Short-term capital movements during the past year showed a much smaller net outflow on balance than in 1952. At the same time there was an increased inflow of long-term capital associated with an expansion in direct investment in Canada and net sales of new Canadian issues abroad were again substantial. These capital movements produced a surplus on capital account roughly equivalent to the deficit on current account, and there was little net change in our foreign exchange reserves. The foreign exchange value of the Canadian dollar showed almost no net change during the year. It declined moderately from January to May, and then moved up slowly to the end of the year.

Coming now to the present position, the first thing to observe is that the real income of the Canadian people has been expanding at a rapid rate for a number of years. The fact that the economy in 1953 was able to achieve further gains of the magnitudes I have sketched suggests to me that we should not feel unduly concerned with a temporary slowing down of this rate of advance. Indeed, in the dynamic kind of economy we have in Canada an occasional hesitation in its forward movement may well be one of the consequences of the buoyant character of our economic growth.

Most of the elements which supported the growth in national product in 1953 are still present, and I believe that the forces of long-term expansion will soon reassert themselves. But some readjustments in production, in costs and in pricing policies are necessary, and are indeed going on.

There is no need for me to go into detail concerning the nature of the present economic situation. It is characterized by more unemployment than we had last year at this same time, and by more unemployment than any of us like to see. It is marked also by a slackening in the growth of production and by declines in certain industries.

An explanation of this state of affairs in Canada can be found in a series of changes which have been at work during the last year or more, both in the international economic field and here in Canada. These changes have given rise to a greater degree of import and export competition, and to a more cautious attitude on the part of industry. These factors have led some industries to reduce their rates of production, or of inventory accumulation. I may note, in passing, that the main explanation for the recession in business in the United States given in the President's report to congress was a change from inventory accumulation to inventory reduction. Added to this there has been a small decline in net farm income resulting from a reduced volume of agricultural production, and lower farm prices. We have also experienced a small decline in exports. Although the effect of these declines in farm income and in exports should be measured against the very high levels achieved in the previous year if we are to keep things in proper perspective, the fact remains that they in turn have tended to limit the demand of the producers affected for the products of the other sectors of the economy.

The increase in imports, especially of those kinds of things that we make in Canada in reasonable volume, and the decline in our exports, small though these changes may be, inevitably raise the question of our efficiency and of our cost and price structure. I do not agree with the suggestion occasionally heard that Canada has become a high cost economy. That may be true of some few sectors, but it is not true of our basic industries. But it is true that for seven or eight years business has been travelling along a comparatively easy road. After the war we had an unscarred and greatly expanded economy. We had learned a lot and made great technical advances. In a world beset with shortages and great tasks of reconstruction we have been admirably situated to supply both our own needs and the needs of our customers. Many countries have now recovered their productive capacities; they can meet a larger part of their own needs and they have more for export. Competition both for our market and theirs has become keener.

Until quite recently our industries have been protected more by external shortages than by our traditional tariff structure. This special form of protection is now disappearing, and some of our industries are finding that they have not watched their costs as carefully as they should, that their break-even points are uncomfortably high, and that their costs and prices are out of line. One result of all this is that I have had more requests for tariff increases or other forms of protection during the past few months than in any year since I became Minister of Finance. This government, as the house knows, has steadily favoured reducing obstacles to trade, and we must move in this direction if we expect others to do likewise. If we were to meet every breath of new competition by increased protection we would certainly become a high cost economy and progressively aggravate our problems.

The re-emergence of keen competition in trade means readjustment and reappraisal. It means a sharpening of pencils and a careful re-examination of managerial and labour efficiency. This is not an easy process, but it is a very necessary one, and the longer it is postponed the more difficult it becomes.

I do not believe that the current slowing down of expansion will be serious or prolonged. Inventory accumulation is a volatile factor in an economy as dynamic as ours but if we bear in mind that the total of demand both at home and abroad is being well sustained, the present situation should be quickly self-correcting.

My reasons for saying this are, first, that the support to be given to production in 1954 in the principal areas where demand originates is well assured. This statement holds good whether we look at the intentions of Canadian business with respect to new investment, or at the probable expenditures of Canadians as consumers or builders of new houses, or at the rate of government expenditures, or at the prospects for exports. The second reason is that we already have a series of supports which should prevent the present readjustments from becoming more generalized and self-aggravating.

It is clear that industry as a whole has such confidence in the future of the economy that it intends to undertake greater capital investment than ever before. The annual survey of investment intentions recently tabled by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), shows that 1954 will see nearly $6 billion spent on new investment, or three per cent more than in 1953. Though some industries will spend less on new investment in 1954, other industries, especially the public utilities, mining, and commercial establishments will spend more, and more than enough to maintain the extraordinarily high levels reached in recent years. Housing requirements remain substantial and the recent changes in the housing act should help to translate these needs into results.

The expenditures of the federal government on goods and services, as well as those of provincial and municipal governments, will increase moderately this year. Given the present high level of personal incomes, and the high volume of available personal savings, there is a strong basis for maintaining or increasing consumer expenditures during 1954.

So far as exports are concerned, the outlook is a little less certain. In the last few years unusually high sales of wheat and coarse grains have contributed to increase our exports. But by normal standards, the prospects for grain sales remain good. For other export commodities no significant changes seem likely, though much will depend on markets in the United States. So far as our European and commonwealth markets are concerned, the basic economic position of these countries has improved and an increase over the export levels of 1953 is a reasonable expectation.

As in so many other questions affecting our development much will depend on the economic situation in the United States. This is, of course, the open season for forecasting the behaviour of the United States economy, but I do not propose to join in this particular exercise. I shall merely note that responsible opinion in the United States seems to be confident that the present downturn will not be deep or prolonged, and that there is a growing consensus of view that an upturn can be expected soon.

In the light of all these considerations, I do not feel that drastic measures by government are appropriate to the present economic situation. As I have said on many previous occasions, there are bound to be both ups and downs in an economy enjoying an unusually high rate of growth. Our present adjustments are taking place at a level of activity which is higher than anything we have been accustomed to in the past. Governmental intervention or expenditure is not a cure for the problem of those industries where supply has temporarily outrun demand, at home or abroad, or where costs and prices have got out of line. The basic solution in these industries must be to produce more efficiently, to eliminate waste, to reduce costs and to search out new markets, with new or better products. In many instances I know that these processes are already under way.

There is, of course, a good deal that can be done by government by measures which have the effect of sustaining demand and production. The government's projected capital expenditure program for the coming year, as indicated in the estimates, takes into account the higher priority which is now being given to federal projects. Even in this field, however, the present plans of industry to embark upon new capital construction, and the expected high level in housing activity, leave little room for any greatly expanded program on federal account. And I do not believe, in any case, that increased public works of the kind appropriate for the federal government can remedy a problem which is to a large extent local in character.

The amount of transfer payments made by the federal government has grown considerably in recent years and provides an underpinning of consumer expenditures. Some of these payments, such as unemployment benefits, necessarily increase when earnings fall off and thus support the level of expenditures. Most of these transfer payments, such as old age pensions and family allowances, are made to groups who spend nearly all their incomes on goods and services. In agriculture and fisheries, price support legislation has been in operation since the end of the war, to put a floor under the incomes of primary producers when economic stability is seriously threatened.

My general conclusion is that our national product in 1954 will be at least equal to 1953, and probably higher; in other words I think that an upswing in the second half of the year will more than compensate for the declines that are evident in certain branches of industry at present.

I should like now to report briefly on our revenues and expenditures for the fiscal year which ended last Wednesday. The usual detailed statements of the accounts are in the white paper which I tabled yesterday and I do not propose to take time in covering this ground again. However, I should remind hon. members that the final results of the year's operations will not be known for some time yet. Consequently the figures in the white paper and those which I shall use tonight are based on estimates and must be regarded as preliminary.

In my budget speech last February, I estimated budgetary revenues for 1953-54 at $4,473 million, expenditures at $4,462 million and our prospective surplus at $11 million. It appears now that our actual revenues for the year were about $4,400 million, our expenditures about $4,390 million and our budget surplus about $10 million.

Despite the tax reductions announced in the last year's budget, revenues in 1953-54 were the largest on record. The total of $4,400 million is $73 million, or about 1½ per cent less than I forecast a year ago, but about $40 million more than we collected in the preceding year. Personal and corporate income tax and excise duty collections have been short of my budget forecast, but customs, sales and excise taxes and non-tax receipts have all exceeded my earlier expectations. Of the total revenues for the year, personal and corporate income taxes, succession duties and other direct taxes produced 56 per cent, commodity and other indirect taxes 35 per cent, and non-tax revenues 9 per cent.

The expenditures last year, at $4,390 million, were $72 million or 1½ per cent less than my budget forecast, but about $53 million more than the total spent in 1952-53. Again the most notable feature of our expenditure program has been the continued importance of defence which constituted over 43 per cent of all government outlay in 1953-54. Full details are given in the white paper, and I shall only point out that, apart from defence, our total budgetary expenditures in round figures amounted to $2½ billion. Of this sum nearly $500 million was for interest and service of the public debt; $750 million—in addition to $340 million paid out of the old age security fund—was for family allowances, veterans' benefits and other welfare and social security services; about $340 million for subsidies and tax rental payments to the provinces; and $110 million for services and assistance to agriculture. In other words, these four classes of expenditure accounted for more than two-thirds of all our civil or non-defence expenditures.

I should like to say something about our cash position and those aspects of our financial operations which lie outside the budget. Once again, in addition to our outlay for governmental services which are included in the budget proper, we have had to provide large sums for loans, investments and working capital advances and for a variety of other purposes. During the fiscal year, these outlays, all of which of course were authorized by parliament, amounted to $430 million. To meet these requirements we have had available from non-budgetary sources the very large sum of $810 million, of which $445 million came from the repayment of loans and advances and $200 million from net receipts and interest accumulations in various annuity, insurance and pension accounts. Details of all these transactions are given on page 62 of the white paper.

After taking into account our budgetary surplus of $10 million and the net amount of $380 million remaining from all these non-budgetary transactions, $390 million was available for debt reduction. Actually, funded debt in the hands of the public was reduced during the year by about $270 million, and our cash balances at the end of the year were $120 million higher than they were at the beginning.

The public debt operations during the past year have included the redemption or refinancing of a large volume of matured or called bond issues. In addition to the usual refunding or conversion of short term securities, we issued new securities amounting in round figures to $3,150 million and redeemed old securities and acquired others for our sinking fund and securities investment accounts in the amount of $3,420 million. As a result, as I indicated a moment ago, we were able to reduce our unmatured funded debt outstanding in the hands of the public by $270 million.

The average rate of interest paid by the government on its funded debt was slightly higher at the year-end than it was at the beginning. Two years ago the rate was 2·67 per cent and last year it was 2·77 per cent. At March 31, 1954 it was 2·86 per cent.

I turn now to a consideration of a tax policy appropriate to the coming year.

Our present tax structure under prosperous conditions, without inflation, and allowing for a normal growth factor, would produce revenues of about $4,500 million this year. Present indications, in my opinion, point to an early resumption of an upward trend in business, and a good prospect of this figure being realized. It is, of course, possible that external factors might be such that the present pause in our expansion would continue through most of the year, and if that happened our revenue would be lower. I feel fully justified, however, in basing my tax policy on a liberal rather than a conservative estimate of the future. I propose, therefore, to take $4,500 million as my revenue base; and if I may have unanimous consent I shall insert at this point in Hansard a table giving the details which make up this total.

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister the consent of the house to place the table on Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Abbott: The table follows:

Table I

Revenues Before Tax Changes

(in millions of dollars)

	1954-55	1953-54 (Preliminary)
Personal income tax	$1,235	$1,189
Non-resident income tax	55	54
Corporation income tax	1,200	1,194
Succession duties	40	40
Customs import duties	415	408
Sales tax	610	592
Other excise duties and taxes	540	518
Miscellaneous taxes	15	14
Total tax revenues	4,110	4,009
Non-tax revenues	340	317
Special receipts and credits	50	74
Total revenues	4,500	4,400
Old Age Security Taxes
2 per cent sales tax	153	148
2 per cent personal income tax	97	91
2 per cent corporation income tax	56	55
Total	306	294

The main estimates of expenditure have already been tabled and total $4,492 million. With the co-operation of my colleagues and the treasury board staff, I have been following each year a policy of steadily improving the quality and the completeness of the main estimates, and I believe that this year they are as complete as it is possible to make them. There will, of course, be some supplementaries, but I can foresee no large items overhanging us, such as we had last year in the losses related to foot-and-mouth disease and in the costs of the general salary increase for the public service, which together totalled nearly $100 million. Each of the more than 500 items which make up the total estimates are individual maximum authorizations, and there is bound to be a certain amount of underspending and lapsing. The original estimates have been carefully screened and the lapsings will not be large, but they can hardly average less than 1 or 2 per cent. All in all, I have come to the conclusion that a prudent estimate of our total budgetary expenditures is $4,460 million.

My general philosophy with respect to taxation has always been that in good, prosperous years we should balance the budget with a bit over for the reduction of debt. When we have had exceptional years, and especially under conditions of inflationary pressures, I have never apologized for having a substantial surplus for debt reduction. I am also convinced that whatever merit there may be in large scale deficit financing under severe conditions, those conditions neither exist nor are they in prospect. On the other hand, I do not think one should be unduly cautious and refuse to consider desirable tax reductions just because conditions might deteriorate and we might have a small deficit.

Taking, therefore, $4,500 million as my revenue base, and $4,460 million as my expenditures, I have a modest sum of about $40 million available for tax abatement.

Beyond the budgets we shall, as usual, have to find cash to make authorized loans, advances and investments. We shall probably require about $125 million for loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The Canadian National Railways capital requirements in 1954, which are initially financed by advances from the government, will come to about $190 million. Funds will be needed for other crown corporations and for loans under veterans' legislation and other authorized purposes. There are likely to be net disbursements from the defence equipment replacement account, and it would appear that the revenues of the old age security fund will again fall short of payments. To finance all these requirements, there will be cash available from non-budgetary sources, mainly from the repayment of loans and advances and from the various insurance, pension and annuity accounts which the government holds and administers. It is not possible to forecast these non-budgetary items accurately, but I expect that, excluding funded debt operations and the requirements of the C.N.R., there will probably be a small net balance in our favour.

Another matter that I am required to report upon to parliament is the position of the old age security fund. I have included this report in the white paper at pages 67 and 68. Hon. members will recall that payments under the Old Age Security Act began in January, 1952, but contributions to the fund became payable at different dates—the 2 per cent sales tax in January of that year, but the 2 per cent personal and corporate income taxes not until July, 1952. There was therefore a long lag between payments out of and payments in to the fund. This lag created a deficit in the fund of $50 million in the first three months of 1952, and contributed largely to the deficit of $99·5 million in the year ended March 31, 1953. Recognizing this lag, parliament in 1952 appropriated funds from general revenue to extinguish the first three months' deficit.

Last year I reported to parliament that because of the continuing effects of the initial time lag I would have to wait another year before I could form a proper judgment on the real balance of income and outgo in the old age security fund. At that time I had expected revenues of $278 million, payments of $345 million, and a probable shortfall of $67 million. In fact the results have been much better. Payments were $6 million less than I had forecast, revenues $16 million higher, and the deficit at $45 million is one-third less than expected.

Looking at the year just beginning, it seems probable that we shall again have a deficit of about $50 million. A precise accounting approach might suggest that I ought to propose an increase in the scale of contributions; but, as I said a few minutes ago, I do not think this is a time to be increasing taxes in Canada if that can possibly be avoided. I propose therefore to carry on with the same scale of contributions for another year.

Under the Old Age Security Act, deficits in the fund are met by temporary loans from the Minister of Finance and these loans are carried as active assets on our balance sheet. The $99·5 million deficit of 1952-53 resulted in large measure from the original time lag between the commencement of payments and contributions. I do not believe any useful purpose is served by carrying this liability of the fund forward into another year, and I propose, with the consent of parliament to write it off against our accumulated active asset reserve.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FINANCIAL RELATIONS

Before completing this statement of tax policy for the ensuing year, I must make some reference to the general field of federal-provincial financial relations by reason of the fact that the province of Quebec has decided to impose again a personal income tax.

The right of any province to impose such a tax has never been questioned. The preamble to the recent Quebec statute imposing the tax contains a statement, however, which cannot be allowed to pass unchallenged. That preamble contains the following words:

Whereas the Canadian constitution concedes to provinces priority in the field of direct taxation:

There is no foundation in fact or in law for such a statement. The provisions of the B.N.A. Act in this regard are clear and unambiguous. Federal taxing power is unlimited. Provinces are limited to direct taxation within the province for provincial purposes. No priority is stated and none is implied. On the contrary, both levels of government have equal and concurrent rights in the field of direct taxation.

Within their powers of direct taxation, provincial governments have imposed general retail sales taxes, taxes in respect of particular commodities such as gasoline, tobacco and liquor, security transfer taxes, and so on. In fact, with the exception of customs duties, I know of no important source of revenue used by the federal government which has not also been available to provincial governments. Presumably all provincial taxes are direct taxes. If provincial priority in the field of direct taxation is admitted, it follows that they have priority in the case of all the taxes which they levy, including these sales taxes and commodity taxes of all kinds.

Under such a doctrine, the provinces would have the right to demand that the federal government, in effect, abandon taxes up to the extent of provincial use. The federal government would be bound to accommodate fully whatever level of direct taxes the provinces wished to impose, and federal taxes would have to be abated to the extent called for by provincial authorities.

There is, of course, nothing whatsoever in our constitution to support such a doctrine of provincial priority, and no federal state could survive as a nation under such an arrangement.

So far as personal income tax is concerned, the federal government entered this field in 1917 and has remained in it continuously since that time. Today, the personal income tax is one of the main pillars of the federal revenue system.

My own province of Quebec did not enter the personal income tax field until 1940 with a tax applicable to the year 1939. It was then abandoned at the end of the following year when wartime tax agreements were entered into. Thus for only two years out of the eighty-seven years since confederation has the province of Quebec attempted to exercise its right to levy such a tax.

This Quebec income tax was imposed as a flat percentage of the federal tax currently in force at that time. As such, it carried the same level of exemptions and, accordingly, was payable by the same people as were subject to the federal tax. The Quebec tax was in addition to the federal tax. No taxpayer was allowed to reduce his federal tax by the amount paid under the provincial law. They were two parallel taxes on the same income payable to two governments.

The present Quebec income tax law does not follow this pattern. It levies the tax under a separate rate structure, provides for different exemption limits and deductions and imposes a tax upon some only of the persons liable for federal income tax. On those to whom the Quebec tax does apply, my understanding is that the rates work out at about 15 per cent of the federal rates.

Since 1947 the federal law has contained a provision allowing taxpayers to offset up to 5 per cent of their federal tax through payment of a provincial income tax. Generally speaking, the credit in the federal law in respect of succession duties, corporation income taxes and personal income taxes levied by provinces gives leeway approximating the previous level of use of these taxes by provincial governments prior to the war. It was introduced as a measure to accord some degree of relief to taxpayers taxed at the same time by two governments. It was entirely a unilateral concession which called for no comparable concession of any sort by a province. So far as I am aware, this type of tax concession is unique and is found in no other federal tax system.

For instance, in the United States of America, in addition to the federal income tax some thirty different states levy personal income taxes. These state taxes are at varying levels. In New York state, for example, a married person with no dependents with an income of $5,000 a year pays $45 to the state of New York, and $660 to the federal government. It may be of interest to observe that a taxpayer in Quebec with the same income and marital status will pay a provincial tax of $49 but has the right to a credit of $28.50 against his federal tax, a privilege not enjoyed by his fellow sufferer in the state of New York. In the neighbouring state of Pennsylvania no state personal income tax is imposed. Accordingly, a resident of Pennsylvania pays less income tax than does the resident of New York. The weight of combined federal and state taxes will vary with the different states. Perhaps it is of the essence of state or provincial autonomy that their tax levels may differ. It is this very right to be different that is so jealously guarded. The idea that there is anywhere a recognized principle that in a federal state the combined taxes levied by all governments should be no greater in one part of the country than in another is without foundation.

The principle underlying the suggestion that provincial tax should generally be allowed as an offset against federal tax strikes at the very root of the system of federal-provincial tax agreements which have been developed in this country. It might be useful, therefore, to outline what it has been sought to accomplish by these agreements.

Prior to 1940, seven of the then nine provinces, as well as many municipalities, were levying personal income taxes. Today there are only two personal income taxes in force—the federal and that of the province of Quebec. Prior to 1940, seven of the provinces imposed taxes on the profits of corporations at varying rates. All provinces imposed a complicated series of miscellaneous corporation taxes. Today there are only two corporation income taxes—the federal and Quebec—while Quebec also resorts to a series of other miscellaneous corporation taxes. Previously all the provinces levied succession duties. Today succession duties are imposed by only the federal government, Ontario and Quebec. The heavy costs incidental to the mere collection of taxes from Canadians as a whole have been greatly reduced. In this respect the federal-provincial agreements have been of the greatest benefit to the provinces, to the federal government and to the whole body of Canadian taxpayers.

While the complete removal of double taxation over so wide a field with the benefits of simplification and efficiency is important, it is probable that the most significant and fundamental feature of the agreements is the way in which they have provided financial stability for the less well-off provinces. The house will recall that in the later thirties a number of provincial governments were in dire financial straits, and were facing the necessity of curtailing essential services to an extent which would have imposed great strains on our federal structure. The situation was very serious. The federal-provincial agreements have provided, through the avenue of friendly discussion, a system under which reasonable and stable revenues are currently being provided to those provinces whose fiscal needs call for more revenue than they could be expected to collect by their own methods. These agreements have helped to enable these provinces to maintain minimum national standards of provincial services.

The third main purpose of the agreements has been to enable the federal government, with the co-operation of provincial governments, to carry out fiscal and other national policies which help to maintain high levels of employment and production in Canada.

Summing up the value of this system of federal-provincial agreements, perhaps I might be allowed to quote one paragraph from a statement which I made to the federal-provincial conference in 1950:

> I have said that some credit is due to everyone seated at this table for the remarkable progress towards a sane tax system which has been made in recent years. The provinces which have been willing to rent to the federal government their important rights in the fields of income and corporation taxes and succession duties have contributed greatly to this desirable result. Under the agreements, literally hundreds of taxes of one sort or another have been suspended and replaced by a relatively few. Meantime, these provinces have received in remuneration rental payments, steadily rising with the increase in national income and provincial population and of a magnitude greater, I believe, than could have been obtained by the direct provincial cultivation of the tax fields in question—at least unless the intensity of cultivation had been pushed to a point which would scarcely have been tolerable under today's conditions. Thus at one stroke a great many old and diverse levies have been suspended while reasonable returns through payments from the federal government have been assured by the agreements. To my mind, this is the essence of effective tax administration.

This Canadian plan of tax rental agreements as a method or device for dealing with the financial problems of the members of the federal state has been developed on a practical basis. Following the rejection of the Rowell-Sirois recommendations, the federal government proposed the wartime tax agreements under which all provinces for the duration of the war, in consideration of certain rental payments, suspended their income and corporation taxes.

After the war the same old problem presented itself again and at the 1945 federal-provincial conference the federal government put forward a comprehensive plan as a substitute for the wartime agreements. This plan was found to be not acceptable to all provinces.

Again the federal government, without the benefit of any workable alternative proposals from the provinces, had to devise some practicable solution to meet the post-war situation. The tax rental agreements were the result and their great virtue is that in achieving important objectives they do not depend upon unanimous acceptance by all provinces.

Prior to the termination of the first series of agreements which had been entered into by seven provinces, a federal-provincial conference was called in 1950 to discuss with all the provinces the prospects for the renewal of the agreements and any suggestions for modification in their terms. Again there were no proposals put forward for any alternative comprehensive method of solving the over-all problem of conflicting tax jurisdictions in Canada.

The various options offered under the present agreements have been developed in a genuine attempt to meet the diverse financial needs of provinces which, unfortunately, are not all equally endowed with natural advantages. Naturally provincial governments will continue to argue that the agreements should provide higher rental payments, but by and large the terms are tolerably acceptable to all.

The province of Quebec alone has decided not to rent its income and corporation tax fields to the federal government. I wish to make it perfectly clear as I have on other occasions that the federal government has not urged the province to enter into such an agreement and has no quarrel with the decision taken by the government of that province to use its own tax fields rather than to rent them to the federal government.

The statute imposing the new personal income tax in Quebec was adopted without any prior consultation with the federal government. I do not suggest, of course, that such consultation was necessary, but the tax was imposed with full knowledge of the extent of the tax credit available under the federal law since 1947, which is limited to 5 per cent of the federal tax.

It is now suggested that the federal government should allow taxpayers in Quebec to reduce the income tax otherwise payable by them to the federal treasury by the full amount they are required to pay to the province. I have given this suggestion the most careful and serious consideration. Clearly, however, the obvious implication of the principle involved in this proposal is that this parliament should recognize that any province has the right to determine the amount by which the people of that province may reduce their national tax liability. I consider that any such principle is completely unacceptable.

If a credit up to 15 per cent of the federal tax were accepted, it would appear to be difficult in principle to later deny full credit for, say, a 30 per cent, a 60 per cent or even a 100 per cent provincial tax. If a province had the suggested constitutional priority in the field of direct taxation, then nothing short of the right to reduce federal tax by 100 per cent would be the stopping point. This would imply that a provincial government without imposing any additional burden on its own taxpayers could secure to its own treasury the full amount which would otherwise be payable by its people to their national government. This would be the obvious consequence of allowing a province to determine the degree of offset against federal tax to accommodate its own tax. I can here only repeat what I said earlier on this point. There is no justification under our constitution for such doctrine. Its acceptance would not only place the federal treasury in an intolerable position but it would completely destroy any basis for federal-provincial tax rental agreements. While this, of course, might not be a matter of serious concern to the wealthy provinces, it can scarcely be disregarded by others.

I have indicated the efforts made by the federal government since 1945 to find a basis for fiscal co-operation which would be fair to all the provincial governments, would fully respect provincial autonomy, and at the same time enable the government of the nation to discharge its obligations to all the citizens of Canada in all the provinces. The tax rental agreements represent the best solution it has so far been possible to find.

It is obviously impossible to conduct intergovernmental discussions through press conferences and public statements, but if the premier of Quebec wishes to follow up his frequently expressed desire for co-operation and collaboration, and will make concrete proposals to the federal government which respect the rights of both federal and provincial authorities under the constitution, which would be fair to all ten provinces and leave the federal government in a position to discharge its national obligations, he will always find the door open for full and frank discussion in the hope of finding a mutually satisfactory solution.

Finally, perhaps I should say a word about what appears to be the attitude of the Conservative opposition on this subject as evidenced by the resolution recently adopted by the Progressive Conservative association. The resolution is reported in the press as follows:

"The Conservative party advocates the principle that any provincial income tax levied by the government of any province be deductible from income tax payable to the federal government by any taxpayer of such province, provided the amount of such taxation does not exceed the amount that such province would have received from the federal government if such a tax agreement had been negotiated."

This resolution clearly does not support the doctrine of provincial priority in the field of direct taxation asserted in the Quebec statute. Rather it is a general proposition that stems from the tax rental agreements. It appears to propose that any province which does not rent its tax fields should be accommodated indirectly from the federal treasury up to the amount of rent it would have received if it had rented its tax fields. I must confess I find that principle somewhat bewildering, but it would appear to be as effectively destructive of any basis for federal-provincial tax rental agreements as the priority doctrine to which I have alluded. However, if I have misunderstood the purport of the resolution, I am sure hon. gentlemen opposite will clarify the matter during the course of this debate.

TAX CHANGES

May I now place before the house my proposals for tax changes. As I said earlier, there is not much margin for tax reductions, and I have had to consider carefully how I can get the most equity and the best economic results with the resources at my disposal.

Clearly it is not possible to make any general reduction in the income tax rate structure, either for individuals or for corporations. The most I can do in this field is to make a few desirable adjustments. None of them will have any significant effects on revenue.

The incentive legislation for the oil, gas and mining industries will be extended for a further year. In the case of deep-test wells, however, this special concession will in future be restricted to more complicated structures such as occur in the foothills. An amendment will be introduced to re-establish past policy with respect to the tax status of fire and casualty mutual insurance companies. It is proposed to withdraw the provision in the income tax regulations which limits the deductions for capital costs to the amount taken on the taxpayers' books of account. The maximum deduction allowed for contributions to pension funds will be increased from $900 to $1,500 for both employers and employees.

These are the main changes involving questions of principle, though the amending bill will as usual contain a number of technical changes to keep the law up-to-date and as fair as possible.

SUCCESSION DUTIES

Our succession duty law is in need of revision. Within the past few years a great deal of progress has been made in improving our federal tax laws. It is generally agreed, I think, that an excellent job has been done through rewriting our Income Tax Act. The Excise Tax Act has been streamlined, simplified and made more systematic. Up until now I have not been able to devote enough time to a similar improvement in succession duties. However, I have recently asked officials of the three departments concerned—finance, national revenue and justice—to commence work on rewriting the law.

In the next few months, while the redrafting is proceeding, the views of informed and interested persons, or groups of persons, would be welcomed on any provision in the law which deserves reconsideration. In the meantime no change will be made in the present law.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

The budget resolutions relating to the Customs Tariff which I am tabling touch 74 tariff items. I am proposing changes in wording in about 50 of these items which would remove uncertainties, anomalies, and administrative difficulties which have arisen. The other changes all involve reduction or suspension of duties. No increases in duty are proposed.

The duty is being eliminated on machinery and apparatus, including tubing of a class or kind not made in Canada, for the operation of potash and rock salt mines. A former drawback item is being re-established to provide for a drawback of 99 per cent of the duty paid on fire clay fire brick used by basic producers of iron or steel. Duty free entry is provided for materials and parts used in the construction and repair of railway signal systems. The duties on motor rail cars or units are suspended until July 1, 1956, and on uranium until July 1, 1958.

Some of the principal items on which the tariff has been substantially reduced include automatic controls for certain sterilizing processes, tear gas ammunition for use by law enforcement authorities, and impregnated jute fabric used by nurserymen. Motor vehicles imported as settlers' effects are presently exempt from duty and taxes when valued at not more than $1,500 but duty and taxes apply on any value in excess of that amount. This exemption has been increased to $2,500.

A new tariff item has been established to provide for duty-free entry of personal gifts not exceeding $25 in value sent from members of the Canadian forces serving abroad to relatives or friends in Canada. This item continues the exemption provided for by order in council P.C. 6598 of December 6, 1951. Last year we provided duty-free entry for goods valued at not more than $1,000 imported by members of the Canadian forces after an absence from Canada of not less than a year. I now propose to abolish this $1,000 limit, and to provide statutory authority for the long established practice of extending the same privilege to employees of the Canadian government returning from foreign postings.

While each of these tariff reductions will be of real benefit to the producers or individuals affected, their over-all revenue implications are not significant.

COMMODITY TAXES

I have decided, both for reasons of equity and economic effects, that the bulk of the available tax abatement should be in the commodity tax field. I do not propose any change in the general sales tax rate, but I can recommend some useful changes with regard to the 15 per cent special excise tax. I regret that I am not able to recommend any change in the taxes on automobiles, television sets, radios, phonographs and cigars. The revenue from this group is quite substantial and is more than I can forgo at this time; and consumer demand for these products has been well maintained. Furthermore, in respect of radios and television sets, last year parliament withdrew the radio receiving licence fee, and directed that in its place the 15 per cent excise on sets should be assigned as revenue to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. I think it would be inappropriate to recommend any change in this tax for the time being.

I can, however, recommend a reduction from 15 per cent to 10 per cent on such items as soft drinks, candy, cosmetics, tires and tubes, motor cycles, smokers' accessories, matches, coin operated amusement devices, fountain pens, clocks, watches and jewelry.

I can also recommend that the 15 per cent special excise tax be removed completely from furs; electrical household appliances such as vacuum cleaners, floor polishers, irons and ironers, coffee makers, toasters and food mixers; firearms, golf clubs, fishing equipment; cameras and films; merchandise vending machines; and luggage.

The revenue loss involved in rate reduction from 15 per cent to 10 per cent for the one group, and in the complete exemption of the other, will amount to approximately $33 million.

While the sales tax rate will remain unchanged, I am recommending the addition of certain items to the schedule of exemptions. It is proposed to include in the exempt list certain classes of road machinery and fire fighting equipment when purchased for their own use by municipalities. Wall panels will be added to the list of exempt building materials. Miscellaneous items include the small sizes of drain tile, sheet music and hearing aids. Total revenue loss under all these sales tax changes will be about $3 million.

Taxes in the field of liquor and tobacco products will continue at their present levels. A technical change will be made in the method of taxing beer. The present tax on malt used in making beer will be replaced by a gallonage tax. The purpose of the change is to introduce a more modern method of taxation without affecting substantially the general level of taxation in the industry.

All customs and commodity tax changes will be effective tomorrow, April 7. My colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) has asked me to give notice that in accordance with standard practice no claims for refunds arising out of tax reductions in respect of goods on which tax has been paid will be entertained.

CONCLUSION

I can now summarize my revenue and expenditure estimates for the coming year. The reductions in taxation which I have announced will mean a loss of revenue of about $36 million, and that reduces my revenue figures from $4,500 million to $4,464 million. Since I have estimated my expenditures at $4,460 million, I am budgeting for a surplus in the nominal amount of $4 million. If I may have unanimous consent, I shall insert here in Hansard the usual table showing the details.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Abbott:

Table II

Revenues After Tax Changes

(in millions of dollars)

	1954-55
Personal income tax	$1,235
Non-resident income tax	55
Corporation income tax	1,200
Succession duties	40
Customs import duties	415
Sales tax	607
Other excise duties and taxes	507
Miscellaneous taxes	15
Total tax revenues	4,074
Non-tax revenues	340
Special receipts and credits	50
Total revenues	4,464
Old Age Security Taxes
2 per cent sales tax	152
2 per cent personal income tax	97
2 per cent corporation income tax	56
Total	305

I have reminded hon. members almost every year that in dealing with figures of these magnitudes slight changes in revenue can create big changes in the residual surplus. Each one per cent change in revenue means $45 million. A two or three per cent change means a difference of $100 to $125 million.

As I explained earlier, my revenue figures are based on reasonably optimistic assumptions. I have said frankly that their realization depends upon an early resumption of our normal rate of expansion, which in turn depends very heavily on the external influences affecting our economy. If these conditions do not materialize, there could be a moderate deficit of two or three per cent.

That, Mr. Speaker, concludes my presentation of the contents of my budget. We have completed a year which has broken all our past records of economic achievements in production, in investment, in housing and in standards of living. The past six months have seen some mixed trends; some sectors are expanding as rapidly as ever, some have levelled off and a few have actually declined; but I am confident that unless external factors work against us, we shall soon be moving into a new and healthy period of expansion.

Internationally the political situation remains clouded and uneasy, but I believe the prospects for fundamental economic improvement are brighter than at any time since 1947. I am hopeful that the year ahead of us will see new and important constructive moves in the direction of improved international trade and payments arrangements, which will enlarge our established markets and open doors to new markets. These markets and ours will be competitive, and will constitute a challenge to management and labour, to farmers and merchants. The outside world is under no obligation to maintain the Canadian standard of living. That is something we have to do for ourselves. Our costs and our prices will have to be kept in line by continuous improvement in efficiency. I need hardly add that high standards of living and low costs of production cannot be permanently divorced; indeed, the whole economic history of the last hundred years shows that they go together. I am confident that we in Canada can achieve and retain both.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide, amongst other things:

1. That the exemption of income from metalliferous or industrial mineral mines for the first three years of production be extended to mines coming into production during the calendar year 1957.

2. That the special deduction from income allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum, petroleum products or natural gas or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas, for expenses of exploring or drilling for oil or natural gas in Canada, be allowed for expenses incurred in the calendar year 1957, and that in addition a similar deduction be allowed to corporations whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses of exploring or drilling for oil or natural gas in Canada incurred in the calendar year 1957.

3. That the special deduction from income allowed to corporations whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses incurred in searching for minerals in Canada be allowed for expenses incurred in the calendar year 1957; and that in addition a similar deduction be allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum, petroleum products or natural gas or exploring or drilling for petroleum or natural gas, for expenses of searching for minerals in Canada incurred in the calendar year 1957.

4. That the special deduction from income and taxes allowed to taxpayers whose principal business is production, refining or marketing of petroleum or drilling for petroleum and to taxpayers whose principal business is mining or exploring for minerals, for expenses incurred in respect of deep-test oil wells be allowed for expenses incurred in respect of deep-test oil wells spudded in during 1955.

5. That for the 1954 and subsequent taxation years the deduction allowed to an employer or employee in respect of amounts paid or contributed to or under an approved superannuation fund or plan shall be increased from $900 to $1,500.

6. For the taxation of a resident mutual insurance corporation, other than a life insurance corporation, as though the surplus arising from its insurance activities on and after January 1, 1954 were a profit from a business, and declaring that a non-resident mutual insurance corporation, other than a life insurance corporation, shall be deemed to be and always to have been subject to taxation on that basis.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide, among other things:

1. That the excise tax on the following goods be repealed:

(a) furs;

(b) electrical appliances adapted to household or apartment use, namely: blankets; chafing dishes; coffee makers; curling irons or tongs; dish washers; food or drink mixers; food choppers and grinders; floor waxers and polishers; garbage disposal units; hair dryers; irons and ironers; juice extractors; kettles; portable humidifiers; razors and shavers; toasters of all kinds; vacuum cleaners and attachments therefor; waffle irons;

(c) firearms and complete parts thereof and ammunition;

(d) golf clubs and golf balls;

(e) fishing rods and fishing reels;

(f) cameras, camera lenses and unexposed photographic films and plates; projectors for pictures;

(g) trunks; suitcases; bags and luggage of all kinds; purses; wallets; billfolds; key and card cases; handbags; jewel cases; dressing and toilet cases; shopping bags; golf and other sports bags;

(h) coin, disc or token operated vending machines.

2. That the excise tax on the following goods be reduced from fifteen per cent to ten per cent:

(a) articles, materials or preparations of whatever composition or in whatever form, commonly or commercially known as toilet articles, preparations or cosmetics, which are intended for use or application for toilet purposes, or for use in connection with the care of the human body, including the hair, nails, eyes, teeth, or any other part or parts thereof, whether for cleansing, deodorizing, beautifying, preserving or restoring, and including shaving soaps and shaving creams, antiseptics, bleaches, depilatories, perfumes, scents and similar preparations;

(b) motor cycles and all other two- or three-wheeled motor driven vehicles including motors for attachment to bicycles;

(c) devices, commonly or commercially known as lighters;

(d) coin, disc or token operated games or amusement devices of all kinds;

(e) ash trays; tobacco pipes; cigar and cigarette holders; cigarette rolling devices and other smokers' accessories;

(f) fountain pens; ball-point pens; ink pencils; propelling pencils; desk sets and all other desk accessories;

(g) matches;

(h) tires and tubes in whole or in part of rubber for self-propelled machines or automotive vehicles of all kinds;

(i) clocks and watches;

(j) articles of all kinds made in whole or in part of ivory, jet, amber, coral, mother of pearl, natural shells, tortoise shell, jade, onyx, lapis lazuli, or other semi-precious stones;

(k) articles commonly or commercially known as jewelry, whether real or imitation, including diamonds and other precious or semi-precious stones for personal use or for adornment of the person; goldsmiths' and silversmiths' products; pewter ware;

(l) articles of cut glassware, crystal glassware, cut or not, etched glassware, or metal decorated glassware;

(m) articles of china, porcelain, earthenware, marble, stoneware, or other pottery ware;

(n) carbonated beverages, aerated waters, unfermented fruit juice beverages and imitations thereof and all other compounded or mixed soft drinks and all mixtures or products advertised or sold for making soft drink beverages or imitations thereof, whether sold in liquid, concentrated or in dry form;

(o) candy, chocolate, chewing gum and confectionery that may be classed as candy or a substitute for candy.

3. That the excise tax on carbonic acid gas and similar preparations be reduced from twenty-five cents per pound to fifteen cents per pound.

4. That the sales tax on the following goods be repealed:

(a) oil and gas burners and stokers for use with furnaces for the heating of buildings;

(b) coal crushers and stokers for use directly in the manufacture or production of goods;

(c) equipment sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for resale, at a price in excess of one thousand dollars per unit, specially designed for use directly for road making, road cleaning or fire fighting, but not to include automobiles nor ordinary motor trucks;

(d) wall panels for use in buildings and materials for use in the manufacture of such panels;

(e) drain tile not exceeding four inches in inside diameter and twelve inches in length;

(f) sheet music and materials used in its manufacture;

(g) hearing aids and parts therefor including batteries specifically designed for use with such hearing aids.

5. That provision be made to require the payment of sales and excise taxes on all products packaged and sold as lighter fluid.

6. That provision be made to require the payment of sales and excise taxes on the packaging used to contain goods subject to these taxes and on any other articles packaged with them whether the goods are imported, or are manufactured or produced in Canada.

7. That provision be made to ensure that machines and tools for operation by tractors are not included as accessories therefor in the prevailing exemption from sales tax.

8. That any enactment founded upon this resolution be deemed to have come into force on the seventh day of April, nineteen hundred and fifty-four.

EXCISE ACT

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Act and to provide, among other things:—

1. That the excise duty on malt be repealed and an excise duty of thirty-eight cents a gallon be imposed upon all beer or malt liquor subject to an allowance for wastage.

2. That any enactment founded upon this resolution be deemed to have come into force on the seventh day of April, nineteen hundred and fifty-four.

The Budget—Resolutions

CUSTOMS TARIFF

1. Resolved, that schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by deleting therefrom the following enumeration of goods and rate of additional duty of customs:

"Ale, beer, porter and stout, 40 cents per gallon"; and by substituting therefor the following enumeration of goods and rate of additional duty of customs:

"Ale, beer, porter and stout, 38 cents per gallon."

2. Resolved, that schedule A to the Customs Tariff be further amended by striking thereout tariff items 187, 189, 263b, 290, 343, 345a, 352a, 353(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h) and (i), 402, 409c(1), 409e(1), 409f, 409m(1), 410f(1), 410o(i), 418, 426, 431h, 437, 440i, 442, 443b, 443d(1) and (2), 445r, 446k, 451, 453a, 476a, 480a, 499a, 535e, 561, 569d, 618b(1) and (2), 660a, 696(1), 696a, 703(c), 704, 705a and 848(2), the several enumerations of goods respectively, and the several rates of duties of customs, if any, set opposite each of the said items, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of duty in said schedule A:

SCHEDULE "A"

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
12b	Sausage casings, synthetic, of paper	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	35 p.c.	17½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
187	Albumenized and other papers, textile fabrics and films, n.o.p.; all the foregoing chemically prepared for photographers' use	Free	20 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	20 p.c. (Prior to November 19, 1952.)	30 p.c.
189	Paper tubes and paper cones of all sizes, with or without metal or plastic ends, adapted for winding yarns thereon	Free	Free	Free	Free 10 p.c. 15 p.c.	Free 22½ p.c. 20 p.c.	Free 35 p.c. 30 p.c.
206a	(4) Materials and articles for the manufacture of the goods specified in tariff items 206a (1), (2), and (3)	Free	Free	Free	Various	Various	Various
237a	Uranium in the form of pigs, ingots, billets or bars On and after July 1, 1958	Free Free	Free 15 p.c.	25 p.c. 25 p.c.	Free	15 p.c.	25 p.c.
263b	Diethyl ketone, methyl normal propyl ketone and blends thereof; methyl ethyl ketone, furfural and methyl isobutyl ketone; all the foregoing for use only in the refining of oils	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free 15 p.c.	Free 20 p.c.	25 p.c. 25 p.c.
290	Cement, Portland, and hydraulic or water lime, in bulk or in barrels, bags, or casks, the weight of the package to be included in the weight for duty per one hundred pounds	5 cts.	8 cts.	8 cts.	5 cts. 15 p.c.	8 cts. 20 p.c.	8 cts. 25 p.c.
343	Tin, in blocks, pigs, bars, or granular form	Free	5 p.c.	5 p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	5 p.c.
345a	Zinc spelter and zinc in blocks, pigs, bars, rods, or granular form; zinc plates, n.o.p. per pound	¾ ct.	1 ct.	1 ct.	¾ ct.	1 ct.	1 ct.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
352a	(1) Bells, when imported for use of churches only...	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(2) Bells, electronically operated or not, including amplifiers, drivers, reproducers, transformers, keyboards, automatic control coders, pealing devices (strikes), perforated roll players and perforated rolls for such players, all specially designed for use with such bells, but not to include separate record players, control cabinets containing record playing devices nor microphones; parts thereof; the foregoing when for use in churches only.....	Free	Free	Free	Free 17½ p.c.	Free 25 p.c.	Free 35 p.c.
353	Aluminum and alloys thereof:
	(a) Pigs, ingots, blocks, notch bars, slabs, billets, blooms, and wire bars.....per pound	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.	Free	2 cts.	5 cts.
	(b) Bars, rods, plates, sheets, strips, circles, squares, discs and rectangles.....per pound	Free	3 cts.	7½ cts.	Free	3 cts.	7½ cts.
	(c) Angles, channels, beams, tees and other rolled, drawn or extruded sections and shapes.....	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(d) Wire and cable, twisted or stranded or not, and whether reinforced with steel or not.....	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(e) Pipes and tubes.....	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	(f) Leaf, n.o.p., or foil, less than ·005 inch in thickness, plain or embossed, with or without backing.	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(g) Aluminum powder.....	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	30 p.c.	30 p.c.
	(h) Aluminum leaf, less than ·005 millimetre in thickness.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(i) Aluminum scrap..... Nothing shall be deemed to be aluminum scrap except waste or refuse aluminum, fit only to be remelted.	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free

402	Woven or welded wire fencing, of iron or steel, coated or not, from wire not more than ·144 inch and not less than ·080 inch in diamater, with tolerance not to exceed ·004 inch; wire fencing, of iron or steel, coated or not, n.o.p.	Free	12½ p.c.	15 p.c.	Free 12½ p.c.	12½ p.c. 20 p.c.	15 p.c. 35 p.c.
409c	(1) Ploughs and parts thereof	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
409e	(1) Spraying and dusting machines and attachments therefor, including hand sprayers; apparatus for the destruction of predatory animals by the discharge of poisonous cartridges and poisonous cartridges for such apparatus; starter cartridges for diesel engines; apparatus specially designed for sterilizing bulbs; pressure testing apparatus for determining maturity of fruit; pruning hooks; pruning shears; dehorning instruments; parts of the foregoing	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
409f	Grain crushers; grain or hay grinders; grain or hay dryers; milk coolers; steel stanchions for confining livestock either in pens or individually, including complete equipment for milking parlors; automatic stock watering bowls; barn litter carriers and track; sprinkler irrigation systems; barn hay forks, carriage, pulleys and track; hydraulic hoists for unloading vehicles; hitches and couplings; plough bolts; all the foregoing for use on the farm for farm purposes only; hay loaders; hay tedders; potato planters; potato diggers; fodder or feed cutters; ensilage cutters; post hole diggers; snaths; stumping machines; grain loaders or elevators with a capacity not exceeding 40 bushels per minute and all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery, n.o.p.; parts of all the foregoing	Free	Free	Free	Free 10 p.c.	Free 22½ p.c.	Free 25 p.c.
409m	(1) Internal combustion tractors other than highway truck-tractors; accessories for such tractors (not to include machines and tools for operation by tractors); parts of all the foregoing	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
410f	(1) Machinery and appliances of iron or steel, of a class or kind not made in Canada, and elevators, and machinery of floating dredges, for use exclusively in alluvial gold mining; parts of all the foregoing	Free	Free	Free	Free Various	Free Various	Free Various

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
410o	(i) Coal heading machines, electric or magnetic machines for concentrating or separating iron ores, automatic scales for use with conveyors, and parts of all the foregoing, for use exclusively in mining or metallurgical operations	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
418	Machinery and apparatus and parts thereof, imported by manufacturers for use exclusively in the manufacture of fish meal, liquid fish and fish solubles, stock and poultry food and fertilizers from fish and waste thereof, in their own factories	Free	15 p.c.	20 p.c.	Free Various	15 p.c. Various	20 p.c. Various
418a	Devices for the automatic control of the composition of sterilizing and cleaning solutions used for sterilizing and cleaning purposes in food and beverage industries and in hospitals; parts of the foregoing	5 p.c.	12½ p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
426	Ozone generators or ozone airifiers and parts thereof, of a class or kind not made in Canada	Free	5 p.c.	10 p.c.	Free	5 p.c.	10 p.c.
427k	(1) Machinery, of a class or kind made in Canada, for working metal by turning, milling, grinding, drilling or boring, planing or shaping, and shearing or pressing, and accessories and attachments therefor; parts of the foregoing	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	10 p.c. Various	22½ p.c. Various	35 p.c. Various
	(2) Machinery, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for working metal by turning, milling, grinding, drilling or boring, planing or shaping, and shearing or pressing, and accessories and attachments therefor; parts of the foregoing	Free	7½ p.c.	35 p.c.	Free Various	7½ p.c. Various	35 p.c. Various
428i	Governors and parts thereof for use in the manufacture of diesel locomotives	Free	7½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	7½ p.c.	30 p.c.

431h	Geophysical surveying precision instruments and equipment for use exclusively in prospecting for, or in the exploration and development of, petroleum, natural gas, water wells and minerals, or for geophysical studies for engineering projects, including the following: magnetometers; gravity meters and other instruments designed to measure the elements, variations and distortions of the natural gravitational force; field potentiometers, meggers, non-polarizing electrodes, and electrical equipment for making measurements in drill holes; instruments and equipment for seismic prospecting; geiger muller counters and other instruments for radioactive methods of geophysical prospecting; electrical and electronic amplifying devices and electrical thermostats designed to be used with any of the foregoing; sodium iodide crystals, thallium activated, in rough cut blanks, when imported to be manufactured into parts for use in instruments for prospecting; all the foregoing of a class or kind not made in Canada, and repair parts, tripods and fitted carrying cases for any of the foregoing.....	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free 15 p.c.	Free 20 p.c.	30 p.c. 25 p.c.
437	Locomotives, cars and coaches and repair equipment, belonging to railroads, brought temporarily into Canada for clearing obstructions, fighting fires, or making emergency repairs on railway lines within Canada; detector cars and rail flaw detector apparatus when imported to test rail in tracks in Canada..	Free	Free	Free	..... 15 p.c.	Free 22½ p.c.	Free 30 p.c.
437a	(1) Materials, including all parts, of a class or kind not made in Canada, used in the construction or repair of railway signal systems.....	Free	Free	30 p.c.	15 p.c. Various	22½ p.c. Various	30 p.c. Various
	(2) Copper oxide, zinc, alkaline electrolyte, primary (wet.) cell batteries, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for railway signal systems, parts of the foregoing.....	Free	Free	27½ p.c.	15 p.c. Various	22½ p.c. Various	27½ p.c. Various
	(3) Insulated rail joints and connections for use therewith, used in the construction or repair of railway signal systems; parts of the foregoing.....	Free	Free	25 p.c.	$5.00 per ton Various	$7.00 per ton Various	$8.00 per ton Various
437b	Motor rail cars or units and chassis for same, of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use on railways for the carriage of passenger, baggage, mail or express traffic; engines and transmissions for such motor rail cars or units; parts of the foregoing.....	Free	Free	25 p.c.	Free	20 p.c.	35 p.c.
	On and after July 1, 1956	Free	20 p.c.	35 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
440i	The following articles and materials when imported for use only in the manufacture, maintenance or repair of buoys and beacons for the Government of Canada, viz.: flanged and dished steel boiler plate heads over five feet in diameter; lanterns and electric flashing lights; fog horn and other warning equipment; marine radio beacon timing equipment; actuating equipment, including low discharge storage batteries and motors; parts of all the foregoing.....	Free	Free	Free	Free 15 p.c. Various	Free 22½ p.c. Various	Free 30 p.c. Various
441g	Grenades, cartridges and projectiles containing tear gas or sickening gas, imported for sale to federal, provincial or municipal law enforcement authorities.....	Free	7½ p.c.	30 p.c.	10 p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
442	Articles and materials which enter into the cost of manufacture of the goods enumerated in tariff items 409, 409a, 409b, 409c, 409d, 409e, 409f, 409g, 409h, 409i, 409j, 409k, 409l, 409m, 409n, 409o, 409q, 427b(1), 439c and 618b(1), when imported for use in the manufacture of the goods enumerated in the aforesaid tariff items, or in the manufacture of parts therefor, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe.....	Free	Free	Free	Free Various	Free Various	Free Various
443b	Oven thermostats, automatic oven lighters and dual valves, for use in the manufacture of apparatus designed for cooking with gas.....	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.
443d	Gas control devices for use on cooking apparatus, or on apparatus for heating buildings, or on apparatus for heating water, or on apparatus for refrigeration, or in the gas line between such apparatus and the meter, or in the gas line between such apparatus and the consumer's gas storage device; gas control devices for the manufacture or repair of, or for conversion to, gas-fired apparatus for cooking, or for heating buildings, or for heating water, or for refrigeration; parts of all the foregoing:
	1. When of a class or kind not made in Canada....	Free	5 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free	7½ p.c.	30 p.c.
	2. When of a class or kind made in Canada.....	Free	10 p.c.	30 p.c.	Free Various	10 p.c. Various	30 p.c. Various

445r	Apparatus for the receiving and transmitting of photographs, weather maps and charts, by wire; parts of the foregoing	Free	Free	30 p.c.	Free 15 p.c.	Free 22½ p.c.	30 p.c. 30 p.c.
446k	Tools, wholly or in part of iron or steel, n.o.p., of a class or kind not made in Canada, for use in machines	Free	7½ p.c.	35 p.c.	Free 10 p.c.	10 p.c. 22½ p.c.	35 p.c. 35 p.c.
451	Buckles, clasps, eyelets, hooks and eyes, dome, snap or other fasteners of iron, steel, brass or other metal, coated or not, n.o.p. (not being jewellery); parts of all the foregoing	15 p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.	15 p.c. 15 p.c. Various	22½ p.c. 22½ p.c. Various	30 p.c. 45 p.c. Various
453a	Metal parts, n.o.p., in any degree of manufacture but not coated, plated nor covered in any manner, for use in the manufacture of spectacle cases and jewellery boxes; hinges of any material, finished or not, for use in the manufacture of spectacle cases and jewellery boxes	Free	12½ p.c.	35 p.c.	Free	12½ p.c.	35 p.c.
476a	Glassware and other scientific apparatus for laboratory work in public hospitals; chairs and tables for surgical operating purposes and parts thereof; infant incubators and parts thereof; infant and patient identification tapes and ribbons of any material; infant identification bead sets including cases, and parts thereof; electrocardiographs and parts thereof, and sensitized film and paper for use therein; electroencephalographic paper; apparatus for sterilizing purposes, including bedpan washers and sterilizers but not including washing nor laundry machines; all for the use of any public hospital, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe	Free	Free	Free	Free 15 p.c.	Free 20 p.c.	Free 30 p.c.
480a	Invalid chairs, with wheels; invalid chairs, designed to be used with wheels; parts of the foregoing including motive power and wheel assemblies and parts thereof	Free	10 p.c.	15 p.c.	Free 15 p.c.	10 p.c. 25 p.c.	15 p.c. 45 p.c.
499a	Nut shells; nut shell flour, wood flour, bark flour, and mixtures thereof; corn cob granules or flour	Free	Free	20 p.c.	Free 15 p.c.	Free 20 p.c.	20 p.c. 25 p.c.
535e	Vegetable fibres, horse hair, and mixtures of vegetable fibres and horse hair, for use exclusively in the manufacture of brooms and brushes	Free	Free	7½ p.c.	Free Free Free 15 p.c.	5 p.c. Free 10 p.c. 20 p.c.	7½ p.c. Free 17½ p.c. 25 p.c.

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
546a	Woven jute fabric, impregnated, imported in lengths not more than three feet each	Free	5 p.c.	15 p.c.	12½ p.c.	22½ p.c.	30 p.c.
561	Woven fabrics wholly or in part of synthetic textile fibres or filaments, not containing wool, not including fabrics in chief part by weight of silk, n.o.p.	27½ p.c.	40 p.c.	45 p.c.	27½ p.c.	40 p.c.	45 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	40 cts.	40 cts.	.....	40 cts.	40 cts.
	Woven fabrics containing five per cent or less, by weight, of synthetic textile fibres or filaments are not dutiable under this item, but are dutiable as though such fabrics were composed only of the remaining constituents.
569d	(1) Woven fabrics, not exceeding three inches in width, made with unserrated selvages, generally known as single, double or four shot corded ribbon, imported by the manufacturers of men's hats for use exclusively in their own factories in making the bands for, or in binding the edges of, men's hats only	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
					22½ p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	(2) Woven fabrics, pleated or folded, sewn or not, in widths not exceeding three inches after pleating or folding, imported by manufacturers of men's hats for use in their own factories in making bands for men's hats only	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
579	Buffing and polishing wheels or discs: (1) The component of chief value being cotton	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.	25 p.c.	25 p.c.	35 p.c.
	and, per pound	.....	.....	4 cts.	.....	.....	4 cts.
	(2) The component of chief value being wool	10 p.c.	12½ p.c.	35 p.c.	25 p.c.	27½ p.c.	40 p.c. and 35 cts. per lb.
618b	Tires and tubes, wholly or in part of rubber: (1) For equipment of the agricultural implements and agricultural machinery specified in tariff items 409b, 409c, 409d, 409e, 409f, 409h, 409j, 409l, and the tractors provided for in tariff item 409m.	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(2) N.o.p.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.	20 p.c.	22½ p.c.	35 p.c.

660a	Synthetic resin or cellulose plastic sheets or plates, coated or not, with or without turned edges, for the production of engravings for use by printers.....	Free	7½ p.c.	30 p.c.	Free 15 p.c.	7½ p.c. 20 p.c.	30 p.c. 30 p.c.
696	(1) Philosophical and scientific apparatus (and ancillary equipment thereto), utensils, instruments, and preparations, including boxes and bottles containing the same; maps, charts, photographic reproductions and other pictorial illustrations, casts as models, animals as research or experimental subjects; living plants, seeds, cuttings, buds, scions, tubers, bulbs and root-stock; mechanical equipment of a class or kind not made in Canada; parts of the foregoing. All articles in this item, when for the use and by order of any society or institution incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific or literary purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use and by order of any public hospital, college, academy, school, or seminary of learning in Canada, and not for sale or for rental, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
696a	Moving picture films, sound or silent, separate sound film track, slides and slide films, positive or negative; sound discs, records and transcriptions; models, static and moving; wall charts, maps and posters; when certified by a recognized representative authority of the Government of Canada or when certified by the Government or by a recognized representative authority of the Government of the country of production or by an appropriate representative of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization as being of an international educational, scientific or cultural character, subject to such regulations as the Minister may prescribe..	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
703	(c) Goods (not including alcoholic beverages, cigars, cigarettes or manufactured tobacco) imported by employees of the Canadian Government or by members of the Canadian Armed Forces after an absence from Canada of not less than one year and acquired by them for personal or household use and actually owned abroad by them for at least six months before their return to Canada, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe..... Any such goods that are sold or otherwise disposed of within twelve months after importation are subject to the duties and taxes otherwise prescribed.	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free

Tariff Item	—	British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff	Rates in Effect Prior to Rates Proposed in this Budget
					British Preferential Tariff	Most-Favoured-Nation Tariff	General Tariff
704	(a) Apparel, wearing and other personal and household effects not merchandise, of British subjects dying abroad, but domiciled in Canada; books, pictures, family plate or furniture, personal effects and heirlooms left by bequest to any resident of Canada, or acquired by any resident of Canada, as a result of the death of any person resident abroad, or as a gift in anticipation of the death of any such person; all such goods or articles when given as a free gift by anyone resident abroad to a resident of Canada; the Minister to be the sole judge as to whether any goods or any article imported is to be classified as entitled to the benefit of this item or not.....	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free	Free
	(b) Personal gifts, not exceeding twenty-five dollars in value and not including cigarettes, tobacco and alcoholic beverages, from members of the Canadian Forces serving abroad, to relatives or friends in Canada.....	Free	Free	Free	Free Various	Free Various	Free Various
705a	Settlers' effects, viz.: Machines and implements for agricultural purposes, moved by mechanical power, and motor vehicles valued at not more than twenty-five hundred dollars, and boats for fishing purposes, if actually owned abroad by the settler for at least six months before his removal to Canada, and subject to regulations prescribed by the Minister of National Revenue.....	Free	Free	Free	Free Free	Free 17½ p.c.	Free 27½ p.c.
	In respect to motor vehicles valued in excess of twenty-five hundred dollars duty shall be payable only on the amount in excess of twenty-five hundred dollars.
	The said machines, vehicles, implements and boats may not be so entered unless brought by the settler on his first arrival, and shall not be sold or otherwise disposed of without payment of duty until after twelve months' actual use in Canada.

708b	Arms, military stores and munitions of war imported by the Government of Canada in replacement of or in anticipation or actual exchange for similar goods loaned to or exchanged or to be exchanged with the governments of a British Commonwealth country or a foreign country designated by the Governor in Council under tariff item 708, under such regulations as the Minister may prescribe.....	Free	Free	Free	Various	Various	Various
848	(2) Machinery and apparatus and parts thereof (including motive power) and drilling mud, for use in the exploration, discovery, development and operation of potash and rock salt mines and for use in the production of muriate of potash and in the production of crushed and screened rock salt.....	Free	Free	Free	10 p.c. Free Various	22½ p.c. 7½ p.c. Various	35 p.c. 35 p.c. Various
	(3) Seamless, lapwelded and electric welded iron or steel casing, tubing and drill pipe, of a class or kind not made in Canada, used in connection with the exploration, discovery, development and operation of potash and rock salt mines and for use in the production of muriate of potash and in the production of crushed and screened rock salt.....	Free	Free	Free	15 p.c. 10 p.c. Various	22½ p.c. 15 p.c. Various	30 p.c. 20 p.c. Various
	(4) Materials for use in the manufacture of the goods enumerated in tariff items 848 (1), (2) and (3).....	Free	Free	Free	Free Various	Free Various	Free Various

3. Resolved, that Schedule B to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking thereout tariff items 1004, 1008, 1010, 1013, 1019, 1021, 1022, 1024, 1032, 1033, 1037, 1038, 1039, 1048, 1049, 1052, 1061, 1066 and 1068, the enumerations of goods and the rates of drawback of customs duties set opposite to the said items, and by inserting the following items, enumerations and rates of drawback of customs duties in said Schedule B:

Item No.	Goods	When Subject to Drawback	Portion of Duty (not including Special Duty or Dumping Duty) Payable as Drawback
1044	Fire clay fire brick.....	When used by basic producers of iron or steel in the construction or repair of blast furnaces, open hearth furnaces (including checker chambers), electric furnaces, blast furnace stoves, soaking pit furnaces and rolling mill furnaces or in the construction or repair of ladles used with any of the foregoing furnaces.....	99 p.c.
1052	Machinery and precision instruments and apparatus for heat treating, welding, sorting, testing, inspecting or correcting; control panels for use with the aforementioned machinery and precision instruments and apparatus; all the foregoing, either new or used, of a class or kind not made in Canada and all parts thereof, not including consumable tools.	When for use in the plants of manufacturers of automobiles and motor vehicles or of automobile or motor vehicle parts for the manufacture of automobiles and motor vehicles or of automobile or motor vehicle parts.....	99 p.c.

4. Resolved, that any enactment founded upon the foregoing resolutions shall be deemed to have come into force on the seventh day of April, one thousand nine hundred and fifty-four, and to have applied to all goods mentioned in the foregoing resolutions imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on and after that date, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that date.

(See also Budget Papers, pages 3755 to 3844.)

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, "the tumult and the shouting dies", and I think I might add that I have never heard so little applauded so much by so many. The minister has spent an hour and twenty minutes trying to persuade us that this is not a budget of blank negation, but I doubt if he has deceived even himself. I must not forget that if the statements we hear are true, and this should prove to be the minister's last budget, it would be in the highest degree regardless of the amenities and the traditions of the house, if I did not say to him how much we have appreciated his budgets. I do not say by that that we have approved of them. But at any rate we will congratulate him upon whatever he did that was right; though we may not have the same categories as he has. We will also forgive him all his mistakes. And we will all say that, whatever course he follows, he has the good will of all of us.

This has been referred to as his swan-song—but I hope not in any literal sense, because I understand a swan-song coincides with the end of the bird. So I am sure there is nothing of that kind going to happen to the minister.

Now, we have had the old, old story. The minister has come and told us that he has spent $5 billion of our money. First of all it looked to be only a matter of $4,600 million; but then we find that the minister deftly had taken $335 million out of another pocket, hoping that that would cause us less pain. I refer to the old age security payment.

We know what a conjurer the minister is. We know how, on occasions, he has here in the evening made us believe by his skill with figures that there was a tax reduction. But, alas, when the cold grey dawn came next morning, we discovered that it had fled away, and that there was really nothing left. That shows the minister's dexterity with figures.

I would also point out with some interest the minister's statement of four or five years ago. It was made with great skill; and I think it is worth recalling. It is not every man who has his remarks of five years ago recalled. It will be in the memory of all who are here that 1949 was an election year. The year before there had been no reductions, but in 1949 there were reductions. The minister explained it in terms which I thought were rather delightful, and I would like to repeat them. Hon. members will see that it needs the changing of only one word to make it completely accurate.

The minister said:

> Tax reductions last year would have come too early to be of real benefit to the public as a whole.

Let me show the mistake the minister made. What he should have said was, "Tax reductions last year would have come too early to be of real benefit to the Liberal party".

Mr. Abbott: The same thing.

Mr. Rowe: "The same thing", he says.

Mr. Macdonnell: I shall discuss on another day whether we can afford really this luxury of paying $5 billion in taxation, or whether we may find, contrary to what the minister finds, that it is helping to raise our costs to the point where we may find it very embarrassing indeed—as we presently are in the export market.

Now, of course that will not bother the government; because the government have got to the point where they believe nothing can be wrong while they are in power. Mr. Speaker, just look at them. Did you ever see a more, shall I say, self-pleased lot of men?

Mr. Abbott: Handsome.

Mr. Rowe: Complacent.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am going to venture this observation, though perhaps it is not strictly part of my duty—I venture to give them a slogan, a slogan that comes from an extempore prayer, the kind of prayer that is made in the church I belong to, and the church to which some others belong; that extempore prayer is this, and I think you will see how wise it is and how it applies to the present situation: "Lord, if it be possible, help us to be worthy in some measure of the high esteem in which we hold ourselves."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that apparently the government receives this without hostility. And I have even some hope that I may have done something useful for them, though that is an odd thing for me to say.

Now, of course it is easy for the government, particularly in the light of things that have recently happened, to contemplate the situation with considerable equanimity. But it is not so easy for the ordinary citizen. The ordinary citizen on the average—every man, woman and child—pays $329 in taxes, or $1,650 for a family. That is hard enough for a family of five. But if there is ever so little flattening out, anything short of a roaring boom, then it will become much harder.

But, Mr. Speaker, I wish to be fair. You, sir, are always fair, and I am sure you wish us to be fair. And I do not wish to neglect to point out that there was a surplus of $10 million. I was wrong in saying the minister spent $5 billion. He did not spend that: There was $10 million left over, 66 cents for every man, woman and child, if my arithmetic is correct.

Mr. Abbott: It is $4,750 million, not $5 billion.

Mr. Macdonnell: The minister has been trying for an hour and a half to put a good face on things. But, after all, why should we be pleased? What is there for the ordinary citizen to be happy about? Have we any reduction in taxation? Well, you could put it all in your eye. There is, I believe, a reduction of two cents a gallon on ale, beer, porter and stout. The minister shakes his head, but that is my interpretation of it. I am sorry, perhaps there is no reduction: Perhaps it is an increase. Perhaps I am giving him credit where I should not give credit.

Is there a reduction in expenditures? Expenditures are practically the same. Is there any plan for dealing with unemployment? No; the minister has told us that he regrets the unemployment, but that there is really no need to take it too seriously.

Really, we have nothing but a lot of fair words. Nobody has been benefited. I was interested in the minister's saying that he took a liberal rather than a conservative view of things. But I would have been more impressed if I had seen any sign of meeting the situation with action. And I wish to point out the fact that if taxes bear heavily upon the rest of us, what happens to those who are unemployed? They, like the rest of us, are the target for all kinds of taxes—taxes direct, indirect, hidden, open, large and larger.

What does that mean to the unemployed? It means something that the rest of us hardly like to think about. What is the government's attitude towards this? Well, so far as I can take it from what the minister said tonight he has really not changed his attitude since February 11 when he said with regard to unemployment, "I cannot say the situation is serious; I would say it is unpleasant".

Well, that certainly is a conservative statement. And of course, when we come to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), his estimate of the question of unemployment was even more interesting. He dealt with it rather lightly, and told us a bedtime story of one of the unemployed men he met who had his pockets full of money. Well, I hope that has been circulated to all the other members of the unemployed. Then he told us also that in Port Arthur, where he comes from—or used to come from—that quite a lot of people there apparently just sign in on the unemployment roll in between jobs, and that there was quite a large number like that.

But the thing that is most astounding in the government's relationship to this matter is the fact that the government speaks with two voices. You would not allow me, Mr. Speaker, to say that the government is two-faced; but they certainly have two mouths because one department gives an entirely different account of the unemployment situation from the other, and when I say "different" I mean "different" in a big way. According to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg), who I think has an appetite for accurate facts, unplaced applicants on February 20 amounted to 559,000; but at the same time that great institution belonging to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the dominion bureau of statistics, tells us that the number of persons without jobs seeking work was 312,000, about half as many. With this ridiculous discrepancy going on it is no wonder that labour feels that they are in a kind of merry-go-round, and that so far as the dominion bureau of statistics is concerned, what they are getting is not the facts but a bedtime story.

I should like the minister, who I feel has given us a fairly optimistic view of the situation, to go and tell his story to the steel workers down in Nova Scotia. I should like to have him go to the textile workers and to the agricultural implement workers almost anywhere. I should like to have him go and tell these workers that. I think they would find great difficulty in living on his comforting assurances that later in the year things will be better. I think they would ask him: What are you doing? And his story would not be satisfactory.

I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he will go to Marysville and tell the people who are out of work there that all is well. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) who spoke the other evening in Manitoba and said:

> Without having an immediate problem of unemployment ourselves, we Manitobans realize that a high level of Canadian employment helps to create a demand for, and supports the price of, Manitoba products.

You see, he was very decent. He admitted he was part of Canada, and he admitted that what went on in the rest of Canada was of interest and importance. I would like him to look at the figures of unemployment right in Manitoba and say whether he feels he would like to go and speak as blandly as that to them.

I come to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier). I ask him whether he would like to go down to Cornwall and tell them that unemployment doesn't matter very much and that before the end of the year we shall have things better and not to worry too much. I should like to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), with 185,000 persons shown as unplaced applicants in the province of Quebec, whether he would feel happy in going to the city of Quebec and giving them that kind of pleasant encouragement. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) whether he would be prepared to do the same thing in Montreal. I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) whether he would like to go back to his constituency and tell them that all is reasonably well or that they do not need to worry; or if it is not well now, just trust the government and all will be well before long.

I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether the people in Port Arthur are wholly happy in learning that some of the lake fleet has not been commissioned because of the stoppage in the movement of wheat.

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Because the harbour is still frozen.

Mr. Macdonnell: Well, that is not the reason the ships are not being commissioned. The ships are not being commissioned, the minister very well knows, because they think there are no cargoes for them.

Of course the plight of the unemployed would be more tolerable if there had been any possibility of tax reductions; but, as I have pointed out, all the tax reduction that is being made you could put in your eye. Of course the Minister of Trade and Commerce told us all that a little while ago. He announced a very interesting economic theory. He said, as reported at page 2106 of Hansard:

> . . . it was decided that this would be a year to loosen the purse strings—

—and that it was no way to improve the situation in the buyer's market to curtail government investment. In other words, the minister, going against all economic opinion, tells us that reducing taxes was not the way to stimulate the economy, and apparently the Minister of Finance has adopted this view.

We now come to expenditures. The total non-defence expenditures were substantially more than a year ago—$184,000,000 more. There are one or two points I wish to bring attention to particularly. First of all, whereas in the United States they have been able to make big reductions in the civil service, here we cannot do it. We go on from strength to strength in numbers. We do nothing in the way of reducing the number of civil servants, and there seems no likelihood that we shall. Let me take one or two samples of the kind of thing we have in the civil service. Let me refer to the number of economists just as an example. In agriculture we have 55 economists; in trade and commerce, 38; in labour, 30, and in fisheries, 19. In all we have a total of 178. Let me come to librarians. We have 100 librarians; 11 in the national library—that is natural enough; 10 in legislation; 10 in mines; 10 in national defence and so on.

I began by saying that I thought this was a budget of negation, a do-nothing budget, a stand-pat budget, and I have asked what has happened: whether anything has been done in tax reduction, only a trivial amount; whether we have any reduction of expenditures, no; whether we have any plans for dealing with unemployment, no; any plan for reducing the cost of production which is now cutting down our export markets, no. What have we instead? We have the minister's liberal estimates, as he calls it, his confidence that improvement is coming, but no indication of any steps for dealing with the difficulties which now face us.

I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

On motion of Mr. Macdonnell the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: I believe it would be the sense of the house that we now adjourn, and I so move.

Tomorrow we shall take the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 9.40 p.m.

BUDGET PAPERS

presented by the Honourable D. C. Abbott, M.P.,

for the information of Parliament in connection with the Budget of 1954-55

BUDGET PAPERS

FOREWORD

The purpose of these Papers is twofold:

1. to present a general economic review of 1953, bringing together in one place and in convenient form some of the more comprehensive indicators of economic conditions prepared by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and other Government Agencies, together with brief comments;

2. to present a preliminary review of the Government accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1954.

PART I

ECONOMIC REVIEW OF 1953

PAGE

1. National Accounts—
   - National Income and Product 3759
   - National Expenditure 3760
   - Personal Income and its Disposition 3762
   - Source and Disposition of Saving 3765
   - Investment and Capital Expenditure 3767
   - Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments 3770

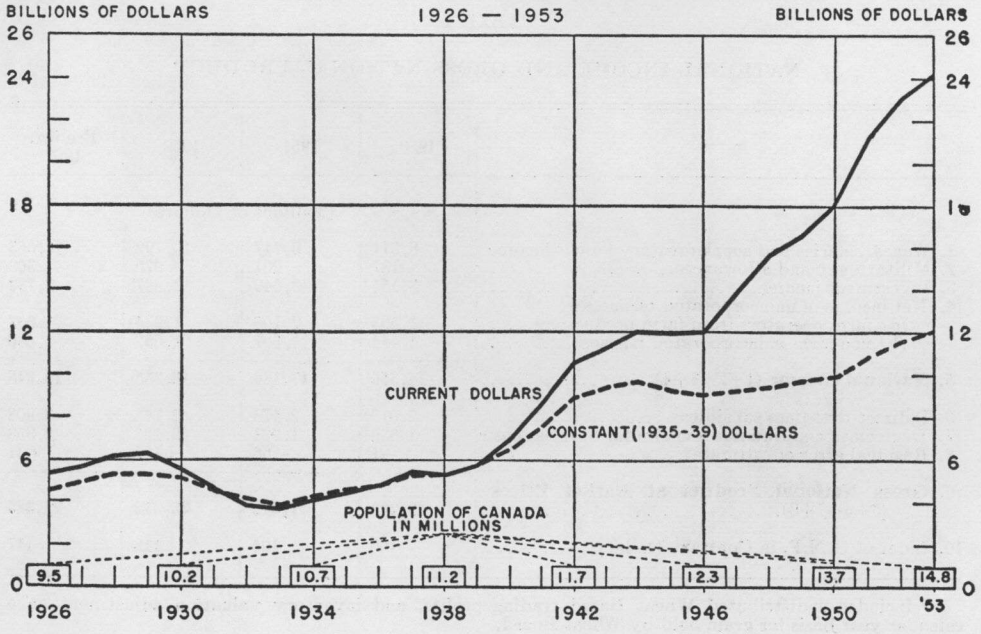
2. Balance of International Payments 3774

3. Employment and Earnings 3778

4. Price Trends 3780

The tables in this Budget Paper are based upon estimates provided by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and other Government Departments. Some of the figures appear for the first time; others have been published elsewhere. All 1953 estimates are preliminary and subject to revision.

THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS



National Income and Product

Preliminary estimates indicate a gross national product of about $24·3 billion for 1953, an increase of $1·1 billion over 1952. In terms of volume or real product it is estimated that the increase amounted to almost 4 per cent. At the same time the population of Canada increased by 2·5 per cent and the civilian labour force by 1·3 per cent.

The gain of something less than 4 per cent in the volume of production for 1953 is not, at first glance, as striking as the gains of about 6 per cent which were made in each of the three years 1950, 1951 and 1952. However, this somewhat smaller gain for 1953 does not indicate any reduction in the growth of non-agricultural output. On the contrary, non-agricultural production increased by about 5 per cent in 1953 which is as high as the increase of 1952. There were substantial volume increases in manufacturing and construction, in mining and public utilities, and in wholesale and retail trade. In fact, with the exception of agriculture and forestry, all branches of production appear to have shown increased output for the year as a whole. But the volume of agricultural production, although still very high in absolute terms, was substantially below the record level of 1952.

The expansion in output was greater in the first half of the year when the volume of manufacturing production was rising substantially. This is well illustrated by the index of industrial production which showed a steady advance throughout the early part of the year and comparative stability, with some tendency to decline, in the last half. The high level of production reached early in the year was fairly well maintained through the third quarter; but the down turn of the fourth quarter brought the index at year end to a level slightly below that of December 1952.

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE
IN CURRENT AND CONSTANT (1935-39) DOLLARS

For the second successive year labour income increased by an amount greater than the total increase in national income. Salaries and wages, inclusive of military pay and allowances, rose by $900 million or 8 per cent compared with an increase of 12 per cent in 1952. Most of the increase was the result of higher rates of pay but there was an increase of about 2 per cent in the number of paid workers. Labour income constituted 63 per cent of national income in 1953, the highest proportion of the post-war period.

Net farm income is estimated to have declined by almost 14 per cent from the level of 1952. More than half of this decline was the result of a reduction in the volume of agricultural production although lower prices also prevailed for many agricultural products. There was a continuance of the trend toward a lower agricultural labour force which has been noticeable for some time. This was particularly true in regard to unpaid family workers.

Net income of unincorporated business other than farming is estimated to have increased by $128 million or about 8 per cent.

Investment income is estimated to have increased by $52 million or somewhat more than 1 per cent. Tentative estimates of corporation profits, the largest component of investment income, indicate a decline of about 3 per cent; but this decrease was more than offset by increases in other categories of investment income such as rents and interest, and by some reduction in dividends paid abroad. This was the second successive year in which corporation profits declined despite large net additions to plant and equipment. However, they were still slightly above the level of 1950.

National Expenditure

During 1953 the volume of Canadian production increased by about 4 per cent. In addition, Canadians drew more heavily on foreign production than in the previous year. Thus, imports of goods and services exceeded exports of goods and services by about $466 million in 1953 compared with an excess of exports over imports of some $166 million in 1952. Taking these two factors

TABLE 1

NATIONAL INCOME AND GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
1. Wages, salaries and supplementary labour income.	8,311	9,717	10,792	11,653
2. Military pay and allowances	137	201	270	309
3. Investment income	3,155	3,649	3,687	3,739
4. Net income of unincorporated business—
(a) farm operators from farm production[1]	1,503	2,106	1,934	1,667
(b) non-farm unincorporated business	1,444	1,507	1,552	1,680
5. National Income (1+2+3+4)	14,550	17,180	18,235	19,048
6. Indirect taxes less subsidies	2,018	2,478	2,744	2,908
7. Depreciation allowances and similar business costs	1,636	1,921	2,126	2,358
8. Residual error of estimate	−1	−66	+107	+31
9. Gross National Product at Market Prices (5+6+7+8)	18,203	21,513	23,212	24,345
10. Index of G.N.P. in Constant Dollars	100	106	113	117

[1] Includes undistributed Wheat Board trading profits, and inventory valuation adjustment on a calendar year basis for grain held by Wheat Board.

into account, the net increase in goods and services drawn from abroad as well as the increase in Canadian production, Canadians used about 6 per cent more goods and services in 1953 than in 1952. About half of this 6 per cent increase in the volume of goods and services used by Canadians was absorbed by increases in personal expenditure on consumer goods and services. Investment in residential construction and in inventories each accounted for about one-fifth of the increase. The remainder was absorbed by the less striking increases in government expenditure and in non-residential construction.

Consumer expenditure rose from $14,424 million to $15,147 million, an increase of $723 million or 5 per cent compared with an increase of $1,126 million or 8 per cent in 1952. The percentage increase in consumer expenditure was no greater than the growth in government expenditure on goods and services and very much less than the expansion of one-third in the volume of residential construction. Nevertheless, in absolute terms, the increase in personal expenditure on consumer goods and services contributed about 50 per cent of the nation's increase in demand and was the largest single element of expansion in the Canadian economy during 1953. This was in contrast to 1952, when an equally powerful forward thrust was supplied by increases in government expenditure; and came about not because of any acceleration in the growth of consumer spending, but because of a levelling off in government outlays for defence. This expansion in consumer spending and the large increase in expenditure on housing, its counterpart in the investment category, are closely related to the substantial relative and absolute increase in labour income which was noted above.

Of the $185 million increase in government expenditure on goods and services in the calendar year 1953, about half was the result of increased defence spending. The increase in defence expenditure was thus about one-sixth as large as the expansion which occurred in 1952. The decline in the relative importance of the increase in government expenditure as a stimulating force in the economy can be seen by comparing it with changes in consumer expenditure. In 1952, for example, the increase in government spending on goods and services was almost equal to the increase in consumer expenditure but in 1953 it was only 26 per cent of the latter.

TABLE 2

GROSS NATIONAL EXPENDITURE

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
1. Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services	12,029	13,298	14,424	15,147
2. Government expenditure on goods and services	2,326	3,243	4,223	4,408
3. Gross domestic investment—
(a) plant, equipment and housing	3,216	3,810	4,265	4,701
(b) change in inventories	960	1,620	241	585
4. Exports of goods and services[1]	4,183	5,089	5,588	5,426
5. Imports of goods and services[1]	−4,513	−5,613	−5,422	−5,892
6. Residual error of estimate	+2	+66	−107	−30
7. Gross National Expenditure at Market Prices (1+2+3+4+5+6)	18,203	21,513	23,212	24,345
8. Index of G.N.E. in Constant Dollars	100	106	113	117

[1] Minor adjustments have been made to the figures of current receipts and payments shown in Table 11 and in "The Canadian Balance of International Payments, 1926 to 1951", Dominion Bureau of Statistics, to achieve consistency with the other component series.

Investment in plant, equipment and housing increased by $436 million, about 10 per cent in terms of value and almost 8 per cent in terms of volume. Almost two-thirds of this increase was in residential construction.

Additions to inventories of farm grain and livestock and grain in commercial channels declined by $120 million in 1953. Business inventory accumulation, on the other hand, showed a large increase since the volume of business inventories rose by about 5 per cent in 1953 while there had been virtually no change for 1952 as a whole. This increase was confined to the first three quarters of 1953, being about 7 per cent for that period. The change from large inventory accumulation in the first three quarters to an inventory decline in the last quarter was much more pronounced than can be accounted for by the normal seasonal movement. In the first three quarters of the year the accumulation of business inventories absorbed almost as much of the increase in the nation's product as did the increase in consumer expenditure, and for the year as a whole it was as large as the increase in capital investment.

Personal Income and its Disposition

Personal income differs from national income in a number of ways. While national income is the total of the annual earnings of Canadian residents from the production of goods and services, personal income is the sum of the current receipts of income regardless of whether these receipts are earnings from production. For example, personal income includes only that part of corporation profits which is actually received by Canadian persons as dividends. On the other hand, transfer payments such as family allowances, old age pensions, veterans' benefits and charitable contributions of corporations, are part of personal income although they are not payments for services and, therefore, do not form part of national income.

During 1953 personal income rose by $951 million or 6 per cent despite a substantial decline in receipts of farm income. As in 1952, this gain in money income represented a significant gain in real income since consumer prices were relatively stable.

TABLE 3

SOURCES OF PERSONAL INCOME

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
1. Wages, salaries and supplementary labour income...	8,311	9,717	10,792	11,653
Deduct: Employer and employee contributions to social insurance and government pension funds.	−256	−329	−357	−386
2. Military pay and allowances.....	137	201	270	309
3. Net income received by farm operators from farm production[1].....	1,402	2,142	1,909	1,642
4. Net income of non-farm unincorporated business....	1,444	1,507	1,552	1,680
5. Interest, dividends and net rental income of persons[2].....	1,295	1,416	1,530	1,654
6. Transfer payments to persons (excluding interest)—
(a) from government.....	1,033	1,033	1,377	1,469
(b) charitable contributions made by corporations.....	25	27	30	30
(c) net bad debt losses of corporations.....	23	25	25	28
7. Personal Income (1+2+3+4+5+6).....	13,414	15,739	17,128	18,079

[1] Excludes undistributed profits of the Wheat Board and an inventory valuation adjustment on a calendar year basis for grain held by the Wheat Board.
[2] Includes all government debt interest paid to persons.

Labour income is the largest component of personal income and comprises almost 66 per cent of the total. Thus, the increase in personal income was due in large measure to the 8 per cent increase in salaries and wages although some other components increased at a comparable rate. Government transfer payments increased by $92 million or 7 per cent, most of the increase being the result of normal growth in family allowances and old age pensions and some increase in unemployment insurance benefits.

Net income of farmers declined by 14 per cent in 1953 but the reduction in farm cash income is estimated at only 4 per cent. This result arose because a much smaller part of the 1953 farm income was kept in the form of increased inventory at year-end. There was some decline in prices of agricultural produce but the decline in volume of agricultural production was a slightly more important factor in the reduction of income. As noted elsewhere, the decline in farm income should be considered in relation to the estimated 4 per cent reduction in the agricultural labour force.

Net income of unincorporated businesses other than farming is estimated to have increased by 8 per cent. Income from interest and rents increased but dividends paid out by corporations are estimated to have declined moderately in line with the reduction in corporate profits.

The pattern of the disposition of personal income was not significantly different than that of 1952. Despite the mid-year reduction in the rate of personal income tax, the increase in personal incomes was sufficient to bring about an increase of 9 per cent in the revenue from this tax.

While disposable income, or personal income after taxes, increased by $842 million, personal expenditure on consumer goods and services rose by $723 million so that there was an increase of $119 million in personal saving. In fact, exclusive of changes in farm inventories, which are to a considerable extent involuntary, personal savings rose by $292 million or about 26 per cent. Some substantial part of this increase in saving can be traced to the 35 per cent increase

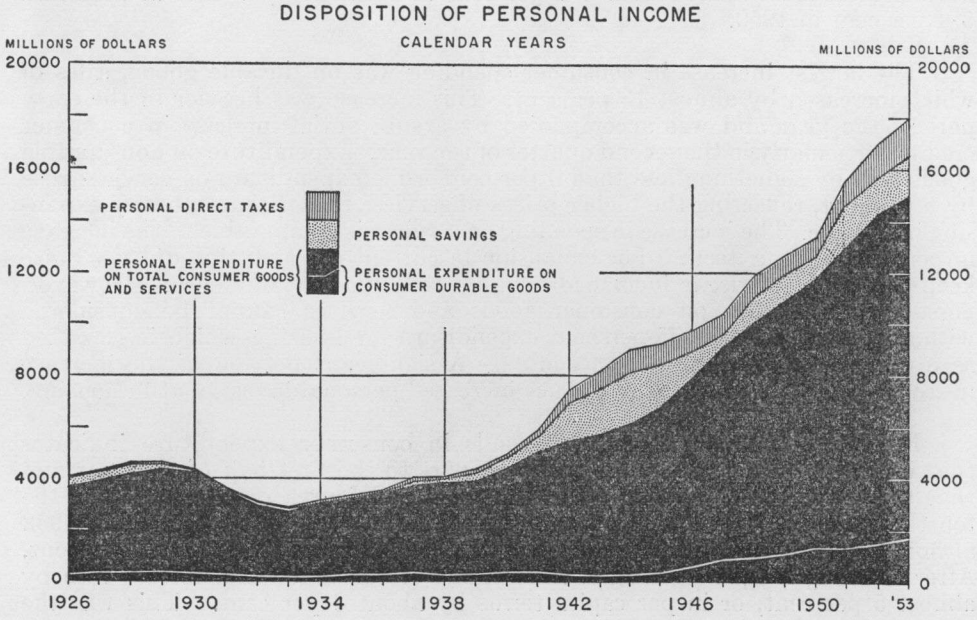

TABLE 4

DISPOSITION OF PERSONAL INCOME

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
1. Personal direct taxes—
(a) income taxes	612	890	1,177	1,287
(b) succession duties	66	69	72	73
(c) miscellaneous taxes	62	71	74	72
Total direct taxes	740	1,030	1,323	1,432
2. Personal expenditure on consumer goods and services—
Goods—
(a) non-durable	7,241	8,001	8,517	8,766
(b) durable	1,343	1,398	1,559	1,759
Services	3,445	3,899	4,348	4,622
Total consumer expenditure	12,029	13,298	14,424	15,147
3. Personal saving—
(a) personal saving excluding farm inventories	514	1,057	1,144	1,436
(b) change in farm inventories	131	354	237	64
Total personal saving	645	1,411	1,381	1,500
4. Personal Income (1+2+3)	13,414	15,739	17,128	18,079

in residential construction since down-payments for housing constitute part of the nation's savings. A further factor in the increase in personal saving is the large element of contractual saving which increases year by year with the steady growth in pension plans, insurance, and the monthly amortization of mortgages on housing. Personal saving constituted 9·0 per cent of disposable income in 1953 compared with 8·7 per cent in 1952, 9·6 per cent in 1951 and 5·1 per cent in 1950.

The largest increase in consumer spending was on durable goods, sales of which increased by almost 13 per cent. This increase was heavier in the early part of the year and was accompanied by a substantial increase in consumer credit, particularly in the second quarter of the year. Expenditure on non-durable goods rose by something less than 3 per cent while expenditure on services rose by 6 per cent, reflecting the higher prices of services rather than a heavy expansion in volume. The increase in spending on services is comparable to the increase in personal income itself. The expansion in current consumption did not quite keep pace with the rise in income although it reflected that influence. However, personal expenditure on consumer goods and services cannot be considered without taking account of personal expenditure for housing which is classified as investment in the national accounts. A significant portion of the increase in savings for 1953 was used to finance increased personal investment in housing.

Examination of the quarterly trends in consumer expenditure indicates that increases were confined for the most part to the first half of the year and that there was some levelling off in the third and fourth quarters. Thus, the fourth quarter of 1953 was less than 3 per cent above the fourth quarter of 1952 although the first and second quarter comparison indicates a gain of 6·5 per cent. After allowing for price changes, the volume of consumer expenditure rose by almost 5 per cent, or in per capita terms by about 3 per cent. This was the second successive year in which substantial gains were made in the volume of consumption without causing a decline in savings, a result made possible by the large increase in real income.

Source and Disposition of Saving

Saving is the source from which investment expenditure is financed. In addition to personal saving, which was mentioned in the preceding section, there is government saving and business saving.

It is estimated that during 1953 the nation as a whole saved $225 million more than in 1952, an increase of about 5 per cent. Both personal and business saving increased but the surplus for all levels of government combined dropped to $136 million, so that government saving was no longer a substantial factor in the total. The amount saved by persons and businesses became relatively more important and constituted about 97 per cent of the nation's total saving compared with 92 per cent in 1952 and 80 per cent in 1951.

TABLE 5

SOURCES OF SAVING

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
Personal saving	645	1,411	1,381	1,500
Gross business saving—total	2,556	2,578	2,804	3,123
(a) Undistributed corporation profits	844	721	673	763
(b) Depreciation allowances	1,636	1,921	2,126	2,358
(c) Net bad debt losses of corporations	−23	−25	−25	−28
(d) Undistributed Wheat Board trading profits and inventory valuation adjustment on grain held by Wheat Board	101	−36	25	25
(e) Inventory valuation adjustment[1]	−2	−3	5	5
Adjusted government surplus (+) or deficit (−)[2]	648	1,049	273	136
Residual error of estimate[3]	−1	−66	+107	+31
Total	3,848	4,972	4,565	4,790

[1] The adjustment has been made only to grain held in commercial channels.
[2] See Table 10.
[3] See Tables 1 and 2.

Personal saving, or the amount set aside from current personal income, is estimated at $1,500 million for 1953—9 per cent of personal disposable income. It constituted 31 per cent of total saving from all sources compared with 30 per cent in 1952. Excluding the change in farm inventories, the increase in personal saving was even more noteworthy, being about 26 per cent greater than in 1952. As noted above, this is closely related to increased expenditure on residential housing and to the continuing growth in contractual saving.

About two thirds of the reduction in government saving was the result of a further decline in the federal surplus, as adjusted for National Accounts purposes.

Business saving is comprised for the most part of amounts set aside for depreciation and of undistributed profits. There was an estimated increase of about 11 per cent in depreciation allowances. Undistributed profits depend not

TABLE 6

DISPOSITION OF SAVING

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
Gross domestic investment—
Housing, plant and equipment	3,216	3,810	4,265	4,701
Change in inventories	960	1,620	241	585
Net increase in foreign assets (including foreign exchange) adjusted[1]	−330	−524	166	−466
Residual error of estimate[2]	+2	+66	−107	−30
Total	3,848	4,972	4,565	4,790

[1] Minor adjustments have been made to the figures appearing in Table 11.
[2] See Tables 1 and 2.

only upon the level of profits but upon taxes and dividend payments as well. The preliminary estimate of corporation profits before taxes indicates a reduction of a little more than 3 per cent for 1953 and this carries the decline in corporate profits, which began in 1952, to about 9 per cent. This decrease in profits has accompanied more normal conditions of supply and demand with a comparatively stable price level. During 1953 there was, however, a substantial drop in corporation taxes because of the reduction in tax rates, so that there has been some increase in the amount of corporation profits after taxes. In addition, it is estimated that dividends paid out were somewhat lower than in 1952, so that some increase in undistributed profits is indicated.

It is estimated that our total payments abroad on current account exceeded our total receipts from abroad by about $466 million and there was, therefore, an increase of like amount in our net foreign liabilities. This was in sharp contrast to 1952 when current receipts from abroad exceeded current payments by $166 million. The movement from a surplus to a deficit in current foreign transactions was much more the result of increased imports than of decreased exports. Imports in 1953 were 9 per cent greater than in 1952 while

TABLE 7

CORPORATION PROFITS, TAXES AND DIVIDENDS

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
Corporation profits before taxes[1]	2,506	2,810	2,640	2,550
Deduct corporation taxes[2]	−981	−1,429	−1,333	−1,174
Corporation profits after taxes	1,525	1,381	1,307	1,376
Deduct dividends paid out[3]	−681	−660	−634	−613
Undistributed corporation profits[4]	844	721	673	763

[1] Includes depletion charges and is adjusted for losses, and for conversion to a calendar year basis.
[2] Taxes paid or payable in respect of the calendar year's income. (See Table 10).
[3] Includes charitable contributions made by corporations. (See Table 3 Item 6 (b)).
[4] See Table 5.

exports were about 3 per cent less. Thus although the level of domestic saving was very high, the nation's expanding requirements were financed to a limited extent by capital inflows from abroad, particularly from the United States. These transactions are treated more fully in the section on the balance of international payments.

Investment and Capital Expenditure

It is estimated that investment in plant, equipment and housing amounted to $4,701 million in 1953 and constituted 19 per cent of gross national expenditure compared with 18 per cent in 1952. The increase for the year was $436 million, 10 per cent in terms of value and 8 per cent in terms of volume. There was a large increase in residential housing which rose by $276 million or 35 per

TABLE 8

GROSS DOMESTIC INVESTMENT

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
Housing, plant and equipment—total[1]	3,216	3,810	4,265	4,701
New residential construction	801	781	786	1,062
Other new construction	1,026	1,260	1,561	1,719
New machinery and equipment	1,389	1,769	1,918	1,920
Change in inventories—total	960	1,620	241	585
Grain in commercial channels[2]	60	—	92	145
Farm grain and livestock[2]	131	354	237	64
All other inventories[3]	769	1,266	−88	376
Gross Domestic Investment[4]	4,176	5,430	4,506	5,286

[1] Includes private businesses and institutions, and publicly owned public utilities.
[2] Value of physical change.
[3] Change in value. Includes privately financed industrial and trade inventories.
[4] See Table 2, Item 3 and footnote to Table 9, p. 15.

cent in value and 33 per cent in volume. The 1953 volume of housing expenditure was about 11 per cent above the previous record level reached in 1950. Non-residential construction, which had shown the largest gain in 1952, rose more moderately in 1953 with an increase of 10 per cent in value and 6 per cent in volume. The estimates indicate that the value and volume of new investment in machinery and equipment were in aggregate practically unchanged from 1952. Declines in investment in farm machinery were offset by gains in trade, finance and commercial services. It should be noted also that while new investment in machinery and equipment did not expand further in 1953, it was already at high levels. Increases in investment in machinery and equipment were large in 1951 because of the expansion associated with defence preparations. In addition, there was a further although more moderate increase in 1952.

In absolute terms the most significant change in investment was the volume increase in business inventories. Whereas business inventories had remained practically constant during 1952, their volume increased in 1953 by about 5 per cent. The effect upon the economy was therefore significantly different than in 1952 when no further charge was made on the nation's productive capacity by demands for increasing inventory. The increase in inventories during 1953 was confined to the first three quarters; and the change from large inventory accumulation in the first three quarters to an inventory decline in the last quarter was greatly in excess of the normal seasonal variation. It should be noted that the build-up of inventories in the first three quarters of the year contributed to economic activity in that period, while the withdrawal of this stimulus in the last quarter coincided with the normal seasonal slow-down and added to its effect. The increase in investment in business inventories for 1953 was somewhat larger than the increase in the volume of residential housing and together they absorbed about 65 per cent of the nation's increase in product.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

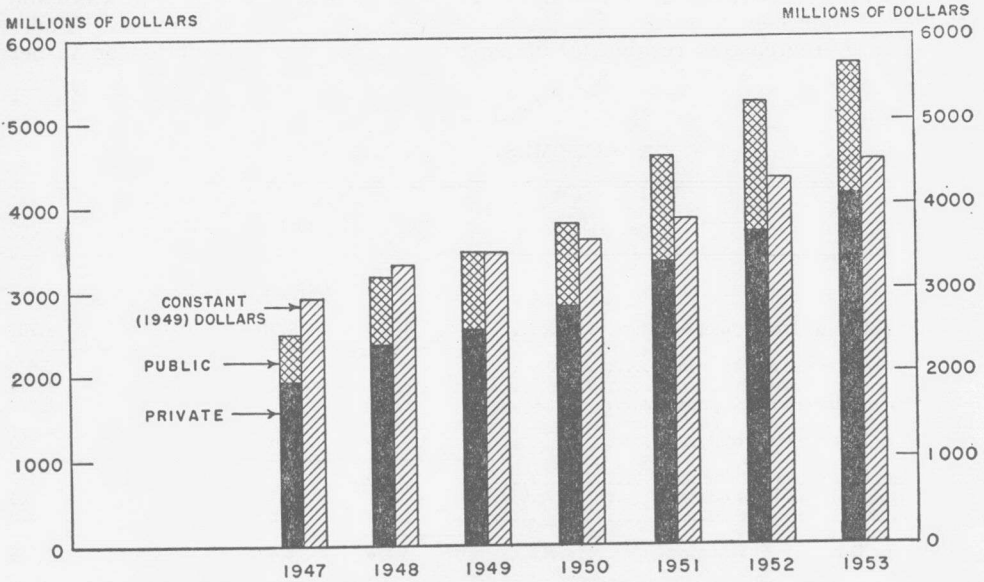

Table 9 gives an industrial distribution of business capital expenditures and brings them together with public capital outlays included under government expenditure in Table 2. The total of public and private capital expenditures increased by $394 million or 7 per cent in 1953. In real terms the increase is estimated at about 5 per cent. This is considerably less than the rate of advance in 1952 when the effects of the increased defence preparedness programme were still in evidence. Moreover, there was a distinct difference between 1952 and 1953 in the categories in which the major increases occurred. While these had for the most part been confined in 1951 and 1952 to increased investment in heavy manufacturing associated with defence, and to the development of strategic resources, the removal of restrictions in 1953 made possible private investment in lines more directly associated with civilian needs. This is indicated by the increased expenditure on housing, commercial buildings, and on retail outlets.

During 1953 the most spectacular increase in capital investment was in the trade, finance and commercial services group, particularly in retail trade. Expansion in these services and facilities generally had not kept pace with the rather rapid growth of the Canadian economy, preponderantly urban in character. The increase in retail store facilities was the most striking. Chain stores, independent stores and department stores spent $189 million on new facilities in 1953, an increase of $70 million or about 60 per cent. There was some decline in capital investment of government departments and this was largely in the federal field and associated with the decline in the rate of creation of new facilities connected with the defence programme. Investment in institutions increased by $23 million, or 8 per cent, the largest increase being in hospitals. In the utilities group there was a fairly heavy increase of 12 per cent in the capital outlays of steam railways and the bulk of this increase was in machinery and equipment. Elsewhere in the utilities group there were some declines.

In the manufacturing group, fairly substantial increases and decreases were in evidence, but the latter predominated. There was a decline of $23 million in iron and steel products, $30 million in paper products and $14 million in chemicals. Food and beverage industries increased their investment by $6 million, transportation equipment by $31 million and non-ferrous metals industries by $8 million.

TABLE 9

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURE

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
Agriculture and fishing	473	515	555	537
Forestry	34	58	39	35
Mining, quarrying and oil wells	119	181	211	280
Manufacturing	502	793	973	940
Electric power, gas and water works	369	440	578	553
Transportation, storage and communications	351	460	581	615
Construction industry	71	66	73	63
Trade, finance and commercial services	397	412	344	480
Institutions	208	236	278	301
Housing	845	821	826	1,086
Government departments	446	595	827	789
Total Capital Expenditure[1]	3,815	4,577	5,285	5,679
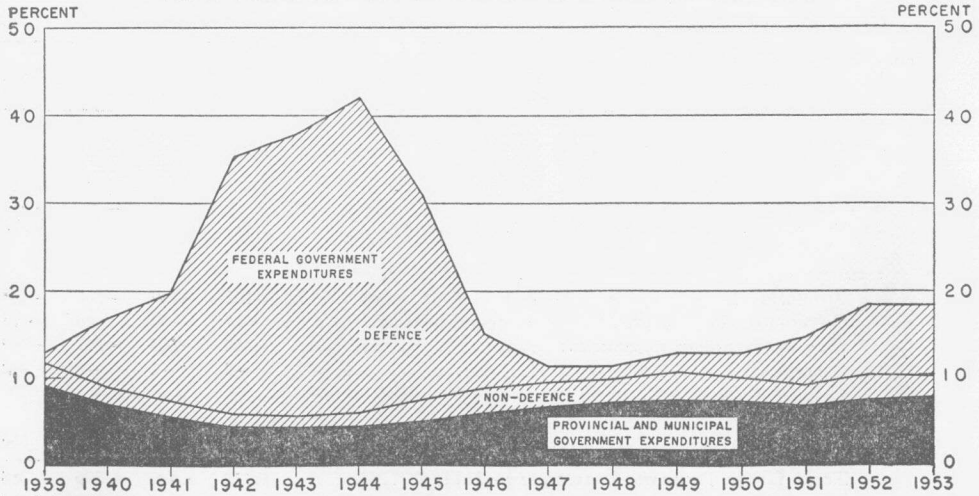
Total Capital Expenditure as a percentage of Gross National Expenditure	21·0	21·3	22·8	23·3
Index of total Capital Expenditure in Constant Dollars	100	107	119	126

[1] For reconciliation with Gross Domestic Investment in Table 8, see below

	1950	1951	1952	1953
PUBLIC AND PRIVATE CAPITAL EXPENDITURE—Table 9	3,815	4,577	5,285	5,679
DEDUCT:
Provincial hospitals and schools, and municipal schools	−107	−130	−150	−163
Government housing excl. C.M.H.C. rental housing	−44	−40	−40	−24
Direct government department outlays	−446	−595	−827	−789
Other	−2	−2	−3	−2
ADD:
Change in Inventories	960	1,620	241	585
TOTAL GROSS DOMESTIC INVESTMENT—Table 8	4,176	5,430	4,506	5,286

Revenue and Expenditure of All Governments



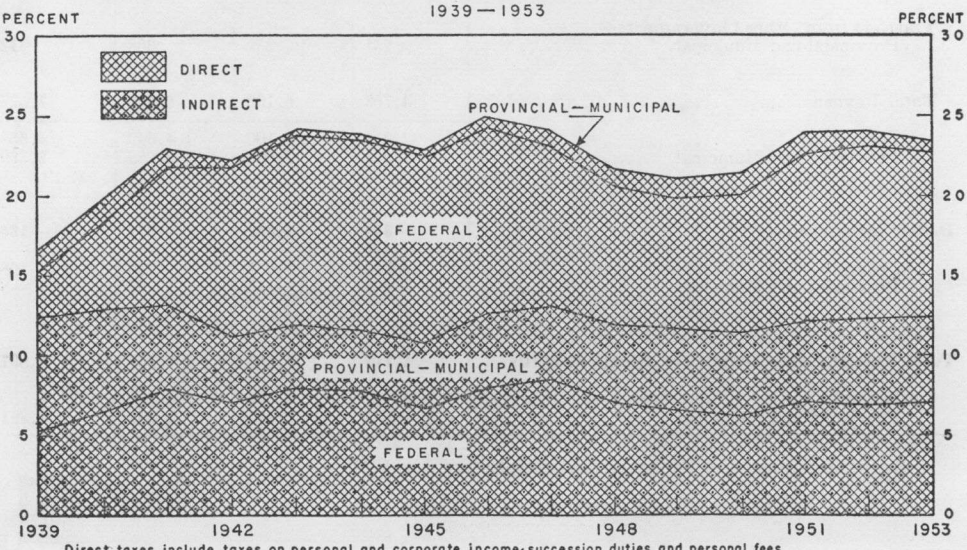
In Table 10 "Government Transactions Related to the National Accounts" an attempt is made to bring together in one statement and under uniform headings, the activities of all governments in Canada on a calendar year basis.

The table is designed to include only those transactions which have relevance for the National Accounts, and consequently the surpluses or deficits shown here differ from those shown in the various public accounts. It has been necessary to adjust the governments' accounting statements of fiscal year revenue and expenditure to exclude certain transactions such as those relating to reserves, write-offs, amortization, and other similar items, as well as the purchase and sale of existing capital assets; and to include the transactions of extra-budgetary funds such as unemployment insurance, old age security, workmen's compensation and government pension funds. Government loans and investments, and debt retirement are not included in government expenditure.

In the federal accounts, some of the more substantial adjustments are as follows: elimination of reserve for possible losses on active assets, elimination of reserve for veterans' conditional benefits, elimination of expenditures charged with respect to shipment from stocks of military equipment to NATO countries, addition of expenditures out of Defence Equipment Replacement Account, elimination of write-down of active assets to non-active account, adjustment of corporation taxes to an accrual basis, inclusion of the change in inventories of government commodity agencies and the Defence Production Revolving Fund and adjustment of interest on the public debt from an accrual to a due date basis. In addition, the federal figures are adjusted to a calendar year basis by using the monthly figures published by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Municipalities are for the most part on a calendar year basis but the provincial figures are based on the provincial fiscal years. The 1953 figures for provincial and municipal governments involve a considerable element of estimation.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES ON GOODS AND SERVICES
AS A PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT



Exclusive of the change in inventories held by its agencies or departments, the federal government's expenditure on goods and services increased by $152 million or 6 per cent in 1953 compared with an increase of $687 million in 1952. This marked slowing down in the rate of expansion of federal government expenditure on goods and services in 1953 was the result of the levelling off in defence spending. For example, while defence expenditure rose by $643 million or more than 55 per cent in 1952, the increase in 1953 amounted to $109 million or a little more than 6 per cent. Nevertheless, federal defence expenditure remained a significant element in the national total, comprising about 8 per cent of gross national expenditure and about 75 per cent of the federal government's expenditure on goods and services. Federal government non-defence expenditure rose by about 7 per cent.

The increase in provincial and municipal expenditure on goods and services is estimated at $129 million or 7 per cent compared with an increase of 13 per cent in 1952. This does not indicate any significant change in the rate of expansion of these services since price rises were a much more important factor in the 1952 increase.

The expansion in federal transfer payments was also much smaller in 1953 than it had been in 1952 so that in this area, as well as in the category of direct expenditure on goods and services, the Canadian economy received much less in the way of a forward thrust. Federal transfer payments increased by $87 million or 6 per cent and this expansion represented in the main the more or less normal growth in family allowances, and old age pensions, together with some increase in unemployment insurance benefits.

Although federal expenditures expanded more moderately in 1953 than in 1952, there was an even smaller upward movement in revenues. There was a rise of about 9 per cent in federal personal income tax collections despite the mid-year reduction in rates which averaged about 11 per cent. The main factor in this increase was the steady rise in salaries and wages. The yield of the corporation tax declined since the effect of the 1953 tax rate reduction was compounded by some decline in profits, the base upon which the tax is levied.

GOVERNMENT DIRECT AND INDIRECT TAXATION
AS A PERCENTAGE OF GROSS NATIONAL PRODUCT
1939—1953

Direct taxes include taxes on personal and corporate income; succession duties, and personal fees.
Indirect taxes include taxes on commodities, services and real property, and business fees.

TABLE 10

GOVERNMENT TRANSACTIONS RELATED TO THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
GOVERNMENT REVENUE—
Direct Taxes—Persons	740	1,030	1,323	1,432
Income—
Federal	612	890	1,177	1,287
Provincial and Municipal	.....	.....	.....	.....
Succession Duties—
Federal	35	35	39	40
Provincial	31	34	33	33
Miscellaneous—
Federal	7	6	7	1
Provincial and Municipal	55	65	67	71
Direct Taxes—Corporations	981	1,429	1,333	1,174
Income—
Federal	835	1,240	1,232	1,107
Provincial	146	189	101	67
Other Direct Taxes—
Withholding taxes—Federal	54	56	55	54
Indirect Taxes	2,081	2,606	2,843	3,017
Federal	1,115	1,495	1,595	1,697
Provincial and Municipal	966	1,111	1,248	1,320
Investment Income	400	453	529	552
Federal	134	164	214	219
Provincial and Municipal	266	289	315	333
Employer and Employee Contributions to Social Insurance and Government Pension Funds	256	329	357	386
Federal	159	214	230	253
Provincial and Municipal	97	115	127	133
Transfers from Other Governments—
Provincial and Municipal	251	259	368	412
Total Revenue	4,763	6,162	6,808	7,027
Federal	2,951	4,100	4,549	4,658
Provincial and Municipal	1,812	2,062	2,259	2,369
Deficit (or surplus−)	−648	−1,049	−273	−136
Federal[1]	−640	−1,039	−216	−128
Provincial and Municipal	−8	−10	−57	−8
Total Revenue plus Deficit (or minus Surplus)	4,115	5,113	6,535	6,891
Federal	2,311	3,061	4,333	4,530
Provincial and Municipal	1,804	2,052	2,202	2,361

[1] For reconciliation with Public Accounts Surplus, see page 3773.

TABLE 10—Concluded

GOVERNMENT TRANSACTIONS RELATED TO THE NATIONAL ACCOUNTS

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
	(Millions of Dollars)
GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURE—
Goods and Services	2,326	3,243	4,223	4,408
Federal—
Defence	493	1,157	1,800	1,909
Non-defence	487	537	669	616
Provincial and Municipal	1,346	1,549	1,754	1,883
Transfer Payments	1,475	1,483	1,845	1,962
Federal	1,020	984	1,400	1,487
Provincial and Municipal	455	499	445	475
Subsidies	63	128	99	109
Federal	60	124	96	106
Provincial and Municipal	3	4	3	3
Transfers to Other Governments—
Federal	251	259	368	412
Total Expenditure	4,115	5,113	6,535	6,891
Federal	2,311	3,061	4,333	4,530
Provincial and Municipal	1,804	2,052	2,202	2,361

	1950	1951	1952	1953
Reconciliation with Public Accounts Surplus:	(Millions of Dollars)
Federal Government calendar year surplus for national accounts purposes	640	1,039	216	128
Adjustments:
Difference between calendar and fiscal year	−122	−300	+367	+24
Difference between corporation tax accruals and government receipts	−140	−161	−8	+130
Revenue items omitted	+73	+67	+49	+91
Reserves, write-offs and similar items omitted from expenditure	−130	−167	−195	−136
Change in inventories of government commodity agencies	−19	−16	+72	−24
Shipment of military equipment to NATO countries, less replacement	−57	−70	−95	−57
Extra-budgetary funds for pensions and social insurance (net)	−56	−144	+27	−30
Adjustment to place debt interest on a "due date" basis	.....	.....	−90	−14
Other adjustments	−58	−37	−95	−88
Federal surplus for fiscal year as per public accounts	+131	+211	+248	+24
	(1949-50)	(1950-51)	(1951-52)	(1952-53)

Federal indirect taxes increased by $102 million or 6 per cent. Almost half of this increase was in customs duties, since the yields from these levies reflected the substantial increase in imports. At the same time the generally high and rising levels of income and spending resulted in a considerable growth in the yield from sales and excise taxes.

Provincial and municipal indirect taxes increased by about 6 per cent. At the provincial level, increased revenue from gasoline taxes accounted for two-thirds of the increase and there was also some increase in the yield of provincial sales taxes.

There was a moderate increase in the importance of indirect taxes in the country as a whole. Thus, for all levels of government combined, indirect taxes exceeded direct taxes by some 13 per cent in 1953 compared with only 5 per cent in 1952.

As indicated above, the moderate expansion in federal expenditure during 1953 was not matched by the rise in revenues so that the federal surplus as adjusted for National Accounts purposes declined by $88 million. During 1952 the greater part of the very large increase in federal expenditure was financed by a reduction from the previous year's level of surplus rather than by revenue increases although the latter were substantial. In 1953 however the further reduction in the surplus was more moderate and the over-all effect of government revenue and spending was, therefore, more neutral despite their higher level. Since revenues and expenditures moved closer to balance, government saving became a negligible factor in the nation's total. The federal surplus was the smallest since 1946. The combined surplus of all provincial and municipal governments is estimated to have declined by about $50 million with revenues and expenditures in approximate balance.

The federal surplus shown for National Accounts purposes differs substantially from the public accounts surplus, not only because of the difference between the calendar and fiscal year, but because of other adjustments made to both revenues and expenditures to make the presentation consistent with figures shown for other sectors of the economy. A reconciliation table has, therefore, been appended to the government table which summarizes the major adjustments.

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

Canada's balance of payments position in 1953 differed in several respects from the position in 1952. The upward trend in the physical volume of imports which became evident in the last half of 1952 continued into 1953 and for the year as a whole, merchandise imports showed a volume increase of about 9 per cent over the previous year. At the same time, the volume of merchandise exports declined by a little more than 1 per cent from the record levels of 1952 and the terms of trade, or the ratio of import prices to export prices, showed some slight deterioration. As a result there was an import surplus of $55 million in 1953 compared with an export surplus of $491 million in 1952. This change in the merchandise trade balance was the major factor in the movement from a current account surplus of $157 million in 1952 to an estimated deficit of some $467 million in 1953.

Merchandise imports rose to $4,207 million in 1953, an increase of $361 million or 9 per cent over 1952. This increase in imports was a reflection of the high levels of investment, industrial activity and consumer spending which characterized the Canadian economy in 1953. There was a significant increase in imports of farm and non-farm machinery, electrical equipment and automotive and other iron and steel products. At the same time the greater volume of imports of consumer goods such as textiles and durables reflected the strong consumer demand and increasing import competition. This stronger demand for imports was spread throughout all categories.

Merchandise exports in 1953 were $4,152 million, down by $185 million or about 4 per cent from 1952. The major decreases were in exports of wood pulp, zinc, automotive products and farm machinery. Increased world supplies in both importing and exporting countries reduced the market for Canadian grains; and exports of wheat, barley and oats were below the record levels of 1952, although they remained above the level of any other post-war year. The fall in prices of wood pulp and zinc had important effects on the total value of these products, while declining farm incomes in the United States and import restrictions in overseas countries affected exports of farm machinery. Newsprint showed a large gain and became Canada's leading export in 1953, while sales of pork, pork products and chemicals to the United States showed a substantial increase.

TABLE 11

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

ESTIMATED CURRENT ACCOUNT BETWEEN CANADA AND ALL COUNTRIES

(Millions of Canadian Dollars)

—	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
CURRENT CREDITS—
Merchandise exports (adjusted)[1]	3,139	3,950	4,337	4,152
Non-monetary gold	163	150	150	144
Travel expenditures	275	274	275	302
Interest and dividends	91	115	142	159
Freight and shipping	284	351	383	340
Inheritances and immigrants' funds	57	77	85	89
Other current receipts	231	249	301	329
Total Credits	4,240	5,166	5,673	5,515
CURRENT DEBITS—
Merchandise imports (adjusted)	3,129	4,097	3,846	4,207
Travel expenditures	226	280	341	365
Interest and dividends	475	450	413	410
Freight and shipping	301	354	375	390
Inheritances and emigrants' funds	61	70	94	90
Other current payments	382	432	447	520
Total Debits	4,574	5,683	5,516	5,982
NET BALANCE ON CURRENT ACCOUNT	−334	−517	+157	−467

[1] Aid to NATO countries under Defence Appropriation Act has been excluded.

ESTIMATED GEOGRAPHICAL DISTRIBUTION OF THE NET BALANCE ON CURRENT ACCOUNT

(Millions of Canadian Dollars)

—	1950	1951	1952	1953[1]
Between Canada and—
United States	−400	−951	−858	−948
United Kingdom	+24	+223	+387	+141
Rest of the Sterling Area	−23	−24	+114	+85
Other OEEC Countries	+108	+223	+332	+255
Other Countries	−43	+12	+182
All Countries	−334	−517	+157	−467

[1] Complete details not yet available.

Another noteworthy feature of Canadian foreign trade in 1953 was a significant change in the direction of exports. Shipments to the United Kingdom and the rest of the Commonwealth, to European countries and to Latin America declined, while exports to the United States increased. As a result, exports to the United States constituted 59 per cent of Canada's total exports compared with 54 per cent in 1952. The fall in exports to the United Kingdom mainly reflects lower sales of wood products and metals while in other overseas countries sales of wheat, barley and automotive products were also down sharply. Exchange difficulties in Brazil were a major factor in the sharp reduction of sales to Latin America.

The change in the direction of imports was less pronounced. The proportion of total imports originating in the United States was about 73 per cent and showed little change from 1952, although their value increased by more than $200 million. Imports from the United Kingdom were greater but there was some decline in the value of imports from other parts of the Commonwealth.

Although the change in the merchandise trade balance was the major factor in the movement to a deficit on current account, the deficit on non-merchandise transactions also widened from $334 million in 1952 to $412 million in 1953, an increase of $78 million. A significant part of this change arose from the settlement of costs incurred in connection with the Korean hostilities, while payments under the Colombo Plan and in connection with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization were also higher. Receipts from freight and shipping were lower while payments rose with the larger volume of imports. The usually large payments balance on dividend account declined somewhat, while the payments balance on travel account was not significantly changed.

Direct investment in Canada and net sales of new Canadian securities abroad amounted to about $560 million in 1953. As in 1952, direct investment, tentatively estimated at $385 million, made up the bulk of this capital inflow. Of this total, approximately three-quarters represented investment in primary industries such as petroleum and mining and related transportation facilities. Provincial and municipal borrowing in the United States accounted for about two-thirds of the new security issues. Movements of short-term and other capital, however, were closer to balance than in 1952 when there was a substantial net outflow.

BALANCE OF INTERNATIONAL PAYMENTS

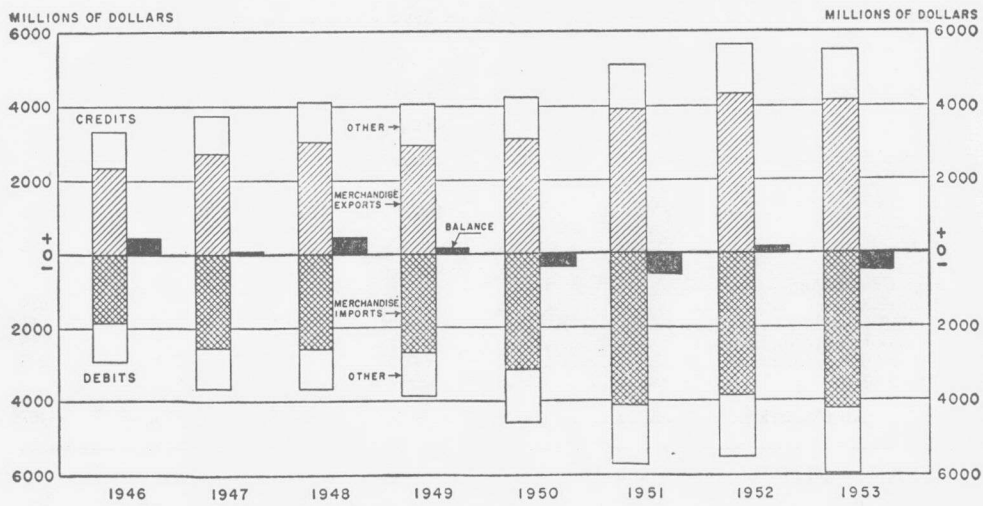

TABLE 12

CANADA'S OFFICIAL HOLDINGS OF GOLD AND U.S. DOLLARS

(Millions of U.S. Dollars)

—	Exchange Fund Account and Bank of Canada		Other Government of Canada Accounts	Total
	Gold	U.S. Dollars	U.S. Dollars	Gold and U.S. Dollars
Sept. 15, 1939	204·9	33·8	22·4	261·1
Dec. 31, 1939	218·0	54·8	33·4	306·2
Dec. 31, 1940	136·5	172·8	20·8	330·1
Dec. 31, 1941	135·9	28·2	23·5	187·6
Dec. 31, 1942	154·9	88·0	75·6	318·5
Dec. 31, 1943	224·4	348·8	76·4	649·6
Dec. 31, 1944	293·9	506·2	102·1	902·2
Dec. 31, 1945	353·9	922·0	232·1	1,508·0
Dec. 31, 1946	536·0	686·3	22·6	1,244·9
Dec. 31, 1947	286·6	171·8	43·3	501·7
Dec. 31, 1948	401·3	574·5	22·0	997·8
Dec. 31, 1949	486·4	594·1	36·6[1]	1,117·1
Dec. 31, 1950	580·0	1,144·9	16·6	1,741·5
Dec. 31, 1951	841·7	899·5	37·4	1,778·6
Dec. 31, 1952	885·0	961·8	13·4	1,860·2
Dec. 31, 1953	986·1	802·0	30·4	1,818·5

[1] Not including $18·2 million in United States dollars borrowed by the Government of Canada in August, 1949, and set aside for the retirement on February 1, 1950, of a security issue guaranteed by it and payable at the holder's option in United States dollars.

There was therefore, a net inward movement of capital, which balanced the deficit on current account without any great change in either the level of official exchange reserves or the external value of the Canadian dollar.

Official reserves of gold and United States dollars were $1,860 million at December 31, 1952, and $1,818 million at December 31, 1953.

A moderate upward trend in the value of the Canadian dollar over the last half of 1953 contrasted with the slow decline evident in the first half of the year. The range, however, was relatively narrow, the United States dollar having moved between $0·968 to $0·998 in the first six months of 1953 and between $0·994 and $0·970 in the last six months. At December 31, 1953, the United States dollar was $0·974 in terms of the Canadian dollar compared with $0·970 at December 31, 1952.

(Millions of Dollars)

Capital Movements	1950	1951	1952	Prelim. 1953
Loans to United Kingdom and other governments—
Drawings	−50	—	—	—
Repayments	+74	+68	+56	+87
Net reduction in the U.S. dollar debt of the Government of Canada (expressed in U.S. dollars)	−50	—	—	−75
Increase (−) in official reserves of gold and U.S. dollars (expressed in U.S. dollars)	−624	−37	−82	+42
Other capital, including exchange adjustments, errors and omissions	+984	+486	−131	+413
Total[1]	+334	+517	−157	+467

[1] Equal in size but opposite in sign to net balance on current account.

EMPLOYMENT AND EARNINGS

Wages and salaries, inclusive of military pay and allowances, are estimated to have reached the record total of $11,962 million for 1953, a gain of $900 million or more than 8 per cent over the previous year. The level of labour income did not, however, advance appreciably beyond the level attained in the second quarter of the year. The seasonally adjusted quarterly figures show a moderate rise of 2 per cent in both the first and second quarters with very little further increase in the third and fourth quarters. This is in sharp contrast to the year 1952 when the nation's payroll continued to rise throughout the year and was 7 per cent higher in the fourth quarter than it had been in the first.

As in 1952, this rise in money income resulted in a substantial gain in real income or purchasing power since prices were comparatively stable. For the two years 1952 and 1953, the rise in labour income has been about 21 per cent while the consumer price index has increased by less than 2 per cent and the number of paid workers by 6 per cent. 1953 was the second successive year in which the proportion of national income accruing to labour showed a substantial increase. Thus, labour income constituted 63 per cent of national income in 1953 compared with 61 per cent in 1952 and 58 per cent in each of the years 1950 and 1951.

The increase in labour income was common to all the broad industrial categories with the exception of the primary industries. The largest increase was in the construction industry where the total wages and salaries paid exceeded the 1952 aggregate by 12 per cent but this gain did not approach the expansion of 21 per cent recorded in the previous year. Earnings in the other main groups, including manufacturing, utilities, trade, finance and other services, increased in about the same proportion as the overall gain in labour income, that is, in the range of some 8 to 9 per cent. On the other hand, labour income in the primary industries showed a decline of some 3 per cent, largely because of a decline in income from logging activities.

TABLE 13

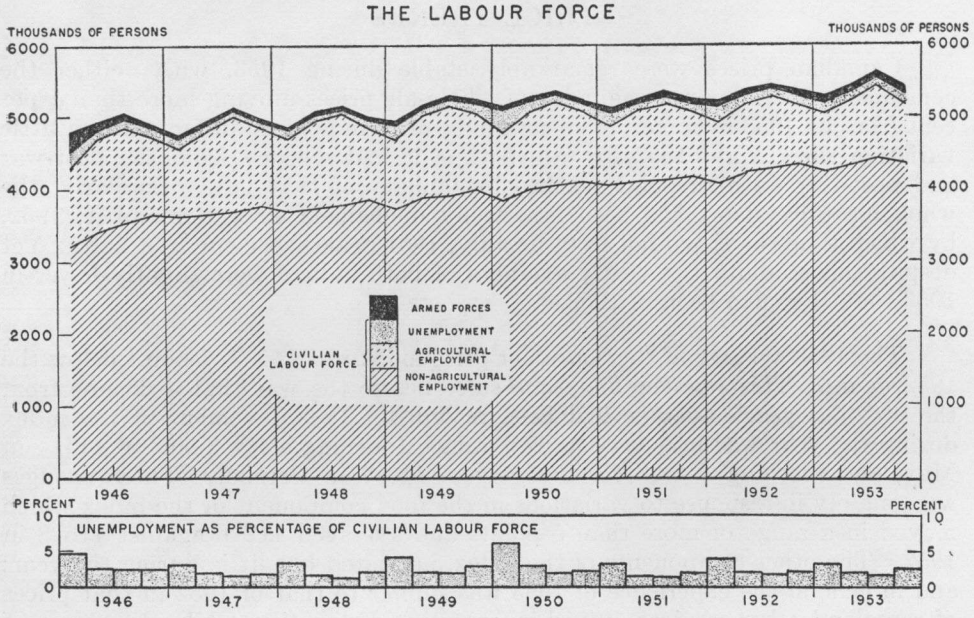
THE CIVILIAN LABOUR FORCE

ANNUAL AVERAGES[1]

(Thousands of Persons)

—	1950[2]	1951[2]	1952[2]	1953
Civilian Labour Force	5,106	5,160	5,257	5,325
Male	4,006	4,026	4,091	4,152
Female	1,100	1,134	1,166	1,173
Non-Agricultural	4,094	4,227	4,371	4,472
Agricultural	1,012	933	886	853
Persons without jobs and seeking work	164	104	128	136
Persons with jobs	4,942	5,056	5,129	5,189
In Non-Agricultural Industries	3,935	4,126	4,247	4,340
Paid Workers	3,394	3,596	3,731	3,811
Employers, own account workers and unpaid family workers	541	530	516	529
In Agriculture	1,007	930	882	849
Paid workers	107	98	110	112
Employers, own account workers and unpaid family workers	900	832	772	737

[1] Average of the quarterly labour force surveys in 1950, 1951 and 1952 and of the monthly surveys in 1953.



[2] Revised.

During 1953 there was an increase of 82,000 in the number of paid workers. Thus, the 8 per cent rise in labour income amounted to about 6 per cent when calculated on the basis of earnings per worker. The annual average earnings per paid worker rose by about $160 to $2,970. As in the previous year, this increase was possible because higher hourly rates of pay more than offset the effect of a fractionally shorter working week. In 1953, hours worked in manufacturing averaged 41·3 per week compared with 41·5 a year earlier, while hourly rates of pay rose from $1.32 in December, 1952, to $1.38 in December, 1953.

Employment conditions improved in the first three quarters of the year 1953. However, this improvement was not maintained at year-end and in the latter months of the year there was a decline from the very high levels of employment which had characterized 1953 up to that time. This was in contrast to the experience of 1952 in which, partly because of abnormally favourable climatic conditions, employment conditions had been very satisfactory at year-end although the beginning of the year was marked by some hesitation.

In addition to the increase in the number of persons with jobs in the first three quarters of 1953, there was, as in 1952, a decline in the number of persons working short-time. The number of persons working short-time averaged 91,000 less than in 1952 with the principal improvement in this regard occurring in the first two or three quarters of the year.

Persons without jobs and seeking work averaged 136,000 in 1953 compared with 128,000 in 1952. In both years the figure amounted to 2·5 per cent of the labour force. For the greater part of 1953 unemployment was lower than in 1952. However, the number of persons without jobs and seeking work rose to 190,000 in December, 1953, compared with 131,000 for the same month in 1952. This trend continued into January and February of 1954, in which months the figures stood at 280,000 and 312,000 respectively, or 93,000 and 133,000 above the levels of the comparable months in 1953.

To some extent the increased unemployment has been due to more severe climatic conditions than those which obtained in the exceptionally open winter months of 1952-53. At the same time, however, certain changes have been taking place in the economy, as receding inflationary forces allowed increased competition to make itself felt in a number of industries. Thus, while by far the largest share of the increased unemployment was accounted for by construction, logging and lumbering activities, widely scattered increases were noted in almost all fields, with clerical, transportation, metal-working, textile, and miscellaneous activities being the groups most particularly affected.

The civilian labour force, which includes both the employed and the unemployed, averaged 5,325,000 for 1953, an increase of 68,000, or a little more than 1 per cent over 1952. This increase of 68,000 in the labour force was accompanied by a rise of 60,000 in average employment. The number of persons employed in non-agricultural industry continued to rise while the number of those with jobs in agriculture is estimated to have declined by 33,000 in 1953. This compares with the previous year's decline of 48,000 in the number of agricultural workers and marks a continuation of the shift from rural to urban occupations.

In addition to the civilian labour force there were 106,000 men and women in the Armed Forces in 1953, compared with 98,000 in 1952. The percentage of the non-institutional civilian population over 14 years of age in the civilian labour force continued to decline slightly, and was 53·1 per cent in 1953 compared with 53·4 per cent in 1952.

During 1953 industrial disputes were much less prevalent than in the preceding year; the total of 1,322,900 working days lost in this way was less than half the 2,880,000 man working days lost in 1952.

PRICE TRENDS

Canadian prices were remarkably stable during 1953, with neither the consumer price index nor the index of wholesale prices moving more than 1 per cent from its 1953 average. The consumer price index has, in fact, shown little variation since May, 1952, by which time it had receded from the post-war and post-Korean high point reached in January of that year. Similarly, the wholesale price index has been practically unchanged since September, 1952, by which time the sharp fall from its July, 1951 peak had come to a halt. Yet despite this stability the yearly averages of both indices were slightly lower in 1953 than they had been in 1952.

The 1953 average of the consumer price index was 115·5, 1 point below the 1952 figure. This was the first time since before the war that a decline from the previous year's average had been recorded. The movement of the index during the year was in a very narrow range, touching a low point of 114·4 in May, and reaching a high for the year of 116·7 in October. These changes were mainly in response to variations in the food component of the index which moved in a range of more than 5 points and averaged 112·6 against 116·8 in 1952. The other components of the index fluctuated but little during the year; and in general the experience of 1953 was similar to that of 1952 in that prices of rents and other services moved in an upward direction while the prices of

CANADIAN WHOLESALE AND CONSUMER PRICE INDEXES

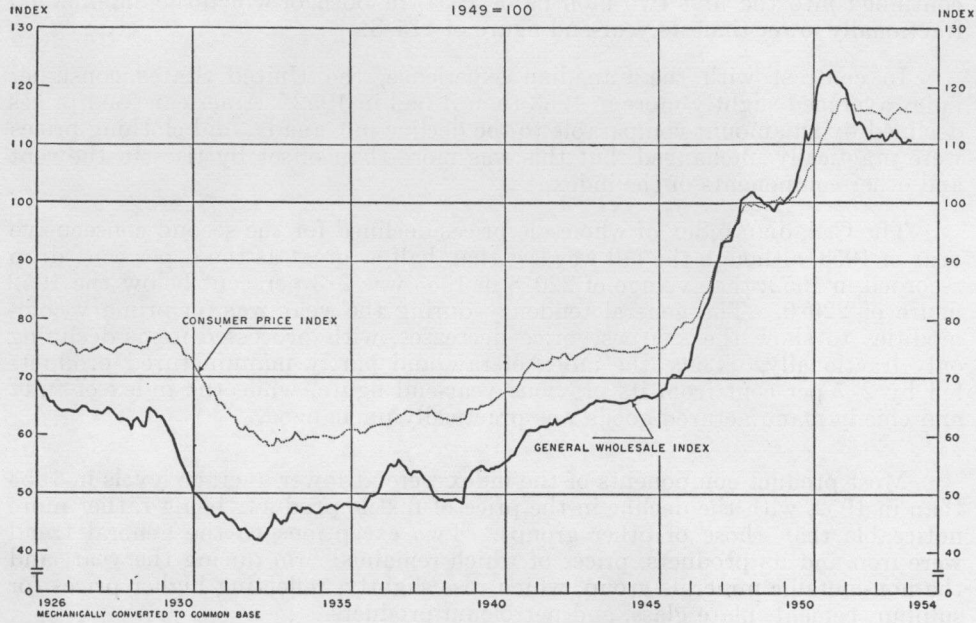


TABLE 14

WHOLESALE PRICE INDEXES

(1935-39=100)

—	General Wholesale Prices	Fully and Chiefly Manufactured Goods	Canadian Farm Products
1939	99·2	101·9	92·6
1940	108·0	109·9	96·1
1941	116·4	118·8	106·6
1942	123·0	123·7	127·1
1943	127·9	126·9	145·4
1944	130·6	129·1	155·3
1945	132·1	129·8	166·4
1946	138·9	138·0	179·5
1947	163·3	162·4	192·2
1948	193·4	192·4	232·1
1949	198·3	199·2	228·7
1950	211·2	211·0	236·7
1951	240·2	242·4	268·6
1952	226·0	230·7	250·2
1953	220·8	229·1	219·5
1953—January	221·5	229·0	234·0
February	220·9	228·8	229·9
March	221·9	229·2	228·1
April	219·6	227·9	221·7
May	220·1	228·3	224·2
June	221·7	230·4	226·6
July	221·2	229·6	226·5
August	222·4	230·1	213·6
September	221·5	230·2	208·9
October	220·7	230·0	208·5
November	218·8	228·1	204·9
December	219·0	227·6	206·8
1954—January	219·8	227·8	209·4
February	219·0	227·3	208·8

Note: 1953 Indexes are preliminary. The Canadian Farm Products index is revised up to July but reflects initial rather than final payments for subsequent months.

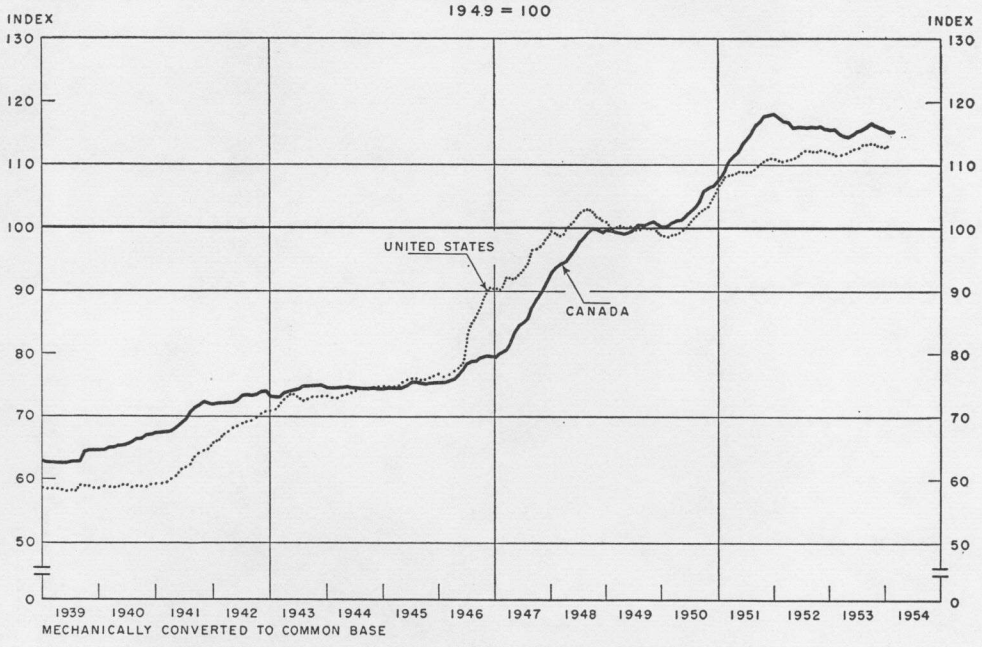
foods tended to be lower. The notable stability of the consumer price index continued into the first two months of 1954, in both of which the index stood fractionally lower than its year-end figure of 115·8.

In contrast with the Canadian experience, the United States consumer index averaged slightly more in 1953 than it had in 1952. American food prices declined by an amount comparable to the decline in Canada, and clothing prices were practically unchanged, but this was more than offset by rises in the rent and other components of the index.

The Canadian index of wholesale prices declined for the second consecutive year in 1953, although the fall was less than half as great as the 6 per cent drop recorded in 1952; the average of 220·8 in 1953 was 2·3 per cent below the 1952 figure of 226·0. The general tendency during the year was for primary commodities to show the sharpest price decreases, with processed items declining only fractionally. Thus, the index of raw and partly manufactured products fell by 2·7 per cent from its previous year-end figure, while the index of fully and chiefly manufactured goods was practically unchanged.

Most product components of the index were at lower average levels in 1953 than in 1952, with the decline in the price of textile products being rather more noticeable than those of other groups. Two exceptions to the general trend were iron and its products, prices of which remained firm during the year, and the non-metallic minerals group, which rose slightly, reflecting higher prices for sulphur, cement, plate glass, and petroleum products.

TABLE 15



CONSUMER PRICE INDEXES

—	Canada		United States
	Total	Food	Total	Food
	1949=100		1947-49=100
1939	63·2	50·2	59·4	47·1
1940	65·7	52·6	59·9	47·8
1941	69·6	57·9	62·9	52·2
1942	72·9	63·4	69·7	61·3
1943	74·2	65·2	74·0	68·3
1944	74·6	65·5	75·2	67·4
1945	75·0	66·3	76·9	68·9
1946	77·5	70·0	83·4	79·0
1947	84·8	79·5	95·5	95·9
1948	97·0	97·5	102·8	104·1
1949	100·0	100·0	101·8	100·0
1950	102·9	102·6	102·8	101·2
1951	113·7	117·0	111·0	112·6
1952	116·5	116·8	113·5	114·6
1953	115·5	112·6	114·4	112·8
1953—January	115·7	113·5	113·9	113·1
February	115·5	112·7	113·4	111·5
March	114·8	111·6	113·6	111·7
April	114·6	110·9	113·7	111·5
May	114·4	110·1	114·0	112·1
June	114·9	111·4	114·5	113·7
July	115·4	112·7	114·7	113·8
August	115·7	112·8	115·0	114·1
September	116·2	114·0	115·2	113·8
October	116·7	115·5	115·4	113·6
November	116·2	113·4	115·0	112·0
December	115·8	112·1	114·9	112·3
1954—January	115·7	111·6	115·2	113·1
February	115·7	111·7	—	—

Despite the steadiness of the general price level, prices of individual commodities showed somewhat more variation in 1953 than they have in recent years. Demand, although still strong, became more selective, while at the same time shortages ceased to be the rule on the supply side. Relative, rather than general, demand and supply conditions became more important in the year just ended, and many commodity prices moved in opposite directions during the year. On the higher side were pork and pork products, cocoa, coffee, pig-iron, and copper, while beef, rubber, steel scrap, lead, and zinc were among those which moved lower.

The over-all stability of the index of wholesale prices in Canada in 1953 was closely matched by the experience of the United States and the United Kingdom. Wide variations in individual commodity prices, and a tendency for the index as a whole to move somewhat lower, were noticeable in all three countries during the year.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEXES

PART II

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS 1953-54

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	PAGE
1. Introduction	3786
2. Highlights of Governmental Financial Operations during 1953-54	3786
3. Budgetary Accounts	3787
A. Revenues	3789
B. Expenditures	3797
4. The Cash Position	3815
5. Estimated Summary of Assets and Liabilities at March 31, 1954	3818
A. Changes in Principal Liability Classifications during 1953-54	3819
B. Changes in Principal Active Asset Classifications during 1953-54	3824
C. Decrease in Net Debt	3829
6. The Public Debt	3830
7. Supplementary Detailed Tables	3837

PART II

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT ACCOUNTS

1953–54

1. INTRODUCTION

Although the Government's fiscal year ended on March 31, the figures which are presented in this Part must be regarded as preliminary and subject to revision for the books must remain open for several weeks in order to record various adjusting entries and to take into account all payments up to and including April 30 made on account of expenditures originating in and properly chargeable to the fiscal year 1953-54. Consequently it is to be expected that the final figures when they become available next August will show some variations from those given in the following pages.

2. HIGHLIGHTS OF GOVERNMENTAL FINANCIAL OPERATIONS DURING 1953-54

The budgetary revenues of the Government for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954 are now estimated at $4,400 million. This is $73 million or about 1½ per cent less than the amount of $4,473 million forecast in last year's budget speech and approximately $39 million more than the total collected in the preceding year.

Budgetary expenditures are estimated at $4,390 million, which is $72 million or 1½ per cent less than the budget forecast and about $53 million more than the total spent in 1952-53.

On the basis of these figures the indicated surplus is about $10 million compared with the budget forecast of $11 million for the year and with $24 million for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1953.

On the revenue side of the Government's budgetary operations, the most significant feature was the continued buoyancy of the revenues, which despite the tax reductions announced in the 1953 budget, were the largest on record. Direct taxes, which include personal and corporation income taxes declined by $35 million, but this decrease was more than offset by increases of $47 million in indirect taxes (due largely to excise taxes and customs import duties) and of $37 million in non-tax revenues.

On the expenditure side, the most noteworthy feature was the continued importance of defence in the Government's expenditure programme. In 1953-54, defence expenditures were $1,890 million or approximately 43 per cent of the total budgetary expenditures for the year. This is approximately $82 million or about 4 per cent less than the corresponding total in the preceding year when defence expenditures constituted 45 per cent of the Government's total budgetary outlay.

Although the budgetary surplus was $10 million, the Government made loans, advances and other non-budgetary disbursements of about $429 million, and at the same time reduced the amount of its unmatured funded debt outstanding in the hands of the public by approximately $273 million. The manner in which this has been achieved can be understood more readily by taking an over-all view of the Government's cash transactions for the fiscal year.

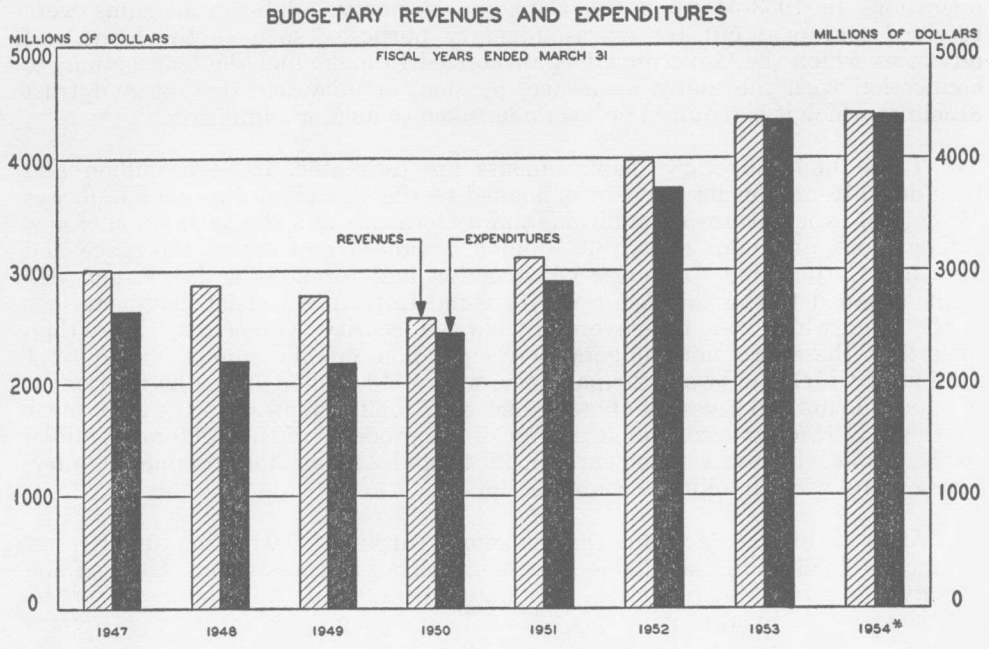
As explained in the section on "The Cash Position", the budgetary surplus of $10 million for the fiscal year does not measure the full impact of Government operations in 1953-54 upon the Canadian economy. Substantial sums were received and paid out for extra-budgetary purposes, such as the loans and advances which the Government is authorized to make and the transactions in connection with the many insurance, pension, annuity and deposit and trust accounts which it is required or has undertaken to hold or administer.

These non-budgetary disbursements are estimated at $429 million and include $146 million invested in or loaned to the Canadian National Railways for capital expenditures on additions and betterments and the acquisition of new rolling stock and equipment, $93 million advanced to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for house construction and for housing loans, and $45 million loaned to the Old Age Security Fund to finance pension payments out of the Fund which were not covered by old age security tax receipts. More than offsetting these are non-budgetary receipts and credits amounting to $811 million of which the two principal items were $446 million from the repayment of sundry loans and investments (of which $147 million represents the repayment by the C.N.R. of government loans out of the proceeds of the $200 million loan to the public which was issued early in 1954); and $365 million from net annuity, pension and other liability account receipts.

After taking into account the budgetary surplus of $10 million and the net balance of $383 million available from non-budgetary transactions, $393 million was available for debt reduction. Unmatured funded debt in the hands of the public decreased by approximately $273 million during the year, and the Government's year end cash balances increased by $120 million.

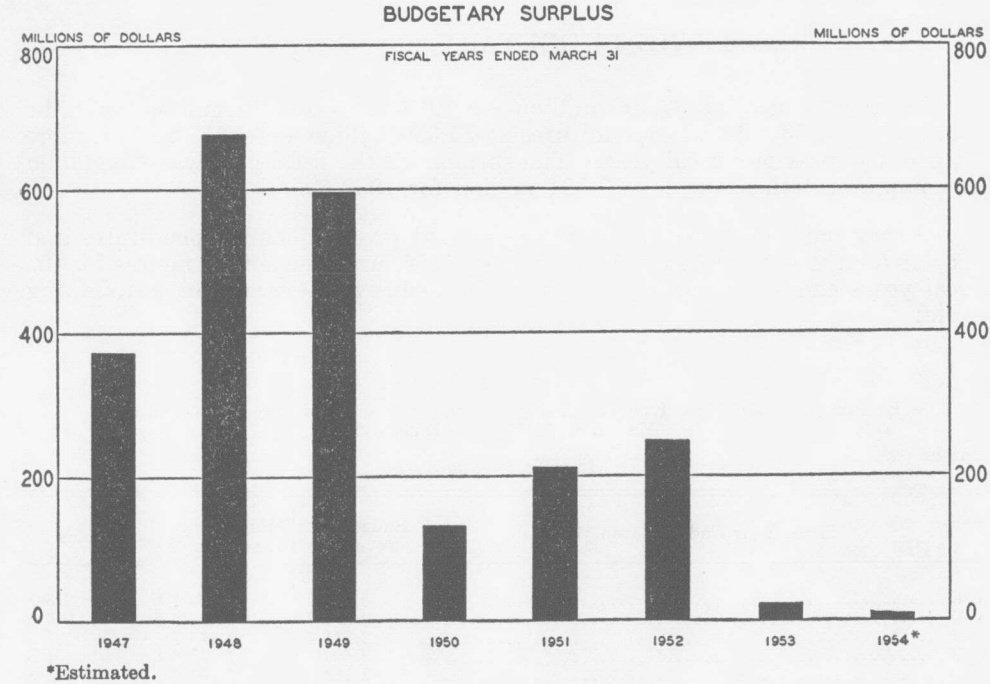
3. THE BUDGETARY ACCOUNTS

Total revenues, at $4,400 million for 1953-54, were $39 million over the total for 1952-53. Total expenditures at $4,390 million were $53 million more than in the previous fiscal year. The surplus for the fiscal year was $10 million as compared with a surplus of $24 million for 1952-53.



A summarized statement of the estimated revenues and expenditures and surplus for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954, with the actual figures for the fiscal years ended March 31, 1947 to 1953, inclusive, is given in the following table:

TABLE I



BUDGETARY REVENUES, EXPENDITURES AND SURPLUS FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1947 TO 1954 INCLUSIVE

(In millions of dollars)

Fiscal Year Ended March 31	Budgetary Revenues	Budgetary Expenditures	Surplus
1947	3,007·9	2,634·2	373·7
1948	2,871·7	2,195·6	676·1
1949	2,771·4	2,175·9	595·5
1950	2,580·1	2,448·6	131·5
1951	3,112·5	2,901·2	211·3
1952	3,980·9	3,732·9	248·0
1953	4,360·8	4,337·3	23·5
1954 (Estimated)	4,400·1	4,390·0	10·1

*Estimated.

*Estimated.

A. Analysis of Revenues

Total budgetary revenues amounted to $4,400·1 million in the fiscal year 1953-54 and were $39·3 million or about 1 per cent higher than the previous record of $4,360·8 million received in 1952-53. Of the total revenues for the fiscal year $2,476·7 million or 56·3 per cent were derived from direct taxes, $1,532·3 million or 34·8 per cent from indirect taxes and the remaining $391·1 million or 8·9 per cent from non-tax revenues and special receipts and credits.

A statement of estimated revenues for 1953-54 classified by major categories, and the corresponding actual figures for 1952-53 is given in Table II.

TABLE II

Statement of Budgetary Revenues by Major Classifications for the Fiscal Years Ended March 31, 1954 and March 31, 1953

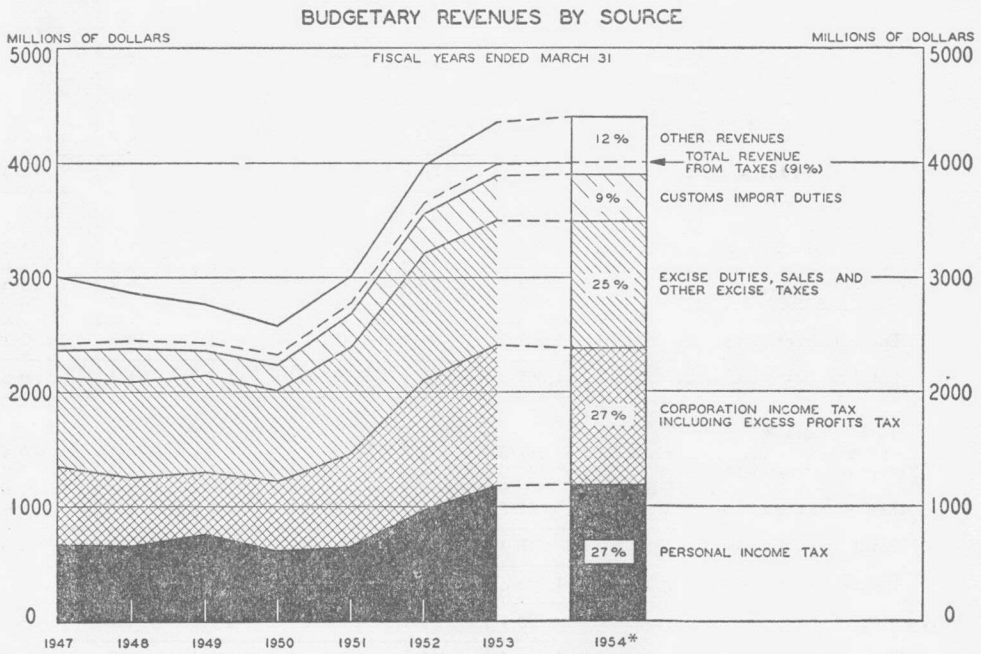
(In millions of dollars)

Source	Fiscal Year Ended March 31				Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)		1953
	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent
Ordinary revenues—
Direct taxes—
Personal income tax*	1,189·3	27·0	1,180·0	27·1	9·3	0·8
Taxes on interest, dividends, etc., going abroad	54·0	1·2	53·7	1·2	0·3	0·6
Corporation income tax*	1,193·4	27·2	1,240·1	28·4	−46·7	−3·8
Succession duties	40·0	0·9	38·1	0·9	1·9	5·0
Total direct taxes	2,476·7	56·3	2,511·9	57·6	−35·2	−1·4
Indirect taxes—
Customs import duties	408·0	9·3	389·4	8·9	18·6	4·8
Excise duties	228·0	5·2	241·4	5·6	−13·4	−5·6
Excise taxes*	882·0	20·0	841·9	19·3	40·1	4·8
Other taxes	14·3	0·3	13·0	0·3	1·3	10·0
Total indirect taxes	1,532·3	34·8	1,485·7	34·1	46·6	3·1
Total tax revenues	4,009·0	91·1	3,997·6	91·7	11·4	0·3
Non-tax revenues—
Post Office	111·5	2·5	111·9	2·6	−0·4	−0·4
Return on investments	147·5	3·4	116·9	2·7	30·6	26·2
Premium, discount and exchange	3·9	0·1	1·5	.....	2·4	160·0
Other non-tax revenues	54·5	1·2	49·8	1·1	4·7	9·4
Total non-tax revenues	317·4	7·2	280·1	6·4	37·3	13·3
Total ordinary revenues	4,326·4	98·3	4,277·7	98·1	48·7	1·1
Special receipts and credits	73·7	1·7	83·1	1·9	−9·4	−11·3
Total revenues	4,400·1	100·0	4,360·8	100·0	39·3	0·9

* Excluding tax credited to Old Age Security Fund—

	1953-54	1952-53
2% personal income tax	90·7 million	45·2 million
2% corporation income tax	55·6 "	36·9 "
2% sales tax	147·7 "	141·6 "
	294·0 "	223·7 "

(1) Direct Taxes



Tax on Personal Incomes

Personal income tax (excluding the old age security tax) yielded a total of $1,189·3 million in 1953-54, an increase of $9·3 million or 0·8 per cent over the previous year. Deductions at the source from salary and wages since July 1, 1953, have been made at rates averaging about 11 per cent less than those applicable in the corresponding period of 1952-53. In addition, that part of personal income tax revenue which is paid in quarterly instalments, and as balances with returns, has been based in 1953-54 on lower rates than in the previous year. The effect of these two factors however has been more than offset by the increase in personal incomes during the year.

In addition the 2 per cent tax on personal incomes levied under the Old Age Security Act yielded an estimated amount of $90·7 million during 1953-54 compared with $45·2 million in 1952-53. These collections were credited to the Old Age Security Fund.

Taxes on Interest, Dividends, Rents and Royalties Going Abroad

Revenues under this heading are derived from withholding taxes on payments of interest, dividends, rents and royalties made to non-residents. The estimated total of $54 million compares with $53·7 in 1952-53.

* Estimated.

Corporation Income Tax

Corporation income tax (excluding the old age security tax) yielded revenues of $1,193·4 million in 1953-54, a decrease of $46·7 million or 3·8 per cent from the previous year's total of $1,240·1 million. While this decrease is due partly to the fact that corporate profits in 1953 were somewhat less than in 1952 it is attributable mainly to the reduction in rates of tax announced in the 1953 budget, applicable to profits earned after January 1, 1953. The 1953 budget imposed rates of 18 per cent on the first $20,000 of profits and 47 per cent on profits in excess of $20,000; the former rates had been 20 per cent on the first $10,000 of profits and 50 per cent on profits in excess of $10,000. Also, in 1953 the allowable deduction from federal tax of 5 per cent of taxable income earned in the Province of Quebec was increased to 7 per cent.

The total revenue from corporation income tax includes $9 million paid by corporations paying the 15 per cent tax on their undistributed income. This compares with $10·2 million collected from this source in 1952-53.

In addition the 2 per cent tax levied on corporate profits under the Old Age Security Act yielded $55·6 million during 1953-54 as compared with $36·9 million in 1952-53. These collections were credited to the Old Age Security Fund.

Succession Duties

Revenues from succession duties were $40 million in 1953-54, an increase of $1·9 million or 5 per cent over the previous year.

PRINCIPAL SOURCES OF TAX REVENUES

* Estimated.

(2) Indirect Taxes

Customs Import Duties

Net revenue from customs import duties for the year were $408 million, an increase of 4·8 per cent over the 1952-53 total of $389·4 million. The increase in revenue corresponds to the increase in total value of imports.

Excise Duties

Excise duties are levied exclusively on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. (Additional taxes are levied under the Excise Tax Act on tobacco products). The revenue from excise duties for the year was $228 million, a decrease of $13·4 million from the previous year's yield of $241·4 million. The decrease is due to the fact that the rates of duty on cigarettes were reduced in the 1953 budget. The decrease in revenue from cigarettes is partly offset by an increase in the revenue from spirits.

Gross receipts from excise duties, before deducting refunds, are divided as follows: $133 million from alcoholic beverages ($127·7 million in 1952-53), and $98 million from tobacco products ($116·9 million in 1952-53).

Excise Taxes

Net excise tax collections (excluding the 2 per cent old age security sales tax) are estimated at $882 million in 1953-54, an increase of $40·1 million over the previous year.

The sales tax, from the standpoint of revenue, is the principal tax levied under the Excise Tax Act. Despite new exemptions from the sales tax announced in the 1953 budget which were estimated to reduce revenue by about $8 million, the gross revenue from sales tax was $612 million, an increase of $28·2 million compared with $583·8 million in 1952-53. Since there was no substantial changes in the general price level during the year, the increase is attributed to higher production and imports.

Excise taxes other than sales tax yielded approximately $290 million, or $11·5 million more than in 1952-53. This increase occurred in spite of the fact that the stamp taxes on cheques, money orders, and security transfers, which yielded $10·6 million in 1952-53, were repealed in the 1953 budget.

The largest increases in the yields from taxes in this category were from the tax on automobiles, tires and tubes, which yielded approximately $101 million ($89·9 million in 1952-53). Of nearly equal importance is the increase in collections of the tax on tobacco products. Due to increased cigarette sales these taxes yielded approximately $7 million more than in the previous year. Finally, revenue from the tax on radios and television sets is estimated at $16·5 million, an increase of $5·8 million over last year.

In addition the 2 per cent tax on sales levied under the Old Age Security Act yielded $147·7 million during 1953-54, compared with $141·6 million in 1952-53. These collections are credited to the Old Age Security Fund.

Other Indirect Taxes

The taxes under this heading are the tax on premium income of insurance companies, the tax on the export of electrical energy from Canada, and the tax on the export of furs from the Northwest Territories. These taxes produced $14·3 million, an increase of $1·3 million over 1952-53. Of this total the tax on premium income of insurance companies yielded approximately $13·6 million, in 1952-53 the yield was $12·4 million.

(3) Non-Tax Revenues

Non-tax revenues for 1953-54 are estimated at $317·4 million, an increase of $37·3 million over the total for 1952-53. The following table presents a comparative summary of revenues under this heading for the past two years:

TABLE III

Non-Tax Revenues for the Fiscal Years Ended March 31, 1954, and March 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Post Office	111·5	111·9	−0·4
Return on investments	147·5	116·9	30·6
Premium, discount and exchange	3·9	1·5	2·4
Bullion and coinage	4·8	4·4	0·4
Privileges, licences and permits	12·7	11·3	1·4
Proceeds from sales	4·6	5·2	−0·6
Services and service fees	17·6	17·2	0·4
Refunds of previous years' expenditures	12·0	9·3	2·7
Miscellaneous	2·8	2·4	0·4
Total non-tax revenues	317·4	280·1	37·3

Post Office

Gross post office receipts for 1953-54 are expected to amount to $129·8 million. After making authorized disbursements from revenue of $18·3 million for salaries and rent allowances at semi-staff and revenue offices, commissions at sub-offices, transit charges on Canadian mail forwarded through or delivered in foreign countries, etc., net post office receipts credited to budgetary revenues are estimated at $111·5 million. A small increase of $0·5 million in gross receipts over the corresponding amount received in 1952-53 is more than offset by an increase of $0·9 million in payments from revenue, due mainly to an increase in remuneration paid to revenue postmasters and their assistants. Costs of operating the Post Office during 1953-54 (excluding the $18·3 million charged to revenue) are expected to total $114 million and thus will exceed net revenue by approximately $2·5 million. However, in making this comparison it is to be noted that the total shown for post office revenues does not reflect any payment for the franking privilege covering parliamentary and departmental mail or for other special services provided for other government departments and agencies, nor does the total shown for operating expenses reflect any charges for premises occupied by the Post Office Department or for certain accounting and miscellaneous services provided by other departments.

Return on Investments

Return on investments is expected to yield $147·5 million, an increase of $30·6 million over the total of $116·9 million received in 1952-53. Half of this increase is attributable to the profits of the Bank of Canada, which for the calendar year 1953 were $15·1 million above those for the previous year. Also contributing to the increase in 1953-54 is the estimated surplus of $10 million to be turned over by Canadian Arsenals Limited; the corresponding item for 1952-53 of $6·1 million was included in special receipts and credits. There were also increases in interest received during 1953 from the Canadian National Railways and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation of $3·8 million and $1·9 million respectively. In addition $2·2 million is included in revenues representing surplus funds in excess of the $5 million reserve established by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which are payable to the Receiver General; in prior years the corresponding amounts were credited to special receipts and credits. The principal item offsetting these increases was a decrease of $6·4 million in the amount of dividends and interest received from Polymer Corporation Limited, due mainly to the fact that there was no receipt in 1953 comparable to the special dividend of $6 million paid by the Corporation in 1952.

A comparative summary of estimated receipts during 1953-54 with actual receipts during 1952-53 under this heading is given in the following table:

TABLE IV

RETURN ON INVESTMENTS FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954, AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Loans to, and investments in, Crown Agencies—
Bank of Canada	44·1	29·0	15·1
Exchange Fund account	16·3	14·8	1·5
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	13·3	9·2	4·1
Canadian Arsenals Limited	10·0	.....	10·0
Canadian National Railways	6·7	2·9	3·8
National Harbours Board	4·3	5·0	−0·7
Polymer Corporation Limited	3·2	9·6	−6·4
Other Crown agencies	1·6	1·4	0·2
	99·5	71·9	27·6
Other loans and investments—
United Kingdom	23·1	23·4	−0·3
Other national governments	12·6	12·6	.....
Provincial and municipal governments	1·1	1·2	−0·1
Soldier and general land settlement loans and Veterans' Land Act advances	5·1	4·7	0·4
Securities investment account	2·3	1·8	0·5
Sinking fund and other investments held for retirement of unmatured funded debt	2·4	0·7	1·8
Other loans and investments	1·4	0·6	0·7
	48·0	45·0	3·0
	147·5	116·9	30·6

Premium, Discount and Exchange

The amount credited to premium, discount and exchange in 1953-54 was $3·9 million compared with a credit of $1·5 million in 1952-53. This revenue item arises mainly from accounting adjustments in asset and liability accounts to reflect a reduction in U.S. dollar and sterling exchange rates from those operative in the fiscal year 1952-53. It is estimated that the Canadian dollar equivalent of outstanding debt payable in sterling and in United States dollars will be reduced in consequence of this revaluation by $4·8 million, offset by $2·5 million reduction in assets payable in these currencies. The result is a net credit in the premium, discount and exchange account of $2·3 million. Net differences in rates on current gold and foreign exchange transactions are expected to account for a further credit of $1·6 million, resulting in a net revenue item of $3·9 million.

(4) SPECIAL RECEIPTS AND CREDITS

Special receipts and credits are expected to total $73·7 million for the fiscal year 1953-54 compared with a total of $83·1 million received in the previous year. A comparative summary of the sources of special receipts and other credits for the last two years is presented in the following table:

TABLE V

SPECIAL RECEIPTS AND CREDITS FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Transfer to revenue of provincial 5 per cent corporation income tax suspense account pursuant to the 1952 tax rental agreements	46·9	45·0	1·9
Proceeds from the sale of Crown assets	17·1	7·6	9·5
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—
Profits paid to Receiver General	(1)	2·1	−2·1
Proceeds and depreciation reserve with respect to the sale of wartime housing properties	5·2	6·7	−1·5
Transfer to revenue of Canadian Wheat Board suspense account	.....	6·3	−6·3
Surplus of Canadian Arsenals, Limited	(1)	6·1	−6·1
Write up to active assets—Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited—capital stock	.....	4·8	−4·8
Miscellaneous special receipts	4·5	4·5	.....
	73·7	83·1	−9·4

(1) Included in Return on Investments in 1953-54.

The amount of $46·9 million represents the transfer to revenue of the balance of the provincial 5 per cent corporation income tax suspense account. A fuller explanation may be found in the section on Sundry Suspense Liabilities.

$17·1 million was received during the fiscal year from the sale of Crown assets. Of this amount $7·9 million was received from the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation representing the amount realized from the disposal of surplus Crown assets after allowing for transfers to active assets of amounts applicable to "Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets". It does not include the residual cash balances nor the value of accounts receivable carried by the corporation as at March 31, 1954.

The remaining $9·2 million under this heading consists of two amounts received under agreements of sale. Crown-owned land and buildings were sold by the Department of Defence Production to A. V. Roe Canada Limited for approximately $17 million. During the fiscal year cash payments of $9 million were received; the balance is set up under "Other loans and investments" as "Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets." Also under an agreement of sale Crown-owned machine tools and equipment were sold by the Department of Defence Production to Weatherhead Company of Canada Limited for approximately $700,000. A cash payment of $200,000 was received during the fiscal year, and the balance set up under "Other loans and investments" as "Balances receivable".

An estimated amount of $5·2 million is included as revenues received from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation representing the proceeds of the sale of wartime housing properties including depreciation provisions set aside in previous years by the corporation on properties that have now been sold. In addition, an estimated amount of $11·1 million for interest on loans to the corporation and $2·2 million representing profits in excess of the $5 million reserve established by the corporation was received. Both these amounts are credited to "Return on investments" in the current year. In 1952-53 profits of $2·1 million were credited to special receipts as shown in the table.

The Budget—Appendix

(5) Comparison of Actual Revenue with Budget Forecast

Total budgetary revenues for 1953-54, excluding revenue from the old age security taxes, as now estimated were about $73 million less than the forecast made in the budget speech of February 19, 1953. This represents a shortfall of about 1½ per cent. Revenues from personal income tax, corporation income tax and excise duties were less than expected, while revenues from customs import duties, sales tax and other excise taxes exceeded expectations.

The following table shows the extent to which actual revenues as now estimated differ from the budget forecast.

TABLE VI

Comparison of Budget Forecast with Actual Revenues for Fiscal Year Ended March 31, 1954

(In millions of dollars)

Source of Revenues	Budget Forecast of Revenues	Actual Revenues (Estimated)	Increase or Decrease(−) compared with Budget Forecast
Personal income tax	1,250·0	1,189·3	−60·7
Non-resident income taxes	55·0	54·0	−1·0
Corporation income tax	1,228·0	1,193·4	−34·6
Succession duties	40·0	40·0
Customs import duties	395·0	408·0	13·0
Excise duties	265·0	228·0	−37·0
Sales tax (net)	580·0	592·0	12·0
Other excise taxes	285·0	290·0	5·0
Miscellaneous taxes	10·0	14·3	4·3
Total tax revenues	4,108·0	4,009·0	−99·0
Non-tax revenues	290·0	317·4	27·4
Total ordinary revenues	4,398·0	4,326·4	−71·6
Special receipts and credits	75·0	73·7	−1·3
Total budgetary revenues	4,473·0	4,400·1	−72·9

The revenue from personal income tax was $61 million or nearly 5 per cent less than the budget forecast. The deficiency is due mainly to the fact that refunds of tax were considerably more than expected.

Corporation income tax collections are approximately $35 million less than the budget forecast which was based on the assumption that 1953 profits would be larger than in 1952. Preliminary indications are that 1953 profits did not reach the expected level.

Customs duties yielded approximately $13 million more than the budget forecast. This is attributed to record values of imports in the early months of the fiscal year.

Revenue from excise duties fell short of the budget forecast by about 14 per cent. This difference arises from a combination of causes of which the most important is the fact that the budget forecast was based on an estimate of receipts in 1952-53 which turned out to have been too high. In addition the use of malt did not increase in step with the increase in beer sales resulting in the revenue from this source falling below expectations. Finally the reduction in the excise duty revenue from tobacco products as a result of the reductions in the tax on cigarettes announced in the 1953 budget was greater than anticipated although this was partly offset by higher revenues from the excise tax on cigarettes.

Sales tax exceeded the budget forecast by about $12 million or 2 per cent. The strength of this revenue source in 1953-54 is indicative of the high level of consumer spending.

The excess of non-tax revenues over the budget forecast is attributable largely to the fact that revenues from return on investments were much larger than anticipated, reflecting the increased earnings of the Bank of Canada for the calendar year 1953, and the fact that profits of Canadian Arsenals Limited and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which in 1952-53 were credited to "Special receipts and credits" were in 1953-54 included as "Return on investments".

While special receipts and credits are very difficult to estimate with any high degree of accuracy, the budget forecast of $75 million for 1953-54 appears to have been very close to the actual amount received.

B. Expenditures

The table which follows presents a comparative summary of estimated expenditures by departments and principal purposes for the fiscal year 1953-54, with actual expenditures for the preceding fiscal year.

TABLE VII

Statement of Expenditures by Departments and Major Classifications for the Years Ended March 31, 1954 and March 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31				Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)		1953
	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent	Amount	Per cent
National Defence	1,839·7	41·9	1,882·4	43·4	−42·7	−2·3
Defence Production	49·9	1·1	88·8	2·0	−38·9	−43·8
	1,889·6	43·0	1,971·2	45·4	−81·6	−4·1
Public Debt Charges—
Interest on public debt	476·7	10·9	451·3	10·4	25·4	5·6
Other debt charges	19·7	0·4	13·6	0·3	6·1	44·9
	496·4	11·3	464·9	10·7	31·5	6·8
Provincial subsidies and tax rental payments (including transitional grant to Newfoundland)	338·1	7·7	338·7	7·8	−0·6	−0·2
Government contributions with respect to civil service superannuation account.	54·5	1·2	38·8	0·9	15·7	40·5
Provision for reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets.	50·0	1·1	75·0	1·7	−25·0	−33·3
Family allowances	350·1	8·0	334·2	7·7	15·9	4·8
Unemployment Insurance Act—Administration and Government's contribution	58·2	1·3	56·2	1·3	2·0	3·6
Agriculture	109·3	2·5	106·7	2·5	2·6	2·4
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	24·8	0·6	8·2	0·2	16·6	202·4
Citizenship and Immigration	25·9	0·6	23·6	0·5	2·3	9·7
External Affairs	45·4	1·0	39·3	0·9	6·1	15·5
Finance	30·3	0·7	29·5	0·7	0·8	2·7
Mines and Technical Surveys	37·5	0·9	29·7	0·7	7·8	26·3
National Health and Welfare	80·5	1·8	72·4	1·7	8·1	11·2
National Research Council and Atomic Energy Control Board	28·2	0·7	28·3	0·7	−0·1	−0·4
National Revenue	50·1	1·1	47·3	1·1	2·8	5·9
Northern Affairs and National Resources	19·5	0·5	19·5	0·4
Post Office	114·0	2·6	105·6	2·4	8·4	8·0
Public Works	114·5	2·6	97·9	2·3	16·6	17·0
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	34·0	0·8	31·1	0·7	2·9	9·3
Trade and Commerce	16·7	0·4	16·5	0·4	0·2	1·2
Transport	120·2	2·7	103·9	2·4	16·3	15·7
Veterans Affairs	239·8	5·5	241·4	5·6	−1·6	−0·7
Other Departments	62·4	1·4	57·4	1·3	5·0	8·7
Grand Total	4,390·0	100·0	4,337·3	100·0	52·7	1·2

The Budget—Appendix

National Defence and Defence Production

Canada's expenditures for defence comprise the expenditures of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Defence Production. Estimated expenditures of the Department of National Defence for the fiscal year 1953-54 were $1,839·7 million as compared with $1,882·4 million for 1952-53, a decrease of $42·7 million, while expenditures of the Department of Defence Production were $49·9 million, a decrease of $38·9 million. Consequently, the combined expenditures of the two departments amounting to $1,889·6 million for the year under review are $81·6 million less than the total of $1,971·2 million for 1952-53. Defence expenditures constituted approximately 43 per cent of all government expenditures in 1953-54, and were, by a considerable margin, the largest class of government expenditure.

The following table shows a comparative summary of expenditures for the two departments for the last two fiscal years:

TABLE VIII

DEFENCE EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954, AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Department of National Defence—
Army services	407·2	516·1	−108·9
Navy services	264·5	260·3	4·2
Air services	745·2	768·0	−22·8
	1,416·9	1,544·4	−127·5
Defence research and development	43·8	43·0	0·8
Government's contribution to the permanent services pension account	35·3	30·0	5·3
Mutual aid to NATO countries	309·2	235·1	74·1
Contributions toward military costs of NATO	12·0	11·3	0·7
Administration and general	22·5	18·6	3·9
	1,839·7	1,882·4	−42·7
Department of Defence Production—
Capital assistance	39·5	79·1	−39·6
Administration and general	10·4	9·7	0·7
	49·9	88·8	−38·9
	1,889·6	1,971·2	−81·6

Total expenditures for the army, navy and air services were $1,416·9 million for 1953-54 as compared with $1,544·4 million for 1952-53, a decrease of $127·5 million. Expenditures for defence research and development, at $43·8 million, were slightly more than for the preceding year.

The Government's contribution to the permanent services pension account, which is equivalent to $1\frac{2}{3}$ times the contributions for permanent services personnel, was $35·3 million for 1953-54, or $5·3 million more than the amount contributed in 1952-53. Of the expenditures for 1953-54, $30·6 million relates to current contributions and $4·7 million to contributions for arrears. In 1952-53, the corresponding amounts were $25·2 million and $4·8 million, respectively.

Expenditures under the Mutual Aid programme which are authorized by Section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, are expected to amount to $309·2 million in 1953-54, an increase of $74·1 million over 1952-53. Under the provisions of this section of the Act, defence equipment and supplies are transferred from Canadian stocks to other parties to the North Atlantic Treaty. The value of equipment and supplies acquired by the services prior to March 31, 1950, and transferred as Mutual Aid, is charged to this appropriation and credited to a special defence equipment replacement account. The value of the equipment is based on its estimated replacement value. In accordance with the provisions of Vote 241 of the Appropriation Act, No. 3, 1953, where equipment and supplies acquired for the services since March 31, 1950, are transferred as Mutual Aid, their estimated replacement value is credited to the appropriate service allotment instead of being paid into the replacement account, and may be expended during the current fiscal year for the purposes of the Canadian forces. The expenditure of $309·2 million in 1953-54 consists of approximately $77·9 million for equipment and supplies transferred from Canadian stocks to North Atlantic Treaty countries and $231·3 million for direct cash outlays for Mutual Aid by the Government of Canada, representing costs incurred in acquiring and supplying new military equipment to parties to the North Atlantic Treaty and in the training in Canada of aircrews from allied countries. In 1952-53, stock transfers amounted to $55·5 million and direct aid to $179·6 million.

Contributions made by Canada towards the military costs of NATO are charged to the National Defence appropriations. These payments comprise Canada's share of the NATO military budgets and of infrastructure costs. The percentage share borne by each nation is established in the North Atlantic Council, subject to ratification by the respective governments. Expenditures during 1953-54 for this purpose were $12 million, as compared with $11·3 million for 1952-53.

Expenditures for the Department of Defence Production were $49·9 million for 1953-54, a decrease of $38·9 million from the total of $88·8 million for the previous year. Capital assistance to private contractors, Crown plants operated on a management fee basis, and Crown corporations undertaking contracts essential to the defence programme, totalled $39·5 million, as compared with $79·1 million for 1952-53. Administration and general expenditures of the Department were $10·4 million, an increase of $0·7 million over the previous fiscal year.

In addition to the foregoing budgetary expenditures, the Department of Defence Production has made cash outlays from the defence production revolving fund for the procurement of materials for use in the manufacture of defence equipment. For purposes of accounting and control, materials so acquired are treated as assets in the books of the Government until they are billed to the Department of National Defence or sold to defence contractors for use in the manufacture of defence equipment. It is estimated that the net cash position of the fund in 1953-54 was reduced by $17·1 million, as compared with a net increase of $19·7 million in 1952-53.

The replacement of equipment and supplies acquired by the Department of National Defence prior to March 31, 1950, and subsequently transferred to parties of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, also involved cash outlays which were not reflected as budgetary expenditures. The cost of such replacement is charged to the defence equipment replacement account, which is credited with the estimated value of the defence equipment and supplies, when these are transferred from Canadian stocks to NATO countries. Transfers to this account during 1953-54 were $77·9 million, and it is estimated that $36·5 million was disbursed for the purchase of replacement equipment and supplies. The balance of the account at March 31, 1953, was $271·1 million, and, as a result of the past year's operations, a total of $41·4 million has been added to this account, bringing it up to $312·5 million as of March 31, 1954.

In addition to the foregoing, there is provision under Section 11 of the National Defence Act for the sale of materiel not immediately required for the use of the Canadian forces or the Defence Research Board to such countries and upon such terms as the Governor in Council may determine. The proceeds of sale are credited to a special account to be used for the procurement of materiel. Credits to the replacement of materiel account in 1953-54 totalled $15·7 million, while $3·7 million was withdrawn therefrom.

The Budget—Appendix

The net effect of the defence programme upon the Canadian economy, is a combination of the net cash outlays from the defence equipment replacement account, the replacement of materiel account and the defence production revolving fund, together with the net cash budgetary expenditures of the Departments of National Defence and Defence Production. This net cash outlay for defence amounted to $1,819·1 million in 1953-54, a decrease of $86·7 million from the corresponding total in 1952-53.

The following table presents a summary of the cash disbursements for defence for the last two fiscal years:

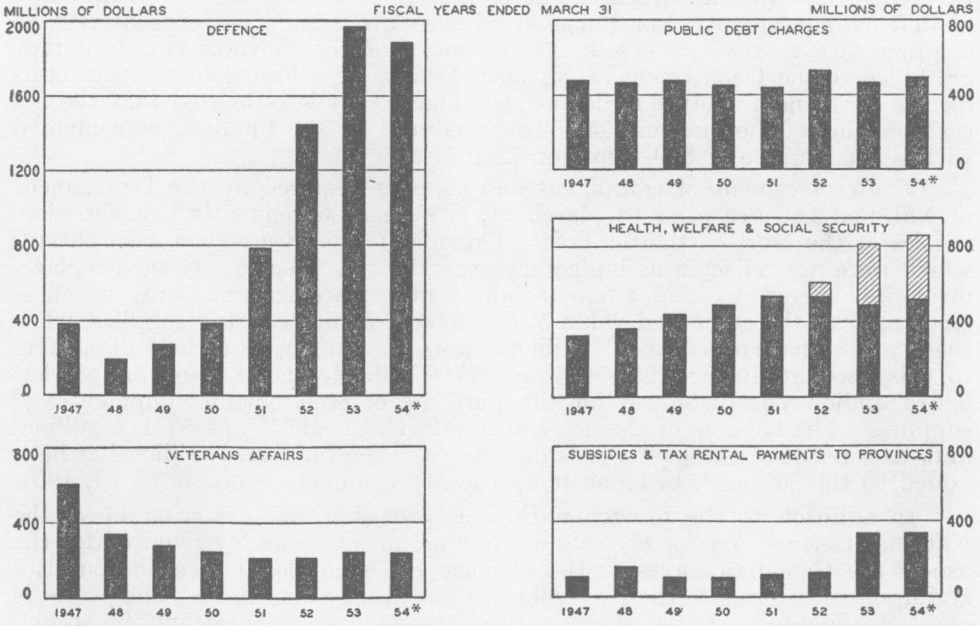

TABLE IX

CASH OUTLAYS FOR DEFENCE FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease(−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Budgetary Expenditures—
Department of National Defence	1,839·7	1,882·4	−42·7
Department of Defence Production	49·9	88·8	−38·9
	1,889·6	1,971·2	−81·6
Less: Value of military equipment and supplies transferred from existing Canadian stocks to NATO countries (included in budgetary expenditures)	77·9	55·5	22·4
	1,811·7	1,915·7	−104·0
Disbursements from:
Defence equipment replacement account	36·5	−14·2	50·7
Replacement of materiel account (Sec. 11, National Defence Act,) (net)	−12·0	−15·4	3·4
Defence production revolving fund (net)	−17·1	19·7	−36·8
	7·4	−9·9	17·3
Net cash outlay for defence	1,819·1	1,905·8	−86·7

PRINCIPAL CLASSES OF BUDGETARY EXPENDITURES

*Estimate.

NOTE: The lightly shaded area in the chart for Health, Welfare and Social Security represents pension payments out of the old age security fund.

Public Debt Charges

Public debt charges in 1953-54, as in 1952-53, constituted the second largest item of government expense. The total of $496·4 million for the year under review represented 11·3 per cent of total budgetary expenditures compared with a total of $464·9 million or 10·7 per cent in 1952-53.

Interest on the unmatured funded debt was $412·3 million compared with $393·1 million in 1952-53. All of this increase of $19·2 million is attributable to interest on debt payable in Canada. A substantial increase in the amount of Canada Savings Bonds outstanding and an increase of approximately 0·1 per cent in the average interest rate account for the greater part of the increase.

Interest on deposit and trust accounts is expected to show a small increase of $0·2 million over the previous year, while interest on insurance and pension accounts, estimated at $61·3 million, is $6 million higher than in 1952-53. Of this latter increase $2·4 million is in respect of government annuities, $1·4 million is on civil service superannuation account and $1·9 million on permanent services pension account.

Other public debt charges are estimated at $19·7 million, an increase of $6·1 million over 1952-53. The greater part of this increase is due to an increase in the annual amortization charge for discount and commissions on previous bond issues.

The following table presents a comparative summary of public debt charges for 1953-54 and the corresponding figures for the previous year.

TABLE X

INTEREST AND OTHER PUBLIC DEBT CHARGES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954, AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Interest on Public Debt—
Funded Debt and Treasury Bills—
Payable in Canada	400·8	381·6	19·2
Payable in London	1·6	1·6	.....
Payable in New York	9·9	9·9	.....
	412·3	393·1	19·2
Deposit and Trust Accounts	3·1	2·9	0·2
Insurance, Pension and Guaranty Accounts	61·3	55·3	6·0
	64·4	58·2	6·2
Total Interest on Public Debt	476·7	451·3	25·4
Annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions	17·8	12·0	5·8
Servicing of Public Debt	0·6	0·5	0·1
Cost of issuing new loans	1·3	1·1	0·2
	19·7	13·6	6·1
Total Public Debt Charges	496·4	464·9	31·5

The Budget—Appendix

Subsidies and Tax Rental Payments to Provinces

Payments to the provinces during 1953-54 for statutory subsidies, rentals under the tax rental agreements, the transitional grant to Newfoundland, and the transfer of certain public utility tax receipts, were $338·1 million compared with $338·7 million in 1952-53.

A comparative summary of the payments for the two years is given in the following table:

TABLE XI

SUBSIDIES AND TAX RENTAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953.

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Rentals under tax rental agreements c. 49, Statutes of 1952	309·2	284·8	24·4
Rentals under tax rental agreements c. 58, Statutes of 1947	.....	23·8	−23·8
Statutory subsidies	20·1	20·1
Transitional grant to Newfoundland	4·8	5·6	−0·8
Transfer of certain public utility tax receipts—sec. 7, c. 58, Statutes of 1947	4·0	4·4	−0·4
	338·1	338·7	−0·6

The total paid as subsidies and tax rental payments in 1953-54 is almost exactly equal to that paid in 1952-53 despite the fact that tax rental payments in 1952-53 included the final quarterly instalment under the old 1947 agreements as well as a full year's rental payments under the 1952 agreements.

The payments under the 1952 tax rental agreements in 1953-54 were $24·4 million greater than in the previous year reflecting the increases in provincial populations and gross national product per capita in 1952 over the base year 1948.

Statutory subsidies in 1953-54 were unchanged from the previous year, both years' payments being based on the 1951 census totals of population.

The amount of public utility tax receipts transferred to the provinces is expected to be $0·4 million less than in the previous year. Section 7 of the Dominion-Provincial Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1947, authorized the payment to the provinces, whether participating in the agreements or not, of a portion of the income tax collected from corporations, whose main business was the distribution to, or the generation for distribution to, the public of electrical energy, gas or steam. Provision for similar payments was also made in the Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1952.

A summary of payments, by provinces during 1953-54 is given in the following table:

TABLE XII

SUBSIDIES AND TAX RENTAL PAYMENTS TO PROVINCES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1954

(In millions of dollars)

—	Statutory Subsidies	Rentals under 1952 Tax Rental Agreements	Transitional Grant	Total
Newfoundland	1·6	11·8	4·8	18·2
Nova Scotia	2·1	19·5	.....	21·6
Prince Edward Island	0·7	3·7	.....	4·4
New Brunswick	1·7	16·2	.....	17·9
Quebec	3·3	.....	.....	3·3
Ontario	3·6	134·4	.....	138·0
Manitoba	1·7	25·0	.....	26·7
Saskatchewan	2·0	25·3	.....	27·3
Alberta	2·1	29·8	.....	31·9
British Columbia	1·3	43·5	.....	44·8
	20·1	309·2	4·8	334·1
Transfer of certain public utility tax receipts (Sec. 7, Chap. 58, Statutes of 1947)	.....	.....	.....	4·0
				338·1

Government Contributions to the Civil Service Superannuation Account

It is estimated that $54·5 million will be charged to expenditures in 1953-54 in connection with the civil service superannuation account, an increase of $15·7 million compared with $38·8 million charged in 1952-53.

The government contributes in each fiscal year an amount equal to the estimated payments by individual contributors in the previous year in respect of current and prior service. The government's contribution for 1953-54 is estimated at $16·5 million compared with $13·8 million in 1952-53.

In addition, $38 million is included in the year's expenditures representing the amount required to cover the additional liability created by the general increase in civil service salaries effective December 1, 1953.

Provision for Reserve for Possible Losses on Ultimate Realization of Active Assets

An amount of $50 million is included as an expenditure in the government's accounts as an addition during the fiscal year 1953-54 to the general reserve for possible losses on the ultimate realization of active assets. It is intended, however, to write off $99·5 million, the amount of temporary loans made by the Minister of Finance to the old age security fund in 1952-53, against this reserve. This will leave the balance in the reserve at the end of the fiscal year at $496·4 million which is equivalent to 6·8 per cent of the aggregate active assets.

Family Allowances

Family allowances are payable in respect of all children under sixteen resident in Canada, with minor exceptions such as in the case of children of immigrants who have to reside in Canada a year before an allowance is payable. The monthly allowance is $5 if the child is less than six years of age; $6 in the age group 6 to 9; $7 in the age group 10 to 12; and $8 in the age group 13 to 15.

For 1953-54 family allowance payments are estimated at $350·1 million representing 8 per cent of the total expenditures compared with $334·2 million or 7·7 per cent for 1952-53. The increase of $15·9 million reflects the increase in the number of children.

The following table presents a comparative summary of family allowance payments by provinces for the last two fiscal years:

TABLE XIII

FAMILY ALLOWANCE PAYMENTS FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Newfoundland	11·4	11·0	0·4
Nova Scotia	16·7	16·3	0·4
Prince Edward Island	2·5	2·5
New Brunswick	14·7	14·3	0·4
Quebec	111·5	107·1	4·4
Ontario	104·6	98·3	6·3
Manitoba	17·9	17·3	0·6
Saskatchewan	20·2	19·7	0·5
Alberta	23·9	22·6	1·3
British Columbia	26·0	24·4	1·6
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0·7	0·7
	350·1	334·2	15·9

Unemployment Insurance Act Administration and Government's Contribution

Expenditures for 1953-54 in connection with the Unemployment Insurance Act (excluding the government's payment as an employer) are estimated at $58·2 million compared with $56·2 million in 1952-53, an increase of $2 million.

Unemployment insurance benefits are not charged directly to budgetary expenditures. The Unemployment Insurance Fund, from which such benefits are paid, is financed by contributions from employers and employees, by interest earned on investments, and by the government's contribution of an amount equal to one-fifth of the combined employer-employee payments.

For 1953-54, the government's contribution to the Fund is estimated at $31·9 million, an increase of $0·8 million over the total of $31·1 million in 1952-53. Administration costs are estimated at $26·3 million or $1·3 million more than the total of $25 million for the previous fiscal year.

Agriculture

The Department of Agriculture expenditures for 1953-54 are estimated at $109·3 million an increase of $2·6 million compared with expenditures of $106·7 million in 1952-53. The net increase of $2·6 million reflects an increase of $5·3 million in the operating losses of the Agricultural Prices Support Board, decreases of $3·7 million in freight assistance on western feed grains, and $1·5 million in premiums on hog carcasses and other smaller changes.

The following table presents a comparative summary of the expenditures of the department for the last two fiscal years:

TABLE XIV

EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954, AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Operating losses of the Agricultural Prices Support Board	37·8	32·5	5·3
Freight assistance on western feed grains	17·0	20·7	—3·7
Rehabilitation and reclamation projects	14·8	13·9	0·9
Premium on hog carcasses including administrative costs	4·9	6·4	—1·5
Experimental farms service	8·7	8·3	0·4
Science service	9·0	8·1	0·9
Production service	9·7	9·3	0·4
Marketing service	4·4	4·8	—0·4
Departmental administration and sundry	3·0	2·7	0·3
	109·3	106·7	2·6

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

Expenditures by the Government of Canada in respect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation are estimated at $24·8 million for the current fiscal year an increase of $16·6 million compared with expenditures of $8·2 million in 1952-53. As proposed in last year's budget the Canadian Broadcasting Act was amended to provide that the corporation in future would receive an amount equivalent to the collections on the 15 per cent special tax imposed on radio and television sets, tubes and accessories. For the current fiscal year, this amount is estimated at $16·5 million consisting of $11·5 million in respect of television and $5 million in respect of radio. Also, as announced in last year's budget speech, the Order in Council under the Radio Act setting the licence fee at $2.50 for private radio receiving sets was revoked as of April 1, 1953. Consequently, in 1953-54 only $0·3 million was collected and turned over to the corporation compared with $5·4 million in 1952-53. Collections in the latter period were derived mainly from private radio station broadcasting licences.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures of the last two fiscal years:

TABLE XV

EXPENDITURES IN RESPECT OF THE CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Sound broadcasting service	6·2	6·2
International shortwave broadcasting service	2·1	2·0	0·1
Payments to the corporation of amounts equal to tax collected under the Excise Tax Act in respect of radio and television sets and equipment	16·5	.....	16·5
	24·8	8·2	16·6

In addition, a loan of $4·7 million was made to the Corporation in 1953-54 to cover the costs of television installations and to support the development of the service. This brings the total of loans to the Corporation to $16 million;

$6·7 million of this amount is in respect of television. Interest at various rates is being paid semi-annually by the corporation to the government and is included in non-tax revenues under "Return on Investments".

Citizenship and Immigration

Expenditures of this department are estimated at $25·9 million for 1953-54, an increase of $2·3 million over the total of $23·6 million in 1952-53. The increase is almost wholly accounted for in the expenditures of the Indian Affairs Branch.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1953-54 and 1952-53:

TABLE XVI

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Indian Affairs	16·7	15·2	1·5
Immigration	7·5	7·1	0·4
Citizenship and Citizenship Registration	0·7	0·5	0·2
Administration and general	1·0	0·8	0·2
	25·9	23·6	2·3

External Affairs

Expenditures of the Department of External Affairs for 1953-54 are estimated at $45·4 million, an increase of $6·1 million over 1952-53. Assistance to other countries directly or through international organizations is estimated at $31·4 million, an increase of $4·8 million. The principal item in this category is an amount of $25 million provided under the Colombo Plan for grants to assist in the economic development of countries in South and South-East Asia. A similar amount was provided in 1952-53. The increase of $4·8 million in assistance to other countries is due chiefly to the provision for a gift of wheat as a contribution towards the relief of famine in Pakistan.

The table which follows presents a comparative summary of the expenditures of the department for the last two fiscal years:

TABLE XVII

EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF EXTERNAL AFFAIRS FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Assistance to other countries	31·4	26·6	4·8
Canada's assessment for membership in international or commonwealth organizations	3·5	3·5
Representation abroad	6·5	5·5	1·0
Administration and general expenditures	4·0	3·7	0·3
	45·4	39·3	6·1

Finance

The major items of expenditure of the Department of Finance have been dealt with under the headings "Public debt charges", "Subsidies and tax rental payments to provinces", "Provision for reserve for possible losses on the ultimate realization of active assets" and "Government contribution to the civil service superannuation account".

In addition, other expenditures of the department for 1953-54 were $30·3 million compared with $29·5 million in 1952-53.

The following table presents a comparative summary of these expenditures for the past two fiscal years:

TABLE XVIII

GENERAL AND ADMINISTRATION EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury—Administration expenses	13·8	13·3	0·5
Grants to universities	5·2	5·1	0·1
Grants to municipalities in lieu of taxes on federal property	3·0	2·6	0·4
Government contribution as an employer to the Unemployment Insurance Fund	1·1	1·1
Federal government share of claims—Rimouski and Cabano fires	.....	0·3	−0·3
Implementation of guarantees—Ming Sung Industrial Co. Ltd	1·6	1·7	−0·1
Grant to the Canadian National European Flood Relief Fund	.....	1·0	−1·0
Departmental administration and general	5·6	4·4	1·2
	30·3	29·5	0·8

Mines and Technical Surveys

Expenditures of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys were $37·5 million for 1953-54 compared with expenditures of $29·7 million for 1952-53. The increase of $7·8 million is due mainly to increases of $3·3 million in payments under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act and of $3·5 million in the expenditures of the Dominion Coal Board.

A table showing a comparative summary of expenditures for the fiscal years 1953-54 and 1952-53 follows:

TABLE XIX

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Emergency Gold Mining Assistance	14·5	11·2	3·3
Dominion Coal Board	10·0	6·5	3·5
Surveys and Mapping including Air Surveys	7·1	6·5	0·6
Mines Branch	2·6	2·5	0·1
Geological Survey of Canada	2·0	1·8	0·2
Administration and general	1·3	1·2	0·1
	37·5	29·7	7·8

83276—241½

Family allowance payments, because of their importance, have been dealt with in preceding paragraphs of the white paper. Other expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare are estimated at $80·5 million for 1953-54 compared with $72·4 million in 1952-53, an increase of $8·1 million.

The following table presents a comparative summary of these other expenditures of the department for the last two fiscal years:

TABLE XX

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
General health grants	28·9	27·3	1·6
Old age assistance	20·6	19·1	1·5
Allowances to blind persons	3·0	3·0
Indians and Eskimos health services	14·9	12·9	2·0
Other health services	5·8	4·5	1·3
Civil defence programme	3·3	1·7	1·6
Administration and general	4·0	3·9	0·1
	80·5	72·4	8·1

General health grants were inaugurated in 1948-49 to assist the provinces in hospital construction, the improvement of general health services and the control of diseases. Expenditures on account of these services were $28·9 million for 1953-54, an increase of $1·6 million over 1952-53.

The following table presents a distribution by provinces of such grants paid in the last two fiscal years, together with the total paid from the inception of the policy in 1948-49.

TABLE XXI

GENERAL HEALTH GRANTS TO PROVINCES

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease(—)	Total for Fiscal Years 1948-49 to 1953-54 Inclusive
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Newfoundland	0·9	0·8	0·1	3·8
Nova Scotia	1·3	1·3	.....	5·8
Prince Edward Island	0·2	0·2	.....	1·2
New Brunswick	1·3	1·1	0·2	5·1
Quebec	9·0	8·0	1·0	37·1
Ontario	7·8	8·3	—0·5	33·1
Manitoba	1·7	1·5	0·2	6·5
Saskatchewan	2·0	2·0	.....	8·9
Alberta	2·2	2·1	0·1	9·1
British Columbia	2·5	2·0	0·5	11·1
Northwest and Yukon Territories	(1)	(1)	.....	(1)
	28·9	27·3	1·6	121·7

(1) Less than $50,000.

Under the Old Age Assistance Act the federal government reimburses the provinces by paying 50 per cent of the lesser of $40 monthly or the amount of assistance given by the provinces in the form of monthly pensions to eligible persons in need who were in the age group of 65 to 69. (Under the Old Age Security Act, all persons 70 years and over who satisfy the residence requirements may receive a pension of $40 per month from the federal government out of the Old Age Security Fund). Similarly, under the Blind Persons Act, the federal government reimburses the provinces for allowances paid to eligible blind persons in need over the age of 21, but under this Act federal reimbursement is 75 per cent of the total payments.

Payments by the federal government in respect of old age assistance were $20·6 million for 1953-54 compared with $19·1 million for 1952-53. Payments on account of allowances to blind persons were $3 million for 1953-54, unchanged from 1952-53.

The distribution of these payments in 1953-54, by provinces, is given in the following table:

TABLE XXII

FEDERAL SHARE OF OLD AGE ASSISTANCE AND ALLOWANCES TO THE BLIND FOR THE YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1954

(In millions of dollars)

—	Old Age Assistance	Allowances to the Blind
Newfoundland	0·9	0·1
Nova Scotia	1·0	0·3
Prince Edward Island	0·1	(1)
New Brunswick	1·2	0·3
Quebec	7·2	1·1
Ontario	4·9	0·6
Manitoba	1·1	0·2
Saskatchewan	1·0	0·1
Alberta	1·2	0·1
British Columbia	2·0	0·2
Northwest and Yukon Territories	(1)	(1)
	20·6	3·0

(1) Less than $50,000.

Indian and Eskimo health services were $14·9 million for 1953-54 compared with $12·9 million in 1952-53. Other health services totalled $5·8 million, up $1·3 million from the previous fiscal year. Of this increase, $0·2 million was for immigration medical services, $0·7 million for laboratory of hygiene and $0·2 million for the administration of various Acts relating to health services.

Expenditures in connection with the civil defence programme were $3·3 million for 1953-54, an increase of $1·6 million.

Administration and general expenditures were $4 million, slightly more than the total of $3·9 million for 1952-53.

National Research Council and Atomic Energy Control Board

Expenditures of the National Research Council were $15·6 million in 1953-54 compared with $15·4 million in 1952-53. The expenditures of the Atomic Energy Control Board were $12·6 million for 1953-54, a decrease of $0·3 million from the previous fiscal year.

National Revenue

Expenditures of this department are estimated at $50·1 million in 1953-54 compared with $47·3 million in 1952-53. Of the increase of $2·8 million for the year, $1·5 million is in respect of the customs and excise division and $1·3 million on account of the taxation division.

The following table presents a comparative summary of the expenditures of the department for the last two fiscal years:

TABLE XXIII

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Customs and excise division	27·0	25·5	1·5
Taxation division	23·0	21·7	1·3
Income tax appeal board	0·1	0·1
	50·1	47·3	2·8

Northern Affairs and National Resources

The Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources was constituted in 1953-54 by an Act of Parliament which redefined the duties and functions of the former Department of Resources and Development to reflect the growing importance of Canada's northland. Expenditures under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, including administration and contributions to the provinces, and expenditures for housing, both included in 1952-53 under the Department of Resources and Development, have been transferred to the Department of Public Works and the expenditures for 1952-53 shown in the table which follows have been adjusted accordingly.

TABLE XXIV

NORTHERN AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL RESOURCES EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
National Parks Branch	7·3	7·2	0·1
Engineering and Water Resources Branch	1·8	3·1	−1·3
Northern Administration and Lands Branch	3·3	3·7	−0·4
Forestry Branch	5·0	3·8	1·2
Canadian Government Travel Bureau	1·5	1·3	0·2
Administration and general	0·6	0·4	0·2
	19·5	19·5

Expenditures for 1953-54 at $19·5 million were the same as those of 1952-53, a reduction of $1·3 million in the engineering and water resources branch being offset by the increase of $1·2 million in the forestry branch.

Post Office

Gross expenditures of the Post Office Department for 1953-54, including payments from revenue, are estimated at $132·3 million, an increase of $9·3 million over the total of $123 million for 1952-53. Remuneration of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices and commissions at sub-offices are paid from revenue. These payments, which are included in the total of $132·3 million for 1953-54, were $18·3 million compared with $17·4 million in 1952-53. Disbursements charged to budgetary expenditures are estimated at $114 million in 1953-54, an increase of $8·4 million over the previous fiscal year.

The following table presents a comparative summary of the expenditures for the past two years:

TABLE XXV

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Charged to Expenditures—
Operations—including salaries and other expenses of staff post offices, district offices and railway mail services and supplies and equipment and other items for revenue post offices	65·3	60·7	4·6
Transportation—movement of mail by land, air and water	45·1	41·3	3·8
Financial services	2·4	2·3	0·1
Departmental administration and general	1·2	1·3	−0·1
	114·0	105·6	8·4
Charged to Revenues—
Operations—salaries of postmasters and staffs at revenue and semi-staff offices, commissions paid at sub-offices and other disbursements	18·3	17·4	0·9
	132·3	123·0	9·3

Public Works

Expenditures of the Department of Public Works are estimated at $114·5 million for 1953-54 an increase of $16·6 million over 1952-53.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1953-54 and 1952-53:

TABLE XXVI

EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Architectural Branch	61·3	52·7	8·6
Engineering Branch	34·0	28·4	5·6
Contributions to the provinces under the terms of the Trans-Canada Highway Act	14·2	14·0	0·2
Housing	1·6	1·4	0·2
Administration and general	3·4	1·4	2·0
	114·5	97·9	16·6

Of the increase of $8·6 million in the expenditures for the architectural branch, $2·8 million is due to increased costs for maintenance of public buildings and $5·7 million to increased outlay in the acquisition, construction and improvement of public buildings. Of the increase of $5·6 million in the expenditures of the engineering branch, $4·1 million is attributable to increased costs for the acquisition, construction and improvement of harbour and river works. Contributions to the provinces under the terms of the Trans-Canada Highway Act are estimated at $14·2 million, an increase of $0·2 million over 1952-53.

When the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources was established, expenditures in connection with housing and the administration of the Trans-Canada Highway Act were transferred to the Department of Public Works. To facilitate comparison the foregoing table has been adjusted to include these expenditures which in 1952-53 were shown under the former Department of Resources and Development.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police

Expenditures for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are estimated at $34 million for 1953-54 compared with $31·1 million in 1952-53. The increase of $2·9 million is due chiefly to an increase of $2·2 million in expenditures for land services of which $1·9 million is in respect of operation and maintenance costs, and $0·3 million for construction or acquisition of buildings. These amounts represent gross expenditures; payments received from the provinces for police services are credited to revenue.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures for 1953-54 and 1952-53:

TABLE XXVII

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Land services	29·6	27·4	2·2
Marine services	1·3	0·9	0·4
Aviation services	0·3	0·4	−0·1
Government contribution to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police pension account	0·7	0·5	0·2
Administration and general	2·1	1·9	0·2
	34·0	31·1	2·9

Trade and Commerce

Expenditures of the Department of Trade and Commerce for 1953-54 are estimated at $16·7 million compared with $16·5 million for 1952-53.

The following table presents a comparative summary of expenditures of the department for the two fiscal years:

TABLE XXVIII

EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Dominion Bureau of Statistics	5·4	5·7	—0·3
Canada Grain Act	4·7	4·5	0·2
Trade Commissioners Service	2·4	2·3	0·1
Standards Division	1·5	1·4	0·1
Administration and general	2·7	2·6	0·1
	16·7	16·5	0·2

Transport

Expenditures of the Department of Transport are estimated at $120·2 million for 1953-54, an increase of $16·3 million as shown in the following table:

TABLE XXIX

EXPENDITURES OF THE DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (—)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Air Services—
Telecommunications Division	13·9	12·7	1·2
Meteorological Division	7·0	6·6	0·4
Civil Aviation Division	21·2	19·5	1·7
Administration	0·2	0·2
	42·3	39·0	3·3
Canal Services	9·5	9·9	—0·4
Marine Services	20·8	21·7	—0·9
Railway Services—
Maritime Freight Rates Act—
Difference between tariff and normal tolls	10·5	10·1	0·4
Other railway services	13·5	6·4	7·1
Maintenance of trackage	7·0	4·2	2·8
	31·0	20·7	10·3
Canadian Maritime Commission	4·3	4·0	0·3
Deficits and non-active advances—
Government-owned enterprises—
Net Income Deficits—
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd	0·6	(1)	0·6
North Sydney—Port aux Basques ferry and terminals	2·2	1·9	0·3
Prince Edward Island Car Ferry and terminals	1·6	1·5	0·1
National Harbours Board	.....	0·1	—0·1
Loans and Advances, non-active—
National Harbours Board	4·3	1·9	2·4
	8·7	5·4	3·3
Departmental administration and sundry	3·6	3·2	0·4
	120·2	103·9	16·3

(1) Less than $50,000.

Estimated expenditures of $42·3 million for air services in 1953-54 represent an increase of $3·3 million over 1952-53. Of this increase $1·2 million is attributable to the telecommunications division, $0·4 million to the meteorological division and $1·7 million to the civil aviation division. Expenditures for railway services are expected to show an increase of $10·3 million, of which $2·8 million relates to payments under the Railway Act to the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways for the maintenance of trackage on the railways' transcontinental lines in certain areas of Northern Ontario, $0·4 million for expenditures in connection with the Maritime Freight Rates Act and $7·1 million for other railway services (due mainly to increases of $3·4 million for transportation improvements and facilities with respect to the Strait of Canso and $4·5 million for construction or acquisition of auto ferry vessels). Payments covering net operating deficits of and non-active loans and advances to certain government owned enterprises are estimated at $8·7 million in 1953-54 an increase of $3·3 million compared with $5·4 million in 1952-53, due largely to an increase of $2·4 million in non-active loans and advances to the National Harbours Board.

Veterans Affairs

Expenditures for the Department of Veterans Affairs are estimated at $239·8 million for 1953-54 compared with the total of $241·4 million spent in 1952-53. The net decrease of $1·6 million is due primarily to decreases of $1·3 million in post-discharge rehabilitation benefits, $1·6 million in war service gratuities and re-establishment credits, and $1·2 million in departmental, district and pensions administration and miscellaneous payments, offset in part by increases of $2·1 million in expenditure for treatment services, $0·7 million in pensions for disability or death, and $0·6 million in the provision for the reserve for conditional benefits under the Soldier Settlement and Veterans Land Acts. Conditional grants are made to veterans who enter into agreements with the director for sales of land and chattels provided they fulfil the terms of the agreements for a period of ten years. The amount charged to expenditure in 1953-54 under this heading covers one-tenth of the conditional benefits included in sales to veterans prior to April 1954.

The following table presents a comparative summary of the expenditures for the past two fiscal years:

TABLE XXX

VETERANS AFFAIRS EXPENDITURES FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Fiscal Year Ended March 31		Increase or Decrease (−)
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
Pensions for disability or death	127·7	127·0	0·7
Treatment services	42·8	40·7	2·1
War veterans' allowances and other benefits	30·3	30·8	−0·5
Post-discharge rehabilitation benefits	2·5	3·8	−1·3
War service gratuities and re-establishment credits	9·1	10·7	−1·6
Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Acts—
Administration and general	5·3	5·7	−0·4
Provision for reserve for conditional benefits	8·6	8·0	0·6
Departmental, district and pensions administration and miscellaneous payments	13·5	14·7	−1·2
	239·8	241·4	−1·6

4. THE CASH POSITION

In addition to the collection of revenues and the making of expenditures in the strict budgetary sense the Government's financial operations include numerous extra-budgetary transactions which involve the receipt and disbursement of large sums of cash.

The estimated budgetary revenues, expenditures and surplus for 1953-54 have been described and analysed in some detail in the preceding sections. Although these budgetary transactions for 1953-54 resulted in a surplus of $10·1 million, the unmatured funded debt outstanding in the hands of the public decreased by $272·6 million, while the Government's cash balances increased by some $120·2 million. It is apparent that both budgetary and non-budgetary transactions must be taken into account when measuring the impact of the Government's fiscal operations upon the Canadian economy or considering the implications of Government spending and the methods by which that spending is financed.

The non-budgetary transactions relate to transactions which result in increases or decreases in the Government's assets and liabilities. They do not appear in the Government's income account nor do they enter into the calculation of the annual budgetary surplus or deficit.

On the assets side they consist, for the most part, of advances to, and repayments of loans by, Crown Corporations and other Government agencies and funds (including the old age security fund), foreign, provincial and municipal governments and other borrowers, investments in government securities and outlays for the acquisition of inventories of materials and supplies which will be used in the future and for services rendered in one year but applicable to the accounts of subsequent years.

On the liabilities side the transactions relate primarily to receipts and payments in connection with the numerous deposit and trust, and annuity, insurance and pension funds held or administered by the Government.

The following summary shows how these non-budgetary transactions together with the budgetary surplus affected the Government's funded debt and cash position in 1953-54. For purposes of comparison, the corresponding figures for 1952-53 are also shown:

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31
	1954 (Estimated)	1953
	(In millions of dollars)
NON-BUDGETARY RECEIPTS AND CREDITS (excluding unmatured funded debt transactions)—
Repayments of loans, investments and working capital advances—
Loans to, and investments in, Canadian National Railways	163·8
Advances to agricultural prices support account	49·8	−71·2
Advances to defence production revolving fund	17·1	−19·7
Advances to exchange fund	15·0	−45·0
Temporary loan to old age security fund	99·5
1942 loan to United Kingdom	53·6	24·3
1946 loan to United Kingdom	14·6	14·3
Loans to other national governments	24·4	22 2
Loans to provincial and municipal governments	3·7	3·8
Other loans, investments and working capital advances	4·1	1·0
	445·6	−70·8
Net government annuities account receipts—
Premium receipts less payments to beneficiaries	32·3	32·9
Government contribution to maintain reserve	1·0	0·7
Interest paid by Government	29·0	27·0
	62·3	60·6
Net insurance and pension account receipts—
Employee contributions less payments to beneficiaries	16·8	17·6
Government contributions	89·8	45·0
Special Government provision for unamortized portion of public service superannuation account	.....	25·0
Interest paid by Government	32·2	28·3
	138·8	115·9
Net increase in Colombo plan fund	18·1	19·9
Net increase in defence equipment and materiel replacement accounts	53·4	85·1
Net increase in interest accrued on the public debt	12·2	25·9
Net increase in reserve for conditional benefits—Veterans Land Act	8·6	8·0
Net increase in matured funded debt, outstanding cheques, interest due, etc	48·3	7·4
Net receipts in sundry other accounts	24·0	22·4
Total	811·3	274·9
NON-BUDGETARY DISBURSEMENTS AND CHARGES (excluding unmatured funded debt transactions)—
Loans, investments and working capital advances—
Loans to and investments in, Canadian National Railways	145·7	141·8
Loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	92·5	72·6
Temporary loan to old age security fund	44·8	99·5
Loans under Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Act	7·8	6·8
Other loans, investments and working capital advances	29·7	12·8
	320·5	333·5
Other non-budgetary expenditures—
Cost of loan flotations (portion to be amortized)	10·3	6·4
Net decrease in provincial 5 per cent corporation income tax suspense account	47·9	29·8
Net decrease in reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets	49·4	−75·0
Net decrease in cash balances of unemployment insurance fund	0·4	0·6
Net disbursements from sundry accounts	0·1	8·3
	108·1	−29·9
Total	428·6	303·6
Net amount available from, or required for (−), non-budgetary transactions	382·7	−28·7
Add, Budgetary surplus	10·1	23·5
Overall cash surplus available for debt reduction	392·8
Overall cash deficit (−) required to be financed by borrowing	.....	−5·2
Net increase or decrease (−) in unmatured funded debt outstanding in the hands of the public:
Unmatured funded debt	−241·0	115·1
Sinking fund	−73·1	−1·7
Securities investment account	41·5	−0·6
	−272·6	112·8
Net increase in cash balances	120·2	107·6

As the table shows, in 1953-54 non-budgetary receipts and credits are estimated at $811·3 million, while non-budgetary disbursements and charges are estimated at $428·6 million, resulting in a net non-budgetary surplus of $382·7 million which, when added to the budgetary surplus of $10·1 million, made a total of $392·8 million available for debt reduction. In 1952-53, as there was a net non-budgetary deficit of $28·7 million and a budgetary surplus of $23·5 million, $5·2 million had to be financed by net new borrowing from the public.

Non-budgetary receipts and credits for 1953-54 are estimated at $811·3 million. Repayments of loans, investments and working capital advances totalled $445·6 million, due mainly to repayments of $163·8 million by Canadian National Railways, a reduction of $49·8 million in the advances to the agricultural prices support account, net repayments of $17·1 million in advances to the defence production revolving fund, net repayments of $15 million in advances to the exchange fund, a writing off against the general reserve of temporary loans of $99·5 million made to the old age security fund in 1952-53, and repayments of $92·6 million by the United Kingdom and other national governments. Other non-budgetary receipts and credits include $62·3 million on government annuities account, $138·8 million in respect of the several insurance and pension accounts, $18·1 million net increase in Colombo plan fund, $53·4 million representing increases in the defence equipment and materiel replacement accounts, and $93·1 million receipts from various other accounts.

Non-budgetary disbursements and charges during 1953-54 are expected to total $428·6 million. Loans, investments and working capital advances were $320·5 million. These include $145·7 million to Canadian National Railways for capital expenditures for additions and betterments and the acquisition of new rolling stock and equipment and for additional working capital (as mentioned in the preceding paragraph, during the year the Canadian National Railways also repaid loans aggregating $163·8 million); $92·5 million to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing construction and loans; $44·8 million in temporary loans to the old age security fund to finance the amount by which pension payments from the fund exceeded tax receipts; and $37·5 million for miscellaneous loans, investments and working capital advances (including $7·8 million for loans to veterans). Other non-budgetary disbursements and charges are estimated at $108·1 million, and include $10·3 million for discounts and commissions on loans, $47·9 million for the net decrease in the provincial 5 per cent corporation income tax suspense account $46·9 million of which was transferred to budgetary revenues during the year, a net decrease of $49·4 million in the reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets (the $50 million provided for this reserve in budgetary expenditures is more than offset by a reduction due to the charge to the reserve of the 1952-53 temporary loan of $99·5 million to the Old Age Security Fund), and $0·5 million disbursements from various other accounts.

With an overall cash surplus of $392·8 million in 1953–54, and unmatured funded debt outstanding in the hands of the public reduced by $272·6 million, there was an estimated increase of $120·2 million in cash balances at the end of the year.

The Budget—Appendix

5. ESTIMATED SUMMARY OF ASSETS AND LIABILITIES OF CANADA AT MARCH 31, 1954

The following table presents in summary form the estimated balances of the asset and liability accounts as at March 31, 1954, the comparable balances at March 31, 1953, and the estimated change in each category during 1953-54:

TABLE XXXI

SUMMARY OF THE STATEMENT OF THE ASSETS AND LIABILITIES OF CANADA AS AT MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease(−)
	1954 Estimated	1953
LIABILITIES
Floating debt	912·2	863·9	48·3
Deposit and trust accounts	205·0	183·1	21·9
Insurance, pension and guaranty accounts	1,767·8	1,567·1	200·7
Deferred credits	150·8	130·0	20·8
Sundry suspense accounts	358·6	352·0	6·6
Province debt accounts	11·9	11·9	.....
Unmatured funded debt	14,569·5	14,810·5	−241·0
	17,975·8	17,918·5	57·3
ACTIVE ASSETS
Cash and other current assets	2,539·9	2,591·8	−51·9
Loans to, and investments in, Crown agencies	1,788·2	1,705·2	83·0
Other loans and investments	2,437·5	2,526·1	−88·6
Sinking fund and other investments held for the retirement of debt	100·7	27·6	73·1
Province debt accounts	2·3	2·3	.....
Deferred charges	260·0	249·7	10·3
Sundry suspense accounts	192·0	199·9	−7·9
Total Active Assets	7,320·6	7,302·6	18·0
Less, Reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets	496·4	545·8	−49·4
Net Active Assets	6,824·2	6,756·8	67·4
NET DEBT (Excess of liabilities over net active assets)	11,151·6	11,161·7	−10·1

Liabilities

The aggregate liabilities of the Government as at March 31, 1954, are estimated at $17,975·8 million, an increase of $57·3 million over the total of $17,918·5 million at the close of the previous fiscal year.

Unmatured funded debt outstanding, including bonds and treasury bills totalled $14,569·5 million or approximately 81 per cent of all liabilities. Of the total outstanding unmatured funded debt, $14,181·6 million or 97·3 per cent is payable in Canada; the balance of $387·9 million is payable in foreign currencies—$337·6 million in United States dollars and $50·3 million in pounds sterling. A complete statement in tabular form of the Government's unmatured funded debt as at March 31, 1954, with details of interest rates, dates of maturity, annual interest charges and amounts of principal outstanding for each loan may be found at the end of this Part.

The Government's liability in respect of insurance, pension and guaranty accounts is expected to total $1,767·8 million at March 31, 1954. Floating debt, which includes outstanding cheques, matured funded debt and similar obligations payable on demand and accounts payable (cheques issued in April in payment of accounts relating to the fiscal year 1953-54) is estimated at $912·2 million.

The other liability items are: sundry suspense accounts (where some uncertainty as to disposal exists), $358·6 million; deposit and trust accounts (consisting of moneys deposited with or held by the Receiver General for various purposes), $205 million; deferred credits (consisting of balances whose ultimate accounting treatment is known, but which are held until certain conditions are fulfilled), $150·8 million and province debt accounts (representing settlements arising out of agreements at the time of Confederation), $11·9 million.

Active Assets

Offsetting the liabilities, and to some extent explaining their existence—as a substantial part of the total debt is attributable to them—are the Government's active assets. For the most part these consist of assets which yield interest, profits or dividends, liquid assets such as cash and departmental working funds together with certain prepaid expenses and sundry suspense accounts.

It is estimated that at the end of the fiscal year the total active assets amounted to $7,320·6 million, an increase of $18 million over the total at the end of the previous fiscal year. The totals of the principal active asset categories as at March 31, 1954 were: cash and other current assets, $2,539·9 million; loans to, and investments in, Crown agencies, $1,788·2 million; other loans and investments (including loans to provincial, municipal and national governments, subscriptions to international organizations and advances to veterans and others), $2,437·5 million; deferred charges, $260 million; sundry suspense accounts, $192 million; sinking fund and other investments held for the retirement of unmatured funded debt, $100·7 million; and province debt accounts, $2·3 million.

The reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets, which now stands at $496·4 million is shown on the statement of assets and liabilities as a deduction from the total active assets, bringing the net active asset total to $6,824·2 million.

A. Changes in Principal Liability Classifications During 1953-54

The gross liabilities of the Government at March 31, 1954, were $57·3 million more than the total at the end of the previous fiscal year. A decrease of $241 million in unmatured funded debt is more than offset by an overall increase of $298·3 million for all other liability items, due largely to the increase of $200·7 million in insurance, pension and guaranty accounts. Other increases are: $48·3 million in floating debt, $21·9 million in deposit and trust accounts, $20·8 million in deferred credits and $6·6 million in sundry suspense accounts.

Floating Debt

It is estimated that floating debt increased by $48·3 million during the fiscal year. Increases of $39·5 million in matured funded debt outstanding (due for the most part to the fact that some bonds of the March 1, 1954 maturity had not been redeemed at the year end), $11·6 million in outstanding cheques and warrants and $11·4 million in miscellaneous accounts payable are offset, in part, by decreases of $13·5 million in notes and other obligations payable on demand and $1·1 million in interest due and outstanding.

The estimated changes in floating debt during 1953-54 are shown in the following table:

TABLE XXXII

FLOATING DEBT AS AT MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease(−)
	1954 Estimated	1953
Matured funded debt outstanding	59·5	20·0	39·5
Notes and other obligations payable on demand	268·5	282·0	−13·5
Interest due and outstanding	56·0	57·1	−1·1
Outstanding cheques and warrants	242·4	230·8	11·6
Miscellaneous accounts payable	269·0	257·6	11·4
Post Office (net liability for money orders, etc.)	16·8	16·4	0·4
	912·2	863·9	48·3

Deposit and Trust Accounts

Deposit and trust accounts increased by $21·9 million during the fiscal year. The principal increase was $18·1 million in the Colombo Plan Fund to which was credited $30·4 million voted by Parliament to provide for assistance to countries in South and South-east Asia. Disbursements from the fund during 1953-54 amounted to $12·3 million.

Insurance, Pension and Guaranty Accounts

The increase in insurance, pension and guaranty accounts is estimated to be $200·7 million. The following table shows the changes in the various accounts for the fiscal year 1953-54:

TABLE XXXIII

INSURANCE, PENSION AND GUARANTY ACCOUNTS AS AT MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease(−)
	1954 Estimated	1953
Unemployment Insurance Fund	894·7	863·1	31·6
Less, Investment in bonds and accrued interest	883·1	851·1	32·0
	11·6	12·0	−0·4
Government Annuities	798·8	736·5	62·3
Permanent Services Pension Account	215·6	160·2	55·4
Superannuation Account	659·0	555·0	104·0
Other	82·8	103·4	−20·6
	1,767·8	1,567·1	200·7

The superannuation account increased by $104 million during the fiscal year. This increase is attributable to several factors, the most important of which are the Government's contribution of $38 million in respect of the additional liability created by the general salary increases to civil servants effective December 1, 1953; transfers of $22·5 million from the retirement fund, and $5·6 million from the National Harbours Board Pension Fund due to the coming into force of the Public Service Superannuation Act on January 1, 1954; the Government's contribution of $16·5 million equal to the estimated current and prior service payments of individuals in 1952-53; interest of $22·2 million credited to the account; and the employees' current and prior service contributions, less payments from the fund.

The Government annuities account is expected to show an increase of $62·3 million and the permanent services pension account an increase of $55·4 million. The increase in the permanent services pension account represents the Government's contribution of $35·3 million (which is made at the rate of one and two thirds times the current contributions and contributions for arrears), interest on the account amouting to $6·6 million and contributions by permanent services personnel for current service and arrears, less the payments from the account.

Other insurance, pension and guaranty accounts show a decrease of $21 million, which included the decrease of $22·5 million in retirement fund transferred to the superannuation account.

Old Age Security Fund

Under the Old Age Security Act pensions of $40 per month are paid to all eligible persons seventy years of age or over without a means test from the old age security fund. During the fiscal year payments from the fund totalled $338·8 million and credits to the fund from the proceeds of the 2 per cent tax on personal incomes, the 2 per cent tax on corporation profits and the 2 per cent sales tax totalled $294 million. The deficit of $44·8 million resulting from these 1953-54 transactions was covered by a temporary loan from the Minister of Finance under the authority of section 11 of the Old Age Security Act.

During the three months' period in the fiscal year 1951-52 in which the Act was in operation, payments of pension from the fund amounted to $76·1 million, receipts from taxes credited to the fund amounted to $26·4 million and the deficit of $49·7 million on the year's transactions was covered by moneys voted by Parliament in Vote 608 of Appropriation Act No. 2, 1952.

In 1952-53, payments of pension from the fund amounted to $323·1 million and receipts from old age security taxes amounted to $223·6 million, and the deficit of $99·5 million for the year was covered by a temporary loan from the Minister of Finance. A large part of the 1952-53 deficit was because the special 2 per cent personal and corporate income taxes only started to be fully payable to the fund in July 1952. The authority of Parliament will be sought to write this amount off in 1953-54 to the reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets.

With the deficit of the old age security fund for 1951-52 covered by funds voted by Parliament and that for 1952-53 written off to the reserve for active assets, the balance of the temporary loan to the old age security fund at the close of the fiscal year is estimated at $44·8 million, representing the deficit on the fund's operations in 1953-54.

The Budget—Appendix

The following table gives a summary of the transactions in the account for the last three years:

TABLE XXXIV

TRANSACTIONS IN THE OLD AGE SECURITY FUND FOR THE FISCAL YEARS ENDED MARCH 31, 1952, 1953 AND 1954

(In millions of dollars)

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31
	1954 (Estimated)		1953		1952(1)
Pension Payments		338·8		323·1		76·1
Tax Receipts—
2 per cent sales tax	147·7		141·5		24·3
2 per cent individual income tax	90·7		45·2		0·1
2 per cent corporation income tax	55·6	294·0	36·9	223·6	2·0	26·4
Excess of pension payments over tax receipts		44·8		99·5		49·7
Temporary loans from Minister of Finance to cover deficit for fiscal year		44·8		99·5		49·7
Carried forward from previous year		99·5		.....		.....
Charged to Parliamentary appropriation		.....		.....		−49·7
Written off to active asset reserve		−99·5		.....		.....
Outstanding at end of fiscal year		44·8		99·5		.....

(1) The Act was in operation for only three months in 1951-52.

A distribution of old age security pension payments by provinces is given in the following table:

TABLE XXXV

OLD AGE SECURITY PAYMENTS BY PROVINCES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1954

(In millions of dollars)

Newfoundland	7·2
Nova Scotia	17·7
Prince Edward Island	3·2
New Brunswick	12·6
Quebec	72·0
Ontario	125·8
Manitoba	20·0
Saskatchewan	20·1
Alberta	20·1
British Columbia	39·9
Northwest and Yukon Territories	0·2
	338·8

Deferred Credits

The increase in deferred credits is estimated to be $20·8 million. Interest accrued on public debt shows an increase of $12·2 million and balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets, set up as a contra account to an account under the same name in other loans and investments, an increase of $8·7 million.

Sundry Suspense Accounts

Sundry suspense accounts show an increase of $6·6 million for the fiscal year. The transactions in the defence equipment replacement account reflect an increase of $41·4 million in the undisbursed balance of the credits in the account which was established under section 3 of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, and subsequent votes of Parliament for the same purpose. Under the terms of the Defence Appropriation Act, 1950, the value of defence materials and supplies transferred to members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization may be credited to the account and these credits may be used in subsequent years to purchase equipment or supplies for the naval, army or air services of the Canadian Forces.

The replacement of materiel account established by section 11 of the National Defence Act is credited with amounts realized from the sale of materiel that has not been declared surplus to requirements but has been authorized by the Governor in Council to be sold to other countries and debited with disbursements representing amounts paid for the procurement of replacement materiel. The increase in the account during the fiscal year was $12 million.

Also recorded under this heading was the amount held by the Government in respect of collections of the 5 per cent corporation income tax levied by the provinces that were party to a tax agreement with the Federal Government in the period 1947 to 1951. Under terms of collection agreements with the provinces, this tax was collected by the Federal Government and the proceeds thereof, when returns were finally assessed, were turned over to the provinces. The amount turned over to the provinces, (less any small amounts which represented collection of interest and penalties) was deducted from the stipulated tax rental payments and thus reduced the Federal expenditures shown on this account.

This arrangement was not continued under the new tax agreements signed for a further five years in 1952 and the provincial corporation income tax was not levied on profits earned after December 31, 1951. However, substantial amounts were collected after 1951 in respect of tax liability incurred during the five years when the tax was in force and towards the end of 1952-53 the account contained approximately $92 million. Prior to 1952-53 amounts in this account, when turned over to the provinces, served to reduce Federal Government expenditures on account of tax rental payments but under the new agreements signed in 1952 the provinces gave up all rights in these collections remaining in the Suspense Account. Accordingly the amount in the account instead of being applied to the reduction of tax rental payments is to be taken into revenue. At the end of 1952-53 the amount of $45 million was transferred from the account to revenue as "Special receipts and credits". As the assessments for the taxation years 1947 to 1951 are now almost all completed, the balance of $46·9 million remaining in the account at the end of 1953-54 has been transferred to revenue as "Special receipts and credits" and the account closed out.

Province Debt Accounts

There were no changes in the province debt accounts during the fiscal year. The amounts have remained unchanged for many years.

Funded Debt Unmatured

The unmatured funded debt outstanding at the close of the fiscal year was $14,569·5 million. The reduction of $241 million reflects decreases of $234·3 million in debt payable in Canada, $2·6 million in the Canadian dollar equivalent of debt payable in London and $4·1 million in the Canadian dollar equivalent of debt payable in New York. The details of the various loan redemptions, flotations and adjustments resulting in this net decrease are described more fully in the section on "The Public Debt".

B.—CHANGES IN THE PRINCIPAL ACTIVE ASSET CLASSIFICATIONS DURING 1953-54

It is estimated that the total of the active assets increased $18 million during 1953-54. However, the reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets was reduced by $49·5 million during the year, an additional provision of $50 million for the reserve being offset by a charge of $99·5 million, representing the amount of temporary loans made to the old age security fund in 1952-53, written off to the reserve in 1953-54. These changes have the effect of increasing the total of net active assets by $67·4 million. Increases of $83 million in loans to, and investments in, Crown agencies, $73·1 million in sinking fund and other investments held for the retirement of debt and $10·3 million in deferred charges are offset, in part, by decreases of $88·6 million in other loans and investments, $51·9 million in cash and other current assets and $7·9 million in sundry suspense accounts.

Cash and Other Current Assets

It is estimated that there was a decrease of $51·9 million in cash and other current assets in the fiscal year 1953-54. The changes in the various accounts in this category are summarized in the following table:

TABLE XXXVI

CASH AND OTHER CURRENT ASSETS AS AT MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953
(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease(−)
	1954 Estimated	1953
Cash in current and special deposits (including blocked currency of $1·5 million at March 31, 1954 and $2·1 million at March 31, 1953)	376·3	255·8	120·5
Cash in hands of collectors and in transit	120·0	129·7	−9·7
Other liquid assets—
Exchange fund account—Advances represented by cash and securities	1,763·8	1,770·8	−7·0
Securities investment account	18·0	59·5	−41·5
Working Capital Advances—
Crown corporations	23·6	23·9	−0·3
Defence production revolving fund	85·0	102·1	−17·1
Temporary loan to old age security fund	44·8	99·5	−54·7
Departmental	46·9	96·0	−49·1
Miscellaneous departmental imprest and advance accounts	32·0	24·0	8·0
Other current assets	29·5	30·5	−1·0
	2,539·9	2,591·8	−51·9

The principal changes as shown in the table are increases of $120·5 million in cash in current and special deposits and $8 million in miscellaneous departmental imprest and advance accounts offset by an overall decrease of $180·4 million for all other asset items, the chief of which are: temporary loan to the old age security fund $54·7 million, departmental working capital advances $49·1 million, securities investment account $41·5 million, defence production revolving fund $17·1 million, cash in hands of collectors and in transit, $9·7 million and the exchange fund account $7 million.

Advances to the exchange fund during the year are estimated at $140 million, and repayments $155 million leaving a net decrease in advances for the year of $15 million which was reduced by $8 million reflecting the decrease during 1953 in the fund's revaluation deficit which at December 31, 1953, was $191·2 million compared with $199·2 million at end of the preceding year thus showing a net change of $7 million in the balance of the fund for the fiscal year.

The decrease of $66·2 million in departmental working capital advances is accounted for by decreases of $17·1 million in defence production revolving fund and $49·8 million in agricultural prices support account, reflecting the credit to the account of $37·8 million representing the estimated loss on operation for 1953-54, which is included in the year's expenditures and $12 million, the net credit to the account from sales and purchases during the year by the Agricultural Prices Support Board.

It is proposed that the amount of $99·5 million, the advances to the old age security fund representing the deficit of the fund for 1952-53, will be written off to the reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets and credited to the temporary loan to the old age security fund. The credit of $99·5 million less the advances of $44·8 million to the fund to cover the estimated deficit of the fund for 1953-54 will result in a credit in the temporary loan to the old age security fund for the year of $54·7 million.

Loans to, and Investments in, Crown Agencies

It is estimated that loans to, and investments in, Crown agencies increased by $83 million during the fiscal year. The more important changes are an increase of $92·5 million in loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and a decrease of $18·1 million in the loans and advances to the Canadian National Railways. The following table shows the changes in this category.

TABLE XXXVII

LOANS TO, AND INVESTMENTS IN, CROWN AGENCIES AS AT MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease(—)
	1954 Estimated	1953
Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited	15·6	8·8	6·8
Bank of Canada—Capital Stock	5·9	5·9	.....
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	16·0	11·3	4·7
Canadian Farm Loan Board	32·6	28·9	3·7
Canadian National Railways	1,027·4	1,045·5	—18·1
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—
Capital Advances	25·0	25·0	.....
Loans	500·0	407·5	92·5
Defence Construction (1951) Limited	.....	2·8	—2·8
Eldorado Mining and Refining Limited	8·2	8·2	.....
Export Credits Insurance Corporation	5·0	5·0	.....
National Harbours Board	106·0	106·8	—0·8
Northwest Territories Power Commission	8·1	8·5	—0·4
Polymer Corporation Limited	34·0	37·0	—3·0
Other Crown Agencies	4·4	4·0	0·4
	1,788·2	1,705·2	83·0

Loans to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for the fiscal year were $101 million, of which $89 million is for lending purposes, $2 million for construction and $10 million for federal-provincial housing projects. Repayments of $8·5 million bring the net increase in advances for the year to $92·5 million.

In the fiscal year ended March 31, 1954, the Government advanced $121 million to the Canadian National Railway Company for capital purposes, the retirement of funded debt in the hands of the public and to cover the operating deficit of the Company for the first three months of 1954. From the proceeds of a $200 million twenty year 3¾% bond issue sold to the public early in 1954, the Company repaid the Government $147·8 million of advances for capital purposes. In addition, it repaid a temporary loan of $16 million obtained during the early part of the calendar year, 1953, when the operations of the Railway were resulting temporarily in a deficit. As a consequence of all these transactions the advances to the Company were reduced by $38·8 million during the fiscal year.

In addition, the Government purchased $20·7 million of 4 per cent preferred stock of the Canadian National Railway Company in order to assist the Company to finance additional capital expenditures. This stock is issued under the authority of the Canadian National Railways Capital Revision Act, 1952, in an amount equal to three per cent of the gross revenues of the Company.

The advances to the National Harbours Board were reduced by $0·8 million during 1953-54, bringing the amount outstanding to $106 million at the close of the year. The balance represents all the outstanding advances in connection with harbour developments at Montreal and Vancouver, and a portion of those in respect of Three Rivers.

Polymer Corporation Limited, a Crown corporation engaged in the manufacture of synthetic rubber, reduced its indebtedness during the year by $3 million.

Advances to the Canadian Farm Loan Board were $32·6 million at the fiscal year-end, an increase of $3·7 million over the total at March 31, 1953.

Other increases in loans to, and investments in, Crown agencies were $6·8 million for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and $4·7 million for Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Other Loans and Investments

It is estimated that other loans and investments decreased by $88·6 million during the fiscal year. The following table shows the main accounts in this category together with the changes during the fiscal year:

TABLE XXXVIII

OTHER LOANS AND INVESTMENTS AS AT MARCH 31, 1954 AND MARCH 31, 1953

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease(−)
	1954 Estimated	1953
Loans to United Kingdom and other governments	1,772·3	1,864·9	−92·6
Subscription to capital of International Monetary Fund	322·5	322·5	.....
Subscription to capital of International Bank for Reconstruction and Development	70·9	70·9	.....
Loans to provincial and municipal governments	83·5	87·2	−3·7
Advances under Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Acts	161·9	162·7	−0·8
Miscellaneous loans and investments	26·4	17·9	8·5
	2,437·5	2,526·1	−88·6

The loans to the United Kingdom and other governments consist of loans to the Government of the United Kingdom under the authority of The War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942, and the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, loans to other governments under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act and miscellaneous foreign loans. The following table shows the changes in this category during the fiscal year:

TABLE XXXIX

LOANS TO UNITED KINGDOM AND OTHER GOVERNMENTS

(In millions of dollars)

—	Balance at March 31		Increase or Decrease(−)
	1954 Estimated	1953
Loans to United Kingdom—
The War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942	142·5	196·1	−53·6
The United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946	1,142·1	1,156·7	−14·6
	1,284·6	1,352·8	−68·2
Loans to Other Governments—
The Export Credits Insurance Act, Part II	440·8	460·2	−19·4
Miscellaneous advances	46·9	51·9	−5·0
	487·7	512·1	−24·4
	1,772·3	1,864·9	−92·6

Under the terms of an agreement entered into on August 13, 1953, between the Governments of the United Kingdom and Canada, the Government of the United Kingdom agreed to reduce the unpaid balance of the $700 million interest-free loan granted under the provisions of the War Appropriation (United Kingdom Financing) Act, 1942, which then amounted to $188·6 million, to $150 million and to repay the balance by quarterly instalments of $7·5 million payable on March 1, June 1, September 1 and December 1 in each year, the first instalment to be paid on March 1, 1954, and the final instalment on December 1, 1958. Under the agreement the loan is to continue to be free of interest until December, 1958.

During the fiscal year 1953-54, the Government of the United Kingdom repaid $53·6 million of this loan reducing the balance outstanding at March 31, 1954 to $142·5 million.

In addition, the Government of the United Kingdom repaid $14·6 million on account of the $1,185 million loan made under the United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946, reducing the balance outstanding at the fiscal year end to $1,142·1 million.

Outstanding advances made under authority of Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act are estimated at $440·8 million, at March 31, 1954, a decrease of $19·4 million for the fiscal year. Advances under this Act represent loans made to certain foreign countries to assist them in purchasing goods and services in Canada. Miscellaneous advances to national governments show a decrease of $5 million, of which $3·6 million is due to the repayment by the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics of advances made under authority of section 3 of the War Expenditure and Demobilization Appropriation Act, chap. 37, 1945 (2nd Sess.).

A summary of the outstanding advances under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act is given in the following table:

TABLE XL

ADVANCES TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS UNDER PART II OF THE EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT
(In millions of dollars)

—	Total Outstanding at March 31 1953	Repayments during 1953-54	Total Outstanding at March 31 1954
Belgium	55·4	2·3	53·1
China	49·4	.....	49·4
Czechoslovakia	9·9	.....	9·9
France	209·2	8·4	200·8
Indonesia	7·7	1·5	6·2
Netherlands	110·2	4·6	105·6
Norway	18·4	2·6	15·8
	460·2	19·4	440·8

All payments falling due during the fiscal year 1953-54 have been received in accordance with the agreements entered into by the Governments of the various countries and the Government of Canada with the exception of payments owing by the Governments of China and Czechoslovakia.

Miscellaneous loans and investments increased by an estimated $8·5 million during the year. Included in this category are the balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets which show an estimated increase of $8·1 million, of which $8·0 million is the balance due by A. V. Roe Canada Limited from a sale to that Company of Crown assets. (A contra account to these balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown assets is included in deferred credits).

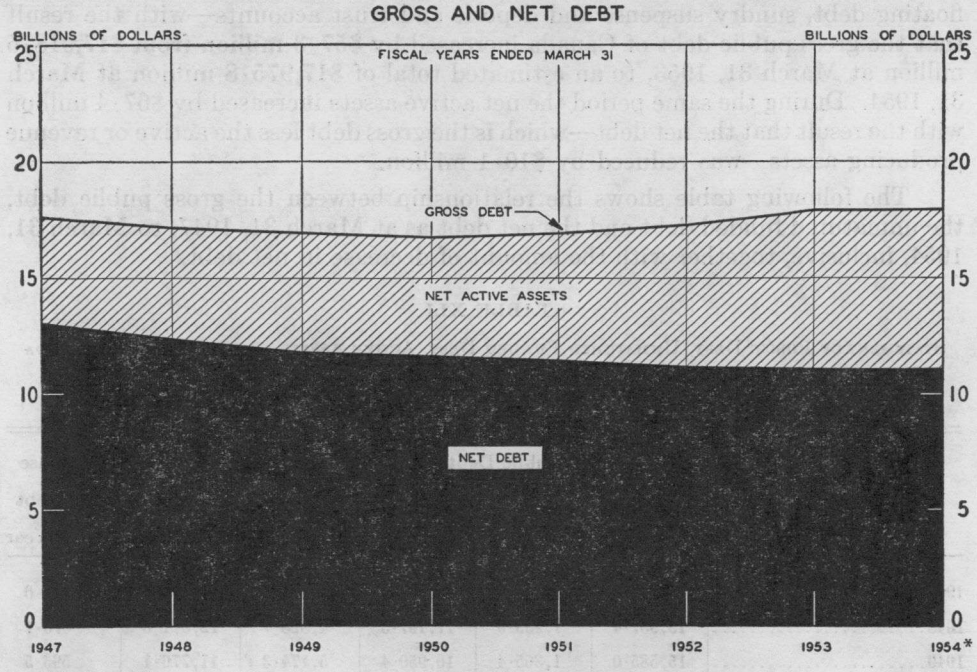
Sinking Fund and Other Investments held for the Retirement of Unmatured Funded Debt

There was an increase of $73·1 million in these assets during the fiscal year, due mainly to the purchase of $75 million 3 per cent Government of Canada New York Loan 1948-63 bonds having a value in Canadian dollars of $72·7 million

Deferred Charges

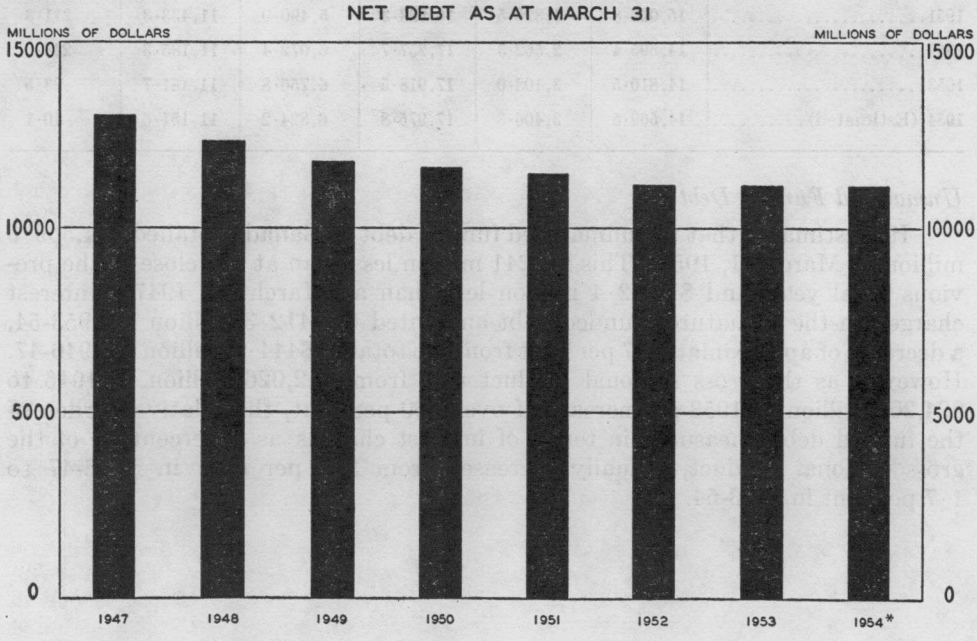
Deferred charges increased by $10·3 million during the fiscal year, reflecting a net increase of $10·3 million in unamortized discounts and commissions on loans, due to the payment of $29·5 million for discounts and commissions on new loans offset by the annual amortization charges of $19·2 million on past loans applicable to and included in the expenditure for 1953-54.

Sundry Suspense Accounts



The decrease of $7·9 million in sundry suspense accounts is due to the fact that the deficit arising from the exchange revaluations in respect of the assets and liabilities of the exchange fund account was $191·2 million at December 31, 1953, compared with $199·2 million at the close of the previous year.

Reserve for Possible Losses on Ultimate Realization of Active Assets



The sum of $50 million was added to the reserve for possible losses on the ultimate realization of active assets with a corresponding amount shown as an expenditure during the year and $99·5 million was written off the reserve in respect of the temporary loan to the old age security fund in 1952-53 resulting in a decrease of $49·5 million in the account for the year. The balance of the reserve as at March 31, 1954, is estimated at $496·4 million.

C. Decrease in Net Debt

The estimated surplus of $10·1 million for the fiscal year resulted in a corresponding decrease in the net debt of Canada, reducing it from $11,161·7 million at March 31, 1953, to $11,151·6 million at March 31, 1954.

*Estimated.

*Estimated.

6. THE PUBLIC DEBT

Gross and Net Debt

The unmatured funded debt of Canada decreased by $241 million during the fiscal year but this decrease was more than offset by an increase of $298·3 million in other liabilities—principally in insurance, pension and guaranty, floating debt, sundry suspense and deposit and trust accounts—with the result that the gross public debt of Canada increased by $57·3 million from $17,918·5 million at March 31, 1953, to an estimated total of $17,975·8 million at March 31, 1954. During the same period the net active assets increased by $67·4 million with the result that the net debt—which is the gross debt less the active or revenue producing assets—was reduced by $10·1 million.

The following table shows the relationship between the gross public debt, the unmatured funded debt and the net debt as at March 31, 1947, to March 31, 1954, inclusive, together with the amount of decrease in net debt.

TABLE XLI

STATEMENT OF PUBLIC DEBT, UNMATURED FUNDED DEBT, ACTIVE ASSETS AND NET DEBT OF CANADA AS AT MARCH 31, 1947 TO 1954 INCLUSIVE

(In millions of dollars)

As at March 31	Gross Public Debt			Less Active Assets	Net Debt	Decrease in Net Debt During Fiscal Year
	Unmatured Funded Debt	Other Liabilities	Total
1947	16,541·9	1,156·3	17,698·2	4,650·4	13,047·8	373·6
1948	15,957·4	1,239·9	17,197·3	4,825·7	12,371·6	676·1
1949	15,585·0	1,365·4	16,950·4	5,174·3	11,776·1	595·5
1950	15,188·1	1,562·7	16,750·8	5,106·1	11,644·6	131·5
1951	15,026·8	1,896·5	16,923·3	5,490·0	11,433·3	211·3
1952	14,695·4	2,562·3	17,257·7	6,072·4	11,185·3	248·0
1953	14,810·5	3,108·0	17,918·5	6,756·8	11,161·7	23·5
1954 (Estimated)	14,569·5	3,406·3	17,975·8	6,824·2	11,151·6	10·1

Unmatured Funded Debt

It is estimated that the unmatured funded debt of Canada totalled $14,569·5 million at March 31, 1954. This is $241 million less than at the close of the previous fiscal year, and $1,972·4 million less than at March 31, 1947. Interest charges on the unmatured funded debt amounted to $412·3 million in 1953-54, a decrease of approximately 7 per cent from the total of $444·1 million in 1946-47. However, as the gross national product rose from $12,026 million in 1946 to $24,260 million in 1953 an increase of over 100 per cent, the relative burden of the funded debt, measured in terms of interest charges as a percentage of the gross national product, actually decreased from 3·7 per cent in 1946-47 to 1·7 per cent in 1953-54.

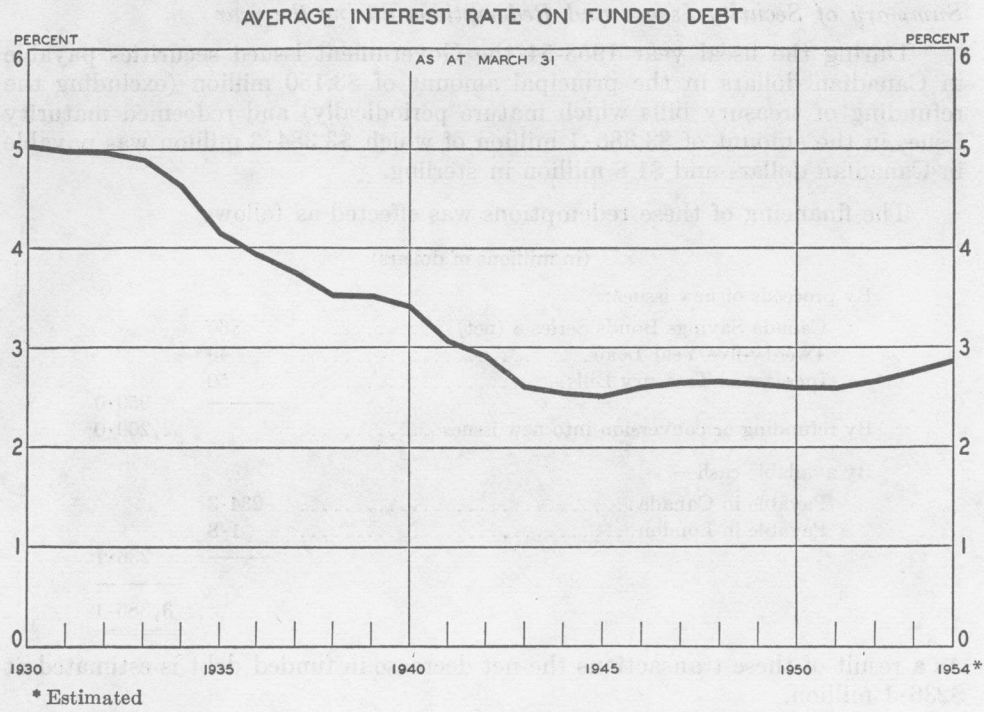
Summary of Security Issues and Redemptions during the year

During the fiscal year 1953-54 the Government issued securities payable in Canadian dollars in the principal amount of $3,150 million (excluding the refunding of treasury bills which mature periodically) and redeemed maturity issues in the amount of $3,386·1 million of which $3,384·3 million was payable in Canadian dollars and $1.8 million in sterling.

The financing of these redemptions was effected as follows:

(in millions of dollars)

By proceeds of new issues:
Canada Savings Bonds Series 8 (net)	860
Twenty-five Year Loan	40
Increase in Treasury Bills	50
		950·0
By refunding or conversion into new issues		2,200·0
By available cash—
Payable in Canada	234·3
Payable in London	1·8
		236·1
		3,386·1



As a result of these transactions the net decrease in funded debt is estimated at $236·1 million.

The Canadian dollar value of the Government's unmatured external funded debt is estimated to have decreased by $6·7 million during the fiscal year. Of this amount $4·1 million is in respect of indebtedness payable in United States dollars and $2·6 million in respect of sterling debt. Apart from the redemption of $1·8 million of 4% Registered Stock payable in sterling referred to above, the reduction resulted from revaluation of liabilities payable in sterling and United States dollars consequent upon the change in the exchange rates as compared with the previous fiscal year end.

As unmatured funded debt payable in Canada decreased by $234·3 million and as debt payable in sterling and United States dollars decreased by $6·7 million, the net decrease during the year in unmatured funded debt was $241 million.

Average interest rates on unmatured funded debt

The average coupon rate of the Government's outstanding funded debt at the close of the fiscal year was 2·86 per cent compared with 2·77 per cent at the close of the previous fiscal year.

* Estimated

Further details of redemptions and new issues of securities during the fiscal year are set out in the following tables:

TABLE XLII

REDEMPTION OF FUNDED DEBT DURING FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1954.

Maturity Date	Interest Rate	Where Payable	Amount
	%		$
May 1, 1953	1¾	Canada	200,000,000
May 15, 1953, Deposit Certificates	1¾	Canada	200,000,000
September 1, 1953	2	Canada	550,000,000
November 1, 1953	2	Canada	200,000,000
November 1, 1953	2	Canada	200,000,000
November 1, 1953	2	Canada	300,000,000
March 1, 1954	2¼	Canada	550,000,000
March 1, 1954	3	Canada	676,355,489
September 1, 1958, Registered Stock	4	London	1,764,770
War Savings Certificates	3	Canada	36,283,540
Canada Savings Bonds, Series 1-7	2¾—3¾	Canada	471,748,100
Total Redemption of Debt	.....	.....	3,386,151,899

TABLE XLIII

NEW SECURITY ISSUES DURING FISCAL YEAR ENDED MARCH 31, 1954

—	Issue Date	Maturity Date	Interest Rate	Price to Government	Yield at Price to Government	Total Amount Issued	Renewals or Reconversion Included in Amount Issued	Amount Issued for Cash
			%		%	$	$	$
Issued to Bank of Canada—
Six Months Treasury Notes	May 1, 1953	Nov. 1, 1953	2	100·00	2·00	200,000,000	200,000,000	.....
Six Months Treasury Notes	Sept. 1, 1953	Mar. 1, 1954	2¼	100·00	2·25	550,000,000	550,000,000	.....
Six Months Treasury Notes	Nov. 1, 1953	May 1, 1954	2¼	100·00	2·25	200,000,000	200,000,000	.....
Six Months Treasury Notes	Mar. 1, 1954	Sept. 1, 1954	2	100·00	2·00	550,000,000	550,000,000	.....
						1,500,000,000	1,500,000,000	.....
Issued to General Public—
Loan One Year Eight Months	Nov. 1, 1953	July 1, 1955	2¼	98·00	3·49	400,000,000	400,000,000	.....
Loan Four Years Six Months	Nov. 1, 1953	May 1, 1958	3	97·15	3·69	300,000,000	300,000,000	.....
Twenty-Five Year Loan	Jan. 15, 1953	Jan. 15, 1978	3¾	97·59	3·91	40,000,000	.....	40,000,000
Canada Savings Bonds Series VIII Net	Nov. 1, 1953	Nov. 1, 1965	3¾	98·875	.....	860,000,000	.....	860,000,000
Increase in Treasury Bills	Various	Various	Various	Various	Various	50,000,000	.....	50,000,000
						1,650,000,000	700,000,000	950,000,000
GRAND TOTAL	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	3,150,000,000	2,200,000,000	950,000,000

The Budget—Appendix

Contingent Liabilities

In addition to the direct debt set out in the statement of assets and liabilities, the Government has certain contingent liabilities. These consist of securities issued by various Government owned enterprises (such as the Canadian National Railways, the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited, and the Saint John Harbour Commission), guaranteed as to principal and interest or as to interest only, and a number of other miscellaneous guarantees, the chief of which are the guarantee of deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada and of bank advances to the Canadian Wheat Board; the guarantees of certain loans made by chartered banks to veterans or farmers for certain authorized purposes; guarantees under The Export Credits Insurance Act and certain commitments under the housing legislation.

The following tables give details of the bonds and debenture stocks guaranteed by the Government, and also indicate the nature and approximate extent of the Government's other guarantees and contingent liabilities. The most significant change during the fiscal year was the sale of $200,000,000 3¾ per cent guaranteed bonds of the Canadian National Railway Company. The proceeds were applied to the redemption of $50,0000,00 5 per cent Bonds due February 1, 1954 and to the repayment of interest-bearing capital advances from the Government of Canada.

TABLE XLIV

BONDS AND DEBENTURE STOCKS GUARANTEED BY THE GOVERNMENT AS AT MARCH 31, 1954

Date of Maturity	Issue	Interest Rate	Estimated Amount Outstanding
		%	$
May 1, 1954	City of Saint John Debentures assumed by Saint John Harbour Commissioners	5¼	3,329
Mar. 1, 1955	Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited	5	9,400,000
June 15, 1955	Canadian National	4¼	48,496,000
Feb. 1, 1956	Canadian National	4½	67,368,000
July 1, 1957	Canadian National	4½	64,136,000
July 20, 1958	Canadian Northern	3½	5,636,506
Jan. 15, 1959	Canadian National	3	35,000,000
May 4, 1960	Canadian Northern Alberta	3½	550,727
May 19, 1961	Canadian Northern Ontario	3½	3,597,518
Jan. 1, 1962	Grand Trunk Pacific	3	26,465,130
Jan. 1, 1962	Grand Trunk Pacific	4	7,999,074
Jan. 3, 1966	Canadian National	3	35,000,000
Jan. 2, 1967	Canadian National	2¾	50,000,000
Sept. 15, 1969	Canadian National	2⅝	70,000,000
Jan. 16, 1971	Canadian National	2⅝	40,000,000
Feb. 1, 1974	Canadian National	3¼	200,000,000
June 15, 1975	Canadian National	2¾	6,000,000
Perpetual	Grand Trunk Debenture Stock	5	696,493
Perpetual	Great Western Debenture Stock	5	223,331
Perpetual	Grand Trunk Debenture Stock	4	2,803,579
Perpetual	Northern Railway of Canada Debenture Stock	4	8,254
			673,383,941

TABLE XLV

OTHER OUTSTANDING GUARANTEES AND CONTINGENT LIABILITIES

	Estimated Amount Outstanding
Deposits maintained by the chartered banks in the Bank of Canada (February 27, 1954)	$ 676,629,369
Bank advances re Province of Manitoba Savings Office (February 22, 1954)	2,540,078
Province of Manitoba Treasury Bill (March 31, 1954)	1,000,000
Loans made by chartered banks under the Farm Improvement Loans Act (January 31, 1954)	31,460,019
Loans made by chartered banks under the Veterans' Business and Professional Loans Act (December 31, 1953)	2,092,918
Guarantees under Part II of the Export Credits Insurance Act (March 31, 1954)	8,925,000
Loans made by approved lending institutions under Dominion and National Housing Acts (December 31, 1953)	Indeterminate
Guarantees of land assembly projects under National Housing Act (December 31, 1953)	543,286
Loans made by approved lending institutions under Part IV of the National Housing Act, 1944, for home extensions or improvements (December 31, 1953)	7,214
Loans made by chartered banks under The Prairie Producers' Interim Financing Act, 1951 (January 31, 1954)	29,034
Loans made by chartered banks to Canadian Wheat Board (February 27, 1954)	69,117,693

7. SUPPLEMENTARY DETAILED TABLES

REVENUES

EXPENDITURES

LOANS AND ADVANCES AND INVESTMENTS

UNMATURED FUNDED DEBT

83276—243

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF REVENUES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(thousands of dollars)

—	1949-50	1950-51	1951-52	1952-53	Estimated 1953-54
	$	$	$	$	$
TAX REVENUE—
Direct Taxes—
Direct taxes on incomes—
Individual income tax	621,982	652,329	975,776	1,225,276	1,280,000
Less old age security tax transferred to old age security fund	.....	.....	−100	−45,250	−90,700
Tax on interest, dividends, rents and royalties going abroad	47,475	61,610	55,017	53,674	54,000
Corporation income tax	603,193	799,197	1,132,680	1,276,940	1,249,000
Less old age security tax transferred to old age security fund	.....	.....	−2,000	−36,850	−55,600
Excess profits tax	−1,788	10,141	2,365	.....	.....
Total direct taxes on incomes	1,270,862	1,523,277	2,163,738	2,473,790	2,436,700
Succession duties	29,920	33,599	38,208	38,071	40,000
Total Direct Taxes	1,300,782	1,556,876	2,201,946	2,511,861	2,476,700
Indirect Taxes—
Customs import duties	225,878	295,722	346,365	389,442	408,000
Excise duties—
Spirits, malt and beer	107,035	129,390	120,851	127,684	133,000
Cigarettes, tobacco and cigars	115,982	114,486	100,711	116,914	98,000
Licenses	38	38	36	38	38
Less refunds	−2,490	−2,868	−3,658	−3,276	−3,038
Total Excise Duties	220,565	241,046	217,940	241,360	228,000
Excise taxes—
Sales tax	415,222	470,627	611,492	725,398	759,700
Less old age security tax transferred to old age security fund	.....	.....	−24,298	−141,558	−147,700
Automobiles, tires and tubes	38,193	70,841	100,904	89,883	101,000
Beverages (soft drinks)	1,627	7,212	19,230	12,481	12,000
Candy and chewing gum	1,030	10,880	11,531	12,391	12,800
Cigarette papers and tubes	7,223	7,734	423	.....	.....
Cigarettes, tobacco and cigars	83,497	85,199	106,354	102,645	110,000
Electrical appliances	.....	2,080	4,893	4,305	5,000
Furs	2,937	4,509	4,793	5,710	4,000
Jewellery, watches, ornaments, etc	4,077	6,459	9,714	7,488	7,500
Matches and lighters	1,091	1,161	1,855	1,394	1,300
Stamps on cheques, money orders etc.	9,898	10,945	11,346	10,561	.....
Stoves, washing machines and refrigerators	.....	.....	10,923	1,546	.....
Television sets, radios, tubes and phonographs	3,101	5,548	8,252	10,706	16,500
Toilet preparations	4,316	4,551	8,467	7,195	7,000
Transportation and communication	3,967	.....	.....	.....	.....
Trunks, bags, luggage etc	2,257	2,604	3,969	3,603	3,500
Wines	2,126	2,225	2,167	2,216	2,200
Sundry commodities	2,310	4,327	7,173	5,964	6,700
Licenses, interest and miscellaneous	370	372	463	461	500
Less refunds (mainly sales-tax)	−11,785	−10,506	−13,723	−20,499	−20,000
Total Excise Taxes	571,457	686,768	885,928	841,890	882,000
Other Taxes—
Chartered bank note circulation	121	.....	.....	.....	.....
Insurance premiums	3,789	4,228	4,753	12,361	13,600
Miscellaneous	525	710	843	679	700
Total Indirect Taxes	1,022,335	1,228,474	1,455,829	1,485,732	1,532,300
Total Revenue from Taxes	2,323,117	2,785,350	3,657,775	3,997,593	4,009,000

STATEMENT OF REVENUES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Concluded

(thousands of dollars)

——	1949-50	1950-51	1951-52	1952-53	Estimated 1953-54
	$	$	$	$	$
TAX REVENUE—Concluded
NON-TAX REVENUE—
Post Office	84,512	90,443	104,610	111,905	111,500
Return on investments	91,529	89,529	117,622	116,906	147,500
Bullion and coinage	4,523	4,708	4,838	4,386	4,800
Premium, discount and exchange	.....	17,562	17,697	1,467	3,900
Other	25,035	31,106	37,205	45,471	49,700
Total Non-Tax Revenue	205,599	233,348	281,972	280,135	317,400
Total Ordinary Revenue	2,528,716	3,018,698	3,939,747	4,277,728	4,326,400
SPECIAL RECEIPTS AND CREDITS—
Sale of surplus Crown assets	16,351	19,613	14,712	7,638	7,866
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—
Profits paid to Receiver General	4,241	2,862	3,144	2,054	(1)
Proceeds and depreciation reserve with respect to the sale of wartime housing properties	2,535	4,351	9,843	6,701	5,235
Refundable portion of income tax and excess profits tax—Transfer to revenue of excess reserves set up in previous years	.....	25,000	7,367	.....	.....
Transfer to revenue of provincial 5 per cent corporation income tax suspense account pursuant to the 1952 tax rental agreements	.....	.....	.....	45,000	46,900
Sale of Crown assets under agreements of sale	.....	.....	.....	.....	9,204
Payment received from the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics in settlement of equipment and material delivered under mutual aid after September 2, 1945	.....	.....	.....	.....	2,807
Transfer to revenue of Canadian Wheat Board suspense account	.....	.....	.....	6,325	.....
Surplus of Canadian Arsenals, Limited	.....	.....	.....	6,114	(1)
Write-up to active assets—Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited—Capital stock	.....	.....	.....	4,794	.....
Miscellaneous special receipts	28,298	42,012	6,096	4,469	1,674
Total Special Receipts and Credits	51,425	93,838	41,162	83,095	73,686
TOTAL REVENUE	2,580,141	3,112,536	3,980,909	4,360,823	4,400,086

(1) Included in Return on Investments.

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CATEGORIES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(thousands of dollars)

—	1949-50	1950-51	1951-52	1952-53	Estimated 1953-54
	$	$	$	$	$
Agriculture—
Administration and general	644	692	733	824	868
Science service	5,684	6,685	6,992	8,136	8,967
Experimental farms service	5,810	7,140	7,729	8,272	8,693
Production service	8,771	9,182	9,335	9,337	9,671
Marketing service	4,387	4,936	4,555	4,780	4,412
Rehabilitation and reclamation projects	8,846	13,212	11,813	13,852	14,850
Freight assistance on western feed grains	16,764	15,638	14,999	20,661	17,000
Premium on hog carcasses suitable for export to United Kingdom	4,982	5,100	5,374	6,405	4,925
Advances to prairie farm emergency fund	13,138	4,304	.....	.....	.....
Payment to Canadian Wheat Board for distribution to producers	.....	65,000	.....	.....	.....
Net operating loss—Agricultural prices support account	3,473	3,485	1,743	32,533	37,759
Other expenditure	2,548	7,411	3,861	1,911	2,111
	75,047	142,785	67,134	106,711	109,256
Auditor General's Office	562	574	601	576	618
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	2,772	2,405	8,301	8,235	8,304
Payment from the consolidated revenue fund of amounts equal to taxes collected under the Excise Tax Act in respect of radio and television sets and equipment	.....	.....	.....	.....	16,500
					24,804
Office of the Chief Electoral Officer	4,456	278	368	465	5,508
Citizenship and Immigration—
Administration and general	376	531	1,114	1,399	1,717
Immigration branch	4,957	5,578	8,073	7,063	7,533
Indian Affairs branch	12,368	14,564	14,054	15,184	16,645
	17,701	20,673	23,241	23,646	25,895
Civil Service Commission	1,513	1,580	1,692	1,910	2,060
Defence Production—
Administration and general	.....	.....	8,284	9,738	10,375
Capital assistance to defence industry	.....	.....	22,695	79,079	39,500
	.....	.....	30,979	88,817	49,875
External Affairs	7,050	7,654	8,225	9,146	10,464
Membership in commonwealth and international organizations	2,671	2,962	2,724	3,477	3,533
Assistance to other countries and international organizations	6,959	11,464	26,634	26,628	31,450
	16,680	22,080	37,583	39,251	45,447
Finance—
Departmental administration and general	5,448	7,354	8,361	9,385	9,468
Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury	11,140	11,345	12,554	13,310	13,805
Interest on public debt	439,816	425,217	432,423	451,340	476,665
Additional amount required to place interest on public debt on accrual basis	.....	.....	87,510	.....	.....
Cost of issuing new loans and annual amortization of bond discounts and commissions	10,546	13,354	10,717	13,072	19,033
Servicing of public debt	478	449	385	508	612
Subsidies to provinces	19,170	18,735	20,108	20,108	20,108
Compensation to provinces—
Tax rental agreements, 1947 Act	76,881	94,123	96,868	23,795	1
Tax rental agreements, 1952 Act	.....	.....	.....	284,778	309,227
Transfer of certain public utility tax receipts, sec. 7, 1947 tax rental agreements act	1,375	4,565	3,732	4,370	4,000
Transitional grant to Newfoundland	6,500	6,500	6,500	5,650	4,800
Government contributions with respect to the superannuation account—general	5,461	6,831	12,911	13,802	16,450
—special	.....	75,000	98,000	25,000	38,000

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CATEGORIES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Continued

(thousands of dollars)

——	1949-50	1950-51	1951-52	1952-53	Estimated 1953-54
	$	$	$	$	$
Finance—Concluded
Grants to universities	.....	.....	6,993	5,115	5,244
Implementation of guarantees (Ming Sung Industrial Co. Ltd.)	.....	.....	1,346	1,695	1,563
Premium discount, and exchange	19,740	.....	.....	.....	.....
Wartime Prices and Trade Board Administration	2,567	1,599	155	.....	.....
Commodity prices stabilization corporation limited	.....	.....	50	.....	307
Advances for payment of drawback claims to millers and other manufacturers of wheat products	400	.....	.....	.....	.....
Grant re Red River Valley flood	.....	12,500	.....	.....	.....
Provision for reserve for possible losses on ultimate realization of active assets	75,000	75,000	75,000	75,000	50,000
Assumption of part of Newfoundland debt under terms of union	62,293	.....	.....	.....	.....
Write-down from active to non-active assets—
Trading losses in securities investment account	8,299	.....	.....	40	.....
Soybean flour suspense account	126	.....	.....	.....	.....
	745,240	752,572	873,613	946,968	969,285
Fisheries	7,586	8,964	8,733	10,777	9,425
Governor General and Lieutenant Governors	274	244	275	397	399
Insurance	311	369	403	449	498
Justice	4,268	4,609	5,103	5,606	5,936
Office of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries	6,691	7,798	8,936	9,303	9,256
	10,959	12,407	14,039	14,909	15,192
Labour	9,770	9,030	9,503	10,088	9,539
Government annuities—amount required to maintain reserve	1,256	660	940	744	1,000
Unemployment Insurance Act 1940—
Administration and general	24,033	26,805	23,919	25,051	26,273
Government contribution	21,084	26,133	29,940	31,139	31,894
	56,143	62,628	64,802	67,022	68,706
Legislation—
House of Commons	3,765	3,332	4,302	4,528	4,094
Library of Parliament	127	137	153	231	295
Senate	1,178	976	1,227	1,103	999
General	159	266	263	295	270
	5,229	4,711	5,945	6,157	5,658
Mines and Technical Surveys	9,839	10,442	10,779	12,027	12,980
Dominion Coal Board	4,357	3,561	5,132	6,484	10,018
Emergency gold mining assistance	13,716	7,114	11,841	11,147	14,500
Write-down from active to non-active assets—
Abasand Oils Limited	1,802	.....	.....	.....	.....
	29,714	21,117	27,752	29,658	37,498
National Defence—
General	383	901	277	295	316
Defence forces, army, navy and air services	348,050	545,738	1,217,579	1,557,660	1,434,009
Mutual aid to NATO countries	.....	195,417	126,416	235,053	309,232
Defence research and development	22,389	23,415	35,394	42,989	43,763
Pensions—
Payments under defence services pension act	5,011	5,011	5,096	5,110	5,101
Government contribution to permanent services pension account	9,046	11,975	30,712	30,009	35,252
Contribution towards military costs of NATO	.....	.....	.....	11,302	12,000
	384,879	782,457	1,415,474	1,882,418	1,839,673
National Film Board	2,123	2,308	2,662	2,920	2,998
National Health and Welfare	16,901	17,344	21,098	22,935	27,918
General health grants	15,716	18,875	24,322	27,333	28,964
Family allowances	297,514	309,465	320,458	334,198	350,142

The Budget—Appendix

STATEMENT OF EXPENDITURES BY DEPARTMENTS AND MAJOR CATEGORIES FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS—Concluded

(thousands of dollars)

—	1949-50	1950-51	1951-52	1952-53	Estimated 1953-54
	$	$	$	$	$
National Health and Welfare—Concluded
Old age pensions including pensions to blind persons	93,189	103,169	80,206	.....	.....
Old age assistance and blind persons allowances	.....	.....	2,999	22,099	23,555
Deficit—Old age security fund	.....	.....	49,669	.....	.....
	423,320	448,853	498,752	406,565	430,579
National Research Council and Atomic Energy Control Board	16,170	18,014	25,080	28,343	28,245
National Revenue including taxation division	47,832	46,056	45,763	47,313	50,092
Northern Affairs and National Resources	22,605	20,764	17,423	19,500	19,488
Post Office	82,640	91,781	97,973	105,553	114,078
Privy Council including Prime Minister's Office	4,248	4,362	4,097	3,767	3,754
Public Archives	198	206	251	307	357
Public Printing and Stationery	866	706	1,103	1,607	2,035
Public Works	67,599	74,458	79,060	83,906	100,362
Trans-Canada highway contributions	.....	7,205	12,792	13,953	14,178
	67,599	81,663	91,852	97,859	114,540
Royal Canadian Mounted Police	15,971	19,801	27,341	31,141	33,992
Secretary of State	1,600	2,065	2,399	2,201	3,292
Trade and Commerce	25,761	23,443	21,817	16,503	16,688
Deficits incurred by the Canadian Wheat Board covering operations for government account	4,471	2,536	.....	.....	.....
Deficit—Trans-Canada Air Lines	4,318	1,325	.....	.....	.....
	34,550	27,304	21,817	16,503	16,688
Transport—
Administration and general	3,808	2,528	3,179	7,495	10,490
Canals service	6,198	8,290	7,991	9,889	9,434
Marine service	17,537	17,187	17,465	21,679	20,812
Railway service	4,488	1,981	2,306	6,414	13,458
Maritime freight rates act	6,982	8,475	10,030	10,130	10,538
Air services	34,115	33,553	36,298	39,011	42,382
Canadian Maritime Commission	2,277	5,899	4,461	3,984	4,327
Deficits—
Canadian National Railways	42,043	3,261	15,032	.....	.....
Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited	461	1,029	467	4	650
Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals	1,221	1,267	1,365	1,520	1,603
North Sydney—Port aux Basques ferry and terminals	.....	.....	.....	1,846	2,236
National Harbours Board	83	188	55	57	.....
Non-active assets—
National Harbours Board	4,236	1,465	1,252	1,877	4,257
	123,449	85,123	99,901	103,906	120,187
Veterans Affairs—
Administration and general	3,850	2,385	2,513	3,627	2,274
Pensions	96,091	95,577	103,703	127,053	127,654
Treatment and after-care of returned soldiers and allowances to dependents	69,507	71,646	76,097	78,541	80,175
Hospital accommodation, additions, alterations and improvements	3,811	3,008	3,758	3,990	4,213
Post discharge rehabilitation benefits	25,099	13,502	6,594	3,790	2,518
War service gratuities and re-establishment credits	22,641	16,868	9,826	10,737	9,106
Soldier settlement and veterans land acts	7,383	6,282	5,922	5,629	5,342
Provision for reserve for conditional benefits under veterans land act	6,496	7,110	7,609	8,042	8,570
Write-down of assets—
Soldier settlement and veterans land acts loans	11,500	14	13	16	7
	246,378	216,392	216,026	241,425	239,859
TOTAL EXPENDITURE	2,448,615	2,901,242	3,732,875	4,337,276	4,389,979

ANNUAL CHANGES IN ACTIVE LOANS AND INVESTMENTS FOR THE LAST FIVE FISCAL YEARS

(In thousands of dollars)

	Fiscal Year Ended March 31
	1950	1951	1952	1953	Estimated 1954
	$	$	$	$	$
Working Capital Advances to Crown Corporations
Canadian Arsenals, Ltd.	.....	2,500	.....	.....	.....
Canadian Commercial Corporation	.....	.....	6,500	.....	.....
Canadian Patents and Development, Ltd.	296	.....	Cr. 296	.....	.....
Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation	Cr. 3,000	Cr. 1,500	Cr. 50	.....	Cr. 307
Crown Assets Disposal Corporation	Cr. 1,183	.....	Cr. 45	.....	.....
	Cr. 3,887	1,000	6,109	.....	Cr. 307
Loans to, and Investments in, Crown Agencies
Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation—
Loans	91,460	79,389	73,624	72,561	92,465
Canadian Broadcasting Corporation	4,500	650	850	2,000	4,750
Canadian Farm Loan Board	1,950	1,900	1,300	1,600	3,700
National Harbours Board	20,382	1,004	227	Cr. 127	Cr. 763
Canadian National Railways	Cr. 20,963	19,888	139,998	141,822	Cr. 18,092
Other Crown Agencies	Cr. 1,295	Cr. 540	Cr. 542	14,614	951
	96,034	102,291	215,457	232,470	83,011
Other Loans and Investments
Provincial and Municipal Governments	Cr. 4,031	Cr. 3,180	Cr. 4,129	Cr. 3,782	Cr. 3,774
United Kingdom and Other Governments—
United Kingdom—Loan under the War Appropriation (U.K. Financing) Act, 1942	Cr. 9,936	Cr. 40,567	Cr. 31,092	Cr. 24,282	Cr. 53,616
United Kingdom Financial Agreement Act, 1946—Loan	120,000	20,000	Cr. 14,010	Cr. 14,290	Cr. 14,576
Export Credits Insurance Act	Cr. 10,964	Cr. 22,935	Cr. 20,657	Cr. 20,599	Cr. 19,438
Other	5,541	144	5,461	Cr. 1,602	Cr. 5,002
Canada's subscription to capital of—
International Monetary Fund	22,500	.....	.....	.....	.....
International Bank for Reconstruction and Development	5,658	.....	170	.....	.....
Miscellaneous—
Loans to veterans under the Soldier Settlement and Veterans' Land Acts.	796	7,515	1,521	Cr. 1,259	Cr. 793
Balances receivable under agreements of sale of Crown Assets	Cr. 2,889	Cr. 1,043	Cr. 936	900	8,304
Other miscellaneous loans	Cr. 812	Cr. 54	2,957	Cr. 256	300
	125,863	Cr. 40,120	Cr. 60,715	Cr. 65,170	Cr. 88,595
Sinking Fund and Other Investments held for retirement of unmatured funded debt	.....	5,499	3,201	1,722	73,085
Net Total of Changes in Loans and Investments	218,010	68,670	164,052	169,022	67,194

UNMATURED FUNDED DEBT AND TREASURY BILLS AS AT MARCH 31, 1954 AND THE ANNUAL INTEREST PAYABLE THEREON

Date of Maturity	Rate per cent	Where Payable	Amount of Loan	Annual Interest Charge
			$ cts.	$ cts.
1954, May 1	2¼	Canada	200,000,000 00	4,500,000 00
September 1	2	Canada	550,000,000 00	11,000,000 00
July 1	2	Canada	100,000,000 00	2,000,000 00
December 15	2	Canada	395,000,000 00	7,900,000 00
December 15	2	Canada	150,000,000 00	3,000,000 00
1955, July 1	2¼	Canada	200,000,000 00	4,500,000 00
July 1	2½	Canada	400,000,000 00	9,000,000 00
1956, July 1	2¼	Canada	400,000,000 00	9,000,000 00
November 1	3	Canada	(1)855,607,410 50	25,414,081 50
November 1	2¾	Canada	*98,000,000 00	2,695,000 00
1957, May 1	3	Canada	1,111,261,650 00	33,337,849 50
November 1	2¾	Canada	*52,000,000 00	1,430,000 00
1958, May 1	3	Canada	300,009,000 00	9,000,000 00
June 1	3	Canada	88,200,000 00	2,646,000 00
November 1	2¾	Canada	*48,000,000 00	1,320,000 00
1959, January 1	3	Canada	1,197,324,750 00	35,919,742 50
November 1	2¾	Canada	*70,000,000 00	1,925,000 00
1960, June 1	3	Canada	1,165,300,350 00	34,959,010 50
November 1	2¾	Canada	*65,000,000 00	1,787,500 00
1961, January 15	3½	New York	(2)46,560,000 00	1,513,200 00
1962, February 1	3	Canada	1,315,639,200 00	39,469,176 00
August 1	3½	Canada	*164,000,000 00	5,740,000 00
1963, July 1	3½	London	(3) 1,921,837 74	62,459 73
July 1	3	London	(3) 48,466,155 14	1,452,244 65
August 1	3	New York	(2)145,500,000 00	4,365,000 00
August 1	3¾	Canada	*199,000,000 00	7,462,500 00
October 1	3	Canada	1,295,819,350 00	38,874,580 50
1965, November 1	3¾	Canada	*860,000,000 00	32,250,000 00
1966, June 1	3½	Canada	54,703,000 00	1,777,847 50
September 1	3	Canada	1,691,796,700 00	50,753,901 00
1968, June 15	2¾	Canada	350,000,000 00	9,625,000 00
1974, September 1	2¾	New York	(2) 97,000,000 00	2,667,500 00
1975, September 15	2¾	New York	(2) 48,500,000 00	1,333,750 00
1978, January 15	3¾	Canada	100,000,000 00	3,750,000 00
Perpetuals	3	Canada	55,000,000 00	1,650,000 00
Various, three months treasury bills	(4) 1·709	Canada	455,000,000 00	7,775,950 00
Various, nine months treasury bills	(4) 2·289	Canada	195,000,000 00	4,463,550 00
			14,569,542,403 38	416,320,843 38
Payable in Canada			14,181,652,410 50	404,926,689 00
Payable in London			50,329,992 88	1,514,704 38
Payable in New York			337,560,000 00	9,879,450 00
			14,569,542,403 38	416,320,843 38

* Estimated.

(1) Redeemable at 101 per cent. Amount outstanding includes $8,471,360.50 redemption bonus.

(2) Conversion rate estimated at $0·97 U.S. to the dollar Canadian.

(3) Conversion rate estimated at $2·72 to the pound sterling.

(4) Estimated average effective rate of discount.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 7, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DREW—USE OF RECORDING EQUIPMENT

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I was very interested to learn that at the meeting of the committee on external affairs held yesterday at 10.30 in the morning microphones were installed and it was explained that a tape recording machine was taking a record of the proceedings. I place this before you, Mr. Speaker, because there has been very strong objection to the introduction of the recording devices here in this house, except in those cases whereby, with consent, the speeches of persons such as President Eisenhower or Mr. Churchill or others who recently visited us were broadcast. But the procedure in this house has not been broadcast.

I would point out that the chairman of the committee explained that this was an experiment and I find these words in the record, and I quote:

> This is in practice in some of the legislatures in the United States and it has been thought that it should be tried at one time or other and that we might try it at this committee.

There was an extended discussion afterwards in regard to this and the question was raised as to whether the tape recording would be used for the purpose of broadcasting, and the chairman explained that this would not be done without the consent of the committee.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is not within the authority of any committee to depart from the established practices in regard to methods of procedure, even though the committees have full right to decide their own procedure within well established rules. I think the very suggestion that something is being tried here that is being tried in the United States suggests to us that we should very carefully consider what the outcome of this could be. If the committee has the right to start taking tape recordings by microphones which could then in turn be broadcast, either in whole or in part, then the next step could easily be television. The committee would have just as much right to introduce television as it has to introduce tape recordings.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why this should be considered by Your Honour and the appropriate steps taken to decide whether any committee may do this at any time. I would point out that in the case of a tape recording there is quite a considerable difference between that and a fixed imprint. A tape recording may be erased in whole or in part and a sentence may even be broken. In fact, there was a well known case in another country where speeches were put out over the air and attributed to certain speakers although sentences were broken and parts then brought together. That could easily be done with tape recordings.

If it should be the decision of this house at any time that there is to be a recording, then it should be a fixed recording and under no circumstances whatever should hon. members of this house agree to accept the introduction of tape recordings. What strikes me as something that is of very definite concern to this house is the fact that this is still to be considered. There was an impression left by the remarks made at the committee meeting that this is an experiment which may be extended by this committee.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if it is right that we should not have records and broadcastings of the speeches in this house, it is right that a similar practice should be observed in committees. I think it is also certain that if there is to be any recording it should be a fixed recording on a disc and not a recording on a tape recorder which may at any time be subject to editing and subsequent change.

I believe hon. members of this house also have a right to know under whose authority this was installed and whether this equipment belongs to the C.B.C. or any other government agency.

Mr. L. Philippe Picard (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of that committee, perhaps I may be permitted to give a word of explanation. About a year or so ago this method of recording proceedings was suggested when I was chairman of the public accounts committee, and the other day we tried this as a sort of exploratory experiment in order to determine whether such a system would be of assistance to the reporters and to enable them, if possible, to have a more accurate record of what is being said. The recording made the other day is now being transcribed and will be compared with the transcript made by the reporters, and a report will be made to Mr. Speaker and to the committee on house procedure in due course. There is nothing definite about this and I secured the permission of the Speaker to instal the machine. According to what I see reported in the Journal, it is quite true that people looked askance at this machine and treated it as if it were a box of snakes rather than just a reporting machine. The present record will be destroyed once it has been transcribed and the transcript submitted to the committee on house procedure.

I would emphasize that this experiment was undertaken to see if it could be of assistance. Reporting committees is quite a difficult task for new reporters, and there are two or three new ones on the present staff, and we hoped it would be of assistance in making a more accurate verbatim report of what was being said.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps, in order to complete the information pertaining to this particular matter, I might just add another word of explanation. It was on the initiative taken by the committee on external affairs, I understand, to try out this experiment.

An hon. Member: Of the chairman?

Mr. Picard: By myself.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps by the chairman. At any rate, it was the chairman who contacted me. I consulted with the Clerk and he, in turn, informed the committee reporters' branch that no matter what was decided upon by the committee itself with regard to trying this experiment they would, as in any normal meeting of the committee, perform their duties. Even if any recording was taken, the reporters were there and took in shorthand, as usual, the minutes of the meeting; they reported the meeting in the usual fashion. In other words, the practice of the house was not departed from. The procedure was just as regular, as far as the rules of this house are concerned, as that at any meeting of any committee.

When the chairman of the committee suggested this experiment to me, I said that if it was the wish of the members of the committee to try out that machine on an experimental basis, in addition to the regular practice being followed with the minutes being taken by the reporters, I did not think I should put any obstacles in their way. But the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) is quite right that if, following this experiment, there were to be any change in or any departure from the regular procedure, no committee could make such change unless they had permission from the house to do so. But my understanding is that this was a subject that had been debated previously in that committee of which, of course, I am not a member.

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Or perhaps it had been suggested by the chairman on a previous occasion. Let us put it that way, if the hon. member agrees with me on that point. I do not want to present the situation in a different way from that in which it was presented to me. But at the time, when the chairman asked me whether it would be possible to bring in equipment for the purpose of making this experiment, I left the matter entirely to him and the members of his committee to decide whether they should try it out or not. But as far as the reporters were concerned, I insisted that they should carry out their duties. It is their reports that we consider as being the reports of the committee and not whatever has been taken on the tape recorder which was tried out on that occasion.

Mr. Drew: In view of the fact that this experiment took place, and that its purported purpose was to see whether it might offer any suggestions, I think the members of the house should know who handled the technical arrangements and whose machine was used on this occasion. Was it a C.B.C. machine or was it a machine belonging to the television branch of the services? I think we are entitled to know that.

Mr. Picard: If I may be permitted to say so, Mr. Speaker, the machines come from the Ottawa Typewriter Company. They are called Tape-riters. A representative of the Ottawa Typewriter Company was there to operate them. It was entirely at my suggestion and it was made because oftentimes on previous committees we discovered afterwards that many members had to change or to add to the evidence they had given or felt that there were words that had been misunderstood. It was just with the idea of helping to get a better recording of what is going on in the committee that this suggestion was made. Before the committee sat, when questions were asked what it was, I suggested that if anybody objected to the machine it would be disconnected right away. Nobody suggested that. Once the records are transcribed, they will be destroyed.

Mr. Drew: Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I think instructions should be given that the tape recording be delivered to the Clerk of the House.

Mr. Pouliot: Inasmuch as it is not a political machine, I do not think the Leader of the Opposition should have any objection to it.

Mr. Speaker: I do not suppose there would be any objection to that procedure. When permission was asked of me to bring in the machine, I thought I was quite safe in leaving it to the members of that committee to decide whether or not they would carry out the experiment. What I was interested in was that no departure would be made from our regular procedure. As I say, the reporters took the proceedings just as if no machine had been there at all. Usually incidents which occur before a committee are dealt with by that committee. I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition brought this matter before the house. I did not know exactly on what occasion the experiment had taken place. I do not suppose that the chairman of the committee or anyone who has the tape recording in his possession has any objection to having it delivered to the Clerk of the House so that we can see that it is properly destroyed.

Mr. Picard: May I be permitted to add, Mr. Speaker, that the recordings are now in the hands of the clerk of the committee and are being transcribed by government employees, namely stenographers from the committee branch. They are in the hands of government officials and not in my hands. They will be transferred to the Clerk of the House as soon as they have been transcribed.

Mr. Speaker: In other words, they are now in the hands of officers of the house?

Mr. Picard: Yes.

RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

Third report of sessional committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government.—Mr. Cavers.

QUESTIONS

SALES OF OCEAN-GOING SHIPS

Mr. Green:

1. Were any proposals made to the government between January 1, 1949 and January 31, 1954, for the sale of ocean-going ships, subject to the covenant restricting such ships to Canadian registry, which were either not acceptable to the government or which were not proceeded with due to any restriction which the government placed on the use of the proceeds of disposition?

2. If so, what was the name of each vessel proposed for sale, its proposed sale price and details of restriction imposed by the government on each proposed sale, showing in each case the reason the proposed sale was not proceeded with?

3. In the event that Canadian owners of vessels subject to the sale covenant and presently on United Kingdom registry undertake to use the proceeds of sale of such vessels for the acquisition of new or more modern tonnage, would such new or more modern vessels be required to be placed under Canadian registry?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

1. The answer to the first part of the question is that relief from the flag covenant was refused on a number of occasions because the terms upon which such relief was sought did not fall within the replacement agreement upon which such relief was conditional. With respect to the second part of the question the reasons for not proceeding with proposals would, of course, be known only to the ship owner or ship owners concerned.

2. With respect to the first part of the question, the publication of the proposed sale price of the vessels and of the owner's proposals would involve disclosure of the private affairs of the companies concerned. With respect to the second part of the question, the actual reason for not proceeding with the sale can, again, be known only to the ship owner or ship owners concerned.

3. Yes.

OLD AGE PAYMENTS—SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Tucker:

1. How many citizens in Saskatchewan, 70 years of age and over, receive old age security payments?

2. How many citizens in Saskatchewan, 65 to 69, receive the old age pension?

3. How many citizens in Saskatchewan, 70 and over, receive a supplementary allowance from the provincial government?

4. How many citizens in Saskatchewan, 65 to 69, receive a supplementary allowance from the provincial government?

5. What is the total amount of the supplementary allowance paid by the provincial government of Saskatchewan?

6. What is the total amount of the supplementary allowance paid by the provincial government of Saskatchewan in the 65 to 69 age group?

Mr. Martin:

1. In February, 1954, there were 42,243 recipients of old age security pension in the province of Saskatchewan.

2. In February, 1954, 4,597 persons, 65 to 69, received old age assistance in the province of Saskatchewan.

3. In February, 1954, a supplementary allowance was paid by the provincial government of the province of Saskatchewan to 16,798 pensioners.

Questions

4. None. Allowance is paid only to those 70 and over.

5. In February, 1954, the amount of supplementary allowance paid by the provincial government was $41,995.

6. Nil—(see answer to No. 4 above).

CANADIAN MERCHANT FLEET

Mr. Green:

What was the composition of the Canadian merchant fleet as at March 31, 1948, and as at November 30, 1953, set out in the same manner as in table 1 of the sixth report of the Canadian maritime commission?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

CANADIAN MERCHANT FLEET

(Ships of 1,000 gross tons and over)

	March 31, 1948		November 30, 1953
	No.	Gross tons	No.	Gross tons
OCEAN-GOING SHIPS IN FOREIGN TRADE
Warbuilt cargo ships
10,000 tonners	110	787,706	29	207,769
4,700 tonners	19	55,202	10	29,167
Passenger ships	3	24,871	1	9,034
Diesel cargo ships	3	20,236	3	20,236
Other cargo ships	2	6,533	4	19,094
	137	894,548	47	285,300
Tankers	10	88,744	15	144,997
	147	983,292	62	430,297
SHIPS IN COASTING TRADE
Warbuilt cargo ships
10,000 tonners	3	21,550	3	21,550
4,700 tonners	3	8,632	1	2,875
Other passenger and dry cargo ships	40	114,953	48	132,210
	46	145,135	52	156,635
Tankers	6	12,908	11	24,685
	52	158,043	63	181,320
LAKES AND ST. LAWRENCE CANALLERS
Dry cargo ships	135	254,844	144	280,918
Tankers	32	62,075	32	62,152
	167	316,919	176	343,070
UPPER LAKERS
Dry cargo ships	60	298,748	70	427,201
Tankers	...	.....	2	25,233
	60	298,748	72	452,434
SUMMARY
Dry cargo and passenger ships	378	1,593,275	313	1,150,054
Tankers	48	163,727	60	257,067
	426	1,757,002	373	1,407,121
Ships on United Kingdom registry retained on U. K. registry	...	.....	55	392,406
Transferred to U. K. registry	...	.....	34	243,908
On loan to United Kingdom	87	622,077	5	36,403
	87	622,077	94	672,717

[Mr. Martin.]

MARITIME COMMISSION ESCROW FUND

Mr. Green:

1. What is the total amount of money which has been deposited in the escrow fund under the replacement plan administered by the Canadian maritime commission?

2. How much money has been withdrawn from this escrow fund?

3. Does the government retain any control over the vessels in respect of which funds withdrawn from the escrow fund are used?

4. If so, in what form is this control exercised?

5. If any of such vessels are subsequently sold and/or transferred off Canadian register, is the amount originally withdrawn from the escrow fund returned to the fund?

6. (a) How much money withdrawn from the escrow fund has been used for the cost of construction and/or acquisition of ocean-going ships? (b) What are the names of these ocean-going ships, when and where were they built, and what was the cost of each vessel thus built or acquired? (c) How many were dry cargo vessels, what were their names, their normal commercial operating speeds and their gross registered tonnage?

7. (a) How much money withdrawn from the escrow fund has been used for the cost of modernization and/or improvement of existing units of the ocean-going fleet? (b) What are the names of the vessels thus modernized and/or improved, how much was spent on each, when and where were they built, and what was the nature of the modernization and/or improvement for which use of escrow funds was authorized in each case?

8. (a) How much money withdrawn from the fund has been used for the cost of construction and/or modernization of vessels for use in the domestic trades such as canals and great lakes? (b) What are the names of such vessels for which money withdrawn from the escrow fund was used, giving the type of trade or service for which each vessel was primarily designed?

9. What penalties, if any, are imposed on depositors of escrow funds, if such deposits are not used within the scope of government policy?

10. What changes or revisions, if any, have been made in the policy of the government permitting the withdrawal or use of escrow funds from the inception of the replacement plan to date?

11. If any changes were made, what were the considerations which governed such changes or revisions, and at what dates were such changes made?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

1. As at February 28, 1954—$50,250,483.94 net.

2. $42,089,860.58.

3. Yes.

4. A flag covenant on the ship in respect of which escrow funds have been spent.

5. The sale price of vessels which have become flag restricted by the use of escrow funds may be required to be placed in escrow and to be subject to the terms of the replacement plan.

6. (a) $13,398,757.04; (b) Disclosure of all the details of this inquiry would involve the publication of the private affairs of the companies concerned; it can be stated however that five dry cargo ships built in Canada between 1943 and 1945 and two tankers built in Canada in 1953 and 1954 were thus built or acquired; (c) See in part answer to No. 6(b); the answer to this inquiry again involves the publication of the private affairs of the companies concerned.

7. (a) $243,587.57; (b) Fifteen vessels were thus modernized and improved; they were all built in Canada in 1943, 1944 and 1945.

The names of the ships and the amount spent on each involve the publication of the private affairs of the companies concerned.

The nature of the modernization or improvement was: one case of conversion from coal to oil, one case of improving hatches and holds, twelve cases of stiffening to increase the deadweight capacity, six cases of installation of improved winches, three cases of installation of improved propellers to reduce oil consumption and increase speed.

8. (a) $27,923,452.78; (b) The publication of the names of such vessels involves the publication of the private affairs of the companies concerned; there were 29 such vessels including a self-unloading collier, four canallers, two tugs, a dipper dredge, a tow barge, a lake collier, eleven bulk carriers, seven tankers, a coastal and canaller carrier.

9. Should the ship owner fail to carry out his obligations under the replacement agreement he binds himself in the agreement to forfeit to the crown the excess of the sale price paid to the ship owner over that paid to the crown at the original sale by the crown, with a minimum established of 5 per cent of the sale price paid to the ship owner or $25,000 whichever is the greater.

10. On November 12, 1953, it was announced that the use of funds was modified by removing the provision that vessels acquired with them must be built in Canadian yards and by adding a limitation that such escrow funds would be used in the future only for the acquisition of dry cargo vessels.

11. These changes were made to meet the changing circumstances of the shipping and shipbuilding industries.

C.B.C. FINANCIAL STATEMENT

Mr. Thatcher:

1. Has the government taken any action on the recommendations of the auditor general as pertaining to the annual financial statement of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for the years ending March 31, 1952 and March 31, 1953?

2. If so, what is the nature of such action?

Mr. McCann:

1. Only one recommendation was made by the auditor general which referred to rates of depreciation and obsolescence. The corporation advises that its practice in the matter of rates of depreciation and obsolescence has satisfied its requirements, but the problem is being carefully studied to determine if there would be an advantage in any change or modification in the practice.

2. See answer to No. 1.

SALES OF WHEAT, 1951-52

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the total number of bushels of wheat sold in the crop year 1951-52 by the wheat board and by all elevator companies and licensed grain dealers, including sales from warehouses and terminal elevators?

2. Of such amount, what was the total number of bushels in each respective grade, from No. 1 hard to feed wheat, and how many bushels in each of said grades were sold or disposed of as (a) tough; (b) damp?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

	Bushels
1. Total sales of wheat by the Canadian wheat board on the 1951-52 pool account	547,198,236.00
Weight losses in transit and in drying and reconditioning	3,975,096.55
	551,173,332.55

2. Included in total sales by the board were sales of the following grades:

No. 1 Manitoba hard	43,904.40
No. 1 Manitoba northern	9,096,903.41
No. 2 Manitoba northern	30,810,166.21
No. 3 Manitoba northern	113,843,474.32
No. 4 Manitoba northern	110,881,039.17
No. 5 wheat	100,553,813.25
No. 6 wheat	54,915,812.40
Feed wheat	10,458,959.10
	430,604,073.46
Tough No. 1 Manitoba hard ..	——
Tough No. 1 Manitoba northern	252,474.30
Tough No. 2 Manitoba northern	4,893,849.45
Tough No. 3 Manitoba northern	55,536,298.40
Tough No. 4 Manitoba northern	23,730,963.00
Tough No. 5 wheat	7,391,446.05
Tough No. 6 wheat	1,255,234.20
Tough feed wheat	306,233.25
	93,366,499.45
Damp No. 1 Manitoba hard ..	——
Damp No. 1 Manitoba northern	429.00
Damp No. 2 Manitoba northern	64,333.00
Damp No. 3 Manitoba northern	427,945.35
Damp No. 4 Manitoba northern	195,047.40
Damp No. 5 wheat	247,726.20
Damp No. 6 wheat	100,418.15
Damp feed wheat	12,355.00
	1,048,254.45
	525,018,828.16

WHEAT PURCHASED BY LOCAL ELEVATORS, 1951-52

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the total amount of bushels of wheat, less dockage, which was purchased at local elevator points in the crop year 1951-52?

2. Of such amount, what was the number of bushels in each respective grade from No. 1 hard to feed wheat, and how many bushels in each of said respective grades were at the time of purchase at said elevator points (a) tough; (b) damp?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

1. Purchased by agents from producers for the account of the board in the 1951-52 pool, 453,997,933·50 bushels.

2. Included in the above total were purchases of the following grades:

	Bushels
No. 1 Manitoba hard	94·00
No. 1 Manitoba northern	2,001,178·40
No. 2 Manitoba northern	29,978,795·45
No. 3 Manitoba northern	93,896,936·20
No. 4 Manitoba northern	52,917,255·15
No. 5 wheat	49,499,167·35
No. 6 wheat	24,847,831·20
Feed wheat	5,633,652·05
	258,774,911·00
Tough No. 1 Manitoba hard	.....
Tough No. 1 Manitoba northern	49,054·15
Tough No. 2 Manitoba northern	5,072,928·15
Tough No. 3 Manitoba northern	51,413,109·55
Tough No. 4 Manitoba northern	38,150,808·15
Tough No. 5 wheat	14,713,707·55
Tough No. 6 wheat	2,737,302·30
Tough feed wheat	466,446·00
	112,603,357·05
Damp No. 1 Manitoba hard	.....
Damp No. 1 Manitoba northern	5,653·30
Damp No. 2 Manitoba northern	324,921·55
Damp No. 3 Manitoba northern	14,089,274·20
Damp No. 4 Manitoba northern	28,261,419·45
Damp No. 5 wheat	13,216,483·35
Damp No. 6 wheat	3,601,549·25
Damp feed wheat	653,936·40
	60,153,239·10
	431,531,507·15

HOUSING UNITS—ALBERTA

Mr. Hansell:

1. How many (a) single house units; (b) double house units; (c) apartments, were built in 1953 under the National Housing Act in each of the following places: Calgary, Edmonton and other communities in Alberta?

2. What are these other communities, and how many of each of these housing categories were built in each?

Mr. Bourget:

1. Dwelling Units approved under the National Housing Act, Alberta, by locality, 1953.

Locality	Single Units	Double Units	Apartments
Calgary	1,400	8	515
Edmonton	1,762	2	1,031
Other communities—
Andrew	2	—	—
Athabaska	1	—	—
Banff	4	—	—
Bassano	3	—	—
Big Valley	2	—	—
Bonnyville	2	—	—
Bow Island	20	—	—
Bow Slope	1	—	—
Brooks	7	—	—
Burdett	1	—	—
Camrose	27	—	—
Cardston	2	—	—
Castor	1	—	—
Chancellor	1	—	—
Claresholm	5	—	—
Cloverbar	1	—	—
Cochrane	8	—	—
Devon	1	—	—
Eckville	1	—	—
Edson	1	—	—
Elk Point	1	—	—
Falher	1	—	—
Foremost	7	—	—
Fort Saskatchewan	77	—	—
Grande Prairie	11	—	—
Grimshaw	1	—	—
Hanna	7	—	—
High Prairie	3	—	—
High River	3	—	—
Innisfail	3	—	—
Jasper	12	—	—
Jasper Place	1	—	—
Kitscoty	1	—	—
Lacombe	3	—	—
Lamont	2	—	—
Leduc	2	—	—
Lethbridge	166	1	41
Lloydminster	17	—	—
Macleod	15	—	—
Medicine Hat	50	—	—
Milk River	1	—	—
Mountain View	1	—	—
Nanton	1	—	—
Newbrook	1	—	—
Olds	2	—	—
Peace River	3	—	—
Pincher Creek	12	—	—
Ponoka	6	—	—
Provost	1	—	—
Raymond	6	—	—
Red Deer	60	—	—
Redwater	1	—	—
Rimbey	1	—	—
Smoky Lake	1	—	—
Stavely	—	—	—
St. Paul	9	—	—
Stettler	25	—	—
Strathmore	3	—	—
Stony Plain	24	—	—
Taber	26	—	—
Three Hills	1	—	—
Tofield	1	—	—
Vauxhall	7	—	—
Vegreville	4	—	—
Vermilion	3	—	—
Viking	1	—	—
Vulcan	10	—	—
Westlock	2	—	—
Wetaskiwin	17	—	—

2. See answer to No. 1 above.

OATS AND BARLEY SALES

Mr. Argue:

1. During 1950-51 and 1951-52, how many bushels of (a) oats; (b) barley, were sold from (i) Pacific coast ports; (ii) Churchill, at a premium over the Port Arthur-Fort William price?

2. What was the amount of such premium received for (a) oats; (b) barley, from (i) Pacific coast ports; (ii) Churchill?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur):

	1950-51	1951-52
1.
Oats	(bushels)
Pacific coast ports..	4,732-12	5,105-20
Churchill	nil	nil
Barley
Pacific coast ports..	165,829-06	12,984,157-16
Churchill	nil	nil
2. Oats
Pacific coast ports..	$ 152.80	$ 422.50
Churchill	nil	nil
Barley
Pacific coast ports..	$14,151.58	$2,304,385.40
Churchill	nil	nil

MENTAL HOSPITALS—FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO COST

Mr. Poulin:

1. In connection with the 11,909 beds installed for the use of persons suffering from diseases of the mind, since the establishment of the national health program, what percentage in money does the share contributed by the federal government represent?

2. What amount has been paid to date under this heading?

Questions

Mr. Martin:

1. 23 per cent or $15,868,644.

2. $9,812,881.

The surveys made by the provinces with funds from the national health survey grant emphasized the need for additional accommodation for the treatment of the mentally ill. It has been acknowledged by the provinces that it was largely this indication of need and the availability of funds for this purpose under the hospital construction grant which stimulated the provinces to press forward with their hospital construction programs, particularly the construction of accommodation for the mentally ill.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT—RESIDENTIAL MORTGAGES

Mr. MacEachen:

1. Have the chartered banks approved any residential mortgages to date under the National Housing Act, 1954?

2. If so, which banks, for how many units, in what amounts, and in what areas?

Mr. Bourget:

1. Yes.

2. Bank of Montreal—No. of units—12, $142,392.00, Pointe Claire, Quebec; Bank of Montreal—No. of units—1, $10,219.38, North Vancouver, B.C.

WHEAT—EXPORTS TO INDIA AND ITALY

Mr. Diefenbaker:

How much wheat did Canada sell to (a) Italy; (b) India, between March 31, 1953 and February 28, 1954?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Canadian exports of wheat to Italy and India between March 31, 1953 and February 28, 1954, were as follows: Italy, 8,382,594 bushels; India, 10,597,437 bushels.

Note: It is not our policy to disclose sales during the current crop year.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS, EXPENDITURES, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Balcom:

What are the total expenditures by all branches of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys in Nova Scotia, for the fiscal year 1953-54?

Mr. Prudham: $448,236.47.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

ELECTRICAL EQUIPMENT—IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Mrs. Fairclough:

1. What was the value of electrical equipment imported into Canada in (a) 1939; (b) 1949; (c) 1952; (d) 1953?

2. From what countries, and what amount from each country?

3. What was the value of electrical equipment exported from Canada in (a) 1939; (b) 1949; (c) 1952; (d) 1953?

4. To what countries, and what amount to each country?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Return tabled.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COMPENSATION TO CANADIAN NATIONALS BY COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, before the orders of the day were called, the Leader of the Opposition asked me the following question:

Have any steps been taken by the Canadian government to place before the government at Peking appropriate claims for redress or compensation in respect of undue hardships and loss of property suffered by missionaries and members of religious orders, as well as other Canadians since the communist government assumed power on the Chinese mainland?

I said that I would take note of the hon. gentleman's question and make inquiries. I added that I could give an immediate answer but that I would wish to be absolutely sure that my answer was accurate. The Leader of the Opposition then said:

I might add, since the Prime Minister is taking this as a notice, that I have raised the question because I understand other representations are being made with regard to the fact that the Peking government will be for the first time meeting a number of other governments during the present month.

The answer to the first question is no. The Department of External Affairs has so far received only one claim for compensation as the result of confiscation of property by the communist government in China. The solicitors for the claimant were informed that the department would be prepared to submit the claim to the Peking government through the United Kingdom chargé d'affaires in Peking. No definite claim has yet been received from the solicitors. We have of course reports concerning personal hardships suffered by Canadians who have voluntarily left or have been expelled from mainland China. We also know that a good many Canadians consider that they still have rightful title to property which they have left behind in China. It should however be noted that one of the problems involved in making representations, if we were asked to do so and considered that the claims should be sponsored by the Canadian government, would arise from the fact that we do not recognize the government at Peking.

With regard to the supplementary question raised by the hon. member, I may say that the question of the treatment of foreigners by the communist government in China is not on the agenda of the Geneva conference—I presume that was the occasion the hon. gentleman had in mind—and it is difficult to see in what context it could be raised there since the only issues on the agenda are Korea and Indo-China. The possibility of formal or informal diplomatic conversations on other matters will in the circumstances be limited and may be non-existent. However, I can assure the hon. member that Canadian representatives will take advantage of any opportunity to convey to representatives of the Peking government the concern that the Canadian government feels about the treatment of Canadians in mainland China.

[Later:]

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): In reference to the statement just made by the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, I feel I should point out that there are well recognized channels by which any request can be communicated to the government at Peking, although recognition may not have taken place. If there are matters to be placed before that government, I would urge that this be done prior to the Geneva conference so that subsequent discussion may be based upon knowledge of the attitude of the Canadian government.

INDO-CHINA—INQUIRY AS TO FIVE POWER DECLARATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs? He will recognize that my question is supplementary to one I asked him yesterday in the committee on external affairs, but I ask it now in the light of further developments. What is the attitude of the Canadian government towards the action of the United States in asking for a five power declaration, outside the United Nations, on the situation in Indo-China? Is it clear that Canada has no commitment that could involve us in any action in Indo-China unless the United Nations, of which we are a member, were to take a decision in respect of the situation there?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not know myself of any declaration of the kind suggested by the hon. member, though I understand consideration is being given by the government of the United States to some united action or declaration of that kind. However the matter has not yet been brought officially to our attention, and I know of no such declaration. I can say that we have no commitment in that area of the world, except that which arises under the obligation we have already assumed as a member of the United Nations.

RED CHINA—INQUIRY AS TO RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The question is based on a report in this morning's Montreal Gazette concerning an address made by the hon. member for Prince Albert on the program "The Nation's Business". Is it correct that criticism by the Progressive Conservatives in this house prevented early recognition of China by the government?

Mr. Fulton: Of course it is.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The government is always interested in the criticism that it receives from the other side of the house, but its decision on this matter will be made by itself.

ATOMIC ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS AT QUEBEC CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was the government of Canada or the late prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King, a party to a secret agreement made by the United States, the United Kingdom and possibly Canada at the Quebec conference in 1943, banning the use of the atomic bomb without one another's consent? If so, was a protest made on behalf of Canada at the unilateral termination by the United States of this free exchange of information and consultation among Britain, the United States and Canada? If a protest was made, on what date was it made? If Canada was not aware of this secret agreement, why was this country excluded?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am grateful to the hon. member for giving me sufficient advance notice of his question to permit the available information to be secured. With regard to question No. 1, the position of the government of Canada with respect to the 1943 agreement was stated in this house by the late prime minister on December 17, 1945, in the following words:

"At Quebec, in September, 1943, an agreement was signed between Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt which bound their two countries to collaborate with the object of producing as quickly as possible a military weapon for use in the war. Under this agreement a combined policy committee was set up. Upon the invitation of Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill, in which I concurred, Mr. Howe, the minister of munitions and supply, was made a member of the combined policy committee as the representative of Canada."

That was Mr. King's statement at the time. With regard to questions 2 and 3, the position is as follows: The tube alloys project, as the joint atomic energy project instituted by the 1943 agreement was known, was concerned only with the development of atomic weapons, and the obligation of parties to the tube alloys agreement to exchange information did not extend beyond this. It will be recalled that although Canada was a partner in the wartime project to develop atomic weapons, nevertheless as soon as the war was over the Canadian project was directed entirely toward non-military objectives. Canada, therefore, was no longer directly concerned with the exchange of information on atomic weapons.

Moreover, the combined policy committee, which as already mentioned included a Canadian member as the result of an invitation extended at Quebec in 1943 by President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill, was continued in existence notwithstanding changes in United States legislation concerning the exchange of information on atomic matters. The Canadian government, which was not a signatory to the 1943 agreement between Mr. Churchill and President Roosevelt, did not consider it appropriate for Canada to make any protest to the United States government regarding the effect of such legislation on the above agreement.

Nevertheless, at the time such legislation, which was known as the McMahon act, was being considered, we made our views known in Washington as to the desirability of the fullest possible exchange of information between the United States, the United Kingdom and Canada for the effective development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. Indeed, at an earlier period, shortly after the end of hostilities, the Canadian government had already expressed to the United States and United Kingdom governments our desire that there should be full and effective co-operation in the field of atomic energy among the three governments.

Mr. Coldwell: The late prime minister's statement makes no reference to any agreement banning the use of the atomic bomb without one another's consent. That was the point in which I was particularly interested. Did we know of that agreement? If we knew what the situation was, and in view of the appointment of the minister of munitions and supply to a proposed committee on atomic development, why were we excluded from a secret agreement if we were a partner in the project?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Mackenzie King was informed at the time in Quebec of the terms of this agreement between Mr. Churchill and Mr. Roosevelt.

Mr. Coldwell: It was a secret agreement.

Mr. Pearson: The terms of the agreement, which is not now secret, were, for obvious reasons, secret at that time. I understand that agreement has since been made public. As I understand it, there was no Canadian commitment or obligation in respect of any part of that agreement, except the paragraph under which Canada was invited to join the combined policy committee.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REFERENCE TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice concerning two questions on today's order paper and which, I would point out, have been on the order paper for four weeks. May I ask the Minister of Justice, with respect to the continuing committee, if he knows whether or not he was appointed chairman of that committee? If he does know, why does he not answer the question? If he does not know, will the Prime Minister cause inquiries to be made in the government and bring the actual state of affairs to the attention of the minister so that he can answer the question?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Perhaps I can answer the hon. member's question by saying that the draft of the answers came to me today, and I sent them to the stenographer to have a slight change made. I shall be tabling them at the next question period of the house.

FISHERIES

CHANGES IN SALMON FISHING REGULATIONS ON ATLANTIC COAST

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I ask the Minister of Fisheries a question, notice of which I sent to his office this morning? Is he in a position to make a statement to the house concerning certain recent amendments to the New Brunswick fisheries regulations, effecting changes in the commercial and angling salmon fishing seasons?

Hon. James Sinclair (Minister of Fisheries): In recent years a decline in the Atlantic salmon fishery has been giving great concern to both the federal authority and the five Atlantic provinces. On the federal side we have stepped up our research program, have increased predator control and stream clearance and improved our hatcheries. There was also the problem of having uniformity in the length of the fishing seasons, both commercial fishing in the area and sport fishing on the rivers of the provinces.

On March 1, we had a conference here in Ottawa of deputy ministers from the provinces, who met with our officials and discussed and agreed upon a joint program which was taken back to the provinces. I am happy to say we have now received the consent of the five provinces concerned to the introduction of uniform salmon fishing regulations in the whole Atlantic area. Instead of having five provinces all with different seasons and different sizes of catch, we will now have uniformity over the three areas: the Atlantic coast area where the salmon come first, then the bay of Fundy, and then the gulf of St. Lawrence.

This program will involve the shortening of the open season for both commercial fishing and sport fishing. This is the type of program which has met with conspicuous success on the west coast, where we are happy to see the salmon fishery increasing each year. I am sure we shall have a similar result on the east coast. I feel I should say that we are very happy about the warm co-operation we received from the five provincial governments concerned.

SALT FISH—MEETINGS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND AND NOVA SCOTIA OPERATORS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday, the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare asked me the results of a recent conference on the marketing of salt codfish in Newfoundland as it affected maritime producers. I can now give the answer.

As the house will be aware, meetings were held on April 1 and 2 here in Ottawa to discuss the new arrangements for the marketing of Newfoundland salt fish. Although final plans have not yet been completed, I am in a position to say, in reply to the question of the hon. member, that sales of Newfoundland salt bulk fish to mainland merchants will be permitted, under appropriate conditions, on approval of the Newfoundland fisheries board.

Last year mainland merchants were permitted to buy salt bulk fish in Newfoundland, outside of the control of the Newfoundland Associated Fish Exporters Limited, commonly known as NAFEL, provided that they entered into firm contracts before the end of May, 1953. The time limit has been removed, as has the need for determining the price in advance for the season's purchases. However, steps will be taken to ensure that Newfoundland fishermen will not be encouraged to produce salt bulk fish in excess of requirements. This change should be mutually beneficial.

Except for sales of salt bulk fish from Newfoundland to mainland merchants, salt fish will continue to be exported from Newfoundland exclusively through NAFEL.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Hamilton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour or whoever is acting for him. Will the acting minister say whether consideration is being given by the unemployment insurance commission to the extension of the period for the payment of supplementary benefits beyond April 15?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Speaking for the Minister of Labour, may I take notice of the question and bring it to the minister's attention when he returns.

CRIMINAL CODE

REVISION AND AMENDMENT OF EXISTING STATUTE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 6, consideration in committee of Bill No. 7, respecting the criminal law—Mr. Garson—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The Chairman: The committee is considering group 5 and I shall call clause 32.

On clause 32—Use of force to suppress riot.

Mr. Gillis: I do not want to start making a noise while these other meetings are taking place, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Gillis: This clause 32 does not stand by itself. The subject matter dealt with is covered in section 33 and sections 64 to 69, so there is plenty of provision in the Criminal Code covering it. The two sections I have just mentioned have to do with unlawful assembly, riots and so forth. What I am going to say will have a bearing on all the sections I have indicated, because they deal fully with the subject matter. Let me point out that they are not new in the code; they are sections that have been in the code for a long time. For example, clauses 32 and 33 replace the old sections 48, 49, 50 and 51 as well as section 93. Then, clauses 64 to 69 deal with the same subject matter as was covered in the old code in sections 87 to 92. What we have before us is merely a consolidation of all those older sections, and there is no change in the law.

In the briefs I have read respecting the Criminal Code, particularly those having a bearing on the rights of labour, this particular subject matter has been completely missed. I have seen no comment on any of these sections in any of the representations made. In my judgment however these are the most dangerous sections in the Criminal Code, so far as the labour movement is concerned. In those other matters dealing with contracts, strikes and the like, the legislation is fairly substantial. But after one has gone through all the legal machinery provided by the labour codes and the Criminal Code, and has been successful in detouring around those, he will get into a position where, in the event of a legal strike, but one which is not popular with the boss of the plant being picketed, he will have to come to these sections of the Criminal Code.

This is pretty tricky legislation. Let me say to the minister that I have listened to the debate in the house concerning the length of imprisonment. I would say that it is immaterial to me whether the term of imprisonment is seven years, fourteen years or two years; but to the person affected, any of those sentences amounts to a life sentence. Because once a person is convicted of a crime under the Criminal Code and enters a federal penitentiary he carries with him from that penitentiary a stigma for the rest of his natural life. An imprisonment of that kind will seek you out in your employment; you become an outcast in the community; you are debarred from holding public office. I have never seen anyone rehabilitated successfully after leaving one of those institutions.

That is one reason why we should be all the more careful when we are setting down the laws, to assure ourselves that there is nothing in those laws that may leave future scars. The law should be clear in that respect.

Let me indicate to the minister just how tricky the law can be—and I shall relate my own experience. I have seen these laws at work. For example, on one occasion I saw a strike, one which was legitimate in every way and in connection with which there had been no disturbance. However, the company decided it would turn the public mind against those who were on strike, and did this by taking off the job the men who operated the pumping station. That pumping station provided water to the community, to hospitals, and other places requiring it. However, the strikers, those who were involved in the strike, proceeded to operate that plant. Then these sections of the Criminal Code became effective.

I am not particularly concerned with the situation where the mayor of a city or town, or the reeve of a municipality, someone having public responsibility, decides that he has lost control of law and order, or that a bad situation has developed and that he must invoke these sections of the Criminal Code. But I am concerned about a case such as I have described, where the company placed itself in an illegal position by shutting off the water. Yet these sections of the Criminal Code were brought into force through getting some pinheaded chap who had been appointed as a magistrate to make a declaration that a state of riot existed.

It is that sort of thing I am trying to guard against. Because if three men are assembled —and it boils down to that—someone can suggest that, arising out of that small assembly, a riot may be precipitated. But that riot never takes place; and most certainly the use of the riot act only aggravates it. Hon. members will let their minds go back to the situation in Cornwall only a few years ago, when the seamen were out on strike. Things were running along peacefully until a Montreal detective agency organized in that city truckloads of thugs, and armed them with old car springs, and weapons of that nature. It will be recalled that we put the facts on the record right here in the House of Commons. I am sure the hon. member for Dauphin remembers it. Those thugs were sent in from Montreal with instructions to start trouble, to cause a riot, so that the blame would be placed on those who were carrying out a legitimate strike under the laws of the country.

Because of these sections in the Criminal Code that kind of thing can happen; and it has happened in the past. We have not changed the law in any way to prevent it happening again.

I am not concerned about what goes on under clauses 32 or 33, but I am concerned with what goes on under clause 68. But they are all tied together. I should think clause 68 might be amended so that if, in the judgment of an elected person, perhaps the mayor or the reeve of a municipality, law and order had got out of hand and assistance was required, such person could issue a proclamation. That would be a proper procedure, rather than leaving it in the hands of doubtful persons, with the possibility of a situation such as developed in Cornwall, and also in my own part of the country. Because men can be picked up for $5 or $10 to precipitate the sort of condition some people want to have precipitated.

I suggest that before these clauses are passed the minister should consider amending clause 68. I have pointed out that the clauses are not new, but they have caused a lot of trouble for all of us. In my view they are the most dangerous in the Criminal Code; because if I am in a gathering of three or four, or even ten people, and I am picked up, although I may be an innocent bystander and be quite innocent, I can be charged. I can be picked up and arrested, and there is not very much defence I can offer under the section as it now stands.

It will be kept in mind that one can get anything from two years to life imprisonment under clause 68 of this bill. We should be a little more careful about it. There may have been times in the history of this country when perhaps you needed it, but that is not so today. In every province of Canada I am sure there are adequate police to take care of any situation that might arise. There are the regular police and the mounted police in most of the provinces. Then there are the provincial police, and they could take care of any situation that might arise in any part of this country today without involving the whole community in the kind of thing that is connected with the reading of the riot act.

Not so long ago the police invaded Louiseville, and their conduct while there left much to be desired. If this type of legislation had not been on the statute books that would not have happened. The mayor of any city has ample protection to handle any situation that might arise under any given circumstances. Before we dispose of these clauses finally the minister ought to think out some amendment to clause 68 that would place the elected responsible people in authority in any community. If any action of this kind were necessary, they should be the people to decide rather than have the kind of thing that has happened in every community that I have ever seen where this legislation has been invoked.

Mr. Ellis: The hon. member for Cape Breton South has just placed before the committee very good reasons why some changes should be made not only in this clause but in clause 64. I would remind the minister that other incidents have occurred in Canadian history which indicate the need for some caution in this regard. While I was attending high school I had the opportunity to witness an event in my own city, the Regina riot, on July 1, 1935. I do not want to go into the history of that incident. If I wanted to take the time I could read some quotations from speeches made by some of the supporters of my hon. friends on the other side of the house, who at that time were in opposition, and some of the things that they had to say about the way in which that affair was handled by the government of the late R. B. Bennett. I believe that incident is still fresh in the minds of Canadians. The incident in itself should draw to the attention of hon. members the necessity for making some changes in these clauses.

You will recall that at that time the police were assembled in Regina from all over western Canada. I understand that Canadian National railway policemen, Canadian Pacific railway policemen, and mounted policemen from all over western Canada, were assembled in the city of Regina, and the riot that occurred at that time was largely the result of provocation on the part of police acting under direct instructions from the government at Ottawa. I realize that a commission was held immediately afterwards and whitewashed the whole affair, at least to the satisfaction of the government of the day. But the history of that event indicates the very serious and dangerous nature of these sections of the Criminal Code.

Clause 32 (1) reads:

> Every peace officer is justified in using or in ordering the use of as much force as he believes, in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds,
>
> (a) is necessary to suppress a riot, and
>
> (b) is not excessive, having regard to the danger to be apprehended from the continuance of the riot.

I realize that if that right is exercised in good faith we will not have too much to worry about, but I suggest there have been instances in this country where good judgment has not been exercised. I think that a good deal of power is given to law enforcement officers in this connection. I would just remind the house that the people who were involved in that riot were not the relief camp trekkers at all. The disturbance started at a public meeting which was attended by a great number of Regina citizens. Some of the single unemployed may have been present at that meeting, but most of the people at that meeting were Regina citizens who had gone out to hear the case being put forth by a number of speakers. Instead of the police exercising good judgment and, if they felt it necessary, arresting the leaders of the trek and placing them in jail to await trial—and I understand the leaders made it perfectly clear that they were available whenever the government decided to have them arrested—the police waited until the vast public meeting had commenced and then quite unexpectedly, without warning of any kind, they descended from all directions, with tin hats and clubs, onto this large public meeting in the city of Regina. In these circumstances, human nature being what it is, provocation will undoubtedly lead to retaliation, and one thing will lead to another, until eventually there is a full-scale riot.

It is not my purpose to recount the history of that event, except to relate enough to indicate the manner in which the power given to our enforcement officers in this case was abused. I suggest that in the interests of justice and in order to prevent a recurrence of this sort the government should give reconsideration to a number of these clauses.

The hon. member for Cape Breton South has suggested a change in connection with clause 68, having to do with reading the proclamation. I believe that is one way in which the abuse of this power could be overcome. In the incident to which I have referred a Tory government at Ottawa ordered the police to assemble at that particular point, and it was on their responsibility that this riot occurred. Therefore I ask the minister to give serious consideration to making some changes to prevent a repetition at any future date of not only the incident I have related but other incidents at Louiseville, Cornwall and Estevan, which was another example in my own province prior to the time of the Regina disturbance.

Mr. Gillis: Cape Breton had half a dozen.

Mr. Ellis: There have been a great many incidents in this country. Since we are reviewing the Criminal Code at this time we should take great pains to prevent recurrences of these most unfortunate incidents.

Mr. Nesbitt: I have heard some very moving and colourful descriptions of sad events of the past from hon. members to my left; but, occasionally, circumstances arise that bring about these incidents. As the Minister of Justice has been pointing out, the purpose of this house is to pass laws; it is not the responsibility of this house as to how those laws are enforced locally. That is no concern of ours.

Without going into any detailed and long descriptions of events that have taken place in the past, I should like to draw to the attention of the minister and of my hon. friends to the left a situation that occurred last spring in western Ontario where there was a trucking strike, which was directed from the city of Detroit. During the time of that strike roadblocks were put up and all sorts of things to inconvenience the public, and everything else. It was impossible for the police to handle them all. There were not enough of them to place them at all points. There was a great deal of violence.

In situations such as this, without going into the matter in any further detail, it seems that ordinarily a clause such as clause 68 would not be used, but it would be advisable to retain that clause because circumstances might well arise, perhaps through lack of judgment on the part of some local police or law enforcement officer, where it might be essential to have it on the statute books. That could happen under any section of the Criminal Code and of course such lack of judgment on the part of peace officers would not be the responsibility of parliament. However, the machinery in the law should be there to meet such situations if they arise, seldom though it may be, and for that reason I certainly believe the present section should be retained without alteration.

The Chairman: Shall clause 32 carry?

Mr. Gillis: I wonder if the minister would care to make a comment on this?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I was about to get to my feet, but I try not to be guilty of talking out my own clauses and there seemed to be a disposition on the part of the committee to pass this clause. In addition, what I might say on clause 32 could just as easily be said on any of the other clauses.

The points which have been raised by the three speakers who preceded me are of importance. They are all valid, the inconsistency between them being more apparent than real. We are dealing here with a question of riots, a subject matter of really great difficulty, and I do not know of any predicament I would more like to avoid than that of being a mayor of a city with a riot on my hands.

Mr. Gillis: You would not have one. They are all imported.

Mr. Garson: May I attempt to illuminate this problem to some extent by reading a report from an old British case. I am not submitting that this is the law or that it is now applicable to this country, but simply as an illustration of the dilemma in which a magistrate, peace officer or mayor may find himself in the case of a riot. This is the report of the judge's charge to the jury in the case of Rex v. Pinney which was a prosecution of the mayor of Bristol, England, in 1832. The judge among other things said this:

> Now a person, whether a magistrate, or a peace-officer, who has the duty of suppressing a riot, is placed in a very difficult situation, for if, by his act, he causes death, he is liable to be indicted for murder or manslaughter, and if he does not act, he is liable to an indictment on an information for neglect; he is, therefore, bound to hit the precise line of his duty: and how difficult it is to hit that precise line, will be a matter for your consideration,—

And the judge continued:

—but that, difficult as it may be, he is bound to do. Whether a man has sought a public situation, as is often the case of mayors and magistrates, or whether as a peace-officer he has been compelled to take the office that he holds, the same rule applies; and if persons were not compelled to act according to law there would be an end of society but still you ought to be satisfied that the defendant has been clearly guilty of neglect before you return a verdict against him.

Such is the situation in which he finds himself, and that is the situation with which these clauses deal. It would be expecting an almost impossible degree of perfection of judgment to insist that every person who finds himself in that position is going to be able to hit that precise line between his responsibility for the consequences of the use of force, on one hand, or of his neglect upon the other. Under the stress of a very critical and urgent situation such as that, the judgment of human beings who are placed in that situation is not often 100 per cent perfect. This imperfection is pretty much what one would expect. So when my hon. friends say, let us cure that defect in human judgment in advance by a provision in our law, I say, "Well, all right, but what is the amendment which you would move to cure that defect in human judgment?"

As the judge said to the jury in the remarks I have quoted, there are few more difficult tasks that could face any human being than the task of hitting the precise line of duty when he has a riot on his hands. I would say this to my hon. friend from Cape Breton South that I believe he will find in all these instances in which abuses have arisen under the law we are discussing, which has been on our statute books for many decades and for a long period before that was the law of England, that where the fault usually lies, if you can call it fault, is that the judgment and the courage of the official who had a riot on his hands was not equal to the emergency he had to face.

For my part I would withhold my criticism because I would be very much afraid that if I were in the same position I might not do much better than he did when faced with this responsibility of hitting the right line between committing an offence on one hand or the other. It is a very bad position in which to be. I am therefore quite a little sceptical as to whether we can solve this difficulty here by improving upon the work of generations of former legislators who have had to deal with this problem both in Canada and in Great Britain.

I am inclined to think that, wise as we think we are in 1954, it is just possible that there were men somewhere along the line during the several generations just past who would have changed this law which we have inherited from them with regard to riots if they had thought it was possible by legislative enactment to inject better judgment into those who deal with riots.

Mr. Knowles: But you have made changes in clause 69.

Mr. Garson: Yes, that is correct, but we have made them for obvious reasons. This bill was reported upon by the special committee of the House of Commons at the last session. From time to time since we have had requests from the three large labour congresses in Canada for conferences to discuss various clauses of Bill No. 7, and while the government agrees it was appropriate for us to introduce the bill in the exact form in which it came from the House of Commons committee, it seems to me that it was natural and proper that we should hear further representations from these large and responsible congresses. We have done that and we have also received representations from what might be regarded as organizations submitting the employers' point of view. For example, we heard from the board of trade of the city of Toronto. In connection with the series of clauses which we are now considering and which deal with riots, I would like to submit one or two amendments which I hope will go some distance toward meeting the legitimate points which have been raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton South, although they will not deal with the particular point which he has mentioned in regard to clause 32.

In that connection the suggestions we have received from these labour congresses have been so valuable that I think I should put a tribute to their helpfulness on the record and say that Mr. Percy Bengough, president; and Mr. Leslie Wismer, public relations and research director of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada; Mr. Gerard Picard, president; Mr. Theodore L'Esperance, counsel; Mr. Pierre Vadboncoeur, technical adviser, and Mr. Gerard Pelletier, public relations officer of the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour; Mr. Donald MacDonald, secretary-treasurer; Dr. Eugene Forsey, research director; Mr. Maurice Wright, counsel of the Canadian Congress of Labour; and Mr. A. C. Crysler, legal secretary, the board of trade of the city of Toronto, who is quite an expert in labour relations law, have all contributed a great deal in the way of useful suggestions which in part we have tried to embody in amendments that we will be submitting to members of this committee on these sections that we have now to consider, including the ones concerning riots that are immediately under discussion.

If in response to the suggestion by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Regina City I were to say that I did not accept an amendment to this section 32 which merely continues what has been a law of long standing, that is not because I deny for a moment the difficulty which they raise but simply because I think that the difficulty cannot be met by amending legislation. Unless there are good reasons —and I hope to advance some extremely good reasons for the changes which I will propose —I think it is the policy of prudence, in connection with legislation of this character, to adhere to language in the law which has stood the test of time.

Mr. Knight: I should like to ask the minister if there is any provision in the law for the punishment of a peace officer who gives an unlawful order for the suppression of a riot. It seems queer and it brings back memories to me of, I think it is, about nineteen years ago. It so happens that I too was in Regina, like my friend the hon. member for Regina City, on the night of that particular riot. I am a bit amazed at my friend the hon. member for Oxford defending the law and the status quo.

An hon. Member: He was not there.

Mr. Knight: I am well aware of the fact that he was not there. But the supporters of his particular party were in charge of things at Ottawa at that particular time. I might say to the hon. member for Oxford that there is no single event in the province of Saskatchewan that has contributed so much to the keeping out of power of his party in Saskatchewan and to keeping it out of power in Ottawa so far as Saskatchewan voters are concerned as did the mishandling of that riot at that particular time. I think that is perfectly true. The people of Saskatchewan have never forgotten. When my friend the hon. member for Cape Breton South says that riots are mostly imported, he certainly has the best proof in that particular riot because, as everybody knows, that riot was imported from the province of British Columbia. There is no good purpose to be served by going into the history of the thing. Everybody knows how those boys were guaranteed free conduct. I see the Minister of Agriculture sitting there looking at me. He probably knows more about it than does any other man in this chamber.

Mr. Ellis: Quote some of his speeches.

Mr. Knight: Yes; I have some of them. I know this, however. It was common knowledge or at least it was common opinion that these boys were promised free conduct, as it were, to go down to put their case at the foot of the throne here in Ottawa. Instead of that, they were unloaded at Regina where plenty of mounted police and police of other kinds were available and waiting.

I have said that I happened to be there and when I say "happened" I mean just that. A few of us had gone down from Saskatoon to fulfil our usual task at the end of the year's term, namely that of correcting high school papers. We heard this noise and we went outside. I certainly witnessed the thing. There were women there with baby carriages at that meeting. It was a perfectly legitimate meeting, gathered around there to discuss this thing and all of a sudden a group of police poured in from all sides with all sorts of weapons and started to beat these people. When a member said here today it was a brutal spectacle, he was perfectly correct. I was extremely lucky that I got away from there unscathed myself.

There is another thing that I should like to point out in connection with this Criminal Code. As matters now stand, anyone who is found loitering after the riot act has been read is liable to be put in jail for life or some such term. I do not know how many years it is, but I know it is plenty. I think there should be some amendment to this particular clause.

Mr. Garson: Would my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Knight: I am not very good at answers. I hope it is not a legal question.

Mr. Garson: No; it is not a legal question. It is a very simple one.

Mr. Knowles: Is it an illegal one?

Mr. Garson: On the facts as I have stated them, would he not say that the fault there was not that of the law but of some human judgment that was involved?

Mr. Knight: Some human judgment? Of course all the mistakes that are made, as far as I know, are as a result of human judgment. I do not know that anybody else but humans can make mistakes.

Mr. Knowles: That is how the Liberals got into power.

Mr. Knight: That is why I am suggesting that the law should deal with this human mistake. If you have a police officer who unlawfully gives an order, I think there should be something in this code to deal with the matter. The minister has yet to answer my question whether there is anything in the law as it stands to deal with the matter.

Mr. Garson: Yes; there is; it is right in this bill.

Mr. Knight: Let us have it.

Mr. Garson: All right. If my hon. friend will get his bill and look at it he will see this:

> Every peace officer is justified in using or in ordering the use of as much force as he believes, in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds,
> (a) is necessary to suppress a riot, and
> (b) is not excessive, having regard to the danger to be apprehended from the continuance of the riot.

If he does not do this in good faith or if there are not reasonable and probable grounds, then by the fact of his giving this order or taking this action he will be a party to every crime which is committed as a result of the action which he has taken because he can only take it upon reasonable and probable grounds and in good faith. I ask this question of my hon. friend. In what other words of the English language could that section be phrased in order to make it more clear that the peace officer can only use that force which he believes in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds is necessary to suppress the riot? I think my hon. friend would agree that society itself goes to pieces if it has not the capacity for suppressing a riot. All that this law says is that in order that society may remain stable and that riots may be suppressed, peace officers shall have the power to use such force as they believe, in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds, is necessary to that purpose. What could be more reasonable than that?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I suppose that I shall be told that if I had studied law I would know the answer to this question. But I should like to know who decides what is involved in the words "in good faith" and who decides whether the grounds on which the peace officer may have read the riot act were reasonable and justified? While I am setting out these questions for the minister, may I ask him whether he has before him the wording of the comparable British law? The reason I ask that question is this. A while ago he gave us a case which was based on British law and in which it was suggested that a person in this position is in a real dilemma. As I listened to the dilemma that the minister read from that case I wondered, as did the hon. member for Saskatoon, whether there is anything in the Canadian law that puts a peace officer in this country in the danger of going too far.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend has it right under his eye, right at this minute. It is in section 32, all spelled out. He says: Who decides this? If there is a riot, or an unlawful assembly which is approaching riotous proportions, and a peace officer comes along and exceeds the authority given to him under section 32 and assaults some people—

Mr. Knowles: Suppose as the result of his reading the riot act somebody else bashes up somebody else, although he started it.

Mr. Garson: Let us discuss one section at a time. We are discussing section 32 now. Let us confine our discussion to it for the time being. I will be very glad to discuss the other one later but there is no purpose in mixing up the discussion by talking about more than one section at a time. If a peace officer under section 32, lacking reasonable and probable grounds and not in good faith but in bad faith, assaults another man, then he is guilty of assault. If he shoots him he is liable to prosecution for murder. My hon. friend asks who decides this. The court decides it. The jury decides it as in the case that I cited. The judge was charging the jury how they should decide it. He said that the man they were judging was faced with a very difficult task and that they had to decide whether, in relation to the facts, he exercised proper judgment.

I must confess that if I were a juror in a case like that I would not be too uncharitable because the judgment that a person exercises in a crisis of that sort is a very difficult judgment indeed to exercise. Even where he takes a step which later proves to be wrong, it would be a pretty uncharitable person who would say that on the appearance of things at the time he exercised the judgment any person would know for sure that the man was wrong. The peace officer is in the same kind of predicament because this is not outright protection here by any manner of means but protection only if he is acting upon reasonable and probable grounds and in good faith.

Mr. Knowles: The minister says that the peace officer in such a situation is in a very difficult position. I agree, but I do not think the minister would want it to be any less difficult. The seriousness of that type of situation is such that the minister would not want it to be too easy for the peace officer to read the riot act and to do the other things that are permitted once the riot act has been read. My question is this: Should there not be some wording right in these riot act sections making it clear that it is an offence for a peace officer to read the riot act unlawfully?

Mr. Garson: Oh no. May I make this suggestion? We are not talking about reading the riot act now and it would do nothing but make for confusion if we were to bring that element into the picture. We are talking now about the degree of protection that a peace officer is afforded who uses force in the suppression of a riot, and that is all. I suggest we suspend our discussion about reading the riot act until we get to the section that deals with that. Let us confine our discussion to this matter because we will have a hard enough time keeping our minds clear about this issue without mixing it up with something else.

Mr. Knowles: All right. I will accept that, but I should like to ask the same question in relation to the use of force under such a situation as is set out in section 32. This is my point. Instead of having to rely on sections elsewhere in the Criminal Code dealing with assault or attempted murder or what have you, should there not be some wording right in section 32 or section 33 making it clear that it is an offence to make unlawful use of force for the purpose of this section? I suppose the minister is going to tell me that the section permits him to do it only if it is lawful.

Mr. Garson: Certainly.

Mr. Knowles: What happens if he does it when it is unlawful? Should there not be some restraint in the wording of this section?

Mr. Garson: No, I do not think so for a minute, because there is no sense in having the crime of assault, for example, provided for twice in two different parts of the code. Let us make this thing perfectly simple. Suppose I am a peace officer and I hit my hon. friend a blow upon the head with my baton and fracture his skull, and then I say I am justified by section 32 in doing that. That is my out. That is all that section 32 purports to do, to give the peace officer protection where he acts in good faith upon reasonable and probable grounds.

Mr. Knowles: The result would be a by-election in Marquette.

Mr. Garson: If the blow were hard enough I think it would be a by-election in Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Hodgson: Let us have one in both places.

Mr. Garson: Suppose my hon. friend says: "I object to this as a free citizen and I am not going to stand for it. There were no reasonable and probable grounds in this case and I am going to the police station to swear out a warrant against this peace officer upon charge of assault causing grievous bodily harm". Then the case just goes on from there. When the case comes up for trial my hon. friend, if he is conducting a private prosecution—the chances are the crown prosecutor would do it for him on a serious charge of that sort—brings his witnesses there to prove as a question of fact whether there were reasonable and probable grounds for this act of the peace officer. If there were reasonable and probable grounds section 32 would clear me. If there were no reasonable and probable grounds then I would be guilty of wounding or—

Mr. Fulton: Assault occasioning grievous bodily harm.

Mr. Garson: Assault occasioning grievous bodily harm, and I would have to pay the penalty. That is the position in which peace officers are in relation to riots. I ask my hon. friend if he were a peace officer would he not want section 32? How would he like to act without any protection of that sort? When a man has this invidious responsibility of trying to maintain order and to suppress a riot and acts in good faith and uses good judgment, is it not fair that there should be a clear statement of the law that he is protected?

Mr. Knowles: May I answer the minister by saying that I agree that the protection should be there but I think the restraint should also be in the same section.

Mr. Fulton: The restraint is all throughout the code.

Mr. Garson: Of course it is all throughout the code. Here is the difficulty. The restraint would have to be in relation to some act. It might be common assault, it might be grievous bodily harm, it might be manslaughter, it might be murder. Are you going to specify all these things in that section? I think that would be absurd. They are specified in the code in their proper place, and all that this section purports to do is to say that the peace officer will be absolved from whatever the facts establish as an offence upon his part, provided he acts upon reasonable and probable grounds and in good faith.

Mr. Herridge: I have been following with interest the points made by the hon. member for Cape Breton South and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I am not satisfied with the section as it is. I remember during the depression a peaceful parade of unemployed consisting of less than a hundred men. When they were marching down the main street of a small town a group of police arrived and started to pound the leaders over their heads with their batons. Naturally no man is going to stand and take that. Personally I was very glad to see three or four of the police bowled over pretty quickly. But once a man has done that it then becomes an unlawful assembly and a riotous condition. Under those circumstances I am quite sure that these men were justified in retaliating against an unfair attack, but if it came to a question of law I am also sure they would lose out because they had struck a peace officer in self-defence.

Mr. Garson: Is not the difficulty in all of these cases due to the human element and a fact that cannot be cured in the law, namely, that the men who were marching on that occasion may not have followed up the matter by laying an information? When the whole affair was over they may have felt that it was best to let it drop.

If my hon. friend is right, and I am not questioning his statement, that the police did make an unprovoked attack and started the riot, and if the evidence proved that fact in a court of law, I think there is no doubt that the police would be guilty of some offence, depending upon what the facts proved. But if no person takes proceedings, then no such consequences will follow. If they do not take proceedings and the consequences do not follow, that is not the fault of the law; it is the consequence of their inaction.

The point I am making is that in all these matters one thing that the law cannot do is to cure these human frailties. If I have rights and I will not exercise them, that is not the fault of parliament. The duty of parliament is to provide rights and whether or not a man exercises them is for him to decide.

Mr. Gillis: The trouble with all these sections under this heading is that we are discussing the wrong one first. We should be discussing clause 68 first because it is the basis for all these clauses.

Mr. Garson: I agree with my hon. friend, and I have no objection to discussing clause 68 first. I did not start this discussion. It was my hon. friend himself.

Mr. Knowles: You brought in the bill.

Mr. Garson: The hon. member rose to his feet, and I courteously let him proceed. If my hon. friend would like to start on clause 68, I have no objection. I have an amendment to offer with regard to clause 33. Might we pass clauses 32 and 33, and then go on to clause 68. If my hon. friends want to come back later to clause 32 or 33 I would have no objection to that.

Mr. Barnett: Is the minister suggesting that we stand clauses 32 and 33?

Mr. Garson: No, I shall move an amendment to clause 33. We could pass clauses 32 and 33 and if later my hon. friends, for any reason, would like to reopen those clauses I would have no objection.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister might tell us what the amendment is.

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Clause 32 agreed to.

On clause 33—Duty of officers if rioters do not disperse.

Mr. Garson: This amendment arose out of our discussion with the congresses and it reads:

That subclause (2) of clause 33 be amended by inserting after the word "that" in line 23 on page 15 the words "by reason of resistance".

The clause would then read:

No civil or criminal proceedings lie against a peace officer or a person who is lawfully required by a peace officer to assist him in respect of any death or injury that, by reason of resistance, is caused as a result of the performance by the peace officer or that person of a duty that is imposed by subsection (1).

In other words, to put it into even simpler language, it is only where the person has resisted the peace officer that he is warranted in using that degree of force.

Mr. Pickersgill: I move the amendment.

Mr. Knowles: Might I ask a question or two concerning this amendment? I take it that the amendment, and the subclause both before and after the amendment, refer only to an injury occasioned directly because of what the peace officer has done, or might it refer to injuries suffered by party B from party C, but which arose because party A, namely the peace officer, tried to interfere in a situation?

Mr. Garson: No, if my hon. friend will look at subclause 1 of clause 33 he will see it starts out, "where the proclamation referred to in section 68 has been made..."; that is where the riot act has been read. In such a case, when a peace officer or person who is lawfully required by him to assist to disperse or arrest persons who had not complied with the proclamation, no civil or criminal proceedings lie against the peace officer or person who was lawfully required to assist him in respect of the death or injury resulting by reason of resistance. In other words, he may not move out and just knock people down. It is when they resist him that he is protected.

Mr. Knowles: So that this is more in the direction of a restraint.

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: It is not in the direction of greater latitude.

Mr. Garson: Did my hon. friend think the congresses would be urging something in that direction?

Mr. Knowles: The minister also mentioned the Toronto board of trade.

Mr. Garson: They were not identified with this.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Fulton: What does this amendment actually accomplish?

Mr. Garson: It makes it quite clear that a peace officer, on that occasion, cannot move irresponsibly into a group of people who are not resisting at all and, because the time provided for in the riot act proclamation has expired, proceed to use violence irresponsibly.

Mr. Fulton: Is not the irresponsible use of violence already protected against?

Mr. Garson: Perhaps I might reassure my hon. friend by telling him that this is merely a provision that has been in the law, is in the present code and is being carried forward.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee that I should now call clause 68?

Mr. Garson: May I suggest that we call clauses 64 to 69 inclusive, because they are all part of the one subject matter. Is that satisfactory?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clauses 64 to 69 inclusive—Unlawful assemblies and riots.

Mr. Gillis: The reason I suggested clause 68 should be the first clause in this set up, and really should be clause 32, was that you do not get a riot until the riot act is read by a police officer, the sheriff, the mayor or their representatives. Now, you do not have any trouble until that is done. All the other provisions contained in the other clauses relate to penalties arising out of the riot. It is by clause 68 that you determine what constitutes a riot.

The Minister of Justice has a lot more faith in the justice of the courts of this country than I have. He says that if a policeman knocks your head off, you go down and have him charged with assault under the Criminal Code. If you did that, do you know what would happen? They would put you in jail with four more charges against you. I could give you examples of that, but I do not want to do so here. Do not fool yourself that you would get away with it.

Mr. Garson: May I ask my hon. friend a question? Would he think that if the man in question went to the attorney general, who is always the chief law officer of a province, that the attorney general would treat him that way?

Mr. Gillis: Not if I went to him or you went to him, but 99 per cent of the people affected by this provision could never get to see him.

Mr. Garson: They could go to him.

Mr. Gillis: Yes, provided they could travel the 300 or 400 miles to the capital. Then, they could see his secretary and he would likely be away fishing. By that time, your case is rather cold. This is being realistic about it.

Take the history of riots across this country, and let us see who caused them? Well, it was not the man in the street who caused the riots. We know that in Regina the orders came from here. It was the peace officers, in whom the Minister of Justice has so much confidence, who came out there with tear gas bombs and rifles. There was no disturbance until they disturbed the peace.

Mr. Knowles: And last night the Minister of Finance reduced the tariff on tear gas.

Mr. Gillis: There was tear gas, and there were weapons; and there is to be no more duty on them.

Mr. Knowles: It looks suspicious.

Mr. Gillis: That was the so-called riot in Regina. And what were those desperadoes doing? Well, they were on a hunger march; they were marching because they could not afford to ride. They were not disturbing the peace.

Mr. Gardiner: They were riding on freight trains.

Mr. Gillis: It was supposed to be a hunger march. But who was it who disturbed the peace and created the riots? It was the police officers, the peace officers who have the authority to read the riot act, as set out in clause 68.

Then, there was the Vancouver post office incident. That was the only place the unemployed had in which they could sleep, in the post office. They were peaceful enough; they wanted to sleep. But tear gas was thrown in at them and, again, a riot was set up. It was not set up by the unemployed, those who did not have a place to sleep, but by your own police officers who had the authority to read the act under this clause.

Mr. Garson: No; may I make a correction. The clause right in front of the hon. member says—

Mr. Gillis: Oh, I have read it.

Mr. Garson: —"justice, mayor or sheriff."

Mr. Gillis: I am giving my own interpretation; and a sheriff is a police officer, and a magistrate is a peace officer—

Mr. Fulton: Peace officer.

Mr. Gillis: Yes, peace officer, certainly—and the mayor is the chief magistrate.

Mr. Fulton: But the hon. member said "police officer".

Mr. Gillis: I meant to say "peace officer". I am sorry; I am not a Rhodes scholar, and I do make slips in my terms.

Mr. Fulton: You do not resent help, do you.

Mr. Gillis: Oh, I appreciate it very much. The hon. member for Kamloops is always so helpful.

And that, Mr. Chairman, is the Vancouver post office incident—hungry people, who did not know where to sleep. Some sheriff or magistrate or justice declared a state of emergency, and tear gas was thrown.

And in my own part of the country—well, I would hate to tell you the story, because it would make pretty bad reading. But I have seen that province barbed-wired three times, and just as effectively as it was on the western front. We had no riots on the streets, but the cavalry came along with their curfew. There was no trouble from the people in the community; they did not cause the trouble at all. And the person who read the riot act and set up that state of war was not a very reputable magistrate, either. He had some kind of appointment that went away back, years before, a kind of commissionership for the taking of oaths. I think it was a political appointment.

I am not concerned about the penalty because, you see, I am not advocating riots. In fact, I have had experience in helping to quell them, when the police got into a good big mess and they had to get out. We had to turn policemen, ourselves, and put some of them in jail—to save their lives.

Mr. Garson: The policemen?

Mr. Gillis: Yes, to get them out of the way, after they had the trouble started.

An hon. Member: Protective custody.

Mr. Gillis: Protective custody, that is right.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Special Officer Clarie.

Mr. Gillis: No, but we had a sense of law and order, and we resented that law and order being disturbed by people who did not have sense enough to leave it alone when it was all right.

I am not afraid of the penalty, but I want to be sure that someone may not make it appear, under clause 68, that I am disturbing the peace when, in fact, I am not—and do that for his own purposes.

It was not the textile workers in Louiseville who disturbed the peace—and this was not so long ago. In the middle of the night there was an invasion of that community—and I am sure the minister cannot remember any of the police officers having been prosecuted as a result of that incident. And they certainly wielded their batons aplenty; there were some pretty ugly pictures in the press. But they had charge of the town.

The only point I am concerned about is that some person in a community who is responsible to the people of that community should have the say as to whether or not a riot is in progress. And I am positive, with my knowledge of disturbances right across Canada, that none of those disturbances would ever have happened if they had not been provoked by people who were supposed to maintain law and order—always of course under orders from somewhere else. A policeman has to do what he is told.

In many cases the big industrialists in a community have more power than the elected representatives and can order the people around—and get away with it. As I said before, I want the minister to look at clause 68. When we elect the mayor of a city I expect he will be the chief magistrate of that city, and responsible to its people. He is highly respected—otherwise he would not be elected. It is his responsibility to determine whether law and order can be enforced by his regular officials, or whether it is necessary to declare war—and that is what it is, when you bring in outsiders to maintain law and order.

I want a tightening up of the old section so that there will be responsible administration. If that is done I do not think there will be riots; and if there are no riots then, regardless of the penalties, you do not need the other sections of the Criminal Code dealing with this matter. However, they remain there to deal with a real emergency, if one should develop.

Then, before the minister determines what the penalties should be he must keep in mind that we must define just how a riot develops, what incites it, who provokes it and the like. If you can do that, and place the reading of the proclamation under the control of the mayors of cities and reeves of municipalities, you are not going to have riots. That is my judgment in the matter, anyway.

And do not forget this, that troops can be brought in under this arrangement. The mounted police can be brought in and billeted. Then the municipality has to pay the maintenance bill all the time the mounted police are in the community. That is another good reason why civic officials should have the responsibility of declaring an emergency, when it means an added tax burden on the taxpayers.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to the discussion with a good deal of interest, and I can say, with the hon. member for Cape Breton South, that I am against riots. But I do feel when we come to a revision of the Criminal Code in connection with these clauses that we should be prepared to inform ourselves on the fundamental points before we permit the clauses to pass.

To my mind the crux of the question we are considering is that it is our responsibility to assess the level of maturity we have achieved in a democratic society. These clauses come under the general heading of offences against public order. The other day I listened with a good deal of interest to the history of the crime of treason as it was outlined by the minister. I have almost wished that he might have given us a somewhat similar outline of the history of the riot act, or of riots generally. Because, unless I am entirely wrong in my understanding of the history of this matter, the riot act as we have it in our present legislation goes back over a long period of time. It arose essentially out of the feudal concept of society in which there was a higher order of people and a lower order, with the cohesion of society being predicated upon holding the mass of serfs, or whatever they might have been, in rein or in check.

In other words, basically, the idea of a riot as an offence against public order assumes an immaturity of outlook on the part of citizens generally which makes it impossible for them to control their actions in the mass. That is a question that I have to ask myself when I am considering this clause. We have listened to descriptions of some of the incidents in this country within the memory of most of the people in this house where this clause has come into force. The thought that has been going through my mind is whether or not in every instance where the provisions of that riot act have been invoked they were actually creating more trouble than they were avoiding as far as public order was concerned. No hon. member has risen to give an instance of where this riot act was used in a way that did not leave a more bitter and lasting taste in the minds of the ordinary citizens of the country than existed before.

I have also looked through this clause and I have tried to find in it any offence which is not covered by some other clause of the Criminal Code. In clause 160 and the following clauses we have various provisions to protect us against disorderly conduct. In the group of clauses from 216 to 220 we have offences having to do with acts causing bodily harm, and in clauses 372 and 373 we have offences provided against destruction of property and various forms of mischief. I have tried to imagine an offence that could be created by an individual involved in what is described as a riot that is not already covered by one of these other clauses?

If I am completely wrong in my understanding of it I should like to have the minister explain just in what way. The minister has made it clear that this is a difficult clause to administer at the level at which it has to be administered. It involves some very tricky matters of wisdom and judgment on the part of the individual responsible. If there were some way in which we could maintain an orderly society without having this thing in here at all it would be an indication that in Canada we have risen to a level where we consider ourselves to be a country of free citizens capable of acting in a responsible manner. It seems to me that if the offences that people commit as individuals against property or against the persons of other people could be dealt with individually rather than in the mass, the way they are in these clauses that we are considering, there would be much less likelihood of injustice being done and of people on the spur of the moment being wrongfully injured and wrongfully punished.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words in regard to this group of clauses having to do with the matter of riots and unlawful assemblies. What constrained me to speak was the phrase used by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. He said that if there were a way of maintaining an orderly society without these clauses in the Criminal Code, or something like that, that is what we should be trying to do. I maintain that, useful as these provisions might be in time of trouble, they will not of themselves maintain an orderly society. We have riots, and we have riots only when economic and social conditions have brought people to the point of desperation. These are the basic causes of this sort of disturbances of people. There may be some other factors at times.

Mr. Pickersgill: The Montreal riot in 1849.

Mr. MacInnis: That was shortly before my time; I cannot recall it. But other reasons may arise in a less well-informed society than the present one, and in a society where people are not free there may be riots, and there may be riots because of religious matters, but there is not very much danger of that, at least in my own section of the country. Actually, there is not much danger of any riots rising because of that reason today.

I have read considerable history, and particularly British history. The riots that I have read about all arose from the desperation of the people. Probably the one that we remember the most is the Peterloo massacre near London some hundred years or so ago—probably it is not quite that long. But if we concern ourselves with good conditions of living, or as reasonable conditions of living as we can, and bring all our people in it so that they may have a part in our government and a part in the economic organization of society, then, people who have constructive opinions like that today are not going to riot and destroy the work of their own hands. Until you have that, these clauses may make provision for putting people in jail, but they will not of themselves create and maintain an orderly society.

If we do these things that we should do in this country that is so rich and has so many resources I believe riots and disorderly and unlawful assemblies would become as extinct as the dodo. I believe we are dealing with the whole series of clauses from 64 to 69, and this is the one that causes the difficulty:

> A riot is an unlawful assembly that has begun to disturb the peace tumultuously.

Why is the word "begun" there? How does a person know, if there is a beginning, there is going to be a continuation? How much beginning is there going to be before we can say there is a riot? Would it not be much better to say that a riot is an unlawful assembly which has disturbed the peace tumultuously. It seems to me we are trying to get a thing before it is there at all. There are other phrases similar to this which might make sense to learned lawyers but to the ordinary person like myself they do not make an awful lot of sense. I would emphasize again that from the little experience I have had with riots and disturbances of the peace it is my impression that they all arose at a time when the young men of this country could not get a better outlet for their energies and they organized some sort of resistance or protest against their conditions. That protest embarrassed the local authorities and then to excuse themselves for their failure to do anything they read the riot act.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Chairman, it was not my intention to speak on this clause but I saw the mayor of a city many years ago read the riot act and that is why I am on my feet at the present time. According to clause 68:

> A justice, mayor or sheriff or the lawful deputy of a mayor or sheriff who receives notice that, at any place within his jurisdiction, twelve or more persons are unlawfully and riotously assembled together, shall go to that place and, after approaching as near as safely he may do, shall command silence and thereupon make or cause to be made in a loud voice a proclamation in the following words or to the like effect: "Her Majesty the Queen charges and commands all persons being assembled immediately to disperse and peaceably to depart to their habitations or to their lawful business upon the pain of being guilty of an offence for which, upon conviction, they may be sentenced to imprisonment for life."

In this case in a city many miles from my own riding I saw the mayor on the steps of the city hall with 50 or more policemen around him and hundreds of people out on the street wondering what it was all about. He read this clause or something similar and immediately he had finished reading it the policemen started down among the crowd. They dispersed them with their batons and I never saw anything so cruel in my life. I saw many innocent people being injured. I believe there should be something in this clause which would make it necessary for the police to hold back for some time in order to give the people an opportunity to disperse. I am not a lawyer but I cannot see anything in this clause that gives the people time to disperse.

Mr. Knowles: There was in the old section but it was taken out, unfortunately.

Mr. Garson: We are proposing to move an amendment to that clause.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I am glad to hear that an amendment will be moved but I wonder if the minister would read it now so that we may know what its effect will be?

Mr. Garson: I will move the amendment as soon as we reach that clause.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Would it not be better to move it now so that we may know what it is?

Mr. Garson: I have no objection if that is agreeable to the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: I would suggest that the amendment be read now for the information of the committee and it can be moved formally when we reach the clause.

Mr. Garson: The amendment would be to delete the word "forthwith" where it appears in lines 15 and 16 on page 25 and substituting therefor the words "within 30 minutes."

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I realize that this amendment is not now before the committee and will not be moved until we reach clause 69 but I will say I am glad the minister is going to propose this amendment. Among other things he will be saved from listening to a half-hour speech from me and in effect he will be saving 30 minutes here as well as putting 30 minutes in the appropriate clause. As the minister knows, that provision was in section 92 of the code as it stood before, and we were going to propose its reinstatement. I rise at this moment, however, to point out that there has been another change made as between the old section 92 and the present clause 69 which I believe requires justification. The old section read in part:

(b) continue together to the number of twelve for thirty minutes after such proclamation has been made, . . .

That "number of twelve" has been deleted from the new section, as was the reference to 30 minutes. Is the minister going to move an amendment to put the word "twelve" back in the clause as well as the 30 minutes? I notice that the "number of twelve" was in section 91 of the old version and it is in clause 68 of Bill No. 7, but whereas the "number of twelve" was in section 92 of the old version it is not in clause 69. It seems to me it ought to be there and I would like the minister to indicate why it has been deleted.

Mr. Garson: Both the matters we have been discussing, the deletion of the reference to thirty minutes and the number of twelve, were recommendations made by the royal commission because they thought presumably that the references were not necessary in the existing code. In the case of the number of twelve I do not believe a great deal turns on it because if there were a real riot and the riot act is read and there is a period of thirty minutes within which they can disperse the fact of there being twelve left is not particularly material. The purpose of reading the riot act is so that a group assembled together can disperse. The group may be 75, 100, 500, or 1,000, and I can see that if they are all assembled together in a riotous group it would be necessary as a matter of common sense to permit some time within which the people in the forefront could have space in which to move away but I do not think it would be a matter of great moment that there should be less than twelve left at the end of that period of time.

For that reason and in view of the fact that that was the view of the royal commission and of all the bodies who have considered this up to the present time we thought, after consultation with these labour bodies, that it was wise to restore the thirty minutes but that there was no particular purpose served in restoring the number of twelve.

Mr. Knowles: I agree the thirty-minute provision is much more important than the other one, but I can but recall that half an hour or so ago the minister urged us to recognize that there was a great deal of wisdom in the past in dealing with sections covering the suppression of riots and the reading of the riot act, and he cautioned against any change from the collective wisdom of centuries gone by. He states that nothing may turn on this, but I believe a good deal might turn on it for the last ten or eleven people who are left. I wonder whether it was necessary to strike out the reference to the number of twelve.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, clause 68 reads in part as follows:

A justice, mayor or sheriff or the lawful deputy of a mayor or sheriff who receives notice . . .

My question is this: Who are authorized to notify the mayor or the sheriff that there is an unlawful assembly or that the peace is about to be disturbed tumultuously?

Mr. Garson: There is no person who is authorized particularly. It would be rather ridiculous if when a riot was in progress we said that the only people who could carry the news of the riot must be the mayor, a member of parliament, the chief of police or someone like that. A person can carry the news to him and will say, "Mr. Mayor, there is a riot out here and we need your official presence right away to deal with it". The only purpose of that language is to say, in effect, that when the mayor or when these other officers receive the notice it is part of their official duty to go there and to take the necessary steps which are part of the responsibility of their office to deal with a riot under this section.

Mr. Ellis: What proof has the mayor that there is indeed a situation as described to him? In other words, must the mayor or the sheriff accept a report brought to him that there is an unlawful assembly and that a riot has begun? If so, is it mandatory for him, on the information given to him, to read the riot act? That is what I am trying to get at.

Mr. Garson: No. My hon. friend must not imagine a lot of difficulties about a matter which is really one of common sense. If within the language of the section a mayor or sheriff, or the lawful deputy of a mayor or sheriff acting if he is not there, receives notice that at any place within his jurisdiction twelve or more persons are unlawfully and riotously assembled together, he shall go to that place and he shall read the riot act. That is a statutory direction to him as to what his duty is in the matter. He is the man upon whom the responsibility falls. His responsibility is to choose between the consequences of not doing what the statute directs him to do, for which he will have to answer, or doing what the statute directs him to do. If he is guilty of a bad mistake in judgment and it turns out that it really is not a riot that he is dealing with at all, then he is answerable for that also. He is therefore unavoidably in an extremely unhappy position; but that is what he gets for being mayor.

Mr. Ellis: That is the point I wanted to get cleared up, because of the word "shall". I read that word "shall" as indicating that it was the duty of the mayor, upon receiving this information, to go to this place and to read the riot act. I am glad that the minister has cleared up this matter to my satisfaction by saying that it is up to the mayor, after the information has been received, to decide on his own authority whether or not a situation does exist where the reading of the riot act is necessary.

Mr. Garson: I will say this to my hon. friend. Where a statutory authority is in these terms imposed upon any public official, what he does is this: Where he receives the notice, he goes to the place, looks at the alleged riot and tries to form the best judgment he can as to whether what is taking place is actually a riot or not. He has to use his good sense to make that decision, knowing that if he errs on either side he will be at fault. Faced with that situation, he exercises his judgment as best he can. If he says, "No; I do not think it is a riot," and if it turns out that there is a riot and that he is wrong, then he is guilty of an offence of failing to carry out his statutory duty. If my hon. friend will look at clause 70—perhaps I may be allowed to refer to it; it is not one of the ones we are now considering; it is just beyond that—he will see this provision:

> A peace officer who receives notice that there is a riot within his jurisdiction and, without reasonable excuse, fails to take all reasonable steps to suppress the riot is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

Hence the mayor or sheriff has quite a decision to make.

Mr. Ellis: In other words, in view of section 70, the safest course for the mayor to follow would be to read the riot act, because if he does not read the riot act and there is a great deal of criticism of his action, he could be held liable to imprisonment under section 70.

Mr. Garson: Yes; he could. But on the other hand if he read the riot act as a result of the exercise of bad judgment he would be responsible for some consequences there also. That is why I say that where the human being in an official capacity like that is vested with that type of responsibility, there is no way that I know of whereby we, in passing laws in this parliament, can avoid the consequence of errors in human judgment any more than we have done in the sections in the statute at the present time. My hon. friend may not think they are perfect but if he objects to any of these clauses I wish that in the course of doing so he would suggest some alternative to them.

Mr. Ellis: During the discussion this afternoon we have had all sorts of examples given where the riot act was read and where there was no need to read it. My question to the minister now would be this. In those cases, what happened to the magistrate or the mayor who read the riot act under those circumstances? Offhand, I cannot recall any action being taken against those people because they read the riot act. But I am suggesting that if they do not read the riot act, they are liable to imprisonment. I think the minister will agree with me on that point. In the examples given this afternoon, I think the minister will agree that there have been many incidents in this country where there was no need to read the riot act and that it was an unfortunate episode. We will all agree on that, I believe. But under these circumstances, no action has been taken whatsoever against either the peace officers or the responsible authority who read the riot act in those circumstances.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will read the section carefully again, I think he will find the answer to the argument that he has just been making during these last five minutes. It says:

> A peace officer who receives notice that there is a riot within his jurisdiction and, without reasonable excuse . . . fails to take all reasonable steps to suppress the riot is guilty of an indictable offence . . .

If he is charged under that section he would come in and he would say, "The reason I acted in the way I did was as follows. I got the notice. I went there. This is what I saw. My excuse for not reading the riot act is as follows." It may be that he made an error in judgment but if he could convince a jury—if it is a jury trying the case—that this was an honest error in judgment and if they regard his excuse for not acting was reasonable, that would secure him an acquittal, I should think. It would be for the jury to decide that issue as a question of fact.

What other provision could we make? We have got to put the responsibility there. It must be remembered that these are not infallible people who are making these decisions but just fallible human beings like you and me. Would any of us be unreasonable enough to say that we should leave out from this clause the term "without reasonable excuse"? I think these sections are quite good. And they should be; for they have been carefully considered over many decades.

Mr. Ellis: Will the minister point out where the specific punishment is spelled out for those who err in the other direction, namely those who read the riot act and precipitate a situation?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I have gone over all this before. I even spelled it out. Perhaps my hon. friend was not listening, but what I said was that where peace officers or other such officers, relying upon these statutory protections, without reasonable cause and in bad faith exceed their jurisdiction, they would then be responsible for whatever crimes their acts would constitute if they were done without authority. I cited the case of a peace officer in the pretended exercise of authority striking a gentleman over the head with a baton and I said that would probably be assault occasioning grievous bodily harm but for the protection he has under the code.

Mr. Knowles: That was the minister attacking me.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I wonder whether the minister can tell us of any instance in Canadian history in which the question of reading the riot act without justification has been made the cause of an action against the official who read it.

Mr. Garson: I am sorry that I cannot. Beyond the fact that I am piloting this bill through the house, I have no more knowledge of riots than my hon. friend who asked the question. I have never had any occasion to look into this matter. I think this must be said, that very frequently those who might have some cause for complaint or some reason for laying an information against a peace officer under these circumstances are the ones who on the facts are perhaps less likely to have any interest in doing so. It may be that some informations of that sort should have been laid that have not been laid. However, as I said on a previous occasion in this debate, that is not something that we can take care of in the law. All we can do in the law is to state rights and provide remedies. If those who have those rights and remedies choose not to exercise them, the law cannot in advance deal satisfactorily with a situation of that sort.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I asked that question because I perhaps have more knowledge of riots than the minister inasmuch as I have been on the spot on two occasions when the unlawful assembly sections of the code have been used. To my knowledge they were used on two occasions for the sole purpose of railroading genuine trade union pickets to jail.

For the information of the minister, I will describe one of these incidents which was a notorious case on the coast of British Columbia. Perfectly legal union pickets in a legal union strike that had gone through all the provisions of the trade union legislation of British Columbia were driven from their places on the picket line into an ambush prepared by the police. Many of the men went to hospital and the others were arrested the next day on a charge of unlawful assembly. I watched them being arrested. Those men went to jail. I was not arrested myself because I happened to be a member of the provincial legislature of British Columbia at the time. Otherwise I undoubtedly would have been. But that was one occasion.

I saw another case involving another perfectly peaceful orderly strike in the mining district of British Columbia where the same provisions were used on the same flimsy grounds because half a dozen men had collected. It was an opportunity to railroad them to jail and get them out of the way. That is how these provisions were used. I do not know of their ever having been used for any other purpose. What protection is there?

Mr. Philpott: I have listened with a good deal of interest and a little bit of amusement to some of the remarks from my hon. friends opposite. It seems to me that in their indignation about occasional abuses of power through the reading of the riot act they are losing sight of the necessity of having a perfectly good section in our Criminal Code to deal with riots. I think anyone who reads the history of this country or who talks to his old mother or his grandmother will very quickly learn that there have been many riots in this country for many different reasons and not, as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway says, merely arising out of poverty or industrial disputes.

For instance, we had riots in 1849, and the reason we are meeting in this chamber in Ottawa today instead of in Montreal, which was the natural capital of Canada, arises from the fact that the more ardent Conservatives of 1849 rather went on a rampage and stoned the governor general of that day. As I recall it, they burned down the parliament buildings. I am not sure whether anyone had time to read the riot act, but if they did not they should have. If you will read the history of a little later time you will see where Orangemen rioted against Catholics and Catholics rioted against Orangemen. There was a very serious riot in the holy city of Toronto when someone tried to put on the wrong kind of religious parade on the wrong day.

I can remember that in my boyhood a very serious riot took place in Hamilton. I also saw the serious consequences of a mayor reading the riot act on a wrong occasion. But I would point out to the hon. members opposite that we are living in a democracy under a system of responsible government, and the last court of appeal is always the common sense of the Canadian people. If a mayor reads the riot act wrongly we know what to do with him at the next election. We toss him out.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): I think the hon. member for Vancouver South has just proved my point because he has referred to the number of riots that have taken place despite this provision in the law, which shows that it is of no use whatever in stopping a real genuine riot. It takes place anyway.

Mr. Knowles: I merely wish to cite an example, which will be familiar to the Minister of Justice and I believe to the memory of the historian of the house, the Secretary of State, to prove that it is not necessary every time informal notice is given to a mayor that there is trouble brewing for him to read the riot act. I refer to an instance in the city of Winnipeg in 1935. The two hon. gentlemen opposite to whom I referred will remember that John Queen was mayor of the city at the time, and in his absence Alderman John Blumberg was acting as deputy mayor.

Shortly after the riots had taken place in the city of Regina a situation began to develop in Winnipeg with large numbers of these marchers on Ottawa passing through our city. I remember the incidents myself quite well but I have also heard John Blumberg tell the story a good many times in the way that he alone can tell it. The chief of police was of the opinion that the riot act should be read. Indeed, if I recall the story correctly, I believe there were others in authority who expressed the same opinion to John Blumberg. As the minister has pointed out, the responsibility of making the decision rested on that occasion on John Blumberg. He refused to read the riot act and it was not read. I think my hon. friends opposite would agree with me it was a good thing that it was not. I put that on the record to emphasize the point that even after legislation has been provided, whether good or bad, it is important to have persons in positions of responsibility who can exercise good human judgment.

Clause 64 agreed to.

On clause 65—Riot.

Mr. Knowles: Before this clause carries may I ask the minister whether any consideration was given to amending it so as to make it clear that a strike would not be deemed to be a riot? I believe this suggestion was made to the minister by some of those who waited on him recently. What has he to say on the point?

Mr. Garson: Yes, that was considered and discussed. It was our view, which I think I am right in saying was shared to quite an extent by others with whom the discussion took place, that a provision of that sort would add nothing to the clause, and indeed might create the impression that a strike was a riot unless declared by the clause not to be a riot.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 66 and 67 agreed to.

On clause 68—Reading proclamation.

Mr. Gillis: I should like to ask the minister if he might not think over an amendment to clause 68. A moment ago, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stated that the acting mayor of Winnipeg refused to read the riot act and that turned out to be a very good thing. All I have been asking is that someone with some responsibility to the community, the city, town or municipality affected, should be the one to make the decision as to whether or not it was necessary to read the riot act. As the clause now reads, that is not the case. The sheriff or his agent, the magistrate or his agent, the mayor or his agent may read it. I should like to see that provision limited to persons responsible to the municipality.

In my judgment all the trouble I have seen in connection with the application of this section of the code has arisen from the fact that the people who read the riot act merely read it for the purpose of precipitating a riot rather than preventing it. If it were amended so that the mayor or his representative in the community were the ones to have that responsibility, I should be quite satisfied.

Mr. Garson: We have felt all along that in the very respect the hon. member for Cape Breton South raises this point the clause in its present form is fairly tight already. The only people who have the right or the duty to read the riot act are a justice, who is a judicial officer, or a mayor or a sheriff or the lawful deputy of the mayor or sheriff, but not, as my hon. friend says, the agent of a justice. Having regard to the fact that this section is of general application all across Canada, and that circumstances might arise under which the mayor is not present or the justice is not present and perhaps even the sheriff does not happen to be around at the time this riot occurs, it does not seem unreasonable to say that the deputy mayor who, in most cases of which I am aware is another elected member of the council, or the deputy sheriff, shall have the right to perform this function.

It may be that my hon. friend objects to the idea of the deputy sheriff upon the ground that he is not an elected representative. I would not object to striking out the word "deputy sheriff" but I do not think we should strike out the word "sheriff" because the sheriff is one of the main peace officers of the community. In most cases of which I am aware he is a long resident there and is a man who enjoys the confidence of the community. If my hon. friend would like to have this power limited to a justice, the mayor, the sheriff or a deputy mayor, I would accept that amendment. However, I do not think we should leave any of the others out because they are all responsible officials.

Mr. Gillis: They may be responsible all right, but they have no responsibility to the community in which that kind of action might take place. The sheriff is a political appointee, and in many cases—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Gillis: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does he realize that there are some provinces, including the one I happen to represent, where in many cases we have no organized municipalities so if the word "justice" were taken out the law would not apply there at all.

Mr. Gillis: I am not suggesting the word "justice" should be taken out, but we want to make sure he is a recognized and legitimate magistrate. There are a lot of people running around this country who are classified as justices of the peace, but who have no responsibility or any roots in any community. The services of such people might be used in reading the riot act. I would be quite prepared to leave in that word "justice" on the understanding it was someone administering justice in that particular community, and not someone imported. I certainly do not agree with the word "sheriff" or the words "deputy sheriff". In the final analysis, the responsibility should be that of the mayor or the justice in the community, as described by the Secretary of State. I believe the wording of the clause is altogether too loose just now.

The Chairman: Shall clause 68 carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

On clause 69—Preventing proclamations.

Mr. McCann: I move:

That paragraphs (b) and (c) of clause 69 be amended by deleting the word "forthwith" where it appears in lines 15 and 16 on page 25 and substituting therefor the words "within thirty minutes."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Knowles: I have a question to ask about the clause as amended. Has any consideration been given to the question of the severity of the penalty provided under this clause? As a layman it strikes me that it is a rather severe penalty, imprisonment for life for failing to disperse because some deputy sheriff read the riot act?

Mr. Garson: Yes, consideration was given to that, but the whole basis for all these provisions relating to riots is that it is in the interests of a stable society, first of all, that the riot should not take place at all. It is in the interests also of society, and of the rioters, that the riot should not continue. Those who persist in taking part in the riot are made liable to these severe penalties —although the maximum penalty is not too often imposed upon those found guilty of rioting—with the view that the riot should not continue and possibly result in some serious loss of life, limb or property. It is for that reason the penalty is, and always has been, so severe.

Mr. Knowles: I might concede, though I do not think I would even go that far, the severity of the offence under paragraph (a), concerning anyone who opposes, hinders or assaults, wilfully and with force. But when you get to paragraph (b) concerning a person who does not peaceably disperse and depart from the place, or to paragraph (c) concerning a person who does not depart from a place forthwith—that is now within thirty minutes—I believe the penalty is severe. Conceivably, a person might take thirty-one minutes to get away and he would have broken the law and be liable to imprisonment for life. Perhaps I am overstating the case by bringing up a ridiculous example, but it does seem to me, in the light of penalties that are imposed for other crimes in the code, that this one is too severe.

Mr. Garson: All I can say in relation to that is if my hon. friend will look at similar legislation in other countries, and in this country for many years, he will find the same severe penalties upon those who are called upon to disperse and who do not disperse. The grievous by-products that the riot produces are what the legislators are trying to avoid by imposing this severe penalty. My hon. friend says that it sounds ridiculous. Well, it has not been regarded as ridiculous by generations of legislators and lawmakers over the years. And I must say that, for my own part, I certainly do not regard it as a ridiculous idea. I think it is very desirable for everyone concerned that riots should be dispersed as quickly as possible.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause as amended agreed to on division.

On clause 52—Sabotage.

Mr. Garson: In connection with clause 52 I propose—

Mr. Knowles: Have you got my amendment?

Mr. Garson: Yes; there are three amendments here. The first one refers to words in paragraph (a).

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Garson: The words "the safety or interests of Canada" seemed rather broad. It is suggested that the clause would be more precise if paragraph (a) of subclause 1 of clause 52 were deleted and the following substituted therefor, "the safety, security or defence of Canada, or".

Mr. McCann: I move:

That paragraph (a) of subclause (1) of clause 52 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(a) the safety, security or defence of Canada, or"

Mr. Knowles: While the amendment offered by the minister is not exactly the one I was going to send to you, Mr. Chairman, it does meet our main objection. We certainly did not like the word "interests" in the subparagraph. As the minister pointed out when we were dealing with clause 46, the word had appeared there in an earlier draft, and even Their Honours in the other place thought it went a little too far. It had been my intention just to move for the deletion of the words "or interests". The subclause would then have read, "the safety of Canada, or". But it seems to me the words now proposed by the minister mean much the same thing. They relate to the military safety rather than what might be regarded as economic interests.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Garson: Then Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to suggest, and which I would ask my colleague to move.

Mr. McCann: I move:

That subclause (3) of clause 52 be amended by deleting the word "or" at the end of paragraph (a) and adding a comma and the word "or" at the end of paragraph (b), and by adding, immediately after paragraph (b), the following paragraph:

"(c) he stops work as a result of his taking part in a combination of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as workmen or employees."

Mr. Fulton: I take it the amendment follows the representations made by the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour, as submitted to the minister on March 2. This is the exact amendment they suggested, is it not?

Mr. Garson: Yes; all three labour congresses are in agreement, and also Mr. Crysler, representative of the Toronto board of trade.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the amendment agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to say a word in support of the amendment.

Mr. Fulton: It has been carried.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni may proceed.

Mr. Knowles: Who is using the steamroller now?

Mr. Barnett: I was not aware that it had been passed. However, I wish to rise only to say that I am very glad to support the amendment proposed now by the minister. As a matter of fact, I had prepared a draft of an amendment somewhat along the lines of that the minister has offered, although perhaps not in identical terms. I assume that the one he has offered may be more appropriate from a legal standpoint that the one I had drafted.

I did feel that the section as we have had it before did leave some very serious loopholes, in so far as the proper protection of those representing bodies of workmen or individual workmen was concerned. We all know that in the normal manner in which trade union organizations are set up there are people involved who are not employees of a particular plant. I feel that if we are going to make it clear that this section is not designed to be used other than for the protection of the legitimate rights of the workers when dealing with their employers we are taking a proper procedure. I am sure no one would quarrel with the fact that during the period of hostilities from 1939 forward the workers of Canada had a very good record in supporting the safety and interests of the country. I think it should be made perfectly clear that this clause is not designed to be used against the workers of Canada, nor against those whom they select to represent them from time to time in their discussions with employers.

I feel that if that assurance can be incorporated in the clause it offers the best possible protection our society can devise against those who may be interested in acts of sabotage during times of war or of approaching war. I know there has been a good deal of propaganda among working people to the effect that this was a clause which was going to be used against the legitimate rights of labour. I am happy to see the minister agrees so entirely that protection of the workers' rights is necessary, and has put forward this amendment.

Mr. Michener: I should like to ask the minister about the word "combination". It is an unusual word in labour legislation, and I am wondering whether it was chosen for some particular reason. I should have thought the normal word would have been "association" or "union". Is there some significance in the expression "combination of workmen"?

Mr. Garson: Yes, that is an expression used in the existing code.

Mr. Michener: Where?

Mr. Garson: I will give the hon. member the section in a moment. It is lifted bodily from the existing code; so that it is authorized by usage.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to say briefly that I had the opportunity to discuss this clause with several union groups, and I am pleased indeed the minister has seen fit to move the two amendments he has moved today. I think both of them will remove a great amount of the objection organized labour had to this clause.

Mr. Philpott: I should like to point out that all of these changes were made by the government side completely voluntarily and without any pressure whatsoever from the opposition.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member trying to stir up a riot?

Mr. MacInnis: It is amazing how quickly some people deteriorate after they come to this house. At one time I thought my hon. friend was a non-political person. As a matter of fact, I could produce columns of material that he wrote advocating the election of members of the opposition to the House of Commons as well as myself. I have a question for the minister. When the delegations from the various labour organizations were discussing this matter with him, did they discuss the deletion of certain words in lines 25 and 26 of subclause 4: "having stopped work in the circumstances set out in subsection 3."

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will allow me, I was going to move an amendment—

Mr. Fulton: Before the minister does that, and before we dispose of this clause, I do not think the absurd remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South should go without a little further answer.

Mr. MacInnis: When you know him you will let him go.

Mr. Fulton: Those who have not read the columns of the Vancouver Sun for as long as my hon. friend and I would perhaps not know of the depths of absurdity to which he can go. My hon. friend is well aware of the fact that if it had not been for the opposition all those clauses would have passed with the support of hon. members from the other side, so that the representations of organized labour would not have had any effect. One should be thankful for the fact that they were held up and allowed to stand at the request of the opposition, and that having been held up organized labour and others interested have made representations.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Fulton: I think for the purposes—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Garson: On a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Garson: On a point of order, I want to raise—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think that, in all fairness, perhaps the provocative remark which was made by the hon. member for Vancouver South was of such a nature that it would have been only fair for me to allow some reply thereto. I might point out to the committee that now there have been two replies to the one remark, and the replies have been considerably longer than the remark. I think the committee might now come back to the discussion of the amendment now before it.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, in the interests of having a good code, no matter who gets the credit for it, I move that clause—

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the desire of the committee that this amendment should be read so that they will know what it consists of? We have not yet carried the second amendment. Is the committee ready for the amendment?

Mr. Knowles: Let us hear the other one. May 4 be related to 3 (c)?

Mr. Garson: No. The amendment reads:

That subclause (4) of clause 52 be amended by deleting the words "having stopped work in the circumstances set out in subsection (3)".

That again has the approval of all the labour congresses and the board of trade of Toronto.

The Deputy Chairman: The question is on the second amendment, which deals with adding clause (c) to subparagraph 3. Shall the second amendment carry?

Mr. Herridge: Would you mind reading it again? It is quite difficult to get the whole implications in an amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: The amendment that is now before the committee is:

That subclause (3) of clause 52 be amended by deleting the word "or" at the end of paragraph (a) and adding a comma and the word "or" at the end of paragraph (b), and by adding, immediately after paragraph (b), the following paragraph:

"(c) he stops work as a result of his taking part in a combination of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as workmen or employees."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. McCann: I move:

That subclause (4) of clause 52 be amended by deleting the words "having stopped work in the circumstances set out in subsection (3)" where they appear in lines 25 and 26 on page 21.

Mr. Fulton: I appreciate the fact that these amendments have been requested by the three main trade union organizations and apparently approved by one of the boards of trade in the country; but in the brief submitted on March 27, while the changes were suggested, I cannot see any arguments in support of them, and I must say I am at a loss to know why it is felt that these words should be deleted. As I look at the clause as it now stands, even with the amendments that have been adopted so far, it seems to me that these words are appropriate and are not unduly restrictive. I will not go any further and express my final opinion on it, but I should like to know what arguments were advanced in support of deleting these words.

Mr. Garson: Because the stoppage of work of that sort has no particular relevancy to the crime of sabotage.

Mr. Knowles: Does it not also have this effect, that with the words in there, which the amendment now proposes to take out, the saving effect of the clause was limited to the persons who had actually stopped work at the plant in question; whereas now it is possible for others than those actually on strike from a particular plant to be part of the picket line. Is not that the effect?

Mr. Garson: Yes, of attending for the purpose of obtaining or communicating information.

Mr. Knowles: That phrase the minister has just read is the legal way of describing a picket line. I think I have correctly stated what the effect of the amendment is that the minister moved. Certainly it was our intention to move an amendment to have that effect. I believe the minister has achieved it.

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause, as amended, carry?

Mr. Barnett: I take it that the minister has no further amendment to propose in connection with this clause?

Mr. Garson: No; is my hon. friend opposing the last one?

Mr. Barnett: No. I have one which I feel covers a point which has not yet been covered. I would like to move:

That clause 52 of Bill No. 7 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(5) No person does a prohibited act within the meaning of this section by reason only that, having information communicated to him, as provided in subsection (4), he refuses to do, or to continue to do, any act pertaining to his employment."

I do feel, Mr. Chairman, that if this clause is to be clear and not involve those engaged in legitimate trade union disputes, in addition to the amendment which the minister has proposed it should be made clear that, to put it in ordinary words, a member of another union who respects a picket line or recognizes certain information with respect to it, which has been communicated to him, is not committing sabotage simply because he recognizes the existence of that picket line and may refuse to do certain acts as a result of the information that has been communicated to him. If this is not in the clause I can conceive of a situation where the people responsible for the closing down of a plant might be completely immune from any possible charge of sabotage, and yet someone who was not nearly as directly involved might become subject to such a charge.

Mr. Garson: May I ask my hon. friend a question? What would be covered by the amendment my hon. friend has moved that would not be covered by the amendment, paragraph (c), passed a few moments ago?

Mr. Barnett: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I may in turn ask a question of the minister. Is his understanding of this paragraph (c), the amendment which was moved a few moments ago, such that he believes the wording of it will cover those who may not be immediately involved in the operations of a plant which has been closed down, or those who may be connected as union officials?

Mr. Garson: My trouble, Mr. Chairman, is that I am not too sure what my hon. friend is trying to cover. We have already covered quite a large area in this paragraph (c). If my hon. friend is urging another amendment then I think we should not pass it unless he can show there is an area left which this other amendment of his will cover, because the amendment we have suggested here is the product of very long and careful discussion with the three congresses and with the legal experts of the Toronto board of trade. In a matter of this kind it is easy to make a legislative blunder, and I would be disinclined to accept his amendment unless he can demonstrate it legitimately covers something which is not covered by the amendment passed a few moments ago.

The Chairman: Perhaps I should read the amendment moved by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni:

That clause 52 of Bill No. 7 be amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(5) No person does a prohibited act within the meaning of this section by reason only that, having information communicated to him, as provided in subsection (4), he refuses to do, or to continue to do, any act pertaining to his employment."

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, first of all, as I believe I mentioned earlier, I gave some consideration to what seemed to me to be weaknesses in this clause. The series of amendments which I have drafted, as I explained, are not worded in the same manner as the amendment which the minister introduced, and the amendment which I have just moved was based upon the wording of other amendments which I have not moved because the minister introduced his amendment. I must say I have not been able to satisfy myself that the point I have in mind is completely covered by the wording of the amendment which the minister introduced, and I am wondering whether it might be possible to allow this clause to stand for the present—

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is reasonable. This bill has been in process now for some five years and I have told my hon. friend that the amendments we have brought in this afternoon have been reached after long and careful discussion with those who should know and who should be well posted in these matters. After hearing the views of both sides we have been able to meet the suggestions they made. I would be strongly disinclined to accept the amendment moved by my hon. friend because I am not sure what the results of it would be upon the amendments we have already passed, and unless he can tell us what the results would be I do not think we should accept his amendment.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I believe I can state the purpose of my amendment in very few words. Its purpose is to protect a worker from the possibility of having a charge of sabotage laid against him because he refused to cross a picket line. In ordinary phraseology that is the purpose of the amendment which I moved because I felt that under the wording of the previous clause no such protection was offered. If the minister could assure me that in his understanding paragraph (c) covers that situation, and if he is satisfied that that factor was given adequate consideration when this subclause was drafted, then I will not be too concerned about the present amendment. But I would like to feel satisfied on that point.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, with all the good will in the world it is not my function to explain to my hon. friend what the result of his amendment would be, nor is it my function to explain to him what in his amendment is covered by what has already been passed. Perhaps he has not my amendment before him which reads:

(c) he stops work as a result of his taking part in a combination of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as workmen or employees.

My hon. friend will have to answer his own question as to whether "he stops work" includes the crossing of a picket line.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, may I make this suggestion? I take it the minister is not prepared to consider the request that the clause be allowed to stand. Perhaps the amendment can be defeated without prejudice to my colleague's right to bring it in again, or it could be withdrawn on the understanding that if the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, after considering the matter further and perhaps discussing it with the minister privately, wishes to bring it in again at a later sitting then the minister might consider this clause being reopened.

Mr. Garson: I do not want to be unreasonable but I am not prepared to give that undertaking because we have tried to be fair to the people who are primarily concerned, the employers on the one hand and the congresses on the other. We have reached a wording which is satisfactory and I believe that unless a better case can be made than the hon. member has made thus far for his amendment we should not further tinker with the wording we have now.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I was not asking the minister to give an undertaking that he would agree to the amendment tomorrow when he is not prepared to agree to it now. I was merely asking that he give an undertaking that if the hon. member for Comox-Alberni was able to persuade the minister that the point should be considered that he would not be unwilling to have the point reopened at some future sitting. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to study the wording of the amendment passed a few moments ago in order to see whether the point the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has in mind is covered and I am not sure that it is covered. As I understand it, the point he is concerned about is a situation where one union is on strike and has a picket line and there is another group of men who may be working on the other side of that picket line and who are not on strike, but where some members of the union which is not on strike do not wish to cross the picket line of the other union. I may not have described too precisely the point the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has in mind but I am suggesting that the minister agree to discuss the matter privately with the hon. member and if they agree the clause might be reopened at some future sitting.

Mr. Garson: I think I would rather that the question be voted on now, because I do not want to disturb the section we have at the present time. We have gone to a great deal of trouble in getting to it and I do not think we should disturb it.

Mr. Knowles: All right; call the vote.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 10; nays, 52.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

The Chairman: Carried on division.

Clause as amended agreed to on division.

On clause 372—Mischief.

Mr. Fulton: I understand that the minister has an amendment.

Mr. Garson: Yes; I have an amendment. The amendment would be as follows:

That subclause (6) of clause 372 be amended by deleting the word "or" at the end of paragraph (a) and inserting a comma and the word "or" at the end of paragraph (b), and by adding, immediately after paragraph (b), the following paragraph:

"(c) he stops work as a result of his taking part in a combination of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as workmen or employees."

That is the same subclause that was moved a moment ago in connection with clause 52. That clause dealt with sabotage. This clause deals with mischief. I would ask my colleague the Minister of Fisheries to move the amendment.

Mr. Sinclair: I so move.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Fulton: I take it that the minister intends to bring in the same amendment to subsection 7 as that which he brought in in connection with subsection 4 of section 52?

Mr. Garson: Yes; I intend to do that.

Mr. Fulton: In that case I will not say anything at this stage until after the two amendments have been disposed of; but I would not want our silence on this point to be taken as indicating that we approve of the section as a whole. I think that these amendments will improve it. I am therefore prepared to see them go through, and will make my remarks after they have been dealt with.

Mr. Garson: Perhaps I had better indicate the other amendment now so that everyone will know what it is he is voting on. The amendment reads as follows:

That subclause (7) of clause 372 be amended by deleting the words "having stopped work in the circumstances set out in subsection (6)" where they appear in lines 16 and 17 on page 126.

These amendments also have the approval of the three congresses and the Toronto board of trade. I would ask my colleague the Minister of Fisheries to move this amendment.

Mr. Sinclair: I so move.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles: As the hon. member for Kamloops has pointed out, may I just say that although there are some fundamental aspects of this whole clause that we dislike, nevertheless both of these amendments make slight improvements. Without prejudice to our opposition to the clause as a whole, we support the two amendments.

The Chairman: Shall these amendments carry?

Amendments agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 372 as amended carry?

Mr. Fulton: No, Mr. Chairman. On clause 372 as now amended, may I say this: From looking at the explanatory notes on the right-hand page, it is obvious that this clause is a consolidation of fifteen separate clauses in the code as it now stands. It must be admitted that the job of the commission which first sat on this thing was to do the work of consolidation; but here I think they have bitten off rather more than any commission, however expert, could chew. The widely varied types of offences covered in those original fifteen clauses, with the widely different penalties prescribed for each different clause, were such that it is impossible to consolidate all these matters and cover them adequately in one section without getting a sort of porridge; and that is what we have here. May I say that it is not a very tasty porridge either; they have left out the salt. It is rather bad legislation.

I made some notes on a comparison of what is now in one section with what was previously in the previous sections. Section 96 prescribed a penalty of life imprisonment. Perhaps I should first have said that the main objection, in view of the fact that here you have a whole vast field of offences consolidated into one section, is that the penalties, since they have to be commensurate with the most serious of those offences, have therefore to contemplate life imprisonment. This section covers anything from life imprisonment down to imprisonment for a term of five years. The fact is that the wide variety of offences covered is such that, in my opinion, it is not capable of being dealt with in that way by a sort of broad general scope of penalties of that kind. The result is that some things which previously carried only minor penalties may now carry penalties of five years or even fourteen years. That is the sort of result you are bound to get when you make such a hodge-podge clause as is found here.

The meaning of these remarks will be clearer, I think, if we take a look at what was done by the old sections which are now consolidated. Under section 96 it is true there was a penalty of life imprisonment, but the act had to be a riotous or tumultuous assembly. There had to be riotous destruction of property before you would get life imprisonment. Then again in section 97 it is true there was a maximum penalty of seven years. But again there had to be riotous damage of property. There was a real offence there. It was not damage done accidentally. There had to be an element of riot, and in the first place, as I have pointed out, there had to be actual obstruction.

The next section is 238 (h), which was one of the subsections covering the offence of vagrancy in the old code, and the only penalty for it was one imposed by means of summary conviction, being a maximum of $50 or six months, or both. Under the clause in the bill you have the possibility of five years imprisonment or fourteen years or even imprisonment for life. The old section, where the maximum was $50 or six months, is now included in a section where the maximum is five years.

Then we come to section 510 in the old code. It is true that the penalty there was imprisonment for life, but there had to be danger to life, and the types of offences covered by that section were spelled out in four specific subsections, each defining a specific offence with great particularity, none of which is present in this general porridge of a section that we now have before us.

Under another subsection of section 510 it was possible that a person could get a term of imprisonment for fourteen years, but this penalty only followed if there had been substantial damage to substantial property creating danger, such things as interfering with or removing or destroying navigation marks, thus endangering the safety of vessels and the lives of those aboard them. Again, this type of specific offence and the specific penalty provided were carefully and fully spelled out in two subsections.

Then there was a further subsection providing a penalty of seven years, but again for substantial damage, and here with the greatest particularity the types of offences were spelled out in ten further separate subsections of old section 510. Then there was another class of offence which might carry a penalty of five years. These were spelled out again with great particularity in five subsections, and then there was one general subsection at the end of 510 providing a maximum of two years for all other cases of damage to property.

Section 516B of the old code again was a specific offence carefully defined and with a maximum penalty of one year and/or a fine of $500 provided. Here again we have the maximum penalty raised from one year to a possibility of five years.

Taking section 517 of the old code, there is a possible penalty of five years in the case of a person who causes danger to valuable property, or life imprisonment in the case of a person causing such danger with intent. But again six specific offences are spelled out in six specific subsections. Section 518 admittedly was only one section creating a specific offence. Section 519 contained two specific and clearly defined offences in two subsections. Section 520 had five subsections and section 521 two subsections.

Mr. Garson: Will the hon. member permit a question? What advantages does my hon. friend claim for all this specification of a number of detailed offences?

Mr. Fulton: I will come to that when I have finished making the comparison between what was contained in the old code and what we have in the bill. Section 522 of the old code contained three separate and clearly defined offences in three subsections. Sections 533, 534 and 535 had one section each.

We now have in clause 372 of the bill an attempt to consolidate the law contained in fifteen separate sections, those fifteen separate sections in turn containing forty-seven separate provisions by way of subsections or subsubsections. The importance of that is that here you are dealing with a great variety of types of damage to property constituting an offence against criminal law. Under the code as it now exists it was felt that different types of damage, carrying with them different degrees, if you like, or irresponsibility, should carry different degrees of penalty, and that not only, therefore, should the offence itself and the property with respect to which it was committed be defined and spelled out carefully and clearly but the penalty for that particular action should also be spelled out distinctly, with a separate penalty for each separate offence.

Mr. Garson: The maximum penalty in each case.

Mr. Fulton: No. In some cases it was a specific penalty without any alternative. In many of these cases the penalties were very much less than the possible penalties provided here. As I have said, in one case the only penalty that could be imposed was six months or a fine of $50 as a maximum. Here there is in every case at least the possibility of five years imprisonment. As I see it, it just is not sound law because, notwithstanding what the minister has said on other occasions, it is our view of the criminal law that it is not necessarily poor legislation to have a number of subsections or a considerable number of words defining an offence. In fact we believe the soundest approach is to spell out each particular offence and provide for that offence a particular penalty. It is an important and undisputed maxim of the law that ignorance is no excuse and it is only fair to provide for all our people the opportunity of knowing that if they follow a certain course of action they will incur a certain penalty and not leave a penalty of a vague and undetermined nature so that a certain course of action in one province may result in one penalty to a certain party and in another province exactly the same course of action may result in a penalty very much less severe. Indeed, not only in different provinces may that difference arise but in different judicial districts.

That does not seem to me to be a sound basis upon which to set out your criminal law. It is for these reasons that we are opposed to this section. It will be obvious to the committee that a section consolidating fifteen old sections and forty-seven separate subsections is not capable of intelligent amendment here to meet the objections which we have in mind. Otherwise I would have drafted such an amendment. But it seems to me that the only thing that it is feasible to do is to go back to the old fifteen previous sections. We cannot achieve that by any amendment that I can draft. Therefore our only course is to oppose the section which, if we were successful, would have the effect of having it deleted and thus forcing the government to re-enact the fifteen former sections. That is the course we propose to follow.

Clause stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacInnis: I wonder whether we can be told what will be the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Garson: We will go on with the code. When that has been finished we will take estimates in the following order: public works, northern affairs and national resources, national defence and fisheries.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, April 8, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David A. Croll (Spadina) presented the sixth report of the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the intention of the hon. member to move concurrence in this report this day?

Mr. Croll: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the deputy clerk dispense with the reading of this report? It appears to be a rather lengthy one.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONTINENTAL DEFENCE

JOINT ANNOUNCEMENT BY CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have here a joint announcement by the governments of Canada and the United States with regard to continental defence. If I might have the permission of the house to do so, I would ask leave to table it and would ask that it be printed as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings, as I understand has been the practice in the past.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

ADULTERATED BUTTER

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): The day before yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre inquired about a return which was passed on March 3. The first part of this return made the following request:

Have any persons or companies been prosecuted, at any time since July 1, 1952, on charges of mixing butter with margarine?

The correct answer to that question would be no, but the government feels that it would be misleading to give that answer. I have spoken to the hon. member and if the house would agree to having the order amended to read "with vegetable oils" instead of "with margarine", a return could probably be made on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Knowles: I would not want to split hairs over a pound of butter, Mr. Speaker. I am sure we will agree.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT SUBSTITUTING "SWIFT CURRENT-MAPLE CREEK" FOR "SWIFT CURRENT"

Mr. J. H. Harrison (for Mr. Studer) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 420, to amend the Representation Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Harrison: I think the explanation is to be found right in the bill itself.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I hear some hon. members say "no".

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should say a word in explanation. The hon. member who is sponsoring this bill spoke to me about it. It is to correct an error that was made in connection with the revised statutes with regard to the name of the constituency of Swift Current-Maple Creek. The name was changed at the last session but only for the statute itself and not in the revised statutes. It is simply a correction of an omission.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE— FURTHER DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Fulton:

In connection with the dominion-provincial constitutional conference:

1. Since the conference last met in 1950, have any invitations been issued by the dominion government or by the chairman of the continuing committee to the provincial governments or any of them, or to their representatives thereon, to hold further discussions of any nature?

2. If so, to whom and with what result?

3. Have there been received any suggestions or expressions of opinion, formal or informal, from any of the provincial governments or their representatives either (a) that it would not be profitable to hold further discussions of any sort; or (b) to any other effect?

4. If so, from which governments and to what effect?

Mr. Garson:

1. No.

2. See answer to No. 1.

3. Yes.

4. Inquiry from the premier of Alberta in July, 1951, and from the premier of Saskatchewan in August, 1951, as to possible reconvening of federal-provincial conference on constitutional amendment.

C.B.C.—MOTOR VEHICLES

Mr. Thatcher:

1. How many motor vehicles are owned by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation?

2. What mileage did these vehicles register in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1953?

3. In the same period, what was their total cost of operation?

4. Are any employees of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation permitted to use these vehicles for personal reasons?

5. If so, what system is used to recover operating costs, including depreciation, in such cases?

6. Are any employees of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation permitted to take corporation-owned vehicles home at night?

Mr. McCann:

1. Twenty six.

2. 163,501 miles.

3. $11,182.63.

4. No.

5. See answer to No. 4.

6. Only with specific permission on special late night or early morning assignments.

NATO—TRAINEES FROM OUTSIDE CANADA

Mr. Knowles:

1. Since the establishment of NATO, how many persons from countries other than Canada have received or are now receiving training in Canada under the provisions of any NATO agreements or arrangements?

2. From what countries have such persons come, how many in each case, and how many in each year, since the establishment of NATO?

3. What is the total amount spent to date for the training of such persons, including transportation, maintenance or any other costs met by Canada?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. Since the establishment of NATO to the end of February, 1954, 2,682 aircrew from countries other than Canada have been trained; 950 are at present training under the NATO air training plan.

2. (a) Numbers trained by country and year to February 28, 1954:

	England	Belgium	France	Italy	Holland	Norway	Denmark	Total
1951	74	14	44	17	8	15	....	172
1952	884	55	147	18	6	2	11	1,123
1953	875	32	305	1	19	....	22	1,254
1954	108	....	16	....	1	....	8	133
	1,941	101	512	36	34	17	41	2,682

2. (b)

Numbers in training by country as at February 28, 1954:

England	412
Belgium	6
France	332
Italy	39
Holland	53
Norway	26
Denmark	39
Portugal	25
Turkey	18
	950

3. It is estimated that expenditures of the NATO air training plan totalled $228,179,898 as at March 31, 1954.

[Mr. Fulton.]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—CONTINUING COMMITTEE

Mr. Fulton:

1. Did the dominion-provincial constitutional conference, prior to its adjournment in 1950, appoint a continuing committee of provincial attorneys general and the dominion justice minister?

2. Was the Minister of Justice to be chairman of that committee and was that appointment or arrangement ever revoked?

3. Has this committee ever been dissolved?

4. How many meetings has it held since 1950?

Mr. Garson:

1. Yes.

2. Yes. The Minister of Justice was appointed chairman of the committee and the appointment has not been revoked.

3. No.

4. None.

C.N.R.—EXTRA CONSTRUCTION GANGS

Mr. Leboe:

1. Does the Canadian National Railways contract with construction companies or any person or persons for the supervision of extra gangs?
2. If so, are tenders called for?
3. On what basis are they paid for this service?
4. Are dining facilities under this supervision? If so, what is paid for this supervision?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): The Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Supervision of all extra gangs is by qualified railway employees.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Supervision of dining facilities is by qualified railway employees.

ARMED FORCES—TOTAL STRENGTH

Mr. Jones:

1. What was the total strength of Canada's armed forces on April 1, 1954?
2. What was the number recruited in the months of January, February and March?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. Strength figures for March will not be available until the middle of April. Strength of Canadian armed forces on February 28, 1954, was 111,197.

2. January, 2,911; February, 3,155.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

GOVERNMENT MEAT PURCHASES

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. What were the quantities, value and grade of meat products purchased by (a) Department of National Defence; (b) other government departments, in each of the years 1952 and 1953, and each of the months January and February, 1954?
2. From whom were the purchases made, indicating quantity and price?
3. Were all purchases by tender and if not, indicate purchases other than by tender?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman would consent to having this question read "meat" instead of "meat products" it would facilitate the answer. There might be meat products which had very little meat in them.

Mr. Knowles: Like pork and beans.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is another point that perhaps ought to be made.

It is assumed it is not intended to include meat bought by the agricultural prices support board during the foot-and-mouth disease emergency. With these amendments, it can be an order for return.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

STATEMENT ON CRASH AT MOOSE JAW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Trade and Commerce give the house any information concerning the tragic accident involving Trans-Canada Air Lines this morning?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am very sorry indeed to have to report to the house that a Trans-Canada Air Lines plane westbound from Winnipeg to Calgary was in collision with a Harvard trainer over Moose Jaw an hour or two ago. Both planes crashed and all occupants of both planes were killed. The report I have from Winnipeg indicates that there were 26 revenue passengers on the North Star, although another report from Winnipeg indicates 30 passengers. In addition, there were five personnel of T.C.A. and the aeroplane crew of four. I am told there were two persons in the Harvard trainer. One plane fell on a house in the outskirts of Moose Jaw and I believe the house was burned. I have not been able to ascertain whether there were any ground casualties. The other plane fell on the golf club. That is all the information I have at the moment. It is more tragic since I believe this is only the third fatal accident on T.C.A. since 1937.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EMPLOYMENT OF CANADIANS ON PIPE LINE FROM HAINES TO FAIRBANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): I should like to address the following question to the Minister of Labour. What steps is the government taking to ensure the maximum number of jobs for Canadians on the pipe line from Haines to Fairbanks, Alaska, which crosses through 265 miles of Canadian territory?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question. A number of other members from British Columbia have asked me about this matter in private correspondence, so perhaps I might answer them all. The pipe line in question will commence at Haines, Alaska, and end at Fairbanks, and will cut through approximately 265 miles of Canadian territory. The Marwell Construction Company apparently will construct the pumping stations and Williams Brothers of Butte, Montana, will lay the pipe line.

Inquiries of the Ministry

At the present time the right of way is being cleared and, as far as Canadian territory is concerned, two contractors from Whitehorse are now engaged, and local labour is being employed. Welding processes in the pipeline construction will be done by skilled men from the United States and all other employees on the Canadian part of the project will be Canadians. We have an arrangement with the department of immigration not to permit the entry into Canada, for purposes of the project, of any people other than key personnel. Our British Columbia regional office officials are watching the matter and will see that whatever employment opportunities there are will be filled by Canadians. I understand that bunkhouses will shortly be constructed at four sites, two in the Yukon and two in Alaska. There again Canadian workmen will be employed in the Yukon area.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): What reasons have been given for employing American welders on that job rather than Canadian welders? We have many competent welders in British Columbia who passed a specific examination for that type of work when the Trans Mountain pipe line was being constructed.

Mr. Gregg: I feel that on the whole the arrangement that has been worked out with the contractors by the regional unemployment office in British Columbia is a very equitable one indeed, and since both terminals of the pipe line are in United States territory I think the fact that a few welders are to be used in the Canadian section is not unfair.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

HALIFAX—COMPLETION OF PLANS AND CALLING FOR TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. R. Balcom (Halifax): May I inquire of the Minister of Public Works regarding the present status of the proposed public building in Halifax? Are the plans completed, and when will tenders be called?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The plans are nearing completion and we expect to be able to call for tenders by the 15th of June.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO BUILDINGS IN PETERBOROUGH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce under whose department Crown Assets Disposal Corporation is administered. Has the government sold the old stone customs house building at the corner of George and Charlotte streets in Peterborough? If so, to whom was it sold?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have made inquiries of Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. I am told that this building has not been declared surplus, and it was the opinion of the officer with whom I discussed the matter that it is not likely to be declared surplus.

[Later:]

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Since the minister mentioned that the building in Peterborough is not likely to be sold, can he tell us what department of government is going to use it?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I did not understand the last part of the question.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): If the building is not going to be sold by the government, then some department is going to occupy it when the new federal building is completed?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): I would assume the Department of Public Works has a purpose for the building which is of sufficient importance to lead to the conclusion that the government should retain it.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works the question, then. Can he say what use will be made of the old customs house building?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): May I take that question as notice?

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): In checking on that, will the minister also check on the old post office building in Peterborough?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDO-CHINA—UNITED STATES PROPOSAL TO ISSUE WARNING TO GOVERNMENT OF CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What is the position of the Canadian government with reference to the proposal of President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles that certain western nations should join together in issuing a warning to the government of China with respect to Indo-China and armed participation in the hostilities there? What communications has the Canadian government received or sent on this subject?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have not been invited to join in any such warning, and we are making inquiries in Washington in order to ascertain, if possible, the nature of any proposal that the United States may have in this regard.

REPORTED ATTEMPTS TO SELL RED CHINA BONDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister have an investigation made in Vancouver with respect to whether attempts are being made there to sell red China government bonds to Canadians of Chinese origin and, if so, whether threats of retaliation against relatives in China are being made in connection with attempts to sell the bonds?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I will be glad to look into the matter. Meanwhile, if the hon. member has any information concerning this matter I would be grateful if he would make it available to us.

Mr. Green: I have a press report here which I would be glad to give the minister.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INVESTIGATION BY COMMISSION CONCERNING LOST TIME

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I should like to refer to the question raised by the hon. member for Ontario on April 1 and a similar question asked by the hon. member for Oxford on March 24, the answer to which appears at page 3322 of Hansard of March 25. I have not yet received any final report from the commission on this point.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I should like to answer the question asked yesterday in my absence by the hon. member for Hamilton West. It is to be found at page 3855 of Hansard and reads as follows:

> I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour or whoever is acting for him. Will the acting minister say whether consideration is being given by the unemployment insurance commission to the extension of the period for the payment of supplementary benefits beyond April 15?

The government is not considering any action at this time to alter the date fixed by parliament two years ago for the termination of these special seasonal benefits.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour supplementary to the one he answered a moment ago in reply to the hon. member for Hamilton West? Can the minister answer the question, notice of which I sent him yesterday, arising out of a report in yesterday's Montreal Gazette concerning 6,000 unemployed persons in Montreal whose supplementary unemployment insurance benefits will expire on April 15? Can the minister say how many persons there are in that same position, by provinces?

Mr. Gregg: The number of persons who were paid supplementary benefits during the last week of March, 1954, which is the last week on record, is as follows:

Area	Number
Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia	9,816
Quebec	26,334
Ontario (east of lakehead)	19,034
Western Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta	11,561
British Columbia	8,249
	74,994

The house will note, of course, that these totals correspond with the five regional administrative areas of the commission. The same information is not yet available broken down by provinces. No information is available as to the number included in the above who will exhaust their supplementary benefits between April 3 and April 15, and the number who will be paid up to and including April 15. It should be pointed out that, as benefits are paid in arrears, those who have entitlement up to April 15 will receive their last week's benefit during the week ending April 24.

With regard to the city of Montreal, there were 6,168 persons paid supplementary benefits during the last week in March. The port of Montreal is now open and a construction program is getting under way, so we feel sure that these activities will absorb a substantial number of workers.

Mr. Knowles: Is it understood, then, that those persons, totalling nearly 75,000, will all be without any unemployment insurance benefit after April 15 or after April 24?

Mr. Gregg: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if they are up to then in receipt of supplementary benefits.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles: Is that not something the government should do something about?

FERRY SERVICE

NORTH SYDNEY-PORT AUX BASQUES—COMMENCEMENT OF OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Buchanan (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I wish to inquire as to when the new ferry to run between North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, will commence its scheduled run?

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): I received no previous notice of this question. As my hon. friend knows, this ship is being built at the present time, and I will ascertain the date when it is due to commence its scheduled sailings and report to the house later.

POTATOES

REQUEST THAT SEASONAL DUTY DATE BE ADVANCED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. G. J. Hahn (New Westminster): Would the Minister of National Revenue consider moving the seasonal duty date on United States potatoes forward from June 15 to June 1, with the present six-week protective period still to apply, and so give the early potato growers protection by having the markets cleared of the vast quantities of United States potatoes that get to our market by beating the present tariff date deadline?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question. The answer is that this date cannot be changed because it is in the statute and is item 83 of the Customs Tariff. It is bound by GATT and could only be changed by international agreement and by subsequent amendment to the statute.

BRIDGES

BURLINGTON CANAL—PROPORTION OF COST TO BE PAID BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. E. Reinke (Hamilton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister say whether the federal government has decided to share with the Ontario government the cost of the proposed highway bridge over the Burlington canal? If so, can he say what the total cost will be and to what extent the federal government will participate?

[Mr. Gregg.]

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario government has not yet submitted detailed plans or estimates of cost. We have, however, been told that on the basis of preliminary estimates the proposed high level bridge will cost approximately $13,300,000.

This problem is primarily one of facilitating highway traffic, but since the canal over which the bridge is to be built is a federal structure we have informed the Ontario government we are prepared to participate up to one-third of the cost of the bridge, on the understanding that Ontario will assume full responsibility for highway traffic over the canal, thereby enabling the federal government, in the interests of navigation, to remove the low level bridge it maintains at the present time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PALMERSTON-SOUTHAMPTON BRANCH LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Huron): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport or in his absence to his parliamentary assistant. Is he in a position to make a statement concerning the rumoured intention of the Canadian National Railways, as published in the press, to make changes in the Palmerston-Southampton branch line, and if so what are these changes?

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): In the absence of the minister on official business, may I say that I received a copy of this question shortly before the lunch hour. I have been unable to obtain the necessary information from the management of the railway company, so I am taking this question as notice.

CRIMINAL CODE

REVISION AND AMENDMENT OF EXISTING STATUTE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 7, consideration in committee of Bill No. 7, respecting the criminal law—Mr. Garson—Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose yesterday we were discussing clause 372.

On clause 372—Destruction or damage.

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to say a few words in connection with this clause. I listened rather attentively to the hon. member for Kamloops when he spoke on this clause just before the adjournment yesterday afternoon. In his criticism of this clause the hon. member made approximately the same criticism as was made by the delegation from the Canadian Congress of Labour in the brief they submitted to the parliamentary committee at the last session.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway has a very fine voice, but he cannot possibly compete with all the other members of the committee. I must ask other members to maintain silence while the hon. member is speaking.

Mr. MacInnis: I thank you for those kind words. I have often heard my voice described as loud, but never before as fine. I am not suggesting the hon. member for Kamloops is not capable of making his own analysis, but I was interested to note how closely it paralleled some of the criticisms made by the Canadian Congress of Labour.

Mr. Fulton: The criticisms were probably prepared by another good lawyer.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not believe they were. They might have had a lawyer's advice, but the criticisms were prepared by a professor, I believe. The submission made by the Canadian Congress of Labour last year to the parliamentary committee, one which I believe might be considered the best submission made to that committee, covered six pages of printed matter. The importance which they gave to section 372 is indicated by the fact that more than two of the six pages are given over to an analysis and criticism of this clause in the new bill. Perhaps I could not do better than quote briefly from the submission to show what the Canadian Congress of Labour thinks about what has been done to the sections dealing with mischief. They say:

> Section 372 (mischief)
>
> This is appropriately named: it is one of the most mischievous sections of the whole bill. With section 373 (which limits the scope of 372 in cases where actual danger to life is not involved, or where the destruction of, or damage to, property is not more than fifty dollars), it purports to consolidate or condense no less than sixteen sections and part of a seventeenth in the present code, many of them long and elaborate. All the present sections are specific; the new section 372 is general and sweeping, vague and ambiguous. In the attempt to cover a multitude of sins in a few lines, the drafters have exposed the individual to impossible hazards.

That criticism is well merited in this instance. Then, later in the submission they say:

> When parliament intends to make certain conduct punishable, and a fortiori when it imposes heavy penalties, it should state clearly and specifically which acts or omissions involve criminality.

This, they insist, is not done in the present clause. And, to quote again:

> The attempt to condense over 250 lines of the present code, covering well over fifty distinct and widely differing offences, with a great variety of penalties, into 44 lines and seven blanket offences, with four different penalties, is bound to mean the use of general and vague language which can only lead to abuse of parliament's intention.

Their concluding paragraph is brief and to the point:

> This whole section 372 is vicious, and should be dropped. The sections of the present code which it purports to replace may need some amendment, notably in respect to penalties, but their general effect is satisfactory, and, subject to necessary amendments, they should be retained.

I presume that in revising and consolidating the Criminal Code the purpose was to bring it more into accord with conditions in this country as we have them today. I do not believe it was the intention, or that it should have been the intention, to replace clarity with obscurity. That is what is done in the clause now before us.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: On division.

Mr. MacInnis: No.

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause as amended agreed to on division.

On clause 373—Damage not more than fifty dollars.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Fulton: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

On clause 365—Criminal breach of contract.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the minister would describe the general effect of the amendments before he moves them—that is, if there are more than one.

Mr. Garson: I think the wording of the amendment will be self-explanatory. However, if a further explanation is required, I shall give it.

Mr. Fulton: Is there only one?

Mr. Garson: Yes, just one.

Mr. Fulton: I thought probably there would be two.

Mr. Garson: If hon. members will look at clause 365, and follow the amendment I am about to offer, I think it will be easier for them to understand what the amendment does. The amendment is—

> That subclause (2) of clause 365 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

Then, in subclause 2, paragraphs (a) and (b) will be the same; but instead of the last three lines—

—if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law have been taken through negotiation, collective bargaining, conciliation and arbitration—

The following words will be substituted:

—if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law with respect to the settlement of industrial disputes are taken and any provision for the final settlement of differences, without stoppage of work, contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement is complied with and effect given thereto.

I would ask my colleague the Minister of Public Works to move this.

Mr. Winters: I move:

That subclause (2) of clause 365 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) No person wilfully breaks a contract within the meaning of subsection (1) by reason only that

(a) being the employee of an employer, he stops work as a result of the failure of his employer and himself to agree upon any matter relating to his employment, or,

(b) being a member of an organization of employees formed for the purpose of regulating relations between employers and employees, he stops work as a result of the failure of the employer and a bargaining agent acting on behalf of the organization to agree upon any matter relating to the employment of members of the organization,

if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law with respect to the settlement of industrial disputes are taken and any provision for the final settlement of differences, without stoppage of work, contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement is complied with and effect given thereto.

Mr. Fulton: I am not very happy about this amendment, in so far as it might be an attempt to meet the well-reasoned opinions of some of the labour organizations. That is to say, I do not think that it does meet their objectives in full. If the minister would tell us whether this has been worked out and agreed upon as being fully satisfactory to the labour organizations it might help us to clear our thinking. As I see it, however, I would be inclined to think that it would not be satisfactory.

Mr. Garson: Perhaps I had better state the position of the various labour congresses. The Trades and Labour Congress are wholly in favour of the amendment. The Canadian Congress of Labour's position I think I shall state by reading a letter from the secretary-treasurer to myself, dated at Ottawa, April 5, 1954. It reads as follows:

Pursuant to the meeting which was held in your office last Friday, April 2, I wish to advise that the Canadian Congress of Labour has given careful consideration to the provisions of section 365 as it appears in Bill No. 7. You have provided us with a redraft of subsection 2 of section 365—

[Mr. Garson.]

That is a redraft of subsection 2 that has been moved in amendment. I continue:

—and you have also provided us with what purports to be a redraft of section 521 of the Criminal Code of 1892, as it existed prior to the revision of 1906.

Perhaps I may interject there the significance of that sentence. Is my hon. friend aware what happened there?

Mr. Fulton: Yes.

Mr. Garson: All right, I will go on:

You have asked me to indicate the wishes of the Canadian Congress of Labour in order of preference.

The reason we asked for the wishes in the order of preference was this: We were trying to get a clause in respect of which the maximum amount of agreement amongst the labour congresses might be achieved. And inasmuch as there was no agreement on the clauses we asked for an order of preference so that we might make an effort to meet that order of preference, if it were possible to do so. I go on with the quotation from the letter:

The position of the Canadian Congress of Labour in our order of preference is as follows:

(1) There should not be any legislation pertaining to a criminal breach of contract. The reasons for this position have already been advanced to you.

(2) If there must be such legislation, then we would suggest the implementation of section 365 as it presently appears in Bill 7 without the saving clause which appears at the end of subsection 2, commencing with the words: "if, before the stoppage of work occurs—"

(3) If the government persists in having such a saving clause as aforesaid, then the Canadian Congress of Labour would suggest implementation of section 365 as it appears in Bill 7 or as worded in the redraft supplied to me on Friday.

That is the redraft that has been moved in amendment just a moment ago.

(4) The Canadian Congress of Labour sees no merit in reintroducing the old section 521.

The Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour agrees with the Canadian Congress of Labour with regard to suggestions (1) and (2) and expresses no opinion with regard to (3) and (4).

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, it is not easy, when we are faced with an amendment on short notice, as we are here, and are told that the congresses have given it even the rather cautious approval they have, to enter into an argument in detail, but I still have reservations with regard to this change which, as it appears from the text of the amendment, affects only the last three lines of the saving clause. The reason I have these reservations is that it must be admitted that in so far as the present criminal law is concerned, this introduces a new element, an element which, at any rate, has not been in it since 1906, if indeed it was there before that time. That is why this making a breach of a contract as between an employer and an employee the subject of criminal law in a manner in which it was never previously—

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend is quite wrong. It was back as far as 1875 that the English analogue of this legislation was passed with the approval at that time of employers and employees in England; and it was in 1877 that the substance of this English legislation that we are discussing was passed in Canada. That was carried on, in fact, in the Canadian Criminal Code of 1892 and has been the law of Canada therefore continuously from 1877 until the present time.

Mr. Fulton: Not since 1906.

Mr. Garson: Yes, since 1906, as regards the first three items: "(a) to endanger human life, (b) to cause serious bodily injury, (c) to expose valuable property, real or personal, to destruction or serious injury".

Mr. Fulton: Yes; I should have said it is new since 1906 with respect to subparagraphs (d) and (e) of clause 365.

Mr. Garson: That is right. But my hon. friend would not be completely accurate if he just dropped his statement there. The reason that this section 365 was not effectively operative with regard to utilities and railways as from 1906 was not through any absence of parliamentary intention but because in the revision which took place in 1906, purely through a draftsman's error, which is quite obvious to one who reads the section, it was so drafted that it was not practically enforceable. If hon. members are interested at all, I could go into the minutiae of the reasons for that. They are technical reasons but I have not found anyone yet, even those who are quite strongly opposed to the clause as a whole, who is prepared to argue that the ineffectiveness of the section as from 1906, in its application to utilities and railways was the result of deliberate policy, or anything else than the result of a draftsman's blunder.

Mr. Fulton: The point there is this. It is perhaps not very material except to this extent, that while that may have been the reason, the fact is that since 1906 this has not been a provision, or at any rate not an enforceable provision, of our law with respect to subparagraphs (d) and (e) of subclause 1. Therefore you cannot really say that that fact was not due to the absence of parliamentary intention, because since 1906 to the present time parliament has not acted to make it an enforceable provision of the law. Therefore, how can you possibly say that it was not because of absence of parliamentary intention? If it had been desired to make it a real and enforceable part of the law, then the section would have been amended; but it has not been amended and no attempt has been made up until the present time to change it. That is an argument with regard to history, and perhaps it does not go to the merits of the situation. The merits of the question now are: Should it be made applicable to contracts between employers and employees in this field, whereas in effect it has not been applicable to it before but has applied only to contracts between corporations engaged in this field? Does the minister disagree?

Mr. Garson: Yes, I do disagree. As nearly as I can judge, I think that the reason that parliament did not form an opinion in relation to this gap in this section was that until we began the consolidation of the code and had some experts examine the section, parliament was not conscious of the fact that that defect did exist in the section in relation to public utilities and railways. In the interim no occasion had arisen to invoke this section and thus no occasion to see whether it was invocable. It was just a hiatus in the law that no person was conscious of. It is an extraordinary thing regarding this legislation relating to criminal breach of contract, which was the product in England of a royal commission and of great public attention to the report of the royal commission by, as I said before, the employers and employees, who apparently were of the opinion that this was required to meet situations which might arise, that I have not been able to find, nor have my assistants, either in Great Britain or in Canada, any single instance in which the British statute or the Canadian statute had been used as a basis for a prosecution. That is my reason for submitting what, I admit, is just a personal theory of my own that no person had discovered the real effect of the section until we started to examine it for the purposes of consolidating the code.

But there is no question about the policy involved in this section; for if my hon. friend is interested, he can go back and examine the debates when the code was being passed in 1892 when Sir John Thompson discussed this clause, or go back to when Edward Blake discussed it in 1877 under the Alexander Mackenzie government, when it was first introduced, and see their clear explanations for its presence in the law of Canada.

I expect that in future it will not be invoked any more than it has been in the past. This section was introduced into the law to deal with only certain types of labour difficulties. It was not introduced so much in the interests of the employers on the one hand, or labour upon the other, as in the public interest. The distinction was drawn in the British statute in this way. They said, here is a small group of contracts which we think in the public interest it should be a crime to break. One of the occasions of examining this in England was a strike of workmen in the gas converter industry which put a large part of the city of London in darkness for a long period of time. That was a rather outstanding example of the public interest being seriously affected by a wilful breach of contract, and that is one of the things which inspired this provision. Happily, in Canada we have never had to invoke it, and I hope we never shall, but there is no question about the legislative policy which inspired it and kept it on the statute books; and the only reason there has been since 1906 a gap in this section in relation to utilities and railways is bad draftsmanship in the Revised Statutes of Canada for 1906.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps we can leave the historical interest of the matter for the time being, though I believe this observation will be made by responsible labour people who are uneasy—and I am interested only in the responsible ones—that the reintroduction of this provision as part of the Criminal Code, if in fact it has never been invoked, is unsound. I believe they would say that, on the basis that there has been no occasion since 1906 to find out whether it was enforceable with respect to employees, because no case arose. That is a fairly good argument in support of their view, and they claim that if it ever should be necessary to deal with a problem of this nature then the proper place to provide for it is not in the criminal law but rather in the field of labour relations legislation. That is their point and I must say it seems to me a point of some substance.

But I am prepared to leave that argument for the time being and deal with it on the basis that the government put it in the code in the form in which it now is. In that respect, as I understand the attitude of responsible labour organizations, they say that if a breach of contract between employer and employee is going to be introduced into the field of criminal law then you must introduce it in such a form that the normal and recognized rights of labour to strike, after due conciliation processes have been complied with, should not be made the subject of criminal prosecution. That is their concern.

They recognize that an illegal breach of contract is wrong, and they feel the same way as others do in that regard. In fact, they feel as strongly about an illegal breach of contract as any of the rest of us, but they say they do not want this clause used, and I think they are entitled to say that. They agree there should be a prosecution in connection with a perfectly legal breach of contract: in other words, where a contract has been discontinued or broken after the appropriate effort prescribed by conciliation legislation has been complied with. But they were concerned with the wording of the clause, particularly the last three lines where there appears to be room for a maliciously-minded employer to put them in such a position that they would be forced to disregard the detailed terms of some labour statute regarding conciliation and where they might be aggravated and irritated to the point where they would be unable to restrain their members any longer so that a technical breach is committed. This would then be the subject of criminal prosecution, and they feel these last three lines are too restricted in character. I felt they had a case there and an argument which is well founded.

What we have to do, it seems to me, is to look at the proposed amendment to see whether in fact it removes that objection. I have some rather grave doubts as to whether it does. It restates it in different language, it is true, but it still seems to me to tie them down pretty tightly as to the exact steps which must be taken, the absence of which, they say, should not be made so much a matter of criminal prosecution as a process in the field of labour legislation. I drafted an amendment so that that principle would be there, the language of which, I submit with all humility, achieves that purpose rather better than the present amendment. My amendment was in this form, that the clause be amended by deleting from subclause 2 the words in the last three lines and substituting the following: "If, before a stoppage of work occurs, there has been a bona fide attempt by such a person or a bargaining agent to invoke and observe the provisions of the law then and there in force relating to the settlement of industrial disputes". That is an attempt to state the general principle that, provided the employee or the union has made a bona fide attempt to abide by the terms in force under any labour legislation which might cover a particular contract, and that, if he or they made that bona fide attempt to abide by these provisions, a breach of contract, or a strike, if you like, subsequent to that shall not then afford an opportunity for criminal prosecution. I believe it is sound to suggest that that principle should be stated in broad general terms, leaving it to the court to decide whether there has been that bona fide attempt, because it is difficult to draw an absolute distinction here and determine who is responsible, the employer on the one hand or the employee on the other.

But we do know, as a matter of fact, that there are some employers, unfortunately, who do not share the generally accepted view with regard to labour unions and will place obstacles in their way and will, in fact, at times conduct themselves in such a manner that the task of the union on its side to comply with the regulations regarding industrial disputes is made difficult. For that reason we could state this general proposition, that provided the employee or the organization has made this genuine attempt to comply with the terms of labour legislation covering industrial disputes, it should not be possible to lay criminal prosecutions, although you might still be free to invoke whatever the provisions are of the labour legislation or the terms of the civil law with regard to the breach of contract. As I say, with all due humility, I rather feel that the type of amendment I had in mind would achieve that object better than would the amendment moved by the minister. I will send him over a copy of the amendment and I would ask him if he would consider the possibility of accepting it as a substitute for his own.

Mr. Garson: Perhaps I might deal with the hon. member's suggestion now. I am afraid that I would not accept it, Mr. Chairman, for this reason. I do not for a minute hold myself out as being any better labour lawyer than is my friend the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Fulton: I do not think that either of us is particularly well qualified in that field.

Mr. Garson: No; I do not think we are. Labour law is quite intricate law. I prefer to rely upon specialists in this field. When we have had this particular clause in the Canadian law for upwards of seventy years and when we were consolidating the code and had fairly clearly decided as a matter of policy that the substance of this law was to be carried on, it seemed to me that the most intelligent way of providing for a wording that would continue that substance in a manner that would be acceptable to these people who were immediately concerned, namely the labour congresses on the one hand and the employer interests on the other, was to go directly to them, let them bring in their legal counsel, sit in with us and see whether we could work out a satisfactory wording upon which agreement could be secured. I do not pay any disrespect to my friend the hon. member for Kamloops when I say that I would quite honestly prefer the views of Mr. Maurice Wright, for example, counsel for the Canadian Congress of Labour, to those of my hon. friend and I would prefer Mr. Crysler's views, because these are men who are competent specialists in this field.

Mr. Fulton: But sometimes they have to be content with what they can get. It does not necessarily mean that what they can get is what they want.

Mr. Garson: No, it does not necessarily mean that what they can get is what they want. First of all, in legislation one has to decide on what the policy is to be. But even after that decision has been made there is always involved, in a matter of this kind, the intricate problem of draftsmanship. The best thing to do in a specialized field of this sort is to go to the people who are experienced and competent. That is what we have tried to do. The result is that the Trades and Labour Congress accepted this wording that I have moved. The Canadian Congress of Labour in effect say, "We do not want the legislation, but of course that is a question of policy. If you are going to have legislation, then we would prefer to strike out this 3-line clause at the end of clause 365 (2) of the bill entirely." It seemed to us that to do this might make it possible for a wildcat strike to frustrate completely the intent of clause 365. The Canadian Congress of Labour's next choice was the saving clause that is provided by this amendment which I have moved. That means that so far as the drafting end of it is concerned the two congresses, as a matter of draftsmanship, approve of the wording in the way and to the degree I have indicated. I may also point out that Mr. Crysler says that as far as he can judge there are no defects in this wording having regard to workability. That is an important consideration.

I am sure I do not need to inform my hon. friend that the provinces of Canada have their labour codes. We have our labour code in the federal field, namely the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. When one drafts a provision of this sort in the Criminal Code, cognizance must be taken of these other laws. The wording we have here is the result of efforts in consultation with the men whom I have named, whom I certainly regard as being experts in this field, to draft a workable section in order to perpetuate in the law this penalizing of a wilful breach of contract.

There is one other point I should like to make. This wilful breach of contract is by no means confined to labour unions. It applies to everyone. If there is an unlawful lock-out it applies. If there is wilful breach of contract on the part of some company that has nothing to do with labour relations at all, it applies. The purpose of the application is to see to it, amongst other things, that there shall be a continuous supply of light, heat, power and transportation for society, and that human life will not be put in danger, that serious bodily injury will not be caused and that valuable property will not be exposed to destruction or serious injury.

Mr. Knowles: The minister has proposed an amendment to his own proposition and the hon. member for Kamloops has proposed another one. As I see it, neither proposition is acceptable. If I may, I should like to deal first with the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Kamloops. It seems to me that it is just as unacceptable as are the last three lines that are now in clause 365. Whether you keep clause 365 as it is with those last three lines in it which read:

> . . . if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law have been taken through negotiation, collective bargaining, conciliation and arbitration—

—or whether you substitute the words suggested by the hon. member for Kamloops, you are limiting the saving clause by whatever labour legislation is now on the statute books of Canada or on those of any of the ten provinces. You are also limiting it by labour legislation that might, in the future, be put on the statute books in any of the provinces. I think that that comment applies equally to the last three lines as they now stand in clause 365 and to the proposal made by the hon. member for Kamloops.

In my view the position taken by the Canadian Congress of Labour is the correct one, namely that we should not have this legislation at all, bearing as it does on trade union contracts. I agree with the position taken by the Canadian Congress of Labour—and it is a position that has already been argued effectively by the hon. member for Kamloops—that any matters affecting trade union contracts should be covered in labour codes or in labour legislation rather than in the criminal law.

As I say, we never know what changes may be made in the law of the provinces. We never know when some province may have in power a provincial government with an anti-labour bias which can change the labour law of that province, with the result that the activities of labour unions within that province could be brought under the umbrella of the Criminal Code, resulting in an effect which was not the intention of parliament at this stage of the game.

Therefore when the minister tells us that some of the labour people have an order of preference, I do not think it should be suggested that the second or the third choice is really very acceptable. It may be a second choice or it may be a third choice but there is a long gap between the first choice and the second choice. When the minister indicated to us earlier in the discussion—I believe it was yesterday—that there were going to be amendments to clause 365, I had hoped that he would consider an amendment which I understand was laid before him a few days ago by the representatives of the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour. I understand their proposal was that clause 365 be amended by deleting the present subclause 2 and inserting the following:

> 2. No person wilfully breaks a contract within the meaning of subsection (1) by reason only that
>
> (a) being the employee of an employer, he stops work as a result of the failure of his employer and himself to agree upon any matter relating to his employment, or
>
> (b) he stops work as a result of his taking part in a combination of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees.

The proposal that was laid before the minister by the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour, and which I believe had the support of some of the others whom the minister saw the other day, stopped there. In other words, their proposal was that the last three lines that are now in clause 365 should be omitted. Thus they would prefer not to have the words the minister has proposed or the words proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops. The effect of the proposed amendment I have just read would have been to make this saving clause really a saving clause so far as labour is concerned.

My basic position is that we should not have a section that requires a saving clause of this nature so far as trade union contracts are concerned. The minister gave us quite a little story about parliament in the past not being too conscious of what it was doing on one or two occasions. Well, we are conscious now of what we are doing. We know now that clause 365, if enacted, will relate to corporation contracts and will also relate to trade union contracts. It is our very strong view that trade union contracts should not be the subject of criminal law but should be confined to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, so far as federal labour relations are concerned, and to the labour codes so far as provincial labour relations are concerned.

With respect to the amendment that the minister has moved, I find it a bit of a toss-up whether it is any improvement on the wording now before us in clause 365. He says that in some order of preference it is acceptable to some of the trade union groups. This wording has just been presented to us and naturally none of us has had any opportunity to consult with any trade union people on it. But my first reading of it, indeed, my fifth and my tenth reading of it, make me feel that it still further restricts the saving effect of the so-called saving clause. The minister shakes his head.

Mr. Garson: Shakes his head in dissent.

Mr. Knowles: Oh yes, that head was going from right to left. The words that the minister proposes to add, it seems to me, add another condition that has to be met before the trade union concerned gets the benefit of the saving clause. Before this amendment was put forward the only condition unions had to meet in order to get the benefit of the saving clause was to make sure that all the steps provided by law had been taken. Now, in addition to that, any provision for the settlement of differences, without stoppage of work, contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement must be complied with and effect given thereto.

As I say, it seems to me that is an addition to the conditions that must be met before a question involving a trade union contract can be said to be beyond the pale of clause 365. If the minister can offer an explanation showing that it does the other thing, perhaps we can toss again as to whether this amendment is better than the minister's original wording. So far as I am concerned, it is little more than a toss because both of them are quite unacceptable. It seems to me that a change is being made here that should not be proceeded with at all. For my part, I think it would have been better if the government had retained, with such amendments as would need to be made to bring it up to date, the wording of the old section 499. A number of changes would have had to be made if that had been brought forward—the reference to hard labour and some points of that kind.

But it does seem to me in reading the wording of the old section 499, and it is a very long one, that the whole context of it related much more clearly to contracts by companies and corporations whereas the wording of clause 365 is so much broader that it has definitely brought trade union activities within the compass of this breach of contract legislation. I appreciate the fact that the minister has continued meeting the labour people right up to the eleventh hour so far as the code is concerned. I appreciate the fact that he has made some changes in some of the other sections that have improved them slightly, but it seems to me that with respect to clause 365 he has not filled the bill, and even with the amendment he has proposed this whole clause is quite unacceptable.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Garson: May I reply? I do not want to stand in the way of the hon. member for Vancouver East, but I think I should reply now to some of the specific points raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. In the first place, I think I should make it clear—perhaps I did not do so sufficiently before—that the revision in 1906 was the same kind of general revision of the statutes of Canada that took place in 1927 and in 1952. Such revisions are conducted by revising officers or draftsmen and never come before parliament at all. Therefore when I say that parliament did not exercise any legislative intention with regard to leaving out public utilities and railways so far as the operation of this bill is concerned, I mean precisely that. This revision was conducted by drafting experts—at least, they pretended to be experts but they were not very expert in this particular matter.

Mr. Knowles: Parliament had many years in which to correct that if it felt it necessary.

Mr. Garson: Quite so but, as I say, it has never had to be invoked. I do not think any person was conscious of the fact until we came to examine the consolidation of the Criminal Code. When we got to it I must say that I was quite embarrassed. I called in the labour bodies and said, "Now, the law is not effective in this field now. I think there is no doubt at all as to what the intention has been all along, and I am telling you candidly that we will have to make this section effective with respect to utilities and railways as it has always been with regard to these other classes that are affected by it."

As I have indicated before, we have been discussing the means by which that might be done. At the conclusion of his remarks a moment ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised the point that he thought it might be better to restore the wording of the provision of the 1892 code. We put that up to the labour congresses, and that is covered in this letter that I got only two or three days ago. We said: "If we cannot reach any kind of agreement on this clause, would you prefer that we should wash out all these long drawn out discussions and just re-enact the provision of 1892? Mind you, I have no right to make this offer to you as a firm offer. I have to clear it with my colleagues and the like, but what do you think about it?" The answer came back in this letter. They rejected that alternative and they said that while they would prefer to have the act removed from the statute books, where it had been for over seventy years—of course, I am sure they must have realized that suggestion was not very realistic—if there must be legislation of this sort their second choice would be to strike out the three last lines of clause 365 (2) that are now in the draft bill, and if that were not considered feasible then they suggested we adopt the wording which is now before the members of the committee.

Mr. Winch: I wonder whether the lawyers and the ministers would mind if the small voice of a trade unionist were heard for a few minutes? I am very much interested in clause 365, and I am very disturbed by it. I speak as a trade unionist, and also as an electrician. I have had the honour of being a member of the international brotherhood of electrical workers for some twenty-eight years. This section specifically mentions workers in light and power industries and places certain restrictions on the activities of trade unionists in those fields if they take certain action. Quite honestly, Mr. Chairman, I feel that this section is dangerous or can be dangerous to the workers and trade union to which I belong. There is specific mention in this provision of light, power, gas, and water and the workers in those industries are brought under the Criminal Code. They are subject to certain penalties if they strike without following certain procedures. There are others who are in what we might term public utilities or public services, who are not mentioned here, and who do not have the right to strike because of an agreement under provincial legislation. I know that in British Columbia the policemen and fire fighters have an agreement under which they have no right to strike. However, it is mandatory under that act that in any dispute the majority award of the arbitration board be accepted by both parties to the dispute.

The electrical workers are in a different position. I think they are in a dangerous position because they are brought into this Criminal Code. If we felt absolutely certain that every provincial government was going to be a fair government, and have on its statute books fair labour legislation, then we would not be too much worried about section 365 as it is now or as the minister proposes to amend it. However, we have not got that assurance that we will have fair governments and for all time to come. We know of certain types of legislation in Quebec. We know right now that if you take the viewpoint of all the trade unions in British Columbia concerning labour legislation now before the legislature, they consider the government as anti-labour. Yet, the government is determined to put through this legislation that is bitterly, completely and unanimously opposed by labour. Since they are determined to put it through, it automatically follows it will be enforced.

If enforcement is found to be impossible, as labour now feels it is, then under provincial legislation there will be penalties imposed because the labour laws of the province have been broken. I say to the minister, Mr. Chairman, that I believe it is most unfair to place the trade union movement, for all future time or until the provision might be changed, again in a position of being under the complete domination of an anti-labour government. If the union did not conform to the provincial legislation, then it would also be committing a criminal offence. As a matter of fact, I feel that most of the penalties provided for the infractions of the provincial legislation are not nearly as serious as the penalties we now have under the Criminal Code. I think it is unfair to have this double-barrelled shotgun aimed at the trade union movement of this country. I also think, sir, that it is not justice to give power into the hands of potentially anti-labour governments so that they can legislate as they please within their jurisdiction with the knowledge that this parliament has carried it forward into the Criminal Code without knowing what may be on the statute books of a province in the future. Actually, that is what we have in this clause. I cannot see any other way of putting it. We are giving a blank cheque power to the provincial legislatures to deal with the trade union movement in their province. I am not going to repeat these arguments that have been mentioned before. I want to say this as a member of the union that is most vitally affected by the measure, as a trade unionist, and as I say I am somewhat concerned. I can only ask the minister if he cannot see that inherent danger, if he cannot see the position in which it is going to place thousands of workers, and so remove the application of the Criminal Code to an individual who breaks a provincial statute.

Mr. Gillis: I am just going to say a few words on this subject. Either the Canadian Congress, in the memorandum they presented to the minister in February, 1953, is wrong —I think that was the only major job they did—or else the minister is wrong. The minister stated that this is not new and has been in the code since 1892.

Mr. Garson: And since 1877, in Canadian statute law.

Mr. Gillis: Since 1877, then. The minister has admitted that Maurice Wright, who advises the Canadian Congress of Labour, is a fair lawyer and specializes in this field. In that memorandum on clause 365 they have devoted a great deal of space to their criticism, much more than they did to any other clause. If the minister will look at that memorandum, in the second paragraph dealing with this section, he will find they had this to say:

> For one thing, this section embodies a legal concept not found elsewhere in our law: that a person can be prosecuted under the Criminal Code for breach of a civil contract. Traditionally, breach of a civil obligation involves the right to seek a remedy in the civil courts; for example, a right to sue for damages, or to restrain by injunction. Section 365 provides that in certain circumstances breach of contract, a civil matter, shall also be punishable by a court of competent criminal jurisdiction. This is a principle which, if admitted at all, should be admitted only because of the most clear and overwhelming public necessity, and confined within the narrowest possible limits. No such necessity has been shown in this instance, nor is the principle so confined.

I would judge from that comment on this particular section that it is a new principle that you are now permitting union strikes to come under the Criminal Code, whereas the general principle in law is that breach of contract is tried in the civil courts. It is a civil matter; it is not a matter for the Criminal Code.

I want to say, further, that I agree with the congress officials, or the representatives of labour, when they say that, in so far as it affects union contracts, it should not become operative. Evidently the minister says that it will be, so that is what we have to deal with.

Those who are connected with labour look upon this clause as the thin edge of the wedge in connection with the outlawing of strikes. That is their conception of it. Rightly or wrongly, they see it that way. That labour movement is exemplified by the three large congresses in this country, and I would point out to the minister that in a time of trouble they are pretty good allies to have. There has never been any suggestion that in troubled times they have been unfair, or have taken any advantage of a state of emergency. We want to be most careful, I should think, that in legislation of this kind we should not do something or say something that might cause the disaffection of those allies, who might be so useful in time to come. If we adopt a reasonable attitude toward them, and show them we are going to be fair, they can make a better contribution.

However, they do feel that this is the thin edge of the wedge. So long as this provision affecting trade union agreements is in the code, I do not think it will be possible to find any wording that would soften the effect or would make it more palatable.

If the minister insists that the clause remain, then I suggest to him that the clause as it now appears in the bill is just as good as the proposed amendment because, in my view, the amendment is as it has been described by the hon. member for Kamloops.

After this discussion is concluded, and if it appears that the clause is going to remain as he has suggested—and apparently it will—I intend to suggest that we should try to have it pinned down to some particular person who can say when, so far as trade union agreements are concerned, this clause should become operative. I would like to see inserted a paragraph following subsection 2 that would place the onus on the attorney general of a province of deciding when the clause might become operative in the matter of trade union agreements.

While the hon. member for Vancouver East did not appear to like the type of government in British Columbia, and there seemed to be a feeling that there is danger in the kind of government we find in Quebec, the fact remains that it is the employers I am afraid of. I fear the employer who wants to carry on some sharp practice. While the provision may have been in existence since 1887, that employer might not have known about it. As a matter of fact, in the discussion of the Criminal Code we have been smartening up a lot of people about laws they could have been using. From now on they may use them—and especially those employers who, in violation of a contract, may want to outflank or bypass a labour code in a province or, so far as that is concerned, a national labour code. Penalties are provided for the violation of contracts; and if an employer did not want to take a chance he could take action under the Criminal Code, in its present wide-open state. But if we placed the responsibility upon an attorney general for the decision as to when the clause is to become operative, then at least we would have a guarantee that the attorney general would see that all the machinery in the province in connection with the labour code would be exhausted before he would permit action under the Criminal Code.

After we dispose of this amendment I will ask the Minister of Justice if he will consider what I have been saying. I shall send him a copy of what I have in mind. So far as I am concerned, the only way we can soften this up would be by putting someone in a position to say when it would be operative. While an attorney general may not like that, I think the safeguard is necessary.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak briefly in support of the opposition expressed concerning this amendment. I do this because there is widespread opposition to the clause among the working groups in Canada.

I would point out that I have received many representations from my own constituency about this clause. The largest group of organized labour in my constituency is the international union of mine, mill and smelter workers, who have expressed strong objection to the clause. All affiliates of the Canadian Congress of Labour in my constituency have expressed similar objection and, to the best of my knowledge, the local affiliates of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada have done likewise. Sometimes the local business agent or local official, who is more closely in touch with the day-to-day life of the working people concerned than the union is, has a better idea about what the rank and file are thinking than do some of the persons in high places.

I, personally, have not had any experience as a trade unionist. As I have said before, I have been a peasant farmer all my life. However, I do listen to what these people have to say. And when I find such united and general opposition to a clause, as I do in this instance, I realize there must be good grounds for that opposition.

Quite recently I received a letter from the secretary of the building trades council of Vancouver, New Westminster and district, in which he deals with this clause. The letter is signed by Mr. E. Kennedy, secretary. Apparently the council retained a well-known firm of barristers and solicitors in Vancouver to make a study in particular of clauses 365 and 372. After making this study the lawyers in question wrote as follows to the labour organization:

> Pursuant to your request for a considered opinion on sections 365 and 372 of Bill 7 and pursuant to my suggestion to you, I have engaged senior counsel Mr. Thomas F. Hurley, to give an opinion. As you know, Mr. Hurley is eminent in the field of criminal law and his opinion carries considerable weight in our profession.
>
> Accordingly, I enclose the opinion given by Mr. Hurley. I must say that I have read the same carefully and can only agree with the conclusion therein set forth.
>
> Please be assured that both Mr. Hurley and myself will be pleased to elaborate further upon request.
>
> Yours very truly,
> Shulman, Fouks and Tupper > per "I. Shulman".

The name of Tupper is, of course, a distinguished name in Canada.

[Mr. Gillis.]

When I receive representations from all sections of labour in my constituency, in which they express views that are held generally across Canada, and when I receive the considered opinion of well known counsel I, as a layman, and without any special or personal knowledge of the situation, must be of the opinion that there is some ground for the opposition expressed with respect to this clause.

I should like to quote briefly from the brief prepared by Mr. Hurley with reference to clause 365. He says:

> It is to be noted that it is almost inconceivable that there can be any strike that does not come within the purview of subsection (1). The phrase "valuable property, real or personal", opens the door wide to every kind of strike that it is possible for me to imagine.

Then he goes on to say:

> It has been suggested that subsection (2) is a saving clause. I consider this to be unfortunately not so. Rather, it seems to me to emphasize the brutally negative aspects of subsection (1).
>
> Subsection (1) makes virtually any strike illegal, under an infinite variety of circumstances. Now, examining subsection (2) (a) it will be seen that the so-called saving clause places the onus on the employee first, to show that the only reason he stops work is as a result of the employer and himself failing to agree upon any matter relating to his employment. I assure you that such proof could be difficult indeed, as any other reason could be sufficient to eliminate the "saving" effect. In addition, the onus is placed on the employee to prove that before the stoppage of work occurred, all steps provided by law have been taken through negotiation, collective bargaining, conciliation and arbitration.
>
> The additional burden thus placed upon the accused has numerous dangerous aspects. It places the employee in the position of having to determine questions which, in many cases, might well give pause to experienced counsel . . . when have all the steps been taken? Have each of the steps been properly taken? Has there been any defect in the proceedings which could subsequently face the employee with an unexpected legal interpretation? The employee could easily be placed in the position of having ceased work, thinking that all steps have been taken, only to find that this was not so. It is well known that ignorance of the law is no excuse. An employee might, therefore, carefully proceed through all the manifold intricacies, only to find himself faced with possible serious consequences, because he or his solicitors have overlooked or misunderstood a requirement of a provincial statute.
>
> Perhaps an even more glaring danger lies in the fact that by this proposed section of the Criminal Code the dominion government would give power to provincial governments to legislate crimes into existence, at their whim—

I think that point was well made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I continue:

> —leaving labour at the complete mercy of any provincial government. That this may well give the labour movement cause for alarm, is certainly clear from an examination of the recent record of certain such governments, notably that of Duplessis of Quebec. This legislation would give

Duplessis' government, or that of any other province, complete power of legal life or death over all trade unions in its jurisdiction.

It makes it possible for a provincial government to insist upon compulsory arbitration, with government-appointed arbitrators, and with criminal sanctions to enforce them.

It makes it possible for a provincial government to make strikes illegal, with like sanctions.

It makes it possible for a provincial government to remove virtually all of the rights labour has won throughout the centuries.

The proposed section 365 can be described, not as a step toward a police state, but as a final step into a police state in so far as labour is concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these concluding sentences are written in quite strong language but they are written by an eminent counsel in Vancouver, and because of the basic feeling of labour as a whole, from its experience in the past and because it is also the opinion of eminent counsel, I as a layman can do nothing else but support the objections raised by previous speakers to this amendment.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of the eminence of the counsel to whom my hon. friend referred, but if this opinion from which my hon. friend quoted is a sample of his handiwork one can only wonder how he became eminent, because I cannot imagine any responsible counsel dealing with a matter of this kind expressing a legal opinion in the language which he has used.

It has been suggested that this is a new principle that is involved; that this is the first time, in 1954, we are introducing this new principle into the law. In proof of the fact, I think pretty conclusive proof of the fact, that that is not so I should like to read very briefly from the remarks of the lord chancellor in England when he introduced the British statute in 1875. He said this:

The government decided to draw a broad line of demarcation between civil and criminal breaches of contract and to leave that line to be determined, not by the tribunal, but on the face of the act of parliament itself.

The employers and workmen bill dealt with civil breaches of contract alone, laying down the general rule—apart from certain exceptions which came under the other bill—that breach of contract which resulted in damages should be treated as giving rise to a civil remedy, and not as constituting a crime.

Certain procedure was set up where the damages were under or over £10.

The breaches of contract which were to be made criminal in future were included in the conspiracy and protection to property bill.

That was the bill he was introducing. It is the British analogue to this legislation. I continue:

That bill dealt first with questions affecting the supply of gas and water. It provided that where a person employed by a municipal authority or a company wilfully and maliciously broke a contract of service, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences of his doing so would be to deprive the public of gas or water, he should be liable . . . They held that a person so acting not only committed a breach of contract incurring civil damages, but a criminal offence for which he ought to be criminally responsible . . .

Then the next clause (5) proceeded exactly on the same principle as clause 4, the only difference being that it contemplated a breach of contract, whether by a person serving or by a person hiring, which involved serious injury to life, personal injury or which exposed valuable property to destruction or serious injury. There, again, a breach of contract having those consequences was treated differently from a mere civil contract.

That legislation went through. It has remained upon the statute books of Great Britain ever since, and I for one have never regarded Great Britain as being a police state in the language of this eminent counsel of Vancouver who said that we were on the way to becoming a police state if we continued in our law a principle which has been there for over seventy years, and which during the whole of that period of time has been on the statute books of Great Britain.

When the Canadian bill was introduced in 1877, the Hon. Edward Blake, who was then minister of justice, gave the following explanation. He said:

In these modern times, the enormous inconvenience of stopping the whole system of communication between one part of the country and the other was very apparent, and he was justified in holding that any man who produced that result by wilfully breaking his contract was guilty of a crime. The principle of that portion of the bill was similar to the English act. But he wanted to avoid class legislation and therefore he had made the law applicable to others as well as to workmen engaged on railways.

Included in that were public utilities. As a matter of fact, the original English act applied only to gas because at that time they did not have electricity; but as soon as they had electricity it was brought in under the British section. Later on Sir John Thompson —I apparently have not the quotation with me—in carrying forward the same provisions into the code of 1892, gave a similar explanation of this difference between a civil breach of contract and a criminal breach of contract. Therefore the suggestion that we are now in 1954 even attempting to foist upon the Canadian people some new principle of law is really quite without foundation. What we have been seeking to do is simply to carry forward a principle of law which has been on the statute books, recognized both in Great Britain and in Canada, from 1875 in the case of Great Britain and from 1877 in the case of Canada, continuously until the present time, and I think a pretty salutary principle of law. What I find most extraordinary is, if it is open to all this abuse that Mr. Hurley says it is open to, that in that period of time neither in Great Britain nor in Canada has there been a single case in which any trade union has ever been prosecuted under it.

My hon. friend quotes from sources that he regards, I suppose, as reliable, but I should like to quote from a letter which was sent out by the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada to all of its affiliated unions after a lot of propaganda had been spread amongst its locals in opposition to this provision in the Criminal Code and to the other labour sections generally. On page 4 this is what the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada had to say with regard to section 365:

> This section 365 dealing with a criminal breach of contract is now in the Criminal Code—

That is quite true, but it was defective so far as utilities and railways were concerned. That quality of not being operative however was not apparent to the lay reader. It required a fairly astute lawyer to discover that it was defective in relation to utilities and railways. But so far as parliamentary intention was concerned it was on the statute books and it was intended during all of that time to be on the statute books.

I continue to read from this Trades and Labour Congress letter:

> This section has never been used against trades unions.

That statement is quite true. So far as I know no union has been prosecuted under it.

> However, the executive council of the congress sought and obtained an amendment which is now contained in section 2 which clearly states that an employee or a trade union does not break such a contract because of a legitimate work stoppage arising from an industrial dispute.

Now, I make no aspersions upon this eminent counsel Mr. Hurley when I say that I would prefer to have the views of the national executives of the Trades and Labour Congress as set out in this letter. May I add, in addition, that these are the views not only of the executive but views which were approved in the convention of the congress held a short time ago.

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Chairman, the minister in his remarks did not, I believe, deal with the most pertinent point raised by the hon. members who have just spoken. If Canada were a unitary state and if this government could establish a fair national labour code and then apply this clause there might be a little more validity to his argument, but the objection which has been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Vancouver East and in the letter quoted by the hon. member for Kootenay West was that this legislation deals with various provincial legislatures, and we find that even in the amendment proposed by the minister namely:

> . . . if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law . . .

Now, the "steps provided by law" are the regulations or the laws in effect in the ten provinces of Canada. It simply means that we are now concerned with the law which is going to be applied differently, or interpreted differently, in perhaps ten different provinces of Canada. I think it should be a principle of law that the law should apply to all Canadians. Here we are faced with a situation where a particular province in Canada can enact labour legislation which denies the trade unions all the hard-fought-for and hard-won gains they have made and which would make it virtually impossible for them to comply with a particular provincial law.

Under these circumstances, if the union felt it necessary to go on strike they would be, under the terms of the provincial law, guilty of a breach of contract. A statute passed by the federal parliament will then be used by this province for the purpose of prosecuting and possibly jailing trade unionists.

To me that is the crux of this matter, namely the penalties provided for in this clause will be applied and enforced in terms of laws passed by the various provincial legislatures and, as I have suggested, it is altogether possible that a provincial legislature could enact labour legislation which would make it virtually impossible for a trade union to carry on its normal operations without breaking provincial labour laws. Under these circumstances, this clause could be used to punish these trade unionists. I wonder if the minister would care to comment on that, because that is the point which causes us the greatest concern.

Mr. Garson: I will be very glad to comment on it. I withheld any comment upon it because I was afraid it might be difficult for me to express myself in language which would not be offensive. I will try to express myself in inoffensive language. But may I remind my hon. friend and those who preceded him with the same argument that they are talking about a clause in this bill which was put there at the express request of the labour congresses, and these arguments they have made have no relevancy except in relation to a saving clause which has been put in the bill at the request of the labour congresses.

Mr. Knowles: Not the whole clause; just the saving part.

Mr. Garson: No. If my hon. friend will look at the briefs submitted by the labour congresses in relation to this bill as drafted in the first place, and which merely continues the former section 499 in the form of clause 365 of this bill, he will see that these briefs asked that it be made clear in this bill that it would not apply to a lawful stoppage of work. In order to give effect to their request we drafted this clause. We wanted to meet them half-way. We have nothing against organized labour. We have many reasons, of which my hon. friends of the C.C.F. group will be conscious, of wishing to be friendly with labour, just as they wish to be, so when they came up with the request that there should be a saving clause put in here covering a legitimate industrial dispute or strike we said: "Yes, by all means."

The argument advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver East, the hon. member for Regina City and some other hon. members on the other side of the house, to the effect that we are trying in this parliament to bring the labour unions of Canada under the control of terrible provincial legislatures which are going to take away their rights are absurd. For the only basis they have for that argument is the saving clause which we have put in the bill at the express request of the labour congresses themselves. There is no other basis for this branch of their argument.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I come to another point. A good deal has been said about a police state by this lawyer in Vancouver and we find this opinion quoted at great length on the editorial page of one of our local papers in the form of a letter written to that paper over the signature of a man who is the national executive secretary of the league for democratic rights, a communistic-front organization. These gentlemen talk about the police state, but what sort of argument is it that a provision in a federal law puts anyone at the mercy of a democratically-elected provincial legislature anyway? Is that argument a vote of confidence in democracy? What is this idea of being at the mercy of parliament or at the mercy of any legislature which is elected by the free vote of the people of Canada?

I did not take part in this debate before because I felt I would have some difficulty in restraining my indignation in the face of an argument of that sort. For if such an argument is made before a committee of this house or made in this country, it is a clear expression of want of confidence in the whole democratic process. The idea is that any law of this sort might depend upon a future law passed by a provincial legislature, and the people involved cannot take the chance of being "put at the mercy of" a democratically-elected Canadian legislature. They would be taking a chance in Russia or in other countries where they do not enjoy freedom of the franchise but surely not in Canada. I realize in saying this that we have had poor governments in this country on some occasions and poor legislatures also; but who, may I ask, put them there? Was it not the people themselves? And surely the people themselves who put them there are free to put them out on another day. Perhaps it would not be a bad thing if they did that in some cases. This argument is not up to the high democratic conceptions which I am prepared to admit that the C.C.F. party have displayed on happier occasions. I do not think it does them credit.

Mr. MacInnis: The Minister of Justice has departed from his usual role. He has usually been very fair in this matter but he has stooped to political manoeuvring and to drawing red herrings across the trail—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: Oh, yes; I heard it. He has stooped to political manoeuvring and to drawing red herrings across the trail when he says any government of Canada elected by the will of the Canadian people is one to which you can trust everything. That is not what my hon. friend says when he is talking about this party on the political platform. That is what he said here today. It is not what my hon. friends over there on the other side of the chamber said either.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: I know, because I have heard what was said, and I can also read. The Minister of Justice says that this provision has been on the statute books since 1887, if my memory serves me aright and I believe he said it is almost unchanged. But if it was there on the statute books and almost unchanged, why did the labour movement of this country—the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada as well as the Canadian Congress of Labour—rush here to tell the minister how dangerous this act in the present case would be to organized labour and to suggest the amendment that has been made to it, if it has been unchanged? The fact is that previously the clause we are dealing with now applied—at least I think it was so considered—to employers that held contracts and did not apply to labour organizations. I believe an amendment was made in 1927; when there was some suggestion that it did apply or might apply to labour organizations, an amendment was made to prevent that being the case.

Mr. Garson: Might I ask my hon. friend a question?

Mr. MacInnis: Yes.

Mr. Garson: Did I understand my hon. friend to say that this statute had applied only to employers when it was first passed?

Mr. MacInnis: I believe that was the understanding.

Mr. Garson: Oh, no.

Mr. MacInnis: It was the statement made by the representatives of the Canadian Congress of Labour when they appeared before the parliamentary committee.

Mr. Knowles: The minister himself said it had never been invoked against trade unions.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not know whether it has ever been invoked against anybody.

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. MacInnis: Here is a law that has never been invoked against anybody. There was no need to invoke it. In order to say that it is more effective than it was before they have got to tighten it up with greater penalties. Surely the commissions that drafted or prepared these revisions of the Criminal Code were short of something to do when they had to deal with matters of that kind. This is a statement made by the delegation that appeared for the Canadian Congress of Labour before the committee:

> For one thing, this section embodies a legal concept not found elsewhere in our law: that a person can be prosecuted under the Criminal Code for breach of a civil contract. Traditionally, breach of a civil obligation involves the right to seek a remedy in the civil courts; for example, a right to sue for damages, or to restrain by injunction. Section 365 provides that in certain circumstances breach of contract, a civil matter, shall also be punishable by a court of competent criminal jurisdiction. This is a principle which, if admitted at all, should be admitted only because of the most clear and overwhelming public necessity, and confined within the narrowest possible limits. No such necessity has been shown in this instance, nor is the principle so confined.

These are statements that were made while the minister was present. If they were not correct statements, they were not answered and they still apply today.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I just finished, about three minutes ago, answering it or at least trying to do so.

Mr. MacInnis: I know; but what the minister said two or three minutes ago did not have anything to do with this matter. The minister was speaking on a lower plane or level than that which is customary with him; and it was different from that on which he spoke both in this house and in the committee. I should like the minister to understand that I am not saying these things lightly. I am tremendously appreciative of the co-operative attitude of the minister all during the sittings of the committee. I am quite free to admit to him that I never sat in any committee where more willingness was shown to try to meet the views of everybody who had something constructive to contribute. It is because of this that I greatly regret that the minister departed from it momentarily a few moments ago; at least I hope it is only momentarily.

Amendments were proposed and it was announced at the time at least that one of the larger labour bodies never accepted them as being adequate, principally for the reason that has been pointed out, namely, that labour legislation, excepting that part of it that is covered by the national labour code, is under the jurisdiction of the provinces. The provision made here is:

> . . . if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law have been taken through negotiation, collective bargaining, conciliation and arbitration.

That may change from day to day. Indeed in any province laws may be passed which labour would find it absolutely impossible to accept. Before I sit down I am going to draw to the attention of the minister something along that line. I think the hon. member for Vancouver East referred to the new labour bill that has been proposed and perhaps, for all I know, has been passed in British Columbia. R. K. Gervin, secretary of the British Columbia trades union congress, general secretary of the trades and labour council of the New Westminster and Vancouver district and vice president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, when appearing before a committee of trade unionists at a meeting with the minister of labour of British Columbia, said this:

> We do not want you to force us into the position of rebelling against something which is impossible—and this bill is impossible.

Then another representative of the trade unions said:

> We are not here to legislate our unions out of business and that is what we would be doing if we allow this bill to go through.

Then another labour leader said:

> To get justice (under the new act) is a luxury which small unions can't afford—there will be some decertifications because our members will never cross the picket line.

In a report in the Vancouver Province of April 1, dated from Victoria, we find this:

> Thinly veiled warnings from British Columbia top labour men that labour-management relations are headed for real trouble if the government persists in pushing through its new labour legislation highlighted the second day of a joint meeting of British Columbia major labour organizations today. One speaker after another, supporting the conference decision in asking the government to withdraw the bill for further study, said bluntly that labour does not intend to give up rights it has won.

There is a danger here in the election of an irresponsible government. Irresponsible governments can be elected and it takes a little time to get them out of office and to right the wrong. There is the danger here that this provision puts trade unions under the necessity of complying with a labour law with which they cannot comply. I do not know whether the amendment proposed by the minister is an improvement on the clause found in the bill as it came from the parliamentary committee. I am rather disturbed about some of the words in the last part of it, particularly these:

> . . . if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law with respect to the settlement of industrial disputes are taken and any provision for the final settlement of differences, without stoppage of work, contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement . . .

Mr. Knowles: That is dangerous.

Mr. MacInnis: Who is going to decide what is deemed to be contained in a collective agreement? It seems to me that is a highly dangerous phrase. I would be greatly surprised if the representatives of organized labour asked for that wording. I should like to get the minister's explanation of the words, "contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement". It would take some time to find out what was deemed to be contained in a collective agreement. I think we should be very careful because we are not legislating for today or tomorrow but for a long time, and we are legislating on a matter that is of grave concern to many people in this country.

Mr. Byrne: I have hesitated to take part in this debate—it would seem to be a debate although we are in committee—but there are a number of questions that I should like to have asked in order to clear my thinking on the matter before making a statement. I will not delay the committee too long but I should like to make one or two observations. I was not a member of the special committee although I attended at times when this legislation was being considered and listened with very great interest. At the time this saving clause was suggested I can recall that I mentioned to some of my colleagues that it was a dangerous section and that it seemed to point more directly at trade unions and make it appear that the section had been designed to prevent strikes by organized labour for the purpose of winning rights. I felt at the outset that the original wording was better, namely:

> Every one who wilfully breaks a contract, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that the probable consequences of doing so, whether alone or in combination with others . . .

As long as a contract exists between employer and employees no responsible union would condone a wildcat stoppage of work that would endanger human life or cause serious bodily injury. In any event, that would be contrary to most provincial legislation. There was another thought that came to my mind. We can conceive of the reasonableness of there being a criminal offence when life is endangered or there is a possibility of serious bodily harm, but if I were to suggest an amendment it would be to delete the entire clause having to do with delaying or preventing the running of a locomotive. It is inconceivable that any serious bodily harm is going to be caused simply through delaying a locomotive by picketing or some such action, and for a strike to be effective it certainly must have some economic repercussions or it is valueless.

This afternoon we have heard the opinion of Mr. Hurley, the so-called eminent counsel. His condemnation of this clause has to do almost entirely with the saving section which does bring unions under the jurisdiction of provincial legislation within the application of the Criminal Code. Apparently it is not enough that unions are restricted by various provincial laws, but we must come along with federal legislation which in effect prohibits certain actions. So far as union contracts are concerned, if a contract is in effect for a year or two years and then terminates at the end of December or the end of June, it is my interpretation of the original section that there would be no offence if the union and the employer had failed to reach an agreement at that time.

But with the amendment to the saving clause there is an implication that there is still a contract by virtue of the fact that the two participants in the disagreement, shall we say, have not reached an agreement. Nevertheless the union agreement with the company has expired as a matter of actual fact. I have said before that I felt that the original wording was better and that if the contract had expired the union did not come under this legislation. I should like the minister to clarify that for me.

I want to say again that I cannot see why it should be a criminal offence to take action that is simply economic. That should be left to the provincial statutes, and many of the provincial statutes make ample provision for prosecution should such action be taken.

Mr. Garson: I think if the hon. member, and all hon. members for that matter, will look at the existing law, which is found in clause 499 of the present code, they will see that there is no saving clause at all protecting—

Mr. Fulton: Because it does not apply to employees.

Mr. Garson: Oh no, my hon. friend is quite wrong about that. Why, in England it was brought into effect in the first place as the result of the very unsatisfactory state of the law between employers and employees, with which the public, employers and employees were all dissatisfied. They had a royal commission, and on the strength of that royal commission's report they introduced a bill. In the selection I quoted from the lord chancellor's speech introducing the bill in the House of Lords he made it very clear that a distinction had to be made between a criminal breach of contract and a civil breach of contract.

All that this section has purported to do during the whole time it has been in the Canadian law is to provide that what is defined as a criminal breach of contract shall be an offence which shall be punishable under the code. It is ironical that all this criticism is being heaped on the government, largely in respect of the language of a saving clause that was introduced into the section at the express request of the labour congresses. In the case of the Trades and Labour Congress, they were proud enough of their handiwork to circularize all their local units stating, in effect, that they had sought and obtained the saving clause to protect unions in respect of all stoppages of work that might occur that might otherwise constitute a breach of the section, that is that were lawful stoppages under their contract or under the relevant laws.

Mr. Knowles: Is it not true that the saving clause was requested and given by the government because the unions felt the wording of clause 365 was so different from the old clause 499 that they had to have a saving clause where they did not have to have it before?

Mr. Garson: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Knowles: I am sure that is the reason the unions wanted it.

Mr. Garson: If my hon. friend will look at the wording of the existing code and examine it carefully he will see the arguments he has just made is not tenable. I think what happened was this. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said, this provision had been in the code for a long time and it had been completely inoperative. Perhaps many who might otherwise have been interested were unaware of its existence. There was never any occasion to examine it. But when in the course of the duty which devolved on the government and the royal commission to consolidate the code it was found that here was a clear principle that had been retained in the British law and the Canadian law during all these years, then we had to deal with this provision in the course of consolidating the code.

In the ordinary course of the consolidation of the code the royal commission brought this provision forward and it was brought to the attention of, amongst others, the labour congresses. Upon being put upon notice of that fact, they said in effect, "Well, here is something that may possibly affect us." As my hon. friends who sat on the committee of the House of Commons will recall, and as I recall from the Senate committee hearings, the congresses' representatives appeared and said that if this section were to be carried forward in this form they did not think it should apply to a work stoppage which occurred as the lawful result of their contract. That seemed to be a reasonable proposition, and from that point on we had been applying our efforts towards finding the best language in which a saving clause to that effect could be worded.

I must apologize for being somewhat indignant a moment ago but what made me indignant was that, after all our hard labours and long hours of consultation, having managed to secure a wording here which meets with the complete approval of one labour congress and, I must admit, the carefully qualified approval of another and the even more qualified approval, if you could even call it that, of the third—

Mr. Knowles: That is hardly a majority, is it, one out of three?

Mr. Garson: No, it is hardly a majority. I do not want to go into the details but I must say I do not share my hon. friend's view that this section is not as good as the previous saving section. In other words, I agree with the views expressed by the Canadian Congress of Labour, that if this clause 365 is to be continued—

Mr. Knowles: Which the Canadian Congress of Labour does not want.

Mr. Garson: That is right, they do not want the clause at all. What they are suggesting is that this clause should not be in the act, to provide that not only workmen but employers and everybody else shall not commit a wilful breach of contract that has an adverse effect upon the public interest. The Canadian Congress was undoubtedly in favour of deleting this clause although that has not been done in Great Britain and I do not think it should be done here.

Then the Canadian Congress of Labour takes the position that if the clause is to remain in the law, they would prefer that we use this language which I moved earlier in the debate than to re-enact the provisions of the code of 1892. I told them we would have to re-enact the provisions of the code of 1892 because the revision of 1906 was botched and it did not carry into effect the wishes of parliament. They recognized the validity of this contention. From what I said I think they recognized that if we were going to carry it forward we would have to carry it forward either in the terms of the code of 1892 or in the terms that are now before the committee. They said that of those two alternatives they would rather we would adopt the language now before the committee.

One of the reasons why I favoured that language—I might as well be quite candid about the matter—was that I had a great deal of respect for the knowledge of these men in the labour congresses. I have a great deal of respect for the legal ability of Mr. Crysler, who is representing the employers' viewpoint. When these gentlemen say that this is the language in which this saving clause could be effectively stated then I, for one, would be prepared to accept their views on that point, especially so when there is also concurrence on this point from the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada. Now, that is the position. Does that answer my hon. friend's question?

Mr. Byrne: I should like to put the question in these words. If clause 2 did not exist in the proposed amendment and a contract had expired but negotiations were going on for perhaps two months without an agreement, and there was provincial labour legislation providing for certain steps to be taken such as conciliation, arbitration and so on and the union officers could no longer maintain the membership which perhaps went on strike, would the union be indictable?

Mr. Garson: I think the answer to my hon. friend's question is this. The clear indication of clause 365, in its language, is that everyone who wilfully breaks a contract is guilty. Now, if there is no contract there cannot be any guilt, no matter what is done. The gravamen of the offence is the wilful breach of contract. And if the contract has run out, then there is nothing that can be broken. But another argument is this—although it has never been stated so explicitly—"Well, supposing we want to walk out while the contract is in effect, what then?" Then the saving clause would be necessary and would have of course to be complied with. If there was compliance with the saving clause, subclause 2 then goes on to say—and while it does not say this exactly, I am putting it in these terms—that notwithstanding the main body of the clause says that every one who wilfully breaks a contract commits an offence, subclause 2 says that—

No person wilfully breaks a contract within the meaning of subsection (1) by reason only that (a) being the employee of an employer he stops work—or—

—being a member of an organization of employees—

—he does certain things, provided always that he complies with the requirements of the law, or of the contract with regard to—

Mr. Knowles: A contract deemed by law to be in effect.

Mr. Garson: Yes, or in the language of the saving clause.

—if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law with respect to the settlement of industrial disputes are taken and any provision for the final settlement of differences—

And so on. But certainly the hon. member for Kootenay East is quite right when he says that if a contract has run out, and there is no contract in existence, saving clause or no saving clause there is no offence under clause 365 because there is no contract that can be broken.

Mr. Barnett: I think when we consider the closing words of the minister we will realize that we are getting close to the crux of the matter. The point made by the hon. member for Kootenay East is an important one. In suggesting that when a contract has run out there is no offence the minister is pointing up the reason why some of us are concerned about the last three lines of this clause.

While the dangers of legislatures making mistakes have been pointed out—and rightly so, because we all admit that legislatures in this country have made mistakes, and may make them again—and while some of us who have some association with the labour movement are concerned about the wording of clauses of this kind, because we realize that more and more in this country the area of battle in respect of labour disputes is moving into the legal field, I suggest that may be why the labour congresses have shown such concern over the wording of these clauses.

I think the real reason some of us are so concerned about the last three lines is that we know that under some of the provincial legislation as we understand it a contract does not run out when it expires.

Perhaps I could illustrate by reading a portion of the amendment the minister has introduced, leaving out certain parts of it. By doing this I believe I can illustrate the point I have in mind. Hon. members will recall that the amendment sets forth the saving clauses (a) and (b). I shall read, then, what follows as I think it could be worded:

If, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps—

And I shall leave out some of the words.

—contained in a collective agreement are complied with, and effect given thereto.

I do not believe any responsible trade unionist would argue that labour should have the right simply to go out, willy-nilly, and break a contract, particularly if such things as causing serious bodily harm or shutting off the public utilities of a city are concerned. I do not think any responsible trade unionist in this country would argue that labour should have that right.

On the other hand, when we have signed an agreement with an employer and under the terms of our agreement we want to reopen the agreement for negotiation at the termination date, and we negotiate with the employer for two months or so, we do not want it to be held that if at the end of that time a stoppage of work occurs a criminal breach of contract has been committed.

The problem is that certain labour legislation is being introduced which, in effect, nullifies the right of labour to terminate its own contract. Leaving aside for the purposes of this discussion whether that is right or wrong, I still feel that if labour is put in a position where it may break some provincial legislation respecting its right to terminate its contract, it should be prosecuted only under the provincial legislation and should not, because of legislation passed in this House of Commons, become liable to prosecution for a criminal breach of contract.

This becomes of concern not only in situations where human life is endangered but also, as the hon. member for Kootenay East pointed out, in situations such as delaying the running of railway locomotives, or exposing valuable property to serious injury.

I think we can all be realistic enough to know that if there is a major strike in one of the leading industries in this country, a great deal of valuable property is going to be liable to serious injury. The very fact that that is so is the major weapon labour has to make its strike effective. Labour has to decide whether the loss of income it is going to suffer is worth while—has to weigh that against the amount of discomfort or injury that can be caused the employer.

That is just what a strike is. So far as I am concerned a strike is just the sort of thing that happens between nations when all negotiation breaks down and a state of war exists. Within the structure of economic life, that is what a strike is. I feel one has to face the reality of that situation. I know that in the last strike in which my own union was involved millions of feet of lumber were piled on the various docks and in the various yards of British Columbia, and they suffered serious injury. That was one of the main reasons in my opinion why the strike was so effective.

I cannot see why that should constitute a criminal breach of contract, in line with the underlying condition of this clause. My suggestion is that the clause be worded so that labour would be held responsible to observe its contract. Some time ago in the discussion the minister referred to wildcat strikes. Well, a wildcat strike that caused serious loss of life or bodily injury could possibly be considered as something subject to criminal charges concerning criminal breach of contract. But those last three lines as they are worded in effect mean that this parliament is, in many instances, taking away from the trade union bodies of this country the right to terminate their own contracts.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Barnett: That is the reason I am concerned about it. If the amendment suggested by the minister had read in the words that I quoted a few moments ago then I would not have been unhappy about it.

I have been rather interested in following the line of argument that the minister has pursued in suggesting that this clause is necessary, because it struck me in effect that he has been taking a very different tack from that which he has followed in the discussion of some other clauses of the code. On a number of occasions when the code has been discussed he has tried to suggest that we should not move into the field of provincial legislation by any provision of the code.

Mr. Knowles: He nods his head to that, too.

Mr. Barnett: On page 3632 of Hansard the minister said this during the discussion of the clause on pollution:

> For that reason we will find that if we are to draft a law of general application for Canada we are more severely restricted in the scope we can take in, because it has to be of general application.

I would submit that this is a case where that principle is equally as valid as he said it was in the case we were arguing at the time that he made those remarks. All in all, I feel the amendment he has proposed certainly does not meet the situation, and I think the minister would agree that it is the right and the duty of hon. members to take a good second look at this clause before it is put through; since it is possible that the labour congresses, in requesting that there be saving clauses, and in having provision made to put in saving clauses, may not have given as full consideration to all the possibilities as could have been given.

The position of the Canadian Congress of Labour has been pretty well stated, and without going into any of the details, I do know that on many levels those union bodies that are affiliated with the Trades and Labour Congress are giving a good deal of concern to this clause. I can say there are a good many of them who are not very happy. I am now speaking only of representations that have been made to me from within the province in which I reside. These things are in the minds of the trade union movements in British Columbia at the present time because there is a proposal to repeal and replace the conciliation and arbitration act that we have had in effect for a number of years by another act. Again without going into details, the fact that trade unionists from the province of Quebec have some concern as to the situation is something that we should give a good deal of attention to. Therefore all in all I do wish the minister could see his way clear to disentangle this saving clause from the present mixture with the legislative rights of the provinces.

Mr. Garson: Just for a moment may I reply to my hon. friend's remarks, the validity of which from his standpoint I recognize. I put this to him. He says that in several contexts I have been hesitant about legislating here with regard to any matters that came under the field of provincial jurisdiction, and that is quite right. But might I point out to him that neither the government, none of its supporters nor I am seeking at this point to write into the criminal law any new principle at all. This principle we are discussing has been in effect here for over 70 years; it is in effect now. The only question is as to whether it should be continued or not. There is no valid argument that I have heard that it should be discarded at this stage. At the present stage there is no saving clause at all. When we introduced Bill No. 7—

Mr. Knowles: Except the words "made by him".

Mr. Garson: Well, if my hon. friend regards that as a saving clause I will not argue with him on that point. I would not say I agree with him, but I leave him to that argument.

Mr. Knowles: And they have been deleted.

Mr. Garson: But when we introduced this Bill No. 7 to continue what has been in the law for over 70 years the trade union congresses appeared before our committee and said: We think we should have a saving clause in this legislation. And what we have said is—and I think it is fair—all right, we are quite willing to grant one. We did not say it quite that quickly. We considered it at some length, and then we agreed. Then, Mr. Chairman, after we had done some work upon it ourselves, knowing that the people who were directly concerned were the ones most likely, with their legal counsel of long years of experience, to have a pretty good idea as to what would be the proper wording of a saving clause of that sort, we went to them, that is to the employees' representatives, the trade union congresses, on the one hand and the employers' legal advisers on the other, and we conferred at great length with them in order to reach a wording which would provide the effective saving clause which they desire.

Now, I ask the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who seems to be a fair gentleman, what more can we do than that? When we bring that clause in here and it does not meet with the approval of my hon. friend and some of his colleagues, I cast no aspersion upon him at all when I say I doubt whether in the examination of the clause which they have performed in the last 2½ hours they are likely to have reached as carefully a considered view concerning it, as the counsel for the trades and labour congresses and the counsel for the Canadian Congress of Labour who presented briefs on it back on February 17, 1953, and have been considering it since that time, and have indicated in the letter which I read into the record, written to me after careful consideration on April 5, 1954, what their position was.

I mean no disrespect to my hon. friend when he offers the wording, or to any other hon. gentlemen who have offered wording of what they thought should be in the saving clause; I mean no disrespect to any of them at all when I say I would very much rather take the saving clause which has been worked out in these long consultations with the trade union congresses, and I think upon reflection that they will agree with me in that.

Mr. McIvor: I ask the minister whether the Trades and Labour Congress is agreeable to this.

Mr. Garson: Yes, indeed, they are certainly agreeable to it.

Mr. McIvor: I was once a member of the Trades and Labour Congress, and I was also at one time president of a union. I found the Trades and Labour Congress very sensible and reasonable folks, as much so as any other union in Canada.

Mr. Fulton: There is some confusion, I think, with respect to the matter of whether there is a change between the law in the section as it now stands and clause 365 of the bill which replaces section 499. Leaving out of account whether section 499 was mistakenly drafted, I would ask the minister certain questions which I believe will establish if there is a very important change in the law. I believe the minister will agree that clause 365 (1) paragraph (a) which covers the position of the person who wilfully breaks a contract and thereby endangers human life is not a new provision because it was covered by section 499 (1) paragraph (a). Is that correct?

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Fulton: Then clause 365 (1) paragraph (b) which covers everyone who wilfully breaks a contract having reasonable cause to believe that the consequences will be to cause serious bodily injury, is not, I suggest, a new offence, because that was covered also under section 499 (1) paragraph (a). Does the minister agree with that?

Mr. Garson: I do.

[Mr. Garson.]

Mr. Fulton: Then clause 365 (1) paragraph (c) covers the case of everyone who wilfully breaks a contract, etc., which has the effect of exposing valuable property to destruction or serious injury. I believe the minister will agree that that was covered under section 499 (1) paragraph (a) which covers the case of both employer and employee.

Mr. Garson: Right.

Mr. Fulton: Then I come to clause 365 (1) paragraph (d) which covers the case of everyone who wilfully breaks a contract the consequence of which is to deprive the inhabitants of a city or place, wholly or to a great extent, of their supply of light, power, gas or water. Now, I wonder if the minister will agree with me that that was covered in part by section 499, subsection 2.

Mr. Garson: Let me read it for a moment. Yes.

Mr. Fulton: My question is; is that covered by section 499—

Mr. Garson: Yes, in part.

Mr. Fulton: Would the minister agree there is an extension, or a difference if he likes, between section 499 subsection 2 and clause 365 (1) paragraph (d) to the effect that clause 365 (1) paragraph (d) now covers a breach of contract having effect where a breach of contract is committed by the employer or by the employee, whereas section 499 subsection 2 made a breach of such a contract an offence applied exclusively to employers.

Mr. Garson: No.

Mr. Fulton: Let me read the wording of section 499, subsection 2:

> Every municipal corporation or authority or company, bound, agreeing or assuming to supply any city, or any other place, or any part thereof, with electric light or power, gas or water, which wilfully breaks any contract made by such municipal corporation, authority or company, knowing or having reason to believe that the probable consequences of its so doing will be to deprive the inhabitants of that city or place or part thereof wholly, or to a great extent, of their supply of electric light or power, gas or water . . .

And so on. That surely cannot be taken to cover anything but a municipal corporation itself or a company or an authority?

Mr. Garson: I agree with that, but if my hon. friend will look at section 499 paragraph (b) he will see another coverage he might have overlooked.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, section 499 (1) paragraph (b) also covers paragraph (d) in part. Paragraph (d) was covered in part by two parts of section 499.

Mr. Garson: Would not the proper thing to say be that section 499 in subsection 1 paragraph (b) and subsection 2 purported to cover the whole field covered in clause 365 (1) paragraph (d).

Mr. Fulton: Yes, and paragraph (e) was covered previously by section 499 (1) paragraph (c).

Mr. Garson: That is right. Section 499 (1) (c) purported to cover what is now actually covered by clause 365 (1) (e).

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles: There is one other point I wish to make with respect to the wording of the amendment proposed by the government this afternoon. Like my hon. friend from Kootenay East I am concerned about the situation when contracts or agreements allegedly run out, and I note particularly the words, "contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement." My mind went back to something that happened in this parliament a few years ago and I sent out for a copy of chapter 1 of the statutes of the fall session of 1950. That was the bill known as the Maintenance of Railway Operation Act, the law that brought the railway strike of that fall to an end. In looking through this act I am reminded of one feature which was omitted from the legislation, and which we were very glad to see omitted, and that was that there was no provision for any penalties in that law in the event those affected failed to carry out the provisions of the law. The law said those affected shall do such and such, but, I suppose as a matter of tact, no penalties were included in the law.

Hon. members will recall some of us were against this legislation at the time. But I am not seeking to revive that debate. However, I note in section 5, subsection 4, of the Maintenance of Railway Operation Act of 1950 there is a rather lengthy wording, which I need not quote in full, but which says, in effect, that after the arbitrator has decided on any matter that has not been agreed on between the railway company and a union the railway company and the union shall give effect to such decision and conclude a collective agreement. It then goes on to say, and I quote:

> . . . and until they do so the collective agreement to which this act applies to which they are parties shall be deemed . . . to have been amended . . .

And so on. My point is that there is a case where a collective agreement, a contract, was amended, not by the parties concerned but by a law passed by this parliament. This parliament included in the law this provision that if the parties did not get together and do such and such a thing by a certain time and did not change their contract accordingly it was by law deemed to have been changed anyway.

Now I ask a question. It is hypothetical because the men went back to work and stayed at work and things seem to have been a little better since. But supposing the clause which is now before us in the name of the government had been on the statute books then. Am I not correct in assuming that these workmen would have been in a position, had they failed to carry out the terms of a contract deemed by law to be in effect, where they would have been guilty of a criminal breach of contract and subject to the penalty set out in this clause, which is five years.

It is that sort of thing, Mr. Chairman, that I find questionable about this phrase referring to contracts deemed by law to be in effect.

Mr. Garson: It was for precisely that reason that in working out any of these saving clauses we wanted to confer with the trade union congresses and their counsel. I have no excess of modesty when I say that their counsel know a great deal more about trade union law than I do. We wanted to make sure that, when they had requested a saving clause and when we had agreed in principle that it was proper that they should have it, we should confer with them as to the wording of the saving clause we were prepared to agree to. As to this railway case that my hon. friend has raised, I do not remember the details of it with sufficient precision to express any opinion. Perhaps he may remember it. As I recall it that statute was passed to carry into effect a sort of informal agreement—was it not—between all concerned to provide for the carrying on of the arbitration?

Mr. Knowles: No. That statute put people back to work. It amended the contract to a certain extent right away and left either to agreement or to settlement by an arbitrator the disputed points.

Mr. Garson: Yes; that is right.

Mr. Knowles: The position was that if the disputed points were not settled by agreement between the parties, the arbitrator was to make the decision and the contract was to be deemed to be amended by virtue of what the arbitrator decided.

Mr. Garson: Yes, that is right. Can my hon. friend think of a single case in which there is in existence in any province in Canada today any legislation that would have the same or a similar effect?

Mr. Knowles: I hope there is not, but there might be. The minister may smile, if he wishes; but that is the whole point; there might be.

Mr. Garson: I think if my hon. friend asks some of his lawyer friends or if he, not being a bad lawyer himself for an amateur, looks up the law himself, he will find that there is none. As I say, I do not know what precautions we could take or what attitude we could take that could be more fair than the one we have taken. I will admit that to the Canadian Congress of Labour it might not seem fair that we should not give effect to their request to forget all about this provision that for over 70 years had been in the law and just to wipe it out entirely. But then we could not do that and did not see our way clear to strike out these last three lines in the clause 365(2).

Mr. Knowles: Incidentally that is the C.C.L.'s second choice, is it not?

Mr. Garson: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Knowles: And it is also the second choice of the C.C.C.L.?

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: And it is also the second choice of a great many T.L.C. local union organizations?

Mr. Garson: I do not know as to that.

Mr. Knowles: I do.

Mr. Garson: I have been most frank with the trade union congress, with the employers' representatives and with the members of this committee in stating exactly what we have done. Short of taking out of the law this section which has been there over 70 years, I think we have done that which is in the best interests of everybody, including the members of the trade union congresses.

Mr. Fulton: Perhaps the minister and I could continue this discussion we were having previously, in which I said I thought I would be able to get him to agree that there is a change in the law. We had got down to subsection (d) of clause 365, having agreed that in the first three subsections there was no change. Then when it came to subsection (d) we agreed that it was covered in part, with respect to employers only, by section 499 (2). Then the minister referred to section 499(1)(b) and said that that covered the same point as is now contained in clause 365(1)(d).

Mr. Garson: No; I certainly did not say that it covered that; I said it purported to cover it, which is very different.

[Mr. Garson.]

Mr. Fulton: Purported to cover?

Mr. Garson: Yes.

Mr. Fulton: I am glad the minister corrected me. Will the minister agree with me that section 499 (1) (b) applies to companies making contracts to supply municipalities essentially and does not cover a contract made between an employee working in, let us say, an electric light plant, operating a dynamo, and his employer because the employee is not a party to any contract to supply electricity to a city.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I have already said about four times that one of the difficulties in this connection was that the draftsmen in 1906, in revising this statute, made this mistake to which my hon. friend is now referring and by so doing made section 499 (c) not applicable to employees.

Mr. Fulton: I think the minister meant (b); he said (c).

Mr. Garson: I meant section 499 (b); they made it not applicable to employees; and similarly in (c). But that is the point that we were clearing up in the ordinary course of consolidating this statute. My hon. friend is quite right in that.

Mr. Fulton: To that extent, as I say,—without rehearsing the historical arguments or what was the intent of parliament back in 1906 whenever this section 499 (b) was first enacted in that form—the fact is that clause 365 (1) (d) extends to employees a liability for breach of contract covered in that group which previously did not apply to them; that is, the criminal law for breach of contract covered in that class of contracts did not previously apply to employees.

Mr. Garson: What clause 365 in Bill No. 7 does is this. It restores the conditions of the law, in so far as employees of utilities and railways are concerned, to that condition in which it was from 1877 to 1892 and from 1892 to 1906; and in so doing, it changes the position in which they were from 1906 until the present time.

Mr. Fulton: That is the whole point.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Fulton: I think that is a very serious point because it certainly makes a change in the law as it has been for the last 48 years. There can be no question about that, whether it was accidental in 1906 or not.

Mr. Garson: I am not arguing that there is any question about it. I agree with my hon. friend.

Mr. Fulton: I am glad the minister agrees because there have been occasions this afternoon when he has said "This has always been the law"; that is, that what is provided in clause 365 has always been the law. But it has not always been the law. It has not been the law for the last forty-eight years with respect to that particular class of contracts and the position of employees under those contracts. It therefore seems to me that there is room for question as to whether this is the right method of covering employees under that class of contracts. I suppose that the object is to prevent wildcat strikes and things that might almost amount to sabotage; in other words, pulling the switches in the power plant and suddenly depriving a city of its utilities without having gone through the proper processes of conciliation and so forth.

I wonder whether it is the proper thing to make that matter the subject of criminal breach of contract or whether, if that should ever happen or be done with that motive, it would not more appropriately fall within the class of prohibited acts. I wonder whether, even though it might have been by accident, section 499 was not better legislation than is clause 365 and whether, if the object is to deal with what amounts to sabotage, you should not deal with it in some other way rather than by trying this extraordinary method of making it a criminal breach of contract. At the same time that you do that you make it extremely difficult for men who are employed in that type of work to exercise what has been and is still regarded as their proper legal right to take advantage of a strike if they go through the processes of conciliation, arbitration and so on.

Now they can be prosecuted and can be required to show that they have complied with every step. All sorts of obstacles can be placed in their way in complying with those steps. I must say I think it might be better to go back to 499. Then there would be no question. No congress, nobody, employer or employee, union, company or anybody else could object to it because that has been the law for the last forty-eight years. If it is felt that there is a danger of wildcat strikes by irresponsible badly-led unions pulling the switches and walking out without a real industrial dispute ever having arisen, surely that should be included under the classes of prohibited acts. In other words, surely we do not want to cover in the criminal law the consequence of a genuine industrial disagreement. That is a matter of negotiation and bargaining. You give rise to all sorts of misunderstandings and misinterpretations if you put it in as a part of the criminal law.

Surely if your object is to prevent—well, I will be frank—communist-led unions from pulling the switches as an act of intimidation and violence, making it a criminal breach of contract is not the way to do it; the way to do it is to make it a prohibited act. I think you are mixing the two branches of law hopelessly by trying to do it in this way. I would sooner see clause 365 revoked, section 499 restored, and action taken under the prohibited acts section to deal with the thing which I think the minister must admit is really in the minds of the government when they are trying to do it in this indirect way.

Mr. MacInnis: I would not want anything I have said today to be taken as meaning that I believe that trade unions are above the law or that wildcat strikes should be countenanced. When strikes of that kind do occur today they are very often called primarily for political reasons, and we should not have protection in the law for that kind of thing. But we want the protection of the law for what has become a customary and traditional exercise of trade union activity.

I must say I am in agreement with the Minister of Justice when he says that he places a high value on the opinions of the executives of the national trade union bodies and their legal advisers. While I might hold a different opinion at any time I would have to hold it very strongly before I would go so far as to oppose their wishes. I want to ask the minister whether the three national labour bodies have asked for the change contained in the amendment now before us from what was in the bill when it came from the parliamentary committee. The provision found in clause 365 of the bill is in these words:

> . . . if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law have been taken through negotiation, collective bargaining, conciliation and arbitration.

What I want to know is whether the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, the Canadian Congress of Labour and the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour asked that those words be changed to what is found in the amendment, namely:

> . . . if, before the stoppage of work occurs, all steps provided by law with respect to the settlement of industrial disputes are taken and any provision for the final settlement of differences, without stoppage of work, contained in or by law deemed to be contained in a collective agreement is complied with and effect given thereto.

It seems to me that the words of the saving phrase as it appears in clause 365 of Bill No. 7 are quite simple and easy to understand, but it is an altogether different thing when you take the words of the amendment put before the committee by the minister this afternoon. Did the labour bodies ask for this change, and if they did not who insisted on the change being made?

Mr. Garson: We have seen these different labour bodies separately and together on different occasions. The wording which I moved this afternoon, as you can tell by the fact that we had to move it after the bill had been printed, is different from the one that we had made up our minds to use at the time the bill was printed. The present wording that we have here was the result of a meeting which was held in my office on Friday last with representatives of the three labour congresses and had to do with a number of suggestions, including the suggestion of a clause with respect to 365 which we had received a short time before from the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour. When we got these we called in the other two groups to make sure that if possible anything we did from that point on would have the concurrence of all three.

At that meeting with the three congresses this wording was discussed as an alternative that we might use in this connection. We asked the Canadian Congress of Labour to take it away, examine it, and then write and let us know the order of their preference in connection with section 365. It was pursuant to that arrangement that we got the letter that I read into the record earlier this afternoon. That was after this wording had been discussed at the meeting and they had taken it away and considered it. They then wrote this letter to me.

The Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour did not write a letter but my assistant, Mr. MacLeod, was in oral consultation with them this morning and they indicated to him the information I read on the record so far as their stand was concerned. That is the way in which this wording was arrived at. It is the one which was discussed at the last meeting and which the Canadian Congress of Labour took away, had a look at, and then wrote me respecting it in these terms.

Mr. Knowles: In other words, this wording was not asked for by these bodies, but they have all seen it?

Mr. Garson: They have all which?

Mr. Knowles: They have all seen it.

Mr. Garson: Oh yes, seen it and discussed it at great length.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Knowles: And they have all categorized it somewhere down the list?

Mr. Garson: No, I would not say that. I would not think that would be true of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada. They were there and took no exception to it.

Mr. Knowles: The Trades and Labour Congress took no exception to this wording. The Canadian Congress of Labour accepted it as a third choice. Their first choice was no clause 365 at all. Their second choice was clause 365 without the last three lines that are now there.

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: All that can be said on behalf of the Canadian Congress of Labour—I am trying to interpret what the minister said—with respect to this amendment is that it is preferable to the old section 499, in their view.

Mr. Garson: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Kamloops questions that. I suppose the most I can say is that I am surprised at that. As for the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour, all we have, with respect, is hearsay evidence. It seems to me it is not very satisfactory. In view of the fact the minister has gone to great pains to tell us of his efforts to meet the views of labour and very eminent counsel, when we come to this extremely important question we have an amendment moved by the government at the eleventh hour on which the views of the various labour bodies are conditional, and it turns out to be a wording that is not satisfactory to us on the floor of the house.

Mr. Herridge: In view of the fact I quoted this afternoon from a brief written by Mr. Hurley, a barrister and solicitor in Vancouver, I want to explain, in view of the rather strong language Mr. Hurley used that somewhat annoyed the minister, that I find I am quite correct in saying he is a brilliant defence counsel. I have been informed also from a reliable source that he is a prominent member of the Liberal party and his wife is a perennial organizer.

Mr. Noseworthy: As the minister well knows, I opposed this clause in committee last year, and I am still opposed to it. I fail to see where the amendment suggested by the minister improves the section in any way. With his legal mind, he may be able to see that. The only advantage that I can see in the amendment he offers is that it will give lawyers something more to argue about.

I am opposed to this, Mr. Chairman, because as long as the code is geared to provincial labour laws employees will be able to enjoy certain rights in one province which will be a criminal offence in other provinces. You cannot escape that fact. In my opinion, when we are making a Criminal Code we should make sure that what is a crime in British Columbia is a crime in Ontario, Prince Edward Island or anywhere else. So long as this measure is geared to the provincial labour laws and dependent upon abiding by those laws, workmen in some provinces are going to be able to enjoy rights which, if workmen in other provinces attempt to enjoy, will be an offence under the Criminal Code.

On that basis I opposed it last year, and notwithstanding the executive council of the Trades and Labour Congress, I still oppose it. I might tell the minister that although he may take some comfort from the fact the executive council of the Trades and Labour Congress has given him their blessing on this section, the rank and file of trade unionists not only in that congress but in others who know anything about this clause are opposed to it. I have communications from locals within the Trades and Labour Congress indicating they do not go along with their own national executive on this question. The other congresses do not go along with them. The sum total of the provision in this Criminal Code is, whether the government wanted it or not, that they have a sharper and much more effective instrument for the government and the police to use against the unemployed in the next depression than they had in the last.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Gillis: Now that that amendment is out of the way—

Mr. Fulton: Well, I have an amendment—

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Kamloops rising to speak on the amendment?

Mr. Fulton: No, I rose, Mr. Chairman, to speak on the clause as amended and then I understood the amendment had not carried.

The Chairman: The amendment has carried, and then I gave the floor to the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. Gillis: Now that the amendment is out of the way, I may say that I indicated when I made a few observations on this clause this afternoon that I was sending over to the Minister of Justice an amendment to subclause 2. He has had an opportunity of looking at it and I am wondering whether he might move it or whether I should move it. While there is a lot of validity to the argument that you are going to get different administrations in each province, nevertheless we cannot legislate here for the voters in British Columbia or Quebec; that is their responsibility.

What I am trying to do is to at least pin the responsibility for action under this clause upon the attorney general of the province in order that he will have the responsibility for seeing that the labour laws of the province are carried out and that employers are not able to circumvent the laws of the province. It is a simple little addition that is in a lot of clauses in the code now. I am just wondering whether the minister would be prepared to move this amendment or I should move it. It reads as follows:

> That clause 365 of Bill No. 7 be amended by adding thereto immediately after subclause 2 thereof the following subclause:
>
> (3) No proceedings shall be instituted under this section without the consent of the attorney general.

It might mean renumbering all the clauses and this might have to be subclause 2, and the last amendment we carried might be subclause 3. I shall leave that to the judgment of the minister. If he wants to move the amendment, that is all right. I know that governments do not look with favour upon someone amending their legislation.

Mr. Garson: I have no objection to my hon. friend moving that amendment, Mr. Chairman. The argument is sometimes put forward that a clause of this sort might be illegitimately used by an unscrupulous employer who could not get consent to proceedings under the labour code and would then turn around and make a flank attack by police court proceedings. An amendment of this sort would prevent that, and so far as the government is concerned we have no objection to it. If my hon. friend wants to move it we shall accept it.

Mr. Gillis: I would move that, Mr. Chairman, seconded by the hon. member for York South.

Amendment agreed to.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Chairman: The committee was discussing clause 365. Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, before the clause carries, there is one point which I think, for the sake of the record, should be straightened out. If the clause had been already carried I might have had to raise this point on a question of privilege; but since we are still on the clause I can do it as part of the debate.

This afternoon, as the minister realizes, we were a bit surprised with respect to some of the things that he said as to the attitude of certain of the trade union people toward the amendment which he proposed to clause 365. In particular I was somewhat surprised at his indicating—perhaps it was a case of a misunderstanding between us—that the Canadian Congress of Labour preferred the amendment which he proposed this afternoon to the old section 499.

This afternoon I questioned the minister on that point, and I have been checking the record to see what we said. I find I asked the minister if it was clear that the C.C.L. people, as first choice, preferred no clause 365 at all, and the minister said that was the case. Then I suggested that their second choice, as he was indicating it to us from the letter he read from Donald MacDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Canadian Congress of Labour, was clause 365, without the three last lines. The minister agreed. Then here is the point where we got into difficulty: I asked the minister if, as a third choice, he was telling us that the Canadian Congress of Labour preferred his amendment, as he moved it this afternoon, to the old section 499. To that the minister's reply was, "That is right".

I might say that I have talked this matter over on the telephone during the recess, since six o'clock, with Donald MacDonald and with Maurice Wright, of the Canadian Congress of Labour, and they feel that the matter should be cleared up. When it came to their third choice, they preferred 365, as it was set out in the printed version that we have, or as it was amended this afternoon by the Minister of Justice, to the old provision as it was prior to 1906. But they did not prefer 365 in any form to the old section 499. And what they wish to have clear on the record is that in the recent negotiations 499, as it now is in the existing code, was not offered to them by the Minister of Justice. Indeed, Mr. Maurice Wright has sent to me, in case there is any necessity to produce the evidence, the two typewritten drafts which were offered to them. One of them is in the form in which it was passed this afternoon, and the other was a redraft of section 521 of the Criminal Code of 1892, as it existed prior to the revision of 1906. And it is that redraft of that old section 521 that the Canadian Congress of Labour rejected, out of hand.

[Mr. Knowles.]

When the minister put Donald MacDonald's letter on the record, that was clear. But in the later discussion it did seem to me the minister suggested—in fact his answer was specific in his reply to me—that the Canadian Congress of Labour preferred the amendment of this afternoon to the old 499. They tell me that if the old 499 had been offered to them they would have accepted that as their first or second choice, but 499 was never offered to them and therefore did not figure in that letter.

In other words, to get these choices lined up, what was passed by the house this afternoon was actually their fourth choice, so far as the Canadian Congress of Labour is concerned.

Mr. Garson: I am very thankful indeed that my hon. friend has raised this matter, because otherwise there would have been a pretty serious misunderstanding between him and me. I thought I had made it clear before my hon. friend asked the question—his first question to which he has just referred—that the old section 499 was out of the question because it was so defective in its application to the utilities and railways that it was completely useless, so far as they were concerned, for the purposes for which it was passed.

When my hon. friend asked his question —I know he did not intend it as a trap— what I had in mind, once 499 was eliminated as an alternative, was the restoration, as I thought I had already made clear two or three times, of the text of the code of 1892, in which code this section 521, which is referred to in Mr. Donald MacDonald's letter, is the relevant section. Section 521 of the 1892 code conforms to 499 of the present code which, in turn, becomes 365 of the bill before us. I must look up the blue copies and see the number of the section to which my hon. friend was referring; but certainly I had completely eliminated section 499 of the present code from my mind and thought we were discussing only 521 of the 1892 code. And that, of course, is the only one referred to in Mr. Donald MacDonald's letter which I put on the record. And I put myself in the position where I could not very well misrepresent the contents of the letter, because I had put it on the record. That was the first thing I did in connection with it.

Mr. Knowles: What was seriously wrong was the minister's statement that the Canadian Congress of Labour preferred this afternoon's amendment to the old 499. As the minister now makes it clear, the old 499 was not offered to them.

Mr. Garson: No, it never was.

Mr. Knowles: If it had been, it would have been their first or second choice.

Mr. Garson: It would probably be that, of course, because as regards about two-thirds of the whole section it would be quite inoperative. They might have preferred to have a section which was thus inoperative. But my hon. friend can see, if he reflects upon the matter at all, that there would be no purpose whatever from our standpoint in offering to the Canadian Congress of Labour a section 499, all the references in which to utilities and railways were completely defective. Why would we offer that?

Mr. Knowles: The minister will realize that this puts a quite different complexion on the significance of Donald MacDonald's letter.

Mr. Garson: Well, that is not correct. I do not know how I could have been more fair to the Canadian Congress of Labour than to read into the record their written letter.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Fulton: There will be an interesting opportunity afforded now, because I propose to move an amendment that 499 be restored. We had it clearly established this afternoon, as a result of some questions and answers before six o'clock, that the present section 365 changes the law as it has been in operation since 1906.

Now the minister has said that what came into operation in 1906 came into operation by mistake, by oversight, by error in draftsmanship. That is very interesting. But I did not hear it suggested this afternoon, and I have not heard it suggested since 1945, when I came here, nor have I heard it suggested that the suggestion was made at any time prior to 1945, that section 499 was inadequate, and that there may be many defects in it of a nature which the government would have liked to cure, or that they might have proceeded under the cured section but found themselves unable to proceed because of the defect in that section.

If the minister would tell us, which he has not yet done, that there have been cases of wildcat strikes where they felt there was a serious gap in the law in that there was no section under which the situation could be adequately dealt with, they were trying to fill a loophole, then the thing might take on a very different complexion; but we have had no such suggestion this afternoon, nor have we been told that the law enforcement officers were conscious of serious defects from the point of view of enforcement and the preservation of law and order. We have been told that when they came to examine the situation they found that an error was made in 1906.

I suggest that the whole of the suggestion this afternoon establishes conclusively that the error, if there was an error in 1906, has created no anomalous situations; that it has not left the country a prey to disorders which should have been dealt with and which could not be dealt with, and so on. Therefore we are left with the stark and simple fact that we are creating a very substantial alteration in the law as it has existed for the last 48 years, and that we are now asked to bring into the realm of criminal law certain actions on the part of men who work in industry which up to now it has not been possible to deal with by way of criminal prosecution.

I stated this afternoon that the proper way to deal with these things was under the ordinary civil law regarding damages for breach of contract; or alternatively the penalties which might follow under provincial statutes dealing with labour relations or, if it was in the field of federal jurisdiction, which might follow from the statutes dealing with federal labour relations. I remain convinced that it is quite inappropriate to try to mix up the two sorts of law and get labour relations confounded and confused with illegal breaches of contracts.

For that reason I repeat the suggestion I made earlier, that if what is desired is to make it possible to deal with wildcat strikes which amount to acts of sabotage, then we should take the steps of dealing with them under the category of prohibited acts which is a well-established category of offences under the Criminal Code. That is where they should be dealt with, and the matter of the relation between employers and employees should not be a matter of criminal prosecution; it should be the subject of civil action. On the basis of that philosophy I therefore move, Mr. Chairman, that clause 365 be deleted.

Perhaps I might explain the purpose of my amendment. It is to delete clause 365 and substitute for it section 499 of the present Criminal Code. It will be appreciated that section 499 is a lengthy one. In single-spaced typing it occupies one and a quarter pages of ordinary size paper. But I may say to you, sir, and to the committee, that I have had this carefully compared with what is now in the Criminal Code as section 499, and I therefore suggest that I should be absolved from the necessity of reading the amendment in full, and that when you put the amendment it would not be necessary for you to read it in full, but that we should deal with it on the basis that clause 365 be deleted and the following substituted therefor, and then to move the substitution in exactly the same words as appear in section 499. I appreciate that that will make necessary, if it were carried, a consequential amendment to a group of sections starting with section 49 on page 20 of the draft bill before us. That is the way I think it should be dealt with. We should deal with these possible disorders, if they should occur, under a group of sections covering the subject of prohibited acts. That is the way we feel it should be dealt with, not in the field of criminal liability or breach of contract.

Mr. Knowles: As one who prepared a similar amendment which we too were going to move, I wonder whether I might ask the hon. member for Kamloops if he left out the reference to hard labour and also whether he changed "His Majesty" to "Her Majesty"?

Mr. Fulton: Yes, I have changed the words "His Majesty" to "Her Majesty", but I did not leave out the reference to hard labour, for the reason that we also have had some discussion of this question with union organizations interested, and it was made quite clear to us that they would be very glad to see the restoration of section 499 in its present form; and they realized that if that were done, then the fact that it is necessary to provide some method of dealing with this question of wildcat strikes, that is now provided for by the section, would have to be dealt with somewhere else in the code; and they feel that the group of sections dealing with prohibited acts was the appropriate place to deal with it, and indeed the more appropriate place to deal with it, than in a section dealing with breach of contract. I am not going to quote anybody, but I am prepared to state and do state that the suggestion now put forward carries the approval of two of the labour organizations of Canada and I put it forward in exactly the same form as it is now for the purpose of avoiding controversies over matters of detail.

Mr. Garson: Before my hon. friend takes his seat may I ask him whether his proposal is to delete clause 365 from the bill and substitute for it the whole text of section 499 as it appears in the present code?

Mr. Fulton: That is right.

Mr. Garson: I ask the question because I find his act incredible. All afternoon we discussed a point which no person has disputed, because they could not, namely, that ever since 1906 section 499 (1) (b) and (c) have made no sense at all; they are just blithering nonsense.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. Fulton: No, they are not.

Mr. Garson: If that is what my hon. friend wishes to put on the statute books, let us just read them.

The Chairman: Order. I cannot agree that I should not read in full the amendment which has been proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops. I thought I should say that before any further discussion took place, unless I have the consent of the committee to refrain from so doing. However, before reading the amendment, or before requesting the consent of the committee, I should like to draw attention to one question which is causing me some concern at the moment.

We have already agreed to two amendments which were put this afternoon, one to subclause 2 and one adding subclause 3. I would draw the attention of hon. members to citation 669 of the third edition of Beauchesne's rules and forms, which reads in part as follows:

> Each clause is a distinct question and must be separately discussed. When a clause has been agreed to it is irregular to discuss it again on the consideration of another clause.

And here more particularly may I draw the attention of hon. members to these words:

> Amendments must be made in the order of the lines of a clause. If the latter part of a clause is amended, it is not competent for a member to move to amend an earlier or antecedent part of the same clause.

Now, we have already amended subclause 2. I would think that the effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops would be also to amend the antecedent part of subclause 1. Therefore, I am myself in some doubt at the moment as to whether I can accept the amendment, and as to whether it is in order.

Mr. Fulton: May I point out, Mr. Chairman, in reply to that point of order that the effect of the amendment is not to amend the clause in particular or in detail but, as is said in the words of the amendment, to delete the clause entirely. It reads: "That clause 365 be deleted and the following substituted therefor." Therefore, I am not seeking in this amendment to amend an earlier subclause of clause 365, or indeed any particular subclause. I am moving that the whole clause be deleted and another clause be substituted therefor.

I have waited until the other amendments were disposed of because if I had felt these amendments made the clause generally acceptable then it would not have been necessary to move this amendment. But these amendments do not, in my view, make the clause acceptable. I am therefore moving that the clause be deleted. Perhaps my amendment should read that clause 365, as amended, be deleted and the following substituted therefor.

I respectfully submit that the citation to which you have referred does not apply. If I were now seeking to amend subclause 1 of clause 365 then the citation would apply, but I am not doing that. As the text of my amendment makes clear I am seeking to delete the whole clause.

Now, sir, with respect to the question of whether Your Honour should read the whole amendment it is quite immaterial to me. I was merely seeking to save the time of the committee and I would point out to any hon. member who wishes to know what is in my amendment that he can find it in its exact form simply by referring to section 499 of the present Criminal Code. I therefore suggest it is not necessary for Your Honour to read the amendment, though it is a matter of no moment to me.

Mr. Garson: My hon. friend pointed out a few moments ago, and quite correctly, that section 499 in the present code in subsection 2 makes it clear that the municipality or company supplying light, power or gas is liable under this section if it wilfully breaks a contract to supply that gas, and therefore the position of the employing company is taken care of by subclause 2 of clause 365. However, subparagraphs (b) and (c) of section 499 of the present code deal with the case of the employee of a utility company or the employee of the railway company wilfully breaking his contract of service. I think it will be seen when I read the language of that subclause that it would be nonsensical for this parliament to pass the amendment which my hon. friend from Kamloops seeks to put on the statute books to read in this way:

> Every one is guilty of an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction before two justices and liable . . .

And so on, who—

> (b) being bound, agreeing or assuming, under any contract made by him with any municipal corporation or authority, or with any company, to supply any city or any other place, or any part thereof, with electric light or power, gas or water, . . . wilfully breaks such contract . . .

In other words, the section dealing with the employee defines him as being a person who is going to supply power, electricity or water, and it is because of that drafting blunder in the 1906 revised statutes that it is necessary in the present bill to bring in language which cures that defect.

Then, so far as railway contracts are concerned, it reads:

> Every one is guilty who
> (c) being bound, agreeing or assuming, under any contract made by him with a railway company, or with Her Majesty, or any one on behalf of Her Majesty, in connection with a government railway on which Her Majesty's mails, or passengers or freight are carried, to carry Her Majesty's mails, or to carry passengers or freight, . . . wilfully breaks such contract . . .

Obviously the employees of a railway company do not themselves make a contract to carry Her Majesty's mails. George Jones the conductor, or Bill Smith the locomotive engineer, does not make a contract to carry Her Majesty's mails. It is because of the defective manner in which those contracts are ascribed to the railway employees rather than to the railway company that this section is defective and inoperative. That is what we are trying to cure in the bill now before us. What my hon. friend's amendment would do would be to strike out the efforts we have made to cure these serious defects and restore this defective legislation to the statute books. On that ground alone I believe that the course which he recommends is ridiculous and that the hon. member's amendment should therefore be defeated.

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, if this amendment is being accepted for discussion I believe it is important that it should be read into the record. I believe there has been a great deal of confusion because—

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I was at fault. I understood the Minister of Justice was rising to a point of order. Do I understand the Minister of Justice wishes to speak to a point of order?

Mr. Garson: No, Mr. Chairman. I do not wish to interrupt my hon. friend's point of order.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, I believe there has been a great deal of confusion in the minds of hon. members in that they do not know what appears in the present section of the code.

The Chairman: Order. Then I must read the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Fulton: I would point out, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Fulton: —that the text of the amendment will appear in Hansard.

The Chairman: Order. Apparently there is not unanimous consent so I must read the amendment. It is moved by Mr. Fulton:

That clause 365 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"Every one is guilty of an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction before two justices and liable on conviction to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars or to three months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, who

(a) wilfully breaks any contract made by him knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to endanger human life, or to cause serious bodily injury, or to expose valuable property, whether real or personal, to destruction or serious injury; or

(b) being bound, agreeing or assuming, under any contract made by him with any municipal corporation or authority, or with any company, to supply any city or any other place, or any part thereof, with electric light or power, gas or water, wilfully breaks such contract knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to deprive the inhabitants of that city or place, or part thereof, wholly or to a great extent, of their supply of power, light, gas or water; or

(c) being bound, agreeing or assuming, under any contract made by him with a railway company, or with Her Majesty or any one on behalf of Her Majesty, in connection with a government railway on which Her Majesty's mails, or passengers or freight are carried, to carry Her Majesty's mails, or to carry passengers or freight, wilfully breaks such contract knowing or having reason to believe that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to delay or prevent the running of any locomotive engine, or tender, or freight or passenger train or car, on the railway.

2. Every municipal corporation or authority or company, bound, agreeing or assuming to supply any city, or any other place, or any part thereof, with electric light or power, gas or water, which wilfully breaks any contract made by such municipal corporation, authority, or company knowing or having reason to believe that the probable consequences of its so doing will be to deprive the inhabitants of that city or place or part thereof wholly, or to a great extent, of their supply of electric light or power, gas or water, is liable to a penalty not exceeding one thousand dollars.

3. Every railway company, bound, agreeing or assuming to carry Her Majesty's mails, or to carry passengers or freight, which wilfully breaks any contract made by such railway company, knowing or having reason to believe that the probable consequences of so doing will be to delay or prevent the running of any locomotive engine or tender, or freight or passenger train or car on the railway, is liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars.

4. It is not material whether any offence defined in this section is committed from malice conceived against the person, corporation, authority or company with which the contract is made or otherwise.

That is the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops. I previously expressed some doubt as to whether or not this amendment offended against citation 669 in that it might be deemed to refer to an antecedent part of a clause after a later part of the clause had already been amended. I do not think I will make a ruling at this time. I think possibly I will allow the amendment to stand.

Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment proposed by Mr. Fulton. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment negatived: Yeas, 33; nays, 68.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Barnett: I do not intend further to debate the clause at this time, Mr. Chairman, but I should like to move the following amendment:

That clause 365 of Bill No. 7 be amended by deleting therefrom subclause 2 as amended and by substituting therefor the following:

"2. No person wilfully breaks a contract within the meaning of subsection 1 by reason only of

(a) being an employee of an employer he stops work as a result of the failure of his employer and himself to agree upon any matter relating to his employment, or

(b) he stops work as a result of his having part in a combination of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees."

The Chairman: Hon. members will recall that I expressed some doubt whether the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kamloops was in order by reason of citation 669. If I may, I should like to read the latter words of that citation once more:

Amendments must be made in the order of the lines of a clause. If the latter part of a clause is amended, it is not competent for a member to move to amend an earlier or antecedent part of the same clause.

May I point out to hon. members that we have already amended the latter part of this section, according to the amendment this afternoon. I therefore must declare this amendment to be out of order. Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause as amended agreed to on division.

Clauses 366 and 367 agreed to.

The Chairman: We now proceed to group 1, clause 206.

Mr. Garson: I wonder if I might have the unanimous consent of the committee to reopen clause 410. I do so because, in the conference last Friday to which I have already referred, representations were received by us from the Canadian and Catholic Confederation of Labour with regard to the effect of providing clause 410 of the bill in place of section 590 of the present code. They were deeply concerned lest in this clause which is very important from the standpoint of organized labour, the change in wording which was effected by clause 410 in some ways prejudiced the rights of labour at present enjoyed under section 590. This argument had not previously been addressed to us—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the minister but may I ask whether the minister has leave to revert to clause 410?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 410—Saving.

Mr. Garson: As I was saying, this argument had not been previously addressed to us but it seemed to us in the government that in a bill which will require for its effective operation a feeling on the part of those concerned that they have been fairly dealt with by it, it was probably better to restore the language of section 590, rather than to have any misunderstanding in the matter. We cleared this matter with the other two labour congresses, and I would accordingly ask my colleague the Minister of Labour to move the following amendment:

That subclause (1) of clause 410 be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"410 (1) No person shall be convicted of the offence of conspiracy by reason only that he

(a) refuses to work with a workman or for an employer, or

(b) does any act or causes any act to be done for the purpose of a trade combination, unless such act is an offence expressly punishable by law.

Mr. Gregg: I so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fulton: Will the minister explain to us what is the effect of this transposition, because that is all it is. It is the taking of the words "except where otherwise expressly provided by law" from the introductory words of the subsection and putting them in at the end in the form "unless such act is an offence expressly punishable by law" and in addition eliminating the words "in restraint of trade" where they qualified previously the word "conspiracy", the phrase being "conspiracy in restraint of trade". What is the effect of that transposition?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there is any real change in substance by this new wording. The fact of the matter is that with respect to section 590 of the Criminal Code, which in effect says that a trade union shall not be a combination in restraint of trade—that is the great principle for which the trade unions have always fought—I think there was a suspicion—

Mr. Knowles: The minister keeps saying 590. Does he not mean 409?

Mr. Garson: I mean 590 of the present code—that in changing from the wording of 590 of the present code to 410 of the bill the new wording had changed the sense. Therefore we said: Well, we will not argue on that score; we will change it back to the old wording. That is what we have done. Since there was no change in substance in changing from the wording of 590 in the present code to 410 in the bill, there is no change in substance by changing back again, and it reassures the congresses concerned that their rights are still intact.

Mr. Fulton: In other words, this is one occasion on which the minister is prepared to admit that the draftsmen of the old statute did not do such a bad job after all. On that basis I would be quite prepared to consent to the amendment.

Mr. Garson: I was not admitting that. I was simply saying—

Mr. Casselman: Do not talk it out.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

The Chairman: We will now proceed with group 1, and the first clause is clause 206.

On clause 206—Punishment for murder.

Mr. Knowles: Before this clause is put to the committee, may I say that this is one of the clauses that I asked to be allowed to stand in case the committee dealing with capital and corporal punishment and lotteries should happen to finish its work before we reached this stage of our dealings with the Criminal Code. That has not happened, so I realize that the committee and the house must decide whether or not to re-enact this clause which provides for capital punishment. It is not my purpose to endeavour to launch a debate on the question now but I wish to indicate that, as far as I am concerned, if the house wishes to enact it I am opposed to it.

Mr. Winch: I want to say a word or two on this clause. I am a member of the special committee, but I understand completely that we have to have something in the code until the committee has reported and a decision has been made by the government and the House of Commons on the question of capital punishment. But because of my opinions I cannot vote in favour of what is now before us, and therefore I should like to ask the minister if he will not consider making provision for the suspension of capital punishment under the code until the committee has made its report?

Mr. Garson: I do not think that I really have anything to add at the present time to the answer I gave my hon. friend on the previous occasion. As I explained then, I think it would be highly improper for the executive by its own action to change the law which under our system of government only parliament can change. That being so, I cannot give my friend any different answer from what I gave him on the previous occasion. I think I should say that I believe it was generally understood by all members of the house when we set up the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate and the royal commission on the rule in M'Naghten's case that none of us would be forsaking our principles or voting against them by providing some section in the code as it stands until we had received the reports from the committee and the royal commission.

I know the difficulty of my hon. friend's position. I respect him very much for having sincere views and feeling very deeply about them, but I do not think that any of us compromise our principles in continuing the present law under these heads until we get the reports from these other bodies.

Mr. MacInnis: I feel that I am in the same position as the hon. member for Vancouver East but yet I agree that the position taken by the minister is correct. I think to suspend laws of this kind would be a very dangerous thing for the executive to do at any time. While I am opposed to capital punishment, I think we will have to let this section stand as the law is today, and I will salve my conscience by saying, "on division".

Mr. Winch: I want to make one other statement. As the minister and the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway have stated, I have certain definite ideas and opinions on this matter, but I want it to be very clearly understood that as a member of the committee of the House of Commons I am keeping an entirely open mind and will judge on the evidence. However, because there is a committee considering this matter I thought that the death sentence might be done away with until the committee was able to report.

The Chairman: Shall clause 206 carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

Clause 289 agreed to on division.

Clauses 641 to 643 inclusive agreed to on division.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, citation 669 in Beauchesne, third edition, has been brought into operation on several occasions during the discussion of this bill. If the chairman will look at that citation he will see that besides preventing amendments except in the proper sequence it also provides that the marginal notes of sections should be read by the chairman. I think that is important so that we may know what the particular section involves. We are not all conversant enough with the Criminal Code to know by the mere reading of the number of the clause what is involved in it.

Clause 644 agreed to.

Clause 645 agreed to on division.

Clause 646 agreed to.

Clause 647 agreed to on division.

Clauses 648 to 651 inclusive agreed to.

Clauses 652 and 653 agreed to.

Clause 661 agreed to.

Mr. Garson: May I again ask the indulgence of the members to move an amendment to clause 400. In order to do that, we would have to reopen the clause and I must, in all frankness, say that this is a matter which has arisen within recent days. I shall have to get the unanimous consent of hon. members to reopen the clause.

The Chairman: Has the minister leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 400—Printing circulars, etc., in likeness of notes.

Mr. Garson: I feel that I cannot do better than to read a letter from the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada in support of this amendment. I shall ask the Minister of Finance to move this amendment which reads as follows:

That clause 400 of Bill 7 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after subclause (1) thereof, the following subclauses:

"(2) Everyone who publishes or prints anything in the likeness or appearance of

(a) all or part of a current bank note or current paper money, or

(b) all or part of any obligation or security of a government or bank, is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction.

(3) No person shall be convicted of an offence under subsection (2) where it is established that, in publishing or printing anything to which that section applies,

(a) no photography was used at any stage for the purpose of publishing or printing it, except in connection with processes necessarily involved in transferring a finished drawing or sketch to a printed surface,

(b) except for the word 'Canada', nothing having the appearance of a word, letter or numeral was a complete word, letter or numeral,

(c) no representation of a human face or figure was more than a general indication of features, without detail,

(d) no more than one colour was used, and

(e) nothing in the likeness or appearance of the back of a current bank note or current paper money was published or printed in any form."

Mr. Abbott: I so move.

Mr. Garson: Now, the explanation for this is contained in a letter from Mr. J. E. Coyne, the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada, addressed to K. W. Taylor, deputy minister of finance, at Ottawa, reading as follows:

We have noticed an increasing tendency for people to produce photographs and other reproductions of Bank of Canada notes, either for use in connection with commercial advertising or for some other purpose or just as a matter of interest or curiosity. In such cases the makers and users of the reproduction have no intention of passing off the pictures as currency or of making any wrongful use of the negatives or plates used in producing them. We believe, however, that it would be highly desirable if reproduction of Canadian currency in this way could be prevented. For one thing, every such action tends to encourage others to imitate them or to think up new ways of making representations of currency, and generally cheapens the position of bank notes in the public eye. For another thing, once plates have been made, though for the most innocent purpose, they may pass into wrongful hands and be put to a wrongful purpose by persons who would not be able to produce the plates themselves.

Mr. Fulton: I am a believer in the principle, and I think the minister has subscribed to this principle on other occasions, that you should not go around creating criminal offences unless it has been reasonably clearly established there is a need for them. I have not heard the minister say anything yet to establish that this section will plug a loophole or fill a gap—

Mr. Abbott: Let the minister finish reading the letter.

Mr. Fulton: I thought he had finished when he sat down.

Mr. Abbott: I thought he sat down when you got up.

Mr. Fulton: I am not like the Minister of Finance; I do not interrupt.

Mr. Garson: The letter is quite a long one but perhaps I had better read the whole thing. I thought the first paragraph was quite convincing so far as I was concerned, but I am probably more gullible than the hon. member for Kamloops. The letter reads:

As a practical matter, however, it seems that such use cannot be entirely prevented because of the lack of a workable definition of what constitutes a "reproduction". For this reason representations that vary in their approximation of reproduction will continue to appear unless the law can be made more definite and more enforceable.

In the past when advertisements and other material have come to our attention we have referred the matter to the Department of Justice. The department apparently takes the view that, except in actual case of intent to pass off false notes as genuine, they are unable to carry on a successful prosecution under the existing sections of the Criminal Code even in the case of exact photographic reproduction. The consolidation of the Criminal Code now before parliament somewhat changes the existing provisions and in our opinion renders the law in this regard even less effective than before. We have discussed this matter in general terms with representatives of the Department of Justice, who say they are unable to prepare a more satisfactory clause under instructions from the Minister of Justice that no amendments of substance are to be made to the Criminal Code in the present bill.

The new series of Bank of Canada notes will be put into circulation in September of this year and will occasion a good deal of public comment. The newspapers and others will no doubt wish to publish photographs and other reproductions of the new notes. Technically, they would be breaking the present criminal law in doing so but apparently would not be subject to prosecution.

In this connection, we propose to meet the "news" problem by giving the papers an outline drawing showing the shape and position of all major elements on the face of the new notes, which may be used to illustrate written descriptions and stories. We shall provide such drawings in proof, mat and plate form, according to the wishes of each paper. We believe this is as far as representation should go, but fear that some papers, and some commercial concerns seeking to take advantage of the publicity of the new issue, will indulge in a wide variety of simulations ranging as far as exact photographic reproduction.

We would think it highly desirable that the law in this regard be established on a more satisfactory basis than at present. We suggest that the Criminal Code should contain an absolute prohibition against photographing Bank of Canada notes, and also against reproducing them in any other way if such other reproduction exceeds the limits of permissible "simulation" set down on the attached memorandum. These limits would have the effect of defining more clearly the nature of what would constitute a reproduction and consequently provide better grounds for prosecution. The representations made possible could not conceivably be diverted to wrongful use. Finally, "simulation" within the limits would enable reasonable illustrative representations to be made for either news or advertising purposes. Since simulation would be an approximation of appearance only this would preclude commercial use of the more objectionable sort which usually depends on a close facsimile treatment.

Mr. Fulton: It is difficult, Mr. Chairman, to grasp the whole of the problem from the letter or to grasp the seriousness of the problem outlined to us merely from the reading of the letter. We have had no previous notice and no opportunity to study the problem. But I should imagine that the fact that a whole new series of bank notes is to be run off, in view of the accession of Her Majesty, will create a great deal of interest. People will want to see them illustrated or reproduced in the newspapers. Therefore a real problem will be created.

This is a quite complicated section and deals with a very difficult matter, namely the general subject of counterfeiting. I am going to suggest that because it is so difficult to deal with, and to ensure that we have not made a change that will either go too far or fall short of what is necessary, in view of the fact that the banking and commerce committee is now sitting, and as this is not a matter involving only legal considerations but one involving also questions of counterfeiting and the like, the sections in this amendment might be referred to the banking and commerce committee, discussed there and reported back.

We have completed our discussion of the rest of the code. This is new and comes before us just at the last moment. As the Minister of Finance is here, perhaps the two ministers might confer on my suggestion.

Mr. Abbott: I understand this bill is to go from this house to the other place. The section before us is one to which the Bank of Canada attaches some importance, particularly because, as the house knows, we are bringing out a new series of Bank of Canada notes in September. They will be rather different from the present Bank of Canada notes. I should not anticipate what they will be, but I have approved the designs.

Mr. Knowles: How much will they be worth?

Mr. Abbott: Oh, they will be, as they always have been, the strongest currency in the world. They will represent characteristic Canadian scenes. I think it is important that there should be a proper provision in the Criminal Code to prevent facsimile reproductions of currency, because a good many people are easily taken in by that sort of thing, and they are protected by the provision in the Criminal Code.

I would say there would be no objection to the suggestion that the proposed amendment should be looked at by the banking and commerce committee, and perhaps the deputy governor of the Bank of Canada might go there and elaborate upon the reasons he has given in the letter to my deputy minister. I do not suppose the house would want it to come back here. If the banking and commerce committee were satisfied with the explanation, it could be referred to the other place and dealt with there.

So far as I am concerned I would be happy to have the officers of the Bank of Canada report before the banking and commerce committee the reasons they feel proper provisions should be put in the Criminal Code now to prevent the facsimile reproduction of Bank of Canada notes.

Mr. Fulton: I wish to assure both ministers that there is no dispute either on my part or that of the official opposition as to the necessity for some such provision. It is just that this is a quite complicated matter and we would like to know what the mechanics of the procedure would be.

Mr. Garson: May I suggest that it might be wise if my colleague were to withdraw his amendment. This text might be submitted to the committee on banking and commerce and discussed there. Then when the bill goes to the other place, as it will have to do, and be considered there clause by clause, it would be a simple matter indeed for the Senate to put in a Senate amendment. That would be passed in due course and come back to the House of Commons.

Mr. Fulton: In other words you suggest that we should approve of it.

Mr. Garson: No.

Mr. Knowles: It will have to come back to us afterwards.

Mr. Abbott: We will have the Senate put the amendment in. Then it will come back here to us.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Senate do whatever you want them to do?

Mr. Abbott: It may refuse it.

Mr. Knowles: We know they do your bidding; but we are surprised you admit it.

The Chairman: Is it understood that the amendment is to be withdrawn?

Mr. Abbott: Yes, I will withdraw the amendment.

The Chairman: Has the minister leave to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

Section agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Fulton: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read a third time? Next sitting?

Mr. Fulton: Agreed.

Mr. Abbott: By leave, now.

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Garson moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the bill is read the third time, there are a few things I wish to say; and I shall move an amendment to the minister's motion for third reading of the bill.

As hon. members are aware there are a great many clauses in this bill, which we have been considering now for a long time, to which we take no objection. Indeed, we are pleased that so much effort has been put into the process of revising and consolidating the Criminal Code, so as to bring it up to date. Many parts of it have been improved immeasurably, and that is due to the tremendous amount of work that has been put into it by all those who have taken part in the effort over the last four or five years.

Nevertheless there are some features in the bill to which we take very strong objection. Those features are perhaps well known, in view of the objections we have been raising in the committee of the whole during the last few days. It is not my purpose to suggest that the time of the house be taken on a series of third reading amendments with a view to testing the house on all the clauses to which we take objection. However there are two particular clauses which we feel should be reconsidered; and when we say we feel they should be reconsidered we mean either that they should be deleted altogether or that they should be amended.

It will be the purpose of the amendment I shall move in a few minutes to place our opposition to those clauses before the house. However, before doing so may I point out that our quarrel with the bill in the form in which it is now before us is not limited to the two subjects which will be mentioned in the amendment I shall move, nor is it limited to the matters I will mention in these few minutes tonight.

However, Mr. Speaker, we have pointed out during the course of the discussion this week that we are not satisfied with the clauses in the bill that deal with such subjects as sedition, treason and the reading of the riot act. We feel, despite the case the government has endeavoured to put forward with respect to these sections, that the question of civil liberties, the question of freedom of speech, and the whole question as to whether or not force and suppression might be used against our people in time of economic difficulty, as well as other important questions, are involved in these matters. We pointed out that we felt that the clauses dealing with sedition are worded too ambiguously; that they make possible the defining in some instances of legitimate attempts at reform as sedition. We felt that the sentence provided with respect to sedition, namely, fourteen years, is too great, too severe, particularly in view of the way in which this offence is defined. In that connection we have already registered our objection to the fact that the sentence for seditious utterances has been increased twice in the last three years. The penalty was two years up until 1951. In 1951 it was increased to seven years; by this bill it is being increased to fourteen years.

Similarly, Mr. Speaker, we feel that the clauses having to do with treason include too many offences under that heading. We pointed out when we were in committee of the whole that we were very interested in the history of the law of treason which the minister gave. We appreciated the point he made when he indicated that across the years we have moved in the direction of narrowing the number of offences that are to be defined as treason. We feel that in this bill there is a reversal in that course of history and we object, as I say, to the greater number of offences now being included under the heading of treason.

Likewise, Mr. Speaker, we feel that the sections dealing with the use of force to suppress troubles and difficulties, particularly the sections dealing with the reading of the riot act, are too severe. When we were in committee of the whole it was pointed out that the authority, the right, under certain circumstances to read the riot act is extended right down to the deputy of a sheriff. We pointed out also that the penalty provided for those who fail to disperse when the riot act is read, or at least within thirty minutes of the reading of the riot act, is life imprisonment, which again we feel is too severe. We associate these sections of the code that deal with the reading of the riot act, as well as those related to sedition, with instances in our history related to economic difficulties and economic disturbances, and for these reasons we regret that our opposition to some of the terms in these sections was not given greater consideration by the government.

However, Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated, it is not my purpose to move an amendment which would attempt to cover all of the things that we think are wrong with the bill in its present form, but rather it is my purpose to move an amendment which will cover the two greatest shortcomings, which will deal with the two clauses in the bill which we feel are most important, particularly to organized labour. These two are the clauses dealing with criminal breach of contract and with mischief. We dealt with these two clauses yesterday and today, one of them being clause 365 on which we spent most of today, and the other being clause 372 on which some time was spent last evening.

As the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) pointed out last evening, and my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis) pointed out earlier today, the clause dealing with mischief, clause 372, is one that attempts to combine some 15 clauses of the old code containing some 50 different offences, and it has put them all in one pot of porridge, which the hon. member for Kamloops suggests is served up without any salt. In addition to the fact that there is a lack of definiteness as to the offences covered under this catch-all clause, we feel that it is a dangerous one in so far as labour relations are concerned. We agree with the labour people who have asserted that this clause is properly named, that it is a mischievous clause, and we feel that it should not be in a code being enacted by parliament in the year 1954.

Likewise we feel, Mr. Speaker, that the government has not really faced up to the issues involved in the debate that has taken place in the committee of the whole today, during which we have contended that labour matters should not be in 365, dealing as it does with criminal breach of contract. This clause is extremely important to organized labour and I submit for the consideration of the house that what is important to organized labour is important to the economy and the well-being of Canada as a whole. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we feel that the house should have an opportunity to express its view, at least in general terms, with respect to these last two clauses, these last two subjects about which I have been speaking.

At this stage there is only one course left for us to follow, and I propose to follow it and to give the house an opportunity to record its approval or disapproval of these two clauses as they now stand. I am not suggesting to the house that all hon. members have to agree with any particular alteration in these clauses that we might suggest, but I am urging the house to agree with us that in their present form clauses 365 and 372 are unacceptable and should not be included in the Criminal Code. Therefore, to bring this matter to a head, and to give the house an opportunity to express its view on these clauses, I move, seconded by my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway:

That Bill No. 7 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house, for the purpose of reconsidering clause 365, dealing with breach of contract, and clause 372, dealing with mischief.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say just a word.

[Mr. Knowles.]

The minister has shown remarkable patience. I have not seen anything like it since I came into the house, patience not only in the house but outside, and I am disappointed that this amendment now comes in.

The minister discussed the question of labour with the three outstanding unions in Canada, and brought in amendment after amendment to suit the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada, but it did not suit all the others completely, which would be a very difficult thing to do.

While I admire the C.C.F. in a good many ways, they remind me now of two teams who had thrown their best into the game and then because one side lost they complained bitterly. Now we have this amendment and I think it is discourteous to the minister. I do not know that I can make my attitude any plainer than that.

Mr. Winch: We never say die.

Mr. Angus MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I assure the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) that the last thing I would not only agree to do here but even think about would be to do anything that would be discourteous to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson). But let me also assure him that as long as we believe that the bill before us can be improved we would be unfair not only to ourselves but to the people of Canada, to the people who sent us here, no matter how few they are, if we failed to use the facilities of this house to the best advantage possible to improve this bill. If hon. members do not agree with what we are asking the house to do now then they will, of course, express themselves in that way and the democratic principle of our parliamentary institutions will have gone the full round.

The hon. member for Fort William referred to the patience shown by the Minister of Justice in piloting this important bill through the house, while he brought in amendment after amendment. I will do the Minister of Justice credit and say that he did not bring in any amendment to this bill unless he thought that amendment would improve the bill. He did not bring in an amendment to satisfy one organization or another. It is quite possible he thought the bill was all right but that certain amendments would not do it any harm and he therefore agreed to introduce them. It is only on that understanding that we can ever believe in the sincerity of the minister and the work he is doing.

I am not going to say anything further with regard to the conduct of the minister during the time this bill was before not only the house but the parliamentary committee.

I have said all I want to say on that aspect of the matter and I do not intend to take anything back or to detract from anything I have said. I am certainly not going to apologize to anyone for using the facilities of this house in the interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has moved this amendment. I believe he has been farsighted in the wording of it because, whatever difference of opinion there may be in detail as to what should be done with these two clauses 365 and 372, he is not asking us to tie ourselves down but is simply asking that they be referred back to the committee for the purposes of reconsideration in committee. As we in the official opposition have expressed ourselves quite strongly with respect to both these clauses and the inadequacies and weaknesses thereof, we certainly would have no other course but to support the amendment.

I am glad the hon. member has moved it. Indeed I am prepared to confess to having been caught short. I had overlooked, or, if you like, misinterpreted the rules, and had not anticipated that the third reading would arise tonight. It was my intention to move a similar amendment on third reading and I am grateful to the hon. member, not only for having brought up this particular motion but for having given me time to prepare my own amendment in which I can incorporate the reasons for which we think this bill should be referred back to the committee of the whole.

Our reasons have to do with clauses 690 and 691, two clauses dealing with proceedings by writ of habeas corpus. I am not going to discuss the clauses in detail but simply point out that a very substantial change has been made in that, according to clause 690, once proceedings by way of writ of habeas corpus have been refused on the merits then no further proceedings shall be taken in respect to the person involved before the judge rejects the appeal of any other judge. That runs counter to the trend of our law for many years, and it is diametrically opposed to the judgment delivered in the House of Lords by a prominent judge, Lord Hailsham, in a case which came up in 1928 and which I will quote in part. He said, each judge, and now I quote:

> has jurisdiction to entertain an application for a writ of habeas corpus . . . and is bound to hear and determine such an application on its merits notwithstanding that some other judge has already refused a similar application.

We attach particular importance to this question of proceedings by way of writ of habeas corpus as being possibly the most important single protection which an individual has against unlawful arrest and against the power of the state. It is the right of the individual to require the authorities to show cause why he should be detained, and we feel that the taking away of that right of further proceedings by way of writ of habeas corpus after the initial rejection should not be incorporated in our law.

I am not going to go into any further detail beyond stating the principle, and that we feel the departure from that principle is so important and of such far-reaching consequences and so unacceptable that the bill should be referred back to the committee to give the committee of the whole further opportunity to reconsider and indeed, I would hope, reject the changes incorporated in clauses 690 and 691. I accordingly move:

> That the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following words:
> "and clauses 690 and 691 dealing with proceedings by way of writ of habeas corpus."

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, before you take a vote on the amendment may I say that perhaps we have listened to the discussion more than we have spoken to it. We have spoken whenever we felt it was necessary to do so. We have more or less always favoured the proposals and amendments introduced by the minister. We believe he has been most reasonable in this matter. We have voted against many of the amendments proposed by those who sit on this side of the house. Perhaps we will do so again. I do not know. That depends on the amendments they propose and whether they go back to the committee of the whole before the bill is read a third time. But if some other amendment can be made that may solve the problem and be satisfactory to the minister and to the whole house, then we are quite willing to give it another try. We do not see much hope in it, but for this time we shall vote with the opposition that the bill be referred back again for us to have at least one more try, even though we have tried so often in the past little while.

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be rather an act of supererogation on my part to review at any great length the matters which have been raised in this motion. The seriousness of the motion itself and the amendment is indicated by the fact that about 10 per cent, I should think, as many arguments have been made in support of this motion as were made in connection with the same subject matters when we were in committee. I am not complaining about that fact. I am glad indeed that that small percentage of arguments was made.

Mr. Knowles: The minister had better be careful. There are a good many speakers over here if the minister wants them.

Mr. Garson: I agree. I am not complaining at all.

Mr. Knowles: Withdraw.

Mr. Garson: I think perhaps I might be forgiven if I at least put on the record in reply one or two points which I think are relevant. In the first place, with regard to the matter of habeas corpus. I was rather taken with the idea that it should have been the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) who moved the amendment to the motion in connection with habeas corpus because the purpose of the section we have provided in the new bill is to restore to the province of British Columbia the very excellent method of having an appeal from the judgment of the trial judge who turned down an application for habeas corpus. I thought that a lawyer practising in British Columbia would be grateful to us for restoring to them what they apparently had always desired to have and did have for many years until a judgment of the supreme court made it unavailable.

An hon. Member: Maybe he did not know that.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, yes. But I do not agree with the minister's interpretation.

Mr. Garson: As to the other matter, namely section 365, criminal breach of contract, I do not know how we could have done anything more than to have continued upon the statute books a provision taking care of wilful breach of contract which has been on the statute books of Canada and of Great Britain for the last seventy-five years. Having reached that decision, I do not know how we could have provided a saving clause to take care of the trade union congresses in any better way than to get in direct contact with them and discuss with them the terms in which that saving clause was drafted.

With regard to the matter of mischief, there is here I think a fairly fundamental difference of opinion between the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Kamloops on the one hand and the government upon the other. They seem to favour the idea that in drafting a Criminal Code one should specify every single kind of mischief, every single kind of forgery or every single kind of larceny that can possibly take place, spell them all out and provide a separate penalty for each one of them so that in terms of their thinking the rather unintelligent magistrate or judge who is in charge of the case will know, by reading that section, just what he is supposed to do.

Mr. Knowles: Is that a fair description of judges or magistrates?

Mr. Garson: No. But that is the impression my hon. friend seems to have. We on the other hand think that the members of the judiciary are intelligent enough to reach a wise decision upon the facts of the case that comes before them, and within the wider terms of reference provided in Bill No. 7.

In order to demonstrate just how ineffective is this method which my hon. friends advocate, I should like to refer to the sidenotes only of the main section 510 dealing with mischief in the existing code. In connection with mischief it refers to damage to house, ship, or boat; to bank, dyke, or seawall; to bridge, viaduct or aqueduct; to railway; to cattle; to ship; to signal; to bank, dyke or wall; to river or canal; to flood gate or sluice; to private fishery; to goods; to machines; to hop-bind; to letter bag; to tree or shrub and so on. All these are separate. The point I would make is that after specifying all these, of other things that could be the subject matter of mischief there must be scores more that are still not covered and that have to be covered by an omnibus clause.

Mr. Fulton: With a maximum penalty of two years.

Mr. Garson: Yes. It was precisely for the purpose of providing a more rational method of defining crime that the new code was drafted. The commissioners were instructed to try to reduce the compass of the code and they succeeded in that regard by reducing it from 1150 sections to 750 sections. To what purpose. This is what they say on this point in their report:

> The work of consolidation has been designed to do away with duplication and needless repetition and to draft provisions that will, where possible, eliminate particularization and reduce the need for amendment.

Most of us are perhaps guilty of intellectual vanity, each being proud of his own brain-child and maybe a little bit prejudiced in his viewpoint on that account. I am therefore not suggesting that the members of the royal commission on the one hand or the government on the other should have their views accepted as to whether the methods we have followed is the only proper method of drafting a criminal statute. But upon this very same subject let me read from one of the great British draftsmen who was responsible for the monumental imperial consolidated acts in the middle of the nineteenth century. This is what he said. Incidentally, he was also the author or the editor of "Russell on Crime", one of the classical books on criminal law. He said this:

> I am very strongly in favour of general clauses when they can be used without any others. They are not only clear and simple; but, if I be not very much mistaken, would reduce the length of our statutes to a greater extent than any other plan that could be devised. Let it be considered what might be effected in forgery alone. No satisfactory reason can be given why the forgery of every written instrument should not be included in a single clause. . . That clause might be so framed as to include all existing and future instruments; and as no forgery can be tried by any Court of Quarter Sessions, there is no reason why the same wide discretion as to punishment should not be given to the court as in cases of manslaughter.

Then further on—and this a man who was one of the great draftsmen of the last century—he said this:

> Hitherto the usual system of framing criminal acts has been to specify each and every act intended to be subjected to any punishment; such a course has the advantage of calling direct attention to all the acts that are made penal; but such a course is open to this objection, that it often leaves offences of equally great criminality unprovided for, and thus affords the artful a chance of evading punishment. Several courses may be adopted to remedy this object. A clause may be framed in such general terms as to include all cases of the same kind within it. This is the simplest, and, perhaps, the best course; and it leaves the judgment of the court entirely unfettered as to the punishment in every case.

I think the argument of my friends the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Kamloops would have been much more convincing if they could have told us of any cases of these particularized offences of mischief that were not covered by the section in the bill. If they are all covered in the section that we have, why should we have to take five or six pages of printing to describe what can be covered in half a page? For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot support my hon. friend's motion.

I should like to take this opportunity of thanking my friend the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) for his complimentary remarks as well as my friend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis). At the same time I should also like to express my deep appreciation—and I am very sincere in this—for the magnificent co-operation which we have had from all the members of the house, particularly those who sat on the special committee of the House of Commons last year. We said when we launched this bill in the first place that we wanted the approach to the provision of a good Criminal Code of Canada to be conducted on a completely non-partisan basis and that each of us should vote in a non-partisan manner on the merits of each section as it came up.

I must say that I never sat on any legislative committee, either in provincial politics or in federal politics, in which there was less partisanship, a more objective consideration of the merits of each section and a willingness to listen to ideas no matter whence they came. We had some communist organizations there and it was a matter of great pride to me as a Canadian that they received the same courteous attention and the same consideration of their arguments as if they had not been people whose political principles we condemn by considering them and rejecting them. It seems to me that is the essence of genuine freedom of expression and real democracy. I want to say to the members of the house, particularly to those who served on that committee, that as the minister in charge of this bill I am most deeply grateful to them for the splendid manner in which they co-operated in producing what I think is quite a good piece of legislation.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Fulton) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aitken, Miss
Balcer
Barnett
Blackmore
Blair
Brooks
Bryson
Cameron (Nanaimo)
Campbell
Casselman
Castleden
Charlton
Churchill
Coldwell
Dinsdale
Drew
Ellis
Fairclough, Mrs.
Fleming
Fraser (Peterborough)
Fulton
Gillis
Girard
Green
Hahn
Hansell
Harkness
Herridge
Hodgson
Holowach
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Johnson (Kindersley)
Johnston (Bow River)
Jones
Knight
Knowles
Leboe
Macdonnell
MacInnis
MacLean
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
Mitchell (London)
Monteith
Nicholson
Noseworthy
Patterson
Pearkes
Perron
Poulin
Quelch
Regier
Small
Stanton
Starr
Thatcher
Tustin
White (Hastings-Frontenac)
Winch
Zaplitny—59.

NAYS

Messrs:

Abbott	Langlois (Gaspe)
Applewhaite	Lapointe
Ashbourne	Leduc
Balcom	Lefrançois
Batten	Legare
Blanchette	Lesage
Boisvert	MacDougall
Bonnier	MacEachen
Boucher (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)	McCann
Bourget	McCulloch (Pictou)
Bourque	McIlraith
Breton	McIvor
Brisson	McWilliam
Bruneau	Mang
Buchanan	Masse
Byrne	Michaud
Cameron (High Park)	Philpott
Cannon	Picard
Carter	Pickersgill
Claxton	Pommer
Cloutier	Power (Quebec South)
Cote	Power (St. John's West)
Crestohl	Proudfoot
Deslieres	Purdy
Dumas	Ratelle
Fairey	Reinke
Fontaine	Richard (Ottawa East)
Fraser (St. John's East)	Roberge
Garson	Robertson
Gauthier (Portneuf)	Robichaud
Gingras	Robinson (Simcoe East)
Gingues	St. Laurent
Goode	Schneider
Gourd (Chapleau)	Shaw
Gregg	Simmons
Hanna	Stick
Hardie	Stuart (Charlotte)
Harrison	Thibault
Henry	Tucker
James	Valois
Jutras	Viau
Kickham	Villeneuve
Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)	Weaver
LaCroix	Weir
Lafontaine	Weselak
Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere)	White (Waterloo South)
	Winters
	Wood—94.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost. Is the house ready for the question? The question is on the following motion of the Minister of Justice:

That Bill No. 7, an act respecting the criminal law, be now read the third time.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I trust you are not forgetting the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: No, I am putting the whole question. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, moved:

That Bill No. 7 be not now read a third time but that it be referred back to the committee of the whole house, for the purpose of reconsidering clause 365, dealing with breach of contract, and clause 372, dealing with mischief.

The question is on the amendment to the main motion. Those who are in favour of the amendment to the main motion will please rise? I say this because if we are agreed we are ready for the question now we could proceed without having the bells rung again.

Mr. Knowles: There may be some who missed the other vote.

Mr. Speaker: That is quite true. I shall therefore ask for the yeas and nays. All those who are in favour will please say yea?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay?

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Knowles) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aitken, Miss	Johnson (Kindersley)
Balcer	Johnston (Bow River)
Barnett	Jones
Blackmore	Knight
Blair	Knowles
Brooks	Leboe
Bryson	Macdonnell
Cameron (Nanaimo)	MacInnis
Campbell	MacLean
Casselman	McCullough (Moose Mountain)
Castleden	Mitchell (London)
Charlton	Monteith
Churchill	Nicholson
Coldwell	Noseworthy
Dinsdale	Patterson
Drew	Pearkes
Ellis	Perron
Fairclough, Mrs.	Poulin
Fleming	Quelch
Fraser (Peterborough)	Regier
Fulton	Small
Gillis	Stanton
Girard	Starr
Green	Thatcher
Hahn	Tustin
Hansell	White (Hastings-Frontenac)
Harkness	Winch
Herridge	Zaplitny—59.
Hodgson
Holowach
Howe (Wellington-Huron)

NAYS

Messrs:

Abbott	Bourque
Applewhaite	Breton
Ashbourne	Brisson
Balcom	Bruneau
Batten	Buchanan
Blanchette	Byrne
Boisvert	Cameron (High Park)
Bonnier	Cannon
Boucher (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)	Carter
Bourget	Claxton
	Cloutier

Cote
Crestohl
Deslieres
Dumas
Fairey
Fontaine
Fraser (St. John's East)
Garson
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gingues
Goode
Gourd (Chapleau)
Gregg
Hanna
Hardie
Harrison
Henry
James
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)
LaCroix
Lafontaine
Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere)
Langlois (Gaspe)
Lapointe
Leduc
Lefrançois
Legare
Lesage
MacDougall
MacEachen
McCann
McCulloch (Pictou)
McIlraith
McIvor
McWilliam
Mang
Masse
Michaud
Philpott
Picard
Pickersgill
Pommer
Power (Quebec South)
Power (St. John's West)
Proudfoot
Purdy
Ratelle
Reinke
Richard (Ottawa East)
Roberge
Robertson
Robichaud
Robinson (Simcoe East)
St. Laurent
Schneider
Shaw
Stick
Stuart (Charlotte)
Thibault
Tucker
Valois
Viau
Villeneuve
Weaver
Weir
Weselak
White (Waterloo South)
Winters
Wood—93.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the main motion carry?

Mr. Knowles: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Green: What will be the business tomorrow?

Mr. Winters: Tomorrow we will take the estimates of various departments, in the following order: public works, northern affairs and national resources, national defence, fisheries.

Mr. Abbott: What a day!

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, April 9, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE LATE RODNEY ADAMSON

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we were all profoundly shocked when we learned early yesterday afternoon of the terrible aircraft accident at Moose Jaw which snuffed out instantaneously the lives of the thirty-one passengers of the T.C.A. air liner, of the four members of its crew, of the pilot of the R.C.A.F. trainer craft involved with the liner in a mid-air collision, and of one more person on the ground suffocated in the ruins of a home destroyed by the flaming wreckage of the planes.

Our warmhearted sympathy reached out at once to all those so tragically bereaved.

But for each one of us in this house our grief became an even more personal thing when the liner's passenger list was made public and Mr. and Mrs. Adamson's names appeared in it. It is truly said that despite our differences in political outlook friendships are formed in this house without regard to party lines. No political difference ever stood in the way of becoming a friend of Rodney Adamson. Our colleague had qualities that endeared him to all of us. His unassuming manner was but one of the many aspects of his solicitude for his fellow men, and throughout his life he used his abilities to the full to work and to fight in their interests.

He was only thirteen years of age when the first world war broke out but somehow, despite his youth, he contrived to serve his country overseas as a pilot before the conflict was over. When the second world war broke out he might well have felt that he had already done his duty to his country in warfare, but his patriotism was such that he could not take any easy course. Once more he served overseas as an officer in the Lorne Scots.

He was first elected to this house in 1940 for the Ontario constituency of York West and was returned by his constituents in each succeeding general election. With characteristic vigour he displayed his interest in a wide variety of the activities of parliament and was one of the official opposition's first-line debaters. Those of us who sit on this side of Mr. Speaker, while not agreeing with all of the things he said, listened to him with respect, for we knew that when Mr. Adamson spoke he spoke after careful preparation and with strong conviction.

He will be remembered in this chamber chiefly, I think, for his interest in conservation and in the development of our resources in the best interests of all Canadians. It will be recalled that during this session he emphasized, and it needed emphasis, the importance of our great northern region. The loss of our colleague and his devoted wife is a real one, and our heartfelt sympathy is extended to their children and their families. It is also extended, Mr. Speaker, to you personally and by all of us on this side of the house, to the Leader of the Opposition and the members of his party both in the house and in the country.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I know that the members of families of both Mr. and Mrs. Adamson will appreciate the words of sympathy that have been expressed by the Prime Minister on behalf of all of us. It is always a tragic thing to realize that those with whom we have been so closely associated day by day have suddenly been taken from us, but there does seem to be a particularly tragic aspect to this accident when we realize that both of them, Rodney and Cynthia as we knew them, were with us only a few days ago, gay, vigorous and so friendly to everyone they met. As the Prime Minister has said, friendships are not in any way limited to the parties with which we are associated, and I know that there was warm and affectionate friendship for both of them in every part of this house.

Rodney Adamson came of a military family. In the first world war his father had commanded that very famous regiment, the Princess Patricia's. The son, both in the first war and the last war, served his country well. He continued his military interests.

As has already been pointed out in the press, Rodney Adamson went to some pains to keep himself informed. At some considerable risk he and his wife spent some time beyond the iron curtain seeking to learn something of what was taking place there. He served his own constituency and his country well. For fourteen years he has represented a large and very important part of Ontario. We remember him best for his constant and unfailing interest in the conservation of resources, particularly the mining resources of this country. He was an advocate of free gold, and will always be remembered as one of those who had deep and strong convictions concerning the importance of gold in supporting the economy of our country.

The late Rodney Adamson

At a time when there may be too great a tendency towards conformity, Rodney Adamson was an individualist. He never hesitated to express his own views with clarity and firmness, whether or not they happened to be the views that were generally accepted. He was the chairman of the committee of our party on natural resources, and we relied greatly on him and his knowledge of that subject. His wife was keenly interested in public affairs, and also served in uniform with distinction during the last war, when she commanded the Canadian women's army corps in Italy. She knew Europe well. She followed both domestic and international affairs, and the two of them were a very effective team in all that they were doing here in Ottawa. Of both of them, I think it could be appropriately said that they died on active service.

What happened in this case does emphasize the fact that all the members of this house are called upon to accept certain responsibilities which impose inescapable risks. Last night he was to have spoken in Calgary at a political meeting. This afternoon he was to have attended a reception specially arranged for him by his father's old regiment, the Princess Patricia's, in Calgary. This evening he was to have addressed that very famous organization, the United Services Club of Calgary. His public service activities were continued right to the end.

In speaking of him in this way and of the services that he performed, may I mention the fact that we had a very clear expression of the extent to which party lines leave no divisions at a time like this. I do want to say that no one could have been more thoughtful than was the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) in his attention to all the details connected with this very tragic event. I think it would be appropriate that I should also say that I do realize that this has been a great blow to him. Whatever differences of opinion there may have been at any time in regard to the details of administration or otherwise, I am sure there is no one in this house who has ever questioned the deep and abiding devotion of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to that service with which he has been so closely associated. The safety record of Trans-Canada Air Lines has been one of which all Canadians can be proud.

It is an unhappy circumstance that we should now be expressing sympathy in the death of one of our own members and his wife on the occasion of the first fatal accident there has been in so many years. I know the sympathy of every member here will go out in full measure to the mother and father of Mrs. Adamson; to the brother of Mr. Adamson; and particularly to their sons, one of whom is only five years old. The thoughts of all of us will be with them not only now but in the years ahead. At the same time may I say that our sympathy is extended to the families of all those who died in this terrible disaster. All Canadians will be thinking of them in their sorrow.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): When the first news of this unaccountable accident reached the house, Mr. Speaker, there was general consternation because of the loss of life involved. Then, too, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) has said, because of the exceptionally fine record of Trans-Canada Air Lines there was a feeling of regret that this happening should have occurred yesterday. But when later in the afternoon we learned that one of our own members and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Adamson, were passengers on the plane there was not only the general feeling to which I have already referred, but a feeling of deep regret and deep sorrow at the loss of one of our members for whom all of us had a very high regard.

Rodney Adamson came here in 1940. I remember well when he came. I recall that we thought of him as a very kindly, friendly, new colleague. Throughout the years he vindicated the feeling we had at the outset of his appearance here. It is indeed a tragedy that he should be taken from our midst at this time, and with him his very charming wife. They leave two children behind and, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, not only will they be in our minds today, but I am sure that many of us will think of them throughout the days to come.

I should like to say, too, that we join with everyone in this house not only in expressing sympathy to the father and mother of Mrs. Adamson, to Mr. Adamson's brother, whom some of us know, and to the children, but to those bereaved friends and relatives of the others who died under these tragic circumstances. We think of the crew of the plane, because the crews of our Trans-Canada Air Lines are exceptionally careful—the splendid record they have built up indicates that. We sympathize with them. We sympathize with the relatives of the passengers who were lost in this tragic occurrence.

As has been said here, when something of this sort strikes us, both as a House of Commons and as a country, I know that there is genuine sorrow for those who suffer under such tragic circumstances. We sympathize, too, with the friends and relatives of the woman on the ground who lost her life so suddenly when the flaming parts of the plane struck a home in the city of Moose Jaw. Perhaps later on, when an investigation has been made, it will be possible to say what error of judgment accounts for all this; and that brings to our minds that, after all, human judgment is often very unreliable. And so, on my colleagues' and my own behalf, I join with everyone in the house in expressing our sympathy to all who have been bereaved. I should like also to associate myself with the very genuine remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) in regard to the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) who has shown such a keen interest in and is so justly proud of the great air line he has done so much to build.

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that the leader of this party would want me to express the feelings of our group. We join with others who have expressed sympathy on the sudden passing of Mr. Rodney Adamson and his wife. It brings to our minds once again the forcefulness of that truth, that we know not what a day may bring forth.

Mr. Adamson's office was in the same corridor as the offices of this group, and it meant that our paths very often met. At such times we had the opportunity to chat for a few moments with him. We felt he was a man who formed real convictions, and whose convictions really meant something to him. He will be missed by his party, because I am sure he was a most valuable asset to it. He will also be missed by the House of Commons and by his host of friends.

We join with others in offering our sympathy to those of his loved ones who are left to mourn his loss.

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add my words of tribute, because in doing so I feel I am voicing what is in the hearts of the people that Rodney Adamson represented in this Canadian parliament for so many years.

The late Rodney Adamson

The constituency of York-Humber was carved out of Mr. Adamson's constituency of York West. Some of the people for whom he spoke in this House of Commons are the people for whom I speak now. I know what a loss his death, and that of his wife Cynthia, will mean to those people, whom he served so faithfully.

The people of York West and of York-Humber were proud of Rodney Adamson, and they showed that pride by choosing him again and again from 1940, onward, to represent them in parliament. He had won their respect, their confidence and their affection as a public servant and as a man of the highest integrity. In York West and York-Humber we mourn the loss of a good friend and a good servant of the people.

NEW MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk has received from the chief electoral officer certificates of the election and return of the following members, viz.:

Of Yves Leduc, Esquire, for the electoral district of Verdun.

Of James Alexander McBain, Esquire, for the electoral district of Elgin.

Of John C. Pallett, Esquire, for the electoral district of Peel.

Of Rodolphe Leduc, Esquire, for the electoral district of Gatineau.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Sixth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.—Mr. McCulloch (Pictou).

TRADE

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—ACTION OF ITALY AND SWEDEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It is reported today that Italy and Sweden have dropped out of the international wheat agreement, and that therefore they will not be taking up the amount of wheat they would have previously taken up—I believe the figure is 32 million bushels. Has the Minister of Trade and Commerce any comment to make on this information, in view of our present situation, and the accumulation of wheat that we have in this country?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the information I have is that Sweden has decided not to ratify. Sweden had a very small quota, indeed—a matter of two or three million bushels. That country has never been a considerable buyer of wheat. This year Sweden is actually an exporting country. It has exported seven or eight million bushels.

Italy did not ratify, owing to a change in government. Italy has still not ratified. Italy has applied to the council for a reduction in their quota. A meeting will be held to determine whether the reduction will be granted or not. I understand that if the reduction is granted Italy intends to sign. To date Italy has not ratified, but Italy has not indicated an intention of not ratifying.

Mr. Johnson (Kindersley): Is there any possibility of other countries with commitments amounting to 32 million bushels, and that have not ratified the agreement, taking similar action?

Mr. Howe (Port Arthur): Well, I have had no notice of these questions. The only country I recall that has not ratified is Brazil. Brazil indicated some time ago that they would not ratify the agreement, and Brazil had a considerable quota. However, Brazil is still buying wheat from North America, although they are buying outside the quota. The position is the same as that of the United Kingdom.

I think, aside from that, all the countries have ratified, except in the cases of Sweden and Italy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRANS-POLAR FLIGHTS—AIR SERVICE TRANSIT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to a publicity release issued by the Norwegian information service from Washington, D.C., on March 11, beginning as follows: "The Scandinavian—"

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should put his question without making quotations.

Mr. Philpott: The release is to the effect that negotiations are taking place between Norway and the United States for rights to fly over the Canadian polar regions. Will the minister make clear that the polar regions of Canada are exclusively under the control of Canada, and that the United States has no jurisdiction in any way over those areas?

Mr. Speaker: That is a question the drafting of which could have been very much improved. I would ask the hon. member to see to it that his questions are in a form in which they ask for information, rather than supply it.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): My attention has been drawn to the press release in question. So far as the point made by my hon. friend is concerned, no question of infringement of Canadian sovereign rights over the Arctic, by trans-polar flying, is involved, because I understand the negotiations which concern air service between Scandinavian states and the United States deal with only flying over and not landing in Canada, and these states already have that right under the international air service transit agreement signed in 1945.

[Later:]

INDO-CHINA—UNITED STATES PROPOSAL TO ISSUE WARNING TO GOVERNMENT OF CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the possible communication to the Canadian government of a proposal of President Eisenhower and Mr. Dulles with reference to a proposed warning to China with respect to hostilities in Indo-China. The Secretary of State for External Affairs was good enough to indicate, as reported at page 3885 of Hansard, that while the Canadian government had no—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Can the hon. member ask his question without giving all these prefacing details?

Mr. Fleming: I was referring to the fact that in reply to that question yesterday the minister said that he was making inquiries in Washington in order to ascertain the exact nature of the proposal. I wonder whether the minister has now had any communication on that subject, to throw any light on the matter that he could not yesterday?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Inasmuch as talks are still going on between the United States and other governments concerned about this matter, there is nothing I can usefully add at this time to what I said yesterday.

RADIO BROADCASTING

CONSULTATIONS WITH MEXICO ON FREQUENCY ALLOCATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. Hansell (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport or his parliamentary assistant. Have consultations been held between the Department of Transport or the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and any representatives of the Mexican government or radio interests in Mexico during the last month in respect to frequency allocations?

May I ask a second question in this connection? If the answer is in the affirmative, will the minister state the nature and results of these negotiations or consultations?

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, since I received no previous notice of this question, may I take this as notice?

[Later:]

Mr. Hansell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of privilege. Did I understand the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Transport to say that he had not received notice of my question? I might say that I sent the minister notice of the question. Evidently it was not passed on to the parliamentary assistant. Might I ask if he will take this as notice of the question and answer it on Monday?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I must say that I left my office in the Hunter building at one o'clock and I have not seen a copy of the question. I will try to bring down the answer on Monday.

FERRY SERVICE

NORTH SYDNEY-PORT AUX BASQUES—COMMENCEMENT OF OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as reported at page 3886 of Hansard, the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Buchanan) asked a question that had to do with the commencement of operations by the new car ferry between North Sydney, Nova Scotia, and Port aux Basques, Newfoundland. In answer to this question, I wish to state that it is expected this new car ferry, the C.G.S. William Carson, which, as I stated yesterday, is under construction at the present time, will commence its operation in the fall of this year. The Canadian National Railways are most anxious to have this ship operating early enough so that it can be fully tested for the difficult winter operations.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PALMERSTON-SOUTHAMPTON BRANCH LINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. Langlois (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Wellington-Huron (Mr. Howe) asked me a question, as reported at page 3886 of Hansard, having to do with a press report in connection with the Palmerston-Southampton branch line. In answer to that question I must say to my hon. friend that I have been unable to find the press report he referred to, but I assume that it has reference to possible changes in train schedules. I am informed by the Canadian National Railways that an adjustment in schedules will go into effect on April 25 with the spring change in timetables. The schedule of the mixed train No. 329 will be lengthened by 30 minutes and that of mixed train No. 330, by 45 minutes.

I wish to add here that the wider question of the service on this branch line is now before the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada where the representations of interested communities will be considered. I am sure that the hon. member realizes it would not be proper for me to make any comment on this matter at this time.

TELEVISION

HALIFAX—PROBABLE DATE OF COMMENCEMENT OF OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. R. Balcom (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. What progress is being made on the television transmitting station at Halifax, and when is it likely to be in operation?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was good enough to give me notice of his question. With reference to the transmitter, a site has been purchased on Geizer hill. Submission to council has been made for the purchase of transmitting equipment and has been approved. Drawings and specifications for the transmitter building are in preparation and should be available for submission for tenders by the end of April.

The studio site has been selected on Bell road and all local approvals have been received. Approval of the Nova Scotia government is necessary before the purchase can be completed. The plans for the building design are in preparation.

Barring unforeseen difficulties, it is expected that the transmitter will be on the air before the end of the year.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DEADLINE FOR FILING RETURNS—WESTERN PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Johnson (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue? Is the government considering an extension of the deadline for filing income tax returns in the three western provinces, in view of the inability of the farmers to market their grain?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): The answer is no. The deadline is April 30, as it has been for years.

PRAIRIE FARM ASSISTANCE ACT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENTS REQUESTED BY MANITOBA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. S. Zaplitny (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the resolution passed by the legislature of Manitoba calling for amendments to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act, which would enable farmers in Manitoba who suffered crop losses due to excessive moisture to receive further assistance? If so, is the minister prepared to recommend such amendments to parliament?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having sent me a copy of his question. In view of the fact that it has come up on two or three occasions during this session, perhaps I should make a little longer statement than I made before with regard to it.

The Prairie Farm Assistance Act was passed in 1939 following seven years of drought on the prairies of western Canada, covering certain sections of the prairies. Because of the experience we had then, this house was persuaded to give consent to the Prairie Farm Assistance Act. The difficulties that have been experienced in Manitoba are not difficulties resulting from drought, but rather from excessive rainfall and excessive moisture. These are difficulties which I think are prevalent right across Canada from time to time. I would think that if we were to make amendments such as those suggested in Manitoba they would have the effect in the first place of greatly increasing the payments that would have to be made not only in Manitoba, but from Manitoba through to the Rocky mountains.

Last year, as hon. members from the central part of the prairies know, there was a great deal of acreage, even on the heavy land surrounding Regina, that was without crops because they were not able to seed the land in the early part of the year. If we were to pass legislation of the kind which would meet conditions of that nature it would be most difficult to persuade the other parts of Canada to take the same action with regard to it as they took with regard to drought, which is of such a serious nature from time to time that it is almost impossible to provide any form of insurance that would take care of it, or to depend on any one province taking care of the calamity that comes when there is very widespread drought. For that reason I have written to the government of Manitoba, as a result of their having sent forward the resolution to me, and explained to them the reasons why I did not think it would be desirable to bring that proposed amendment into this house at this time, and I doubt very much whether it would be at any time unless we greatly change the policy which backs up the present Prairie Farm Assistance Act.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

CHARLOTTETOWN—INQUIRY AS TO TENDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. A. Matheson (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can the minister say when the department will be ready to call for tenders on the new federal building at Charlottetown? Can he say whether separate tenders will be called for the clearing of the site and the construction of the new building or whether the two operations will be combined under one contract?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): The target date for the calling of tenders is June 1. As to the second two questions, I hope to be able to let one contract for clearing the site and constructing the building. That will depend however on our ability to get vacant possession of several properties on the site.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

THIRTEEN-YEAR-OLD PERSON SERVING PENITENTIARY SENTENCE

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can he tell us how it is possible for a 13-year-old youngster to be serving a penitentiary sentence in Canada?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member will give me the pertinent information, I shall be glad to look into the matter raised by him.

Mr. Regier: I meant to address my question to the Minister of Justice. Is it possible for the situation I have described to exist?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to extend the same reply to my hon. friend as that given by my colleague the Minister of National Defence. If my hon. friend will give me the name and the particulars of the case he has in mind, I shall be glad to look into it.

Mr. Regier: He is in St. Vincent de Paul.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

360. Departmental administration, $321,732.

The Chairman: Hon. members will find this vote on page 51 and they will find the details on page 430 of the blue book.

Mr. Hodgson: I have a few remarks I wish to make in connection with this department and the work they have on the agenda. I want to try to bring to the attention of the minister and his officials and of the members of the committee the need for more speed in connection with the trans-Canada highway. I also want to quote a few figures on the extent of the increase in traffic, motor vehicles and that sort of thing in Canada in the last few years, especially since 1949 when this project was first brought before parliament.

The Department of Public Works has announced that construction on the 5,000-mile trans-Canada highway was speeded up during 1953.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member please speak up so that we can hear him?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Hodgson: Mr. Chairman, if you could get some of the other members to pipe down, they might be able to hear me better.

All provinces but Quebec have signed agreements with the federal government to share construction costs. The federal government pays half the cost of sections of previously-built roads incorporated in the trans-Canada highway. During 1953 contracts were approved worth $46,343,500, more than $12 million above the 1952 figure.

Mr. Winters: I wonder whether the hon. member would mind telling me what it is he is reading from?

Mr. Hodgson: I am reading from statistics from the Department of Public Works.

Mr. Winters: That is what I wanted to know. Is it a released statement?

Mr. Hodgson: It is a statement released by your department. That is the end of it.

At the end of the war economists felt that any prediction of 3 million vehicles in Canada by 1955 would be an overestimate. Already in 1952 we had reached that total. Now they are looking ahead to 1960 and later, and there is danger of being wrong as they were before. Some economists believe there will be 4,500,000 motor vehicles registered in Canada by 1960. I myself think the estimate is conservative. I believe we have 3,500,000 motor vehicles in Canada now. By the end of 1955 we will reach the 4 million mark. Add to this the influx of cars from the United States each year, and the congestion of traffic on our highways gives us some comprehension of the need of the trans-Canada highway now, not twenty years hence. At any rate our modern cars and trucks are in use to the point of embarrassment, and are getting more numerous all the time; and that is a challenge to this government in getting on with the job of this national project.

A study of the private services and of the public services rendered by the motor vehicle shows that a revolution has been brought about in our national transportation. A point has already been reached in use and ownership which leading authorities did not think we would attain for at least another ten years. The number of motor vehicles is ten years ahead of all predictions and traffic arteries are ten years behind.

In the annual use of their motor vehicles, Canadians now travel 12½ billion miles per year. The tonnage of freight carried annually by motor transport in Canada exceeds the combined total of that carried by rail, water and air. There are 14,000 communities in this nation of ours which are chiefly dependent upon highway transportation for their very existence. If trucking were removed from industry for a brief period, the industrial machine would come to a halt in short order.

Automotive vehicles play an indispensable role in the science of war and national defence. If we are to survive an attack on our free world, we shall need all the mobility and powers of dispersal that automotive vehicles can give us, and most certainly a trans-Canada thoroughfare.

When confederation came into being it was quite properly believed that the railway would be the prime instrument of the country's development, that roads would be of limited local concern and should, therefore, be left entirely to the provinces to build and maintain. The fathers of confederation acted quite properly for their day and age. They were deliberating just about 35 years prior to the appearance of the first motor car in Canada. Hence roads have been principally the responsibility of municipal governments and the provinces. But the government of that day built two railroads across this continent. Without these rails of steel confederation would probably have fallen apart. It is just as important now to have a trans-Canada highway as it was to have a railroad at that time. These modern roads have become a matter of national importance. Most major traffic routes connect cities in different provinces and carry traffic to and from provinces. Eventually they will be largely interconnected in this national pattern of highways. But we are wondering: How soon? Roads are more than a provincial or municipal matter. They have become a national problem. We must have a broader area of co-operation and understanding among road-building authorities. Above all, we must have a stable and better highway policy, framed on national needs. It might be that some informal collaboration will result from the trans-Canada highway machinery. I, personally, believe that the best results will be achieved by a co-operative association of all road authorities in the interests of all. The problems that face us today dwarf the problems concerning roads of a generation ago. Every last citizen of Canada is or should be interested. The public does want this highway problem solved. People are ready to admit that they are learning by bitter experience, and that inadequate roads are a bad investment. They are paid for partly by human lives, by property damage and by costly delays. I am glad the Minister of Public Works inherited this problem from the last department in which he served, and I wish to quote a statement he made in 1949 when he was then minister of reconstruction and supply. He then moved the second reading of Bill No. 194 which was designed to encourage and assist in the construction of a trans-Canada highway. On November 28, 1949, he said, as reported at page 2328 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments in moving second reading of the bill entitled "An act to encourage and to assist in the construction of a trans-Canada highway." Hon. members will understand that this legislation is enabling in character, in that it seeks authority for the federal government to enter into agreements with the provincial governments toward the construction of provincial highways which will join at various provincial boundaries to form a continuous road across Canada from one coast to the other and, as such, constitute a trans-Canada highway.
>
> This project has been envisaged for many years, and it is considered that the time is now appropriate to proceed with it. When first contemplated it was conceived as a highway from Halifax to Vancouver, but it is now proposed that it shall extend from Victoria, on Vancouver island, to St. John's, Newfoundland, and also embrace Prince Edward Island.
>
> The highway, when completed, will remain the property of the respective provincial governments, who will assume their normal highway responsibilities with respect to it, such as maintenance and snow removal. In effect, therefore, this legislation will enable the federal government to assist provinces in highway construction.

I would like to point out to the minister that the increase in motor traffic and motive power in Canada has developed much faster than many of us thought would be the case, and perhaps even faster than the minister or the officials of his department considered likely. I believe that at this time a new deal should be made and the municipalities taken into consideration, as well as the provinces, in regard to the proper maintenance of these highways. The minister did point out at one time that federal contribution to the completion of the trans-Canada highway would amount to as much as 70 per cent of the total, but I will deal with that later.

Some of that expenditure covered the cost of the old road as well as the new and probably his department has now a better understanding that further help and assistance towards the completion of this road is now required. His department should offer some encouragement to the provinces to enable them to complete this highway and they should also offer something in the way of maintenance. This highway will stretch all across Canada and will pose a major problem to each of the provinces which it crosses. We must have more push and more encouragement from the Department of Public Works.

The minister mentioned during the speech from which I have already quoted that the project had been envisaged for many years. In fact, I remember one speech he made in the house in which he stated that the government had a large package of public works on the shelf waiting for the time when it would be required to create work and wages for the masses. I believe that time has arrived now and if there is any doubt in the minister's mind I would ask him to look at the unemployment relief lists of the different towns and cities all across Canada. If he still does not think the time is ripe to take some of these packages off the shelf, then surely he will agree that the time has arrived when we must have a trans-Canada highway. That project would help provide employment all across Canada. We must have it speeded up more in the future than it has been in the past, and we require that speed-up now.

We accelerated the program last year but even acceleration is not sufficient to complete this program within the seven-year period mentioned in 1949. When this program was started, after many years of consultation, it was considered that it would extend over a seven-year period. Four years of that time has now elapsed and less than 800 miles of this 5,000-mile highway has been completed. That leaves 4,200 miles yet to be constructed. At the rate of the last four years it will take 21 more years to complete this program, despite the fact that this highway is badly needed now.

I would urge the minister to make a special effort to get Quebec to sign on the dotted line, because it will not look very good in three or four years' time if we have the highway all across Canada with the exception of a large chunk of Quebec.

I would like to refer again to the minister's speech on November 28, 1949, as reported at page 2329 of Hansard. At that time he said that something in the neighbourhood of $300 million would be required for the 5,000 miles of the highway, and the federal government's share would be $150 million. The minister also pointed out that there was an average cost of $60,000 per mile for new construction as well as for the highway already built. Of the amount of money voted, 30 per cent has already been spent and only 17 per cent of the road completed. I would now like to quote from his remarks at the bottom of page 2329. The minister said:

> Let us take, for example, a province where $20 million would be needed to complete the highway, and where that province has already spent $8 million on portions of highway which will be part of the trans-Canada highway route. The federal government contribution for the new construction would be $10 million plus 50 per cent of costs previously incurred, or $4 million, for a total contribution of $14 million. If the province applies this contribution of $4 million against the cost of completing the highway, federal money in the $20 million expenditure would amount to $14 million, or 70 per cent. On the other hand, the payment for roads already constructed may be applied elsewhere, as determined by the province, but it is my hope that the provincial governments will use it in such a way that the maximum amount of development and the maximum amount of employment will result.

A return I received a few days ago showed that the cost per mile has not been $60,000, as the minister estimated in 1949, but $107,344 per mile. That figure is on the basis of the amount of money spent and the miles of road completed.

We all know, of course, that the cost of any project of such magnitude as the trans-Canada highway must cost much more per mile for the first year's operation than it would cost on the average a year or so after a start has been made, but I believe this expenditure to date is out of all proportion to what the road should cost. Officials of the Department of Public Works have already provided a great deal of assistance. Last year they provided 38 engineers, 5 technical officers, 4 draftsmen, and 5 survey assistants, and the travelling expenses for these men amounted to $61,000. According to the estimates, they have indulged in photography, for I see an item here for "films, broadcasting and advertising" and opposite that there is an amount of $23,000. It seems to me it would be time enough to take pictures, and broadcast and advertise, when the road is much nearer completion. As things stand at present it will be 21 years before it is completed.

According to an announcement by the department, the work was speeded up last year and contracts were let for $46,343,500. This was $12 million above the 1952 figure. Would this speed-up put on last year have anything to do with the 1953 election? Although it looks very much like it, I trust this was not the case, and that that speed-up will extend well into 1956 and this road will then be completed. If the government is going to dilly-dally along with this project and just put on a speed-up each election year, there can be no doubt that it will take 21 years to complete.

However, I am glad to know that all the provinces, with the exception of Quebec, have signed the agreement and I trust Quebec will sign sometime next year at the latest so that the minister will not have the excuse three years from now that the highway was not completed because one province did not sign the agreement. I am sure that every member of this house and the country is anxious to have this work done at the earliest possible moment as the need is great and the progress of the country requires much more road to be built in the future than has been built in the past. We hope that the speed of last year will be accelerated and that this highway building program will not be accelerated for election years only. I trust that the cost per mile will get down to where it belongs, to the estimate that the minister made in the first place. It should not exceed $60,000 per mile.

I know the minister will say that the provinces have everything to do with the construction. I should like him to tell the house what the fifty-two officials of his department are doing in spending $61,000 in travelling expenses and also $23,000 for films, broadcasting and advertising. They have also spent $1 million in the national parks and have not built any road there at all in spite of the fact that roads through national parks are to be constructed and paid for 100 per cent by the federal government. One province has already spent $8 million for a road which will be part of the trans-Canada highway and is spending $10 million for new construction this year.

Mr. Winters: That is not our statement. That is your own.

Mr. Hodgson: There is no doubt about it—and I think the minister will agree with me—that construction of the trans-Canada highway has not been accelerated. It has not gone along as fast as it should have if it is going to be a seven-year program. In four years there has only been 800 miles of road built. At the rate of construction last year it will take fourteen years to finish it. As I said before, I think it is up to the department to give the provinces some encouragement, and I think there should be a new conference with all the provinces, all those that are interested in a road-building program, and the municipalities in each province which the road will go through should be brought into the conference. You should see if you cannot work out some new and better agreement to speed up construction of the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. Winters: I wonder whether I might say at this moment that there is a later item, 397, under which I think the trans-Canada highway might be more appropriately discussed and under which I would be very glad indeed to discuss it. I think I should say in reply to this speech that I find it a very strange one indeed and one that might more appropriately have been made in the legislature of Ontario or some other provincial government. My hon. friend well knows, because he indicated that he has read the legislation which he himself helped to pass, that the Trans-Canada Highway Act is enabling, that the responsibility for the construction of the highway rests with the provincial governments, and that to the extent that they build the highway we are obligated by the act of parliament to contribute half the cost of construction.

We have been doing everything we can to urge on the provincial governments the desirability of making haste within the terms of the agreement. It is a seven-year period, and as recently as last December I wrote every provincial minister concerned under the terms of the agreements we have with nine of the ten provinces reminding them that the legislation would lapse on December 9, 1956, and that beyond that date parliament had given the government no authority to participate in sharing the cost of the trans-Canada highway. I reminded them that four years of the construction period have already elapsed, that only three remain, and that unless they accelerate their programs of construction they will not complete the highway in the time available to them. As I said, I also reminded them that we have no authority whatever beyond that date.

What more we can do to urge the provincial governments to meet the obligations which they themselves assumed under the terms of this agreement, I do not know. But those are the terms given to us by parliament, and I can assure all hon. members that there is no lack of desire on our part to get on with this construction program. I well recognize that in a province such as Ontario, for example, the trans-Canada highway is a very small percentage of their total highway construction program. But it is their responsibility to decide how much attention and how much effort they wish to focus on the trans-Canada highway and to what extent they wish to emphasize other phases of their highway construction program.

I have referred to Ontario on several occasions because that is perhaps the key link in any trans-Canada highway chain. There are sections in Ontario that have not been graded, and if we are going to enable automobile traffic to pass in relative comfort from one coast of Canada to the other it is absolutely essential that the link in the chain through the province of Ontario be completed. There are other provinces that have parts of the trans-Canada highway route still to be graded, but all hon. members know that Ontario is the key province in the chain of the trans-Canada highway agreement.

Mr. Hodgson: I should like to ask the minister whether he does not think that the federal government should contribute something to the provinces toward maintaining this highway on account of the increase in motor traffic that has taken place since 1949 when the agreement was first made? Give them some encouragement.

The Chairman: Would this particular question not come more properly when we reach the item concerning the trans-Canada highway? I am by no means saying that the question is out of order, but it does appear to me that particular questions would come more properly when the item is called.

Mr. Hodgson: I have got a lot more questions for that time, but I should like to have this one answered now. When does the minister think the highway will be finished?

Mr. Winters: I can only say to the hon. member what I have said to the provincial governments on many occasions, that this parliament has passed legislation which enables the federal government to participate with provincial governments under the trans-Canada highway agreements until December 9, 1956. Beyond that we have no authority. The terms of the legislation are specific. They enable the federal government to pay 50 per cent of the cost of construction, and it is clearly set forth that the maintenance of the road once it is constructed is the responsibility of the provinces in the same way as ownership of the highway. There was a matter of provincial jurisdiction and autonomy involved and we made it clear, and it was the wish of all provincial governments, that ownership and maintenance of the highway should be provincial matters.

Mr. Hodgson: The minister has not answered my question. He has officials who must have some idea. They must have given some thought to the matter. When do they think the highway will be completed?

Mr. McIvor: It depends on the provinces.

Mr. Hodgson: I guess it depends on the moon.

Mr. Winters: All I can say is there has been agreement. If one can say that the provinces entered into the agreement in good faith and propose to live up to its terms, then the trans-Canada highway will be completed by December 9, 1956.

Mr. Winch: I have listened with a great deal of interest to the extemporaneous speech of the hon. member for Victoria, Ontario, but I want to discuss a matter of policy which is not covered under any other item of the estimates of the Department of Public Works except this one. I would appreciate it very much if the minister would explain to the house what policy is followed by the federal government in determining when they will make a contribution toward the cost of building bridges. I was very interested in a question asked only yesterday by a member from Ontario as to the contribution by the federal government towards the cost of a bridge in Ontario. As I understood the minister's answer, it was that because the government owned or controlled a canal the government were prepared to pay one-third of the cost of the bridge.

That brings me to an important question. What is the policy of the government and what determines the government's action with respect to whether or not they will contribute towards the cost of construction of bridges? I believe the minister knows right now what I have in mind. I am discussing the Marpole bridge in the city of Vancouver. This bridge crosses a navigable river which comes under the control and jurisdiction of the federal government because it is a navigable river.

There is only one airport for the city of Vancouver, which has a twofold value. First, it has a commercial value. I believe that it is one of the most used airports in the Dominion of Canada. In view of the fact that Vancouver is on the Pacific coast, the airport has an interest in the realm of defence. This bridge is obsolete. It has been knocked out time after time by tugs and log booms. There is no question about the need for a new bridge. From my studies and my knowledge of the situation, Mr. Chairman, I am going to say that basically the bridge is a municipal and provincial responsibility. I admit that.

There is the issue, however, that the bridge crosses a navigable river and provides the only access to the airport for commercial or defence purposes, or offence, if you want to put it that way, on the west coast. I believe these considerations can reasonably bring the bridge within the realm of federal government interests. I understand the federal government is now in the process of negotiating, or has completed negotiations, to take over the Vancouver airport. I do not know whether or not it has been taken over as yet, but I understand there are negotiations to that end and the federal government has made an offer to the city of Vancouver.

I am certain I could talk for about an hour on this subject. I do not believe I have to do that because I am sure the Minister of Public Works knows the importance of that bridge. I am convinced that if there were an offer of assistance from the federal government it would accelerate the building of what I believe is one of the most necessary bridges in the entire Dominion of Canada. Although

I may have to say more about it later, and that depends upon the minister's answer, I am going to go back to what I started to say. What is the policy, and how is it determined, in regard to grants for the construction of bridges?

I shall put the question directly through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister of Public Works. What negotiations have there been in the past or are there now, and can the federal government assist British Columbia in the construction of a vital bridge over the Fraser river at Marpole?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I would imagine that there are as many circumstances that have a bearing on policy as there are potential bridges or existing bridges. Generally, though, there are some cornerstones of policy. If a bridge is entirely within the area of a province, then it is normally regarded as a provincial responsibility. If the bridge is over interprovincial or international waters, then there is some reason for the federal government's participation and the federal government normally does participate. One example of that is the proposed Pembroke bridge, which is under discussion now, and with respect to which the federal government has told the governments of Ontario and Quebec that we are prepared to participate and co-ordinate the work if they wish to go forward with the structure.

There is another bridge across an international water at St. Stephen, New Brunswick, which I have in mind, and for which the federal government is also ready to pay a part of the cost. The fact that the water is navigable does not necessarily mean the federal government is responsible for sharing the cost of a bridge over it. Normally the federal government has a decision to make as to whether the navigable water should or not be bridged; that is a matter for decision under the Navigable Waters Protection Act.

In the case of the bridge over the Burlington canal, there were many circumstances. This canal was built by the old commission of works, I think it was called, before confederation, and has always been regarded as a federal structure. It has been maintained by the federal government since confederation. There is a railway bridge over the canal now as well as a highway bridge. It was a double bascule bridge, but one side of it was knocked out by a ship. There is a temporary fixed bridge there now. One side is still bascule, which can be raised to enable navigation to pass through. This bridge was built by the federal government. It is maintained by the federal government, so the federal government already has an interest and responsibility there because of that involvement in the bridge.

The government of Ontario has asked permission to build a high level bridge over the canal to facilitate the flow of the very large and developing volume of traffic that must move over the canal to complete the circuit of travel. We have told the Ontario government that we are prepared to participate with them in that expenditure up to a maximum of one-third. We were prompted in that by two basic considerations, and we made one of them a condition of our participation. The first was that we be permitted to abandon our present bridge over the canal for which we are responsible and which we maintain. The other consideration was the requirement of navigation through the canal which was built by the federal government or the forerunner of the federal government.

The requirements of navigation make it necessary to build a much more expensive bridge than would be required were there no need to consider navigation. The reason is that a high level bridge will be required rather than the low level bridge which otherwise could have been built. For these reasons we felt there was a federal government responsibility. In British Columbia, at Marpole, the river is navigable and we are quite willing to give permission to British Columbia to build a suitable bridge over the river, having regard to the requirements of navigation. The water is purely within provincial boundaries. There seems to be no federal government involvement other than the potential one of the airport my hon. friend mentioned.

We have, to date, told the government of British Columbia that there is no federal government responsibility with respect to the bridge, and that we cannot participate in the cost.

Mr. Winch: Have you told the province of British Columbia that you will not make any grant? Do I understand that?

Mr. Winters: That is what we have told the British Columbia government.

Mr. Winch: Is that not a change of policy? I understand that in the past discussions, extending over two years, there was an offer by the federal government to participate in the expenditure. Has that been withdrawn?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I am not aware of any offer. I know the history of this bridge since I have been Minister of Public Works. Since that time, in correspondence with the minister of highways of the government of British Columbia, I told him that in my opinion there was no federal government responsibility, and that I could see no grounds for federal government participation.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid there is some misunderstanding on the part of members of the cabinet. This subject has been discussed for quite a few years. I have here a press clipping of September 18, 1946, bearing the heading "Ottawa to aid City on Bridge to Airport", and stating as follows:

> The federal government will share in the cost of a new high level bridge at Marpole—to serve the municipal airport—with the city and Richmond, Reconstruction Minister C. D. Howe told city council at a private meeting this morning.
>
> A report covering the proposed location, type and clearance of the span is to be prepared by civic, provincial and dominion engineers.

This was the highlight of three announcements made by Mr. Howe.

That was nearly eight years ago.

Then, I have here another clipping from the News-Herald of June 11, 1949, under the heading "Federal Aid Promised For New Bridge", and stating:

> The federal government is willing to put up one-third the cost of a high level bridge across the Fraser river, says Arthur Laing, Liberal candidate in Vancouver South.

And this basis of a third by the dominion, a third by the province and a third by the city has been the basis all the way through—at least it was in the beginning. The article continues:

> He said Rt. Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce, had told him the money is available and the government is only waiting for city and provincial authorities to decide on a site.

Then, in 1950 I find an article indicating the holding of a conference on this subject in Ottawa. This article is dated at Ottawa, March 31, 1950, under the heading "Bridge Talks Open", and states:

> Vancouver and B.C. government representatives met a federal cabinet member today in the first round of the city's fight for a new $10,000,000 high-level bridge to span the Fraser river at the foot of Oak.
>
> B.C. Works Minister Carson, accompanied by Ald. J. D. Cornett and city engineer John Oliver, met federal works minister Fournier.
>
> "We're just getting into the problem," said Mr. Carson, adding the delegation would meet other ministers within the next few days. Negotiations might easily continue after the delegation returned to B.C., he added.
>
> "A very fair reception," said Ald. Cornett.

Remember, this was four years ago. The article continues:

> The delegation had received strong support from B.C.'s federal members, Mr. Carson said.
>
> Works minister Fournier, trade minister Howe and transport minister Chevrier are representing the federal government.

Then, I find a dispatch dated November 28, 1951, under the heading "Ottawa's Offer dims Marpole Span Hopes", and stating:

> Ottawa will pay only $400,000 if and when a new bridge is built over the Fraser at Marpole, B.C.'s cabinet minister in the federal government, Hon. Robert Mayhew, said today.
>
> Mr. Mayhew said this assistance was offered by trade minister Howe and "still stands."

That was the statement in 1951 by the then representative of British Columbia in the dominion cabinet. Yet we have the present Minister of Public Works saying that the dominion will not pay one cent.

Mr. Chairman, that simply is not good enough. This bridge is used primarily for traffic to the airport—an airport which, I believe, does more business than any other in Canada. Certainly if there is any other doing more business, it would only be the airport at Dorval. Time and again people are held up by reason of the fact that this old Marpole bridge is open, perhaps to let a scow or a tug through, and it opens hundreds of times each year. I think it was only last year that the Prime Minister was delayed for half an hour or so because this span had to be opened.

As the minister knows, navigation has the right of way. When a tug comes along towing a scow loaded with sawdust, or anything of that nature, all traffic to the airport has to stop while the bridge is opened. Traffic cannot continue until the tug and scow have passed through.

If that situation existed in Montreal, Toronto or Ottawa the people in those districts would be frantic; it simply could not happen. These cities are so near the centre of government that things of that kind would not be tolerated. I suggest to the minister there is no reason why nearly a million people in greater Vancouver should be subjected to a situation of this kind. The federal government cannot get away from some responsibility. Perhaps the provincial government should take the lead—and the provincial government has announced its willingness to do that. The city of Vancouver has been willing to help all the way through.

To hear the Minister of Public Works for Canada say that he and his department are not interested, and that the federal government will not do anything about the bridge, is simply going back on a promise made years ago, and repeated year after year by responsible ministers in this same government.

I do suggest that the minister should take another look at this situation. The only possible excuse for his attitude today is that he does not know the facts, and that he does not know what has been going on right here in Ottawa in connection with this bridge. I hope we will have assurance from him today that he will take the matter up with his colleagues and that, as a result, Ottawa will agree to do its fair share toward building a proper and modern bridge over the north arm of the Fraser river.

Mr. Winch: May I add a further word. I am grateful to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra for having placed on record the newspaper comment.

When I spoke earlier I did not say some of the things that perhaps I should have said. I think it is known to the minister that for twenty years I was in the British Columbia legislature, and that during twelve of those years I had the honour of leading His Majesty's loyal opposition as a member from the city of Vancouver. As a member from Vancouver and also as leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition in that legislature I was, ex officio, a member of the cabinet—"ex officio"; I stress that.

However, as a result of holding that honour I did know something about the negotiations conducted in matters of this kind. I want to say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the minister, that in the past few years this matter has been of great importance to Vancouver and the province of British Columbia. It was always our understanding that the federal government was prepared to make a financial contribution toward the construction of a bridge at Marpole. The only problem ever presented to us in our meetings with the city council of Vancouver, or from a legislative standpoint, was as to where the bridge should be—whether at Marpole, Oak street or Fraser. The remarks of the minister this afternoon are the first indication I have had that they were not prepared to make any contribution financially.

I can only repeat my own words and emphasize this. Without any question of doubt there is a responsibility on the federal government. Without any question of doubt there is a commitment of more than one cabinet minister of the Liberal government that they would contribute toward the cost of a new bridge. I just want to add my word once again. We have got to have it. There is no question about it. In peace and in war we have got to have that new bridge. I ask the minister to go over the history, study the situation and come forward with no less than one-third of the cost of a new bridge at Marpole.

Mr. Hahn: In connection with this item, I was pleased when the hon. members for Vancouver-Quadra and Vancouver East raised the bridge question. In so far as the bridge is concerned, there is no doubt in the minds of British Columbians, particularly those on the lower mainland, that the federal authorities do have a responsibility, but I shall bring that problem to light later on. The hon. member for Victoria, Ontario, mentioned highways. We have a highway problem in the Yellowhead pass that will probably be dealt with by one of my associates. However, my problem in this instance happens to be something having to do with remarks that were made on March 12 by certain hon. members who intimated that this government was using electioneering as a political football: that is, that you had to vote Liberal in order to get what you wanted. I know a lot of people say, "Oh, well, that is all foolish", and so on; but in view of the fact that all those past governments or cabinet ministers have indicated that they were desirous of helping the provincial government and the city of Vancouver to build the Marpole bridge, one just begins to wonder whether there is not some element of truth in the suggestion, in so far as the province of British Columbia is concerned, on account of its having changed its particular provincial politics. I hear an hon. gentleman say, "Nonsense". It probably is. I would not place any credence in it, sir, if it were not for the fact that in the Surrey Leader of March 25, on page 7, I read this:

> Liberal comeback soon, Mott tells Surrey club.

I for one know Mr. Mott very well. I have every reason to respect his thoughts and his ideas. He was a valuable servant of this government and he was a valuable servant of the people of New Westminster. My quarrel has never been with William Mott or with anyone else concerned with that same gentleman who served his province and his city so well. But I should like to read this:

> William Mott spoke on the future of the Liberal party in British Columbia at the annual meeting of the Liberal Association for Ocean Park, Crescent Beach and Elgin. Meeting was held in the Legion hall at Crescent on March 12, and there was an excellent attendance.
>
> Mr. Mott feels that there is every hope of the party making a comeback in the near future. He also stated that last year a large amount of money had been expended by the federal government in Surrey, but that this year, since George Hahn has been in office, there has been none allocated with the exception of the Annacis Island development.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if that is not a suggested reason why I should not have been elected I would like to know what it is, and I should like to have an answer to it. Certainly, it does not come out and say that you must vote Liberal or you will get no public works, but the intimation is definitely there. I do know the Minister of Public Works well enough to realize that those are not his sentiments. At least, I have reason to believe that those are not his sentiments. I believe such a charge should be refuted, and in no uncertain terms. That is the only reason for my rising at this time. He has treated me quite well so far as I am concerned as an individual, but it is up to him to let those who were defeated know that that is not his policy or the policy of his government, if it is not so; otherwise, we must accept the suggestion that because the province of British Columbia turned out the Liberal government and elected a Social Credit government, no further help is coming from this government.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, may I just say one further word on the Marpole bridge before we leave it and get into maritime matters?

Mr. Winch: Do not leave it; give us something.

Mr. Winters: What I said about my conversations and correspondence with the government of British Columbia represents my thinking on the problem. It was arrived at after a careful search of the files, during which I found no binding commitment, nor indeed any commitment of any kind, requiring the federal government to participate in the cost of the Marpole bridge. I have been hearing about these reported commitments through the press, such as that quoted by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. I simply wish to assure the committee that if my predecessor here or any of my other colleagues in good faith have committed the federal government to participation in that bridge, they may be assured that that commitment will be honoured.

Mr. Hahn: I did not get an answer to my question regarding the inference.

Mr. Brooks: I did not—

Mr. Winch: Do I understand that if there was any statement or impression left by any of the predecessors of my hon. friend of financial assistance to the building of the Marpole bridge he would honour it?

Mr. Winters: I said that if there is any valid commitment on the part of my—

Mr. Knowles: That is well protected.

Mr. Winters: I do not want to hedge on these words. If my predecessor, or any of my colleagues, speaking on their responsibilities as members of the cabinet, have said that we will participate in the cost of building the Marpole bridge, then we will honour the commitment; but I have been able to find on the files no record of any such commitment.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Royal.

Mr. Brooks: I know the hon. members who have been trying to rise have a much greater contribution to make to this subject than I have. However, I feel I have my rights. I have been up two or three times. I want to discuss the general problem. I think there is a great misunderstanding as to just what the federal responsibility is in the matter of bridges. This Marpole bridge is an excellent example, I should think, of cases where the federal government should give assistance. I was in Halifax a few days ago and I noted that the bridge across Halifax harbour is pretty well near completion. They expect to have it finished this year. I understand that the bridge across Halifax harbour has been the responsibility of the federal government, the local government and the city of Halifax.

Mr. Winters: Just the latter two, Mr. Chairman, the provincial government and the municipalities.

Mr. Brooks: The federal government has made no contribution at all?

Mr. Winters: No contribution, no.

Mr. Brooks: It is understood at Halifax that the federal government was making a contribution.

Mr. Winters: A great many people think that, but it is not correct.

Mr. Brooks: The federal government is getting a lot of credit for something that it is not doing, which has been true in the past. An hon. member mentioned bridges connecting different provinces. In the past I have brought to the attention of this department a bridge which the people of Campbellton, N.B., and Cross Point in Quebec feel should be constructed. Has the minister anything to say in connection with this bridge? Is there any possibility of a bridge being constructed in that vicinity in the near future?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I may say what the situation is there. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska has been very much interested in this matter, and not long ago he led a delegation to see me. We have written to the government of Quebec and to the government of New Brunswick telling them that if they are anxious to have a bridge built across—

Mr. Brooks: Across the bay of Chaleur, at Campbellton.

Mr. Winters: Yes, at Campbellton. We told them that if they are anxious to have a bridge built across the bay at Campbellton, we are prepared to co-ordinate the work there, and are certainly prepared to give favourable consideration to financial participation.

Mr. Brooks: It would be a three-party arrangement?

Mr. Winters: Yes; it would be a three-party arrangement. The government of New Brunswick seemed to be quite interested. The government of Quebec at that time was involved in its legislative program and the reply we received was that they had too much work on hand at that particular moment to devote their attention to this bridge but that they hoped to be in a position to consider it at a later date, at which time they would communicate with us.

Mr. McIvor: I have just a brief word to say. I know this bridge in Vancouver. I think I have a right to know the airfield. The worst bottleneck I have seen in Canada was leading up to that Marpole bridge. When I was out there the information I obtained was that the city of Vancouver expected to sell the airfield to the dominion government and that the money received would be used in building the bridge. I do not know how far that matter goes, but that is the information I had. As to the need for that bridge, I say it is one of Canada's outstanding needs, but I trust the minister to be fair.

Mr. Nicholson: I must thank the minister for providing for a public building in my constituency. When the minister was before the committee on March 12 trying to get this item through, I mentioned the fact that a year ago provision had been made for a public building at Carrot River. The Minister of Agriculture is in the chamber and I am sure he will agree with me that Carrot River is a very important centre. Can the minister indicate whether it was an oversight that this item is not in the estimates this year whereas a year ago apparently provision was made for the building of a public building there? In a letter written to me on February 5 the Postmaster General mentioned that a public building was needed very badly. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police are also servicing quite a large area. Can the minister say whether it was an oversight that Carrot River was overlooked in the supplementary estimates which were brought down at the end of the month or whether plans can be proceeded with for the construction of a public building at this important centre?

[Mr. Brooks.]

Mr. Winters: No, Mr. Chairman; it certainly was not an oversight. On a previous occasion I outlined to my hon. friend the policy of the department in not providing funds in the estimates for work we are not prepared to undertake during the year under consideration. That is the position we are in at Carrot River. It is a matter for future planning before we shall be able to undertake the work there.

I might say, Mr. Chairman, that I think we would have a little bit more orderly discussion here if we discussed these various provincial projects under the particular vote for the province concerned.

Mr. Hahn: What I have to say is not a provincial matter. It has to do with the charge that was made in connection with a particular item respecting a Liberal policy. I want to know whether or not the minister wants to let the inference stand wherein Mr. Mott suggests that the reason I have not had any public works in my district is that the area did not vote Liberal. Is that the policy or is it not?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether Mr. Mott or anybody else made such a statement. These are just reports which I know the hon. member is relaying here to me in good faith; but until I know the context and the spirit in which the remarks were made, I could not pass judgment on them. I may say that all these projects are treated on their merits.

Mr. Hahn: It is a press report.

The Chairman: I must ask the hon. member to confine his remarks to the general administration of public works.

Mr. Hahn: That is the situation. I should like to be within my rights here. I think it is a matter of administration as to the policy of the government, as set down, whereby they are going to allocate public works at certain places.

Mr. Byrne: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Hahn: Yes.

Mr. Byrne: In this report was it stated specifically that the reason there had not been this allocation was that the voters had elected Mr. Hahn, or was it that they had elected a Social Credit supporter? Was it a distinction as between two members or was it a distinction as to party?

Mr. Hahn: I am sorry, but I passed the report over to the reporter.

The Chairman: Order. I would remind the hon. member that we are discussing the first item, item No. 360, of the Department of Public Works. I have allowed a fairly generous discussion, as I think hon. members will agree, but I cannot allow this discussion to go any further. I would ask the hon. members to confine themselves to a discussion of this department and not to indulge in a discussion of political matters.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. If you cannot discuss a department's policy on the first item, which is administration, just where are you going to discuss it? That is not a difficult question for the minister to answer. I have known the minister for a good long time and, as far as I am concerned, I do not think he takes politics into consideration when allotting these different projects. But let him say so now. Now is the time to make this point clear, particularly in the instance referred to by the hon. member who was speaking just a moment ago. There is no difficulty in the matter for the minister. Let him say that Mott was telling something that is not true or that he was telling the truth, one or the other.

Mr. Winters: If the hon. member wishes to take responsibility for statements he has seen in the press, he is acting on his own. I have already said—and I think my hon. friend heard me—that these projects are considered on their merits.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): No politics in it.

Mr. Winch: When I raised the matter of the Marpole bridge I was discussing it under item 360 because there is no specific item which covers it. I want to raise one other matter of policy and ask the Minister of Public Works a question, in view of the situation in Canada, where even according to the Minister of Finance our first six months may be on a downgrade, but he hopes that the next six months will be on the upgrade, where we have at the present moment in the neighbourhood of 500,000 unemployed. That being the situation, whether it is in a recession or in prosperity—

Mr. Winters: Does my hon. friend not mean 500,000 applications for jobs? I think there is quite a distinction there.

Mr. Winch: That is right; 592,000 applications for jobs. If the minister wants me to put it that way, I will do so. What I am coming to is this. I cannot understand why, in the architects' drawings and specifications for public buildings being constructed by the Dominion of Canada, we specify materials coming from outside of Canada. I refer in particular, of course, to the post office in Vancouver. With all the beautiful granite and marble of varying types in Canada, why should it be necessary to specify—or why should it be done—in any government specifications that any material coming from outside of Canada should be used in the construction of public buildings? I think that is an important matter at any time, but it is a particularly important matter at a time when we have 592,000 applications for employment in the Dominion of Canada. I believe I know Canada fairly well. I know its products and resources fairly well, and for the life of me, Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why the dominion government, through the Department of Public Works and their architectural branch, plan a building and specify marble which has to come from Italy, or some other country. As far as I am concerned it simply does not make sense. I admit it may be beautiful. You have only to inspect this House of Commons and you will find marble from many countries, but you will also find throughout this entire building granite and marble which is a product of this dominion. I cannot see why that marble and that granite produced in Canada are not good enough for the government in its specifications. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether this is strictly a matter of policy, and why, in the specifications of a multimillion dollar construction such as the Vancouver post office, they specified imported Italian marble. We have marble finishers in Canada who could be employed if we used our own marble and granite. Why cannot we have a policy of using the produce of Canada in public works constructions?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, as a matter of policy the specifications of the Department of Public Works require Canadian materials consistent with economy. The particular building to which my hon. friend referred was designed for the Department of Public Works by very competent architects from Vancouver. In order to get the quality and the colour of the marble in certain public areas they specified requirements that could be met only by importing Italian marble.

Mr. Winch: Why?

Mr. Winters: Because of the type of granular structure and the appearance of the marble. It is a very small part of the total cost of the building. The total value of the marble purchased and worked in Italy will be of the order of about $60,000 which is a very small percentage of a building cost of some $9 million. We have endeavoured—and, I believe, succeeded to a very large extent—to use domestic materials in public works structures. There are instances from time to time where, on grounds of economy or for some technical reason, foreign materials are included; but by and large I think hon. members would agree, if they had the opportunity of examining the specifications and the tenders submitted, that we have achieved a pretty good measure of success in having local materials used in these projects.

Mr. Ferguson: Surely it is like buying an oil painting such as a Rembrandt in order to show our people in Canada some of the beauties from other lands. The texture of the marble must be worth observing and it seems to me this is no doubt part of an educational campaign to show our people in the form of these public buildings the things which come from other parts of the world. That policy has been carried on for years and possibly the sort of material required cannot be obtained in Canada.

Mr. Winch: But that is not the point. Did the minister say that this building will cost $9 million?

Mr. Winters: Yes, of the order of $9 million.

Mr. Winch: And the minister informs us that out of the $9 million structure it is required to have a $60,000 importation of Italian marble. But that does not make sense to me, Mr. Chairman. The importation of $60,000 worth of Italian marble may not be a considerable item, but I would point out to you, Mr. Chairman, that the marble polishers and granite finishers in Canada could have nine months' work on that amount.

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Winch: Yes, I believe they would.

Mr. Winters: I understand the polishing in Canada would represent about $37,000 and perhaps give work to some 45 men for about three months.

Mr. Winch: The minister has not contradicted me one bit. As a matter of fact, he has helped me considerably and I appreciate that. That work could go to the people of Canada and they would reap the benefit from the expenditure of this $60,000 item out of a total expenditure of $9 million. But I still cannot understand why we should import Italian marble.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. MacLean: No, Mr. Chairman. When this item was last being considered by the committee on March 12 I was about to make some comments when the committee rose. I propose to make these comments now. First of all, I would like to congratulate the minister on his appointment to the very important portfolio of Minister of Public Works. I believe the choice is a very happy one and for a variety of reasons I am pleased that he holds that portfolio. To begin with, he is an engineer and I think the ministry of public works is a job which should be held by an engineer. I am also glad to see this portfolio come to the maritime provinces, and, without being facetious, I believe another reason why the present minister is highly qualified to hold the post is that he received at least part of his education at the university from which I myself graduated.

An hon. Member: A great man.

Mr. MacLean: We are both great men. I think perhaps the Prime Minister made the best possible selection when casting about for an appointee to fill this position, particularly when one considers the limitations placed upon his freedom of choice.

The minister has a very important task before him, because I believe the Department of Public Works is one of the most important portfolios in this government. It is one with which every part of the country is intimately concerned. I was pleased to hear the minister say that it is hoped that in future more of the construction work being carried out on behalf of the government will be undertaken by his department. I think that is as it should be, and I will be looking forward to the day when all public building construction, or as much as possible, will be done by the Department of Public Works. The minister's job is an important and difficult one for another reason. It is especially difficult because I think his department perhaps ranks lowest of all government departments in public esteem. As a result of its past history people have not had too much confidence in it. I think the general feeling of the Canadian people with respect to this department in past years is aptly expressed in an article found on page 6 of Maclean's magazine of November 1. The article is written by Blair Fraser and reads in part as follows:

> Normally the Minister of Public Works knows a great deal about politics. Now, for the first time in human memory, he knows something about public works. Public works has been, in fact, the last surviving puddle—

He does not say how big the puddle is.

> —of the great dismal swamp of politics and patronage which once engulfed the whole government service. There hasn't been an actual scandal in the department since the 1890's, when the notorious McGreevy affair exposed a nasty situation, but though old-fashioned graft was cleaned up, old-fashioned patronage was not. Public works remained proverbial, in and out of the government service, for inefficiency and general ineptitude. This was not the fault of the harried handful of competent civil servants trying to run the department. They had to work with the blunt instruments the politicians gave them, and as the years went by they got more and more discouraged and resigned to defeat.

I am delighted to be able to hope that the department is now starting with a clean sheet and that things will be different in the future. Before I go further, may I say that I sincerely wish the minister and his deputy minister success in their attempts to bring about this very necessary improvement. Both today and on March 12 a great deal of concern has been expressed about the possibility that certain parts of the country are discriminated against simply because they see fit to elect to parliament members who are not supporters of the government. I trust that is not so and that it never was so, but I know for a fact that a very large percentage of the Canadian people believe that it is so. There is no denying that they have been encouraged in that belief from time to time by certain people in this country merely for their own personal benefit.

I was delighted to hear the minister say that when consideration is given to new public works decisions will be reached on the merits of the work in question and the merits alone. I was delighted to hear the minister say that because if he makes that understood at every turn he will have gone a long way toward improving the esteem in which his department is held by the general public.

There is another matter that I wish to refer to briefly, and I was pleased to hear the minister say that there will be a change in this connection. I refer to the custom in the past of putting items in the estimates that apparently have had no meaning. It has been customary year after year for items to appear in the estimates and for the money not to be spent. The explanation that has been given is that some time before the estimates come before parliament again someone might be moved by some whim to start on some public work, and that therefore it was nice and convenient to have an item in the estimates so that they would have authority for doing so if the occasion should arise. If estimates are meaningless it makes a mockery out of considering them, and I am pleased to hear the minister say that in the future items will appear in his estimates only when it is contemplated that the work will be proceeded with in the year ahead and before there is another opportunity to present a similar item to parliament. But that has been far from the case in the past.

As an example, I should like to cite the case of the public building in Charlottetown. To satisfy my own curiosity I examined the estimates of the last several years and I found that an item has appeared for this building in every year since 1947 to date, with a cumulative total of $1,500,000. As yet there is no visible sign of any building being constructed. I am delighted to know that the project will go forward in the year ahead. But the unfortunate thing about the recurrence of such items in the estimates is the fact that our budget is based on the estimates, and taking only the case to which I have referred the Canadian people have already been taxed to the extent of $1,500,000 for a building the construction of which has not even commenced. To me that is not good business.

I think the estimates should be real and meaningful estimates of the money actually to be spent in the year ahead. Then funds can be raised to meet the proposed expenditures from year to year. I think that is only common sense and good business. I believe the Canadian people are sick and tired of paying real taxes for meaningless estimates to build phantom buildings. There is nothing else I want to say at the present time except that I note that under this item there is a considerable increase in the amount set aside for wages. That is caused in part, I understand, by the fact that the staff has been increased by twenty-five and partly by an increase in the rates of wages. I would be very pleased if the minister, when convenient, would explain a little more fully how much of the increase is for increases in rates of wages, how much is for additional members of the staff, why additional staff is necessary and whether the addition to the staff is an addition because the department is taking over work which was formerly done by other departments or whether it is really an increase in the total number of civil servants.

Mr. Fairey: I am sorry to revert again to the Marpole bridge but I feel that as a former member of the British Columbia civil service I was in a position to know the feeling of the people in government circles and the people of Vancouver with respect to an understanding between the federal government, the government of British Columbia and the city of Vancouver. Certainly it was our understanding that if it had not been for the procrastination of the city of Vancouver the Marpole bridge would have been built long ago.

I can clearly recall that the Hon. E. C. Carson, minister of public works at the time when I was deputy minister of education, told me there was a definite commitment on the part of this government and all that was standing in the way of proceeding with the building of the bridge was the question of a site. He told me also that three engineers had unanimously chosen the Fraser avenue site, but they could get no agreement from the officials of the city of Vancouver.

It is true that there is no legal obligation on the part of the federal to make a contribution towards this bridge. I feel that is something we must remember. It is a matter of expediency or if you like an implied obligation on the part of this government to service the airport that caused the ministers of that day to agree that federal assistance be given, and that they were quite prepared to proceed on a three-way basis with the province and the city. That was the definite understanding.

Mr. Winch: A one-third contribution?

Mr. Fairey: I am just giving my impression, Mr. Chairman, and the impression certainly of the most of the people of Vancouver and British Columbia. Certainly that was the impression in the minds of the officials of the provincial government. I feel I should say that. I hope that the minister will, as he has been urged by several speakers, take a second look to see if we cannot come to a settlement of this vexed question.

Mr. White (Middlesex East): Before the item passes there are one or two questions I wanted to ask the minister. As he has said earlier, I realize that the expenditures deal with the current year and not the distant future. But upon looking over the details of the estimates I was unable to find any great increase in the amount of money that will be spent for harbours and wharves on lake Erie or lake Huron. I was looking into the future hoping that possibly in view of the proposed new seaway more attention would be paid to the facilities at these various ports. With the increasing cost of highway and railway transportation, I am hoping that water transportation on the great lakes will offer a cheaper alternative method of transportation than we have enjoyed in the past. As a consequence, I asked that question.

Upon going through the estimates of the Department of Public Works I found no mention of any item dealing with the seaway. I see item No. 444 in the Department of Transport deals with that but I presume a portion of the work will eventually be done by the Department of Public Works. I hope it is not out of order to mention that, with all the negotiations and talk going on about the seaway, I am hoping it is not the policy of this government to try to get the United States to join with us in the building of the seaway. I believe that the policy of the government should be to do everything in its power to make it an all-Canadian seaway so we can have control of it, and it will not be one of those international things about which there is bickering all the time. We know what has happened to our tariffs. I just mention that in passing.

I see there is an item of $100,000 for the dock at Kagawong on Manitoulin island. I believe I mentioned that a year or two ago. Then we come down the great lakes and I notice there is an item of nearly $100,000 for Colchester and another item of $100,000 for Kingsville. However, I notice that there is only about $19,000 for Pelee island. Kingsville and Leamington are two ports that serve the Pelee area, but there are two docks on Pelee island, the north dock and the west dock. I have been there a good many times and know something about the area. It is increasing in importance, and there is a vast amount of agricultural wealth produced on the island. I believe these people are hoping that more improvements in the dock facilities will be made.

I suppose I really should not mention this but I heard the hon. member for New Westminster referring to political bait held out to constituencies. I feel that the minister does not want any part of that. He gets dragged into these things against his will. I was glad to hear him say that his decision as to proceeding with public works would be based on the merits of each case. I commend him for that statement. In passing I want to mention to him that during the heat of the by-election in Elgin reference was made to the fact that more could be gained for the constituency if a member on the government side were elected. Figures were brought forward that such was not the case. The new member for Elgin will be here next week, so I am not going into that any farther. Apparently the results would indicate that people do not like to be dealt with in that manner.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I should like to bring a matter to the attention of the committee that is of concern to all members. I refer to the shelf of public projects we were supposed to have back in 1945. I noticed from a perusal of the estimates before us there is an increase in the amount allotted this department over last year by $10 million. It is quite natural that those of us who feel that something of a dynamic nature should be undertaken by this government to overcome the unemployment situation in this country are quite concerned about the loss in potential prosperity, if I may put it that way, due to the loss of man-hours.

Back in 1945 when I came into this house, Mr. Chairman, at the end of the war, I recall that we were faced with the question of: where do we go from here? The war was at an end and we were wondering whether the Canadian economy would retrogress into the conditions we experienced in the thirties. At that time I recall, as many other hon. members will, the government gave confirmation of the fact that they had a shelf of public projects which could be undertaken if the Canadian economy showed signs of lapsing into a condition which would bring about unemployment. This scheme of public projects sponsored by the federal government was to overcome that difficulty.

Upon returning to the House of Commons this year I find that apparently this shelf of public projects has either gone into the wastepaper basket or has been forgotten. I should like to bring to the minister's attention the fact that in Canada today we have a very grave unemployment situation. In excess of 500,000, nearly 600,000, people have registered for employment. If we want to prevent the loss of wealth which these people could produce for the Canadian economy, then it is the responsibility of the federal government to undertake a dynamic policy of public works. To make a mental calculation of what we are losing today in man-hours one could take the very conservative figure of 500,000 unemployed on a five-day 40-hour week, and arrive at the colossal sum of 80 million man-hours per month that we lose.

Those of us in this group say that after all real wealth can be created only by the application of our labour force to our natural resources. One can see readily that there is nothing very dynamic in the present economic system of Canada if that is all the government has to offer. Therefore I urge the Minister of Public Works who, I know, is an excellent minister trying to do his part, to develop a public works program. I do not know what influence he has with his colleagues in the cabinet. We do know however that tremendous expenditures are being made for defence, reaching about $2 billion and, in the circumstances, I think it is reasonable, wise and expedient to use some of our public money in a vigorous public works program.

I suggest that in this connection the minister would do well to confer with his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and that they consider what is involved in the protection of our people in a time of war when hydrogen bombs might be used. Anyone who has made any study of the subject knows that under our civil defence program there are no facilities with which we could protect ourselves in such event.

I do not know what the plans of the government were when they told us between 1945 and 1949 that they had a shelf of public works projects, but I am saying to the minister now that right at this moment it would be expedient for the government to give serious consideration to considering a real and dynamic program through which we will develop our resources and make use of that shelf of public projects by proceeding with slum clearance, the elimination of level crossings, and thus stamping out accidents at those crossings, and entering into commitments or agreements with the Minister of National Health and Welfare for the development of a program all along the line in the matter of public works. I should think this would be preferable to reducing the expenditures of last year or to the $130,776,751 indicated as the expenditures for this year.

If there are any public works projects on the shelf that could be proceeded with, in my opinion it would be expedient to go forward at once with them and thus eliminate some of the unemployment.

It is all very well for members of the House of Commons who are receiving their indemnities and who have financial security. But when we leave the House of Commons for the Easter vacation and return to our homes we will meet people whose incomes have fallen because they have been unable to sell their grain. And when the farmers are not in a position to employ help, there are many who are unemployed. To put the matter succinctly, we will find many who are unemployed. It is a most serious thing when one's income is cut off completely. The government should have sufficient vision and vitality to go ahead. If we are going to tell the world that this is a free world, and that we live in a dynamic economic society, then let us get busy and do something about it.

Mr. Green: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works one question in connection with the point raised by the hon. member for Vancouver East when he discussed the use of Italian marble in the new post office building at Vancouver. The minister will recall that I asked him a question on March 17 about this marble and he answered on March 19 indicating that Italian marble was to be used. Before plans or specifications of this kind involving the use of such articles from abroad are passed by the minister's department is there any attempt made to find out whether there are men unemployed in the districts where similar work is being done in Canada? Here we find men unemployed in Vancouver, and yet the minister has admitted this afternoon that if Canadian rather than Italian marble were used it would give employment to 45 men for three months. That is not something to laugh at. It means that 45 families would have had the benefit of three months' work.

When it comes to a question of whether 45 men should be given work, or whether we should have marble of a little finer texture in a post office, I think the only reasonable decision would be to give the men work. I presume what happened was that the Vancouver architect wanted to have a fine monument to himself, and with this in mind he called for the fine Italian marble. Then when the specifications reached Ottawa the officials here did not bother to make any change or to find out whether or not there were men in Vancouver who were out of work.

Is it the policy of the department to make inquiries about those who are out of work before it approves specifications which will mean giving work to people living in other countries?

Mr. Winch: Is any study made by the minister's experts as to the availability of products of a type similar to those to be imported? I ask that question because I believe there is in the constituency of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary quantities of marble and granite of similar texture and hardness to that imported from Italy. Was any investigation made on that point, or was there any study given to it?

Mr. Winters: Replying to the question of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, the answer is yes. All public projects are undertaken having due regard to the labour situation in the area. I think perhaps the hon. member may be placing the emphasis in the wrong place. On the positive side is the fact that we are building a $9 million building in Vancouver, and that this will provide a substantial body of employment. I suggest it is not quite fair to attempt to emphasize the relatively few people who would be employed if we were to do certain other things.

Surely the main consideration is that we are building a very large building at a cost of over $9 million, and thereby providing a considerable amount of employment that otherwise would not be available if the building were not being erected. I can assure my hon. friend that we have gone to considerable extremes in other fields to ensure that Canadian materials are used, and that the Canadian content of labour in this $9 million structure is kept at a very high level, indeed.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I shall have to interrupt proceedings to point out that it is now five o'clock, and that the house will proceed to the consideration of private and public bills.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. 418, to incorporate Baloise Fire Insurance Company of Canada.—Mr. Cannon.

REPRESENTATION ACT

AMENDMENT SUBSTITUTING "SWIFT CURRENT-MAPLE CREEK" FOR "SWIFT CURRENT"

Mr. W. G. Weir (for Mr. Studer) moved the second reading of Bill No. 420, to amend the Representation Act.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the fact that I have not seen a copy of this bill, although it looks as though I am going to see one in a few seconds, I have no objection to the second reading being called today. Perhaps the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill in the absence of the hon. member who introduced it might be willing to let it stay in committee of the whole so that we can have a look at it, after the printed copies have been distributed. That would facilitate its getting third reading the next time public bills are called.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Swift Current-Maple Creek.

Mr. Green: May we have an explanation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to give a brief explanation. It appears that when the act was passed last year to change the name of the constituency of Swift Current to "Swift Current-Maple Creek" there was not a second clause put in it to make the change in the Revised Statutes of Canada, so that it applied until the revised statutes came in by proclamation, I think on September 15, but it is no longer the law. I think it was clearly intended by parliament that it should have been. It was simply an omission in drafting last year. The purpose of this bill is to correct that omission in the Revised Statutes of Canada, and it has no other purpose whatsoever.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Despite my suggestion a moment ago that the bill might stand over, now that we have had a chance to look at it, and since it is obviously so simple, there is no objection to third reading now.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

360. Departmental administration, $821,732.

Mr. Jones: I should like to make a few remarks with respect to the discussion that took place before five o'clock regarding the use of Canadian products in public buildings. It is well known that the only real consumer of marble in Canada is the government itself. Most structures are built of cheaper products, stone, wood, brick and so on, especially concrete. With the government itself showing a bad example by importing marble from Italy, it kind of upsets the whole economy, particularly in my own part of Canada where we are very proud of the type of marble we can produce. In the interior of British Columbia, in the Kootenays and Okanagan valley, we can equal marble or any other stone produced in Italy or in any other country, and we are proud of that. At the present time we consider them depressed industries. Many of the quarries are closed down for lack of customers; many of the quarries have been pretty well closed down for the last ten years for that same reason; but recently the government itself was seeking a hard stone for an extension to the post office in Penticton, and they came to the conclusion that the stone that had already been in use in the old buildings for forty years or fifty years was the best stone that they had seen.

That is the impression given to me by the architect. This particular stone is produced in abundance. There is a vast deposit of it not far from Penticton. I understood at the time, two years ago, that the government were anxious to acquire the rights to that particular quarry. Whether they did so or not, I am not sure. But if they did, they certainly have first-class stone equal to anything they can bring to this country from Italy.

On behalf of that depressed industry I would suggest that the government, before a contract is let for any more marble or any more hard stone from any other part of Canada, take steps to find out what we have in the province of British Columbia. If they do not wish to go to the expense of doing that, I may say that the provincial government already has all the information with regard to these various marbles and the hard rock that we have in such abundance. I would suggest to the minister that, in fairness to our province and before he places an order again for marble, he should take steps to find out whether a similar product is available in the Okanagan valley, the Kootenay valley or one of the other valleys in British Columbia.

Mr. McIvor: The outstanding example in Canada today where local stone or Canadian stone has been used is this House of Commons. When you look at this building you see this beautiful stone which comes from Tyndall, Manitoba. That fact shows that the government is right on the job.

Item agreed to.

Architectural branch—

361. Branch administration, $701,299.

Mr. Green: This item covers branch administration of the architectural branch. Turning to the details on page 431 we find a list of people who are working in that branch. I take it from these figures that there are 28 architects, 23 engineers and 23 technical officers. Can the minister tell us whether or not those figures are correct?

Mr. Winters: I assume that my hon. friend has totalled the figures shown on page 431. I accept them as being correct. I have not totalled them myself.

Mr. Green: Are these people all employed in Ottawa?

Mr. Winters: The answer to that question is yes.

Mr. Winch: What is the position of a member of this house if he wants to get from the architectural branch some information on plans and specifications and calling for tenders? The reason I raise this question is this. I am naturally interested in the Vancouver post office because I am a member from the city of Vancouver. Over a period of almost months now I have received communications from various unions asking about the type of architecture, about the construction, how much is granite, how many floors there are and various other questions. I wanted to answer those questions. Several weeks ago I got in touch with the architectural branch of the Department of Public Works with regard to the post office. I asked if I could see the actual plans and specifications. That was weeks ago. I have never seen any plans or specifications to this date. Are they secret or what? When I, a member of the House of Commons, ask to see plans and specifications, why cannot I be allowed to see them?

Mr. Winters: There is no reason why not. A member of the House of Commons is quite entitled to see the plans and specifications of a building, once those plans and specifications are complete. Would the hon. member care to tell me—and perhaps he would care to do it privately—to whom it was he spoke? I should be glad to discuss the matter with him.

Mr. Winch: It was your chief architect.

Mr. Winters: The chief architect says that the plans and specifications have not been refused.

Mr. Winch: I have not got them.

Mr. Harkness: I notice that there is a considerable increase in the number of personnel, from 128 to 158. I refer particularly to the point that I think the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra was making. Quite a part of this increase in personnel is accounted for by an increase in the number of architects. Can the minister explain the reason for this increase amounting to over 20 per cent in the number of personnel required for branch administration in the architectural branch? Is there a great deal more building projected than was the case previously or is this chiefly for planning for what used to be called the shelf of public projects for the future? Or what is the general explanation?

Mr. Winters: The reason for the increase is to try to make our program of planning a little more current. We had a backlog because of the difficulty of obtaining architects and technical assistants. On more than one occasion my hon. friend has referred to the number of revotes. We are endeavouring to bring the program up to date, to get some of these revotes out of the estimates and to get on with the program of new work.

Mr. Harkness: In other words, this increase is to put current work into operation, as you might say?

Mr. Winters: Yes; that is correct.

Mr. Harkness: Rather than for future planning?

[Mr. Winch.]

Mr. Winters: That is correct.

Mr. Dinsdale: I am wondering whether it is the policy of the Department of Public Works to look after all the architectural functions for these various activities across the country or whether in some cases this work is handed out to private firms in the local area where the work is to be done?

Mr. Winters: There are many instances in which buildings are designed for the department by private architects. That is part of the department's policy.

Mr. Dinsdale: Is it the policy in the public works department to do most of the architectural work or do they call in the private architects only when the departmental officials are not able to handle the quantity of work involved?

Mr. Winters: The general policy has been for the department to do the smaller buildings. Normally one design of building will serve the purpose of two or three different communities. It is standard practice to use that design to the extent that we can do so, having in mind the need to blend any building into the community. The larger buildings have almost invariably been designed by private architects because we regard that work as being beyond the capacity of our people to deal with, having in mind the heavy load of smaller work that is on them. When judged in the light of dollars and cents I would think the division would be just about even; I would think that about half of it would go to the private architects and that half of it would be done by our own people. It would be something of that order.

Item agreed to.

362. Ottawa—maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, including repairs and upkeep, rents, furnishings, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $500,000, $14,996,664.

Mr. Green: This item has to do with buildings in Ottawa. Can the minister explain why extensive repairs and improvements are being made to the old printing bureau? I understand that the new printing bureau is to be occupied next year; I refer to the new building in Hull. But in spite of that fact, there is a good deal of face-lifting going on in the old red building behind the Chateau Laurier. I believe the plan is to tear it down, but they are now installing new fluorescent lighting and the offices are being altered and redecorated, a new intercommunication system installed, and repairs being made to the brick work. Will the minister explain why public funds are being used for that purpose in view of the fact that the new building is to be occupied next year? We are all aware that the new building will cost quite a few million dollars and that in itself will be a big enough bill for the taxpayers to meet, and it does seem to me a little rough to be adding on a bill for fixing up the old building when it is to be vacated in any event.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the new building for the printing bureau in Hull will not be occupied for another two years. In the meantime it is necessary to maintain the present building and the repairs, which are relatively minor, consist of some brick work. I also understand that the printing bureau has a requisition for some 400-odd fluorescent lamps which will be necessary during the period they will be in the building, which will be another two years in any event.

Mr. Green: How much are these repairs and the new equipment going to cost?

Mr. Winters: There is an amount of $2,300 for the repair of the brick work, but I have not the cost of the 400 fluorescent lamps before me now.

Mr. Green: Will the minister provide that figure?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Green: And also the figure for the alteration and redecoration of the offices, and for the new intercommunication system which has been installed.

Mr. Winters: I know of no intercommunicating system. Perhaps my colleague the Secretary of State is aware of that. In any event, I will get the answers to the other questions.

Mr. Green: There may be some alterations about which I have no knowledge, and perhaps we could be informed of the total amount which has to be spent.

Mr. Winch: I may be out of order on this, Mr. Chairman, but it will only take a moment. It has to do with the question of maintenance. Might I suggest to the minister, through you, sir, that he call in some lighting engineers and experts in regard to the lighting in this chamber. It is bad.

Mr. Winters: May I just say, Mr. Chairman, that that matter is in hand. We have in mind a program to make a survey of all the lighting in the building.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, item 362 is a small item but I notice half-way down page 433 there is an item of $49,638 for 1954-55 as against $22,240 in 1953-54 and which covers "foremen of char service". This service has been more than doubled. We have 18 for next year but we had only eight for 1953-54. I also note that the number of cleaners and helpers is about the same. Perhaps the minister will tell us why there has been this substantial increase in the "foremen of char service"? It seems to be out of all proportion.

Mr. Winters: The only answer I can give at the moment, Mr. Chairman, is that we have acquired a considerable amount of additional space during the year. I have not the detailed statement but perhaps if my hon. friend will permit I will bring him a detailed statement after the dinner recess.

Mr. Brooks: The item does not show that we have employed more cleaners and helpers.

Mr. Winters: There are more.

Mr. Green: In the details for this item at page 435 there are some quite substantial increases and I would like the minister to explain them. For example, professional and special services cover $186,750 which is an increase of about $56,000 over last year. Could the minister tell us why there is this increase and exactly how that money is to be spent? Then "moving government departments and services" has increased from $100,000 to $150,000; furniture and furnishings for government departments show a total of $1,123,000 compared with $1,027,500. Materials and supplies are up about $90,000; repairs and upkeep of buildings including materials required therefor are up by $500,000; rents are up by about $40,000; light, power, water and other public and municipal services are up by $123,000. Will the minister explain why there have been these increases, and also give us some details of these items?

Mr. Winters: Under the first item to which my hon. friend for Vancouver-Quadra referred, professional and special services, there is an increase of $57,200. That increase covers the employment of window cleaners from outside firms and the amount is $68,000 compared with $23,000 in 1953-54. We have in mind a program of having some of this window cleaning done by outside services. It is now being done on a day labour basis. We are going to do some experimenting in that field to see whether we cannot overcome the problem by inviting tenders from people who specialize in char services. We will then compare results with the present method. We have increased the vote for that purpose. That is really the only large item.

Mr. Green: Where can we find the same item for last year? Did it come under casual help?

Mr. Winters: It came under casual help last year.

Mr. Green: And casual help is up $45,000?

Mr. Winters: Yes, but this is due to additional occupation. Each new building we occupy requires more casual help.

Mr. Green: Could we have further details on the items I mentioned?

Mr. Winters: Moving government departments and services?

Mr. Green: I mean the rest of the charges for professional and special services.

Mr. Winters: The rest of the charges are these: Rideau Hall—Dominion Electric Protection Service $650; Rideau Hall—sprinkler system—Dominion Messenger and Signal Company $300; Rideau Hall—control of rodents $200.

Mr. Green: What?

Mr. Winters: Rats.

Mr. Knowles: How much per rat?

Mr. Winters: Then there is the item I mentioned, window cleaning $68,000; electrical protection—Dominion Electric Protection, sprinklers, etc. $65,000 which is the same as last year. The general item of control of rodents in buildings around Ottawa amounting to $14,000 compares with $17,000 for last year, a saving of $3,000.

Mr. Green: That is a break for the rats.

Mr. Winters: It is a break for the taxpayers too. Then we have payments to tenants to clean corridors, remove garbage, etc. $12,000; the Prime Minister's residence —payment to steward as representative of public works department in household $1,000, which is the same as last year; House of Commons—operation of sound reinforcement system $20,000, the same as last year; then the Bell Telephone—clockline service $600 compared with $800 last year; and then we have an item for contracts for deodorizers $5,000.

Mr. Green: Is that for the cabinet or the government?

Mr. Winters: It is for buildings generally.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Is it the intention this year to do all the window cleaning by contract? I know that some of it has been done by contract every year, but is it the intention to do all window cleaning by contract this year?

Mr. Winters: No, it is not. This is just to provide a further amount for additional contract work we wish to do, but it is not the intention to do it all this year.

Mr. Green: What about the other items in this vote which are increased?

Mr. Winters: In the item for moving government departments and services there is an increase of $50,000. This item provides for payment to moving companies for moving furniture, files, etc., from one building to another. Each year considerable reassignment of accommodation takes place in Ottawa, and for the fiscal year 1954-55 a considerable number of moves are foreseen.

Mr. Green: The minister has not dealt with the others yet. What about furniture?

Mr. Winters: In furniture and furnishings for government departments there is an increase of $95,500, or 9 per cent. Much of this furniture is for the new veterans affairs building which will be occupied this year. Would my hon. friend like me to itemize some of these?

Mr. Green: All right.

Mr. Winters: For furniture for various departments, replacements and new furnishings for expanding services there is an amount of $962,500 compared with $876,000 last year. For venetian blinds the amount is $25,000, the same as last year; upholstering and furniture repairs, $15,000, the same as last year; the Prime Minister's residence, furnishings, $2,000, a decrease of $2,000 compared with last year; Rideau Hall, rugs and carpets and material for drapes and slip covers, $2,500, the same as last year; Rideau Hall, replacement of furniture, $25,000, the same as last year.

Mr. Green: How much?

Mr. Winters: $25,000, the same as last year.

Mr. Brooks: Are they spending $25,000 a year on furniture?

Mr. Winters: I would hope that would not be every year. My hon. friend doubtless has been there and has seen the furniture. It has been there for many years and is in need of repair and replacement. I have seen it myself and I quite concur that some considerable renewals are necessary.

Mr. Green: Is that to be $25,000 a year?

Mr. Winters: No, that is just the vote for this year.

Mr. Brooks: And last year.

Mr. Winters: Then we have Laurier House, repair of furniture, $1,000, the same as last year; House of Commons, reupholstering and repairing seats in diplomatic and side galleries, $6,000; House of Commons, furniture, rugs, filing cabinets, coolers and fans, $35,000, the same as last year; House of Commons, repairing standard electric fans, $2,000, the same as last year; House of Commons, new hall clocks, $2,000, the same as last year; the Senate, furniture repairs, $10,000; the Senate, furniture, rugs, coolers, fans, etc., $20,000. These are the main items of expenditure.

Mr. Green: What about materials and supplies?

Mr. Winters: There is an increase of $91,050, or 6 per cent, over last year. That consists of lamps and supplies, $66,000 compared with $63,000 last year; Laurier House, supplies for char service, $150, the same as last year; Laurier House, fuel, $1,200 compared with $1,300 last year. Then we have heating supplies, $995,000 compared with $964,000 last year; Rideau Hall, fuel, $22,000 compared with $22,700 last year; Rideau Hall, repairing and replating of silverware, repairs to kitchen equipment, $2,000 compared with $2,500 last year; Rideau Hall, supplies for greenhouses, $6,500 compared with $6,000 last year; Rideau Hall, china and glassware, $2,000 compared with $4,000 last year.

Mr. Green: Is that an annual item?

Mr. Winters: No. It is as required for the year. Rideau Hall, new beds and bed linen for household staff, $2,000; uniforms and caps, $12,000; experimental farm, fuel, $151,000; flags and decorations, $15,000; House of Commons, supplies for parliamentary restaurant and cafeteria, $15,000, the same as last year; ice, $8,000, the same as last year; fire extinguishers and refills, $18,900; supplies for char service, $220,000, the same as last year; Prime Minister's residence and coach house, fuel, $1,900.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I have a question pertaining to this very matter. I note that quite a substantial amount is spent in replacing furniture, carpets and so on in the public service. When you replace furniture, what happens to the old furniture? How do you dispose of it? Is it sold or is it taken to the incinerator and burned? What happens to it?

Mr. Knowles: It is taken out of Liberal offices and put in opposition offices.

Mr. Winters: My Liberal friends say that just the reverse holds true. Some of it of course is repaired and put back into use. Furniture that cannot be used further is declared surplus to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation and disposed of by my colleague, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is responsible for Crown Assets Disposal Corporation.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Does that apply to furniture and things of that sort?

Mr. Winters: Oh yes.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Crown Assets Disposal Corporation handles that too?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Winch: I have a question which I feel certain is in the minds of many members but perhaps they do not want to speak about it. What is in the mind of the minister with respect to the office accommodation of members of the House of Commons? In the majority of cases there are two members to an office at the present time, and I think that in all such instances they get along quite happily. But it does not make for efficiency in the work of members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Winters: Have you any particular members in mind?

Mr. Winch: Two members cannot be dictating to two stenographers at the same time without there being confusion. If one member has any visitors it disturbs the entire office. I think every member of the house who is in the position of occupying an office jointly with another member knows the problem. It is a very serious one, not only from the point of view of the efficiency of members of the House of Commons but also with respect to the impression that the general public gets from reading press comments about members not being in the house itself. It is my own personal experience that when two members occupy the same office they split up in shifts so that each can have the office to himself for a while in order to do his work and give his dictation. You cannot be both places at once. Every member knows that is the situation.

It is not fair to members of the House of Commons so far as their work is concerned and the reaction of the press is not fair in pointing out that often over half the members are not present in the house. We know that in the majority of cases they are in the building because when the division bell rings they take their seats in the house. I think one of the big problems is the matter of office accommodation for members. I believe that this vote is the proper place to raise the question, and I should like to ask the minister whether he has anything in mind that will bring about a better distribution of office space for members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Winters: I agree with much of what the hon. member for Vancouver East has said. I know there is a great deal of congestion, and I know that many members are working under conditions that are not conducive to the best over-all efficiency. I must say that if my hon. friend had not brought it to my attention I would not have noticed he was working at reduced efficiency himself.

We are in the process of negotiating now for the services of an architect to do a complete job on remeasuring the west block, which is a very old building. The plans have been lost, and the building must first of all be measured. Then we propose to get a competent architectural opinion on how that building could be rebuilt, if necessary, so as to provide the best utilization of space. Once the building is rebuilt, then I would imagine Mr. Speaker would have in mind moving to the west block many of the facilities that are presently housed here in the centre block. Some action has already been taken to that end, and I would hope that we could look forward to the day when many more facilities would be housed in the west block thereby releasing accommodation in this centre building for the use of members.

Mr. Knowles: I notice that included in this item the minister has an amount of $998 to be paid to thirteen persons listed as caretakers of tower clocks, part-time. I presume that it is the caretakers that are part-time and not the clocks. Could the minister tell us where these people work? The amount averages out to about $76 per year per person, and perhaps an explanation could be given. The item appears on page 437, about ten lines down.

Mr. Winters: It is an outside Ottawa vote.

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry, my page did get turned over, but perhaps the minister could answer in any event.

Mr. Winters: It is on page 437, and relates to caretakers of tower clocks, part-time. It is an additional payment to those janitors in post offices where there are tower clocks, for looking after the tower clocks. This item is for the whole country.

Mr. Knowles: This average of $76 a year is in addition to another salary.

Mr. Winters: That is right.

Mr. Nesbitt: I was interested in listening to some figures the minister was reading. I noticed there was an item of $8,000 for ice. I should like to know whether there is an ice manufacturing plant in the House of Commons here, or does the ice have to be purchased?

Mr. Winters: This ice is purchased from private ice manufacturers.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Nesbitt: I presume it is artificial ice rather than natural ice. If it is costing $8,000 a year to supply ice, could not an ice manufacturing unit be installed that might over a period of time be less costly?

Mr. Winters: The item covers the supply of ice to buildings all around Ottawa. It is possible, I imagine, that the establishment of a plant has been studied. I have not studied it myself. The amount of $8,000 is not very large when one thinks in terms of the expense of installing ice making machinery.

Mr. Green: The minister has not yet dealt with repairs and upkeep of buildings, which is up nearly $500,000; rents are up by $40,000; light, power and water and other public and municipal services are up by $123,000. Could he explain those large increases?

Mr. Winters: I could list the items and the increases. Repairs and upkeep of buildings, including materials required therefor, an increase of $490,890 or 19 per cent; Rideau Hall, painting and repairing various buildings, $3,000; that is down $1,000 from last year. Rideau Hall, pointing stonework; that is the same as last year. Rideau Hall, painting and repairing greenhouses, $2,000; that is the same as last year. Reconstruction of verandah of Rideau cottage, $3,000; repairs to laundry building, $2,000; Rideau Hall, repairs to roof of Government House and other buildings, $2,500; Rideau Hall, installation of oil burners in orderlies' cottage, main garage and carpenter shop, $1,800. Rideau Hall, new baking oven for main kitchen, $1,000. Rideau Hall, painting in interior of Government House and Rideau cottage, repairs and alterations to carpenter and paint shop, repairs and painting boiler rooms, $4,500. Rideau Hall, renewal of certain water mains, $1,000. There is a long list of miscellaneous small items.

The increase generally is due principally to provision being made for exteriors, painting of government owned buildings at an estimated cost of $100,000; electrical repairs in House of Commons, that is replacement of primary electrical switch gear, at a total estimated cost of $100,000; elevator power conversion and renewals at a total estimated cost of $200,000.

Mr. Green: In the House of Commons?

Mr. Winters: That is for elevators in buildings throughout Ottawa, changes from direct to alternating current. Then there are alterations to the Daly building when vacated and reassigned, at a total estimated cost of $100,000. There is an increase of $123,150 in the allotment, power, water, etc., due to provision being made for new buildings and rentals.

Mr. Dinsdale: I notice on page 443 an item for the national library which is increased this year from $50,000 to $150,000. I wonder whether the minister could make a statement on the progress being made in this project?

Mr. Winters: I think that is in another vote. It is on page 443, and will come under a later item.

Item agreed to.

363. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including repairs and upkeep, rents, furnishings, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $800,000, $20,843,057.

Mr. Knowles: I should like to say a few words under this item with respect to the rates of pay in the case of women cleaners, particularly those working in the federal buildings in the city of Winnipeg, who come under the direction of the Minister of Public Works. I am sure that he is well aware of what I am going to say because we have had a fair amount of correspondence concerning this matter. I only hope that by raising it on the floor of the house I might be more successful than I have been in taking the matter up with him by letter.

As the minister knows, when the five-day 40-hour week was instituted for civil servants generally—I refer to the time previous to the occasion when the five-day 40-hour week came into effect for postal workers—that had an effect on the wages received by the women cleaners in the city of Winnipeg which, from their standpoint, was most unfortunate, and I would say it was most unfair. Previously they had been working five and a half or six nights a week, and they were paid on an hourly rate. When the people working in the offices which were cleaned at night by these women went on the five-day week, naturally there was no point in having the cleaning women coming in on the sixth night and cleaning up the offices when those offices had not been occupied during the day. Therefore they, too, went on the five-day week.

Well, they did not mind going on the five-day week, but it was a rather tough blow for them to suffer an actual reduction in their weekly take-home pay as a result of that change. In the correspondence I have had with the minister he has suggested to me that I would not want people to be paid for work they were not doing. I suggest that that was a case of begging the question. The fact of the matter is that other employees of the government who went on the five-day 40-hour week did not suffer any loss in take-home pay. The purpose of the five-day 40-hour week was not to effect a reduction in pay but rather to improve the working conditions of the employee.

Generally speaking that change to the five-day 40-hour week for government employees was effected without any reduction in take-home pay. I have not the page references in Hansard before me at the moment, but I can say that during the course of this session I have inquired, through the medium of the order paper and by obtaining answers on the pages of Hansard, as to whether there are any other government employees in whose case the fact of going on the five-day 40-hour week resulted in a reduction in pay. The answers given to me suggest that this was the only group.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is quite unfair, and that something should be done about it. If the minister insists that these people are on prevailing rates and that that makes it impossible to prescribe that they shall now get per week what they got before, the problem could be solved by an increase in the hourly rate sufficient to bring these women up to the same amount of pay they were receiving before.

I know some people think of these women who do this work as though they were in part-time unemployment, or doing casual work. I do not presume to speak for what goes on in other cities, but I do know that these women who are working in the minister's department in Winnipeg are regular, year-round full-time employees. I know some of them personally who have been in this work for ten or fifteen years or more. So they are not to be thought of as casual or temporary employees, whatever their precise legal status may be. They have an arrangement for holidays; one they did not have some years ago, but an arrangement we were able to win for them. They pay unemployment insurance premiums, and they pay into one or other of the superannuation funds. To all intents and purposes they are just as permanent employees of the federal government as are any other employees.

I urge strongly upon the minister that the situation be reconsidered and that the necessary increase be made so that these women may continue to receive at least the same amount they were receiving before the five-day 40-hour week was instituted.

In the course of the correspondence the minister and I have had concerning this matter he has informed me that the usual survey has been made by the Department of Labour to determine whether or not the rates being paid to these people corresponded with the prevailing rates for comparable work in the same area. He has not been at liberty to indicate to me what is contained in the reports made to him by the Department of Labour, but he has suggested to me that these reports have indicated that his department was doing as well for these women as is the case with women doing comparable work in Winnipeg.

My information is not quite the same as that the minister appears to have received. I am told that women doing comparable work for the T. Eaton Company in Winnipeg are on a 40-hour week and that their rate of pay is seventy-five cents an hour or more. At the Hudson's Bay Company in Winnipeg the rate is exactly the same, seventy-five cents an hour; and, likewise, that is the rate for those working for the Canadian National Railways. Those who are cleaning in public buildings for the city of Winnipeg receive eighty-five cents an hour, and again they are on a basis of a 40-hour week. Women doing this kind of work for the Winnipeg public school board are paid on a monthly rate at the figure of $149 per month.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the provincial government?

Mr. Knowles: I am sorry I do not have that information, but I have no objection to the suggestion by the Secretary of State that it should be taken into consideration. I hope, however, that he is not trying to show up the provincial government as being a poor employer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just a matter of curiosity.

Mr. Knowles: But as compared with these rates of seventy-five and eighty-five cents an hour, the rate paid to the women cleaners who work in Winnipeg for the Minister of Public Works is sixty-five cents an hour for a week of thirty-seven and one-half hours in the dominion public building, and sixty-five cents an hour for a thirty-hour week in the commercial building. There are still other buildings that come under the minister's supervision. There is the old post office building, and some others. While the hours per week may vary, I believe the sixty-five-cent rate carries right through.

I could continue the discussion on this point, but it seems to me I have made it clear. I do hope some favourable consideration will be given to increasing these rates so that these faithful employees of the government will not receive less than they were receiving before the five-day 40-hour week came into effect. It seems to me two things are involved: One is the actual rate of pay and the other is that justice should be done.

Mr. Winters: Before recess, Mr. Chairman, may I say just a word. I have every sympathy for the point raised by the hon. member, who has been so interested in the pay received by these charwomen. The position is as he stated it. We have exchanged correspondence in which I informed him of the facts he has put before the committee. They are hourly rate employees. The Department of Labour conducted a survey at the time the hours were decreased to see whether a re-rating was justified. It is true there are private employers in the city of Winnipeg who pay more, but it is also true that the majority of private employers pay less.

After making a very exhaustive survey, the Department of Labour told the Department of Public Works that there was no ground for recommending an increase in the rate at the present time, but that the matter would be kept under review.

Mr. Knowles: Is it government policy to match the minimum rate in the field?

Mr. Winters: It is to match the rate of good employers in the district.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The Chairman: When the committee rose at six o'clock we were discussing item 363. Shall the item carry?

Mr. Knowles: May I have one or two words with the minister? At six o'clock we were discussing this question of the wages paid to women cleaners working for the Department of Public Works at Winnipeg. The minister said it was the policy of the government to match the best employers in the field.

Mr. Winters: No, I did not say that.

Mr. Knowles: What did the minister say?

Mr. Winters: I said "good employers".

Mr. Knowles: All right; I will accept that. He said it was the government's intention to match the good employers. Are not the good employers the ones who pay good wages?

Mr. Winters: What I said is a pretty good definition of the position. There is a difference between good, better and best, as my hon. friend well knows.

Mr. Knowles: Just a minute; that puts the government a long way down. Better is better than good and best is better still. So he puts himself in the third category. Seriously, I hope the minister will have this matter looked at again. If he cannot cut through the red tape but has to have another review made by the Department of Labour, I ask the minister to have such a review made in the light of the figures I put on the record this afternoon showing that other women in Winnipeg doing comparable work are getting better pay.

Mr. Winters: I have no objection to that, Mr. Chairman. I told my hon. friend that the matter was under constant review. We have every sympathy with the position of the charwomen in Winnipeg. The position was examined and it was then found that some employers were paying more to charwomen than our charwomen were receiving, but a great many of them were paying less, and on that basis the Department of Labour, which is the department that guides us in these matters, recommended that the rate be not changed at this time.

In reply to a question asked earlier by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra about the printing bureau I might say that the Department of Public Works has no request at the present time for electric fixtures but we have received a request for 400 fluorescent lights. These are being stocked to assure replacement of burnt-out tubes and to keep the replacement stocks in the building at a proper level. The replacement of tubes is high due to the long hours of operation at the bureau. The cost is approximately 69 cents each, so 400 comes to $276.

As to requisitions for work, a requisition was filed for resurfacing the press room floor and adjacent hall area with mastic in June, 1953, at a cost of $3,600, and that is the only requisition we have had.

An hon. member asked a question about foremen of char service and pointed out the fact that the list showed eight last year and this year there are eighteen. There are no new bodies, but ten positions of cleaner and helper have been reclassified by the civil service commission as foremen of char service.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Mr. Dinsdale: I should like to return to the subject of architects' service, for a moment. The minister has indicated that in some instances private architects are used. That being so, I should like to know the procedure involved in applying for work on government projects. The reason I ask is that a local firm has been in touch with me and they claim that they have been given the information from the department that in order to participate in work from the Department of Public Works it is necessary to get in touch with the local member and he makes the approach, and it is all the better if that member is a Liberal member. I do not think that is a proper function for a member of parliament to make overtures to the branch on behalf of architects.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member has done it. If it is not proper, then the hon. member has acted improperly.

Mr. Dinsdale: I have had some correspondence on this matter because of the information that came to me, and I realized that under the administration of the minister this policy would not be carried out. I should like to have him indicate it so that it can be on the record and I can indicate to this firm that such is not the policy.

Mr. Winters: Hon. members, such as the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, imply from time to time that Liberal members are the only ones who make requests of the minister. I might say that he is one who has made a request of me, in this case to have an architect, a friend of his, employed and I can see nothing very much wrong with that. But I do want to say that I receive at least as many requests from members of the opposition as I receive from Liberal members, and I see nothing wrong with that either. Hon. members are elected to represent their constituencies with respect to federal matters, and it is only right and proper that they should endeavour to do so.

As to the employment of architects, when outside architects are used in the design of public buildings, the fee is uniform so it is a question of choosing somebody who is competent. There are a great many competent architects in Canada, and I venture to say there are many competent architects in the constituencies of a good many hon. members on both sides of the house. When names are brought to my attention it is my practice to consult with the chief architect to get his opinion as to the competency of those people. I am not familiar with them all. I will be, I presume, as time goes on, familiar with more of them, but at the present time I must reply on the best advice I can get, and I endeavour to choose the architects that will deliver work which will be a credit to the Canadian people generally.

Mr. Dinsdale: Can the minister say that he would prefer the direct approach of the firm rather than have it detoured through a member?

Mr. Winters: I do not think I need to advise architects on how to approach the government to get work. From my short experience in this post I have found out that they do not need much tuition on how to approach the government.

Mr. Green: On page 438 there are particulars of this vote given in two ways: First of all, the actual way the money is spent, that is, for the type of work, and then there is another division according to provinces. Then, I notice this. There is one classification, generally, $809,257, after listing each one of the provinces and London, England. After these listings there is one item which is described as general. Can the minister explain what that covers?

Mr. Winters: May I answer that in a moment? May we pass on to another item and I shall answer that in a moment?

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, if we could do so, I should like to revert for one moment to the previous item for the purpose of asking a question which I omitted to ask.

The Chairman: Order. Has the hon. gentleman unanimous consent to revert to the previous item?

Mr. Winters: To which item does he wish to revert?

Mr. MacLean: The question comes under item 362.

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Chairman: I hear some hon. members say "no". Has the hon. gentleman leave to revert to item 362?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacLean: It is a brief question and has to do with the playing of the bells in the tower here. Who is responsible for deciding when the bells are played? What are the duties of the carillonneur apart from playing the bells? I notice that he draws a considerable salary. I think that is only fair. It is about half as much again as M.P.'s drew until recently. I am just wondering what the regulations are with regard to the matter, who is responsible for the programming, the hours and so forth.

Mr. Winters: The content of the program is his own. He is a very competent carillonneur. He reports to the deputy minister and confers on matters respecting administration generally; but normally he is left to his own devices to choose his programs and to choose the time of playing. It is pretty much the same time from year to year.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. MacLean: Is there a set number of programs per week or per month, or what is the basis?

Mr. Winters: The program is set up at the first of each year and I think it is published and made available to the public in the form of a little booklet.

Mr. Bell: With regard to item 363, I am looking at page 438 and I see amounts for maintenance and operation of public buildings. I look at the details for New Brunswick and I see that the amount given there is about half of that for Nova Scotia. I thought perhaps that was just because there are not too many public buildings in New Brunswick. But in looking back three years I see that this amount was reduced to the present amount from an amount that was similar to that for Nova Scotia. There seems to be consistency in those amounts. I wonder whether the minister can explain why New Brunswick was cut down to such a small amount three years ago and has not been placed back in its former position.

Mr. Winters: We do not place moneys in the estimates unless we are going to spend the money. We do not place an amount in the estimates for maintenance and operation unless it is so required. My hon. friend will see that this year there is an increase over last year, the amount being $600,000 as against $560,000. That is just for necessary maintenance. Probably in the years to which he refers there was an especially big maintenance project at some particular place. I do not recall it but this is for actual costs of maintenance.

Mr. Bell: Would the reason that the New Brunswick figure is so low in relation to the Nova Scotia figure perhaps be that there was only half the number of public buildings in New Brunswick or is there any consistency there? The other amounts seem to be fairly well the same each year. Three years ago New Brunswick was well up over the million-dollar mark, where Nova Scotia is now. Then we were cut down to about $500,000. While there is an increase this year, I should like to have an explanation as to why the amount for New Brunswick is so low as compared with that for Nova Scotia. Is it because we do not have as many public buildings?

Mr. Winters: It is because the buildings in this current year do not need as much maintenance. That is the real reason.

Mr. Bell: I argue against that contention by saying that the amounts are fairly consistent each year in the case of the other provinces, as they have been for the last two or three years. There is no change.

Mr. Winters: I think my hon. friend should really be pleased that we are able to cut down the amount for maintenance and operation. Surely that is the type of economy he should be pleased about.

Mr. Bell: I am; in the other provinces.

Mr. Winters: It is only used where necessary.

Mr. Knowles: There is one honest politician.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

365. Nova Scotia, $1,330,000.

Mr. McCulloch (Pictou): I should like to ask the minister when tenders will be called for the Pictou post office.

Mr. Winters: We plan to call for tenders for the post office in Pictou by June 15.

Mr. Purdy: I might just ask the indulgence of the committee for a moment to take the minister on a Cook's tour of the constituency of Colchester-Hants, running from the Minas basin to Northumberland strait and review our public buildings. First, at Hantsport, Shubenacadie and Stewiacke our buildings are in fairly good repair. I do not think the total for repairs of these buildings will be very much this year. Coming next to Windsor, I may say that last year we understood that the roof and the outside of that building which, by the way is very old—it was built in the early 1880's—was slated for some major repairs. Unfortunately they were not carried out. I should like to have the minister look into that matter to see if the repairs could be carried out this year. When he has looked over the other places in Nova Scotia, where new buildings are needed, I wish he would cast his eye there. I think it is nearly time that that building should be replaced.

I now come to Truro, the hub of Nova Scotia.

An hon. Member: The what?

Mr. Purdy: The hub of Nova Scotia. I am pleased to see that the plans which were brought into being a good many years ago at the time the reconstruction and rehabilitation committee was sitting building up the famous shelf of public works has now taken a little bit more definite shape, and that a lot has been purchased. I hope the construction of the building will be proceeded with without too much delay. I have already drawn to the attention of the minister the fact that the lot which the department has purchased is one of the finest lots in town, on the main street, one of the show places of Canada; and that the shade trees on the street make a wonderful arch. On that lot there are a number of nice trees. If I might just transpose my thoughts for a minute, I might say to him that while speeches are made by fools like me, only God can make a tree. When they start to make their plans for that building I hope they will do everything possible to save as many of the trees as they can.

Now we shall go to the Northumberland strait and to the village of Tatamagouche. Back in 1940 the record will show that an amount was in the estimates for a public building at that point to house the post office. Plans were drawn, the contract was let and work was under way. The basement was dug. The forms were in. Some of the concrete was poured. Then owing to the stress of war, all work on public buildings of that nature was abandoned.

The work that was done was eventually demolished and the contractor settled with and on that vacant lot a temporary post office building was erected. The people of that flourishing community felt that when the contract had gone as far as that they would be sure to have a public building suitable for their needs in due course. However, so far there is nothing in the estimates for that and I would ask the minister to take this matter under advisement and discuss it with his colleague the Postmaster General. The former postmaster general must have approved this project otherwise the work would never have been started. If we could get that public building anywhere in this area it would certainly be a nice asset, and it is certainly much needed. There are five rural mail routes serving North Colchester based on this thriving village.

A few years ago it was my privilege to participate at the unveiling of a monument erected there by the national historical sites board to commemorate the naval battle of Tatamagouche bay. There is a nice monument there to commemorate this battle which took place during the early days of the country. It was not a very important battle but it was certainly considered important enough to erect a monument to commemorate it. I hope it will not be necessary for someone in the future to erect a monument to mark the spot where the public building was started but not finished.

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer for a moment to the public building erected at Lockeport. It was my pleasure some few days ago to be in that town and to see the new public building there. It is a very well planned building and architecturally attractive. The exterior is of brick and Nova Scotia granite. Many of the citizens with whom I spoke were pleased to have such a fine building in their community. They felt it was sufficient to meet their present needs and take care of the natural growth for the next few years. As far as the town of Yarmouth is concerned, for which there is an item in the estimates for a public building, a suitable central site which appeals to the citizens has been purchased, but I would like to ask the minister if he would be so kind as to tell me and the house and through the house the citizens of my home town when he expects the plans and specifications to be completed and when he expects to call for tenders.

Mr. Winters: I thank the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare for his kind remarks about the building at Lockeport and also the hon. member for Colchester-Hants for his remarks, and I would like to assure him I will look into the points he has mentioned. As to the plans for the building in Yarmouth a site has been acquired and the plans have received the approval of the Post Office Department. My hon. friend may have an opportunity of looking them over. The target date for calling of tenders is July 1.

Mr. Ferguson: I would like to ask the minister when work on the revote for Collingwood harbour which is in the estimates will be commenced or tenders called for. The item covers the amount of some $3,000-odd and—

Mr. Winters: At present we are on an item for Nova Scotia, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps the hon. member will wait until we reach the item to which he has referred.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

366. Prince Edward Island, $550,000.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Chairman, there are a couple of questions I would like to ask the minister on this item and with particular regard to the vote for the building in Charlottetown. Could the minister tell us whether plans have been completed as yet and, in a general way, what offices will be accommodated in that new building and what the total cost will be? I also have one question with regard to the public building at Montague. Could the minister indicate when that building will be completed?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, the tentative estimate is, of course, $3,500,000. It is anticipated that the building will be used to accommodate a post office, the customs, income tax, agriculture, transport, and veterans affairs. There may be other departments added, or some may be taken away.

Mr. MacLean: Will it include the R.C.M.P. offices?

Mr. Winters: At the moment we are not planning to include the R.C.M.P. offices in that building. Plans are nearing completion and, as I told my hon. friend the junior member for Queens this afternoon, the date for the calling of tenders is June 1.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

367. New Brunswick, $1,250,000.

Mr. Brooks: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a few questions with reference to the New Brunswick vote. I note that there is $1,250,000 authorized for New Brunswick, but they are all revotes. Like the hon. member for Colchester-Hants and the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare, I would like to congratulate the minister on the fact that some buildings have been completed. But I would like to ask about the public building at Rothesay. I have brought this matter up on a number of occasions and the former minister of public works promised definitely both in 1952 and in 1953 that this building would be constructed. I do not think it is necessary to again point out the great necessity for this building. I do not suppose there is any place in Canada that needs a new post office more than Rothesay. The population there is increasing very rapidly, as I have pointed out before, and there are two private schools in that town. There is a large consolidated school and a new district high school. The population is increasing from about 100 to 150 every year and the building now in use there is an absolute disgrace as far as the Post Office Department and the Department of Public Works are concerned. They have no facilities of any kind in this building. There are three or four employees and they have not even a washroom.

I understand there has been some difficulty over the selection of a site, but there is a good site near where the building used as a post office now stands and it could be purchased. I have been told, and the minister can correct me if I am wrong, that the reason this site has not been selected is because the owner of the land does not belong to the proper political persuasion.

An hon. Member: Oh.

Mr. Brooks: You may say "Oh" but you do not know my opponent in the last election. I would like to see some of the private correspondence with the department in that connection because I have every reason to believe that my opponent during the last election, and also one of the local candidates for another party, opposed the purchase of the site. I would like to have the minister's comments on this, and I would also like to know if there is any possibility of this building being constructed in the immediate future.

[Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare).]

In 1952 as reported at page 3781 of Hansard Mr. Fournier, the then minister, said:

I am going to put up a nice building in that place.

In 1953 as reported at page 3643 of Hansard Mr. Fournier said:

I am going to try and convince them—

Speaking of his officials.

—that this item was put in the estimates for a new public building and I am going to instruct them here and now to go ahead with that project.

That project is long overdue. I would like to have the minister's comments on this proposed building for Rothesay. There is no finer village in this country and the people of Rothesay have, I suppose, the poorest post office accommodation of any place of its size in Canada.

Mr. Winters: It is a fact that the site has not yet been selected, and my hon. friend may be disappointed to know that to my knowledge I have received no communications of any kind from his opponent. As the result of no site being selected, no plans are prepared, and I am not in a position to say when the project will go forward.

Mr. Brooks: Is the minister aware that there is a site that can be obtained?

Mr. Winters: We have been looking into the problem of sites. I have not a final report on it. My report to date is that no site has been selected.

Mr. Brooks: There has been a site available for some months, and I hope the minister will make further investigations at once.

Mr. Bell: I have one question for the minister. Can he tell me the story on the customs building in Saint John? I want to know what is going on, what are the details and what are the plans with respect to the future of that building.

Mr. Winters: Our proposal at Saint John is to carry out some quite extensive renovations, as I recall, to the existing building to try to keep it in as good shape as we can until such time as we can plan to build a new building there.

Mr. Bell: It is a very old building. People tell the story around Saint John about an official from Ottawa who came to visit the customs department there and who spent all his time in the office of one of the senior officials dodging the raindrops that were seeping through the roof and falling into pails in this main office of the customs building. That will give you the story on the old building.

Mr. Brooks: Can the minister tell us what the situation is with reference to the proposed customs and immigration building at St. Stephen and also the public building at Woodstock?

Mr. Winters: At St. Stephen an additional site has been acquired. Sketch plans have been sent to the customs department for approval. We hope to be able to call for tenders for that building very early next year. The Woodstock building is in process now. The contract has been awarded to R. Stewart Construction Company and the work is in hand.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

369. Ottawa, $10,640,000.

Mr. Green: This item covers buildings in Ottawa. I would ask the minister to tell us whether anything has been done to carry out the recommendation made by the special committee on atomic energy last session. If the minister will recall, the committee was very much disappointed with the accommodation found for the work on radioactive minerals. We were shown through the basement of the museum. That was where much of this work was being carried on. I think every member of that committee felt that accommodation was not suitable for this work which is so important to Canada today. Nevertheless, in looking through the details of this vote I can find no provision for better quarters for carrying on this work. I ask the minister to explain whether I am wrong and, if so, to tell us just what accommodation is being provided for this work.

Mr. Stuart (Charlotte): I should like to support the statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. The committee was privileged to visit the quarters supplied for this particular work at that time and they were very much disturbed about the accommodation. I know that it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that some improvement should be made. I believe it is most necessary and should receive every attention.

Mr. Prudham: I wish to thank the hon. gentlemen who are supporting us in this project. I think the minister will explain what is being done.

Mr. Winters: The first item on page 443, chemical laboratory for Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, $500,000, is to cover the start of the work we have in mind there. At present the department is working on plans which will provide for an extension of the chemical laboratory of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

Mr. Green: Is there any provision for a building for the geological survey?

Mr. Winters: That is being contemplated in connection with the over-all plans the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys has for several new buildings for its operations. There will be almost a complete rehousing job which will take some time, but the whole plan is in mind and under study.

Mr. Green: Will the accommodation for the radioactive work actually be built during the present year?

Mr. Winters: We plan to start it with the funds allocated by this vote. I doubt whether it will be completed this year but it should be started.

Mr. Green: How long will it take?

Mr. Winters: I am told it will perhaps take two years to build, a year and a half in any event.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Some time ago I think it was announced that the national art gallery would be located somewhere in the vicinity of Sussex street. I was wondering whether there was anything in this vote towards the acquisition of a site for this building during the current year.

Mr. Winters: There is an item on page 443, the third from the bottom of the group of Ottawa votes, for the acquisition of property required for sites for future government buildings. Under that vote we are endeavouring to work out arrangements for a suitable site for the national art gallery.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): But no steps have been taken so far to acquire a site?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Dinsdale: This afternoon I asked a question about the national library, and I think this is the appropriate item. Will the minister indicate what progress is being made on this project?

Mr. Winters: The architects, Messrs. Mathers and Haldenby, of Toronto, are working on the plans, and they have not yet quite completed their preliminary plans.

Mr. Hodgson: Will the national library have any connection at all with the parliamentary library?

Mr. Winters: No, it will be a separate operation.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. Hodgson: How soon will the work on the parliamentary library be completed, and how much will it cost? Has the minister any information on that?

Mr. Winters: I am told, Mr. Chairman, it will be another two years before the job is completed. Hon. members who perhaps have looked in to see the work going on there will realize how complex it is. The whole building has had to be stripped right down to the masonry shell. It is turning out to be a much more expensive operation than could possibly have been foreseen. It will probably cost in excess of $2 million.

Mr. Hodgson: That is what I was told the other day, but I did not know whether or not that was right. It seems like a large sum. There is no doubt the building needs repair, but—

Mr. Winters: It is far more than a repair, it is a complete rebuilding.

Mr. Hodgson: A few weeks ago there was another fire in the library and the fire trucks came up here. What was the cause of that fire in the library? Was it because of a careless workman dropping a cigarette or what was it?

Mr. Winters: I do not think there was any carelessness, Mr. Chairman. There was simply a short circuit in the electrical wiring that ignited some of the woodwork in the dome. The fire was quickly brought under control and there was negligible damage.

Mr. Cardiff: Will the space in the library be enlarged or is it merely going to be fireproofed?

Mr. Winters: The capacity will be increased, and it will be fireproofed.

Mr. Cardiff: Does that mean the walls will be extended to increase the outside dimensions of the building or will there be an additional structure added?

Mr. Winters: No, there is going to be some further excavation, the basement is going to be deeper. There will be more accommodation there and the internal arrangements will be such that there will be more storage space for the books.

Mr. Hodgson: I see here there is an item of $900,000. Does that mean you think that amount will cover the cost for this year?

Mr. Winters: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Green: There is one item here, site for departmental buildings in Tunney's pasture, improvements and services, $750,000. Could we have a breakdown of that $750,000?

Mr. Winters: This amount, Mr. Chairman, is required to continue the work of grading, installation of sewers, water mains, electrical services, roads, sidewalks, supply and placement of topsoil, etc., in the Tunney's pasture area. Buildings erected or to be erected in this area include the bureau of statistics, record storage building, food and drugs laboratory, virus laboratory, public works testing laboratory, atomic energy building and other departmental buildings.

Mr. Green: Has the minister got the amount for the landscaping for the bureau of statistics building?

Mr. Winters: The contract for the landscaping for the whole area, Mr. Chairman, is $425,526.

Mr. Green: Over half of this vote of $750,000 is for landscaping.

Mr. Winters: All of the amount I gave you will not be spent this year. I think perhaps half will be spent this year.

Mr. Green: How large is the area to be landscaped?

Mr. Winters: I am told by the hon. member for Ottawa West it is about a mile square, but I have not that information.

Mr. Green: What is the cost for the grading of this land? What is the total cost for grading?

Mr. Winters: The figure I gave includes the earth and rock grading and fill.

Mr. Green: That is landscaping.

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Hodgson: In connection with Tunney's pasture—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard.

Mr. MacDougall: I rather think I am speaking on the right item. It appears on page 443, and apparently under that item you can deal with almost anything that is in or around Ottawa. If I am right in assuming that, there is something I should like to say. I believe those who walk to or from the House of Commons are rather appalled at the narrowness of the main entrance as you turn into the parliament buildings. No doubt at the time that gate was constructed it was sufficiently wide for a horse and buggy, a horse and cutter or a horse and gig, but when you attempt to enter with a modern car you have to go into low gear and then into second to run up the little hill before you can get into high.

There are two additional gates on either side of the main gate. It seems to me that the space taken by these gates could easily be used to give additional width to the main gate. I do not say it is particularly annoying, but it is inconvenient. I do not believe that it meets the dignity of the general surroundings to have such a narrow main entrance into the centre block of our House of Commons. It seems to me it would not be a very expensive proposition to knock out one of the divisions separating the two small gates from the main gate. If that could be done I think not only the people of Ottawa but everyone from this country or other countries who visits the centre block will be appreciative of that improvement in the facilities for getting into the centre block of Canada's capital.

Mr. Hodgson: Has Tunney's pasture no topsoil at all? Is it necessary to truck all the topsoil? This $750,000 seems like a lot of money to spend for planting a bit of sod or grass?

Mr. Winters: We have to put the topsoil there before we can get the grass to grow. There is no topsoil there.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

370. Ontario (other than Ottawa), $8,415,000.

Mr. McIvor: Mr. Chairman, Fort William is outside of Ottawa. We have been attempting to obtain a public building there, and the reason is that we are paying out over $30,000 in rent for dominion offices. We think it would be a saving to the dominion government to have all these offices in one place. A delegation came down here, and the minister treated them very well indeed, up to a point. I admit our delegation was late, but we will not be late next year. We are giving notice now that we want that building so that we can save money for the dominion government.

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Chairman, I want to put in a request now, because it would appear that this minister is not going to carry on as the last one did. It would seem that he is going to consider requests that are made. I headed different delegations to the former minister of public works, and in each and every case upon leaving him I thought that I would most certainly get what I had asked for. But as soon as the interview was over the former minister appeared to forget the interview completely. The result was that I never got anything.

I believe there is a request before the department now for a new post office at Exeter, which is very badly needed at that point. There is an airport adjacent to Exeter, and in the last few years the post office has not had sufficient room in which to operate. I believe engineers have been told to go down there to look the situation over. I have no reason to complain up to this point about what the present minister has done; but if there is no improvement next year by way of an allotment for that post office building the minister will be hearing from me.

Mr. Monteith: Would the minister tell me the nature of the public building at St. Mary's for which there is a revote of $50,000.

Mr. Winters: This is a post office building. The site has been selected but I understand it has not yet been purchased. The Post Office Department attaches a considerable amount of importance to this building, and we hope to be able to proceed with it.

Mr. Monteith: This year?

Mr. Winters: We have a target date of October 15 for completion of the plans. Whether we will be able to meet that date or not, I cannot say; but I hope we will be.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—
371. Manitoba, $2,665,000.

Mr. Knowles: Can the minister say when the new post office building in Winnipeg is to be completed, or perhaps I should ask in what year it will be completed.

Mr. Winters: The plans are not yet completed.

Mr. Knowles: There is a hole in the ground there.

Mr. Winters: Well, that is a start. We expect the plans will be completed by the middle of the summer. It may take three years after that before the building is completed, because it is to be a large building.

Mr. Knowles: Has any decision been reached as to what use will be made of the old post office building at the end of the three years' time?

Mr. Winters: We have not yet made that decision.

Mr. Dinsdale: There are three items that interest me in this vote. First, there is the construction of the customs and immigration buildings at Boissevain, the addition and alteration to the public building at Brandon, and a similar estimate for the public building at Virden.

I rise at this time because each of these is a revote. In the cases of the first two, I believe they have been in the estimates for the last three or four years.

[Mr. Cardiff.]

Dealing particularly with the customs port at Boissevain, I think the minister is aware that this matter is becoming increasingly urgent, because the customs port is located on highway No. 10 which today is becoming recognized as the main street of the Americas. It is a highway that runs right through from South America, through the international peace garden, the city of Brandon, and Riding Mountain national park. At the present time it continues as far as Flin Flon, Manitoba, which is an important mining section in the province. We would hope eventually, of course, as the north opens up that this highway of the Americas would extend right through to Churchill. I understand the great difficulty here is the matter of negotiation with American officials.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member is referring to Boissevain?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Mr. Winters: The situation is that the plans are complete and they have gone to the secretary for advertising. Tenders will be called, to close on May 12, 1954. That will save the hon. member a speech.

Mr. Dinsdale: I think we are seeing greatly improved efficiency in the department when we can get a response such as we have had just now concerning this item which, as I have indicated, has been on the books for the last three years.

Then, in regard to the addition and alterations to the post office at Brandon, I notice the amount this year is reduced from $150,000 to $50,000. I wonder if there is an explanation for that.

Mr. Winters: No; it just means that is probably all we will be able to spend this year. We expect to go out for tenders this year, but it will be late in the year and we do not expect we will be able to spend more than $50,000. However that does not mean anything in the final outcome.

Mr. Dinsdale: It just indicates once again the new efficiency and the new look in the department. Then, finally, as the penultimate point, I would direct attention to the public building at Virden. I do not think there is any particular problem there, but I would point out that Virden is the oil centre in western Manitoba. At the present time it has all the appearances of a boom town with the result that post office facilities at the moment are greatly overcrowded. From what the minister has said in regard to the two other items I think we can safely conclude that this project, too, will receive the same expeditious attention.

There is one further matter I should like to bring to the minister's attention at this time. It is the need for a new federal building in the city of Brandon. I think the situation there is much the same as that in Fort William. At the present time, with the exception of the post office, federal offices are located in the old post office building. In that building are the employment offices, the unemployment insurance offices, and the headquarters for the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The square footage available in the old post office building is only 1,720 square feet, which means that the insurance branch has overflowed into an upstairs office occupying a square footage of 1,100 square feet. My information is that these two branches alone require some 5,000 square feet of office space. The present accommodation available is just 2,820.

In addition to the lack of sufficient area, the fact that the two branches are dispersed at different parts of the city creates an administration problem of some significance. On top of that I understand that the C.M.H.C. is opening a new regional office to administer the new act, and will require further office space. Furthermore I believe the radio trouble unit is to be located in the city of Brandon, which will require further office facilities.

I will not labour the point other than to say that Brandon is the important urban area of western Manitoba, and is the second largest city in the province. As a matter of fact, it serves an area of 12,500 square miles, with a population of 105,000 people. Perhaps the minister will also be aware of the fact that there is an excellent piece of property lying between the old post office building and the new post office building which is just waiting to be used for a project of this kind. I bring this to the minister's attention. Some of these days he will be visiting the city to see for himself, and this is by way of preliminary information.

Mr. Viau: In respect of the new Winnipeg post office I am informed that the outside will be completed of brick from eastern Canada. Will the minister advise the committee why Manitoba Tyndall stone, such as has been used in other public buildings in greater Winnipeg, is not being used?

Mr. Winters: I am not in a position to say whether that is true or not, but I would be very surprised if that were true. We have appointed as architects the well-known firm of Green, Blankstein and Russell, and I shall be very greatly surprised if that were the case. However, it is something that I shall look into.

Mr. Churchill: The minister said a few minutes ago, in answer to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, that the plans would not be completed until late this summer. Were there any plans in hand before tenders were called for the excavation of the foundation?

Mr. Winters: The plans at that time were sufficiently developed so that we could undertake the foundation. The plans are not yet completed to the point where we can call tenders for the superstructure. That is quite a different situation, you know.

Mr. Churchill: What is the progress of the work at the present time? Has the excavation been completed, is further work being undertaken at the present time, or will there be a delay until the plans are in hand at the end of the summer?

Mr. Winters: The excavation has been completed, and I understand that at the present time the caissons are going in for the foundation.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

372. Saskatchewan, $2,720,000.

Mr. Knight: There is one vote here that has to do with my city, a vote of $350,000 and a revote of $70,000. I am familiar with that building, but for the record I should like to have the opinion of the minister when he thinks this work will be completed. It has been in hand for quite a period of time. When is there a chance of it being completed? What is the purpose for which it is to be used when it is completed? We know it probably better as the building of the Department of Veterans Affairs rather than the London building under which name it is designated here. May I say that for all public works in the province of Saskatchewan, and not only the city of Saskatoon, we are quite anxious that by next year when we shall have our fiftieth anniversary of the foundation of the province we should like to have these things in good shape. Can the minister give me that information for the record?

Mr. Winters: With respect to the building that is listed here, "Saskatoon—addition and alterations to London building", the work is about 60 per cent completed at the present time. It should be finished and occupied this year. The building is for the use of the Department of Veterans Affairs, income tax and certain other services.

Mr. Knight: It is largely a consolidation, is it not, of the dominion government offices?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Knight: Can the minister tell me approximately what the total expenditures on that building will be to put it in shape, or what the total estimate is?

Mr. Winters: The total amount of the contract is $530,764.61.

Mr. Knight: There must be a lot of work to be done yet.

Mr. Winters: It is 62 per cent completed; there is 38 per cent of the work to be done.

Mr. Knight: Can the minister give us the approximate date of the completion?

Mr. Winters: I said it would be completed and occupied before the end of the year. I do not want to set the target date now, I just do not know.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): There is a matter which I should like to bring to the attention of the minister. I am very happy to see the hon. member for Qu'Appelle in his seat because he will be interested in this matter. I had the honour to represent the former seat of Assiniboia from 1945 to 1949. During that period I had the good fortune to have the village of Kipling in my constituency, which, as anyone knows who knows the southeastern part of the province, is a very progressive town and in a prosperous farming district. I want to refer the minister to the vote on page 446 "Kipling—public building, revote $25,000". Last year there was a vote of $75,000 provided. I know we have finished the Criminal Code, but I do not recall anything in it covering political parties which go out and make false promises or commitments. I am happy to hear from the minister that the Department of Public Works of this government is going to get a new look. I am not going to make any insinuations that could not be backed up, but we have heard from various members that there could very well be political reasons why certain votes were not spent in certain buildings under construction.

With regard to the Kipling building, I rise primarily to emphasize the fact that was previously recognized by the Department of Public Works, namely, the real necessity for a new building in the village of Kipling. I had a great deal of difficulty getting answers to certain questions from the government.

Mr. Winters: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend will allow me to interject I might be able to save him a speech. We propose to go out to tender on this building early in the summer, and if additional funds are required this year we shall ask for them in the supplementary estimates.

[Mr. Winters.]

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I am very happy to get the information which the minister has just given. Nevertheless I do want to continue these few remarks to indicate to the minister that we are expecting him to go through with it. It is a fact that the department did have certain surveys in that village. I would suggest to him that when they undertake this building they work in close conjunction with the local authorities and the people concerned because it has been brought to my attention that if the site—I am not too sure of the site—selected is the one they intend to build on it may not be the proper one in the best interests of the village, unless more than one has been surveyed. I am suggesting that when you build you work in close co-operation with the local board of trade, the town council and others to make sure that it will be an asset to the town and will work in with town planning.

I am happy to hear what the minister has just said. I want to emphasize that you need a building there. There is a high revenue—

Mr. Winters: You are going to get it.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I am going to make one other suggestion in view of the fact that the minister is so amiable tonight. It is that when they are giving consideration to this matter, they consider the R.C.M.P. detachment at that point. We have our R.C.M.P. stationed there. They have never had proper barracks. Would the minister now be kind enough to give me the assurance that when they are considering this building they will make it a joint building to house the R.C.M.P., which they can use as a barracks, as well as a post office for Kipling?

Mr. Winters: No; I will not give my hon. friend that assurance.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I would point out this consideration to the minister, and I am quite serious about it. If this department is not already giving consideration to this matter, it would be well to do so because I do not think we need two buildings in that village. One building properly constructed would be under your department. It would be the type of building which would be an asset to the town and would serve very well the two purposes. I am suggesting to the minister that he give consideration to that matter. Perhaps now that I have got this far, I might solicit the assistance of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to get the R.C.M.P. barracks in addition.

Mr. Mang: Since I have been given some publicity in this matter, just to set the record straight I might say that Kipling is now in the constituency of Qu'Appelle, and that we have been in very close touch with the situation since August 11. We are working in very close harmony with the local people, with the Department of Justice which is in charge of the R.C.M.P., and with the minister in charge of the Department of Public Works. We are making quite definite progress. If the building costs more than $25,000, we are not going to leave a building there with the roof off. It is going to be completed and it will be a good one. When the necessity arises for the R.C.M.P. to put up a building we, together with the local organization, will be working together. That is outside of any political organization. I mean the town organization and so forth.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): I hope the hon. member for Qu'Appelle is speaking with authority and for the government. Now that he says he has been on the job since August 11, there is another question I should like to ask him or the minister. It is in connection with some of the contracts which were let or given to the Lunam Construction Company. This matter was brought to my attention on a number of occasions. The committee will recall that the former member for Qu'Appelle, Mr. Dewar, resigned from the house just prior to the federal election. There were left certain contracts which were not fully paid to the subcontractors or there were certain moneys which should have gone to the subcontractors. It has been brought to my attention that certain truckers and other people who were working there and in the employ of the subcontractors were not paid. If the minister or the hon. member for Qu'Appelle would assure me that this matter has been cleaned up to the satisfaction of the subcontractors and their workers I should be very happy. It is a bad situation because some of these young men who were working there with their trucks never were paid, and they have either lost their trucks or have been put in an extremely awkward position. I should like the minister to make a statement with regard to that matter, or the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Mang: We are fully aware of the situation and everything is being done to rectify the situation that we are aware of.

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Since the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has taken the liberty to answer my question and not the minister, I should like to ask him this question. When he says that "everything is being done", does he mean payment in money or that it is certain underground things that we cannot see?

Mr. Winters: This, Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member who said he would make no insinuations. The speech was loaded with them.

The situation with respect to the subcontractors is that they have formed a committee to attempt to establish the validity and the quantum of the subcontracts. They have appointed a legal agent, a Mr. Pope, to act on their behalf. They have had meetings. From a conversation which I recently had with Mr. Pope, I understand that they are very close to agreement on how the remaining moneys should be apportioned and that they have agreement as to assignment from Mr. Lunam. We hope that before too long the situation will be satisfactorily disposed of in so far as we are able to apportion the remaining funds.

Mr. Nicholson: I must thank the minister for including an item for $110,000 for a public building at Kelvington. Earlier this afternoon I discussed Carrot River. I should like the minister at this point to give us some information as to how he decides where those public buildings are built. I know that the Post Office Department and the R.C.M.P. are all interested in getting quarters in the country. The minister has assured us that in the future these public buildings are not going to be built for political reasons. I think hon. members might be interested, however, in finding out how, for instance, Lemberg gets a new public building this year. I might mention that Lemberg is in Melville constituency.

When I was in parliament previously and referred matters of this type to the then postmaster general or to the then minister of public works, I was informed that until a centre had a post office revenue of $10,000, no consideration could be given to the erecting of a public building. I find that, for the last year for which information is available, Lemberg had a revenue of $4,810. I find that in the Melville constituency Lemberg, Ituna, Langenburg, Fort Qu'Appelle and Balcarres, all with a revenue a good deal less than that of Carrot River, have public buildings. Saltcoats has been included. It probably is the centre in Melville which the Minister of Agriculture believes did not get the consideration that it deserved. But these six centres I mentioned in the Melville constituency either have public buildings or are in the process of receiving them.

As I said previously, there is not a centre in the Mackenzie constituency that has a public building. We had one at Fort Livingston seventy-five years ago but not now. But in the Mackenzie constituency Hudson Bay, Kelvington, Carrot River, Preeceville, Norquay, Porcupine Plain, Sturgis, and Buchanan all have greater revenue than has Lemberg. I would suggest that the post office revenue gives some indication as to the size of the community. I wish the minister would explain this matter. Perhaps he would rather leave it for the Postmaster General to discuss, although I am sure if we wait until the Postmaster General comes with his estimates, he will tell us that public works decides. I wish the minister would explain how it is that none of these centres in Mackenzie constituency with revenue in excess of Lemberg get a public building, while Lemberg, with a revenue of $4,810, gets a fine public building in the course of the last year. Can the minister tell us what the formula is? How is that Lemberg, for example, gets a public building and Carrot River does not?

Mr. Winters: I know that the hon. member does not have in mind that there is any political favouritism here.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: The thought seems to be in the minister's mind.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member probably knows better than does anybody else that the constituency of Mackenzie was represented for the past four years in a distinguished manner by a prominent Liberal. If the hon. member is accusing the government of not doing anything for the constituency for the past four years, surely he cannot say that the grounds were political.

There are certain principles here which, I think, should be made clear. In the first place it is very rare for the Department of Public Works to build a building for itself. It will not build a building for its own purposes in Kelvington or Carrot River or the other places mentioned by my hon. friend. The buildings it does construct are erected only because some other government department requires the type of accommodation which can be had only by building.

The other point is that these departments look to the Department of Public Works to provide suitable accommodation. Suitable accommodation does not automatically mean that new accommodation must be built. The $10,000 division line of revenue is a guide. The Post Office Department does not like to have new buildings erected in centres where revenue is less than $10,000 per year. But that does not mean that a new building cannot be built in a centre smaller than that, because if suitable existing accommodation cannot be found in a small centre then the only alternative is to build new accommodation. It also applies that there are centres where revenue is greater than $10,000 per year and where it is satisfactory to use existing accommodation rather than build new accommodation.

An hon. Member: What a story.

Mr. Winters: It is a true story, my hon. friend may be surprised to know. It is a fact that the Department of Public Works and the other departments of government concerned use their best judgment to solve the problem in the public interest.

Mr. Nicholson: I wish to thank the minister for his statement and I accept it as a statement of policy. The problem that I have been discussing did not arise while the minister was in charge. However, I think it is unfortunate that in an election campaign a candidate gets up and states, "You cannot get anything because your member of parliament is not a supporter of the government". I believe it is important that these decisions be based on an established formula, regardless of the political views of the sitting member. I must say, however, that the minister has been very courteous in handling all my correspondence and I would like to say that I have never felt a problem has been rejected because of any political difference of opinion I might have had with the minister. I again must emphasize that it is unfortunate that during the election campaign it was suggested that because Mackenzie had been represented by a C.C.F. member for a number of years no public building had been built there. As regards Carrot River it should not be suggested that they cannot have a public building now because a Liberal member does not represent that constituency. I simply want the minister to assure us that during the next four years a decision against building a public building at Carrot River will not be based on the fact that the people there did not send a Liberal member to parliament at the last election.

Mr. Castleden: Mr. Chairman, first of all I wish to thank the minister for the fine work that has been done in erecting a splendid federal building in the city of Yorkton. In that regard, I would like to ask the minister when he expects the work to be completed and whether he can give us some idea of the total cost? The building was very much needed and I can assure the minister that it is very much appreciated by the people of that city and the surrounding district. They will be very interested in finding out when it will be ready to be occupied.

The people are particularly anxious to know the completion date, because they were told during the election that the best thing to do was to vote Liberal in order to get the building finished. I would like to have the minister's comments on that.

Mr. Winters: The building at Yorkton is under contract to W. C. Wells Construction Company and the amount involved is $766,047. About 70 per cent of the building has been finished and the job should be completed within the next three months.

Mr. Castleden: There was a revote on the first estimate and I believe the figure then was $225,000. The second year there was a revote of $350,000, and this year it was $450,000. What is the total figure?

Mr. Winters: $766,047.

Mr. Castleden: And you expect to have it finished this year?

Mr. Winters: Yes.

Mr. Castleden: With regard to the other post offices I might say, in line with what the minister said tonight, that there are one or two places in my constituency where accommodation for post offices at the present time is very poor. I refer to the village of Theodore and the village of Raymore. As regards the village of Kelliher, they too, have a fairly large revenue, and although they have fair accommodation it is not nearly as good as in the neighbouring village of Ituna, or the town of Lemberg, which happens to be in the constituency of Melville. The revenue at the village of Kelliher is higher than at Ituna and considerably higher than at Lemberg. However, I hope the minister keeps these things in mind and remembers the very poor accommodation which they have at Theodore and Raymore.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—
373. Alberta, $3,600,000.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I notice in the details there is an item for accommodation for government services in Calgary on revotes which amounts to $150,000. I wonder if the minister would tell us the purpose of this building and the purpose to which it is to be put and what exactly this vote covers. I would also like to know where that building is to be erected in Calgary and what size it is to be.

Mr. Winters: This amount is required toward the construction of a public building in Calgary to provide improved accommodation for the Department of Veterans Affairs and other government services. I am not yet in a position to tell my hon. friend how large the building will be. We have not progressed far enough with the planning to know the answer to that question.

Mr. Harkness: I take it from the minister's remarks that this is not to be the total cost of the building and that this is merely the preliminary vote in order to get it started. Is that the situation?

Mr. Winters: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Harkness: And I take it also from what the minister said that this is the same building for which votes were passed, I believe, in 1947-48 and in 1948-49 in regard to the veterans' affairs building. I wonder if the minister could give us any information as to what steps have been taken to acquire a site, if any, and how soon he expects construction on this building to start.

Mr. Winters: The Department of Veterans Affairs has requested us to erect a new building on a site which is owned by them opposite the Colonel Belcher hospital. It is our intention to proceed with the erection of a building on that site. The plans are not yet beyond the preliminary stage and I am not in a position to say when the building will be started.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Chairman, I wish to say something about this item before it is passed. There has been some comment this evening about political favouritism in the Department of Public Works. I do not agree with that, Mr. Chairman, and for this reason: during the past 20 years the town of Banff has been represented by a Liberal and a Conservative. Very little has been done in the town of Banff. It is the most outstanding summer resort on the North American continent—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): —and it deserves some consideration. I have just been reminded that it is now being represented by myself, a Social Crediter, and that may be the reason why it is being given some consideration by the Department of Public Works. Certainly that could not be considered as being political favouritism. I notice in the estimates that the department is going to spend $280,000 for a new public building in Banff. I imagine that sum will be to get it started. I do not suppose that will be the amount which will be required to complete the building. It should make a very handsome building in Banff national park. The provincial government also has its eye on Banff since the last election, and they are now erecting a building which will cost more than $250,000 to house one of the most modern telephone services in Canada.

These two buildings are going to be a great asset to the town of Banff, and well they should because Banff attracts more tourists than any other spot in Canada. There is a problem in connection with the building to be erected by the Department of Public Works that I want to bring to the minister's attention. I have already discussed the matter with the Department of National Revenue. I should like to know whether provision is made in the plans for quarters for customs officers. I am informed, and I think accurately, that there is a considerable amount of business for such an office.

Mr. Winters: The answer to that is yes.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I am very glad to hear that. A customs officer is stationed at the Banff Springs hotel during the summer season. I am informed by one business concern in Banff that last year they paid over $7,000 in duties in a period of eight months. That is only one firm, so there must be sufficient business to warrant the opening of a customs office. I am very pleased to hear the minister say that provision is being made for that type of service. Can the minister tell the house what progress has been made? Has the site been selected?

Mr. Winters: As my hon. friend probably knows, the building will be constructed on a crown site, so we own the site now.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): You have the site?

Mr. Winters: We have the site.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Where is it?

Mr. Winters: It is at the corner of Bear and Buffalo streets.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Is provision also being made in that building for the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. Winters: No.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I was informed that it would be possible for the R.C.M.P. to be housed in the new building and that the building which they now occupy would be used for other services. Is that correct?

Mr. Winters: That is not correct. We do not propose to house them in this new building.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): What will be the over-all cost of the building when it is completed?

Mr. Winters: It is estimated that it will be around $300,000.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): Can the minister say when construction will be started?

[Mr. Johnston (Bow River).]

Mr. Winters: We hope to call for tenders by the 15th of May.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): How long do you think it will take to complete construction?

Mr. Winters: I think it could be done within a year and a half.

Mr. Johnston (Bow River): I want to thank the minister for giving this matter the consideration that it deserves.

Mr. Quelch: I was very glad to see that the item for the public building at Stettler had been increased from $75,000 to $125,000. I wonder whether the minister can say what progress is being made with the erection of the building and just what purpose it will serve. I understand it will house the new post office, but what other services will it provide accommodation for?

Mr. Winters: Post office and veterans affairs.

Mr. Quelch: Can you say what progress is being made?

Mr. Winters: The contractor is J. C. Haddow. The amount is $222,000. The contract was awarded in September and the building is 25 per cent completed.

Mr. Thomas: I was wondering where the money had gone that was in last year's estimates for a public building at Wetaskiwin, and now I think I know. It went to Stettler. In all seriousness, I do want to voice the protests of the people of the city of Wetaskiwin against the government's action in dropping all mention of a public building in Wetaskiwin from the estimates this year. The need for this building has been recognized for some time. As a matter of fact, two years ago the sum of $50,000 was included in the estimates, and I believe that was intended for an extension to the existing building. Apparently it was recognized last year that an extension was not sufficient, and the sum of $75,000 was put in the main estimates toward the construction of a new building. Suddenly this year it is dropped.

Surely the priority has not disappeared so quickly. Conditions in that post office are intolerable not only for the public but also for the employees. The employees are working in cramped quarters and do not have proper facilities. People are forced to line up for their mail. When I was home at Christmastime people were standing in line an hour or more in order to get their mail. The employees could not get the mail sorted on time and people were delayed. Letters were coming in late and things were in a general uproar.

Since the item was first put in the estimates two years ago the situation in Wetaskiwin has worsened tremendously. The population of the city has increased to the extent where it has overloaded the facilities of the post office. Business has also increased to a very great extent. The Wetaskiwin area now has five full oilfields completely circling the city and it serves at least a part of one other field. That makes a total of six oilfields, and all the oil companies have their offices there. The oil supply companies have offices there. The drilling equipment and equipment repair companies also have offices in the city. These businesses are all forced to use the facilities of the post office in Wetaskiwin. As I said a moment ago, the situation there is terrible. The need for a new post office was recognized at least two years ago by the department.

The estimates were passed by the House of Commons. Surely, the minister cannot say that with the expansion of business within that city there is no longer any priority for a new building there. It would appear to me that if there were a need two years ago there is a double need for a new building now. I want to repeat that I protest most strongly the withdrawal of this item from the estimates. I should like an explanation from the minister as to why this item was dropped from the estimates when the need is so obvious.

Mr. Winters: The explanation is short, Mr. Chairman. A site had not yet been acquired, and when we compiled the estimates and the treasury board found we were not in a position to go ahead with the building because we did not have a site, they asked us to drop the item from the estimates this year so the equivalent amount of money could be used somewhere else where construction could be put in place.

Mr. Thomas: I would presume, then, that a site will be obtained this summer, or at least negotiations for a site undertaken, so a start can be made on the building early next year.

Mr. Shaw: When I spoke on March 12 when the first item of this department was before us, I made a reference to five projects in Alberta which had been dropped, we hoped only temporarily. When the minister replied it happened that I was called out of the house, but from what he said I am rather inclined to believe he may have misunderstood me. He referred to the $3,600,000 appropriated for the ensuing fiscal year, which represented an increase of $1,299,999 and said this would indicate there was no attempt whatever to discriminate on any grounds that may possibly have been in the mind of the hon. member.

Upon reflection I believe the minister will agree that I did not charge discrimination at all. I asserted that there were other people who support the minister's party who were charging discrimination by inference, if not directly, inasmuch as they asserted that if an opposition member were representing the constituency that would be the best guarantee we would not secure a public building. I challenged that statement myself and said that, so far as I could ascertain during my fourteen years here, the policy was not one of discrimination. I would not want him to think for a moment that, so far as Alberta was concerned, I thought there was a suggestion of discrimination.

My entire comment was to the effect that, inasmuch as parliament last May had given its approval to the five projects, including the one in my own town of Innisfail, I trusted the minister would keep these matters to the fore and would agree to go through with these projects. After all, as I emphasized then and as I emphasize now, the need was recognized. The projects were given a high priority rating and everyone had cause to believe the projects would be undertaken. I was pleased to note that on March 12 the minister made it clear the projects had not been abandoned. I had used that term, and I am pleased to know that. I hope these projects have not been taken away completely, and that in another year the minister will find it possible to proceed with those projects to which I referred on March 12.

As I say, my only purpose tonight is to stress the fact that at no place in my remarks, either on March 11 or 12, did I charge discrimination against my constituency or against Alberta.

Mr. Holowach: I am pleased to see the department has allocated some funds for the erection of public buildings in the city of Edmonton. I have no quarrel with where that money is to be spent because all parts of Edmonton are important to me. Naturally, I am sorry that not one cent is to be allocated to Edmonton East, which is one of the oldest parts of Edmonton and perhaps the most important. I am curious to know, and I would appreciate if the minister would be kind enough to explain, why the proposed public building in Edmonton, which was originally designed for Edmonton East, was switched to Edmonton West. What were the reasons for that switch, and were any political motives responsible for the change?

Mr. Winters: I do not know of any switch being made since I have been in this department, Mr. Chairman. No switch was made, and therefore the second part of the question does not need an answer.

Mr. Holowach: The proposed public building now being built in Edmonton West was originally to be built in Edmonton East; that was the understanding of the people of Edmonton.

Mr. Winters: That was all before my time; I do not recall it.

Mr. Holowach: That may be, but I was anxious to know the reason for the switch.

Mr. Winters: I do not know.

Mr. Blackmore: Just before the item carries, I desire to thank the minister and his department, on behalf of the Lethbridge federal riding, for the construction of three fine public buildings in the Lethbridge riding, namely Taber, Carway and Lethbridge. The building in Carway is particularly important because of the fact it is a rather vital port of entry to the Waterton Lakes park. It is entirely fitting that there should be a respectable public building there because of the great number of tourists going through the port of entry yearly.

Item agreed to.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—
374. British Columbia, $4,450,000.

Mr. Herridge: I rise to make a few comments on this item with a particularly clear conscience because I represent the constituents who are most reasonable in their requests. They never ask for anything unless it is urgently required, after due consideration, and so on. I know the minister's officials, and I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that for some ten years the present public building in Trail has been inadequate, both as to size, as to facilities and as to conveniences. The greatest objection to the present building is the fact that the staff working in the basement often works under insanitary conditions. Whenever there is high water or a storm, the sewage backs up into the basement and the postmen find it very difficult to continue sorting letters because of the odours that are caused by this sewage.

[Mr. Holowach.]

I realize the department has had rather unusual difficulty in choosing a site because it has not been an easy matter to find a suitable site in the city of Trail for the proposed building. The local organizations and the local people are looking forward now to the commencement of this proposed building. I should like the minister to inform me just how far plans have proceeded and when we can expect tenders to be called. I should like to ask the minister about two other projects to save him rising on three occasions, because I believe in the conservation of the minister's energy.

I notice a vote of $100,000 for the city of Nelson. There, again, there has been some delay owing to the willingness of the department to consider a change in site to accommodate the city council. That is very much appreciated. However, they are greatly concerned about the commencement of work on the building. When can we expect tenders to be called for the building in Nelson?

Then I notice a public building for Castlegar, in the amount of $50,000, and I am pleased indeed to see this amount set out in the estimates. Castlegar is a rapidly growing community, possibly the most rapidly growing, with the exception of one in the constituency of the deputy chairman. I think it is a very good thing to consider placing a public building there. What are the plans in connection with that building, and when can construction be expected?

Mr. Winters: First of all, we are planning a building for Castlegar. The site has been acquired. Sketches have not yet been started, but we hope that we will be able to go out to tender on the building before the end of this fiscal year, that is, before the end of March 1955.

In Nelson we are going to build the building on a crown site. Sketches have been approved, and we hope we will be able to go out to tender within a month.

In Trail we plan to build on a crown site. Revised sketches are being prepared, and we hope to call tenders late this year.

Mr. MacInnis: I notice there are two amounts for Vancouver, in connection with item 374. Perhaps I should preface any question I have to ask by saying that, so far as we know, we have no political troubles, as they have adjacent to Melville in the province of Saskatchewan. However we have not yet heard from the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra. In any event I do not expect problems of that kind to develop under the administration of the Minister of Public Works.

The first item for Vancouver is a customs building with a vote of $1,200,000, and the second is a post office building with a vote of $2 million, including a revote of $780,000. Will the vote in the estimates now for the customs building be sufficient to complete it?

Mr. Winters: The amount of the contract for the customs building at Vancouver is $2,854,589. So the amount in the estimates will need to be supplemented by about $850,000.

Mr. MacInnis: Has the contract been let for the post office? I believe tenders have been called.

Mr. Winters: Tenders have been called, but the contract has not yet been let. We know what the amounts of the tenders were, but they are still in process of being scrutinized. The contract has not yet been awarded.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not suppose the minister can say when it is expected work on the post office building will be begun. I might add that a very substantial fence was built around the lot on which the post office is to be built. There was some fear expressed through notices in the press, and by certain people in Vancouver, that the fence was of such a substantial type that it meant that the post office would not be built for a long time. I hope the minister will be able to reassure the people of Vancouver that the post office will be proceeded with as soon as the tenders can be properly analysed.

Mr. Winters: The recommendation to treasury board in favour of the lowest tender is in the course of preparation now. The submission will go forward presently, and I would imagine that the contractor would be able to start there within the next month, at any rate.

Mr. Patterson: We are very appreciative in the Fraser valley of the fact that a new immigration and customs building is being constructed at Huntingdon, and also for the fact that there is a revote in the amount of $70,000 for the public building at Mission City. Will the minister state what stage the plans have reached in connection with the Mission City post office?

Mr. Winters: At Huntingdon the building is fifty per cent completed. Perhaps the hon. member has seen the building in progress. At Mission City we have a crown site. Sketch and plans have been prepared but detailed plans are not yet ready. We hope however that within the course of the next two months we will be able to call tenders for it.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I believe I would require about five minutes for what I have to say. Perhaps we should call it ten o'clock.

The Deputy Chairman: Well, the committee has not done badly this afternoon. Perhaps it would be well to call it ten o'clock, report the resolutions and ask leave to sit again.

Mr. Green: Before that is done, I believe the minister was going to give an answer to me.

Mr. Winters: The hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra asked me to give some information as to what was included in the general item found at page 438, in the amount of $809,000. That amount is principally for purchasing lock boxes, and furniture in bulk for future distribution, for travelling expenses not especially allotted, and for moving government departments within the various provinces.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: On Monday we will resume debate on the budget.

Mr. Green: Will that be continued on Tuesday and Wednesday?

Mr. Harris: That is the present intention, unless something unusual occurs.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

360. Departmental administration, $821,732.

Architectural branch—

361. Branch administration, $701,299.

Supply—Public Works

362. Ottawa—maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, including repairs and upkeep, rents, furnishings, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $500,000, $14,996,664.

363. Maintenance and operation of public buildings and grounds, other than at Ottawa, including repairs and upkeep, rents, furnishings, heating, etc., and to authorize commitments against future years in the amount of $800,000, $20,843,057.

Acquisition, construction and improvements of public buildings—

Construction, acquisition, major repairs and improvements of, and plans and sites for, public buildings listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended on individual listed projects—

364. Newfoundland, $550,000.

365. Nova Scotia, $1,330,000.

366. Prince Edward Island, $550,000.

367. New Brunswick, $1,250,000.

369. Ottawa, $10,640,000.

370. Ontario (other than Ottawa), $8,415,000.

371. Manitoba, $2,665,000.

372. Saskatchewan, $2,720,000.

373. Alberta, $3,600,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 12, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

NEW MEMBERS INTRODUCED

Rodolphe Leduc, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Gatineau, introduced by Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent and Hon. Alcide Cote.

Yves Leduc, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Verdun, introduced by Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent and Hon. Alcide Cote.

James Alexander McBain, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Elgin, introduced by Hon. George A. Drew and Mr. H. O. White.

John C. Pallett, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Peel, introduced by Hon. George A. Drew and Miss Sybil Bennett.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

PRESENTATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY REPORT—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I desire to lay on the table, Mr. Speaker, the supplementary report of the Canadian wheat board, being the final accounting and auditors' report for the 1952-53 crop year. I ask that this be referred to the committee on agriculture and colonization.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN NATIONAL (WEST INDIES) STEAMSHIPS LIMITED

STATEMENT TO CLARIFY POSITION OF COMPANY

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I desire to make a statement on the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships.

It has been drawn to my attention that what I had to say on the subject of the future of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships Limited, when the report of that company was being considered by the railways and shipping committee, has created the impression in some quarters that the government has in mind the winding up of the affairs of that company. Such a misconception of the government's intentions may well prejudice the efforts of the steamship company when soliciting business, and I think therefore that the facts should be restated.

What I said before the committee was that while the financial year of the Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships in 1953 was a disappointing one, the expenses incurred were abnormal owing to abnormal circumstances. I endeavoured to make it clear therefore that 1953 was not a year to look at to obtain a true picture of the situation with respect to the usefulness of the steamships.

The situation is therefore that there is reason to entertain hope that the position of the steamship company will improve, and it is not the intention of the government to abandon this service now. However, the management and the government will keep a very careful eye upon the operations this year in particular in order that we may obtain a true measurement of the usefulness of the service with respect to the future. Consequently those who are interested in the continuation of the service will have an opportunity to demonstrate their willingness to provide sufficient traffic to support it.

NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING POLICING, HARBOUR TOLLS, ETC.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. 421 (from the Senate), to amend the National Harbours Board Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

OPIUM AND NARCOTIC DRUG ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LICENCES, REGULATIONS, ETC.

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved the first reading of Bill No. 422 (from the Senate), to amend the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

NATO—VISITS BY PARLIAMENTARIANS

Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North):

1. Has a recommendation from NATO that parliamentarians should be encouraged to visit NATO military and civilian headquarters been received by the government of Canada?
2. If so, what action has the government taken?

Mr. Blanchette:

1. Yes.

2. No action has yet been taken by the government to implement it, but the matter is under consideration.

LONG SAULT RAPIDS CANAL—CONSTRUCTION COST

Mr. Casselman:

What is the proposed cost of the suggested new 27-foot draft canal and locks on the Canadian side of the Long Sault rapids?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): $70,230,000.

HAROLD C. BANKS

Mrs. Fairclough:

1. Has a board of inquiry under the Immigration Act been held with reference to the residence of Harold C. Banks?
2. On what date was the Department of Citizenship and Immigration made aware of the court record of Mr. Banks in the United States?
3. How was that information acquired?
4. At the time of application for permanent residence, was Mr. Banks called upon to make a declaration with regard to convictions in the United States?
5. If so, what did the declaration disclose?
6. If not, what type of declaration was required of him?
7. Was his record investigated by the offices of the department before granting permanent residence?
8. Has Harold C. Banks returned to Canada from the meetings of the international labour organization?

Mr. Harris:

1. No.

2. May 2, 1953.

3. Inquiries were made by the department.

4. In view of the ready admissibility of citizens of the United States of America as immigrants under the law, it is the practice to make minimum inquiries of them when entering Canada. Mr. Banks signed the usual landing card which supplied general information and indicated conditions of health, finances, and whether he was ever refused admission to or deported from Canada.

5. See answer to No. 4.

6. See answer to No. 4.

7. No.

8. Yes.

CORONATION MEDALS

Mr. Balcer:

1. How many medals commemorating the coronation of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II have been granted to Canada?
2. By what department of government, or through what agency were these coronation medals distributed?

[Mr. Stewart (Winnipeg North).]

3. On what basis were the recipients of these medals chosen?
4. Were there any orders in council passed in this connection?
5. What are the names and addresses of all the recipients of these coronation medals?

Mr. Pickersgill:

1 and 5. In accordance with traditional practice, information is not available as to the number of medals and the names of recipients.

2. The Department of the Secretary of State.

3. On the basis of categories approved by Her Majesty the Queen.

4. No.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY—ADVERTISING, ENLISTMENTS, ETC.

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Since April 1, 1952 and to date, what have been the total expenditures of the national defence department, navy, for advertising of all kinds, the purpose of which is to encourage enlistments in the Royal Canadian Navy?
2. How many men have applied since said date to the Royal Canadian Navy for appointment as administrative officers in (a) the regular force; (b) the short term service; (c) the reserve force?
3. How many men have been commissioned since said date as administrative officers in (a) the regular force; (b) the short term service; (c) the reserve force, and how many were (i) former officers in the Canadian navy; (ii) original appointments?

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ADVERTISING

Mr. Hansell:

1. What was the total cost involved in advertising for recruits in each branch of the Department of National Defence, in each of the following categories: (a) newspapers; (b) weekly and monthly magazines; (c) radio; (d) billboards and posters; (e) other forms of advertising?

ARMED FORCES—PSYCHIATRIC EXAMINATIONS

Mr. Jones:

1. Is any psychiatric or mental examination given to persons seeking to enlist in the armed forces?
2. If so, what is the nature of such examination?
3. Are any applicants refused enlistment for psychiatric or mental reasons?
4. If so, what standards are applied?
5. Are personnel in the armed forces examined regularly as to their psychiatric or mental state?
6. Are any personnel discharged for psychiatric or mental causes?
7. Are any standards of literacy applied to persons seeking to enlist in the armed forces?
8. If so, what are they?

Mr. Blanchette: Return tabled.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister) moved:

That when this house adjourns at six o'clock p.m. on Wednesday, April 14 next, it stand adjourned until Monday, April 26 next, at 2.30 o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION TO BE BROUGHT DOWN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. Now that we are about to rise for the Easter recess, is the Prime Minister in a position to indicate to the house what items of government legislation, other than those now on the order paper, are yet to be introduced at this session?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I am sorry I am not in a position to indicate that today, nor do I expect to be able to do so tomorrow or Wednesday. But I do hope to be able to do so shortly after we return, following the Easter recess.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT CONCERNING FIRE IN HANGAR AT PENHOLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister going to make a statement in regard to the fire that occurred in a hangar over the week end?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): No, I was not intending to.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): Are you at a later date? This is a very important matter —a $2 million fire, according to what the papers say.

[Later:]

Mr. Claxton: May I refer to the question asked by the hon. member for Peterborough. As the hon. member and other hon. members know, the practice is that after a fire occurring in any of the armed forces a very thorough investigation is made. That of course is under way now. If any hon. member wishes to have any information after the investigation is held, I shall be only too glad to give it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR LOW INTEREST LOANS ON FARM-STORED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce of which I gave notice on April 5. Has the government received a request from the government of Manitoba that low interest loans be made to farmers on farm-stored grain? Does the government intend to reconsider its attitude against loans of this nature?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have no recollection of having received a communication from the government of Manitoba, though I noticed in the press that the legislature of that province has unanimously voted that this government should do as the hon. member has suggested. It is easy for one legislative assembly to vote that another legislative jurisdiction should pay out money. However, the government has no present intention of changing its policy in that particular regard.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS

GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES NOT CANADIAN CITIZENS —ARCHITECTS RETAINED BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State what progress is being made in preparing two returns, one of which was ordered on February 18, dealing with the subject of non-Canadians in the public service, and the other on March 3 dealing with the subject of the number of architects employed in departments other than the Department of Public Works.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I shall have inquiries made.

VETERANS LAND ACT

REPORTED REFUSAL OF FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Finance. I originally directed this question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner), but I was informed before coming into the house that it related to the Department of Finance. Is the minister aware that veterans farming under the Veterans Land Act are being refused farm improvement loans? What is the reason for the change in policy respecting veterans?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): I shall look into the matter and give my hon. friend an answer later.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RADAR DEFENCES—RELEASE OF INFORMATION TO PUBLIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. I wonder if he could tell us whether information on Canada's radar defences in the north is now being made generally available to the public.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Well, sir, the advice of the chiefs of staff, which hitherto I have acted on, is that they should not be made available to the public. However, inadvertently some information has been made available but not in a systematic form. It is very desirable that they should not be made available to the public, but the very nature of radar stations prevents their being completely secret, as stations are usually erected on the tops of hills. What is important is that we should not officially give a list of radar stations that indicates their existence, our progress in building up, or their operational qualities, thereby enabling the only potential enemy to check the efficiency and effectiveness of its own sources of intelligence.

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask a supplementary question? Will the minister say that much of the information to which he refers was revealed in an air force publication which has a fairly general circulation?

Mr. Claxton: No, not in that form, Mr. Speaker. This magazine, the Roundel, is what I had in mind in my previous answer. Through inadvertence it published in lists of postings from one station to another postings to radar stations.

Mr. Hamilton: A further question of the Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker: What steps has the minister taken to see that publication of such secret data made by our Department of National Defence does not occur again in a government publication?

Mr. Claxton: The question raises a good many questions as to future policy regarding security for radar stations, and the whole matter is being looked into.

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

INCOME TAX

REPORTED COMPLAINTS AS TO ACTIONS OF INSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. G. McCullough (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. It arises out of letters I have received from farmers in Saskatchewan complaining of the methods used by income tax inspectors. Has the minister received complaints from farmers as to the procedure of income tax inspectors in Saskatchewan? If so, is any action being taken to correct their methods in making certain investigations?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): No complaints have been received that I am aware of.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR LATEST INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has he the most recent figures available of those seeking jobs in Canada at the present time?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): I have no over-all figures later than those announced over two weeks ago for the previous month.

RADIO BROADCASTING

CONSULTATIONS WITH MEXICO ON FREQUENCY ALLOCATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I should like to answer a question asked on Friday by the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) as follows:

> Have consultations been held between the Department of Transport or the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and any representatives of the Mexican government or radio interests in Mexico during the last month in respect to frequency allocation? . . . If the answer is in the affirmative, will the minister state the nature and result of these negotiations or consultations?

The answer is yes. Consultations have been held at technical level between officers of the government of Mexico and of the government of Canada looking towards the solution of engineering problems arising out of the sharing by radio broadcasting stations in both countries of the channels in the standard broadcast band. These consultations are to be continued by correspondence.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

STATEMENT AS TO BUILDINGS IN PETERBOROUGH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): On April 8, the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser) asked whether the government has sold or will sell the old customs building and the existing post office building in Peterborough.

In reply, I may say that neither building has yet been sold. Consideration is being given to using the site of either one or the other building to provide accommodation for the unemployment insurance commission.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 6, consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I find it very hard to deal with this budget. It does not itself seem to deal with anything in particular. We have a lot of optimistic hopes by the minister. On the one hand he says, if such and such a thing happens, then the prospect is satisfactory; if it does not happen, things will not be so good; but his conclusion is that the favourable things will happen. This is all very well and fine but the minister gives next to nothing to support his optimistic conclusions.

Next we have a microscopic tax reduction which seems related to nothing in the world except perhaps the minister's desire to leave a good farewell impression in the minds of the children and the users of curling tongs.

The budget reminds me of a book by the late Hilaire Belloc which he entitled "On Nothing".

As I said the other evening, the minister spent an hour and twenty minutes trying to persuade us that the budget was not a budget of blank negation. But I doubt if he even deceived himself. At any rate the immediate and universal feeling throughout the country, so far as one can judge from the press, is that the budget has been a dud.

Let me set on the points on which it is negative. It has nothing for employment, nothing real to relieve the taxpayer, nothing to break the deadlock in wheat, nothing to indicate any intention of improving the efficiency of government, nothing to reassure us that we are not going to have another spate of inflation.

We have come to regard the budget as a statement of what the government has been able to do for the welfare of the Canadian people and its citizens, and second, as a kind of statement of economic conditions in the country.

Judged by this first test, what has the present budget done? The minister will bring in some resolutions, and they will be finally embodied in legislation, but no one can suggest that they will have the slightest effect on the life of the community. They will cause scarcely a ripple. I understand that Birks have announced a 10 per cent reduction on wedding rings. It is not of personal interest to me, but I doubt whether even in these days it will either stimulate or retard the number of marriages that will take place, and I so far have been able to see no other effect of any kind.

I wonder whether it has ever occurred to the minister that if he had only left last year, basking in the sunshine of reduced taxes it would have been a happier thing than in the twilight of today. Gone are the surpluses which rejoiced the heart of the minister, and indeed there is an ugly fear that even the picayune surplus of $4 million which he predicts may not materialize. There is an ugly fear that perhaps he has been a bit optimistic in predicting that, and that he has found it easy to run away from some of the awkward facts. For example, the minister did not find it in his heart to tell us of the large number of industries in which, according to recent reports, production is down: Metal mining, coal mining, non-metal mining, manufacturing as a whole, non-durable manufactures, dairy products, wheat flour, rubber products, tanneries, textiles, clothing, coke and gas products, durable manufacturers as a whole, wood products, iron and steel products, including primary iron and steel, non-ferrous metal products, non-metallic products and electric power.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege; I wonder whether my hon. friend would consider moving a little to the right or to the left so that he would be in front of one of the microphones.

Mr. Fleming: Preferably not to the left.

Mr. Knowles: We are having trouble in hearing what he is saying.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am extremely flattered that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) should wish to hear me, and I certainly will do my best.

Mr. Knowles: So you responded by moving to the left.

Mr. Macdonnell: But not far.

Mr. Fleming: Only in a geographical sense.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask whether I can now be heard?

An hon. Member: That is better.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I again thank hon. members for wanting to hear me. It is a very unusual experience.

The minister's optimism naturally has attracted a good deal of attention, and the Free Press—I mean the Winnipeg Free Press—has this to say—

Mr. Knowles: Capital "F".

Mr. Macdonnell: I quote:

> He makes the surprisingly buoyant assumption that the upturn in the second half of the year will more than compensate for the declines which have been evident in certain branches of industry since the beginning of the calendar year.

The minister makes it clear that he is basing this optimism on his expectation of an upturn in the United States. My only comment on that is that I think it needs a lot more than an upturn in the United States to cure our situation. I think it needs a good deal of effort on our own part. I think it means bringing down our costs in the export trade where we are being hampered at the moment by competition we cannot meet.

Nevertheless, the minister's optimism is attractive. As I listened to it, my mind carried back to a cult—I suppose it was a cult—which was popular a good many years ago, called Couéism. It was a kind of autosuggestion. People muttered incantations to themselves and by that means I suppose they bucked up their morale and the morale of others, and made themselves feel better. One of the incantations I remember was, "Every day and in every way, I am becoming better and better." I suppose the minister has perhaps adopted a little of that and says, "Every day and in every way things are becoming better and better."

I would be the last to deprecate optimism, but I do feel that, while our long-term prospect is brilliant, we should not assume that it is free from perhaps a little of what the minister calls hesitation. I thought that was a nice word. I propose to refer to it later—occasional hesitation. But while I love optimism, I do not think that we should confuse optimism with wishful thinking. I think what we need is informed and well-based optimism, and I wonder a little whether the minister, humanly enough, just made up his mind that he was going to go optimistic. After all, after seven prosperous years it is hard to contemplate a change and, as I said the other night, I realize that when governments are carried along on the crest of a boom they come to believe that really nothing can go wrong when they are in power—at any rate, that nothing can go seriously wrong. I think they come to believe that they are the darlings of fortune and that fortune will never desert them. So the only world dreamt of in their philosophy is a world where things are always bigger, better and brighter.

Although the minister does admit that there are considerations which give some cause for hesitation, nevertheless he comes definitely down on the side of optimism, but what I would rather call wishful thinking. In this connection it is very interesting to read a short comment on the minister's speech from the Financial Times of London. It is a matter of some interest that the Canadian Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and the British Chancellor of the Exchequer presented their budgets on the same day. It did invite comment, and I propose to read a short comment from the Financial Times. The Times says it is obvious from the Canadian budget that finance minister Abbott has based his entire economic policy on an early recovery in the United States. Again, they say:

> That, it is worth noting, is more than Mr. Butler, chancellor of the British exchequer . . . is willing to do.

Again:

> This contrast perhaps also serves to explain why Mr. Abbott had not shown more concern about the marked deterioration in the Canadian trade balance in the past year.

And further:

> Evidently it would be very hard indeed for Mr. Abbott to contemplate any other assumption than an early revival of American economic activity without some fundamental changes in his whole financial policy. But that does not make his present policy any less of a calculated risk.

The comment I wish to make on that is that I fail to find very much calculation in the Minister of Finance's assumption of risk. I fear, indeed, that there was not much calculation but that the assumption was a bad assumption, and perhaps even a misleading one. At any rate, there was not enough to support it.

I wish to come now to the definite topics that I want to consider. I wish first to refer to the continued rise in non-defence expenditure which faces us this year, as in other years, and which we find perplexing and to which there seems to be no answer that the government has been able to find. This year, with things uncertain, we might have expected some kind of retrenchment, but apparently there is none whatever. Private individuals, private corporations, even government corporations like the Canadian National, have to economize. They have to cut their suit according to the cloth. They have to be realistic. But apparently as long as the government has the pocket of the taxpayer open to it it does not become realistic. If only there were a higher power to say to the government, "This is all you have to spend, you cannot spend any more", I think magical things would come about in the way of reorganization.

That has happened in the United States. We are told that they have cut off $7 billion and hope in the coming year to add $5 billion to that. They are taking it seriously. Realism has overtaken them. I suppose one thing which has prevented our taking the situation realistically is that we have had these surpluses. In the United States they have not been misled by surpluses. They have not taken extra money from their people and they have not had these surpluses which are apt to lead a government astray, and I think have led our government astray.

In some mysterious way our government seems to believe there is a divine dispensation which relieves us of the necessity of doing what other people have to do. We apparently do not have to practise prudence and economy. Optimism is the substitute. Of course we all know that that does not make sense. We all know that taxes enter into the cost of production, and we all know that non-defence expenditure should be coming down.

I want to deal with this matter at some length. Let us have a look at our non-defence expenditures since 1948. In the fiscal year ended March, 1948, they were $1,994 million, in round figures. At the end of the next fiscal year they were $1,907 million, a blessed drop to encourage us, but there has been no such encouragement since. At the end of the last fiscal year they were, when you add the old age security fund, $2,697 million, and the present budget provides for $2,892 million. When you take into account the supplementaries and our non-civil defence expenditures they will be approximately $3 billion this year.

What about our civil service payroll? Permanent and temporary employees increased from 118,000 in 1948 to 135,000 in December, 1953, and the payroll rose from $226 million to $360 million. If we add casuals, ships' crews and so forth, the number of civil servants as of the year 1953 is not 135,000 but 171,000, and the payroll, on the basis of adding casuals, is not $360 million but approximately $475 million. Commenting on this, the Financial Post says:

> The trouble with a government job or project is that it never seems to end. Hardly a week passes but some new board or commission is set up, an office opened and a staff hired. But seldom indeed are these groups disbanded even when their original mission has been accomplished. The usual practice is to absorb the staff into some other branches of the service. Over the years that sort of thing adds thousands to the government pay roll but little indeed to government efficiency.

I do not propose to dwell on these figures. I do propose later to dwell as emphatically as I can on what I believe is the need for a close scrutiny into government operations. However, at a time when questions are being asked in the house as to why the C.N.R. has had to reduce its staff, at a time when, from all across Canada, labour departments report unemployment, at a time when there is the greatest anxiety in labour circles about the existing situation, at a time when the unemployed are being asked to tighten their belts and hope for the best and believe the minister has some heaven-sent inspiration when he predicts that all will be well or nearly well in the autumn, at this time the one organization which does not practise what it preaches is the government.

In spite of all this the minister forecasts a surplus. It is microscopic compared to the surpluses of his big days, and even here one wonders whether by the desire to make things look good, by the inability even to contemplate a deficit, he has not been led away by unwarranted optimism. Last year he underestimated the gross national product by $345 million. Nevertheless, even with this windfall of more than a third of a billion dollars, he was high in his revenue estimate by nearly $100 million. If, as some think, the gross national product may be actually lower than last year, if our economic growth has really slowed to a walk, then it could be the minister would have a substantial deficit. I should like to ask him when he replies to state his present estimate of the gross national product.

It is perhaps natural that the attention of an opposition should be especially attracted to one form of expenditure beyond all others, namely the millions spent on displays, films, advertising and other informational publicity.

"Informational publicity"—what a blessed phrase. Especially invented, no doubt, for the use of government so as to be able to use public money, incidentally, to advertise itself. The government has seized with avidity upon this means of advertising. The figures have grown from $1,799,000 in 1930-39 to $7,177,000 in 1950 and $11,164,000 in the budget for 1954-55. Various instances might be given but I think it is perhaps interesting to refer to some of the pamphlets published under the authority of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin).

Under the slogan "Posture's Important When you are Very Young" is a picture of two posturing children apparently modelling themselves on two giraffes and what I take to be an ostrich in the background. Then, again, with the minister's blessing, we have the "Robertson" children going to the dentist. They are remarkable children. They brush their teeth immediately after every meal. They do not eat candy or sweet things between meals or before going to bed. This looks to me like total abstinence, and I fear that the minister's tax reduction on candy will mean little to them; but I am sure they will appreciate the kind thought of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Finally, there is a posture circular for adolescents. The instructions are long but I gather that the authorities are against protruding abdomens and hollow backs. Again comes—

Mr. Martin: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does he think we should discontinue these three publications which are strongly supported by the department of health of the government of the province of Ontario?

Mr. Ferguson: I heard nothing about that when I was young.

Mr. Abbott: That is obvious.

Mr. Macdonnell: I submit that all I was doing was bringing these to the attention of the house and to the skilful use of language on the part of the minister. When the minister rose I was afraid he was going to reach for one of those speeches he always has ready.

Mr. Martin: I have too much regard for the hon. member.

Mr. Macdonnell: That is very kind of the minister, but I should add that I do not feel the other departments are idle in this good work. The Department of Agriculture, for example, is busy giving information to the farmer. No doubt the farmer obtains much the same information from the provincial government, but on the other hand no doubt the economists, of whom there are 55 employed by the Department of Agriculture, have many interesting things to say and the only thing one can hope for is that they do not overlap too much.

It is not perhaps surprising in the light of this that there are complaints in the press. The Edmonton Journal, which I believe is an independent newspaper, states:

> What makes this all the more disheartening—

And what they say is very true.

> —is the fact that the increase is not the result of some major crisis requiring costly emergency measures, but rather a general rise in ordinary expenditures.

The Journal goes on to make what I believe are very pertinent criticisms:

> No attempt is apparently being made to offset higher salaries by cutting down the size of departmental staffs. Irritating extravagances of the past are being faithfully carried on.

This points dramatically to the different administrative attitudes in the United States where the Eisenhower administration has cut the federal budget $7 billion below its previous level, and is planning a further cut in the neighbourhood of $5 billion.

The Edmonton Journal concludes:

> Our government's indifference to economy is all the more unfortunate because the general economic outlook in 1954 is more uncertain than it has been for several years.

Mr. Speaker: May I interject here and point out that the hon. gentleman has already quoted three extracts from newspapers. I would remind him of citations 264 and 265. Citation 264 states:

> It is out of order to read extracts in a debate if they: (a) refer to other debates during the same session, etc.—

It is not in order to put on Hansard the expression of opinions by outsiders commenting on our proceedings. The hon member is quite entitled to express his own opinions but he cannot put on Hansard the expression of opinion by others. I quite realize that certain hon. members may think I am being rather drastic in this instance but I know this debate will be prolonged, and it is my belief that too many members indulge in the habit of reading quotations into Hansard. I do not say all hon. members follow that practice but I believe it would be wiser if I gave a warning at the opening of this debate. Unless that is understood we may have opinions expressed by every newspaper in the country put on Hansard by the time this debate ends, and that is exactly what I wish to avoid. I will read citation 264 again which states:

> It is out of order to read extracts in a debate if they:

And so on. And then the last paragraph states:

> Bourinot, page 335, refers to these objections when he says a member may read extracts from documents, books, or other printed publications as part of his speech, provided in so doing he does not infringe upon any point of order.

Citation 265 states:

It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Citation 266 states:

On the 17th March, 1933, a member quoting a newspaper in debate was ruled out of order by the Deputy Speaker who said: "The rule is quite clear, that the quoting of a newspaper, an author or a book which reflects upon debate before the house, either directly or indirectly, is entirely out of order, because members are here to give their own opinion and not to quote the opinion of others . . ."

I am obliged to cite these authorities so that we do not have during this debate the reading of several quotations on Hansard.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry if I have forced you to correct me again. As a matter of fact, I was a little bit uneasy. The temptation, of course, to take quotations is extremely strong because free writers so often express your views better than you yourself are able to do so. However, I think I am in the happy position that I have now read all my quotations and that there is no need for me to trespass upon your patience any more.

We in our party have constantly sought to keep before the people of Canada the urgent need for the federal government's reaching agreement with the provincial governments with regard to the reallocation of taxing power. We have done this so often and in such detail, I do not think that I shall repeat this argument today. We have strongly criticized and continue to criticize the obstinate procrastination and ineptitude of the government in not pursuing this matter as they have been urged to do. In the amendment that I propose to move today I shall include the exact words of a paragraph which my leader moved in this house dealing with this subject on November 24, 1952: I regret that the government shows no intention of dealing with a matter which threatens the very foundations of our national unity.

Mr. Speaker, I am coming back to this question of spending because I believe it to be of the very greatest importance. I have not spent a lot of time talking about this or that extravagance because I have come to the conclusion that unless the government is ready to do what it as yet has utterly refused to do, except in one or two special cases, namely to invite outside assistance in their organization, it seems to me that the matter is hopeless. I am therefore not giving a lot of detailed cases of expenditure.

When even the ministers are admitting that things are uncertain and that we are maybe running into difficulties, I confess that I would have thought that this would have been a time for retrenchment, but I have seen no sign of it; there is no sign of it. It would look as if the government has no capacity to deal with this matter. Apparently, something comes over men when they have been a long time in power, and they do not seem to reach the conclusions that sensible men would reach in their own business or which I assume the members of the government reach in dealing with their own affairs. But when you find that non-defence expenditures are up by hundreds of millions of dollars, it really causes you to think. Of course, in a private organization that kind of thing could not happen. There would be the acid test of the profit and loss account. I confess that I had thought that even the government, faced with a situation which has been partially disclosed to us, would have taken some steps to deal with it; but as I say, I can find no sign of it whatever.

The leader of my party, who incidentally has had a great deal of experience of government, has made suggestions with regard to calling in outside assistance, and the answer has been in the negative. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) dealt with this matter at considerable length and his refusal took two lines, first that there was nothing to correct and, second, that if there were a report such as that which was made by the Hoover commission, it would do no good. The arguments which were used I found to be very strange and I propose to deal with them at some little length because I regard this as a matter of first-class importance; and if it is possible that anything I shall say will have any effect on the decision, I want to say it.

The first argument used by the minister I thought was extremely strange. He pointed out what is true, namely that our cabinet comes into being in a different way from that of the cabinet in the United States where, as we know, members of the cabinet are named by the president. He seemed to think that because the government obtained its authority from the votes of the people, unlike the government in the United States which is appointed by the president, that fact was going to make all the difference in the world. I find his argument interesting, unusual and, if I might say so without being offensive, nonsensical. Here it is. The minister first says:

> These men—

That is, the members of the Canadian cabinet.

> —take an oath of office that they will carry out the specific work that has been assigned to them.

By that remark the minister seems to imply that by taking the oath of office people, regardless of their capacity or their experience, by some magic have become supremely or absolutely competent to do their job. The minister goes on to say this, and what he says is quite unwarranted:

> We are asked now to accept the view that these men are mediocre people, and very bad administrators.

Nobody has used harsh words of that kind. There has been no suggestion of that kind. The suggestion has been that there was room for assistance from outside. Nobody knows better than does the Minister of Trade and Commerce that, in the business world, it is those who are most competent who are most ready to call in outside assistance.

Then next the minister says this—

Mr. Abbott: Will my hon. friend allow me to inquire whether these quotations are from a debate during this session or some previous session?

Mr. Macdonnell: At a previous session, I think; yes, I am confident that they are from a debate in a previous session.

Mr. Abbott: If they are from this session of parliament, then they are out of order, of course.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am confident that it is a previous session. The next thing we have is this:

> We are asked to get a group of independent people, as though there were no independence in those administering the affairs of government.

I find myself unable to think of the right word by means of which to describe this argument. I will reply to it merely by asking a question of the minister. When it was found necessary for the Post Office Department to get an outside report—which I understand was before the regime of the present Postmaster General (Mr. Cote)—did the government ask a member of the government to do it or did they get someone from outside? We all know the answer. Therefore the government's action really makes absurd the answer given by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

I am dwelling on this matter, Mr. Speaker, because it seems to me a striking and almost unbelievable instance of the complete, impenetrable and absurd self-satisfaction of the government. The minister repudiated the idea that anyone from outside could help. He said:

> I presume that the government would choose the very best men they could find, but the fact that it would be an independent body without responsibility to anyone would be, in my opinion, no guarantee that they would be better judges of how this parliamentary government should be organized and administered than are the elected representatives of the people who have sworn to carry out that particular task.

Again you see, Mr. Speaker, the belief in the mythical effect of taking an oath. I will not embarrass the minister by asking him if it is really true that in the case of all his colleagues the oath has covered all defects of mind and heart, and whether he has found them all the supermen we are now asked to consider them.

Now, the minister goes on and says that he has not heard of any great changes being made as a result of the Hoover report. To that I would answer that I commend to the minister a publication entitled "Status of the Hoover Report", by a committee of citizens. It is further called, "A citizen's guide to the progress of Federal Reorganization". It is worth setting out some of the conditions which the Hoover commission found when they began to delve into the Washington situation, because I assume we will not be stupid enough to imagine similar conditions would not be found here.

I shall recite some of the incidents upon which the Hoover commission reported. One Missouri farmer received conflicting advice on the use of fertilizer from five separate agencies in the Department of Agriculture. It would not be hard to imagine, with all the economists we have in our own department, that there might occasionally be duplication in our Department of Agriculture. Budgeting and accounting—the government was maintaining four separate distinct and duplicate sets of books for some important types of federal accounting. Because of obsolete laws, freight car loads of old vouchers were being shipped to Washington for detailed audit when a simple spot check in the field would suffice. Labour—there were more federal activities outside the Department of Labour than in it. This reminds one, incidentally, of our own Department of Trade and Commerce producing unemployment figures as far apart as the poles from those of the Department of Labour. Indian affairs—there were 12,000 Indian bureau employees administering the affairs of 393,000 Indians, or one federal employee to each 32 Indians. Medical activities—five large and thirty smaller hospital systems went their separate ways "with little knowledge and no regard for" one another's operations. New hospitals were sometimes built in areas where others stood empty. Others were built in remote places where neither patients nor physicians could use them.

Does anyone believe that if an expert reviewing agency reviewed our affairs it would fail to find similar situations? If anyone does, let him look at the Woods-Gordon report on the post office. I quote the following from page 42 of that report:

> The "Primary Sortation" is the first division of unsorted mail into a number of different groups. While this plan will require further development, there is an indicated annual saving in the forward letter section of the Toronto post office alone of approximately $200,000 per annum.

I quote again from page 54:

> While these suggested revisions in the organization's structure in the transportation branch do not materially change the administrative functions they strike at the primary weakness, the lack of future policy and program regarding the extent and nature of transportation services.

To suggest in the face of this that there is no need of inquiry and investigation does not make sense. It will merely create the impression the government is not happy about the situation and that there are things to hide.

It only remains to add that the story of the results of the Hoover commission does not in the least warrant the suggestion it has been ineffective. Here is a summary which is illuminating. The recommendations made by the commission totalled 273. Of these 116 or 42 per cent have been accomplished; 35 or 12 per cent have been mostly accomplished; 44 or 16 per cent have been partially accomplished, which leaves 77 out of 273 remaining.

I do not think, in the light of this, anyone will seriously say that the Hoover report should be laughed off. Of course, it has been hard, when everything has been booming, to get the public interested, but it may be more easy to interest them in the future than it is now. The government is content to advise other people to reduce their expenses, but they do not set an example. Indeed, of course, the government makes it almost impossible for other people to reduce their costs by maintaining taxation at such a rate.

I come now to the question of unemployment. There is nothing in the budget to comfort the unemployed except the minister's optimism, which is a thin mixture. However, I believe the unemployed should turn their wrath rather on the Minister of Trade and Commerce than on the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Trade and Commerce manages to ignore the figures which come from the Department of Labour. He runs an opposition show of his own. The confusion really becomes complete when the two departments use different words to describe unemployment. It is a kind of runaround. "Unplaced applicants", as they are called by the Department of Labour, are not far from 100 per cent higher than the "persons without jobs and seeking work", which is the phrase produced by the trade and commerce department and used by its minister. Then, we have a third category of "persons without jobs and seeking work, plus persons on temporary layoff".

Here are the latest figures available as at February 20 last. Unplaced applicants, in round figures, totalled 559,000. This is the figure published by the Department of Labour, but the dominion bureau of statistics produces an entirely different figure for "persons without jobs and seeking work, 312,000". To add to the confusion, there is the third figure entitled "persons without jobs and seeking work, plus persons on temporary layoff, 335,000". We have, as I say, complete confusion. We have the government speaking with two if not three voices, and the confusion gets worse the farther we go.

In speaking about this the Minister of Finance says, as reported at page 3727 of Hansard for April 6, 1954:

> And I do not believe, in any case, that increased public works of the kind appropriate for the federal government can remedy a problem which is to a large extent local in character.

Now, the word "local" attracted me because I think the minister has failed entirely to keep in touch with the labour department. The March issue of the Labour Gazette shows an average of 40 per cent of Canadian wage and salary earners in what is called "substantial labour surplus areas", and almost all the rest in moderate surplus areas. To put it differently, may I say that of 109 localities, 57 were in substantial surplus, 48 in moderate surplus, and only four very small places were in approximate balance of labour demand and labour supply. In percentage figures what this means is that in more than half the area there was at least one worker in every ten unemployed, and in practically all the other areas from one in ten or one in sixteen were unemployed.

In the face of this situation, what comfort are the unemployed to get? All that they have is what the Winnipeg Free Press calls "the surprisingly buoyant assumption that the upturn in the second half of the present year will more than compensate for the declines which have been evident in certain branches of industry since the beginning of the year." Now, the minister says again, at page 3726 of Hansard for the same date:

> Indeed, in the dynamic kind of economy we have in Canada an occasional hesitation in its forward movement may well be one of the consequences of the buoyant character of our economic growth.

"Occasional hesitation"—I think that will seem, to the man who is suffering from unemployment, like a far-off distant voice of some superior being to whom the affairs of poor mortal men are remote. "Occasional hesitation", however, will mean something very real and vital to the unemployed in their day-to-day lives.

The ministers tosses the ball lightly from one to the other. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) says the time has not come for public works, and that the Minister of Finance will deal with the situation by fiscal and monetary measures. The Minister of Finance seems to be in the same mood he was in earlier in the year when he said that unemployment was not really "serious", although he admitted that it was "unpleasant". Having got himself to this point, his conclusion is not surprising. He said:

> In the light of all these considerations I do not feel that drastic measures by government are appropriate to the present economic situation. Governmental intervention or expenditure is not a cure for the problem of those industries where supply has temporarily outrun demand.

The ministers are good at negation. "It is not time for this". "It is not time for that". What is it time for? We get nothing but negation, and the hope that the United States will cure our problem. That is really all that is left.

I should qualify that to this extent, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce speaking the other day in Toronto, did seem to have a vague idea that not everything was quite right. He did say that there would be co-operation between government and industry with regard to employment. But he did not seem to worry about it, at all. His conclusion was:

> By and large, the Canadian economy remains buoyant and expanding.

Of course everyone hopes that the ministers are right. The Minister of Finance is pinning his hopes on United States recovery. But we must, incidentally, remind ministers that costs must come down, and that blithely offering cheap advice to producers about costs, while the government does not do anything about it, leaves them in the very greatest of difficulty.

What the unemployed make of all this, I cannot say. When ministers are not agreed on the problem, how is it likely that the unemployed will feel when there is no serious interest being taken? And when other ministers ignore the Minister of Labour, how can the unemployed have confidence? It is too much to expect. If uncalculated optimism blunders into being right, well and good. But supposing this optimism is wrong—then we will be in a proper mess, and the government will be responsible for taking the risk, which the Financial Times says is a "calculated risk", but which in my opinion is wishful thinking.

I have been talking about the unemployed. Their plight is largely caused by shrinkage in our export trade, and I now propose to say a few words about trade, including the subject of wheat. The Minister of Finance spoke hopefully about international organizations which have to do with international trade. He mentioned the international monetary fund, the organization for European economic co-operation, and the general agreement on tariffs and trade. And we can all hope that his expectations will be realized. But again I say that he cannot take advantage of these conditions, however important they may be, unless we have set our own house in order, and can meet competitive prices.

The Toronto Star draws this warning from what the minister said, when it says:

> Our economic growth has slowed to a walk.

And again:

> It may not be necessary, as Mr. Abbott says, for the government to take any drastic measures to deal with the recession. But even if business recovers to last year's levels it will not give us the expanding economy we need to sustain full production and employment.

I suggest that is a remark well worth pondering, because it is true our economic activities these last few years have depended upon a constantly expanding economy. In the atmosphere which has been created, to stop expanding is going to mean the equivalent of going backward, because so many people have come to count on expansion as the ordinary course of things; to believe that next year will be better than this, and to arrange their expenditures accordingly. Indeed, I think we can say that the government has, in effect done that. And it is not surprising that the ordinary citizen has followed their lead.

So the condition we have is that the government is gambling with the welfare of the unemployed, and indeed with the welfare of all of us. I shall not worry hon. members with long details of trade figures. I could point out that in 1953 we had a trade deficit of $210 million against a surplus of $325 million the year before, or a net worsening of $535 million.

The reasons are three in number. The first of these is the premium on the Canadian dollar, which impeded trade to some extent. The second is the price of Canadian goods and the third the shortage of dollars in certain areas.

As regards the prices of Canadian goods I wish to remind hon. members of a comment which has been quoted in the house—and, Mr. Speaker, I am not quoting from the press, but rather from the speech at the annual meeting of the Royal Bank where Mr. Muir said:

> Startling and unpleasant as it may be, there is evidence that Canada is tending to become a high cost economy in which natural and artificial barriers prevent us from achieving the degree of flexibility and mobility required for orderly adjustment.

Now, I have spoken about the decline in foreign trade, caused increasingly I think by our high costs and our failure to meet competition abroad, which is disconcerting enough. But, worse still—and there is plenty of evidence of it—is the failure to meet competition at home. Mr. Forsyth, president of Dominion Steel and Coal Corporation, has spoken recently of the failure to meet competition "in our own backyard." He no doubt had in mind cases of Canadian manufacturers being substantially undersold by European competitors, particularly those from the United Kingdom. Two recent cases have come to my own attention, in one of which a United Kingdom competitor tenderer 50 per cent below the Canadian tenderer and in another case 22 per cent below.

Of course we all know the results of German competition because there is much of it. Particularly, with our own eyes, we see the little German motor car, the Volkswagen, on our streets.

What does the Minister of Finance say about all this? Well, he seems to be doing a kind of balancing act. On the one hand, in a realistic passage of his speech he says:

> Some industries are finding that they have not watched their costs as carefully as they should, that their break-even points are uncomfortably high, and that their costs and prices are out of line.

And again he says:

> The re-emergence of keen competition in trade means readjustment and appraisal.

But in the next breath we have:

> I do not believe that the current slowing down of expansion will be serious or prolonged.

Then he comforts himself by saying:

> Responsible opinion in the United States seems to be confident that the present down-turn will not be deep or prolonged.

And finally he has persuaded himself by his own optimistic arguments when he says:

> I think an up-swing in the second half of the year will more than compensate for the declines that are evident in certain branches of industry at present.

I think it would have been more accurate if the minister had said, not "I think" but "I want to think" or "I must think" or "I am determined to think".

While I am speaking about export sales I should like to say a word about wheat. Apart from the large amount involved, wheat has always been regarded as a kind of index of the Canadian economy. The many inquiries made in the house the Minister of Trade and Commerce was apt to wave aside rather airily, and to suggest there was nothing much to be concerned about. But I do not think the position of the farmers warrants his unconcern. The net income of farmers was down 14 per cent in 1953 from 1952, and more than 23 per cent from 1951, while the index of the things the farmer buys shows that it is down only 4 per cent.

I think the seriousness of the situation struck the house and the country suddenly about a month ago when the minister told us that no wheat from the 1953 crop was yet sold, and that on January 30 there were 127 million bushels from the 1952 crop in the hands of the wheat board. On January 30, 127 million bushels from the 1952 crop were in the wheat board's hands. The situation on March 24, I am informed, was that 359 million bushels were in commercial positions, and 328 million bushels estimated deliverable on farms, making a total of 687 million bushels.

If the disappearance in the last four months of the crop year is 35 million bushels a month, which I understand is favourable, it would leave us about 550 million bushels on July 31, which is only six weeks away from the delivery of the 1954 crop. Notwithstanding this very high supply position, the Canadian government has taken what competent people regard as the very speculative, long position. It seems perfectly clear that if we have another good crop this position will almost certainly cost Canada dearly.

Those who are interested in precedents carry their minds back to a similar situation existing in 1929. At that time the pool virtually tried to hold up European purchasers and it had what we have learned to call a chain effect on shipping and other things, and was one of the things that precipitated the unfortunate situation that descended on us then. I suggest that there should be some co-operation, a meeting of minds between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister of Trade and Commerce is constantly telling us we are very fortunate to have that wheat just as wheat, and says you cannot go wrong as long as you hold wheat. There are some others in this house who have a mercenary idea that wheat is for the purpose of being sold, and they do not all seem to agree with the minister; however, I am not quoting them because their views will not prevail very far. But I do think that the Minister of Trade and Commerce ought to try to persuade the Minister of Agriculture. There does not seem to be unanimity there.

Mr. Gardiner: There is on that question.

Mr. Macdonnell: Well, not unless the minister has changed his mind from what he said on December 7—maybe there has been a meeting of minds since. The minister himself may be able to reconcile what I am just going to read.

Mr. Gardiner: Why not quote the speech I made in this house during this session?

Mr. Macdonnell: I am going to quote what the minister said on December 7. He will make his own speech if he wants to. I am going to quote the strong language he used in Rome on December 7. He said:

> During the war we were asked to produce great quantities of cereals, particularly wheat. Now we find no one to buy our surpluses at prices for which our farmers can afford to sell.

Again, he said—

Mr. Gardiner: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that those two statements that have just been read are parts of two different sentences in two different parts of my speech that were put together by someone and made to give that impression.

Mr. Argue: Still using an alibi.

Mr. Gardiner: The last part of the statement has to do with cheese and butter, not with wheat.

Mr. Rowe: What impression did you want to give?

Mr. Macdonnell: I come to butter and cheese later. I thought butter and cheese were in here. The minister will exonerate me from wanting to quote anything inaccurately—

Mr. Argue: Don't quote the minister.

Mr. Macdonnell: —from the press. The minister will correct me if he wishes.

Mr. Gardiner: The first part of what has been read is really a lead that was written by the newspaperman. It has to do with wheat, and in the other instance it has to do with dairy products, and another which was quoted only the other day in the Gazette, and that is why I am so familiar with it.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am going to quote something more unless the Speaker stops me, and perhaps by the time I am through the minister will feel that it gives a better story of what he said. I hope the Speaker will not prevent my reading it. Again he said:

> Our costs of production are very high. I do not think there is any country in the world today which can afford to buy some of our products at the prices our farmers must charge if they are to make a living.

He also said that Canada's cost of production of butter and cheese is extremely high. The minister indeed, as the phrase has it, certainly "blew his top".

Another remark attributed to him was that:

> Canada will maintain her vast grain store reserve with or without international aid.

There seems to me at the moment no question of international aid; the question is about selling wheat in a competitive market, and without pretending to adjudicate between two such experts as the two right hon. gentlemen, I have a feeling that the Minister of Agriculture has had quite a lot of experience in selling wheat, but maybe he will want to correct that, too.

Mr. Gardiner: If you will take my speech I will send you a copy of it, if you wish it. If you will take it and read it to this house they will see that it does not say these things at all.

Mr. Rowe: You should have given a proper release to the press.

Mr. Gardiner: I did not give a release at all.

Mr. Macdonnell: I should be glad to read the minister's speech at any time.

Mr. Rowe: It is bad enough to have to listen to it.

Mr. Macdonnell: I have to make do with what I have which, as I say, comes from a responsible source. The minister will be glad to know I am not going to quote any more of it, but I do think we are entitled to know what his position on this matter is at the moment, and that brings me back to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sorry he is not in his seat. He is not as anxious to hear me as the people to the left. I hope, by the way, that my voice is carrying better.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, much better.

Mr. Macdonnell: You are standing it all right?

Mr. Coldwell: Yes, following it very well.

Mr. Knowles: Did you say standing it or understanding it?

Mr. Macdonnell: I said "standing".

Mr. Knowles: You have a very pleasant voice.

Mr. Macdonnell: The Minister of Trade and Commerce is a man of many devices, but whether he is good at salesmanship is something that I do not know. Of course his experience with the grain business had nothing to do with selling; it had to do only with storing, and I am wondering whether he has a complex; whether he has got very, very good at storing and not much good at selling, and whether he gets great pleasure out of having bursting elevators all across the country—very well built by him. There was one unfortunate instance that we were told of the other night where one of the C.C.F. members nearly met his end, which would have deprived us of the pleasure of meeting him. At any rate, that is a long time ago. But it seems to me, when we have all this wheat and the minister sitting on top of it, the question does arise whether we are in a good position or not.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce has always been a great perplexity to me because he says—and I am sure he says it sincerely—that he is a believer in private enterprise. I have no reason to doubt that, except there are so many things he does that seem utterly inconsistent with it. Here we have a situation where the minister tells us we have got to rely on the good judgment of the wheat board. I have no doubt that the wheat board, if we could get inside their minds, would say: Of course we have to rely on the judgment of the minister. At any rate, between them they arrive at conclusions, and in any event it is the judgment of a small group of men; and this minister, who is a great exponent of private enterprise, is on the other hand so keen on having control in his own hands that we do not really get the benefits of private enterprise in anything that he gets hold of by way of public enterprise. Therefore I think it is legitimate to ask—I have no expert knowledge to do more than ask—whether it is possible that a few men who are now in control of selling wheat are backing their judgment against experienced purchasers in Europe. If they are, the question further arises whether they have open minds to believe that the situation is changing. Do not let us forget that the present handling of wheat has deprived us of merchandising skill. My friends to the left, even if they listen to what I say, will disapprove entirely of what I say. We are deprived of the judgment of scores or hundreds of expert merchandisers backing their judgment against each other and each day reaching what is the best composite view as to what price wheat can be sold at.

Mr. Coldwell: Is the hon. member suggesting that the farmers should market their grain on the grain exchange again?

Mr. Macdonnell: I am not making any suggestions except that I hope that the minister is not going to leave us in the position we are in now. The well-informed and always moderate review of the Bank of Nova Scotia for March has this important thing to say:

> The piling up of wheat stocks, not only in Canada but in the United States, the current restrictions on United States wheat acreage, the slow rate of sales under the international wheat agreement this season, the year-long decline in wheat prices outside the agreement and the recent seven-cent reduction in the Canadian lakehead price, are all symptomatic of the changed atmosphere. The world wheat market has become much more competitive . . . world trade in wheat will likely be smaller this year, and there is much to suggest that North American exports will bear more than their share of the decline.

Again the writer says:

> The combination of increased supplies and lessened demand has brought about a striking change in the atmosphere of the world wheat market. This change is clearly reflected in the slow movement of wheat under the international wheat agreement. Up to mid-February only a little more than 35 per cent of the amount of wheat which the four participating exporters agreed to sell and the 45 participating importers to buy in 1953-54, had been sold. And it should be noted that the total commitment under the agreement this season, because of the failure of the United Kingdom to enter, amounts only to 421 million bushels. At the corresponding date in each of the two preceding seasons, at least 70 per cent of the annual amount of 581 million bushels then covered by the agreement had been sold.

Later it has this to say:

> Though the policy of the wheat board is to keep Canadian prices fully competitive, there seems to be no disposition to pursue an aggressive policy of price reduction.

Finally:

> Regardless of how well prices hold up during the remainder of the season there is no doubt that the more competitive wheat market and the mounting surplus make the outlook for Canadian wheat more uncertain than it has been for a long time.

The matter could hardly be in a more unsatisfactory position. The minister gives us the bland assurance that wheat is a good asset. As time passes the minister takes things more and more into his own hands, and instead of obtaining the best composite judgment we can have we have to rely on him. Attempts were made to hold up the purchases in the United States and Canada in 1929 but they failed. As I said, there was a chain reaction on shipping and other business. There is a vast difference between the situation today and in 1929 but enough similarity to make us think.

Outside North American markets, wheat is becoming more competitive than for a good many years and purchasers are in a stronger position. Is the wheat board following the example of the Minister of Finance and relying on the hope that all will be well? Are they taking a gamble hoping that they can make the purchaser dance to their tune? Is there in the backs of their minds the feeling that if things turn bad they will be able to deposit the problem on the doorstep of the government?

One thing is certain, that others are suffering. Lake shippers are facing a serious situation and ocean shippers too. Up to a few weeks ago little or no wheat had been booked for shipping via the St. Lawrence this season, something almost unprecedented. Freight ships have left Saint John virtually empty.

I have been talking about trade, notably wheat. I wish now to say a few words about competitive costs, taxation and inflation. We are collecting $1,200 million from corporations by way of income tax. This means $1,200 million added to production costs. It is conceded by every reputable authority that the best way to revive purchasing power is to reduce taxation. Of course, in addition to the taxes on corporations we take approximately $1,200 million income tax from individuals, and there are other taxes direct and indirect. When ministers advise us to cut down costs but can do nothing to assist by reducing taxes it is really preaching to the air. The position in which exporters are going to find themselves, if there is no means of cutting down their costs by tax reduction, may be a very serious situation indeed.

I want to say a word about monetary policy. We have had fifteen years of boom stimulated by the government's financial policy. In 1946 the government feared a recession, and at that time they took action to stimulate when it was proper, but since then they have been trying to eat their cake and have it by stimulating purchasing power and at the same time, as in 1946 and 1947, trying by financial measures to avoid rising prices. This proved largely ineffective, and it is essential to recall that while prices were rising the government was artificially stimulating investment through double depreciation.

Reviewing the intervening years quickly, in 1950 the boom which had existed slackened slightly and there was fear of unemployment. Then came the Korean war which stimulated the boom to still further heights. In the spring of 1951 the government did take steps to curb, but their courage deserted them in 1952 under pressure, and again they abandoned restraining measures. Instead of moderation the government stoked up the boom. The gross national product kept mounting until it was $24·3 billion in 1953, 33 per cent higher than in 1950, and 75 per cent higher than in 1946. Now the rate of expansion has slowed, perhaps to a walk.

In 1952 the gross national product was 7 per cent ahead of 1951. Last year the increase was 5 per cent and this year it is expected to be not more than 3 per cent. We must remember of course that inflation has always been very attractive to the government because it has enabled them to spend more and still have surpluses, but this built-in inflation, as it has been well called, of high taxes will take a lot of readjustment. As I said earlier, anything short of a roaring boom in the mentality which we have developed is going to be hard to live with.

I shall not detain the house longer on inflation, but we should not forget its danger merely because it has been living with us for a long time. Some well-informed people believe that the recent call for redemption of $2 billion of government bonds indicates a new voyage into inflation. The Republican administration in the United States came into power with a great blowing of trumpets pledged to hard money, so-called honest money. Now they have done a right-about-face and with the fear of the November election they are pursuing a soft-money policy. They are trying to give the economy stimulation by cheap money and low interest rates, in other words, another dose of inflation.

I do hope this operation of our finance department is not the signal for us to start in on a debasement of the currency with all that it means in the way of high prices and other unfortunate results. I end, Mr. Speaker, where I began, with a list of the negations of which the budget consists: Nothing done for employment; nothing real done to relieve the taxpayer; nothing done to break the deadlock in wheat; nothing done to indicate any intention of improving the efficiency of government; and nothing done to reassure us that we are not going to have another spate of inflation. It is a dismal recital of hopes, vague optimism and admonitions to others to do things when the government itself seems helpless to do anything. I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe):

That all the words after "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house regrets that the government

(a) has failed to reduce taxes which are an excessive burden on the Canadian people and place our producers under a severe disadvantage in meeting competition from abroad;

(b) has failed to reduce unnecessary expenditure;

(c) has failed to improve the efficiency of its administration;

(d) ignores the problem of unemployment;

(e) has failed to retain and regain markets for our surplus primary products;

(f) has failed to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers so that the provincial governments and municipal councils may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly-increasing responsibilities."

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will understand if I do not discuss the various suggestions, proposals and criticisms made in the amendment which has just been moved. In his address the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) dwelt at some considerable length on some topics with which I would also like to deal at some length, the most notable being the problem of marketing our farm produce and wheat. However, since that is a matter which should be the subject of extended consideration I do not propose to deal with it. I shall leave that to one or more of my colleagues who are familiar with the wheat situation in western Canada. However, I do wish to say something about the budget and the speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) made when he introduced his budget.

The minister has, as usual, given an interesting and optimistic review of the Canadian economy and its prospects for the current financial year. Time alone will tell whether his optimism—which my hon. friend calls wishful thinking and I suppose optimism is closely allied to wishful thinking—is justified or not; but I am sure that people generally believe that the outlook is not nearly as rosy or as encouraging as he painted it.

As the minister spoke, more than 500,000 people in Canada were registered as seeking jobs; and on the farms the impact of falling prices has already been felt. The farmers in western Canada, as we have been told, have a vast accumulation of grain, and the marketing prospects are far from bright. Some farmers, including some in my own constituency, had little or no crop in 1952, and the failure to market or make arrangements for advance payments on any part of the 1953 crop, which could not be marketed because of the quota, has caused difficulty and stress.

Taking into account those considerations, I believe the minister is unduly optimistic. He indicated, too, that the gross national product for 1954 will be much the same as in 1953. He appeared to be satisfied with that position. But I would point out that, unless our gross national product increases at a greater rate than our increasing population and in accordance with the technological improvements which are made from time to time, the problem of employment will become increasingly difficult. If the gross national product in 1954 remains at the same level as in 1953, it should be clear that there will be no improvement in the employment situation in Canada next autumn and winter, although activity in the coming spring and the summer should give us some temporary relief.

The budget then, in our opinion, fails to take any decisive action to meet the two problems to which I have referred. They are the two important and urgent problems of maintaining full employment, to which we are committed under the charter of the United Nations, and the improvement in the agricultural industry.

It seems to me that now is the time, when the budget is being introduced, to outline some positive steps to improve these conditions. I believe the minister failed to do this. Budgetary steps should have been taken to increase the purchasing power of the average Canadian so as to enlarge the domestic demand for the larger product which we can produce. That could have been done, Mr. Speaker, in several ways. Among them and coming immediately to mind should have been an increase in the exemptions under the Income Tax Act to those taxpayers in the lower brackets. I am not urging any relief in corporation taxes. With the high rents and high prices for clothing and other commodities which enter into the cost of living, steps should be taken to relieve the small taxpayers of impositions that were placed upon them when the cost of living was appreciably lower. We have urged before and I do so again that exemptions for single persons should be raised to $1,500 and for married couples to $3,000.

The minister, in effect, echoed complaints that the old age security plan was becoming an increasing burden on our budget. These payments are like family allowances and unemployment insurance. They are means of redistributing the national income and maintaining the purchasing power among our people. They are, in effect, insurance premiums against depression and are therefore, in my opinion, legitimate impositions on our people as a whole. One means, of course, of improving the position of the old age security fund would be to remove the ceiling on the two per cent levy which is now limited to a maximum of $60 per individual taxpayer. The removal of this ceiling would be a step in the direction of levying the contribution according to the ability to pay. I believe that levying according to the ability to pay is the kind of levy that is favoured by most people today.

Then, too, there should have been much more of a reduction in excise and sales taxes. Some excise taxes were reduced but they affect a relatively small number of items and I do not think they will be felt at the level of the consumer. Sales taxes are the most regressive form of taxation. Where they are used in the provinces they are used of necessity to meet social services which, we believe, should be the responsibility of this parliament through a national social security plan, a plan that was proposed by the government in 1945 at the dominion-provincial conference of that year. Sales taxes are a tax on purchasing power and thus not only reduce the ability to buy goods to the amount of the tax, but discourage people from buying in the domestic market upon which we must depend more and more as time passes. This discouragement is felt particularly by the great mass of the people whose purchasing power, individually, is low, but in aggregate, represents the bulk of the buying of consumer goods in this or any other country. Moreover, the new exemptions under the sales tax and excise taxes, reduced or repealed, relate to many articles which may be deemed luxury goods, such as jewelry, diamonds, semi-precious stones, cut glass, and articles of that description.

I should immediately say, however, that I wish to commend the minister in one particular and that is for the exemptions under the sales tax on equipment sold to, or imported by, municipalities, especially designed for road making, fire-fighting and so on. But I regret that this does not include motor trucks, which represent a heavy cost to municipal governments. It is regrettable that household necessities, such as children's clothes and babies' shoes, are still taxed. This emphasizes the point that the tax reductions or exemptions have been made in many instances on the wrong item.

Because of the government's failure to take what I have termed positive action, and which would meet the general economic recession which has manifested itself during the past few months, the pressure has been growing on this parliament to take a negative kind of action. By this I mean that there have been increasing demands for protection through higher tariffs for certain industries which have been feeling the effects of the economic recession.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

I want to say immediately that we of the C.C.F. have often urged general economic policies to meet the needs of the economy generally, but I do not propose to recite them at length today. Most of them were very clearly developed by my colleagues in the recent debate on unemployment. In effect, by refusing to plan actively for full employment and for more stability in agricultural prices, there has been strong pressure for increased tariff protection which, in his budget speech, I am glad to say the minister felt compelled to refuse. I should like to say to him that we in this group stand for the principles of freer trade among the nations. We believe that the welfare of Canada depends not only on intelligent trade relationships providing opportunity for our entry into world markets, but that this opportunity can only be provided to our producers to the extent that we are prepared to accept goods in exchange for the goods that we sell abroad.

I found it difficult to follow the statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to the effect that the United States has been somewhat at least of a champion of freer trade. Personally, I have not seen any clear evidence of this in their actions, though many speeches have been made by prominent Americans, including the President, seeking to convey that impression. There is an old proverb which says, "Actions speak louder than words". The minister's statement came very soon after the latest breach, on the part of the United States, of the Geneva agreement on tariffs and trade by way of new restrictions on the importation of Canadian barley. I should like to say that I was disappointed, when this matter was drawn to the attention of the house, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) felt that this breach of GATT did not require an emphatic protest from our government. This was particularly the case because it is only the latest in a series of unilateral actions on the part of the United States which emphasizes the uncertainties of United States markets for Canadian produce and goods.

Mr. Abbott: I think my hon. friend meant to say rye, not barley. He said barley.

Mr. Coldwell: That was a slip of the tongue. I meant rye.

Mr. Abbott: That is a much smaller item.

Mr. Coldwell: Yes. I thank the minister for the correction. It is because of this uncertainty that we have been urging the government to endeavour, in a more positive fashion, to encourage trade with nations other than the United States, more particularly, of course, with the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries.

The budget, I say, made few reductions in what I have called regressive taxes or indeed in any other form of taxation. I have noted before that both the United States and the United Kingdom have outlined some reductions in their defence expenditures. I feel that with the relaxation in world tension we could safely reduce our defence expenditures, as the United States has done, by at least 10 per cent this year. I am sure that our people cannot look happily upon suggestions that it may be necessary to maintain indefinitely that drain upon our national expenditures to the extent of some 43 per cent of the national budget. I want to emphasize once again that the strength of Canada and that of the democratic world rests not so much on a high level of armaments—although again I reiterate that defence expenditures are necessary in the kind of world in which we are living today—but that true defence will lie in the feeling of the mass of the people that the needs of themselves and their families are being adequately met by national policies as far as they affect our national economy.

There are indeed many worth-while social security measures that Canadians themselves must have in order to maintain and improve their standards as a modern, democratic and progressive people. To the extent that we can move in that direction, and indeed assist other peoples in the world to move in the same direction—and I think that is equally important—to that extent can we reduce and finally, we hope, eliminate the present threats of totalitarianism whether of the fascist or communist variety. Let us bear in mind that the threat to freedom in the world is not only from communist sources but from varieties of fascism here and there across the world. Thus, I want to suggest once again that since the new and frightful weapons of war make most types of military equipment for our forces obsolete, we should do everything possible to assist in reaching universal agreements for progressive disarmament and thus to be able to divert a substantial part of our defence appropriations to giving material and—what is perhaps more important—technical aid to underprivileged and underdeveloped peoples and areas everywhere. I want to say that this, in our opinion, is the only sure way of promoting the peaceful progress of mankind.

Among measures that are required to strengthen our own economy and to avert serious distress are not only projects like a national health plan—which I would place at the very top of our requirements in the realm of social security legislation—improvement in family allowances, old age pensions, unemployment benefits, crop insurance and so on, but economic undertakings—because, after all, if we are going to have the kind of social security that we envisage, we must have an economic basis that will carry the social security system—that will bolster the economy in vulnerable areas and increase production to enhance our gross national product. Among these are, of course, projects like the St. Lawrence seaway project and irrigation projects. Among the latter, first and foremost, is the utilization of the waters of our great rivers, particularly those of the South Saskatchewan river.

I am sure hon. members will pardon me if I refer to this particular project for a few moments at this time because, as a matter of fact, my own constituency is both sides of this river and the undertaking of that irrigation project would affect my constituency more than any other one in the province of Saskatchewan. Those of us who, like myself, can remember the years of drought and disaster over large areas of otherwise fertile land on both sides of this river are most anxious to see this project undertaken. I do not propose this afternoon to outline the tortuous statements made in Saskatchewan by supporters of the federal government regarding this project or to discuss the varying estimates of cost that have been produced by the federal government from time to time, it seemed to many of us, to delay the carrying out of this important project. I think this is clearly outlined in the record of correspondence over the years between the federal government and the provincial government of Saskatchewan. I think that an examination of the correspondence and statements indicates that the federal government has been vague and, if I may use the term, somewhat evasive.

I know, of course, that the present government of Saskatchewan has never asked the federal government to subsidize the generation of electric power. It has been clear, I think, that the provincial government has been prepared to contribute to the construction of the dam the same amount of money that it would cost the province to generate the potential power in some other manner. There are two sides to this question but no one, I think, would suggest that the users of power in the province of Saskatchewan should be asked to subsidize an irrigation and water conservation project which is the responsibility, in my opinion, of the federal government and which it has assumed elsewhere. It seems to me that the time has come when, instead of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner)—whom I am glad to see in his seat this afternoon—presenting his views to the government of Saskatchewan, the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent)—and I am glad to see him here to hear this suggestion—and the federal government should be prepared to state that they are prepared to undertake the project on a fair and equitable basis and, I hope, to undertake it within a very short time. Negotiations have been conducted, it has appeared to me, in the hope that by driving an increasingly hard bargain the provincial government can be forced to reject federal proposals in the hope that blame for any failure to proceed will fall upon the provincial government. The difficulty has been that, even when the Saskatchewan government has been willing to make an agreement along lines suggested by the Minister of Agriculture, he has always been in the position of being able to say that for various reasons the federal government has decided not to proceed with the undertaking at the time.

I think it is unfair to ask one party to carry on negotiations with the knowledge that any firm commitments made by the province are regarded as binding, whereas any commitment which the Minister of Agriculture or his officials may make is done with a clear understanding that the federal government is not yet committed to proceed, even though a satisfactory agreement may be reached by a joint committee of the P.F.R.A., acting on behalf of the federal government, and by representatives of the provincial administration.

As I have said, what is required is a firm statement from the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) that this government intends to proceed with the dam in the event of a satisfactory agreement being reached between the two governments regarding the divisions of costs. The time has arrived, indeed has long since passed, when the provincial government should not be expected to negotiate on a purely hypothetical basis, not knowing whether they are being merely manoeuvred into rejecting an impossible agreement, and without any assurance that if a satisfactory agreement regarding division of costs is worked out the whole thing may not be rejected in the final stages by the federal government. To those of us who represent constituencies which may become once again stricken by dry years and drought, this project is of primary interest and importance; but more than that it is of fundamental interest to the economy of Canada and to all the people of Canada. I want to emphasize this in view of the tremendous cost of the relief that had to be poured into these areas because of the prolonged drought in the thirties.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

Mention of this dominion-provincial project leads me to comment on the finance minister's forthright statement declining to allow the deduction from federal income taxes of the new 15 per cent personal income tax in Quebec beyond the present limit of 5 per cent. I recognize at once that, under our constitution, a province has the right to impose a direct tax, such as the income tax, if it chooses to do so. But it is equally clear, I believe, that the federal parliament also has a constitutional right in this field. The doctrine that the provinces have priority in the field of direct taxation and that the federal government should, in effect, move over to the extent that the provinces decide, is a dangerous, insidious and false doctrine that could not, under any circumstances I believe, be supported by any member in this house. We must always remember that the people of the provinces are represented in the federal parliament as well as in the provincial legislatures.

We in this group believe in our federal system and want to preserve it. We want to preserve the rights of this parliament. We want to preserve the autonomy of the provinces in the fields in which they are granted complete sovereignty and autonomy. In the past, we had given our support to the federal-provincial tax rental agreements because we believed that they best served the interests of all the people of Canada by assuring all provincial governments of more adequate revenue to administer their provincial programs in their own way and under their own authority, while at the same time assuring the federal government the necessary fiscal powers to develop social security and other policies that will benefit Canadians generally wherever they may live, and tend to spread more adequately the burden of taxation in all parts of Canada.

In saying this and taking issue with the demand of the premier of Quebec, I want to make it very clear that in his activities over the past few years in promoting the fallacious idea that Canada is less a nation than an association of ten sovereign states, with the assumption by the premier of Quebec of the right to pass legislation often incompatible with the fundamental democratic rights of Canadian citizens, he has merely carried forward the type of propaganda used for many years by the Liberal party in Quebec to further its own political interests. In other words, in my view, to some extent these are chickens coming home to roost. I do not propose to elaborate upon this to any extent at the moment, but the pages of Hansard as well as the public press will vindicate the view I have just expressed.

In the recent past the federal government neglected to protect Canadian civil rights when the padlock law was passed, and most recently when the freedom of worship act was amended by the Quebec legislature. I know this act was directed against a sect with whose teachings and with whose type of propaganda I have no sympathy whatever, but that legislation could be used to curtail other religious rights and freedoms of other religious denominations and minorities in Quebec. I want to emphasize that throughout the years the propaganda of the Liberal party, both provincial and national, prepared the groundwork for this ultra-nationalism and the claims of Mr. Duplessis. The Liberal party of Canada, I repeat, as well as the Liberal party of Quebec, must bear the grave responsibility for paving the way for what is today an attack, and a very threatening and insidious attack, on Canadian unity and our general national welfare.

Let me say again that we believe in the federal system. We desire to see all the provinces of Canada able to carry out their constitutional functions without interference by this federal parliament. We believe that, in order to achieve this purpose, the tax rental agreements are of primary importance and concern to the welfare and autonomy of the provinces of Canada, particularly of the less favoured provinces. Let me say, however, to the federal government that it must not forget its own proposals to the dominion-provincial conference on reconstruction in 1945, which included more than these fiscal arrangements. The terms on which the federal government asked the provinces to release certain tax fields, including that of personal income tax, which incidentally some of them including Quebec and Ontario had only begun to enter, comprised not only rental payments but undertakings by the federal government to do things that would ease the financial burdens of the provinces. I believe Quebec did not impose a personal income tax until 1939, and then had it in effect for only two years.

Among these proposals was complete responsibility for adequate old age pensions at the age of 70 without a means test, and half the cost of old age assistance for persons between 65 and 69. No one will argue today that $40 per month is adequate. There was, too, the proposal to assume full responsibility for assistance to the employable unemployed. Most important of all, there was the proposal to introduce a national system of health insurance to give complete health coverage to the people of Canada. On the economic side the federal authority proposed a public investment policy to compensate for fluctuations in private investment and to maintain full employment.

In the past the government has replied, when these proposals were brought to its attention, that they could not be proceeded with until the taxation agreements were generally accepted. Now, there is only one province remaining without a tax rental agreement, and there is surely no longer any excuse for delaying the implementation of its own proposals made to the provinces in 1945. Incidentally, these proposals followed a long series of discussions, all of which are outlined for those who would read in the voluminous reports of the Rowell-Sirois commission, reports which, when they were presented, we believed would form the basis for better relationships and found better conditions for, not only the provinces but for all the people of Canada who live in the various provinces.

And this reminds me of at least one other respect in which the federal government is to blame for this new issue between the premier of Quebec and the federal parliament. Since 1950 meetings between representatives of the federal and provincial governments on matters connected with tax rental agreements have been adjourned, or as I recollect, on the understanding that there would be a permanent committee under the chairmanship of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson).

Mr. Abbott: Not on the tax rental agreement; on the constitutional matter.

Mr. Coldwell: I am relying on my memory completely in that regard. But, in any event, there have been no further discussions of the type which, I think, should have been held over the last number of years.

And of course I immediately say that I think before the legislation was introduced into the legislature of the province of Quebec, the premier of Quebec should have endeavoured to have some discussions with the federal government of Canada regarding the proposed legislation and the problems which might arise out of it.

But, I think too, that blame can be placed upon the federal government for not convening conferences from time to time, when difficulties have been envisaged by the provinces or the dominion, to see whether these matters could be straightened out by negotiation and discussion.

Therefore to that extent I agree with my hon. friend from Greenwood when he criticizes the government. And I believe there is a clause in his amendment—although I did not have time to read it carefully, because I had to rise immediately upon his taking his seat—which puts into words just what I have in mind. These words are:

—has failed to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers so that the provincial governments and municipal councils may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly-increasing responsibilities.

Mr. Abbott: Are you in favour of "a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers"?

Mr. Coldwell: I shall have something to say about that. When that was moved I heard someone say, "You voted for that in 1950".

Mr. Knowles: 1952.

Mr. Coldwell: Well, I was not here at the time, but I think my colleagues did vote for a similar resolution. But I want to say this, that words placed on the record in one setting often have a very different connotation and different meaning when they are placed on the record in another setting. I would say that I would want to go into the meaning of this more fully than I am able to go into it this afternoon before I would decide that I would vote for the wording of it. But I did suggest that we might try to amend it, and I think possibly I can move an amendment that will help.

Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. MacInnis):

That the amendment be amended by inserting in paragraph (f) thereof, immediately after the words "has failed", the following words:

"to reconvene the dominion-provincial conference from time to time so that an effort might have been made";

and also by adding at the end thereof the following additional paragraph:

"(g) has failed to make provision for raising the income tax exemption levels to $1,500 for a single person and $3,000 for a married person, together with increases in the income tax rates in the higher brackets, and an increase in corporation taxes."

Perhaps I would make it more intelligible if I were to read it, in the form in which we suggest it should be. The effect of my subamendment is to alter paragraph (f) as moved by the hon. member for Greenwood so that it would read as follows:

this house regrets that the government... (f) has failed to reconvene the dominion-provincial conference from time to time so that an effort might have been made to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers so that the provincial governments and municipal councils may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly-increasing responsibilities.

[Mr. Coldwell.]

That, as a matter of fact, differs quite markedly from the paragraph in the amendment moved by the hon. member for Greenwood. I think anyone reading it will see the difference at once. Then, in addition, the subamendment adds a new paragraph, which I have already read, calling for the raising of the income tax exemption levels together with an increase of income tax rates in the higher brackets and an increase in corporation taxes.

In other words, what this amendment does is to change the meaning of the words by placing them in a different setting, just as in 1952 when similar words were moved on the address—not on the budget—they were in an entirely different setting.

And now I must come to a conclusion. There are some things the minister could have done with relatively slight reduction in prospective expenditures. Chief among them might have been the elimination of the floor under medical expenses. With soaring costs of hospitalization, relief in this field is badly needed, pending the adoption of a comprehensive national health plan to include all Canadians.

These are, then, some of the main criticisms I wish to make on behalf of my colleagues and myself. I do not have unlimited time; therefore time does not permit me to deal with other phases of our economy and budgetary policies which deserve closer study and more consideration than I have been able to give them when addressing the house this afternoon.

These, and indeed the necessarily brief criticism of the points I have mentioned, will be discussed and elaborated by other members of the party who will participate in this debate within the next few days.

However once again, before I take my seat, I wish to express the disappointment many of us feel that the burden which has remained on the great masses of the people continues to remain there, and that when relief is given, often it is not given in those places which would be most desirable from that point of view.

The hon. member for Greenwood referred to the inflation that has taken place in the past few years. Our people have suffered from that inflationary process. We argued at the time that there were methods we could use to control inflation. However we have seen inflation come and the earnings of our people almost cut in half because of the rapid increase in the cost of living. This has had a most disastrous effect on people receiving pensions or other small incomes of various types.

And so, Mr. Speaker, these are some of the criticisms we want to place before the house. As I have said, my colleagues will elaborate on some of the points and offer further criticism, particularly on the point mentioned at the close of the speech by the hon. member for Greenwood, namely the wheat situation, and the general position in the matter of agriculture at the present time.

Mr. Solon E. Low (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I imagine hon. members will understand if I fail to take time today to give consideration to the amendment and subamendment which have been moved this afternoon. The amendment itself is long and involved, and I should like to have time to give it consideration. I would also like to take plenty of time to give consideration to the way in which the amendment has been modified as the result of the subamendment just moved by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell).

The leaders of the smaller groups on this side of the house, as was just said, do not have unlimited time and for that reason we have to be more selective in the things about which we speak in the budget debate. If I do fail this afternoon to mention any of these which are considered to be of first-line importance it will not be because I do not attach importance to them, but simply because I have not time to deal with them and other things as well. However, there will be several speakers in the debate from our group, and we shall try to deal with all of these things that touch the lives of the people in the country, and upon which it will be necessary for us to make a pronouncement.

My hon. friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), has presented what he says is his last budget. Such an occasion calls for some things to be said that might not be said in the course of an ordinary budget debate. The minister's qualities, his affability, his engaging personality, his cordiality at all times have won for him I think a sure place in the affection of hon. members and of the people of Canada. So long as budgets of this kind are going to be presented to parliament, there is no one I would rather see present them. May I add that no one but the Minister of Finance could get away with such a budget as this one with less resistance.

The high regard that I have for the minister but sharpened the keen regret that I felt on Tuesday evening last as he made his presentation in his usually effective way and very jaunty style, that provision after provision of his budget made it clear to me that he missed a golden opportunity to present a budget which would have been a departure from the ball and chain budgets of the past, because that is what they have been; and especially is it a matter of regret at this hour when the scourge of unemployment has again descended on Canada, and has already taken heavy toll in too many of our Canadian communities. This is an hour in Canadian history when even though they are employed the breadwinners in so many homes are experiencing hardship and privation and are having a very difficult time to make their take-home pay cover bloated costs and overgrown living expenses. At this hour, the minister could have brought down a budget that could have dispelled the ugly threat and at the same time made possible a decent standard of living in every Canadian home.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the message of his budget could have been a ringing assurance to the people of Canada that the maintenance of that decent standard of living that I just mentioned would be secure. If that had been the case, the minister's last budget would have been an historic one and would have brought him fame and the abiding satisfaction that always comes to one when he renders a real service to the millions of his fellow citizens. Instead of a message of real assurance and hope, what did the minister give to the people last Tuesday? Well, clearly his message was this: "If you have tears, prepare to shed them now. But if weeping over my nine previous budgets has drained you of tears, I have arranged to lower the tariffs on tear gas to help you find some tears of crocodile size for this, my tenth effort. My generosity, fellow Canadians, overcomes me. Come, let us weep together." That is just about the message of last Tuesday's budget.

I say this with deep regret: The minister, unless he is ready at the eleventh hour to accept the suggestions of changes, has missed his great opportunity in the same way as the Hon. Mr. Dunning missed a similar opportunity under similar although more pronounced circumstances in 1929 and again in 1936, and as the Hon. Mr. Bennett did in 1931.

Hansard records a famous speech made in this house many years ago by an illustrious Canadian, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. On this particular occasion Sir Wilfrid Laurier indulged in this effective oratorical declaration: "Canada needs three things: The first is transportation; the second is transportation; and the third is transportation." Transportation was Canada's greatest need in Sir Wilfrid Laurier's day. We have made progress since then in providing this country with transportation, although I feel sure that if Sir Wilfrid had been at the helm between the two wars and since world war II especially, the trans-Canada highway would long ago have been completed. We do not need transportation so badly as we did in his day, but we still need transportation in some parts of the country. But if Sir Wilfrid Laurier were here today he probably would say, to meet the challenge of this hour: "Canada needs three things: The first is markets; the second is markets and the third is markets."

Our home market is the best market we have. It could be a much better one, much better than it is if we followed the right financial and budgetary principles to make it so. For the optimum development of that home market we do need transportation of a form, not the kind of transportation about which Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke but the widespread distribution amongst the Canadian people of that medium which transports goods over the counter from the merchants' shelves to the consumers who need and want them; or, in the case of durable goods, from the warehouses to the farms or the factory. What Canada needs most right now is a home market well supplied with a properly adjusted, continuous flow of purchasing power that will permit our people to buy and use all they want of what we can and do produce.

The government claims that we have prosperity in Canada, and it claims credit for bringing that prosperity. I spoke a moment ago about Sir Wilfrid Laurier, but he described in his speeches a potential prosperity for Canada by reference to vast undeveloped resources, as they were then. Well, these still exist in spectacular abundance in Canada. We have today a tremendous flow of goods and services provided by the developed resources of this nation. Those goods are in the form of food, clothing and articles that are useful, and they take the drudgery out of life in the home and on the farm; services such as electricity, transportation, hospitalization and so on exist, and these can be made to exist in ever-increasing quantities at levels sufficient to bring a great degree of comfort to every last citizen in our country. But, Mr. Speaker, so many thousands of our own people are not enjoying that prosperity for the simple reason that it has not been brought within their reach through wise financial, economic and monetary means.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the statesman about whom I was just speaking, said at one time: "I will give you a prosperity you can feel in your pockets." Mr. Speaker, Canada needs that kind of prosperity in this hour, and needs it desperately.

[Mr. Low.]

When our home market has been provided for as it ought to be there will of course be surpluses of many kinds of production which will be important to other nations. Right now foodstuffs are in the greatest surplus in Canada, and they are our most pressing problem so far as external markets are concerned. This government has relied too heavily on the United States market and has failed miserably to cultivate the United Kingdom market in the post-war period with the result that, on the one hand, frequently we are either politely asked by our American neighbours to keep our oats, barley, beef or cheese at home or find ourselves facing embargoes or tariff barriers set up to keep these products out of the United States or, on the other hand, we stand idly by and watch our best traditional market, certainly our present best potential market, filled from behind the iron curtain.

The consequence is that Canadian farmers and food producers have to sit on piles of surpluses and worry about finances, how they are going to keep the sheriff off their trail and how they are going to keep the merchant and the machine dealer satisfied and in business, not to mention worry about what the future holds for them. I am not complaining for one moment about the surpluses of wheat and other cereals that we have carried over these past two years. We have been especially blessed by Divine Providence with abundant crops. But it is not at all comforting to the farmers in very many communities of this country to have to face the prospect of having wheat and water three meals a day all winter long because their merchant has gone out of business or has exhausted his credit-giving power, and at the same time suffer the harassing experience of pressured machine and supply dealers dogging their footsteps day in and day out because they too face the prospect of bankruptcy since collections are slow and have made it impossible for them to satisfy their creditors.

Canada failed her basic food producers last winter and indirectly made it impossible for them to satisfy their creditors. Canada failed her basic food producers and the merchants in many of her communities last winter by allowing business to slump and unemployment to appear. But that is an old story now because we have always failed our basic producers as we did during the last war and since; after we had held out high hopes to them all during the war if they would sacrifice for the duration.

I am not drawing an exaggerated picture of the situation at all. That which I have given is an accurate portrayal of literally hundreds of medium-sized and smaller Canadian communities. I can name any number of them in my own constituency. Markets, markets, markets at prices that are fair and equitable are the greatest need! The failure to find and provide these markets is creating many discouraged basic producers. One discerns a growing spirit among farmers and ranchers especially that says to the rest of the world: Well, under the circumstances we will turn largely to subsistence farming and provide ourselves and our families with the best variety of things that we can and let the rest of you do likewise or go hang. They are not to be blamed for feeling that way, but it is unfortunate that it should be so at a time when the world need for food is so great, when the actual need of even many Canadians is so great. This is no time, I say, for discouragement to food producers.

Here is something that has caused me to pause and think pretty hard about the situation and the trends. Since 1939 Canada's population exclusive of Newfoundland—I could not obtain figures which included Newfoundland—has increased 28 per cent. Income per person in Canada has increased nearly 219 per cent. Prices have also increased so that the purchasing value of the dollar has declined to a low of about 53 cents. At the present rate of population growth in our country the demand for food will probably increase by about 4 per cent per year. What I am wondering about, and what a good many people likely will begin to wonder about, is whether farm production will keep pace with the growing needs.

The average yearly increase in food production from 1920 to 1948, the last year for which I could get average figures, was 2½ per cent. If that continues to be the average for the years ahead then there will be a net decrease in surplus foods each year of about 1½ per cent. Therefore it would only take about 14 years more of continuous population increases and continued normal 2½ per cent increases in food production to wipe out any surpluses we might have.

But if we continue to allow unnecessary and constant discouragements to dog our farmers and food producers, the trend of course will be materially accelerated with the result that a world that is very short of food at the present time will become very much shorter. This is the hour for encouragements of every kind for farmers and basic producers rather than discouragements.

Let us not forget these things. The reservoir of Canadian production is full and can be refilled again and again in continuous succession through the proper development and use of our resources. Of course, it goes without saying that if all outlets were recklessly thrown open, such as we might find with uncontrolled reckless expenditure and needless waste and extravagance by government, then of course the reservoir would be emptied faster than it could be replenished.

But in the actual situation as it exists today, the policy of the government is now, and the effect of the budget that is before us will be to close many of the outlets and so clutter up and clog the stream of the remaining outlets that the normal flow will be impaired. Goods and services will not be able to get to the people who want them. In such circumstances the reservoir overflows and the labour and the skills that have kept it full will in some measure be halted. Indeed, they already have been. Consequently unemployment follows and in its wake a whole series of disabling economic situations.

It is not my desire to paint an exaggerated or gloomy picture nor to detract in any way from the credit that is due the government for any good things they have done. But I consider it my duty to try, if I possibly can, to shake the government out of its complacency and put the spotlight on some of the real problems that we face. What is the background against which the budget must be considered. If we did not measure it against the actual background this budget might appear to be a pretty sensible and courageous one, but when it is put into sharp focus with the national and international background it looks very different.

In the first place, Canada's responsibility in a desperately worried and dangerous world is to be as strong as we possibly can and as free from economic booby traps as we can make ourselves. All of us must be ready to make what sacrifices are required so that we can negotiate from real and not imagined strength and play our full part in collective action to prevent further communist encroachments in other parts of the world, while at the same time taking sensible and balanced action to stop the spread of communism and its infiltration into strategic places here at home.

I should like to digress here for a moment to say to the government that in my judgment there is a pressing need in Canada for an efficient and effective information service to provide the leaders of this nation with the true facts of the internal situation. There should be some group of well-balanced, intensely loyal people of discernment and unchallengeable integrity to work in close association with the R.C.M.P. and other sources of information to sort out and establish the facts and to make them known, as far as it is possible within the limits of security considerations, to the government and to members of parliament.

As it is now, it is extremely difficult to establish the facts of our present internal situation from a security point of view; and when any interested and thoroughly awakened individual tries to do a job of gathering information, assessing it, and then warning the people, it seems that it does not take very long for pretty strong forces to be stirred up against him to discredit him and his work. It would be the purpose of the communists to discredit every individual who might try to bring home to the Canadian people an awareness of any danger which we are in, but an information service of the kind I have mentioned would not be subject to the same disabilities. I think it could do a very necessary and pressing job.

I am convinced that the Canadian people generally do not have an awareness of the real dangers besetting them. Far removed from the present scenes of trouble stirred up by communist imperialists in every part of the world, communist imperialists who are determined and quite sure they are going to consummate their designs to take over the world and remake it to suit themselves, we Canadians are pretty apathetic as a general rule and our attention is easily diverted by hysteria and whipped up over such things as "McCarthyism" and a lot of other "isms", so that we lose sight of the real problems we face. But to get back to the point I was making, Canadians, and above all the government, must be sure Canada is strong and secure.

To be able to do that we will have to keep Canadian business and economic activity high, as high as those means which are open to a government to take in a free society can keep them. Every time we allow unemployment to develop on any appreciable scale beyond the seasonal variations we play right into communist hands and we see the number of communist party members increasing. There has been a considerable increase during the past seven or eight months, I am told on reliable authority, and that is largely as a consequence of the more than serious unemployment that developed since last fall. If the government had been fully aware of the situation they would have taken remedial action long before this. If the Minister of Finance had for a moment put himself in the position of the unemployed head of a Canadian family he would not have brought down the kind of budget he did. It may be too late for the minister to do so, but he should still imagine himself in the position of the head of a family, and without a job and take-home pay.

For that reason I would like to quote a letter which appeared in the February 22 issue of the Toronto Globe and Mail. I have no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in quoting this because it is short and because it was written by a responsible secretary of an association of social workers who get right down among the people and see them in their homes. This is the letter, and I quote:

> The executive committee of the Canadian Association of Social Workers, representing over 400 men and women giving service to families and children through various social welfare organizations in greater Toronto, is deeply concerned about the situation facing many families whose breadwinner is now unemployed and for whom there are no unemployment benefits or whose period of benefit has expired.
>
> At the present time there is no assistance available from any official source for such families, the city of Toronto having provision only for unemployables and federal and provincial authorities not having organized in any way to meet this widespread need.
>
> Last year, after more careful study by the Canadian Welfare Council and its membership across Canada, representations were made to the government at Ottawa and to all provincial governments regarding the urgent necessity of having some overall and permanent provision made to meet the situation and avoid the destitution and disruption of normal family living which today faces many families through no fault of their own. As far as can be observed, nothing has been done to make effective the recommendations made in this report or to evolve any satisfactory alternatives. Unemployment of able-bodied employable people who need and want work is a national problem which strikes at the very roots of family life and causes untold suffering.
>
> We feel that all citizens should be fully aware of this situation and should do all in their power to urge upon the federal and provincial governments to appropriate funds for the suitable relieving of need, and upon the municipal government to extend its relief program pending the availability of government resources for this purpose.
>
> Many people today in Toronto are actually suffering from hunger because of unemployment due not only to seasonal interruptions but to closing down or reduction in many industries.

The letter is signed by Miss Betty Quiggin, corresponding secretary of the association which I have named. What Miss Quiggin reports about Toronto has undoubtedly been true of many other Canadian cities for quite a number of months now.

With that picture in mind let me refer to an incident which involved one of the most capable and intelligent ministers of this government. In the Globe and Mail of February 11 last there appears a report of what took place when a labour deputation came to Ottawa and made six recommendations to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). The minister at that time insisted that the backlog of demand for farm implements had been filled, and therefore the production of them must be reduced; and that members of the labour unions involved must seek other jobs.

Now, listen to this, and I quote from the Globe and Mail report of February 11 last:

> The brief, which was a joint presentation of the United Auto Workers Union and the United Steel Workers, both C.C.L.-C.I.O. affiliates, said it was incorrect to state that the decline resulted from farmers being adequately supplied with implements. The 1951 census revealed that for every 100 farms in Canada, there were only 64 tractors, 53 passenger cars, 31 trucks, 29 gasoline engines and 32 electric motors. The problem, said the brief, was that many farmers were financially unable to buy equipment.

I think it must be abundantly clear that the real answer is to be found in that quotation from the article in the Globe and Mail. That article reveals the answer to the question of how to solve the problem of the hour, not only for the farm implement industry, but the whole unsolved problem of distribution in a situation where the problem of production has been completely solved. The answer is simply: Make the consumer or user financially able to buy, and he will do the job of keeping our economy in balance and unemployment at the irreducible minimum. That is the solution and the only effective solution.

That news item to which I referred gave the capable and intelligent Minister of Trade and Commerce credit for this statement:

> It was no longer the case that everything and anything produced could be sold.

In that single sentence the Minister of Trade and Commerce put his finger on the frame of mind which is responsible for the iniquities in this budget and which have been in every budget presented to this house since 1929. Not only the iniquities it contains but the benevolences which it also contains. Any useful and every useful thing which can be produced could be sold. The only reason they are not all sold is that those who need and want them have not the money with which to buy them. The medium which transports them over the counter or out of the warehouse is not available to so many of the people of this country so that they cannot make use of these things which are produced for them.

In the commercial letter put out by the Canadian Bank of Commerce dated February 19, 1954, there is to be found this short but potent paragraph:

> The task ahead, and this applies to every segment of the economy, is to maintain economic activity at current levels. Above all else, it would seem essential, in this regard, that increasing attention be given to the consumption side of the equation.

There, Mr. Speaker, you have it in a nutshell from a bank which is doing big business in this country and which has its finger on the pulse of the economic situation. The problem before us, therefore, seems to be as clear as day. Now, if ever, business must be kept steady and as free as possible from heavy jumps and declines. Certainly we would be utterly stupid to allow a depression to come upon us, or even a serious recession. I remind hon. members that our enemies will be impressed with our economic strength and the well-being of our people just as much as they will be impressed by our defensive military strength. They will become proportionately more bold and determined if they see unemployment grow or even continue at the level which has existed in this country over the past several months.

From the minister's speech of last Tuesday I note that he forecasts an upturn in the last six months of 1954 in Canada. He bases his hopes, to some degree at least, upon the improved situation in the United States. At least, he mentioned that as one of the reasons that he had for the forecast. As a consequence of his faith in the future, the minister in this present budget made very infinitesimal provision to take care of the present situation. I must be extremely critical of the failure of the government to take action on unemployment, not only just now but weeks ago when it became apparent that it was growing beyond the seasonal limit.

I think that the minister and the government are to be criticized for taking the position that simply because there appears to be some chance of a favourable upturn in the economic situation in the United States, our own trends will follow suit later this year. It seems to me the minister fails to bear in mind that the favourable turn in the United States came about as a consequence of deliberate and well-planned governmental action. They did not stand pat in the hope that everything would turn out all right in their country. The government got busy and made tax concessions to the people. They prepared to spend more money, to make credit easier to the public, to push housing and a number of other things deliberately chosen to stimulate employment and to keep activity at a healthy level. But, by contrast, the government of Canada decided to stand pat and to let things take their own sweet course back to something like a favourable level.

Let us just suppose for one moment that the minister's hopes for the last six months of 1954 do not materialize. Then what? That is the question. Certainly it is clear that this budget makes no provision whatsoever to meet such a situation as that; not for a moment. This budget is definitely not the kind of budget that Canada needs at the present time. I say that the provisions of this budget would be woefully inadequate to meet the situation in Canada at the end of the first six months of this year if the expected upturn does not materialize.

The minister in his budget should have provided for whatever eventuality might arise later in this year, particularly in view of the facts as they are at the present time. The budget that we are now considering should have been one which provided for quick encouragement of increased consumer purchases. It should have been one providing for encouragement of increased production in many lines in order to keep up employment. It should have been one to provide for the use of a money mechanism which would get purchasing power into the hands of the ultimate consumers quickly and directly so that, by their effective demand, they could bring and keep the balance at or near the point of equilibrium.

More specifically, Mr. Speaker, this budget should have provided for a much greater reduction of taxation than it provides for. We are all grateful, of course, for the small things which the Minister of Finance did for the people by way of tax relief but I feel, as does my friend the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, that in so much of the field that was covered by the very small reductions which the minister brought in the ultimate consumer will not feel the effects. He is the one who needs the help in this country. He is the only one who can correct the situation by his effective demand.

The municipalities are going to feel happy about the removal of the sales tax on road-building equipment, but I am going to say this: The school divisions and districts of this country will not share that happiness because the same tax was not removed from their purchases of school buses to carry the children to school. They look upon the sale tax on buses as a means used by the federal government to make the school districts collectors of taxes for them from the farmers and other ratepayers in the districts, as it really is. It is simply a method used by the federal government to have the school districts collect for the federal government taxes that the average ratepayer in the school districts does not understand and cannot see.

Canadian housewives, of course, will be thankful for the removal of the excise tax on some items and its reduction on others; but they will never reconcile themselves to a situation where they have to pay a very substantial price differential over what their opposite numbers pay for the same thing down across the line in the United States. One could refer to cottons, electrical goods, dress goods and so on. Another good example is this. An American can buy a Chevrolet standard model automobile just across the line from Oshawa for from $500 to $700 less than Canadians can buy the same car. On the purchase of such an automobile in Canada the purchaser pays to the federal government over $500 in sales and excise taxes alone. We impose a 10 per cent sales tax and a 15 per cent excise tax at the manufacturer's level, but the United States has had the good sense to refrain from that practice over the years.

The price differential between Canada and the United States on many items our people want to buy is striking. Cottons, electrical goods—which I have already mentioned—heavy hardware and automobiles are just a few examples. The differential has arisen quite largely as a result of the difference in taxation on commodities between the two countries. The result is that many thousands of Canadians who can afford to do so have been making regular shopping tours into the United States in order to bring back their legal quota of tariff-free purchases. I wonder whether the minister has ever thought of this fact: If just half of Canada's population were to spend only half of their customs-free allowance in the United States each year, $1,200 million of Canadian money would be spent across the line each year for things that are lower in price there than they are here. That is just another reason why the price differential should not be allowed to become great enough to encourage mass movement on shopping tours down into the United States. Imagine what $1,200 million extra spent in Canada would do for business and employment in this country!

The minister should have announced in this budget the abolition of that part of the sales tax which is not earmarked for old age pensions or, in the alternative, should have provided himself with the authority to abolish it if the expected upturn in economic activity and outlook does not materialize during the last six months of this year.

The sales tax imposed at the manufacturers level is a pyramiding tax, very largely responsible for many of the heavy price differences between Canada and the United States. It is the poor man's income tax. It puts some Canadian producers into a handicapped competitive position as far as trade is concerned and helps to clutter up trade.

For these and many other reasons which I could offer but which I have not time to deal with today, I say the sales tax should be abolished. This was the budget that should have provided for its abolition. This is a time of readjustment when many businesses are at or near the boom peak. To make the adjustments that are necessary, prices have got to come down enough to put Canadian businesses into a position to compete in a world of trade where competition has again become very keen.

Tax reductions of the magnitude I have suggested would stimulate industrial activity and reduce unemployment. Moreover, while the minister fears that he would not be able to replace the lost revenue I am convinced that by reducing the tax burden as I have suggested he would bring down prices in Canada. With lower prices, our people would buy more, and so stimulate business from the retail level on back to the primary producer. More people would be put to work and unemployment would cease to bedevil many parts of Canada. Not only that, but I say that the minister's tax base would also be preserved so that his actual loss of revenue would be small, if any.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, as I see that my time is about up, may I say this. Coupled with the type of tax reductions that I have suggested, the present and foreseeable future situation calls for an all-out housing drive. What I say is that you are not going to be successful in that housing drive unless interest rates on long-term mortgage loans are brought somewhat lower, and unless money at quite low interest rates is made available to municipalities and limited dividend corporations for low income housing projects.

Every effort should be made to push the completion of the trans-Canada highway and to provide for federal participation in a highway system for Canada. Work on the St. Lawrence seaway and various developmental schemes should be pushed ahead as fast as possible.

Finally, the minister while this budget is before the house ought to provide himself with a monetary mechanism that will make it possible to inject purchasing power directly from its birthplace into the hands of ultimate consumers so that they can quickly convert it into effective demand, and thus exert a stimulating influence on declining business activity. The production is already in existence, and as much more as we want can be brought into existence. The need for old age pension increases, war veterans allowance increases, and blind pension adjustments is very great. We have every material requirement to fill these needs and make these people in these brackets to which I have referred happy, except the financial means. We in this group strongly urge the use of the Bank of Canada to provide all the new money that is required at cost. This would be one step at least towards emancipating our people from the Frankenstein which we have allowed to grow up in our midst, and which threatens to destroy all freedom.

If we fail, Mr. Speaker, at this hour to provide the purchasing power to enable every Canadian to enjoy the material things our country is producing and can produce, we will be letting our people down and endangering the security of our country.

Mr. W. L. Houck (Niagara Falls): As this is the first time I have availed myself of the opportunity to speak since becoming a member of this house, I should like to follow the time-honoured custom of congratulating the Speaker and you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, upon your appointments to these high offices. I am not saying it in a boastful attitude whatever, but I have had the privilege and honour of serving under quite a few Speakers in the Ontario legislature, and I should like to say to Mr. Speaker and to you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, that although many verbal bouquets have been thrown to both of you—yes, almost reaching the point of orchids—I want to say that you are by far the two best looking Speakers under whom I have ever had the privilege of serving.

When I first arrived in this house I felt rather at home because of the fact the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) served with me for some six or seven years in the Ontario legislature. I had the privilege also of sitting alongside the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll); the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Conacher) and the hon. member for Cochrane (Mr. Habel), so I really felt at home.

I have listened with a lot of amusement to the various speakers talking about their various ridings. I presume that this debate, along with the debate on the address in reply to the speech from the throne, does serve a useful purpose because of the fact a member has to say something about the importance of his riding. This afternoon I find myself in a rather peculiar position. I do not have to say anything about Niagara Falls. The whole world knows about Niagara Falls. I doubt if any city in Ontario or in the whole Dominion of Canada gets more free advertising over radio and television than does Niagara Falls. Yesterday afternoon I was rather interested in listening to Gracie Fields during her excellent program on television refer to the fact that she had spent her honeymoon at Niagara Falls. That city is known as the outstanding honeymoon centre of the world, Mr. Speaker. Then, too, we have the rather doubtful honour that quite a few come back later on to commit suicide.

I do want to say that we in Niagara Falls are not jealous or selfish in any respect. We want to share it with the rest of the world. I am sure I could say to the hon. member for Spadina, whose home is in Toronto, that if he happened to be abroad in any foreign country and a small child came up to him and asked, "Where are you from?", when he replied "From Toronto", that child would immediately say "How far is that from Niagara Falls?", in order to know just where the hon. member did come from. In fact, we are so beautiful at Niagara Falls and so well known throughout the world that I had a dream the other night. My dream went something like this. I had gone up the steps to St. Peter, if a politician ever gets up the steps to St. Peter, and St. Peter said, "Where did you live?" I said, "Niagara Falls." He said, "That is a beautiful place, I do not think you are going to like it up here."

Speaking in a more serious vein, Mr. Speaker, we in Niagara Falls are exceptionally proud of our splendid relationships with our brothers and sisters directly across the Niagara river. I suggest that we provide a wonderful example to the rest of the world of those things called democracy or free enterprise. In the vicinity of the border line we do not merely give lip service to that thing we call democracy, but we actually live it. We have now lived for almost a hundred and forty years in peace and harmony with our good neighbours to the south of us. The rainbow arch, which is visible most of the day, is indeed a symbol of the peace and friendship between two great countries and two great friends.

I know that during the course of the next few weeks we are going to hear some criticisms of the budget. Perhaps some other remarks will be made from a jealous and selfish point of view, but I think all hon. members agree with me that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has brought down a very fine budget. I must say that we in Canada have been fortunate indeed, regardless of our political stripe, in having had very fine ministers of finance. I believe, however, that the name of our present minister, the Hon. Douglas Abbott, will go down in history as one of the finest ministers of finance we have ever been privileged to have.

[Mr. Houck.]

There are a few comments I should like to make, pertaining to the St. Lawrence and to hydro, both of which are near and dear to my heart because I come from a hydro riding. I believe, Mr. Speaker, there are always occasions in one's life which stand out. One such occasion that I recall most vividly was nineteen years ago when I had the honour of moving the address in reply to the speech from the throne in the Ontario legislature. I am sure that my speech today will be another occasion that I shall remember for many years.

I should like to deal with a subject of great importance, not only to the welfare, economy and future prosperity of Ontario but to this great Dominion of Canada. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure it is shared by other hon. members, the signing of the agreement between the government of Ontario and the dominion government at Ottawa on December 3, 1951, marked an historic milestone in bringing the St. Lawrence seaway and power project closer to realization than it has been at any time in the long history of negotiations on this vital development. Under the terms of that agreement the Ontario government entered into a contract with the dominion government authorizing the Ontario government to develop the Canadian power rights of the international section of the St. Lawrence river with an appropriate authority in the United States.

Now, in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that agreement was not only historic but it was significant for a number of reasons. First of all it revealed very clearly that the St. Lawrence seaway and power project is an undertaking which men of action, regardless of their political views, recognize as being vital to the future progress of Ontario and Canada and of fundamental importance to the welfare of the people of this province and to the Canadian people in general. The St. Lawrence project is therefore one which transcends political considerations. It points up the fact that the public men who have been working untiringly to make it a reality are Canadians first, regardless of their political affiliations.

The subject of harnessing the power of the St. Lawrence has been the subject of negotiation between Canada, Ontario, the United States and the state of New York for over half a century. To the average citizen of Ontario and Canada the St. Lawrence power project is a mammoth undertaking that has seemed to appear and disappear from our field of notice always without finality one way or another.

Representing as I do the Niagara Falls district of the province of Ontario I have always been intensely interested in the development of hydroelectric power and in the power needs of our communities. One has only to recall that a little less than thirty years ago the average household in the province of Ontario was using only half a horsepower for lighting and one-and-a-half horsepower for electrical appliances. Today the connected load is more likely to be more than two horsepower for lighting and between twelve and fourteen horsepower for appliances.

This increase, coupled with the tremendous building program and industrial expansion, makes us realize that unless something is done to maintain the supply of low-cost power Ontario will face a critical situation in the near future. And I know that the most immediate and the most important concern of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of the province has always been with the shortage of power, not with the surplus of power as some people are led to believe.

Every citizen of the province of Ontario therefore should have a deep interest in the situation governing the St. Lawrence power project. Many of us thought that the negotiations for the St. Lawrence had possibly terminated with the great lakes-St. Lawrence development basin agreement in 1941. Events have proved how we were wrong. Canada waited eleven years for the United States to ratify that agreement. Finally our government decided that the 1941 agreement was superseded by the international joint commission order of October 29, 1952. This ruling gave approval to the Canadian and United States applications for the joint development of the power project on the St. Lawrence river, and led the way to the possibility of an all-Canadian seaway.

And I think it is a matter of interest to us members of the house to know that Canada has already spent some $300 million on various sections of the St. Lawrence, compared with the United States expenditure of approximately $93 million. And according to the Department of Transport, fifty per cent of Canada's expenditures were made during the period when each construction dollar represented something like four of today's dollars.

It is therefore reasonable to assume that the cost to Canada to the present day has been something like a billion dollars. The seaway is of course of tremendous importance to Canada and, despite the fact that the major portion will be located in Ontario, the far-reaching effect on our economy makes it of prime importance to every province in this great dominion.

And, important as the seaway may be, the power project is by far the matter of greater urgency, in fact a matter of immediate urgency, if the future of Ontario is to be protected. Ontario hydro electric officials have made this fact abundantly clear on many occasions. Since 1945 demands for power have increased at a rate which is without parallel in the history of our province. And when one realizes that more than half of Canada's industrial output stems from the province of Ontario, and that this province leads in agricultural production, it can be easily seen that the power project is also of vital importance to this dominion.

Ontario hydro has stated on many occasions that the power needs of the people of that province must be met if our present high standard of living and growing economy are to be maintained. In an effort to keep pace with the growing demand for power, hydro has utilized every major source of power within economic transmission distance of large load centres. Despite a tremendous construction program involving more than a billion dollars, Ontario hydro will still be faced with a shortage of power towards the end of this decade.

During the seven immediate post-war years industrial consumption of power increased by 45·7 per cent, commercial use of power increased by 132·5 per cent and domestic use was up by 145·8 per cent. Farm electrification has progressed at such a rapid pace that farmers in Ontario at the end of 1953 were using 272 per cent more power than in 1945. During this same period the number of rural customers increased by 215,295.

There can be little wonder that Ontario hydro is deeply concerned about the continued delay in getting action on the St. Lawrence. All thinking people realize that, as Canada's leading mining, manufacturing and agricultural province, Ontario must have a new large source of low-cost power in the next few years if it is to maintain its present phenomenal expansion.

The St. Lawrence is the only answer, apart from high-cost steam generated power or the development of small sites which at present would not be economical because of their remote location.

Ontario hydro is, of course, studying the feasibility of using atom power. But, unless the development of this new source is much more advanced than I am led to believe, we cannot expect low-cost power from atomic energy for many years to come or even if it does come.

Ontario hydro's program of power expansion will be completed in 1957. At that time its dependable resources will have been increased by some 132 per cent, allowing for the fact that the United States may be, at this time, making full use of its allocated diversion of waters at Niagara. Even with this tremendous increase in resources it is obvious to the people of Ontario that the 1,100,000 horsepower to which Ontario is entitled from the St. Lawrence will be required by 1958 if the present rate of growth is to be maintained. In fact, I am informed that every one of the 6,300,000 kilowatt hours a year from the St. Lawrence could be utilized right now for the benefit of Ontario and Canada.

The total potential power between lake Superior and Montreal based on the average amount of water available is in excess of 14 million horsepower. This is almost as great as the total installed capacity of all the hydro-electric plants in Canada today. Of course, the development of the entire St. Lawrence power potential is not economical or practicable. It is believed, however, that a total installation close to 10 million horsepower would be justified.

Of this 10 million, some 5,400,000 horsepower would be at Niagara, 2,200,000 horsepower at the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence, 2,000,000 horsepower at Beauharnois, and 1,100,000 horsepower at Lachine, Quebec. From this total installation available on the Niagara and St. Lawrence rivers some 5,500,000 horsepower would be available to Canada.

On the St. Lawrence river itself, as the figures show, about 5,400,000 horsepower would appear to be economically justified at Lachine, Beauharnois and the international rapids section. Of this, 4,300,000 horsepower would be in Canada and 1,100,000 horsepower in the United States at the international section.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to our own power load, about a third of these total resources have been developed, to date. We have on the Niagara river a 500,000 horsepower plant, which is called the Sir Adam Beck Niagara generating station No. 1, at Queenston. We have another 180,000 horsepower at the Ontario power plant in Niagara Falls; another 145,000 horsepower at the Toronto power plant, also in Niagara Falls, and another 100,000 horsepower at the Canadian Niagara station. Then, Mr. Speaker, we have 200,000 horsepower at DeCew falls, which is very close to St. Catharines. At Beauharnois and at the Cedars plants in Quebec, I believe approximately 1,200,000 horsepower has been developed. Rapidly approaching completion, of course—and I am happy to say this—is the new Ontario plant at Niagara Falls, which will develop 1,828,000 horsepower.

It is a pity to me, Mr. Speaker, that those who take a narrow and selfish view and those who fear their interests may be adversely affected have been loud and persistent in their clamour against the St. Lawrence project. Large sums of money have been spent in promoting anti-St. Lawrence publicity. Fortunately much of this deceptive propaganda has collapsed when subjected to careful study.

It is somewhat ironical when one considers that almost every major newspaper or publication has commented during the last few years on the fact that the St. Lawrence is one of the most important developments of our age. Despite the tremendous support which this scheme has enjoyed, however, we are still awaiting authority to proceed.

There can be little doubt of the need for an early start on this project. During the post-war years in Ontario the increase in industrial use of electricity has been enormous. More than 600 factories, new to Ontario, have been established; technical processes have been developed; personnel has been trained, power equipment installed and a strong broad industrial base has been laid. On this broad base industry is capable of rapid expansion. I need hardly add that it would also be the arsenal from which our defence production materials could be drawn if necessary.

You may recall that a treaty was negotiated in 1950 between the Canadian government and that of the United States permitting a larger diversion of water for power at Niagara. The Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario—and I give them full credit, Mr. Speaker—lost no time in beginning a development which will eventually harness the falling waters of Niagara river to develop a further 1,828,000 horsepower.

Since I come from Niagara Falls, Mr. Speaker, naturally I have taken a keen interest in this project, and I want to say this to the credit of the Hydro Electric Power Commission. Although the United States and the state of New York have the right and the power to use the available water at Niagara falls, along with the Hydro Electric Power Commission, for the last two years they have not seen fit to take any of it. I throw my chest out and my shoulders back in justifiable pride that we here in Canada, and in Ontario, have gone ahead and set a picture and a pattern for the people of the United States, and we have shown them what we can do with regard to the water that is available at Niagara for power purposes.

They are fighting at the present time, and will continue to fight over there for many months to come, as to whether or not that power should be developed either by private enterprise or by public enterprise. But while they are going on with their arguments we are going ahead, and we shall have that development finished in a very short time.

The Sir Adam Beck generating station No. 2 is scheduled to open officially next August 8. Truly remarkable progress has been made since construction began in December 1950, just two months after the final ratification of the Niagara river diversion treaty. The new plant, named in honour of the man who is the father of hydro in Ontario, is just upstream from the No. 1 plant at Queenston, which was at one time the largest hydro-electric station in the world. This new plant, the new diversion, is spread across an eight-mile distance. The works of the Niagara project include tremendous engineering feats by Canadians on the staff of the Ontario hydro. Two intake structures for the tunnels are located two miles above the famous falls, near Chippawa; the twin 5½-mile long tunnels with diameters of 51 feet are being constructed under the city of Niagara Falls; the 2¼-mile open-cut canal is almost complete and the new powerhouse at Queenston, located six miles below the cataracts, is rapidly taking shape.

I want to say this, Mr. Speaker, we have had very many fine hydro engineers not only in the province of Ontario but in the Dominion of Canada as well. I think I can say without fear of contradiction that among the finest was Dr. Harry Acres. Dr. Hogg was another fine efficient hydro engineer. We also had Mr. Hearn, who is now the chief engineer of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of the province of Ontario, and Mr. Andrews of the Harry Acres Company at Niagara Falls. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I can paraphrase the advertising slogan of a famous automobile company, which goes something like this: "When better cars are made, so and so will make them". I want to say, Mr. Speaker, without fear of contradiction: When better hydro engineers are produced, the Niagara Falls area will produce them.

Will you call it six o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Houck: Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment for the dinner hour I was telling the house something about the mammoth new hydro development at Niagara Falls and I was also speaking about the willingness of Ontario and New York to co-operate to undertake the power development on the St. Lawrence at a cost of something over $600 million. I firmly believe that the benefits to the province of Ontario, the state of New York and, indeed, Canada and the great republic of the United States of America, will outweigh the original cost. Looking ahead we must picture in our minds just what this new source of power will mean to our people, and especially what it will mean to industry. One engineer has estimated that the power going to waste in the international section of the St. Lawrence is equivalent to the energy that could be created by 28 million healthy workingmen every year.

Over the last few years a great deal has been said concerning the decentralization of industry. One cause for concern, especially in the maritime provinces, is that the seaway and the power project may have a strong centralizing influence. I believe this government recognizes the importance of carrying out, in so far as it is possible, an orderly and economic policy of decentralization of industry. We must not forget this policy and steps should be taken to see that it is followed in every possible field.

In considering this power project we must not lose sight of the old saying that "trade follows the flag". The modern adaptation of this saying is that "industry follows power". Ever since the industrial revolution it has been traditional that industry developed where there was an adequate supply of primary power. I believe it is part of our national responsibility that every power resource that can be developed must be developed, and that it is the prime responsibility of this government or any other government to do so.

Power resources are all a part of our great national heritage. They are all part of the vision of development that the fathers of confederation had, and unless we are prepared to see that every single natural resource in Canada is developed we are not going to meet that challenge and achieve the destiny envisioned by the pioneers, the fathers of confederation.

Almost all the opposition that the seaway project and the power development are meeting seems to come from extremely powerful lobbies in the United States, lobbies that seem to have bushels of money with which to operate and seem to be accomplishing what they have set out to do. It is my firm belief that much of the objection to these developments is coming from selfish business interests who care nothing about the country's welfare as long as they are well looked after. Another thing that should stand out prominently in all these negotiations between Canada and the province of Ontario is that politics have played no part whatsoever. Probably no bigger football has ever existed in Washington than the St. Lawrence project itself.

I quite well recall that some ten or twelve years ago, when I had the privilege of serving on the Hydro Electric Power Commission of the province of Ontario, we at that time met the whole Senate committee from Washington for three days along the St. Lawrence. We inspected the whole project and at the end of the three days' conference they as much as assured us that the St. Lawrence project could be proceeded with within two months. That is twelve years ago.

In time of peace shortage of power is unfortunate. In the event of war a power shortage is a national disaster. As the best friend that the United States has among the nations, Canada is deserving of better treatment than she has had in relation to engagements for power developments on rivers in which both countries have a common interest. Canada's efforts to obtain the St. Lawrence projects have been backed by almost all representatives across the dominion. Without the wonderful co-operation shown between the two levels of government, federal and provincial, Canada's firm stand could not have been upheld. I think that our government leaders from Newfoundland to British Columbia are to be congratulated for the splendid spirit they have shown and the foresight they have had for the future of our great country.

I want to apologize to the house. I realize that I have probably spoken longer than I intended. I am also aware of the old saying that the brain can only absorb what the seat can endure, and I promise that I will only be another minute or two. I want to bring to the attention of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) the fact that we are badly in need of the new Burlington bridge at Burlington. I hope that the same spirit of co-operation that has existed between the dominion and the province with respect to the St. Lawrence seaway will exist with regard to that bridge. On week days and holidays it takes you longer to travel through that strip at Burlington than it does to go from Niagara Falls to Burlington, a distance of some forty-five miles. The present bridge is one of the great handicaps that tourists meet in getting through the traffic hazard at Burlington.

I also want to draw to the minister's attention the bridge at Homer. The bridge is raised when ships are passing through, and on many days last year I have seen the traffic lined up from the bridge in St. Catharines to the city of Niagara Falls, a distance of twelve miles, waiting for the bridge to be lowered.

I want to pay my respects to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) for the very fine officials they have at our border points, especially at the ports of Niagara Falls and Fort Erie. These customs and immigration officials are the first greeters of our immense tourist traffic, and very seldom are there complaints from tourists with respect to the treatment they receive from these splendid officials. Our first impressions are our lasting impressions, and many times tourists at Niagara Falls have told me of the wonderful way in which they were handled by these fine officials at the border. I say to the ministers concerned that they are to be congratulated on having such fine officials. They are doing a lot to sell this great Dominion of Canada.

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that it is a distinct honour, one that I will cherish for many a day, that I should be the first representative of the new riding of Niagara Falls. I hope I may carry out my duties with honour and distinction to that great riding.

Mr. H. O. White (Middlesex East): Mr. Speaker, in rising tonight to take part in this budget debate may I say that in my opinion it is probably the most serious in all the years I have been here because in preceding years business was on the upswing. But now we have come to a period of readjustment and, as the minister pointed out in his presentation of the budget the other evening, business and industry have to sharpen their pencils and get down to brass tacks. My first reaction to the budget was that the the people had asked for bread and were given a stone.

On April 1 taxes went up in a sense. We had to pay more postage for first-class letters, and while on budget night a few crumbs of comfort were thrown in by the reduction of taxes on certain lines they amounted to so little that the resentment stirred up by the increase in postage rates was greater than the acclaim that greeted the minister's budget.

I criticize the budget on several grounds. It failed to take into consideration mounting unemployment. I know that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) and other cabinet ministers have said that the condition is seasonal but it is hardly seasonal when unemployment is double what it was a year ago. It was seasonal then. Therefore that is not quite the answer to the problem. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that you warned the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) about reading quotations from newspapers. I do not intend to read a quotation, but I have here in my hand excerpts from many Canadian newspapers, all of which point to the serious problem confronting many areas of this country due to mounting unemployment.

One other point the minister failed to mention is that business failures have increased by 19 per cent from a year ago. That underlines how much tougher it is to do business today, and how competition from foreign countries is depriving many of our industries of their business, and the people who work in them of their livelihood. The source of my information in that regard is the dominion bureau of statistics publication, volume 32, No. 3, which deals with business failures and which states that such failures have increased by 19 per cent over the third quarter of 1952. That, in my opinion, is a fair barometer of what is going on in this country.

The minister also failed to take into consideration the shrinkage in freight tonnage or car loadings. That, to my mind, is one of the best indications of economic conditions as they exist today. A dominion bureau of statistics bulletin issued by the Minister of Trade and Commerce deals with this point. I have no wish to bore the house with an endless series of figures, but taking the month of October as a yardstick there were 825,607 tons less freight loaded in October 1952 compared with October 1951. Comparing the months of October 1951 and October 1953 there were 1,385,471 tons less freight loaded in 1953 than in 1951. That also is an indication of an economic trend within this country.

It occurs to me that possibly the next election is too far off to expect much in the way of tax reductions, but probably we will come back to that happy state of affairs as the years roll on. However, I wish to bring to the attention of the house some other factors which should be taken into consideration. Down through the years I have been here the government has effectively killed as far as was humanly possible every connection we have had with the British commonwealth and the United Kingdom, even to the extent of putting an eagle on the cap badge of the R.C.A.F. We have put all our trading goods in the United States basket, as it were, and this has resulted in the loss of our export markets. It has also resulted in a flood of United States goods into this country.

In accordance with your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to quote from a newspaper but I would like to refer to an item in the Windsor Daily Star of a week ago which pointed out that with respect to one item alone, namely onions, 243 carloads of United States onions were sold in 12 Canadian cities since January 1954. This took place while hundreds of thousands of bags of Canadian onions failed to find a market in the three southwestern counties of Ontario and in the Bradford marsh area, northwest of Toronto.

Is it any wonder then that implement companies and their employees are idle and farmers cannot buy their produce? It must be obvious that farmers are not going to turn around and buy the products of factories whether they produce textiles or farm implements.

However, I would like to reiterate that the government has severed as far as possible our British connections in terms of trade and in many other ways. The government has put its trust in the United States market, despite the fact that recent experiences indicate that we have been shut out of that market in terms of dairy products, oats, and rye, and this was done without any consultation with our government, regardless of the Geneva trade treaties to which we as well as they were signatories.

These Geneva trade treaties have cramped our field of action. We signed this treaty as did 33 other nations and attempted to bring about comparative tariffs, but we fail to take into consideration that many of these countries who are signatories to this treaty have a much lower standard of living and lower wage rates than we have. Despite that fact we are expected to compete with them.

I would like to draw to the attention of the house the plight of the electrical goods industry. The average wage rate in that industry today, both in the United States and Canada, is $1.67 an hour. The countries which supply electrical goods to this country, such as Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and other countries, have an average wage rate running from as high as 37 cents to as low as 27 cents. Is it any wonder therefore that we have men idle when these goods can be delivered at a price which is far below our cost of production? Regardless of this the minister tells industry and labour to sharpen their pencils and to become more efficient. The comparison I have given you as far as electrical goods are concerned applies equally well to the textile and other industries.

I think I can agree with the hon. member for Middlesex West (Mr. McCubbin) that optimism has its place, but so has a little realism, and I believe that realism was lacking in last week's budget speech.

Barring a miracle it is very likely that milk supplied to the milk concentrating factories of this country may slip down a few cents in price, and if the government wishes to bring on more unemployment all they have to do is to take the floor price from under farm products. They will then find even more industries laying off their workers.

While I am dealing with the farming industry and their problems I would like to say a word about daylight saving time. We have railway time, airline time, bus time, and daylight saving time. We will have city time and country time. If this government believes in democracy then they ought to have a referendum so that the people can decide whether we should or should not have daylight saving time. The whole problem is complex and extremely confusing. For example, in Windsor, Chatham, and western Ontario they have eastern standard time, while London and many other cities have daylight saving time. In my opinion those who wish to go to work an hour earlier should do so, but there is no reason to change the clocks.

A year or so ago, though it seems just like yesterday, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) returned from his tour of South America. I remember his telling us about the great opportunities there for expansion of trade; but from that day onward our trade with those countries has gone down and down. Maybe it is not his fault, but he certainly promised us some great things as far as those South American countries were concerned. I hope he does not take another jaunt around there to sell Canadian products and come back with the same results.

Taxation plays a bigger part in our economy than many of us realize. It is estimated that it requires an investment of between $8,000 and $10,000 to equip a factory so that it will employ one man and so on for every employee. In other words, the amount of money that is drawn off in taxation reduces the number of potential jobs in this country. On more than one occasion I have pointed out to the house and to the government that inflation is the root cause of many of our troubles. Through inflation we have priced ourselves out of world markets. Inflation is the most subtle and sinister invasion of the assets and wealth of the people. In Germany this inflation ended in Hitler's dictatorship, because when you can control currency and destroy people's faith in their monetary system you can do with them almost anything that you desire to do.

From the budget speech I note that the government have finally adopted a suggestion of the Conservative party—and incidentally it is one of my own—that the sales tax on municipal purchases be done away with. I am glad to see the adoption of that suggestion.

I am coming back again, Mr. Speaker, to what the minister said about labour and industry becoming more efficient and his telling them to sharpen their pencils and cut their costs. The strange part about that matter was that the government themselves failed to do that. The biggest business in the country, they neither sharpen their pencils nor become more efficient. I think here is a case where the government could and should give a lead to industry and labour by showing that they themselves can follow their own advice; but apparently they either are unable or unwilling to reduce the cost of government.

I want to return for a moment to our unfavourable trade balances. I have here in my hand the monthly summary of foreign trade published under the authority of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. This monthly summary shows imports for consumption from all countries. To summarize it quickly for you, in the month of January, 1952, imports from foreign countries amounted to $307·1 million and in January, 1953, they amounted to $327·8 million; in other words, they were up $20 million. As to our exports to foreign countries, they were down from $324·1 million to $317·3 million in the same months. In the months for which I have the figures here, namely January, February, March, April, May, June, July and August, of 1953, only two show a favourable trade balance, those of June and August. In June there was a favourable trade balance of $9·7 million and in August one of $1·6 million. As to the other months the figures range all the way from minus $87 million to minus $47 million, minus $35 million and minus $6·6 million. In other words, we are employing people outside of Canada to make the things that could well be made by our idle people.

Then as to imports for consumption, in the month of August, 1952 we imported agricultural and vegetable products to the tune of $33 million worth. In July, 1953 we imported $42 million worth. In other words, some of these onions that I was talking about have been brought into the country while our own were wasted. As to fibres, textiles and other products, in the same months our imports for consumption went up from $25 million to $31 million; iron products, imports went up from $97 million to $150 million; chemicals and allied products went up from $13 million to $18 million; non-metallic minerals and like products went up from $54 million to $64 million. In other words the totals for these main groups imported into this country went up $100 million in the year from August, 1952 to July, 1953.

I say again, is it any wonder that we have idle people? While I am mentioning to the minister the matter of sharpening his pencil and becoming more efficient at home, may I say this. From the dominion bureau of statistics report I notice that the number of employees of the dominion government increased by 11,678 in the past twelve months.

There is another matter in the budget to which I want to draw the attention of the minister and the house. I refer to the matter of dominion-provincial relations. It is quite apparent to me—at least, it is my opinion—that that matter was dragged in as a red herring to draw the people's attention away from the serious economic and unemployment situation prevailing and away from the burdensome amount of taxation they are paying, amounting to something over $1,300 for a family of four in Canada before they have a dollar with which to buy their groceries, pay their rent or clothe themselves.

I would point out to the minister that over the years the Liberals too have had some resolutions in their platform. One was the health insurance plan which has been forecast every election year since 1919, but nothing has been done about it. They have promised to reform the Senate ever since 1867. But worst of all, they have failed to formulate plans to aid in the development of the natural resources of the country, thereby increasing employment in the country.

I want to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Houck) who preceded me. I was glad to note that he had at last become a disciple of that great man—probably the greatest of all Ontario citizens—Sir Adam Beck. I noticed that in his speech he also failed to mention the repudiation of the hydro contracts carried out under Mitchell Hepburn.

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the present budget now before us the government proposes to raise, including the special old age security tax, the sum of $4,765 million. Of that sum they propose to spend something over $2 billion on national defence. Because our national defence expenditures will take approximately 42 per cent of our total budget and because I did not take part in the external affairs debate, I propose to deal with some aspects of our responsibility as a nation for helping to safeguard the survival of democracy and for making it work in the kind of world in which we live today.

The democratic world has, in our generation, fought two world wars to secure the survival of democracy against the onslaughts of nazi and fascist dictators. Today we are confronted with the problem of securing the survival of democracy against the advancing and ever-increasing forces of communist dictatorship. I believe we all agree this dictatorship is a much more sinister force than that which we fought in world war I and world war II. It is more sinister and more dangerous because, whereas the nazi and fascist dictators appealed chiefly to the racial superiority of one or two races, communist dictators appeal to the hungry and dispossessed peoples of every race everywhere.

We sometimes think today in terms of two worlds, communists and non-communists. The world in which we live is torn by tension between those two forces, between the two great most powerful states, Russia and the United States of America. In addition to that we are living today in an age of revolution. The world in which we live is, in my opinion, passing through the greatest revolution in its history. We are living in a world in which two-thirds of its population is rising up against inequalities of race and inequalities of economic opportunity.

We on this continent are inclined to think our great task today is to stop communism. We are sometimes inclined to believe that but for Russia we could all enjoy a stable peace. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we are experiencing today a world revolution for equality. I suggest, further, that were every communist in the world removed that revolution for equality would continue. Let us take a brief look at that world. We are told that there are 200,000 babies born into this world every day. Only one in three is white. Two of every three are born either in countries that have revolted and thrown out the white folk who govern them or in countries who are still trying to throw out the white folk. Only one in four of those babies is born a Christian. One in four is born in China. One in nine is born in India. Those born in India have a one to four chance of surviving infancy. Those who survive infancy have only a fifty-fifty chance of ever reaching maturity.

Half of those 200,000 babies born every day in this world, unless we can make democracy work in other countries, will always be hungry. Many thousands of them will die of famine before reaching maturity. We are told today that two-fifths of the world's population can neither read nor write. Only five in every hundred in Africa, still a part of the free world, can read. Two billion of these sick, hungry, and illiterate people live in the free world, in that free world which we are trying to lead in a crusade against communism.

When we look at Russia, we think in terms of tyranny. When these millions in Africa, Asia, or South America look at Russia, tyranny does not frighten them. They have never known anything else. What they see is not tyranny but the possibility of liberation from landlords and local money lenders to whom they have been in debt all their lives and to whom they pay from 30 per cent to 100 per cent interest. They see not tyranny in Russia but the possibility of planned reconstruction of their country on the basis of modern machinery. They see possibly an end to all the misery and despair that is unknown to us, and such as we can scarcely imagine.

It is true that such sickness, hunger and misery is not anything new to these people, but this is the first time in their history that hundreds of millions have learned that because of new scientific knowledge, new technical skills, their suffering is unnecessary. They have now come to realize something they have never known before. There is plenty of evidence the peoples of Asia, Africa and South America are determined to solve their economic problems. The great question that confronts us as a member of the free world is whether or not we can demonstrate to these millions, in time, that democracy can offer them a better solution to their problems than can dictatorship.

I submit that it is only by doing that we can ever hope to hold these two billion people within the free world. In other words, unless we want to live in the communist dominated world, unless we are prepared to see communism dominating the world in which we live, we must make democracy work not only in our own countries, but in Asia, Africa and South America. We ask what we are doing in that regard. What are we doing to demonstrate to these people that democracy does offer them and can provide them with more freedom and security both in the field of economics and politics, than can communism.

Quite frankly I think we have made a fair beginning, though I admit it is but a beginning. If we compare the course of action that was adopted by the victors of world war II with the course of action that was followed by the same victors of world war I, I think we realize that we have been making some progress in this job of making democracy work. We have been making democracy work better in the domestic field in Great Britain, Europe and North America, and to some extent in the international field.

Before world war II one of our most painful social problems was that of mass unemployment, the inability of our economic system to employ a large sector of the available labour force in productive enterprise. Somehow we have managed to avoid mass unemployment since world war II. Some say that is because of our rearmament program, but I think an impartial observer must admit that our employment figures were nearly as high in 1948, 1949 and 1950, before we embarked upon our rearmament program, as they have been since that time. That is particularly true in this country.

To be quite frank I suppose we must admit that our rearmament program has been one factor in our provision for unemployment. To be frank again, we must admit that the scarcities created by the ravages of war in Europe have contributed markets for our products and enabled us to maintain a high degree of employment.

However unemployment is again raising its head in this country. And whether the government believes that that unemployment is seasonal or temporary, it is a factor involving half a million Canadians. The fact remains that even with our experience of the thirties we have not yet learned to provide full employment for all our people without recourse to rearmament or recourse to war, or depending upon shortages created by war.

That is one of the lessons which somehow we must learn in this and other countries of the free world, if we are to enable democracy to survive and if we are to prove to our own people and others the advantages of democracy over communism. If we turn again to the pre-war world we find that another of our difficulties was the inability to find employment for available savings and capital. Today on the other hand there is always a shortage of capital for investment in the numerous enterprises sponsored by government agencies and private firms within the free world system.

The third symptom of our domestic economy in the pre-war days, particularly in North America and Europe, was the stagnation of agriculture. Lack of markets made it necessary for us on this continent to burn food, to burn agricultural products we were unable to dispose of. Today we are experiencing a veritable agricultural revolution in the mechanization of agricultural processes and in boosting agricultural output. We are getting nearer to the goal of being able to feed some of the hungry millions of the world than we were in the post-war years. There, again, we find today our granaries filled, bulging with wheat; we find ourselves without markets and unable to dispose of our wheat, while millions of people are hungry.

There again we must learn somehow to find a way of distributing food we can produce among the hungry peoples of the world. This buoyancy of our post-war economic system has been brought about, in part, by reason of war and rearmament, in part by shortages created by war and also in part by the shift of political power and influence within the countries of Europe and North America.

Since the war, under the pressure of public opinion, governments have been forced to devote a higher percentage of their production and net income to improving the standard of living of the common people within their borders. This has been made possible by a redistribution of our national income. Governments in every country enjoying representative forms of government, or government responsible to the electors, since the war have been taking bigger slices of the national income and redistributing it through welfare-state measures such as children's allowances, old age pensions, health insurance, workmen's compensation and the like.

That, and the increasing amount of capital investment made by governments or in government-sponsored or government-supervised and, in some cases, government-owned enterprises, have served to provide the consuming public with more spending power, and have served to remove the unbalance between classes in our domestic economy.

Here I think we need to stop before we take too seriously the advice of those who tell us that, because industrial workers have been receiving higher wages and because farmers have been receiving higher prices for their products, we are pricing ourselves out of world markets, and consequently the thing to do to regain those world markets is to begin reducing wages and farm prices. I think we would do well to stop and consider before we follow any such advice as that.

After all, we cannot maintain full production unless our consuming public have the wherewithal to buy that production. It is true that we must of necessity export a great part of our production, but we must take in turn from those countries to which we export goods of that country's origin. We must take these goods in exchange for ours. These goods that we take back in exchange must in the final analysis be sold to our own people. Therefore, unless we can maintain in one way of another the purchasing power of our consuming public in Canada we have no hope of continuing the kind of prosperity we have enjoyed in the past.

Let us turn now to the international field where the unbalance between the nations that have and the nations that have not still remains to be adjusted. What have we done in that field? Again I say we have made a beginning, but nothing more than a mere beginning. Prior to world war II the only means by which the increasing capital of industrial metropolises could be spread throughout the world was that of foreign investment on private account and for profit. As masses of capital accumulated in one or two of the most advanced nations, it was lent to or directly invested in the less developed parts of the world. This method of investment led to the extension of actual sovereignty of the capital exporting nations over those in which the capital was invested. The necessity of providing some security for investments resulted in the whole world becoming colonized. It was this method which led to the partitioning and repartitioning of the globe and led to the frightful collisions between major industrial nations, the relations which we know as world war I and world war II.

That picture has changed somewhat since world war II. The whole mental climate of our times is inimical to that type of enterprise today. After world war II the economies of Britain, France, Germany, the rest of western Europe and Japan were shattered. In the past this problem would have been met as after world war I by raising of ordinary commercial loans from private investors in the United States. These loans would have been made with an eye to private profit. This time, after world war II, no one even supposed that this method could possibly be followed.

The economies of Britain, France, Germany and Japan have been largely restored through Marshall aid and similar arrangements. Much of the needed capital was exported as a free gift. Some of it was advanced on easy terms and modest interest rates. The capital was not raised voluntarily, but was provided by the United States government out of taxation compulsorily levied on the United States public. Whatever we may say about the United States' motives for this, the fact is that an entirely new way was found of rectifying to some extent the unbalance between the United States and Europe after the war.

The real and gigantic job that now lies ahead of us in order to make democracy work and thereby save for the free world two billion people living in Asia, Africa and South America from going communist is to find some way whereby the United States, together with Canada, Great Britain and those European countries which are again going concerns, can pour their capital into Asia, Africa and South America. From China to Peru the majority of the human race remains untouched by the industrial revolution. Psychologically and politically they are waking up, and unless some acceptable means can be found of providing capital and technical knowledge to enable them to develop their countries they will certainly be lost to the free world. They will pass into the Russian orbit which can do far less for them economically than can democracy, but which will do even that little for them at the expense of those freedoms that we in the free world cherish.

In this field I submit we have fallen down badly so far. We have laid the foundation. We have the Colombo plan and the technical assistance plan within the United Nations; but to date work in this field has received very scant consideration. Our main efforts have been devoted to rearmament. We in Canada spent approximately $1 on economic aid for every $100 we spent on rearmament. Altogether we have been spending in Canada approximately $29 million a year on Colombo, economic aid and all the United Nations' agencies combined. That, I submit, is not good enough and is simply an indication of the fact that we do not realize in this country, nor do our allies in other countries realize, the magnitude of the greatest problem that confronts us today.

World war II, it is said, cost the United States $330 billion. If world war III began tomorrow, whether it began in Indo-China or wherever it began, the United States, Great Britain, Canada and other countries of the free world would immediately find the hundreds of billions of dollars needed to prosecute that war, but those same nations today can find a matter of millions instead of billions for the greatest of all tasks that now confronts the free world if we are to make democracy work. If, indeed, we are to enable democracy to survive.

Because of the immediate situation in regard to Indo-China, Mr. Speaker, we are in danger at this time of diverting our thought from the greater, the more important and long-term program of assisting the hungry and dispossessed peoples of the world. Whatever we may do, or whatever happens in Indo-China, we must not lose sight of the fact that we must somehow, by some means, convince the leaders of the two billion not yet brought within the Russian orbit that democracy has more to offer them both in economic and political freedom and security than has communism.

[Mr. Noseworthy.]

Have we any reason whatever to believe that if the United States and other free nations choose to fight it out to the bitter end with the communists in Indo-China that China and other communist countries will not give assistance to the communists as they did in Korea? Surely, Mr. Speaker, with our experience in Korea, and the knowledge we now have of the powers of the hydrogen bomb, it is the part of sanity to try, as our own Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) suggested to us in his speech, by every means possible to secure a negotiated settlement of the dispute in Indo-China without embarking on another Korea. Such embarkation might very easily result in the use of the H-bomb by one side or by both.

Any move that will lessen the possibility of such a negotiated settlement will shock the conscience of the entire world today, and history may well regard the perpetrator of such a move as an enemy and not a friend of mankind. The United States and her allies in the free world may have to make some concessions to communist countries to achieve that kind of settlement in Indo-China. It may be possible that we may have to recognize Red China or admit Red China to the United Nations or open up avenues of trade with countries behind the iron curtain. We may have to make concessions to public opinion in France regarding the rearming of Germany. But none of these concessions will be half as terrifying to mankind as the possibility of the two great world forces using H-bombs against each other.

While on the subject of H-bombs, I want to say that in my opinion Canada's role should consist of using every possible effort to secure international agreement on two points; one, that there be no more trial explosions of H-bombs in the Pacific and, two, that this infernal machine, capable only of destruction, be outlawed from the face of the earth. The H-bomb just has no place in a world of human beings who still have some interest in survival.

Mr. A. J. MacEachen (Inverness-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate in its early stages, I wish at the outset to compliment the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) upon his budget and the message of assurance which it contains for the Canadian people. In the welter of pessimism that is being generated in Canada today, it is refreshing to have the chief financial officer of the country paint an optimistic picture, a picture which, I think, is justified and supported by an economic review of last year's achievements and by an assessment of the critical economic factors that will affect the development of the country in the year ahead. If there is any relationship between the economic development of the country and the financial or economic policies pursued by its government—and that proposition has been widely urged in the house since the debate began—then I think the Minister of Finance should receive the commendation of the Canadian people for having presided over the financial affairs of the country in the period of its unprecedented economic growth.

In announcing another surplus the minister has continued his policy of adjusting the budget accounts to the state of the economy. It used to be a belief of public finance that a surplus was always desirable and that a deficit was always undesirable. But now—and this view has been presented only in recent times—it is true that a surplus or a deficit is neither necessarily good nor bad in itself, but derives its virtue from its accommodation to the need of the economy. Of recent origin also is the belief that the budget can be used as a defensive and offensive weapon in maintaining balance in the economy. Therefore, the government has continued its policy of creating surpluses in periods of prosperity for the prudent reason of retiring the public debt gradually but for the more solid reason of facing up to a deficit without extraordinary strain when such a policy is required in the national interest.

The gradual retirement of the public debt is useful because it reduces the annual burden of debt carrying charges and also because it appeases the distortion in income distribution which is inevitably associated with a large public debt. I believe that the Canadian public have supported this policy of creating surpluses. I believe an opposite policy would have bordered on imprudence, if not improvidence. Last year, the budget accounts reveal, Canada established new records in the gross national product, in employment and earnings, in the size of the labour force, in the rate of personal savings and in other categories of economic significance. The achievement of last year takes on additional perspective in view of the equal or greater achievement of previous years. The trend has been a steady and upward growth in the economy.

In view of this background one must ask himself whether the current unemployment problem represents a basic reversal in the upward growth of the Canadian economy. The minister faced this issue squarely and stated that the current unemployment is the result of increased price competition from foreign suppliers and a general readjustment to a more competitive economy. If this diagnosis is correct, and no alternative diagnosis has yet been presented, then in my judgment the real solution does not lie within the realm of fiscal policy. By fiscal policy I mean the augmenting or enlarging of the stream of purchasing power through tax reductions or increased government expenditures. Such a measure at this time would not assist the specific industries facing price competition, because there is no presumption that consumers will buy higher-priced goods simply because purchasing power has been discharged into the economy.

Furthermore, the application of general fiscal measures would not likely have the desired effect unless there is a general malaise affecting investment, consumption, and government expenditures. No evidence has yet been brought forward to counteract the evidence of investment plans presented in the annual survey tabled in this house by the Department of Trade and Commerce. Defence expenditure will continue to play its role in sustaining the economy and the only sign of weakening among these three sensitive barometers is a weakening in purchasing power, and even with that weakening, purchasing power still remains strong.

If price competition from foreign markets is the problem then the short term solution is clear, if unacceptable. It lies in the realm of commercial policy. The quickest way to provide such price relief is through the application of a tariff against competing products. The minister has wisely resisted pressure for increased tariffs. Such a policy at this particular time would work against increased world production and against Canada's stake in multilateral trade.

I believe the high aspirations expressed by hon. members in the debate on external affairs have now taken practical effect, and this practical effect will be supported by the same firm purpose that was expressed in that debate. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, as a member for the province of Nova Scotia I can testify to the adverse internal effects further tariff increases might have on regions which must export their primary production.

It is my belief that Canada has reached the peak point in its unemployment and that the downward trend will soon be evident.

One phase of this problem which has been neglected is the rapid rise in Canada's civilian labour force. In 1945 the total civilian labour force in Canada was 4,481,000 while today it is 5,230,000, an increase of 749,000 persons. The increase for the past year was 36,000 persons. It might be of some help in putting this problem of unemployment in perspective if we consider the number of employed as well as the number of unemployed. The dominion bureau of statistics figure for persons without jobs and seeking work as of February 1954 was 312,000, which is the highest figure for this category since and including the year 1945. At the same time the total number with jobs in Canada as of February, 1954 was 4,918,000. This figure demonstrates that there were more persons with jobs in Canada in February 1954 than at the same time in 1945, 1946, 1947, 1948, 1949 and 1950. According to the recent D.B.S. labour supplement there are more jobs in Canada now than in 1951 or 1952.

An hon. Member: That will go over with the unemployed.

Mr. MacEachen: It is true that the number of jobs in this country have decreased since last year at the same time by 97,000, and while I lament and I am distressed as much as hon. members opposite at the number of unemployed in the country I still believe that in order to maintain a balance we should also rejoice that the Canadian economy is, as of now, maintaining employment for almost five million Canadians.

Naturally a growing population combined with an expanding economy will result in an expanded labour force, and if our economy, Mr. Speaker, is in for a period of general readjustment then it might be wise for hon. members of this house to consider how the expansion of the labour force could be arrested during this temporary period. One of the most obvious devices that occurs to me is an increased emphasis on vocational education in necessary skills in Canada.

May I turn now to another aspect of the budget. The total non-defence budgetary expenditures in round figures amounted to two and a half billion dollars. Two-thirds of this amount is accounted for by interest and service on the public debt, social security benefits, subsidies and tax rental payments to the provinces, and services and assistance to agriculture.

I should like to discuss two classes of expenditure mentioned by the minister, namely, tax rental payments and social security benefits, with particular reference to my own province of Nova Scotia.

In my judgment the tax rental agreements have served or achieved two ends. First, by agreement with the provinces, they have permitted the federal government to become the chief collector of corporation and income taxes, providing the central government not only with this rich source of revenue but also giving the central government weapons of the first importance in controlling the economy.

Second, these tax agreements have attempted to overcome disparities in economic development as between parts of Canada by effecting what amounts to a regional redistribution of government revenue. For the fiscal year ended March 31, 1953, the total revenue collected by the province of Nova Scotia amounted to approximately $48 million. Of that amount approximately $20 million was revenue under the tax rental agreements. Had the province of Nova Scotia cultivated these tax fields on its own its collections would have fallen far short of payments under the tax rental agreements, and that province would have been unable to provide the standard of service now available to the residents of that province. Even with the tax rental agreements, there is considerable strain on the province of Nova Scotia in attempting to meet the standards of the wealthier provinces of Canada. Though the tax rental agreements have been of undoubted value to the province of Nova Scotia, I am sure I will be forgiven by hon. members if I confess that I have always shared the view, so frequently expressed by Premier Macdonald of Nova Scotia, that a more efficacious method of handling the province of Nova Scotia would have been to adopt the principle of fiscal need first recommended by the Rowell-Sirois commission, and later incorporated in the original proposals made to the province.

May I turn now, Mr. Speaker, to a few remarks on the subject of social security and its contribution to the national life. The comprehensive system of social security in Canada is meeting the needs that arise in an acute form in any industrial or market economy. In such an economy, income from gainful employment is the source of livelihood for large classifications of people. The loss of income, through causes beyond the control of the individual, and the inability to accumulate savings to meet the critical emergencies of life have been the principal considerations which have led modern governments to establish programs of social security. I am proud, Mr. Speaker, of Canada's achievement in this field because through this medium we have relieved human insecurity in critical areas of life and we have met the challenge of problems associated with industrialization.

At one period of time the chief support for social security came solely from persons who wished to relieve human suffering, and I trust that such motivation will continue to be the basic philosophy of our approach to the problem. But to those supporting social security unexpected aid came from economic science. Economic science proved, I think without any doubt, that social security or transfer payments constitute a permanent support to purchasing power and contribute to the desirable social and economic objective of overcoming inequities in the distribution of income.

The work of the government in this direction has not ceased. As a new member of this house, I received my greatest satisfaction from the announcement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) that assistance would be provided for disabled persons. The Nova Scotia legislature has passed enabling legislation in order to be in a position to adopt this legislation.

I have mentioned particularly the tax rental agreements and social security payments principally because they indicate the direction of government expenditures. I believe that these two policies have been instruments that have increased the appreciation of Canadian citizenship. There are no other two policies that indicate more clearly the manner in which this government has met the challenge of Canadian federalism. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that in the province of Nova Scotia at present there are difficulties that no one should overlook. There is particularly the difficulty associated with the coal and steel industries. But because an opportunity will be provided to discuss this matter when the estimates of the dominion coal board come before the house I shall postpone my remarks on these subjects until that time.

Mr. Speaker, if the claim is made that those who strike an optimistic note are wishful thinkers, then I want to join that band of persons who have faith in the future of Canada, that group which is not dismayed by a single temporary interruption in the steady growth of the Canadian economy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon Members: Question.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Coldwell) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Argue
Barnett
Blackmore
Bryson
Cameron (Nanaimo)
Campbell
Coldwell
Ellis
Herridge
Johnson (Kindersley)
Johnston (Bow River)
Jones
Knight
Knowles
Leboe
Low
MacInnis
McCullough (Moose Mountain)
McLeod
Nicholson
Noseworthy
Quelch
Regier
Winch
Wylie
Zaplitny—26.

NAYS

Messrs:

Abbott
Aitken, Miss
Anderson
Applewhaite
Ashbourne
Balcer
Balcom
Batten
Bell
Benidickson
Bennett, Miss (Halton)
Blair
Blanchette
Boisvert
Bonnier
Boucher (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Bourget
Breton
Brisson
Brooks
Brown (Essex West)
Bruneau
Byrne
Cameron (High Park)
Campney
Cardiff
Cardin
Carter
Casselman
Cavers
Churchill
Cote
Croll
Decore
Deschatelets
Deslieres
Dickey
Dinsdale
Drew Dufresne
Dumas
Enfield
Eudes
Eyre
Fairclough, Mrs.
Fraser (Peterborough)
Fraser (St. John's East)
Fulton
Garland
Garson
Gauthier (Portneuf)
Gingras
Gingues
Gour (Russell)
Gregg
Habel
Harkness
Harris
Healy
Hees
Hellyer
Hodgson
Hollingworth
Hosking
Houck
Huffman
James
Jutras
Kickham
Kirk (Antigonish-Guysborough)
Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)
Lafontaine
Langlois (Gaspe)
Lapointe
Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)
Lesage
Macdonnell
MacDougall
MacEachen
MacLean
McBain
McCann
McCubbin
McCulloch (Pictou)
McIvor
McWilliam
Maltais
Mang
Matheson
Michener
Monteith
Nesbitt
Pallett
Pearson
Perron
Pinard
Pommer
Pouliot
Power (Quebec South)
Power (St. John's West)
Prudham
Purdy
Ratelle
Reinke
Richard (Ottawa East)
Robichaud
Robinson (Simcoe East)
Rowe
St. Laurent
Schneider
Small
Stanton
Starr
Stuart (Charlotte)
Tucker
Valois
Villeneuve
Weaver
Weir
Weselak
White (Hastings-Frontenac)
White (Middlesex East)
White (Waterloo South)
Winters
Wood—125.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDougall: You always have to spoil it, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Take your time, Stanley.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words—

Mr. MacDougall: "A few words"?—hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: This is the most voluminous applause I have ever had in this House of Commons.

An hon. Member: The first time you have earned it.

Mr. Knowles: As I was saying, I wish to say a few words—

An hon. Member: You said that.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Knowles: I am having as much difficulty, Mr. Speaker, as I sometimes have when asking a question on the orders of the day.

In his budget speech the other night the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) made this statement upon which I wish to comment briefly. As recorded at page 3730 of Hansard for April 6 the minister referred at some length to the matter of the old age security fund, and then said this:

> Looking at the year just beginning, it seems probable that we shall again have a deficit of about $50 million. A precise accounting approach might suggest that I ought to propose an increase in the scale of contributions; but, as I said a few minutes ago, I do not think this is a time to be increasing taxes in Canada if that can possibly be avoided. I propose therefore to carry on with the same scale of contributions for another year.

Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I do not quarrel with the statement of the minister that he does not propose to make any increases in the taxes provided under the Old Age Security Act, so far as this year is concerned. But I do wish to register my strong objection to the inference that the day might come when, because of deficits being incurred—bookkeeping deficits, if one might call them that—in the old age security fund it might be necessary to propose an increase in one or other of the 2 per cent taxes levied for purposes of the old age security fund.

The fact that that inference is there is supported by various news reports commenting on what the Minister of Finance said in the paragraph I have just read. For example, under the byline of Warren Baldwin, the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, April 7, 1954, had this to say:

> Canadian taxpayers have been given another year of grace before being put on a pay-as-you-go basis for payment of old age pensions. They will continue to contribute two per cent in sales tax, two per cent through corporation tax and two per cent on personal incomes up to $60.
>
> Faced with the alternative of increasing his overall tax structure or budgeting for a deficit, Finance Minister Abbott has avoided both and put off the day of reckoning.

Similarly, the Ottawa Citizen in its editorial on the minister's budget, also in the issue of April 7, referred to this act of the minister in these words: "And so he temporizes for another year." The point I wish to make is this, that we are paying for old age pensions now on a pay-as-we-go basis. The fact that the total cost of old age security payments at their present level of $40 a month is not covered by the earmarked taxes does not mean that those payments are not being made out of current income. The fact is that old age security payments at the present time are being made in part from these three 2 per cent taxes, and in part from revenues out of the consolidated revenue fund, but all of these revenues are equally current.

In my view, the point should be made that there is nothing wrong with the payments being met as they are today. In fact I go further and say it is better that these payments be met in that way than that the 2 per cent social security tax should be increased in order that there might be a bookkeeping balance. So long as the present situation is maintained, to the extent that old age security payments are met in part out of the consolidated revenue fund, to that extent they are paid for on an ability to pay basis, to an extent that is greater than is the case with respect to the 2-2-2 formula. The funds that are received into the consolidated revenue fund on the basis of the personal income tax and on the basis of the corporation income tax are on a much more progressive basis than is the case with the three 2 per cent taxes. I want to register my very strong protest at any suggestion that there should be any increase next year or the year after in those 2 per cent taxes that are collected for the purpose of old age security.

In fact, as hon. members know, when these three 2 per cent taxes were brought in we objected to certain features of them. For example, we objected to the fact that the tax on personal incomes for purposes of the old age security fund was not put on a graduated basis. In addition to it not being on a graduated basis, it is cut off at the $60 point, and we objected very strongly to that. We agree that old age security pensions should be on a contributory basis and they are; yes, they should be on a pay-as-you-go basis, and they are; but we also contend that they should be on an ability to pay basis. That is not the case if you insist on balancing the old age security fund by 2-2-2 tax, or a 3-3-3 or a 4-4-4 formula, or whatever the minister may devise.

To the extent that old age security payments are paid out of the general revenues, out of revenues collected from the income tax and the corporation tax, to that extent they are being paid on a fairer basis than is the case with respect to the formula set up in the Old Age Security Act. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I meant what I said when I started this speech, in spite of the fact the minister and other members were surprised and gave me that questionable applause. I meant to speak only for these few minutes to underline the point that there should not be any increase this year, next year or in future years in these special taxes under which old age security payments are made at the present time.

If additional moneys are needed, let them be found by increasing the income tax in the upper brackets, let them be found by increasing the corporation tax. While I am referring to this matter, Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the time has come—my leader suggested it this afternoon in his remarks—for an increase in the old age pension itself. My leader pointed out that the federal government as long ago as 1945 had described itself as ready to accept the full responsibility for adequate old age pensions for all our people 70 years of age and over and of participating in adequate pensions from 65 to 69. The sum of $40 a month is not an adequate pension at the present time. I suggest that at the very least that figure should be $60 a month, and that could be paid and should be paid at the present time.

I strongly urge, Mr. Speaker, the view of the man in the street that it is very strange that parliament can find so much money for so many other purposes but cannot find it for increasing old age pensions. To the ordinary Canadian this is a sad commentary on the way in which this government operates. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, far from putting any pressure on the country to get ready for the idea of an increase in the old age security tax, I say that this tax should stay where it is or be reduced, but that the old age pension should be increased and that the funds necessary for increasing the amount of the old age pension should come out of general revenues on the basis of the income tax structure and on the basis of the corporation tax, for those are taxes which are paid according to ability to pay.

Just in the two or three minutes that remain to ten o'clock—and I am not adjourning the debate, Mr. Speaker, for as I said when I started, I wanted to speak just very briefly on this question—

Mr. Abbott: The hon. member is making a record for himself.

Mr. Knowles: In the two or three minutes that are left I wish to say that in addition to my feeling that something should be done at this session of parliament to raise the old age pension, I certainly hope that if nothing is placed on the order paper of this House of Commons before we go home for Easter, when we come back we shall find on the order paper notice of legislation to increase the amount of the war veterans allowance. I was hoping today that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) in reply to my question on the orders of the day would be able to tell us before we go home for Easter what legislation remains to be introduced during the balance of the session, and that his answer would have included an amendment to the War Veterans Allowance Act. I urge, sir, very strongly that along with an increase in the old age pension, the old age assistance pension—and the blind pension too—there should be an increase in the war veterans allowance and in the permissible income allowed to recipients of that pension.

If anyone is saying: Oh, there is the C.C.F. again, asking for payments, asking for increases in old age pensions but not proposing any means for raising the money, I suggest,

Mr. Speaker, that there is on the order paper in my name a motion which I cannot now debate because of the rules of the house, asking for an elimination of the $60 ceiling on the old age security tax, for this very purpose; and just a few moments ago there was before this house an amendment in the name of my leader asking for an increase in income taxes in the upper brackets and for an increase in corporation taxes. When we make such proposals we have it in mind that that is a way in which money can be found to increase old age pensions and make these other improvements in social legislation which we feel should be made at this session of parliament.

On motion of Mr. Drew the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue this debate tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 13, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE LATE ANGUS L. MACDONALD

TRIBUTE TO FORMER MINISTER OF NATIONAL DEFENCE FOR NAVAL SERVICES

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate that it is not the practice of the house to pay tribute to the memory of other than members of the current parliament, I hope I may have the indulgence of the house to depart from the strict observance of that practice this afternoon. Exceptions have been made in the past in the case of former members of the house who had distinguished themselves particularly in the house in the service of their fellow Canadians; and I believe that Angus L. Macdonald served this country with such patriotic devotion and such distinction as a member of this House of Commons and of the government of Canada during the terrible emergency of the last war that it will be felt fitting that a tribute should be paid to him today.

His sudden death this morning brought to an end an active and particularly brilliant career on the Canadian political scene. We all know that Angus Macdonald won distinction in many fields, notably as a barrister, as a member of the federal government and of this House of Commons during those difficult years of the war, and as premier of his native province of Nova Scotia both before and after the war. Those of us who had the privilege of working with him admired his high qualities, which he placed so unstintingly at the service of his fellow Canadians. And, moreover, we all became deeply attached to him as a dear personal friend.

Angus Macdonald was never a man to spare himself. To the very day of his death he gave all of his great energy to the performance of those duties which have gained for him a permanent place in the history of this country. Canada and Nova Scotia have lost a great public servant, and I am sure members of this house who were his wartime colleagues will join with thousands of Canadians everywhere in sharing in a very personal way the grief of Mrs. Macdonald and their children, and also the government and people of Nova Scotia.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I know every member in the house will appreciate the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) has suggested a departure from custom in this instance, because I feel sure we would have been unhappy in our hearts had there not been an expression of this kind on behalf of the members here and the people of Canada generally in respect to the memory of a very great Canadian.

To many of us Angus Macdonald will be remembered even more for his personal qualities than for the great service that he gave. As the Prime Minister has pointed out, he made a tremendous contribution to the development of the military services of this country during the war. His role was that of the navy; and from a few small ships he saw that navy expand to a great fleet which contributed immensely to the cause of freedom for the whole world.

But I think perhaps most of us who have been confronted with this sudden news concerning the loss of a dear friend will remember him most for his admirable Scottish characteristics—industry, honesty, integrity and warm friendship. Political opinions never divided Angus Macdonald from those who held different views. Our friendship and respect for him go out at this time in full measure in memory of a man whom we all loved.

I suppose few Canadians had a deeper and more visible affection for Scotland than had Angus Macdonald. He was deeply proud of Scotland, of his Scottish ancestry and of Scottish traditions. In fact, he was a better Canadian because he sought to implant in his native province through his own activities those fine characteristics we all respect, no matter to what blood stock our race may run.

The story, which I believe is true, that I always liked best of Angus Macdonald was that he decided to welcome Ramsay MacDonald in Gaelic when he visited Canada; and having welcomed him in faultless Gaelic, he discovered that Ramsay MacDonald did not understand that ancient language. But it was symbolic of Angus Macdonald's love of Scotland and Scottish traditions that in the new Scotland in Canada he should seek to preserve them on an occasion of that kind. All of us today pay tribute to a truly great Canadian. In these troubled days we cannot afford to lose men like him. I know that from everyone here with a full heart there will be extended to his widow and the members of his family, the deep and profound sympathy of all of us.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, it is I think very fitting that the Prime Minister has given us an opportunity of paying our respect to a man with whom many of us were associated in this house during the war years. We remember when he came here. He came here not because he wished to come, but because he was called by the government of Canada to participate in the deliberations of the government in the conduct of the war during a very critical period. We all remember his charm and his integrity, and it came as quite a shock to those of us who knew him to know that another great—and I use the word advisedly—Canadian figure who had served his country so well in the capacity of minister of defence for naval services during the war had passed to his reward. On behalf of all associated with me, and I know on behalf of everyone else in this house, I join in expressing our appreciation of the life that he led, the service that he gave to our country, and our deep sympathy with his widow and family in their great and sudden sorrow.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, the members of our group deem it entirely fitting that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) should have taken this opportunity to honour Angus Macdonald in the way that he has done today. I had the privilege of sitting in the house when he was here, and while he had the responsibility of being minister of defence for naval services. I always associated with Angus Macdonald three words: stability, strength and serenity. The members of our group are pleased to join with the members of the other parties in paying a last farewell to Angus Macdonald and in expressing the most sincere condolences to those who are bereaved.

Hon. C. G. Power (Quebec South): Mr. Speaker, for some years I was honoured by being associated with Angus Macdonald in the course of our duties as members of this government. Angus left with those of us who were associated with him a memory of a man of intense patriotism without ostentation, forcible character without violence, of loyalty as a colleague and of the foremost natural friendship as a man. It is with the deepest regret that I note the passing of a man who did honour to the Nova Scotia which he loved, and to the Canada which he represented so ably in this house. To his widow and family, I think I speak on behalf of all those who were in any degree associated with Angus during the time he was here, I express the deepest and most sincere sympathy. He will go to his last resting place, in the soil of the Nova Scotia which he loved, carrying with him the love, the affection and the admiration of thousands of his fellow citizens, and also the word that will go all over Canada that he was a great Canadian.

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is indeed a day of mourning for Nova Scotians everywhere, and I wish on behalf of my province to thank the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition and those other hon. members who have spoken so feelingly on this sad occasion. All Canadians feel that they are losing a great public figure and a staunch friend.

The Hon. Angus Macdonald was long a symbol of Nova Scotia, and most of us saw in him the reflection of what we ourselves might wish to be. He had that warm and strong personality which easily transcends all differences of race, creed or religion. It was Angus Macdonald who did so much to weld together so many different peoples in Nova Scotia and make us a province that has already been proud of its role in confederation.

Farsighted and wise in his advocacy of the role of Nova Scotia in the life of this great country, he was to me a great friend and a wise counsellor in all those matters respecting Nova Scotia and Nova Scotians. Always a great admirer of Joseph Howe, whose statue stands so nearby his own office, Angus Macdonald will today take his place beside that great figure in the hearts and minds of Nova Scotians everywhere.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IGOR GOUZENKO—RELEASE OF TESTIMONY BEFORE UNITED STATES REPRESENTATIVES

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will recall that on February 16, 1954 my colleague, the parliamentary assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pinard), made a statement concerning the handling of the transcript of the proceedings of the meeting on January 4, 1954, at which Mr. Igor Gouzenko was interviewed by representatives of the United States government. In that statement the parliamentary assistant informed the house that in the latter part of January the Canadian government had notified the United States government that we were prepared, if that government wished, to make public the transcript, with the exception of a few minor deletions, the reasons for which he outlined.

This month a note was received from the United States government requesting that the full transcript, minus our deletions, be made public by the Canadian government as soon as might be possible. I should therefore now like to table copies of this transcript.

In doing so, I should like to remind the house that prior to this interview Mr. Gouzenko had been interrogated exhaustively by security authorities many times, over a period of several years, since he first made himself available to us in the autumn of 1945. The appropriate security authorities of the United States government at all times had access to all Mr. Gouzenko's information without reservation. Although the transcripts of evidence which Mr. Gouzenko gave to the royal commission in 1946 and the reports of his other interrogations by security officers were not themselves made public, the bulk of the information contained in them was made public in the report of the royal commission published in 1946 and in the numerous articles written by Mr. Gouzenko and in the interviews granted by him to representatives of the Canadian and United States press during recent years.

Therefore, it will not be surprising to members of the house that the transcript of Mr. Gouzenko's evidence at this January 4 meeting discloses very little—if indeed there is any—information not already available to the public. Of course it does not disclose any information of a security type not previously known to the Canadian and United States security authorities.

I should explain that the reason why the transcript was not made public previously in view of the considerable interest shown in this meeting, was that the whole object of this meeting was to provide an opportunity to representatives of the United States government to interview Mr. Gouzenko on matters pertaining to the internal security of the United States. It was therefore not considered appropriate for Canada to make the transcript public unless so requested by the United States government, as it has now done.

As already explained to the house by the parliamentary assistant (Mr. Pinard) in his statement of February 16, 1954, a few minor deletions have been made in this transcript, in order to eliminate references either in the questions or in the answers publication of which in this context might jeopardize Canadian security investigations of individuals or organizations in Canada, or might be open to question on grounds of international propriety as relating primarily to the interests of a third country. In each case these deletions are marked by square brackets with indication of the number of words omitted.

Finally, I should like to say that Mr. Gouzenko has been good enough to read over the transcript and has testified to its completeness and accuracy.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice arising out of the statement he made a few moments ago with respect to Igor Gouzenko. In view of the extent to which Mr. Gouzenko has been revealing his identity, in his writings and in interviews, does the government feel there is any useful purpose in continuing to protect his anonymity by means of police protection?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I think the question which the hon. member has just asked is not one which is appropriate on the orders of the day without notice.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the minister would answer it tomorrow?

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice a question with respect to the statement regarding the transcript just tabled by the minister with reference to the deletions made for various reasons, including the fact that this might involve a third country. Would the minister say whether more than one such third country was included, or whether only one was included? If so, whether that country was Russia and, if so, why it should be considered necessary to have regard to any feelings in that matter.

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, I should think it would be rather obvious to everyone that the reasons for the deletions being made are the same as those which would apply with even greater force in regard to an answer being given to my hon. friend's question.

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question in view of the tabling of the transcript of this interview. When Mr. Gouzenko appears on television, as I believe he has done, is any prior, shall I say, censorship exercised over what he says, or may he say what he likes? If so, might not that practice conflict with the kind of precautions which the minister and the government quite properly exercised in regard to interviews?

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, it is a practice which, I think it is fair to say, has never yet conflicted, and I think I should also add that Mr. Gouzenko on every occasion on which he has appeared in court or before this commission, the proceedings of which I tabled today, has always given a very good account of himself as a witness.

[Later:]

Mr. Garson: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) asked me a question to which I gave an answer and I should like now, in the interests of greater clarity, to make a correction of that answer to read as follows:

Mr. Speaker, our non-censorship of Mr. Gouzenko is a practice which I think it is fair to say has never yet conflicted; for I should also add that Mr. Gouzenko on every occasion on which he has appeared in court, on television or this examination the proceedings of which I tabled today, has always given a very good account of himself.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FRASER (PETERBOROUGH)—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. In the Montreal Gazette of this morning, page 23, under the heading "Parliamentary News", there is a statement that works minister Winters says either the old customs building or Gordon Fraser, member for Peterborough, may be used as accommodation for a branch of the unemployment insurance commission. I wish to inform the minister that since I have been on a diet I do not think I have the necessary accommodation.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON POSITION AT HALIFAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. R. Balcom (Halifax): I wish to inquire of the Minister of Transport whether or not he is in a position to make a statement concerning the airport at Halifax, outlining the progress made to date, along with information which might indicate the probable date of starting operations.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I do not know that I can give a complete statement answering the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, but I may say this. We are desirous of building an airport at Halifax. As the hon. member knows, we have made surveys in the Lucasville area which indicated that weather conditions there were not better than those which prevailed at Halifax. Since then we have had a further survey made of the Kelly lake area near Halifax. This has been completed and an analysis of that survey indicates the Kelly lake area warrants further investigation on the ground.

To this end the department will send a survey party as soon as it is possible so to do in order to complete that investigation. For that reason it is not possible for me to say at this time when the construction will begin, other than to say that if reports in the Kelly lake area prove satisfactory, and subject to the city of Halifax providing the lands for airport facilities, then we will proceed with the construction of civil aviation facilities at Halifax.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RADAR DEFENCES—RELEASE OF INFORMATION TO PUBLIC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question about radar installations because it is important for this country to know whether there has been a breakdown of security in his own department. Can the minister tell us how he reconciles his statement of yesterday that the giving of names and locations of government stations is permissible, with the statement made last year that such information would be most valuable to the only potential enemy we have.

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): I thought I made the position quite clear yesterday that the publication in the Roundel of individual names of men posted to radar stations was made contrary to security provisions laid down by the chief of the air staff and generally in effect throughout the armed forces. This was done through inadvertence of the editor.

GRAIN

INQUIRY AS TO CLEARING OF ELEVATORS AT SEABOARD PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What progress has been made in the clearing of grain elevators at Montreal and other seaboard ports in readiness for the flow of grain from the head of the lakes when lake shipping opens later this month?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I would point out to my hon. friend that about a week ago one ship struggled through the ice and reached the port of Montreal. I believe it has since departed, but it took on package cargo more valuable than wheat. I understand that other boats are on their way there, and as they are able to dock in Montreal and take on cargoes of wheat, space will be provided for western grain. We hope to see a considerable movement under way in about ten days, but unfortunately we have to wait for favourable weather.

TRADE

WEST INDIES—REFUSAL OF ALLOTMENT TO SUPREME POWER SUPPLIES LIMITED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. W. Noseworthy (York South): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? Has his department received any application from Supreme Power Supplies Limited in Toronto for an allotment under the British West Indies trade liberalization plan? If so, was it rejected, and if it was rejected under what conditions may this company expect to secure a future allotment?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. For the past four years the Department of Trade and Commerce has operated the British West Indies trade liberalization plan, under which Canadian exporters with a history of trade in the British West Indies in the base years 1946, 1947 and 1948 are entitled to quotas based on 40 per cent of their average exports in this three-year period.

In 1952, as a further measure of relaxation, the colonies agreed to the reallocation of unused quotas and we were able to take care of several Canadian manufacturers who had not been exporting in the base period. Unfortunately, the amount available was not sufficient to take care of all Canadian firms interested in the British West Indies market.

On October 17, 1952, Supreme Power Supplies Limited asked for a special allocation of $5,000 to cover the shipment of transformers to Bridgetown, Barbados. We pointed out to them at that time that we did not have sufficient funds, but if further existing quotas were unused we might be able to take care of them later in the year. Unfortunately, this did not prove to be possible. We have had no further request from Supreme Power Supplies Limited since 1952. If this firm is still interested in the British West Indies market we could give them a small quota at this time.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF PATROL BOAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the Minister of Justice if it is not the policy of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to purchase needed equipment in Canada when available from Canadian sources? If so, is that policy now being followed with respect to the purchase of a patrol boat which is to be a prototype of other boats required for R.C.M.P. services?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): My hon. friend has not given me notice of this question but I will be glad to take his question as notice and look up the details of the case he mentioned.

CUSTOMS

REQUEST FOR OPENING OF OFFICE AT MILTON

On the orders of the day:

Miss Sybil Bennett (Halton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the urgent communications which I received this morning from the town council of Milton, would the minister tell the house when he expects to open a customs office in the town of Milton?

Hon. J. J. McCann (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of this question. Other than as indicated in the question, no recent representations have come to my attention concerning this matter. I shall, however, look into it and report the decision of the department when one is made. We are always willing to service any community where it can be shown that our services are necessary and that there is sufficient business to warrant the opening of an office.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SALE OF LITERATURE AT NEWSSTAND IN CHATEAU LAURIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is it the policy of the Canadian National Railways to permit the sale of the appalling trash sold under the name of literature on the newsstand of the Chateau Laurier hotel? If so, is this "literature" picked out for the hotel by any department, either the Canadian National Railways or the Department of Transport?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to what my hon. friend is referring, but if he is referring to what I think he has in mind then it may well be that that is a matter which concerns a concessionaire. If it does concern a concessionaire, and of that I am not too sure, it is a matter over which the Canadian National Railways, and certainly the Department of Transport, would have absolutely no jurisdiction. However, if it is a matter which is under the direct jurisdiction of the Canadian National Railways, then I shall make inquiries and perhaps I can report to the house at a later date.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST MR. AND MRS. HENRI ZORIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. Earl Rowe (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he would care to comment on the more or less controversial issue regarding a deportation order against Mr. and Mrs. Henri Zorin? I understand Mr. Zorin is a graduate of McGill University and his wife is a graduate of the Royal Victoria College.

Some hon. Members: What is the question?

Mr. Rowe: My question is this. Has the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration any comment to make as to the deportation order issued by his department against Mr. and Mrs. Zorin, in view of the fact he was only defending his wife in the streets of the city of Quebec?

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the first I have heard of this matter but I shall look into the files and see what the situation is.

(See also page 4066.)

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, April 12, consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell.

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for some years it has been customary for the Leader of the Opposition to wait until the closing stages of this debate to make such remarks as he deems appropriate in regard to the budget. I depart from that practice this afternoon for one reason, and one reason only.

One part of the budget speech, and a substantial part, raised an issue which it would be very unwise for the members of this parliament to ignore, and to which it seems to me we should direct our attention before the unfortunate consequences go beyond anything anticipated in the budget speech itself.

Already, since that budget speech was made in this house, bitter things have been said in different parts of Canada which are not contributing and will not contribute to national unity within this country. I regret that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) chose to adopt what I believe to have been an unnecessarily provocative manner in presenting a decision which it was entirely within the authority of the government to present to this house.

There is always room for debate on constitutional issues, and if there were not our law books would not be filled with the records of so many appeals to our senior courts to determine what the meaning of our constitution and other constitutions really is. It does not help national unity to seek to make this subject one which appears to be an isolated issue between the government of any one province and the government of Canada. Nor does it help national unity to have any provincial premier attacked in this house, no matter who that premier may be, because an hon. member of this house cannot agree with the point of view that a provincial premier expresses.

Every one of us comes from one of the ten provinces. We are not only citizens of Canada, but we also have a personal and very natural interest in the affairs of our own provinces as well. I do not think any one of us regards it as desirable that attacks on the premiers of those provinces be made in such a way as to appear that the mere mention of the name of a particular premier in itself suggested some improper association. I do not think those who have made such attacks would themselves welcome similar attacks on the premiers of their own provinces. This situation is not improving. It is getting worse day by day, and rapidly. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) took it upon himself to admonish those who choose press conferences to present constitutional opinions. Then having admonished others, he himself went on a press conference last night on the radio to deal with the very same subject. Evidently what is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander. The difference, of course, is that the radio press conference had a much wider audience.

One of the things which must be so noticeable to those who have been following this subject with deep concern—and I believe that most of the members of this house have been doing so—is the change indicated in the attitude of the government in one year. Last year in his budget speech the Minister of Finance said that the arrangements being made by the government for certain tax concessions were, and I quote the words:

. . . in accordance with the principle that nothing in federal legislation shall in any way discriminate against a province which does not enter into a tax rental agreement. This is in line with the declared intention of the federal government that nothing should be done which could be interpreted as pressure, direct or indirect, on any province to accept or renew a tax rental agreement.

This year the attitude is very different. This year the mere failure to accept such an agreement is in itself justification for dealing at arm's length with those who take that point of view.

Mr. Speaker, this attitude has already produced the inevitable consequences. In different parts of Canada things have been said which are inclined to disturb those deep, strong, warm and friendly feelings of understanding which have been growing, improving and maturing in the years that have passed. I greatly regret some of the statements which have been made in different parts of Canada and which seem completely to ignore the possibility that there is a constitutional issue. At the same time may I say that I greatly regret that there are those who have suggested that the good faith of the English-speaking part of our population may in some way be placed in issue. Mr. Speaker, I hope that comments of that kind in any part of Canada can come to an end and that this issue, like others, can be discussed on the basis of the legal and fundamental points involved.

As an English-speaking Canadian may I say that no one in this house or in Canada has a deeper or firmer belief in the sanctity of the British North America Act than have I. On many occasions I have expressed my belief in the sanctity of that constitution. Others in our party have done so, as have others of the English-speaking members on the other side of the house. Only because I think it is important that no suggestion of this kind should be permitted to becloud the issue now before us, I want to place on record once again what I said in regard to this very subject some considerable time before it was my privilege to sit in the House of Commons. As premier of Ontario I had occasion to discuss this subject on April 1, 1947. I quote from the Hansard of the debates in the Ontario legislature, and I do so simply to show that this subject is not one which impresses the people of this country only on the basis of their racial origin or of the part of the country in which they live. This was what I said on that occasion:

There are good reasons why the province of Quebec attaches special importance to the provisions of the British North America Act and is less likely to accept substantial changes which are made without the consent of that province and without adequate compensating protection, if any of their established rights are to be diminished. With good reason Quebec looks to the British North America Act as their guarantee of their own civil law, of their customs, of their language and their religion.

It would be well for all of us to keep in mind the reasons why those special rights were assured to the province of Quebec in 1867. The provisions of the British North America Act merely carried forward undertakings which were first given at the time of the capture of Quebec in 1759. Those undertakings were given statutory form in the Quebec Act of 1774 and repeated in the Constitutional Act of 1791.

It is not for anyone living in any other part of Canada today to question the wisdom of that decision. There can be little doubt that if those rights had not been granted the people of Quebec would have seen no good reason for not joining the other North American provinces which seceded and formed the United States, under the revolutionary war which began in 1775.

Nor is it likely that the soldiers of Quebec would have fought so gallantly and so successfully in the defence of British North America in the war of 1812-14 if the Constitutional Act had not reassured them of those rights in 1791, and in doing so gave them a good reason for remaining loyal to the British crown. In view of the fact that those rights have been undisturbed for nearly 200 years, there is no reason why the province of Quebec should accept any agreement which would have the effect of weakening their provincial government, and by centralizing financial power in the central government present the very real possibility of the establishment of a unitary government, in fact if not in name. If these deductions are correct, then those provinces which hope to maintain national unity will follow the course which it is possible for Quebec to follow as well. But, Mr. Speaker—

In that case, Mr. Speaker, I was addressing the Speaker of the Ontario legislature.

—in emphasizing the special reasons why Quebec would resist agreements which would weaken the federal structure and lead to centralization, I wish to leave no impression that it is Quebec alone which would be unwilling to lose control of its own local affairs. The people of Ontario are very properly jealous of their great traditions, and I do not believe that they would be willing to hand over the control within their province of their local customs, their administration of justice and their own long-established educational system.

That is what I said in April of 1947, seven years ago now, and some considerable time before I had any reason to consider the possibility that I might be here in this House of Commons. I hope these words, Mr. Speaker, will remove any possible suggestion that this is a subject which is only of interest to one province of Canada. This is a subject which is of interest to all Canadians, and I am sure the remarks I made about Ontario apply with equal force to other provinces of Canada. Certainly no Canadian expressed in clearer or more emphatic terms his belief in the sanctity of the British North America Act than did that great Canadian whose memory we have respected in the house today.

Those who attended the dominion-provincial conference which met on August 6, 1945, will recall so well the strong, vigorous, clear and emphatic statements of the then premier of Nova Scotia, Angus L. Macdonald, who pointed out that his province dearly cherished those traditions, those customs and those laws which were preserved in that constitution. That was true, I believe, of every premier. This is a subject which is in no way confined to one province alone. This is not a problem which affects merely the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec. This is not a problem which can be solved by discussions between the government of Canada and the government of the province of Quebec alone. This is a subject which should be discussed at the earliest possible date so that consideration may be given to those circumstances which are bringing into the open statements which are certainly not helping the solution of this problem.

One point I wish to make with the utmost earnestness, Mr. Speaker, because I propose to present my arguments directly to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) is that in many quarters this matter has been discussed as though it were an issue in which the Minister of Finance stood as an individual who challenged the rights of others in Canada. Under our parliamentary system, under our constitution, there is one man who accepts the central, final and supreme responsibility, and that is the prime minister of Canada. There can be no other situation. Under our system the representative of the crown does not appoint the members of the cabinet according to his judgment. The representative of the crown has the responsibility of calling upon an individual to form a government. That individual, if a government is formed, becomes prime minister of Canada.

The members of the government who are later sworn in are nominees of the prime minister. They are his nominees. They continue to hold office at his will and if they depart from the course laid down by common agreement of the government over which he presides it is his duty to ask for their resignation. If anything that has been said in the budget speech is unacceptable to any Canadian, then the person to whom the remarks should be directed is the Prime Minister of Canada. After all, it is the head of the government of Canada who must accept the central and final responsibility for any statements that are made in the budget or in any other official presentation of the government. In fact the Prime Minister must accept that responsibility more directly in relation to the budget than in relation to any other presentation to parliament. This, after all, is the presentation by all departments of government to this house through which they seek money by means of which, out of revenues from the people of Canada, the government headed by the Prime Minister can carry on its business.

That is the situation. It is, therefore, to the Prime Minister that I direct my remarks, and I do hope that in the discussion of this subject it will be the Prime Minister who will accept the responsibility for dealing with a situation which surely is one that cannot be contemplated with satisfaction by any Canadian today. I do think that before careless remarks are made, such as have already been made, we should remember the genesis of this problem now before us in so far as it relates to the exchange of certain taxing powers in return for certain annual payments. In 1942 it was stated by the government at that time, a government of which the present Prime Minister was a member, that these were only temporary arrangements for the duration of the war. Let me read the opening part of the statute which dealt with the agreements then made. The statute was assented to on the 28th of May, 1942 and is found in 6 George VI, chapter 13 of the statutes of 1942-43. It reads as follows:

> Whereas the dominion and the provinces and certain municipalities have been levying taxes upon incomes and upon corporations, and it is expedient during the continuation of the present war and for a certain re-adjustment period thereafter that the dominion only should levy such taxes: Therefore, His Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—
>
> 1. This act may be cited as The Dominion-Provincial Taxation Agreement Act, 1942.
>
> 2. The Minister of Finance, with the approval of the Governor in Council, may enter into an agreement with the government of any of the provinces of Canada to provide, in accordance with and subject to such terms and conditions as may be set out therein, that the province and its municipalities shall cease to levy personal income and corporation taxes as defined in such agreement and subject to such exceptions as may be set out in such agreement, for the duration of the war and for a certain re-adjustment period thereafter, and to provide for the payment of compensation by the dominion to the province therefor.

The agreements which were signed contained this recital:

> Whereas the province shall not, by agreeing, as hereinafter provided, to desist from imposing certain taxes during the term of this agreement, be deemed to have surrendered, abandoned or given over to the dominion any of the powers, rights, privileges or authority vested in the province under the provisions of the British North America Act,

1867, or any subsequent act of the parliament of the United Kingdom, or to have otherwise impaired any of such powers, rights, privileges or authority—

And then the agreement went on to set out the details.

Mr. Speaker, in the face of those statements, it will be seen first of all that these agreements were dealing with the abandonment of income tax and corporation tax, and it was understood that there was to be no diminishing of authority, not only of the provinces but of the municipalities. And it is for that reason that we have included our reference—as we have on earlier occasions—to the provinces and the municipalities, in dealing with this subject.

Certainly there is room for difference of opinion. Certainly there is room for honest conflict of ideas in regard to this subject. Mr. Speaker, there is just one way that the discussions now taking place, and which have aroused already a great deal of feeling, can be terminated, and that is to have the assurance that this subject will be dealt with.

It is not just the province of Quebec; every province has indicated its desire to have this problem dealt with. When the governments of the provinces met the government of Canada in the city of Quebec in 1950, statements were made which indicated a very wide measure of agreement—a wide measure of agreement in regard to this constitution of ours, and the way in which we could solve the problem which had been brought to a head by these agreements entered into because of the dreadful necessities of war.

Mr. Speaker, my views on this subject are well known. My views on this subject have been put on Hansard too extensively on some occasions to meet with the approval of the government. On this occasion I have no thought of dealing with the history of this subject or with the various points of view which have been expressed. I prefer not to add in any way to the things that already have been said which might cause misunderstandings in regard to this extremely important subject.

It is now eighty-seven years since men of great vision, men of great faith, men of deep conviction and of great ability met in the city of Quebec to draft the terms of a constitution which would give corporate entity to the scattered units of population in this northern part of the North American continent. Let us reread the speeches of those men in those days—of Macdonald, Cartier, Galt and all those others who expressed their belief in the tremendous future that was opening up through the terms that had been arranged by agreement and common understanding.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come when the same kind of statesmanship, the same vision, the same faith and the same good will need to be shown today as was shown at Quebec in 1867. This is not the time to invite the premier of any province to seek consideration here in Ottawa. This is not the time for any premier of any province to be told that he may have the illimitable privilege of an audience with a cabinet minister. No, Mr. Speaker, this is the time for an invitation to be extended by the Prime Minister of Canada to the premiers and the governments of the provinces of Canada to meet and to discuss the way in which they can overcome these problems, and revitalize and bring back into harmony the details of the British North America Act.

There is one man who can do it. There is only one man who can call this conference together—only one. It is not very long ago that members of this House of Commons, without reservation, and with sincerity and warmth, indicated their approval of a trip then contemplated by the Prime Minister. It is not very long ago that all of us expressed our belief that good will between governments is extremely important in these difficult days.

Mr. Speaker, if good will between the government of Canada and the governments of India, of Pakistan and of Ceylon is important, then good will between the government of Canada and the governments of the provinces is infinitely more important. To the extent that we may accord to the Prime Minister of Canada those qualities which have been extolled by the followers who have been putting forward some of the views I have mentioned, may I say those qualities cannot better be used at this time than around a conference table here in Ottawa, where the premiers of the ten provinces and their associates would meet with the Prime Minister of Canada and his associates to discuss the constitution of Canada, and a way in which we may overcome these difficulties and retain that spirit of unity which has been our pride for so many years. Today, Mr. Speaker, has been a dramatic one. From different parts of the world has come disturbing news; from different parts of the world has come news which indicates how important it is that here in Canada we become as strong and united as possible in this great struggle for freedom in which we are engaged. This is a day in which it would be peculiarly fitting for the government to give a statement that I believe could put an end to those long-distance exchanges, either over the radio or through the press, or in any other manner, which can only create accumulating misunderstandings, and during the time that this parliament is recessed could vastly increase the difficulties with which we are confronted.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, leaving the details for another occasion—and it is certainly my intention to enter this debate and deal with the financial aspects of the budget later in the course of these discussions—leaving the details for the present, simply having sought to place before the house the problems that are before us, without in any way attempting to indicate all the things that have been said, which must have caused concern here in this house, I appeal to the Prime Minister of Canada to say definitely, without any reservation, before we adjourn for the Easter recess, that he will extend an invitation to the premiers of the ten provinces before the end of May to a conference here in Ottawa so that, with that measure of good will which we have been extolling on other occasions in this house, we may seek to rebuild that federal structure of which we are all so proud.

Mr. David A. Croll (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that no one in this house will expect me to follow the main theme of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), and I will not disappoint. I intend to discuss some aspects of the budget. I have already heard the budget described by opposition members in many terms. Some have been more colourful than others; but I think it could be most fairly described as one favouring free competition.

The underlying philosophy was reiterated by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) when he spoke on the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's weekly press conference. He is reported in the Gazette of April 3 to have said:

> In the long pull an industry that cannot meet competition must cease to operate.

It is quite clear now that the budget provided no comfort for the protectionists. The minister repeated in the best Liberal tradition that high tariffs are a luxury that we in Canada cannot afford, and that our prosperity and high standard of living is largely dependent upon a high volume of trade outside our own borders and a large consumer demand at home.

In so far as it was possible under present economic conditions, the budget removed the tax element from competition, and by its underlying philosophy gave hope that in the future more will be done to make our goods more competitive at home and attractive abroad. The combines act, particularly the abolition of retail price maintenance, has brought about a greater competitive spirit in our economy and a direct benefit to the consumer. Some manufacturers have already started to cut costs, to promote efficiency in distribution and to rely on quality. Others are still not convinced, would rather not go to the trouble to work and hustle, and recently, through their spokesmen and in other ways, they have turned their big guns on combines legislation.

On the one hand, we have the view of a representative section of big business that combines and monopolies are not so bad after all. Indeed, the view is put forward in some sections that the combines investigations are nothing more than a witch hunt. That is the opinion of Mr. R. M. Fowler, president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, as reported in the Toronto Telegram of January 30 last. Mr. Fowler even goes so far as to ask the question:

> Do we really want the law of the jungle to govern the business life of Canada?

By this I take it that he is comparing the law of the jungle with free enterprise, and that he is opposed to both of them. That is surely a surprising position for the spokesman of Canadian industry to take. On the other hand, we have the opinion of Mr. Justice Schroeder, of the Supreme Court of Ontario, in the recent rubber combines prosecution to this effect:

> By their plea of guilty, the accused have admitted that they were parties to an arrangement, the proper object of which was to impose improper, inordinate, excessive or oppressive restrictions upon that free competition, to the benefit of which the people of this country were entitled. Inherent in these illegal agreements of the accused companies are features so obnoxious to the welfare of the community that, if extended, the effect upon the public might become disastrous.

Faced with two such conflicting views, the man in the street may be forgiven if he is confused and uncertain as to the meaning and the purpose of combines legislation, and he asks himself, whether the combines legislation is a boon or a bane. Is the combines branch engaged in a witch hunt? That is one of the matters I intend to discuss this afternoon.

We have had anti-combines legislation in Canada since 1923. The act was amended in 1951 to forbid the practice of resale price maintenance. Then it was very carefully overhauled in 1952. Many hon. members who are here now will recall that. Since the Combines Investigation Act was passed in 1923, reports of 35 investigations have been published. Nineteen of these investigations have taken place since 1945, and a large number of prosecutions under the act have been conducted over the years. There is no question that the act has been vigorously and intelligently administered. Indeed, that is one of the main objections to the act. They would prefer not to be investigated and prosecuted, and their objection, of course, is quite understandable.

The two points of view as to the current administration of the act are rather neatly summed up by two recent newspaper articles. The first is from the Winnipeg Free Press, and I quote:

> These latest decisions—
>
> The rubber decisions.
>
> —will certainly be welcomed as further evidence, if any were needed, that the Canadian anti-trust legislation is now being administered with a vigour and success unprecedented in the history of this country.

The next quotation comes from a different source, the Financial Times of Montreal, and it confirms the efficiency of the combines branch but in language that is not so complimentary. I quote:

> . . . the combines investigation crowd are working with assembly-line efficiency exhuming scandals in private enterprise. The scandal consists mainly in taking a profit; something that did not use to be a sin.

Well, there you have it. There is no need to stress the efficiency and vigour with which the combines act is being administered. But there is a need to clarify our thinking on two other matters. The first one is whether enforcement is effective, and the second that the principle and methods of the present legislation are not the best that could presently be devised. As to the effectiveness of the combines legislation as it is now administered, there can be no question. The effect is both positive and deterrent, as one gathers from the loud squeals of big business.

There is, however, a constant tendency to take every success that the combines branch achieves and twist it into an argument which goes something like this. If the conditions disclosed in the report on the prosecution could exist, then it is an indication that the legislation is not effective. Instead of giving credit for the prosecution of the offences that are disclosed, and recognizing their deterrent effect upon others, the stand is taken that the disclosures are proof of the ineffectiveness of the measures designed to maintain competition. This is, of course, the attitude of persons who welcome any material that they can mould into the semblance of an argument to support their political and economic philosophies. It is important that the public should not reach the conclusion that the Canadian economy is combine-ridden.

The fact that the combines branch is successful in disclosing, and the justice department in prosecuting, combines should be taken only as evidence of effective enforcement. There are very definite indications that the work of the combines branch is having a very real and widespread effect upon manufacturers and distributors. Each such case, and there have been many, is like a pebble dropped into a pond where the ripples extend far beyond the area immediately affected. So long as the enforcement of the act is vigorous and continuous, satisfactory results will be achieved. If its enforcement should be periodically relaxed, what has been gained will, of course, be lost. The businessman himself would suffer because he would be lulled into a false sense of security and the next period of activity by the department would catch him with his combines down.

There is very much evidence of competition throughout business. The electrical appliances field, the automobile field and the food field are examples of trades in which competition is very real and virile. Both the rubber fields and the optical fields are ones in which competition appears to have been restored following combines investigations into those industries.

Now, for a few moments I should like to consider the second question, that the principle and methods of the present legislation are not the best that could be devised. Here we are faced with a tendency in certain quarters to propagate the view that business is being unnecessarily harassed by the anti-combines legislation, and that the courts should not condemn combines just because they eliminate competition but only where positive evidence can be produced by the crown to demonstrate specific and undue price increases or other abuses. They go even farther and advocate that the legislation should be changed to require the courts to review each case to see whether the parties who have gained control over the markets have used that control to advance their own interests to the detriment of the public or whether they have exercised it in moderation for the benefit of the industry and the public.

I particularly want to take issue with this tendency which is aimed at undermining the whole anti-combine structure as it has been built up over the years. As an example of the view expressed by the opponents of the legislation, I should like to refer to a speech made by J. D. Ferguson, president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, at Granby on November 26 last. The view expressed by the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association is that whenever a combine charge is brought the courts should not concern themselves with the elimination of competition but should examine the arrangements in detail to see if the prices and other terms that have been fixed by the parties are reasonable. If they do not take that approach, then the courts are shirking their responsibilities.

It is interesting in this respect to place beside each other some of the statements of Mr. Ferguson, as spokesman of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, and those of the judge in the last two rubber cases. I quote from Mr. Ferguson:

> . . . when the groups of businessmen pleaded guilty, it did not mean for a moment that they were admitting they had done anything detrimental to the public.

Mr. Justice Schroeder says:

> . . . by their plea of guilty the accused have admitted that they were parties to an arrangement, the direct object of which was to impose improper, inordinate, excessive or oppressive restrictions upon that free competition to the benefit of which the people of this country were entitled.

Mr. Ferguson says:

> It is perfectly possible that the public has been unaffected. It might even have benefited.

Mr. Justice Schroeder says:

> Inherent in these illegal agreements of the accused companies are features so obnoxious to the welfare of the community that, if extended, the effect upon the public might become disastrous.

Mr. Ferguson says:

> All they admitted was that they had committed a technical breach of the law . . .

Mr. Justice Schroeder says:

> In determining the punishment . . . the court must have regard to the magnitude of the aggregate business involved and the far-reaching evil consequences likely to flow from allowing such schemes to operate unchecked or to go lightly punished.

You can readily see these utterances of the judge leave no doubt that the court considered the elimination of competition not to be merely a technical offence, but to hold a really serious and sinister implication for the public. The court's interpretation of the combines legislation is worth looking at. As early as 1905 the court said, and I quote:

> The right of competition is the right of every one, and parliament has now shown that its intention is to prevent oppressive and unreasonable restrictions upon the exercise of this right.

In 1940 the Chief Justice of Canada said, and I quote:

> The enactment before us, I have no doubt, was passed for the protection of the specific public interest in free competition . . . and, as the enactment is aimed at protecting the public interest in free competition, it is from that point of view that the question must be considered whether or not the prevention or lessening agreed upon will be undue.

In the recent Calgary bread case the judge said this had been the law for 62 years. In 1952 parliament reviewed the legislation and strengthened it in certain important particulars following the recommendation of the MacQuarrie committee, which confirmed the principles of the legislation as interpreted by the courts. To say that the courts are shirking their responsibilities in not interpreting legislation properly is therefore unfair to the courts and contrary to the record.

Of course, Mr. Ferguson is not only dissatisfied with the ability of the courts to interpret the legislation; he is also critical of the ability of parliament to understand and enact such legislation, because parliament is not composed largely of businessmen. The Winnipeg Free Press recently pointed out that the logical extension of this view would mean that in considering the Bank Act the house should largely be made up of bankers; and in considering the wheat agreement it should be made up largely of farmers.

Let us further examine the point on competition which has given the North American continent the highest standard of living today that has been enjoyed in the history of any nation at any time.

Those who would run after new gods have a very heavy responsibility. Competition is concerned, not only with the reasonableness of today's prices on the basis of today's costs, but also with the improvements in efficiency, and with innovations which make for lower costs and lower prices tomorrow. The public has the right to ask that business hustle, cut costs, and expand markets.

It is a fact that in some combine cases it is very difficult to prove that prices have been unduly increased, but it must be remembered that without today's competition tomorrow's costs and tomorrow's prices may be entirely different from what they will be if competition is maintained.

The present prosperity of Canada, and this is also true of the United States, is not the result of the theory that prices are reasonable, but rather due to the fact that they are the best prices that an active competition can produce. It is a fact that nearly all of the combines reported upon up to the present time are entirely or substantially price fixing combines. In all such cases the agreements in whatever form had this in common that the participants would not sell below the common prices that had been agreed upon. It would be naive indeed to believe that the effect and the purposes of such agreements were not to raise prices, and in many cases, of course, there was direct evidence of substantial increases as a result of agreements.

One wonders whether the opponents of the present legislation really believe the public would be satisfied with a system under which trade and industry were permitted the privilege of setting prices upon their own views as to what was best for the public. It seems to me that the public would have little confidence in such a system. They would soon demand that if prices were to be fixed by other than the free market they should be fixed by some government body upon which the consumer would have representation.

Are we to assume that business, big or little, welcomes consumer participation in price fixing? I doubt that very much.

Mr. Justice Schroeder, in delivering his reasons for judgment in the recent rubber case, gave a broad hint of what would be involved if the courts undertook to examine the "reasonableness" of prices, instead of restricting themselves to the question of the elimination of competition which is detrimental to the public. Mr. Justice Schroeder pointed out that if he were to discuss prices from this standpoint, and now I quote:

> . . . there should be satisfactory information as to the capital structure of the company and accurate information as to executive salaries, extraordinary expenses, advertising costs and like matters.

I think it is quite obvious that if the courts were to take the responsibility for saying that prices were reasonable, the courts would also have to take the responsibility of saying that executive salaries, dividends, reserves, expenditures including the very much cherished expense accounts, and so forth, were not unreasonable.

Would the opponents of the combines legislation really prefer this to a free enterprise system? It may serve their purpose in argument to call free enterprise "the law of the jungle", as the president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association did recently; but are they prepared to exchange free enterprise for unfree enterprise? I am sure they are not, and I find it difficult to understand what these persons who wish combines to be tolerated expect to gain, and particularly is it hard to understand what they expect to gain as against what they would throw away. They say they are not looking for the privilege of raising or fixing prices. They are only asking for the privilege of making some moderate rules on the stabilization of trade. Yet other industries have been able to carry on successfully on the basis of purely competitive practice and without any attempts at collusion. The persons to whom I have referred have never demonstrated why, in their particular industries, this cannot be done in the same manner. Are we to assume that, for this extremely doubtful privilege, they are willing to throw away the rule of law, whereby parliament lays down prohibitions against certain types of bad business behaviour in favour of a system that would, of necessity, involve a far-reaching interference of government in their businesses?

Despite vigorous denials, it cannot be too strongly emphasized that an invitation to pass upon the reasonableness of prices is an invitation to regulate. The opponents of the present legislation vigorously deny this and say that all they ask is the privilege of fixing by agreement certain conditions of trade, so long as they exercise that privilege in a moderate and reasonable fashion. How is the public going to be informed as to the moderation or the reasonableness of manufacturers or distributors on whose councils it has no representation? The public surely are not so gullible. They would demand and would be entitled to a measure of government regulation which could not and should not be denied to them.

The public have had their eyes opened recently. Their confidence in certain business leaders must have been severely shaken by the results of the rubber investigation and the electrical wire and cable investigation. It would seem to me that they would be much more reassured if men in the position of the president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association and others were to advise the members of the association that the Combines Investigation Act and related sections of the Criminal Code are the law of the land and are to be obeyed and that infringements of them are not merely technical offences.

It seems to me that men in the position of Mr. Ferguson are doing no service either to the public or to the people for whom they pretend to speak when they attempt to whitewash such offences and to lead the persons concerned to believe that they are being dealt with unjustly and that it may be only a matter of time until the legislation is changed. I am firmly of the view that Mr. Ferguson's and Mr. Fowler's associates should condition themselves for a long life with this act and its rigid enforcement.

Like many others, I am amazed at what has happened in the economic development of Canada during my lifetime. We have come a long, long way from the predominantly agrarian economy of fifty years ago. It is as though Canada had been almost standing still since the days of Cartier and Champlain and then, suddenly, in little more than half a century, had blossomed into a great industrial nation, second to none in productivity and prosperity. There is no magic formula for our growth. It was accomplished by the union of two great forces: hard work and freedom. Without both of those forces we would not be where we are today; and without both of them we shall not continue to thrive and prosper.

This country is founded on the bedrock of free enterprise. The president of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association may choose to call this "the law of the jungle". But does he really believe that it would be an improvement to permit the lions and the tigers to form a combine? I am certain that the other inhabitants of the jungle would not agree with him.

The aim of the combines legislation is to protect the public interest in free competition. Those who are trying shortcuts have no licence to exploit or to profiteer, nor will they be granted one. They are jeopardizing free enterprise from within by their greed and lack of initiative. Combines, if allowed a free hand, can become a new form of government at a different level. This result we cannot permit.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), in carrying out the wishes of parliament under the combines act, has shown high political courage. His outlook has been oriented to the present and the future, and he has not failed to understand the political climate of the day. His industry, sincerity and devotion to the public interest is demonstrated by his insistence that business relearn and apply the fundamental principles of competition to the home market and to the highly competitive foreign market. For that insistence he has earned the commendation of this house.

If we are not timid tomorrow and do not waver in applying this philosophy, the future will reward us by providing for this country greater markets and a yet higher standard of living for our people.

Mr. H. R. Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in the speech he delivered this afternoon the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) called on the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) and the federal government to have another conference with the ten premiers of the provinces of Canada. From the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition it was not clear just what purpose such a conference might serve. Surely it would be a waste of time for the premiers from nine of the provinces to sit in on a conference that was discussing the "beefs" of Premier Duplessis of Quebec. I therefore do not understand what was in the mind of the Leader of the Opposition, as to just what kind of conference it would be or what would be discussed. I think the most significant aspect of this discussion on dominion-provincial relations, particularly the action of Premier Duplessis in Quebec, is the silence of the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister has not yet, to my knowledge, made any public statement on this controversial matter. Because he is the Prime Minister and also because he is from the province of Quebec, I believe he owes it to the country to discuss this question on the floor of the house.

I am not opposed to the calling of a dominion-provincial conference; in fact I think a great deal of good might come from such a conference. But I believe its discussions should centre around problems that must be solved and solved soon. I think such a conference should consider what is to be done about the half a million unemployed in Canada. The federal government might tell such a conference what plans, if any, it has with respect to a shelf of public works. Such a conference might usefully spend its time discussing what is to be done with the huge surplus of grain and the crisis that now faces agricultural producers. I say that if such a conference takes place it should consider solutions to the very great economic problems facing the country at this time and should not merely consider the "beefs" of one particular provincial premier.

As time has passed during this session, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) has made it more clear all the time to anyone who knows anything about conditions in western Canada that agriculture there faces very serious difficulties indeed. He announced that a seven bushel per acre quota was the most that farmers could hope to deliver and, as a matter of fact, he said it was something that should make everybody happy. But it was the worst news that western Canada has had in many years. This is a return to the situation in 1929 when huge surpluses of grain were going unwanted. Our farmers have been good producers. Nature has been kind. They have produced good crops, but because of policies followed by the government they now find it impossible to market their crops.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce rises in his seat periodically and says that everything is fine, that farmers are earning large incomes and that sales are good, but these statements are not borne out by the facts. The wheat economy in Canada is in a crisis right now, and that crisis is spilling over into other fields. If you want to correct unemployment in Canada, put some purchasing power in the pockets of western farmers. Take steps to buy their grain, and in my opinion there will be no unemployment in a matter of a few short months.

Letters coming to western members of parliament in increasing numbers now show just how bad the situation is. It is true that so far in this crop year a substantial quantity of grain has been marketed, but the great bulk of that grain was marketed in the early part of the year and as the months have gone by less and less grain has been sold. I wonder what the members of the cabinet would think if they were faced with the situation pointed out to me by the secretary of a farmers' union lodge in my constituency, Mr. T. W. Bennett of Willow Bunch. He points out that at a recent meeting of the Willow Bunch lodge the cash position of the farmers of that district was surveyed and the farmers were found to be so short of cash that it was decided to send a delegation to the rural municipality to see if the municipal council would provide the farmers with relief fuel so that they could sow their crops this spring. I wonder what members of the cabinet would think if they were farmers, had 5,000 bushels of wheat in their granaries and had to go and beg two or three barrels of gasoline from somebody in order to sow their 1954 crop.

If the farmers can only deliver seven bushels per acre farmers will suffer and the merchants in the small communities will suffer with them. Sales are getting smaller as the months and weeks go by. Two years ago, according to the Wheat Review of March, 1952, importing countries had bought 213 million bushels of wheat out of a total of 233 million bushels fixed as Canada's quota under the international wheat agreement. Over 90 per cent of all the grain contracted for had been sold by March 18. One year ago sales had fallen off considerably. Out of a quota of 235 million bushels 159 million had been purchased as of March 24, or approximately two-thirds of the quota under the agreement. The latest figures for this year, which are up to March 30, show that of Canada's quota of 163 million bushels under the international wheat agreement only 71 million bushels have been sold. In other words, even though there are only four months left in the present crop year Canada has supplied only 44 per cent of its quota under the agreement.

Sales are falling off week by week, but what does the government do about it? Literally nothing. It has been announced that the United States government has made gifts of wheat to Japan in conjunction with purchases by Japan of United States military equipment. On March 11 I asked the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question in that regard and in reply to my question whether such a gift was being made the minister said, as found at page 2883 of Hansard:

> In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that it is intended to give 500,000 tons of wheat to Japan. In the second place, that would seem to be the business of the United States government regarding which that government would not welcome protests from other countries.

The minister had no knowledge of such a gift and said that no protests would be made. But, lo and behold, eight days later, in answer to a further question of mine on the same subject, he made this reply, as found at page 3148 of Hansard. Listen to this:

> The United States informed Canada some weeks ago that they considered the food situation in Japan would warrant a gift of wheat and barley under section 550, and asked if we had objections.

Eight days before the minister said that he had no knowledge, and on March 19 he said that they knew about this transaction weeks before. The minister cannot be right both times, and certainly on one occasion he was misleading the house and misleading the country.

Mr. Martin: I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was misleading the house. That is not parliamentary, and I am sure my hon. friend does not mean to leave that impression.

Mr. Argue: I meant exactly what I said. If I had meant to say anything else I would have said it. The minister has raised a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with respect to whether or not my statement that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was misleading the house is parliamentary. I submit to you that it is. It is my understanding of the rules that if I had said that the minister was deliberately attempting to mislead the house such a statement would not be in order. I leave the matter in the hands of the Speaker. I have no intention of withdrawing my remark unless the Speaker rules it unparliamentary, which I submit it is not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member must know that he cannot impute motives to another member of the house. When he says another member is misleading the house, he is imputing motives and I feel the hon. member should withdraw.

Mr. Argue: If my language was not strictly parliamentary, I withdraw that part of it that may be offensive to the rules of the house. And I leave those two statements side by side on the record, and say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) was wholly wrong on one occasion, and I also say that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is a sufficiently able man that he is not wrong very often without knowing it. Here are two statements that are completely opposite. Then he goes on to say:

> We said that we were negotiating with Japan and we had objections at that time.

Eight days before, no objection was to be made to the United States because, according to the minister, it would not be the right thing to do. Yet, eight days later he referred to objections made, and the sentence before that says "some weeks ago". I will ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) which is correct. Did the government know that Japan and the United States were undertaking such an arrangement weeks before March 19, or did the government know nothing about it, as was stated on March 11? In any case, a delegation went from Canada to the United States, and a very impressive delegation it was. There was the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner). They went to Washington to meet their counterparts in the United States government to discuss, I expect, the very important trade problems facing Canada and the United States, including the matter of surpluses. Then they came back to Canada and a statement was made concerning the results of that conference. That statement gave us absolutely no information. It was just words and said nothing from which anyone could derive any hope.

I should like to quote from an editorial appearing in the Western Producer of April 1 in which an excellent comment is made on the statement to which I have referred. I think this editorial states very well indeed the real facts regarding the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) was stopped yesterday from reading editorials. He was asked to express his own opinions. Of course I am always very interested in my hon. friend's opinions—more than I am in the opinions of the editorial writer in the Western Producer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member understands, of course, that he cannot read from a newspaper or other article commenting upon action taking place in the house.

Mr. Argue: Well, I shall not quarrel with Your Honour's ruling or with the objection taken by the Minister of Finance. I know of course that he does not like the editorial comment.

Mr. Abbott: I would rather have your comment.

Mr. Argue: So I shall paraphrase what the editorial says.

Mr. Abbott: Can you not speak for yourself?

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Argue: Well, if I could not, I judge I would be in about the same position as was the minister on the night he delivered his budget.

Now, the editorial states that after making due allowance for the vagueness—

Mr. Abbott: Are we obeying the rules, Mr. Speaker, by paraphrasing?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the interval I have found the citation to which I shall direct the attention of hon. members. Citation 306 in Beauchesne's second edition is as follows:

> It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

I hope the hon. member will abide by the rules.

Mr. Argue: I think I shall, Mr. Speaker. I should point out, however, that the statement was not made in this debate by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I submit that to quote from an editorial which comments on a statement made by a minister when the orders of the day are called is scarcely something that reflects on proceedings in the house. But if the reading of an editorial of this kind is offensive to the Minister of Finance, and if he is such a tender person that the reading of an editorial would bother him—

Mr. Abbott: No, not tender.

Mr. Argue:—then I shall not read the editorial. I shall refer however to some of the things the editorial says.

Mr. Abbott: Make the statements your own.

Mr. Argue: The editor says, in so many words: Here were four big guns of the Canadian cabinet who went to Washington. They laboured hard and long and they brought forth a small and puny mouse.

Mr. Abbott: Very original, that!

Mr. Argue: Well, perhaps it may not be very original, particularly when one has been a member in the house for some years, with the government opposite in power. That government is most prolific in having given birth to innumerable mice over the years. And this is certainly one of them. However I wish to thank the Minister of Finance for the help he is giving me in making my comments.

Mr. Abbott: Always willing to oblige.

Mr. Argue: The editorial says that the whole statement is reminiscent of the thirties, and that the government here is just as unable now to cope with surpluses as was the government in the thirties. The editorial goes on to say that—

Mr. Abbott: Oh, oh—the editorial again.

Mr. Argue: Does the minister want to object? I am paraphrasing it.

Mr. Abbott: Oh, I see.

Mr. Argue: I am not quoting it. The editor goes on to say that surely this is something that should be corrected, and that it is a reflection upon Canada and the government when the government cannot solve the problem of the huge surpluses of food in a world that is hungry.

Anyway, we saw the four cabinet ministers going to Washington. And when the Minister of Trade and Commerce made his statement one of the phrases he used—and I am paraphrasing again, so that it will not offend the minister—

Mr. Abbott: You do not have to paraphrase that.

Mr. Argue: Anyway they said that they were advancing on a bold front.

Mr. Abbott: A wide front.

Mr. Argue: I would like to know what was accomplished in Washington, because if anything was accomplished we were not told about it. And how would the government expect to accomplish very much in going to Washington? The Minister of Trade and Commerce gets up day after day in the house and says that everything is fine, that markets are good, that the economy is buoyant, that farm income is at the highest peak and that the outlook is bright. Then he goes down to Washington and says, "We are having all kinds of trouble; would you help us out?" I can just imagine someone quoting some of the statements of the Minister of Trade and Commerce back to him. Then the ministers decide that in order that they might come back with at least a mouse they should decide on agreeing to issue a most innocuous press release that says absolutely nothing.

Here is a situation fraught with great danger for Canada. The over-all surplus of wheat on February 1 in the four major exporting countries was 1,907 million bushels. The Minister of Agriculture says: "Well, the thing to do with this big surplus—and of course the farmers will do it—is to turn some of it into meat." Every economist in the Department of Agriculture right now is advising the minister that the price of hogs is going to go down very drastically this fall, with the larger number of hogs coming on the market.

Would the Minister of Agriculture suggest that the farmers feed more cattle? In 1951 Canada's cattle population was 8,400,000. Last year it was up to 9,800,000. The cattle population of this continent has increased from 90·4 million to a present 105 million head, the largest number of cattle in the history of North America. Cattle numbers have gone up tremendously in the last two years, and the price of cattle has fallen. What is going to happen? What would happen if farmers fed increased quantities of grain to livestock? I know what would happen, and the Minister of Agriculture must realize what would happen. There would be another further drastic drop in cattle and hog prices.

The debates centring around the export of wheat today remind me of the debates that took place in this house in 1946, 1947 and 1948, when C.C.F. members were warning the government that they were losing the British market for Canadian bacon, cheese and other farm products. What were we told? We were told that it was nonsense; that we were not losing the British market. Well, history now shows that the members of the C.C.F. were right. The British market has been lost as a direct result of the economic policies of the Minister of Finance of this country. And markets will continue to be lost so long as we demand hard currency dollars that our customers have not got.

The Minister of Finance has his ideas of finance and trade. I have different ideas. My ideas are just simple ones. I believe that when one nation has huge surplus quantities of food and people in other nations are hungry and suffering from malnutrition, it is our duty and their duty to take whatever financial and other steps that may be necessary to move our surplus food to feed people who need it. The people in the United Kingdom could use Canadian food.

Two-thirds of the people of the world are hungry. We have so much food on this continent that farmers are fearful of the future, and yet this government does not make a single, financial move to get rid of any real part of those burdensome surpluses. Oh, they went to the United States and held a big conference and came back. They say they are advancing on a bold front, but we are not told where they are going. The Minister of Finance I suppose gave part of the broad advance in his budget the other night, and that was a depression budget if I ever read one because in it was one very significant statement. The minister said: "I am basing my budget on the same gross national product this year as last year." The year before 1953 Canada's real production went up 4 per cent. The year before that Canada's real production—

Mr. Abbott: It was 5 per cent.

Mr. Argue: —went up 5 per cent.

Mr. Abbott: It was 5 per cent last year.

Mr. Argue: All right, 5 per cent last year. The minister's statement makes the position even worse than I was going to paint it. The Canadian people are capable—and I put this to the minister—once again in 1954 of increasing the real production by 5 per cent, but the government will do nothing to lay plans for such an increase in production. And therefore the 5 per cent increase in income that should result from an increase in our population and improvement in technology is being denied the people of Canada because steps are not taken to put 500,000 people back to work. Steps are not being taken to put money into the pockets of agricultural producers. This government apparently has learned nothing in the last twenty years.

Farm income went down 11 per cent in 1952, went down 14 per cent in 1953 and it is going to go down a further large percentage this year. That drop in farm income, unless it is arrested, is going to spill over into the rest of the economy and is going to have very serious economic repercussions.

The minister, in his budget—part of his great advance on a broad economic front—made some changes; he took off some taxes. The minister can say that half a million unemployed as a result of tax reduction on furs can now buy their wives mink coats a little cheaper. I suppose the unemployed can now buy a bag of golf sticks just a little bit cheaper. They have lots of time to play golf. They can go and get fishing equipment a little cheaper. They are not making any money but they may be able to get the equipment on credit. They will not be charged quite so much, and they can go fishing, too. This is a black budget; it is a depression budget, and in parts of Canada, particularly western Canada, the farmers are not waiting for a recession. They are not hoping against a recession or a depression; for them it is right here. They have no cash. True, they have all kinds of wheat and still their families must go without many of the necessities of life.

Then the government has another plan on this bold, broad economic advance. They have a Colombo plan to help feed the people of underdeveloped countries. It is part of a program to raise living standards in southeast Asia. Canada's contribution under this government to feed people in southeast Asia, to lift their living standards, is the magnificent one of less than the cost of a postage stamp for each person living in southeast Asia. That is not a contribution that is worthy of the generosity of the Canadian people. The only reason Canadians are not contributing more to help underdeveloped countries is the lack of imagination, lack of leadership on the part of this Liberal government. People in the world are starving and the Canadian farmer has so much wheat he does not know what to do with it. He cannot get any money and the Minister of Finance rises in his place and says: Well, the real production is going to stay the same; I am going to make a few insignificant changes in income tax; that is all. He should have reissued the budget of a year ago. There would not be too much difference between then and now.

Unless something is done soon we are not only going to have a reduction in the standard of living for large sections of the Canadian economy, but we are likely to lose some of the friends that we have in countries of the world if we do not come to their assistance. I believe we should make a real contribution, not a trifling, stingy, insignificant one of $25 million. Resolutions come to my desk from church organizations, from clubs of all kinds. I believe the Canadian people almost unanimously would support a very much larger contribution to underdeveloped countries. There is a place where we could get a lot of money to provide food, technical personnel and capital equipment to help underdeveloped countries.

Mr. Crestohl: Will the hon. member permit a question? In what way would the hon. member suggest that the people of Canada should be taxed in order to be able to make a more generous contribution to the Colombo plan?

Mr. Argue: That is a very important question! It shows the mentality of the Liberal party. It is no different from the party that was in power from 1930 to 1935. We have unemployed, and there is too much food in the country, and when some reforms or some expenditures are suggested they say: Well, who are you going to tax? All right; who are you going to tax? You can tax big business and raise the tax on corporation profits.

Mr. Abbott: Put a special tax on members of parliament.

Mr. Argue: Hear, hear; and raise succession duties. Then, if there is not—

An hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Argue: I am replying to a question, now. If there is not sufficient from that source the government might use the policy it used in the early years of the war and put our unemployed resources to work, namely by an expansion of the money supply. That is not going to hurt anybody of whom I am aware. I am willing to make a little wager with the Minister of Finance that the result of his budget this year will be a deficit, unless of course he does a lot of manipulation with the budget figures.

Mr. Abbott: You had better cover up there.

Mr. Argue: Then I shall suggest another place from which the money might come, and once again you would not have to dig into the pockets of the little taxpayer. I suggest the time has now arrived when the government should consider a substantial scaling down in its estimates for the Department of National Defence. I feel that one hydrogen bomb probably has as much offensive power in it as a billion dollars in the Department of National Defence. I do not know, because I am not a military expert. I believe, however, that Canada should take $500 million of the amount in its defence department now and spend that money on raising the living standards of the people in Asia, South America and Africa. We would then be making our greatest contribution towards peace.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): It is my purpose today, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the need for a Canadian royal commission on communism. Some hon. members will have noted that on February 11, 1954, there appeared upon the order paper a resolution in my name calling for the immediate appointment of such a royal commission. This resolution came upon the order paper so late in the year it has been impossible for me, under the rules, to discuss it until the coming of the budget debate. In order to clear the way for me to debate the resolution I asked on April 9 that it be withdrawn from the order paper. This was done.

As the resolution stood as No. 18 upon the order paper of April 9, it read as follows:

Mr. Blackmore—The following proposed resolution:—That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to the immediate appointment of a royal commission to study and report upon the whole matter of communism as it affects Canada, to determine and make known:

1. What is the basic origin of communism?
2. What are the techniques communism has employed?
3. What is the degree of success communism has attained in Canada?
4. What are the possible means available to Canada of combating communism in Canada?

As I suggested that resolution on February 10, clause 1 read as follows:

Whether, and to what extent, communism is basically an imperialist conspiracy of eastern European reds of an ethnic grouping possessed of Mongol and Turkic affinities—a Mongolian-Turkic-Red conspiracy that has, from its beginning, aimed aggressively at actual physical invasion, conquest and enslavement of America; a conspiracy that has employed and still employs the various brands of socialistic and communistic ideology merely as a sort of sheep's-clothing disguise to conceal the real facts beneath communism.

The appropriate parliamentary officials, in the interests of our rules, advised me to modify my clause 1 to render it more nearly in order, and the result was the form clause 1 has taken on the order paper. This clause 1, as originally suggested in my resolution, constituted one of my main reasons for placing my resolution on the order paper. I am firmly of the belief that if the Canadian people had any idea just who originated communism, and where it came from and how it was the first agents were able to go to Russia and begin the job in Petrograd, they would make short work of all communists and communist sympathizers in Canada.

One of the two main matters I desire to consider today is the suggestion that communism is basically an imperialist conspiracy of Turko-Mongolian-Red plotters seeking to rule the world. The evidence at my disposal leads me to believe that it is just that, and all of that. If I have time today I shall go into the matter in some detail. The other of the two matters I wish to consider today has to do with clause 2 of my resolution, namely the techniques communism has employed. The illustration of communist techniques to which I aim to call attention is that of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek, and how communism has endeavoured to destroy that great leader, not only at home but abroad. Communism is endeavouring right now to do that in Canada.

I propose to ask three questions concerning Chiang Kai-shek which are briefly as follows: First, did Chiang Kai-shek throughout world war II hold two million Japanese soldiers against the eastern China coast? Second, did he during the same period successfully hold the Chinese communists in check? Third, was Chiang Kai-shek driven from the Chinese mainland through communist spy activities within the American administration? The answer to each of those three questions is an emphatic yes. It can be proven beyond the shadow of a doubt, and has already been proven by the great committees investigating in the United States.

The communist organizations of America have dinned into Canadian ears the propaganda that Chiang Kai-shek was corrupt, ineffectual and a totalitarian. To help Canadians begin an appropriate review of their ideas as regards Chiang, I propose to ask the following three questions in respect of Chiang Kai-shek's world war II activities, and I propose to answer each question as I ask it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it being five o'clock the house will proceed to the discussion of private and public bills.

PRIVATE BILL

EASTERN TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. 394, respecting Eastern Telephone and Telegraph Company—Mr. Balcom—Mr. Applewhaite in the chair.

On clause 1—Capital stock.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask whether any changes were made in this bill when it was before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines?

Mr. Balcom: There was no change made, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The items under private and public bills having been exhausted the house will proceed with the business interrupted at five o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Question No. 1. Is it not a fact that throughout world war II Chiang Kai-shek held a powerful Japanese army of two million men engaged along the eastern coast of China, thereby enormously contributing to our victory? The answer, emphatically, is yes. Chiang did hold two million Japanese engaged along the eastern coast of China throughout world war II. Proof of that is to be found in abundance in Admiral William D. Leahy's book "I Was There", New York, 1950, at page 202.

[Mr. Blackmore.]

This is cited by John T. Flynn in his book "While You Slept", New York, 1952, page 188. Flynn cites this fact in order to substantiate the statement he had made at page 36 of "While You Slept" in the following words:

> Chiang's country was invaded by the Japanese. He did, as Admiral Leahy pointed out, hold a huge army of two million Japanese soldiers in China while we fought in the Pacific.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that that evidence pretty well disposes of that question.

Now, question No. 2. Is it not equally a fact that Chiang successfully held at bay the Russian Chinese communist fifth column armies right up to the close of world war II? The answer, once more, is emphatically yes. Chiang held the communists off all during world war II. What is the proof? There is pretty strong evidence in the dispatches of United States Ambassador Leighton Stuart. Dr. Stuart's dispatch of July 1, 1947, warned the United States government that the Chinese nationalist troops lacked arms and ammunition, the arms and ammunition, by the way, it was the business of the United States to supply to Chiang Kai-shek under the arrangement they had with him. Dr. Stuart's dispatch of September 20, 1947, warned again of the ill effects upon Chiang's forces resulting from the failure of United States financial and military assistance.

In his dispatch of February 5, 1948, he warned again of the dangerous lack of American aid resulting in disaffection among Chiang's forces.

All three dispatches were sent after the end of world war II and after the United States had undertaken to give assistance to Chiang Kai-shek. Ambassador Stuart's dispatch of March 17, 1948 reads as follows, and I am reading from page 39 of Freda Utley's "The China Story". Freda Utley is one of the best authorities on China that can be found anywhere. Everything she says is thoroughly documented. But here is the quotation from page 39:

> In their despair all groups blame America—

Ambassador Stuart is speaking of the Chinese.

> —for urging structural changes . . . or reforms which they feel they themselves would carry out if their immediate internal problems were not so acute, while America still delays the long promised aid upon which the survival of democratic institutions depends.

Again on March 31, 1948, two years after the end of world war II, he sent this dispatch:

> The Chinese people do not want to become communists, yet they see the tide of communism running irresistibly onward. In the midst of this chaos and inaction the Generalissimo stands out as the only moral force capable of action.

I believe that will effectively substantiate the fact that Chiang held the Chinese communists at bay all during world war II. Anyone who required more proof than that would be most unusual.

Question No. 3. Is it not further a fact that Chiang was driven from the Chinese mainland largely if not entirely through the meddling and treasonable manoeuvring of a conspiracy of communist spies operating in the United States through agents infiltrated into the United States administration?

I spoke about this the other night and I pointed out how Lauchlin Currie, for example, countermanded the order by General Eisenhower that certain supplies should be sent to Chiang Kai-shek. I would emphasize that the answer to this third question I have posed is again positively yes.

The United States caused the fall of Chiang Kai-shek. In this connection at least five considerations require to be taken into account, all of which serve to show the truth of this declaration. The first one is the evidence of witnesses who have testified to this. May I read again from "While You Slept" at page 15. Some may wonder why I quote John T. Flynn's "While You Slept". It is because it is a perfectly documented book. The truth of everything it says has been established over and over again in committees of the very highest degree of integrity and reliability. But this is what Flynn states at page 15:

> The only difference between Russia's war on China and her war on Korea was that in Korea we aided and armed the South Koreans to fight communism, while in China, incredible as it may seem, we actually told the Chinese government to do what Russia wanted—unite with the communists. When Chiang Kai-shek refused, we disarmed him.

Again, at page 185 of his masterful book he states:

> The dark curtain that, with our consent, was rung down over our luckless allies in Europe—Poland and Czechoslovakia and other little countries—has now fallen on China. And this was made possible wholly because of Russia's allies—conscious and unconscious—in America, in our government and even in our state department.
>
> There were traitors in the state department and in posts of power in many departments of the government. Many of the men who are now being hustled off to jail were exercising a controlling influence at those key positions where decisions are made.

There can be hardly any doubt after considering these assertions. The other night I quoted to some extent from a letter by Walter S. Robertson dated October 8, 1949 and addressed to the Hon. Philip Jessup. After Hon. Walter S. Robertson had been eighteen months in the finest position that one could imagine in China to learn the truth, these are his words:

> . . . in my opinion at least, it can be fairly demonstrated that the confused and confusing inconsistencies of our own vacillating policy, however well meaning it might have been, contributed directly and indirectly to the debacle which engulfed him and his government, our ally, and brought to power the communists, our long avowed enemies.

I come now to the second consideration. Roosevelt's behaviour at Yalta shows completely how the United States wrecked Chiang Kai-shek. Although Japan previously had already offered to surrender before Yalta, and although Roosevelt knew this, yet at Yalta Roosevelt, advised by the communist spy Alger Hiss, signed an agreement with Stalin and without the knowledge of Chiang Kai-shek. Pertinent portions from this agreement are as follows. I quote from page 37 of a document which I have in my hand called "China in Stalin's Grand Strategy". It is a document reprinted from Foreign Affairs, an American quarterly review, October, 1950. It is a document by Hu Shih, who was the Chinese ambassador to the United States in 1939 and certainly a man whose word we would not question, I fancy. Here are the quotations from the Yalta agreement:

> The leaders of the three great powers—the Soviet union, the United States of America and Great Britain—have agreed that in two or three months after Germany has surrendered and the war in Europe has terminated, the Soviet union shall enter into the war against Japan on the side of the allies on condition that:

I skip paragraphs (1), (2) and (2)(a), and quote subparagraphs (b) and (c) of (2):

> (b) The commercial port of Dairen shall be internationalized, the pre-eminent interests of the Soviet union in the port being safeguarded and the lease of Port Arthur as a naval base of the U.S.S.R. restored.
>
> (c) The Chinese Eastern Railroad and the South-Manchurian Railroad which provides an outlet to Dairen shall be jointly operated by the establishment of a joint Soviet-Chinese company, it being understood that the pre-eminent interests of the Soviet union shall be safeguarded and that China shall retain full sovereignty in Manchuria.

Then paragraph (3) is as follows:

> (3) The Kurile islands shall be handed over to the Soviet union.
>
> It is understood that the agreement concerning Outer-Mongolia and the ports and railroads referred to above will require concurrence of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. The president will take measures in order to obtain this concurrence on advice from Marshal Stalin.
>
> The heads of the three great powers have agreed that these claims of the Soviet union shall be unquestionably fulfilled after Japan has been defeated.
>
> For its part the Soviet union expresses its readiness to conclude with the national government of China a pact of friendship and alliance between the U.S.S.R. and China in order to render assistance to China with its armed forces for the purpose of liberating China from the Japanese yoke.

Anyone who studies those words and remembers that Chiang Kai-shek knew nothing about it will stand astounded and horrified. The results flowing from that agreement are dreadful to think about as far as China is concerned.

This agreement cleared the way for Russia to take over Manchuria, which she later did by the most reprehensible kind of treachery based upon this Yalta agreement. This agreement also cleared the way for Russia, by similar treachery, to deliver Manchuria into the hands of the Chinese communist Red army so that it might serve that same Chinese Red army first as a secure retreat in which to recuperate and to accumulate numbers; second, as a source of supplies from Russia and from Manchuria itself which has thirty-three million people; and third, as a base from which to attack Chiang.

This agreement at the same time directly deprived Chiang Kai-shek of the resources and industrial potential of Manchuria which would have come to him automatically upon the surrender of Japan. This agreement in time resulted in the Chinese communist army being able to overcome North China proper where lay China's only considerable industrial strength, thereby depriving Chiang Kai-shek of that important asset.

I now come to the third main consideration. Roosevelt at Yalta further stacked the cards against Chiang Kai-shek by promising Stalin to provide him with fuel, transport and equipment for 1,250,000 men, 3,000 tanks, and 5,000 planes, thus giving Stalin an army of 1,250,000 men right on the borders of Manchuria, just exactly where he wanted them, thereby enabling him to seize Manchuria just as soon as Japan went out. This is clearly established in "While You Slept" at page 149. For a full account of the conference—and I am saying this for those out in the country who may wish to go into this matter in a scholarly manner—see "The Roosevelt Myth" by John T. Flynn, New York, 1948.

I come now to the fourth consideration. The United States further hurt Chiang through the mischief wrought by General George Marshall. Freda Utley's "The China Story", page 9 down to page 12, shows this in great detail. I do not propose to quote it. I merely am telling where it is to be found so that anyone who wishes to look up the matter can satisfy himself completely.

The fifth consideration is this: Finally the United States wrecked the hopes of Chiang through the havoc wrought by United States failure to deliver military supplies to China. The whole of this story in enough detail is to be found in "The China Story" by Freda Utley, pages 34 to 41.

In my opinion, what everybody should bear in mind in this connection is that, as I pointed out, Japan had offered to surrender before the three powers ever went to Yalta, and Roosevelt knew this. Yet he signed this outrageous agreement turning over China to Russia. There will be those who will wonder how it can be proved that Roosevelt knew that Japan had offered to surrender. The evidence can be found in "The China Story" by Freda Utley, at page 263, wherein she tells in a note of the testimony of General Bonner Fellers, which is corroborated by Rear Admiral Ellis M. Zacharias in "Behind Closed Doors"—New York, 1950—page 63.

So much for Chiang Kai-shek and whether or not he was worthy of all the opprobrium against him which has been scattered so liberally throughout this nation and throughout the United States only by the communists and communist sympathizers.

I turn now to the other matter which I wish to discuss, namely the suggestion that communism is basically a Turko-Mongolian-Red imperialist conspiracy determined to enslave the whole world. The communist organization has cleverly contrived to delude people into believing the tragic fallacy that communism in Russia or elsewhere was and is a revolution, a successful popular uprising to throw down tyranny, oppression and reaction; a revolt of the so-called proletariat against the bourgeoisie, against capitalism and special privilege as such. All men who are adequately informed know that communism began through a cunningly-conceived, deeply-rooted, widely-ramifying conspiracy of certain top-ranking people of the world; a diabolical plot aimed at physical or political conquest of the world and the abject subjugation of all mankind except a small specially privileged class.

Mr. Philpott: Why bring the Turks into it? They have got nothing to do with it.

Mr. Blackmore: If we could get a royal commission established we could bring a good deal of evidence to show that Turkic people do have a lot to do with it—or did have. This is one reason why we need a royal commission. It would be impossible to present all the pertinent evidence in any number of speeches on the floor of the house. That evidence has to be produced, before a judicious adequately qualified commission.

Mr. Philpott: Surely my hon. friend knows that the Turks and the Mongols were the bitterest enemies down through history. No two peoples ever fought each other like the Turks and the Mongols.

Mr. Blackmore: I have never said for a minute that it is the Turks. I have said it is the Turko-Mongols, and in fact the very words in the resolution show that there is a people having Turkic affinities and Mongol affinities, a red people. Who these red people are, how they come to have Turkic affinities, how they come to have Mongol affinities, can be shown before a royal commission if we have a chance.

Mr. Ellis: Tell us now.

Mr. Blackmore: Now, the suggestion couched in those words differs fantastically from what Canadians have been led to believe, differs so fantastically that hundreds of thousands of Canadians will condemn my suggestion without even stopping to listen or even think—there is evidence of that right in the house—much less to study and ponder. The great problem then is: Where shall we turn for authorities? Whom shall we believe? May we reason upon this matter briefly?

Lenin said:

> We must be ready to employ trickery, deceit, law-breaking, withholding and concealing truth.

This quotation is taken from Lenin's "The Infantile Disease of Leftism". The translation is found in Sir Norman Angell's "The Steep Places", published by Harper in 1948, at page 73. I am quoting from "China in Stalin's Grand Strategy", page 13 of the pamphlet published from the article in Foreign Affairs. That would pretty well tie it down, I think. In the light of that statement of Lenin, I ask every Canadian: Can you possibly believe any account coming from any communist or communist controlled or influenced medium of information? Certainly no Canadian safely can, and no patriotic Canadian will.

As recently as 1952 the story has been told and flawlessly proven, an utterly dreadful and amazing story, step by step and person by person, of how the American communist organization took over America's most influential information media, the radio, movies, magazines and books, and through them persuaded United States leaders to support the communist plan to turn over China, Formosa and Korea to the Soviets of Russia. That sounds almost impossible to believe, but I hold in my hand a book, "While You Slept" by John T. Flynn, and I invite any member of the house or any person in the country to read that book through carefully page by page right to the end and then question its authenticity. It establishes beyond question the truth of what I have just said.

Obviously the tremendous fact established in "While You Slept" is that communist organization agents or dupes in the United States were able to use the radio, movies, magazines and books to establish in American minds any idea or prejudice they chose to establish. This, as everyone must recognize, is an utterly appalling fact; and when you remember that it applies also to Canada it is for us even a more appalling fact. This book most clearly warns us what we must not believe.

Bearing all this in mind, let us turn again to seek for authorities. Located in the Empire State building, New York, is an organization called the national economic council. This council is a non-profit, non-partisan, membership corporation organized in 1930 under New York state law. Twice a month the economic council issues what it calls the "Economic Council Letter". These letters are generally accepted as being highly reliable.

Council letter No. 332, dated April 1, 1954, which I hold in my hand, tells us definitely the following facts:

1. The Soviet government is nothing else than a gang of plotters that succeeded in making itself master of Petrograd in 1917. I quote briefly from the publication:

> The U.S.S.R. is not a world power in the sense we have always thought—a government naturally looking out for its own interests but maintaining certain general standards of honour and integrity in international dealings. Rather, this Soviet government is nothing else than a gang of plotters who succeeded in the confused days of 1917 in making itself master of Petrograd . . . and extending that mastery to all Russia.

2. This gang of plotters, with the astounding help of the United States, has made itself master of most of the Eurasian continent and threatens so to spread until it will subjugate the whole world. Here is a brief quotation:

> There is not a country in the world, including the United States, that is not threatened with subjugation.

I call on the people of this nation to contemplate with the greatest of soberness that statement coming from such a source.

3. This gang of plotters down to and through their successors today have said consistently that they will not stop until they have subjugated the whole world. May I quote briefly from the publication again?

> They have said that communism and capitalism cannot live side by side on the same planet.

What does that mean? That means that Canada must come under them; it can have no other meaning at all.

4. Communism is against all religion, especially Christianity. I quote briefly again:

> Communism is against all religion, especially Christianity. If Soviet Russia is successful, in the end Christianity will be largely wiped out. . .

5. The Lusk committee of the New York state legislature in 1919 made an investigation of communism and, reading again from the economic council letter, "its four-volume report has long been a classic". If this organization knows about that report it probably knows a good deal.

6. Soviet Russia has been at war with us ever since 1919 and is today. I quote again:

> Soviet Russia is at war with us today. She has been ideologically at war with us ever since 1919. She was secretly our enemy even between 1941 and 1945, when we considered her "our ally". During that time she was taking advantage of our generosity, or stupidity—
>
> Just as she is today.
>
> —and was including in her requisitions for aid, designs and materials which she intended to use in building up her post-war military potential to destroy us later.

This letter supports every suggestion I have made as to the basic nature of communism, as to its being an imperialistic plot of eastern Europeans, of Turko-Mongolian reds, except that it has not mentioned the ethnic characteristics of the original plotters.

May I read a very short quotation from the introduction to a recent book published in 1952 and written by a man named Prychodko. It is entitled, "One of the Fifteen Million". The introduction is written by Dr. Watson Kirkconnell, president of Acadia University. This is what Dr. Kirkconnell says:

> This is a terrible book, but it is the truth that is terrible and it must be faced, for the martyrdom of human freedom in the U.S.S.R. is a martyrdom that the geopolitical planners in the Kremlin intend for us as well. Russian slave camps for Canadians in Canada, manned by Russian police, are the objective of Stalin and his power-hungry agents among us. Every horror described in this book will be duplicated on Canadian soil if communist plans prevail.

That was the president of Acadia University. I do not see how we can lightly disregard such solemn statements.

What evidence can be adduced to indicate that those original communist plotters were Turko-Mongolian reds?

Fortunately for us there was also held in 1919 by the United States a rather thorough investigation into the basic origin of communism. The evidence that was accumulated from the many sources considered would, I feel certain, satisfy any body of judicious men and women, sitting as a royal commission investigating the facts, that the gang of plotters who succeeded in the confused days of 1917 in making itself master of Petrograd (1) was of eastern European origin; (2) left the United States of America and went directly to Petrograd, evidently financed by a powerful organization of individuals, many of whom were in the United States; (3) conquered Petrograd by sordid strategy. That evidence would, moreover, show that those eastern Europeans were reds having Turkic and Mongol ethnic affinities.

Mr. Speaker, I think there is no need to say anything more concerning this matter. Surely this evidence ought to be sufficient to convince anyone who is at all interested in the welfare of this nation that we should have set up the most capable commission possible to determine all the facts of every kind concerning communism, to learn all that is being done in Canada, how it is being done and by whom.

We know virtually nothing about all this. We are the victims of skilful propaganda originated by men around us who pretend to be the very best kind of Canadians—just as did those men in the United States such as Owen Lattimore, who travelled about in morning clothes, if you please, and I suppose with monocles. Because they were such nice men no one would have suspected that they were plotting to turn the United States into the hands of those who control Russia! But that is what they were doing. There were Alger Hiss, John Stewart Service, John Carter Vincent—many of them, whose records are now established beyond question.

How do we know what is going on in Canada? I think the evidence that things are going wrong in Canada is practically overwhelming. And I submit, with all the earnestness of which my being is capable, that the sooner we can establish a royal commission on communism in Canada to sit day in and day out, for months and months, to get at the facts, the sooner we shall discharge our responsibility as members of parliament representing the people of Canada in these most trying times.

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have something to say at this time, because I feel the house has been honoured by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in the presentation of his budget. I think it is a good after-election budget. It is a good budget for the present time, and for at least two reasons: First, the minister follows in the footsteps of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) when he fights and struggles for a united Canada. There can be no doubt about that. His plan is that he will stick to the constitution of Canada, no matter what anyone says, and will say to any province: Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther.

I had an interview with a successful businessman of Ottawa and, after reading the budget, his conception of it, in the words of Agrippa, was: Almost thou persuadest me to be a Liberal. Of course the word used originally was not "Liberal".

When the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) was speaking this afternoon I was intensely interested when he referred to the late Angus L. Macdonald who, as was well said this afternoon, was a great Canadian. I would say further that he was a great Christian Canadian. But I was disappointed when the Leader of the Opposition said that Quebec does not stand alone in this respect. Then he proceeded to read what he had said in the legislature in Toronto, and I think he convinced us that Ontario stood with Quebec in this issue.

I will say for the late Angus L. Macdonald that he agreed with the Minister of Finance and was premier in one of the nine provinces that co-operated. I believe that showed the wisdom of this former member of the house.

While it may be true that at one time Ontario stood with Quebec in this issue, it does not stand in that position today because the government of that province has entered into a co-operative agreement with the dominion. Quebec stands alone. I did admire the Leader of the Opposition when he stood in the house and championed the cause of his friend. I do not know whether I am safe in saying that they are kindred spirits.

The fact is, however, that Quebec now stands alone, and I am sorry that it does, because I think the citizens of that province compare favourably with those of any other part of Canada.

Mr. Dufresne: That is the best part of your speech.

Mr. McIvor: However they do not all agree with the premier of that province.

Another feature of the budget I like is that, notwithstanding the fact that we are likely to have a new pension scheme for the handicapped, there was no increase in taxation.

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough): That is only a promise.

Mr. McIvor: There was no increase in taxation, notwithstanding the increase in the indemnities of the members of both houses of parliament, and in the salaries of civil servants. There was no increase in taxation despite the fact that the St. Lawrence seaway has been promised, and the work is likely to begin this year. Not only that, but there is a decrease in taxation to the extent of about $30 million.

I know there are hon. members in the house—and I agree to some extent with what they say—who say that we should be giving, giving, giving. But we cannot keep on giving without getting. We must have taxation, and I must congratulate the minister upon not having increased taxation at this time.

The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) spoke about combines; the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Blackmore) spoke about communism and the need for a royal commission. I, too, have a pet subject, and I should like for a few moments to place before the house a cure for strikes. I agree with the Ottawa Journal when it says this:

> The right to strike is a vital right; one of the democratic freedoms. If there be those to argue otherwise they are but blind reactionaries, people who would repeal the twentieth century.

The outstanding right of labour is the right to strike, just as industry has the right to shut down. My first cure or suggestion comes from a friend in Fort William, Edgar Rutledge. His suggestion is that a committee be chosen like a jury, with rights of a jury. If the number of people affected is small, the committee might be smaller, but he suggests that a committee be formed, four from the dominion government, four from industry and four from labour. These people would elect their own chairmen and their judgment would be final, but they should not be tied in to any particular political party. They should be free. I notice that in the British house a formula to settle British industrial disputes without recourse to strikes is the aim of Sir Walter Monckton. I hold in my hand a long article which I shall not read. They emphasize the same thing, that it is possible to set up a committee to settle industrial disputes. My friend, Mr. Rutledge, says that they should have the right of a jury. Human beings are human beings, and I do not know how this would work.

My second cure for strikes is the right to share in the profits. This summer I received from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg)—and I was grateful to him for giving me the finding of his research workers—a letter, as follows:

> I promised to write you further on the subject of profit sharing plans in Canada.
>
> Although at present there is not much statistical data on the extent of such plans in Canada today, our economics and research branch is planning to include a question on the subject in its annual survey of working conditions this coming April.
>
> There is an organization known as the council of profit sharing industries, Akron, Ohio, which has been active in encouraging the formation of profit sharing plans both in Canada and the United States. Information from this group on plans affecting Canada was published several months ago and indicated that 50 Canadian firms were members of the organization and that they employed 30,000 workers.

There are two of them in Fort William. I continue:

In the United States, there are reported to be over 3,000 plans in operation.

Another group which had done considerable work in this field is the profit sharing foundation, Long Island city, New York. This group has carried out several studies lately to indicate the soundness of plans now in effect in the United States. It has studied plans which have been discontinued, as well as those which have been successful. In the former case, they have come up with the conclusion that in 40 per cent of the cases there were no profits to share and a further 30 per cent were the result of changes in company policy resulting from new ownership. In other words, the foundation's studies would seem to indicate that the numerous instances of discontinuance of plans do not reflect on the essential soundness of the profit-sharing principle.

Generally speaking, there is considerable difference of opinion as to the value of profit sharing. It has been stated that labour organizations have opposed such plans. However, many of the successful plans now in effect involve unions and probably reflect an improved confidence in management policy by the unions involved. It is perhaps true that profit sharing has succeeded most often where the over-all labour policy of the company has been reasonably good. Where good relations do not exist, profit sharing is fairly generally looked upon as a doubtful means of encouraging employee loyalty and higher productivity. For example, an international labour organization study has advocated that profit sharing plans should be the last rather than the first step in any program aimed at improving labour relations.

In recent years, the emphasis has probably changed a bit from strict profit sharing to the other area you have mentioned in your letter, of allowing workers to have a greater participation in management. This concept is that worker participation may bring profits to their greatest possible level with worker distribution either through a profit sharing plan or a fairly generous wage policy. For example, labour-management production committees are one means of encouraging discussion of problems in an effort to reach solutions which will be of mutual benefit. The Department of Labour has been active in encouraging the formation of these committees. Today there are over 975 such committees in Canada, of which the department has a record.

I appreciate the Minister of Labour's co-operation. I am convinced, Mr. Speaker, that this plan may work with single industries, but a case was brought to my notice where one industry took this plan up and it worked. Production increased. More money came in, but because they had to share with the other parts of the industry scattered all over the country there was no profit.

My third cure for strikes is Christian brotherhood. The churches throughout Canada in all their branches will back me up in this, that the cure for strikes is Christian brotherhood. Moral rearmament says absolute honesty, absolute unselfishness, absolute purity and absolute love will work. I do not mean partial Christianity; I mean the real, genuine practice of Christian brotherhood will be the cure for strikes, and until we get that I do not think any other plan will really work. We do find human beings are willing to co-operate in a lot of things. This last year a strike was under discussion that pretty nearly took place but did not. Some of the workers, young married men, were anxious. They did not want to strike. The strike did not take place and they were happy.

I know there are labour leaders who are not in favour of this plan at all, and some of them have so declared. Notwithstanding some of those labour leaders, a cure can be found. If hon. members take it to heart and think it through and through, we shall find a way.

I must say that I enjoyed the speech of the minister when he delivered his budget. I congratulate him on being honest and sincere, because the budget has in it just the thing that we need for Canada today. Thank you.

Mr. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to make any reference at all to the constitutional problem that has been raised as a result of the discussion of dominion-provincial financial agreements, but the suggestion that has just been put forward by the genial hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McIvor) prompts me to make a brief observation as I commence my remarks.

The suggestion has been put forward that this is a problem existing only between one province and the federal government. I must admit that I am not an authority on constitutional matters, but so far as I can see, from the attention I have given to the subject, this difficulty relates itself not only to Quebec and the federal government but to all provincial governments and the dominion government.

I base that observation on the importance of the subject of dominion-provincial financial relations on conclusions from the book "The Government of Canada", by Dr. MacGregor Dawson. I would recommend the reading of chapter 6 of this book to any members interested in this subject. On page 135, Dr. Dawson has this to say in regard to the provincial agreements:

These agreements—even if it be assumed that Ontario and Quebec become parties to them—certainly do not settle the financial difficulties between the dominion and the provinces, although they may be adequate to bridge the next five years.

That was the first term of the agreements. He says further:

For it is impossible to perceive how any permanent solution can be found except by the acceptance of the following three fundamental propositions, all of which are implicit in the problem and are clearly indicated by past experience . . .

These are the three propositions, and I will just outline them briefly. The first is as follows:

The dominion must be expected to take the lead in devising and implementing policies designed to prevent future economic depression and establish measures of general social welfare.

The second is:

The provinces must not be allowed to lose in the process their individuality, power, and prestige as autonomous authorities and essential parts of the federation.

The third is:

No system of per capita grants to the provinces will be able to displace entirely payments made on a basis of fiscal need, and any permanent settlement will be compelled to adopt some variant of the Rowell-Sirois recommendations as a supplement to the present proposals. To ignore this fact is to ignore the whole history of dominion-provincial financial relations.

I merely put that on the record as a reply to the statement made by the hon. member for Fort William, that this is merely a problem between one province and the federal government. It is a far-reaching problem and goes right to the heart of confederation.

Leaving that subject to those who are more competent than myself, I want to return to the budget. As I listened to the budget speech just a week ago tonight I came to the conclusion it was a very intriguing budget speech from the standpoint of the opposition. The previous budget speeches to which I have listened since coming to the house were full of soaring optimism with respect to Canada's buoyant economy. This was far from being the case in the budget under consideration at the moment. Instead I found that the minister's remarks were full of cautious, carefully-chosen phrases, many of which reechoed opposition criticism that has been heard in the chamber during the budget debates of recent years.

He used such phrases, for example, as "there is a temporary slow-down" due to an "improved supply position", and "there is a necessary cost and price adjustment." This was most unusual as we contrasted it with the buoyant optimism of recent years. One may also recall some of the slogans heard last summer during the election campaign. There were slogans to the effect that if a Liberal government is returned to office Canada will have prosperity, but if any other group is returned to office there will be depression and chaos.

I recall also, just two weeks before August 10, travelling through the rural area of my constituency. The grain was rolling into the elevators and all the farmers were rejoicing because apparently there was an inexhaustible market for the bumper crop they were harvesting. I remember the queues lined up before the elevators after the restrictions were entirely removed. It was not long, of course, until the elevators became completely plugged. From the remarks made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) in this chamber this afternoon the elevators apparently still remain in that position.

I could go on to the throne speech debate and recall the Conservative amendment introduced at that time to the effect that the prosperity and security of all Canadians would be advanced by government policies which would restore markets for primary products and generally promote a high volume of trade. In this regard the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) and myself sometimes write for weekly papers. The editors are very fair-minded, I believe, since they publish our columns side by side from time to time, thus giving our respective viewpoints from this chamber. I feel that is an excellent idea. I recall the comments made by the Minister of Justice after our amendment was moved. He said he felt reluctant to vote against that amendment because that is exactly what the Liberal government had been doing, that is restoring markets or promoting markets for primary products and generally promoting a high volume of trade.

Now, just a few months later we are confronted with a budget that is extremely cautious and manages to muster only a slight feeling of optimism. On the whole, it is a stand-pat budget. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), as he did last Tuesday evening, speaks of a slow-down or a four per cent decline in exports and an unpleasant unemployment situation, it would indicate there has been a rather rapid change in the economic climate of this country.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose at six o'clock I was referring to the rather unique position in which the opposition finds itself in relation to this budget, particularly with reference to the cautious approach of the Minister of Finance in his budget statement a week ago tonight.

The minister did not say so in so many words, but there is implied in some of the statements he made the view that the situation is perhaps more serious than appears on the surface, and his careful use of what we might call "Ottawa semantics" was designed to camouflage the situation to a certain extent. We know that semantics is the science of meaning, and deals with the real meaning of verbal symbols. I believe when the minister referred to the temporary slowing down of the economy, what he actually meant was that we have over 500,000 unemployed.

In addition to that there is a sharp drop in the farmers' income, and I have before me some statistics which demonstrate that point. With reference to the price situation as regards our farmers we should take into consideration the net income which depends not on farming prices alone, but also on farm prices in relation to farm costs. In 1951 we find that the index for farm prices stood at 296·8 and in 1952 the index stood at 272·6, and there is every indication to suggest that the figures for 1953 will indicate a further drop of from 5 to 10 per cent. At the same time the cost of the things the farmer was buying in 1951 stood at an index of 230 and in 1952 at 243·1, according to the Farm Forum Guide of January 11, 1954. That index is rising in proportion to the price he receives for his goods so that the farmer is caught in a price squeeze.

I also believe that this "temporary slowing down" refers to the decline in the sale of automobiles, and farm machinery as well. If we get behind the meaning of this phrase it would appear it also includes the loss of the United Kingdom markets for our agricultural products.

So far as the use of the phrase "cost and price adjustment" is concerned, I believe here, if we again get behind the Ottawa semantics, the minister was thinking of the increase in the failure rate among small businesses, the increase in loss-leader selling and, on the prairies, the situation where we find the retail stores working on a cash basis because of the inability of the farm customers to pay on the line due to the shortage of cash. All these things are, I believe, behind the phrase "cost and price adjustment."

Then there is the other phrase to which I have already referred, namely "improved supply position." Obviously in behind that bit of semantics we have an increase in the process of dumping as is evidenced by the passage of Bill No. 29 in this house earlier in the session, and again with reference to the lost markets, the decrease in purchasing power due to the wheat glut and the resulting unemployment.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that these phrases are typical of Liberal vagueness which has been exemplified by the much vaunted middle of the road policy initiated at the onset of the depression by the man Mr. Bruce Hutchison called "The Blondin of Politics", the late Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King. The Liberal party took to political tightrope walking during the depression, and indeed it had to because it was the only way by which Liberalism could survive under rapidly changing world conditions.

It is a well-known fact that Liberalism has virtually disappeared in Britain and in other European countries. In this connection I was very interested to read, a short time ago, excerpts from a dissertation written by the present Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) when he was a professor of history in the province of Manitoba. Under the heading of "The Failure of Liberalism" he had this to say:

> It is not remotely likely that the decay of orthodox liberalism can be arrested for very long . . . It is small wonder that economic liberalism is discredited . . . Classical liberalism is dead. As a political creed it is bankrupt.

I believe that is an excellent summation of the situation which prevailed during the twenties and in the early thirties. Another political commentator, the late Mr. Harold Laski, of the London school of economics, wrote in similar vein under the heading "The Decline of Liberalism".

However, in this country Liberalism has survived by means of very clever political tightrope walking which has resulted in a great deal of uncertainty so far as the stand of the Liberal party is concerned. I think that was precisely illustrated in the rather humorous situation which occurred in this house during the debate on the throne speech last fall. We had the Conservatives describing the throne speech as an example of "socialism in a silk hat" on the one hand, and on the other we had the C.C.F. party describing the policies of the Liberal government as "reactionary capitalism". There seemed to be a very wide diversity in the interpretation of the same throne speech, which I feel resulted from the studied vagueness adopted by the Liberal party in order to survive under rapidly changing world conditions.

I would like to sum up this point by stating that the success of the Liberal party as a political chameleon is demonstrated by the different approaches adopted by the party in various parts of Canada. In Quebec the party is conservative; in Ontario it is protectionist, witness Bill No. 29; and in the west, and also in the maritimes, it is free trade.

I was very much interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) this afternoon in regard to the basic liberalism of his party. Perhaps his views on the Liberal party are not akin to mine but to me the budget speech suggests that the Liberal party is coming back to a more orthodox Liberal position, and is seeking a base upon which to make a stand.

The Ottawa Journal, in summing up the budget speech in a phrase, used significant words when it described it as a "Lead, Kindly Light" budget. In other words, it exemplified faith without works. This suggests strongly a return to discredited classical orthodox Liberalism, and the laissez-faire theory based on the natural law.

I think I can best sum it up by one or two quotations from outstanding authorities in this particular field. It is the idea that if we leave things alone long enough they will gradually work out for the best by the process of natural law; or again, if I may quote Voltaire, the great French liberal, one of the early leaders of liberal thought, through the mouth of Candide, one of his brain children, he used the phrase that "all is for the best in this best of all possible worlds". The hon. member for Greenwood, speaking the other night, used the Coué summation of Liberalism: Every day in every way we are getting better and better.

The belief in inevitable progress towards inevitable perfection, of course, is a by-product of the materialism of the nineteenth century. Other political theories that were spawned in that same era were socialism and Marxism. I think the budget speech indicates a return to this more orthodox Liberal position. Certainly in 1929, when the economic deluge descended upon the western world, the Liberal party at that time was strongly motivated by the classical theory because it did nothing except to wait for things to get better in the United States. The throne speech in the session of 1929 indicated that it was just a temporary set-back and that before the year was out things would be much better indeed. In fact, there was in some of the sentiments expressed by the minister the other night, with regard to Canada's tie-up with the United States economy, a striking resemblance to the sentiments expressed and the remarks made during the 1929 throne speech.

As is well known, as a result of the onset of the depression a Conservative government was elected in 1930. It was left to wrestle with lost markets, surplus agricultural products, the Hawley-Smoot tariffs and a general breakdown in international trade combined with the tragedies of nature in the form of drought, dust and grasshoppers; and, along with it all, the general backwash of the first stages of the industrial revolution in Canada. The first stages of any major social change are always marked by a high degree of social disorganization. On top of all these problems it was confronted with an apathetic opposition. I do not think the government of today can come to the conclusion that they are confronted with an apathetic opposition. Perhaps they sometimes feel that we are much too critical. Perhaps they feel that we talk far too much.

I do not want to stretch too far the parallel between 1929 and today because conditions in Canada have changed tremendously since then. When I hear members talk in this house as if we stand, financially and economically, back at 1929 or 1930, I disagree with them most heartily. Canada has passed through an economic revolution. The world has changed and has passed through an economic revolution. The centres of influence in the world have moved from the continent of Europe to the North American continent. Again, as I think my friend the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) would say, we have passed, in economic terms, through the Keynesian revolution.

There was the new deal in the United States. We did not have a new deal, in so many words, in Canada although the late R. B. Bennett tried to introduce a new deal forced by the impact of these changing conditions. There is no doubt that we have been influenced by the changed circumstances all around us. There is, for example, the fact that the late Dr. Clark was brought in from Queen's University in 1932 in order to give his expert assistance in wrestling with the problems of the depression. The success he had in this regard is indicated by the fact that he remained in the post of deputy minister of finance up until his unfortunate and untimely death last year. I was quite impressed by the tribute paid to the late Dr. Clark by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech last year when he gave outstanding credit to Dr. Clark for the contribution he had made in bringing about economic and financial stability in Canada.

Very often we in this house hear discussions that arise from time to time as to who did what and when with regard to the new look in our economy. For example, we hear members laying claim to paternity of family allowances. There was, a short time ago in this house, no less than three members laying claim to having initiated the idea of family allowances. The same thing applies to other social security measures. However, Mr. Speaker, I am going to suggest that these things came in response to the social facts that existed during those difficult days of change. They did not occur only in Canada. Canada is not the only country with a social security and social welfare program. I am sure that no hon. member in this chamber can lay claim to credit for what took place in the United States, in the United Kingdom or in other European countries. They came about as a result of social pressures coming in the wake of the emergence of the western world into an urban, industrial civilization. Therefore I say that we cannot draw the parallel too closely between conditions today and those that existed in 1929. Yet the distress signals are out.

The government has been strangely apathetic and nonchalant in the face of the storm signals. Certainly the opposition has given the warning repeatedly during the past few years. I have sat in this house since 1951. In my first session the budget debate was largely around the theme of inflation resulting from a soft-money policy; and inflation is still with us despite the juggling of the price index. It is obvious that it is still with us because we repeatedly receive representations from pensioners of all kinds and those who are forced to live on lower incomes. In addition to the soft-money policy, we have criticized the philosophy of softness that has been propagated by the government, the idea that the great white father at Ottawa will look after you. As an example of that sort of propaganda we have it suggested from time to time that any other group in office at Ottawa would take away all these nice things that come from the hands of an all-benevolent and beneficent government.

Then we have mentioned the lost United Kingdom markets, a subject that has been discussed off and on in Canada for the past three or four years. I remember taking part in 1950 in a citizens' forum discussion which dealt with the difficulties arising from the loss of our United Kingdom markets. The subject of convertibility has also appeared repeatedly, and I am delighted to see that the Minister of Finance is taking a more positive interest in this problem. It is basic of course to the stability of our Canadian economy which depends for its lifeblood upon a healthy export trade.

It could be that the reason for the seeming nonchalance and apathy on the part of the government is that it has grown soft, flabby and complacent from old age and too much royal jelly. It is said that with old age comes hardening of the arteries. One of the characteristics of hardening of the arteries is the failure to remember recent events but an ability to go away back to the beginning of things with a very clear insight into earlier events. Perhaps the return of a more orthodox Liberalism is another evidence of the tendency towards senility and the resulting hardening of the arteries.

On the other hand, the apathy and nonchalance might merely be a very carefully thought out policy, the desire to play possum in order to stave off the psychological impact of depression thinking. The preamble of the United Nations charter says:

> Since war begins in the minds of men it is in the minds of men that the bulwarks of peace must be built.

I believe that statement is just as true of depression as it is of war. To a large extent depressions begin in the minds of men. Going back to the 1930's, as a result of the depression psychology then prevalent there was retrenchment just at the time when confidence and expansion were needed. At that time the Liberals, as can be seen from reading the debates of those days, were at the wailing wall preaching blue ruin, as seems to be characteristic of oppositions. There is a psychological impact that affects the economic trend in a country.

I have introduced this point because members of this house from the west are sometimes accused of crying perpetual blue ruin. I suggest that is not true because the west has learned to take adversity during its relatively short history. The west has largely been in a pioneer era during that whole period. Westerners sometimes quote a poem that illustrates this position and it is to this effect:

> Out where the world is in the making,
> Out where fewer hearts in despair are breaking,
> That's where the west begins.
>
> Where there's more of giving and less of buying,
> Where there's more of living and less of dying,
> Where a man makes friends without half trying,
> That's where the west begins.

I think that is a very excellent expression of the spirit of the west, but I want to point out that just a few weeks ago the Minister of Trade and Commerce, when speaking to the chamber of commerce in the city of Winnipeg, accused western members of crying wolf, and implied that western members were poor public relations representatives for their constituencies. This of course is not very flattering to those of us from the west. I think he also included Liberal members as well as those on the opposition side of the house. Certainly their recurring election theme, do you want to go back to the dirty thirties, is conducive to this depression psychology. This unfortunately is the sort of thing that encourages the splintering on the prairies which is plaguing our federal system today.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is a basis in fact for the continuing western agrarian protest. The western voice is weak politically with the result that the party in power, particularly if it is in power for a long period of time, always tends to become the prisoner of the two central provinces. In terms of representation you find the bulk of support of Ontario and Quebec going to the party in power. If I have time I should also like to deal with industrial development. If you compare the interest in the St. Lawrence seaway with the lack of interest in the Saskatchewan dam there is quite a difference, and there is also the fact of the continuing loss of population from the west. When the Minister of Trade and Commerce made that statement in Winnipeg I believe it showed that he has been taken in by the popular legend and myth of current Canadian development which suggests that the west is very rapidly catching up with the east. This might be true from the standpoint of the prophetic future but it certainly is not true at the present time. I want to present certain statistics to illustrate that point. I have before me some statistics dealing with the jobs that have been created in manufacturing industries since 1945. Forty-four per cent of these jobs have been created in Ontario, in Quebec 35 per cent, British Columbia 7 per cent, Manitoba 4 per cent, Nova Scotia 3 per cent, Alberta 3 per cent, and all others 4 per cent.

The amount of investment in manufacturing follows a similar pattern. Out of a total of $3,400 million, Ontario has $1,655 million or 48·7 per cent; Quebec has $880 million or 25·9 per cent; British Columbia $306 million or 9 per cent; Alberta $153 million or 4·5 per cent, and all other Canadian provinces $406 million or 11·9 per cent. If we look at the situation from a slightly different standpoint, that of the establishment of new plants, we find that up to 1952 there have been 1,500. Forty per cent, or 626, have been established in Quebec, 60 per cent of which are in and around Montreal. One-third have been established in Ontario, namely 504, 40 per cent of which are in the Toronto area. That of course emphasizes that the west is still far behind so far as the establishment of new industries is concerned. Ontario and Quebec still have just about the same share of the country's manufacturing production as they did in 1931. They have about 80 per cent; British Columbia has 8 per cent; the prairies 8 per cent and the maritimes about 4 per cent. There was a significant change during the war which brought the prairies up to nearly 10 per cent of the total in 1946, but central Canada has since re-established its position as the producer of four-fifths of the country's manufactured goods.

There are actually fewer jobs in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Saskatchewan than there were in 1946. I think these figures demonstrate that what we call the agrarian protest is quite justified. Nevertheless the west is progressing. The names of Lynn Lake in Manitoba, Uranium City in Saskatchewan, Leduc in Alberta and Kitimat in British Columbia are well known in Canada and other parts of the world.

I want to emphasize that this progress is largely due to the activities of private corporations in the western area. If I had time I could point to some developments in my own city which are all promoted by private companies and that have had very little encouragement, actually, from, for example, the Department of Defence Production. I merely mention that when the small defence industries branch was set up Brandon organized a Brandon pool and hoped to receive stimulus to its industrial development from participation in defence production. Because of the concentration and centralization in the central provinces there was not too much of a boost given to our efforts in this regard.

To bring my remarks to a conclusion, the situation that faces Canada at the present time as we pass through an era of transition demands more than a laissez-faire approach to the problem. It is not sufficient to say that eventually everything will work out for the best in the best of all possible worlds. When the member for Spadina (Mr. Croll) was speaking this afternoon on the excellent work of the combines investigation branch it occurred to me that he might turn the combines investigators loose in investigating this government; because I think it is one of the biggest monopolies that we have in any area of activity in this country.

As I have said before I think that big government, monopolistic government, is a much greater danger than any form of big business, or any other bigness. The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) has put forward again the idea of having an independent committee or commission to investigate government efficiency after the fashion of the Hoover commission in the United States. I think that this idea has merit in dealing with the problem to which I have just referred.

We must do more than rest on our laurels. Canada has had a great past. We have made tremendous strides since the war years. We have been amazingly fortunate and lucky, located as we are on the peace side of the conflicts that have occurred during the first part of this century in Europe. But we cannot expect our phenomenal good luck to continue forever. We must deserve it. During the war superhuman effort was made in the defence of our way of life. I believe that an even greater effort is needed at the present time if we are going to move safely and successfully through the transition period that faces us at the moment.

The government has taken credit for the booming prosperity of the past. I would suggest that by the same token it must take responsibility for the difficulties through which we are passing at the present time.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, it is with a certain amount of trepidation that one like myself, who has never had the slightest difficulty in counting money in his own possession, approaches the vast accumulation of money that was set forth in the budget speech. Without the slightest hesitancy the minister juggles these billions like a conjurer at a children's party. But if we are able to avoid having our eyes dazzled by these millions and billions, some things begin to emerge clearly out of the budget.

The first thing that emerges is that it is admirably designed to bring comfort to the comfortably off. During the last election campaign I had very great difficulty in convincing people in my audience that I was speaking the truth when I described to them what had been done by the government of Canada to protect the interests of a certain class of citizens—a privilege that was not accorded to the vast number of Canadians. When I attempted to show them that in certain circumstances a Canadian citizen with a wife and two children could draw an income of $10,000 a year without paying one cent of income tax, I was invariably challenged in all meetings and told it was ridiculous, that the government of Canada would never do any such thing, and that certainly the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) would never be guilty of such gross discrimination.

But, seeing that the protests that were made last session to the minister have been of no avail, I think perhaps it would be a good thing if once again the picture were placed on Hansard so that the people of Canada can see what the actual situation is. Now, this fortunate Canadian citizen with the wife and two children and an income of $10,000 a year is drawing his income from dividends of Canadian corporations.

An hon. Member: Like a member of parliament.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo): A member of parliament is in a privileged position, but not quite as privileged as these gentlemen to whom I am referring. The position of the member of parliament is not quite as good. The person whose situation I am describing has, in the first place, an exemption of $2,300 a year, leaving him with a taxable income of $7,700 a year. The tax on the first $6,000 of that income is $1,140, and the tax on the $1,700 is $442, making a tax of $1,582, plus a social security tax of $60, bringing the amount to $1,642. There is a surtax of four per cent on investment income over $2,400 amounting to $304, making a total of $1,946. This amount the fortunate gentleman would have to pay to the treasury of Canada, were it not for the fact that under the Income Tax Act there is a credit coming to him of twenty per cent of his dividends, or $2,000. So that he does not pay any income tax at all.

Now, if such married man with two children were unwise enough to work for his living, and smart enough to get $10,000 a year for doing it, he would be in a much less privileged position and would actually pay $1,642 a year. I am quite sure the Minister of Finance will tell us that this is to offset the gross injustice of those who have been taxed on dividends before. He will point out that unless we have this provision, these individuals are in effect taxed twice. That is to say, the company earnings are taxed before the distribution of the dividends is made.

When I read the defence of his position which he put on Hansard last year I wondered just in what way this fortunate shareholder of a company differed from a man who worked for that company. I wondered just what extra privileges he would be entitled to over the head of the man who works to make money which provides the taxes and dividends. I think there can be little doubt that this is a privilege that is given to a group of Canadian citizens over the heads of the vast majority of Canadian people.

That however is not the only evidence in this budget that it is, as I say, a budget admirably designed to promote the comfort of the comfortably off. We have, of course, the provision with regard to the two per cent personal income tax for old age security. Here again we have an odd situation. The tax is payable on the first $3,000 of taxable income, making a tax of $60 for any taxpayer. I suppose the philosophy behind this is that, by and large, the majority of those who are going to seek old age pensions in their old age will come from the lower income brackets. Therefore, with unerring justice, the Minister of Finance provides that such people should pay a larger proportion of their income toward this cost than do the more fortunate people in society. But it has created a curious situation. The man with the taxable income of $3,000 a year pays $60, and the man with a taxable income of $10,000, $15,000, $20,000 or $25,000 a year pays $60 for old age pensions, departing entirely from the principle of a graduated tax based on ability to pay which prevails throughout the whole of the rest of the income tax structure.

One of the features of this budget which has not been changed in any significant manner is one which perhaps the majority of Canadians are not aware of; at least they are not conscious of its impact on their pocketbooks. I refer to the 10 per cent sales tax. In the first place, I might say that most authorities are of the opinion that sales taxes are regressive taxes; that they tend to place the burden inequitably largely on the shoulders of those least able to pay. However, as I say, most Canadians are not conscious of the fact that they pay 10 per cent on a vast range of commodities they buy, and they are still less conscious of the fact that in actual fact in most instances they pay much more than that; because one of the most pernicious features of this tax is that as it is imposed at the manufacturing level it has a pyramiding effect as it is imposed throughout the economy.

The manufacturer adds the 10 per cent to his price to the wholesaler. The wholesaler, when he calculates his mark-up, does so on the basis of the price plus the 10 per cent, and the same process may take place when it passes into the hands of the retailer. It is of course impossible to estimate with any degree of accuracy the actual amount of money that the Canadian public pays in respect of this 10 per cent sales tax. Some investigators whose reports I have read suggest that it may exceed $1 billion a year, out of which of course the government of Canada receives about 75 per cent, $759 million in the present budget.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that these are evidences of the fact that this budget is designed not to impose the necessary burdens of taxation on the people of Canada in the most equitable manner possible, but to impose them as heavily as possible on the shoulders of the vast mass of the people who draw modest or small incomes to as great a degree as possible. The provisions of the Income Tax Act to which I have referred indicate that this government is extremely solicitous of a rather privileged minority in our society.

I suppose one need not be surprised at this particular attitude on the part of the government toward the fiscal policies of the country. It is perhaps all of a part with the whole attitude towards our present economic situation that is revealed in the budget address of the minister and has been revealed before this session by other government spokesmen. We have all noted—and those who have spoken before have nearly all commented on it—the very optimistic picture painted by the minister of the future of the Canadian economy, and one must of course pay tribute to his powers of optimism, but I have been wondering just on what he bases his optimism. On examining his speech I find some flaws of logic in his argument, because at page 3723 of Hansard I find he has this to say:

> In the economic sphere, 1953 has been a much better year. Industrial and agricultural production in almost all countries has continued to expand, and consumption has risen. Supplies of many products entering into international trade are becoming more plentiful, and international markets more competitive. The recovery of Germany and Japan has contributed to this development. It is becoming increasingly evident that after many years of scarcity and inflation we are returning to more normal competitive conditions.

That statement is perfectly true. I do not think any observer of events would quarrel with it; but when we find the minister drawing the conclusion from that that the economy of Canada is facing a cloudless future, then, as I say, I wonder about his powers of logic. Because it is just the very recovery of these countries that has begun to create again the problems we have known so well in the past; it is just the fact that we have rehabilitated those war-torn countries that has brought them back into the picture as producers, producing very often the same goods that our own people produce in Canada. It is perhaps significant that in the last few months here in eastern Canada, and I imagine by now in western Canada, there are on the streets a great many German Volkswagens which have been shipped here from a rehabilitated Germany. It is perhaps no coincidence that the Japanese textile industry has been put on its feet again, and simultaneously we are bombarded with complaints from the Canadian textile industry about the sad state of their sector of the economy.

I am not suggesting for one moment that we should not have rehabilitated those countries. Plain common sense, in addition to human decency and humanitarianism, would have obliged us to do so; but I do think that we should take our heads out of the sand and not fail to understand just what the consequences are going to be.

I think we can find the parallel of this situation in the history of Great Britain, because in essence Canada and the United States have done in the post-war period what Great Britain did throughout the long period of time when she was at the top of the industrial tree, when she exported not only commodities but capital goods for the manufacture of commodities, to various countries of the world, and of course inevitably those countries entered the markets of the world in competition with Britain. We are therefore facing the inescapable results of a competitive and private profit-making enterprise system, and all the loud cheers of prosperity ahead will not enable us to get over that situation simply by words.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a more realistic point of view would be to recognize the fact that the world is again approaching that stage when decisive international action will have to be taken at the cost of many cherished traditions, institutions and illusions which our society has fostered. We shall have to face the fact that the only solution for mankind with our appalling productive capacities is to plan for world-wide co-operation rather than to attempt to compete one with the other, to attempt to drive others out of our markets and drive ourselves into their markets, which must of course only mean further international dislocation.

The Minister of Finance also made another very striking and very revealing comment with regard to the economy of Canada. He said at one point that he recognized of course his optimism was based on the assumption that the present economic recession in the United States will grow no worse. Then he had this to say on page 3725 of Hansard:

> A significant change took place in the direction of our export trade. Sales to the United States rose by over $100 million, while the proportion of our exports going to the United Kingdom and other commonwealth countries declined, reversing the trend which had prevailed during 1952.

There is a clear statement of the very state of affairs which hon. member after hon. member has complained about since the opening of this session. Here we have a plain statement from the Minister of Finance that under his government's auspices our trade has been channelled even more firmly to the United States market than it was before. No wonder he bases his assumption of continuing Canadian prosperity on the continuation of United States' prosperity. Because any doubts or hesitations he may have in his mind about the United States economy would, of course, undercut all his assumptions about a prosperous future for Canada.

Now these instances, Mr. Speaker, indicate to me that this government is still playing the role of Micawber and is still hoping that something will turn up; still hoping that by some miracle we can get past that rock upon which our economy nearly foundered in the thirties; still hoping by some magic of international agreements—Heaven knows the last thirty years is strewn with the wreckage of international agreements—we shall overcome this inescapable contradiction of a profit-making society, the contradiction of each one of us forcing our goods on the other in order to balance the trade of every nation in the world.

I have wondered, Mr. Speaker, whether other members of the house have been struck, as I have, with the most outstanding feature of this budget; the one that hits you smack in the eye when you read the accounts of the Minister of Finance. It is the fact that Canada is still spending 43 per cent of her revenues on defence projects. One might have thought that in the light of the recent revelations with regard to the development of thermonuclear weapons of war there may have been some hesitation on the part of this government to continue a program which must have been instituted long before these revelations were made. But there has been no suggestion from the government that they have in any way considered recasting their plans for the defence of Canada, in spite of the fact that the United States has given us clear hints of that and disturbed us very much; despite the fact that Great Britain has announced a similar recasting of her plans. We hear no indication at all from the government of Canada that it is actually contemplating coping with the situation with plans governed by these recent rather terrifying developments.

One can see, Mr. Speaker, that even useless defence expenditures have a certain psychological value; that is to say they do comfort people in the thought that possibly they are protected from the danger of attack. I can recognize that psychological value very well. If I may be pardoned for referring to an incident in my own history, I recall an incident of the first war. Three of my comrades and I were overtaken by shell fire at night. We jumped into a disused trench and crawled under a shelter that was placed across the trench. We sat there quite happily, quite confident we were safe from flying pieces of shrapnel. When we got up to go after the shelling was over one of my comrades, upon reaching up, discovered we had been sitting underneath a blanket all that time. There is no doubt about it, it increased our equanimity greatly. We sat there in considerable comfort. No doubt even the expenditure on equally useless weapons of defence has the same comforting influence on the people.

I am not suggesting for one moment that it may not be necessary to spend all of $2 billion, perhaps more than that, on defence against these modern weapons, if indeed there are any such defences. I might interject here that scientific opinion is not very encouraging on this score. I have yet to see any reputable scientist or any reputable authority on aerial warfare suggest that there is any real defence against these weapons. I have yet to hear the suggestion that there is any other defence than that suggested by Mr. Dulles, the suggestion that has so upset the rest of the world. It may be that there are some defences, and it may be that they will cost many times more than we are now spending for defence. The point I want to make is this, that we should be examining the necessity for that type of defence and looking with a critical eye in the direction in which our present vast expenditures are being made.

Speaking for myself, I should not care to be charged with the responsibility of justifying before this chamber the expenditure of nearly $2 billion in 1953 for defence plans which must have been formulated before there was any widespread knowledge of recent developments. I think the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Claxton) or the Minister of Finance or the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) or any of their colleagues would have a difficult job doing that. Of course we are not given, nor can we expect to be given, the details of the manner in which these funds are being expended today. Everyone recognizes that. But I think there is no one in this house who would suggest that the thought has not passed through his mind, and I am sure passed through the minds of most other Canadians, that a very large part of these funds must inevitably be going down the drain today, and be just about as useful as if we were spending the money on bows and arrows.

I suggest that while we are re-examining the reality of Canada's defence position, our government should be prepared to divert several hundred millions of dollars, possibly 25 per cent of this defence budget, to other purposes. By that means we could play a worth-while and really important part in the task of rehabilitating and developing those areas in the world which are today the danger spots. Every competent observer from Asia tells us that we are in a race with time today, a race with the communists, and that the measure of our success in that race will be the speed with which we can bring their standard of living up to something approaching our own. Not long ago a committee of this cabinet was interviewed by a delegation of workers from the agricultural implement industry who came to ask the government for some help of some sort. They had no real suggestions to make, but they wanted some relief from their plight as a result of the curtailment of that industry.

I recall that the then acting prime minister, the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe), was unable to give them any more comfort than to suggest that they had better go elsewhere to look for other sorts of jobs. I feel that was rather cold comfort for a man with a wife and family and an established home in that area, particularly since the Minister of Trade and Commerce was unable to offer them any practical suggestions as to where they should look for jobs. How much more effective it would have been for those people and the economy of Canada had the acting prime minister been able to announce that this government was prepared to spend a large amount for agricultural machinery as a contribution to the development of southeast Asia. How much happier those men would have been when they went home, and how much more confident we could be with regard to the future were such a policy being followed today.

I am prepared to run the risk of being jeered at when I suggest that at least $500 million of the money the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) is going to collect from us this year is going to be completely wasted because it is going to be spent on weapons and means of defence that have been rendered as outdated and obsolete as the weapons that were in use before the first world war. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I should not be at all surprised when this House of Commons meets next year to find that our budget appropriations for defence have been severely pruned. I, in fact, will be very much surprised if they are not severely pruned. I would urge the government that they should do this in the open, that they should make a declaration to the people of Canada that they are recasting our whole defence program; that they are going to take advantage of the enormous sums we have appropriated to make a really worth-while contribution to world peace, which may indeed be more effective than any arms or any weapons of defence we could devise.

So, Mr. Speaker, we have had a budget which, as I said, is designed to bring comfort to those who are already comfortable; it is designed to place a heavy burden on those who are least able to bear it, and designed, moreover, to toss a great deal of the proceeds down the drain in pursuit of an obsolete and worn-out concept of defence.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. A. B. Weselak (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, this being the first occasion on which I rise to address the house since becoming a member, I would like to follow the custom of the house by congratulating you, Mr. Deputy Speaker, and also Mr. Speaker. I must say that I have listened attentively to your rulings and have found them to be fair and just, and therefore I am pleased on this occasion to associate myself with other hon. members in this respect.

This afternoon, I listened with considerable interest to the speech made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). For forty minutes I heard a tirade such as I have never heard before. Throughout his speech the hon. member criticized the actions and policies of the government; forecast a depression, stated that we had lost all our markets, and that blue ruin was prevalent in the west. While it must be admitted that there is no room for overoptimism, neither is there licence for presenting a dismal and frightening picture to the public, particularly to those who are not normally familiar with the facts.

The hon. member for Assiniboia belittled every effort made by the government to move western surpluses, ignoring the fact that unusually large crops have produced record surpluses, while at the same time farmers in western Canada have marketed greater quantities of grain than ever before, and export sales have reached new peaks. His speech, while critical, certainly was not constructive, and contributed nothing toward a solution of the farmers' problems. When asked how he proposed financing a substantial gift of grain to southeast Asia his only reply was that we should tax corporations or, in the alternative, reduce defence expenditure by $500 million.

While I hold no brief for corporations, there is a limit to which taxes can be levied on corporations. Capital investment is essential to the development of this country and its progress, and eventually a saturation point is reached when the tax has the adverse effect of restricting investment of such capital. Offhand I am not in a position to say whether this point has been reached, but I do not believe the reply given was seriously considered by the hon. member before it was made. His alternative, namely to reduce our defence expenditure, also suggests a certain measure of lightness, and no doubt would be welcomed by any potential enemies of this country.

Reverting to my remarks regarding wheat, I wish to go on record as being in support of our wheat board system of marketing. I feel that the government, through the wheat board, has done a tremendous job in disposing of the unusually large crops which have produced record surpluses.

During the debate yesterday, the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond (Mr. MacEachen) pointed out that the unemployment figures today should be viewed bearing in mind the labour force and the total number presently employed. He pointed out that unless these factors were taken into consideration the unemployment figures were not being placed in their proper perspective.

As regards our wheat surplus, consideration should also be given to the fact that whereas our normal wheat crop is 325 million bushels per year, in the past three years the prairie production of wheat has reached anything from 529 to 664 million bushels. A total of 1,855 million bushels of wheat have been harvested in the past three years, compared with an average pre-war harvest of approximately 936 million bushels over a similar period, and which means in effect that the production has been practically doubled.

Our normal exports would have been adequate to absorb the pre-war production, but they have not been sufficient to keep pace with the production for the past three years. The record shows that in 1950 producer marketings were 367,845,000 bushels which was high for the period 1944 to 1950. In 1951 our producer marketings were 455,341,000 bushels. In 1952 our producer marketings were 535,942,000 bushels, and in the period August 1 to March 3 inclusive our 1953 marketings were 263,200,000 bushels for a period of seven months.

An analysis of these figures indicates that had we been producing average crops then we would not have had sufficient grain to fill the markets which we have had in the past three years. An examination of any of the records of the wheat board and board of grain commissioners will indicate that our exports exceeded 500 million bushels last year and our consumption last year, including grain for milling purposes, exceeded a total of 200 million bushels making a total in excess of 700 million bushels disposed of in the past year.

The wheat board is faced with a serious problem, but I have every confidence that if markets are to be obtained every effort will be made by the government to obtain these markets. We must admit that the marketing of these huge stocks of grain presently on hand presents a serious problem, and while it is anticipated that the world demand for wheat will eventually increase so as to take care of the situation, there remains the immediate problem of disposing of the wheat now at hand.

In presenting his budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) made the welcome announcement that there would be no tariff increases. Our economy is dependent upon exports and any steps taken by the government to curb international trade is bound to have an adverse effect upon the export of our produce. The minister admitted that considerable pressure was being put on the government for tariff protection in various industries, and he is to be commended upon the stand he has taken in this regard. We therefore welcome the minister's announcement to the effect that there will be no tariff increases, and we agree with his opinion that tariff increases are not in the best interests of Canada.

In his budget speech the minister referred to the fact that there had been a return to normal competitive conditions in world markets, and he pointed out that any retrograde step towards protectionism at this time would jeopardize any prospects for real progress in this country.

On this occasion I also wish to commend the minister on the consideration given by him to the municipalities in the matter of exemption from sales tax of road machinery and fire-fighting equipment purchased for their own use. The purchase of such equipment is usually a substantial item in any municipal budget, and the saving through this exemption will be of assistance to the municipalities who are hard pressed to find the required moneys to provide essential services in their communities.

In the face of the rigidity of our expenditures caused by commitments for social security, health measures and defence, there was little room for tax reduction. During the war public works were curtailed, and therefore we are faced with a backlog of required public works which also require attention and money for their completion.

The opposition decry the fact that no substantial tax reductions were made, yet a reading of Hansard during consideration of the estimates, particularly those with reference to the Public Works Department, discloses that the demands for increased public works for public buildings and other public structures emanated from the opposition benches.

Resolutions have appeared on the order paper in the names of hon. members of the opposition during the course of the session requesting further extension of expenditures in the field of health and social security. Had the government acceded to all these requests I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the budget brought down last Tuesday would have reflected in no uncertain way the extent of such commitments which would have had to be passed on to the people of Canada in substantially increased taxation.

There is, however, one aspect of the budget which has caused me considerable concern and that is the reduction in net farm income. The white paper tabled before the presentation of the budget shows that net farm income had declined by almost 14 per cent in 1953 from the level of 1952. It explains that more than half of this decline can be attributed to a reduction in the volume of agricultural products produced and a small portion perhaps to the four per cent reduction in the farm labour force. I realize that with the rehabilitation of Europe markets for our products are not as readily available as they were in the war and immediate post-war years, and that agriculture as well as industry must face the fact that we are today faced with competitive markets and must therefore regulate our production costs accordingly.

The wholesale price index published in the budget papers appended to Hansard of April 6, 1954, discloses on page 3781 that the wholesale price index of fully and chiefly manufactured goods, which are mainly the goods required by farmers, rose from 211 in 1950 to 227·8 in January, 1954, while wholesale prices of Canadian farm products dropped from 236·7 in 1950 to 209·4 in January, 1954. It is therefore obvious that the farmer's cost of production has risen sharply in the past three years while his return has substantially dropped in the same period. The situation is becoming serious and on this occasion I would ask the government to give serious consideration either to referring this matter to the standing committee on agriculture or to setting up a body which could be a committee of this house perhaps to study the matter of this increasing spread in order to determine what remedies, if any, are available to solve this growing problem.

This being my first address in this house, I should like to take this opportunity to commend this government and particularly the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) for the progress which has been made in the field of national health. For the past four years I have been closely associated with one of the phases of the health program, namely the construction and equipping of rural hospitals. In my own constituency of Springfield, which I have the honour to represent and of which I am justifiably proud—the reasons for my pride in my constituency I will reserve for a later occasion—prior to the inauguration of the health plan we had no hospital within its confines except one located at Pine Falls at the northern end of its more populated area. As a result of the program we now have in Springfield a modern, well-equipped, 25-bed hospital at Beausejour and a well-equipped modern 10-bed nursing unit in Whitemouth. I might say in passing that the hospital in Beausejour has operated since 1949 without a deficit, despite the fact that per diem charges are far lower than those in city hospitals and that the services certainly are comparable. At the outset there was certain resistance to the plan to establish units in the area. However, the vote was favourable and, through the co-operation of the province and municipalities affected, these units became a reality.

There is one aspect of this particular scheme that deserves particular comment, namely the policy of putting the responsibility for construction and operation of these hospitals at the local level. My experience has been that while local boards flounder a bit in their inexperience, nevertheless the close financial limits within which they have to operate makes it necessary for them to get a dollar's value for each and every dollar which is available to them. In addition, these local boards contribute their time voluntarily and, I can assure you, unstintingly. The policy to which I have referred also has the effect of fostering a local pride in these units which is amply evidenced by the organization of local guilds which do a tremendous job towards providing the amenities which a budget-conscious board must overlook in an effort to provide the technical equipment and aids which are usually desired. The value of such services to a rural community can be assessed only by those who now have them but previously were without them. The saving in life, the saving in money and the conveniences which have been made available by these hospitals certainly have made well worth while the effort put into them by the various levels of government and by local boards.

In closing may I say that I believe we must all realize that we are in a period of transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy and that certain dislocations in our national economy are unavoidable. I am confident that given good leadership,—which, in my opinion, we have—the people of Canada will weather the adversities we now experience and that, despite the predictions of ruin, the future growth and wealth of Canada will well outstrip the record of the past.

[Mr. Weselak.]

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Dickey: Has the hon. member not spoken already?

Mr. Fulton: I think the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Dickey) is getting confused. He usually speaks twice himself, but others do not follow that habit.

Mr. Dickey: Another joke?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we heard made in this house an appeal for a restoration of good relations between the dominion and the provinces. That appeal was made directly to the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) but so far it has gone unanswered. I hope that before the house adjourns for the Easter recess some indication will be given to us whether the government of Canada regards seriously its pledges to the provinces and its responsibility not only to preserve the system of confederation but to make it more workable.

I am a little bit surprised that in the course of this debate today, no answer has yet been made to the statesmanlike appeal made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew). I am a little bit surprised that no indication has been given whether the dominion government is prepared to meet the provinces and to sit down with them around the table in an effort to arrive at an agreement or in an effort to discuss the problems which prevent an agreement on these extremely important subjects which are at the moment outstanding matters of difference between the dominion and all the provinces. The reason I am surprised is that I recall the glowing phrases which were used by the Prime Minister and various other ministers of this government in connection with certain conferences which were held in the year 1950 when not only was it indicated that progress was being made in the matter of discussions of problems of this sort but that we were within an ace of getting an over-all agreement which would govern for all future time the relations between this central government and the provincial governments. I wonder a little bit whether the reason we have not had an answer from the Prime Minister so far or any indication from any other spokesman for the government is that they are afraid that their forecasts of the possibility of agreement are not capable of being realized. I wonder whether they are a little bit self-conscious, shall we say, about the basis which they themselves suggested for the meeting of that conference.

My mind goes back over the last few years since we have been here and I recall some of the statements that have been made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), that great Canadian patriot who, as I recall it, started—in his own words, not mine—to remove from Canada the last vestiges of colonialism. Those were his words. He introduced certain measures which he said were forward-moving steps in that process; and the last great task which he set himself was the repatriation of the Canadian constitution. So far that task falls far short of realization. If there is one person who, together with the Prime Minister, shares the major portion of the responsibility for the lack of fulfilment of that task, it is the same Minister of Justice.

I wonder whether the government does not dare to meet the provinces because they know that the provinces have needs and requirements which they are not able to meet under the present arrangements which they have made and beyond which the federal government is not prepared to go.

I recall that the premier of my own province of British Columbia has been down in recent months and has indicated clearly to the federal government that they require certain assistance over and above that which they are now receiving. The premier of British Columbia has laid before the federal government certain concrete proposals which so far have gone unanswered. I remember that the other day the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) used the extraordinary argument that he had not realized that the request of the province of British Columbia for assistance in completing the Pacific Great Eastern Railway was even a request at all.

While I do not share the political convictions of the premier of the province of British Columbia, I do share with him an awareness that the needs of that province with respect to the development of its own resources demand financial means which at the present time are beyond the capabilities of the province to meet because of the disadvantageous agreement which they have made with the federal government. The premier of that province came down here to lay before the federal government well-considered and reasonable requests for assistance in connection with the railway problem and in connection with the matter of development and a long range yield program for the handling of the province's resources, requests which so far have gone entirely unanswered.

I wonder why it is that the dominion government is so unprepared, so reluctant to meet the provinces, particularly in the light of the glowing statements that were made just some three or four years ago. I recall that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) sought in his budget address to lay the problem on a certain specific or particular basis. My answer to the Minister of Finance would be that before he is entitled to reproach any party in the house or any province in the dominion it is up to him and his government to indicate to the house and to the country the basis on which he would be prepared to deal with suggestions for an over-all solution of this whole problem. There could be nothing clearer, Mr. Speaker, than the fact that the responsibility for the initiative in this issue rests squarely upon the dominion government mainly through the instrumentality of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson).

But of course, as my leader pointed out this afternoon, the ultimate responsibility comes back to the Prime Minister of Canada. In substantiation of what I have said I want to refer in some detail to the record of the last dominion-provincial conference which held its first meeting on Tuesday, January 10, 1950. I hold in my hand the record of the proceedings entitled "Proceedings of the Constitutional Conference of Federal and Provincial Governments" for the first session on Tuesday, January 10, 1950 and the third session on Thursday, January 12, 1950. These meetings were held at Ottawa and in essence they were primarily devoted to a discussion of problems regarding amendment of the British North America Act. The conferences got off to an exceptionally good start. They were adjourned until September, 1950 when, at the invitation of the premier of Quebec, they met in Quebec city from September 25 to September 28. They met under the chairmanship of the Prime Minister of Canada, the right hon. gentleman who so far has shown an extraordinary reluctance to exercise any responsibility or any semblance of statesmanship notwithstanding the impasse into which dominion-provincial relations have fallen at the present time.

Mr. Abbott: That is what it is to be a Rhodes scholar.

Mr. Fulton: If any hon. member wishes to take exception to my words—

Mr. Lesage: That is what you would like.

Mr. Fulton: Yes, indeed I would, and I am going to give the hon. gentleman plenty of opportunity to do so because I am going to read from the record of this conference and the record of returns which were tabled in this house.

Mr. Lesage: You are beating around the bush.

Mr. Fulton: If my hon. friend wishes to interrupt, would he show the courtesy of rising to his feet to do so.

Mr. Abbott: We would not want to interrupt. Go right ahead.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fulton: The Prime Minister of Canada, speaking in the course of the conference in September, 1950, said these words as reported at page 58 of the proceedings:

I do not want to imply that what has already been decided here has the importance of Magna Carta, but I think we have all greatly benefited from the evidence and realization that all those attending this conference were sincerely desirous of doing everything within each one's power to arrive at the goal of settling in Canada matters of interest to the Canadian public, and that we are determined that those matters will ultimately be settled through institutions responsible to the Canadian public.

I suggest that the institution responsible to the Canadian public is this government, but in the last few days, weeks or months, indeed, years since 1950, it has not shown any very great sense of responsibility in this matter. The premier of Ontario discussed the progress made in the course of the conference, the purpose of which was to settle matters as between the dominion and the provinces. He was referring to the press statement authorized by the conference and he said:

As the press statement sets out, we have made very substantial progress. We are going to make more progress. I think I should express appreciation for the attorneys general committee which has met and which is going to meet again. That committee did a valuable job indeed. We now have clarified a great many things and I do not think it is breaking any secret to say that we have enlarged the scope and authority of that committee. I feel quite sure that when we meet next December we will make, not only more progress, but we will achieve the objective to which we have set ourselves, the objective of finding a way to amend our constitution in Canada in a manner which will protect all the minorities, all the races and all the interests in this great country of ours.

These, sir, are the words of the premier of Ontario referring to the press statement submitted by the Prime Minister of this country not quite four years ago regarding a conference called under the aegis of the dominion government, a conference which has not met since although they appointed a continuing committee under the chairmanship of the Minister of Justice who has done nothing more than find reasons and excuses for that conference not to meet again.

Then we have the words of the gentleman whom we were pleased to honour in tributes paid in this house today discussing the progress made in this conference. At page 60 of the report of the proceedings we find that the Hon. Angus L. Macdonald said:

However, we are on the right road. We have achieved certain things here. The continuing committee of attorneys general, with the Minister of Justice as chairman, will, I am sure, advance still further along that road and when the next plenary conference meets in December I feel sure we shall make still further progress.

I ask the Minister of Justice to ask himself, in the light of the remarks of that splendid Canadian voice which is now stilled, what thought he has given to making still further progress along that road? I hope the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson), who was going to repatriate the constitution of Canada, and set the badge of his great achievement upon the liberation of these things, will say soon in the course of this debate what plans he has in mind for resolving this impasse for which, next to the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance he, perhaps more than any other gentleman opposite, is responsible.

Then we have the premier of New Brunswick who said this, as reported at page 61:

We have had much to inspire us and there have also been things that have tended to sober us. What I mean is that we all realize that the job which was undertaken last January by this conference is going to be done some time.

Perhaps the premier of New Brunswick did not realize how prophetic those last two words were. He went on to say:

If we of this generation of public men do not do this job, the men of some other generation are going to do it. It is somewhat of a challenge to us to rise to the levels of statesmanship which are necessary to accomplish a task so great.

I suggest to you, sir, that those words, in the light of the sober realization of the facts of the situation today carry with them their own accusation of the present government which, by an obstructionist and obstinate course, has set itself against the making of further progress along those lines.

Then the premier of New Brunswick again echoed the words of the premier of Nova Scotia when, in his closing paragraph he said:

I think also, Mr. Prime Minister, that we have profited much from the guidance and the way in which you have carried out the important duties of your position as chairman of the conference. In closing I want to add my belief to the confidence that others have expressed that we are going to succeed in this work in which we are engaged. I know I leave here with a feeling that in the not distant future we will reach the goal which we all have in prospect.

Then the premier of Manitoba had these encouraging words—and hon. members will keep in mind that this was not quite four years ago—

As far as the work of the conference is concerned I know that you, Mr. Chairman, and all of us recognize that it would be unrealistic and even untruthful to pretend that we have accomplished everything that we set out to do. On the other hand, and as has been mentioned earlier, we have taken long strides toward reaching our objective.

Then the premier of Manitoba continued:

I am optimistic and we from Manitoba have always been optimistic as to the eventual outcome of this and other conferences.

Then the premier of Prince Edward Island expressed himself to the same effect. They all paid tribute to the work done by the Prime Minister of Canada and by the Minister of Justice in advancing the work of that conference. The conference closed on September 28, at which time a press statement was issued containing the following:

The conference has had a full and frank discussion of the principles applicable to such a general amending procedure and has reached agreement on many of them. Its members are unanimously of the opinion that substantial progress has been made and are exceedingly gratified at the spirit of harmony and co-operation which has been shown by all delegates throughout the whole of the proceedings.

May I remind the house that this conference was held at the invitation of the government of that province, in the city of Quebec. The press release goes on to say:

The conference has requested the continuing committee of attorneys general to study the proposals which it received with a view to arriving at an amending procedure satisfactory to all governments concerned. The continuing committee met today in the late afternoon and agreed that the provincial attorneys general and the Minister of Justice would exchange views by correspondence leading up to a meeting to be held at Ottawa on November 13, 1950 in order that the matters referred to it might be further considered and a report prepared for submission to a third plenary session of the constitutional conference to be held immediately after the federal-provincial conference on fiscal and other matters which is to meet in Ottawa on December 4, 1950.

The continuing committee has also been authorized to study the methods and techniques whereby a Canadian constitution can be domiciled in Canada as a purely Canadian instrument.

There I can read between the lines the fine Italian hand of the Minister of Justice, harking back to his oft-repeated shibboleth of repatriation of the Canadian constitution, liberating Canada from the shackles of colonialism. I wish the Minister of Justice would set himself occasionally to tasks which are important with the same realism and energy as, in the days of 1950, he set himself to this imaginary task of the liberation of Canada from those hypothetical and entirely imaginary chains which he thinks bound her. And I must say the Minister of Justice has not shown the same ambition, energy and zeal since 1950 which he showed in those well-worded and high-sounding press releases which followed the conference in September of 1950.

Because nothing—absolutely nothing—has happened since—not one thing. Nothing has resulted from this conference, which started off in such a blaze of glory and which dissolved on September 28, 1950 with so many high-sounding words, so many promises of progress for the future. Whether or not there was a meeting on November 13, 1950, as was arranged by the continuing committee, I have been unable to find out. But I do know that on December 4 the federal and provincial governments met again in conference in Ottawa, and issued this statement to the press, as it is reported at page 137 of the proceedings of that conference. The statement bears the following heading, "Statement to the press by the Right Hon. Louis S. St. Laurent at the conclusion of the conference", and states:

The conference discussed:

1. The offer of the federal government for new tax agreements;
2. The offer of the federal government respecting old age security;
3. A provincial proposal for an amendment to the constitution to permit the provincial legislatures to levy an indirect sales tax at the retail level.

The press release goes on to set out the proposals in four short paragraphs, the concluding two of which are as follows:

And that the provincial governments would consider the proposal for new tax agreements and indicate their respective positions at a later date. It was also decided to suspend the further deliberations of the federal-provincial conference on constitutional amendment and of its continuing committee of attorneys general pending consideration of the tax agreements and related matters. Once these have been disposed of, the committee of attorneys general will resume its deliberations at the earliest convenience of the federal and provincial governments.

And that was the end of that conference. Since that time—since December of 1950—we have had nothing but a deep, dark and abysmal silence. The Minister of Justice apparently has abandoned his zeal and his energy. Perhaps he feels that notwithstanding the lack of progress he is nevertheless a good Canadian. I hope he feels he is. I hope he feels he does not labour under any disability because he has not bothered to reconvene this conference. I hope he also realizes to the full that the failure to reconvene this conference is now bedevilling the Canadian constitutional picture and the relationship between the dominion and the provinces to a point where there is grave danger to the whole of the Canadian confederation.

I say that, Mr. Speaker, because the Minister of Justice himself has tied in the whole of the fiscal arrangements between the dominion and the provinces with these constitutional conferences, by the exchange of correspondence which he himself tabled in the house the other day. The Minister of Justice admitted in the answers to questions quite recently that he was in fact appointed chairman of the continuing committee; that his appointment had never been revoked, and that the continuing committee has held no meetings since 1950. He also admitted that the dominion government has issued no invitations since 1950 for any further meetings of the conference, and that he had however received suggestions from some of the provinces that there should be further meetings. Those suggestions were received in inquiries from the premier of Alberta and from the premier of Saskatchewan. In substantiation of that, there was tabled in the house on April 8, as sessional paper No. 209, copies of correspondence exchanged between the premiers of Alberta and Saskatchewan and certain ministers of the present government.

What happened was that on July 12, 1951, the premier of Alberta wrote to the Prime Minister of Canada referring to a press report of the Prime Minister's "Nation's Business" broadcast, in which the Prime Minister said as follows:

> We are actively striving to work out with the provincial authorities a suitable method of making here in Canada any amendment which may be required in the future, to our own constitution.

It would be interesting to hear from the Prime Minister what he regards as being encompassed within the words "actively striving to work out." Will the Minister of Justice tell us; will the Prime Minister tell us; will the Minister of Finance tell us what active efforts have been made by the government since 1950 to work out this suitable method of amending our own constitution here in Canada? Will any of the hon. gentlemen tell us what active efforts have been made by them in this or in any other field of dominion-provincial relations to meet with the provinces and work out any method of agreement whatsoever? Will they tell us what active efforts are being made to meet the reasonable requests of the premier of the province of British Columbia in this or in any other field? Will the minister tell us what has caused him to abandon so entirely his position that until he had repatriated the Canadian constitution we were somehow or other labouring under the shackles of outmoded colonialism, as they have pointed out so enthusiastically? What is the reason for the great change in attitude between September, 1950 and April, 1954?

This is what the Prime Minister said in 1951: They were actively striving to work out with the provincial authorities a suitable method of amending the constitution here in Canada, and the premier of Alberta, I think with a pardonable and understandable curiosity, inquired as follows:

> I would be interested to know if this statement indicates that you propose to reconvene shortly the dominion-provincial conference on constitutional matters. It is our sincere hope that this may be the case. We feel that no time should be lost in finding a satisfactory method of amending our own constitution in Canada.

[Mr. Fulton.]

Well, sir, that received a polite acknowledgment from Mr. J. W. Pickersgill, special assistant to the Prime Minister, a gentleman who has since been translated into another capacity, in which he remains singularly silent on this matter. I hope that when he returns from his undoubted well-earned Easter holiday he will also enter into this matter, and with the advantage of the great background which he has acquired behind the scenes he will be willing to stand up in front of the curtains and enlighten us on all the difficulties which have since beset the dominion government and have persuaded it that it would no longer be profitable even to meet with the provinces around the table to try to work out a solution. However, this Mr. J. W. Pickersgill acknowledged the letter from Mr. Manning and told him:

> I am sending the letter on to Mr. St. Laurent at his summer home in St. Patrick, where he is hoping to spend most of the rest of this month.

And that, Mr. Speaker, was the extent of the satisfaction which Mr. Manning got out of this whole matter until some months later, in September, 1951, when there is a very interesting letter written to Mr. Manning, following upon the fact that the premier of Saskatchewan had made a similar inquiry as to whether and when this conference might be reconvened. After having discussed the matter on the telephone with the premier of Saskatchewan, the Minister of Justice wrote a letter to Mr. Manning dated September 6, in which he said this:

> I believe with you, and feel sure that Mr. Douglas does also, that the best chance of achieving success in the solution of this problem lies in continuing the discussions that were commenced last year.

Some chance, in view of the complete inactivity of the Minister of Justice over the three-year period since the letter. However, he continued, there were certain reasons why it might not be convenient to have it at that particular moment. Then he said:

> Moreover, we have a feeling here, which is shared by Premier Douglas and also by the attorneys general of two other provinces with whom I was conversing today, that we shall probably be able to make more progress in the conference on constitutional amendment after the outstanding fiscal matters relating particularly to the dominion-provincial tax agreements have been cleared up. We think, and in this we are confirmed by the views of several provinces, that it would be wiser to delay the reconvening of the dominion-provincial conference on constitutional amendment until after agreement has been reached between the dominion and the provinces with regard to the matters which were under discussion at the dominion-provincial conference on fiscal relations.

I suggest to you, sir, that no exchange of correspondence could have made it clearer that the whole matter of the relations, both on the particular matters and on the broad general scale, between the dominion and the provinces which were the subject of discussion at the dominion-provincial constitutional conference, is made dependent upon reaching an agreement on fiscal relations between the dominion and the provinces. Indeed, sir, it is difficult for me to understand how any agreement with respect to over-all constitutional amendments, modification or any other aspect of the constitution whatsoever could be reached without some discussion of their impact on the financial arrangements. And since the one is again dependent upon the other, and since the Prime Minister of Canada has issued such glowing statements as to the progress made in the one field and as to the prospects of success in the future with respect to that field, and since the Minister of Justice, as it were, practically staked the whole success of his political career upon repatriating the Canadian constitution, to use his own words, I must confess that I am unable to understand what excuse this government finds for its complete, its continued, its obstinate, and its deliberate failure to invite the provinces to meet with it since December, 1950, to continue those discussions.

I hope, sir, that you regard with equal seriousness to that which I regard it and with which I know every hon. member in all parties regard it, the desirability of reaching agreement on a method of amending Canada's constitution here in Canada. It is a matter to which the Prime Minister referred in a "Nation's Business" broadcast, a broadcast to all the Canadian people in 1951. It is a matter to which he referred again in the course of his election campaign tour of 1953 in the city of Vancouver, and I dare say elsewhere. It is a matter to which the Prime Minister attached the greatest of importance when it suited the political convenience of the moment and of the Liberal party and of the hon. gentleman to do so. But it appears to be a matter which, when it comes to be a concrete problem to be grasped and dealt with in the interests of the whole Dominion of Canada and in the interests of preserving the constitutional relationships of the Dominion of Canada, the hon. gentlemen are more concerned with their political advantage than they are with the national welfare.

Then, as now, they seek to temporize, to procrastinate and to dissimulate with regard to this matter, because they realize that if they grasp the nettle it may sting. The Liberal party, which has always been prepared to set its own particular partisan interests above those of the nation, is not prepared to be stung. But, sir, I suggest to you that this is an issue upon which it is necessary to take a national rather than a partisan point of view. For the reasons which I have advanced, and the quotations that I have placed on the record, I believe we are quite within our rights in saying that this government owes it as a bounden duty to the Canadian people to take up this matter where they left off in September, 1950, and to call the provinces around the table to meet with them under the continued chairmanship of the Prime Minister of Canada, and make a real national effort, rising above narrow party considerations, to solve the problem and find a basis upon which all the provinces and the dominion can go forward again in harmony and unity.

(Translation):

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I do wish it to be clear that I am neither dissimulating nor procrastinating, as the hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) has accused the members of the government and its supporters of doing. On the contrary, in the time at my disposal, I would like to discuss financial relations between the federal government and the provinces. This problem, as he has said himself, by the way, has been a most difficult one for several years. Events which occurred in the province of Quebec in recent weeks have added to its seriousness.

Like the hon. member for Kamloops I think that this matter must be dealt with from a national point of view. But we must remain realistic and deal with this problem as it is, and in the light of present circumstances. I am sincerely convinced that the calling of a federal-provincial conference to examine the rights granted by the constitution would not bring about an immediate solution to the problem with which a large number of residents of the province of Quebec are now faced. The problem for these people is an immediate one, and it is with that matter particularly that I would like to deal, within the larger framework of federal-provincial financial relations in the whole of Canada.

Since it is now nearly ten o'clock I would like to move that the debate be adjourned.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

Motion agreed to and debate adjourned.

IMMIGRATION

DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST MR. AND MRS. HENRI ZORIN

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): I wonder whether I might have the consent of the house, Mr. Speaker, to revert to orders of the day to answer a question asked this afternoon by the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe)?

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister the consent of the house to revert to that period?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Harris: He inquired about a gentleman by the name of Henri Zorin, who was under order of deportation in Montreal. I find I dealt with the appeal on December 15, and dismissed it. In the meantime, however, this gentleman has taken proceedings in the courts of Quebec in order to delay the operation of the deportation order. I feel, therefore, I should not make any statement about it.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris moved the adjournment of the house.

He said: As I shall not be here tomorrow evening, I should like to announce the business for the week following our return after the recess. We shall begin on Monday with a motion to go into supply, and when it is carried will call four departments. We shall then resume this debate, but on Thursday and Friday will take the estimates of public works and northern affairs.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 9.58 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 14, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

DIPLOMATIC INSTRUMENTS

TABLING OF BILATERAL AND MULTILATERAL AGREEMENTS

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to table, in English and in French, texts of three multilateral agreements and eight bilateral agreements concluded recently between Canada and various other countries.

PRIVATE BILLS

SENATE BILLS—FIRST READINGS

Bill No. 423, for the relief of Mary Joy Thomson Asselin.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 424, for the relief of Ronald Arthur Leslie.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 425, for the relief of Lucienne Saint-Laurent Calve.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 426, for the relief of Roberta Barbara Shvemar Feigelman.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 427, for the relief of Pearl Marie Neil Lane.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 428, for the relief of Marjorie May Price Amory.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 429, for the relief of Marie Jeannette Laure Lafreniere Lucas.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 430, for the relief of Frances Goldberg Glegg.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 431, for the relief of Thelma Nellie McKeage Patrick.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 432, for the relief of Madeleine Roy Julien.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 433, for the relief of Louis Tothe. —Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 434, for the relief of Joseph Delphis Guillaume Delorme.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 435, for the relief of Nicolas Joseph Ladislas Barath.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 436, for the relief of Ferencz Gyula Babinszki.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 437, for the relief of Beatrice Alexandra Duff Sheppard.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 438, for the relief of Remi Charbonneau.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 439, for the relief of Kathleen Florence Pippy Hayward.—Mr. Hunter.

Bill No. 440, for the relief of Fred Skiffington.—Mr. Hunter.

QUESTIONS

C.B.C.—TELEVISION INSTALLATION IN TORONTO

Mr. Thatcher:

1. What was the total cost of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation's television installation in Toronto, including building, transmitter, tower, ground system and studio equipment?
2. Were tenders called for this installation?
3. If so, was more than one received?
4. On what basis was the tender or tenders awarded?
5. Who drew up the specifications for buildings and equipment?
6. Were these specifications checked or revised by any outside source or authority?

Mr. McCann:

1. The corporation's television installation at 354 Jarvis street, Toronto, has cost $2,457,702.51 to February 28, 1954.

2. Yes.

3. Yes.

4. Tenders were awarded on the basis of the lowest quotation to meet the specifications and requirements of the corporation.

5. The corporation's architects and engineers.

6. Yes. The tower was designed by the supplier. The reinforced concrete structural design of the building was prepared by outside engineer consultants. The designs and specifications of the tower and building were approved by municipal authorities of the city of Toronto.

CORPORATION INCOME TAX—CLAIMS FOR DEDUCTIONS

Mr. Knowles:

1. For the latest taxation year for which the information is available, what was the total amount of money for which deductibility from corporation income tax was claimed by corporation income tax payers in respect of donations, contributions to approved charities, etc.?
2. For the same taxation year, what was the total amount allowed as deductible?
3. For the same taxation year, what was the total loss to the federal treasury because of such deductions?

Mr. McCann:

1. In 1951, corporations reporting profits claimed $24,691,000 as charitable donations. This is set forth in 1953 taxation statistics, page 121, line 34.

2 and 3. Statistical information not available.

Questions

MARSHLANDS REHABILITATION EXPENDITURES —NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Balcom:

What moneys have been spent in Nova Scotia, and in what locations, on marshlands rehabilitation in the fiscal year 1952-53?

Mr. McCubbin: The following amounts have been spent in Nova Scotia, on marshland rehabilitation, in the fiscal year 1952-53:

Surveys and engineering, $78,257.90; construction work shop (Amherst, Nova Scotia), $50,021.94; construction and maintenance of projects, $587,062.40.

Name	County	Amount
Advocate	Cumberland	$ 99,437.73
Allan River	Annapolis	121.34
Amherst Point	Cumberland	1,863.58
Annapolis Royaltown	Annapolis	11,100.25
Barronsfield	Cumberland	3,005.10
Bishop Beckwith	Kings	11,241.05
Castle Frederick	Hants	7,298.70
Converse	Cumberland	100,239.88
Dentiballis	Annapolis	658.84
Dugeau	Annapolis	1,130.85
Elderkin	Hants	2,619.67
Falmouth Great Dyke	Hants	17,484.13
Falmouth Village	Hants	13,655.58
Fort Belcher	Colchester	16,721.51
Fox Bow	Annapolis	1,488.51
Glenholme	Colchester	99.95
Grand Pré	Kings	1,698.72
Granville Centre	Annapolis	2,944.77
Habitant	Kings	5,488.19
Hebert	Cumberland	1,555.66
John Lusby	Cumberland	14,805.69
Kennetcook	Hants	42.50
Martock	Hants	11,111.72
Masstown	Colchester	12,606.13
McKay	Cumberland	780.93
Morse	Annapolis	1,046.56
Morse Bishop	Annapolis	258.85
Moschelle	Annapolis	831.34
Mount Anne	Annapolis	1,197.37
New Minas	Kings	10,090.29
Newport Town	Hants	1,090.60
Oslo North River	Colchester	9,622.52
Pre Rond	Annapolis	5,010.83
Queen Anne	Annapolis	13,085.00
Ricketson	Annapolis	542.60
River Hebert	Cumberland	55,525.56
Rosette	Annapolis	262.20
Round	Colchester	3,082.40
Ryerson	Annapolis	1,909.67
Saulnierville	Digby	154.56
Scotch Village	Hants	5,846.69
Seaman	Cumberland	4.63
Selma	Hants	22,930.30
St. Croix	Hants	13,538.80
Tregothic	Hants	1,905.18
Truro Dykeland Park	Colchester	15,060.62
Upper Belleisle	Annapolis	2,948.70
Upper Nappan	Cumberland	9,243.77
Victoria Diamond Jubilee	Colchester	1,026.13
Walker	Annapolis	802.55
Wellington	Kings	18,630.28
Windsor Forks	Hants	50,380.20
Woodworth	Annapolis	1,833.22
Total		$587,062.40
Grand total		$715,342.24

Questions

ARMED SERVICES PAYROLL—HALIFAX

Mr. Balcom:

What is the total of the payroll in Halifax, for (a) army; (b) navy; (c) air force?

Mr. Blanchette:

Total pay and allowances for service personnel in Halifax during the year 1953 were:

(a) army	$3,792,312.24
(b) navy	5,106,973.67
(c) air force	801,600.00
	$9,700,885.91

FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—ALBERTA

Mr. Hanna:

1. What was the total expenditure in Alberta for the fiscal year 1952-53, by the federal government, including the statutory subsidy and tax rental agreement payments?
2. What was the total expenditure during the fiscal year 1952-53 in Alberta by each federal government department and agency?

Mr. Benidickson:

1 and 2.

Expenditures by the federal government in the province	Thousands of dollars
A Direct payments to the provincial government:
(a) Compensation under dominion-provincial taxation agreements	$ 32,322
(b) Compensation under section 7, Dominion-Provincial Tax Rental Agreements Act, 1947 (share of net taxes collected from certain public utility companies)	991
(c) Statutory subsidies	2,127
(d) General health grants (national health and welfare)	2,106
	37,546
B Direct payments to or on behalf of individual residents of the province:
(a) Family allowances (national health and welfare)	22,576
(b) Pensions (world wars 1 and 2) —veterans affairs	8,892
(c) Veterans war service gratuities and re-establishment credits (veterans affairs)	858
(d) Veterans post-discharge rehabilitation benefits (veterans affairs)	220
(e) War veterans allowances (veterans affairs)	1,793
(f) Old age pensions, pensions to blind persons (and old age security payments)—National health and welfare	19,847
	54,186
C Interest paid on Government of Canada bonds:
Estimated amount of interest paid to holders of Government of Canada bonds in the province	15,577
D Estimate of major expenditures by government departments or agencies within the province:
(a) Agriculture	11,009
(b) Citizenship and immigration	1,906
(c) Defence production	68
(d) Finance	873
(e) Fisheries	13
(f) Justice	326
(g) Labour	1,630
(h) Mines and technical surveys	206
(i) National defence	74,418
(j) National health and welfare	1,945
(k) National revenue	2,024
(l) Public works	2,177
(m) Resources and development	7,750
(n) Royal Canadian Mounted Police	2,623
(o) Trade and commerce	835
(p) Transport (including C.M.C. and N.H. board)	2,263
(q) Veterans affairs	4,152
(r) Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation	91
	114,309
E Proportional share of federal government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund.
Portion allocated to province on basis of proportion of number of insured workers in province to number of insured workers in Canada	1,561
Total expenditures	$223,179

Expenditure figures do not include:—

(a) The more general type of budgetary expenditures which are made for the benefit of the country as a whole and which are of direct benefit to all the provinces. In this category are the expenses of the central legislative body at Ottawa, the financial and administrative departments at Ottawa and the research activities of the national research council.

(b) Payments to the majority of suppliers of goods and services as the payments are in many cases made to the head office of the company and therefore do not lend themselves to an accurate segregation by provinces.

Questions

MARGARINE AND BUTTER—COMPARATIVE FOOD VALUE

Mr. Poulin:

1. In taking as a basis of comparison butter and margarine sold by dealers in Canada, is the nutrition division of the Department of National Health and Welfare in a position to state which of these two products has the greater food value?
2. If so, which product?

Mr. Robertson:

1. No, because sufficient analyses of butter and margarine as sold in Canada are not available in the files of the nutrition division.

2. See answer to No. 1 above.

LA MARTONA, LION AND MONARCH SPREADS

Mr. Boisvert:

1. Are the products, labelled La Martona, Lion spread and Monarch spread, foods under the provisions of the Food and Drugs Act?
2. If so, what are the components of such products and the proportion of each?
3. Where are the producers of these foods located?

Mr. Robertson:

1. Yes.

2. The product La Martona is labelled to show the ingredients as shortening, butter, emulsified cream cheese, with condiments and salt. Laboratory analysis of this product has shown a moisture content of 15·84 per cent and a fat content of 77·18 per cent.

The product Lion spread is labelled to show the ingredients as animal fat, salt, milk powder, flavouring and colour. No analytical report is available at the present time.

3. The product La Martona is made by Les Fromages Davidson Cheese Products Ltee, Ste. Thecle, P.Q., and the product Lion spread is made by the Lion Spread Products Ltd., Grand'Mere, P.Q.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—MIXING OF WHEAT GRADES

Mr. McCullough (Moose Mountain):

1. Is it the policy of the Canadian wheat board to mix different grades of wheat prior to sale?
2. If so, what method is followed and for what reason is this done?
3. What grade of wheat is used to make first grade flour?
4. What was the net price per bushel for grade 3 northern wheat delivered by farmers to elevators at Carlyle, Saskatchewan, for each year 1939 to 1953 inclusive?
5. For the years 1939 to 1953 inclusive, what percentage of Canadian wheat graded No. 1 northern; No. 2 northern and No. 3 northern?

Mr. Dickey:

1. The Canadian wheat board, not operating elevator facilities, does not mix grades of grain. Operators of elevators may mix grain in accordance with the terms of the Canada Grain Act and regulations thereunder.

2. See answer to No. 1 above.

3. The Canadian wheat board cannot answer this question because it is not engaged in the milling of wheat. Generally speaking, grades from No. 1 northern to No. 4 northern inclusive are considered as milling grades although at times lower grades can be used. Much depends upon the milling characteristics of each grade from year to year.

4. The Canadian wheat board can only answer this question in so far as board initial payments, interim and final payments are concerned. The following table shows net proceeds to producers for No. 3 northern wheat delivered to the board at Carlyle (18 cents per cwt.) Prairie Farm Assistance Act levy deducted.

Crop years	Initial payments	Interim payments	Final payment	Net proceeds to producer at elevator cents	cents	cents	cents
1939	46·530	.....	.....	46·530
1940	47·025	.....	8·146	55·171
1941	48·510	.....	15·897	64·407
1942	68·805	.....	11·612	80·417
1943	104·940	.....	12·146	117·086
1944	104·940	.....	18·677	123·617
1945	104·940	49·500	8·341	162·781
1946	114·840	39·600	8·341	162·781
1947	114·345	39·600	8·341	162·286
1948	133·155	19·800	8·341	161·296
1949	152·955	.....	8·341	161·296
1950	113·355	19·800	29·343	162·498
1951	117·315	19·800	25·333	162·448
1952	117·315	19·800	22·341	159·456
1953	117·315	.....	.....	.....

[1] From August 1, 1939 to September 27, 1943 producers may have marketed wheat outside of the Canadian wheat board.

Questions

5.

	No. 1 Northern	No. 2 Northern	No. 3 Northern	Total for 3 grades
1939-40	56·3	22·2	4·6	83·1
1940-41	49·0	28·7	8·7	86·4
1941-42	36·5	38·1	10·2	84·8
1942-43	12·5	32·2	26·4	71·1
1943-44	19·4	47·4	16·6	83·4
1944-45	25·1	49·3	13·7	88·1
1945-46	30·6	45·5	12·1	88·2
1946-47	20·5	44·9	17·1	82·5
1947-48	13·8	43·0	22·0	78·8
1948-49	42·6	36·7	5·7	85·0
1949-50	27·6	51·4	7·4	86·4
1950-51	4·3	15·8	19·1	39·2
1951-52	0·5	7·8	35·1	43·4
1952-53	9·6	51·4	21·0	82·0
Aug. 1-March 31, 1953-54	3·7	51·2	30·7	85·6
Percentage for whole period	22·7	37·0	16·9	76·6

Percentages shown for the years 1939-42 inclusive are computed on the basis of inspections by Board of Grain Commissioners and do not include tough and damp classifications within these grades.

Percentages shown from 1943 on are taken from the marketing statistics of the board and include tough and damp classifications within the grades 1, 2 and 3.

INDIANS

Mr. Mang:

1. What is the Indian population of Canada?
2. What has been the rate of increase in the last ten years of the Indian population under seven years of age?
3. How many Indian day schools are there in Saskatchewan?
4. How many Indian residential schools in Saskatchewan?
5. How many new Indian schools have been constructed during the past four years?
6. What is the total amount of money held by the federal government in trust for Indians in Canada, and what rate of interest does this amount bear?
7. What has been the total earnings of Indians in Saskatchewan for the years 1950-51-52-53?
8. From what sources is the revenue of Indians derived?
9. What is the total annual expenditure of the Indian affairs branch in (a) Canada; (b) Saskatchewan?

Mr. McCann:

1. 136,407, according to the 1949 departmental census.

2. The population of this age group increased by 26·4 per cent during the period 1939 to 1949.

3. 52 day schools and one seasonal day school.

4. Nine.

5. 205, including 31 constructed in the province of Saskatchewan.

6. $22,881,111.38. The interest rate for $1,069,889.85 is six per centum and five per centum on the remainder.

7. This information is not available.

8. Sources of revenue of Indians include wages, salaries, or other returns from a wide variety of occupations; also rentals and royalties from reserve lands, interest on trust funds and family allowances, old age pensions, etc.

9. (a) $15,184,013 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1953.

(b) $1,794,596 for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1953.

The above figures are from the annual appropriation of the Indian affairs branch and do not include expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

IMMIGRATION—PERCENTAGE OF POPULATION

Mr. Fulton:

What is the figure, expressed as a percentage of total population, which it is felt by the government is acceptable as a rough guide to indicate the annual number of immigrants which, under normal circumstances, the country can safely bring in and successfully absorb?

Mr. McCann: The number of immigrants admitted to Canada in any one year is not based on a percentage of the population but is related directly to the absorptive capacity of the country, which varies from time to time.

LOANS TO OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. Hansell:

1. What loans or advances, if any, were made to any other countries, during the years 1950 to 1953 inclusive?
2. What terms of repayment were agreed upon in each loan?
3. What security does Canada hold in respect to each of these loans?

Mr. Benidickson:

1. None.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

Questions

INCOME TAX—QUEBEC

Mr. Deschatelets:

What sum of money does five per cent of the amount of individual income taxes paid by the taxpayers of the province of Quebec, for the fiscal year 1953-54, represent?

Mr. McCann: Information not available, as the time for filing 1953 income tax returns by individuals does not expire until 30th April, 1954.

MARITIME MARSHLAND REHABILITATION ACT—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Lusby:

1. What were the total expenditures made in the province of Nova Scotia, by counties, during the fiscal year 1953-54 under the provisions of the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act?

2. What new construction projects under the provisions of the act are contemplated for the fiscal year 1954-55, in the county of Cumberland, and what is the proposed amount of expenditure on each such project?

Mr. McCubbin:

1. The following amounts have been spent in Nova Scotia under the provisions of the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act in the fiscal year 1953-54:

Surveys and engineering	$ 73,107.98
Construction work shop at Amherst	38,344.34
Construction supervision ...	28,181.54
Construction and maintenance of projects	729,991.80
Total	$869,625.66

Project expenditures by counties:

Cumberland	$297,516.26
Hants	235,799.37
Colchester	29,057.37
Annapolis	150,207.86
Kings	17,200.54
Digby	161.00
Yarmouth	49.40
Total	$729,991.80

Note: These figures are not complete in that April 30 is the closing date for paying accounts incurred during the fiscal year; and a few accounts not yet submitted are not included.

2. Proposed expenditures by projects in Cumberland county in the fiscal year 1954-55:

Amherst Point marsh	$23,000
John Lusby marsh	28,200
Minudie marsh	76,000

Estimated cost of maintenance and repairs to existing works in county for fiscal year 1954-55: $7,000.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

POST OFFICE EXPENDITURES—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Balcom:

1. What was the total expenditure during the fiscal year 1952-53 for postal services in Nova Scotia, for (a) salaries at staff offices, district offices and for railway mail clerks; (b) salaries at semi staff, revenue and sub post offices and rental allowances paid by the Post Office Department?

2. What were the estimated rentals and maintenance costs of post offices in public buildings and rentals paid by the public works department for other post offices, during the calendar year 1952?

3. How many rural routes and other mail services, separately, were in operation in Nova Scotia on April 1, 1953 and what was the total cost thereof, during the fiscal year 1952-53?

4. What was the revenue derived from postal operations in Nova Scotia, during the fiscal year 1952-53?

5. How many post offices were there in operation in Nova Scotia as at April 1, 1953?

Mr. Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare):

1. (a) $1,968,043; (b) $939,803.

2. $374,696.

3. Rural routes, 302; side services, 207; stage services, 367; city services, 47. Total cost, $907,470.

This does not include the proportionate cost of railway and air services as it is not practical to apportion this on a provincial basis.

4. $4,149,099.

5. 1,215.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—INCREASE IN BENEFITS

Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the Unemployment Insurance Act been studied, since January 1, 1954, by the government or by any officials thereof to determine whether there should be an increase in the rates of unemployment insurance benefits?

2. If so, by whom have such studies been made?

3. Have such studies resulted in any decisions or recommendations to the Minister of Labour?

4. If so, what are the terms of any such decisions or recommendations?

5. Will legislation based thereon be introduced at this session?

Mr. Martin:

1. Continuously under study.

2. Unemployment insurance commission.

3. No.

4 and 5. See answer to No. 3.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT COMMISSION—CONTROL OF ATOMIC WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Hunter (Parkdale): I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the United Nations disarmament commission, which includes Canada as a member, taking any action at present to achieve agreement on the prohibition and control of atomic weapons, including the H-bomb?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question, the answer to which is in the affirmative. The United Nations general assembly, by resolution of November 28 last year, suggested that the disarmament commission, which consists of the members of the security council and Canada, should study the desirability of establishing a subcommittee consisting of representatives of powers principally involved which would seek by agreement to work out arrangements for the elimination of all major weapons adaptable to mass destruction, and for effective international control of atomic energy to ensure the prohibition of atomic weapons and the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only. As the house will be aware, the disarmament commission held its most recent meeting in New York on April 9, and is meeting again this afternoon. In the resolution now before that commission Canada has been proposed for inclusion in the subcommittee, as a power principally involved, although no final decision has yet been taken by the disarmament commission. The Canadian government will of course play its full part as a member of the commission and is ready to participate in renewed efforts to resolve the problems of the control of atomic energy.

TRADE

PARIS CONFERENCE—STRATEGIC GOODS WITHHELD FROM COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the minister's attention been drawn to the press report from Paris appearing in this morning's Globe and Mail regarding the conference of fifteen countries in Paris meeting to revise the list of strategic goods that the West refuses to send to communist countries; and can the minister inform the house whether Canada is sufficiently represented at this meeting?

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I wish to thank the hon. member for having given notice of his question. I have seen the press dispatch in question, and Canada is being represented at the meeting to which this press dispatch refers. The head of our delegation to that meeting will be Dana Wilgress.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VETERANS LAND ACT

REPORTED REFUSAL OF FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on Monday, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) asked me if I was aware that veterans farming under the Veterans Land Act are being refused farm improvement loans. He also asked what is the reason for the change in policy respecting veterans.

I wish to state that there has been no change in the policy respecting these loans.

The Farm Improvement Loans Act provides for seven loan classes. The regulations under the act restrict loans in five of these seven classes to an owner of a farm. The definition of an owner under the Farm Improvement Loans Act is:

> Owner includes one having an equitable or legal interest in the farm.

A person holding land under the Veterans Land Act is a tenant at will. Section 10 of the Veterans Land Act reads as follows:

> Every veteran holding or occupying land sold by the director shall until the director grants or conveys the land to him be deemed a tenant at will.

It follows therefore that a Veterans Land Act settler would not be eligible for a farm improvement loan where a loan is restricted to an owner. A Veterans Land Act settler would, of course, be able to obtain a loan for the purchase of either livestock or farm implements. Under the regulations these two classes of loans can be made to tenants.

I am advised that one bank had issued a directive to its supervisors to the effect that Veterans Land Act settlers were not eligible for any loans under the Farm Improvement Loans Act. My officials took this up with the bank's supervisors and I have reason to believe that its head office will issue a corrected directive.

COAL

PURCHASES FOR GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. B. McCulloch (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Prudham). How much bituminous coal was ordered for the federal government buildings in Ottawa for the fiscal years 1953-54 and 1954-55? How much of this, in each of the above two years, was Canadian coal?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. McCulloch (Pictou): What prices per ton were paid in each of the two years?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. George Prudham (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give notice of his question, and I am in a position to answer it.

His first question is:

How much bituminous coal was ordered for the federal government buildings in Ottawa for the fiscal years 1953-54 and 1954-55?

In 1953-54 there were 52,980 tons purchased, and for 1954-55 62,908 tons have been ordered. In 1953-54 I find that 11,908 tons were of Canadian origin and in 1954-55 I find that 62,908 tons have been ordered from Canadian mines.

The price paid in 1953-54 was, for American coal, $10.50 per net ton and the price paid in the same year for Canadian coal was $11.95 per ton. Canadian coal ordered for this year has been ordered at $10.68 per net ton for slack coal and $11.43 for stoker coal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IGOR GOUZENKO—REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF POLICE PROTECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alistair Stewart (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Justice. Is the newspaper story correct that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police have withdrawn protection from Igor Gouzenko?

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Yesterday my hon. friend's colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), asked a somewhat similar question. I would say in reply to both questions —that asked yesterday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the one today by the hon. member for Winnipeg North—that, as the house is aware, it has always been the policy of the government not to disclose the details of the security arrangements made on behalf of Mr. Gouzenko. This policy of non-disclosure is still in effect. The arrangements made for Mr. Gouzenko's protection have, naturally, varied from time to time and have been adjusted to the circumstances of Mr. Gouzenko's own activities. To this end the government has endeavoured at all times to co-operate with Mr. Gouzenko.

I think therefore the house will appreciate that it is not in the public interest, and certainly not in Mr. Gouzenko's interest, to express at this time any opinion about the usefulness of continuing the present arrangements, since the information which has been sought is that which, I should imagine, would be most valuable to those who might have a hostile attitude toward Mr. Gouzenko's security.

[Mr. McCulloch (Pictou).]

TRANSPORTATION

MONTREAL—IMPROVEMENT OR CONSTRUCTION OF TUNNELS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. Has he knowledge of any plan for federal aid to improve the Wellington street tunnel in Montreal, or consideration of a new tunnel in its place in the near future?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): All I can say is that during the sittings of the railways and shipping committee, when Mr. Donald Gordon was under examination, the hon. member for St. Ann (Mr. Healy) raised the same question. After some discussion during the course of the proceedings the president of the Canadian National Railways undertook to give the matter consideration. I understand since that, because of the representations made by the hon. member for St. Ann, the chief engineer of the Canadian National Railways and one of the representatives of the city of Montreal have been in consultation about the matter.

With reference to the second part of the hon. member's question, as to the tunnel, I would say that the federal government has already provided, in co-operation with the city of Montreal, two tunnels under the Lachine canal, one at St. Remi street and the other at Atwater street, the first at a cost of about $5 million and the second at a cost of about $7 million. I have no information as to any additional tunnels being provided at this time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ACTING HOUSE LEADERSHIP OF THE PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE PARTY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Daniel McIvor (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege. I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Fraser) upon his acting as leader of the Progressive Conservative group in the house. It is a good sign for the future.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RECRUITMENT OF TEACHERS FOR OVERSEAS SCHOOLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. K. Fraser (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Owing to the fact that I have had a number of letters,

I should like to ask him to what branch of his department a school teacher would apply who wished to go overseas to teach the children of the men in the services. What are the qualifications required?

Hon. Brooke Claxton (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are hoping to open a number of schools in connection with the military camps and air force camps in Germany and France at the beginning of the 1954-55 school year. Arrangements have been made with the provincial school authorities in all the provinces, I believe, under which teachers qualified to teach in the various provinces should apply through the provincial school authorities; and places are allocated on a quota basis approximately in the proportion of the number of children whose ordinary places of residence would be in each of the provinces. However, in addition, some applicants have applied to the department. Such applications will be considered in conjunction with those received by the provincial authorities, and they should be made to Mr. Harry Low, the director of the bureau of current affairs.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SALE OF LITERATURE AT NEWSSTAND IN CHATEAU LAURIER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to a question raised yesterday by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). The hon. member asked:

> Is it the policy of the Canadian National Railways to permit the sale of the appalling trash sold under the name of literature on the newsstand of the Chateau Laurier hotel? If so, is this "literature" picked out for the hotel by any department, either the Canadian National Railways or the Department of Transport?

I replied by stating that if it was a concessionaire operating the newsstand I did not think the railways would have any jurisdiction over it.

I have since inquired of the Canadian National Railways and I find that the newsstand at the Chateau Laurier hotel is and has for many years been operated by a concessionaire. The hotel management, while exercising no direct control over the operations of the newsstand, can and do bring to the attention of the concessionaire any complaints respecting the type of printed matter sold on the hotel premises and demand its removal if the complaint is found to be justified.

I am further informed that there have been no such complaints since the year 1948, over and above the one which, I take it, the hon. member wished to make yesterday. I should like to add that if the literature is found to be obscene within the meaning of the Criminal Code then a prosecution can be entered at the instance of the provincial or municipal authorities who are responsible for the implementation of that section of the Criminal Code.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF PATROL BOAT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Stuart S. Garson (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming), without notice, asked me two questions which I agreed to take as notice and to which I agreed to reply today. The first question was this:

> May I ask the Minister of Justice if it is not the policy of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to purchase needed equipment in Canada when available from Canadian sources?

The answer to that is that it is the policy of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to do so.

The second question was this:

> If so, is that policy now being followed with respect to the purchase of a patrol boat which is to be a prototype of other boats required for R.C.M.P. services?

The answer to that question is yes.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 13, consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell.

(Translation):

Hon. Jean Lesage (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I was saying yesterday evening that the financial relations between the federal government and the provinces had been a thorny problem, especially in the last few years. I added that the events which occurred in the province of Quebec in recent weeks have added to its seriousness.

I do not seek to lessen the gravity of the situation in which a group of taxpayers of Quebec find themselves. I know that my colleagues in the house recognize that the matter cannot be lightly brushed aside or easily settled. Because the situation may have far-reaching consequences, it must be examined from all angles, and its causes and effects determined in a dispassionate manner, avoiding charges and counter-charges and, above all, name-calling. Would there be any justification, for instance, for accusing me of being an enemy of my province?

I am a Canadian, a son, a resident and a representative of the province of Quebec; to my mind, the only emotion which the circumstances permit is that resulting from the concern that the citizens of my province may find themselves in a predicament.

I fully realize that the personal income tax levied by the Quebec government and the attitude—fully justified, in my opinion—of the Canadian government in regard to total deduction of the tax, give rise in my province to differences of opinion which may rend the unity of the racial group to which I belong.

Peace and contentment within each group as well as between the groups that compose the Canadian nation are so necessary for the safeguarding of national unity and for the social and economic progress of our country that every man of good will must leave aside any political prejudice and interest and conscientiously examine the problem in an effort to find a solution. This afternoon I shall endeavour to set forth as objectively as possible the data of this problem.

The distribution among the provinces of taxation revenues in the form of grants by parliament is a policy which is entirely consistent with the spirit of confederation.

Statistics prove that the payment of subsidies to the provinces was an integral part of the implementation of the act in 1867 by the fathers of confederation themselves. Indeed in 1868, 54 per cent of the provinces' total revenues were made up of subsidies granted to them by the Canadian government. This percentage varied from year to year between 42 per cent and 57 per cent until 1888; between 29 per cent and 37 per cent from 1888 to 1909; from then on it gradually decreased until the depression of 1930-35 when, in that last year, the percentage reached a level of 46 per cent, to fall off again afterwards.

In regard to Quebec, the subsidies received from the Canadian government made up 60 per cent of the provincial revenue for the fiscal year 1867-68 or 59·67 to be exact. During the first ten years of confederation, the average was 46 per cent; during the first twenty-five years it was 37·5 per cent. This percentage has consistently decreased so that it barely exceeds 1 per cent at present.

[Mr. Lesage.]

It is not fair, therefore, to claim that the payment of subsidies to the provinces is contrary to the wishes of the fathers of confederation. Throughout their lifetime, such payments were made on a high scale.

Being faithful to the spirit of confederation, in order to establish a fairer distribution of revenues which help all the provinces to fulfil their constitutional obligations, the Canadian government made, since 1945, various proposals to local governments with a view to reaching fiscal agreements which would at the same time offer the important advantage of avoiding double taxation.

I think that nobody will deny that, in order to maintain our system of government, every level of government must have the financial resources it needs to fulfil its constitutional obligations.

But certain provinces would not be able to meet these needs simply by tapping the direct taxation fields within their territorial limits. Such is the case with the maritime provinces which, unfortunately, participate only in a slight degree in the economic development of the nation. Manitoba and Saskatchewan can claim their share of the taxes levied on a national revenue to which they are contributing handsomely, but which is out of reach of their taxing powers.

We must keep in mind that most of the head offices of the companies which derive their profits from operations which they carry out in all the provinces are located in Ontario and Quebec and that it is in these provinces that their incomes are subject to taxation, as is the personal income of most of their highly-paid employees.

Under those circumstances, it is only fair that the tax revenues be divided in some manner between the various provinces.

In the province of Quebec, for instance, most of the taxes come from the island of Montreal and are distributed throughout the province by the Quebec government. And yet nobody complains about it.

The proposed tax rental agreements submitted by the Canadian government between 1945 and 1950 were not deemed acceptable by all the provinces; but the latter did not submit any workable alternatives.

In 1950, the Canadian government called a new conference and put forward a new system of agreements which possessed the advantage of not requiring acceptance by all the provinces. Without studying in detail, for the time being, the basis of payments made under those agreements, I wish to stress an all-important point. The amount of $134 million which the province of Ontario received for the fiscal year 1953-54 is substantially the same as the one it could have collected itself in corporation and personal income taxes, which are deductible taxes, had it not accepted the agreements. The latter amount could be estimated as follows for 1953-54:

	Millions of Dollars
1. 7 per cent on corporation income	81.0
2. Taxes on capital of corporations and the educational tax such as the one collected in Quebec	16.3
3. 5 per cent of the federal tax on personal income	4.7
	30.7
	132.7

It should also be noted that as far as the richest province is concerned, namely Ontario, the amount collected under the agreements on the one hand, and on the other, the product of direct deductible taxes it could levy are equal or quite so. The chief reason which prompted Ontario to sign an agreement was, therefore, to avoid double taxation.

The other provinces receive more, and Quebec could receive more, than they could levy themselves directly from deductible taxes.

The distribution of that surplus to each province out of general revenues of Canada is precisely the main reason for agreements, as I explained a while ago.

Quebec would have received, under the agreements, in 1953-54, the sum of $113 million. I exclude the succession duties which are not rented to the federal government by Ontario, and I leave out in my estimates constitutional subsidies. As it did not sign the agreement, it levied in corporation taxes, which are deductible taxes, the following amounts, according to the figures released by its minister of finance in his budget speech of February 12, 1954:

	Millions of Dollars
7 per cent on corporation profits ..	53.1
Special corporation taxes
(a) on paid-up capital	13.5
(b) for educational purposes ...	3.5
Total corporation taxes	70.1

It should be pointed out immediately, at this point, that 5 per cent of the taxes levied by us in the province of Quebec would have amounted to $15 million, whereas 5 per cent of the taxes levied by us in Ontario amounted to more than $30 million. In other words we have collected from Ontario more than twice as much in personal income tax as we have collected in Quebec.

But let me return to the province of Quebec: $70 million deductible in respect of corporation income tax, 15 per cent deductible in respect of 5 per cent of personal income tax, that is, a grand total of $85 million deductible, as compared to $113 million which it could have received under the agreements. Since it is not the richest province, this means that it could have collected an extra $28 million under agreements whose object is precisely to enable less wealthy provinces to meet their constitutional obligations through a more equitable distribution of national revenue.

I said "national revenue" and that should be made clear: the additional $28 million which the province would have obtained through the agreements do not represent an amount which would be collected specifically in the province of Quebec, it would come from the federal treasury out of general taxes paid by all Canadians.

I said that the Quebec government had not seen fit to accept the agreement. I repeat that no pressure was exerted to have it sign. The only pressure I am willing to exert is to appeal to the provincial government so that we might reach an understanding in order to avoid, among other things, double taxation which it has just imposed upon many of the taxpayers in my province.

Let us not forget, Mr. Speaker—and this is no criticism on my part, I merely point out widely-known facts—that it is pursuant to a one-sided action of the majority in the Quebec legislature, an action that was taken although it was well known that the federal law only provides for a 5 per cent deduction, that 300,000 taxpayers in my province will pay a double tax on their revenue.

This double taxation is exclusively due to the decision of the Quebec government which now attempts to throw the blame upon the Canadian government. This reminds me of the little boy who pulled the cat's tail and replied to his father, who had told him to stop: "I am not pulling: the cat is."

We must clearly distinguish between two facts: on the one hand, there is the provincial legislation on personal income tax, the passing of which caused double taxation. On the other hand, there are the demands made upon the federal government to allow the total deduction of the provincial tax from the federal tax. These two questions should be distinguished with respect to their very nature as well as chronologically.

I would be the last one to suggest that the Quebec legislature had no right to impose such a tax. The constitution gives it the right to impose direct taxes within the province for provincial purposes. The problem is not whether the province has the right to tax personal income, for such a right is recognized.

The problem which we have to solve—and it seems to me it is important that we know just what this problem is—is not the matter of the right which the province has to levy income tax. This is a unanimously recognized right. That is not a problem.

The Quebec government has not consulted the federal authorities, neither before, during, nor since the passing of its law, in order to find grounds for a mutual agreement as far as deductibility is concerned, which is the second point at issue. We have read statements in newspapers, we have received claims from the taxpayers, but we have not heard from the Quebec government.

Is it necessary to make any comments on such a procedure? I do not believe so because, I repeat, we must avoid charges and counter-charges.

Some citizens of Quebec have asked us to amend our income tax law in order to allow those taxpayers who pay the provincial income tax to deduct the total amount of this tax from the federal personal income tax, up to a maximum of 15 per cent.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) has pointed out to us why this was impossible. But I repeat that it is the intention of no one to deny the legislatures their right to tax the income of individuals.

We cannot, however, accept the unjustified claim that the provinces have priority over the Canadian government in so far as direct taxation is concerned. To my knowledge, it is neither arrogant nor provocative on the part of anyone to mention politely, according to the terms of our oath, the rights that are granted to the federal government by our constitution. Nothing in the B.N.A. Act may be construed as giving priority to local governments in the field of direct taxation.

I have already discussed this matter thoroughly in the house, and the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Breton) expounded it in a masterly speech last November.

May I add that the law is so clear that it has never been referred to the courts. The right of the Canadian government to tax by every means has never been questioned, because the matter is beyond discussion. In 1945, the Leader of the Opposition himself, while premier of Ontario, stated:

> The provinces were authorized to levy direct taxes . . . whereas the federal government was authorized to procure funds by means of any kind of taxes.

For that matter, the theory that the provinces have a prior right is absurd. If such a theory were accepted, a province could levy a tax amounting to 100 per cent of the federal taxes on personal and corporate income and even of the federal sales tax, and if this tax were deductible from the federal taxes, nothing would remain of the latter.

I have sometimes heard the following: inasmuch as parliament allows a deduction of 5 per cent in regard to provincial taxes, it therefore recognizes the prior right of the latter. Or the following: since parliament pays a rental to the provinces that have signed tax rental agreements in return for their rights to direct taxes, it recognizes that local governments have a prior right in this field.

In neither case, Mr. Speaker, is there anything but the recognition of a parallel and concurrent right; in both cases, the Canadian government makes an honest effort to help the provinces, while eliminating the inconvenience of double taxation for the taxpayers, and the cost thereof for the governments.

If, having entered a business partnership, my partner and I have equal rights, nothing prevents me from leasing out my share to my partner. But such lease surely does not imply any priority either of his right or mine. It implies equal rights.

Mr. Speaker, before giving an answer to those who have asked that the new provincial tax be made deductible, you may rest assured that we considered the matter seriously, that everything was duly weighed because, as I have said, the members of this government are not satisfied with the present situation.

But we must consider the facts as they are. What we are being asked is, in fact, from the point of view of deductibility, to amend section 33 (1) of the Income Tax Act which now reads as follows:

> Where an individual has paid tax on income for a taxation year to the government of a province in which he resided, was employed or carried on business during the year, there may be deducted from the tax otherwise payable under this part for the year the lesser of (a) an amount equal to the tax so paid, or (b) 5 per cent of the tax otherwise payable under this part for the year.

In other words, we are being asked to amend this section by changing the figure 5 to 15.

It is, in fact, what we are requested to do because, in order that each Quebec taxpayer may deduct his provincial tax in full, the deduction provided by section 33 on an individual basis must be allowed up to 15 per cent. This cannot be done otherwise than on an individual basis, of course.

What would be the effects of an amendment of that kind? Here I shall refer to the tax agreements since an attempt has been made to justify the merits of the suggestions which were brought forward by establishing a comparison between what the province of Quebec would receive under such agreements and what it now collects plus what it could collect in deductible taxes.

The suggested amendment would permit any province which has not signed an agreement or lets an agreement lapse, to levy on every taxpayer a personal income tax equal to 15 per cent of his federal tax and deductible from the latter. That means therefore that with a possible deduction of 15 per cent, Ontario would be greatly tempted to drop the agreements because that province could then collect over $60 million more than what it now receives under the agreements, at no additional cost to its taxpayers.

And more than that, I believe that Ontario could go so far as to request the termination of the agreement it signed on October 29, 1952. It could hold that there has been a breach of faith on the part of the federal government, since one of the bases of this agreement is precisely an amount equal to 5 per cent of the personal income tax liability of the residents of the province, as provided for by section 4 (1) (a) of the said agreement.

The $60 million surplus that I mentioned a moment ago could be collected by the Ontario government and would then be part of its revenue instead of going into the nation's consolidated fund. The benefit of the regulating effect of our taxation system would thus be lost for the nation and the province of Ontario would be placed financially in a privileged position, simply because it happens to be situated, geographically, in the centre of our country. Let us remember the case of Montreal, which I gave as an example, in relation to the rest of the province. Situated as it is, at the head of navigation, it pays the greater part of the provincial taxes.

On page 10 of its submission to the Prime Minister of Canada, the Montreal chamber of commerce says this:

> In practice, the federal government accepts the deduction of the provincial income tax from its own income tax within certain limits.

On page 27 of the same brief, the chamber of commerce determines what that limit should be when it says that one could seriously object to the full deduction of the new provincial tax only if the said deduction gave the province of Quebec a privilege not granted already to the other provinces.

Now, I indicated a moment ago that one of the main characteristics of the present agreements is that the province of Ontario obtains the same amount it would get if it levied its own personal and corporation income taxes according to the present rates of deduction from the federal income tax, that is 5 per cent in the case of personal income tax. The province of Quebec would thus have an advantage over Ontario, although the latter provides nearly half of the federal revenue derived from personal income tax.

Or else, the province of Ontario could consent to the continuation of the agreement, on condition that it be revised so as to give her as much as she could levy herself in the form of deductible taxes, including 15 per cent of the federal income tax. Consequently, that province could ask for a payment of $196 million instead of $134 million, that is, an increase of 45 per cent.

But the amounts payable to the other provinces would also have to be changed. Under the new formula with its 45 per cent increase, if it were accepted for Ontario, the amount would be $164 million instead of $113 million for Quebec.

And it would go round and round. Quebec would no longer be satisfied with 15 per cent. If it is fair to say, as has been said, that we should accept the principle of authorizing a deduction corresponding to the amount which the province would have received had she signed an agreement, Quebec would then request a 31 per cent deduction from personal income tax.

Again Ontario could say: "I am entitled to the same treatment", and so on. The ultimate and ridiculous consequence of all this would be that the federal government would no longer enjoy the fields of taxation granted to it by the constitution.

Some have said: "Why is it that last year parliament authorized the deduction of the Quebec educational tax and increased the amount of deductibility from 5 to 7 per cent in the case of corporation taxes?" The answer is quite simple: such a decision did not have the effect of undermining the very basis of fiscal agreements with the other provinces. The other provinces, and more particularly Ontario, had they not signed the agreement, could have received in deductible taxes, including that part of provincial taxes which became deductible last year, an amount not greater than the amount paid to each province under the agreements. But that is no longer the case, because, I repeat, the two amounts are now equal as far as Ontario, the richest province, is concerned.

Some would lay down as a principle that any province which has not signed an agreement should be entitled to levy deductible taxes in proportion to the amount it would receive under the agreements.

I have mentioned that, taking into account the present deductibility of corporation taxes, the deductible percentage in Ontario for personal income tax would have to be 5 per cent, which is the present rate, in order to maintain a proper balance. In Quebec, as I will show later on, it would have to be a little less than 15 per cent. I made the calculation for New Brunswick also and in that province it would have to be 63 per cent.

We can already see the tremendous confusion that would follow the application of that principle subscribed to by the Conservatives at their last convention, but conveniently forgotten by them since.

If, for instance, we were to recognize that, in the case of New Brunswick, the deductible percentage from personal income tax should be 63 per cent, would not the Quebec government be the first to ask for the same treatment?

How could we amend the Income Tax Act so as to recognize a percentage of deductibility which would vary from one province to another?

I cannot bring myself to believe that some would want to place us in such a position that we would have to put into force a law which would differ from one province to another.

It may be said that this could not happen, since all the other provinces, nine out of ten of them, have signed agreements. But these agreements are temporary and could be denounced for valid reasons. By laying down, at this time, the principle of discrimination, we would pave the way for anarchy.

But I will be told also that deductibility is being claimed, not in respect of 15 per cent of the whole of the federal income tax collected in the province of Quebec, but only in respect of 15 per cent of the income tax to be paid by the 300,000 taxpayers liable to the provincial income tax according to a scale of contributions providing for higher basic exemptions.

But let us not forget that section 33, which I quoted a while ago, provides for deductions on an individual basis. It could not be otherwise. This section allows every federal taxpayer to deduct up to 5 per cent in respect of the income tax paid to a province which is not party to an agreement.

If the figure 5 is changed for the figure 15, any non-signatory province, or any province which has allowed its agreement to lapse or which would have denounced its agreement for good and valid reasons, may benefit from the amendment. We must legislate here for all provinces, and when we allow a percentage of deduction, this percentage must be established in respect of the amount of income tax payable to the federal treasury, without any regard for the variable exemptions which may be allowed by the provinces in respect of their own tax. As a matter of fact these exemptions may well vary in a single province from session to session. How are we to know, for instance, whether, a few months from now, the Quebec government will not change their exemption levels to bring them down to the federal level, which would be much to their advantage since they would thus be in a position to collect from every federal taxpayer up to 15 per cent of the federal levy without this costing these taxpayers one extra cent.

More than that, if the 15 per cent deduction were allowed, the province of Quebec itself could then levy more in deductible taxes than it would receive under the agreements. On the basis of the 1953-54 figures, I said that Quebec would have received $113 million, apart from the statutory grants, under the agreements. I do not take into account succession duties, as in Ontario; Quebec would find the same advantage in not renting this right. According to the figures given by its minister of finance, the province of Quebec has levied through various taxes on corporations—all of which were deductible for federal tax purposes—the sum of $70·1 million in 1953-54. Fifteen per cent of the federal personal income tax would have yielded $44·7 million in that same fiscal year, which means that the province could have levied $114·8 million in deductible taxes, or approximately $2 million more than what it would have received under the agreements.

The Montreal chamber of commerce will say: "Allow at least a 14 per cent deduction". But the difficulty which the chamber wants to avoid would still remain. There will still be double taxation, at least in respect of part of the 15 per cent tax to be paid by the taxpayers.

Is it not fitting to recall, Mr. Speaker, that this same body made representations to the Quebec authorities when the bill providing for a provincial income tax in that province was introduced, to the effect that the legislature should limit its tax to 5 per cent of the federal tax, while at the same time taking full advantage of it. This would have yielded, for 1953-54, an amount of $15 million, at no additional cost to its taxpayers. In my opinion, the chamber of commerce was in fact blaming the government of Quebec for imposing double taxation on personal incomes.

I have shown, I believe, that making the new provincial tax on personal incomes fully deductible in Quebec would not settle the problem. Far from being a solution, this deduction would create new difficulties with the other provinces as well as with Quebec itself.

In short, we are being asked to recognize that it is the privilege of the Quebec government to decide, as it deems fit and by one-sided action, what amount of revenue it may take from the federal treasury.

In other words, what is being asked of us is the power for Quebec not only to levy taxes upon its own taxpayers but on the Canadian government as well.

The government of the province of Quebec says that it does not want any subsidy. But what it is seeking from us is the permission to determine the amount of a federal subsidy to be collected in another way.

Mr. Speaker, it was only after seriously considering the possible consequences of what we have been asked to do, that we came to the conclusion that we could not accept the proposal made to us, as I say, not by the government, but by some Quebec taxpayers.

Since 1945, we have put forward various successive proposals which became acceptable to nine provinces out of ten only after various amendments.

The government of Quebec never made any counter-proposals; it acted unilaterally without any consultations whatsoever, and now there are those who would have us without further ado accept the fait accompli as the solution to this problem.

The fact that we are unable to accept this suggestion, which is the first offered to us whereas we have already made several that were rejected, does not mean that we are opposed to any further proposals. On the contrary. The study I have just made, speaking with due humility, and which has been made by others of this matter may perhaps throw more light upon the various aspects of the question, and thus provide the basis for a satisfactory solution.

If the government of Quebec is ready to try and find a common ground for agreement, I may assure you that, for their part, the members of this government are prepared to seek, in co-operation with the Quebec authorities, a solution to this difficult problem which we all want to solve.

There is no insoluble problem for men of good will, ready to discuss seriously, in all good faith, and without fanfare, a question on its merits.

(Text):

Mr. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, there were certain thoughts that came to mind the other evening as the minister was presenting his budget, and I should like to mention a few of them: Some minor relief in excise tax; no change in income tax; no expected increase in the gross national product. Government members almost appeared to have a marked script telling them when to laugh and applaud. There was little concern for the Canadian taxpayer. Of course, with no apparent effort being made to curb expenditures, what else could be expected? The minister said that imports were up 9 per cent and exports down 4 per cent; exports to the United States were up and exports to the United Kingdom were down. He said that there was to be no further sales tax on road machinery, fire-fighting equipment and so on purchased by the municipalities, a very welcome gesture.

The minister does not believe that we have a high cost economy, which would seem to be a contradiction of some other ministers. There was uproarious laughter from the Liberal benches on the announcement that inventories on hand on April 6 must be sold, less the decreased tax. There was no apparent thought that while this is probably the only way the matter could be handled, some small operators could be forced out of business. There are plans to overhaul the federal Succession Duty Act. The present minister will start the overhaul, but who will finish the job?

There is no apparent concern about the hundreds of millions of bushels of wheat unsold in the west. In the minister's opinion there is no serious unemployment. When one considers the whole picture, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me to be anything but an impressive budget. My reaction as a newcomer to this experience of listening to a budget address was that there was very little of anything for anybody except the government.

There used to be a rule of thumb method of dividing profits of a company, Mr. Speaker. It was roughly 50 per cent to the shareholders in the way of dividends and roughly 50 per cent left in the company for further expansion, and so on. Now, the government takes approximately 50 per cent of the earnings, if those earnings are over $20,000, and leaves the other 50 per cent for these two purposes. This means possibly only 25 per cent of net earnings are left in the company to assist in the development of the company and of Canada.

I wonder if there is not a point of diminishing return in this matter of taxation. The minister found this out in connection with the taxing of tobacco and cigarettes. I feel a reduction in tax rates might well mean an increase in over-all taxes flowing into the treasury. I feel further that individual tax rates are too high. If the government could ever see its way clear to practise a certain amount of economy itself, as it preaches to others, there is no doubt that these onerous tax rates now in force could be reduced.

[Mr. Monteith.]

Just a word about unemployment. I should like to read a clipping from this morning's Globe and Mail which bears the heading "Lay-off at Stratford". The item is dated at Stratford, April 13, from the Canadian Press and says:

> Fifty-six men will be laid off April 21 from the C.N.R. motive power shops here in what is expected to be general staff reduction of between 700 and 800 workers in motive power and car shops across the system, C.N.R. officials said today. The layoff here represents a staff reduction of eight per cent—to 901 workers in shops here.

I cannot reconcile this announcement with all the fine words coming from the government benches. May I repeat, as I said in the house last March 1, that the government should take the lead and assure their own employees in the Canadian National Railways that their jobs are secure. That, in itself, would give confidence to the country as a whole.

I am not able to dwell on this subject further today, but I would point out that the list of employees in the civil service has grown from 115,000 at the height of the war effort, when there were all sorts of special services in effect, such as rationing and the like, to 125,000 in 1950 and to 135,000 regular employees last December, at which time there were altogether 170,000 on the payroll. I am wondering why the government's own railway employees should be let out at this time, when the government itself declares that we are due for better times and conditions.

I should like now for a moment to get back to a discussion of the budget. The budget would authorize the deduction annually of $1,500 from taxable income for payments towards superannuation plans. This is a suggested increase from $900 per year. What workingman or so-called white-collar worker could this possibly affect? Only someone earning a very large salary could derive any benefit from this change. It will not benefit other than a very few Canadians in the higher income brackets. I think that in this particular the minister's efforts might well be labelled "An Executive's Budget".

The budget also provides for the taxation of a residential mutual insurance corporation, other than a life insurance corporation, as though the surplus arising from its insurance activities on and after January 1, 1954, were a profit from a business. The remainder of the minister's statement in this connection is not of importance as it has to do with non-resident mutual insurance corporations.

Might I outline briefly the history of taxing these mutual fire insurance companies, as I understand that history. I think it was in 1947 that the budget first proposed taxing this type of co-operative effort. They were to be taxed on net earnings, the same as any other company—with one somewhat technical adjustment to the effect that the reserve for unearned premiums was to be calculated at 100 per cent rather than at 80 per cent as required by the Insurance Act.

One mutual company appealed an interpretation of the act, and the appeal was upheld by the appeal board. I believe this decision was later reversed by the Exchequer Court. Then the Supreme Court of Canada, some time around last May, after the budget for that year had been brought down, found that if all or the majority of the members of such a body of people were banded together to insure themselves, any surplus arising from overpayment for insurance by them was not taxable.

The Supreme Court did find that income arising from the investment of that surplus was taxable, after an allowance of some three per cent of such income was deducted to allow for the expense of operating the investment portfolio, and so on. The main point was that no underwriting profit was taxable.

Now, it is obvious the minister wishes to get his hands on that underwriting surplus.

Let us consider some of the circumstances surrounding these mutual fire insurance companies. First of all, usually the members are farmers grouping themselves together to provide protection for themselves against fire loss. It is a co-operative effort.

I should like now to place on record a schedule of the limit on refunds of surplus by insurance companies as set out in section 117A of the Insurance Act of Ontario. This is governed by a limit per $100 of insurance after refund has been deducted from surplus. A company with over $2 million of direct insurance in force must have $1 of surplus for every $100 of insurance at risk; a company with over $5 million insurance in force must have 80 cents per $100 at risk; a company with over $10 million must have 70 cents; one with over $25 million must have 60 cents; one with over $75 million must have 50 cents and one with over $125 million must have 40 cents. I believe most companies would fall in the category of 60 cents or 70 cents per $100 at risk.

In section 117 of the Insurance Act of Ontario, if a company falls below 25 cents for every $100 of insurance in force, the department will force the company to adopt a basic premium of insurance of 80 cents per $100, covering three years. Other provinces have provisions somewhat similar to those in Ontario. This is especially true in New Brunswick, where the act is patterned after that in Ontario.

One point that has made it exceedingly difficult for these companies has been the increase in prices during the last number of years. It has caused a tremendous increase in the amount of insurance in force and caused a drop in the proportion of surplus to insurance in force, which has forced them to try to accumulate surpluses to prevent the basic rate being applied, and has also made it more difficult for them to refund surplus. Therefore surplus seems to me to be more in the nature of a reserve.

It does not appear to me that these members are in business to make money. We all feel the tariff insurance companies do not as a rule like to insure farm risks. What are these people to do? They simply group together to protect themselves against the possibility of fire loss. I see no argument particularly against taxing income from the investment of surplus, but I do take objection to the taxing of any small excess of premium receipts over losses and expenses of operations, particularly when under their provincial charters they are required to keep a certain surplus on hand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention a few matters concerning the operation of the Income Tax Act which, I think, should be brought to the attention of the house. They may seem rather minor but in their own way I believe they are rather important. I would like to read section 27, subsection 1, paragraph (c) of the act from Stikeman's "Income Tax Act" annotated 1953 revised. Section 27 states:

(1) For the purpose of computing the taxable income of a taxpayer for a taxation year, there may be deducted from the income for the year such of the following amounts as are applicable:

We now come to paragraph (c):

an amount equal to that portion of medical expenses in excess of three per cent of the taxpayer's income for the year paid either by the taxpayer or his legal representative

(i) within a period of twelve months ending in the year and not included in the calculation of a deduction for medical expenses under this act for a previous year, . . .

It would appear from the wording of the act that the taxpayer who does not pay his medical bills promptly receives the greatest benefit. In other words, the government appears to bonus the delinquent payment of medical bills. The act states that medical expenses will be allowed which are paid within a 12-month period, and since there is a three per cent deduction, it would appear that the taxpayer would be further ahead if he accumulated several years' medical bills and paid them all within the 12-month period. You might say, the taxpayer who paid his bills promptly during a three-year period would have nine per cent of his income deducted for these medical bills, whereas, if he accumulated them and paid them in one year, he would have only three per cent deducted.

I would like to refer to another paragraph in section 27, namely paragraph (d). Section 27 states:

(1) For the purpose of computing the taxable income of a taxpayer for a taxation year, there may be deducted from the income for the year such of the following amounts as are applicable:

(d) $500 if the taxpayer

(i) was totally blind at any time in the year or was, throughout the whole of the year, necessarily confined, by reason of illness, injury or affliction, to a bed or wheel chair, and

(ii) did not include any amount in respect of remuneration for an attendant by reason of his blindness, illness, injury or affliction in calculating a deduction for medical expenses under this section for the year;

This does not appear to me to allow a person who is mentally unsound and who must have attendants looking after him at all times to make this $500 deduction unless he is confined to a bed or wheel chair. Actually he might be able to be taken for walks and so on but still require the full-time company of attendants. In my estimation these two paragraphs of section 27, subsection 1, might well be reconsidered, examined, and probably amended.

Another section of the act which does not seem entirely equitable to me is the matter of refund on overpayments. Section 57, subsection 1, reads as follows:

If the return of a taxpayer's income for a taxation year has been made within two years from the end of the year, the minister

(a) may, upon mailing the notice of assessment for the year, refund, without application therefor, any overpayment made on account of the tax, and

(b) shall make such a refund after mailing the notice of assessment if application therefor has been made in writing by the taxpayer within 12 months from the day on which the overpayment was made or the day on which the notice of assessment was sent.

The general practice of the department, upon receiving a taxpayer's return, is to send an assessment notice which also acts as a receipt for any amount paid at that time. Let us assume a taxpayer files his return on April 30. He would receive an assessment notice dated probably some time in May. Presuming the department found nothing incorrect, upon checking the return, the taxpayer would have 12 months from that date in May to apply for a refund if he later felt he was entitled to such a refund.

Now, suppose a taxpayer did not meet instalment payments in time, the department would in the course of time send him a reassessment notice demanding payment of interest, though the amount may be very small. In that case the taxpayer has 12 months from the date of the reassessment notice to apply for a refund if he felt such to be coming to him. In other words, the taxpayer who was paid up completely, upon making his return, would be penalized for those extra months if he should later find he had overestimated the amount of tax he should pay.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that many taxpayers have suffered as the result of being unable to apply for a refund due to this time restriction. In fact, I know of taxpayers who have suffered substantially due to being unable to apply for a refund more than 12 months after receiving their original assessment, while other companies who received a reassessment notice and paid a small amount of interest had several months more time in which to discover an error and make application for such refund. It seems to me that this prevailing situation is unfair and should be remedied.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a word on this net worth method of calculating a taxpayer's income, particularly as it applies to farmers. I would like to say at the outset that I realize the inspectors of the department have a real problem. It is a simple matter to check on the return of an employed person. There are T-4 slips for evidence. It is comparatively easy to check on corporations or individuals in business. They, as a rule, have adequate records and books of account. The one case of the taxpayer who has not been trained or accustomed to keeping track of his receipts or disbursements is the farmer. The law states the farmer should keep records. That is easy to say. I wonder how those in this house who are not farmers would care to work 12 to 14 hours a day in the summer months and then try to write up a record of what moneys they may have received or what petty expenditures they may have made. Maybe there is no great difficulty in keeping track of a monthly milk cheque or of the sale of some hogs or cattle beasts, but it would be almost impossible to recall all the petty payments which a farmer is likely to make, such as for some seed, a few bolts for a hay loader needing repairs, a piece of harness and so on. I feel that inspectors sent out to investigate farmers' returns should themselves have had farming experience.

Sometimes a practice that has been made use of is that of taking signed statements from farmers as to their estimated cost of living and as to other details of their financial operations. I cannot agree with this procedure. The farmer when first approached by an income tax inspector is bound to be nervous, is likely not to understand completely what it is all about, and hence is likely to make statements about transactions which are not entirely correct, although well intentioned. They may have applied to another year. I have seen that sort of thing happen. As so many farmers deal to a great extent in actual cash, their memories of certain transactions may well be at fault. The transactions might have taken place in one year instead of another. It has been my experience that some such signed statements may later prove to be incorrect, to the detriment of the taxpayer. I will say that in most instances income tax inspectors have eventually agreed to adjustments if such adjustments could be shown to be justified. That is not, however, my point. I feel that every opportunity and assistance should be given to the farmer in order to help him come to a correct determination of his taxable income without the department using some hastily drawn up and signed statement as the basis of determining that income.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, might I point out that if an inspector has had previous farming experience he will have a much truer picture of what a farmer is likely to spend for his ordinary living expenses than will an inspector who is accustomed to living in a city. It occurs to me that in some cases at least farmers are assessed more than they should be in this respect.

Mr. G. H. Castleden (Yorkton): Mr. Speaker, I think the 1954 budget will be remembered in Canada, if it is remembered at all, rather for what it failed to do at an important turn from the economic prosperity in Canada than for what it did. If ever a country needed leadership in the face of an admitted decline, it is now. But this budget reveals the same bankruptcy of effective action towards curing our unemployment, our declining markets and the slow-down in our production that prevailed preceding the last depression. I lived through that depression, Mr. Speaker, and it was one of my hopes that I would never see another one. If action is going to be taken to prevent one, it should be taken now. Instead of getting action which would prevent a depression, we get nothing but a continued song of optimism, of what great hopes there are for the future, of optimism with regard to international economic co-operation and an important program this year for the general agreement on trade and tariffs. In his budget speech the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), as reported at page 3724 of Hansard, said this:

> From what I have said, it is clear that events are shaping up to make the coming year an important one for progress in international economic co-operation.

What that means in terms of trade and what Canada is going to get out of it is not very clear. The minister continues:

> The new and positive attitudes of many countries, their improved trade and payments position, and the substantial progress towards domestic economic stability have combined to create a more favourable climate for advance than at any time since the end of the war.

That is very nice sounding phraseology, Mr. Speaker, but I should like to know what it means in actual terms for 500,000 people who are unemployed in Canada. I should like to know what that phraseology, translated into terms, means to the fishermen of Newfoundland who have lost their markets for fish; to the coal miners of Nova Scotia who are being taken out of the mines because there is no market for the coal; to the potato growers in New Brunswick; to the industrial workers in Quebec and in Ontario, in the factories which are laying off people day after day and week after week; and this is continuing in a time when we were told that things were improving as the month of April advanced.

The wheat growers of the prairies are still looking in vain for an opportunity to sell their grain. What about the lumber workers and the ship workers? Yesterday we had from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) a statement about the great opening up of shipping and the prospects for a great flow of grain through the great lakes. But in this morning's Globe and Mail I notice, under dateline Ogdensburg, New York, April 13, an article which says as follows:

> Because of a gloomy outlook for grain cargoes, the George Hall Corp. of Canada will commission only seven of its fifteen freighters Monday when navigation opens on the St. Lawrence river.
>
> Frank A. Augsbury Jr., president of the company, described the situation as "very bad, a terrific problem in Canada". The holding of eight Hall ships at anchor will affect 200 employees, 25 on each vessel.

Phrases to the effect that Canada's declining inventories are basically a constructive adjustment do not mean much to 500,000 unemployed people who find their unemployment benefits running out as the weeks progress and that they cannot find work. The facts facing this government—and the members of the cabinet know this—are that Canadian industrial plants for years have been working on war contracts, with guaranteed prices and no competition. But today we have to place our goods in line with goods of other countries in order to sell them on the markets of the world against world competition where the cost of living is not so high and where those goods are being bought because of the difference in price. The cost of living in this country has gone high because of the administration of this government. Just a few years ago, when we tried to get them to hold price controls, they scrapped them. The finance minister tells the great Canadian people that the cure is to sharpen their pencils. They will have to do a lot of sharpening to meet prices today, with the cost of living at the present level in Canada. The only sharpening of pencils that the western farmer knows about is when he goes to the bank to borrow some more money, because he can get no cash with which to carry on and to put in his crop this year. How can our gross national income and production increase if we have not markets in which we can sell our goods? What good is international economic co-operation or general agreements on trade and tariffs when our goods are too high priced to sell? Producers from Europe are delivering steel goods in Montreal; for instance, we are told that nails are being delivered at $3 a keg less than the figure at which we can produce them in Canada. No whistling-in-the-dark budget such as that which we are given will correct the facts of the situation. Every major sign of a serious decline is here, including the great optimism of the cabinet and of the minister himself. With such situations as this, Canadians review and look over the budget with a great deal of careful examination and with a discerning eye.

They look at various expenditures such as those on defence and wonder how much of this is outdated. I think every person in public life today should be warning the people and placing the facts before them with respect to one of the greatest dangers that face the world and civilization. Recent developments are such as to demand that the world powers get together on the H-bomb problem. Unless mankind can control the bomb then our civilization faces destruction. Time is rapidly running out. We have in the United Nations machinery which can control the H-bomb or N-bomb or cobalt bomb and can stop them. I do not think there is any other agency that can. But real co-operation is required in getting together those nations which have the know-how. Our existence depends on mankind's ability to accept the authority of the United Nations and its willingness to place all bomb experimentations under a United Nations committee.

It is evident today that bigger and more terrible bombs will be exploded as long as the three great powers that now have the know-how refuse to get together. More and more terrible means of destruction will be devised until finally humanity will be shocked out of its insanity. People who have watched the rapid growth of the power and destructiveness of this fearful weapon and who know its possibilities realize by now that this is no longer merely a nightmare of the future, as we looked upon it a few years ago, but a hideous reality that is here today. Its fearful effects are slowly beginning to be realized by the masses of the people; and the masses of the people will make governments move some day if they do not move of their own volition. Man has finally found some of the inner secrets of nature which heretofore have mercifully been withheld from him, but man in refusing to work together with his fellow men is proving that he lacks to a great degree the moral responsibility to handle such knowledge.

The possibilities of even the H-bomb, let alone the nitrogen bomb, should arouse the most serious reflection in the mind and conscience of every human being capable of comprehension. Can science be allowed to produce more and more terrible engines of destruction? If we continue along the path which is being followed at present we will come to a point where vast areas of the world, now the homes of millions of people, will be contaminated by the vile dust from these death-dealing weapons. Recent reports show that the explosion at Bikini in March of this year affected a vessel some 2,200 miles away, a location heretofore thought to be beyond the range of harm. A report from Tokyo found in the Montreal Star of Saturday last has this to say:

> The master of a radioactive Japanese fishing vessel reported today his boat was 2,200 miles away from Bikini when the United States touched off its second hydrogen device March 26. The log of the Misaki Maru said it was operating at a point near Angaur, in the Caroline islands, from March 19 through March 29. A geiger counter clicked 200 times per minute when it was placed near the head of one of the crew men after the Misaki Maru reached port yesterday. About 45 beats per minute is considered the safety limit. Nevertheless, the tuna catch of the Misaki Maru was pronounced free of contamination and sent to fish markets for sale.
>
> The Misaki Maru's location was made known as the government fisheries bureau announced it would begin a search for new fishing grounds "secure from the hydrogen bomb." Examinations by Japanese doctors revealed that the Misaki Maru's crew had no external sores as in the cases of 23 men of the Fukuryu Maru who were burned by a fall out of hot ashes from the March 1 Bikini-Eniwetok blast.

In spite of past failures, I think Canada should be taking the lead in urging the nations of the world to get together. I was glad to hear the statement of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) this afternoon, although it still seems to fall far short. I believe the matter is important enough for Canada to request a meeting of the general assembly of the United Nations in order that this problem may be solved, because the sands of time are running out.

Canada must persist in its efforts. I believe we can succeed but if we do not succeed and have to face the horrible results of that failure, then let us be able to say that at least we fought on the side that was right and asked for sanity. I do not think the urgency of this matter can be overemphasized. We must have world control or world destruction. I think our national defence estimates should be geared to the situation as it exists today. There is no defence known for H-bomb activity, so why should we spend so much on types of defence many of which must be completely obsolete.

It is not my intention to deal with the ramifications of the problems that this government is having with the province of Quebec. I think it is the sort of squabble that is dangerous to the unity of Canada. The Liberal party is today reaping the harvest of some of the seeds it has planted down through the years. They will have to deal with it, but I know that Canadians are disturbed when they read such statements as that of the premier of Quebec reported in the Montreal Star of last Saturday. I do not wish to involve him particularly, but I think it is a sign of the times. The report reads as follows:

> Mr. Abbott's statements certainly rejoiced the enemies of the province of Quebec who favour only one language and one religion.

Just think that in Canada that type of thing could be said, that a belief exists in the minds of a large number of people that we do not have freedom of religion in this land, that individuals have no right to freedom of religion, freedom of speech and freedom of assembly. This kind of thing can only arise in a nation where people are not aware of their own liberties and the liberties of all men, and recognize and tolerate those liberties in others. A bill of rights should have been written into the Canadian constitution years ago. Every Canadian born and brought up in this land should know that there are certain basic human rights which are his and that they will be maintained for him by an impartial tribunal. These rights should be guaranteed to every citizen of Canada. I think the failure to do this is one of the failures of governments of Canada in the past. Such a bill establishing these rights for every Canadian citizen would do a great deal to promote unity within Canada and do away with some of the misunderstanding that exists.

We realize that every Canadian has a right to freedom of religion. We believe that the people of Quebec have that right in the same way that I believe they believe that we have a right to our religion. But if there were no question about them having such rights then no demagogue would be able to make such statements and cause disunity among Canadians. It would seem that too many people do not know of these rights. Certainly they are in the hearts of the people of that part of Canada from where I come. In the province of Saskatchewan we have a bill of rights on the provincial statute books, and these rights are established.

In the debate yesterday there was some reference made to the establishment in Canada of some kind of royal commission. I do not believe we need the kind of royal commission that was requested. Surely in Canada another of our basic rights is that everyone charged with any penal offence is presumed innocent until he is proven guilty according to law in a public trial in which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence. May Canada never be disgraced and divided by anything resembling the investigation committees of the United States. Due process of law is the bulwark of our freedom. It prevents the victimizing of men and women without any evidence and without any opportunity to defend themselves. It prevents the perversion of facts and the condemning of people by allegation when the charges are already disproved.

I do not know of anything which will weaken and divide a nation so much as the fear and suspicion that results from the establishment of that kind of so-called court or tribunal. I do not know of anything that will ruin a nation's position in the scale of greatness more quickly than the perversion of justice. Let us be thankful that Canada's R.C.M.P. and the investigating bodies charged with law enforcement in Canada have maintained justice in these difficult times. Canada can hold her head high. We in Canada need fear nothing except our own fear to attack wrongs when we see them in our midst.

The want of confidence motion regrets that that the government has failed to retain and regain those markets of our land for such things as fish, fruit, wheat, lumber and coal. I believe that is one of the major failures of the present administration. In the falling markets of Canada lies the foundation of a depression which can bring havoc to this country and be felt from end to end of this nation. Our goods are finding it difficult to meet competition from other countries. The Minister of Trade and Commerce has made certain statements in this house concerning our trade which do not seem to be borne out by the facts as they have occurred.

We in the prairie provinces are particularly vulnerable when we cannot find markets for our large crops of grain. The uncertainty of the situation was emphasized by the minister's statement in this house a week or so ago to the effect that he hoped this year to obtain the delivery of seven bushels per acre on our specified acreage by July 31 next. Seven bushels per acre amounts to approximately fourteen bushels per seeded acre which is approximately one-half of the 1953 crop in many areas of the west. The minister admits that, under present circumstances, the western producer cannot hope to deliver more than seven bushels.

There are two essentials in this situation which the people have a right to expect from this government. The first is that if the producer is to be placed in the impossible position of being unable to get a sufficient return from his crop to cover the cost of producing that crop, then he must have access to some means which will permit him to continue his production. The second essential to the farmer's well-being is that in each community there should be provided distribution of deliveries. In my own community there are farmers today who, because of their inability to deliver grain, are left in a position where they cannot meet the payments on their purchases of farm machinery and trucks. Already the implement companies and the automobile companies are repossessing farm machinery.

If these farmers lived in some portions of Alberta where the crop deliveries have been up to some seven bushels and more they would be able to meet these payments and would not suffer these losses. I want to know by what right the people in one portion of the prairies should be penalized and have to take extra losses because of the failure of this government to equitably distribute the right to deliver grain. In one area the farmers have only three or four bushels delivered, while others have seven or eight bushels delivered, and the difference would mean that a man would not have to suffer the loss he is today suffering because of this unequal distribution.

One of the tragedies of the situation has been the optimism with which the ministers have misled the people. People reading reports from the ministers here would imagine everything was all right; they would be able to deliver the grain all right and that wheat in the bin is as good as cash in the bank. Unfortunately, it is not. Many of these farmers who are having their implements repossessed have wheat in their bins, but they cannot dispose of it; it is not cash. To solve this problem I am going to recommend that the government should immediately undertake some arrangement whereby advances could be made to farmers on properly stored farm grain. This move need not cost the government very much It could be done through the wheat board. Ultimately, we hope that grain will be sold and the money then could be paid back to the government out of the selling price of the grain. Such an arrangement exists across the border in the United States, where the farmer is guaranteed 90 per cent of parity. If the farmer cannot deliver the grain, government officials inspect the bins on the farm and he gets an advance. This enables the communities to carry on. The situation is entirely different in western Canada.

The other thing that would help give some justice to these people would be some method for the equitable distribution of box cars. This would enable farmers to get the cash necessary to carry on their ordinary operations. Tax arrears in many parts of my own constituency have not been bigger than they are at the present time for over twelve years. Retailers are unable to collect advances they have made to farmers, and farmers are unable to make their scheduled payments. One would expect a clear-cut statement from the minister about this situation, because it is one of the big problems facing this government, and in addition the minister had attended the FAO conference. We thought the food and agriculture organization would meet and out of that would come a solution of the problem of disposing of our great surplus.

"But when the minister returned with the communique issued at the conclusion of this gathering we received no clear-cut statement. The communique, of which the Minister of Trade and Commerce approved, is woolly and indefinite. It is not at all like the one for which we had hoped from practical men of affairs who had the power to translate their decisions into law." That is the opinion of one paper in the west which represents a large group of the wheat pool producers.

This government would do a great deal towards restoring the confidence of the people in it if they would make a statement of the facts and tell the people what they can expect. The government should guarantee the equitable distribution of box cars, and last fall should have told the farmers what they could expect in the way of delivery so the farmers could have planned their production in line with that information. To pretend that all is well when it is not is to condemn those people to an unnecessary and a brutal hardship, and at a time like this that is not good.

There are one or two things which the minister could have done to help restore the confidence of the people of Canada in this government, and which might have been included in the budget. With production going down, with a large number of people in Canada unable to earn sufficient to carry on and maintain their homes, a change might have been made in the Old Age Security Act under which 2 per cent of all taxable income is paid by income taxpayers in Canada. That seems right and equitable as far as it goes, but when a limitation of $60 is placed on it, Mr. Speaker, a privilege is being granted to certain high income groups which the small man in the street does not like. The maximum should be eliminated.

Another thing that should have been done by this government to restore the confidence of the people in it is to extend the unemployment insurance benefits. Five hundred thousand people in this Canada of ours today are facing unemployment. For a short time they receive a portion in the way of unemployment insurance. They are facing the end of that in a few weeks, and what have they to look forward to? I say they will look to the House of Commons; they will look to the 265 members here who raised their own pay to $10,000 a year as far as the members are concerned and to $27,000 a year for the cabinet. They will say: When the cost of living hit you boys you took care of yourselves; how about us?

Until and unless such measures as we have been advocating here are taken in hand and put into effect by this government I do not think this government has a right to expect and certainly it does not deserve the confidence that the Canadian people placed in it on August 10 last year.

(Translation):

Mr. Joseph Fontaine (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, since April 6, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) made his budget speech, several members have expressed their opinions and made such comments as they deemed appropriate.

I believe it is now my turn to speak on behalf of the people of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot, because I am deeply indebted to my constituents for having so generously placed their confidence in me. At the 1949 election they gave me the greatest majority of any candidate, not only of my own province but of the whole of Canada, that is 85 per cent of the vote cast, but they did even better at the last general election, because last year they elected me by acclamation. I therefore want my speech today to be the expression of my gratitude to the electors of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot.

Our fine county is made up partly of rural people and partly of city folks. In the urban area, we have the city of St. Hyacinthe, the only one in my constituency with a population of 30,000 people. Industry in general is prosperous and I believe we can fairly say that the people are happy and moderately well-to-do. We have numerous and important industries, including wool, cotton and silk mills, to mention but a few. We also have metal works like Volcano Limitée, a home industry, and Griffin Steel, a subsidiary of a Chicago firm, which is now setting up a plant that will give work to some five hundred men and pay annual salaries in excess of half a million dollars. Such achievements have been brought about through the good will and foresight of our authorities.

We also have at St. Hyacinthe modern educational institutions, which have produced young men who honour us in the religious as well as the civil sphere. St. Hyacinthe also has a well-organized textile school, where we prepare young people who will hold key positions in industry in a few years.

I would be remiss in my duty if I failed to express here the sincere thanks of all my fellow citizens to the federal authorities concerned for having so generously co-operated in the erection of this school through a large subsidy of $238,500 for construction and of $75,000 for equipment. I want to draw the attention of the house to that grant, because, in the province of Quebec, it has become almost a tradition for the provincial authorities to accept contributions from the central power without uttering a word, so as to take all the credit for themselves.

This year, no less an honour was reflected on the farmers of my county.

The Canadian National Agricultural Congress has awarded, since its foundation, the title of "master breeder" to the best cattle breeders of this country. Out of five medals awarded since its foundation, two have gone to farmers of my constituency, namely to Mr. Donat Giard and Mr. William Bousquet. In appreciation for the good services rendered to our district by those two farmers I want to bring that fact to the notice of the members of this house.

As I said a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, our agriculture is prosperous. This prosperity is, of course, as much due to the development of our foreign markets as to the foresight of our farmers, who have intelligently managed the distribution of agricultural production. Truck gardening is now practised on a large scale and all sorts of co-operative enterprises are operating with great success, such as the co-operative of St. Damase, the hub of small-scale farming.

When introducing the budget last year, the Hon. Mr. Abbott pointed out that our country's prosperity was the result of the collective and individual effort of the citizens of our nation.

There never was a better-deserved tribute, and this is still true today. Canada goes on setting the pattern of a united, strong and responsible nation. Our people know the value of work and co-operation.

The efforts now made by the opposition to rouse the people are useless. It would have the people believe that they are called upon to make too many sacrifices. They want to convince our people that they are not happy. But such efforts will not succeed even if, in some quarters, people indulge in demagogy and try to rouse the poor against the rich.

Never perhaps, Mr. Speaker, has the opposition offered such childish arguments; on the one hand, they claim that the government does not spend enough money, while on the other hand, they blame it for not reducing taxes. They ask more money for the Colombo plan, more subsidies, higher allowances and pensions and, at the same time, lower taxes. In other words, to implement those requests would mean budgeting for a deficit, even during the good years, whereas our Minister of Finance, like all good administrators, wants to balance his budget by equalizing revenues and expenditures. It is claimed that the Canadian taxpayer is being too heavily taxed by the government in this budget. Let us remember that federal expenditures, which the government cannot reduce at the present time, amount to about four billion and a half. I have said that they could not be reduced at this time. In fact, almost half of the total is for national defence and I wonder if our opponents are sincere when they talk about fighting communism while at the same time calling for the reduction or even the cancellation of this amount. To us it is a necessary and unavoidable sacrifice that must be made if we want to secure the greatest of all assets, freedom, and particularly freedom under a Christian system; it is also a sacrifice that must be made to maintain the material prosperity which we now enjoy.

[Mr. Fontaine.]

It has been said that the landslide victories achieved by the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent and by the Liberal party at the 1949 and 1953 elections are the sign of a healthy nation. The way the Canadian people have reacted to the present policies of the government and more particularly to the budgets of the Minister of Finance shows that the nation is healthy. In spite of the criticisms offered by the opposition, the Canadian people keep cool and continue to trust a man who, through wise administration, has made it possible for Canada to enjoy the greatest period of prosperity in our history. It would have been easy for the hon. Minister of Finance to reduce taxes in one or two important fields, so as to give the impression that all of the main burdens were removed. No, the present policy of the government does not aim at putting up a false front, at deceiving: it is a far-reaching policy directed solely toward the welfare of the nation as a whole.

I mentioned our national defence expenditures but there are also other very large expenditures which cannot be reduced; I refer to the amounts spent to maintain our social services, to pay the interest on the national debt, which has been reduced by two billion dollars, thanks to a wise and far-sighted administration.

What is the source of these revenues needed to cover those extraordinary expenses? What taxes does the government collect for that purpose? First of all there is the tax on incomes, which supports the whole structure: it brings in more than two and a half billion dollars and covers our defence expenditures and part of the cost of our social security. It is evident therefore that the federal government cannot relinquish that tax.

The solicitor general for the province of Quebec said at Levis, on April 8, that the federal government had made a serious and insulting error when they refused to allow the Quebec taxpayers to deduct from the federal tax the whole of the provincial income tax. The Minister of Finance has explained in detail and very clearly why such a thing cannot be done, and I do not have to cover that ground again. One needs but to analyse that statement; if they keep on, they will have us believe that it is the federal government that has imposed that 15 per cent tax in the province of Quebec.

I fail to understand the attitude of the provincial government which was offered more than $100 million and is now complaining that we are depriving it of some $15 to $20 million. And let no one say that the dominion-provincial agreements, which all the other provinces have signed, constitute an attack on autonomy!

Today—through sheer demagogy—they try to lead us to believe that the tax rental agreements between the dominion and the provinces are contrary to the spirit of the constitution and even encroach upon provincial autonomy. We would be very naïve to believe that the premiers of the other provinces are not as anxious as Mr. Duplessis to protect the autonomy of their respective provinces. The premier of Quebec himself does not think so, because, on May 2, 1946, he stated, during the plenary session of the dominion-provincial conference, as reported at page 556 of the proceedings:

> The province of Quebec is willing to consider a clear, precise, iron-clad and absolutely fair agreement to rent to Ottawa . . .

I repeat these words.

> . . . agreement to rent to Ottawa the personal income tax and the corporation tax.

If renting taxation fields is an infringement upon provincial rights the Quebec premier is not speaking seriously, or else he is the first to accept this infringement. Can anybody believe in his sincerity when he now speaks of the federal government taking over a field which rightfully belongs to the province, while adding, with characteristic boldness, that for seven years now he has been attempting to enlist the federal government's co-operation.

We all know, for it is easy to see, that, on the contrary, Mr. Duplessis has been, with an eye ever turned towards forthcoming elections, a sworn opponent of the federal government. Alone among the provincial premiers he has refused to co-operate with respect to concluding taxation agreements, building the trans-Canada highway, accepting university grants, etc., thus depriving Quebec of numerous advantages which the other provinces enjoy and which could in no wise affect provincial autonomy. On the contrary this could have relieved the Quebec taxpayer, not only from the present 15 per cent tax, but also from the excessive, uncalled for and nuisance taxes imposed by the province in order to justify Mr. Duplessis' particular attitude.

Mr. Abbott: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fontaine: I may add that Mr. Duplessis does not seem to understand the meaning of the words "national unity", for he has always considered the rest of the country, outside Quebec, as a foreign nation, the government at Ottawa as a naturally hostile government, and the Quebec members at Ottawa as non-existing, as if they did not represent their province; and all this so as to be able to make Quebec a reserve, where he would be the big white chief with more and more dictatorial, more and more totalitarian powers.

The hon. Minister of Finance has presented to the nation a realistic budget, a budget which aims at ensuring the general prosperity of the country; moreover, he has left the door wide open for Quebec, whose credit Mr. Duplessis is ready to jeopardize, if it will serve his interests and those of the Union Nationale party.

Whatever Mr. Duplessis may say, the subsidies go back to confederation, when they were proportionately higher, for at that time they represented more than half of the revenue of the province. But enough has been said on this matter for the time being. I now wish to speak about problems which concern more particularly the electors of my constituency, especially those in the rural areas.

I said a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, that agriculture is the basis of our whole economy and that, when the farmers are satisfied, all goes well for the rest of the country. In Canada, agriculture is prosperous and it is all to the good. The prosperity of agriculture depends on two conditions: first, its products must be sold and, second, the basic price must be such as to make this sale profitable.

Our farmers are entitled to a just and reasonable profit. It is towards that goal that the federal government has consistently aimed, never forgetting that agriculture is at the basis of all industry. If it be true, as has been said, that, when farmers are prosperous the rest of the country is necessarily prosperous, the opposite is just as undeniable. If agriculture is depressed because prices are too low or because producers cannot sell their products, either in this country or elsewhere, the whole of the industry will suffer.

When a building is begun the first thing that is done is not the construction of the roof: on the contrary the foundations must first be laid solidly so as to ensure the solidity and the resistance of the whole building.

Our Liberal federal government has at all times and in every circumstance held to these principles. It has always worked for the welfare of the Canadian nation as a whole, and as I was saying a moment ago, they have helped with every means within their power and with all their strength the agricultural class of the whole country and of St. Hyacinthe in particular. This is of course the constituency with which I am most concerned, as will readily be understood. It is of course that part of the country which I am fondest of. As a matter of fact had I my choice of every constituency in this country, I must admit that it would be in that constituency first and foremost where I would choose to run.

Mr. Speaker, a large scale project is at present under way in the metropolis of this country, Montreal. It is the building of a large central market, where all truck gardeners, not only from the neighbouring districts, but also from the whole province of Quebec, could sell their products. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) to take into consideration the request for financial assistance which I sent him some time ago, on behalf of the horticulturists of my district.

Some might probably say that this is a project of a local nature which concerns mainly provincial authorities. I agree. But, because of the importance of this undertaking and of its immense usefulness for our agricultural people, I think that this question should be carefully examined by the officials in the federal Department of Agriculture to find out whether it would not be advisable to contribute to it.

The agreements entered into in 1936 by the federal and the provincial authorities respecting vocational training have contributed largely to the erection of technical and other similar schools. These institutions have rendered invaluable services to our people.

We, in St. Hyacinthe, have benefited from the building of our industrial school for textiles. On that occasion no inaccurate arguments of ill-conceived provincial autonomy intervened to deprive us of our rights.

The western provinces have often benefited from federal assistance, when their progress and the development of their resources were at stake. This assistance has always been approved by our people in the eastern provinces, because we knew it was justified.

Today, I believe, in all fairness, that we in Quebec may well hold out our hand to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, asking him to make a contribution equal to that of the province and the truck gardeners, in order to carry out this project, which, as I say, will help our farmers who specialize in certain crops, by eliminating sacrifice sales due to the inadequacy of existing facilities.

[Mr. Fontaine.]

By bettering the position of our truck gardeners with regard to the grading of their products, for instance, by providing them with the necessary space for displaying and selling their products, we shall not only help the truck gardeners, but, in a general way, all the farming people.

Moreover, the wholesaler, the jobber, the retailer, the farmer, the consumer, the whole province and the whole country would benefit from it. Montreal being the main centre of distribution of fruits and vegetables in Canada, all producers and consumers are directly affected by the prices paid for these products on the Montreal market.

In conclusion, it can be stated that the building of a central market in Montreal is of fundamental importance for the producers as well as for the retailers and the consumers, who must absorb in part at least the excessive cost of the distribution of fruit and vegetable products, caused by the deplorable conditions which prevail today on the Montreal market.

(Text):

For my English speaking compatriots, with whom we get along so well in St. Hyacinthe, I think I should now say a few words in their language, even though I recognize I cannot do so well in English as many of them do in French. However, I will be brief.

All I would say to the electors of St. Hyacinthe, who have given me support such as few people have ever had, is that they can continue to rejoice in the wonderful state of health of our country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and that they can continue to have confidence in our great leader whom I believe to be the greatest since confederation.

Mr. Elmore Philpott (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, this is the first budget debate in which I have had the honour to take part.

Mr. McIvor: It will not be the last.

Mr. Philpott: I must say it is with deep regret that I have heard from different quarters in the house that this might be the farewell budget of the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). While throughout my writing career I have had, shall I say, the privilege and at times even the pleasure of taking a good lusty crack at just about every minister in this and every other government that has been in office since I began writing, I must admit that in all of the ten budgets presented by the present Minister of Finance I have found nothing really serious to criticize. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that quite often we are very lavish with our tributes when the person involved is no longer around to receive them, and I simply wish to say for my part that I think the present Minister of Finance has been the most competent Minister of Finance we have ever had in my lifetime, and I know of no superior in any other country.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I certainly have no intention whatever of entering, in any shape or form, the discussion on the double taxation question precipitated by the premier of the province of Quebec. I do not regard in any way the issue created by the premier of Quebec an issue of Quebec versus Canada, or the French-speaking people in Quebec versus the rest of the country. I regard it entirely as an internal matter and if you want to sum it up you might well label it a question of Duplessis versus Quebec, but certainly not Quebec versus the rest of Canada. I believe that if we have anything of which to be proud in this country it is that, perhaps better than we ourselves realize, we have worked out a sort of modus vivendi in living together. These two great races, with their different culture and language, have not always been the best of friends.

Sometimes, Mr. Speaker, when I look around this chamber and listen in this chamber I hear people talking about the inevitability of war between Russia and the west. I hear people suggest that the two great blocs of today are the bitterest enemies in history. But, Mr. Speaker, it is not so, and I believe we in this chamber have forgotten that we ourselves, whether of French or English descent, are descendants of the very people who were the bitterest and most inveterate enemies there ever were. Getting along as well as we do in this country I think we should give ourselves a little pat on the back every now and again, and never forget that only a couple of hundred years ago our own forefathers were as bitter enemies as Russia and America today, or the capitalists and the communists.

I remember on one of the last trips I made to the old country I watched some children playing in the back yard and suddenly I had to laugh aloud because I realized the name they were giving to their game was not the same as it would have had in North America. In North America we would have called that chase "Cops and Robbers" or "Cowboys and Indians", but in England, if you please, they called the game "French and English". I think that speaks for itself.

I would repeat that I have no intention of getting into the Quebec double taxation situation. I do believe that if we have any genius in this country it is for development along parallel lines. Whether this Liberal party has any ideological basis for its success, I think that every member in this house will admit —whether it is good luck or whatever it is— that the greatest periods of success in this Canada of ours have been in the administrations of Liberal governments, particularly the Liberal government that we have right today. What is the ideological basis that gives rise to the success of the Liberal administration?

I have often thought about our friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe). I sometimes hear our friends immediately opposite me—or who should be immediately opposite me; I refer to our socialist friends —talking about the benefit of socialism. May I say this. If we were going to give medals to the Canadians who have promoted the most successful public enterprises that there have ever been in Canada, we would not give them to my hon. friends who should be opposite me but would give them to the Minister of Trade and Commerce who has promoted the most successful public enterprises certainly since the days of Sir Adam Beck and the great hydro enterprise in Ontario or Sir Henry Thornton who made such a great success of the C.N.R.

But if we suggested to the Minister of Trade and Commerce that he was a socialist, he would look at us absolutely aghast because, of course, he is no such thing. He believes in taking what instruments will do the best job for whatever we have to do. Hence we get him making a success in the public enterprise field of such things as T.C.A., the artificial rubber plant at Sarnia and we also, to a much greater degree get him and all the ministers on the front bench of this government promoting policies which give prosperity to the great substantial basis of industry and commerce in this country; and that is, of course, to private enterprise.

If we have any basis for our success in this country I think it is because we have allowed public enterprise and private enterprise to develop and that we have certainly never shown any, shall we say, narrow-minded preference for one as against the other. That is why, Mr. Speaker—and I do not say this in any way as criticism of the policies of this present government but because I believe a peculiar situation exists in the whole field of radio and television—I want to avail myself of the privilege of speaking for a few minutes on the exact set-up of radio and television in Canada.

In the tables which the Minister of Finance supplied to us with his budget speech at page 3805 in the appendix to Hansard of April 6 I notice that he sets forth the amount of money that will be spent in the present year by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. That figure amounts to $24·8 million. That, of course, does not include a loan of $4·7 million which was made by the treasury in the year 1953-54. We all know that that is a considerable increase from the expenditures of the past. That is, the grant has gone up from $8·2 million in 1953 to $24·8 million in the present year. That amount, of course, is going to come out of the special 15 per cent tax which is imposed on radio and television sets, tubes and accessories. When we have that amount of money involved, and even if it was not concerned with something of which we are all so justifiably proud as we are of the C.B.C., I would think it would be the duty of every one of us to give a long and careful look at that expenditure. I myself have had the privilege of working with the C.B.C. over a great many years, although not for the last several years. I have also had the privilege of working for private radio stations for a good many years. I thus had the privilege of perhaps getting a close-up view of how the two of them operate and what their peculiar difficulties are.

When you look back at the growth of the C.B.C., you see that it has not come up as a straight agency of the government. If there is anything of which they are most jealous and proud I think it is of the fact that they are not a subsidiary agency of the government, taking their instructions from the government and that they certainly do not follow any particular political line. If we wanted to name the things about the C.B.C. of which we are all most justifiably proud I think the chief one would be that in its political basis it is absolutely impartial, absolutely fair and that it has worked out the most fair and just system, especially at election times, that I know of in any country which it has ever been my privilege to visit.

If you look back at the period of growth of the C.B.C. you will see that we allowed it to develop. Nobody ever had a plan in advance which was carried right through to a successful completion. For instance, in the Aird report the idea was that eventually the Dominion of Canada would take over all radio broadcasting. As we know, as the years went on, that became an impractical policy and just by the pressure of events it did not happen. We also know—and I think this is an extremely important point for us to realize—that when the C.B.C. first came into operation and when there was a limited number of private stations—that is auxiliary stations or stations in separate operation from the C.B.C.—the audience of the Canadian people was divided on a much different basis from that on which it is divided now. A large percentage of Canadian listeners did not listen at all to Canadian radio stations, either public or private, but rather tuned in to United States stations. Hence, as we know, over the years there grew up, shall I say, the peculiarly Canadian system which we now have in Canada, with the C.B.C. the dominant party—some would say the senior partner—in the whole radio set-up in Canada, but nevertheless with the private stations—the commercial stations as they are sometimes called—performing an extremely useful and valuable public service without any kind of subsidy from the treasury of this country.

We are now faced with the rise of a new medium; and I say that television, as it is coming up in North America and all over the world, is a utility of such tremendous potential that it may have a far greater effect on the lives of all of us, and especially on the lives of our children, than radio has had in the past, or possibly even the press. What I am anxious to stress today, Mr. Speaker, is that it would be a mistake for us to try to duplicate exactly in the television field the set-up that we have had in the radio field. I note that on March 30 of 1953 the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) set forth clearly the government's policy with regard to television in Canada. As reported at page 3393 of Hansard, among other things he said this:

> These words make it clear that it was not the policy of the government to create monopoly in television or to limit any one area indefinitely to one television station.

The minister was of course explaining the necessity of having coverage right across the country, that we should have either a public station or a private station in every centre right across the country before there could be any duplication. Then he added:

> . . . it may not be long before there is a sufficient degree of national coverage to justify the government and the C.B.C. giving consideration to permitting two and perhaps in some cases more than two stations in certain areas. It is anticipated that, in due course, private stations will be permitted in areas covered by C.B.C. stations, and the C.B.C. may establish stations in some areas originally covered by private stations.

I think that is a statement of policy with which everyone can agree. It is a good, sensible, common-sense statement setting forth the position of the government at that time, but I submit that the time is rapidly approaching to follow the course set forth by the minister. I look at the television set-up in Canada as it exists today and this is how it shapes up to me. We have C.B.C. stations actually operating in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal, with one in the process of being established in Halifax. We also have private stations already licensed for Edmonton, Calgary, Saskatoon, Regina, Fort William and Port Arthur, Sudbury, Windsor, Kitchener, London, Peterborough, Kingston, Quebec, Sherbrooke, Rimouski, Saint John, New Brunswick, and Sydney, Nova Scotia.

But the fact that Canada, even with that number of stations actually in operation or already licensed, lags very far behind the United States where 253 standard band television stations are already in operation, and that does not include the 129 ultra high frequency stations. At the beginning of this year Canada had a total of 365,400 sets in operation compared with some 12 million to 15 million sets in operation in the United States. What I am suggesting and what I am urging for the consideration of the house is that in our television policy we should carry out what seems to me to be what is right in line with the genius of our whole Canadian two-culture set-up, and especially at the basis of Liberal ideology. We should allow the fullest free development of both types of television.

We should of course complete and make strong the coast-to-coast national C.B.C. television set-up. Let us make up our minds always to keep the C.B.C., so far as television is concerned, in the same position that it occupies in the radio field, the dominant factor in the national picture or, if you want to call it that, the senior partner. But whatever we do let us never be guilty of holding back and frustrating the free development of free enterprise when free enterprise has a certain job to do in this Dominion of Canada.

When I look at our country and see, for instance, that in Vancouver alone there are something like three vacancies—there are certainly two—and that in almost every great city in Canada there is now only one C.B.C. station and listeners have to tune in private stations in the United States if they want a change of diet, then I suggest that the time is very close at hand when we can carry out the government policy suggested by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) last year and give the green light to free enterprise television stations where they are needed to fill out the picture.

I do not regard free enterprise privately-owned radio or television stations as poor relations in any way or, as some might say, country cousins of whom we are just a little bit ashamed. Certainly they are not in any way, shape or form second-class citizens. I look for the time when the full speed ahead signal will be given to private television station owners in Canada to go ahead and do the job to the very best of their ability.

I am not one of those who has as little confidence in public ownership and public operation of the C.B.C. as one gentleman with whom I was talking the other day. He was in favour of never allowing the private television interests to go ahead because he feared that if they did so in such cities as Toronto, Winnipeg, Montreal and Vancouver the C.B.C. would not be able to survive under free competition. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, I have never yet seen a city which was not a better city if it had two good live newspapers competing. I have never seen a country which was not a better country if it had two live political parties competing, the one ready to throw the other out if and when it got the chance through the people tiring of the other party.

Therefore I suggest that the time is rapidly approaching when we should give the private radio stations, which have hitherto been held back from applying in the great metropolitan centres where the C.B.C. has had a justifiable monopoly up to the present time, a chance to go full speed ahead and make a two-fisted job of television in Canada.

On motion of Mr. Winch the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Abbott: I move that the house do now adjourn.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 5.19 p.m. until Monday, April 26, 1954, at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, April 26, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

QUESTIONS

AMBER DURUM WHEAT

Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What was the average price per bushel of amber Durum wheat to the export market during the 1952-53 crop year?
2. What was the average price per bushel paid to producers of amber Durum wheat?
3. What accounts for the difference in selling price and price to the producer, if any exists?
4. What was the average price per bushel of amber Durum wheat to the domestic market?
5. What accounts for the difference, if any, between domestic price and export price?
6. What percentage of amber Durum wheat grown in Canada is produced in Manitoba?
7. What percentage of this wheat is sold to the domestic market, and to the export market?

Mr. Dickey:

1. Average prices received—1952-53 Pool Account—Wheat

(a) Under international wheat agreement—$1.824527 per bushel basis No. 1 amber Durum wheat in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver.

(b) Outside international wheat agreement (class II)—$2.6381903 per bushel basis No. 1 amber Durum wheat in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver.

(c) Average of export sales—$2.3408896 per bushel basis No. 1 amber Durum wheat in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver.

2. $2.2766075 per bushel basis No. 1 amber Durum wheat in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver, less operating and administrative costs of 4·33068 cents per bushel.

3. The final price to producers reflected different selling bases for Durum wheat, namely, export prices under the terms of the international wheat agreement, export prices outside the international wheat agreement and domestic selling prices as provided by Canadian wheat board regulations, 1952-53 and 1953-54 and amendments thereto.

4. $1.8296569 per bushel basis No. 1 amber Durum wheat in store Fort William/Port Arthur or Vancouver.

5. From August 1, 1952 to September 23, 1953 Durum grades of wheat were sold on the same price basis:

(a) Under the international wheat agreement.

(b) In the domestic market.

From September 24, 1953 Durum grades of wheat were sold in the domestic market at a premium of 10 cents per bushel over the board's selling prices for Durum wheat under the international wheat agreement. Over the period of the 1952-53 pool account wheat, export prices for Durum wheat outside the international wheat agreement were substantially higher than prices quoted under the international wheat agreement.

6. The Canadian wheat board is not aware of official estimates of production of Durum wheat in Manitoba. Production, however, is highly concentrated in the prairie provinces and in 1952-53 total board receipts of Durum grades of wheat from producers amounted to 8,288,289·8 bushels, of which 1,725,745 bushels, or 20·822 per cent were in Manitoba.

7. This question cannot be answered for the reason that there is no way of identifying grain produced in any province after such grain is unloaded at terminal elevators in Fort William/Port Arthur or elsewhere.

OLD AGE PAYMENTS—BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Goode:

1. How many senior citizens in British Columbia, 70 years of age and over, receive the old age pension?
2. How many senior citizens in British Columbia, 65 to 69, receive the old age pension?
3. How many senior citizens in British Columbia, 70 and over, receive the cost of living bonus from the provincial government?
4. How many senior citizens in British Columbia, 65 to 69, receive the cost of living bonus from the provincial government?
5. What is the total amount of the cost of living bonus paid to senior citizens by the provincial government?
6. What is the total amount of the cost of living bonus paid to senior citizens, by the provincial government, in the 65 to 69 age group?

Mr. Robertson:

1. In February, 1954, 84,646 senior citizens were in receipt of old age security pension in British Columbia.

2. In February, 1954, 8,093 senior citizens were in receipt of old age assistance in British Columbia.

3. 26,258.

4. 6,270.

5. During the calendar year 1953, the total cost of living bonus paid by the British Columbia provincial government was $3,755,269.25.

Questions

6. During the calendar year 1953, the total cost of living bonus paid by the British Columbia provincial government to those in the 65 to 69 age group was $643,398.89.

WHEAT SALES, 1951-1952

Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What was the total amount of wheat sold by all elevator companies and licensed grain handlers from warehouses or terminal elevators, including sales for domestic purposes, during the crop year 1951-52?

2. Of such total what was the amount in each of the grades from No. 1 hard to feed wheat?

3. What was the amount of such sales which were listed as (a) tough, or (b) damp, giving the respective grades in each case from No. 1 hard to feed wheat?

Mr. Dickey:

1. Statistics are not kept on a basis which would provide an answer to this question.

2 and 3. See answer to No. 1.

INCOME TAX, 1945-53—QUEBEC

Mr. Boisvert:

What was the revenue collected in the province of Quebec with respect to the income tax from 1945 to 1953 inclusive (a) from individuals; (b) from corporations; (c) from the succession duty?

Mr. McCann: Tax collections in the province of Quebec by the taxation division of the Department of National Revenue:

Fiscal year ended 31st March	Income Tax (a) Individuals	(b) Corporations	(c) Succession duties
1945	$ 190,834,732	$ 107,639,412	$ 4,410,013
1946	174,654,743	72,989,429	4,568,285
1947	176,441,871	52,621,486	7,025,416
1948	172,258,565	107,480,594	7,807,023
1949	201,533,942	132,155,096	5,405,580
1950	146,300,694	178,763,722	9,093,781
1951	155,018,683	216,842,374	6,319,126
1952	236,480,799	344,175,722	6,818,068
1953	286,595,444	385,025,260	6,770,603

WHEAT STORAGE AT CHURCHILL, ETC.

Mr. Bryson:

1. How many bushels of wheat were held in store at the terminal elevator at Churchill, from November 1, to April 1, in the years 1952 and 1953?

2. What elevator companies shipped wheat to Churchill in the years 1952 and 1953?

3. What amount of money was earned by each company in the form of diversion charges?

Mr. Dickey:

1. As at April 1, 1952, 1,996,507·10 bushels; as at November 1, 1952, 2,047,897·30 bushels; as at April 1, 1953, 2,093,701·30 bushels; as at November 1, 1953, 2,516,299·00 bushels.

2. Year 1952: Canada West Grain Co. Ltd., Canadian Consolidated Grain Co. Ltd., Federal Grain Ltd., Inter-Ocean Grain Co. Ltd., McCabe Grain Co. Ltd., Lake of the Woods Milling Co. Ltd., National Grain Co. Ltd., Parrish & Heimbecker Ltd., Pioneer Grain Co. Ltd., Searle Grain Co. Ltd., Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, United Grain Growers Ltd., Waskesiu Mills Ltd.

Year 1953: Same companies as above plus Ogilvie Flour Mills Ltd.

3. It is not the policy of the board to disclose the earnings of individual companies.

[Mr. Robertson.]

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—PROPOSALS BY WESTERN PROVINCES

Mr. Leboe:

1. Have any representations been made to the government from any source in the western provinces respecting the proposed St. Lawrence seaway?

2. If so, of what nature were such proposals?

3. Has the government considered any possible advantages to the western provinces in the construction of this seaway?

4. If so, what are these advantages?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe):

1. Yes.

2. Several letters have been received from organizations and individuals in the western provinces and these correspondents have commended the government for acting on the St. Lawrence seaway and recommending that work be proceeded with at the earliest possible moment.

3. It is felt that this question is answered by the statement made in the House of Commons in 1951 on December 4 by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier), as follows:

As a matter of fact it is difficult to go very far in ranking the benefits to the various provinces in order of importance. Rather than argue about which will gain the most, let us look at what concrete opportunities will be opened up for each.

The prairies would find a substantial saving in the cost of moving grain, flour and other products to markets in eastern Canada and overseas. Moreover the seaway would permit large ocean vessels to move into the great lakes to relieve such shortages of shipping as occurred this year. Shortages occur from time to time to hinder the grain movement, for at present the only vessels that can enter the lakes are too small and too few to make much impression.

4. Answered by No. 3.

MEAT INSPECTION—TORONTO AND MONTREAL

Mr. Hodgson:

1. Under whose jurisdiction is the inspection of meat carried on in (a) the Toronto area; (b) the Montreal area?

2. Was a penalty imposed on the Toronto firms: (a) Industrial Packers; (b) William Puddy Beef Company; (c) L. Goldman & Son, for breach of the Live Stock and Live Stock Products Act, 1939? If so, what penalty was imposed?

3. What authority has abattoir commissioner C. T. Hunt to settle infractions of the Live Stock and Live Stock Products Act, 1939?

Mr. Gardiner:

1. (a) and (b). The Canadian Department of Agriculture inspects and grades meat for human consumption in plants and establishments engaged in interprovincial and export trade in accordance with the provisions of the Meat and Canned Foods Act and regulations. Inspection of other plants and establishments is a responsibility of provincial and municipal authorities.

2. No. Investigations are still under way with a view to determining whether prosecutions should be undertaken.

3. None.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—PERSONNEL

Mr. Hansell:

1. How many people are employed in the Canadian wheat board offices in Winnipeg?

2. How many are employed in other parts of Canada?

3. How many outside inspectors or field men are employed in each province and at what salaries?

Mr. Dickey:

1. 624.

2. 54.

3. 18. It is not the policy of the board to divulge the salaries paid to individual employees.

The foregoing numbers of staff are as at April 10, 1954.

U.S. SURVEY OF HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the government any information concerning a survey undertaken by the United States department of labor, in a number of American cities for the purpose of ascertaining the total annual cost of a representative list of goods and services considered necessary for urban families to provide for health, efficiency, the nurture of children, and participation in social and community activities?

2. If so, can such information be made available to parliament?

3. Has the Canadian government undertaken a comparable survey in Canada, so as to determine the annual cost of a modest but adequate level of living, in terms of dollars, as distinct from the percentage basis of the consumer price index?

4. If so, what are the results of such a survey?

5. If not, is consideration being given to the making of such a survey?

Mr. Dickey:

1. Yes. The bureau of labor statistics of the United States department of labor published a budget titled "The City Workers Family Budget" in the February 1948 issue of the Monthly Labour Review. This document contains the following statements:

> The budget was designed to represent the estimated dollar cost required to maintain this family at a level of adequate living—to satisfy prevailing standards of what is necessary for health, efficiency, the nurture of children, and for participation in community activities.
>
> This is not a "subsistence" budget, nor is it a "luxury" budget; it is an attempt to describe and measure a modest but adequate standard of living.

A detailed description of the budget as well as total dollar cost of purchasing it in thirty-four large United States cities at March 1946 and June 1947, was provided in the above mentioned issue of the Monthly Labour Review. This budget was last priced at October 1951 and costs of a budget in thirty-four large United States cities as of this date were published in the Monthly Labour Review of May 1952.

2. The document described in the answer to question No. 1 is for sale by the superintendent of documents, United States government printing office, Washington 25, D.C. It may be consulted in the library of parliament. See last annual supplement to the catalogue of the library of parliament.

3. No. The budgetary studies made by the government of Canada are restricted to determining on a factual basis the goods and services actually purchased by representative groups of Canadian families.

4. See answer to No. 3.

5. No. The determination of "a modest but adequate level of living" requires a series of subjective judgments on which it is extremely difficult to secure any general agreement.

Questions

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. McCulloch (Pictou):

1. Has the government of Nova Scotia let any contracts under the trans-Canada highway agreement?

2. If so, (a) how many, and for what type of work; (b) in what amounts; (c) in which locations; (d) when is it anticipated the contracts will be completed; (e) to what extent does the federal government share the cost of the projects?

Mr. Bourget:

1. Yes.

2. (a) One, for the construction of two bridges and approaches; (b) $148,895; (c) (i) Horne bridge over McCulloch brook near C.N.R. subway at Westville road, Pictou county.

(ii) Caledonia bridge over Sixmile brook near Salt Springs, Pictou county.

(d) By November 30, 1954; (e) Under the terms of the Trans-Canada Highway Act the federal government may contribute up to 50 per cent of the cost of the work to the province.

WHEAT STORAGE, 1951-1952

Mr. Diefenbaker:

What was the total amount of wheat in store in both country and terminal elevators by grade, from No. 1 hard to feed wheat, including the number of bushels graded as (a) tough; (b) damp, as of (i) the beginning of the crop year 1951-52; (ii) at the end of the said crop year?

Mr. Dickey:

In country elevators:

Grade	(i) As at beginning of crop year 1951-52 (Aug. 1, 1951)	(ii) As at end of crop year 1951-52 (July 31, 1952)
	bushels	bushels
1 Manitoba hard	2,982	—
1 Manitoba northern	2,420,390	176,291
2 Manitoba northern	7,501,784	3,652,746
3 Manitoba northern	6,927,340	16,492,161
4 Manitoba northern	7,669,355	12,646,308
No. 5	22,434,892	28,890,346
Garnets	857,550	364,459
Special bin	37,186	105,390
All others including tough and damp off grades of the above grades	25,527,668	34,946,637
Totals	73,379,147	97,274,068

In public and semi-public terminal elevators:

1 Northern	543,608	72,552
2 Northern	1,996,059	1,258,777
3 Northern	2,925,159	2,576,527
4 Northern	2,592,205	3,343,833
No. 4 Special	5	15,676
No. 5 wheat	11,290,662	9,600,637
No. 6 wheat	16,525,593	4,785,186
Dried 4 Northern	2,486	—
Dried No. 5 wheat	3,403	—
Rejected 2 Northern	316	4,362
Rejected 3 Northern	9,595	9,732
Rejected 4 Northern	1,552	1,600
Rejected No. 5 wheat	9,096	3,150
Rejected No. 6 wheat	—	2,136
Rejected 3 Northern sprouted	—	3,435
Rejected No. 5 wheat sprouted	—	4,065
Rejected 1 Northern mixed heated	36	—
Rejected 2 Northern mixed heated	20,423	4,443
Rejected 3 Northern mixed heated	7,356	20,192
Rejected 4 Northern mixed heated	4,916	15,054
Rejected No. 5 wheat mixed heated	15,798	35,501
Rejected No. 6 wheat mixed heated	17,338	6,429
Rejected 4 Northern rejected mixed heated	—	546
Rejected 2 Northern a/c Tartarian buckwheat	1,573	—
Rejected 3 Northern a/c Tartarian buckwheat	405	—
Rejected No. 5 wheat a/c Tartarian buckwheat	—	1,930
Rejected 2 Northern mixed gravel	20	—
Rejected 3 Northern mixed gravel	—	1,519
Rejected No. 5 wheat mixed gravel	2,995	—
Rejected 3 Northern mixed gravel & cinders	926	—
Rejected 4 Northern mixed gravel & cinders	38	—
Rejected No. 5 wheat mixed gravel & cinders	—	5,003
Rejected No. 6 wheat mixed gravel & cinders	—	980
Rejected 4 Northern mixed earth	—	1,461

Grade	Questions (i) As at beginning of crop year 1951-52 (Aug. 1, 1951)	(ii) As at end of crop year 1951-52 (July 31, 1952)
	bushels	bushels
Rej. No. 5 wheat rej. mixed gravel and cinders	—	1,944
Rej. No. 6 wheat mixed heated rej. a/c earth	—	1,974
Rej. 3 Northern mixed rotten kernels	1,434	—
Rej. 4 Northern mixed rotten kernels	—	1,122
Rej. No. 5 wheat mixed rotten kernels	821	—
Rej. No. 6 wheat mixed rotten kernels	874	24,840
Smutty 1 Northern	8,925	3,077
Smutty 2 Northern	34,900	8,119
Smutty 3 Northern	9,571	12,568
Smutty 4 Northern	17,852	7,758
Smutty No. 5 wheat	12,138	20,143
Smutty No. 6 wheat	9,232	—
Smutty rej. 3 Northern mixed heated	6,247	4,097
Smutty rej. No. 5 wheat mixed heated	672	—
Sample red spring broken	2,054	3,516
Sample red spring heated	36,142	36,450
Sample red spring mixed gravel	689	—
Sample red spring mixed rotten kernels	—	7,444
Sample red spring heated rotten kernels	—	3,783
Smutty sample red spring broken	—	2,720
2 C.W. Garnet	57,690	49,518
3 C.W. Garnet	82,737	136,867
Rejected 3 C.W. Garnet	1,459	1,175
Rej. 3 C.W. Garnet a/c Tartarian buckwheat	—	1,527
Feed wheat	3,693,466	650,671
Rejected feed wheat mixed heated	4,487	—
Rejected feed wheat mixed rotten kernels	—	1,507
Rejected feed wheat a/c rotten kernels	—	2,351
Rejected feed wheat mixed heated sour	1,073	—
Smutty feed wheat	4,808	—
Rejected No. 6 wheat mixed earth	54	—
(a) Tough
Tough 1 Northern	—	3,477
Tough 2 Northern	110,893	462,065
Tough 3 Northern	547,306	1,209,048
Tough 4 Northern	645,747	1,193,788
Tough No. 5 wheat	1,417,594	1,218,172
Tough No. 6 wheat	1,213,799	179,596
Tough feed wheat	631,533	18,246
Tough and heating 4 Northern	—	1,904
Tough and heating No. 5 wheat	—	4,526
Tough and heating No. 6 wheat	3,805	—
Tough rejected 2 Northern	604	—
Tough rejected No. 5 wheat	—	8,245
Tough rejected 4 Northern heating	—	129
Tough rej. 2 Northern mixed heated	6,707	—
Tough rej. 3 Northern mixed heated	10,585	11,551
Tough rej. 4 Northern mixed heated	11,539	17,513
Tough rej. No. 5 wheat mixed heated	14,478	17,480
Tough rej. No. 6 wheat mixed heated	4,324	7,369
Tough rej. feed wheat mixed heated	—	1,124
Tough rej. 3 Northern rej. mixed heated	1,182	—
Tough and heating rej. 2 Northern mixed heated	1,941	113
Tough and heating rej. 4 Northern mixed heated	2,201	3,023
Tough and heating rej. No. 5 wheat mixed heated	—	1,226
Tough and heating rej. No. 5 wheat rej. mixed heated	—	32
Tough rej. No. 5 wheat rej. mixed heated	—	232
Tough smutty 2 Northern	1,420	1,420
Tough smutty 3 Northern	11,334	9,343
Tough smutty 4 Northern	2,260	1,308
Tough smutty No. 5 wheat	2,990	6,535
Tough rejected 3 Northern a/c mildew	—	1,403
Tough rej. No. 5 wheat mixed gravel and cinders	33	—
Tough rej. feed wheat a/c mixed rotten kernels	66	—
Tough sample red spring heated	16,788	17,473
Tough and heating sample red spring heated	1,988	20,698
Tough 2 C.W. Garnet	1,400	25,776
Tough 3 C.W. Garnet	—	98,611
Tough rej. 2 C.W. Garnet mixed heated	—	1,460

Grade	(i) As at beginning of crop year 1951-52 (Aug. 1, 1951)	(ii) As at end of crop year 1951-52 (July 31, 1952)
	bushels	bushels
(b) Damp
Damp 3 Northern	170	11,589
Damp 4 Northern	2,647	7,252
Damp No. 5 wheat	1,315	26,295
Damp No. 6 wheat	1,552	10,988
Damp feed wheat	5,317	3,645
Damp and heating No. 6 wheat	1,305	—
Damp and heating feed wheat	1,143	—
Damp rejected 4 Northern	—	694
Damp rej. 3 Northern mixed heated	—	5,655
Damp rej. 4 Northern mixed heated	768	—
Damp and heating rej. No. 6 wheat mixed heated	—	1,526
Damp smutty rej. 3 Northern mixed heated	477	—
Damp and heating smutty rej. No. 5 wheat mixed heated	—	1,917
Damp sample red spring	29	1,031
Damp and heating sample red spring heated	1,235	5,334
Totals	44,637,363	27,376,709

WAR VETERANS ALLOWANCE ACT—AMENDMENTS RECOMMENDED

Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the government received representations, at any time since November 12, 1953, asking that the War Veterans Allowance Act be amended so as to provide (a) for an increase in the amounts of the allowance payable thereunder; (b) for an increase in the total amount of income permissible to recipients of the war veterans allowance?
2. If so, from whom?
3. Have these matters been studied by the government, or by any officials thereof, since November 12, 1953, to determine whether or not such requests should be implemented?
4. If so, by whom?
5. Have any reports thereon, and any recommendations, been made to the Minister of Veterans Affairs?
6. Will legislation, based on such reports or recommendations, be recommended at this session?

Mr. Lapointe:

1. (a) and (b) Yes.

2. Commands and branches of veterans' organizations, Canadian non-pensioned veterans widows and some individuals.

3, 4 and 5. Studies of relevant facts have been made by officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs, who have reported to the minister. The government has had the representations and the reports under consideration.

6. It is not customary to forecast policy in giving answers to questions on the order paper.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD "EYE WITNESS" SERIES

Mr. Fraser (Peterborough):

1. What firm or firms were the distributing agents in 1953 for the national film board's "Eye Witness" series?

[Mr. Dickey.]

2. What is the total amount paid to the national film board for these films?
3. Does the national film board distribute these films in any other way?
4. If so, how?
5. What was the total cost of producing "Eye Witness" in 1953?

Mr. Harris:

1. (a) Canada.

Columbia Pictures of Canada, Ltd., handle the Canadian theatrical distribution of this series. The following theatre chains have shown the "Eye Witness" series and its French language counterpart, "Coup d'Oeil" during 1953-54:

(1) B. L. theatres (Bernstein and Lieberman).

(2) Exhibitors Booking Association.

(3) Famous Players (including subsidiary firms such as Franklin-Herschorn, F. G. Spencer and Twinex).

(4) France Films.

(5) National Theatre Service.

(6) Odeon Theatres.

(7) Premier Operating Corporation.

(8) United Amusements.

(9) Independents (including such firms as O'Brien Theatres, Loews, etc. and such outlets as community theatres, parish halls, garrison theatres serving as commercial theatres for communities).

In addition, the C.B.C. and Rediffusion Inc., have telecast "Eye Witness" and "Coup d'Oeil" in Canada.

(b) Abroad by distributor and country.

International Film Distributors, United Kingdom; International Film Distributors,

New Zealand; Columbia Booking Office, Netherlands; Belgavox, Belgium; New Realm Pictures, Limited, United Kingdom; (they also distribute through Army Kinema Corporation to British army bases.) Kamerafilm (Eye Witness No. 5 only), Norway.

2. Total amount 1953-54*

Theatrical	$3,342.98
Non-theatrical rentals, etc.	23.20
Television	198.85
Total	$3,565.03

*Preliminary figures.

3. Yes.

4. In addition, the series were distributed by the national film board through:

(1) Urban and rural circuits in Canada.

(2) Sale of 16mm prints in Canada and abroad.

(3) Television in Canada and the United States.

(4) Distribution through film libraries of Canadian posts of the departments of external affairs and trade and commerce abroad.

5. The 24 films in the "Eye Witness" and "Coup d'Oeil" series cost a total of $115,911 in the fiscal year 1953-54.

TAX RENTAL AGREEMENTS PAYMENTS

Mr. Lafontaine:

1. What amount was paid each year, since 1947, to each province which signed the dominion-provincial tax rental agreement?

2. What amount would the province of Quebec have received each of the said years had it signed this agreement?

Mr. Benidickson:

1 and 2.

Payments each fiscal year under tax rental agreements
(in addition to statutory subsidies)

Under 1947 agreements (thousands of dollars)

Province	1947–48 (a)	1948–49	1949–50	1950–51	1951–52	1952–53 (a)	Total
Newfoundland	....	....	4,860	7,220	7,932	2,054	22,066
P. E. I.	1,577	1,770	1,927	2,160	2,352	689	10,474
Nova Scotia	10,330	10,673	11,471	13,003	14,198	2,183	61,859
New Brunswick	8,705	8,478	9,320	10,594	11,611	2,530	51,237
Manitoba	9,496	13,410	14,529	16,381	17,920	2,949	74,683
Saskatchewan	10,261	14,070	15,207	16,947	18,344	2,537	77,366
Alberta	9,904	14,024	15,276	17,343	19,106	5,009	80,661
B. C.	15,217	21,969	24,519	27,862	30,534	5,845	125,946
Total	65,490	84,394	97,110	111,509	121,996	23,795	504,293
Payable to Quebec if it had signed an agreement	45,142	64,154	69,953	78,268	85,148	22,623	365,288

(a) Payments were made by quarterly instalment which commenced on September 30, 1947. Thus only three instalments were paid in fiscal year 1947-48. The final instalment under the 1947 agreements was paid in June, 1952, and thus fell within the 1952-53 fiscal year.

Under 1952 agreements

Province	1952-53 (thousands of dollars)	1953-54
Newfoundland	10,722	11,825
P. E. I.	3,259	3,657
Nova Scotia	18,094	19,508
New Brunswick	14,946	16,178
Ontario (a)	123,327	134,448
Manitoba	23,005	25,039
Saskatchewan	23,530	25,254
Alberta	27,241	29,802
B. C.	40,095	43,516
Total	284,219	309,227
Payable to Quebec if it had signed an agreement (b)	111,703	121,335

(a) Ontario chose to retain its succession duty field; therefore the rental payments shown are after deducting an estimate of the credits allowed against federal succession duties for Ontario duties. The amount of these deductions cannot be finally calculated for a number of years.

(b) These amounts are the rental payments Quebec would have received if it had signed an agreement which included rental of succession duties. If the province had signed an agreement under which it continued to levy succession duties the rental payments would have been reduced by deducting an estimate of the federal credits given for Quebec duties.

Questions

PAPER AND SILVER CURRENCY

Mr. Hansell:

1. What was the total amount of paper currency media in use in Canada as at January 1, 1954?
2. What was the total amount of silver money in Canada as at January 1, 1954?
3. What was the total amount of money minted by the Royal Canadian Mint in Canada during 1953?

Mr. Benidickson:

1. December 31, 1953

Bank of Canada notes in circulation	$1,599,124,687
Less: Held by chartered banks	263,791,733
Bank of Canada notes in hands of the public	$1,335,332,954

2. December 31, 1953

Subsidiary coinage issued less amount withdrawn from circulation

Silver		$ 89,550,237
Nickel		7,813,082
Tombac		570,847
Steel		3,109,691
Bronze		12,130,181
		$113,174,038
Less: Held by Bank of Canada	$ 386,296
Held by chartered banks	18,433,874	18,820,170
Subsidiary coinage in hands of the public		$ 94,353,868

3. $7,625,964.

TUNNEY'S PASTURE, OTTAWA

Mr. Hodgson:

1. What is the full legal description of the whole of the property at Tunney's pasture on part of which the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation head office and buildings are situated?
2. From whom was this property purchased?
3. What was the purchase price and date of purchase?
4. What has been spent on this property for (a) surveys, subdivision plans, etc.; (b) buildings (giving details); (c) landscaping; (d) any extras?
5. Has the government used this property for any other building projects?
6. If so, for what purpose?

Mr. Bourget: With respect to this question I must say that I had a word with the hon. member. I told him that the head office and buildings of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are not situated in Tunney's pasture but are built on the Montreal road. I understand that the hon. member is agreeable to redrafting his question accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: This question is now dropped and will be redrafted.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

SCRAP IRON EXPORTS

Mr. Hansell:

1. Was any scrap iron exported by Canada during the last five years?
2. If so, to what countries, and what total amount in terms of tons and dollars was exported to each country in each of these years?

Mr. Dickey:

1 and 2. Canadian exports of scrap iron, by countries, during the last five years were as follows:—

Year	Country	Tons	Value
1949	United States	39,975	$ 1,009,203
1950	United States	62,618	2,034,221
1951	United States	39,804	1,615,678
1952	United Kingdom	48,517	2,419,844
	Argentina	8,834	437,786
	Japan	3,129	122,946
	United States	27,308	1,206,607
	Totals	87,788	$ 4,187,183
1953	United Kingdom	194,812	7,925,118
	Germany West	14,357	583,943
	Japan	104,361	3,862,871
	Mexico	228	13,517
	United States	96,251	3,491,706
	Totals	410,009	$15,877,155

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

IMMIGRANTS, 1945-1954

Mr. Ellis:

1. How many immigrants were admitted to Canada during the period April 1, 1945 to March 31, 1954?
2. What were the countries of origin and how many from each country in each year?
3. What was the occupation listed for each head of family and/or individual immigrant from each country of origin?
4. What was the religious affiliation of these immigrants by country of origin?
5. How many of the total number of immigrants from each country of origin came over in family groups, and how many came over as individuals?

Mr. Harris: Return tabled.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION—PERSONNEL

Mr. Dufresne:

1. What was the number of permanent and non-permanent employees of the Quebec harbour commission on April 1, 1954?
2. What are the names and addresses of those employees?
3. What is the yearly salary of each of them?

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): Return tabled.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SUPPLEMENTARY BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George H. Hees (Broadview): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the serious unemployment situation existing today, will the government give consideration to continuing the payment of unemployment insurance benefits to those whose unemployment insurance credits have expired and who, through no fault of their own, are unable to find work?

Hon. Milton F. Gregg (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, consideration was given to that question before the Easter recess, and it was decided not to take that step.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDO-CHINA—CONSIDERATION BY CANADA OF FIVE-POINT PEACE PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the government giving any consideration to support by Canada of the five-point peace plan to settle the war in Indo-China, advanced by Prime Minister Nehru at New Delhi on Friday last?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): I understand that my hon. friend's question refers to the speech made in the House of the People by Prime Minister Nehru on Saturday, April 24.

Mr. Coldwell: It was in Friday's paper.

Mr. St. Laurent: Then it must have been a preview because we have just received from the Canadian High Commissioner in New Delhi a summary of the statement on Indo-China made by the prime minister in the House of the People on Saturday, April 24. It is being studied very carefully by us here. We have also passed on this summary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson), who is now leading the Canadian delegation at the Geneva conference, as the proposals of Prime Minister Nehru will no doubt be given very careful consideration by those delegations which will be participating in the discussions on Indo-China at Geneva. In view of the fact that other countries are more directly concerned than Canada with this immensely complicated situation, I do not feel I should say any more at this time.

[Later:]

Mr. E. D. Fulton (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, in regard to the matter to which he just made reference in reply to the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell), and other developments in the Indo-China theatre, reconsideration has been or will be given to the position of the Canadian delegation at the Geneva conference with a view to ensuring that we will take part as an interested and concerned party in the discussion on Indo-China?

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Speaker, I would not like to commit the government to making any recommendation to parliament at this time to become directly involved in what is taking place in Indo-China. There have been statements made in this house that our obligations which might involve military action in the East were limited to what we were doing under the aegis of the United Nations. Now, there might arise a situation where it would be felt that we should go beyond that, but the government will have to give that very serious consideration. Before definitely committing Canada to action which might involve the participation of military forces, the government will, however, certainly bring its recommendation to parliament.

Mr. Fulton: I think the Prime Minister has misunderstood my question. My question was whether in view of these developments the Canadian delegation to the Geneva conference would be taking part in the discussion on Indo-China as an interested party; not whether the government of Canada was going to make any commitment with respect to the conflict there. The basis of my question was that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) in the external affairs debate some three weeks ago indicated we probably would not be taking part in that conference on Indo-China because we were not immediately concerned. My question relates to whether in view of the new developments we can any longer continue to take the position that we are not concerned in what goes on there.

Mr. St. Laurent: Canada has never taken the position that it was not concerned. It has taken the position that it was not directly participating in what was taking place in Indo-China and, as a consequence, that it had no standing to participate in decisions which might be made with respect to military action in Indo-China. We wish to fully discharge the spirit of the statements made to the house, that we are not going to involve Canada in matters that might require military action for their implementation without making a full disclosure to this house and a recommendation as a consequence of that disclosure.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WATER POLLUTION

NORTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. M. Campbell (The Battlefords): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a request from any provincial premier for a western provincial conference with the federal government to discuss the pollution of the North Saskatchewan river? If so, when will such a conference be held?

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no letter has been received from any provincial premier requesting a provincial-federal meeting to consider the pollution of the North Saskatchewan river. The premier of Saskatchewan did forward, or at least we received three copies of certain resolutions adopted by the legislative assembly of Saskatchewan in which it was requested:

> That this assembly urges the government of Canada to take cognizance of the health hazard and inconvenience which Saskatchewan citizens living along the course of the North Saskatchewan river have suffered as a result of the pollution of this stream . . .

That is all we have received in that connection.

TRADE

LIMITATION ON EXPORTS OF BASE METALS TO UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald M. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if negotiations are proceeding in any form between the government of Canada and the United States with respect to the possible limitation of export by Canada of base metals to the United States; if so, what stage these negotiations have reached and what position the Canadian government is taking?

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there are no such negotiations current at the present time.

WHEAT

INCREASE IN PRICE AT HEAD OF THE LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the minister intend to raise the price of wheat by seven cents a bushel at the head of the lakes, as he indicated he would do when lake shipping was resumed this spring?

[Mr. St. Laurent.]

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce does not set the price of wheat. That is the function of the wheat board. However, it might interest my hon. friend to know that the price of wheat at Fort William has advanced by four cents a bushel over the last two or three weeks.

SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PURPOSE OF SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) which he might like to take as notice if he does not have the information immediately available. Can the minister tell the house what change in the civil servants' superannuation regulations makes it necessary to conduct a survey of retired civil servants, demanding information on any employment they may have, their rates of pay, and their periods of employment?

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was good enough to send notice of this question to my office, but I received it just before entering the house. I will take this as notice and attempt to give an answer tomorrow.

SUPPLY

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I propose to avail myself of the opportunity presented by this motion to deal with a subject which was mentioned earlier, and which has received fresh emphasis since we met here just under two weeks ago.

Within that time there have been a number of statements and events which have impressed the necessity for some definite steps being taken to bring together at the earliest possible date the government of Canada and the governments of the provinces in order to deal with these matters which are causing concern, not only to the members of the different legislative bodies, but to the people of Canada generally.

As an example of the kind of statement to which I refer, there was a speech made by the minister charged with the responsibility for civil defence in which he dealt with the changing picture which has been presented to us as a result of the hydrogen bomb. He pointed out that with the enormously increased destructive power of this bomb we must review our attitude to the whole problem of civil defence.

I am referring to the speech made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) at Windsor on April 23. Having reviewed the new situation resulting from the terrible power of this bomb, the minister had this to say, as reported in a dispatch in the Windsor Star of April 24:

> It is no longer possible, he said, to indulge in the idle luxury of debating whether this civil defence job is a federal, provincial or local responsibility.
>
> The size of the possible threat is much too great for that; it is so large that it clearly and inevitably involves us all.

I do not think that there will be much tendency on the part of any hon. member in this house to disagree with the fact that this is a problem which involves us all. This is a subject which is of primary importance in the minds of people throughout the world who hope that there may be some possibility of peace through the joint efforts of the freedom-loving nations. Having said that, may I point out, however, that it is one thing to emphasize the seriousness of this situation and it is another thing to leave the impression that there is any less reason to discuss where the responsibility lies.

Let it be granted that every one of us must be prepared to consider this subject and to join in every way we can in preparing to meet the threat which is of a nature that we do not care to contemplate but which could be a dreadful reality. It had been pointed out by municipality after municipality across Canada that their burdens were already so heavy that they could not meet the financial responsibilities involved in some aspects of civil defence. If this problem has suddenly increased both in scale and in importance, that fact is all the more reason why there must be some understanding as to how this plan of civil defence is to be carried out, how the reassessed responsibilities are to be borne and how the financing of those responsibilities is to be accepted by the different bodies charged with the responsibility of finding the money necessary for that purpose. This is one of those problems which have remained unsolved because of the failure of the government of Canada to continue those conferences which might have found a solution of our difficulties along those lines.

Then let me refer to something else that, within this past week, has emphasized the problems that we face. Last week was education week. In different parts of Canada the cost of education and the problem related to the financing of education at the municipal level was being considered by those who have the responsibility of dealing with that subject. From many parts of Canada came requests for direct assistance by the government of Canada in a field which, under our constitution, is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. Surely that fact in itself emphasizes the growing complexity of this problem. Furthermore, within the time since we last met, from a number of municipalities have come recommendations that assistance in different forms be given to the municipalities directly from the government of Canada because of the inability of those municipalities to meet certain of their obligations without still further burdening the homes and the real estate within those municipalities.

These things have impressed on the minds of all of us the fact that there is not today a satisfactory understanding of this problem or anything approaching a solution of something that has been discussed on so many occasions in the past. Before we adjourned for the Easter recess I expressed the hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) would extend to the provinces an invitation to attend a conference where these problems could be discussed. The Prime Minister has made no reference to that suggestion. We now meet again, and on this first day that we meet I refer again to this subject and I mention only some of the pressing demands which suggest the need for bringing together the governments within this country in order to discuss ways and means of solving those problems which are much in the minds of every one of us.

Mr. Speaker, I sought to emphasize the fact that this is not a subject which is causing concern in Canada alone. I pointed out that in Australia, under another federal constitution although a slightly different one, discussion is taking place on this same subject with an increasing sense of urgency. We also find in the United States discussions of the same subject. Mr. Speaker, under our constitutional system, this is something as to which the Prime Minister is called upon to act. If there is to be a conference, then it must be the responsibility of the Prime Minister to decide that this conference will take place. I sought to emphasize previously that this is a problem which can cause misunderstanding as well as considerable difficulties in many fields unless it is tackled and dealt with in the manner that was suggested by this government itself some years ago. After all, the war years left in this country—as in other countries—problems which were the inevitable consequence of great changes in the pressure upon governments for immediate and prompt action. When in 1942 the provincial governments agreed to certain proposals that were then made, they did so recognizing that the urgent demands of war called for some measure of joint action which would avoid any delays that might embarrass the government of Canada in accepting its international obligations at that time. There were differences of opinion in those days. Generally, however, the situation was accepted as one of the necessities of world war. The same situation developed in large measure in the United States, Australia and other countries where a federal system has been established.

I recognize that it is not appropriate at this time to discuss the details that are set forth in the budget or in any way to parallel that discussion or invade the field of the budget debate. However, I do want to point out something that apparently needs to be pointed out in view of certain comments I have seen. I pointed out on an earlier occasion that the request for a conference of this nature, which has been asked for, I believe, by every province in Canada either in the form of letter, statements in the legislature or by requests by the premiers of the provinces, does not in any way suggest that our position has changed with regard to any of those details which may be related to the problems that have arisen, largely as a result of the failure to have such a conference.

May I say without any reservation that our position has not changed in any way with respect to the rights of the provinces in the field of taxation, with respect to the right of the provinces to determine their own course and with respect to the rights of the provinces voluntarily to enter into agreements or not to enter into agreements as the case may be. I certainly wish it clearly understood that in again emphasizing the need for such a conference I am not in any way changing the position which has been stated emphatically over and over again, that any province which does not enter into an agreement to abandon its traditional field of taxation has a perfect right to tax in that field and should be able to do so with the kind of co-operation it received from the government of Canada in earlier days when taxes levied by the provinces were, in the case of several provinces, collected by the federal authorities.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I be permitted to interrupt the Leader of the Opposition? I do so because a moment ago he indicated that it was his understanding that this debate today on a motion to go into supply should not parallel the debate on the motion to go into ways and means already on the order paper. I was happy to hear him say that was his understanding because he will probably recall that on the motion to go into ways and means the hon. member for Greenwood moved an amendment the other day, paragraph (f) of which reads as follows:

> (f) has failed to reach agreement with the provincial governments in regard to a clearly defined reallocation of taxing powers so that the provincial governments and municipal councils may have adequate financial resources to carry out their rapidly-increasing responsibilities.

I have been listening intently to the Leader of the Opposition ever since he began his remarks and it struck me that whatever he had to say about the responsibilities of either municipalities or provincial governments with respect to civil defence could have been fully discussed under this amendment which, I think, covers the ground that he himself covered in his speech today. The minute he left the subject of civil defence he went into the question of the taxing powers of the provincial governments and their need for additional revenue and, if I recall correctly, his suggestion as to a dominion-provincial conference was made when he was discussing the motion to go into ways and means prior to which this amendment was moved.

I merely ask for clarification at this moment. It is also my understanding that during this debate we should not parallel a debate of which notice has been given and which is supposed to be resumed within a reasonable time. I am reminded at this time of citation 246 of Beauchesne, third edition, which reads as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 41, it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada, that a member, while speaking, must not: . . .
>
> (d) anticipate discussion on a motion set down for future consideration.

I know that the Leader of the Opposition does not want to duplicate a debate. It is a wholesome restraint upon members that they should not debate now a question which they can debate on a motion already on the order paper. I would be glad to hear him explain the position he takes with respect to what I have said.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Winch: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have asked that a point of order be clarified and the Leader of the Opposition is entitled to explain his position.

Mr. Drew: I will explain as briefly as I can the reason for presenting the remarks I have and the reason why I believe they are appropriate under the circumstances. I availed myself before adjournment of the very wide latitude afforded by the budget debate to make a request which was not directly related to any point in the amendment. I indicated at that time that I did not propose to discuss the budget but that I would do so on a later occasion. I then expressed the hope that the Prime Minister would meet an increasingly difficult situation by announcing that a conference, long overdue, would be called. I have today sought to indicate why I believe that is more urgent than ever. In doing so, I sought to mention one or two subjects that in my opinion did suggest increasing urgency in relation to that matter.

The remarks I was making at the time Your Honour rose related to certain suggestions that were made, in spite of my very clear statement that I was merely making a request for a conference and not discussing the budget at that time, that this meant a change in attitude with regard to certain fiscal problems. I am simply stating this is not the case, that I was confining my remarks at that time to the need for a conference. I have sought today to express my belief that a conference is necessary. I have sought to emphasize the way in which certain recent events and statements support that claim and, Mr. Speaker, I have made the remarks that I had proposed to make in that respect. Therefore I will present the motion I had intended to move which will indicate to you what my purpose was. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Fleming):

That all the words after "That" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"in the opinion of this house immediate consideration should be given to the extension of an invitation by the Prime Minister of Canada to the premiers of the provinces to a conference which would resume discussion of those matters being considered by the constitutional conference which adjourned on the 28th of September, 1950, and such other matters as now require joint consideration by all the governments of Canada."

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I am not sure what interpretation to put upon this amendment. It seems to me that if it simply criticizes the government for having failed to reconvene the conference which adjourned on September 28, 1950, it is of course in line with some criticisms I made myself during the budget debate. But as I understand the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), he was discussing one phase of dominion-provincial relations which is not directly involved in the constitutional discussions that he suggests should have been carried on during the past few years, that is to say, civil defence.

It seems to me that this is a very broad amendment.

Mr. Drew: I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but perhaps I might be of assistance by saying I had hoped I had made it clear it was the financial consequences of civil defence I was discussing, and the need for dealing with that problem, not in any way the problem of civil defence as such.

Mr. Coldwell: If we are discussing the financial problems connected with civil defence, this resolution, it seems to me, goes far beyond that, and cannot be related to the conference which adjourned on September 28, 1950, because my recollection is that when I raised this subject during the budget debate and began to criticize the government on the ground that the conference should have been reconvened at an earlier date because some financial matters needed to be discussed, I was told that the conference on constitutional matters was not intended to deal with the financial relationships of the provinces and the dominion. I accepted that because I recognized immediately that that interpretation was correct.

If, however, we are discussing civil defence there is quite a lot I should like to say about it. The dangers of the hydrogen bomb, which have been revived this afternoon, were brought to the attention of this house two or three weeks ago, not only by me but in a very able and forceful speech by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch). I should like to express the opinion once more that, while we should take every precaution we can, and that includes, of course, any system of warnings required to warn us of the approach of hostile planes, we should see to it also that our national defence department retains in Canada such interceptor planes as might be necessary under those circumstances. I want to say very explicitly that this new weapon has changed the whole picture of civil defence within the past two or three months.

While we must take every precaution and prepare for any emergency, I am one of those who believe there is no real defence against the hydrogen bomb, except the defence that can be obtained through settling international disputes through the United Nations Organization, and by the representatives of the government of Canada pressing by every means possible the study of a general reduction in armaments. It is all very well to say we have to press for an agreement not to use the hydrogen or atomic bomb, but when a nation gets into a corner we cannot tell whether or not such an agreement will be honoured. On behalf of those associated with me, I want to say that we believe Canada should take every available means to assist in bringing about a general agreement, not only for the abolition of these fearful weapons of war but for the placing of atomic energy and hydrogen development under an international body which would have the unrestricted right of inspection.

We should also do everything possible to end war and remove the causes of war, and bring about a general disarmament amongst the nations by agreement. I see no other real defence against these weapons today. While I shall support any measures that are intelligent to try to mitigate the results of any such attack that might come to us if we cannot reach this sort of agreements, yet I am certain in my own mind there is no real defence against these dreadful weapons. I believe that Canada should use her influence —I would hope and believe she will—in promoting the idea of general disarmament amongst the nations. As I say, it seems to me that in an indirect way this resolution is attempting to bring about a conference on a problem that should be dealt with directly, rather than by the oblique mention we have in this amendment. Had the amendment been confined to a conference on civil defence, as I understood it was likely to be from what the hon. member said at the outset of his remarks, I would have found it much easier to come to a decision as to what to do with this particular amendment.

Mr. Martin: Is my hon. friend aware of the fact that about three weeks ago in this building there was a dominion-provincial conference with all the ten provinces on civil defence, when the whole problem of the hydrogen bomb was discussed, including the matter of financing civil defence in Canada.

Mr. Winch: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It is my understanding that under a motion for committee of supply only one grievance at a time can be raised. I have listened very intently to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew), and in my estimation he has raised three points of grievance: one, the hydrogen bomb; two, civil defence; three, a dominion-provincial conference. I say, sir, that cannot be done under this motion, especially in view of his remarks when he was tying it in with his remarks during the budget debate, and that particular subject is not before us.

On a point of order, therefore, sir, I am asking which one of the grievances we are dealing with. To which one does the motion refer?

Mr. Speaker: As the hon. member has pointed out, great latitude is afforded to members during the debate on the motion to go into supply. I do not think one has to be too particular as to the extent of the remarks of the one who does present the amendment, but the concrete form of the thoughts expressed in the speech is supposed to be reproduced in the amendment. However, I am in the same difficulty as that expressed by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell). We heard about civil defence and the difficulties of the provinces with respect to taxing powers. And, having listened to those remarks, we have now an amendment which relates to the calling of a conference to resume the discussions of points which were under study in a constitutional conference.

Now, as I recall it, there was no matter of civil defence or even of taxing powers being then discussed at that constitutional conference. And as to the second part of the amendment which refers to "such other matters as now require joint consideration by all the governments of Canada" that, to me, is fully included in paragraph (f) of the amendment which was moved to the motion to go into ways and means only the other day and which, as I say, will be resumed within a very reasonable time.

That is all I must consider when I am dealing with citation 246 of Beauchesne's third edition, to which I referred a minute ago, and which has reference to anticipating a discussion of which notice appears on the order paper.

Citation 467 is quite clear on the subject. The last part reads as follows:

> —shall not relate to any decision of the house during the current session, nor to any item of the estimates, nor to any resolution to be proposed to the committee of ways and means, nor to any matter placed on or whereof notice has been given in the order paper.

Now, I think the Leader of the Opposition had his own suspicions as to the value of the course he was following today, because he did point out that this discussion today should not parallel that which was inaugurated on the motion to go into ways and means the other day, and which is about to be resumed.

I should like to submit this decision to the judgment of the house. In my view this amendment is not in order. It covers a very wide field which certainly can be fully covered in the other amendment to the motion to go into ways and means, which debate had been initiated before the recess and which is about to be resumed. It was announced by the leader of the house that shortly after the recess we would resume debate on the motion to go into ways and means. I think we would be creating a very dangerous precedent in our proceedings if we were to accept an amendment of the kind now offered by the Leader of the Opposition, when already there is one on the order paper which offers just as great latitude to discuss all these points.

I would say that what is contained in this amendment today is merely the substance of the amendment made on the motion which is already on the order paper. As a matter of fact paragraph (f) could have read:

> has failed to extend an invitation to the premiers of the provinces to a conference which would resume discussion of those matters being considered by the constitutional conference which adjourned on the 28th September, 1950, and such other matters as now require joint consideration by all the governments of Canada—

And so on, to the very end. That would include exactly what is in the amendment offered today. And if the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) the other day in moving his amendment failed to include that part which is contained in the amendment today, then I think that he ought to resort to other methods to bring it about, but it should not be done by way of an amendment to the motion to go into supply today, particularly when the discussion is to be resumed on the amendment to the motion to go into ways and means.

Mr. Drew: Mr. Speaker, I wish to deal with only one point you raised. I take no exception to what Your Honour has said, other than that I would not wish to leave it unchallenged on the record that there was any suspicion in my own mind that the amendment I have now offered is covered by an amendment already on the order paper. I do not propose to debate the point, but I did wish to make that clear. Your Honour can make your ruling, and I do not wish to raise any unnecessary issue on a point of procedure of this nature. But I do wish to point out that my only thought in raising the point today is to seek an indication in the house in regard to a positive expression of a desire for a conference. I have asked the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) for a statement. We are waiting for a statement from the Prime Minister, and I think we should have a statement from him as to whether he will or will not call a conference.

Mr. Speaker: At this moment I think my position must be that I shall rule the amendment out of order. However, I should like to have the sense of the house on that ruling. If the hon. member is not going to appeal the ruling I would ask the house to make its opinion known, because it is a very important matter.

We have before us a motion to go into committee of ways and means, and the debate on that motion is known generally as the budget debate. To that motion we have had an amendment; and in that amendment is included much of what is now contained in this new amendment offered by the Leader of the Opposition to the motion to go into committee of supply.

As the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar (Mr. Coldwell) has said, the debate on the motion to go into committee of supply covers a very wide field. There is not a single word in the amendment, however, which could not be covered in the debate for which provision is now made on the order paper. I have quoted citation 246, which states that we should not anticipate discussion of a motion of which notice has been given, or which is already on the order paper for future discussion.

I think for the purpose of protecting the observance of the rules I must hold that, by virtue of the citations I have quoted, the amendment now offered is not in order; and I would ask the house to express its views in the matter. In order to bring it to a head I shall say that the amendment now offered is not in order.

Mr. Drew: Since I have indicated that I do not propose to force a vote on the matter, I hope Your Honour will permit me to point out the tremendous difference between a statement of regret that a result has not been achieved, and a positive proposal that something should be done with which this house certainly, in my opinion, has a right to deal.

Let me give an illustration. Surely under the broad field and scope of the budget we deal with all aspects of national defence and subjects of that nature. Assuming, for the sake of argument, that there were a necessity to have some international conference of some kind—and the government shows a great inclination to attend conferences not held in this country—then surely there would be an opportunity to present a motion indicating the view of the house that such a conference should be held.

In the present instance I am simply presenting to the house a positive request that there be called a conference which has been asked for by the provincial governments. And no reason has been given why it should not be called. The calling of that conference is not, in itself, related to the budget. It could bring under discussion subjects entirely independent of the budget. I say that under the circumstances we should be permitted to vote on this, so that there might be an indication of the views held in the house on the subject. If on the other hand Your Honour follows what is an unusual course, that of preventing a motion of this kind, then most certainly I would have no choice but to support my own belief that the amendment I have offered is in order—if such a vote is called.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition appears to be under the impression that, because he wants the house to make a pronouncement on a certain proposal he has put forward, necessarily it must be accepted. Now, I have no objection to his view, that the house should pronounce its opinion as to the extension of an invitation to a conference. But what I am objecting to is that now, on a motion to go into supply, we are discussing what is virtually contained in an amendment to the motion that the house go into committee of ways and means—which debate is already on the order paper, and is about to be resumed. Now I am using words that he used himself. We are paralleling a debate, and that we cannot afford to do. If the hon. member will look at citation 467 he will see that on a motion to go into supply he does not have to move an amendment. He is entitled to discuss anything that he wishes, and he has done so. He discussed civil defence and other subjects. I am inclined to believe that the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) is quite right. If, in introducing a subject on the motion to go into supply, the hon. member wanders over the various fields which come within federal matters, hon. members are apt to ask themselves: What are we going to discuss? On the motion for the house to go into ways and means latitude is given. It is the budget debate, and all the matters which the hon. member has brought up here are apt to be discussed; but today it is a motion to go into supply. He is using that motion to discuss a lot of the things that are reserved for the other debate, and he is not giving hon. members a chance to assess on what subject their remarks should bear.

From now on, once an amendment has been proposed, what is the debate going to be? Is it going to be on civil defence? Is it going to be on the resumption of a conference with respect to the matter of allocating the various subjects under the constitutional act so that we shall have power to amend our constitution here in Canada? Or would it have to do with the various powers pertaining to taxation, which is a duplication of the amendment contained in paragraph (f) of the motion proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell)? There is a lot of merit in what the hon. member for Vancouver East said, namely, that when we are discussing a grievance it must be a specific subject, because it is my duty, whenever an hon. member leaves one subject, to make sure that all the discussion of that subject is terminated before another one is initiated. That is another difficulty that I am confronted with. Surely if the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) today wishes to move an amendment, which is to me another amendment akin to that which is being moved in the budget debate, I do not know whether it is wise for us to create that precedent.

Mr. Drew: May I simply say, Mr. Speaker, that I agree with Your Honour that this is an important subject. I hope that you will not place on record a decision, I mean by vote, which might be embarrassing, because after all it is the motion that counts. I am quite prepared to ask that this amendment be withdrawn by consent so that the necessity for a vote is not presented. With the consent of the house I ask that this amendment be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other subjects?

Mr. Winch: May I speak on the point of order again? I am going through with what I understand to be the rules of the house, namely, that only one grievance can be raised at a time. As I said before, the Leader of the Opposition has raised three. Now, sir, it is very difficult for hon. members to know which grievance is before us, because I understand that if a grievance has been discussed we cannot raise it again. What is the grievance of the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Speaker: I think we have now left the subject of the wide grievance contained in the amendment, because the hon. Leader of the Opposition has had leave to withdraw that amendment. I would imagine that we can now go over to wheat or to any other grievance.

MARKING OF PACKAGES "MADE IN CANADA"

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): I have something which I wish to raise very briefly. I could not raise it on the orders of the day, but it has to do with the marking of packages which are allegedly made in Canada. As I understand it, we have no general law governing the marking of goods as "made in Canada". I also remember that such legislation is rather difficult to formulate, but we do have a statute which is the Unfair Competition Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, chapter 274. I refer to section 11, which reads:

> No person shall, in the course of his business, (b) direct public attention to his wares in such a way that, at the time he commenced so to direct attention to them, it might be reasonably apprehended that his course of conduct was likely to create confusion in Canada between his wares and those of a competitor.

We passed an act in 1952 or 1953 which I believe has not been proclaimed, and which will supersede the legislation to which I have just referred. But, as I understand it, it deals perhaps a little more specifically with the problem in mind, since it refers to the geographical origin of the goods in question.

I do not want to demonstrate one particular article, but I do have in my hand an article which is marked "made in Canada" and the package is marked "printed in Canada". The article contained in that package was marked "U.S.A." What I rather suspect is that the fabric out of which the article was made originated in the United States and was brought into Canada and probably turned into a child's garment in a Canadian factory, but marked "made in Canada".

At a time when the textile industry is in need of work, it seems to me that anything of this nature should be very carefully looked into by the government, and the legislation should be strengthened, if possible, so that an article marked "U.S.A." cannot be put in a package that is marked "made in Canada", in a package also containing, in print, "printed in Canada". It seems to me that we should have on our statute books legislation that would prohibit that sort of marking when the article is made—of course, I am giving the company the benefit of the doubt in this respect—from an imported fabric in a Canadian factory. But my real purpose in rising is not only to say that we should strengthen the legislation to meet problems of this description, but to say that we also have on the statute books of Canada an act of this parliament which might assist, and which has not yet been proclaimed. That is the point I have in mind. Whether we can succeed in formulating new legislation that would meet cases of this description, or not, I do not know because I am not a lawyer; but I do know that we have stronger legislation than the legislation now in effect. And what I am suggesting to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Garson) and to the government is that the legislation passed by this parliament in an attempt to do something along the lines that I believe necessary should no longer be delayed; it should be proclaimed and brought into effect immediately, as I say, particularly in view of the conditions in an industry which needs all the work that it can possibly get. I am not asking for any protection for Canadian industries; all I am asking is that we should have packages accurately marked. If the goods are made in Canada, then they should be marked "made in Canada"; but if the goods are partly manufactured or, as I think likely in this case, if the fabric itself is manufactured in the United States, then some marking should be put on the package to indicate that, while the article may be made in Canada, the material from which the article is made originates in another country.

Whether it is the United States or any other country does not concern me at the moment. What I am concerned with is that we have passed legislation which was designed to strengthen our administration in this regard. That legislation is on the statute books but has not yet been brought into effect by proclamation. Why this delay? What I am asking is that the government should proclaim this legislation, if it is stronger, as we were told it was at the time, and endeavour to restrict the marketing of goods claimed "made in Canada" which are not in reality made wholly in Canada.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I am the minister responsible for the legislation in question now on the statute books but not yet proclaimed, I should perhaps give a word of explanation as to the reason for the delay in proclamation. This legislation for its operation requires rather extensive and detailed regulations. A committee has been working on the preparation of these regulations for the entire period since the act was passed at the last session of the last parliament. I have received a report of the committee within the last few days and as soon as it is possible to bring it before my colleagues I intend to do so. I think, however, it will be necessary to give a good deal of publicity to these regulations after they have been made in the interests of the people who will derive benefit from the legislation. There will have to be a period during which the regulations can become known, otherwise there would be considerable confusion. However, I hope that that period can be kept to a minimum and that the will of parliament can be carried out as soon as possible.

With respect to the other point raised by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, as I indicated to the house at the time legislation was before us dealing with the Patent Act, it is intended to set up a commission of inquiry into the Patent Act, the Copyright Act, and other related legislation. It is not intended that this inquiry should go into the whole scope of new trade mark legislation recently passed by parliament, but I should think the terms might be made broad enough so that interested parties who wish to make representations in regard to further improvements in that act would have an opportunity to do so.

Supply

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Robinson (Simcoe East) in the chair.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

341. Departmental administration, $1,316,383.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL REVENUE

295. General administration (including the former customs excise seizure expenses and adjustments), $2,822,515.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

424. Departmental administration, $625,101.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE PRODUCTION

78. Departmental administration and payments to Canadian Commercial Corporation and other corporate agencies for services provided in connection with defence purchasing and production, $6,446,812.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

162. Departmental administration (including the former administration of justice—miscellaneous expenditure, including expenses of litigated matters), $427,600.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Chairman, the minister stated on the eve of the Easter recess that he would today call four departments. We have now had four and a fifth is now about to be called.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, when I compiled the list this afternoon I thought it would be preferable to have the Department of Trade and Commerce and Department of Defence Production together for the purposes of debate, and I also submitted the Department of Justice because I understood the hon. member for Kamloops wished to have a debate on this particular matter. That is the reason why I submitted the fifth department.

Mr. Drew: I think it is only right and I believe it would very much preserve good relations in these matters if the statement made by the minister before we adjourned is respected and four departments called on this occasion.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Chairman, if you would allow the Department of Justice not to be called at this time we could go on with the others.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Wednesday, April 14, consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in this debate I recognize that it is the budget debate which is now before us, though I feel that in the majority of cases the major points could be raised under the estimates as they will appear before us at a later date. It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to speak this afternoon on three points which I would like to emphasize prior to entering into a discussion of the estimates. I am sorry that the ministers in charge of the matters to which I wish to refer have now left the house. However, sir, I am going to continue with the remarks I desire to make.

On several occasions a number of hon. members in this house have spoken on the unemployment situation and have discussed the condition of those who are unemployed, who were receiving unemployment insurance, but who had their supplementary benefit cut off on the 15th of this month.

Since these hon. members have spoken on this issue it has been my privilege to return to my home city of Vancouver, and my own constituency of Vancouver East. As a result of my visit to my own riding and my own city I wish to take my time in drawing certain things to the attention of this government and in telling the government, as nearly as I can inside parliamentary regulations, exactly what I think of them. Ever since the house met on November 12, Mr. Speaker, this government has been told about the growing unemployment situation and the problems facing those who are now unemployed. The only answer we could get from the cabinet benches was that it was an unpleasant situation, but that it was only seasonal. The only answer we could get from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) was that on April 15 those on supplementary benefit would be cut off.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is all fine and dandy for those of us who have an income and can take care of our homes, buy food and clothing and anything else we may need, but it is, in my estimation, a bad situation when a government is quiescent as long as there is one family in Canada which is hungry.

On my return to Vancouver over the Easter recess I made some inquiries about the unemployment situation and here is what I found. Out of the Vancouver office alone, in January, February and March, $4,789,000 was paid out in unemployment insurance. That fact indicates a rather serious situation in Vancouver. We also find that, under the orders of this government which calls itself humanitarian and interested in the people, all supplementary benefits under unemployment insurance were cut off as of April 15. As of April 15, in the Vancouver office alone, 4,300 were cut off any help from the federal government. We also find that, within four days of the supplementary benefits being cut off in Vancouver on April 15, 80 applications for assistance were received by the social welfare department of the city of Vancouver. We also find that between March 1 and April 13 in Vancouver there were 575 applications from single, homeless, employable unemployed men, all of whom, outside of 22, were taken care of by the city of Vancouver. There were 4 single women who made application and 105 heads of families.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) is not here nor is the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) but some cabinet ministers are present; I am going to ask those cabinet ministers who are here this question. In view of your decision that there shall be no supplementary benefits after April 15, when 4,300 were cut off in Vancouver on that date, was it your expectation that there would be 4,300 jobs on that date? If not, what do you expect those 4,300 men and women to do? Do you expect them to starve to death? You are not prepared to take any action. Eighty have applied within four days after the closure. We do not know what is going to happen from then on, but since the beginning of the year the province and the city have been taking care of the employable unemployed, something which I maintain is not the responsibility of the province of British Columbia or of the city of Vancouver. Time after time members in this house, myself included, have maintained that the responsibility for the employable unemployed is that of the dominion government. The matter has been raised time after time. It was mentioned by my own house leader when he spoke in this debate. Mr. Speaker, I can think of no way whatsoever in which the government can get away from its own promise. I know that I have mentioned this matter before but I am going to keep right on mentioning it until this government has the decency and the honesty to carry out its own promises. I cannot see how the government can get away from its promise in 1945 when they asked the provincial governments to sign tax agreements. We signed them. I was one that agreed to it. At that time the dominion government said this, as found at page 43 of the green book proposals:

> The dominion government would accept responsibility for ensuring that there shall be provided a reasonable minimum payment for the maintenance of employable unemployed persons . . .

Mr. Speaker, I think it is an unfortunate situation in this country when we cannot trust the words of government. I am going to say this. Because of the words, not of this government but of the party that was the government, we signed the provincial-dominion agreements under false pretences, and the provinces and the municipalities of Canada at the present time are carrying burdens which rightfully belong to the dominion government. Although you have heard this time after time since November 12, you are going to keep on hearing it, Mr. Speaker, until this government fulfils its promise to take care of the employable unemployed. Why should British Columbia or the city of Vancouver have to be responsible for the employable unemployed? They have accepted the responsibility to the extent of 575 applications already from employable unemployed from March 1 until April 13. They have covered 105 heads of families. They have covered a number of single unemployed women. It is not our responsibility, Mr. Speaker, and I am going to keep on speaking about the matter until the government fulfils the promise it gave in 1945 in the green book proposals.

Mr. Speaker, it was my privilege to be able to go back to my home constituency over the Easter recess. I want to speak about some of the things I discovered on that trip. I am sorry that the minister in charge of our post office system is not here now. I hope that his parliamentary assistant is here. I am going to make this statement. I have been in the trade union movement since I was 17 years of age—I am now 47—and I think I know something about that movement. I think I know something about trade union contracts. I am going to say this. In my estimation the Post Office Department of the Dominion of Canada is getting a most odorous reputation, namely that of being the most despicable and disreputable employer in the entire Dominion of Canada. I mean that. In the past we have heard on the floor of this house a great deal about the need for increasing the postal rates in Canada by one cent right down the line so as to cover the increased cost of wage increases to postal employees, and the five-day week. Mr. Speaker, be that as it may, I think it is terrible and horrible what the Post Office Department of this government is doing in order to try to squeeze the last dollar out of their own employees.

I am not speaking from hearsay at all. When I was in Vancouver last week a postal employees' delegation met me. What did I find? I found something that is not to be found in any employer-employee agreement in the entire Dominion of Canada. The government announces that they will pay overtime rates to their postal employees and that they are now to be on a 40-hour five-day week in some parts of Canada. What are you doing where these employees are on the 40-hour five-day week? You are pulling the dirtiest, lowest stunt ever pulled by any employer in Canada. What are you doing? You say that they are entitled to time and a half overtime rates. O.K. They are on a 40-hour five-day week. The Post Office Department issued an order and I have got it right here. What does it say? It provides that before an employee can collect one cent at the time and a half overtime rate he has to work 48 hours in the week. There is a 40-hour week but the overtime rate does not come into effect unless you work 48 hours in the week.

Show me one union agreement, show me one employer-employee agreement that is as low as that. It means even more than that, Mr. Speaker. If a statutory holiday occurs in a week the employees do not get paid for it at the overtime rate unless they work for forty-eight hours in the week. I have heard of some rotten deals in my life but that is the rottenest I ever heard of. I have the government's own order setting out that although the employees are on a 40-hour week they do not collect the overtime rate of pay unless they work 48 hours. It goes beyond that. May I ask the house leader if he will take note of this? May I, Mr. Speaker, ask the house leader if he will take note of this?

Mr. Abbott: He will.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the house leader to take note of this?

Mr. Abbott: Do not take yourself too seriously.

Mr. Winch: On January 14 I stated, as found at page 1109 of Hansard, that the government had in mind changing the night differential in the post office. I now refer the house to page 1146 of Hansard of January 15 where it will be found that the minister said:

> I believe he also stated that he had been informed that the department was endeavouring to eliminate the night differential granted to postal employees. We have no such thought in mind. I am afraid that he is getting his information from an unreliable source.

That is the statement the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) made on that date. That order, Mr. Speaker, was put through and the night differential has been wiped out in the postal service. When I said that it was going to be done the minister said no, that I did not have a correct source of information. I have spoken to the postal employees in the city of Vancouver and the night differential has been wiped out. What does this mean? At that time the night differential meant that those who worked for seven hours got paid for eight. The government has now put an order into effect whereby they get a slight increase in wages but not a sufficient amount to make up for the loss of the night differential. This penny-pinching government is stealing a few cents in order to get an extra hour from those who have to work on the night shift in the post offices. You should be darn well ashamed of yourselves. But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house leader that the important point is that I was given the lie on the floor of the house by a cabinet minister. It did go into effect.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it is not in order for any hon. member to make a reference of that kind. If any explanation is needed now—I am sure it will be made later if necessary—may I point out that if the facts are as the hon. member says, and I have some doubt, he is speaking of a date in January when the minister's reference could have been made precisely as it was and yet by government action some weeks later a change could be made. If that is so, the circumstances would not justify the description the hon. member has now given. Therefore I would ask him to withdraw his remarks.

Mr. Winch: I am not withdrawing the remarks. I am going to ask the minister to supply the date of the secret order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Abbott: This is not the British Columbia legislature.

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration what is the remark he is complaining about? I must apologize for not hearing it, but I was being detained here by a very interesting conversation with a colleague of mine. I did not hear the remarks made by the hon. member for Vancouver East.

Mr. Harris: The hon. member for Vancouver East recited certain facts in connection with the Post Office Department. He said that on January 14 he made certain remarks and that on January 15 the Postmaster General answered him but that despite that answer certain action was taken at a later time which was contrary to what the minister had said. The hon. member used the words that the minister gave him the lie and I am asking that they be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East has heard the recapitulation of what he said. Am I to assume that the expression reported as having been used by him was in fact used by him? In the circumstances I am sure that he will know what course he should follow.

Mr. Winch: I would say, Mr. Speaker, with deference to you, that the information given this house does not represent what is now in effect in the Post Office Department.

Mr. Speaker: Does that mean that the hon. member withdraws the expression? As he knows, the formula for that is to say that he withdraws the offensive words.

Mr. Winch: I withdraw. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I ask that the minister who has just spoken should tell us what was the date of the order which changed the night differential?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May I ask the minister to allow me to interject a word here? We are not in committee. We are now proceeding to debate the budget, and the hon. member for Vancouver East is anxious to ask questions. Perhaps we ought to dispose of the motion now before the house and reach the committee stage where he can ask as many questions as he wishes, but not now.

Mr. Winch: I am saying it now so that they can be ready at the committee stage.

Mr. Abbott: Just making a constituency speech.

Mr. Winch: There is another point. I want to point out just what this government is doing through its Post Office Department. I am only going to speak about Vancouver because I know about Vancouver. This government is trying to pull a very fast one to save money. There is an agreement on wages so far as the Post Office Department is concerned, and what is being done? I am not blaming the minister. Perhaps he does not know anything about it, but he ought to know. I am going to tell him right now what is being done. In order to cut the throats of those who should have these wages,—

Mr. McCann: That may go in British Columbia, but it does not go here.

Mr. Winch: —they hire what is called casual labour. I have heard of some of these casual labourers who have been working for months in the Vancouver post office department. Some of them have been there for years, and they are doing the same work as those who are on the permanent staff. There is this difference. If the Post Office Department calls them casual employees, they are paid 97 cents an hour. If these men were on the permanent staff they could reach a salary of $280 per month.

I met a delegation of post office employees in Vancouver, and they said they call these men "permanent casual employees." The government gets away with paying them 97 cents an hour. I think it is time the government and this department got into a hole and pulled it in over them.

In Vancouver, sir, there was a chap doing electrical maintenance work. I did not see him, but the delegates from the post office association who came to see me told me about him. This man was receiving the prevailing union rate. Not long ago his position was abolished, and the civil service commission called for applications for this job. This man was told to make application and he would have a priority. He did make application, and he got the job, but at $100 per month less than he had been receiving. Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious what is going on in this government. I do not think the same thing is happening in all departments; as a matter of fact, I am told it is not. It is in this Post Office Department.

I do not blame the minister. I do not think he knows what is occurring, but I think he has some rotten, putrid advisers. I think it is time something was done about them. I think the minister ought to make an investigation right now of what is occurring. Yes, you have increased wages. Yes, you have introduced the 40-hour five-day week. But what are you doing? You are bringing about the rottenest conditions between employer and employees in Canada, and that is being done by a department of the Dominion of Canada. I am very sorry the minister has not been here while I have been speaking. Since he is here now, I want to say again that I do not believe he knows what is happening in the Post Office Department. I do not think he knows of the policy or the things that are being done in his department that have brought this department to the position of being known as the most disreputable, despicable employer of labour in the Dominion of Canada.

Since the minister introduced the changes in the Post Office Act, naturally the changes have been made under his authority, but perhaps without his knowledge. But you are bringing them down to a position that is a shame in Canada. I am sorry, but I have just reached the end of what I had to say about the minister's department, and he is now here. While he is here, however, and although it is going to take up some of my time, I want to say again that I think it is terribly wrong that a directive should be issued—I have it here—that no overtime rates shall be paid unless a man has worked over 48 hours in the week. The employees are supposed to be on a 40-hour week basis. I have your directive here, Mr. Minister, and it is wrong. I feel it is wrong you should tell this house that no change in the night differential was under consideration, when there has been a change made in the night differential. The increase in wages does not cover the extra hours of work, so you are gaining a few cents on the night differential from those who work at night.

I want to continue now, Mr. Speaker, with one other phase of my remarks. If the minister is to be brought in, he should be brought in when I commence these remarks. I want to speak to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier).

Mr. Abbott: He is attending the dominion-provincial conference today.

Mr. Winch: I hope he is more successful in that than he has been with something else. I want to speak about what he had to say in this house under date of March 25, as it appears in Hansard at page 3319. He had this to say:

> However, with reference to the transfer to Canadian National Telegraphs, I was unable to give any information to the house, because the departmental officers were in Montreal discussing the arrangements. These have now been completed and, in my opinion, they are as satisfactory as they were with the British Columbia Telephone Company. For that reason I am sure the house will be interested in knowing what are the terms of the transfer.

The Minister of Transport said that the terms of transfer of the employees of the government telegraph service were as good as those in the transfer of the telephone system. I am not expressing my own opinion, but when I was in Vancouver I was met by a delegation of those who were formerly the employees of the government. What did they have to say? They said that the employees of the government telegraph service, one of whom had thirty-one years of service, had received the dirtiest deal that they thought had ever been given to any employee of the government. I have read the statement of the Minister of Transport concerning what he maintains were the terms with reference to the transfer of the government service employees to the Canadian National Telegraphs. The employees say that all the information is incorrect. They say they met as employees with the Canadian National Telegraphs representatives, and that as a result they found their seniority lasted only a short time, and that inside of two months they would be reduced to what is known as a non-schedule basis, under which they would have no guarantee of wages, no seniority, and would not have the protection of any union agreement.

Eight employees in Vancouver refused to accept the proposal offered by Canadian National Telegraphs. One of these men, Mr. J. F. Christie, had been thirty-one years in the service of the federal government. Another, Mrs. Mighton, had been twenty-six years in that service; Mr. Oliver had been in the service seven years, and Mr. Coleman five years in the civil service and seven years in the army—and the time in the army has to be recognized.

The offer was such that all these employees had to refuse. They lost seniority; they lost superannuation rights under this non-schedule basis—and it must be kept in mind that only two, of all employees, came under the schedule basis. Under the non-schedule basis they would lose not only their standard of wage but also their seniority rights.

Something is greatly wrong in this connection, when we see those who have served the Dominion of Canada well being left completely stranded, as these employees were. And I would ask hon. members to keep in mind the fact that one of these men had been thirty-one years in the service of the federal government. It was wrong for the Minister of Transport to state in the House of Commons that the agreement with Canadian National Telegraphs was equal to that with B.C. Telephone Company. Everyone admits that B.C. Telephone was tops in its agreement and gave seniority and the same rates of pay—everything their own employees had. They even took three of the employees of the telegraph system into their employment.

The offer given these men by Canadian National Telegraphs was not the one the minister described to us, and these men quit the service. I say the federal government has a responsibility in the matter in having Canadian National Telegraphs give the same rates of pay to employees in the federal telegraph service. Failing that, then I say the federal government must accept the responsibility of taking care of its loyal servants who, in the cases I have mentioned, served for periods ranging between seven and thirty-one years. I am going to ask the government to consider this matter, to see what can be done.

I said I was going to discuss only three points, and I have done so. First of all, something must be done—and done right now—on a federal basis to take care of the employable unemployed. This has been a federal government responsibility since 1945. The government has failed to keep its promises. Our municipalities and provinces are being faced with costs which are rightfully those of the government here in Ottawa. I say the Post Office Department is not being fair to its employees. I suggest that the Postmaster General (Mr. Cote) should take careful note of the advice he is receiving, because I think some of it is very bad. Unfortunately the condition of ill repute must be his responsibility, because it cannot be traced to those whose responsibility it ought to be.

While I have no doubt the information given by the Minister of Transport was given in all sincerity, the fact is that it was incorrect, and he has received bad advice. It has been shown that the offer made to the employees by Canadian National Telegraphs was not as he indicated to the house it would be. I suggest the minister should make an investigation immediately, not just through the officers of Canadian National Telegraphs but through meeting directly with the employees who would not accept the offer because they believed it was so vicious it was not worthy of consideration.

It is time the government tucked in its shirt and pulled up its pants. Instead of making excuses it should get down to facts. If it does I am sure it will realize that there are many things in Canada that need correcting, and the government can make the necessary corrections if it only will.

(Translation):

Mr. Bona Arsenault (Bonaventure): Mr. Speaker, on April 6 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) made his annual budget speech, in which he stated the financial position of the country and clearly defined the stand taken by the Canadian government with respect to the new personal income tax recently imposed by the government of the province of Quebec.

On that occasion, the Minister of Finance, who has long since won the admiration and the gratitude of the Canadian people, once more gave proof of the courage he has always shown in the face of difficulties. One must not forget that he too is from Quebec and that his love for his province is just as strong and sincere as that of any of us from Quebec and of any of those who, outside the house, have set themselves up as the defenders of our province.

On April 14, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage), in one of the most brilliant speeches of his political career, analysed in detail the serious problem which arises in the field of fiscal relations between the federal government and the government of Quebec.

His speech made a deep impression on the intelligent people of the province of Quebec. Through his ponderation, his high-mindedness, his noble sentiments, the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet showed us that it is still possible for citizens of a province to examine and discuss dispassionately, without undue provocation and useless arrogance, a problem common to us all and the importance of which cannot be overemphasized.

The problem of intergovernmental relations between Quebec and Ottawa is of too high a level and its implications are much too important for the future of our province to transform it into a common matter of political partisanship.

We therefore have, as elected representatives of the same province, an opportunity which is perhaps unique in history, of resorting to all the resources of our intelligence to do each our share, no matter how small, for the settlement of a problem the solution of which can only be found in the search for truth, in moderation, in mutual respect and more particularly in the honest and sincere recognition of the rights and duties of each of the parties concerned.

We of the Canadian parliament are the first to recognize the right of the province of Quebec, and of any other province, to direct taxation, because this is the only taxation field which, under the constitution of this country, the provinces share concurrently with the Canadian government.

Section 91, subsection 3, of the confederation act grants to the Canadian government the right to resort to "any mode or system of taxation". This is quite clear.

Under section 92, subsection 2, the provinces have the right to resort to direct taxation "within the province . . . for provincial purposes," but their right in that regard is parallel to that of the Canadian government, since the federal government, under section 91, has access to "any mode or system of taxation".

Besides, this point has never been challenged before the courts, neither by the province of Quebec nor by any other province in this country.

Consequently, since the money levied by the Canadian government, under its taxation legislation, is its own property, nobody has the right, through a provincial law or otherwise, to order that part of this money which is the Canadian government's own personal property, shall be, without any agreement to this effect, diverted to the benefit of a province, whatever the motives may be.

In order, then, to apportion this direct taxation field as evenly as possible among the various provinces—a taxation field to which both the federal and provincial governments have access according to the instrument of confederation—every province in this country, with the sole exception of the province of Quebec, has signed fiscal agreements with the Canadian government.

Even Ontario and New Brunswick, which are at present under Conservative administrations, even Saskatchewan, which has a C.C.F. government, even Alberta and British Columbia, which have Social Credit governments, have loyally concluded agreements with the Canadian government, on the basis of friendly co-operation, with a view to the apportionment of personal and corporation income tax fields.

There has been no thought, on the part of these provinces, that in so doing they were giving up any portion at all of their autonomy. On the contrary, the very fact that such agreements do, in fact, exist conclusively demonstrates that the federal government acknowledges that the provinces enjoy rights that parallel its own in the field of direct taxation.

If the leaders of the province of Quebec had shown towards the Canadian government the same spirit of co-operation evinced by the other provinces of our confederation with regard to the apportionment of direct taxes and many other matters, the taxpayers of Quebec would not have to deplore today this hateful system of double taxation and would not have lost from $30 to $40 million a year since 1947.

And yet there are not two constitutions, one for Quebec and one for the other provinces, and section 92 of the confederation act, concerning the provincial powers of direct taxation, does not apply solely and exclusively to Quebec, but to all the provinces of this country. The name of Quebec is not even specifically mentioned in this regard.

Efforts have been made, among the people, to rouse passions, to exploit the attachment of the French-speaking Canadians to their race, to their language, to their religion, by suggesting falsely, to say the least—

Mr. Dufresne: That is what the Liberal party has done for 25 years.

Mr. Arsenault: —that the apportionment of taxes as between the federal government and the provinces is a question that concerns the fields of education, of language, or of religious faith.

The rights of the provinces in the field of education are not established by section 91 or section 92, but rather by section 93 which guarantees those fundamental rights not only to the province of Quebec but to all the provinces of this country. The rights of the French language in this country are recognized neither by section 91 nor by section 92, but by section 133, which guarantees rights not only to the French language but also to the English language.

Can anybody tell me under which principle the distribution of profits among partners in the same undertaking, or the fair apportionment of the product of taxation between the federal government and the provincial governments can possibly be considered as a religious issue?

No, Mr. Speaker, this is nothing but a question of taxation, a matter which concerns the apportionment of the proceeds of taxation, a question to be dealt solely under sections 91 and 92 of the confederation act.

This is hardly surprising, for it is not the first time that such bogeys are being unearthed to impress the people of Quebec. Many of those who are now listening to me will recall that, from 1927, when a Liberal government introduced old age pensions, up to 1937, the provincial governments of the day in Quebec, while pretending to safeguard the sacred rights of that province, denied pension benefits to the older citizens in that part of the country, while during those ten years such benefits were being distributed in the other provinces. During those ten years the citizens of Quebec who were over 70 were sacrificed for the sake of a provincial autonomy which was not at all at stake, and thus lost millions of dollars.

In 1936, on the eve of a provincial election held that year, the present prime minister of Quebec, who was then leader of the opposition, advocated with a gesture that honoured him and that he likes to recall, co-operation with the Liberal government in Ottawa, as regards the payment of old age pensions in Quebec, on the same basis as in the other provinces.

The first payments were made in 1937. And, since 1937, that is since the introduction of old age pensions in Quebec, has the province lost or sacrificed in any measure its autonomy or its sacred rights?

But, that is not all. Again, when the so beneficial Family Allowances Act was introduced by a Liberal government in 1944, the slogan of provincial autonomy and sacred rights was heard once more in the province of Quebec and in at least one other province in this country, a province well known to the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew).

Here in this house, the then Conservative members, many of whom still sit among us, made speech after speech denouncing, with the energy of despair, the establishment of family allowances, in which they saw a measure seriously threatening the sacred rights and the autonomy of the provinces.

Today, however, after an experience of ten years in the administration of this profoundly human legislation, no one, even on the other side of the house, any longer claims that the safeguard of provincial autonomy requires the abolition of our system of family allowances.

And how many members of the Conservative party, beginning with the Leader of the Opposition himself, would dare to utter publicly the speeches they have made against the institution, by a Liberal government, of family allowances.

It is often repeated—many things are said—that Ottawa draws $300 million in personal income tax in the province of Quebec.

It is never said however that Ottawa gives to the province of Quebec, through old age pensions, family allowances, pensions for the blind and subsidies to help the building of hospitals in Quebec, over $200 million per year. It is never said however that the $300 million received by Ottawa from personal income tax in Quebec is not even sufficient to cover the large amounts generously distributed by the federal government in Quebec by way of pensions, allowances, unemployment insurance benefits, public works, grants of all kinds for the maintenance of its various services.

The least that one could do would be to recognize that what Ottawa draws in taxes from Quebec with one hand it gives generously with the other hand to the people of Quebec.

People who advocate social security measures, such as old age pensions and family allowances are called centralizers. Yet there is no more decentralized and more beneficial legislation in Canada than these measures enacted through the wisdom and foresight of the Liberal governments which have held power at Ottawa one after another; these measures today enable the St. Laurent government to take money from the pockets of people who have the means of alleviating the burden of those who are less privileged.

We are accused of being centralizers—

Mr. Dufresne: It is true.

Mr. Arsenault: —while under the terms of the fiscal agreements made with the provinces—listen carefully—we are actually bringing about decentralization and distributing the national income on a more equitable basis for all provinces.

Mr. Dufresne: Let the hon. member repeat that in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): You would not understand.

Mr. Arsenault: As we all know economic centralization has come about as the years went by in the centre of the Canadian territory, and more particularly in the two largest cities of Canada, Toronto and Montreal, where are located the head offices of most of the largest business and financial institutions.

For example, mail-order houses, insurance and trust companies and commercial and financial establishments by the thousands drain each year through their innumerable branches disseminated throughout the country millions if not billions of dollars from the public which they send to Toronto and Montreal. As a consequence, these thousands of financial and commercial establishments are liable to taxation on their profits only in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec where their headquarters are located.

The people of the maritime and western provinces of Canada, who have the same right to be called Canadians as we have, have often and strongly objected to being thus deprived of sources of revenue essential to the good administration of their provinces, owing to the unfair situation I have just mentioned and from which they have had to suffer since it is a result of the economic centralization which exists in our country. And that is why we have rich provinces, provinces less rich and poor provinces.

The principle which is followed by the Canadian government in the distribution of old age pensions, family allowances and other social security benefits amongst the people of our country is exactly the same on which is based a fair distribution of the tax proceeds between the federal government and the provinces, through financial agreements.

Economically strong and developed countries subscribe millions to the United Nations and the Colombo plan in order to assist economically weak and underdeveloped nations.

We should all the more, it seems to me, endeavour to regulate our own country's economy by helping out those of our Canadian provinces which, for reasons beyond their control, happen to be economically weaker. Besides, the companies whose head offices are located in Toronto and Montreal find their markets in those very provinces.

Within the field of its jurisdiction the government of the province of Quebec acts no differently. The government, through taxation, collects money where it is to be found, in the richer counties of the province and distributes it, in the form of subsidies or public works, in the counties where money is less plentiful.

As there are in Canada provinces which are wealthy, some which are less favoured, and some which are poor, there are also in the province of Quebec counties which are wealthy, some which are less favoured, and some which are poor.

For example, taxes collected from rich taxpayers on the island of Montreal cover a large share of the cost of the construction of roads, bridges, and other highway work, and of the improvement of provincial public services in the poorer sections of the province.

Mr. Abbott: That is true indeed.

Mr. Arsenault: Would the present opponents of fiscal agreements between the Canadian government and the provinces, who in the past have declared themselves firmly opposed to our beneficial social security measures, by any chance wish for the establishment in Canada and more specifically in the province of Quebec of the conditions which prevail in other countries, where opulence in its most arrogant form disdainfully looks down at poverty in its lowest depth.

Would they like to see, through social discrimination between citizens of the same nation, communism become deeply rooted in Canada, as unfortunately it is already in too many countries of the world, before the government of our country recognizes its duties towards the Canadian people as a whole?

At the beginning of the last war, all the provinces of Canada agreed, in return for financial compensations, to relinquish for a time their concurrent rights to personal and corporation income taxes.

If these wartime fiscal agreements were considered necessary to control our country's economy at the very moment when, to fight nazi dictatorship, the federal government was levying barely $500 million a year for national defence, how much more indispensable should be today the co-operation granted by all the provinces of our confederation to the government of the nation, when, in order to fight communism, a dictatorship one hundred times worse than Hitler's, the Canadian parliament is forced to levy an enormous amount of more than $2,000 million a year to meet the heavy requirements of national defence.

And that is also why, ever since 1945, the Canadian government has submitted to the provinces a series of fiscal agreements meant to replace the wartime taxation agreements. Having seriously studied the scope of these new draft agreements and having submitted in turn their own suggestions to the federal government, every province in this country, with the sole exception of Quebec, reached an agreement with the latter administration.

But even had it not chosen to co-operate with the federal government on the same basis as the other provinces, the Quebec government, as early as 1947, could have taken advantage of a section of the federal income tax legislation under the terms of which it was authorized to retain for its own use 5 per cent of the total amount of federal income tax levied in the province of Quebec, that is, from $12 to $13 million annually.

Here again the province of Quebec—and in doing so it was quite within its rights—did not choose to take advantage of this federal offer. In this way, then, the people of that province have, so far, been deprived of an amount of more than $100 million.

The government of Quebec, having neglected to avail itself of so many opportunities to lighten the load which its taxpayers were called upon to carry, has suddenly come to life and taken upon itself to impose a new personal income tax upon the people of that province.

Moreover, with no previous consultation or negotiation with the Canadian government—which, after all, is not exactly that of an enemy country—taking no account of a law voted by the federal parliament under whose terms the amount which provincial taxpayers may deduct from federal income tax is limited to 5 per cent, heedless of the fact that this action constitutes a serious threat to the fiscal agreements concluded by all other provinces and whose basis is this 5 per cent of personal income tax, the Quebec government maintains, through the press, that the federal government should allow Quebec taxpayers to deduct from the income tax which they are legally obliged to pay to the federal government, the full amount which it has pleased the Quebec government to provide for through its own legislation.

I am all for the idea of the province of Quebec receiving its share, and all its share, of the financial advantages made available to the provinces by the Canadian government; and in my humble opinion, the province of Quebec never went far enough in that direction.

But to demand at the same time that this transfer of funds, from the federal government to the province—since the matter indeed concerns the revenues derived from federal taxes—be made solely upon the terms arbitrarily dictated by Quebec is, in my humble opinion, going a bit too far.

Our tax legislation does not allow a deduction of 15 per cent, but of 5 per cent. The basis of financial agreements concluded between all the other provinces and the federal government is not 15 per cent, but 5 per cent, as far as the personal income tax is concerned.

And that basis of 5 per cent is not the upshot of a dictatorial challenge by the federal government or of any of the provinces which gave assurance of their co-operation, but the result of patient studies and painstaking negotiations between the Canadian government and the provinces which have signed fiscal agreements, under our democratic processes.

In order to modify this basis of 5 per cent, the assent of the nine other provinces which have signed fiscal agreements would be required and the Canadian parliament would have to consent to a revision of the Income Tax Act.

Yet, as has been ably shown by the hon. Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, at page 4079 of Hansard of Wednesday, April 14 last, one of the main results of the suggested changes in our Income Tax Act, that is the substitution of the figure 15 for the figure 5, would be to allow Ontario to collect $62 million more for each $29 million received by Quebec, should Ontario denounce or terminate her present fiscal agreement. And it would be in Ontario's interest to do so, unless the federal government agreed to grant this additional $62 million to Ontario through an amendment to the existing fiscal agreement.

For we know that the collection of individual income tax yields more than twice as much in Ontario as in Quebec.

Therefore, by virtue of what provincial rights can the Quebec government leave the federal government with but one alternative, that is to grant Ontario $62 million for each $29 million paid to the province of Quebec? Is that the best suggestion Quebec can offer for the solution of this distressing problem?

To create a multitude of other more serious difficulties is not the best way to solve a problem.

Let us suppose for example that the city of Montreal, under the principle of unilateral deductibility, should decide by a resolution of its council and without consulting the provincial government that granted its charter, to collect a gasoline tax, the proceeds of which would be specifically earmarked for the improvement and the maintenance of the city streets.

Rather than enter into negotiations with the Quebec government, suppose the city claims, through advertisements in the newspapers, that, in the interest of autonomy and of the citizens of Montreal, this tax should be deducted from the amount derived by the provincial government from its gasoline tax, within the limits of greater Montreal, up to at least the amount the city is obliged to levy for the maintenance of its streets.

What would then be the attitude of the premier of Quebec?

In the extremely unlikely case where the Quebec government permitted such a tax on gasoline to be collected according to the whims of the city of Montreal, would not other towns, villages, and municipalities of the province, for instance Quebec city, Sherbrooke, Three Rivers, be strongly tempted to invoke the same principle and to follow the example of Montreal?

How long could a public treasury, be it provincial or federal, be maintained under such a system?

Some say that since the federal government already grants a 5 per cent deduction under the Income Tax Act, the 15 per cent tax asked for by the province follows the same principle.

No, Mr. Speaker, the principle is not the same.

In one case, the 5 per cent represents an amount placed by the federal government at the disposal of those provincial governments who refuse to accept the advantages of a fiscal agreement, 5 per cent of the personal income tax collected by the federal government being the very basis upon which the amounts to be paid under multilateral agreements are computed.

As far as the 15 per cent is concerned, it is an amount which a province wants to take without agreement, without consultation, without negotiation, without authorization, in spite of the law of the country and in contradiction of the basis upon which rest the fiscal agreements with all the other provinces.

True, the provinces have rights. But the same constitution also grants rights to the federal government which has very heavy responsibilities towards the Canadian people.

Consequently, if the Canadian government accepted the principle that Quebec or any other province could enact unilateral legislation providing for the refund of the amount of taxes which that province decided, for one reason or another, to levy, how could the Canadian government continue to meet its crushing load of obligations contracted to ensure the national, economic and social security of the Canadian people?

Since 1945, the Canadian government and more particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) have made great efforts to find a basis of financial co-operation with the provinces, which would be fair and equitable for each and all of the provincial governments and respect provincial autonomy while enabling the government of the Canadian nation to fulfil its obligations towards all the citizens of the country.

[Mr. Arsenault.]

That basis of co-operation has been found and accepted by all Canadian provinces, except the province of Quebec.

The federal-provincial agreements are perhaps not perfect, but they nevertheless constitute the best formula which men of good will have yet been able to find in the interest of good administration of the provinces and of the prosperity of the Canadian nation.

Thanks to these fiscal agreements and to numerous other financial arrangements between the Canadian government and the other provinces, such as those relating to the construction of a trans-Canada highway, grants to universities, housing, protection of our forestry resources, aid to fisheries, conservation of our water resources, development of physical fitness, setting up of national parks, etc., the other provinces of the confederation fully share in the marvellous economic development of our country.

Meanwhile, in the province of Quebec, they keep on wasting extremely valuable time in discussions over principles which are not at issue; bogeys are set up as has been done so often in the past, for instance with regard to old age pensions and family allowances; and they unfortunately instil in the minds of our Quebec youth the idea that Ottawa is the capital of a foreign country, if not an enemy country.

Again this morning, I was reading in a Montreal newspaper this headline: Duplessis continues to wage his war against Ottawa.

Is there no other solution to this difficult problem of fiscal relations between Quebec and Ottawa than a struggle to the death where everybody, Quebeckers and Canadians, stand to lose?

I share the views of those who believe in conciliation. I still think that intelligent men may come to an agreement in the interests of the taxpayers of a whole province who are anxiously awaiting a settlement of the matter, and who are insisting upon one.

Let us reduce the problem to essentials. What is the point at issue?

Quebec wants to receive and Ottawa wants to give. But there is no agreement of a formula under which Quebec would receive and Ottawa would give. And the tragedy of all this is that Quebec, the one province which requires far less than what Ottawa is willing to give, is the very one which is accusing Ottawa of refusing to give.

Is that not the case?

What the Quebec provincial government wishes to obtain through this new personal income tax legislation which it has imposed on its taxpayers is $22 million more per year for a period of three years.

Even if it were possible for the central government to allow Quebec taxpayers the deduction of such an amount from their federal tax, without jeopardizing the fiscal agreements with the other provinces, that would not solve the problem.

In my humble opinion, the province of Quebec has never asked for enough.

What we Liberal members from Quebec in this house want is the full participation of our province in the economic development of the Canadian nation.

What I now ask for, on behalf of the taxpayers of my province, is the full measure of financial co-operation, made available to the province of Quebec by the government of my country.

If it is not possible for the Quebec government to recover the hundreds of millions it has already lost, often under the most futile pretexts, let us strive, at least, to show more solicitude for our fellow citizens, the taxpayers of Quebec, and try to find a formula acceptable to both parties concerned.

We all know that the fiscal agreements between the federal government and the provinces provide for the rental of three taxation fields, personal and corporation income taxes, and succession duties.

Yet, we also know that with the consent of the other provinces that have signed fiscal agreements, the Canadian government made an exception in the case of Ontario, which still levies succession duties, the proceeds of which are deducted from the total amount granted to the province under the fiscal agreement.

Does this exception, in the fiscal agreement with Ontario, with regard to succession duties not point to the possibility of co-operation, wherein the governments of Quebec and Ottawa could work out a modus vivendi, at least on a provisional basis, under which Quebec might obtain a larger part of tax revenues, without hardship for her taxpayers and without jeopardizing the present fiscal arrangements?

Would it not be possible, with the consent of the other provinces, to extend to the collection of corporation taxes in Quebec the exception granted to Ontario in connection with the collection of succession duties, besides extending this latter exception to the province of Quebec?

I have not much experience in financial and intergovernmental matters of this magnitude but is there not in this a possibility which would justify a more thorough investigation by men of good will, working quietly, secure from indiscretions and blatant publicity?

In return for this important concession on the part of the federal government and the provinces which have signed fiscal agreements, would it not be possible for the government of the province of Quebec to agree, without renting its taxation fields and while continuing to collect succession duties and corporation taxes as it does now, to a suspension of its individual income tax law, in order to avoid double taxation in Quebec, and could not the province conclude with the federal government a special and temporary financial agreement providing for the payment, by the federal government, of amounts considerably higher than those the province could collect under its latest income tax act?

During the present debate other formulas leading to an honourable compromise may be put forward, no doubt, but the one I am suggesting, in all humility, sincerity and good faith, would result in the following:

1. It would require, on the part of the province of Quebec, no tax rental agreement whatsoever;

2. It would encroach in no way, either upon provincial rights or upon the rights granted to the federal government by our constitution;

3. It would interfere in no way with the existing fiscal agreements between the federal government and other provincial governments;

4. It would do away with double taxation on personal income in the province of Quebec;

5. It would mean for the government of Quebec financial advantages substantially greater than those which a provincial personal income tax might make possible.

Moreover, as soon as the communist menace lessens or vanishes, as soon as the international tension eases, the national defence expenditures will proportionately go down, and the federal government, no doubt, will greatly reduce taxes, especially the personal income tax.

Such a situation would make it easier for the federal government, with the co-operation of the provinces, to bring about important amendments to fiscal agreements now in force, in order to enable the provinces to resort, in a greater measure than in the past, to direct taxation without increasing the burden of their taxpayers.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Order. I am sorry to have to interrupt but I must advise the hon. member that his forty minutes have expired.

Mr. Arsenault: May I have a minute?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If the hon. member has unanimous consent to continue his remarks he may do so.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Arsenault: Liberal members from the province of Quebec who sit in this house are as conscious of the rights of their province and of the interest of the Quebec taxpayers as any of their political opponents.

Although they live in Quebec they are nonetheless Canadians. And as such, in the fulfilment of their duties, they do not forget that in 1867 it was decided once and for all that our country, Canada, would not be made up of ten nations, but of only one nation, from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Therefore, all of us from Quebec should strive to always act in such a way that the government of the Canadian nation may, within the scope of the confederation act and in close co-operation with all the provinces within our confederation without exception, continue to make and increase if possible its truly magnificent contribution to the building of a happy and prosperous Canadian nation.

Mr. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, when the house adjourned twelve days ago, two ministers had acquainted us with the government's centralizing policy as regards the request of the provincial authorities of Quebec for the deduction of the provincial tax, and today, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) has repeated those very arguments, to which he added some of his own, without, however, substantially improving the government's position.

It would be difficult to imagine a weaker argument in favour of their refusal. In view of the unpopular position of the government, all three wanted to leave the impression that they were expecting a suggestion from the prime minister of Quebec. "We are leaving the door open," they said, "and if the prime minister of Quebec wants to come and discuss the matter with us, we will be delighted."

And yet, there is nothing clearer, nothing more precise or reasonable than the Quebec government's proposal.

The province of Quebec, which is experiencing an industrial expansion unmatched in its history, is faced with the increasing needs of its population. Quebec, where large families are legendary, has acute problems to solve, in order to give her children the education they deserve and have a right to expect, in a wealthy country such as ours.

The province needed more revenue to give her population the same treatment as that afforded the rest of Canada. The Quebec government had to resort to income taxation and showed its good will in taxing, under the constitution, personal incomes on a scale representing 12 to 15 per cent of the amount the taxpayers must pay to the federal government.

The provincial government could have gone farther but it has shown the good will of Quebec by asking the deductibility of an amount less than that offered by the federal government for the signing of the agreement involving its autonomy. By doing so, it affected in no way the agreements concluded between the federal government and the other provinces.

Thus, the poorer, or so-called poorer provinces could still receive these subsidies which are indispensable to them. But, at the same time, it showed that the people of Quebec are determined not to sell their rights for a mess of pottage.

And what were the arguments advanced by the federal government to reject such a reasonable offer which in no way disturbed its plans?

Here are a few examples. First of all, the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), in his budget speech—that is, speaking for the Liberal government—said that he could not allow this tax to be deducted because the province might perhaps, some day, claim a deductibility of 30, 40 or 60 per cent.

This is a childish argument since what is involved is an amendment to the Income Tax Act and since absolutely nothing prevents the government from taking a decision to the contrary. If it cannot allow the extent of deductibility which is being asked for, it can simply refuse, being the sole judge in this matter.

If the request of the provincial authorities is unreasonable, nothing prevents the federal government from rejecting it. But, so long as the provincial government's request means less than the amount which the federal government is ready to grant at the price of a signature which Quebec feels reluctant to give, it has no right to refuse.

As for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage), in addition to this same argument, he advances another still less acceptable. He said that if Ontario took advantage of the principle of deductibility, that province would receive, on the 15 per cent basis, more than it gets from the outright grant. Yet, if we grant 15 per cent to the province of Quebec, how can we refuse it to Ontario, says the minister. Once more, however, it is a feat of imagination which enables the minister to suggest this, for the problem he raises does not exist. Let the federal government grant to Ontario the right to deduct an amount not exceeding the sum that province receives under the agreements and nobody will complain, at least nobody from the province of Quebec.

It is clear when we go over the arguments advanced by the government that it intends to pursue its policy of centralization without the slightest concession. That much talked about freedom to accept or refuse the agreements means that the province must either sign an agreement on the terms chosen by the federal authorities, or lack the necessary funds and be forced to compel her taxpayers to pay double taxes.

Yet, before the last election, the federal government allowed those of the provinces which had not signed an agreement to deduct their share of corporation income tax. Permission was also granted to collect a tax from corporations for educational purposes.

The Minister of Finance, speaking once more on behalf of the government, said in 1953, before the election, when he announced that the corporation tax could be deducted:

> The general effect of this will be to place corporations in Quebec, which is without a tax rental agreement, on the same basis as those operating in other provinces in respect of the burden of corporate income tax.

In the same speech, on the subject of financial agreements, he said:

> The virtue of this approach was that it was not dependent for success on the unanimous acceptance by all provinces. A cardinal principle in the offer was that no pressure, direct or indirect, should be placed on any province to accept an agreement. This has been a fundamental position of the federal government's attitude ever since.

As I said a moment ago that was before the last election and now that the government has been re-elected, in spite of the promises and assertions of the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), the only freedom left to the province of Quebec is to live isolated in a province whose citizens are placed in an inferior financial position to that of the other citizens of the country.

Until the election, the government seemed to consider these agreements as temporary, but today it considers them as permanent and does not intend to call further federal-provincial conferences to discuss the problem of taxation.

At the beginning of this debate, the leader of my party set forth before the house all the advantages that could result from such a conference.

A meeting between the federal and provincial authorities would enable Quebec to assert its rights and protect its autonomy; it would bring an end to this isolation in which Quebec has found herself since she refused to sign those agreements which were unacceptable to her.

Each year, our province is losing several million dollars as a result of this refusal, and, to cope for a time with this lack of revenue, the provincial government is forced to make use of its right to personal income tax in order to get an amount of $22 million needed for educational purposes, for the health and welfare of its people.

It is quite evident that the federal authorities show ill will in refusing this deduction though it would cost them less than if the province of Quebec had accepted the $115 million offered in exchange for her taxation rights.

It is also obvious that the federal government thought that they had found in this double taxation a means to force Quebec to give up her autonomist policy.

This deductibility which the province of Quebec is asking is surely only a temporary measure, pending a new reallocation of taxes, according to the spirit of confederation and in the interest of Canadian unity.

It has been recognized by our party that the federal government should necessarily allow deduction of the provincial tax. At its recent convention in Ottawa 800 delegates unanimously passed a resolution to this effect.

Certain newspapers, such as L'Action Catholique and Le Devoir—which, by the way, have been waging a magnificent battle with the federal government on this issue—have expressed concern over the fact that the leader of our party devoted his budget debate speech to demanding that another meeting of federal and provincial authorities be called with a view to allowing the provinces to benefit from a reallocation of taxation fields according to the principles of confederation, without, however, repeating the resolution adopted at the convention.

But I am pleased, in my capacity as senior member of my party for Quebec, to repeat once more that that resolution was adopted unanimously at our party's convention, and that our party and our leader demand that the federal government allow that deduction.

I insist upon the fact, though, that this deductibility should only be a temporary measure, and that a stop must be put to federal centralization. A new conference should be called so that the provinces may recover their autonomy within the limits of their rights and obligations.

The whole basis of taxation must be revised for, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier once said: "Every successful attempt made by the parliament at Ottawa to deprive a province of a right it enjoys, however immaterial that power might be, is a step further in the direction of legislative union."

And more recently, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King spoke along the same lines.

We know that the Right Hon. Mr. Mackenzie King, during the earlier part of his political career and when he was in the opposition, always wanted and always tried to be looked upon as the emulator of the great Sir Wilfrid Laurier.

On one of those occasions when Mr. King took his inspiration from the policies of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, he stated, on April 3, 1930, here in this house:

(Text):

When on a previous occasion we were discussing this matter of grants from one treasury to another, I said I thought it was an unsound principle; in fact, I think I used the expression that it was a vicious principle to have one body raise the taxes and another body spend the people's moneys thus raised. Is there any hon. member who will disagree with me in that statement? There is none. That is the extent of the statement I made. I was referring to a principle of financing, speaking simply in relation to what is sound and what is unsound in financing. Anyone interested in financing, whether of a municipality, a province, a dominion, an empire, or a league of nations, will, I think, admit it is unwise, an unsound, a wrong principle for one body to have to do with raising the taxes and another to be concerned with the spending of the money so raised, that other body not having to account to the representatives of those who have paid the taxes.

(Translation):

We can readily see the tremendous difference between the centralizing policy of the federal Liberal members of today and the attitude of their heroes of the past.

If the other provinces are interested, rather from a financial point of view, in resisting any attempt on the part of the federal government to seize their rights, it is both human and quite understandable that Ottawa's alluring offer could have an effect on the poorer provinces, which must, indeed, get special assistance.

I believe, however, that the campaign launched by the Liberals against the prime minister of Quebec, because he refuses to play their game, is very damaging. They are trying to make out the provincial government of Quebec as a "troublesome" government, with which it is impossible to get along, and they even go so far as to accuse it of separatism and of wanting to consider the rest of the country as a foreign state.

But if, from 1945 to this day, the province of Quebec has had to refuse this deal, which would have brought it more money, the reason for this rejection may be found in its history. Indeed, whether we accept it or not, the fact remains that the province of Quebec is different from the other provinces. Its population is French-speaking and Roman Catholic in a country where the majority is Protestant and Anglo-Saxon.

Up to now, in Canada, even with this duality of language and religion, we always did get along very well together. There have been some clashes, some temporary difficulties but everyone will agree, I think, that Quebec has always tried to deal fairly with the Protestant minority and to grant it freedom and its most sincere co-operation.

Under all our provincial governments, our Protestant school system has always enjoyed the greatest freedom, a fact which can be quoted as an example to all the countries of the world.

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): Hear! Hear!

Mr. Balcer: What the government of the province of Quebec is asking today is that the federal government, which represents the country as a whole, should treat Quebec with this same fair play in the matter of provincial taxation.

And I do not call fair play the refusal by the federal government to allow the deductibility of the provincial tax with the sole purpose of forcing Quebec to sign an agreement which the population of the province does not want its government to conclude.

Within the last twelve days, I have realized, by reading the newspapers and discussing this question with the citizens of my riding, that the immense majority feel that the federal government is dealing unfairly with them by refusing to allow the deductibility of that tax.

I am therefore convinced that I would not honourably represent the electors of my constituency if I did not avail myself of every opportunity to ask justice for Quebec without doing harm to the other provinces but thereby strengthening national unity.

(Text):

Mr. H. J. Murphy (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part in this debate. I shall be very brief in my thanks to the government, because if I spent my time in thanking the government for the many things they have done in my constituency I would have little time left to ask them for some more.

Last November I drew the attention of the government to the need for assistance for the fishermen in New Brunswick, particularly the herring fishermen. I am happy to report that action has been taken, and I wish to thank the government on behalf of the herring fishermen of the county of Westmorland for the assistance given. At the same time, and on their behalf, I would invite this nation to the annual Shediac lobster festival held in Westmorland county, where one would get inside information as to what fishermen have to do.

Last fall I also referred to the importance of the Canadian National Railways in the economy of the city of Moncton and the county of Westmorland. I pointed out at that time that we in Moncton were acutely affected by the lay-offs because we did not have other industries to absorb these skilled men. One of the greatest reasons for the lay-offs on the C.N.R. has been the dieselization of the railway. We do not wish to see progress stopped, and we cannot ask that the railways revert from dieselization to the use of coal. Nor can we expect the government to subsidize any part of the country; yet we feel that our shops are equipped to manufacture freight and passenger equipment. In fact, witnesses at the railway committee told us that last year fourteen units of railway and freight equipment were modernized in the Canadian National Railways shops in Canada, and that three of these were done in Moncton. They consisted of two cars for sleeping accommodation and a diner. I was very happy to hear this and I hope that more of this work will be done in Moncton. Of course, that is up to the management of the Canadian National Railways which, in fact, is the people's railway and I hope that some attention will be paid to my request.

Before leaving the subject of the Canadian National Railways I should like to point out that besides a large number of present employees there are a large number of former employees who are now on pensions. These pensions are based on the wages they received while working for the railway. Many of them were retired at a time when wages were very low, and consequently their pensions are small. I should like to bring this matter to the attention of the government and I hope it will be taken into consideration.

At this time I should like to trace some of the economic changes in New Brunswick since confederation and to make a suggestion as to how the economic situation could be bettered. Last fall I mentioned the Chignecto canal. I should like to go into the matter more fully at this time. Although this idea is not a new one it is better now than ever before, because shortly we shall commence work on the St. Lawrence seaway which, when completed, will enable central and western Canada to ship directly to the overseas markets, to South America and to the Atlantic region of Canada. I feel that those living south of the isthmus of Chignecto should be able to have the advantages of shipping directly to western and central Canada without adding a trip of 400 or 500 miles around the province of Nova Scotia.

As I see it, the Chignecto canal is part and parcel of the St. Lawrence seaway and it could be referred to or called the St. Lawrence seaway of the maritime provinces. Whatever reasons there have been in the past for not constructing this canal, they no longer apply in view of the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway. In addition, there are the great eastern base metal finds in Gaspe and northern New Brunswick which are dependent to a great extent for their development on this canal project which would be the direct route from the mines for the great industrial centres of the United States.

At the outset let me say that we are interested in the Chignecto canal as a finished product and not as a capital work project of short duration. As has been said in this house, public capital works projects are not the employment measures they used to be because of the diminishing amount of manpower which is used in such projects.

There are the strongest reasons for the conviction that the canal would revitalize the whole economy of Canada's seaboard region. Lumbering, farming, fishing, mining, shipping and manufacturing would all enjoy the benefits, and low-cost water transportation would be bound to extend the marketing radius for the native products. In western Canada corresponding benefits would be felt not only in lower prices for maritime products delivered there but also in lower transportation costs for western produce in the markets of the Atlantic region.

The construction of the Chignecto canal would provide a short route in sheltered waters to the trading points of the bay of Fundy and New England for the products of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. It would increase coastwise shipping between the ports on the gulf of St. Lawrence, the bay of Chaleur, Northumberland strait and then on the bay of Fundy. It would increase regular steamship sailings between the Atlantic provinces and central Canada. At this point I might mention that in the railway committee we were told that a steamship will ply shortly between Nova Scotia and Bar Harbor, Maine, showing that the days of coastwise shipping have really just begun in eastern Canada and are not at an end. A Chignecto canal would make it convenient for vessels plying between Montreal and points on the Atlantic seaboard to call at ports, not only in the bay of Fundy but in northern Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and northern New Brunswick to load or discharge cargo in passing.

It would revive native industries which flourished years ago but which could not survive the pressure of ever-increasing rail charges; it would stimulate the establishment of new industries; it would create a new economy in the Atlantic provinces.

It may surprise many residents of Canada to know that four years after confederation the percentage of population employed in industry in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick was almost equal to the percentage of population similarly employed in Quebec and Ontario. Seventy-five years later, however, there had been a tremendous change. Ontario and Quebec had been steadily enriched, and their industrial employment average rose. In the three Atlantic provinces there had not been an increase, but a devastating decline. Incidentally, New Brunswick in that period had dropped from first place to second place from the last among the five provinces. Prior to confederation the maritime provinces were regarded as the most prosperous region in British North America. New Brunswick on a per capita basis was the most industrialized of any of the provinces then comprising Canada. The lack of the Chignecto canal is one reason why our prosperity and industrial developments have lagged far behind Quebec and Ontario.

In 1871, of every five Canadian industrial workers one was employed in the maritimes. In 1946 the ratio had dropped to one out of every seventeen. Again, in 1871 the industrial wages paid per inhabitant in New Brunswick were the highest of any of the provinces. In 1946 that province ranked second last in wages.

[Mr. Murphy (Westmorland).]

The extent to which the failure to build the Chignecto canal has arrested maritime development is difficult to estimate. That failure, together with the distress which overwhelmed the seaboard provinces during the depression of the 1870's, were marked factors in retarding our progress. Previously prosperous communities declined in the years following confederation. Industries decayed and our youth, denied opportunities at home, migrated because of the compulsion of economic necessity. The beneficiaries from these involuntary migrations are the other parts of Canada and the New England states.

The industrial design of the Atlantic provinces has been the darkest shadow in the history of confederation and the people of that region have come to the conclusion that one of the most productive remedies, a remedy which would confer lasting benefit, is the construction of the Chignecto canal. The volume of traffic now passing through our Canadian canals far exceeds the expectations of those men who had the faith, foresight and courage to embark on the policy of canal construction. The failure of those men of faith, foresight and courage to include the construction of the Chignecto canal is the failure that we must rectify.

The history of the canal project began more than 260 years ago in the days of the first Acadian settlement in the maritimes. The intendant saw the advantage of serving the isthmus, and his suggestion of how to go about it was quite simple. He suggested that a way be cleared across the flats and thus allow the 47-foot high tides of the bay of Fundy to do the rest. The intendant was not an engineer but his vision of the need, even in those far-off days, was sound.

Actually it was not until 1822 that the first practical step was taken. A survey for the canal was made in that year, and it was followed by others. The most competent engineers of that day agreed that the surveys showed the project to be both feasible and desirable. In the pre-confederation negotiations of 1864 and 1866 the Chignecto canal was repeatedly discussed by delegates. I will show later that this construction was actually promised as an inducement to the maritime provinces to enter confederation.

The first parliament of Canada quickly got down to business on the canal project when, in 1868, it ordered the reports of all surveys referred to the then minister of public works for study. When this was done hopes of early action ran high. Departmental officials who examined the engineering and other data for the minister were so decisive in their recommendations that Senator Robert B. Dickey of Amherst, Nova Scotia, declared, and I quote:

> This great work is now removed from the category of provincial questions and has become a dominion necessity.

It looked as though the undertaking would be gone ahead with immediately, but other factors intervened. Canada was engaged in reciprocity negotiations with the United States, and the enlargement of Canada's waterway system entered into the discussion. This led to the necessity for making an extensive survey of all canal projects. In 1870 a royal commission, headed by Sir Hugh Allan, was established to carry this out. The Allan commission's report divided its recommendations into works of first, second, third and fourth classes. The first class embraced, and I quote:

> all those works.....which.....for the general interest of the dominion should be undertaken and proceeded with as fast as the means at the disposal of the government will warrant.

The Chignecto canal was placed in this category. Included in the works of the first class recommended by the Allan commission and their estimated costs were:

> The Sault Ste. Marie canal, $550,000; The enlargement of the Welland canal, $6,550,000; The Laurie canal—Ottawa, $1,800,000; The Chambly canal, $1,500,000; The deepening of the river St. Lawrence between Quebec and Montreal, $800,000; The Baie Verte or Chignecto canal with a minimum draft of 15 feet, $3,250,000; The St. Lawrence canals, $4,500,000; Deepening the upper St. Lawrence river, $220,000.

With the exception of the Baie Verte or Chignecto canal, all the canals in the first class have now been built. No explanation satisfactory to the people of Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick has ever been given as to why the Baie Verte canal has not been constructed.

However, things went so favourably that the government of the day, under Prime Minister Macdonald, called for tenders for the canal's construction but behind the scenes violent disputes had arisen between the departmental engineers on one hand, and the engineering experts of the Allan commission on the other. This dissension continued until 1873 and it is clear from a speech delivered in the House of Commons by Sir Charles Tupper, who later became prime minister of Canada, that prejudices and jealousies arising from frustrated personal ambitions had much to do with the obstructive delays which held back the work on the canal.

Canada's second government, that of the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, twice included money for the Chignecto canal in the federal estimates, but in the meantime the great depression of the 1870's overwhelmed the country. With financial catastrophe on every side the Mackenzie government appointed another royal commission to go into the question of the Chignecto canal.

Little was heard again of the Chignecto canal until the late 1920's. In that decade, when the rest of the country was attaining new peaks of prosperity, it became alarmingly clear that something was wrong with the Atlantic region. In parliament the maritime representatives once more demanded the Chignecto canal. A royal commission was appointed by the Mackenzie King government in June, 1930, and instructed to inquire into the project in the light of new conditions. Before this commission met the Mackenzie King government was defeated at the polls. The incoming R. B. Bennett ministry, after a delay of one year, named its own commission.

There is a striking parallel between the conditions under which this commission held its hearings and those which formed the background for the Young commission in 1873. Again the world was in the throes of a great depression, a depression recognized as one of the worst in history. Again the government's policy was one of retrenchment, of reducing administration spending and avoiding further financial commitments.

Construction of the Chignecto canal was a definite pledge made prior to confederation in 1867 to the three maritime provinces by the representatives of Ontario and Quebec. In the years following confederation parliament was repeatedly reminded by those who had been delegates to the pre-confederation conferences at Quebec and London that, in the words of Senator Amos E. Botsford of New Brunswick, that the Chignecto canal, and I quote:

> . . . was held out by the Quebec conference as an inducement to New Brunswick to go for confederation.

Senator Robert B. Dickey of Nova Scotia declared that "it was distinctly understood there that this canal should be constructed".

John Burpee, member of parliament for Sunbury, New Brunswick, declared that if the people of New Brunswick had not been satisfied that the canal would be built they would never have consented to the union.

Senator R. D. Wilmot, of New Brunswick, asserted that the canal had been discussed at the London conference of 1866. It was the understanding of the delegates that it would be one of the first public works undertaken.

These and similar confirmatory statements were made in the presence and hearing of other parliamentarians who attended the pre-confederation conferences. They were made not once but many times, and in no case were they contradicted, or was any doubt cast upon their authenticity. There have been at least ten surveys of the Chignecto isthmus in the last century and a quarter. With only minor differences of opinion on technical aspects, all agreed that the canal was feasible. The following are some savings in miles that would be afforded by the Chignecto canal. The savings are of two kinds; that is to say, there is one route around Cape Breton island and one route through the strait of Canso. The difference between the maximum and minimum savings is 60 or 70 miles. I will give you the maximum savings that would be afforded by the construction of the Chignecto canal:

Montreal to Windsor, N.S., 561 miles; Montreal to Hantsport, N.S., 561 miles; Montreal to Parrsboro, N.S., 561 miles; Montreal to Joggins, N.S., 640 miles; Montreal to Digby, N.S., 452 miles; Montreal to Hillsborough, N.B., 645 miles; Summerside to Saint John, N.B., 662 miles; Summerside to Portland, Maine, 511 miles; Charlottetown to Boston, Mass., 422 miles; Saint John to Montreal, 481 miles; Saint John to Pictou, N.S., 553 miles; Saint John to Newcastle, N.B., 612 miles; Saint John to Charlottetown, 618 miles.

The Chignecto canal is a national need. In fairness to the Atlantic region, as well as in the interests of the whole country, Canada must keep her promise and build it now.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, there are two points with which I should like to deal during the present debate on the budget. Both of these matters relate directly to the budget itself. First of all is the matter of the textile industry and other similarly affected industries in the country such as the machine tool industry. I know that these matters have already been dealt with in this house at great length on many occasions besides this and that they will probably be dealt with again. But this problem with respect to the textile industry, the machine tool industry and others, of course arises owing to the matter of cheap labour and exchange advantages when trading with other countries which far overcome any tariff advantages there may be to the industries in this country.

I am particularly interested in this matter because in the city of Woodstock, which is the principal city in the riding I represent, there are 2,000 textile workers, many of whom are out of work and most of the remainder are on a short-hour week. In addition, the town of Ingersoll, which is a town of 7,000 persons also in my riding, is virtually dependent on the machine tool industry and lately that industry has been threatened for the same reasons, namely by the importation of machine tools from Holland, England and, in some cases, the United States. For the sake of brevity I should like to deal chiefly with the matter of the textile industry. As I say, I do not intend to deal with it at any great length because it has been dealt with many times before.

As I think most hon. members of the house know, within the last few months a great many textile plants throughout the Dominion of Canada have been closing down, many of them apparently permanently. Since the textile industry is, I understand, the largest employer of persons in the Dominion of Canada,—a year ago almost 200,000 persons were employed in the industry—this situation is an extremely serious one. Recently the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) made a speech after delivery of the budget at, I understand, a radio press conference. The implication of the minister's remarks has caused a great deal of concern in various parts of the country, particularly in my own constituency. I have not before me the exact words of the minister because they were made over the radio but the effect or the implication of his words was that if certain industries, particularly the textile industry, were not able to stand on their own feet, they would have to go by the board. I do not know whether the minister is returning to orthodox Liberal policy of 1911 when the matter seemed to boil down to the question of whether or not Canadians were to be hewers of wood and drawers of water but this impression, rightly or wrongly, has certainly been created by the minister's remarks on that occasion.

I think it is only fair to ask of the minister the following questions with regard to the textile industry, the machine tool industry and certain other industries. How far is the government going to go with regard to this matter of allowing Canadian industries to be put out of commission by competition from foreign countries? The second question is this. Are we going to have a textile industry or are we not? If so, to what extent? As I think every hon. member in this house well knows, there are many considerations other than the economic one which require that we have a textile industry in Canada. The country was glad enough to have one in 1939 when the war broke out; and this statement most certainly applies to the machine tool industry as well.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks will take about two minutes with respect to this matter, and I should like to finish them if I may do so. There is one further thing in this regard. The present policy of the administration has caused a great deal of dislocation in the textile industry in particular. Many plants have closed, and many are on short time with the consequent loss of purchasing power within the country. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) recently suggested to a group of farm implement workers that if they could not get a job in that industry, they could go some place else. This is certainly not an easy matter today because there is in this country a big housing problem, a fact which I understand the government is well aware of in view of the new housing act. It is not easy to go from one town to another and to find a new place to live. The cost of moving is extremely high these days, and if you have to go any distance it is an expensive proposition. More than that, there is another question that arises. Can the new industries in the country absorb all these people who have lost their jobs in the textile industry? Lastly, a great social problem is created. It is a hard thing for a person who has had a senior position of some form or other in the textile industry—a dyer or something like that; a high salaried man—suddenly to have to go out to find a new job in a totally unrelated industry and to take a menial job at a reduced income. That is extremely hard on him and on his family. I think that these are things which the minister should take into consideration with a view possibly to making some changes in the excise tax and in the Customs Act.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, I should now like to direct one or two brief remarks to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) with respect to an alteration to the Unemployment Insurance Act that I wish to suggest. It is my feeling that in times of economic stress, or recession as we say nowadays since the other word is no longer in vogue, some consideration might be given to changing the unemployment insurance regulations so that if those seeking jobs in the country should be in excess of a certain figure, let us say, 300,000, the government would be in a position to declare that there was a situation calling for emergency action, and that under such conditions the one day waiting period in a week be set aside until the number seeking jobs had receded to the figure set—300,000.

I fully realize that under ordinary economic conditions the theory behind the Unemployment Insurance Act is that those drawing unemployment insurance share part of the load. In that way the one day waiting period is somewhat analogous to a $25 deductible insurance policy. However, in times when the number of those seeking jobs becomes larger than a figure that could be decided upon after careful study I submit that the one day waiting period should be abolished for the following reasons. It would alleviate the economic pressure, from a sociological standpoint, on families in need. It would keep up purchasing power in the country and help to prevent the downward spiral which is the reverse of the upward spiral of inflation.

This type of alleviation as far as it goes would be somewhat better than a program of public works as it would affect those most directly concerned in any period of recession. It may be that the thinking behind the act may have to be revised. If a proposal such as I have made were adopted I realize there would have to be greater contribution from employees, employers and the government, but I still feel that consideration should be given to this suggestion and that in times of recession it would help matters materially.

There is a subject in the budget with which I wish to deal at some length. I refer to the change in the income tax proposed by the minister so far as the taxation of mutual fire and wind insurance companies is concerned. To review the history of this matter very briefly, these mutual insurance companies have come into being because of a need in the country. As most hon. members are aware, the ordinary straight line insurance companies, as they are sometimes called, are not at all anxious to, and in many cases will not insure farm properties. So far as the few companies that will are concerned, their rates are very high. When the need arises this type of thing grows up. The only way farmers can protect themselves is to band together and form mutual insurance companies. These companies are analogous to credit unions.

I do not propose to go into the subject of credit unions at any great length at the present time. I only wish to say that credit unions, like mutual insurance companies, came into being as the result of a need. Standard banks and loan companies, because of very heavy overhead and the difficulty and cost of collection, have to charge very high interest rates on small loans. As a result the people who needed such loans the most were quite unable to get them because the interest rates were out of all proportion to the good derived from the loan. Accordingly credit unions came into being, and I feel quite sure that most hon. members know that they are able to lend money at very low rates of interest because of the fact that there is no overhead in office expenses and because people do the work for nothing on a voluntary basis. There is also the fact that, credit unions being localized, the officers in charge know the people with whom they are dealing and they have a much better idea whether or not they are a good risk.

I only mention this in passing because credit unions are somewhat analogous to mutual insurance companies, and I point out that credit unions are not taxed. Then there is the question of co-operatives which are again somewhat similar in nature to mutual insurance companies. Co-operatives are of course taxed to a certain degree. Without going into the details of the taxation of co-operatives at any length, may I say that after their patronage dividends are refunded they have to pay a tax of 3 per cent of the capital employed at the beginning of the year, but this is a relatively small amount. It is a very low rate of taxation.

To get back to the main subject of mutual insurance companies. As most of us realize, these companies are not basically profit-making institutions but, as I have already pointed out, only a group of farmers banded together in order to insure and look after themselves. I do not think anybody would take any exception to a tax being placed on the interest from any investments that these mutual insurance companies hold. I think that is a fairly self-evident thing. The income from such investments should be taxed, but in my view the surplus of these insurance companies, with one reservation which I am going to deal with immediately, should not be taxed.

The minister may very well say that these companies do not necessarily have to pay a tax on their surplus because it can be returned to the policyholders in the form of a dividend. But section 117 of the Ontario insurance act—and I believe the situation is much the same in the other provinces—sets out that such companies, depending on the amount of policies outstanding, must have a surplus of a certain size in order to be in a position to refund to the policyholders. These figures have been outlined in some detail by my colleague, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), and as they have already been set out I will not take up the time of the house to deal with them again. But I should like to mention in passing that the amount of surplus that has to be set aside before refunds can be made is related to the amount of insurance policies that have been underwritten.

I would agree that any surplus arising after the figure set by the Ontario act has been reached probably should be taxable, but it is very unfair to tax the surplus of a company until this figure is reached. Such a surplus is in the nature of a reserve. Its amount is laid down by the provincial government concerned and the companies have no choice but to observe the law. This reserve is set up to protect the policyholders and until the amount of surplus or reserve set is reached none of the surplus can be refunded by the company. I should like to suggest that mutual fire insurance companies and mutual wind insurance companies not in a position to legally make refunds should be free of taxation. Otherwise it makes it very difficult for these companies to build up the surplus required by the province in order to be in a position to refund.

For example, a company in my riding increased its policies by $10 million between 1950 and 1952. Accordingly, under the terms of the Ontario insurance act it had to increase its surplus by $60,000 before the company could make any refunds to the farmer policyholders. During this period from 1950 to 1952, the surplus was increased by nearly $50,000 but $17,000 of this had to be paid in taxes. During this period, therefore, only $33,000 was actually added to the surplus. I point out that taxation at this rate makes it very difficult for such companies to reach the surplus necessary before any refunds can be paid.

I cannot understand why the minister has made this proposed alteration in the Income Tax Act. It certainly discriminates against the poorer insurance companies. The richer companies, who have already established the necessary surplus under provincial legislation to enable them to pay refunds, can do so and they do not have to pay any further taxes of this type at all. All these companies have to do is to pay out any future surplus in the form of refunds. This proposed amendment, as just pointed out, makes it extremely difficult for the poorer companies to build up the surplus to the point where they can make refunds.

This situation has been aggravated by the economic conditions prevailing in Canada during the last few years. Inasmuch as building and replacement costs have greatly increased during the past years many people have increased their insurance policies, and the amount of insurance underwritten by these companies has greatly increased, thus increasing the surplus they must have before any refunds can be made.

With all respect, the tax appears like a spite tax imposed by the minister as a result of the supreme court decision last May which enabled these companies to get around the former section of the Income Tax Act. Following the supreme court decision it was held that mutual insurance companies did not have to pay income tax except on income from investments.

It seems that this might very well be a spite tax because in Ontario, for example, there are 66 mutual fire insurance companies. In 1951, when taxes were levied at about the same rate as proposed by the minister now, the total taxes collected amounted to approximately $184,000. In 1952 the taxes from these 66 companies amounted to approximately $158,000. From the point of view of the total revenue required for the budget, this amount seems relatively trivial.

It hardly seems fair for the minister to reduce taxes on diamonds, furs, cigarette holders, pinball machines and other luxuries, while, in effect, at the same time putting a tax on an essential article such as fire insurance which farmers, as a rule, can get in no other way. It seems very unfair, as I said, to tax an essential service and make the farmer the goat.

I should like to say a word now about mutual wind insurance companies. In the last few years in Ontario, for some unaccountable reason and I suppose we shall have to ask the weatherman about this, there has been an increased hazard from tornadoes. The result has been that a great many more persons are taking out wind insurance and those who have such insurance have been increasing it. Shortly before the Easter recess, according to the newspapers, tornado warnings were posted in Ontario. The result has been that wind insurance companies have had to greatly increase the amount of insurance they have had to underwrite, thereby increasing the amount of surplus that these wind insurance companies have had to have. If they are taxed on the surplus it makes it difficult to build it up to the point where they can make refunds to their customers.

In conclusion on this subject I would stress that the minister should give this subject further consideration. I am sure he has had many representations already, but it does seem unfair that credit unions are not taxed, co-operatives are taxed in a relatively small way, whereas mutual insurance companies, which are basically and essentially the same type of thing, should have this tax on their services. As I said before, I do not believe the people who are concerned with mutual fire insurance and wind insurance companies are worried about paying taxes after the surplus has been built up to the point where they can make refunds to their patrons. It is during the period of building up the surplus to the point required by provincial law before they can make refunds that they object to the tax.

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): May I first add my congratulations to those that have already been accorded to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) for the skill and clarity with which he has again this year presented his budget to this house. Under the direction of the minister, the Department of Finance has gained added distinction, and the succession of budgets introduced by the minister has brought credit to Canada not only among our own people but in many nations abroad. I join in expressing the general regret that the minister has determined this shall be the last budget he will present to this house. For that reason this budget has been described as his swan song, but like all the others that have gone before it, its melody has been one that must please the great majority of the people of Canada.

The consistent melody throughout the minister's tenure of office has been sound financing which has kept this country's books in balance, and which is reflected in the position held by the Canadian dollar in the money markets of the world. We are the envy of many nations whose financing, perhaps for reasons beyond their control, has constantly led from one deficit to an even larger deficit. Our Minister of Finance, rightly I believe, determined upon a policy of paying as we go without imposing unbearable burdens upon the taxpayer. He has managed thus to reduce our national debt, meet all our obligations and provide essential funds for our expanding defence forces.

In the history of this country to be read by future generations the term "Abbott budget" will be read with pride by all those who make a serious study of this period of world-wide financial problems and difficulties. We have been well served by a minister who has grasped the fundamentals of budget making, who has a sense of history and who wisely looks to the future while formulating his budget for today. The Abbott budgets have been worthy successors to those of Fielding and Robb and Ilsley, which through good times and bad maintained this country's finances on a sound foundation and contributed to our national growth and development.

As a member of this house and a supporter of this government I was proud when the minister, in his important budget address, spoke as a Canadian who put the welfare of his country above local, sectional or party interests. This government is pledged to maintaining and developing Canadian unity; to the encouragement of increasing co-operation and understanding between the provinces. We are building here a great new nation. To succeed we must be prepared at times to sacrifice some of those things which may seem important to us as individuals, but which play no part in drawing together our various racial and religious groups and helping them to work and live together in harmony.

As a French Canadian and a Catholic I have addressed many audiences in many parts of Canada, and have spoken steadily and consistently in support of national unity. I have frequently pointed to the dangers that lie in the continuance of ancient prejudices, and have urged all those who believe in the future of Canada to speak up for understanding and friendship between all our people and between all our regions.

It has been said many times since world war II that Canada stands in the same position as the United States occupied in the concluding decades of the nineteenth century. We might also look to an even earlier period and find an example of the problem that seems to be facing Canada today. Abraham Lincoln, one of the greatest presidents in the history of the United States, was dedicated to the preservation of the union. Opposed to him were the forces of one section of the country which flaunted its pride in its past and took up arms in order to break the union which had been achieved less than a century before. In his first inaugural address President Lincoln spoke for the union in these words:

> Before entering upon so grave a matter as the destruction of our national fabric with all its benefits, its memories, and its hopes, would it not be wise to ascertain precisely why we do it. Will you hazard so desperate a step while there is any possibility that any portion of the ills you fly from have no real existence? Will you, when the certain ills you fly to are greater than all the real ones you fly from—will you risk the commission of so fearful a mistake? All profess to be content in the union if all constitutional rights can be maintained. Is it true, then, that any right, plainly written in the constitution, has been denied? I think not. Happily the human mind is so constituted that no party can reach to the audacity of doing this. Think, if you can, of a single instance in which a plainly written provision of the constitution has ever been denied. If by the mere force of numbers a majority should deprive a minority of any clearly written constitutional right, it might, in a moral point of view, justify revolution—certainly would, if such a right were a vital one. But such is not our case. All the vital rights of minorities and of individuals are so plainly assured to them by affirmations and negations, guarantees and prohibitions, in the constitution, that controversies never arise concerning them. But no organic law can ever be framed with a provision specifically applicable to every question which may occur in practical administration. No foresight can anticipate, nor any document of reasonable length contain, express provisions for all possible questions. Shall fugitives from labour be surrendered by national or by state authority. The constitution does not expressly say . . .
>
> From questions of this class spring all our constitutional controversies, and we divide upon them into majorities and minorities. If the minority will not acquiesce, the majority must, or the government must cease. There is no other alternative; for continuing the government is acquiescence on one side or the other . . .
>
> If a minority in such case will secede rather than acquiesce, they make a precedent which in turn will divide and ruin them; for a minority of their own will secede from them whenever a majority refuses to be controlled by such minority. For instance, why may not any portion of a new confederacy a year or two hence arbitrarily secede again, precisely as portions of the present union now claim to secede from it? All who cherish disunion sentiments are now being educated to the exact temper of doing this. Is there such perfect identity of interests among the states to compose a new union, as to produce harmony only and prevent renewed secession? Plainly, the central idea of secession is the essence of anarchy. A majority held in restraint by constitutional checks and limitations, and always changing with deliberate changes of popular opinions and sentiments, is the only true sovereign of a free people. Whoever rejects it does, of necessity, fly to anarchy or to despotism. Unanimity is impossible; the rule of a minority, as a permanent arrangement, is wholly inadmissible, so that, rejecting the majority principle, anarchy or despotism in some forms is all that is left.

The union survived, thanks to the strength of a president who saw the threat to its existence as the most important fact that existed at the time of his inauguration. Canada, too, must survive, not as a group of individual, independent states or provinces, each adopting and following its own policies regardless of the interests of all the others, but as a federation of provinces concerned of course about their own prosperity and their own rights but dedicated to the development of a single great nation, in the prosperity and development of which all will share.

My own province of Quebec has a long and stirring history in which all of us whose heritage is French take pride. We have no wish to sacrifice our language or our religion; and no responsible person in Canada has ever suggested that we should. Neither do we have any wish to be considered apart from the rest of Canada nor to be looked upon as other than good Canadians. The Minister of Finance, who comes from the province of Quebec and who represents an important constituency in that province, recognized that fact in his budget address. He spoke in support of a principle which surely all of us here in this Canadian parliament must accept, the principle that this federation of Canadian provinces must be preserved and that no individual or group, from whatever misguided notions, shall have the right to destroy it.

World conditions imposed upon the minister the necessity of keeping our defence budget at a high level, and thus made impossible the reductions in taxation which he and all members of the government would have liked to introduce. Taxes upon business continue to be heavy and this burden, made necessary by the continuing high cost of defence and other essential public services, constitutes a threat to our continued economic development.

It has already been pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that Canada, through high wages, taxation, and the high cost of operating in a country of great distances and great climatic variations is in danger of pricing itself out of world markets. This danger has already been demonstrated by the textile industry, which finds itself unable to compete with textile producers from other lands. Unless we are to weaken our defences and lower our standard of social security and pensions, we must continue to maintain our sources of revenue which come through taxation. I would suggest to the minister and to his successor as head of the Department of Finance that some consideration be given to a source which has until now been entirely overlooked both in this country and, I believe, in the United States.

Capitalist organizations are subject to taxes upon their earnings, whether these come from their own operations or from their investments. During the past years of full employment another group of capitalist organizations has developed and has remained tax free. I refer to the great labour unions with huge memberships. The unions receive dues from their members and in many cases have established large reserve funds which are invested in stocks and bonds and thus return dividends, or profits each year to the union. I have no argument with this. They are to be commended on their sane business acumen and foresight. I am pleased, as many others must be, to see that the labour unions are recognizing the importance of profits and thus are likely to be more concerned in the future than some of them have been in the past about the earnings of capitalist companies. The fact that many of these unions will share in the profits of these industries will bring a closer and more intimate understanding between capital and labour and we will all benefit by this mutual interest in the country's industries.

Neither do I suggest that any tax should be imposed upon capitalist labour organizations which is not also imposed upon other capitalist groups. All incorporated companies that make a profit pay taxes upon those profits. It seems only fair and equitable that labour unions which make a profit should be similarly taxed.

I have no figures for Canada, but I do have some astonishing figures indicating the extent of labour union profits in the United States and there seems to be no reason to think that the profits of Canadian unions, in many cases only the Canadian branches of American unions, should not be on a comparative basis. Writing in the Daily Mirror of New York on April 9 this year, Victor Riesel reported that Dave Beck, head of the teamsters union, told a California audience that his union has been earning an average profit of $113,000 a month on the stock market, or more than $1,500,000 a year. Riesel estimates that the union has some $5,000,000 invested in securities and has a reserve of some $32,000,000.

Just a month ago, Riesel reports further, the American Federation of Labor central labour union in Philadelphia employed a securities adviser formerly connected with a local brokerage house. The city's 195 unions will share the services of this adviser to make certain their funds are invested in the most potentially profitable stocks. The C.I.O. national maritime union recently deposited some $25,000,000 from one of its welfare funds in a bank for future investment.

The bigger unions, Riesel reports, have funds as high as $175,000,000. The international garment workers union earns about $1,000,000 a year on investments and the locomotive firemen and enginemen's union takes in $1,100,000 a year, according to recent reports.

The trend towards labour investments in the United States is increasing as reserve funds grow, and the same situation will develop in Canada. Here is a legitimate source of income or profits taxation which should not be overlooked and it is one which fairly tapped could only be welcomed by those who insist each year upon the imposition of higher and higher taxes upon profits. I offer the suggestion for serious consideration to the Minister of Finance who must welcome any new source which will permit him to maintain present high revenues without imposing undue hardship upon those who are already paying the nation's taxes.

Mr. G. T. Purdy (Colchester-Hants): Mr. Speaker, one week ago today the people of Nova Scotia at Halifax buried a great chief to a province's, yes, to a nation's lamentation. I was a member of this house during the period of Angus L. Macdonald's labours here as minister of naval affairs. Following that, for the next four years, I was one of his bonnets in the legislature of Nova Scotia, the province he loved so dearly. Last year it was my privilege to carry his colours in the provincial election. I was not successful, but his government was again returned with a substantial majority.

In the early thirties it fell to the honour of Mr. C. P. Blanchard of Truro in my constituency, that of Colchester-Hants, to place the name of Mr. Macdonald in nomination in the provincial convention as our leader. At that time he was practically unknown in politics. From that time until his death I had been closely associated with him in political matters and am proud to say that I loved Angus L. Macdonald. His name has now been added to the long list of great political figures from that little province down by the sea who have gone to their great reward: Howe, Thompson, Tupper, Fielding, Borden, Ralston and scores of others. Angus Macdonald is gone, but his memory will remain in Nova Scotia forever.

One of his greatest ambitions in recent years was to lead the 100 pipers over the Canso causeway at the time of its opening. The causeway will be opened soon. The pipers will march, and the pipers will play, but instead of the colourful dress of the band, many of us will see through a veil of tears leading that procession the gallant figure of Angus L. Macdonald with his kilts swaying in the breeze and the tune we will hear will not be "The Road to the Isles", but "Flowers o' the Forest". While in the case of Angus L. Macdonald memory is not the only thing that grief can call its own, yet it was my hope that the causeway would be named after him. I understand, however, that Mrs. Macdonald has given her consent to the Halifax-Dartmouth bridge being named in his memory, which may interfere with this. The bridge is a provincial-municipal undertaking and I feel that the people of Canada as a whole would not wish that Nova Scotia alone be responsible for preserving in stone or some other suitable way forever and a day the memory of this great Canadian.

I suggest that the opening of the causeway, which is a federal-provincial undertaking, would be the time and place for such recognition and urge the minister from Nova Scotia and his associate the minister in charge of the historic sites and monuments board to take my suggestion into prompt and favourable consideration.

The late Joseph Howe, another great Nova Scotian, is responsible for these famous words:

> A wise nation preserves its records . . . gathers up its muniments . . . decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead . . . repairs its great public structures and fosters national pride and love of country by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

Surely this nation would wish to profit by these words and see that the name of Angus L. Macdonald is associated with this great undertaking and his memory brought forcibly to the minds of those who pass that way so that they may be reminded that in our humble way we all have a part to play in developing this great Canada of ours. Further, it would once again bring home to us that "lives of great men all remind us we can make our lives sublime, and, departing, leave behind us footprints on the sands of time".

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I listened with deep interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Murphy) and other hon. members from the maritimes dealing with matters of importance to those provinces down by the sea. As a representative of Truro, which is the railway centre in Nova Scotia comparable to that of Moncton in New Brunswick, I wish to commend the hon. member for the words he used on behalf of our railway people.

Coming now to the other project mentioned, namely the Chignecto canal, having been born and brought up within sight of one of the surveys carried out on that project, and having travelled the route of the old Chignecto marine railway which it was thought would take the place of the canal but unfortunately did not develop, I would like to associate myself with the hon. member's request that the Chignecto canal be considered as the maritime end of the St. Lawrence waterway and developed along with that great undertaking. Surely the maritime provinces are quite within their rights in asking for that.

I do not propose this evening, Mr. Speaker, to go into the great problem of maritime rights except to draw to the attention of some hon. members who have not been here over the past few years the fact that we in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island have a heritage in regard to things which we believe were promised to us at the time of confederation but which have not yet been carried out.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all wish to hear the speech of the hon. member and I would ask him, through you, sir, to speak a little louder because it is impossible for us to hear him over here.

Mr. Purdy: Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like the hon. member to hear what I have to say because if he had paid a little more attention to what I am saying than he has done over the past few months it would be much better for Canada.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I still could not hear that remark.

Mr. Purdy: Read it in Hansard. Now, sir, as I was saying, at the time of confederation we in the maritime provinces, as other hon. members brought out this afternoon, believed we had received certain promises. We thought we would be enabled to market our natural products in the central provinces through means of the Intercolonial railway and through other means which would enable us to make up what we were losing in our north and south trade. Without wishing to take up the time of the house on this point I would like to illustrate how that situation has developed up to the present time.

Today, Mr. Speaker, it costs me $22 per thousand to send my lumber to Toronto. On the other hand, a friend of mine in Windsor, Nova Scotia, who is in the plaster business—and I would like to remind the house that these are both natural products—has a net return of $8.30 per ton on plaster shipped to the Toronto market compared with $16.50 a ton for a comparable industry in Ontario. In other words, our people in the maritime provinces are not able to enter the central Canadian markets, as we were promised at the time of confederation, because if we did our workmen would have to work for just one-half the amount received by those employed in industry in the central provinces.

However, Mr. Speaker, this is the place but certainly not the time to develop this point further. It may be Nova Scotia has not developed as we thought she would under confederation, but we still love her and we are very glad to return to our native province when we are through here.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard such good news for some time as that which was related to the house tonight by the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Bourque) when he listed for us the millions of dollars the labour unions were beginning to pile up. I think that is a very good omen and I would like to see the day that when there is some difficulty across the bargaining table the labour union representatives do not immediately have to think of those who may be hungry at home if they do not kow-tow to the wishes of the employer. I would emphasize again how happy I am to hear that some of the labour unions now have such assets that they are compelled to employ investment advisers.

However, the hon. member did not mention one matter which I read about in that connection within the last few days, and that was the case of where one of those wealthy labour unions—and it was, I believe, the teamsters union—had helped out in refinancing a plant and were thereby able to ensure the continued solvency of that plant as well as the security of their own employment. In view of the large earnings of those labour unions we might well give some thought to the possibility of the unions investing these moneys and the workers thereby enabled to become part owners or at least have a much more real personal interest in the welfare of a particular enterprise than they had when they were merely wage earners.

At this time I cannot help but comment on a thought which occurred to me recently when I reread the speech from the throne. Like many other hon. members, Mr. Speaker, I am at this moment attempting to make a guess for my family as regards how long this session may last. I therefore reread the speech from the throne in order to determine what work had been outlined there and with which we had not yet dealt. I noticed two matters. The St. Lawrence seaway project and pensions for the handicapped, and I reflected "well, is it not typical of the Liberal government in Canada that those things that would mean so very much to people all over Canada are being left to the very last." I sincerely hope, and this is my only reason for mentioning it, that this house is not going to go home for a summer recess on the understanding that pensions for the handicapped may be a possibility next year. I believe that since we have announced these pensions as far back as last fall we should not allow these people to wait for legislative action over such a long period of time. I believe we would have been more considerate of these people if we had completed the negotiating which was necessary before we made any announcement. These people are very, very hard up and a great many of them have been waiting many, many months wondering whether their standard of living is going to enjoy any change and how long they will have to wait before things improve.

In looking over this business of the national economy I notice that the gross national production last year is listed at some $24 billion. Then I notice that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) confidently predicts that there is going to be available for reinvestment purposes in Canada this year the sum of $6 billion. Out of a gross national production of $24 billion, $6 billion means that out of every four dollars' worth of goods that were produced last year, one dollar has been laid aside and is available within the national economy for reinvestment purposes. At this time when our home market needs a boost, I think that percentage is out of all proportion to what it ought to be.

If you take into consideration the net national production, the situation is much worse. There is a great deal of money being made in Canada. I should also point out that the $6 billion is a great deal more even than this federal government—which on the whole renders a great many services to the people of the nation—receives from the people by way of taxation. When we hear of the criticism that the federal government is spending too much money, I think we should see the thing in its proper light and should remember that there is even more money available for reinvestment than is being used by all the activities of the federal government.

I think that the greatest evil or harm of this large amount available for reinvestment purposes, however, lies in the purposes for which this money is going to be used. We have in Canada surpluses of almost all the basic commodities that we produce. Yet the managers of this investment money are this year proposing to build still more mills and still more factories to turn out yet more goods that we already cannot sell. Therefore, as my leader has done once before this year, I would advocate that it is time a national investment board were set up. We have great need for investment in this new land of ours. However, our investment at this time should be in durable consumer goods such as highways, hospitals, schools, more modern penitentiaries and other like social measures. A national investment board would be able to give some direction to the flow of investment money that is available within the nation.

I should like to make just a few remarks also on a part of the budget address given by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). I notice that he went to great lengths to express his satisfaction at the fact that the soft-currency areas of the world were rapidly gaining that blissful state known as convertibility. I am sure we all look forward to the day when nations can buy and sell wherever they wish to sell in the world, and will have the money with which to complete the necessary transactions. However, we in the C.C.F. have always advocated that this business of convertibility should be handled by an international agency under the auspices of the United Nations. What has happened? Under an international agency all the "have" nations of the world would assume their share of the responsibility. The rest of the world is improving the value of their money in terms of the United States dollar merely by means of learning to get along without it. This does not affect the Americans nearly as much as it affects us. I understand that if the need arose they really have to rely on the export market for only some 2 per cent of their national output whereas we, a country with only about one-tenth of the population of the United States and even greater natural resources, must export or die; and by "die", I mean suffer the pangs of the hungry thirties all over again.

Those who are operating the United States economy do not seem to be much concerned about what happens to the Canadian economy when convertibility is established in the soft-currency areas of the world. It does not hurt them but it certainly hurts the primary producer of our land. It is extremely hard for Canadians to sit idly by and accept the assurances coming from the Canadian cabinet that everything will be all right when we see the people of Australia ordering Russian salmon which they do not like as much as they like our salmon and paying for it more money than they would have to pay for our salmon only because they have not the United States dollars with which to buy our salmon. I think that is maybe putting the situation crudely, but it is putting it in language that the Canadian primary producer, especially the fisherman, is well able to understand. The same thing applies to the sales of Canadian wheat, Canadian lumber, Canadian apples and all the other basic primary commodities of Canada.

Each day I am in the house I spend much of my time looking at the front seats of the government and observing the reactions I can see there. I never saw them look more unhappy than they looked on the day they returned from the economic conference in Washington and the report that was given us told us exactly what we were afraid it would tell us. It told us that they had received a polite "no" over in Washington. I think it is time that we insisted to our good friends south of the border that, much as we like world-wide convertibility, we do not want it to come about at the expense of our markets.

I now come to my last major subject. The first plank in the platform of the British Columbia section of the C.C.F. calls for the establishment of a permanent dominion-provincial secretariat. We believe that there are plenty of dominion-provincial difficulties with which to occupy the full time of such a secretariat. We believe that the situation as to the federal government versus the Quebec government would never have arisen if there had been a permanent dominion-provincial secretariat in operation in the past ten or fifteen years; we do not think that such basic differences of outlook in the Canadian economy would have arisen. We believe that almost every department of government would be involved in such a secretariat. We have these meetings taking place all the time. I understand that there is one taking place right now on a relatively minor matter, namely in regard to interprovincial trucking on the highways. We hear of these meetings every once in a while.

We think it would be much more satisfactory if some kind of permanent arrangement were made. I think that a dominion-provincial conference would also help to emphasize to the federal authority the needs of the lower levels of government. I doubt very much whether there is one provincial government in Canada now that has the resources in relation to its obligations available to it that the federal government has. Over and above the powers of taxation the federal government also has wide fiscal and monetary powers which it has used on past occasions and is able to use again. I do not think there is a municipality in the whole Dominion of Canada that has resources in relation to its obligations as adequate as those of the federal government.

I am thinking of the needs of possibly the smallest unit of local government, our public and high school boards. I am thinking of those in charge of looking after our educational needs. These needs are growing all the time but very little is done. It may be said that five-year agreements are made but in five years a great deal can happen so far as the needs of these lower levels of government are concerned. In five years a lot can happen to the value of money. I believe it was the Rowell-Sirois report which came out with the flat statement that if the upper levels of government would exercise the same measure of economy as was being exercised by the local municipal governments our nation would have nothing to worry about.

One does not have to be around here very long to realize the great disparity between the value of money here and the value of money to the volunteer municipal official back home whose obligations, I maintain, are just as important as those of this government. Yet even though he is sacrificing night after night of his time year after year in performing such work he is unable to satisfy himself that he is meeting these responsibilities. At the present time our municipalities have special local growing pains. I should like to advocate a policy of very low interest loans for self-liquidating municipal undertakings in order to help our rapidly growing municipalities to meet their needs. I should like to see the federal government assume full responsibility for all the main highways of the Dominion of Canada. I should like to see the provincial governments assume responsibility for all secondary highways and the municipal governments take over the local or market roads, as I believe we usually call them.

This is one matter which could be ironed out by a permanent dominion-provincial secretariat, and I am sure that eventually agreement would be reached. I am certain of one thing, that we would not have the federal government agreeing to pay one-half the cost of a large section of the trans-Canada highway in one part of British Columbia when that highway, we are given to understand on good authority, is going to be flooded by a huge hydro development possibly even before it is fully completed.

With respect to the field of health services, if you look at the outlay by provincial governments for such services you will see that high costs are making it impossible for the provincial governments to fulfil some of their other responsibilities. So far as housing is concerned, we heard numerous speakers emphasize during the housing debate that the housing act does provide for dominion-provincial-municipal agreements for low cost rental housing. The fact remains, however, that this provision has been on the statute books for a goodly number of years and the municipalities and provincial governments have not taken advantage of it. Some speakers have taken them severely to task for not taking advantage of the legislation.

I submit there is something wrong with the legislation. The municipal and provincial governments are as interested in low rental housing as the federal government but their resources are so limited that even though the terms offered to them for low rental housing may seem adequate when viewed from the federal sphere they do not seem adequate to those people who have to take the initiative in the matter.

In the field of education Canada faces a serious crisis. I know there are constitutional difficulties involved but I am going to stick my neck out, as it were, and offer an easy short-cut. I do not do so lightly. I have taken up the matter with a number of educational officials from time to time and they think the idea is at least worth putting forward. I think our teacher shortage might well be overcome if the federal government, in lieu of something else, would offer to pay directly to every teacher, certified as registered and engaged in teaching by a provincial government, a grant of $1,000 a year. I think that would meet with quite a favourable reception as an immediate measure that could be undertaken to eliminate the supervising of classrooms of thirty-five or forty youngsters by grade 9 or grade 10 students. That situation exists from one end of Canada to the other today and something has to be done about it or those teachers who really are teachers are soon going to leave the field in even greater numbers.

I should like to emphasize again that this business of democracy that we talk so much about has its foundations in the lower levels of government and not in the federal government. Democracy is built from the bottom up and the people who build democracy in Canada today are our local parks board commissioners, our school board members, our municipal councillors, our mayors, our provincial governments, and to a certain extent also the federal government. But the most important part of democracy is to be found in the lower levels of government. Let us give them the tools and they will do the job.

We find that sometimes they are obliged to resort to very desperate measures. In British Columbia we have a 5 per cent retail sales tax. In the province of Saskatchewan there is a sales tax and also in the province of Quebec. There is a sales tax in some municipalities. Do we want to force all our municipalities to levy sales taxes? Some municipalities levy poll taxes. Some are forced to raise their licence fees, thereby hindering commercial development. Yes, these lower levels of government need more revenue and that revenue can be allotted to them without impinging upon their constitutional rights. It is being done and has been done for years and years. The federal government has rendered assistance to the lower levels of government. To my mind it has not been adequate but they have done so and I think it is time they did so more adequately and showed that they have some confidence in democracy.

However, we in the C.C.F. do not agree with the Conservative amendment which says that a dominion-provincial conference should be called for the purpose of bringing about a reallocation of taxing authority. I think, to be exact, the words are "reallocation of taxing powers". I do not believe any municipal government wants the right to levy a sales tax. I believe all provincial governments would very much like to abolish their sales taxes. I believe that the less taxing levels of government we have, the better we will be. However, they must have more revenue.

We agree with the Conservative amendment that some tax reduction is possible. We especially do not like the excise tax. We regret that concessions were made to luxury goods. I feel that a concession to the automotive industry would have been much wiser than a concession to those buying fur coats, hunting equipment and the like. We believe there is a good deal of waste and no effort is being made to conduct a proper efficiency survey on the operations of this $5 billion a year undertaking known as the federal government.

We agree with the Conservative amendment that this government is doing nothing towards helping to solve the unemployment problem, and that the inaction of this government has lost for us the major share of our overseas markets. However, we are unable to agree with the Conservatives when they say that a dominion-provincial conference should be called for the purpose of reallocating the powers of taxation.

Mr. Charles Yuill (Jasper-Edson): In rising to take part in this debate, I should like to draw the attention of the house to a few of the things that would perhaps enhance the situation of the farm industry. Coming as I do from an agricultural constituency, I feel that it might be important to mention a few of the ways and means that this government could use to enhance the take-home pay of those who participate in this greatest industry in Canada.

Since agriculture is the major industry of the country, and since we have had three bumper wheat crops in a row, the equivalent of approximately five average crops, one might think that every one in the agricultural industry would be prosperous. A glance at the record does not indicate this to be so. The figures I am about to quote are taken from briefs submitted to the government of Canada by the interprovincial farm union council. We find that farm income has taken a drop of $137,270,000 in one year, that is from $2,811,949,000 in 1952 to $2,674,679,000 in 1953. At the same time, the farm debt in the three prairie provinces increased from $367 million in 1946 to $486 million in 1952 and chartered bank loans increased from $283 million in 1952 to $381 million in 1953.

Borrowings under the Farm Improvement Loans Act were increased from $85 million in 1952 to $98 million in 1953, and there has been an increase in applications for loans in 1953 of 33 per cent over the previous year. This does not indicate prosperity. There are many contributing factors to this unhappy situation. It is not a matter of overproduction but rather one of underconsumption, caused by lack of proper distribution, that aggravates the situation. Until this government is willing to put into circulation sufficient credit or currency to equate our ability to consume with our ability to produce within Canada, and to trade on a mutually advantageous basis with other trader nations by accepting the currency of those countries in payment for our products, there is little hope for a prosperous industry in Canada, be it agriculture or anything else.

There are other things the government could do to stabilize the agricultural industry. They could keep an eye on the unfair practices and exorbitant price fixing of the farm implement manufacturers. They could investigate the alarming increase in the price of fertilizer as well as the unfair practices of the packing plants and their unreasonable spread between the price paid to the producer and the price charged to the consumer. There should also be closer observation of the methods of grading and mixing of coarse grains at the lakehead.

Returning to the price of farm machinery, may I say that since price controls were removed in 1946 the rate of increase in the price far exceeds the increase in production costs. While it is true that wage rates in the farm machinery manufacturing industry have increased it is also a fact that owing to the rapid mechanical and technological advances in the industry the average output per worker has increased to the extent that the labour cost per manufactured unit has been greatly lowered. In 1945 the average output per worker in dollars was $2,223, while in 1950 it was $4,218. On the other hand, wages and salaries in the industry constituted 42·4 per cent of the gross selling value in 1945, and this dropped until in 1950 the percentage was only 28·9.

Furthermore, the operation of the Farm Improvement Loans Act has greatly reduced the credit losses, collection costs and administration costs of farm machinery producers. With these facts in mind, it does seem advisable that an inquiry should be made into this situation.

Let us turn now to fertilizer. Today the use of fertilizer is almost a necessity. Year by year the use of artificial fertilizer has been increased. However, the cost has increased to the point where farmers cannot afford to buy this product. This will have a decided effect upon production and the farmers' income as well. One company, the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company of Canada, seems to have a monopoly on the manufacture of fertilizer in western Canada. The price of fertilizer has doubled in the last ten years, and seems to be still advancing. From 1940 to 1945, sulphate of ammonia, the chief source of nitrogen, was produced at a plant in Calgary owned by the federal government at an average cost of $19 per ton, while at Trail and Welland it cost $29 per ton. When the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company took over the government owned plant at Calgary in 1946, the price was raised to $40 per ton and is still going up. I am told that today it is about $118 per ton.

Let us see what has happened to our livestock industry. Taking the records of the three largest delivery points, Montreal, Toronto and Winnipeg, we find the average price paid for all grades of cattle in 1951, as compared with 1953, are as follows: In Montreal in 1951 a farmer received $24.82 per hundred, and in 1953, that price was reduced to $14.31 per hundred. In Toronto in 1951, the price received was $29.70, and in 1953 it was reduced to $17.34. In Winnipeg in 1951 the price for livestock was $27.40, while in 1953 it was $14.70. This shows a decrease of 43 per cent in two years.

Is it any wonder the producer is worried? I fail to see why cattle prices should have been reduced so drastically—certainly not because of our supply! We find, according to the September issue of "Current Review of Agricultural Conditions in Canada", issued by the Department of Agriculture, that we in Canada consume 95 per cent of all the cattle we raise. We find that the latest statistics show stocks of meat held by packers, abattoirs, and cold storage warehouses as of December 1, 1953, were 13 million pounds less than on December 1, 1952. This gives the lie to the supply-and-demand argument as the reason for declining prices.

Examining the long term trend of livestock numbers, as it is related to human population, we find that in 1900 Canada had 1,278 cattle per 1,000 population, while in 1953 we had only 784 cattle per 1,000 people. Considering Canada and the United States jointly, we had only 66 per cent as many cattle in 1953 as we had in 1900.

The latest figures compiled from national revenue taxation statistics for 1951 show the entire meat industry had, after taxation, a net profit of over seven and a half million dollars, the equivalent of 30 per cent of the share capital, while the producer had to settle for not much more than fifty cents on the dollar in the sale price of his cattle. This proves that the packing plants have been having a field day at the expense of the producers and consumers alike.

Since lifting of the controls that were in effect during the war the packing plants have been taking the public for all the traffic will bear. There was a time when you could see some evidence of compatibility between livestock prices and the wholesale prices of the finished products—but not any more! In many cases the quality of their products has deteriorated, and the wholesale prices do not reflect any relationship between the rail grade price and the wholesale price.

The packers never miss an opportunity to make some easy money. I know what I am talking about because I have over 43 years of experience in the retail trade and do not have to go out of my own shop to prove what I say. I mentioned in my maiden speech an incident that occurred last Easter, a year ago. As many of you know, there is an extra demand for smoked hams at Easter. Just before the butchers had an opportunity to purchase their supply of Easter hams the packers went into a huddle and decided overnight to raise the price of smoked hams eight cents a pound, in spite of the fact that rail grade price of hogs had dropped 65 cents per hundredweight.

I have seen the price of cooked hams and bacon go up as much as ten cents per pound overnight, with little or no justification. When top rail grade prices for hogs range from 28½ to 33 cents per pound, can anyone tell me why the wholesale price of cooked ham should be $1.02 to $1.06 per pound, or why sliced back bacon should be sold at 95 cents a pound wholesale? It will be hard to convince me that these prices are necessary to make a fair margin of profit.

There are many other indications that the producer is not getting his share. In the beef market the producer is again at the mercy of the packing plants, particularly if he has an off-type animal which, in spite of its grade, invariably finds its way well up the grade when offered for sale at wholesale. They try to justify their tactics by the old story of supply and demand. Assuming they are right, do you not think the producer should enjoy the fruits of his labour and share in this increase?

Another thing that has caused the farmer some concern is why he was not considered in the price support extended during the hoof-and-mouth epidemic? The farmer was told, by inference at least, that there was nothing to worry about, that he would still receive the basic floor price of around 23½ cents per pound, and that then all would be well.

You can imagine their surprise and disappointment when they sold their heavy hogs, into the raising of which they had put all their extra grain and a great deal of extra labour, for as low as 11½ cents per pound, or only 50 per cent of the prices expected.

The government then turned around and paid the packers 60 cents per pound to process hogs for which, in some cases, they had only paid 11½ cents. Surely the farmers should have received the subsidy. I suggest that the government take immediate steps to check and put a stop to these unfair practices, for one can see how such practices affect the purchasing power of the consumer and jeopardize the interests of the producers as well.

I am sure that all the farmer wants is to be allowed to sell his produce on the open market at a reasonable profit and buy his machinery and other necessities on the same basis.

Mr. J. A. Charlton (Brant-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I believe I would be voicing the opinion of many people throughout the country if I were to say that this has been the most disappointing budget we have had in a number of years. Of course there is very good reason for it: there is no election in the offing for at least the next year or so. We know that this year the government did not feel the budget had to be as attractive as it did last year.

The strange fact, however, is that while taxes were reduced on many luxuries, they were maintained on what we consider the necessities of life. For instance, I do not believe anyone would suggest that fishing rods, golf clubs and cameras are necessities. I am wondering why the government has taken this position. Could it be because this is the last budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) will bring down, and that he might have wanted to help out some of his friends who like to go on fishing and hunting trips?

Mr. Cardiff: Probably the minister wants to go fishing.

Mr. Charlton: Yes, probably he goes fishing at times, too. It is true that the tax on tires and tubes was reduced by five per cent. But another strange fact is that there has been no reduction in the prices of new automobiles usually equipped with four or five new tires and tubes. Is the manufacturer absorbing this five per cent? Certainly it is not being passed on to the consumer.

The budget offers no relief for the unemployed; it offers no relief to industry or to the individual. I had intended to say a few words about agriculture, but I shall not speak at length on this subject because I shall have another opportunity to do so when the estimates of the Department of Agriculture are under consideration.

Many people in urban districts seem to feel that farmers are getting away without paying income tax. Some might be doing so—I am not prepared to say. But I can say, Mr. Speaker, that as a general rule farmers are not trying to get away with anything in connection with the filing of income tax returns. Some farmers have not made out income tax forms because they have felt they did not make enough to pay income tax. They did not feel they were making enough money to bring themselves within the taxation brackets, and therefore they felt it was not necessary to complete the forms.

The policy now being followed by the income tax branch in demanding net worth statements from farmers who have not made out income tax forms is most unfair and unjust. Some of the inspectors—I will not say all of them—who have had nothing to do with farming during their lifetime are not very sympathetic. They seem to think the farmers are getting away with something. When they make out returns for a farmer they do not make any effort to consider his position favourably. I wonder how many members in the house would want to come into the house in the evening and make bookkeeping entries after working on a farm from six o'clock in the morning until six o'clock at night, out in the air all that time, and doing hard work.

It is not usual for farmers to do that sort of thing. Probably they keep a little notebook in their hip pockets and a short pencil, about two inches long, to do their bookkeeping; but when the inspectors come around to the farms and figure out an arbitrary assessment of a farmer's income the main thing they are looking for is what the farmer's living has cost him. I refer to that part of his living which he has taken off his farm. I have been told by many farmers that these inspectors wanted to charge them $2.50 for every chicken eaten in the farm home. I am sure that most hon. members would agree that that would be ridiculous. I have one case in my riding where an inspector insisted on charging $2.50 for every chicken that the farmer had eaten in his own home. Probably that is the retail price that the inspector would have to pay for a chicken if he bought it in the store, but that surely could not be any justification for charging the farmer at that rate.

I had a case a few years ago where inspectors wrote to various farmers in the district and advised them to meet the inspector some 30 odd miles from the farmers' homes, at nine o'clock in the morning in a hotel room. Although most farmers might make a special effort to get up a little earlier and to get through their chores by nine o'clock, certainly they could not very well drive 30 miles and be there at nine o'clock and take all their books with them. Then, if they missed one little item they probably would have to drive back 30 miles to pick it up while the inspector sat in the very comfortable hotel room waiting for the man to come to him. Those are some of the injustices carried out by some of the inspectors—I will not say all.

In view of the tax relief given by the government of the United States, it is reasonable to say that our manufacturers in this country are to be put to a further disadvantage in supplying both the domestic and the export market. I ask this question: Would anyone in this House of Commons expect a horse to go into a race with hobbles on him? That is exactly what this government is asking industry to do. It is hobbled with high taxation, and yet the government expects industry in this country to compete not only in the domestic market but in the export market as well, and I include agriculture.

Many of the manufacturers in foreign countries are working at much lower costs than we are, and even in many instances under controlled currencies at low levels which give them a further advantage over our industries here. The minister has admitted that some industries in the country are under distressed conditions. He has said, and I quote two small passages from his budget speech at page 3726 of Hansard:

> Until quite recently our industries have been protected more by external shortages than by our traditional tariff structure. This special form of protection is now disappearing, and some of our industries are finding that they have not watched their costs as carefully as they should, that their break-even points are uncomfortably high, and that their costs and prices are out of line.

A little further on in the same speech he said:

> The re-emergence of keen competition in trade means readjustment and reappraisal. It means a sharpening of pencils and a careful re-examination of managerial and labour efficiency. This is not an easy process, but it is a very necessary one, and the longer it is postponed the more difficult it becomes.

These words could be quite naturally directed right back at the government. Have they made any attempt to readjust their costs of government? Have they made any attempt at all to sharpen their pencils and to do a little soul-searching of their own efficiencies or inefficiencies in the administration of government? Not that we can see or find in this budget. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that before he castigates industry and tells them to cut costs, this government should sharpen its pencils and do a little in that direction.

Take for instance the textile industry. The Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McCann) made it quite plain that he was not ready to assist that industry in any way other than by the passage of Bill No. 29. He made that statement before the textile union when they interviewed him. Is the textile industry necessary in this country or is it not? If it is necessary in time of war, then surely to goodness it is equally necessary to keep it alive in times of peace.

Mr. Wood: How much bonus do they need?

Mr. Charlton: The hon. member will have his opportunity to make a speech after I am through, if he will choose to do so. The textile industry in this country, as the government well knows, is in very great difficulties. Many of the factories have closed down permanently. Many more are working a short week. There are four such industries in my riding all working on short time, and have been for quite some time, and yet the government refuses to do practically anything for them. In the event of another war, which heaven forbid, the textile industry would be one of the most important industries we have, because certainly in this country, or in any northern country, clothing has a very important part to play in any army.

The textile industry has employed over 100,000 people during the past few years. It is one of the largest employers of labour we have in Canada. I understand that today fewer than 80,000 people are employed in that industry, and even though 80,000 are apparently employed, many of them are working three days a week or less. Surely something more concrete can be done than has been done so far for this important industry.

Another industry that is under great stress is the agricultural implement industry, which is directly affected by the economic difficulties of the farmers across Canada. The government has spent much time making statements across the country about how valuable a large store of wheat is to Canada. That may be true; but, Mr. Speaker, if I had a dining-room full of gold bullion I could not buy anything with it until I sold it. The same is true of wheat. The wheat will buy nothing until it is turned into cash, and certainly the farmers in the west or in the east cannot buy the equipment of the agricultural equipment manufacturing concerns unless they have the cash to do so. I want to commend the labour organizations that brought the brief before the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) some time ago. The U.A.W.-C.I.O. of Brantford were among them. I want to commend them for realizing just how important farmers are to their livelihood.

Cheap food and employment do not and cannot go together. If farmers cannot get a reasonable amount for their produce then certainly the employers who are manufacturing farming equipment will not be able to employ the workers to make these implements whatever the cost may be because the farmers are not going to be in a position to buy them. It would therefore seem that labour is finally recognizing the buying power held by the farming community. Farmers today are not buying because they are afraid to let go of the dollars they now have for fear of future prices.

Another industry affected is the electrical industry, and, of course, agriculture, as I pointed out before. Dealing with one case alone with regard to the agricultural industry I would like to draw to the attention of the house the recent importation of onions. I read a piece in the newspaper a week ago which recounted that 243 carloads of onions have been brought in from the United States and sold in this country compared with 17 carloads of Canadian onions sold here. Many tons of Canadian onions are being dumped and used as fertilizer while American onions are being brought in to compete against our own product. The same thing can be said as regards the peach growers, potato growers, celery growers, strawberry growers, tomato growers, and last but not least the dairy farmers of Canada.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is just one other point I want to mention which has been brought out very well indeed by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). This was in regard to resident mutual insurance corporations. This was dealt with in item 6 as reported at page 3736 of Hansard on April 6 during the budget speech and reads as follows:

> For the taxation of a resident mutual insurance corporation, other than a life insurance corporation, as though the surplus arising from its insurance activities on and after January 1, 1954 were a profit from a business . . .

The remainder of the quotation has to do with non-resident mutual companies. As I have already pointed out, the hon. member for Oxford has set out the position in which these companies find themselves, and I fully concur with all he said regarding their difficulties. These companies were set up to help farmers who ordinarily could not obtain insurance from any other source for most of the bigger companies are in different fields and they do not wish to undertake farm risks. Again, these companies were set up more or less as co-operatives to help the farmers out, but in spite of the fact that they are trying to help themselves under difficult conditions it seems they will have to pay this huge income tax to keep from building up a surplus in their own companies.

I have had several telegrams and letters from such insurance companies in my own riding and in one case in particular the company's risks during the period 1941 until 1953 have risen nine times. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for a company whose risks are increasing at that rate to build up the kind of surplus referred to by the hon. member for Oxford and which is necessary under an act of the Ontario government. In the case of a risk which is greater than $25 million they have to have a reserve of 60 cents for every $100 carried, and that increases to one dollar on a risk of $2 million, so that one can well understand how difficult it is for these smaller mutual insurance companies to carry on paying income tax on their earned surplus and at the same time be able to build up a surplus sufficient to comply with the Ontario government act.

I do not feel it is necessary for me to go over many of the points raised earlier, but I concur with the remarks made by the hon. member for Oxford and the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) in this regard, and I believe the government should reconsider their position with regard to these mutual insurance companies. The supreme court passed a ruling last year and this budget apparently affects that ruling.

There is one other thing I wish to deal with for a moment and that is to commend the work carried on by the Grand valley conservation authority, and also the Grand river anti-pollution committee. In addition, I would like to commend the government for reducing the taxation on equipment being purchased by municipalities by 10 per cent, and I would like to suggest that they go a little further and aid the municipalities along the Grand river who are now dumping raw sewage into the river and creating extremely unhealthy conditions. It is entirely unfit for children to swim or bathe in the river. It is now getting to the point where fish being taken from the Grand river at its mouth are being refused by dealers in New York and Montreal because of their flavour. That means a great deal to fishermen who depend on these fishing grounds for their living. It meant as much as $1,500 in two weeks for one fisherman down there so one can readily see how great this problem is. It is difficult for these municipalities to carry the burden of this sewage disposal without some assistance. I know there have been many resolutions forwarded both to the provincial and the dominion governments, and I would ask this government to consider giving assistance in some way in conjunction with the provincial government so that they can develop sewage disposal plants in the cities and towns along the river where the pollution is so great at the present time.

As I pointed out before, the children are being deprived of their swimming and the odour is terrible along the river especially at the lower end. The town of Dunnville has to depend on the Grand river for its water supply in the same way as the city of Brantford and other towns. It will cost a tremendous amount of money for the cities to put in these sewage disposal plants and I would urge this government to co-operate with the provincial government in granting money to deal with this problem.

(Translation):

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take the opportunity afforded me by this debate to make a few more brief comments on a matter I have already discussed on various occasions in this house, that is the production and sale of margarine in Canada.

I do not intend to pose as a prophet or as a Mr. I-told-you-so; nevertheless, even if it seemed utopic during some years to defend, on the floor of the house, the dairy producers against margarine producers, those who did so, and I was not alone in doing it, had at least a foreboding of what is taking place today. And what is happening now—official statistics are there to prove it—is that butter consumption has decreased in Canada since the introduction of margarine, that is since about 1948.

I wish to quote official figures from a pamphlet published by our national dairy council.

According to those statistics, 370 million pounds were consumed in Canada in 1948. In 1953, that is five years later, the consumption had declined to 328 million, or 42 million less, or a decrease of 11 per cent. On the other hand, the same statistics inform us that the butter consumption of our population was 28·7 pounds per capita, whereas it fell to 22·2 per capita in 1953, which is a decrease of 6·5 pounds per capita, or 23 per cent. This is a substantial decrease both in total and per capita consumption.

Moreover, we have today, in stock, at the beginning of the butter-producing season, the highest surplus we ever had. The quantities of butter now held by the government, thanks to its excellent butter-purchasing policy, amount to approximately 30 million pounds. If we add to this the quantity held by private individuals, we arrive at an approximate figure of 45 million pounds at present in stock in this country. And this at the very moment when the new production is arriving on the Canadian market.

I do not hesitate to say that this creates, to my way of thinking, a dangerous situation for the 445,000 dairy farmers of this country and also for the majority of Canadian workers. I will be asked, and quite rightly so, how it is that an overproduction of butter can constitute a threat to the workingman in this country.

The answer to this seems quite simple. Two million people in Canada live mainly from dairying. That means more than two million people who consume those things manufactured by the workers of our towns and villages. And these people, I must add, are no ordinary consumers. If we compare the amount devoted to the purchase of consumer goods in the case of the workingman on the one hand and in that of the farmer, on the other, we will find that in the latter case, this amount is enormously larger. As it happens, not only does the farmer consume personal goods such as clothes, food, household equipment, automobiles, etc., but he is also a large purchaser of articles for farm use: agricultural implements, chemical fertilizer, prepared feeds, drainage equipment, building materials, etc. It is therefore no exaggeration to state that the most important consumers in this country are the farmers.

We find there the economic explanation of the fact that every time the agricultural industry is having trouble in Canada, almost immediately we are faced with demoralizing unemployment among the labouring people of our cities. It has been so during the economic depression of 1929-1939; the same thing has happened again during the past few months, although on an evidently much reduced scale.

Farm incomes started to decrease in 1952 and they have fallen again in 1953 and, that same year, our country began to feel the impact of unemployment. I would like to quote here official statistics, which surely cannot be contested because they are taken from the Votes and Proceedings of the House of Commons, No. 85, of April 5, 1954. On page 8, in table 3 entitled "Sources of personal income", I find that in 1952, the income of farm operators decreased by 11 per cent from the preceding year, while in 1953, the income of the same category of people decreased by 14 per cent in comparison with 1952. Therefore, if we add those two percentages together we see that, all in all, in 1952-53 their income decreased by 25 per cent, compared with 1951.

However, during that period, the income of the workers did not go down. On the contrary, if we return to the same table, we see that during the same years, that is 1952 compared with 1951, the income represented by wages and salaries increased by 11 per cent, and if we compare 1953 with 1952, from that point of view, that income increased again by 2½ per cent, so that, if we add together again those two percentages represented by the increases which took place during 1952-53, with regard to income from wages and salaries, we find that, while the income of farmers was decreasing by 25 per cent, the income of workers, that is of those who were receiving wages or salaries, increased by 13½ per cent.

Mr. Speaker, could you call it ten o'clock? (Text):

On motion of Mr. Poulin the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall continue this debate. If it is concluded, we shall take the bill having to do with the Vocational Training Co-ordination Act, then the one in connection with the Research Council Act, then the one having to do with the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, and then the resolution standing in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) with respect to crown corporations.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, April 27, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

AIR TRANSPORT

MODIFICATION TO CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Chevrier) is not in his seat, but if his assistant will take this question as notice I shall be very pleased. In view of the discussions held in Ottawa from April 12 to 14 with representatives of the United Kingdom government on the subject of possible modifications to the Canada-United Kingdom air transport agreement, is the government now in a position to indicate what changes, if any, will be made in this agreement?

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport and his assistant (Mr. Langlois, Gaspe) I shall take this question as notice and inform the minister.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

CONSTRUCTION THROUGH BANFF NATIONAL PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. E. Johnston (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Does the federal government plan to continue the construction of the trans-Canada highway through the Banff national park throughout the year 1954? If so, how many miles will be completed in the year 1954? Secondly, how long will it take to complete the trans-Canada highway through the Banff national park?

Hon. Robert H. Winters (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I did not receive notice of this question until this moment, so anything I say will be from memory and subject to correction. We do intend to do some work on the Banff national park trans-Canada highway this year, but hope to do a larger amount of it in the Yoho park at the western end. As to the length of time it will take to complete the trans-Canada highway through the Banff national park, we intend now to complete it by the termination date of the agreement which will be December 9, 1956.

[Later:]

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF TIME FOR COMPLETION

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works following the question put by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Johnston). Has any understanding been arrived at regarding an extension of time in which the provinces may complete the trans-Canada highway? In other words, must they complete their part of the trans-Canada highway by 1956?

Mr. Winters: Mr. Speaker, the legislation passed by parliament provides for termination by December 9, 1956, and there is no authority beyond that date. That is the only position I have been able to take in discussing this matter with the provinces.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER LEGISLATION TO BE BROUGHT DOWN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George A. Drew (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that before the Easter recess the Prime Minister indicated that he would inform the house, when we resumed, what new business might be brought before us, I would ask the Prime Minister if he is now ready to tell us what new business the government proposes to introduce.

Right Hon. L. S. St. Laurent (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I am meeting with my colleagues on Thursday and we will be going over the list of matters that are apt to be considered, and I hope shortly afterwards to be able to make a full statement to the house.

SUPERANNUATED CIVIL SERVANTS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PURPOSE OF SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Hamilton) asked a question concerning a questionnaire sent out to some 20,000 superannuated civil servants. I promised I would inform myself on the matter and give an answer today.

The purpose of the questionnaire was to obtain information on three points: (1) Whether civil service pension cheques are being sent out in the name of people who are not now alive; (2) whether any civil servants who were pensioned because of disability are now re-employed; and (3) whether any pensioned civil servants have since been re-employed in the public service.

The questionnaire was briefly worded, and apparently some misunderstanding has arisen. The only purpose is to obtain information required for the proper administration of the superannuation act.

As to the first question, some envelopes containing the questionnaire are coming back marked "Address unknown", whereas the envelopes containing the pension cheques are not being returned.

Information on the second point is necessary because, under the act, civil service disability pensions are suspended if the pensioner recovers to the extent that he can resume duties comparable to his former duties.

In the case of the third question, it may be to the advantage of the retired civil servant if his new salary, plus his benefits, exceeds the salary at which he left the public service.

BUTTER

REPORTED HOLDING OF ADULTERATED PRODUCT BY GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, following a report I read in a newspaper yesterday in regard to the government holding several thousand pounds of adulterated butter. Has the minister any comment to make on that report?

Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the government is not now holding any adulterated butter.

Mr. Fulton: What did you do with it?

[Later:]

Mr. Fulton: May we ask the Minister of Agriculture what disposition the government made of the adulterated butter, and how much there was of it?

Mr. Gardiner: The butter which we had and which, according to our information, was adulterated, was taken back by the persons who delivered it to us; and they paid back to us the money which had been paid to them.

Mr. Knowles: And what are they doing with it?

RAYMOND ARTHUR DAVIES

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration can tell us whether the government plans to deport Raymond Arthur Davies, recently convicted of passport fraud, at the conclusion of his two-year sentence, and if so, to what country.

Hon. W. E. Harris (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the case, Mr. Davies indicated that he might or might not appeal. I am not sure what has happened in that respect, but in any event this department would not be officially notified of his conviction until he entered prison. If he does that, we will learn of it and a board of inquiry will be held at that time in order to determine whether or not he should be deported.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REPORTED OFFER TO PURCHASE BARLEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): I should like to direct to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) a question of which I gave him notice. In his absence perhaps his parliamentary assistant could answer it. Would the minister care to comment on a recent press release regarding a Russian offer to buy three million bushels of Canadian barley?

Mr. J. H. Dickey (Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Defence Production): In the absence of the minister I shall have to take that question as notice. I will draw it to the minister's attention.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Monday, April 26, consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell.

(Translation):

Mr. Raoul Poulin (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in the course of my remarks, yesterday, I showed that butter consumption in Canada had considerably declined since margarine was put on the market, and that available butter stocks are now the largest in our history; this jeopardizes to a considerable extent the position of our farmers, and in consequence, that of our working people, because the rural classes are the main consumers of manufactured goods.

I stated moreover that in 1952 and 1953, the farm income decreased by approximately 25 per cent, while the income of wage earners increased by about 13½ per cent. I also said that the decline in farm income generally raises the depressing ghost of unemployment. It therefore seems hardly an overstatement to say that the surest means of maintaining employment at a reasonable level would be to bolster the purchasing power of our farming people, even if the workmen had to make certain sacrifices to this end; it would, indeed, be better for a workman to eat butter—even costly butter—and work, than to consume cheaper margarine while unemployed.

Let us not, besides, labour under any delusion. If ever the day comes when margarine producing companies no longer have to fear any competition from butter, we will see the price of their product rise to fantastic heights. I am sure in my own mind that our good working people will have already understood the essential difference between those methods which are used to fix the price of butter and those used to fix that of margarine. In the first case we have 450,000 small producers who will never be in a position to unite closely enough to have any serious influence or any measure of control over the market, whereas in the second case, we have a few large and powerful companies which will always find some way, in spite of anti-combines legislation, of doing away with competition and of selling at exorbitant prices. Workers will then realize, though a little too late, that they have been victimized on two levels at once.

That is why I wish to state quite plainly that in defending the vital interests of the dairy producers, I am at the same time defending the higher interests of the working class. One way, to my mind, of protecting the dairy industry against the flood of margarine would be to levy an excise tax on the sale of the latter product. It is a rare event, indeed, to see members of parliament suggesting the imposition of a new tax. But, at the present session, we will have seen and heard everything. I would like to mention in this connection that several agricultural organizations in the county of Beauce have advocated such a measure. I have been the recipient of a number of resolutions adopted at meetings of co-operative unions.

Other groups have sent me delegations of their officers. And here are the names of some parishes whose professional farm groups have deemed it appropriate to take a definite stand on the matter: St. Gedeon, St. Martin, St. Pierre, St. Honore, Ste. Marie, St. Ephrem, St. Victor, St. Benoit, and a few others, the names of which I have not here.

If I add to that the hundreds of representations I have been receiving for some years, concerning that same problem considered from a different angle, I do not hesitate to state that the farming class as a whole, in the riding I represent here, urges the government to rid the market of a product which, as I said, constitutes a serious danger to the welfare not only of the farming class but of the working class as well.

Since I am dealing with the problem of butter and margarine, I would be unfair if I did not pay tribute to the government and to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) for the general policies they have put forward in the past few years in that respect. I believe that the butter price support program has been an excellent thing. It has protected the dairy producer and enabled him to sell his product at a reasonable price, even if that price is still lower than it should be. The main result however has been to prevent the scandalous state of affairs that prevailed during the winter of 1951-52 when urban workers, for instance, had to pay 80 cents, 90 cents, or even $1 for a pound of butter. I remember very well mentioning the fact in the house and urging the government to take the necessary measures in order to prevent a repetition of such a scandal. Once more I declare I would be unfair if today I did not express my humble thanks to the Minister of Agriculture and to the government. However, it may also be my duty, since I had some congratulations to offer, to take that same government to task in respect to a certain aspect of the problem of margarine, which I raised a few moments ago. During the past few months, on three or four occasions, I have asked the government a few questions in the house in an endeavour to establish if the government and its experts really believed that margarine is a product comparable in quality to butter.

Unfortunately, I must say that I did not receive a satisfactory answer. The last question I asked was as follows:

1. In taking as a basis of comparison butter and margarine sold by dealers in Canada, is the nutrition division of the Department of National Health and Welfare in a position to state which of these two products has the greater food value?
2. If so, which product?

I thought that my question was clear enough, well enough put, for our offsprings are always dear to us, but I did not receive a satisfactory answer. I have here the answer and I quote from page 4070 of the Hansard of April 14, 1954:

1. No, because sufficient analyses of butter and margarine as sold in Canada are not available in the files of the nutrition division.
2. See answer to No. 1 above.

That means—it is at least the conclusion I am drawing—that the government does not hold on this subject a clear, definite opinion. I wonder then how it happened that the nutrition division of the Department of National Health and Welfare published, during 1953, what I would call a book of recipes for cooks having to serve meals to large groups of people.

Mr. Speaker: Order! I apologize for interrupting the hon. member.

(Text):

May I ask hon. members to converse in more moderate tones. They seem to be competing with the voice of the hon. member who is speaking and it is very difficult for me to hear. I always like to listen to speeches by hon. members and I would appreciate it if hon. members would observe silence.

(Translation):

Mr. Poulin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for coming to my rescue. I admit quite humbly that I had trouble hearing myself.

Well, if one goes through this publication issued under the authority of the Department of National Health and Welfare, one finds that in exactly 122 recipes, it is advised to use either butter or margarine. If the government is not in a position to give us a comparative statement of the food value of butter and margarine, how is it that in this publication, in 122 different places, the use of either butter or margarine is advised; they are on an equal footing, on exactly the same basis.

I do not want to prolong unduly my humble remarks on this matter, because I would now like to say a few words about another problem which is no less interesting.

In the few minutes I have left I would like to make some remarks on a matter about which I spoke here on March 23 last. It is also a matter about which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) spoke rather at length in his budget speech of April 6 last. I have in mind the deductibility of the new Quebec provincial tax from the amount of the federal income tax.

Owing to the importance of this matter, I shall strive to avoid any word or to take a position which might offend those who do not share my humble opinion on this matter.

Speaking in the house yesterday, the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) stated textually as follows, and I quote Hansard at page 4120:

—since the money levied by the Canadian government, under its taxation legislation, is its own property, nobody has the right, through a provincial law or otherwise to prescribe that part of this money which is the Canadian government's own personal property, shall be, without any agreement to this effect, diverted to the benefit of a province, whatever the motives may be.

Mr. Speaker, there has been no attempt made on the part of the province of Quebec, through its bill No. 43, to take any money belonging to the federal government. In my humble opinion such a statement is absolutely contrary to facts. According to the terms of its legislation the province of Quebec is simply requiring its own taxpayers to pay, in a clearly defined fashion, certain sums of money which it will then use for equally well defined provincial purposes.

That, briefly, is the essential meaning of that act. It being so, who could really claim that the province of Quebec wishes to convert to its own purposes moneys rightfully belonging to the Canadian government? The province of Quebec is merely exercising a right in taking what it is entitled to take. I doubt very much if anybody here, in this house, would deny it that right. As a matter of fact we have not heard any member or any minister speak to that effect. The member for Bonaventure himself recognizes that right. He is reported on page 4119 of Hansard as having said:

We of the Canadian parliament are the first to recognize the right of the province of Quebec, and of any other province, to direct taxation.

That quotation flagrantly contradicts the one I mentioned a while ago; and yet the latter is from the same member and appears at the same page of Hansard.

But I will go further. The province of Quebec, under section 92 of the British North America Act, may exclusively—to use the exact term found in the language of the act —make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated. And, under subparagraph 2, I quote again:

Direct taxation within the province in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial purposes.

Brilliant lawyers, there are many of them in this chamber and I recognize their talent, will attempt no doubt to demolish my humble arguments. Will they be kind enough to tell me what the word "exclusive" does mean in the aforementioned text, apart from suggesting clearly that, in provincial matters, not only has the province of Quebec equal rights, parallel rights, as the member for Bonaventure put it, but that it has priority over the federal government?

But the province of Quebec is not so exacting, Mr. Speaker. Far from diverting to its own benefit funds belonging to the federal government, it merely asks that government to amend an existing federal statute, under which the central authority comes and collects from provincial taxpayers moneys that are exclusively theirs according to section 92. Neither does the province ask to recover the total funds to which it is rightfully entitled, but only that part it has the unquestioned authority to collect under the terms of that very section 92.

This was answered by the hon. Minister of Finance in his budget speech. I am now quoting what he said as recorded in Hansard of April 6, page 3732:

If a credit up to 15 per cent of the federal tax were accepted, it would appear to be difficult in principle to later deny full credit for, say, a 30 per cent, a 60 per cent or even a 100 per cent provincial tax.

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, that I am not very much impressed by this argument. The hon. minister said that "it would appear to be difficult in principle to later . . ." But, though that principle is now confirmed by the present deduction of 5 per cent, the government does not, in practice, feel bound by the rule recognized in the 5 per cent section. It remains within the limits of its authority—if not its rights—so long as the majority in this house supports its claim. Though deduction was, in principle, introduced by the federal government, this government is now, in practice, able to refuse a deduction of 15 per cent; why should it not be even more able to refuse 30, 60 or even 100 per cent should such action prove advisable?

The federal parliament is always free to do as it pleases, and, if it seems now relatively easy for it to refuse a small exemption, how much easier it will be later on for them to turn down requests which might appear even more exorbitant.

They are taking the Quebec government to task for not having consulted the federal government with a view to coming to an agreement before enacting its legislation. When it came to adopting section 33 of the Income Tax Act, with which the provinces are directly concerned, were the provinces consulted? No, unless I am mistaken. Since it is at least recognized that the provinces hold with the federal government equal rights in that field, why is it that one of those two partners having equal rights should not legislate in a field in which the rights of the other are concerned, while the latter could do it with impunity? One law for one's friends and another for one's foes, some might think. Not even that, but rather the deeply rooted conviction in the mind of certain legislators that the provinces are institutions which are inferior to the federal government, that they owe the latter their right to exist and, consequently, come under its sway.

And yet this statement is the exact opposite of the truth. It is the federal government which owes its existence to the provinces. Without them it would never have come into being. It is of course true that it now has well defined rights which the provinces have neither the capacity nor the right to take away from it, but these rights are limited to those which the provinces agreed to hand over when, through mutual consent, they established this compact from whence sprung the federal state. The hon. member for Bonaventure adds, at page 4121 of Hansard:

It is often repeated—many things are said—that Ottawa draws $300 million in personal income tax in the province of Quebec.

It is never said however that Ottawa gives to the province of Quebec, through old age pensions, family allowances, pensions for the blind and subsidies to help the building of hospitals in Quebec, over $200 million per year. It is never said however that the $300 million received by Ottawa from personal income tax in Quebec is not even sufficient to cover the large amounts generously distributed by the federal government in Quebec by way of pensions, allowances, unemployment insurance benefits, public works, grants of all kinds for the maintenance of its various services.

The least that one could do would be to recognize that what Ottawa draws in taxes from Quebec with one hand it gives generously with the other hand to the people of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking, in all sincerity, whether the hon. member for Bonaventure has well weighed his words, has given careful thought to the matter, before uttering them. Does he claim seriously that Quebec receives more money from Ottawa than it gives it? Would he have the house believe that the federal government gives more to Quebec than it receives from it? Has he not perchance forgotten to add to the $300 million paid by Quebec taxpayers the millions the latter pay to Ottawa under other headings? What about the excise tax, the federal sales tax, customs duties, postal fees, trade permits, etc. He repeats, to use his own formula, that Ottawa collects $300 million in Quebec on personal income tax, but he does not repeat enough that it directly or indirectly collects many other taxes under the headings I just mentioned. If Quebec receives from Ottawa at least as much as it gives in return, this province is therefore a poor relation within the Canadian confederation; in this case, the surplus wealth of other provinces should be offered it as a gift.

But as things are, it is the opposite argument that is invoked by the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage), when they refuse to admit the deduction claimed by the province of Quebec. These gentlemen pretend that the fiscal agreement policy is based on the recognition of the principle that part of the federal revenue is to be distributed to the poorer provinces. Quebec, they say, is a wealthy province—on this point they are right—and must therefore accept the agreement policy in order to assist the less fortunate provinces. The hon. member for Bonaventure will doubtlessly have to meet the two ministers, whom he commended warmly yesterday—not without ground—and harmonize his views with theirs; otherwise the taxpayers will think—and rightly so—that unity does not yet exist within the great Liberal family, and that all its members are not of one view with regard to an issue of such great importance at the present time.

The hon. member for Bonaventure also claims that the problem is a purely financial one, bearing on the allocation of taxes. Mr. Speaker, I beg to differ completely on that point. That fiscal problem, that question of taxes raises the entire question of provincial autonomy. Since I spoke at length on that particular subject in the house on March 23, I shall not restate my arguments for fear of boring the house. I shall be content to say that the great majority of the population of Quebec is apprehensive, and reluctant to accept various subsidies which are sometimes given the appearance of a gift. They remember the old saying: He who pays the piper calls the tune.

Need I repeat here, for the third or fourth time within five years, that personally I have no fear whatever—and I say so sincerely and emphatically—that the men who now make up the present government at Ottawa may encroach upon fields that come within the sole jurisdiction of the provinces, nor would I fear such action on the part of a government that may eventually be formed from within the ranks of those who now make up the official opposition. However, I have the right to ask myself what the future may hold for us in that field.

When our children in the province of Quebec have taken our place and formed a new link in the chain that links most of us, through the centuries, to the first settlers who opened our country to civilization, what kind of men will then be at the helm of our country? Nobody knows. In spite of what the hon. member for Bonaventure may think, are we quite sure that the problems pertaining to racial, religious and educational matters will be solved in conformity with the indefeasible rights of the French-speaking people of Canada? Whoever is aware of certain sad happenings in the history of his country, and more particularly of its contemporary history, may wisely entertain some doubts.

Mr. Speaker, the elaborate and very interesting speech made by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Arsenault) will have had at least one merit, that of calling the attention of the house to a suggestion which it is the duty of the federal government to consider seriously, if that government is sincere in rejecting the request made by the provincial government. For my part, I shall simply declare that its acceptance would deprive a provincial government of its freedom of choice between the various fields of direct taxation which were granted to the provinces by our constitution.

(Text):

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few brief remarks to make in this debate. There is no doubt the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) would have made himself very popular if the personal income tax or the corporation tax, or both, had been reduced substantially this year. Naturally, all of us would welcome any prospect of reduced taxation. But, so far, no one has indicated where appropriations could be cut. For example, I have not heard any suggestion from anyone that we cut our defence expenditures at this time—expenditures that consume over 40 per cent of our tax dollar. Nor do I believe that any responsible critic of the government would dare suggest that we trim down our defence expenditures at this time.

Neither do I hear any serious suggestion of reducing the amount set out in the budget for social services. Liberal administrations over the past twenty years or more have built up a comprehensive plan of social welfare, establishing a basic national minimum of social security across Canada. It is a plan that is admired throughout the world. Surely no one will suggest that this long-range plan be interfered with, or that it be diminished in either scope or extent.

One thing that has impressed me since coming to Ottawa has been the activity of the Department of National Health and Welfare. The immensity of the measures taken by the federal government to provide hospitalization and health facilities across Canada, even in the most remote centres, has been an inspiration to many of us who are now in the house at this session for the first time. The record of the government and, in particular, of the Department of National Health and Welfare, ought to be a source of pride to every Canadian. There is not a home in Canada that has not benefited, and benefited to a large extent, from the huge grants made by the federal treasury for the construction of hospital and health centres across the country.

I would be very much opposed to any attempt to curtail or to restrict in any way these facilities, or any effort to lower our standards. I feel sure, too, that any such move would be opposed by the great majority of members in the House of Commons.

How, then, are we going to cut taxes? Are we going to begin deficit financing? Would anyone suggest that we move away from the method of financing that has been adhered to by this government over many years? I believe the Minister of Finance holds an invincible record of achievement in balancing budgets over many years, and in having been fortunate at the same time in reducing substantially the national debt. Indeed there are many who express the hope that eventually the national debt may be wiped out altogether.

I am convinced that, with the exception of a few grumblers, in their hearts the people of Canada salute the Minister of Finance and this government for the brave, efficient and careful manner in which they have tackled and are now tackling the financial problems of this country. When I was back home during the Easter recess I found the people still talking about the Prime Minister's world tour. They have expressed their deep admiration for his having undertaken this extensive trip abroad, spreading, as he did, the spirit of good will that Canadians have towards the divers peoples whom he visited.

The people of Canada are very much interested in the peoples of India, Pakistan, Ceylon and other nations in that part of the world. In considerable measure this is due to the long and close association between ourselves and these various nations of the British commonwealth. I find that there is widespread satisfaction that the Prime Minister visited some of the great countries in Asia, as an expression of the feeling of brotherhood and mutual understanding that exists and has existed over a long period of years between the people of Canada and the peoples of these lands.

Accordingly I desire to express the hope that the government will give the most careful study and consideration to developing and extending our participation in the Colombo and other plans, to assist in every possible way in raising the living standards of the peoples in these countries. It would seem that there is very much that we can do, and I would urge that every means possible be taken to cement our good relations with these nations of the commonwealth, and with other friendly nations of the East.

I understand that last year we contributed $25 million to the Colombo project. I would be in favour of substantially increasing this technical and material aid, after the government has had time to discuss measures in detail with those who are responsible for implementing the plan. I should imagine that a great deal by way of further technical assistance in the fields of agriculture, transportation and public utilities would be very much welcomed in the East at this time.

For example, could we not furnish a goodly supply of agricultural tools, implements and equipment suitable for use in the East, as well as a further supply of trucks, buses and other vehicles of transport? Probably this was one of the many subjects discussed with the leaders in Pakistan and with Mr. Nehru during the Prime Minister's visit.

Of course, any large-scale assistance would mean heavier taxes here in Canada. It simply could not be done without in some measure increasing the tax burden; but I believe the majority of people would favour doing this, taxes or no taxes. I find that the average intelligent working man or woman is quite prepared to pay taxes in return for increased security from unemployment. I believe that an intensive program of technical and material aid to commonwealth and other friendly countries in the East might help substantially to ease the unemployment situation that exists in some centres, including my own historic city of Brantford. I am quite certain—indeed I have no doubt—that I could carry my constituency on a program of expanded aid to eastern nations. I have reason to believe that the labouring people of Brantford as a whole would support it, and also the farmers and a substantial proportion of the remainder of the electorate. They would like to see the Prime Minister's good will visit backed up by a long-range program of assistance in developing countries in areas of the world that have been suffering for generations from a depressed standard of living. If we can, let us be of real assistance to our friends in the East. I am sure they need and would welcome our help just now, and it would be a way in which we could demonstrate our feeling of brotherhood toward the inhabitants of the several great nations that have been grouped together for so many years in our commonwealth.

The Christian heritage alone of this land impels us, Mr. Speaker, to set a real example of sharing some of our material prosperity with those less fortunate in this regard, but who probably are every bit as, if not more, sensitive to spiritual values. In other words, I should like to see the Prime Minister's trip followed up at this time by a plan in which the people of Canada as a whole could participate. The expressions of good will that have been advanced by the Prime Minister in Asia represent, I am sure, what is in the hearts and minds of the men and women whom I represent, and I venture to say that the people of Brantford are typical of the people of Canada.

For a long time my constituents have recognized the merits of the government's long-range domestic program, or else I would not have been elected to this house; but I believe they are now prepared to have Canada give a little leadership in a new field of endeavour, a field worthy of the very best that is in us, of developing the peaceful arts in many friendly nations, particularly those with whom we are united in the commonwealth, and of aid that is consistent with what we should like in our hearts to see accomplished in the vast and intensely interesting continent of Asia.

(Translation):

Mr. J. W. Dufresne (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, on April 6 last, the house assembled to hear the first budget speech of this twenty-second parliament.

[Mr. Brown (Brantford).]

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott), having announced with a sigh of relief that he was submitting the last budget of his political career, acted in such a way as to leave with the Canadian people and more particularly with those of the province of Quebec a souvenir that will never fade and which I shall later qualify in the appropriate terms.

The government of the province of Quebec, having taken concrete steps, that is having enacted legislation in order to regain the powers granted it under the British North America Act, the Minister of Finance deemed it advisable to devote an important part of his speech to that firm and energetic attitude of the Quebec government. At the same time the latter requested the right of deducting from the federal personal income tax the amount of the new provincial tax.

That night, all the people of Quebec were listening, and awaiting anxiously the reply of the federal government to the request made on their behalf by the provincial government which enjoys the full confidence of the people under its jurisdiction.

The Minister of Finance, with that arrogance he alone can display, in stating the policy of centralization of a government which has been already too long in power, was evidently pleased and extremely satisfied to announce that the taxpayers of the province of Quebec shall pay from now on a double tax in return for their love of their province and the protection of its autonomy.

That statement of the Minister of Finance and his blunt refusal to grant the legitimate request of the Quebec government, or rather of the people of Quebec, were met by a thunder of applause from the benches of the subservient Liberal members from Quebec. As I was put out of countenance, though little surprised, by the unheroic attitude of the Liberal members from Quebec, I felt ashamed for them, and it is with a heavy heart that I felt myself forced to leave this chamber.

Mr. Speaker, we are faced here with a problem which might have very serious consequences, and we should not deal with it lightly, or in a partisan spirit. This question must not be considered as a political one and treated as such. It is well above that level, for the maintenance of good will between all Canadians and of sound national unity are at stake.

Let there be no mistake about this. Any attempt made to deprecate the true patriotism which marks the Hon. Maurice Duplessis and to condemn him in the eyes of the other citizens of this country must necessarily mean condemnation of each and every citizen of the province of Quebec who will thus be subjected to this double taxation.

The premier of Quebec is by no means personally concerned in all this business. He is but the representative and the mirror of a whole group of people who remain true to the confederative compact and are jealously on guard to preserve their rights and prerogatives. He is merely protecting the interests of those who, in three successive general elections, have requested him to act as their spokesman and defender in the upholding and recovery of rights which are truly ours and which, as had been promised, would be returned to us in their entirety once the last world conflict had come to an end. In this field he is also continuing to uphold the autonomist policy so often attacked but so brilliantly defended by great Liberal chieftains, such as Messrs. Gouin and Taschereau, to name only those two.

What a striking contrast, Mr. Speaker, between the centralizing Liberal party of today and the one which was led by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that earnest autonomist whose memory they are about to perpetuate in the very city of Quebec by the erection of a monument.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier as well as Sir John A. Macdonald knew themselves that the Canadian confederation is a sacred pact between the two major groups of Canadians who laid together the foundations of this young country and who both contributed to its expansion and development.

And to the centralizers who think they are indispensable to the management of Canadian affairs, I shall recall that word of a great Canadian, of one of those who largely contributed to the realization of the Canadian constitution, Sir John A. Macdonald, when he declared:

> In this country there is no superior race, no vanquished race; there are only Canadians with equal rights.

I shall also quote to the government a statement made one day by Sir Wilfrid Laurier who proved thereby his great comprehension of the confederative pact and showed unequivocally his respect for provincial autonomy.

Sir Wilfrid said:

> There are but two minorities in the Canadian confederation, a minority of race and a minority of religion. To give to the central power, where the majority of race and of religion is found, the authority to encroach arbitrarily upon the jurisdiction of the provinces, is to destroy the legislative independence of the provinces and to make it but an illusion and a mockery.

> As a matter of fact, the cause of all the unrest that has upset our young confederation at different times has always been one and the same; it has always been the attempt by the central authority to encroach on provincial prerogatives.

These words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier are strikingly true nowadays. And when looking at those who claim to be his political followers, one is inclined to think that they should be ashamed to do so.

If the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), the hon. Minister of Finance and all those who now form the government would take their inspiration from the United Nations charter, they would find therein a section providing that any aggression by the strongest government against the weakest must be punished.

When people in Quebec are asked to abandon their rights, to give up their principal sources of revenue, or else to be taxed to the tune of $125 million more than the taxpayers of the other provinces, I say that this is aggression, cold war, or more precisely shameless blackmail.

The federal government states that because of its need for funds, it collects money wherever it may be found. The government thus adopts the principle of "What we need, we take".

In years past, other governments have done so. But they were compelled to abandon, at a certain moment, what they had seized without justification.

History has shown disquieting examples of what happens when the maxim "Might is right" is followed. In 1871, the chancellor of a powerful empire applied that principle. In 1914, the chancellor of the same empire—a great jurist he was, and moreover a professor of Roman law—told the British representatives that the treaty which guaranteed the integrity of the Belgian soil was nothing but a scrap of paper.

Another chancellor of the same empire ordered the conquest of weaker states, such as Czechoslovakia and Poland. I shall not attempt to relate what all that led up to for, alas! we know it but too well.

There are various kinds of aggression against a less powerful state. Whether it be armed aggression for the purpose of invading and dominating that state or whether it be aggression intended to weaken it financially in order to do away with it, it is nonetheless an aggression condemned by the United Nations charter and which should be punished.

In the matter about which we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, impudence and cynicism are carried a little too far. They say to Quebec: "You can always come here for a meeting because the government will always be happy to meet you." On the other hand, they are determined to maintain the position outlined in the budget speech. What tragic jokes this government can invent!

The province of Quebec owes nothing to the central government and should certainly not humiliate herself by making the first steps. The federal government is undoubtedly the aggressor, having little by little and by devious means encroached upon the autonomy of the provinces. I have never seen an assaulted person compelled to make excuses to his attacker. That is however the ridiculous idea of the Minister of Finance and of the government to which he belongs.

Mr. Lesage: Ridiculous.

Mr. Dufresne: All means seem to be good in order to reach an objective which is centralization and to attain eventually at legislative union, the most important step towards a condemnable socialism, from where only one further step would lead us to despicable and inhuman dictatorship. The time has surely come for the federal government to recognize its serious mistake and mend its ways, because the people, who cannot be provoked with impunity, will know, one day, how to punish, as they should be, those who in words and in deeds betrayed their trust.

It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, to listen to some of the speeches of our friends opposite, who, bluntly contradicting themselves, preach centralization to the French-speaking Canadians in the name of national unity. What nonsense!

First of all, I do not believe that anybody, in this house or out of it, has any right to lecture my compatriots in this fashion.

Mr. Lesage: You neither.

Mr. Dufresne: Let the minister not get discouraged; I will get to him later.

Mr. Lesage: That does not surprise me.

Mr. Dufresne: To preach national unity means to act in a patriotic fashion. I will allow no one in this country the right to give lessons in patriotism to Canadians of my tongue. No one has a right to give us lessons in this regard, especially not the defenders of centralization.

Mr. Lesage: And yet you need some.

Mr. Dufresne: Have not French Canadians more than once fought valiantly for the defence of those constitutional rights accorded them by the Constitutional Act of 1791? In 1812, for instance, many of our Quebec ancestors willingly shed their blood for the defence of our Canadian soil against the invasion of American soldiers. They then fought with the utmost energy to preserve for the British crown that important section of our important Canadian territory.

Later on we had two great world wars during which French-Canadian regiments won renown and added to the glorious chapters of our history. And if in the course of those bloody conflicts, the Canadians of my race had refused their co-operation, our army, our navy and our air force would have had been less numerous by one-third and our influence with the other nations would have been weakened to that extent.

If they accepted with enthusiasm to serve for the defence of their country on those various occasions, it was because they had to preserve for themselves and for the coming generations sacred rights that the fathers of confederation had guaranteed to them; those rights ensure their survival and their development in Canada, which belongs to them rightly since they are its pioneers.

The government, Mr. Speaker, is illogical on a vast scale and is becoming ridiculous in the eyes of all good Canadians worthy of the name.

For many years the economic future of a young country like ours, which needs all its resources, is being jeopardized by considerable, not to say extravagant, spending, for war and our so-called national security. I am not, mark my words, criticizing in any way the expenditures made for our defence and for the re-establishment of a just peace in the world. Yet it is an imperious necessity to practise what is being preached, as much here, in Canada, as abroad.

Why did we consent to take part in wars that, apart from costing us billions of dollars, have bereaved us of the best of our young people, of whom our country had a dire need for the conquest of its own destiny? Why did all Canadians accept so many sacrifices in the dark hours when the free world was in danger?

Why do we keep on giving money and bleeding ourselves white to ensure the protection of our land and defend ourselves against our common enemy, communism?

Also, why do we grant such help—greater help than we can afford, sometimes—to various countries in need of our assistance, for the purpose of maintaining among those populations the peace and freedom so many human beings are seeking?

All those generous measures, we take in the name of individual freedom, in the name of civilization, and in the name of democracy, which is so dear to the hearts of all Canadians.

And so, for a decade at least, we have been working so that other countries might win back their freedom and their sovereignty and live once more according to the great principles of democracy.

At the same time, however, right here in Canada people are endeavouring to undermine and to suppress that democracy which is essential to progress and national unity and so dear to all the nations which are longing for justice, peace and freedom.

The word "democracy" means, in my humble opinion: By the people, for the people, not by the people for its subsequent destruction, by the gradual suppression of their sacred rights for the benefit of centralization, which, as I said before, constitutes the first step towards the surrendering of all liberty.

The federal government finds itself condemned in the attitude it has taken lately toward the province of Quebec, by the loss of prestige and influence it has suffered in the other provinces of Canada. Let us not forget that, by weakening the provinces financially, we are working toward their eventual destruction. And those who are aware of the centralizing ideas in the mind of the members of the Canadian cabinet are in a position to guess their evil objective: the suppression of the provinces in order to achieve legislative union, which is prejudicial to all Canadians, constituting an irreparable encroachment upon their liberty.

No matter what those who advocate centralization may have to say, the province of Quebec is not seeking preferential treatment. It is only trying not to sign her own death warrant, and to keep those indefeasible rights which were granted to it by the constitution to which it was a party.

Mr. Speaker, a contract—and the pact of confederation is a contract—cannot be cancelled or even amended in any way without the consent of the contracting parties. Quebec never agreed to the amendment of the constitution. Therefore, if the federal government has any honour, it should respect such a precious document.

The government of Canada, taking upon itself the right of the more powerful party, availing itself of wartime conditions, negotiated with the provinces to get them to abandon their guaranteed rights or to rent, for a very definite period, certain taxation fields belonging to the provinces. I do not suggest that no one has the right to abandon his rights or to rent privileges that belong to him; however, I contend that those who want to keep unaltered what belongs to them should be free to do so.

Through means that I shall not qualify, but about which most of the signatory provinces are complaining, the government succeeded in violating the constitution. No infringement upon that constitution is permitted without the consent of all the provinces. It was in that spirit that the fathers of confederation drafted the pact. Therefore since the constitution has not been amended because the provinces have not agreed to do so, I contend that the federal government did not have the right of entering into those agreements or of renting certain taxation fields from the provinces.

Therefore, what the federal government has done in the matter has no legal standing and all the agreements signed and renewed up to this date are in themselves illegal.

Mr. Lesage: What a great lawyer!

Mr. Dufresne: The matter is so simple, Mr. Speaker, mere common sense; one does not need to be a lawyer to understand it.

Mr. Langlois (Gaspe): The man who does not understand does not know any better.

Mr. Dufresne: Well those who understand—

Mr. Gauthier (Portneuf): It is better not to say anything than to speak like that.

Mr. Dufresne: When will the federal government impose a penalty upon itself for having acted, as it has done since 1942, in a manner that is completely illegal. Since it will undoubtedly refuse to apply penalties against itself, the people will look after it themselves at the first opportunity.

The constitutional conflict between the central power and the Quebec government cannot remain unsolved because it is grossly unfair to the citizens of that province.

The leader of the opposition (Mr. Drew), true champion of provincial rights, appealed on two different occasions to the right hon. Prime Minister, asking him to call, with the least possible delay, a federal-provincial conference with a view to bringing about a solution to this distressing problem.

The Prime Minister has turned a deaf ear to these two appeals, which demonstrates in the first place his lack of co-operation and certainly, too, the way in which he seeks to approve and patronize this fatal policy of centralization. And before putting forward my own modest suggestion, may I be allowed, as one Quebecker to another, to appeal to him to bring to this serious problem the particular attention it deserves.

Let us forget all this petty politicking. Let us rather act as real Canadians devoted to the preservation of well understood national unity.

Mr. Lesage: That is the first sensible thing you have said.

Mr. Dufresne: That is the first time my good friend is of my opinion. The hon. Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources —and this is going to please him—in a well prepared speech, but one which echoed the feelings of his centralizing masters, has held that the proposal put forward by the hon. Leader of the Opposition, with a view to the convening of a federal-provincial conference before the end of May, was no immediate solution to this problem.

And yet, instead of playing the mathematician, in order to convince his colleagues of the cabinet that he was fit to manage the portfolio of finance, he could have suggested that which, in his opinion, could have solved the problem immediately and definitely. He did not do so, because he was afraid, no doubt, to spoil his chances with the government of which he is a member and which has no intention to try to solve the constitutional imbroglio.

In my humble opinion, there is but one immediate solution to the problem which requires Quebec taxpayers to pay a double tax:

1. A return by the federal authorities to logic and common sense which they have lost through too long a reign at the helm of the state.

2. The immediate and full respect for the Canadian constitution which guarantees unequivocally the rights of the provinces, thereby preventing a centralization nefarious to a sound democracy.

3. The will, on the part of the federal government, to stop considering Quebec as an illegitimate child within confederation.

Can we still continue to treat with contempt the numerous requests made by every important public body, such as municipal councils, chambers of commerce, as well as countless associations or organizations without any political character, that are asking for fair play for the people of Quebec and are also urging the government to come back to the great principles upon which the Canadian constitution is based. Could anybody remain indifferent when faced with the legitimate grievances of a whole people? It is up to the right hon. Prime Minister to answer that!

It is unfortunate that we did not hear more speeches on this issue by Liberal members from Quebec.

Mr. Lesage: They will come.

Mr. Dufresne: Before the Easter recess, they all boasted that they would defend the arrogant and uncompromising attitude of their government. But yesterday, when the session was resumed scarcely a score of French-speaking members were waiting anxiously for the question to be put, so that they might be spared the irksome task of making a speech. I am scarcely surprised by their changed attitude, for I know them well. They were back from their respective constituencies where they had been in a position to realize that the views of their electors did not agree at all with the policy of the government. One must then infer, Mr. Speaker, that the fear of the electorate is the beginning of their wisdom.

The province of Quebec is firmly opposed to centralization on very particular grounds; in the face of the present centralizing thrust, it may well fear the advent of a legislative union.

French-speaking Canadians have traditions to which they are deeply attached. They have customs and traditions of their own which it may be possible for them to safeguard through the guarantee offered to them by the Canadian constitution. They have a past of which they are proud, ancestors whose footsteps they want to follow. They have a deep love for the language of their forefathers and for the religion they have been taught on their mother's knees. They have an educational system adapted to their mentality and a culture which they have not refused to place at their country's disposal. Can such a valiant people as ours be asked or required to give up all this, to play into the hands of those whose only concern is to divide in order to rule? No, Mr. Speaker, and I appeal here to all well-meaning Canadians worthy of that name who constitute the great majority in this country.

Whatever one's language or religion, nobody can help being deeply impregnated with the traditions established by his ancestors. Every citizen wishes to keep his traditions, his language, his faith, his customs, and use them in the service of Canada.

When every Canadian understands that a glorious past cannot be sullied with impunity, the general harmony among all of us will be more complete, that will be all the better for this wonderful and promising country of ours, which we want to make even greater and more prosperous for future generations.

Let us be guided once more by common sense, let us act always and everywhere as real Canadians. We must respect what is dear to us if we want our country to become greater and to prosper.

In that way, Mr. Speaker, we shall live happy, in the closest harmony, each in his own sphere fulfilling the noble mission we have received from Providence.

When, with the satisfaction derived from the fulfilment of our duties, we shall be called into a better world, leaving to our children a country in which it will be pleasant to live in peace, harmony, justice and freedom, our descendants, with real joy in their hearts and the deepest pride in being Canadians, will be able to sing the first two lines of our national anthem:

O Canada, terre de nos aïeux
Ton front est ceint de fleurons glorieux!

(Text):

Mr. H. A. Bryson (Humboldt-Melfort): Mr. Speaker, yesterday afternoon two hon. members on this side of the house dealt in some detail with the very serious agricultural situation that has developed in Canada. In particular the hon. member for Jasper-Edson (Mr. Yuill) dealt with it at length and placed a great many very interesting figures on Hansard to substantiate the statements he made in that regard. While I am not going to take the time this afternoon to speak about this question in detail, I should like to take some time to deal with the over-all picture as it applies to agriculture and in particular to the condition of the grain farmer in western Canada.

I am very glad that I was able to visit my constituency during the Easter recess because it gave me an opportunity to speak not only to farmers but also to machine agents, garage men and a great many of the other small business people whom we find in every little town scattered throughout the prairie provinces. I was told in every case that their business had fallen off from 25 to 60 per cent in the last six months, owing of course, to the fact that farmers, because they are not able to market their produce, are not able to buy the things that they need. It only seemed to confirm what I had believed and what a great many more people believe, that a most serious situation has developed in our agricultural industry.

Obviously we are following the very same pattern that was developed prior to 1939 and the second world war. At that time we had the same conditions of surpluses, falling prices and lost markets together with an increase in the cost of production. Following the second world war our agricultural economy was cushioned against a very obvious recession in this country by the introduction of the Marshall aid program. Following that the recession was of course cushioned by the Korean conflict.

As I said a moment ago, we have learned nothing from the events of the last fifteen years and we are right back where we were prior to the outbreak of the second world war. We have reverted to the status quo of the 1930's. Somebody once said that a literal translation of the Latin, "status quo", is "the mess that we are in". I submit that as far as our agricultural economy is concerned we are back in the same old mess in which we were in the 1930's. I should like to mention briefly the impossible position in which our farmers find themselves in trying to work out plans for their production. I think it is something that is unique and it is something that a great many people do not seem to appreciate. This, we are told, is the age of the specialist. This is the age of the efficiency expert and, while a great many people do not like the sound of the word, this also is the age of planning.

No business can long survive in this country unless it gives a great deal of thought to planning for the future. The distance that these plans are projected into the future is limited only by the size and the scope of the particular industry coupled with society's need for the product that the industry produces. While that is true of all successful enterprises in this country, both in peacetime and in war, it does not follow that it applies throughout the agricultural industry, because farmers do not plan their production in the light of future prospects or future promises but rather on the basis of past experience. I might add that one of the yardsticks that farmers have come to use in their planning is that whenever the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) suggests a certain approach to a problem, if they do the opposite they find it is a good guide to what they should do in that particular year in which he makes the forecast.

The blame for this state of affairs cannot be placed on the shoulders of our farmers. They have no control over the cost of production, nor have they any control over the prices they will receive either on the domestic market or in the markets of the world. We have a pitifully small population in Canada.

We can never hope to consume all we produce. Why should we when two-thirds of the world's population is hungry and clamouring for food? Like a great many people, I believe that our whole approach to this problem of distribution is wrong. I believe the government is trying to reconcile its thinking in 1954 with its thinking back in 1934. I do not believe it is possible to do that. It is time we reversed the actions of the proverbial ostrich by pulling our head out of the sand and facing up to reality.

We must revolutionize our thinking concerning this problem of distribution just as drastically as we have revolutionized our production methods in this country. If our agricultural industry is to survive and take its place in our country's economy, we should and must plan for the future. Those plans must be based not only on our domestic needs but upon the needs of mankind everywhere, rather than plan as we now do on hope, mere chance and intuition, with our success dependent in large measure on our happy ability as individual farmers to outguess our neighbour concerning what to produce and in what quantities. The most urgent and important question of the day, so far as agriculture is concerned, would seem to be how long can we, as an agricultural nation, continue, without giving this problem of distribution the serious consideration it deserves.

Throughout the war the farmers were asked to produce in abundance. We did a wonderful job. We were told we had done something that had never been done before. We were told we were the salt of the earth and we had unlimited markets. But now we have an entirely different condition. One of the very significant things, and one that any amateur observer might question, is that in spite of the fact we are still spending in the neighbourhood of $2 billion for defence in the name of peace and world security, we are unable to find markets for the very large food reserves we have in this country. The reason, of course, is that we are spending this tremendous amount of money not for food but upon arms, aeroplanes and guns. We are shipping these things to people who are badly in need of food. In effect, we are saying to these people, accept these things and defend your poverty. When this does not have the desired effect, we throw up our hands in holy horror and in our stupidity say that these people are accepting communism, they are turning to communism.

We should not cut our production. I certainly hope our government will not be influenced by recent press statements attributed to the United States secretary of agriculture, Mr. Ezra Benson, in which he suggested the United States would like to see Canada cut her agricultural production. I think we can all go along with a statement recently made by our own Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) when he was speaking at a luncheon held in London, Ontario, on January 27 of this year by the federation of agriculture. He said:

> None of us wants to see food production curtailed or surplus food destroyed when there are so many hungry people to be fed. Indeed, as long as these people remain hungry there cannot be such a thing as a surplus, except in the economic sense. All our humanitarian and social instincts rebel at a policy of contrived scarcity and food destruction.

I certainly hope that will continue to be the policy of this government.

I come now to one item about which I am greatly concerned, and one which I investigated thoroughly when I was home over the Easter recess. It is something that we in this party have advocated for a long time. We believe that the government should take ownership of properly stored grain on the farm. We do not ask the government to pay the full initial price for this grain, but they should pay a minimum price for grain properly stored on the farm. We say that because the Canadian people are now being told that the grain that is piled on the farms in western Canada is a wonderful thing. They are told it is just the same as money in the bank. If times get tough or we get into another crisis, we will have this supply to draw upon, and we believe that is true.

However, we do not believe the producer should carry the whole burden of this so-called mountainous prosperity, as someone referred to it. Today the people of Canada are asked to bear the whole burden of defence. We are stockpiling armaments in the name of security and world peace, and the people are quite prepared to pay the shot. We say that food is just as essential to world peace and security as armaments. We believe it is only fair that all the people should help to carry that burden and not leave it to the producer alone.

There is another matter I should like to mention at this time, and I am expressing a personal opinion for what it is worth. From discussions I have had I know that a great many people in western Canada are in favour of the scheme I have outlined, but the farm organizations in western Canada are shying away a little bit from this idea of the government taking ownership of properly stored grain on the farm. I am suspicious of this, that the wheat board is saying to the farm organizations of western Canada, "If you are going to advocate this new idea and if you are going to try to push us into the position of buying this grain, then we will abandon the wheat board." And that would be a real disaster. But I am suspicious that this is the gun that is being held at the heads of western farm organizations.

I think the government should exercise some control over the cost of production, but I am not going to discuss that matter in detail today. There will be other opportunities for me to do so. However, I shall deal with one item in particular, that of fertilizers. I should like to comment momentarily upon two points discussed in debate on December 2 by the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne) who, I am sorry, is not in his seat.

On that date, replying to a criticism I had made in connection with what I called a monopoly in the sale of fertilizers in this country, the hon. member for Kootenay East said I had left the impression that farmers were being gouged. He intimated he was sorry I had made that statement, because he was afraid it would have an adverse effect on fertilizer sales. I am convinced the hon. member for Kootenay East did not make those statements without giving some thought to them, because I know he is concerned about the situation of the workers in the plant at Kimberley. I know the figures he quoted in the house had been submitted to him by the fertilizer companies concerned—because I have investigated the matter. I do not think the farmers in that part of the country from which I come had to wait until I came to Ottawa for me to tell them that they were being gouged, so far as their purchases of fertilizers were concerned. They knew about that a long time ago.

As a matter of fact, when I was home at Christmastime the farmers in my area were circulating a petition in which they asked their neighbours to pledge that they would not buy any fertilizers this spring. This was done with a view of bringing the high cost of fertilizers to the attention of the proper authorities. Fertilizer distributors in the district of Humboldt-Melfort told me only a day or two ago that they know now that their sales of fertilizer are going to be drastically reduced.

I was not in the house when the hon. member spoke and discussed the fertilizer situation, but I could tell from reading his speech that he has real sympathies for the fertilizer companies, and was not pleased with the nasty things I had said about them. I am not going to deal at length with this subject of fertilizers, but I shall try to correct two statements of the hon. member on that occasion.

First of all he said that in the years 1935 to 1939 it took 90 bushels of wheat to buy one ton of fertilizer. He then proceeded to point out that in 1952 it takes only 65 bushels to buy one ton. I would say to him in reply that in the years from 1935 to 1939 we were buying fertilizer for about $60 a ton and wheat was selling at less than a dollar a bushel. To be exact, the price of wheat was ·956 cents per bushel.

But what was the picture last year? Farmers who were able to market top grades of wheat found that they had to sell over a hundred bushels to obtain enough money to buy one ton of fertilizer. And, incidentally, these figures are from the dominion bureau of statistics and cannot be denied.

The other point made by the hon. member for Kootenay East was that because the fertilizer industry had sold 100,000 tons of fertilizer in western Canada this had meant an increase of 35 million bushels of wheat. I have made inquiries at the central experimental farm here in Ottawa. They have secured all available information from many experimental stations and from the hundreds of illustration stations scattered across the country, and it is their considered opinion that 15 million bushels would be an outside figure—and not the 35 million mentioned by the hon. member.

This just goes to prove once again that the fertilizer people will go to any length in an effort to becloud or muddle the thinking of people who are buying their product. I do hope that before this session is over this whole industry will be investigated under the authority of the Combines Investigation Act.

I was very happy indeed to hear the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) make a case for economic aid. I am not going to discuss the subject at length; but it was refreshing to hear the fine address he made this afternoon. In addition to the proposal I have made in connection with outright purchases of grain by the government, I would like to see this country accept sterling. This group has maintained over the months that sterling should be accepted. There are many places throughout the commonwealth where it could be spent; or, as we have suggested over and over again, we could invest it in Great Britain to help them rebuild their industries, so that they might produce more goods to offer in trade for our agricultural products. This would help relieve the great surpluses we find in agriculture today.

I should like to see wholehearted support for a world food bank as outlined by the food and agriculture organization of the United Nations. I believe these two things, coupled with what I have suggested previously, would go a long way toward relieving the stress and help cut down the surpluses we have in our agriculture. It would also go a long way toward establishing security and peace throught the would.

Mr. G. W. McLeod (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, in the few remarks I shall make in this debate it is my wish to bring to the attention of the government the need for greater financial assistance to the government of British Columbia in developing and conserving her natural resources. The hon. member for Kamloops (Mr. Fulton) made mention of this a few nights ago, and I should like to commend him for it, because I heartily agree with most of what he said. Of course I could not agree with everything, and particularly the fact that he cannot agree with the political convictions of the premier of British Columbia. However, I would remind the hon. member that it is not so many years ago that he and the premier of British Columbia were very close political buddies. Of course, that was before the time when our premier saw the light and renounced Conservative policy.

There is one problem that is a threat to Canadian unity, and that is the Ottawa tax view. It is interesting to follow the arguments of government members from Quebec who support the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) in the stand he has taken. Apparently the present government at Quebec is not very popular with government supporters in Ottawa. They are not afraid to make their views known, whether right or wrong.

However, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Bourque) upon the very strong plea for national unity he made when speaking in the house last night. I am sure that is one goal we must never lose sight of, and we as Canadians must at all times be prepared to sink our differences of race, religion and politics in a common desire to work in harmony for the welfare of Canada.

Now, what about this Quebec taxation problem? To my mind it is serious; but, Mr. Speaker, I believe it is strictly a family affair and a problem for the Quebec and Canadian governments to settle. It is a family squabble between these two members of the Canadian family and as such the rest of us would be well advised to keep out.

However, while speaking of this taxation question, there is one matter I must bring up. It concerns the defence department and the Department of Finance. I am thinking of members of the Canadian forces posted to stations in Quebec. These men and women, Mr. Speaker, are not in Quebec by choice—they are there in their line of duty. Yet, because they are in Quebec, they are going to be penalized to the extent of the income tax levied in that province. They will receive less take-home pay than those stationed elsewhere in Canada. This is an injustice. I trust that the ministers of national defence and finance will get their heads together and bring in a solution. If something is not done, I am sure that harmful and unnecessary dissatisfaction will result. I know of what I am speaking, for it was my privilege to spend a few days with my son and his family on one of our defence stations recently and this matter was brought to my attention.

Of the provinces working with the federal government under the tax rental agreements I am sure the so-called "have-not" provinces—the prairies and maritimes—are not dissatisfied. This leaves Ontario and British Columbia. So far as Ontario is concerned, I am sure there are many members of this house who will be able to speak for her. I am going to confine my remarks to my own province of British Columbia.

Our province, Mr. Speaker, comparatively speaking, is the fastest growing and the wealthiest in Canada; yet, strange to say, these two facts are causing us a lot of trouble. In the first place, our increasing population demands expensive services from the province; and in the second place, the federal government is receiving the major share of the increased revenues derived from our great wealth.

Since 1939 our population has increased by 55·3 per cent. The next highest provincial increase was Quebec with 32·2 per cent, while the increase for Canada was 27·8 per cent. This rapid increase creates a great problem for us. The people must be provided with roads, schools, hospitals and social services. In 1940, Mr. Speaker, it required $29·4 million to provide these services. In 1953 it required $145·4 million. This is a large amount of money for a fast growing province to raise, and many projects that are necessary for our people and that would assist not only British Columbia but Canada as a whole cannot be undertaken for lack of funds. Yet it is interesting to note—and I hope the house will remember these figures—that in 1952-53 the federal government collected the huge sum of $259,708,170 from corporation and personal income taxes and succession duties in our province. Many millions more were collected from sales, excise and other taxes. Mr. Speaker, this is only $21 million less than the total collected from the three prairie provinces—Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—and almost two and one-half times the amount collected from all the maritime provinces. I trust that the hon. members from these provinces will recall these figures when they are discussing the estimates, and compare their allotment with what British Columbia is receiving.

I want to refer briefly to P.F.R.A., railways, highways and conservation of natural resources. Agriculture in British Columbia is expanding along with our total economy. In 1940 our production from this source was valued at $52 million. In 1951 it was $160 million. The end is not in sight yet. There is room for tremendous development, but expensive irrigation and reclamation projects are required. Irrigation is needed in all except the coastal and northern parts of the province. There are large tracts of land that may be reclaimed in areas subject to flooding, as well as in semi-arid areas.

Here I would like to acknowledge expenditure by the federal government of $2,429,939 for work done under supervision of P.F.R.A. engineers in recent years. These projects included, mainly, reclamation and irrigation of blocks of land for war veteran settlement and have proven very satisfactory for the settlers and are of great benefit to the communities and to the province generally.

I would like to see the federal government extend the full benefit of P.F.R.A. to our province. Many of our areas are short of water for home use and the assistance of P.F.R.A. would be very welcome in constructing dams, dugouts, and other facilities for the provision of water for domestic and farm purposes. Then, too, we have individuals who are spending large sums of money for sprinkler systems where the water is pumped from adjacent lakes and rivers. In the vicinity of Vernon we have possibly the largest privately-owned sprinkler system in British Columbia, if not in Canada. It is used mainly for watering pasture land on one of the largest mixed farming ranches in the interior. It has cost the owner thousands of dollars without any outside assistance. Under P.F.R.A. he would have been entitled to engineering assistance and to grants in aid of purchasing the necessary equipment. It is to promote and encourage further installations such as this that we are so concerned that P.F.R.A. should be extended to British Columbia.

I am going to quote you some of the expenditures made by the federal government in aid of such projects as I have been mentioning. Under the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act, 1945, the sum of $8 million will be spent in reclaiming lands around the bay of Fundy. Up to the end of 1952, Manitoba had received $4,277,688, Saskatchewan $35,276,000, and Alberta $28,049,108, under P.F.R.A. British Columbia has received absolutely nothing. So, Mr. Speaker, when I ask that these benefits be made available to our province and that we share in the millions being spent to promote agriculture, I believe you will agree the request is not unreasonable.

We have a railway problem, too. The P.G.E. has no coast outlet, but I am glad to report that the provincial government has instituted steps to complete the line from Squamish to Vancouver. However, there is great need to have the line extended from Prince George to Dawson Creek. This is a distance of 271 miles and is beyond the ability of the province to finance. For years we have heard of the need for a Peace river outlet. Mr. Speaker, this is it. From Dawson Creek to Vancouver via P.G.E. would be 516 miles shorter than between the same two points via Edmonton. This road, if completed, would also give a short rail route from the Peace river bloc to the port of Prince Rupert via Canadian National railway from Prince George.

I am not going to take up the time of the house to enumerate the great developments which would follow in the wake of a rail outlet. At the first opportunity hon. members might obtain a map of the Peace river area and while looking at it think of the press reports they have read concerning gas and oil development, mineral finds, and the thousands of acres of virgin timber in this last great bloc of unsettled farm lands. This great area, truly an inland empire, endowed with natural wealth almost beyond imagination, is waiting for a rail outlet to the seaboard. Such an outlet has been promised for years. The federal government has built railroads and through the C.N.R. are operating roads in almost every province of Canada most of which can never hope to serve Canada, as a whole, to such great advantage as a road from Dawson Creek to the Pacific coast. I might mention a few of these such as the Hudson Bay railroad, the Northern Alberta and Newfoundland railroads. We are not asking for favoured treatment. We are merely asking that the federal government assist us in providing this worth-while railroad which would be a great stride forward in the development of our northland and a necessary artery of defence in time of war.

Coming to highways, we all realize that this primarily is a provincial matter. However, we have conditions which make road building the costliest in Canada. Our settlements are scattered and connecting highways, through sparsely settled districts and for long distances, are necessary. We have a very heavy outlay for bridges.

I was rather amused to learn that the federal government disclaims any responsibility for financial assistance for the construction of the Marpole bridge at Vancouver. Yet I find that this same government is committed to spending $30 million on a causeway from Cape Breton to Nova Scotia. We need roads to tap our mineral and forest wealth. We need roads into our far north, and we need a trans-provincial highway from Alberta through Yellowhead pass to the coast, as well as the trans-Canada highway through Revelstoke. All these roads will mean wealth for Canada and greater tax return for the federal government. We think the federal government should share the cost.

As regards conservation, I was greatly interested in the reports of the conference on natural resources held in this city last Wednesday and Thursday. On April 22 the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) stated that resources had put Canada in her position as a top-ranking trading nation and that these resources are vital for defence. He is also quoted as saying:

> We must consider as urgent any measures which will improve the status of conservation of our natural resources. With the exception of minerals they are renewable and it must be our aim to keep them renewed. The approach must not be lethargic, but dynamic.

He went on to say:

> . . . conservation requires a combined effort at two levels—federal and provincial.

Truer words were never spoken. On April 23 the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) addressed the same convention. He quite plainly showed that he is alive to the necessity of conservation, and he stressed that the federal government is fully alive to the situation and that such a program had become "not only a matter of protecting future generations but of ensuring progress in the present time." He mentioned several acts sponsored by the federal government in carrying out its role as regards conservation, both independently and in co-operation with the provinces. He stated:

> Conservation cannot be taken for granted. It must be pursued constantly and with vigour.

After reading the reports on this conference and noting the keen interest shown by these ministers representing the government of Canada no plea of mine need be added. All I ask, Mr. Speaker, is that this government re-examine the brief presented by the government of British Columbia, especially with regard to forest conservation, and take immediate steps to implement a federal-provincial plan which will be in the best interest of all concerned.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote the words of a great Canadian, the late Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King. Speaking before the dominion-provincial conference in 1945 he said:

> What then are the aims or the objectives for which we are seeking the best possible dominion-provincial relations? To express them, very briefly, we are asking the provinces to go into partnership with the dominion in a broad program for the development of our national heritage, and the welfare of the Canadian people.

I would like to assure this government, Mr. Speaker, that the people and the government of British Columbia are prepared to do their part in developing the great resources within their borders in partnership with the federal government of Canada.

Mr. S. R. Balcom (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, in entering this debate on the budget may I first add my commendation to the personal tributes paid to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott). In his customary manner he presented a weighty and complex subject matter with clarity and a minimum of abracadabra. In an atmosphere in which words and speeches favour length rather than directness—and I trust hon. members will forgive me—his is a refreshing approach.

The review in the budget speech of the financial arrangements with the provinces and their background was most timely. The tenor of the minister's remarks demonstrated his appreciation of the very great difficulties encountered in arriving at an equitable distribution of tax revenues. Emphasis was laid upon the varying positions of the provinces because of the uneven distribution of wealth, and it was suggested that even if it were possible for the federal government to vacate the corporation and income tax fields, the poorer provinces might still have difficulty in obtaining enough revenue for necessary services. That, I am afraid, is only too true.

In effect then the federal government in the role of tax collector goes some distance in redistributing the fruits of toil of all Canadians. There is one aspect of this problem which has not in the past and still does not receive sufficient attention. The disparity in wealth among the provinces is not simply the result of differences in resources. That some areas are blessed with a greater abundance of natural resources than others cannot be denied. Nor are we of the less wealthy areas prone to envy because of such differences. But we could rejoice much more wholeheartedly in the good fortune of others if the price of nationhood were more evenly distributed.

I am not going to talk at any length about the reasons, quite apart from nature's bounty, why Canada's wealth has become unduly concentrated. Others have dealt most ably with the results of tariff, transportation, and other public policies. Suffice to say again that the disconcerting tendency for the benefits to accrue to the centre is the result in part at least of policies both of government and of business. In all fairness a price should be paid by the areas which benefit most from these developments.

During this session a suggestion was made in the other place that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be given to the four western provinces. A rather sudden conviction has grown in some provincial minds that the residents of the north should have the benefits of provincial government, of particular provincial governments. I should hate to be cynical but I wonder whether the vast riches of the northland are a factor in this view. Perhaps it is history repeating itself with just a change in costume. The proposal is not unlike the handling of the public lands of the west at one time held by the dominion government.

I refer to the financial arrangements which attended the entry of the four western provinces into confederation. As the public lands of the new provinces were to be retained by the dominion, it was considered only fair that a special subsidy should be paid in lieu thereof. Subsequently these lands were turned over to the provinces but the subsidies were continued. That was a fairly good bargain for the western provinces, I should say. I speak of this matter now not in envy of those provinces which would benefit from that arrangement but because it is an example of what has happened over and over again in different spheres as this nation has progressed.

Let us consider this latest suggestion. For many years the taxpayers of Canada have carried the responsibility of providing the necessary services for the Yukon and the territories. When the time comes for dividends to be paid, should they accrue to any particular province? I believe firmly that the population of these frontier areas should have every consideration. After all, they are the pioneers and their spirit is in essence the spirit which has developed the country. In due course we may have an additional province. When the circumstances warrant, let these hardy and deserving people run their own affairs within the sphere of provincial jurisdiction. In the meantime there is no reason why the returns from an all-Canadian investment should accrue to Victoria, Edmonton, Regina or Winnipeg rather than to Halifax.

In fact, I believe a stronger case could be made for Nova Scotia and the other maritime provinces. We brought into confederation a great heritage, economic, political and social, which has continued to enrich the national life. That is as it should be, but the flow ought not to be in one direction only. As we are bounded almost entirely by the sea, we cannot expand westward or northward. Instead, we have sent and are sending our people to develop the other great provinces. Should not a part of this last frontier then be the hinterland of Nova Scotia? I would ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Harris) to give this matter his serious and thoughtful consideration.

The Minister of Finance gave an informative and, for the most part, a heartening review of the state of the nation. There is an uncomfortably large amount of unemployment, some of it seasonal and some of it owing to difficulties in particular industries. But in spite of a slackening in business activity generally, the over-all prospects for Canada are encouraging. In the light of this fact, the minister has refused—and I believe quite wisely so—to implement restrictive measures to protect special interests. No one wishes to minimize the personal hardship, the calamity, that loss of employment brings to a worker and his family. There are very few people—members of parliament or others—who do not feel that every effort should be made to keep unemployment to a minimum. But there is a vast difference of opinion as to the best way to achieve this end.

The most obvious action suggested when unemployment increases is the extension of social security benefits, but let us look at the proportion of our total expenditures which goes into welfare now. In round figures, our total budgetary expenditures amount to $2½ billion. Of this amount, $750 million is for family allowances, veterans benefits and other welfare and social security services. If we add to this amount $340 million paid out of the old age security fund, we have almost 40 per cent of non-defence expenditure going into this field. In addition, we have unemployment insurance. No one can honestly say that this government has not made provision for the hardships attendant on unemployment.

The only way in which we shall be able to support these commitments and continue to raise the standard of living of our people is by continuing growth. The government must—and I am sure it will—direct a proper proportion of its revenues to positive development. In the long run that policy will provide more jobs and more security than will overzealous paternalism in respect to individual problems.

The minister has done well to resist the pressures for tariff or customs increases. Canada, as the third largest trading nation, has a very large stake in increased world trade and in the progressive removal of restrictions thereon. For example, with respect to wheat, picture the difficulties there would be were tariffs or embargoes added to the marketing difficulties resulting from keener competition from other producer countries.

Because of our dependence on United Kingdom markets we in the maritimes are perhaps more familiar than are others with the results of tariff restrictions. Our lumber industry has already suffered because of the lack of effective demand. Our fresh fish industry, which finds its main market outlet in the United States, has so far weathered the gales of competition. But the pressure across the border for higher tariffs hangs like the sword of Damocles. I cite these instances to support my view that in Canada's own interest we must not seek tariff protection to save us from fair competition.

Of particular interest to Nova Scotia and Halifax was the optimistic note in the budget speech with regard to the progress towards freer trade in the United Kingdom, Europe and the commonwealth. There are signs, too, that our great neighbour to the south is lending an ear to the pleas for removal of trade barriers. Foreign trade is vital to our economy and it is the lifeblood of our ports. It is as important, Mr. Speaker, to the dockworker in Halifax that trade be kept moving as it is for the wheat farmer to sell his wheat abroad.

It is important then for the government to bend every effort—as they are doing, I must say—to expand trade. One factor of great consequence is speed and efficiency in transport. That is one justification for national participation on a very large scale in the St. Lawrence seaway and power project. The development of ports important to international trade meets the same test, namely the involvement of national interest as opposed to purely local or provincial interest. That is why we have pressed for an over-all plan of development of the port of Halifax. We are not satisfied simply with the provision of berths and other facilities as business demands. The long-range plan and its implementation should precede and stimulate business, not just follow after.

This past winter there has been great pressure on available facilities at the port of Halifax. It is granted that some of it was due to the dock strike in New York, a situation which may arise at any time. But there has been an increase in traffic of such proportions as to justify a new look at the problem and the addition of many more facilities in the port of Halifax.

It goes without saying that adequate railway facilities are a "must" for balanced port development. I have on other occasions drawn attention to the need for enlargement of the Nova Scotian, the Canadian National hotel in Halifax. We have also pressed for replacement of the outmoded building which houses the baggage, express, mail and other departments of the Canadian National Railways. This building has now been declared a fire hazard, which is serious enough in any circumstances, but when you consider the special role that Halifax plays in our scheme of national defence the urgency for a fireproof modern structure is the more apparent.

In this connection I would also urge early consideration by the Canadian National of the construction of a suitable railway station at Armdale. To those who know the location of the railway tracks encircling the city en route to the waterfront, the logic of such a move will be quite apparent. The population of that area in Halifax city and county has grown very quickly in the past decade. The city itself has increased by 100 per cent while the suburban area has more than doubled its population to easily some 20,000 people.

The location of a suitably equipped station here would in any circumstances be a justifiable service to the residents of the area and would relieve congestion in downtown Halifax. In time of emergency it would be invaluable in facilitating the evacuation of people from the western and northern parts of the city.

I do not wish to be an alarmist, Mr. Speaker, but I do feel that the awful possibilities of the dreadful weapons of war now developed call for a new approach to many problems. The position of Halifax as a target area, with all the attendant dangers, calls for immediate action on the first-class bottleneck at the Fairview underpass. The Canadian National Railways, as the main agency responsible for the situation there, should initiate action on this problem. The city of Halifax and the province have a responsibility too, but I believe that its importance in civil defence warrants that the initiative be taken by the dominion government through Canadian National Railways.

I now have a more pleasant suggestion to make regarding the railways. Canada's stature in the eyes of other nations has grown considerably in the past. We are made aware of this in the contributions of our Canadian representatives at international meetings, in the attitude of the diplomats and representatives of other countries towards our people and in the general appraisal of Canada's economic strength.

In the United States in particular there has been of late a veritable flood of articles and stories on Canada and its resources and development. In most cases these have emphasized our mines and natural resources; in short, Canada is presented as a land of opportunity. That this view has acceptance in many circles is borne out by the volume of United States money flowing into Canadian development. The almost phenomenal success attending some of this, particularly in oil, has strengthened the current of optimism. But I suggest that there are some dangers inherent in this situation. It is to be hoped that we may some day get out of this era of a semi-war economy. When that day comes it is natural that there will be bad years as well as good. Then we shall need in our neighbours, as well as ourselves, a faith in our country based on a well-informed public opinion.

I am afraid, sir, that some of the information about Canada which is being disseminated, particularly in the United States, is not tempered by a realistic appraisal of our problems, of the difficulties of a country which is in fact a thin line strung across a continent, of a relatively small population which must pay high for an extensive transportation system in order to survive as a nation, and of an economy where a relatively few staples bulk large in our total production.

The effect of the glowing prospectus of Canada as it appears to potential investors in the United States, and not tempered by a realistic appraisal of some of our problems, may make them wonder about Canada's contribution to NATO. In fact, questions have been raised and statements have been made which indicate that we are not regarded so well in all quarters for our contribution to mutual defence. In the light of all this, Mr. Speaker, and in view of its importance to our future development, increasing efforts should be made to present Canada as a whole to our neighbours. This is no counsel of gloom; it is prompted by a desire that our position be on a foundation firm enough to weather any minor storms which sooner or later we must encounter.

One small way in which this might be accomplished is to provide United States congressmen and senators with passes on Canadian railways. It is not suggested that the railways should bear the expense of this educational project but rather that they should be reimbursed for any small cost involved, and it would not be too large. We might then encourage better understanding on the part of those responsible for defence expenditure and procurement, for tariff and other trade regulations.

This better understanding would surely spread further among the people. It is very important to us that the average American does not feel short-changed on his foreign commitments. An appreciation of what Canada is doing and the removal of the impression that we are not doing our share is more important than the attraction of more investment capital at the expense of realism.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. 423 (letter J-14 of the Senate), intituled: "An act for the relief of Mary Joy Thomson Asselin".—Mr. Hunter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): Is anybody acting for the sponsor of these divorce bills?

Mr. Knowles: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Applewhaite): If not, the bills will stand. The business for the hour for private and public bills having been exhausted, the house will revert to the consideration of the business interrupted at five o'clock.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Macdonnell.

(Translation):

Mr. Fernand Girard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, a while ago, the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Hansell) speaking of the Quebec income tax said that it was a family problem between Quebec and the federal government and that it did not concern the other provinces. However, he recognized that this was greatly unfair to the servicemen stationed in the various camps of the Department of National Defence in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, that attitude well shows how the government deals with this matter. It is considered unfair that a serviceman from another province should be compelled to pay that tax. Yet they do not seem to realize that it is just as unfair to compel 300,000 taxpayers in the province of Quebec to pay a double tax, although they do not benefit, like the citizens of the other provinces, from the subsidies paid under the fiscal agreements, because the province of Quebec refused to sign them. It was expected that in the budget debate Liberals would try to refute all the arguments advanced in favour of the deduction of the tax and of the prior right of the province regarding that tax. They all took up the gratuitous assertions made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) himself. Mr. Abbott's speech was met by thunderous applause from the Liberal members from Quebec, even when he stated that the prior right of the provinces in the field of direct taxation had no legal or concrete basis.

Before stating—yet without attempting to prove it—that the province had no prior right, neither de jure nor de facto, maybe the minister neglected to read the whole of the British North America Act and more particularly sections 91 and 92 which deal with this question. It is true that section 91, subsection 3, states that the federal government shall have the right to raise money by any mode or system of taxation. However, the beginning of that section, and all the government members failed so far to deal with this point, provides that:

> It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons, to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, in relation to all matters not coming within the classes of subjects by this Act assigned exclusively to the legislatures of the provinces.

And then, in section 92, it is expressly stated that:

> In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming with the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated:

Nobody has attempted to equate "exclusive" with "parallel", as the government supporters who have spoken on this matter have tried to do.

The hon. minister not being in a position to rewrite the British North America Act seizes upon a motive which ill conceals the evident contradictions of his statement. He holds that to admit this principle would put the treasury in an intolerable position. In other words, he says: I cannot hand over his own garden hose to my neighbour; I need it to water my own garden. So he immediately claims that, as a charitable necessity, the poorer provinces must be helped, forgetting too that the 15 per cent we are claiming is less than what would be offered in a fiscal agreement, and that the other provinces are left with the lion's share, the amounts received by them under these agreements being in no way affected.

The hon. minister made another declaration, with a more serious implication, when he said that the province of Quebec did not exercise its right to direct taxation before 1940. Does that mean that only those prerogatives granted under the British North America Act which are regularly resorted to are applicable and that the provisions of the federative act which have not yet been applied lapse and become inoperative? And yet the arguments used by the Minister of Finance lead to such a conclusion.

The hon. minister claims moreover that should he grant the 15 per cent deductibility of the Quebec tax, it would be tantamount to recognizing in principle the province's right to grab 30, 60, and even 100 per cent of his direct taxes. In the first place the request concerning deductibility covers but 15 per cent and nobody as yet has asked for 30, 60 or 100 per cent. In the opinion of the hon. minister, to grant the deductibility of 15 per cent would provide recognition of the prior right the provinces have in the direct taxation field.

How is it that 5 per cent, which is provided by a federal statute, does not constitute such recognition? Can the hon. minister tell us at what percentage provincial priority begins; is it 6 or 6½ per cent, or what is it? It is of course obvious that the government is trying to hedge and veil its centralizing policy. As a matter of fact, the delirious enthusiasm of the socialists, which was only equalled by that of the Liberals at the time of Mr. Abbott's statement, is perfect proof that the centralizing attitude of the government in fiscal matters is at the same time a victory for the socialists, who want an almighty central government.

For the Liberal members from Quebec, this policy had a disadvantage, for it was disagreeable to almost the entire voting public of that province, who had and still have a word to say about their own autonomy. The hon. minister had thought of everything. He had a ready solution, which gave to his colleagues from Quebec the opportunity for numerous speeches on non-pertinent matters. He, indeed, invited the prime minister of Quebec to a conference with the federal government. But his invitation was accompanied by a straight rejection of all deductions.

That was a door, but one that was padlocked by the refusal of any concession. Such a contradictory offer has nothing in common with preceding statements according to which "no pressure, direct or otherwise, would be applied to obtain the signature of a province". The same minister declared last year that one of the advantages of the fiscal agreements was that their success did not depend on the unanimous approval of the provinces. Twelve months later, he says that if one province refuses to participate, the treasury will be placed in an intolerable position. Completely unmindful of any contradiction, he is ready to see the taxpayers of Quebec carry the burden of an additional $25 million in taxes, as a punishment for their refusal to sign. He even says that the federal treasury could not tolerate our exercising our freedom of choice.

Everybody is talking of a federal-provincial conference. I am not against any sincere wish to understand each other, and every possible means to achieve such an end must be taken. Has any thought been given to the real alternative which faces a province which has refused to be a party to a fiscal agreement? There is only one: exercise her own right to tax. The province had to choose between $115 million under a fiscal set-up or $15 million, which is roughly the equivalent of 5 per cent. Such is the freedom of choice which is offered!

Much more, the charitable duty of helping the poorer provinces has been invoked, even though to do so a province would have to accept double taxation, although in fact, the said province never requested 100 per cent of its direct taxes, but only 15 per cent, which is less than was offered under the fiscal agreements.

Not one hon. member has taken upon himself to refute the arguments advanced in this house by several hon. members about the prior rights of the province to direct taxation. All have adopted the rather easy way of resorting to gratuitous assertions and advocating a federal-provincial conference, while stating that they would adopt an uncompromising attitude.

The Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage) summed up all those arguments, which he repeated after the Minister of Finance, by using a charming comparison, quoting as an example a child who refuses to obey his father's order to stop pulling the cat's tail. The child replies that it is the cat that is pulling. Using the same comparison, I must say that it applies even better to the other side of the argument. The child is well entitled to pull the tail of a cat that drinks his plate of milk. I easily see the federal government in the role of the father who scolds his child because he is pulling the cat's tail, without stopping to ask himself to whom the plate of milk belongs.

The passing-of-the-buck policy will not succeed in diverting attention from the real problem which consists in determining to whom the plate of milk belongs or whether the province has a prior right in the field of direct taxation. It is therefore useless to find in that attitude and in the dollar and cents consideration of a centralizing government reasons for decentralization and then pretend to have fulfilled the intentions of the fathers of confederation, who cannot have set up a central state at the expense of the autonomy of the provinces which united to make up that state.

When one reads the numerous speeches made before confederation, one is astonished to see that the fathers of confederation were unanimous in their desire to protect the autonomy of the provinces. Since our contemporaries do not seem to agree on the constitution or on its interpretation, I took the liberty of making a pilgrimage, as I say, among the fathers of confederation, a few years before the pact was signed, to see what they really had in mind. When they drafted the British North America Act, they evidently intended to grant to each legislative body the necessary prerogatives to ensure the preservation of the two races and of the two cultures that were facing each other under the union government, following the uprisings of 1837.

One has but to read the speeches of those who drafted our constitution to become firmly convinced that the British North America Act is the outcome of the unanimous and clearly-stated desire to safeguard the autonomy of the two races which faced each other in Upper and Lower Canada, and to guarantee the rights and the prerogatives of the other provinces which might join confederation. May I be permitted for this purpose to quote some of the statements of the fathers of this confederation which it is our duty to preserve and respect. We will find in these statements the proof that confederation was a treaty between two races, a pact ratified in London, whereby each province agreed to join the other, not so as to disappear but in order to form a central government having jurisdiction over questions of general interest.

It never came to the mind of the fathers of confederation to form a centralizing government which would deprive the provinces of all their sources of revenue, limiting their role to that of a passive distributor of the liberalities of a central government. If such had been their intentions, the provinces would never have put up with it.

Immediately following confederation, in a speech delivered on May 17, 1867, Sir George Etienne Cartier said, as reported on pages 523 and 524 of the record of his speeches:

Confederation was a compromise and still retains that character to-day. There are many who went as far as to say that we did not quite know what to expect from Great Britain, that though a good constitution had been drafted at the Quebec conferences, the imperial authorities would change and alter it at will. You know what happened. We went to Britain and we were treated fairly, generously. All our representations were taken into account. These Canadians, said the British ministers, have come to see us with a ready made constitution, agreed upon after friendly agreement among themselves, the result of a mature discussion of their interests and needs. They are the best judges of what is good for them, let us not undo what they have done and let us approve their confederation.

And even before confederation, most of the great parliamentarians of the day were moved by the same spirit.

On February 6, 1865, the hon. the attorney general, Mr. Macdonald, in a speech which I quote from the debates preceding the adoption of the British North America Act, said:

The whole plan of confederation as worked out by the conference and submitted by the Canadian government for the perusal of the people and of the legislature is in the nature of a compromise. I do not hesitate to repeat it, there has been of necessity many mutual concessions.

Such a project may be considered as a treaty passed between the different provinces, and if any serious change is made thereto, every one of the colonies will feel itself absolved from the implied obligation to deal with it as a treaty and will be in a position to amend it ad libitum so as to suit its own views and interests; all our works will remain fruitless and we will have to start all over again and to work out a new treaty.

As evidenced by page 81 of the same volume, Sir Etienne Tache stated, on February 8, 1865:

I must declare that the scheme must be assented to or rejected as a whole because it is the result of deliberations not only of the Canadian government but of the other provinces as well.

And the Hon. Mr. Brown spoke along the same lines when he said:

Whether we ask for a parliamentary reform for Canada only or a union with the maritime provinces, the views of French-Canadians have to be ascertained as well as our own. This plan may be adopted, but no plan not assented to by both sections could be approved.

And the Hon. Sir Etienne Tache said on February 16, 1868—I am quoting from page 243:

Thus, honourable gentlemen, the proposal now before you is not so much the work of the Canadian government, but the collective effort of delegates from all provinces in the form of a treaty.

On the motion for second reading of the bill, in the House of Lords, as stated on page 27 of a book by the Rev. Father Ares S.J., entitled "Confederation: Law or Compact", even Lord Carnarvon said the following:

The Quebec resolutions are, with a few small amendments, the basis of a legislation that I now have the honour to introduce in parliament. These resolutions have been agreed to by all the British provinces of North America and the legislation based on these resolutions must be accepted as a treaty of union.

To those facts which establish that the treaty has really been a pact between the provinces can be added the opinions expressed on direct taxation even before confederation by the fathers of confederation. I shall quote the statement made on February 7, 1865, by the Hon. Mr. Galt, which can be found on page 68 of the report of the debates preceding the passing of the British North America Act:

The transfer to the general government of all of the main sources of revenue and—with a single exception, that being the field of direct taxation—of all the means which can be used to have the industry of the nation help meet the needs of government means—the fact will be evident to anyone—that part of the resources placed in such a way at the disposal of the general government will have to be used one way or the other to fill the gap which inevitably will be created between local revenue and local expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, that statement was made in 1865, even before the pact of confederation was signed. I have been unable to find any other statement which at that time could have been interpreted otherwise. It seemed evident that in the spirit of the fathers of confederation the right of direct taxation should be reserved solely for the provinces.

Mr. Paquette, who then represented Lower Canada, made a speech on March 8, 1865, reported at page 795 of the debates on the confederation of the British North American provinces. He was speaking precisely of direct taxes. After compiling various figures, he predicted a deficit of $485,078 for Lower Canada. He stated:

Mr. Speaker, how can we overcome that deficit unless we resort to direct taxation?

And he added:

The Minister of Finance states himself that the federal legislature will have the power of resorting to all taxation systems it may deem advisable to meet the expenses of its administration, while local legislatures will have to resort to direct taxation for the same purpose, if their revenues are not sufficient.

Mr. Speaker, surely one cannot find more frank statements. Well, those statements were made even before confederation, even before the present discussion was started, even before the government decided to negotiate fiscal agreements, and we find that, in the minds of the fathers of confederation, the provinces had a prior right to direct taxation.

And yet, the Minister of Finance dares contend that the question of priority has no basis, neither de facto nor de jure. Section 91, in the light of section 92, either states a general rule, or constitutes a contradiction, which is inadmissible on the part of the fathers of confederation, particularly in view of the fact that the numerous debates on confederation dealt with the necessity of safeguarding the prerogatives of the provinces. Reading the speeches contained in that volume, one finds that, for all purposes, no speaker suggested that any of the provinces could keep its prior rights, its prerogatives. We cannot admit that they made a mistake, or intended that section 92 should be inconsistent with section 91.

We must therefore admit that section 92 sets forth exceptions to the general application of section 91; that it is a clarification of it. And section 92 does state that direct taxation is exclusively a provincial matter. The word exclusively is important. No mention has been made of it in the speeches of the government supporters since none of them could interpret it in a sense favourable to centralization.

After confederation political figures of every party continued to make statements to the same effect. Here is what I find in the debates of the House of Commons for February 18, 1925. The Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe is quoted as follows:

> I may say that every time an important amendment was made it was first submitted to the provinces. I do not think there are many cases in which an amendment has been asked to the British North America Act without communicating with the provinces. If it was done it was only in cases where there could be no possible objection on the part of the provinces.

And the same gentleman also stated:

> It is somewhat strange that one of the parties to the convention should study the methods of amending the pact without inviting the other parties interested to participate in the discussions.

Again the Right Hon. Mr. Lapointe stated, on February 18, 1925, once more according to Hansard, at page 300. The minister of justice mentions those words, after quoting the opinion of Mr. Churchill stating that the construction of "pact" given to the confederation by public men in Canada was also the one of the public men of the empire. Then he adds: "That was the interpretation accepted by every interested person in Canada, it is the opinion of the public men in the provinces."

Perhaps it will be alleged that precedents altered the constitution without consulting the provinces. I shall answer through Lord Sankey who stated in 1932, as found in Appeal Cases, 1932, pages 54 and 70:

> Inasmuch as the act embodies a compromise under which the original provinces agreed to federate . . . the process of interpretation as the years go on ought not to be allowed to dim or to whittle down the provisions of the original contract upon which the federation was founded, nor is it legitimate that any judicial construction of the provisions of sections 91 and 92 should impose a new and different contract upon the federating bodies.

As may be seen, Mr. Speaker, there has been a continuity of views amongst all members of parliament of both parties which have held power since confederation; but all this has become part of the fiscal structure of confederation. Yet some have tried to consider the confederation act as a law, subject to modifications, which could be changed without consulting the provinces.

Well, I know, of course, that the partisans of centralization do not all support the principle of the central government's supreme authority, which enables it to amend the confederation act without the agreement of the provinces; but they approve of a federal law reducing to 5 per cent the rate of our direct income taxation in the provinces. They are blaming a province which did not ask Ottawa's permission to exercise its own right. They dare not deny a province the right to levy taxes, but they dictate a limit to this right. They admit provincial taxation, but as a supplementary one, that should raise no issues with the federal treasury.

Yet it was a distinguished Liberal, the Right Hon. Ernest Lapointe, who declared on February 1, 1937, as may be seen in the official report of the house—and I quote:

> The dominion is the child of the provinces; it is not their father. The fact of saying that we have jurisdiction does not give it. The assumption of powers which we do not have does not give those powers to us.

Let those who have nothing but words of praise for the enticing offer of subsidies pretend now that provinces do not lose their autonomy! The other provinces are now asking the government to raise the subsidies they receive.

The hon. Minister of Finance, if he were premier of a province, would not accept such a situation. I base this opinion on nothing but his own statement to the house last year when he dealt with the question of fiscal agreements, as can be ascertained on page 2131 of Hansard for February 19, 1953. I quote:

> This might never be possible. As a matter of fact, I am by no means sure if I were a provincial minister of finance that I would agree to such an arrangement. I am afraid I would find something repugnant in the idea that an outside body—a board, council or commission—would be investigating provincial affairs and determining the size of the fiscal needs for a particular period which amount in turn would be the measure of the federal grant.

Who can say that within 25 years we shall not have a socialistic government, a government that will decide the fate of provincial autonomy which is supposed to be guaranteed by a pact that can be broken by the more powerful? No Liberal member seems to have seen that; they have acted against the spirit and the letter of confederation and contrary to all the statements and policies of their own party. Instead they saw in Mr. Duplessis, who resorted to the Quebec provincial tax, an opponent whom they wished to corner, even at the cost of penalizing a province at the rate of $25 million per year, thus placing its citizens in an unfair situation and in a position of economic inferiority as far as the other provinces are concerned.

If the Liberal party is so sure that its policy is the right one, why does it fear so much a vote on the matter? Why does it try to transform it into a mere question of dollars and cents, thus shifting the true meaning of the issue? Why have they chosen to act in a way that is evidently contrary to the interest of their electors, preferring to submit to party discipline? Why did the socialists applaud with so much energy? Why did the Quebec press condemn them unanimously?

They have also tried to cast a smokescreen on the matter by speaking of national unity, Quebec isolationism, ultra-nationalist separatism and so forth and so forth.

I am asking you, Mr. Speaker, who is working against national unity? Is it those who urge compliance with the Canadian constitution or those who try to amend it to suit their centralizing policy? The province of Quebec has always found a safeguard to its autonomy within the very framework of confederation and she will never give in to the tantalizing appeal of fiscal agreements. It safeguards national unity within the framework of the act of confederation, which is the constitution of our country.

We shall not cease to labour the point, Mr. Speaker, until we obtain fair treatment for the province of Quebec, even though the only ones to rise to its defence may be the independent members, as well as those too few Conservative members and the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. LaCroix).

[Mr. Girard.]

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to digress a moment to ask the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) whether the government will soon grant supplementary unemployment insurance benefits.

There are in my constituency nearly 1,000 families who have not received any income since April 15. It is perhaps true that the present situation is merely temporary, but I nonetheless support the request of the labouring people and would ask the minister to keep on paying these benefits for a few weeks at least to families without any means of support.

(Text):

Mr. W. G. Blair (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, the recent budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) some three weeks ago has given considerable time for analysis. One disappointing feature was the fact that there was no tendency revealed to offer assistance to depressed areas.

In former debates in this house I have placed before the house the position of industries in the Ottawa valley and the effect of unemployment, particularly in my own constituency. The Ottawa valley has been known for years as the centre of the textile industry and in that area there is probably the largest concentration of this industry in all Canada. Many mills are closed down through lack of orders, and in the area of Carleton Place and Almonte there are 700 persons unemployed. The greater proportion of these are textile workers. In the month of March last there was paid out in unemployment insurance a total of $40,000. Owing to the fact that steady jobs were not obtainable unemployment insurance has been of marked assistance during a most difficult period.

As opposed to the textile industry it has been argued that the industry has overexpanded; it is not efficient; and has not kept up to date in manufacturing methods. But one very important fact has been entirely ignored, and that is the defence aspect. On former occasions I have placed the position of the Canadian textile industry before this house, but in all fairness to the industry I feel an answer should be given to the arguments which have been presented against it.

Let us first take the question of overexpansion. The industry now supplies less per Canadian than it did before the war, but the per capita share of the domestic market, which has supplied the imports, has almost doubled. There were five per cent more looms and seven per cent more spindles in factories in Canada in 1951 than in 1939. However, it is to be noted that our population during that period has increased by 24 per cent. It is not true that textile mills have otherwise expanded. It is quite easy to understand the difference between labour costs in Britain and Canada, but it does not fully explain the increase in the United States imports. It is difficult to understand why such an argument can be used in reference to an industry which never at any time had more than approximately 70 per cent of the domestic market.

I would point out that in the period from 1935 to 1939 just prior to the last war Canadian mills supplied 73 per cent of all fabrics which were used on the domestic market. This has now dwindled down to 51 per cent. The domestic market for textile goods is greater than it was in 1939, yet the Canadian industry has a smaller percentage of domestic sales than it ever secured prior to 1939. If the industry over the last three years had been able to retain the former percentage of its domestic sales it would still be in a sound position and could recover its costs and make a profit.

In regard to the charges of inefficiency, I would again point out that this industry since the end of world war II has spent something like $450 million in modern equipment with the object of bringing production in the industry to a high point of efficiency.

It is also charged that the industry has not kept up to date in the use of various fibres. Fabric producers inform me that they are prepared to make goods of any form of fibre, and will produce fabrics of rayon, nylon, or wool, either alone or in mixtures of two or more fabrics, if there is a demand by the Canadian public for such goods.

In spite of the fact that all efforts have been made to produce an effective industry, it is becoming increasingly apparent that our industrialists find it impossible to compete with goods made in overseas countries because our wages are two or three times higher than their wages. In so far as competition from the United States is concerned, distress prices can be established giving a fictitious price, but which have the object and purpose of undermining our Canadian customs structure. It is nonsense to believe that under present conditions Canadian industry can meet price competitions from abroad. No amount of efficiency in industry can cure such a situation. It is only natural that in countries of comparatively low wages goods can be processed and placed on our market to sell more cheaply than our own domestic production.

In so far as wages are concerned, to meet foreign competition would mean a serious reduction in our own wages. Reductions in wages would mean that the Canadian public would not be able to purchase in the amounts to which they have been accustomed. It is due to our buying power that our standard of living has progressed to the point where it now stands. Unemployed workers are unemployed customers, and unemployed customers will mean that more goods will be left unbought, resulting in piled up surpluses or, on the other hand, more unemployment.

On March 4 I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gregg) to state the policy, if any, the department has considered for the re-employment of textile workers in areas of closed factories throughout Canada. In reply the minister said, and I quote:

> When any worker applies to his nearest employment service office for employment, a full record is taken of his work experience, and this information is available in matching men with jobs not only in the immediate locality, but in Canada as a whole. This means that when employment opportunities develop in other industries and those applying for work have suitable qualification, the applicants are referred to them. This applies to alternative employment opportunities which develop in their own immediate areas, or to those which become available in other areas, if suitable workers are not available locally.

In view of the minister's answer regarding unemployment, it is interesting to study the results of a survey conducted in a depressed textile area in New England. This research was conducted by the bureau of business and economic research of Northeastern University of Boston. The object of the survey made a year ago was to find out the position of displaced textile workers. Workers over 45 years of age were having a particularly hard time in finding new jobs. Eighty per cent were drawing unemployment insurance. The majority of the re-employed were earning less than before, and many had been downgraded from skilled to unskilled qualification with a loss of seniority, and very little chance for advancement. Diversification had helped, but new industries are filling jobs with newcomers in the labour market instead of displaced textile workers. Of the first some 156 workers checked, only 5 per cent found jobs in new industries.

In one area in New Hampshire, a town with one mill and 1,500 population, the closing of the mill made idle 200 workers. Some workers were re-employed in a leather products firm which moved into the mill building. Two years after the shut-down a third of the 200 laid off from the woollen mill were still out of work. For the other two-thirds who got jobs, the average period of employment was about five months. Thirty per cent got textile jobs elsewhere, some as far as 64 miles from home; 50 per cent took jobs in a leather products company with downgrading and less pay, and 20 per cent got a variety of other jobs.

The problem of unemployment in the textile industry is serious, and the continuing maintenance of the textile industry under adverse conditions is extremely difficult.

If Canadian textile manufacturers are to maintain their position in the domestic market, there should be full realization of their attempt to do so in competition with other countries with lower wage standards and cheaper production costs. The present adverse conditions in which this industry finds itself cannot be entirely overcome by improving the efficiency of production. As I pointed out, they have spent $450 million to improve efficiency and to lower costs. It is becoming apparent that if these mills could retain their pre-war share of the domestic market, it would lessen their difficulties because production and volume are necessary to make business a profitable operation.

I again bring the position of this important industry to the attention of the government. I am fully aware of the desirability of exploring all possibilities and channels of international trade. When I spoke on this question earlier in the session, as reported at page 402 of Hansard, I stated:

> I do not believe it is advantageous to the economy of this nation nor do I advocate a high protective tariff policy for this or any other industry, because such a device can only provide stability for an uneconomic unit at unwarranted high cost to the Canadian consumer of the products which the industry produces.

At that time I suggested that a study be made of the duty on all fabrics coming into Canada. The textile industry is not the only industry which today finds itself in difficulties with regard to foreign imports. A careful analysis should be made of Canadian industry, and this analysis should take into account the consumption level of the domestic market, price structures, production capacity and, most important of all, the element of defence.

There are many manufacturers in Canada who do not worry about foreign competition, but they are worried about foreign industries using the Canadian market as a sales outlet for distress goods. There is little protection against foreign goods offered in Canada below the competitive price here or in the country of their origin. Countries exporting to Canada do this to avoid disturbing their own home market. Textiles, stoves and refrigerators have been principally affected.

As far as tariffs are concerned, they should not be so low as to cause failures of efficiently operated Canadian businesses, nor so high that inefficient producers could still remain in business. If such an approach could be made to the problem of Canadian manufacturers, then it could be reasoned what industries should be protected, the amount of their protection, and the position of other industries which are not entitled to any protection at all.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that a board consisting of trade officials, and research and efficiency experts would be an advantage. Such a board could make inquiry into the causes of failure, or of inability to meet competition of certain industries, and make recommendations to increase efficiency or suggest certain changes in trade agreements which would enable such industries to manufacture in a competitive market.

I now approach the problem of another type of industry which has been manufacturing in Canada for many years. This industry was developed in early years by Canadian manufacturers and, according to the requirements of that time, was confined principally to the making of stoves. Since that time the industry has kept up to date in all modern developments in heating and has expanded in various factories throughout Canada. Employment dropped by 26 per cent and business prices are down 17 per cent since last year. Canadian manufacturers in this line—and I include refrigerators—are supplying less than half the domestic market in Canada. The position of our Canadian dollar has had its effect because it now commands up to 3 per cent premium. When United States money had a 10 per cent premium it acted as a protection for the Canadian manufacturer.

In the year 1952 the United States exported 2·7 per cent of the total production of gas ranges in that country. Production is much greater in the United States than it is in Canada, for in the same year manufacturers there produced 38 units for every one sold by Canadian manufacturers in Canada. Another 2 per cent of the United States production would destroy any further business of the Canadian manufacturer in this line. At present, merchandise of this type is coming into Canada at prices which are very low even in the United States. Apparently it is the practice for United States manufacturers to sell several carloads to a distributor in that country at a low price. This low price is the one which is used for duty purposes in Canada for single carloads or when selling to large retailers or distributors in Canada.

Canadian manufacturers are looking for a fair market value to be used for duty purposes. If that could be obtained, Canadian manufacturers could carry on and would not find the competition too severe from merchandise which is coming in at prices which are very low even in the United States. The valuation for duty is the crux of the matter. In order to meet competition, Canadian manufacturers would favour a method in which the value for duty would be the fair market value of similar goods sold for home consumption under fully competitive conditions averaged over a six-months' period in the country of origin.

Gas ranges averages show that imports received over 80 per cent of the market, and the same percentage would hold good for oil space heaters. The Canadian manufacturer is at another disadvantage in that manufacturers in the United States can spread their die and tool costs over large quantities of a model on account of the large market. In Canada where the market is about a tenth as large as that in the United States, the die and tool costs are high. This situation is shown in the fact that in 1952 2,085,385 gas ranges were sold on the United States market while 55,407 were sold on the Canadian market. Therefore it can be appreciated that unit costs of Canadian manufacturers would be much higher. It only requires a small percentage of United States production of gas ranges sold at low prices in the Canadian market to flood our market and embarrass our Canadian manufacturers.

It is to be noted that due to the building of natural gas pipe lines across Canada natural gas will be available to Canadians at low prices. Unless some relief is given to Canadian manufacturers in this line, very little of the market for gas ranges will be available. Some change will have to be made in customs regulations to place them in a competitive position. At present the United States stove manufacturer is able to sell at prices in Canada that have made heavy inroads in the Canadian market. As in the case of textiles, we should again consider the element of defence. Plants of the type I have mentioned engaged in the manufacture of stoves, etc., are well equipped for the fabrication of steel. If it were necessary these same plants could convert rapidly to the production of defence material.

There would seem to be no plan to deal with unemployment. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) told a delegation that if they lived in a depressed area they should move to another area where they could get work. The Minister of Labour stated in answer to a question I asked regarding unemployed textile workers that the federal government was willing to co-operate with provincial governments regarding the location of new industries. The present unemployment stems from federal government policies. In the Ottawa valley, where there has been a concentration of textile factories, there should be an all-out effort to place new industries. Conditions are ideal for manufacturing in this area, and this should be considered in conjunction with a policy of decentralization.

So far as meeting competition is concerned, taxes add to the cost of production and our industry is again placed at an unfair disadvantage. Not only the industry suffers but unemployment is created. High corporation taxes will obstruct industrial growth and industry will not find it profitable to take risks. Excessive taxes do not permit sufficient earnings for industries to expand. The buying power of the nation shrinks resulting in unemployment and the further curtailing of industrial expansion. Increased consumer buying power would stimulate industrial expansion and create more jobs which would be available to those who are unemployed at the present time. Steps taken towards lowering the taxation against production costs in industry would help our industries meet competition not only in the domestic field but also in the export market.

It is to be regretted that there is no mention of economy in the budget. Every year the government finds that the Canadian taxpayer must produce more money. In 1952-53 they required $4·6 billion. In 1953-54 they required $4·9 billion and again there was an upward move to $5 billion in 1954-55. I point this out in view of the fact that defence expenditures will be down $126 million. Last summer we were given to understand that taxes would be reduced in accordance with defence expenditures, but instead of being reduced $126 million they are actually down about a third of that, or $40 million. Taxes can defeat their own ends, and if they are levied at too high a rate they can decrease production and expansion in industry and in the end produce less revenue than somewhat lower taxes. Certainly the corporation tax at 49 per cent leaves little room either for industrial expansion or to meet foreign competition.

I am concerned about the surplus of farm products in the United States. The grand total is over $2·7 billion in value. Included in the list are dairy surpluses, $382 million; vegetable oils, $235 million; wool, $62 million; and grains, $1·91 billion. Under their present program part of the surplus could be used as a strategic reserve. The dairy surplus is held in the form of butter, cheese and dried milk, but even if they retain part of the surplus as a strategic reserve the rest will be sacrificed, and there are indications that it will be disposed of at a loss.

It has already been proposed to get rid of some of this surplus by greater sales to foreign countries at market prices which are below United States prices. In so far as the Canadian dairy farmer is concerned, there is no likelihood nor possibility of the export of their products to the United States. This again brings up the question of the British market. The Canadian dairy farmer is already under severe competition from edible oils. The only market of which the dairy farmer is assured is the domestic market, and even this is under competition. Lack of suitable markets will mean uncertainty in the industry which will be reflected in lack of buying power for the products of Canadian industry.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. R. R. Knight (Saskatoon): It is always an interesting event in this House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) brings down his budget. I have often said, and I have often written, that I feel it is the night of nights in the House of Commons when the people of Ottawa show some interest in the proceedings of this house. I suppose these people are, to some extent at least, representative of the people of Canada. On budget night, therefore, they usually crowd the galleries and even stand up, something that I never quite understood because I know they could get the main points of the budget just as easily and as quickly if they stayed at home. However, for some reason they come.

I believe it was noticeable this year that there were very few people here on budget night. I take it they expected practically nothing, and if I may say so, that was just about what they got. It was a very tame budget. There was nothing inspirational about it, and I imagine that is one of the reasons we have not had many inspired speeches. The minister will forgive me—

Mr. Abbott: Are we going to get one now?

Mr. Knight: —if I say that other people have told me they are getting accustomed to his cyclical budgeting. Some people have even ventured to say his are political budgets. People naturally supposed that this was not a year in which anything might be handed out to the Canadian people. When I say "handed out to the Canadian people", that is not a proper term to use because we know that any relief we get at budget time is as a result of money which we have already contributed to the public purse. A government has no money except what it extracts from its people.

At any rate, we were faced with a budget of $4,600 million, of which 43 per cent was allocated to defence. Even while the minister was speaking with his usual optimism—it is a great thing to have optimism, and I wish we could have it with some justification at the moment—I could not help but think about the state of the country. This was brought to my attention when I was at home during the Easter recess. One could not help but notice that it was not a spirit of optimism which prevailed.

One or two of my bank manager friends talked very seriously about the situation, and pointed out how slow business was, and how credit had been curtailed, particularly at the country points which are serviced by the wholesalers in my city. This curtailment of credit had forced the merchants to go on a cash basis, and their customers were suffering a great deal because they did not have money to purchase things. Many farmers had the equivalent of money, for in many cases their granaries were bulging with wheat, but as this house knows very well it has been difficult to sell that commodity in recent times.

At one point during the journey home I saw twenty railroad workers who had been discharged on that particular date getting off the train. My own city is rather susceptible to that sort of unemployment because it is a railway centre. Business conditions in the country are generally reflected by the business that the railroads are doing. Of course, this extreme optimism, which is characteristic of the Minister of Finance, is not confined to him. I suppose the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Howe) might be called the supreme optimist of Canada. One or two other cabinet ministers are optimists too.

I recall certain optimistic speeches that were made by cabinet ministers in my city just before the election. There were five of them who visited my town in the period before the election, and with my usual modesty may I point out that I am now returning their visit. They were very optimistic at that time, and could see no reason for gloom. I notice the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), our new and junior cabinet minister, is also optimistic. I note in a clipping I found this morning in a Vancouver paper that they actually call the junior cabinet minister the prime minister "designate". The article says he is in no hurry to take over, and I would suggest that is a good idea on his part.

The Secretary of State was very optimistic about the state of the nation and particularly in regard to export trade. One comment in reply to his optimistic remarks in this paper was to the effect that preliminary figures issued by the bureau of statistics showed that exports for the first quarter were actually down from the same period in 1953. However, the Secretary of State says this:

> I am a politician, not a business forecaster, but I do not mind saying export trade is holding up very well and shows no sign of setback.

The two articles were side by side or nearly so in the same paper.

Just as a personal note, and it has no bearing on the question, I should like to comment on the statement of the minister that he is a politician and not a business forecaster. He had been talking about the hon. member for Vancouver South (Mr. Philpott) and the hon. member's remarks concerning radio and the private ownership of television. According to the Vancouver paper, the minister said that he and the other cabinet ministers always listened very attentively to members of parliament such as the hon. member for Vancouver South and that the government always listened to what members of parliament have to say, especially when they are members supporting the government. I would suggest that statement from the junior member of the cabinet proves that he was right when he said he was something of a politician rather than an economic forecaster. However, I did not take the statement of the minister too seriously.

I should like to comment now on the statement that export trade is holding up and the fact that our trade generally is good. We in this group, of course, have always been known as being full of gloom. If the minister would study the statistics put out by the dominion bureau of statistics he would find that the figures do not bear out his statement as to export trade, but they would bear out his statement that he is not an economic expert. This D.B.S. bulletin of April 26, 1954 in my hand has to do with the same export trade the minister was talking about. It says:

> There were 66,274 cars of revenue freight loaded on Canadian railways during the week ended April 14 as compared with 73,227 in the same period of 1953, bringing the cumulative total from the beginning of the year to 969,605 cars as compared with 1,052,441 a year earlier.

Those of us from the west are interested, of course, in grain loadings. I see in the third paragraph of this same bulletin a reference to reduced loadings of grain. Well, we do not have to be told about that. The paragraph to which I refer is as follows:

> Reduced loadings of grain, miscellaneous car loadings and less-than-carload merchandise contributed to a drop of 1,722 cars in the western division to 22,912 cars for the week.

Then it goes on to say that coal shipments were up to the extent of 209 cars.

Well, that is not a particularly bright picture. Yet, our cabinet ministers go around the country trying to keep the people cheerful and to keep them satisfied with the administration that happens to be in office. For instance, during the Easter holidays the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Gardiner) was out in the west. May I say I was pleased to see him in his seat today, and to note that he has made such a good recovery from his recent illness. He always seems to thrive on political activity, and perhaps that is one of the reasons he is looking so well after the Easter recess.

Perhaps I shall return to that point again. Meantime I should like to refer to a clipping I have obtained that deals with the subject of credit buying, and appears in this evening's issue of the Ottawa Journal. It bears the heading: "Credit Buying Hits New High at $1,836,000,000." And that is in a country, Mr. Speaker, where we are supposed to have everything, where we have more God-given natural resources than any other country in the world. Yet we cannot buy the proceeds of our own production, and have credit buying to an amount of $1,836,000,000. The article says:

> The amount of money Canadian consumers owed for the things they bought on time rose by $59,000,000 to a new high of $1,836,000,000 in the final quarter of 1953.

Does anyone suggest that the people took a sudden splurge of extravagance in that particular time, or does it not indicate that they were short of purchasing power? The article says:

> A Bank of Canada survey, contained in the bank's monthly statistical summary, showed that the rise in debt continued in most sectors of the consumer economy—with the exception of buying on time through finance companies which largely finance automobile sales.
>
> Consumer borrowing from banks and other credit institutions was up, and so was buying through the use of charge accounts and instalment plans in retail stores.

I suggest that is not an indication of a very healthy state in our country at the moment.

I should like to say a word or two about the budget itself. I suppose the main feature was the reduction of the excise tax from 15 per cent to 10 per cent on certain goods, and in addition to that the abolition of the 15 per cent excise tax on some goods. This latter group consisted chiefly of luxury items such as electrical supplies, if those can be classified as luxury items. May I say that they are luxuries for a great many people in our country. Then, furs came under this same category.

However the income tax remained the same, and the 10 per cent sales tax was not changed. I thought as I read the items that some relief might have been given on the necessary articles of daily use. Anyone who will study these items, with particular reference to furs or even electrical equipment, will find that relief is given on goods that are purchased only once or twice in a lifetime, or on those which many people cannot afford to buy at all. I should have liked to see more relief on the smaller items, the day-to-day purchases of the ordinary family. These however appear to have been neglected. The items on which the excise tax has been reduced are those which people of moderate incomes either do not buy at all or buy only once or twice in a lifetime. The relief on the smaller items is so small that it will never be handed down to the consumer. For instance, let us take the small reduction on the price of the gas, or whatever it is called, that is used in the manufacture of soft drinks. The reduction is so small that it certainly will not amount to as much as one cent a bottle in the price to the consumer, and will be absorbed at some other point, perhaps in the profits of the wholesaler or the manufacturer

As I have said, there is no relief in the income tax schedule. It remains the same; and so does the sales tax. I was glad to note that the minister saw fit to reduce the taxes on municipally purchased and used machinery. For many years in this house I have been suggesting that if we want to encourage small towns to have proper fire-fighting equipment there should be no taxes levied against those machines. I congratulate the government and the minister upon having given this measure of relief.

However I am not so happy about the sales tax on other items, because I feel it is inequitable. This is true, of course, in respect of all sales taxes. They become a heavy burden upon the people in the lower income groups. When a man is spending practically his total salary on food and clothing, when he is paying rent and raising a family, practically the whole of his income is subject to sales tax. The people of Canada generally do not know that they are paying this sales tax, at all. And that is my second objection, namely that such taxes are hidden.

Unfortunately we have a sales tax in Saskatchewan—and I hope they will be able to get rid of it some day. However there is some excuse in the provinces for putting it on, because they do not have the wide taxing powers of the dominion. But when a man pays the provincial sales tax he pays two or three cents over the counter and is perfectly conscious of the fact that he is paying that tax. On the other hand he knows nothing about the dominion sales tax. He simply pays his bill over the counter, the tax having been imposed at the manufacturer's level, and he does not know that he has been mulcted of that particular amount. As I have said, this tax falls heaviest on those who are least able to pay.

Another objection I have to the budget is that there were left in the taxing structure certain injustices perpetrated the year before. One of the most amazing of these features, and one hardest to explain, because it is somewhat technical, is the fact that a man who draws his income solely from dividends on corporation shares pays no income tax at all, with the exception of the small tax he pays to the old age pension fund. That is something that is almost incredible to most people. I do not wonder that they have difficulty believing it.

The day before yesterday when I made out my income tax return I discovered that —hon. members will laugh at this; all right, let them laugh—I was able to deduct $4.40 or $8 something, I have forgotten, not, sir, as a deductible amount but I was able to deduct that amount of money actually from the tax which I was assessed. To me that was an amazing thing. I think it is wrong. The minister of course will say that the funds have already been taxed in the hands of the corporation, and that if we were to adopt my suggestion to tax it, it would be double taxation. I do not want to go into that argument although I believe that I could probably expose it as a bit of a fallacy. I do not mean it is a fallacy that the money has not already been taxed. But in its relation to individuals, when we are talking about the income coming from investment or coming from work, and showing there the contrast, then I say there is an injustice. As a matter of fact, while the man who has an income of $10,000 derived in the way in which I have indicated would pay practically no income tax, it is also true that the man who worked for an income of $10,000 would have to pay an income tax of $1,650, or something of that sort, assuming both were married and had two children.

As I say, people in the country, audiences, are simply amazed when that fact is drawn to their attention. Some alteration should be made in it. The other inequity of which I was thinking is the fact that there is a ceiling upon the amount of contribution we make to the old age pension fund. Certainly the method by which it is done is quite contrary to our own philosophy in this particular group. I need hardly relate how it is done, although there may be a few hon. members who are not acquainted with it. Hon. members no doubt know that under the famous 2-2-2 formula the 2 per cent additional tax is put on the income of each individual paying taxes for the old age pension fund, to supply pensions for himself or for other people or for both, as the case may be. Therefore, if you have $1,000 taxable income you pay $20. If you have $2,000 taxable income you pay $40; if you have $3,000 taxable income you pay $60. Hon. members would expect it to go on and rise so that when you got to $4,000 or $5,000 taxable income you would pay a proportionate amount. But that is not how it works. In other words, there is a ceiling, and when you have $4,000 taxable income you do not pay in proportion to your ability to pay; you simply stop right there, and if you have an income of $10,000 or $20,000 it does not make any difference, you pay the little sum of $60 only into the old age pension fund, in spite of the fact that you yourself are entitled to $40, the monthly pittance, that we pay to old people who have no source of income at all.

There are those privileges to those people. I know the minister does not so consider them. He is thinking about the whole thing and the collective picture, the actuarial basis and all the rest of it. I am thinking of the human beings who are affected by that particular thing. Some provision should have been made in this budget to remove that ceiling. Along with that there should have been some remission of the sales tax with which I have already dealt.

We would have liked to see higher exemptions in the taxation of the lower level incomes. I think I remember my leader suggested $1,500 for a single man and double that for the married couple. One might say: We need the money; why should we remit taxes of that type? Well, the thought that occurred to me when I began to talk here tonight was this matter of the general picture. It seems to me that the general picture needs some expansion of the purchasing power in the hands of the Canadian people. I do suggest that some remission of these particular taxes would give us a bit of a boost in the matter of putting extra purchasing power in the hands of the people, and it might have boosted our economy and kept it going for at least some time longer.

There is a question with which I have not yet dealt, namely, defence expenditures and the consequent or necessary taxation. I shall admit, of course, that in the present state of the world we must have defence expenditures, but I am just wondering whether we might not have hoped for some reduction; and the question arises in my mind as to how effective any defence expenditure can be in these days, in the light of the new and awful discoveries that science has inflicted—and I use the word deliberately—upon the world. It seems to me that if these mechanisms of science are so awful as they are said to be and if we are committed to spend as much on defence this year as we were last, then we have to face one of two things: Either we must completely change our whole method of defence, if indeed there is any good in doing that, or else we are simply pouring money down the drain by continuing to perpetuate methods of defence which were all right ten years ago but which, in the light of the discoveries to which I have already referred, may be of no value at all.

I am going to suggest that even from the point of view of defence we might be better off in the defence of ourselves by giving to the world, and particularly to some of the underprivileged countries of the world, a feeling of our sympathy and sincerity in the form perhaps of material gifts or certainly technical assistance; and that the best defence that we can have, particularly from the point of view of the Asiatic people, is to give them that knowledge of our willingness to help. We take the view that the creation of friendliness and good will in the world is of more value in the promotion of peace than is the handing out of bullets and of guns and of the implements of war.

That is all I wish to say at the moment, sir, in regard to the budget but I do want to say something about our disappointment—and this applies particularly to the Saskatchewan members of our group—that nothing is being done, and no provision is being made for expenditures in the matter of the Saskatchewan river dam. The people of the province were disappointed. I have been talking to them lately and I know that. I shall not go here into the arguments, shall not describe the drought cycles which have bedevilled our economy over the years in Saskatchewan or instance our need for a greater population, and for a greater diversification of farming, and for the consequent stability that a nation or a state or a province is assured by the residence of people upon the land. I know the right hon. member for Melville, the Minister of Agriculture, was in my own city among other places during the Easter holidays. I have always envied the minister's plausibility and his ability to convince people. It has been one of the reasons for his political success. I noticed in my local paper, the Star-Phœnix, of April 17, a heading which says: "Outlook for dam better." Do you know why these people are convinced that the outlook for the dam is better? It is because the Minister of Agriculture told them so. All right; that proves the thing I have just said. I would point out of course that he has been telling them that for many, many years. I suppose he still thinks it is good for another election, and I would not wonder but that it is. I shall quote a line or two of this clipping:

> The federal government's viewpoint toward the proposed South Saskatchewan river dam appeared to be getting "more and more favourable."

This is quoted as being the opinion of those people who are members of the institution known as the Saskatchewan river development association and who met the minister. When they went out of the meeting they said the federal government's viewpoint towards the proposed South Saskatchewan river dam appeared to be getting more and more favourable every day. What a gift the Minister of Agriculture has. I could go on and read some more of this but I do not think I will.

There is one thing here which is very interesting, and which appeared in the same newspaper. What I am referring to is not a political speech or a speech of any kind made in the heat of the moment by the Minister of Agriculture, but a deliberate statement made by the minister at an interview with, I presume, a reporter on this particular newspaper. The interview carries a very interesting headline. It states: "Ottawa Ignoring Commission's Report on Dam, says Gardiner". With you, sir, in the chair I cannot ask the Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent) a question but I am wondering what the Prime Minister's comment would be on that particular statement. Does that headline mean that they are going to proceed with the dam? I take it that the people of Saskatchewan in view of the minister's remarks will not be at all disappointed. I hope that the confidence of the Saskatchewan river dam association is justified.

I do not wish to go into political affairs in Saskatchewan. Certainly I never interfere in provincial-political affairs, but I believe I am entitled to speak in regard to federal-political affairs as they relate to the province of Saskatchewan.

This may be news to some hon. members, and it certainly is news to me, but I understand we have had a distinct resurgence of Liberal-political activity in that particular province. We might notice, for example, that the Minister of Agriculture was closeted with the president of the Liberal association and what we used to call " the machine", though perhaps my hon. friends on the other side of the house prefer the word "organization". However, there have been some signs of political resurgence and particularly in the minister's sphere. I notice, for instance, that one of the chief Liberal organizers, a very fine man and a good fellow in his own right, Mr. Bird, has been put in P.F.R.A.—or is it P.F.A.A.—and then our old colleague, Mr. Dewar, who it might be recalled attained some notoriety in public affairs in this country, has now joined one of the minister's departments, and in fact I believe it is the same one. I presume of course that those gentlemen will be employed solely in the work of their department. These factors are very interesting to me, and I would also like to observe in passing that I notice the minister's picture has appeared in several newspapers including the Star-Phoenix, Yorkton Enterprise, etc. Indeed, the minister has had a very busy and active time during the Easter week. But who am I to blame him if he hopes to gather in a few votes for the Liberal cause in Saskatchewan, for goodness knows they need them badly enough.

Then there is this question of choosing a new leader and my right hon. friend has always been king of the Liberals in Saskatchewan, and he is not particularly fond of crown princes, as at least one hon. member of this honourable house is well aware. Whether the leader of that party is Dr. Thomson on the one hand, or my right hon. friend's son on the other, I would suggest that the direction of that machine will be retained here in Ottawa which, incidentally, is one of the things of which some of my young Liberal friends who are voting for his party are not too fond at the moment. They are inclined to say, rightly or wrongly, that direction from Ottawa had perhaps something to do with Liberal misfortune in both provincial and federal elections of last year. However I am not competent to judge that and I simply throw out the idea.

As I said before, I have no objection to the minister catching a few Liberal votes if he can get them by promising this dam, so long, and only so long as the dominion government finally carries out its promise and builds the dam. After all, we do not want to wait until we are all dead. We want to see the results of this project on those at times arid plains. Whatever may be the minister's motives, the main thing is to encourage construction of what I think would be a national asset, and if he does succeed in gathering in some votes, or even if he does not succeed at all in making capital and gathering in a few extra Liberal votes, there is always the greater compensation.

I have no doubt most hon. members are acquainted with the story of Saul who was sent out to gather in his father's asses and succeeded in founding a kingdom. I hope that that is the fate which will befall my right hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture and I hope the job will be done. After all, the main thing is to found the kingdom, and I hope that that will be done in the province of Saskatchewan and water should be brought to those plains.

This has been a subject which has been discussed in this house time and again, and I do not wish to repeat myself, but I think, sir, having at least said a word or two in regard to the budget and as regards this irrigation project, which is particularly near to my heart, and the hearts of the people in Saskatchewan and the people in the city who are dependent upon the farm life of the province of Saskatchewan, I shall resume my seat.

Mr. T. H. Goode (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to make a political speech as did the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, but I have two items of interest to my constituency which I wish to bring to the attention of the house. One is firmly entrenched in the political life of British Columbia though I believe it should not come under a political heading, and that is the question of the years-old problem of the Marpole bridge. My riding is on the south end of what perhaps can be considered the terminal for that bridge, and if you visit in the Vancouver, Burnaby or Richmond areas you will find a different rumour at every corner of every street in the riding to the effect that the provincial government of British Columbia is going to do one thing and the federal government is going to do another.

The truth of the matter is this. I sincerely believe that the Social Credit government of British Columbia intends to build a bridge at Marpole, and I believe, although I did doubt it for some months, that they are genuine in the news they are giving to the people of British Columbia in regard to the bridge.

An hon. Member: They are all genuine.

Mr. Goode: That may be so, I do not know, but in this case I believe they are sincere. However, I believe the provincial government of British Columbia cannot build that bridge alone, nor do I think it is entirely a British Columbia responsibility. Today I received the latest report of the North Fraser harbour commissioners, a federal body the majority of whose members are appointed by the federal government, and on page 5 of their 1953 report they state:

> The Marpole bridge suffered considerable damage throughout the year as a result of collision by scows and log booms. The most serious disruption occurred during the month of December when road traffic was closed off for a period of eight days for replacement of one of the truss span piers. The movable span opened for river traffic 6,691 times during the year,—

That is the year 1953.

> —an average of 558 openings per month. 664 openings were recorded in October, the highest month of the year.

Then they go on to say this, and this is a federal commission reporting to the parliament of Canada:

> A company of consulting engineers was commissioned by the provincial government in November to make preliminary studies for a high level highway bridge over the north arm of the Fraser river, approximately 270 feet east of and parallel to the existing B.C. Electric Railway bridge, crossing near the foot of Oak street.

And it goes on to say that the commissioners have given certain permission to the provincial government to do their preliminary that the bridge will be built if the province of British Columbia receives financial help from this parliament. Some time ago hon. members from British Columbia discussed this matter in brief and it was said by a gentleman on this side of the house that there had been no contact between the British Columbia government and the federal government with regard to the cost of the Marpole bridge. I find out that that is true. I spoke at Sea Island last Saturday night and I said certain things to the people there whom I represent in this house. In part this is what I said. I said that I would support a financial contribution to the bridge from the federal government if certain things were done. These were the specifications with which I qualified my statement: (1) that the bridge be built at Oak street and nowhere else; (2) that the bridge be not a toll bridge; (3) that the provincial government submit to the federal cabinet at the earliest opportunity full plans, specifications and firm costs of the structure; and (4) that the bridge be constructed by the firm giving the lowest tender.

I support in this house at this time, if these particulars are carried out, a contribution on the part of the federal government of one-third of the construction cost. I believe that the provincial government has a financial responsibility in the matter. I also think that the city of Vancouver has a responsibility. I would suggest to the federal cabinet that negotiations be started just as soon as the provincial government of British Columbia bring forth specific plans for the structure. At that time I will support in this house again, should the necessity arise, a contribution from this house of one-third of the cost.

I wish to bring to the attention of the house one other matter which also interests the municipality of Richmond. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Winters) will remember that in 1948 a disastrous flood struck the Fraser valley country in British Columbia. When the water had receded and the people had been sent back to their homes with those homes repaired, the cost to the people of Canada was $8½ million, and the cost to the government of British Columbia was an additional $2¾ million, a total of $11¼ million altogether. The minister will know of the final report of the Fraser valley diking board, dated March 1, 1950. In that report they make two very definite statements. On page 11 the board suggested that it would provide rockwork on the river banks where the dikes were in jeopardy from river erosion for five years after the date of the report; and on page 17 they say:

> Every winter and every spring there exists in the Fraser river basin enough snow to cause a disaster. The timing of the melting of this snow is in the hands of Providence, and engineers can only be guided by the law of averages.

I bring this report to the minister's attention because the municipality of Richmond, which I have the honour to represent in this house, has for the last three or four years made representations to the Minister of Public Works pointing out to the department that the dikes in that municipality could not withstand a serious spring freshet. On February 11, 1952, the reeve and council of the township of Richmond sent a brief to the then minister of public works in which they outlined their concern over the serious dike break that had taken place on January 14, 1952, in the municipal dike in that area. They pointed out that serious erosion was evident along the north bank of the south arm of the Fraser river, which is the main channel. When the dikes were originally constructed by the municipality they were built 100 to 300 feet back from the river and now in many places the foreshore has entirely disappeared and the dike is now on the edge of deep water. In other places the existing foreshore is being rapidly eroded.

The house will please understand that practically the whole of the area called Richmond is under high water level, and forty years ago the people of that municipality built the dikes to protect themselves against a spring freshet. These dikes were then, and still are, owned by the municipality; and it is to the credit of this government that some thousands of dollars have been spent on rockwork facing the river to protect the dikes. I wish to present to the minister today my sincere concern and the concern of the municipality that the time is coming when the Richmond municipal dike will not hold and a break will occur. If that happens, a disaster of serious consequences will have hit British Columbia, and many millions of dollars will have to be spent by this government to protect the investment by many small householders and farmers in Richmond.

The diking board says that "every spring there exists in the Fraser river basin enough snow to cause a disaster". I have repeatedly warned in this house that one of these years the freshet on the Fraser river will be of such density and force that the old municipal dike will not hold. Because we have built first-quality dikes in the upper Fraser valley the seriousness of the situation in my riding is more pronounced because now extra pressure will be put on the dikes in the delta of the Fraser river. Should the weather in British Columbia turn exceptionally warm, as it did in 1948, then the present protection cannot defend against a disaster of the first magnitude.

I wish to follow along my argument with a description of what is happening from the gulf of Georgia eastward to the city of New Westminster. There is no doubt that New Westminster will become one of the greatest fresh-water ports in Canada. It is not unknown for four hundred deep sea ships to berth there in one year, and we in Burnaby-Richmond rejoice that this should be so. I point out to the minister that the work that is progressively being done from the gulf of Georgia to New Westminster is being done to protect that New Westminster harbour. The Fraser river channel has shifted many times in the last fifty years; and to make sure that deep sea boats could enter the port of New Westminster it has been the policy of the public works department to close in the shores of the river to maintain density of current that will carry with it to the sea the silt that has been building up over the years, and that which comes down from the headwaters every year. Actually what the department is trying to do is to scour the river bottom so that our costs of dredging will not be, as they were for so many years, millions of dollars per year.

And so the department has embarked upon a policy on the south bank of the main channel to put a rock embankment up to the height of 12 and 14 feet in some places, not only to protect that shore but to keep the current in a confined area. I say this is all being done to enable the city of New Westminster to fulfil its destiny as the greatest fresh-water port in Canada. I support that idea and I believe that any moneys that can be spent on the main channel of the Fraser river to enable boats to enter the New Westminster harbour should be spent—always remembering that Richmond, too, has deep water anchorage—and it will always receive the approval of the people of Richmond and the member for that riding.

However, in building up the south bank of the main channel the department did not figure that the current of the river would be changed, but it has changed and now the north bank, that which borders the municipality of Richmond, from Woodwards Landing west is receiving most of the force of the current and gradually that shore is being eaten away, in some places to the extent of 300 feet. It can be noted here that 25 foot depth channel markers have in the last ten years moved 400 feet closer to Lulu island, proving my point that the shore of Richmond is taking the full force of the current in certain places because of the policy of the department in building strong rock protection on the southern shore.

I have no argument with the work being done by the department. I believe that the sooner they confine the main channel of the Fraser river to a static position the better it will be for everyone concerned, but I do report that the Richmond shore is taking the full brunt of the current at this time. The department has also constructed wing dams along the river which are assisting the rock protection on the south bank to throw the force of the current into Richmond and, as I have said, I doubt that the municipal dike will hold for too many more freshets.

I readily agree that considerable rockwork has been done on the Richmond shore, to the credit of the department, but for another $1 million spent now full protection could be afforded the people whom I represent and their homes would be secure from a serious flood in some spring that will come just as surely as will come tomorrow morning. We have been doing some patching on my side of the river acknowledging, I think, that we have a federal responsibility to the people of Richmond to protect them against a flood. I do submit to the minister that it is essential that rockwork protection be done to complete a 14 foot rock wall the entire length of the Fraser river shore where it contacts my municipality.

From Steveston to the gulf of Georgia we have constructed two jetties, again attempting to confine the river to allow the silt to move into the gulf. We believe that this work was well done and that the jetties will serve their purpose, that of confining the river in a narrow space, but those two jetties again are going to throw more current force against the Richmond dikes should a serious freshet occur this year or next year.

It seems that it is the destiny of the Fraser valley that when the freshet occurs in late April or early May we also have very high tides, the tides working in a narrow space between the two jetties at the delta and the freshet trying to force itself westward from the headwaters of the Fraser river. The two forces meet between the city of New Westminster and the city of Steveston, British Columbia, and the minister will know that most of this space is occupied by Lulu island, proving again, I think, that now the Fraser valley is protected Richmond too should be protected by a comparatively small investment now, instead of ten times the investment should the dike break down.

In January, 1952, I met the council of Richmond and some of the federal engineering staff at the council chamber when the reeve said:

> I do not want to be an alarmist, but I anticipate trouble down there if something is not done before the freshet.

Mr. Milavsky, a member of the public works staff, said that the federal government were only interested in the river from the point of view of navigation, and that they placed rock only to the extent that it protects the river depth. At that time the official might have been correct. That is certainly not the case now because since then the department has spent many thousands of dollars on channel maintenance and rock protection for Lulu island. The sandbars in my municipality are practically all gone. Some of the rock protection has dropped four or five feet, and had done so at the time we met the public works official in the Richmond municipal hall.

It was pointed out to him then that the increased current in the river was causing undermining of the south arm dikes and, I believe, because of the opinions offered at that meeting someone in the engineering branch changed his mind and the dominion government started doing more extensive rockwork along the north side of the main channel of the Fraser river from Woodwards Landing down to Steveston. The channels between Rose island and Number One island and between Number One island and Woodward island have been closed off, all helping to make the river self-dredging. All this has been done, of course, to increase the flow of the river and not to protect Lulu island.

On March 8, 1954 the reeve and council again wrote to the chief engineer, Department of Public Works, pointing out that the dike had now been damaged in three other sections, and I understand that one of these sections is to be protected by rock at the earliest possible moment. But these complaints come in from the council periodically because no policy has been laid down with regard to the south side of the main channel, and I warn the house that before many years are over, and unless considerable money is spent, we will have to undertake a bill of repairs and rehabilitation on Lulu island that will cost millions of dollars.

Finally, may I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the provincial government of British Columbia issues a snow survey every month which gives the condition of the snow in the mountains that feeds into the Fraser river. When visiting the river last week we noticed that none of the snow water had started down from the headwaters at this time, and in looking over the provincial report for this month I find that not only is the snow in the mountains much heavier than it was in 1948 but that the water content of that snow is over 23 per cent heavier than it has ever been before. I ask the Minister of Public Works to send his officials to Richmond at the earliest possible moment so that the freshet, if it comes this year, will not flood my municipality.

(Translation):

Mr. Roch Pinard (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) made, a few days ago, his important speech, which contains a statement of the financial policy of the government for the current year, it seemed to me, as it did to others I am sure, that his general considerations on the economic situation and the forecast of budget amendments were of secondary importance, on account of the important decision regarding federal-provincial relations, and in particular relations between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec, a decision which the minister then made known to the members assembled in this house.

For the past few years, the Minister of Finance had devoted an important part of his speech to an examination of these complicated matters of federal-provincial relations. But the statement of principle which the minister made the other day did have the result of placing in its true light this important problem with which the people of Quebec are now faced.

Canadian citizens living in any of the ten provinces of our confederation, who have at heart the common good, who want this country to continue prospering and developing, who want this nation to prosper in harmony, well-being and, at the same time, unity, are now going through a period of anxiety because of this conflict between the government of this country and one of the most important provincial legislatures.

I do not want to take too much time, but I would like, during the next few moments, to review briefly the facts in the light of which I will be able later on to lay the responsibility where it belongs, and explain the stand I have chosen to take in the present situation.

Since 1867 Canada has enjoyed a federative system of government. That system, which does not offer as many advantages in a compact country whose territory is limited, constitutes, I think, the only system suited to a country like ours where many problems of all kinds—political, geographical, and economic—arise and must be solved in the general interest of the people of this country.

That is no doubt what our predecessors understood when they decided, one day, to unite the pioneer provinces of this country in one whole which at the present time can be described as one of the most perfect examples of a federative state.

Was it a real treaty between the races making up our nation at the time or was it purely and simply an act of the imperial parliament? I will not attempt to discuss the merits of those questions at this time. This seems to me to be a rather useless controversy, one which has so far led us to little else than an exchange of views devoid of much constructive value. Yet I think we should subscribe to the view, and state our belief in this connection, that the British North America Act was born of an agreement between the original provinces, even though it was impossible at the time to provide against every likely contingency.

In any event, this agreement was definite as far as certain essential rights of the French-speaking minority were concerned. It should be impossible to infringe upon these rights even though the language of the constitution could give rise to ambiguities or different interpretations. Those rights, all legislators, whether they be in Ottawa, Quebec, or in any other section of this country, are under the obligation to respect them strictly, to defend them and to protect them in their letter as well as in their spirit.

To those who would challenge the value of the texts themselves, or to the others who would only see therein the guarantee of inviolable rights of the French minority in this country, I shall recall the statement of principle made in 1950 by our present Prime Minister (Mr. St. Laurent), when he said before the prime ministers of the other legislatures who had met here in this capital, and I quote his words:

> That in no wise runs counter to the firm belief of so many of us that there is something stronger than any legal safeguard, and that is the good faith, the mutual tolerance, and the common understanding which are the highest glory of most Canadians, regardless of whether English or French happens to be their mother tongue.

In that security which is much more reassuring and which springs from a generous and loyal acceptation, by all those who live on our Canadian soil, of that common obligation towards the minority group in this country, Canada has been able to move forward and to grow in concord and harmony.

But I do not want to stray from the subject which is in our minds today and relates to that conflict between the federal government and the Quebec legislature. Let it be sufficient, on concluding those brief remarks concerning the vital rights of the French minority, to reaffirm that this is a sacred trust bequeathed to us by our predecessors and which no legislative power has the right to deny, to scuttle or to destroy.

However, like those who came before us, we want to continue to live under the federative system since it is the sole means for the Canadian people to keep moving forward towards progress in unity, concord and mutual respect.

Our main concern in the present conflict opposing the two governments is the delimitation and the application of fiscal privileges arising from the Canadian constitution.

Any federative system, although it may provide, as ours does, unquestionable advantages, nevertheless gives rise to problems which must be approached calmly and in harmony, but which must also be studied on the sole basis of common interest.

Even though the British North America Act does not make up the whole Canadian constitution, it must nevertheless be recognized that it is in the light of its text and of the application of its spirit that we must examine the various aspects of this disagreement between the Quebec legislature and the Canadian government.

After a serious study of the matter, any unbiased person will necessarily come to the conclusion that although, in the Canadian constitution, provincial rights are set out and clearly determined in a restrictive and complete way, the federal parliament, whose powers are also enumerated, also has a further right to legislate about any matter that is not specifically defined and which remains unallocated. This time, it is a general and exclusive power which is contained in this residual clause which makes up the preamble of section 91, wherein it is prescribed that the federal legislature must enact legislation for the peace, order and good government of Canada. Under the circumstances, it is then clearly a power and truly an obligation devolving upon the federal legislature, because there can be no prosperity or true progress in the country unless the federal government fulfils that obligation. The federal authority must necessarily fulfil that obligation if we want the system to be workable.

In any federative system, it is undoubtedly important, I would say, that it is even essential and indispensable that the local governments be in a position to benefit from the advantages granted them and that they be able to legislate as they see fit, without having the federal government interfere with their legislative enactments. But, on the other hand, it is also essential that in a federated state the central power, the federal government, should be able to legislate so that the legislatures do not permit anarchy to take root in the country.

Therefore, if it is the duty of the federal government—and such is the case—to legislate for the peace, order and good government of the country, it shall necessarily have to ensure uniformity in the progress and development of each of the provinces that make up confederation.

It should not follow, for instance, that certain conditions obtaining in one part of the country should be prejudicial to another part of the country. For instance, if a certain group of people enjoy certain advantages and certain privileges, it is up to the federal government to intervene, so as to ensure uniformity, an essentially identical standard of living, an equitable apportionment of benefits throughout the country.

For instance, if because of circumstances of time and place, one part of Canada happens to be more industrialized, with heavily populated centres, thus preventing otherwise desirable migrations to other parts of the country, the federal legislator must provide, through sound measures, for more adequate distribution, decentralization of wealth, more equitable apportionment of the benefits which the nation must offer not only to one but to all parts of the country. We have there the structure and the object of the social security legislation implemented by the government, that is to say, old age pensions and family allowances and national health measures which it has agreed to adopt in order to distribute in a more rational and more uniform fashion the advantages resulting from the prosperity which this country enjoys.

It is clear that such measures entail huge expenditures. The federal government must therefore be in a position to obtain the necessary revenue it needs to implement them. A very large proportion of the national revenue has been devoted to this social security legislation and I do not believe that the people of the province of Quebec—the people from any other province, for that matter—would be willing to see the federal government put an end to these measures which have allowed for a fairer distribution of the wealth of this country and through which the Canadian people have been enabled to advance more rapidly and to progress in a more orderly fashion.

Secondly, the federal government has obligations which are perhaps even more serious in the wider field of foreign relations.

Canada, which is essentially a producing country with a great many natural resources and which gets every year a substantial surplus of production, has the duty to facilitate the disposal, the distribution and profitable sale of its products by creating new markets abroad for its commodities.

This policy has always been followed, or rather applied by the party to which I belong, and it can be said that it is because of the action of former Liberal governments who have succeeded each other for many years in this country, or, at least partly because of their action, that Canada is now experiencing such a degree of prosperity. The central power owes it to itself to create and preserve markets abroad, so as to ensure a profitable distribution of our surpluses.

It was Laurier who said, when introducing a measure of trade reciprocity with our neighbours, that it was proper for Canada to create and maintain markets abroad if this country wanted to grow and prosper. It is the very essence of economic progress in this country.

It is undoubtedly what was in the mind of the fathers of confederation because in the Canadian constitution the federal government clearly has the authority, as defined in subsection 2 of section 91, of regulating trade and commerce. The policy of the federal government in that matter will be the very cornerstone of true prosperity in our country and, as a result, in each of our provinces. Again, since it behooves the federal government to formulate the economic policy of our country, this entails large administrative expenses and, in some cases, important capital expenditures, so as to manage this economic planning which comes within the jurisdiction of federal authorities. For that purpose, we must maintain trade missions in other countries, take part in the international monetary and economic conferences, so as to keep informed of the needs of world markets and organize our production accordingly. Here again, we have to draw upon a very large portion of the national income.

But the parliament of Canada must also ensure the security and the defence of the country. I do not think it is necessary to emphasize here how serious is the tension in international relations and how necessary it is for Canada to keep ready at all times to protect and defend itself. Canada, in that respect, cannot live in isolation. It is bound by international commitments, either as a member of the United Nations or as a signatory to regional defensive pacts such as NATO, and our country, on account of that, is forced to earmark an important part of its revenue not only for its territorial defence, but also for the fulfilment of its commitments to the countries with which it has contracted alliances.

Even though a substantial reduction of our defence expenditures would have been very desirable, in order to devote our national revenue to peaceful activities, there is not the slightest doubt that this is impossible for the time being, and that as long as the free world is threatened with another war, as long as our country is open to aggression, we will have to continue to devote a large portion of our national revenue to these purposes. As it is, almost half of our expenditures are used for the defence of our own territory as well as for that of friendly nations with which we have entered into alliances.

Now these obligations of which I have spoken do result from a strict interpretation of section 91 of the British North America Act and more particularly of the residual clause of that section where the taxation powers of the federal government are defined as unlimited so that our country may be in a position to fulfil such obligations.

The provincial legislatures also have their obligations and in order that they may fulfil them the constitution provides for the method of taxation which they must use. The federal government, according to the constitution, is entitled to use any mode of taxation direct or indirect, that is, any method which it may choose to resort to in order to obtain the money it needs to administer the country. However, according to the terms of the Canadian constitution, the legislatures must levy money through direct taxation, as long as this is only for provincial purposes.

For me it is unquestionable that there is common jurisdiction on direct taxation, that there is concomitance of both governments, but there cannot be, for either system of government exclusive jurisdiction or, if you prefer, prior jurisdiction. There is jurisdiction for the federal government in every case, but it is imperative, in the case of legislatures, that this power of direct taxation be used for provincial purposes only.

The issue therefore is to determine if, in this disagreement between the federal government and the Quebec legislature, the stand taken by the provincial government is not only constitutional but also, and I say especially, really within the spirit of the confederative system under which it is important that we may continue to live.

Nobody denies to the province of Quebec, to its legislature, nor to any of the other legislatures in this country, the right to impose a tax on the income of its taxpayers, for provincial purposes. In the same realm, as I said a while ago, nobody can deny the same prerogative and the same right to the federal government. I cannot see why, for instance, when a provincial legislature would have accepted to invade a field of direct taxation, the federal government should evacuate it.

But since we live in the same country, since we must, as legislators, use the right of taxation but within the limits of necessity, since serious abuses may spring from an abusive mode of taxation or from the method of double taxation, it is important therefore and it is appropriate, whether in the case of the federal government or in the case of a provincial legislature, to accept to make laws only after reaching an agreement, or at least after consultation, so that the taxpayers may not have too heavy a burden to carry.

What has been, in this connection, Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the federal government? I think that, such being the circumstances, it has retained, at all times, a sane point of view. It has always preferred consultation with the provincial legislatures before attempting to use any particular method of taxation. It is for this reason, for example, that it has called federal-provincial conferences where its representatives, having convened the representatives of these legislatures, have explained to them the reasons for which such or such a method of taxation was to be resorted to.

I have no wish to recount the whole history of these conferences. But should those who are interested in this problem, and who are really desirous of resolving the present difficulties, have occasion to speak to the delegates which have sat in at these conferences, these federal-provincial gatherings, they will learn of the care which the representatives of the federal government have always taken to make these legislatures and their representatives understand the needs of this government so as to justify the recourse to the means of taxation chosen by it.

If we examine the proceedings of the last federal-provincial conference we find that before making the federal proposals to the provincial representatives, the then prime minister took care to ascertain that they could understand the obligations the federal government had to fulfil. That is why several representatives of the federal administration took turns to explain, as heads of departments and ministers of the Canadian government, the obligations their respective departments had to meet.

We saw the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Pearson) explain to the provincial delegates the heavy burden of our international obligations and present a picture of the international situation, in order to make them understand the part that our country had to play in the troubled post-war world and Canada's obligations, not only as far as the defence of our own territory was concerned, but also in connection with the defence of other free nations.

Then, in the field of social security, we saw the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Martin) explain to the provincial representatives the legislation he intended to submit to the government in order to improve social conditions and the special program he intended to propose in the field of national health.

We then saw the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) explain carefully to the representatives of the legislatures the financial obligations of the Canadian government and the revenues required to enable our country to fulfil all the obligations I have just mentioned.

What has been, on the other hand, the attitude of the Quebec legislature and of its representatives and what has been the position of the legislatures of the other provinces? Some of them made counter-proposals. Then, they consented to ratify fiscal agreements. After these negotiations, eight and, later on, nine provinces consented to conclude agreements with the federal authorities.

I do not question the right of the government authorities of the province of Quebec to levy an income tax, but I question the way they did it, that is, without first informing the federal government, the government of the country, of the Canadian nation.

How can we conceive, Mr. Speaker, in this country in which we want to live in harmony, that the spokesman for a legislature could negotiate with the central power through press conferences? On the international level, representatives of nations irrevocably pitted one against the other, are still able to take part in conferences like that now being held at Geneva to discuss the possibility of alleviating the present international tension. Is it possible to conceive that in our country, where we are all Canadians with the same ideals, the ten heads of provincial governments could refuse to get together in a conference? Is it conceivable that the prime minister of one province would not also accept to attend such a conference and even to negotiate with the prime minister of the country to which he belongs?

My principal objection, Mr. Speaker, the main reproach I am now addressing to the representatives of the Quebec legislature is directed against the way they chose for dealing with the central authority through the channel of press conferences. The Quebec taxpayers will challenge such an attitude on their part. They should have agreed to inform the representatives of the central government, and of the Canadian nation, otherwise than through a press conference, of their wish to obtain the deduction of the provincial tax from the federal tax. I shall abstain from further discussing the point as to whether the federal government was right in refusing all deductions, that is the deduction suggested by the prime minister of the province, through the press. I believe the Minister of Finance adopted the only attitude justified by circumstances. He also agreed to suggest to the representatives of the Quebec legislature—and I am very happy he did—to come back if necessary, this time with more concrete proposals, and not to be content to call themselves autonomists, defenders of provincial autonomy, but to discuss in all frankness a formula for overcoming the extremely serious deadlock involving more than two or three hundred thousand citizens of Quebec, since this new tax was introduced. I consider this the main rebuke to be addressed to the representatives of the provincial legislature of Quebec.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I express my belief that the population of Quebec will disapprove the attitude of its premier who refuses to negotiate. I do not claim that he had to sign an agreement: he is entirely within his right when he refuses to do so, because the agreements are not compulsory, but he should have informed beforehand the federal government of his intention of imposing such a tax, which under the circumstances is a nuisance tax and is as unjust to the taxpayers of the province of Quebec as it would be to the citizens of any other province.

I believe I shall be excused for the excessive ardour which I may have displayed in my speech but I am convinced that justice is on our side and that we did what was fitting for the welfare of the taxpayers of the country. I hope that the legislature of Quebec will accept to hold new negotiations with the federal government so that the province of Quebec will not isolate itself and so that we, from the province of Quebec, will continue to feel at home not only in our province but in any other province. It is the duty of the province of Quebec not to isolate itself but to extend its influence, as was recently said by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Lesage).

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we are not dealing with a struggle between self-proclaimed autonomists in Quebec and ourselves, whom they call centralizers. In fact it is a struggle between the Union Nationale and our national unity.

(Text):

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Macdonnell) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Bell	Lennard
Blackmore	Low
Blair	Macdonnell
Cardiff	MacLean
Casselman	McBain
Charlton	McGregor
Churchill	Michener
Dinsdale	Mitchell (London)
Dufresne	Nesbitt
Fleming	Pallett
Fraser (Peterborough)	Perron
Fulton	Poulin
Gagnon	Quelch
Girard	Robinson (Bruce)
Hahn	Small
Hansell	Stanton
Hodgson	Starr
Holowach	Tustin
Howe (Wellington-Huron)	White (Hastings-Frontenac)
Johnston (Bow River)	Wylie—40.

NAYS

Messrs:

Abbott	Forgie
Anderson	Gardiner
Applewhaite	Garland
Arsenault	Gauthier (Lake St. John)
Ashbourne	Gauthier (Nickel Belt)
Balcom	Gauthier (Portneuf)
Barnett	Gillis
Batten	Gingras
Beaudry	Gingues
Benidickson	Goode
Bennett (Grey North)	Gour (Russell)
Blanchette	Gregg
Boivin	Habel
Bonnier	Hardie
Boucher (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)	Harris
Bourque	Healy
Breton	Hellyer
Brown (Brantford)	Henry
Brown (Essex West)	Herridge
Bruneau	Hosking
Bryson	Houck
Buchanan	Huffman
Cameron (High Park)	James
Cameron (Nanaimo)	Jones
Campbell	Jutras
Campney	Kirk (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare)
Cardin	Knight
Carter	Knowles
Cauchon	Lafontaine
Cavers	Langlois (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere)
Coldwell	Lapointe
Cote	Leduc (Gatineau)
Crestohl	Leduc (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle)
Croll	Lefrancois
Dechene	Legare
Deslieres	Lesage
Dickey	MacDougall
Ellis	MacKenzie
Enfield	McCann
Eyre	McCulloch (Pictou)
Fairey	McDonald
Follwell	McIlraith
	McMillan
	McWilliam
	Masse
	Matheson
	Meunier
	Mitchell (Sudbury)
	Monette
	Murphy (Westmorland)
	Nixon
	Noseworthy
	Pickersgill
	Pinard
	Pommer
	Pouliot
	Power (Quebec South)
	Proudfoot
	Purdy
	Ratelle
	Regier
	Reinke
	Richard (Ottawa East)
	Robertson
	Robinson (Simcoe East)
	Rouleau
	Schneider
	Stewart (Winnipeg North)
	Stick
	Stuart (Charlotte)
	Thibault
	Tucker
	Valois
	Weaver
	Weir
	White (Waterloo South)
	Winch
	Wood
	Zaplitny—121.

Mr. St. Laurent: Mr. Speaker, it is because of the absence of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Drew) that I abstained from voting on this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the main motion?

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, it must be a cause for general concern for members, even of the government, to contemplate the gathering unemployment problem which confronts Canada. It must moreover give them little satisfaction to reflect upon the meagre allowances we are granting to our old age pensioners and to the many other people who have a right to assistance at our hands, such as superannuated civil servants and other classes whom we could readily bring to mind. It must be vexatious in the extreme for them to think about the fact that we are accumulating in this country surpluses which we at the present time see no way of disposing of at home or abroad, while the United States is doing a similar thing. I am sure all these matters have been disturbing the members of the government just as they have been exercising all the other members of this house. We now have another problem which threatens to give the government a real and immediate headache, namely, the refusal of the province of Quebec to attempt to carry on any further with the amount of revenue that is left to it after the dominion government gets through taxing.

What can be done about all these problems? Is there nothing that can be done? Are we to confess ourselves beaten in the presence of such superabundance as Canada is capable of bringing into existence? Are we to raise idle and helpless hands and rail against the powers that be when in all probability we have in our own control the means of going forward towards remedying the evils which basically are the cause of these regrettable features in our economy?

Eighteen and a half years ago we in the province of Alberta elected a Social Credit government under William Aberhart, one of the very greatest statesmen to arise in the Dominion of Canada. We were filled with the conviction that we need not rely entirely for our revenue upon money that we could extract from the pockets of the citizens of the nation. We saw no reason why, since the kings of England for centuries created all the nation's money—and it was good money, sound money—someone representing the king in our day should not be able to create money just as good and just as sound as king's money. Whereas the king normally had to have gold or some other precious metal out of which to create money, and inasmuch as we had learned to use paper instead of specie for money and are now finding that we can get along very well without even specie backing behind the paper, we saw no reason why it should not be thoroughly feasible and acceptable and in every way advisable for the nation of Canada to contemplate the creation of money debt free.

We had proposals for the use of that money after it was once created. In the first place we said the all-important thing to do with the money was to bring about a price structure as fair and equitable as it could possibly be made considering the production of which the nation is capable. The first use to which that money would be put would be the bringing down of consumer prices in accordance with the amount of surplus production at that time existing in the country. This would be done by the use of what we would call a compensated discount. I shall not go further into that matter at the present moment except to point out that that would be the first use that would be made of this money created debt free.

We proposed that after the price structure had been modified by discounts to what seemed to be a desirable extent, additional money which the king then found in his possession should be used in issuing to consumers a consumer credit somewhat resembling the cost of living bonus with which everyone became familiar during world war II. We called this cost of living bonus a dividend. We saw no reason why it should not be called a dividend because it constituted a share of the national income, of the national production which actually of right belonged to every citizen in the nation because either as producer or consumer every person in the nation contributed directly or indirectly to the producing of the goods which formed the backing of the money which the king could produce debt free.

We were greeted with a wide variety of receptions. Almost no one thought we were using any kind of sense. I remember the volumes of abuse that were hurled against Premier Aberhart by the capitalist press from coast to coast in this nation, abuse which it was a disgrace to hurl against any good and honourable man, such as he was, desiring to make conditions better. We were called crackpots, funny money artists, scrip teasers and all those other epithets which ignorance and prejudice generally apply to all people who attempt to improve conditions.

We were not abashed; we were not dismayed; because we remembered similar things were hurled against Wilberforce when he set out to free the slaves and against every other reformer who ever set out to reform existing conditions, especially if it looked as though he were going to be able to succeed. So we came to the House of Commons, to set before members of this honourable house those principles which we believed would help constitute a solution to the serious unemployment problem confronting Canada in 1935, a problem of poverty in the midst of plenty, a paradox, a monstrosity, something not to be seriously considered or contemplated by any sane man.

The favourite phrase that was applied to us then was that we believed in "funny money". It is my purpose tonight, during the time which remains at my disposal, to give some consideration to this matter of funny money and in doing so to go back into the financial history of Canada to the passage of the Dominion Notes Act in 1868, then to follow on down to the passage of the Finance Act of 1923 and on down to the passage of the Bank of Canada Act of 1934, and to show members of the house and the people of the country that practically every single dollar this nation operated on from 1868 down to 1934 was, or was backed by, funny money, exactly the kind of money that the Social Credit proposal envisaged.

Mr. Speaker: As it is now ten o'clock, will the hon. member be kind enough to interrupt his speech at this point?

On motion of Mr. Blackmore the debate was adjourned.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Harris: We shall continue this debate tomorrow and if it is completed take the resolution with respect to the trade agreement with Japan.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, April 28, 1954

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PINARD—REFERENCE TO REPORT IN MONTREAL "GAZETTE" OF APRIL 28

Mr. Roch Pinard (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege which arises out of a newspaper report appearing in today's issue of the Montreal Gazette where I am quoted as having said this:

> He said the government should stop considering Quebec "as the illegitimate child of confederation."

I never used those words. On the contrary, I believe that this government is considering the province of Quebec as one of its most glorious sons. Knowing well the concern that this paper has for accuracy and the consideration it always has for the government and its supporters, I thought it would be well to bring this matter to their attention.

QUESTIONS

C.B.C.—TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES AND OFFICES

Mr. Thatcher:

1. Since January 1, 1952, has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation moved employees from other points in Canada to Ottawa?
2. If so, how many and at what total cost?
3. Are any offices or divisions formerly established in Montreal and Toronto, now established in Ottawa?
4. If so, what offices or divisions and what was the purpose of moving same to Ottawa?

Mr. McCann:

1. Since January 1, 1952, 50 employees have been moved to Ottawa at a cost of removal expenses amounting to $37,459.96.

In addition to routine transfers to head office and to stations CBO-CBOT, certain senior officials and employees in the national offices of the program, engineering, personnel and administration, press and information, and station relations and broadcast regulations divisions previously located in Montreal and Toronto have been moved to Ottawa to provide closer co-ordination in the general management of the corporation.

2, 3, and 4. See answer to No. 1.

C.B.C.—SPACE OCCUPIED IN OTTAWA

Mr. Thatcher:

1. How many square feet of floor space does the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation or any division or subsidiary thereof occupy in Ottawa?
2. Where is this space located?
3. What is the total monthly or yearly rent for this space?

Mr. McCann:

1. 46,744.

2. Head office: Victoria building, Holt-Renfrew building, Bryson-Graham building, 17 O'Connor street.

Station CBO studios and offices: Chateau Laurier hotel.

3. $108,197.50 yearly rental rate.

NATURALIZATION—SAM CARR

Mr. Fulton:

1. In order to obtain his certificate of naturalization on March 1, 1945, did Sam Carr swear an oath or subscribe to a declaration of allegiance or make any other form of affirmation of loyalty to His Majesty and to Canada?
2. Has his grant of naturalization ever been revoked on grounds that it was obtained by false representations or on any other grounds?
3. Who was minister of the department in charge of naturalization at the time this certificate was granted?

Mr. Harris:

1. Yes.

2. No.

3. The late Hon. Norman McLarty.

FOREST INVENTORY, NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. MacEachen:

1. Has the federal government signed an agreement with the government of Nova Scotia for the completion of a forest inventory in Nova Scotia?
2. If so, (a) to what extent does the federal government participate in the cost of same; (b) how much has been paid by the federal government to date, and when is it anticipated the inventory will be completed?

Mr. Lesage:

1. Yes.

2. (a) Under the terms of a federal-provincial forestry agreement dated June 12, 1952, the federal government has undertaken to pay, for the duration of the agreement, one-half of the cost to the province of preparing and maintaining, in accordance with certain specifications, an inventory of the forest resources of Nova Scotia. The present agreement terminates on March 31, 1956, but is subject to renewal thereafter on terms and conditions then to be determined.

(b) Payment to date is $25,248.46; it is expected that the inventory will be completed in the fiscal year 1956-57.

HIGHWAY TRANSPORT

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE—REPORT BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Howard C. Green (Vancouver-Quadra): Will the Minister of Transport give the house a report on the dominion-provincial conference on highway transport which has just been completed?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): The federal-provincial conference on highway transportation convened in Ottawa on Monday of this week and completed its business this morning. I think it is safe to say that the conference was a successful one.

In view of the position of the federal government that it was reluctant to enter the field of extra-provincial highway transportation, it suggested to the provinces that they control and regulate such extra-provincial undertakings in the same manner as that in which they were controlling intra-provincial movements. The provinces seemed to be willing to accept this suggestion. Thereafter there was drafted a bill which was submitted to the conference for its approval. Dependent upon the reaction of the various provincial governments to this draft bill, the federal government will be willing to give consideration to enacting at this session of parliament legislation which would make the proposed bill valid.

Mr. Green: As a supplementary question may I ask whether it will be necessary to amend the British North America Act in order to implement the agreement?

Mr. Chevrier: If the suggestion contained in the draft bill meets with the approval or the favourable reaction of the provinces, the answer to the question is no.

CIVIL DEFENCE

FINANCIAL ARRANGEMENTS—REFERENCE TO PRESS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clarence Gillis (Cape Breton South): May I be permitted to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

[Mr. Lesage.]

It arises out of a press dispatch in this morning's Globe and Mail captioned "Ottawa Said Ready to Match All Grants for Civil Defence". Is the minister in a position to tell the house what procedure is necessary on the part of the provinces and the municipalities in order to qualify for these grants?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have not had an opportunity of reading in detail the press dispatch to which he makes reference but I am advised generally that it deals with the proposed new financial arrangements in connection with the operation of civil defence in Canada.

This matter was discussed at the dominion-provincial conference held in Ottawa a few weeks ago, when the whole matter of civil defence, and financial arrangements in connection therewith, were discussed with all the provinces and when there was, as a result, general agreement on what was disclosed there and on the new financial formula. I will discuss the formula in the house on the occasion of the presentation of the departmental estimates, and I hope the proposal will stimulate action in those places where action is not now adequately taking place.

Mr. Fulton: Will this require a constitutional amendment?

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INVESTIGATION INTO CRASH AT MOOSE JAW

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Coldwell (Rosetown-Biggar): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce? When may we expect the report on the regrettable accident at Moose Jaw? Has the inquiry been completed yet?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Perhaps I might answer this question. The report is not, I think, complete. By that I mean it has been completed on the ground but in so far as the preparation of it is concerned it is not yet completed. I expect to have it some day this week. When I do my first responsibility will be to discuss it with my colleagues before I can impart its implications to the house.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

SUBSTANCE ALLEGED TO HAVE DAMAGED AUTOMOBILE WINDSHIELDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister anything to say with respect to the substance alleged to have damaged automobile windshields and in some cases, particularly at Wellandport, Ontario, to have caused minor injuries to persons?

Hon. Paul Martin (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Beyond what has already been reported I have nothing to say.

CANADIAN OVERSEAS TELECOMMUNICATION CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO UPWARD ADJUSTMENT OF RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether the government-owned Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation is considering an upward adjustment in its rates at the present time?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): I am grateful to the hon. member for having sent me notice of his question. I am not aware of any consideration being given at this time by Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation to a revision upward of its rates, but I should say that the matter of rate revisions, either upward or downward, is always a matter under consideration by any corporation. Subject to that, I think I should tell my hon. friend that there is at this time no intention of an upward revision.

Mr. Hamilton: Would the minister examine the report directed to him by the directors of the corporation which gives some indication of this fact?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I will be glad to.

AIR TRANSPORT

MODIFICATIONS TO CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Transport): Yesterday, in my absence, the hon. member for Saskatoon asked the following question:

> In view of the discussions held in Ottawa from April 12 to 14 with representatives of the United Kingdom government on the subject of possible modifications to the Canada-United Kingdom air transport agreement, is the government now in a position to indicate what changes, if any, will be made in this agreement?

The answer is no. There have been amicable discussions with the United Kingdom authorities on the subject of the Canada-United Kingdom air agreement, and there are no changes to be announced at this time. If there are any to be announced at a later date they will be announced in the house.

TRADE

RUSSIA—REPORTED OFFER TO PURCHASE BARLEY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. C. D. Howe (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In my absence yesterday an hon. member asked the following question:

> Would the minister care to comment on a recent press release regarding a Russian offer to buy 3 million bushels of Canadian barley?

I may say that the Russian government has asked this government to arrange for trade quotations on 50,000 tons of barley. Quotations have been submitted but no purchase has been made as yet.

THE BUDGET

ANNUAL FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The house resumed, from Tuesday, April 27, consideration of the motion of Hon. Douglas Abbott (Minister of Finance) that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of ways and means.

Mr. J. H. Blackmore (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, last evening I closed my introductory remarks with the following words, speaking of the opponents of Social Crediters in the 1930's, as found at page 4192 of Hansard:

> The favourite phrase that was applied to us then was that we believed in "funny money". It is my purpose tonight, during the time which remains at my disposal, to give some consideration to this matter of funny money and in doing so to go back into the financial history of Canada to the passage of the Dominion Notes Act in 1868, then to follow on down to the passage of the Finance Act of 1923 and on down to the passage of the Bank of Canada Act of 1934, and to show members of the house and the people of the country that practically every single dollar this nation operated on from 1868 down to 1934 was, or was backed by, funny money, exactly the kind of money that the Social Credit proposal envisaged.

In tracing this development as regards Canada's money I propose to follow the account of Canadian financial history as it is given in the report of the royal commission of 1933 on banking and currency in Canada, beginning at page 21, paragraph 44.

Before commencing this review may I say that "funny" money, as our opponents and critics apparently use the term, must refer to money which is created by the minister of finance, for the fundamental characteristic of the Social Credit proposal in respect of money is that money can safely and soundly be created by the government or the minister of finance. No one ever seems to doubt that coin money can be created through the Canadian mint. No one ever seems to call that funny because it is created by the government, but when it comes to paper money, then government-created money immediately becomes "funny", which, I must say, is extremely funny to me.

In examining the question of a government or a minister of finance creating money, may I point out that we are told in paragraph 44 of the report of the royal commission on banking and currency in Canada that the Dominion Notes Act of 1868 empowered the minister of finance—note that, the minister of finance—to issue, that is, to print, to create, $8 million in bills, $5 million of which would have 20 cents' worth of gold behind each of the dollars and $3 million of which would have 25 cents' worth of gold behind each of the dollars. Obviously that money was created by the minister of finance. Consequently it must have been "funny" according to our critics, but I think probably most men will find some difficulty in establishing the funniness of that money.

The chartered banks were required to keep in such dominion notes one-third of whatever cash reserve was required on their part, which meant that money that came out of the banks must have been funny too. Then again, to a large extent the notes remained in circulation, which indicated that our fathers in those days apparently did not worry very much about the notes being funny as long as they could get them.

In paragraph 46 of this report we find that by 1913 the minister of finance was empowered to issue, that is, print, create, $30 million provided he had 25 cents' worth of gold in reserve behind each of those dollars, that is, $7,500,000 behind the whole $30 million. If he desired to print further money, which he could, he had to have a dollar of gold of course behind each one dollar bill.

In paragraph 47 we learn that in August, 1914, parliament legislated that the minister might create—print—and issue $50 million against partial gold backing. After that, $16 million were issued by the minister of finance and the notes were backed by deposits of railway securities guaranteed by the dominion government. We notice here a definite move in the direction of what might be called a modern, realistic conception of the backing of money, that is, with securities.

Then, $10 million were issued and those notes were not backed either with securities or with metal. Now, that might appear to have been really funny, but it was not looked upon as such in those days by the realistic minister of finance, Sir Thomas White. In 1917, as recorded in the same paragraph, $50 million were printed and used to buy $50 million worth of Canadian goods which were sent across to Great Britain. This $50 million was backed by British treasury bills. Apparently no one thought those notes were funny. They did the job. They paid the Canadian farmers and other producers and they supplied the goods to Britain without immediately having goods in return.

May I suggest to Canadians, both within this house and without, that it is well to give careful attention to this fact. This is an incident in Canadian financial history illustrating a principle, the application of which might mean we could solve our problem in connection with exporting goods to foreign markets where purchasers are unable to obtain Canadian dollars. May I suggest very humbly that if the members of this house go back to their constituencies and tell the people that nothing can be done about exporting our goods when these facts stand before them in the royal commission's report on finance, then they are betraying a trust. The same is true of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) if he comes before us and tells us that nothing can be done in respect of the same kind of exporting.

On August 3, 1914, there was passed an order in council authorizing the minister of finance to issue advances of dominion notes to chartered banks against securities submitted by them to the Minister of Finance and approved by him. This again is in paragraph 48 of the report. It indicates the recognition of the fact that Canadian dollars could be issued, partly against securities, and they would be good money, not funny. They could be taken into a bank and issued by that bank in payment of its responsibilities, still without being "funny".

In August, 1914, parliament passed the Finance Act of 1914, confirming the issues of notes already made under the order in council of August 3, 1914, and providing for authorization by proclamation of similar advances in case of war, invasion, riot, insurrection, real or apprehended, or in case of any real or apprehended financial crisis. Now, that comes right down to our own times, I imagine. If we are not now faced with a financial crisis then a good many of us are misinterpreting the signs.

In paragraph 49 of the report we are told that the proclamation in pursuance of the Finance Act of 1914 was made on September 3, 1914, and thenceforth throughout world war I and the early post-war period extensive use of the act was made; that is to say, of the principle of having the minister of finance against the backing of approved securities print and issue the money which was necessary to carry on the activities in which the nation was at that time engaged.

In paragraph 50 we learn that an act passed in 1919 provided for the continuance in force of the proclamation of September 3, 1914 until two years after the conclusion of peace on termination of the war. This would seem to indicate that the act had been found effective and satisfactory during the war.

Paragraph 51 tells us about the power to issue dominion notes against approved securities being made a permanent part of the Canadian financial system. It would appear that the men who sat in this house from 1919 to 1923 were Social Crediters in their thinking. They did not consider the social credit monetary concepts funny. Paragraph 51 contains words which I think it fitting we should include in Hansard. Here are the words:

> But extensive use continued to be made of the power to issue dominion notes to the banks against approved securities with the result that it was decided in 1923 to make this part of the Finance Act mechanism a feature of the normal Canadian financial system. In introducing the new legislation, Mr. Fielding, the Minister of Finance, made the following brief explanation of its purpose:
>
> "The act (the Finance Act) was adopted as a war measure and no doubt was exceedingly useful in the financial operations during the war. It may be said that the war being over we no longer have any need for the act, but experience has shown—

Note these words.

> —that the act is still required; indeed, I am inclined to think that something of the kind will have to become almost a permanent part of our financial system.

In my opinion that statement is of great significance, as I think it must be to every person who gives it careful attention. Here was a measure adopted by a Conservative government and administered with great success by a Conservative finance minister, one of the very greatest the dominion has produced. It was re-enacted by a Liberal government upon recommendation of a man recognized as being one of the greatest of the Liberal finance ministers.

I should like to read two brief excerpts from this report, one from paragraph 48 in order to go back and sum up the whole picture.

> Another extremely important change in the Canadian monetary structure was effected by the passing of the Finance Act in the 1914 war session of parliament.

I read that just to emphasize the fact once more that the Finance Act of 1914 was a new departure, the beginning of a new and remarkable era in Canadian finance.

May I read now paragraph 55 of the commission report, in which the commission described the whole process as follows:

> From this brief survey it can be seen that while the Dominion Notes Act has developed mainly along its original lines, the position of the dominion note issue has been substantially changed by the introduction of the Finance Act.

It is important to bear in mind that this royal commission, from whose report I have been reading, was composed partly of men from Great Britain. The Right Hon. Lord Macmillan, P.C., K.C., of the City of London, England, was chairman of that commission. Sir Charles Stewart Addis, K.C.M.G., of the City of London, England, was apparently his assistant. Then, there were on the commission three eminent Canadians in the persons of the Right Hon. Sir William Thomas White, P.C., K.C.M.G., of the city of Toronto, in the province of Ontario; secondly, the Hon. John Edward Brownlee, K.C., M.L.A., of the city of Edmonton, in the province of Alberta, and Beaudry Leman, Esquire, B.Sc., C.E., of the city of Montreal, in the province of Quebec.

Apparently the object of those who selected the commission was to have a report adverse to the finance acts of 1914 and 1923. The object was to destroy in Canada these very successful finance acts of 1914 and 1923 and, as it were, to put Canada in bondage by establishing a Bank of Canada, or a central bank, that could grow into an instrument powerful enough seriously to control the activities of any minister of finance and his government.

We shall find that as the commissioners prepared their report that report was slanted slightly against what Canada had done under the finance acts of 1914 and 1923.

When they issued their report they recommended, as everyone suspected they would, the establishment of a Bank of Canada which, of course, could involve the discontinuance of the finance acts of 1914 and 1923.

Now, two eminent Canadians on that commission, Sir Thomas White and Beaudry Leman, recommended solemnly against the recommendation of the commission. Sir Thomas White wrote a memorandum of dissent which appears at page 85 of the report dated October 3, 1933. I believe it is only fitting that I should read certain extracts from that memorandum, so that those who have been unable to have access to the report may be in a position to know what Sir Thomas White thought about the whole proposal of establishing the Bank of Canada.

I quote first from page 85 as follows:

> But there was on the part of the government no "policy of inflation." Credit inflation automatically and inevitably occurred owing to the need of financing the government's own war expenditures in Canada and of providing the British government with the necessary funds to pay for the vast amount of foodstuffs, munitions and other products purchased in Canada and required by Britain and her allies in the prosecution of the war. In respect of these advances to the British government aggregating more than twelve hundred million dollars it is to be observed that conversely that government made advances in sterling in London to the Canadian government to meet the expenditures of the latter in maintaining the Canadian forces abroad. On balance at the end of the war the British government owed the Canadian government two hundred and twenty million dollars which was duly paid.

That passage clearly indicates how the finance minister created money in Canada so as to enable Great Britain to buy goods in Canada during world war I. And that is the very thing we need to be able to do now, on a larger scale.

Then, on the same page I find this:

In these conditions and having regard to the suspension of the gold standard in all the great nations of the world except the United States, the Finance Act instead of being an instrument promoting a policy of credit inflation served with the highest efficiency the purpose of providing in conjunction with the note issues of the banks adequate currency facilities for the financing of the rapidly mounting volume of Canadian agricultural, industrial and commercial production and trade. It is my belief that no central bank in the world during the war period functioned more smoothly or was capable of being utilized more promptly or with greater immediate effect in serving the purposes of national and business finance than the Canadian Finance Act of 1914. It is also my view that during the period in question and in the very trying period of so-called reconstruction following the armistice no other monetary system proved more efficient or better adapted to national needs than that of the chartered banks of Canada supplemented as it was by the provisions of the Finance Act of 1914. The advantage of that system to the government of Canada, in making its issues of bonds to the Canadian public and of having immediately available through the agency of the Canadian Bankers' Association the facilities afforded by the chartered banks with their thousands of branches throughout the dominion needs only to be mentioned to be realized and appreciated. And in my opinion the same high degree of efficiency has been maintained by the Canadian financial system down to the present time. Of this statement we have at least partial proof in the stability of that system during the unprecedented world depression of the past four years.

And then at page 87:

Although it may be technically correct that "the Finance Act did not provide Canada with the organization needed to undertake the tasks which the maintenance of the restored gold standard implied," the fact is that in conjunction with the policy followed by the banks the Canadian monetary system worked quite as efficiently as the central bank systems of nations economically similar to Canada.

And this further quotation:

It was suggested during the course of our hearings that political influence might possibly affect unfavourably the administration of the Finance Act because the treasury board which authorizes advances and fixes rates of interest payable thereon is composed of members of the government. With regard to this I have only to say that if by "political influence" is meant partisan or improper influence not a shred of evidence has been adduced before the commission in support of such a suggestion. The fact is that authorization of advances under the act is an almost purely routine matter of administration carried out by the treasury board, aided by the recommendation of the Minister of Finance and the advice of his chief officials. I have no hesitation in asserting that the administration of the Finance Acts under all governments has been wholly free from any such influence.

And again at page 88 he uses these words:

Should it be the opinion of the Minister of Finance that he requires additional expert assistance to that available in his department he might appoint as a permanent member of his staff an outstanding economist whose special duty it would be to continuously study the economic and banking situation in Canada. Such an official together with the deputy minister of finance (himself a distinguished economist) and the inspector general of banks would constitute a most competent departmental committee to advise the minister and the treasury board upon all applications for advances by the banks. Personally, if any change is made in the existing mode of procedure, I would prefer such a permanent departmental advisory committee to an independent board created for the purpose of control and regulation of credit through the administration of the act. It may be of interest to the public to know that since the enactment of the Finance Act in 1914 the dominion government has received a total revenue, by way of interest charged the banks upon advances, of $22,782,602, with practically no additional cost to the Department of Finance.

And, again, here is a quotation of importance:

Upon this most important question which involves consideration of structural change in Canada's monetary system I regret to find myself in disagreement with a majority of the members of the commission. With my colleague, Mr. Leman, I dissent from their recommendation that "a central bank for Canada be forthwith established." The terms of our dissent are to be found in paragraph 238 of the report and are as follows:—

"238. Sir Thomas White and Mr. Beaudry Leman dissent from the arguments and conclusions contained in this chapter as to the need of the establishment of a central bank at the present time and under existing conditions and also as to certain features of the suggested constitution of such a bank should it at any time be established in Canada."

One further important quotation is as follows:

