A Little Daughter

Of a Church of England minister cured of a distressing rash, by Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Mr. RICHARD BIRKA, the well-known Druggist, 287 McGill st., Montreal, P. Q., says:

I have used Ayer's Family Medicine for 40 years, and have heard nothing but good of them. I know many performed by Ayer's Sarsaparilla, one in particular being that of a little daughter of a Church of England minister. The child was literally covered from head to foot with a red and ec-zematous rash, from which she had suffered for two or three years, in spite of the best medical treatment available. Her father was in great distress about the case, and, at my recommendation, at last began to administer Ayer's Sarsaparilla, two bottles of which effected a complete cure, much to her relief and her father's delight. I am sure, were he here to-day, he would testify to the strongest testimony as to the merits of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

POETRY.

My Rights.

Yes, God has made me a woman, And I am content to be Just what he meant, not reaching out For other things, since He Who knows me best and loves me most,
Has ordered this for me.

A woman to live my life out In quiet, womanly ways, Heating the far off battle The crowding, struggling world of men Fight through their busy days.

I am not strong or valiant,
I would not join the fight Or jostle with crowds in the highways To only my garments white; But I have rights as a woman, and here I claim my right.

The right of a rose to bloom In its own, sweet, separate way, With none to question the perfumed pink,
And none to utter nay If it reaches a root or points a thorn, as even a rose-tree may.

The right of the lady birch to grow,
To grow as the Lord may please,
By never the sturdy oak rebuked, Denied not sun nor breeze, For all its pliant tenderness, kin to the strongest trees.

The right to a life of my own—Not merely a casual bit Of somebody else's life flung out That taking hold of it, I may stand as a cipher does, after a numerical writ.

The right to gather and glean When food I need and can,
From the garnered store of knowledge Which man has heaped for men, Taking with free hand freely and after an ordered plan.

The right—ah, best and sweetest!— To stand all undimmed Whenever sorrow or want or sin Call for a woman's aid, With none to cavil or question, by never a look gained.

I do not ask for a ballot;
Though my very life were at stake, I would beg for nobler justice Than men for manhood's sake Should give ungrudgingly, not withhold If I must fight and take.

The first fault and the feeblest Both seek the weak woman's wit The weakest soldier's name is writ On the great army's roll, And God who made man's body strong made, too, the woman's soul.

SELECT STORY.

The Strike at Shane's.

CHAPTER VII.—Continued.

"The bad luck your papa has had this spring makes us all feel downhearted. Perhaps it is all for the best, and we can only hope that it will come out all right."

"I don't think it will come out all right," said Edith. "I don't think papa is doing right to drive away the birds, and work the horses to death; and Mr. Tracy thinks the same thing, for Uncle told me so, and I'm going to have a talk with papa about it."

"It is quite useless to annoy him about it," said Mrs. Shane. "His mind is made up, and he will not change it."

This reply did not settle the matter with Edith, for she was determined to talk with her father about the matter, but she did not expect the opportunity to come in the manner it did.

The days slipped by and the corn was coming up, but the difficulties on the Shane farm had not improved any.
The horses were still not fit for use, and Hedges could not tell when they would be.

"I don't believe there's anything the matter with that bay Dick," said Shane, and I'm not going to fool with him any longer. He eats as hearty as ever, and I saw him down in the pasture trotting round as lumber as any horse. I'm going to hitch him up and make him work or break his neck.
Here's the corn coming up and some of the horses have got to go in the field pretty soon."

Having come to this conclusion, he said he would hitch Dick up to the cart and drive him to town, and see if he couldn't limber him up under the whip.

"Do be careful," said Mrs. Shane,
"you know that horse has a bad temper."

"Oh! I guess Dick knows me by this time, and he knows I won't stand any nonsense. If he's as lame as he pretends to be, it won't be much trouble to handle him."

Accordingly the harness was put on Dick, and he was hitched to the cart.
He stumbled around like a very lame horse, and made a very bad show of getting along. No one but Shane would have undertaken to drive him in the condition he appeared to be in.

"I shall not rest until I know," said Mrs. Shane.

"Don't worry about that. Father knows too much about horses to let Dick get away from him that way," said Tom. "Come, Mike, let's go back to work."

Shane still lay beside the road unconscious. He had tried to manage the horse by brute force, and here was the result—the horse prancing over the field, cutting in his freedom, and the man lying unconscious beside the road.

The horse had not expanded a tittle of his strength, and the man was as helpless as the dead.

At the time of the accident Edith was visiting Cora Tracy, and in the afternoon Mr. Tracy had occasion to hitch up his wagon and drive down the road on an errand to another farm, and as he was going by the Shane farm he told Edith she could ride with him.
She gladly accepted his invitation, for it would save her a long walk.

"I always like to ride behind your horses," said Edith, as they drove along; "they look so happy and contented."

"That's the way I want them to be," said Mr. Tracy. "They deserve to be happy just as much as I do, or any of my family."

Do you think animals know anything about happiness or unhappiness?" said Edith; "that is, I mean do they know when we love them, and can they love us in return?"

"That is a hard question to answer," said Tracy; "but I think their actions indicate that they appreciate love and kindness as much as a human being does; but whether they understand such things as we do or not, I cannot tell. I have always made it a rule to treat them as though they did. This is especially the case with horses and dogs. I can't say I can get much better service out of them by treating them kindly; and then I feel better myself when I have treated all the brute creation fairly, and have dealt justly by them."

"I wish papa would look at things as you do, and would take more interest in the welfare of his dumb animals," said Edith.

"He won't listen to me," said Edith.
"He says I am too young to know much about such things."

"Why, now is this?" exclaimed Tracy, as they passed along the road in the vicinity of the wreck, and saw Dick over in the field. "Here is a horse running to and fro with a bridle in his teeth, and part of the harness. Why, it looks like he's passed in his remark, and he recognized the horse as Mr.
Shane's."

"It looks like Dick," said Edith,
"taking up the sentence and finishing it for him; but it can't be, for Dick is lame and this horse is not."

"It looks like some one has indications of it on the road. That is one way that high-spirited horses have of retailing for ill-usage on the part of their masters," he continued, as they drove along the road. On nearing the turn of the road he saw evidence of the wreck made by Dick; but Edith's bright eyes had seen it before he did.

"Oh! Mr. Tracy, there has been a runaway, and there is a man lying beside the road. Oh! I know it must be papa. Do please drive faster and let us see."

Mr. Tracy needed no urging on this point, for he had already started his horses into a trot. As they neared the place the cause of the trouble was apparent. Edith leaped from the wagon and was at her father's side in a moment.

"Oh! dear, dear papa, speak to me," she sobbed, as she lifted his head in her arms. "Oh! Mr. Tracy, is he dead?" she asked, between her sobs.

"He is not dead, my dear girl, but very badly injured, I am afraid," he answered. "Can you stay here with him until I go for assistance?"

"No, no, don't go away; I can help you lift him in the wagon and we will take him home."

"Why, my dear girl, you have not strength to help me lift him."
"Oh! yes I have, Mr. Tracy; I am strong. Come, let me help."

"Well, if you insist, we will try it," said Tom.

stopped at the house; "I don't think papa ought to drive him when he is so lame," and she pulled his neck and smoothed out his long mane. "Don't drive him hard, papa," she continued, "and I'm sure he'll do the best he can."

Shane made no reply, but drove away toward town. The drive to town and return was a slow one, for even Shane's hard heart would not permit him to drive a lame horse out of a walk.

Shane was rather proud of the fact that he had succeeded in driving Dick, and said that all the horse needed was exercise, and he would be at work in a few days. He thought, perhaps, a little exercise would do the rest of the horses good.

The next day Shane proceeded to hitch Dick up again for the purpose of driving him.

"There's no use talkin'," he said to Mike, "I have got to put these horses to work."

"Better go slow," said Mike, "for if you put them sick horses to work too soon you may have dead ones."

"It is better to have dead horses than useless ones, just standin' round starin'. A dead horse don't eat anything. It would be money in my pocket if they were all dead," and he gave Dick a sharp cut with the whip to start him. Dick laid back his ears and hobbled away; but his looks appeared to indicate that a very little of the whip would limber him up too much for the good of Shane's health.

Edith being away there was no one to give the horse a kind word to put him in a better humor. Shane mounted the cart and clucked to the horse to start, but Dick stood still. He had evidently made up his mind that he did not want to work that day. Shane gave him a cut with the whip, but Dick laid back his ears and shook his head as much as to say, "there is trouble coming for somebody."

"You won't go, eh?" said Shane, and he gave the horse blow after blow with the whip, almost cutting the hide open. Dick made a lunge forward, but Shane pulled with all his strength on the reins, and the hard bit cut the horse's mouth until it bled, and threw Dick back on his haunches. The sudden halt threw Shane forward, and the reins were slackened. This was Dick's opportunity, and he seized the bit in his teeth, a trick horses learn when they are abused, and which they practise to save themselves from punishment by the bit. Before Shane could recover himself, Dick had started down the road, forgetting all about his stiff legs. Shane pulled on the reins until his arms ached, but it was the strength of a man against the strength of a horse.
It was the steel bit against the teeth of the horse, now, and the teeth won.
Down the road they flew with the speed of the wind. They neared the bend in the road, and Shane knew that the end would come there, for he never could make the turn without upsetting the cart, but he was helpless. Straight at the fence went Dick, paying no attention to the turn of the road, and with a bound he went over, and the cart was smashed to splinters. Shane lay beside the road unconscious, and to all appearance dead.

Dick kicked himself free from the harness and sped across the field, thankful that he had the privilege to use his legs once more. Shane had spent his life among horses, but he never learned until now that he could not subdue a high-spirited horse by force.

Mrs. Shane had seen the horse start and feared the result. An elevation in the road had cut off her view, after the horse had passed down the road a few rods, and she knew nothing of the result. She called Mike and Tom from the barn and told them what had occurred.

"Oh! that's all right, mother; I guess father can manage him, as lame as he is," said Tom. "He won't run very far before he will get tired."

"Bogorra, I'm not so sure of that," said Mike; "it's a very temper the horse has, and when his blood's up he's hard to manage."

"I would rather you would go after him and see if anything has happened," said Mrs. Shane.

"Why, how useless that would be, mother; there isn't a horse on the farm we could drive, and we couldn't catch him on foot."

be said; and they lifted him up and succeeded in getting him into the wagon, and drove as rapidly as possible to the Shane farm. When they arrived and met her mother on the porch, Edith's swollen eyes told the whole story to Mrs. Shane, and she clasped her daughter in her arms and sobbed: "Is he dead, Edie? is he dead?"

"No, mamma; only hurt," she replied, trying to keep up a stout heart.
Mrs. Shane hastened out to the wagon, and Edith hurried away in search of Tom and Mike, who came and carried Mr. Shane into the house.
Mr. Tracy immediately went for the doctor.

"Now, Jerry and Tom, you'll have to trot," he said to his horses, as he touched them lightly with the whip.
"It's a case of life and death, old boys, so skip along." And the good horses skimmed over the ground in the best of humor, and soon returned with the doctor.

On examination Shane was found to have a broken leg, and a contusion on the head. He remained in a semi-unconscious condition for the rest of the day. On the following morning he rallied, but had no recollection of the accident until Mrs. Shane explained the matter to him. The bitterest pang to him now was the thought of the two long months of enforced idleness and suffering that were before him.

CHAPTER VIII.

The story of the accid at was soon spread abroad over the farm, and was commented on by all the animals; but the general opinion seemed to be that there would be one person less to abuse them—for a while anyhow.

"I'm sorry Tom wasn't fixed somehow so that he couldn't get out here to look after the farm."

"I don't like that way of doing," said Dobbin to Dick. "You went too far in that matter. Of course everybody will know now that you were playing off, and they may see through the whole thing, and that will result in more violence."

"Well, what is done can't be undone," said Dick, "my temper got away with me, and I was tired of sham-ming. If I had been really lame Shane would have driven me just the same.
I was lame for all he knew to the contrary, and when he whipped me I started to run before I had time to think.
I knew I might as well make a complete job of it while I was at it; for Shane would know I was shamming anyhow, and I would have to fight it out with him sometime. You see, I had put myself in a position where I had to fight or surrender, and I preferred to fight."

"It's a very bad piece of business," said Dobbin, "and may make trouble for all of us. You should have kept your temper."

"I tried to and failed, as you see," said Dick. "I have neither your age nor experience in such matters, and make bad breaks sometimes."

"We will have to take some other means of protecting ourselves when Shane gets about again," said Dobbin; "but that won't be for a good many days, so Tower says."

"It's open war with me now," said Dick. "I don't intend that the harness shall go on my back again until this matter is settled. Tower was saying the other day that Shane said if ever we did get able to work he would make us pay dear for our vacation."

The days were long and tedious for Shane as he lay on his bed and brooded over his troubles. To his physical suffering was added the worry about the condition of things on the farm.
Mrs. Shane and the children tried to keep all further trouble from him by putting the condition of things in their most favorable light, but he understood his business too thoroughly to be deceived.

"Tom, how long before that corn will be ready for the cultivator?" asked Shane, as Tom was passing through the room.

"I don't know," said Tom, "but when it is the neighbors will all come in and plow it over for you."

"Did the blackbirds take much of it?"

"I don't think they took any of it,"
said Tom.

"Is it a good stand?"

said Tom.

"Is it a good stand?"

said Tom.

said Tom.

"I shall not rest until I know," said
Mrs. Shane.

The death of the Czar of Russia after an illness of little more than a month's duration, removes the mightiest autocrat on earth. Alexander was "Emperor of all the Russias."

The territory under his rule embraced one-sixth of the surface of the globe, and contains over one hundred and ten millions of people. He was one of the greatest of the Romanoff family that has reigned since the dynasty was founded in 1613.

Born in 1845 he came to the throne in 1881, in consequence of the assassination of his father by nihilist conspirators. He was studious as a young man, and when obliged to assume the reins of power he was qualified to fill a post so responsible and so difficult.

During the thirteen years of his reign Russia has made wonderful strides in the extension of commerce and in the quelling of domestic discord. She has attained a position of great influence among the first powers of the world.

On the other hand it remains for a more enlightened age to witness the removal of cruelities against prisoners of her population and to repeal the awful severities of Siberia.

The Provincial papers are still grinding away at the late exhibition at Halifax, and the main point at issue now appears to be in regard to the best place for holding such shows.

To argue the question understandingly requires a knowledge of the object sought in holding provincial exhibitions. If the principle aim is to have a successful dog show, or to afford a breeding firm a good opportunity for advertising, there is no doubt that the object can best be accomplished at Halifax.

If a sham fight or naval review is a necessary adjunct of an agricultural and industrial show, the metropolis is undoubtedly the best place in the province to hold such an exhibition.

But if the object is to obtain the fullest possible representation of the agricultural products of the Province, the end can best be attained by holding the exhibitions in agricultural centres.

The City of Hamilton Stirred Up. An Interesting and Well-known Lad Taken Home from St. Joseph's Hospital to Die.

The Whole Staff of Physicians and Trained Nurses Declared His Case to be a Hopeless One. At the Point of Death, Paine's Celery Compound Cures Him.

One of the Most Desperate Cases Ever known—Limbs and Body Swollen—An Unconquerable Piece of Humanity—The Boy's Body is Tapped and Two Gallons of Water Taken Away—After Medical Skill Failed, Paine's Celery Compound Works Miraculously—All Statements Vouched for by Geo. LeRiche, Esq., late late of J. Wiser & Co., and David Morton, Esq., Superintendent of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church Sunday School.

Young Aleck McIntosh, interesting, bright and good-looking, is a lad in his teens, and resides with his parents at No. 107 Catherine Street south, Hamilton, Ont. The members of the family are well and favorably known, and attend St. Paul's Presbyterian church, of which Rev. E. J. Laidlaw, LL. D., is pastor.

Some months ago, to the great grief and consternation of Mr and Mrs McIntosh; their son Aleck was stricken down with a terrible swelling of the limbs and with a terrible fever. Notwithstanding the fact that the boy was under the care of an able and experienced doctor, his condition continued to grow worse.

A consultation was held by three of the leading physicians of the city, and the result was that Aleck was sent to the hospital, where he might have all the advantages of medical skill, and the constant attention of trained nurses.

At the end of four weeks, Aleck's condition was more alarming than ever, and his parents were assured that there was no possible chance of recovery for their dear boy. He lay on his hospital bed perfectly helpless, and so swollen from head to foot that he was unrecognizable.

The sorrowing parents, feeling that there was no hope, and that the hand of death had securely grasped their loved boy, wished to have him taken from the home. As he was being taken from the hospital, those in charge expressed sorrow that nothing more could be done for the dying lad.

While at home, and at the point of death, a kind neighbor called to see him. At the moment a revelation came to her mind. A joyous hope filled her anotherly heart as she gazed on the dying boy, and witnessed the intense grief of the parents. She remembered having herself used in an extreme case the great life-giver and health-restorer, Paine's Celery Compound. Would it meet this case where he vital spirit was almost extinguished? Yes, she had faith that it would.

The use of Paine's Celery Compound was suggested to the parents. "Ah! yes, try it—anything—if dear Aleck's life can be saved."

The wonderful Compound was immediately procured and properly administered. The first dose produced results that gave the parents hope. There was a virtue in the medicine that no other remedy ever contained. The boy lived, and the medicine was continued day to day with results that gave joy and gladness. By the time the fourth bottle was finished young Aleck McIntosh was well, and all his troubles banished. To-day he is as strong and robust as any boy of his age in the city.

All the physicians look upon the cure as a marvelous one, and the whole staff of St. Joseph's Hospital rejoice at the lad's restoration to health.

Scores of Hamilton's best people can vouch for every statement made in connection with this unparalleled case. The statements made by Mr and Mrs J. McIntosh, the boy's parents, are ably supported by two Hamilton's leading business men. Such sterling proof of the value of Paine's Celery Compound, should strongly convince every sufferer, and all who have suffering and distressed friends, that there is no other medicine.

CORRESPONDENCE. To the Editor of THE ACADIAN. Unphilosophical as our council may have been at the time of their election they are undoubtedly fast learning the ways of legislators. The manner in which the petition re Scott Act Inspector was shelved at their last meeting shows this to be the case.

The above testimony of Mr and Mrs James McIntosh, is vouched for by Geo. LeRiche, Esq., and David Morton, Esq., as follows: "The testimonial letter from Mr and Mrs James McIntosh, in reference to the cure of their son Aleck by Paine's Celery Compound, has been submitted to us as neighbors and friends. Having visited this home many times during Aleck's illness, we do most willingly testify to the truthfulness of all statements made."

A Woman of the World. BY FLORENCE WILSON. She had been talking pleasantly to two or three women; she made her good-byes all cheerful and bright, and after she had disappeared one woman turned to another in a tone that was scolding.

What is that—a woman of the world? A woman of the world is one who feels that the story told to hurt your feelings is essentially bad form.

A woman of the world is one who is courteous to old people, who laughs with the young, and who makes herself agreeable to women in all conditions of life.

A woman of the world is one who does not gauge people by their clothes, or their riches, but who condemns bad manners.

A woman of the world is one who does not let her right hand know what her left hand does. She does not discuss her charities at an afternoon tea, nor the faults of her family at a prayer-meeting.

A woman of the world is one who in her dress is always the personification of neatness and good taste, whose hair is combed, whose skin is like satin and whose eyes shine with happiness.

A woman of the world is one who is courteous under all circumstances and in every condition in which she may be placed. She is the woman who can receive the unwelcome guest with a smile so bright and a hand-shake so cordial that in trying to make the visitor comfortable she forgets to be a woman.
