

IMAGE EVALUATION
TEST TARGET (MT-3)

Photographic
Sciences
Corporation

23 WEST MAIN STREET
WEBSTER, N. Y. 14580
(716) 872-4503

CIHM/ICMH
Microfiche
Series.

CIHM/ICMH
Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadien de microreproductions historiques

© 1981

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Library Division
Provincial Archives of British Columbia

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the filming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol → (meaning "CONTINUED"), or the symbol ▼ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Library Division
Provincial Archives of British Columbia

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en terminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles suivants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole → signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole ▼ signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

ails
du modifier
une page

rrata
o

pelure, n à

32X

MOP
979.51
F687

MR.

Delivered

The Commission reported to the House of Commons on August 6th, 1906, that the Stoney Mountain

Mr. F. C. ... Committee as

Mr. C. ... lodgings ... progress of ... discussion ... circumstances ... ready bear ... by gentlemen ... it would be ... new arguments ... gone so long ... fore us has ... this debate ... tendance ... rassment ... and after ... the highest ... upon the ... an impera ... mentous ... as is invol ... sent here ... the humb ... have been ... reluctanc ... and belie ... that Stat

SPEECH
OF
MR. SOLOMON FOOT, OF VERMONT, ON THE
OREGON QUESTION.

Delivered in the House of Representatives, U. S., February 6, 1846.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having under consideration a resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, entitled "A resolution of notice to Great Britain to annul and abrogate the convention between Great Britain and the United States of August 6th, 1827, relative to the country on the northwest coast of America, westward of the Stony mountains, commonly called Oregon"—

Mr. FOOT, of Vermont, having obtained the floor, addressed the committee as follows:

Mr. CHAIRMAN: It has been my misfortune to have been confined at my lodgings by severe indisposition, for the most part of the time during the progress of this debate. I know but little of the character and scope of the discussion, except as I have occasionally glanced at the reports. Under these circumstances, I can expect to do little more than to travel over a track already beaten; to say little more than has already been often and better said by gentlemen who have preceded me. Indeed, under any circumstances, it would be little better than arrogant presumption in me to essay to add any new argument, or to give any new interest to a question after it had undergone so long, so elaborate, and so able a discussion as the question now before us has received. It was my desire and my purpose in the early part of this debate to have expressed my views to the committee, had not my attendance upon the House been interrupted. Feeling, as I do, the embarrassment of addressing the committee at so late a period of the discussion, and after the question under consideration has called forth the best talent, the highest eloquence, the profoundest research, and the ripest experience upon the floor of this House, that purpose would now be abandoned but for an imperative sense of obligation I feel, that, upon a question of such momentous and vital consequences to the whole and every part of our country as is involved in the resolution before us, the State, which I in part represent here, should be heard upon it, even though it be through the voice of the humblest of her representatives upon this floor. Much rather would I have been saved the task, (for it is with the most extreme and unaffected reluctance that I ever attempt to address this House,) and that what I trust and believe to be the prevailing opinions and sentiments of the people of that State upon this subject, should have been expressed by either one of my more learned and gifted colleagues. But as it is, Mr. Chairman, I must beg the indulgence of the committee while I venture to submit to their consideration some general views upon the subject which has already occupied so much of their attention.

Allow me to say, in the first place, Mr. Chairman, that I do not propose in the few remarks which my recovering strength will enable me to present at the present time, to go into an examination of the grounds of the respective claims of Great Britain and the United States to the Oregon territory. The time allotted me is insufficient at the same time to allow me to present some other views in connection with this controversy between the two Governments as I desire to do. Moreover, the question of title has been very fully discussed both here and elsewhere. The result of the best and most impartial examination I have been able to give to the subject, upon my own mind is, that both Governments have certain rights and claims there, not perhaps very clearly defined; that neither Government has a clear or perfect title to the whole of the Oregon territory; that neither can rightfully assert an exclusive claim to the whole, or extend its own exclusive jurisdiction over the whole of it, consistently with the rights and claims of the other. The question of title in controversy is peculiarly of that character, which renders it eminently a fit and proper subject for negotiation and compromise. However we may affect to regard our title to the whole of Oregon as clear and perfect, England is doubtless equally convinced that she has the better title to a part of that territory. Not unlike all parties to a controversy, we very readily, and easily, and naturally satisfy ourselves that we are in the right, that the opposing party is in the wrong. The controversy in this instance, as to the question of right, as to the question of title, let us bear in mind, is not among ourselves; it is with another party, with another Government, which claims title against us to a part of this territory. This controversy has existed for more than twenty-five years. It is a question of conflicting title between two Governments, each urging and insisting that it has the stronger and better claim. The arguments which have been addressed by each Government to the other, through their diplomatic correspondence, however ingenious and able they may be, are nevertheless rather the ingenious and able arguments of counsel for a client, than of the judge pronouncing an impartial decision upon the merits of the case. These conflicting claims have been the subject of discussion, of argument, of negotiation, of mutual propositions of compromise and settlement at different periods and under different administrations, representing the views and policies of the two leading diverse political parties in the country, during this whole period of time. Both Governments have occupied the disputed territory, in the mean time, to a certain extent, and for certain purposes, as they now occupy it by virtue of a conventional agreement.

The direct question which is now presented to us, and which I undertake to say is prematurely and inconsiderately forced upon the consideration of the popular branch of the Legislative Department is, whether Congress shall direct that unconditional notice shall forthwith be given for the termination of the convention of 1827; and whether, as a necessary resulting consequence of such notice, after the abrogation of the treaty, we shall assert an exclusive claim to the whole of the Oregon territory, and extend over the whole of it our own exclusive sovereignty; or whether we shall leave the controversy still open, as it now is, for further negotiation and compromise. Whether, in short, the

the pop
as the r
"war o
adjustm
the hono
ing fro
opinion
one acc
that cou
and whic
terest, o
al magna
Mr. C
that the out natio
stand it
Secretary
are warra
that Gove official de whom is trovcrsy a comprom
or by furt
abroad, b
himself a
be so, wh amicable
the town,
Committe
two since honorable had very ernments happy to
Why,
what is th
Does it in challenge Has our
Have the
anywhere
posed to c vention?
ests the s
friendly r
cautiously
relations,
well as to
I answer
title; or,

the popular language of the advocates of extreme measures, we shall adopt as the rule of our action, "the whole or none of Oregon," "now or never," "war or no war;" or whether we shall yet endeavor to effect an amicable adjustment of the controversy, and at the same time maintain the peace and the honor of the country. The answer within and without this Hall, judging from recent indications, would doubtless present some contrariety of opinion as to the most expedient course of action, while all will agree with one accord, that the dictates of wisdom and patriotism alike commend us to that course of action most consonant with the national character and dignity, and which shall best subserve to vindicate and to maintain our national interest, our national faith, our national honor, and, if you please, our national magnanimity.

Mr. Chairman, we have been frequently told that negotiation is at an end; that the door is closed against all compromise, and cannot be reopened without national dishonor. Sir, I do not so understand it. I do not so understand it from the Executive message. I do not so understand it from the Secretary of State. From the very latest intelligence from England, we are warranted in saying, it is not so understood by the official authorities of that Government. Who, indeed, from anything contained in the published official documents upon this subject, is authorized to say, that those to whom is especially committed the charge of this question regard the controversy as having reached a point at which the national honor would be compromised by the consideration of further propositions of compromise, or by further efforts for an amicable settlement by negotiation, at home or abroad, by treaty or by arbitrament? No one, I assume to say, would feel himself authorized or justified in making such a declaration. How can it be so, while England manifests every disposition on her part to effect an amicable adjustment? Indeed, we have it not only in flying rumors about the town, but we have the authoritative statement of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, (Mr. C. J. INGERSOLL,) made but a day or two since, upon this floor, in answer to an interrogatory put to him by my honorable friend from Tennessee, (Mr. GENTRY,) that a correspondence had very recently taken place between the official organs of the two Governments relative to this question. I can say, for one, sir, that I was very happy to hear it.

Why, Mr. Chairman, let us ask ourselves, in all candor and soberness, what is this controversy about? What is the nature and character of it? Does it involve any question of honor that renders an appeal to arms, or a challenge to arms, or a provocation to arms, necessary to its vindication? Has our national flag been insulted at home or abroad, by sea or by land? Have the rights of our citizens been anywhere violated, or has our soil been anywhere wrongfully invaded? Has England done anything, or even proposed to do anything, incompatible with the stipulations of the joint convention? Nothing of the kind, sir. On the contrary, England still manifests the strongest desire to maintain, and strengthen, and perpetuate the friendly relations which subsist between us; and not only so, but she seems cautiously to avoid doing anything which would be likely to interrupt those relations, the preservation of which is so vitally important to her interest, as well as to our own. What, then, I ask again, is this controversy about? I answer, that it is nothing more nor less than a mere naked question of title; or, more properly speaking, it is a mere question of boundary. Such a controversy is, of all others, the most appropriate to be settled by negotiation, by treaty, or by reference. It is a disputed claim to a piece of territory, the evidence of title to which is, in its very nature, somewhat vague and inconclusive, and about which both parties may honestly differ in regard to the strength and validity of their respective claims. It is a case wherein both parties may relax somewhat from their extreme demands, not only without dishonor, but with signal credit, for the sake of peace and harmony. The settlement of such a question most pre-eminently belongs to the statesman, rather than to the soldier; to the councils of the cabinet, rather than to the wager of battle. Sir, it would shock the moral sense of the civilized world, that the two most enlightened and Christian nations of the earth should fail to effect a peaceful and honorable settlement of such a controversy, and should involve themselves in a war in consequence, the end of which, and the disasters of which, no man can foresee or conceive.

But it is urged as an objection to negotiation, or compromise in any way that we have a clear and perfect title to the whole of Oregon. This declaration is often made, I apprehend, without much examination of the question, and with an easy credulity, which is satisfied without further investigation, to repeat, as clear and incontestible facts, the unsupported assertions of a political conclave. The stronger and clearer, however, we can make our title to the whole of Oregon appear, so much the better and safer case we should have for the decision of an impartial and competent tribunal, if the parties should not be able to agree upon terms of settlement between themselves. And surely there could be little risk of our rights in submitting the question of our title to such a tribunal, provided some of these gentlemen will shed upon the board some of the light by which they so clearly see the perfection of our title to the whole of Oregon. Gentlemen have said, by way of illustration, more remarkable for its extravagance than any analogy to the question we are considering, that we might as well yield to the demands of England any portion of these United States, or of this District, or of the ground on which this Capitol stands, and that we might as well propose negotiation, or reference, in such a case, as in the case of Oregon. I can hardly think gentlemen serious in such a comparison, or in supposing that there is any analogy, or any approximation to analogy, in the two cases. In the case of Oregon, we have to meet an adverse claim, and one which has been asserted and insisted upon as long, at least, as we have asserted any claim; and one which we have so far respected as to have made repeated propositions for a division of the territory in dispute; and so far as to have admitted the adverse party to the exercise and enjoyment, in common with us, of equal rights and privileges there. And this is not all. England has had actual occupation of this territory, or a part of it, much longer, and a much larger portion of the time than we have; and under the convention of 1818 she claimed the right of settlement there; and in 1827 we renewed the convention for an indefinite period of time, with the full knowledge that she claimed such right of settlement. I will not ask whether, under these circumstances, we are not estopped from asserting, but I will ask whether we are quite justified in asserting, that England has not only no title, but no color of title or claim to any portion of the Oregon territory? Such an assertion, it appears to me, is a direct and palpable contradiction of the concessions of this Government, by a series of treaties, negotiations, and propositions, through a ped by nego-

 ce of ter-
 what vague
 differ in re-
 is a case
 demands, peace and
 tly belongs
 he cabinet.
 al sense of n nations of t of such a quence, the or conceive
 n any way
 This decla-
 tion of the t further inported asser-
 ver, we can better and l competen-
 of settlement
 our rights in ided some o-y which the
 on. Gentle-
 its extrava-
 at we might these Unite-
 apitol stands uch a case, a s in such approxima-
 we have t-
 insisted upon hich we havivision of the party to th-
 and privileg-
 on of this tea of the time
 d the right
 r an indefini-
 h right of ses, we are n-
 te justified i-
 title or claim
 it appears
 f this Govern-
 through a p-

riod of more than a quarter of a century; and an unwarrantable imputation upon the conduct and motives of three different administrations of our Government, numbering many of the ablest men and purest patriots of the country, in proposing to surrender to Great Britain a large portion of this territory as a peace-offering, to what is now, for the first time, asserted to be an arrogant and groundless demand. We have, all at once, become vastly wiser and more patriotic than our fathers. Considering the character and the early date of the British claims—considering the grounds and the nature of the evidence upon which our respective claims rest—and considering the manner in which her claims have always been treated, the concessions and the offers made—I have no hesitation in saying, that we shall find less justification in now treating her claims as a mere arrogant and groundless pretence, than we shall in meeting them and treating them with serious and respectful consideration—so long, at least, as she manifests a similar disposition on her part.

Let us suppose that England, being as thoroughly convinced of the validity of her title to Oregon—the whole of it, if you please—as the Baltimore convention and President Polk are of ours, should say to us: “We have a clear and incontestible title to the whole of the Oregon territory; we shall, therefore, insist upon the whole of it; and although we have been negotiating about it for more than twenty-five years, and made various propositions of settlement, and offered you one-half of it, by way of compromise, and you have occupied it, in common with us, all this while, we shall now close the door upon you, and give you notice that, at the expiration of twelve months, you must quit possession; from that time we shall exercise our own exclusive jurisdiction over the whole of it; we shall no longer listen to any terms of compromise; we shall neither propose nor receive any further offers for negotiation, nor will we submit what we consider a clear title in us to the decision of any disinterested tribunal; all your claims are a mere pretence, without foundation or shadow of title. We own the whole; we demand the whole; we will take nothing short of the whole; and, in so doing, we claim only what rightfully belongs to us; and if you choose to go to war with us for taking only what is our own, we will meet you as best we can. Let consequences take care of themselves.”

This is very much after the manner we are now addressing ourselves to England upon this subject; and how, think you, we should be likely to regard language of this character by her to us? I need not say we should regard it and treat it as the highest indignity which could be offered to us.
 It would be met with a universal response of condemnation, not only from the whole American people, but from every civilized government on earth.
 No alternative would be left us but tame and dishonorable submission, or an appeal to arms, and to the God of Justice, in vindication of our invaded rights and insulted honor. Her tones of arrogance and insult would find a response in the united voice of an indignant nation’s scorn and defiance.
 Is England less sensitive in regard to her rights and to her honor than we are? Will she be more likely than ourselves quietly to submit to acts of encroachment upon her rights, or what she considers to be her rights?
 This is not the character or spirit of the British Government. That is not the character or spirit of any civilized government on earth. Whatever act on her part, touching this controverted question, we should regard as offensive and hostile, and as affording a just provocation and cause for war, will, on our part, be precisely so regarded by her. Who will venture to say we should declare war against England, or consider it as just cause for war, in case she should give us notice for the abrogation of the joint convention, and should assert her exclusive sovereignty over the Oregon territory; and yet that England would not declare war against us, nor consider it just cause for war, in case we should do the very same thing? Is it wise, then, is it patriotic, is it magnanimous on our part, to address ourselves to England in a tone and manner which, coming from her, we should so readily condemn and resent; or to do any act which, if done by her, we should regard as offensive and belligerent? Should we not, by such a course of conduct, even in a good cause, place ourselves in the wrong before the eyes of the civilized world? There is a good old golden rule, as applicable to the conduct of nations as of individuals: "Do unto others as you would that they should do unto you." There is an honor, a glory, a moral heroism, in acting upon the principles of this rule, which never sprang from the red fields of blood and carnage.

Mr. Chairman, believing as I do that this unfortunate and protracted controversy may yet be amicably adjusted; believing as I do that it is the desire and the expectation of the great body of the American people that it should be so adjusted, I cannot discharge what I deem to be my duty as a representative upon this floor, looking to the best interests and the highest welfare of the country, without entering my most earnest protestations against every course of action, and every course of remark, which, in my judgment, shall tend, in the slightest degree, to close the door to such an adjustment; which shall tend, in the slightest degree, to interrupt or embarrass negotiation; and, above all, which shall tend in any degree to array the two Governments in hostile collision upon such a question. In so doing I am sustained by the conscious assurance of the approval of those for whom I am authorized here to speak and to act. How could we more effectually close the door to all further negotiation, and to all hope of an amicable adjustment, than to notify England of our determination, after the expiration of twelve months, to take exclusive possession of the whole Oregon territory? Will she be in a better mood to negotiate by our informing her that she has no shadow of claim to any portion of that territory? Can we treat with her upon better terms, and render an amicable settlement more probable and more speedy, by telling her that she must quit possession and abandon all pretension of any title there after one year's notice? I confess it strikes me very differently. I am not, however, unwilling to vote for notice in some qualified form, expressing our earnest desire still to negotiate a settlement, and giving assurance that it is given with a view to a more certain and speedy adjustment.

However much gentlemen may be disposed to decry and denounce the course of former administrations, in offering a division of this disputed territory by the 49th parallel of latitude, and however they may denounce those who would now acquiesce in such a division as a fair and honorable settlement, I trust the friends of the present Administration will spare it their denunciations for having made the same offer, notwithstanding the extreme pretensions and lofty assertions of the inaugural. Who doubts but if that offer had been accepted it would have received the approbation of the great body of the American people of all parties? Instead of our ears being saluted with the clamor about an ignominious surrender of American soil, and of American citizens, or of a sacrifice of national interests or of national honor, the deed would have been hailed as one of the proudest and noblest achievements in our diplomatic history. Surpassing credit would have been claimed for the wisdom, and tact, and promptness of this Administration, in effecting a peaceful and honorable adjustment of this long standing controversy. Yes, sir, had that proposition been accepted, I doubt not it would have received the sanction of the American Senate and of the American people, and been every where hailed as the harbinger of abiding peace and harmony between the two Governments. Even the manifesto of the Baltimore convention would have been forgotten amidst the general jubilee at the glad tidings of a result so fortunate and so desirable. And I will venture the prediction that, if the present Administration should ultimately settle this question upon that line of division, they who now most confidently assert our title to be clear and indisputable to the parallel of $54^{\circ} 40'$, and who now most vociferously declare that not one inch of the territory short of that line can be surrendered without dishonor and disgrace, will at least be silent, if not the first to commend the act.

I entertain the opinion, Mr. Chairman, that if wise and considerate counsels prevail on both sides, this controversy may yet be brought to an early, an amicable, and satisfactory arrangement. The letter of the Secretary of State, withdrawing the proposition which he had made, concludes by expressing the hope that such an adjustment may still be effected, and peace and harmony between the two Governments still be maintained. We are bound to believe that this expression was made honestly, sincerely, and in good faith. It was made, too, officially, and under the immediate direction and authority of the President of the United States. We are bound to believe, also, that the proposition itself was made in good faith, and with a sincere desire to bring this controversy to an early and an honorable termination. To assert or to suppose otherwise, would be to impute to the President and Secretary the lowest and grossest species of dissimulation and hypocrisy. I make no such charge. I intend no such charge. If the proposition was made with the knowledge, the expectation, or the hope that it would be rejected, as was intimated by the gentleman from New York, (Mr. KING,) I will leave it to that gentleman to reconcile the act with any principle of propriety, of good faith, or of honorable conduct. Small as my confidence may be in the present Administration, my estimate of them is not yet quite so low as to believe them capable of conduct so unworthy, so base, and hypocritical. And, when they give assurance of their desire that the pending controversy between this Government and Great Britain may be amicably settled, and the peace and harmony now so happily subsisting between them may be maintained, I will believe it to be something more significant than the mere empty forms of diplomatic civility. What, then, are we to infer from the language of the correspondence to which I have referred? Why, most certainly, that the President and Secretary do not regard the rejection and withdrawal of the offer made by them as presenting any insuperable barrier to further negotiation, or as precluding all hope of compromise; but, on the contrary, that they still entertain the hope and expectation of yet effecting an amicable and satisfactory result. In short, that they consider, and are willing to treat the question, as still open for negotiation and compromise. And I venture to affirm, Mr. Chairman, that if there be any one act or recommendation of this new Administration which, more than any other, commends itself to the approval of the American people, but little is the offer made. and the disposition thereby manifested, in reference to this side or the very question. I, of course, am to be understood as drawing my inferences promise, in regard to the views and disposition of the Administration upon this, a not to be upon other questions of national concern, from the record, from their pub claim and lic acts and communications. I am not in the fortunate position which territory, perhaps, some other gentlemen may occupy, to be in the receipt of any Believing of their private or confidential communications. But I am not at liberty (don and I presume that they entertain any private views or opinions, upon any of the the exhib great questions of public interest, inconsistent with those officially promul whether v gated. If I am not deceived, then, as to the views and disposition of th of the cou Administration upon this subject, if I do not misinterpret their language, o don and p misunderstand its import, I submit whether we shall not best discharge our duty I will, by leaving the question, with its responsibilities, where it properly belongs, wid necessary the administrative department, unembarrassed and unencumbered by any there. The legislative direction or control. They must understand, better than we can just cause the state of the question in all the stages of its progress. We are, indeed towards I informed that negotiations have been resumed, and may now be going on without q between the authorized organs of the two Governments. We know nothing claim to t therefore, of the present condition of the question. We have called upon clusive po the President to communicate to us any correspondence which may have subject is taken place, since the annual message, upon this subject. He has not yet the resolu responded to that call. We are left to grope in the dark. Hence, I repeat man fro what I have before said, that this question is prematurely, and inconsider posed to b ately, and, I will add, most unwisely, forced upon the consideration of this asurance House. And, blindfolded as we are. you have said that we shall vote upon thorative it in three days from this time. We are presenting to the world the singular say, also and extraordinary spectacle of discussing and acting upon a question in question b involving consequences no less momentous than of peace and war, while a take excl information as to the present state of that question is withheld from us. l position w is contrary to all my views of national propriety that we should be legislatin contempl at all upon a question of this character, while it is a subject of negotiation session an I say, then, let us interpose no impediment to negotiation; let us throw n whole of possible obstacle in the way of an amicable settlement, while such a settle Britain w ment is within the range of the remotest probability. Let the question re of title w main untrammelled in the hands of those whom the people have so recentl from a t appointed to the administration of their public affairs; and in their treatme years; an of the subject we will at least indulge the hope that they will be actuated by bate have a due regard to the interests, the integrity, and the honor of the country ion and ex and that, acting under a sense of their obligations and responsibilities to th ever she c American people, they will in due time, if possible, bring this controversy that this to a fair, a just, and honorable termination. And, if they can do so wid first time the notice, they can certainly do so without it. Besides, by giving the no another n tice with the design and for the purpose we have expressed, we at least run the suppo the hazard of provoking a feeling of irritation and obstinacy, rather than moment. spirit of good will and conciliation, so essential to a peaceful and amicable shall do t settlement of any controversy. of taking

But, Mr. Chairman, if, upon the other hand, rash and inconsiderate cape, the counsels prevail on either side, the result must inevitably prove most unfor settlement fortunate and disastrous to both. In the present already excited state of feeling the chanc upon this subject, both in this country and in England, it would require the notice an people, if but little of the language of irritation, of menace, or of defiance, on the one erence to this side or the other, to arrest all efforts at negotiation, to blast all hopes of comy inferences promise, and to involve the two Governments in a disastrous war. It is upon this, a not to be presumed that either Government will tolerate in the other the n their pub claim and exercise of exclusive jurisdiction over the whole of the Oregon ition which territory, or any act looking to the exclusive possession and control of it. cept of an Believing that much will be gained by the exhibition of a spirit of conciliaat liberty tion and harmony while much will be lost, and every thing hazarded, by n any of th the exhibition of an offensive gasconading tone, I ask, in all earnestness, ally promul whether we shall not best consult the interests, the honor, and the happiness sition of th of the country, by abstaining from all acts, and from all language of irritalanguage, o tion and provocation.

urge our dut I will, most cheerfully, give my support to any provisions which may be belongs, wit necessary for the protection of our citizens in Oregon, and those emigrating ered by an there. These are peaceful and proper measures, and can furnish no than we can just cause of complaint. But let us once assume an attitude of hostility are, indeed towards England; let us direct that the notice be given forthwith, and be going on without qualification; let us accompany the notice with an assertion of our how nothing claim to the whole of Oregon, and the assurance of our purpose to take ex-called upon clusive possession of it; and let us follow it up with the declaration that the h may have subject is no longer open to negotiation and compromise, as was set forth in e has not ye the resolution introduced in the outset of this debate by the honorable gence, I repeat tleman from Illinois, (Mr. DOUGLASS,) let this be done, (and it is all prod inconsider posed to be done,) and I will venture my poor opinion in opposition to any ration of thi assurance or pledge to the contrary, let it come from however high and au-all vote upon thoritative a source it may, that war is the certain, the inevitable, I might the singular say, almost the necessary consequence. The notice being given, if the question in question be not settled within one year, we can do no less than proceed to ar, while al take exclusive occupation of the whole territory, or else recede from the from us. l position we had taken, with disgrace and ignominy. No one, I presume, be legislatin contemplates the latter alternative. We shall proceed, then, to take pos-negotiation session and control, and to exercise our own exclusive sovereignty over the us throw n whole of the Oregon territory. Do gentlemen really imagine that Great such a settle Britain will peaceably and quietly yield to our authority; surrender all claim e question re of title which she has hitherto asserted and insisted upon, and withdraw ve so recentl from a territory which she has actually occupied for more than fifty eir treatment years; and all this without a struggle or an effort? Gentlemen in this dee actuated b ate have dwelt much and loudly upon the rapacity of England for dominthe country ion and empire, and upon the tenacity with which she fixes her grasp where-abilities to th ever she can get hold of a foot of territory. And shall we flatter ourselves s controvers that this rapacious, and domineering, and mighty nation will now, for the n do so wit first time in her history, quietly and peaceably yield to the demands of ving the no another nation a vast and valuable territory to which she claims title? Sir, e at least ru the supposition is too preposterous to be entertained with seriousness a single rather than moment. We may date a war with that power from the day on which we nd amicable shall do the first overt act, and take the first step avowedly for the purpose of taking entire and exclusive possession of that territory. There is no esinconsiderat cape, then, from this alternative, in case we give the notice, except by a e most unfor settlement of the question within the year. And, as I have already said, ate of feeling the chances of a settlement, in my judgment, are greatly lessened by giving ould require the notice in the form and manner proposed.

If, then, Mr. Chairman, this Oregon question is to be settled by a conflict of arms. I beg of these gentlemen, who would hurry us upon this fearful issue, and who seem almost impatient of the delay, to pause and wait till we are somewhat better prepared for it. Let us first reinforce our army and navy. Let us establish some suitable and adequate defences along the three or four thousand miles of our exposed sea-coast, and along the other thousands of miles of our unprotected northern and western frontier. While you are so prompt and liberal in appropriating the public money for the erection of blockhouses, and stockades, and military posts, through the trackless wilds and deserts hither and beyond the rocky mountains, and send your companies of mounted riflemen there for the protection of a comparatively small handful of emigrants to Oregon, (measures which I approve, and for which I shall vote,) will you not make some adequate provision for the protection of the property and the lives of twenty million of your fellow citizens at home? Sir, the mania for the acquisition and possession of foreign and distant lands seems almost to lead us to forget that we have a country and a people around us to care for.

Mr. Chairman, when and wherefore all this sudden excitement upon the subject of Oregon? Who are they that have become so clamorous all over the country once for the whole of Oregon, and who would declare a general war of expulsion from the American continent of every nation who may chance to have a foothold upon any part of it? Who are they that agitate the public mind, and appeal to the popular passions and prejudices; who denounce treason against our own Government all suggestions of negotiation and compromise, and who would prefer the fearful alternative of war to any treaty arrangement? Who are they that are ever fulminating their anathemas against Great Britain, as though they alone were jealous of her power and her designs? Who are they that are ever mouthing their oft-repeated professions of sublimated patriotism, as though it were anything more than a frothy declamation of full-grown demagoguism, which evaporates with the breath that utters it? Who are they that arrogate to themselves the privilege of denouncing the conduct and impugning the motives of the advocates of negotiation and compromise, and who denounce as enemies of their own country, and the allies of a foreign power, those who would avoid the issues of war, and who would maintain the peace which now blesses our land and the world, by all means and measures consistent with the integrity and the honor of the country? Whence comes, I ask, all this sudden storm of patriotic fury, of vaunting arrogance, of vindictive denunciation of empty and senseless gasconade? Not, I undertake to say, from the industrious, sober, and reflecting portion of the American people; nor, indeed, from the best friends and truest patriots of the country. Divest the subject of all extraneous and improper influences; remove from it the instigations and influences of selfish and designing men, of a corrupt hiring press; remove the instigations and influences of jobbers in stocks and jobbers in politics; remove the instigations and influences of aspirant demagogues, of cuckoo patriots and Tom Thumb heroes; of President makers and of embryo Presidential candidates; of those who would raise a whirlwind that they might ride upon the storm; of those who would fire the city that they might revel in the plunder of its ruins. Do this, and you Oregon controversy might be settled, peaceably, honorably, and forever, in less than ninety days.

I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that, in my judgment, hostilities must inevitably ensue between this Government and Great Britain, if we carry out all the measures we propose in relation to Oregon. To suppose otherwise, would be to suppose that the mistress of the seas has lost her pride and her greatness; that her spirit and her power have departed. If we will not stop and count the cost of a war with England, we may at least ask ourselves what we shall be likely to gain by it. We should not gain Oregon by a war with Great Britain, most certainly. No sensible man, I think, can entertain an idea so ridiculous and absurd, as that we can take and hold possession of Oregon in the event of a war with the English nation. We have neither army nor navy to maintain a position at any single point in that vast and distant region. We shall have occasion enough for all our forces at home. Besides, it would be utterly impracticable to march an army through the immense and totally barren deserts which intervene between us and that territory. Every American citizen would be driven from Oregon, and the chance of its boundless wilderness and desolate plains would be broken only by the howlings of the wild beasts and the wild huntsmen, perhaps, for centuries to come. I do not fear that England will conquer this country any more than we shall be able to conquer England. Nobody dreams of this. But she can destroy our commerce; she can lay waste our cities and villages; and she can drive us, and will drive us, in spite of all we do, from Oregon. Gentlemen may affect to sneer and scout as they please at the idea of negotiation, as though there were something submissive and humiliating in it, or as though they feared our diplomatists would be overreached by the superior tact and skill of those upon the other side. Let them remind them, that when they shall have provoked an unnecessary war, when millions of treasure shall have been expended, and an untold amount of human life been sacrificed, and Oregon lost, that very war must be finally terminated by negotiation, by treaty; and Oregon itself, if it be restored at all, must be restored at last by negotiation.

Mr. Chairman, I am as decidedly in favor of Oregon, to the extent of our clear and just rights there, as those who urge the most extreme measures for our immediate and exclusive possession of the whole of it. It is for this reason that I am opposed to any measure which, in my judgment, will hazard a peaceful settlement of the controversy, and throw our rights and interests there upon the issues of war. But suppose that all efforts at a settlement of these conflicting claims between this Government and Great Britain fail, and things remain as they have for the last twenty or thirty years: shall we lose anything by it? Have we lost anything by it thus far? Not at all, sir. But, on the other hand, we have been the gainers by it, and we should continue to be the gainers by it, if demagogues would but cease to agitate the question for political and sinister purposes. Let this corrupt question, affecting our foreign relations, remain as it did during the administrations of Mr. Monroe and Mr. Adams, of Gen. Jackson and Mr. Van Buren, disconnected with our domestic strifes, and it will be well enough. The natural progress of events, the steady and increasing flow of emigrants, would ultimately and surely secure to us the sole possession and control of that country. In that sense, and in that way, I will agree that Oregon will be ours by the "decrees of destiny." While we have been doing so well, then; while, with every passing year, we have been adding strength to our claims and possessions there, let us not hazard every thing by the adoption of hasty and hostile measures. It would be the extreme of folly to cast upon a doubtful issue the acquisition of that which the silent and natural course of things must inevitably give to us. It is not to be disguised, however, that the question has been involved in difficulty and danger, and wholly in consequence of having mixed it up with the party contentions of the day, and in consequence of that swaggering declaration to the world, that "our title to the whole of Oregon was clear and unquestionable," after our repeated concessions of the rights and claims of England by our own solemn official acts. Can any better or truer reason be assigned for the present vexed position of this Oregon question, than that it has resulted mainly from an unworthy disposition to throw every great question of national interest into the arena of party politics and party strife:—from jealous fear that one ambitious aspirant for the popular favor will get the start of another in turning the popular current in his favor upon some great question of public interest? There, too, I venture to affirm, lies the reason and the motive for springing this question upon the public attention at the present time. Texas has made one President for us, and it seems to be determined that Oregon shall make one or two more for us; and it is presumed that he who gets the first start upon it will be the favorite of the people. I put the question to the House and to the country, whether this whole Oregon excitement, which has been got up of late, is anything more than a preliminary scramble for the Presidential succession. Hence we have new tests of moral and political worth; new tests of one's attachment or indifference, his love or his coldness, towards his country; and new tests of political orthodoxy. He who now clamors loudest for the whole of Oregon is the best patriot; while he who halts or doubts is a traitor, aye, a "British Whig." He who most ostentatiously vaunts his courage is the bravest man, while he who has too much modesty and common sense to act in bravado, lacks in spirit, and is a parasite and a coward.

I am free to admit, that I consider the question now before the House out of time, out of place, and out of order. However expedient it might be to give the notice; legitimately and constitutionally, we have nothing to do with it. It is a prerogative which properly and legitimately belongs to the Executive department of the Government. This House is not constituted an advisory council to the President. Such advisory power, if I may so call it, belongs to the Senate, as a co-ordinate branch of the Executive department in the treaty-making power. It could not have been contemplated in the treaty that any legislative action would be required, in order to invest the President with authority to give the notice, whenever, in his judgment, the public interest should require the abrogation of the convention.

I agree with gentlemen that this Oregon question is one of national character and interest; that it should be considered and discussed, when considered and discussed at all, in a liberal and national spirit. For this reason it is a matter of regret, as it was an act of folly, that the attempt was made to adopt it as the peculiar creed, and to identify it with the action, either of the political parties of the country. And whoever would be controlled or influenced in his action upon it by any narrow, sectional, or partisan considerations, would prove himself recreant to his obligations as an American statesman, as an American citizen. I believe I appreciate ighly as any gentleman the importance of that country to us in a commercial, political, and national point of view; I believe, with the learned and eloquent gentleman from Alabama, (Mr. HILLIARD,) that the day is not far distant when a railroad will span this continent, uniting the Atlantic and Pacific shores, and which will thenceforward become the great highway and thoroughfare of the commercial world. If I differ at all with the loudest and fiercest champion of Oregon, it is only as to the extent of our title here, and as to the best and surest mode of ultimately, if not immediately, obtaining exclusive possession and control of what rightfully belongs to us. The question of title or boundary should finally be settled by negotiation—a consummation devoutly to be wished by all good patriots—and the 49th parallel should be fixed upon as the line of division, I doubt not it would be entirely satisfactory to the American people. The possession of the country south of that line would give us all the practical advantages we should derive from the possession up to 54° 40'. Besides, I fear not to say, it would give us all to which we have any clear title. While I am satisfied that we have the better title to that portion of the country drained by the Columbia river, I am equally satisfied that England has the better title to that portion drained by Frazer's river; and the 49th parallel would be as fair and equal a division between these respective sections of country as could be drawn by a straight line. Such a division would give to each party their just proportion, according to their respective titles; and this is the line to which the parties ought to come, and must come, at last, if they will settle the dispute between themselves. I doubt not the earnest desire of the British Government, for an early and amicable settlement of this question; and, if that disposition be met by a corresponding spirit on the part of this Government, it may be settled upon a just and equitable basis. I would rejoice, even, that the present Administration should reap the reward and the honor which would belong to such an adjustment of this ancient controversy. The event would everywhere be hailed as the harbinger and the promise of peace.

It is the desire and the policy of the people of this Government to maintain peace with all nations. They do not desire war. They do not believe there is any occasion for war; and, above all, they deprecate that folly and foolhardiness which would inculcate a spirit of war in the public mind; which would "prepare the hearts of the people for war." The sentiment more worthy of a past and a barbarous age, than of this enlightened republic. I will not stop to expatiate upon the evils and the horrors of war, however inviting a theme for declamation, nor to speak of its influences upon national character and the public morals. It is enough to say that the spirit of war is, in its very nature, hostile to the spirit of Republican liberty. It is a spirit which but too often degenerates into an unbridled lust for blood, and rapine, and plunder. We have read in vain the history of other nations, if we have not learned that it was a kindred spirit which blotted out of being the republics of "olden time;" which have slept in the tomb of ages, and "the morning of whose resurrection has not yet dawned upon the world;" that it was a kindred spirit which filled with rapine and blood the modern republics of Venice and Florence. The teachings of history have been in vain to us, if we have not learned that it was a kindred spirit which infuriated to its blackest deeds of atrocity the Jacobin factions, and the sans-culottes democracy of revolutionary France.

I appreciate and which built up, upon the fall of liberty there, that imperial and military west, despotism, before whose colossal power the world itself stood aghast; that among was a kindred spirit which tore in sunder the later republics of South America, and struck down to the dust the flag of liberty which had been reared from the summit of her Andes. Let this spirit become the predominant While spirit of our countrymen, and it needs not the ken of prophetic vision to praiseworthy us that this young republic has already reached the years of its States, decline. Let this spirit prevail here, and I stand upon the authority of those who world's history, and proclaim to the American people that their destiny, our men foreshadowed in the fate of those other republics that have fallen before the State which

The spirit of war, thanks to God, has slumbered upon the earth for the Federal Union last quarter of a century. Glutted with the spoils, and exhausted by the, whose ravages of a thousand years, it halted in its march of death, and reposed from its work of desolation, on that dread night when the sun went down in blood and whose on the field of Waterloo. Heaven grant that the slumbering giant be unsurpassed disturbed in his repose for other ages to come. The world has had time to take breath. The spirit of Peace—a peerless, and godlike form—rose ere patriotism and with steady and triumphant step advancing over the earth, has backward pended, with an abundant hand, blessings and honor, and glory and happy love ness, to the nations. In what age or century of the world have the principles of civil and religious liberty, the arts and sciences, civilization whose day christianity; all that elevates, and all that adorns, and all that ennobles their spirit dignifies the character and condition of man, made such advances as with the contest the last thirty years? which may be truly denominated the age of peace who inherit It has been an age of progress. It has been an age of glorious achievements, a world of intellectual and moral triumph, such as the world has never before seen will be the

Sir, I cannot longer dwell upon this theme. It is, indeed, a rich and exhaustless and sublime theme, worthy of the contemplation, not of testimony to the poet and the orator only, but of the civilian and statesman, of the philanthropist and patriot.

Mr. Chairman, I know that war is sometimes necessary—sometimes unmount, and avoidable. It furnishes but a melancholy evidence of the depravity of man. Our father that war is ever justifiable. The fearful alternative of war may be forced upon us, either by ill-advised counsels at home, or by aggression and wrong from abroad. If the long peace we have enjoyed is to be interrupted, allow me shall do well to see to it that there be no occasion for laying the provocation whose might to our charge. Far better that aggression and provocation come from the walls of the other side. Let us, if possible, in the judgment of the world be in the right and and our adversary in the wrong. In such a contest the victory will be happily won in the outset. I would yield much to the spirit of peace and harmony. I trust, and if the sword must be drawn, let it be in a just and necessary war; in alluding it be in defence of the invaded rights and honor of the country. And when that crisis comes, if come it must, it will be met by the American people as they were with one voice and with one heart. If war be brought upon us by the reckless and reckless counsels of those whom the people have placed in the highest seats of power, while they will be held to a fearful account before the supreme appellate tribunal of public sentiment, our talismanic watchword will still be—"our country, our whole country, and nothing but our country."

Something has been said, in the progress of this debate, of the chivalry of the south; something has been said of the valor of the west. I choose rather to say, of all the people of this nation—whether they reside in the east or on the al and military west, whether their lot be cast upon the sunny savannas of the south, or among the "old gray mountains" of the north—that, in such a crisis, if South America will all be chivalrous and brave, that they will all be generous and had been re-patriotic.

the predominant While other gentlemen have been so eloquent in the vindication and vision of their own constituents, and the people of their own sections and years of its States, I trust I may be pardoned the indulgence of a passing reference to those whom I have the honor, in part, to represent here. I am one of but their destiny our members upon this floor, from a small unpretending border State; a fallen before State which, in some respects, occupies but a subordinate position in the earth for the Federal Union; a State, nevertheless, which holds within its borders a people exhausted by toil, whose habits of industry, whose general intelligence, whose indomitable and reposed from energy of character, whose devotion to the Union and the constitution, and whose attachment to the principles of civil and religious freedom, are a giant unsurpassed by those of any other State or nation. They may be less forward than others in sounding their own praises, or in vaunting their own arm—rose ere patriotism, yet the sons of the American Switzerland will never be deaf nor earth, has backward to their country's call in any and every emergency. Much as glory and happily love the peace and quiet of their mountain homes, when the day of save the principal and of conflict shall come, I pledge you, upon the authority of one civilization whose days have all been passed among them, and who knows full well that ennoble their spirit and their valor, that they will be there, the first and foremost in advances as with the contest, with "their backs to the field, and their feet to the foe." They age of peace who inherit the blood and the spirit of the heroes of Bennington and Ticonderoga, will be there. Other Allens, and Starkes, and Lees, and Warners, ever before seen will be there, to cheer and to lead her gallant sons to the rescue; and in the end, a rich at a pace of danger and of death, "upon the green graves of their sires," will testify to the world how much there yet remains of that daring that knows not of the philistine fear; of that patriotism that knows not section or party; of that spirit which knows no servitude, and submits to no wrong. The people of Vermont, and I am proud to say it, are the descendants of the pilgrim stock. The pravity of our fathers sleep upon many a battle-field of the revolution. We claim to be kindred with those who fought and fell at Concord, and Lexington, and Bunker Hill. And if my honorable friends here from Massachusetts will be interrupted, allow me to assert a participation of the honor, we claim kindred with those the provocative whose mighty voices first awoke the echoes of freedom within the ancient walls of Faneuil Hall; with those who bore no subordinate part in laying the foundations of this Republic. Ask me not where such a people will be found in the day of their country's need.

and harmony I trust, Mr. Chairman, that I have an ample apology for this digression, necessary war; in alluding to my native State, and briefly, though it be but feebly, vindictory. And what of the character of her people, in the attempt which was made some American people says ago to cast a sneer—an aspersion—upon her, by one of her own sons in us by the name of Mr. CHIPMAN, of Michigan, upon this floor. I have only to say, in reply in the highest to that attempt, that he who has the taste and the heart to illegitimatize it before the sun's own birth, so far as to repudiate his parentage, commends himself less to the rebuke than to the commiseration of his friends. And while I trust that our country and Vermont has but one son who would make it a virtue to publicly avow of the chivalry a misfortune to him that he was born upon her soil; I am quite sure she I choose rather but one son who could utter the unnatural sentiment without mortification in the east or reproach to her.

Mr Chairman, I trust I am not wanting in respect for the opinions of those who differ with me in regard to the probable results of giving an un-conditional notice for the abrogation of the joint convention, and of asserting an exclusive claim, and of exercising an exclusive sovereignty over the whole of the Oregon territory. With the most profound deference to the opinions of the illustrious gentleman from Massachusetts, (Mr. ADAMS,) whose agency and far reaching sagacity the country is so largely indebted for the rights and claims there which we are now contending for; and with all deference to the opinions of others, who express so much confidence that these measures will not lead to hostilities, I am utterly unable to bring my own mind to that conclusion. While I will go as far as these, or any other gentlemen, in any and every act which may be necessary to maintain the true dignity and the true honor of the country, I would, for this very reason, try every just and fair expedient to preserve the peace of the country.

Mr. Foot's remarks were arrested at this point by the expiration of the hour.

Note.—This speech was delivered in the House of Representatives the day before the recent correspondence between the two Governments, touching the subject of Oregon, was communicated to the House by the President.

the opinions of giving an und of asserting gnty over the ference to the
. ADAMS,) (1
gely indebted or; and with onfidence th e to bring in
, or any othe maintain th
this very re
the country
piration of h

representatives to ments, touch
by the Pre

