Mr. CARVELL: Of course it is true. It will be true no matter what the outcome of this measure may be, it will still be true if this is forced through the House. You cannot change a truth because you try to juggle with it, it is a truth all the same. The people of this country know it is a truth, the people of this country knew it was true with reference to a contribution in 1909 and in 1910 and in 1913 and that it will be true regarding a contribution in 1915. Where does my right hon. friend think this will land him? Where is he going to end? He knows he cannot force a contribution upon this country to-day and quit to-morrow. He knows he is going to establish a precedent which must continue to follow; he knows that this thing must be continuous. Every argument which he has made, every argument which his followers have made since this debate has commenced, has been an effort to show that you cannot build ships in Canada, you cannot have any other permanent policy than one of contribution; he knows that that is the logical conclusion of his present Act. Again I ask him to come back to the sane sound reasoning of the leader of the Opposition in 1910 and compare it with the make-shift proposition, with the forced proposition forced on him by the Nationalist wing of his party. Compare those two situations and see which appeals to his judgment as being the one most commendable to the hon. gentleman who now occupies the high position of Prime Minister of Canada.

That is practically as far as I wish to proceed upon what I would call the historical portion of this argument. I shall now take up an entirely new branch, and as it is nearly 12 o'clock I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. CARVELL: It would take me an hour and a half or two hours to finish and I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. ROGERS: My friend, when he opened his remarks, said something about an arrangement having been made by the Whips to adjourn at a certain hour and I have been informed by the Whip on this side that no such arrangement has been made but that there was some understanding that when the hon. member for Carleton should conclude his remarks the House would adjourn, and I may say that that rule will be lived up to.

Mr. CARVELL: If my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works contends that I must conclude my remarks I must do so, but before going on I will state what took place. The chief whip of the Conservative party came to me this morning and very kindly, and I thought in a very gentlemanly way, told me what the order of the debate was to be and told me that we would discuss the matter until shortly after eleven o'clock. I relied upon that and I know that if the hon. gentleman was in the House he would state the facts as I have stated them. What arrangement he may have made later on with the chief whip of the Liberal party I do not know.

Mr. ROGERS: In order that there might be no mistake I took the trouble to have Mr. Stanfield telephoned to at the hotel and he assured me that the arrangement was that when the hon. member for Carleton concluded his remarks the House should adjourn.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Do I understand that my hon. friend will not allow the adjournment to take place at this hour? He knows that we have been in the habit for years of adjourning about twelve o'clock?

Mr. BORDEN: My right hon. friend will remember that we have been debating this measure for a very long time and at very great length and with a very great amount of repetition indeed, and we are being taunted all the time, even in this House but outside as well with the alleged fact that we are making very little progress with this measure. Well, we intend to make some progress with it. If we have not hitherto sat long enough to make progress we will have to sit a little later and make progress. I read an article the other day from a newspaper which is very strongly supporting my right hon. friend, taunting us on this side with the fact that we had made no progress. Under these circumstances I do not think it is unreasonable to ask the hon. gentleman who has already spoken at some length to conclude his remarks this evening.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: This question has been debated at some length it is true, but not at an unusual length. My hon friend remembers that on the Naval Bill the House discussed the question at far greater length than we have been discussing the present Bill, twice as long, if not more. My hon. friend will also remember that four or five years ago when Mr. Taylor was the chief whip he on one occasion especially asked that we should not sit later than twelve o'clock, and we generally agreed to that. Of course there are exceptions to all rules, and when it has been agreed that we should take a vote we have sat very late, but as a rule we did not. If we are to understand that we are not to live up to this rule now but must sit until all hours in the night of course we will have to submit but I do not think my hon friend has acted at all in the spirit of fairness I would have expected from him.

Mr. BORDEN: The right hon. gentleman will remember that we have not insisted upon late sittings up to the present. I think we have endeavoured to meet hon. gentlemen opposite in a fair way in regard to adjournment but I think we will have to sit a little later in the future if this debate is to be so greatly protracted. It is perfectly true it has not up to the present time taken as long as the naval debate in 1910, but we have not yet got through the second reading of this Bill and we have already been engaged for some twenty-two days in debating this Bill and nothing else. I am rather under the impression that pretty much everything has been said about it that can be said about it. Under these circumstances I will not be considered as acting unfairly at all but I would like to have my hon. friend conclude his remarks this evening and to say we will have to sit somewhat later in the evening in the future than we have done in the past.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: My right hon. friend will, of course, have his way, if he says we shall sit later we shall have to sit later, but let us understand to what length we are to sit in the evenings, 1 o'clock, 12.30 or 2 o'clock. It is not fair for us to be kept here until all hours. We should know how long we shall have to sit.

Mr. BORDEN: I shall be very glad to discuss that with my hon. friend and try to arrive at some conclusion with regard to it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Perhaps my right hon. friend (Mr. Borden), having regard to the fact that my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B., is suffering from indisposition, will consent to adjourn.

Mr. BORDEN: If the hon. gentleman is suffering from indisposition—

Mr. CARVELL: You can see I am; I cannot very well talk in my present condition.

Mr. BORDEN: Can my hon. friend give me an idea of the length of time that his remarks will occcupy to-morrow?

Mr. CARVELL: I will try to get through in an hour or an hour and a half at the outset.

Mr. ROGERS: Make it an hour and we will let you off.

Mr. CARVELL: I will try to finish in an hour.

Mr. BORDEN: I will agree to the time limit if my hon. friend will accept that.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Borden, House adjourned at 11.59 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, February 19, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—SACKVILLE WHARF.

*Mr. EMMERSON:

1. Is the Government aware that the new public wharf at Sackville, N.B., constructed by the Department of Public Works for the Dominion, was completed early in September last, and taken over by the said department?

2. (a) Has there been any connections made by a spur line of railway between the Intercolonial railway and the said new wharf? (b) If not, is it the intention of the Government to make such connection? (c) If so, when?

3. Is the Government aware that great inconvenience and loss is said to have resulted to the trade and shipping interests of Sackville by reason of the want of such rail connections during the past autumn?

4. Previous to the completion of said wharf and as early as a year ago, was the attention of the Intercolonial railway authorities or management called to the necessity of the construction of such spur line anticipatory to the completion of said wharf, in order that the shipping facilities at Sackville might be perfected and the traffic of the Intercolonial increased?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes.

2. (a) The railway has a connection with the old wharf at that point and made no request for the building of a new wharf. (b) The matter has not been decided, but it is not considered that a rail connection with the new wharf would result in increase in the earnings of the railway. (c) Answered by No. 2b.

3. The Department of Railways and Canals has no information to such effect.

4. Yes. Letters were received by the management of the Intercolonial railway advising that railway connection with the new wharf was necessary.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ST. LIN.

Mr. SEGUIN:

Does the hon. Minister of Public Works intend to have placed in the supplementary estimates a sufficient amount to ensure the early construction of a public building at St. Lin, a town of the Laurentides; the construction being rendered urgent after the reply made by the hon. minister in December last?

Mr. ROGERS: The supplementary estimates have not yet been considered.

WHARF AT L'ASSOMPTION.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Does the Department of Public Works intend to have placed in the supplementary estimates an amount sufficient to ensure the construction of a wharf at the town of L'Assomption, in order to make effective the amount already voted by Parliament for this purpose?

2. If not, what causes prevent this construction, and at whose request is this enterprise abandoned?

Mr. ROGERS: The supplementary estimates have not yet been considered.

BREAKWATER IN THE RIVER L'ACHIGAN.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Does the hon. Minister of Public Works intend to have placed in the supplementary estimates the amount sufficient to ensure the construction of a breakwater on the river L'Achigan, in order to make effective the sum already voted by Parliament for this purpose?

2. If not, what are the causes that prevent this construction, and by whose request is this enterprise abandoned?

Mr. ROGERS: The supplementary estimates have not yet been considered.

BREAKWATER AT ST. GERARD DE MAGELLA.

Mr. SEGUIN:

1. Does the hon. Minister of Public Works intend to have placed in the supplementary estimates, the amount sufficient to ensure the construction of a breakwater at St. Gérard de Magella, in order to make effective the sum already voted by Parliament for this purpose?

2. If not, what are the causes that prevent this construction, and by whose request is this enterprise abandoned?

Mr. ROGERS: The supplementary estimates have not yet been considered.

EMPLOYMENT OF J. ALBAN LAFERRIERE.

*Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Is J. Alban Laferrière, formerly of Hull, in the employment of the Government?

2. If so, what position has he, when was he appointed and what is his salary?

3. Had he occupied other positions with the Government before? If so, why was he changed?

Mr. CODERRE:

1. Yes.

2. Dominion Government Immigration and Repatriation Agent, at Manchester, N. H., appointment, April 1, 1912, salary, $1,500 per annum.

3. There is no record of Mr. Laferrière having been formerly employed in any department of the Government.

NORTH SYDNEY PUBLIC BUILDING.

1. What amount was expended on the public building at North Sydney, N.S., during the year 1912?

2. What was the nature of the work done?

3. Was the work let by tender and contract? If so, who were the tenderers and what was the amount of each tender?

4. Was the work given to the lowest tenderer?

5. Was the work performed subject to inspection? If so, who was the inspector?

6. Was there any estimate made of the cost of the work before the contract was let? If so, what was the amount of the estimate, and what was the cost of the repairs as completed?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. $3,442.40.

2. Repairs and alterations before the fire, after the fire, and for furniture and furnishings.

3. Only one tender was forwarded to the department, that of Mr. J. J. Dooley, which was recommended by the Inspector of Buildings. The amount of the tender for work before the fire of 6th June, 1912, was $1,750, and for similar work after the fire, $1,060.

4. Yes.

5. Yes; Mr. W. Bishop, Inspector of Dominion Buildings, Nova Scotia.

6. Yes; the estimate for repairs before the fire was $1,825, and the contract was awarded for $1,750. Repairs under contract: First contract, before the fire, J. J. Dooley, $1,750; second contract after the fire, J. J. Dooley, $1,060. Ordinary repairs, without tender, made throughout the year: preparing floor for safe, J. J. Dooley, $207; altering doors, J. J. Dooley, $48.90; boiler section, Matheson and McMullin, $40; plumbing, W. H. Buchanan, $41.95; electric wiring, J. T. Murphy, $35.80; smoke pipe, Thompson and Sutherland, $5.20; petty repairs, M. McMillan, $22.60; total, $401.45. Furnishings, throughout the year: Rubber mats, &c., Thompson and Sutherland, $124.80; stools and chairs, Vooght Bros., $28.05; two clocks, J. C. Robertson, $23; key cabinet, Office Specialty Manufacturing Company, $14.03; Shannon file, Office Specialty Manufacturing Company, $36.30; grills, Rubenstein Bros., $4.30; petty repairs, J. W. Ingram, 47 cents; total, furnishings, $230.95. Grand total, $3,442.40. This amount does not include cost of heating, water, lighting or caretaker's salary for the year.

SYDNEY POSTMASTERSHIP.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Has James Crithley been appointed postmaster at Sydney, C.B., to fill the vacancy caused by the dismissal of James White?

2. If so, is the said James Critchley the same person who has been recently re-elected president of the Liberal-Conservative Association of Sydney, C.B.

3. Under the rules of the Post Office Department, is it regarded as proper for a postmaster to act at the same time as president of the Liberal-Conservative Association for the district?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.

2. The department has no information as to whether James Critchley has been elected president of the Liberal-Conservative Association of Sydney, C.B.

3. See answer to No. 2.

ANTIGONISH COUNTY ESTIMATES.

*Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish):

Referring to the following letter and the memorandum attached thereto:—

Office of the Minister of Public Works of Canada,
Ottawa, December 28, 1912.

Senator Girroir,

My dear Sir,—Your letter of the 24th inst. addressed to the Minister of Public Works received, and in accordance with your request, I am inclosing you herewith a list of the items which have been placed in the Supplementary Estimates for Antigonish county for 1913-14.

Yours sincerely
(Sgd.) GEORGE BUSKARD,
Minister's secretary.

To E. L. Girroir,
Barrister,
Antigonish, N.S.

List of amounts for Antigonish county, N.S., noted for estimates, 1913-14:

Mr. ROGERS.

Main Estimates.
Arisaig—Complete extension to wharf..	$3,000
Bayfield harbour—Repairs to wharf and breakwater..	2,500
Blue Rock—Repairs to breakwater.. ..	1,200
Breen's Pond—Construction of breakwater..	1,400
Harbour au Boucher—Repairs to wharf..	1,000
Malignant Cove—Repairs to breakwater	800
Supplementary Estimates.
Cribbin's Point—Wharf and dredging.	15,000
Delorey's Beach—Breakwater, repairs and extensions..	14,700
Malignant Cove—Extension of piers and dredging..	4,000
McArra's Brook—Extension of boat landing..	1,700
McNair's Cove—Extension to wharf ..	5,500
Ogden's Pond—Sand grain and extension of pier..	2,800
South Lakevale—Extension of channel pier..	3,000
Auld's Cove—Protected channel..	15,000
Tracadie harbour—Improvements.. ..	27,000
Harbour au Boucher—Warehouse... ..	1,200
Breen's Pond—Extension to breakwater	14,500
Georgeville—New wharf..	90,000

1. Have the items mentioned under the heading Supplementary Estimates, or any of them, been placed in the Supplementary Estimates for Antigonish county for 1913-14, as stated in said letter?

2. If not, is it the intention of the Government to place these items in the Supplementary Estimates of this year?

Mr. ROGERS: The supplementary estimates have not yet been considered.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—BRANCH LINES.

*Mr. EMMERSON:

1. Is it the intention of the Government to announce at the present session of Parliament a policy respecting the acquisition of the branch lines of railway connecting with the Intercolonial railway, to be operated as a part of the Government system of railways? If so, will the announcement be made in time to permit any action being taken by the Government towards securing any of said branch lines of railway during the present calendar year of 1913?

2. Has the Government reached any general policy relating to the construction of new and additional branch lines of railway to connect with the present Government system of railways, which at present comprises the Intercolonial and the Prince Edward Island railway, and when will Parliament be advised of any such decision?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. The matter is under consideration.

2. Answered by No. 1.

PROPOSED NORTHERN EXPEDITION.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Is there any truth in the following despatch which appeared in the press on the 15th instant:—

Canada may send Steffanson to the Arctic Regions now.

Ottawa, February 15.—Negotiations which Vilhjaimur Steffanson is conducting with the Canadian Government for the financing of his northern expedition are progressing, and it is now practically certain that the start will be made in May.

A final understanding, however, has not yet been reached as to the terms under which the expedition will proceed, but it is understood that Steffanson has practically agreed to the Canadian Government assuming the sole direction. The amount of guarantee is placed at about $75,000.

The original idea was that the Government should make up the difference between what was guaranteed by the National Geographical Society, of the United States, and the American Museum of Natural History. From the present outlook, however, this will be changed, the explorer released from his American connections, and the whole trip be financed by the Canadian Government.

Steffanson expects to be absent three winters and four summers, if successful. He will go to the far north of the Canadian mainland to plant the flag and make scientific observations.

While the expedition will be under the immediate direction of the Geological Society, the Interior and Marine Departments will be interested. A number of Canadian students, temperamentally suited for the work and possessed of scientific knowledge, will be taken along. The explorer's idea, as he states it is to ' round off the map.'

Mr. HAZEN: 1. The matter is under consideration.

BUCKHORN BRIDGE.

Mr. BURNHAM:

1. (a) Did the late Minister of Railways and Canals cancel the obligation of the county of Peterborough to the late Government in the sum of $3,000 and the cost of maintenance of the Buckhorn bridge? (b) If not, why not?

2. (a) Did the late minister leave any record or direction in respect thereto in the Department of Railways and Canals? (b) If not, why not?

3. If so, what was the general report of the same?

4. Is the late Minister of Railways and Canals aware as to whether or not the late Government had acquired by expropriation or purchase all the lands required for the purpose of said bridge, and as to whether the purchase money therefor had been paid by the late Government?

5. Was it the intention of the late Minister of Railways and Canals to cancel the obligation mentioned? If so, what was to have been the quid pro quo therefor?

Mr. COCHRANE:

1. (a) No. (b) The department has no information.

2. (a) No. (b) The department has no information.

3. Answered by No. 2.

4 and 5. The department has no information.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is a little out of the ordinary, but this question seems to be directed to me, and the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Burnham) has asked me to answer it from my point of view. I have no objection:

1. The minister had decided to recommend that it be done, but no Order in Council had been passed.

2 and 3. Impossible to recollect what records there might be in the department. Certain correspondence did take place between the department and the superintendent of the Trent canal, and between the minister and the Hon. J. R. Stratton.

4. The records of the department will fully answer this.

5. Yes. The reason for so doing will be found in correspondence between the department and J. H. McClellan, superintendent.

THE BIOLOGICAL BOARD.

Mr. CHISHOLM (Antigonish):

1. Who are the members of the Biological Board, what salary do they each receive for their work, what time do they give to their work, and what seasons of the year are they engaged in such work?

2. Have any reports of a practical nature been made of late, or at any time, by the Biological Board on the life, habits, the manner and time or times in which commercial fish reproduce their species? If so, have such reports been published in non-technical language and distributed among the fishermen of the maritime provinces? If not, why not?

3. Has the Biological Board accomplished anything of value to aid the fishermen in their calling? If so, in what way?

4. Is it intended to have the Biological Board conduct an inquiry as to the alleged detrimental effects upon the fisheries of steam trawling?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Professor E. E. Prince, Chairman; Professor L. W. Bailey, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton; Rev. Abbe V. A. Huard, Laval University, Quebec; Professor A. P. Knight, Queen's University, Kingston; Professor A. B. Macallum, University of Toronto; Dr. A. H. MacKay, (of Dalhousie University) Halifax; Professor A. Willey, McGill University, Montreal; Professor A. H. R. Buller, Manitoba University, Manitoba. No salary is paid. Usually the summer months, from May till October; but the periods for each member of the staff are variable. The work commences as soon as the ice conditions and winter conditions permit, and continues until October, when the members of the board resume their professorships in the various universities.

2. Thirty-nine reports have been published by the board in three separate volumes, some of them treating of the reproduction and habits of commercial fish. The Chairman of the board has since 1895 published non-technical reports in the fisheries reports of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. These have been published separately. In these reports some of the work of the Biological Board has been embodied.

3. The Biological Board has accomplished some very important results which must be of aid to the fishermen, especially on bait, water pollutions and on the feeding habits of fish—on oyster and clam culture, the temperature and density of sea water and other practical subjects.

4. Such investigation is being conducted by the department.

PARCEL POST.

*Mr. LEMIEUX:

What steps, if any, have been taken by the hon. the Postmaster General towards the establishment of a parcel post system in Canada?

Mr. PELLETIER: The Postmaster General has already twice given the information that this matter occupies the attention of his department.

DISMISSAL.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Has James White, postmaster at Sydney, C.B., been dismissed?

2. If so, for what reason, and on whose complaint?

3. Was there an investigation?

4. If so, what are the names of the witnesses examined and the expenses of the investigation?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes.

2, 3 and 4. For political partisanship, by direction of the Postmaster General. No investigation was held because the facts were sufficiently to the knowledge of the department to render unnecessary the expense of an investigation.

UNOPPOSED AND UNDISCUSSED MOTIONS.

For a return showing in detail the quantity and values, respectively, of the imports and exports of Canada with Great Britain, United States, Australia and New Zealand, during the year ending March 31, 1912, in horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, bacon, hams, fresh and salted beef, lard, tallow, mutton, canned meats, butter, cheese, eggs poultry and apples. —Mr. Sutherland.

For a copy of all telegrams, letters, petitions, reports of engineers, plans, surveys, and other documents in the possession of the Department of Railways and Canals, and having been received since January 1, 1912, relating to the construction of a branch line of the Intercolonial railway into Guysborough county.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all letters, petitions, telegrams, complaints,evidence, reports and other papers and documents in the possession of the Marine and Fisheries Department, or any department of the Government, relating to the dismissal of Stephen C. Richard, lightkeeper at Charlos' Cove, N.S., and if there was an investigation, the names of all witnesses examined, a copy of the evidence, and a detailed statement of the expenses of such investigation.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all letters, petitions, telegrams, complaints, findings, reports and other papers in the possession of the Post Office Department, or any department of the Government, relating to the dismissal or discharge of James White, postmaster at Sidney, British Columbia, and if there was an investigation, the names of the witnesses examined and a detailed statement of the expenses of such investigation; also of all letters, telegrams, recommendations and other papers connected with the appointment of his successor.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all correspondence, papers, accounts, vouchers, concerning the purchase and subsequent repairs of a private car by the Department of Militia and Defence, from the Canadian Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Lemieux.

For a copy in duplicate of all letters, telegrams, petitions, applications, reports and other documents, together with a copy of all pay lists, with detailed statement of names of workmen employed, days worked and wages paid, in the possession of or on file in the Department of Public Works, or in any other department of the Government, relating or in any way appertaining to the expenditure made in connection with Gotros village wharf, county of Westmorland, New Brunswick, referred to in an answer given by hon. Mr. Cochrane to a question relating to said wharf, asked in the House of Commons on the 13th instant, as reported in 'Hansard' of that date.—Mr. Emmerson.

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents relative to the sale of alleged Indian lands at Nyanza, riding of North Cape Breton and Victoria, N.S., to one Philip McDonald, such sale having taken place about the year 1877.—Mr. McKenzie.

For a copy of all letters, vouchers and other documents generally, together with the detailed account relating to any fyled by Guillaume Narcisse Ducharme, for his service as commissioner of the Public Service Commission.—Mr. Lemieux.

NAVAL FORCES OF THE EMPIRE.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden for the second reading of Bill No. 21, to authorize measures for increasing the effective Naval Forces of the Empire, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Turriff thereto, resumed from February 18.

Mr. F. B. CARVELL (Carleton, N.B.): Mr. Speaker, I attempted last evening to give, as briefly as possible, what in my judgment was the history of the naval question in Canada from the beginning down to the first part of the year 1910. I referred generally to the attitude taken thereon by prominent members of the present Government, and quoted some resolutions, and some of the statements made by the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, and by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster). I now propose to discuss for a short time the reasons and principles upon which we are asked to pass the present legislation. It is hard to reconcile all the statements made by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I do not intend to give a resume of the arguments made by every hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who has spoken on this important question. I do, however, wish to refer as briefly as possible to the arguments and statements made by the right hon. Prime Minister, who has introduced this Bill, and is responsible for it, as well as, to some extent, those of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and generally to the arguments made by hon. gentlemen who have given reasons why, in their opinion, this Bill should be passed. I desire to give also, if I can, some reasons on the other side, and I want to discuss them as fairly and frankly as I know how.

The cardinal principle or reason advanced by hon. gentlemen opposite as to why this Bill should be passed is that of emergency. If my hon. friends would come out flat-footed and say there is no emergency, then with all the evidence before the House and all the information before the country I think my hon. friends could not have the hardihood to press this Bill through and ask Parliament to make it law. We have discussed this question of emergency in the House for a long time. Away back in 1909 the question of emergency was discussed and I want to be frank and state that the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster), after making his masterful argument in 1909, as to the reasons why we should not adopt the principle of contribution but rather that of constructing, manning and maintaining our own navy, did admit, at the close of his speech, that if a matter of national emergency arose, a question of such vital importance that the country must act at once, we would be willing to do what was necessary under the circumstances. The next time this matter was referred to was by the Prime Minister on the Naval Service Bill of 1910. I shall read an extract from a speech made by that right hon. gentleman. He said:

It may be fairly asked what we would do if we were in power to-day with regard to a great question of this kind. It seems to me that our plain course and duty would be this. The Government of this country are able to ascertain and to know, if they take the proper action for that purpose, whether the conditions which face the Empire at this time in respect of naval defence are grave. If we were in power we would endeavour to find that out, to get a plain, unvarnished answer to that question, and if the answer to that question, based upon the assurance of the Government of the Mother Country and the report of the naval experts of the Admiralty were such—and I think it would be such—as to demand instant and effective action by this country, then I would appeal to Parliament for immediate and effective aid, and if Parliament did not give immediate and effective aid I would appeal from Parliament to the people of the country.

I submit that there is the proposition laid down by the hon. gentleman as the only ground on which he would be willing to ask a contribution for the Mother Country. That was followed up by a resolution now known as the famous amendment of the right hon. gentleman to the second reading of the Naval Bill of 1910. That amendment recited that the proposals made by the Government were inadequate, that it would be practically a separatist navy, although I think these words are not actually used in the resolution, and it concluded with an amendment to the effect that the Government should contribute at once to the British Admiralty a sufficient sum of money to provide two dreadnoughts of the most modern and powerful kind, thus clearly indicating that at that early date the right hon. gentleman had it in his mind that we would be justified in making a contribution only in case of emergency.

I come next to the introduction of this legislation in this House by the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) on the 5th of December last. I have gone over the speech of the right hon. gentleman with great care and while I admit that the right hon. gentleman tried to induce the country to believe that there was an emergency, I cannot find any very strong arguments along that line in the speech itself. The right hon. gentleman has, I am glad to say, some respect for consistency. He realizes the very, very unpleasant position in which he is placed owing to his attitude from 1909 down to the present. He does not like to rise and say there is an emergency but he did go as far as he should go under the circumstances and very early in his speech he made use of these words:

I desire to express my warm appreciation of the manner in which we were received by His Majesty's Government, who took us most fully into their confidence on the great questions of foreign policy and of defence, and who accorded to us all relevant information at their disposal. A portion of this necessarily is of a very confidential character which cannot be made public; but an important part will be communicated to the House in a document which I shall lay on the table this afternoon.

Then he proceeded to read and lay upon the table of the House the document from the Admiralty. Later on, at page 707, he said:

It is neither necessary nor desirable in this place to debate or discuss the probability or imminence of war. The real test of our action is the existence or non-existence of absolute security. We cannot afford to be satisfied with anything less than that, for the risks are too great.

He wound up his very important speech practically with these words, which will be found at page 693 of the revised edition.

The next ten or twenty years will be pregnant with great results for this Empire, and it is of infinite importance that questions of purely domestic concern, however urgent, shall not prevent any of us from rising 'to the height of this great argument.' But to-day, while the clouds are heavy and we hear the booming of distant thunder, and see the lightning flashes above the horizon, we cannot and we will not wait and deliberate until any impending storm shall have burst upon us in fury and with disaster.

Those are practically the only references made by the Prime Minister to the question whether there was emergency or need or imminent danger or any other word which you might coin for the present condition of affairs. Therefore I think I am justified in saying that the right hon. gentleman did not say that there was an emergency or use words to bear out that statement, but I think he went as far as he could to create that impression in the country and every hon. gentleman who has followed him on that side of the House has thrown consistency to the winds, has entirely forgotten or failed to recognize the arguments and facts that have been advanced and has simply come out and cried for an emergency contribution on the ground of this fearful German naval scare. And I think pressure has been brought to bear on my right hon. friend to such an extent that he himself is coming to the conclusion that if he wants to justify his conduct and this legislation before the country he will be driven to somewhat the same attitude. I know not what may have taken place within the inner circles and the caucuses of the Conservative party, I only know that every hon. gentleman opposite who has discussed this matter has come out without any hesitation in saying that there is an emergency on account of the prominence and strength of the German navy and that we should do this, not only to maintain the equilibrium of the British navy but to protect ourselves or the British Isles from danger and invasion, and they all say that in protecting the British Isles we are protecting ourselves, which, of course, is a truth. I find that so great has been the pressure brought to bear on the right hon. gentleman that when he spoke upon this question on Thursday last he took an entirely different attitude. Here is the statement made by the right hon. gentleman at page 3332:

And when the right hon. gentleman says, in the first place, that we are to do nothing until we can build ships ourselves, and, in the second place, that we are to do nothing until we can train men and have them ready to man these ships, he is not seized with an adequate conception of the situation, and he does not seem to be inspired by a sincere desire to do something at the moment of emergency.

My right hon. friend comes out now and says there is an emergency. My right hon. friend has joined forces with the Minister of Trade and Commerce and with every other gentleman who has spoken on that side of the House, except I must say the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) who took a very different line of argument last evening from the other hon. gentlemen of his political persuasion. I commend my hon. friend for having the independence to state to this House what he believes at least to be the actual facts of the case. I wish some of my hon. friends opposite, who do not have German votes to look after, would be as frank with their constituents and with the country as my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel).

Then, Sir, we come to the statement of the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce. If there is a man on the other side of the House for whom I have a sincere admiration, or at least, for whose ability I have a sincere admiration, it is the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I may be pardoned, perhaps, if I refer with some degree of pride to the fact that we were both born in the same province, and in the same county. I do not know whether any of his greatness has been reflected upon that portion of the county from which I come; but I do feel proud that a man of his ability, breadth of mind, and force of character, sprang from the little province of New Brunswick by the sea. When you come to argument and logic, when you come to the man who has got into a tight corner and must get out of it some way or other, the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the man who is able to do the trick, with a greater amount of ability than any other man of my acquaintance to-day.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): He can swallow himself.

Mr. CARVELL: He can do better than that; he can get round a thing without swallowing himself. Now, I am not going to refer at length to his speech of 1909, because it would be needlessly taking up the time of the House. But we do know that the hon. gentleman made a wonderful argument in favour of the Canadian navy. Who forgets that statement of his, after arguing the case as only he could argue it, after giving the pros and cons against the contribution, in favour of the construction of a Canadian navy. He wound up with these words:

We will then have some of our bones, some of our body, some of our blood, some of our brains, some of our national independence embodied in this policy.

Whereas we would have none of it if we attempted to carry out the policy of giving away money to the British Empire. My hon. friend felt that the only position open to him was to come out flat-footed and say that an emergency existed at the present time, but there was no way of getting away from his argument of 1909; there was no way of getting away from the argument he advanced from the beginning to the present time. My hon. friend was not in England when the right hon. the Prime Minister was there. He went to England later in the summer, after the right hon. the Prime Minister had returned, I think. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce was not present at the conferences with the Admiralty. He did not hear the conversations between the right hon. the Prime Minister and the First Lord of the Admiralty. If he knew anything at all of what took place, he got it second-hand from the hon. gentlemen who were there; I presume from the Postmaster General. I have no doubt that the Postmaster General was best qualified to tell my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce exactly what had taken place on that memorable occasion.

Now, I want to read the statement made by the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) on this occasion, and to put it alongside of the statement made by the right hon. the Prime Minister. It will be found on page 1416 of Hansard':

My right hon. friend and members of his Cabinet went to Great Britain. They spent two months there, and they were not idle. They saw the officers and Lords of the Admiralty, and the secrets and policy and condition of the Empire were laid before them. They not only had statistics and figures and expert advice, but, what is still more valuable, they drank in the atmosphere surrounding men whose whole lives and whole purposes were devoted to the needs of the Empire, the condition in which it was, and the conditions in which other countries were, which is more valuable than dry statements or tabulated figures. After going through this process, my right hon. friend came to the conclusion that there was a danger, that there was a need for immediate and effective help. He came back to this Parliament and laid before it all the proofs he could, and gave to the House his own conviction as leader of the Government. He could not lay more before the House, because it is not permitted; but let no man run away with the idea that the statistical statements contained in the memorandum of the lords of the Admiralty which has been prepared for publication, was all, or even the most important part, of the information obtained. But, Sir, from the memorandum of the British Government, and from that deeper and more intimate source, he says to this House and to this country: There is a need, and it is pressing. I believe in giving the most effective aid in the face of that need, and I say to the people of my country I know the trust that is committed to me. I hold a little more than Canada's welfare in that trust; I hold some part of the welfare of the Empire. Whatever men may say or whatever men may do, the destinies of Canada are absolutely and irrevocably bound up with the destinies of the Empire. On my knowledge as given to you, on my knowledge as possessed but which cannot be disclosed, in pursuance of the sacred trust of a privy councillor and the leader of the Government in my country, I ask Parliament to pass this vote.

These are the statements which the Minister of Trade and Commerce put in the mouth of the right hon. the Prime Minister, but they are not statements which the Prime Minister himself would make. The right hon. the Prime Minister did not make them. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce, with all his agility and ability, in effect comes out, as I said before, flat-footed, and takes the ground that there is an emergency, and that this country is not only justified but bound to meet the conditions which exist at the present time.

There is one statement, however, to which I must refer before passing on, and that is as to the atmosphere which my hon. friend found when he was in London. Why, Sir, you can find an atmosphere in London that will satisfy the longings of any Imperialist at any time he cares to go there. If my hon. friend had gone there four or five years ago, he would have found the air permeated with the idea that the Liberal Government was being driven to destruction because they were trying to take taxation from the poor man and to put it on the rich. If my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce had gone to London in those days he would have come back and said: This is in the atmosphere; this cannot be done, because, it is in the atmosphere. But it was done, and, by Lloyd George's taxation, many millions of taxes, about which my hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup) spoke so gloomily last evening, were shifted from the shoulders of the poor, down-trodden labouring men, and placed, where they belong, on the shoulders of the rich; not to the extent that they should have been, I submit, but to some extent. I say that the atmosphere was furious with opposition to that scheme. I can imagine what my hon. friend would have found if he had associated with the members of the House of Lords at the time when Lloyd George's first budget was thrown out. I was in England when the Veto Bill was under discussion, and I found the atmosphere furious. Other members of this House were there, and they found the same atmosphere. It was not only furious but electric with the feeling that the Liberal Government was going to be driven out of power and that the Tory party were going to come back to power. The idea of the House of Lords voluntarily voting away their right to legislate on any important subject, and especially on one which affected the right of taxation in respect to their properties as against the property of the poor, was not to be thought of. But Sir, the storm passed away and if my hon. friend had been in England one month later, in 1911, he would have found an entirely different atmosphere; for while the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce and myself were on the ocean, the House of Lords gave in and passed the Veto Bill with the result that the House of Lords practically ceases to have any power, if the Commons desire to have their way.

Then, again, if he had gone to England—yes, he was there when the great question of Home Rule was under discussion. There he found another atmosphere. He found there an atmosphere which said that rather than submit to home rule being forced upon the people of Ireland they would rebel. He found members of the House of Commons and of the House of Lords standing up in the north of Ireland and advocating open rebellion. He even found physical force; he found men who were drilling, who had been supplied with arms and ammunition, who were going to resist this measure to the death. When he had stayed there two or three months longer he found another atmosphere because he found that the great Unionist city of Londonderry, which, it was declared, would stand by the men who were going to disrupt the British Empire rather than submit to Home Rule, actually elected a supporter of Home Rule. He also found that the great province of Ulster was represented in Parliament by a majority of men who were in favour of Home Rule.

Perhaps you will pardon me, Mr. Speaker, for digressing as I have done on this question, as I felt that it was necessary to show with what agility they create these atmospheres on the other side. When my right hon. friend and his colleagues had left Ottawa they commenced to create an atmosphere in England and that atmosphere was a demand for a contribution of money or dreadnoughts. Thousands of pounds were spent in creating that atmosphere. That atmosphere was created by articles in the British papers, speeches made by British statesmen and by cabling these articles and speeches across to this country. We found these first in the Montreal Star and then we found them sent broadcast all over the country to the Conservative papers from the greatest to the smallest. The atmosphere was created; when the right hon. gentleman got to England he found everything ready for him. He was at once taken up by the Unionist clubs, he was wined and dined, he was given to understand that the only thing that would do them any good would be a contribution and, in that frame of mind and under these conditions, he went to the Admiralty. The people of England are a pretty bright lot; they are not all la-de-das, they do not all wear a round pane of glass over one eye, they have got two eyes, they keep them open, they have been keeping them open for a long time and they are perfectly familiar with what the attitude of the Canadian Parliament was in 1909 because it is referred to in the memorandum. They knew what the attitude of the Conservative party was in 1910, they knew about the amendment which the right hon. leader of the Government had moved when he was leader of the Opposition, they knew the attitude of the Liberal party, they knew about the Naval Service Act which had been passed by the Canadian Parliament, they knew that the Liberal Government had been defeated in the election of 1911, they knew the attitude of the Nationalists, they knew that the Nationalist allies of the right hon. leader of the Government would never allow this country to inaugurate and support a Canadian navy, they knew, in as plain language as it could be stated to them, that the only thing that this Government could do was to make a contribution.

With all this knowledge before them, with the knowledge that the Conseryative Government could not build warships would not build warships, with the knowledge that the only thing that they would be allowed to do by their Nationalist allies was to make a contribution—with this knowledge and under these conditions, the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues go to the Admiralty and say: With these restrictions, stipulations and conditions, what can we do for you? I wonder if anybody is surprised at the answer which they received from the Admiralty. It would have been a surprise to me if they had received any other answer. The Admiralty discusses the matter purely from an academic standpoint. The Admiralty is not changing base very much from its position in 1909. I read last evening to the House what was the attitude of the Admiralty in the McKenna memorandum issued in July, 1909, before the conference was held. I wish to read it again to show what the attitude was at that time:

If the problem of Imperial defence were considered merely as a problem of naval strategy it would be found that the greatest output of strength for a given expenditure is obtained by the maintenance of a single navy with the concomitant unity of training and unity of command.

Then they go on to say that this might be satisfactory in one part of the Empire and not in another and therefore they discuss other methods and lines of action. When the right hon. the leader of the Government went to London in 1912 he said to the Admiralty: What can we do? It may be said that the Admiralty went back on their position but it was just what the manager of a great corporation or of a great work would do. Suppose this Government create a commission, tell them to go on and construct a public work and ask them what they want; they want to do the thing in their own way, exactly as the Admiralty wanted to do it, but the Government point out to the commission that there are certain reasons why they cannot do this and that. Then the commission will be reasonable and will come round and say what should be done. It is precisely the same with the Admiralty. The Admiralty say: Now, we have our chance to get exactly what we want as the managing board of the Admiralty—not the British people. I do not believe that it is what the British Government want, and I will try to prove to you later on wherein I make that distinction. But it is what the lords of the Admiralty, who are simply looking at this question from the one standpoint, say. They say: Give us, not dreadnoughts to use in the British navy —you cannot find it in the document—but they say, and I want to quote their words exactly:

The Prime Minister of the Dominion having inquired in what form any immediate aid that Canada might give would be most effective, we have no hesitation in answering after a prolonged consideration of all the circumstances that it is desirable that such aid should include the provision of a certain number of the largest and strongest ships of war which science can build or money supply.

What else could they have said? The right hon. gentleman asks them: What can we do for you immediately? The Admiralty knew that we could not build ships in Canada immediately; the Admiralty never asked us to do it immediately, but the right hon. gentleman asks: What can we do for you immediately and he gets the only answer that the Admiralty can give them. They say that you can contribute a number of battleships. They could not give any other answer and had any other body of men been in their positions they would have given exactly the same answer. It is true that the Admiralty make an argument to convince the people of Canada that they should make this contribution. They give us a statement of the condition of the British and German navy at the present time. They state what the British navy will be in 1915 and what the condition of the German navy will be in 1915, but there is a most remarkable omission in this memorandum which I do not think has been alluded to before, and I propose to allude to it now. The most remarkable thing in this memorandum is that, while the British Admiralty tell the people of Canada in this memorandum what the German navy will be in 1920, they are absolutely silent as to what the British navy will be at that date. I do not know. There may be two reasons. I am inclined to take the latter of the two. The first reason would be that they want to induce Canada to do something more than they would do themselves. I think the true reason is that they do not want to expose to the world exactly what their plans are to be for the next eight years. They have not given out their plans, and even in this memorandum there is not one word as to what the conditions will be in 1920. All we have is the condition which will exist in Germany at the end of the year. I have given so far as I know every argument that has been or could have been put up in favour of this contribution.

I want now to take up the other side of the case for a few minutes, in reference to the question of emergency. Notwithstanding the lamentable statement made by my hon. friend from East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) last evening, we know that Great Britain is the banker of the world. We know that it is the richest country on earth. We do not believe that millions of people there are facing starvation. We know that in the last five years the British have been able to reduce their national debt by about $50,000,000 a year; and that they have been able to pay all the expenses of government and to carry on their naval programme to a greater extent than has any other nation in the world. We know that they have been able to do all this out of revenue, and they state publicly that they are going to continue to do this.

We know that the Lords of the Admiralty have no fear whatever as to the outcome of this naval question between Great Britain and Germany. On this side of the House we believe that no emergency exists. I think we have the facts and figures to prove it.

The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) made some reference last evening to the statements made by the Right Hon. Winston Churchill when discussing the naval proposals in the British House of Commons on the 22nd of July last. That speech has also been referred to by a number of hon. members who have taken part in this debate. I have here a quotation, which to my mind is the pith of the whole matter. This was made after the German Naval Bill of 1912 was made public, and after the ministers from the Dominion of Canada had been to London, asking as to what they could do in the way of immediate assistance to the British navy. You will find it in the English Parliamentary Debates, Volume 41, July 22, 1912. After having discussed to some extent what the British proposed to do and what the German Naval Bill proposed to do, he uses these, to my mind, very common-sense suggestive words:

Cool, steady, methodical prepartion, prolonged over a succession of years, can alone raise the margin of naval power. It is no use flinging millions of money about, on the impulse of the moment by a gesture of impatience, or in a mood of panic. Such a course only reveals your weakness and impotence. Those who clamour for sensational expenditure, who think that the kind of danger with which we are faced needs to be warded off or can be warded off in that way, are either ignorant themselves of naval conditions or take advantage of the ignorance of others.

Where can you find the whole pith of the matter boiled down in as few words and as appropriate words as these? He tells the British people: There is no need to get nervous over the matter; we have it well in hand; what is the use of flinging away millions of money? You fling away millions of money, the argument would be, in vessels which are not necessary; you increase the cost of upkeep and these vessels will become obsolete in a short time. Better take a cool course and meet the conditions as they arise. It seems to me that Winston Churchill had in his mind conditions, which neither the British people nor we knew; but which have come to light during the last two or three weeks. It is well known that prior to that time, Winston Churchill had gone to Germany and prior to that he had stated to the British public and to the world at large what Great Britain intended to do, that they intended to maintain the supremacy of the British navy upon the high seas. We find now that the statements made by Mr. Winston Churchill at that time were made with a knowledge, which was not possessed by the world at large; but which is now coming to light. I find it in a dispatch in one of our Ottawa papers on the 8th day of February, 1913, as follows:

Naval Pact in Germany may end Armament Race—Significant Utterances of German Admiral Von Tirpitz in Addressing the Reichstag.

Berlin, Feb. 8.—The Budget Committee is now discussing the naval estimates for 1913. According to the semi-official Lokalanzeiger, Admiral Von Tirpitz informed the committee that a 'sensible agreement' between Great Britain and Germany with reference to the strength of the respective navies would be 'something to be welcomed.' If he has been accurately reported, his declaration is the first official admission from a responsible quarter that Germany considers an agreement of any kind with Britain as within the range of practical politics.

Admiral Von Tirpitz's statement before the Budget Committee regarding German and British naval strengths was equally remarkable, when he said that there need be no misgivings regarding the maintenance of such a standard of naval power between Britain and Germany.

My hon. friends opposite should consider that article. We find next a statement from the Vossiche Zeitung, a very prominent and important German paper:

The Vossiche Zeitung treats Tirpitz's statements as a formal announcement that an Anglo-German naval agreement has actually been reached. The Berliner Neuste Nachrichten, the organ of the German Navy League——

That is the jingo element in Germany. They have a jingo element in Germany as as well in England and Canada.

—states that Germany is on the verge of a 'decisive change in her entire naval policy,' and urges Parliament to weigh well whether it would not be better to retain 'freedom of action.'

Like all other jingo elements, it is opposed to such a change. In the face of this, how can any member come to any other conclusion than that Winston Churchill knew what he was talking about when he counselled sane commonsense and reasonable action in the British House of Commons on the 22nd of July, 1912?

Mr. BURNHAM: Is the hon. member in favour of an Imperial navy, and, if so, would it not be advisable to consult the other parts of the Empire before adopting any policy?

Mr. CARVELL: I will have great pleasure in answering the question later on, because I intend to discuss that branch of the subject. When my hon. friend asks me if I am in favour of an Imperial navy, I say that I most certainly am. He would be a mean Briton or a mean Canadian who would not be in favour of an Imperial navy. I am in favour of more than that! I am in favour of a Canadian navy as well. My hon. friend's question is a very fair one, and I will answer it later on.

We have more evidence on this question. I find another strong, and to my mind unanswerable reason why we should not proceed with this legislation at the present time, entirely apart from the reason put forth by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). The British labouring people are not entirely asleep over these questions. They pay their share of the taxes, although not as much as they used to; but they feel that if some of this money, instead of being devoted to naval armaments, were devoted to greater old age pensions, greater insurance, and such things as would ameliorate the suffering among the poorer people of Great Britain, it would be a much better world in which to live. Therefore, they have views upon this subject. Everyone of them on the other side from Mr. Bonar Law and Mr. Asquith down to the ordinary labouring man, knows and feels that England is safe, that she is looking after her own interests and does not require any of the colonies to look after her affairs; and they know that they can trust their parliament and government to do what is necessary for the country's protection. One of the most impressive things that I have seen in this connection took place at a conference held in London, a meeting of the independent Labour party, the Parliamentary Labour party, trades unions, trades councils and the Fabian Society. The delegates assembled represented two millions of Labour-Unionists of Great Britain. Think of it—a conference representing two millions of Labour-Unionists. And here is the statement made by the president in his opening address, he being not only president of the society but also a Labour member of Parliament:

Mr. G. H. Roberts, the Labour member for Norwich, presided, and, in the course of his presidential address, made the following reference to Premier Borden's offer of battleships to the Mother Country:—

Much comment is evoked by Canada's offer to furnish this country with three battleships. Did the Dominion elect to build, man and maintain its own navy we would not interpose. But a gift which greatly adds to our annual expenditure is open to criticism. Accepting Government assurances that our defensive forces are sufficient and efficient, these three vessels must be in excess of requirements. Besides which giving the colonies representation on the Imperial Defence Committee is a departure fraught with such far-reaching consequences that it must be subjected to searching inquiry. In resisting unnecessary and provocative armaments, which squanders wealth otherwise badly needed, we have the glorious consciousness that the future peace, happiness and well-being of the world's millions largely depend on our exertions.

I commend this paricularly to my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel). If this had been brought to his attention in time, I think he would have made it known in this House. I have given it here because it comes from a body of men such as I have described, who believe that the British Government is amply looking after their affairs, men such as those who for five hundred years have never failed, when the standard of Britain was in danger to pledge their lives for their country's security. These men say that such a contribution as ours is unnecessary. But I have more than that. I have an editorial from the London Daily News of February 8. Now, this is not ancient history but something of very recent date. I do not intend to read the whole article, it would take too much time. But I commend it to the very careful consideration of hon. gentlemen opposite. I hope the right hon. the leader of the Government himself will take the trouble to read the article, because there is more in it than I have seen in any article published on the naval question either in this country or across the water. The article discusses first the recent statement made by Admiral Von Tirpitz:

Admiral Von Torpitz speech, if we understand it, was not a whit less important than his colleague's.

One of his colleagues in the Reichstag.

Referring to Mr. Churchill's speech on March 18, he said that as head of the German navy, he had no objection to Mr. Churchill's ratio between the English and German fleets of 16 to 10. This statement implies, firstly, a renewal of Germany's assertion that she does not desire to contest British supremacy on the seas; and, secondly, a quite new declaration that the ratio of 10 to 16 secures that object of self-defence which Germany has in view.

This is Admiral von Stirpitz, who, as I understand it, is in charge of the naval affairs of the German Government, stated publicly that he had no exception to take to Mr. Churchill's proposed ratio of sixteen to ten, that is, sixteen British ships to ten German. The News discusses this to some extent, and finally we come to the Canadian end of it, and this is my justification for reading it here this afternoon:

Clearly, if the standard of 16 to 10 is acceptable to Germany after having been formulated by Mr. Churchill, there is very powerful reason for remaining faithful to it. Are we doing so? Two circumstances suggest a doubt. There is firstly the complication of the Malay-Canadian battleship; there is secondly the report that our programme of construction in the current year will be larger than foreshadowed by Mr. Churchill last year. Upon the second circumstances, so long as it rests upon rumor, there is no need to dwell; but the first requires comment. Mr. Churchill has said that the Malay-Canadian battleships will be additional to the English programme; they must therefore increase the ratio to more than 16 to 10. We have repeatedly emphasized that so long as we have to man and maintain the colonial ships without any corresponding reduction of our own programme this Colonial assistance imposes an additional burden upon the British taxpayer. If in addition we drive Germany into enacting new navy laws, and revive a competition when it promises to stop, then it will be admitted that the policy of counting the Colonial ships added to the Imperial fleet as external to the British programme is a very costly one.

The course indicated by prudence and wisdom is two-fold. We should discourage gifts to the British navy and encourage the dominions to build local navies. The German authorities, precisely because they announce their fleet as intended for defence, could not count the local navies of the dominions under local control as additions to the British navy or in any way increasing the potential danger to German security. German naval apprehensions must be wholly European, and the dominion navies are wholly extra-European. It follows, therefore, that Canada would be doing the best for herself and for this country and for the peace of the world if, instead of presenting three battleships to the British navy, she followed the example of Australia and developed a local navy of her own.

That is a statement, as I have said, which, in my judgment, should be considered very carefully by hon. members of this House. When a great newspaper like the London Daily News, which is not a provincial paper, but one of the great journals of the world, read, probably, by as many people as any other paper in Great Britain except possibly The Times, comes out and practically tells the Canadian Government that they are not helping but actually injuring the British Empire by the course they are taking, it is time that hon. gentlemen opposite should drop their jingoism, get out of this atmosphere that they found in London, and come back to reason and common sense. It is time for them to drop this Bill, and as my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) said, redistribute the seats and, if they are bound to have a decision, let the people say what we are to do on this subject.

But we have more evidence. I have given only a small portion of it, and I will not give much more, for to do so would take up more of the time of this House than I should be justified in occupying. But I wish to give a little more. A great deal of jubilation on the other side occurred over the attitude of my hon. friend—and I do treat him as a friend—the hon. member for Sunbury and Queens (Mr. McLean), a gentlemen with whom I have been associated in political matters for many years. That hon. gentleman took the course which he thought proper, and I do not intend to enter into any argument with him. But we are indebted to the hon. gentleman for a lot of facts which, if properly digested, present cogent reasons to this House why we should not go on with this proposition but should come back to sane common sense. The Admiralty memorandum was given to the present Government, I believe, at their earnest importunity; and I have a suspicion that they could not get what they wanted the first time and sent the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) back to get it—the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the man, I think, it will be found who turned the trick. But they only discussed dreadnoughts in the Admiralty memorandum. They absolutely threw to the winds everything which had to do with the navy, except dreadnoughts, and they only compare the dreadnoughts of Britain up to 1915 with those of Germany up to 1920. I now intend to present to the House a number of statistics submitted by one in whom hon. gentlemen, I know, have the most absolute faith. I believe that they are absolutely correct, and that, when read by members of this House and the people of the country, they can be relied upon as being the very essence of the facts with regard to the naval situation. The conditions revealed by the tables presented by the hon. member for Sunbury and Queens (Mr. McLean), are wonderful indeed, and one could talk for two hours on a matter and yet not exhaust all the information contained in them. According to one of these tables, I find that the total number of the ships of Great Britain is six hundred and fifty-five, and of Germany, three hundred and sixty-four. I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman obtained this information from reliable sources, and that he would not place these tables on 'Hansard' if he had not verified them, and had not considered them absolutely reliable. Great Britain, six hundred and fifty-five; Germany, three hundred and sixty-four—and yet hon. gentlemen say we must reverse the common-sense policy adopted by this Parliament in 1909 because Britain is in danger; because there is an emergency! Ah, Mr. Speaker, it is because there is an emergency in the Tory party of Canada! I may have more to say about that later on.

I now come to the next table, wherein I find that the hon. member has not dealt with things small and niggardly, but with the very best fighting machines that sail the waters of the earth to-day. The next table discards everything except the twenty-five most up-to-date, modern, invincible fighting ships afloat. Of that total of twenty-five, we find that Great Britain possesses twelve, and Germany two. These are battleships with a speed of twenty-one knots and up. The next item refers to battle cruisers of twenty-eight knots and up. There are only a dozen of these vessels in the world to-day, and of that dozen, Great Britain possesses six, and Germany three. Of armoured cruisers there is a total of twenty-five, with a speed of twenty-three knots and up, Great Britain possesses seventeen, and Germany two. Of a total number of protected cruisers of twenty-four, with a speed of twenty-five knots and up, Great Britain possesses fourteen and Germany four. Of the fastest destroyers in the world, a total of twenty-five, with a speed of thirty-three knots and up, Great Britain possesses ten and Germany four. Yet hon. gentlemen state, in the face of such a remarkable supremacy as that, that an emergency exists, and that this country should give $35,000,000 to Great Britain, imposing a burden upon the British taxpayer which he does not want. That is Canadian Tory jingoism in its very essence!

Hon. gentlemen opposite, especially the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), discussed this question as though the whole world were arrayed against Great Britain; as though it was the duty of British statesmen to place the Empire in such a position as to enable it to cope with any possible combination. I do not think this is a reasonable position to take; I do not believe it is necessary to have a fleet on every sea and ocean in this world, all of them greater than those of all otner nations combined. It is not commonsense—it is foolishness, and I do not think hon. gentlemen can expect that such an argument can be accepted as anything but foolish. Does any one believe, after what took place in Manilla bay not more than a decade ago, that the United States would stand by and see the British Empire demolished? I am not relying upon the Monroe Doctrine; I am relying upon the ordinary sense of humanity existing between the different sections of the Anglo-Saxon race. I am discussing only what might reasonably happen. I am not considering the United States as an ally of Great Britain, but simply state that I do not believe the United States would stand idle and see the British Empire smashed by any of the great military powers of Europe, if that were possible. When I read these figures, and observe the enormous supremacy of the British Empire over the rest of the world, I cannot but come to the conclusion that Great Britain does not require the assistance of the United States or anybody else. We have the entente cordiale in Europe, between France and England, and would any hon. gentleman state that France would sit idly by and see Great Britain smashed? By no means. I think my hon. friends are not doing themselves justice in discussing this question entirely from the German standpoint. I know not what Russia would do, but it is generally understood that Russia is in combination with France and Britain to-day, and we know that tnere is also an alliance between Great Britain and Japan. If, for any reason, this alliance should be broken, does any hon. gentleman say we should assume that splendid isolation which was discussed in this Parliament many years ago, and be in a position to defend ourselves against every combination?

Again referring to the tables submitted by the hon. member for Sunbury and Queens, I wish to refer to the condition of affairs which, it is supposed, will exist in Europe in 1915. Taking into consideration the dreadnoughts of the six great fighting nations, what do we find? Britain will have thirty-six dreadnoughts, France ten, and Russia four—a total of fifty. On the other hand, Germany will have twenty-three, Austria four, and Italy six, a total of thirty-three. These figures do not take into consideration torpedo boats, destroyers, protected cruisers, second-class cruisers, and other component parts of the great flotilla of vessels going to make up a navy.

Hon. gentlemen talk glibly about what the personnel of the Germany navy will be in 1920; but 1920 is a long way off, and many things may happen before that time. I wish to talk about conditions as they are to-day. According to these tables, there are 134,000 officers and men in the British navy, and the Germans have only 60,805, and even if the latter country proceeds with its present programme up to 1920, eight years hence, and even if Britain stands stock still during tnat period, Germany will have only 102,000 men as compared with our 134,000. In the face of such a condition of affairs as this, who can say there is an emergency, or that it is necessary that we should give $35,000,000 to Britain when it is not required?

I have a lot of data before me, but I will not weary the House by putting them on 'Hansard,' although I could go on almost indefinitely piling up evidence against the statement that a condition of emergency exists in England to-day, and that we should enter into tnis unreasonable, and I think, almost unconstitutional expense of $35,000,000 of our money.

I am sorry that the right hon. Prime Minister is not in his place, as I wish to ask him some questions; but I trust that one of the ministers present will bring them to his attention. I have tried to place before the House all the evidence we have in favour of the existence of an emergent condition of affairs, and as against that I have read some facts that have come to light tending to show that no such condition exists. My right hon. friend intimated in his speech, and the hon. member for North Toronto (Mr. Foster) stated that in their conversations with the British Admiralty they had obtained some secret information—something of a terrible nature, something which showed the Empire to be almost on the verge of collapse, something which makes it necessary to take immediate steps materially to increase the naval defences of the Empire. I hope the Minister of Finance will do me the honour of asking his leader to state to the House whether anything new has come to light, whether he has any information in addition to what he gave us, whether he knows anything about the alleged agreement between Germany and England, which provides that the ratio shall be as sixteen to ten. If he cannot do that, will he not give the information to the right hon. leader of the Opposition, who is a privy councillor, a gentleman in whom he must have confidence, a gentleman who is sworn to regard as secret any information that comes to him in that way, in order that we will be able to take from him —not the facts, he could not disclose them, but his conclusions as to whether the facts as narrated do create an emergent condition of affairs? After exhausting every particle of information we have on the question to-day there is no man who can logically reason this matter out and ask any jury to come to the conclusion that there is any reason for this preposterous legislation.

Coming as I do from the Maritime provinces, I have not only a feeling of disappointment, but I might almost say a feeling of animosity, against the members of this Government for the way they have treated the maritime provinces and Quebec over this question of the naval defence of the Empire. Apart from the emergency portion of my right hon. friend's speech, to my mind the next most important part was his statement that we cannot build ships in Canada, that it is an impossibility to build ships in Canada for from twenty-five to fifty years. I find that this idea is not new in the mind of the right hon. gentleman, I find that he voiced the same sentiments in 1910 although at that time he was a little more modest than he is to-day and only limited the range of possibility to fifteen or twenty years. Now he makes it twenty-five or fifty years. I tell my right hon. friend and his followers that when he makes that statement he is practically insulting the intelligence of the people of this country. Go up to the great lakes; you will find there steel ships being built to-day practically as long and as big as a dreadnought and not very different.

Mr. CROTHERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend laughs. He should go up and look for himself.

Mr. CROTHERS: I have been there.

Mr. CARVELL: And you know it, of course you know it.

Mr. CROTHERS: I do not know anything of the kind.

Mr. CARVELL: I do not say they are dreadnoughts; I say as big as. And after all what is a dreadnought? A dreadnought is simply a combination of steel in various forms, that is all there is to it. You start with the keel. There is no real difference between the keel of a dreadnought and a torpedo boat destroyer. The only difference is that one is bigger and broader and longer than the other, but they are only made of sections of steel and we have the steel in various places in Canada, and mechanics with sufficient skill to make the keel of a cruiser and therefore with sufficient skill to lay the keel of a dreadnought. Then you have ribs and after that a steel frame riveted together. That frame is covered with boiler plate just as in a merchantman plying on the great lakes. Thus far I think even my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) will agree that we have the means in Canada to-day to do that much of it. But if my hon. friends from the maritime provinces want any further information or proof let me give it to them. In 1911 tenders were called for the construction of ten vessels for the Canadian navy, four cruisers and six destroyers. Various British firms were invited to tender and five or six British firms did tender. Among them was the firm of Cammell, Laird & Company, of Birkenhead, and Vickers, Maxim & Son. Vickers, Maxim & Son have said within the last three months that they are prepared within a year to lay down the keel of a vessel which you can describe in the port of Montreal. I have not actual proof of that, I am only speaking now of what has appeared in the papers and has been said in this House. But I shall tell something I know something about. In the summer of 1911 a provisional contract was drawn up and executed between Cammell, Laird & Company and Norton-Griffiths & Company, of London, and the condition was that if Norton-Griffiths & Company were the lowest tenderers, and secured the contract for the construction of the harbour works and drydocks in St. John, and Cammell, Laird & Company were the lowest tenderers and received the contract for the construction of the Canadian naval vessels, they would commence the construction of those Canadian vessels in St. John within a year of the signing of the contract. Norton-Griffiths & Company were the lowest tenderers for the harbour works and dry-docks at St. John, they got the contract, they are to-day carrying on the work and have a large portion of the excavation already done. Cammell, Laird & Company were the lowest tenderers for the construction of the naval vessels. That was a matter of public knowledge. When the late Government went out of power they returned all the cheques accompanying the other tenders and left in the hands of the new Government the cheques of Cammell, Laird & Company and Norton-Griffiths & Company, leaving it open to them to go on and make the contract with the lowest tenderers. In the tender of Cammell, Laird & Company to this Government they agreed that within a year of the signing of the contract they would lay down the keel of the first vessel and within two or three years deliver the finished article. If the hon. members want to secure confirmation of what I have said they can do so from the representatives of these firms in Montreal. Hon. gentlemen opposite say it would cost us so much to erect a ship-building plant. I shall not go into that because the hon. member for St. John took the trouble to go to a modern ship-building plant on this continent not 500 miles away from Ottawa, where they are building dreadnoughts, where they started on an open field ten years ago and since then have built something over 100 vessels —and they are building dreadnoughts of the very highest type which science can devise or money supply. They have erected a shipyard and done all that in twelve years. They erected a shipyard in two or three years and they have turned out over one hundred vessels in twelve years. I can tell you more than that. In the negotiations with Cammell, Laird & Norton-Griffiths, it was understood that one million dollars added to the cost of the dry-dock for which there is a contract by this Government now, would have enabled you to build these naval vessels. If the Government had signed that contract as they should have done, as the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should have done, one million dollars, over and above what this Government has provided in the way of a dry-dock, would have been all that was necessary to carry out the construction of these vessels.

Mr. WILCOX: Why did the late Government not sign it?

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend is asking a question that has been answered a great many times. There was an election on the 21st day of September, 1911. Does the hon. member know about that?

Mr. WILCOX: Yes.

Mr. CARVELL: I thought he would. You always get a response from the other side when that is mentioned. The tender was submitted to this Government in the month of May. It was taken to England by the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries who consulted with the Admiralty. He did not return to this country until some time in July. The House was in session, but on the 31st day of July, I think, Parliament was dissolved, and the late Government were too good constitutional advisers of His Excellency to ask him to sign a contract of that magnitude in face of going to the people. But they left that $100,000 in the hands of the department, and when the new Government came in, they found it there, and they had not only the right, but the duty to sign that contract. But I am sorry to say that they were recreant to their duty, and the city of St. John to-day is not receiving and will not receive the advantage to which it is entitled, and the Dominion of Canada will not receive the advantage to which it is entitled by reason of the present Government's failure to act.

Mr. McCURDY: How does the hon. gentleman reconcile the statement which he has just made with that made by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition in this House on December 12:

I say now that the Government in power would have been better advised if they had awarded the contracts, and had they done so, we would at the present time have under construction on the stocks at Montreal four cruisers and six destroyers.

Mr. CARVELL: It is not my business or duty to reconcile the statements. I have only given the facts as they exist to my knowledge. I have only given to this House some information which I think may convince even the most sceptical, that we can build ships in Canada. It is not a question of where you are going to build them. My right hon. friend says we cannot build the ships in twenty-five years. I say we can, and I am trying to give you my proof, and I think I will even convince my hon. friend from Queens and Shelburne that I have some reasonable ground for what I say. We can build the ships in Canada, and if the Government had done their duty we would have been building the ships in Canada to-day. I think that is an answer sufficient to satisfy even my hon. friend from Queens and Shelburne.

But they say not only that we cannot build the ships in Canada, but that we cannot manufacture the guns in Canada. I think that is right. But they do not manufacture the guns at Fore River. They do not manufacture the guns on the Clyde. They do not manufacture the guns at Belfast, at Harland & Wolff's. We were all through their establishment; in fact when I was in the Old Country there was not a ship-building firm that did not try to impress the Canadian representatives with the view that they were the only people in the world who could build ships. We went through a number of establishments, and we got a lot of valuable information. We saw their magnificent industries. In one case, I think it was at Belfast, they were employing 20,000 men. At the great works at Newcastle-on-Tyne, I think they said they were employing 20,000 men in one establishment. But that only gives us an idea of what could be done in Canada if we had a government with the nerve and patriotism to work this question out. If you are going to develop a shipyard, you will not allow it to lie idle. As I have said, they do not manufacture guns at Harland & Wolff's establishment in Belfast. They do not manufacture them on the Clyde, or at Newcastle. A number of us were through the works of Armstrong, Whitworth & Co. where they do manufacture the guns and build the ships as well. There is one place where you can assemble the ships and the guns at the same point, but on the Clyde and at Belfast they get the guns from some other place. At Fore River they do not manufacture the guns; they are built at Pittsburg and placed on the vessels at Fore River. If we built vessels at Halifax, St. John, or Vancouver, I do not think we would start manufacturing guns at once, because we would not need a sufficient number to justify the expediture. We would bring the guns from England, subject of course to the consent of the Admiralty, and place them on our vessels.

Then they say we cannot make plate. I do not believe it. We have not made it here before because we did not have any sale for it. We have got the iron, the steel, and the nickel, and the industries ready to make it. Give us a sale, and you will get the product. You might as well say that we cannot build an automobile because we do not make the engines and the different parts. I do not believe that there is a complete automobile manufactured in Canada. Personally I think it would be a great pity for those who use them if they were all manufactured in Canada, speaking from my own experience. The manufacturers import certain articles which they would not be justified in manufacturing themselves, on account of the cost, and they assemble them. Some firms manufacture more than others, but the result is that you get the finished product, and you have an industry employing tens of thousands of people, and doing a great work in Canada. Incidentally, I may say that I think they have a little more protection than they need. However, we have got the industry, and we are importing many of the most intricate parts that go to make up that machine. Give us a contract to build those ships in Canada, and we will get the industry. We will spend probably from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000 in our own country, and we will import the intricate parts which it will not pay us to make at home. When the shipyards were not engaged in building war vessels, they would be engaged in building merchant vessels. They would employ tens of thousands of people in the next twenty-five years if the present Government were true to their pledges, would withdraw this legislation, and go on in a plain commonsense way to construct those ships, employing the men in Canada, manning them in Canada, and maintaining them in Canada. So much for that.

Mr. CARVELL.

There were two other reasons advanced by the right hon. Prime Minister why this Bill should be passed and the money sent to the other side of the water. The first was that we were going to have representation on the Imperial Defence Committee. That has been referred to before, but I wish to discuss it from my standpoint for a few moments, as I think it is of the very greatest importance. I do not say that the right hon. the Prime Minister deliberately intended to deceive the people in the first-place, I have too high a regard for that right hon. gentleman to make such an assertion, and in the second place, it would be unparliamentary to do so. But, I have no hesitation in saying that the way the matter was put to the Canadian people did deceive the Canadian people, and especially the Conservative portion thereof. For a month or two before the right hon. gentleman made his speech in this House on December 5, every Canadian newspaper had been pointing out to its readers what a wonderful advance had been made by this Government in securing the right to appoint a representative on the Imperial Defence Committee. Henceforth no war can be entered upon by Great Britain, no change in foreign policy can take place, without consulting Canada! We are going to have a representative in London, one of the Cabinet ministers! Many of their newspapers go so far as to pick out the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley), member of the Cabinet without portfolio, as the gentleman who is going to occupy that high and honourable distinction. I want to read what the right hon. gentleman said about that, so that there will be no contention that I am juggling with his statement or that I am giving my version of it. I want to give my right hon. friend's version of it. You will find it on page 714 of 'Hansard' in his speech of December 5:

> While the committee does not control policy in any way, and could not undertake to do so, as it is not responsible to Parliament, it is necessarily obliged constantly to consider foreign policy and foreign relations, for the obvious reason that defence, and especially naval defence, is inseparably connected with such consideration.

Think of that for a moment. He states that it is necessarily obliged constantly to consider foreign policy and foreign relations. Then he goes on to say:

> I am assured by His Majesty's Government that, pending a final solution of the question of voice and influence, they would welcome the presence in London of a Canadian minister during the whole or a portion of each year. Such minister would be regularly summoned to all meetings of the Committee of Imperial Defence, and would be regarded as one of its permanent members. No important step in foreign policy would be undertaken without consultation with such a representative of Canada.

Think of that, Sir; something entirely new in the annals of British Government; no important step in foreign or naval policy to be taken without the consent of this member of the Imperial Defence Committee!

This seems a very marked advance, both from our standpoint and from that of the United Kingdom.

He calls attention to this marked advance, that we are to enjoy something in advance of anything we have enjoyed heretofore, something which the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues had obtained from the British Government which never was obtained before. A marked advance!

It would give to us an opportunity of consultation, and therefore an influence which hitherto we have not possessed. The conclusions and declarations of Great Britain in respect to foreign relations could not fail to be strengthened by the knowledge that such consultation and co-operation with the overseas dominions had become an accomplished fact.

That statement was made by the right hon. gentleman in his speech in this House on the 5th of December. I do not believe that in the history of Canada such a rebuke has been handed out to a colonial statesman as that which was handed to the right hon. gentleman and his colleagues by the Secretary for Colonial Affairs as a result of his making that statement in the House of Commons. I think you would look in vain, you could not go even to preconfederation days, to find an instance where the British Government felt it necessary to call down in as plain and unmistakable language a responsible minister of the Crown for statements which he had made. Let me read from this despatch, bearing date December 10, 1912, and addressed to His Royal Highness the Governor General:

Downing Street, December 10, 1912.

My Lord,—I am forwarding by post for the confidential information of your ministers, a record of the proceedings of the Committee of Imperial Defence of May 30, 1911 (during the Imperial conference), and of August 1, 1912 (during the visit of the Canadian ministers to London).

My right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was Premier of this country, and was present at the conference as one of the Canadian delegates. This record deals solely with the representation of the Dominion on the Committee of Imperial Defence:

Your ministers, who were present on the first occasion, will remember that the matter arose out of a resolution by Sir Jos. Ward on the Agenda of the Imperial conference, asking that the High Commissioners of the dominions should be summoned to the Committee of Imperial Defence when naval and military matters affecting the overseas dominions were under consideration. The unanimous view of all those present on May 30, 1911, was that the representation of the dominions should be not by the High Commissioner but by ministers who would be responsible to their own colleagues and Parliament and at the same time it was decided that a defence committee should be established in each dominion which would be kept in close touch with the Committee of Imperial Defence at home. The resolution untimately put forward by His Majesty's Government and accepted unanimously by the members of the Imperial conference at the Committee of Imperial Defence were as follows: (1) That one or more representatives, appointed by the respective governments of the dominions, should be invited to attend meetings of the Committee of Imperial Defence when questions of naval and military defence affecting the overseas dominions are under consideration.

Note that they were invited to be present when matters of naval defence affecting the overseas dominions were under consideration:

(2) The proposal that a defence committee should be established in each dominion is accepted in principle. The constitution of these defence committees is a matter for each dominion to decide.

The Canadian Government having changed in the Autumn of 1911, it was necessary when Mr. Borden and his colleagues visited England this summer, to put these proposals before them, as of course they were unaware of the previous proceedings.

I do not know whether that is meant sarcastically or otherwise. My own opinion is that it is meant to be sarcastic, because surely the right hon. Prime Minister must have known what took place in the Imperial conference of 1911:

Subject to consultation with his colleagues in Canada, Mr. Borden provisionally accepted the resolutions as passed and stated that he saw no difficulty in one of his ministers, either with or without portfolio, spending some months of every year in London in order to carry out this intention. Mr. Asquith and I had, subsequently, several private conversations with him, at which he expressed the desire that the Canadian and other dominions ministers who might be in London as members of the Committee of Imperial Defence should receive, in confidence, knowledge of the policy and proceedings of the Imperial Government in foreign and other affairs.

The right hon. gentleman asked the Premier of Great Britain to allow his minister to have a say in foreign affairs. Listen to the answer:

We pointed out to him that the Committee of Imperial Defence is a purely advisory body and is not, and cannot under any circumstances become a body deciding on policy, which is and must remain the sole prerogative of the cabinet, subject to the support of the House of Commons. But, at the same time we assured him that any dominions minister resident here would at all times have free and full access to the Prime Minister, the Foreign Secretary and the Colonial Secretary for information on all questions of Imperial policy.

When you compare the castigation which the right hon. gentleman received at the hands of the Colonial Secretary for the statement deliberately made by the Premier of this country in this House on the 5th of December last, I think you will come to the conclusion that the right hon. gentleman was very hard pressed in order to find some reason to put before the Canadian people as to why they should accept this proposition. But another reason was given why they should accept it. This was held out as a sop to the people of Canada. We must remember that on that delegation to London in 1912 was the representative of the city of Halifax (Mr. Borden) and the representative of the city of St. John (Mr. Hazen), the two cities in Canada which, probably more than any other, are interested in the construction and maintenance of a Canadian navy. These hon. gentlemen, when they were coming back to Canada to ask the people of this country to contribute an enormous amount of money to be sent out of this country—to be given, as my hon. friend says, as a free gift to the British Admiralty —felt that something must be done to satisfy the feelings of their friends in the maritime provinces and in the other maritime portions of Canada. Therefore they concocted this scheme of building small cruisers, oil tanks, and auxiliary vessels in Canada. While it may be a little wearying, I wish to read to the House the statements made by both the right hon. the Premier and by Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, on this question. I shall then be willing to leave it to the Conservative members of this House to decide whether in their judgment there is the least ghost of a chance of ever having one of those British vessels built in Canada. I will be willing to leave it to a jury of Conservatives anywhere as to whether or not it does not almost amount to an insult to the intelligence of the people of the maritime portions of this country. The right hon. gentleman says:

I have discussed this subject with the Admiralty, and they thoroughly realize that it is not to the Empire's advantage that all shipbuilding facilities should be concentrated in the United Kingdom. I am assured, therefore, that the Admiralty are prepared in the early future to give orders for the construction in Canada of small cruisers, oil-tank vessels, and auxiliary craft of various kinds.

This was cheered to the echo by my friends on the opposite side. Then he went on to say:

The plant required is relatively small as compared with that which is necessary for a dreadnought battleship, and such an undertaking would have a much more secure and permanent basis from a business standpoint. For the purpose of stimulating so important and necessary an industry, we have expressed our willingness to bear a portion of the increased cost for a time at least.

I leave it to my Conservative friends if they did not believe, when that statement was made that the right hon. gentleman had made an arrangement whereby these vessels were to be built in Canada, we paying a portion of the increased cost. That is the only logical conclusion to come to from that statement. It brought forth a letter from the other side. The letter was here; but my right hon. friend did not feel disposed to bring it down to Parliament until telegrams were exchanged between him and the Admiralty. Finally it was brought down:

Admiralty, Whitehall,
4th November, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Borden,—

I have given careful consideration to your two letters about the encouragement of the ship-building industry in Canada. I recognize the importance of such a policy on general grounds not less than from the immediate Canadian standpoint; and any practical scheme for Admiralty co-operation would command my support. The main difficulty to be surmounted is to obtain that high degree of expert knowledge and experience which modern warships require for their efficient construction.

Here you have a politician to deal with, a man who knows how to write a letter which said a good deal, yet meant nothing. He goes on to say:

We might, however, in the first instance, agree upon certain classes of vessels with which it may be considered that competent Canadian shipyards would be able to deal. The most suitable classes of vessels with which to inaugurate the system would be light cruisers, oil-tank vessels and small craft for auxiliary services. We should, if it would meet your views, be prepared to invite tenders from approved Canadian firms for the construction of some vessels of such classes in the near future.

How on earth are they going to get tenders from approved Canadian firms, if the Canadian firms do not exist? How in the world are the Canadian firms going to exist unless this Government does something to induce them to invest their two, three or four million dollars in a plant? There again the politican puts it all over the statesman. Let us go on a little further. We have not yet come to the real cream of this proposition:

It would be understood that progress with this policy would have to depend on the prices quoted being reasonable, having regard to all the circumstances (including the fact that Canada will be prepared to share any extra cost) and also on the time required for construction not being excessive as compared with the dates fixed for completion of similar ships in England. No fixed scale or proportion of orders could be guaranteed to Canadian firms.

They might get one this year and one ten years from now.

We would begin by giving some orders at once, and further progress would depend upon the development of the industry and the extent of our programme.

The Admiralty would, of course, remain wholly responsible for the design of all vessels, and for the supervision of the construction of those building in Canada. Arrangements for this could be worked out in detail and should not present any difficulty.

WINSTON S. CHURCHILL.

There the British politician tells the Canadian statesman what he will do for him, and then turns round and says: I am not able to do anything for you because you cannot do it for yourselves. The Canadian Government will not even put up the money to build a shipyard; it will not allow the people of Canada to get ready to build these ships. I do not wonder that my right hon. friend held back that statement until my right hon. leader extracted it from him. He must have known he was putting up simply an empty husk to his followers in Canada, and I am sorry to say that they cheered him to the echo.

Mr. GRAHAM: It is like an empty ship.

Mr. CARVELL: It is worse than an empty ship. If you had an empty ship you could put men in it. Here you have not even got the means to have an empty ship. It seems to me that the real gem of the whole debate comes from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen), the gentleman who represents the city and county of St. John in this Parliament, the gentleman in whose constituency Norton-Griffiths & Company, are now building a dry-dock, the gentleman in whose constituency Cammell, Laird & Company would now be building war vessels, had this Government carried out the policy it should have carried out. When you read the statement of Winston Churchill and the conditions under which he would be willing to give contracts to Canada to build these small vessels, you will see that the statement of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries is a real gem. This was from the written portion of his speech, you will remember. The hon. gentleman spoke about fifteen minutes in reference to the local elections in New Brunswick last summer; then he came to the written portion; it is this:

I come, Mr. Speaker, from one of that group of little provinces by the sea, where bold and hardy seamen are reared, where the salt breath of the sea is ever in our nostrils, where the limitless road of the ocean lies at every man's threshold, tempting him beyond the horizon to lands afar. In days gone by those provinces excelled in ship-building; the products of their skill were found in every sea and in every port. The coming of the iron age killed that industry; the former days of romance are gone. But it is a peculiar pleasure to me to be able to point to that feature of our policy which provides for the revival of our ship-building industry, and provides for it upon a sound, a well considered and a business-like plan. Under its fostering care, Mr. Speaker, we may look forward with confidence to the day when we again may see our own ships plough the distant oceans, when once more to the man of the maritime provinces the sea will be his rightful heritage.

Just think of that effusion of eloquence from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, when he had in his possession the letter from Winston Churchill, dated the 4th day of November, 1912, telling him the conditions under which they were going to establish this ship-building industry in the maritime provinces. I think comment on that is unnecessary. It brands the Minister of Marine and Fisheries as not having treated his constituents with the frankness to which they were entitled. It certainly brands him with having sent out to his constituents something which would lead them astray whether it was intended to do so or not. It was something which could not but lead them astray, something which created in their minds hopes which could not be realized. The evidence is that we had the Conservative newspapers and politicians proclaiming for weeks: See what our minister had done for us; the British Admiralty will come here to build half their fleet, we are going to share in all this prosperity; the British shipbuilding firms are coming to build these vessels in St. John. And for all I know, the politicians are going around singing the same song to-day, notwithstanding Mr. Winston Churchill's letter, which I have just read.

Now, I have discussed this question at greater length than I had intended. I have very little more to say. I have discussed the proposition put forth by the right hon. Prime Minister as to whether you can build ships in Canada, also the manner in which Canada is to be represented upon the Imperial Navy Defence Committee, and as to the construction of these ships in our own country. I want to compare the two policies, the policy advocated by the right hon. leader of the Government, and the policy advocated by the right hon. leader of the Opposition. I wish I had the ability to argue this case in the style of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster). But I have not, and I never expect to aspire to such a position. I wish I had the ability of my right hon. friend the leader of the Government to argue in favour of a Canadian-built, manned and owned navy, as he did, but I never shall attain to that. I have given the history of this transaction down to 1910. There is a little of the history that I omitted, and for fear of being charged with not giving it all, perhaps I had better supplement what I have said and fill the hiatus in the historical record of this transaction. In 1910, a new condition of affairs arose in this country. My hon. friend the present Prime Minister came to this Parliament, and we all gave him a great deal of credit. He was prepared to stand by the attitude he had taken and for which he had argued in 1909. The only thing at variance with this that he would do at first was to vote with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that before anything should be done for the construction of a Canadian navy the matter should be referred to the people. Thus far would he go but no further. But when we come to February, 1910, we find that a change has come over the spirit of his dream. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier and Mr. Henri Bourassa had been getting in their work. They had taken the right hon. gentleman up into a high mountain and had said to him: Behold all these Quebec seats I will give you if you will bow down and worship me. And the right hon. gentleman did not have the stamina to say: Get thee behind me, Satan; but he fell down and worshipped for the Quebec seats that were promised him. The next thing was a resolution which he moved in this House about February, 1910, I think, in which he deprecated the policy, said that the proposed navy would be useless and would be a separatist navy or something to that effect. At that time came his first suggestion of an emergency which was contained in the concluding clause of his resolution in which it was stated to be the duty of Parliament to provide money for dreadnoughts not to be built under contracts subject to the Parliament of Canada but the money to be handed over to the British Admiralty to be used by them—a sufficient sum to build —and from that time we find a sudden change in his attitude. Next came the Drummond and Arthabaska election. It has been stated in this House, and I believe it to be true, that a hard and fast bargain was made between the Conservative party and the Nationalists that they would play one game in Ontario and another in Quebec. Mr. Monk would gather up what seats he could in Quebec, the rest would gather what they could in Ontario and the English-speaking portions of Canada. They played that game. The first result, as I have said, was in Drummond and Arthabaska in the autumn of 1910. While I cannot prove that my right hon. friend the leader of the Government gave his consolation and advice, I do know that the Minister of Trade and Commerce did, and I know that he was one of the first men to send his telegram of congratulation, as also did the whip of the Conservative party, on the great victory which they had achieved—the great victory of turning down a man who was in favour of Canada doing her duty in the manly self-defence of this country and of the Empire. Things went on until the summer of 1911 when the elections came on. We had the Nationalists preaching one doctrine in Quebec and the Conservatives preaching another doctrine in Ontario. The result was that they came back here with, I believe, twenty-two gentlemen of Quebec of the Nationalist stripe.

Now, what was the particular objection that the Nationalists of Quebec had to the Laurier naval policy? It is in a nutshell. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) tried to justify it publicly on constitutional grounds. But, Sir, hon. gentlemen who have seats in this House to-day, and men who have no seats in this House, leaders of their party everywhere, publicly took objection to the Canadian navy on the ground their sons would be taken from their homes and placed on these vessels and made to lose their lives in defence of the British Empire. There is no getting away from it; that is the reason, that is the objection which the Nationalists of Quebec had to the naval policy of the late Government. And, Sir, I respect and honour the seven gentlemen, who, the other night, proved that they were not bolted and barred to their seats by so many ties but they could stand by what they considered the proper policy in 1911. I do not agree with them; I have not the faintest sympathy with them, I think their position unmanly, I think it un-Canadian and un-British. But it is logical. They voted here last week for what they had advocated in the resolution of 1911. It may be too personal to refer to one hon. gentleman, but the statement made by that hon. gentleman was the most pathetic thing I have seen in this House, that he expected to be somewhere else in a short time, but still declared in the face of his Maker that he was not going to stultify himself in the eyes of his constituents. But what am I to say to my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier)? What am I to say to my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Nantel)? What am I to say to these other hon. gentlemen who sit on that side? They advocated in 1911 the same doctrine as these seven gentlemen to whom I have referred. But they are bolted and barred to their seats, some of them by seven thousand reasons, and others by only two thousand five hundred reasons, but they held their seats and went back on the pledges they made to their constituents. And they stand to-day by a policy which is neither fish nor flesh nor good red herring, a compromise between the Tory jingoes of Ontario and the Nationalists of Quebec. Why, Sir, we have the whole matter in the quotations made last evening from L'Evènement and La Patrie. They say: Give the money; let the money go; Ontario and the West pay for it; and you can tell your mothers and sisters not to have any fear, for their sons and brothers will not be taken away to fight; we will get Englishmen at twenty-five cents a day to do that. That is the true Nationalist policy, and that is the policy which I say is embodied in this legislation. When hon. gentlemen stated that they did not know from which parent this legislation sprung, I can tell them that it sprang from the Postmaster General, and I want to give that hon. gentleman credit for a great deal of acumen and business ability in connection with his action in that regard. He took great care not to send the Premier or the Minister of Marine and Fisheries over to England to negotiate this matter and decide upon this policy; he went himself. He knew what was going on, and I do not think anybody, even my right hon. friend, will deny that he is the man who is responsible for this legislation. I am sure my good Conservative friends, representing such constituencies as South York, N.B., and various ridings in the province of Ontario, will feel highly flattered when they realize that, like good children, they are falling in with the Postmaster General and the Minister of Inland Revenue on this naval question. I hope that in this regard my hon. friends will be able to square themselves with their own constituents as well as with their own consciences.

On the other hand, the policy of the Opposition is exactly the policy which has been adhered to since 1909. We said in 1909 that it was the duty of the Canadian people to take their ordinary and reasonable share in the defence of the Empire; we say so to-day. We said in 1909 that the only manly way to do that was to man our own vessels, maintain our own ships, and give our lives, if need be, to maintain our rights and the rights of the British Empire; we say so to-day. We said in 1910 that we could build vessels in Canada; we say so to-day. We said in 1909 and in 1910 that you would give nothing of value to the Empire if you sent empty ships; we say so to-day. Reference has frequently been made in this debate to that occasion on which the people of this country were called upon —and they responded to the call—to aid the Empire; I refer to the South African war in 1899, and following years. Hon. gentlemen tell us we cannot get recruits, and this has been stated by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, the Postmaster General, and the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel). In this statement I submit that they stultify the laudable and patriotic ambitions of the young men of this country, and they are, to my mind, uttering a libel as against the great nationhood of Canada each time they repeat the statement. When the dark days of 1899 came, was there any trouble in getting Canadians to enlist? No! The first regiment consisting of 1,000 men was sent off within, I think, three weeks. They went to the front; they engaged in the most bloody battles of the war, and, after the unhappy circumstances connected with Magersfontein and Spion Kop, did the Canadian youths lay down their arms and assert their fear to go on the field of battle and take their share of the conflict by the side of the representatives of other portions of the Empire? No; after Magersfontein and Spion Kop a greater wave of popular patriotism swept over Canada than had ever before existed in this country. A number of batteries of artillery were recruited at the time of the war, and I know that young men came from parts of the country miles and miles distant in order to enlist. I know of men who, not being able to get a chance to enlist on that contingent, smuggled themselves on board the train and went to Halifax, boarded the ships as stowaways, went to the front, and became good soldiers. I think, as I have said, that hon. gentlemen are not justified in making any such statements as that against the people of Canada. Suppose that in 1899 the Canadian Government had said to the British Government: 'We will not allow you to take our men—here is money; take it and buy rifles, ammunition, clothing, and the various necessities of war.' Would this have been a credit to Canada? You might just as well send money to Britain to buy guns and ammunition and provisions in such a case as send empty dreadnoughts, and say: 'Take these hulks, man them with your twenty-five-cent-a-day men, and do the fighting which we do not desire to do ourselves!' I think hon. gentlemen should have a higher conception of the sentiment existing in the minds of the people of Canada at the present day, and I hope that, before this debate is concluded, they will come to the conclusion that if Canada is to do her part when, as my right hon. friend has said, Armageddon comes, it should be done not only with battleships, not only with money, not only with ammunition, but with our ships and our blood and our bones and our brains, and all that goes to make up a true and loyal Canadian.

As to the constitutional aspect of this matter, if no emergency exists; if there is no reason for sending this contribution; if it is against the well-reasoned conclusion arrived at four years ago by my right hon. friend and his lieutenants; if it is against the real sentiments of the people of Canada; if it is only a makeshift; then, Sir, should not the people of the country be consulted before the House passes upon this momentous question? I submit that the proposal of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) is a reasonable and constitutional one, and that it is the duty of this Government to effect a redistribution and give to the people of the West that percentage of representation to which they are clearly entitled. If the people of the country, after the question has been referred to them, decide that they are in favour of an un-British policy of little Canadianism—a contribution of money and not of men—then I shall be willing to bow to the inevitable, and admit that the majority must rule. But I have not such a conception of the people of this country; I contend that they do not hold such sentiments, and this my right hon. friend will find out if he gives them a chance to vote upon this question, and say whether they are willing to stand by the manly, noble Canadian and British policy of the Liberal party, or the mean, huckstering expenditure submitted by the right hon. Prime Minister in the proposition which is the basis of this Bill.

Mr. O. S. CROCKET (York, N.B.): Before hearing the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), I thought I had a fairly clear idea of what the attitude of the Opposition was upon this question. The speech which my hon. friend has just concluded, however, has, I must confess, somewhat confounded me in that respect. Day after day during the last several weeks we have sat in this House and heard hon. gentlemen opposite declaim against the proposals of the Government on the ground that they involved a contribution to the British Admiralty, with all its attendant evil consequences. We now learn from my hon. friend that these hon. gentlemen, his political associates, are quite mistaken; that these proposals do not involve a contribution to the British Admiralty, but, on the contrary, provide that the proposed expenditure is to be made under the direction of the Governor in Council. He said last night that he wished that they had provided that the money should be handed over directly to the Admiralty, and that in his opinion it would be much safer. It is therefore rather difficult to discover just where the Opposition is at in view of these conflicting views.

My hon. friend has also introduced a new argument into this discussion and is entitled to credit for that. He called special attention to it describing it as an argument of great importance and one that had not been mentioned in the course of this debate. That was the argument that this Bill was unconstitutional because it provides for an expenditure of money to be made outside of the bounds of the Dominion of Canada. I am not surprised that we have not heard that argument from any other gentleman because it impressed me as one of the most absurd contentions I have ever heard advanced in this House in relation to constitutional law. He based that argument upon the ground that if this money is expended in England for the construction of battleships we will not have the power of summoning the building firms before the Public Accounts Committee in order that we may there have that full and unobstructed investigation of which my hon. friend has at all times been such a distinguished champion.

My hon. friend also dwelt at some length upon the proposal which has been made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) that this question is one that should not be determined by the Parliament of Canada without first referring it to the people. I would ask members to recall the attitude of the hon. member for Carleton with reference to this same proposal which was made in 1910 in connection with a measure providing not for a single appropriation for a temporary purpose but for a permanent naval policy in this country. What was the attitude of my hon. friend on that proposition? How did he vote? I asked him last night how he himself voted on that occasion and he admitted that he voted against the proposal that that proposition, involving the embarking of this country for the first time upon a permanent naval policy of the most far-reaching consequences, should be submitted to the people before being passed by the Parliament of Canada, and yet that hon. gentleman, in view of that fact, had the temerity to attempt to chide hon. members on this side of the House for inconsistency in opposing an amendment to submit to the people the present proposals involving a single appropriation for a temporary and urgent purpose, and not committing Parliament or the Government in any way respecting a permanent policy.

My hon. friend has made another argument that has not been heard of before in this House. That was in dealing with the question of emergency that there was no need for the people of Canada to do anything on behalf of the Imperial navy because he felt convinced that should any danger ever arise the British navy could rely on the protection of the navy of the United States. That is the first time I have heard an argument of that kind made in or out of this House and I do not think the hon. member for Carleton will have reason to pride himself upon having made it when he goes before the loyal electors of the county of Carleton on the occasion of the next appeal to the people of the country.

I do not intend to further follow the hon. member for Carleton in his three-hours' speech, because I regard his speech as nothing more or less than a repetition of what has been said over and over again during several weeks in this debate, and as absolutely irrelevant to what is really, as I see it, the issue between the parties in this matter. It must be evident to every one who has followed the speeches made by hon. members opposite that they have rested their case entirely upon industrial, local and mercenary considerations, and that, although some of them have contended, that the Opposition plan is best calculated to strengthen the naval forces of the Empire, not one of them has so much as attempted to argue that all important phase of the question. They tell us that their plan will give us a great ship-building industry in this country, that it will develop our seaports, that it will involve the expenditure of millions of dollars among our own people. Apart from these considerations, and the novel ones advanced by the hon. member for Carleton already referred to, the only argument I have heard advanced by hon. members opposite in behalf of the Opposition policy as against the proposals of the Government is that the Opposition plan will safeguard our precious autonomy and will avert the dire consequences of that revolution-breeding evil of taxation without representation. Without desiring to be offensive I think I can justly say that these arguments can be at once dismissed as the hollowest sham and the merest nonsense, seeing that the appropriation for which this Bill provides is a voluntary offering by the people of Canada through their constitutional representatives, in their own Parliament, for the common defence of the Empire, of which it seems necessary at times to remind our hon. friends opposite that Canada still forms a part. So far as the ship-building argument is concerned I would be quite willing—if this were a Bill to encourage the ship-building industry in this country or the development of our ports—I would be quite willing to argue with the hon. member for Carleton or any hon. gentleman opposite, the question whether it would be more advantageous for Canada to start a navy of her own with the object of building her own warships or such of them as we might find ourselves capable of building in this country or whether it would be better with a view to the development of this industry to start in the first instance and at once with orders from the British navy for the construction of such ships as competent ship-building firms in Canada are capable of handling, as has already been arranged between the right hon. the Prime Minister of this country and the First Lord of the Admiralty. It seems to me that, having regard to the proper and successful development of a great, permanent ship-building industry in Canada, nothing could be more desirable than the plan which is outlined in the letter of the First Lord of the Admiralty, to the right hon. the Prime Minister of the 4th November last, which my hon. friend from Carleton has already read. Notwithstanding that my hon. friend read this letter, I propose to again put it on 'Hansard' as part of my remarks, in order that the people may judge whether looking at this question solely from our industrial standpoint there is not more real benefit in the proposal of the Government than in the proposal of hon. members opposite. The letter is as follows:

4th November, 1912.

My Dear Mr. Borden,—

I have given careful consideration to your two letters about the encouragement of the ship-building industry in Canada. I recognize the importance of such a policy on general grounds not less than from the immediate Canadian standpoint; and any practical scheme for Admiralty co-operation would command my support. The main difficulty to be surmounted is to obtain that high degree of expert knowledge and experience which modern warships require for their efficient construction.

We might, however, in the first instance agree upon certain classes of vessels with which it may be considered that competent Canadian shipyards would be able to deal. The most suitable classes of vessels with which to inaugurate the system would be light cruisers, oil-tank vessels and small craft for auxiliary services. We should, if it would meet your views, be prepared to invite tenders from approved Canadian firms for the construction of some vessels of such classes in the near future.

I understood my hon. friend from Carleton to make light of that sentence upon the ground that we had no Canadian firms from whom tenders could be invited, or who could build these ships for the British navy; yet he has spent at least half an hour this afternoon in arguing that we have firms, or would have firms in this country in a very short time which would be capable of building dreadnoughts of the most modern and powerful type.

It would be understood that progress with this policy would have to depend on the prices quoted being reasonable, having regard to all the circumstances (including the fact that Canada will be prepared to share any extra cost) and also on the time required for construction not being excessive as compared with the dates fixed for completion of similar ships in England. No fixed scale or proportion of orders could be guaranteed to Canadian firms. We would begin by giving some orders at once, and further progress would depend upon the development of the industry and the extent of our programme.

The Admiralty would, of course, remain wholly responsible for the design of all vessels, and for the supervision of the construction of those building in Canada. Arrangements for this could be worked out in detail and should not present any difficulty.

WINSTON S. CHURCHILL.

The advantages of such an arrangement are manifest. Immediate orders for such vessels as our shipyards can handle, gradual development under Admiralty supervision, working up naturally from the smaller to the larger types as experience is acquired under the auspices and tuition of the most experienced naval organization in the world; permanency and growth ensured by the constant and never failing requirements of the largest navy in the world, dependent only on the successful achievement of economical, speedy, and efficient construction. Here surely is an inducement worth while, instead of the limited and uncertain requirements of a local and necessarily insignificant Canadian navy, and all this, Mr. Speaker, without any risk or danger to the efficiency of either the defence of the Empire or of Canada.

But, Mr. Speaker, I ask, are these industrial, local, and mercenary considerations the considerations which should, in any event, determine or influence the action of this Parliament in dealing with the momentous question of the defence of the Empire? What, I ask, is the object of these proposals? Let me quote the second clause of the Bill which is now before the House:

From and out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada there may be paid and applied a sum not exceeding thirty-five million dollars for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective forces of the Empire.

What do the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and hon. members on the other side of the House say to that clause, that there shall be appropriated $35,000,000 for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire? Why, the right hon. gentleman has already assented to that provision, because he proposed an amendment to the resolution, upon which this Bill was founded, and the first clause of that amendment is in precisely the same terms as the second clause of the Bill which I have now read. That amendment accepted clause 1 of the resolution, and proposed to strike out all the clauses following, clauses 2, 3 and 4, but the amendment left clause 1 standing, as the expression not only of the Prime Minister who introduced this measure, and of those supporting him on this side of the House, but of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House with reference to the purpose of our action. Every hon. gentleman on your right, Mr. Speaker; who voted for the resolution submitted by the right hon. the Prime Minister on 5th of December last, voted for an appropriation of $35,000,000 for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire. Every hon. gentleman on your left, including the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, who voted for his amendment, has voted for the appropriation of $35,000,000 for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire. And yet, Mr. Speaker, we heard the hon. member from Carleton argue for over an hour this afternoon that there was no necessity for Canada doing anything at the present time, no need of any immediate action. The very first clause of the amendment which was proposed by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, and to which I have already referred, proclaims the necessity for action, and immediate action, upon our part, and states the reasons for that necessity as interpreted by the leader of the Opposition himself. Let me quote from the amendment:

The memorandum prepared by the Board of Admiralty on the general naval question of the Empire and communicated to this House by the right hon. the Prime Minister on December 5 shows that several of the most important of the foreign powers have adopted a definite policy of rapidly increasing their naval strength.

Is that a matter of no significance to the British Empire? Let the next clause of the right hon. gentleman's own amendment answer.

That this condition has compelled the United Kingdom to concentrate its naval forces in home waters, involving the withdrawal of ships from the outlying portions of the Empire.

Is that a clause of no concern to the people of Canada? Let the next clause of the amendment prepared and moved by the leader of the Opposition himself answer that question:

That such withdrawal renders it necessary that Canada without further delay should enter actively upon a permanent policy of naval defence.

We have, therefore, in the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition, not only the approval of the first clause of this Bill providing for an appropriation of $35,000,000 for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire, but we have the specific statement contained in the Opposition amendment that a condition has arisen in Europe which has compelled the United Kingdom, for its own protection, to concentrate its naval forces in home waters and that this condition 'renders it necessary that Canada, without further delay, should enter actively upon a permanent policy of naval defence.' We may call it an emergency, a necessity, as the amendment to which I have referred itself calls it, a need, a crisis, or anything else. What difference? Both parties are agreed that a situation has arisen which calls for immediate action on the part of this Parliament. That being the case, what then is the issue between the parties? The issue is to be found in the resolution brought down by the right hon. Prime Minister and in the amendment moved thereto by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition. I think that I correctly state it when I say that the Liberal-Conservative party, declaring as it does, for an appropriation of $35,000,000 for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire, proceeds at once to the accomplishment of that purpose by providing for the construction and equipment of battleships of the most modern and powerful type and for the placing of these battleships at the disposal of His Majesty for the common defence of the Empire upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the Governor in Council and His Majesty's Government. That is the policy and the position of the Conservative party. The Liberal party, declaring for an appropriation for the same purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire, proceeds immediately to put itself on record as opposed to the construction and equipment of battleships of the most modern and powerful type, as suggested by the Admiralty and opposed to the placing of these, or any other vessels, at the disposal of His Majesty for the common defence of the Empire. These are the provisions in the resolution to which our hon. friends on the other side of the House have objected and against which they have voted. I have already read clause (a) of the resolution, which is clause 2 in the Bill.

(b) That the said sum shall be used and applied under the direction of the Governor in Council in the construction and equipment of battleships or armoured cruisers of the most modern and powerful type.

The leader of the Opposition, and every one of the members of this House who has supported his amendment, has voted against that clause. They also voted against this clause:

(c) That the said ships when constructed and equipped shall be placed by the Governor in Council at the disposal of His Majesty for the common defence of the Empire.

Instead of that the Opposition propose, what they failed to do themselves when they were in power—to give effect actively and speedily to the impossible and mischievous Naval Service Act of 1910 and to add to the Rainbow and the Niobe two so-called fleet units to be built, manned, maintained and controlled by Canada without co-operation with or reference to the British Admiralty and to be stationed, one on the Atlantic coast and the other on the Pacific coast of Canada, for the exclusive, and, I say, absolutely unnecessary, purpose of defending our own shores. That is, the issue between the parties as appearing in this Bill and the amendment which the leader of the Opposition moved to the resolution on which the Bill is founded.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CROCKET: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock, I had pointed out that the entire Opposition party in this House, by its vote in favour of the amendment of the right hon. leader of the Opposition on Thursday last, had recorded itself as in favour of the appropriation of $35,000,000 for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire. It may be that some hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House did not fully appreciate the significance of the votes which they were then recording; and apparently my hon. friend from the county of Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), was one who did not do so, otherwise he surely would not have made the statement which he did in the course of his speech this afternoon, that were there any necessity for immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire, there was nothing else that could be done than the action proposed by the Bill tabled by the right hon. the Prime Minister. In making that admission, it seems to me that he gave his entire case away. To my mind there is absolutely no question upon this point that, if there is any necessity for immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire, there is, as the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., admitted this afternoon, only one thing to do, and that is to provide immediately for the construction and equipment of battleships of the most modern and powerful type, as suggested by the Admiralty, and to place them at the disposal of His Majesty for the common defence of the Empire.

I had also pointed out that, notwithstanding the fact that the entire Opposition party in this House had committed itself to the first clause of the resolution of the right hon. the Prime Minister, which is in the same terms as the second clause of the Bill now before the House, the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and every one of his followers in this House, when they voted for that amendment, at the same time voted to strike out of the resolution of the right hon. the Prime Minister the provision for the construction and equipment of battleships of the most modern and powerful type, and voted against the proposal that those battleships should be placed at the disposal of His Majesty for the common defence of the Empire. At six o'clock, I was endeavouring to show exactly what the issue was between the two parties in this House upon this question, that they were a unit with respect to the object of the appropriation, and that the only question was as to what should be done to accomplish the purpose set forth in the clause of the Bill which I have quoted. I think I showed that the Liberal-Conservative party stands for the expenditure of the proposed appropriation for the common defence of the Empire, and that the Opposition party in this House stand for the defence of the territory of Canada and the territory of Canada only, in that respect taking the same position precisely that the hon. member for Yamaska (Mr. Mondou) took in this House the other night.

It is true that the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, who in the session of 1910 in this House openly and boldly declared that he was no imperialist, and who in connection with the Naval Service Act of that year took special care that no clause or no word should be given place within the four corners of that Act which could by any possibility be interpreted as recognizing any association or connection between this country and the Empire, has taken equal care, in the preparation of the amendment which he moved recently, to introduce a few high-sounding phrases which might be passed off upon the casual or superficial observer as the langauge of a fervent imperialist. But examine Mr. Speaker, the amendment, and you will find that its operative and effective provisions are precisely as I have described, and that under this Imperialistic disguise, the right hon. leader of the Opposition has securely laid and fixed in this amendment his pet idea of a distinctive exclusive, and separative Canadian navy. I have already pointed out that the amendment proposes to strike out those clauses of the Prime Minister's resolution providing for the common defence of the Empire and the placing of these ships at the disposal of his Majesty for that purpose. Bearing that in mind, I will ask the attention of the House to the so-called imperialistic clause in the amendment proposed by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition:

That any measure of Canadian aid to Imperial naval defence which does not embody a permanent policy of participation by ships owned, manned and maintained by Canada and contemplating construction as soon as possible in Canada is not an adequate or satisfactory expression of the aspirations of the Canadian people in regard to naval defence, and is not an assumption by Canada of her fair share in the maintenance of the naval strength of the Empire.

It will be observed that that clause is purely negative in its terms and is effective only as a criticism or condemnation of the proposal of the Government. The effective and operative clauses of this amendment so far as the Opposition policy is concerned, are the last two. Let me read the first of these clauses:

It is the opinion of this House that measures should be taken at the present session to give effect actively and speedily to the permanent naval policy embodied in the Naval Service Act of 1910, passed pursuant to the resolution unanimously approved by this House in March, 1909.

That clause contains one statement of fact, which is untrue. It states that the Naval Service Act of 1910 was passed in pursuance of the resolution passed unanimously by this House in the month of January, 1909. The resolution of 1909, which has been quoted again and again in the course of this debate, required and did so very plainly and distinctly in connection with any naval service that might be organized in Canada, that it should be in association with and in close relation to the British Admiralty, and on lines suggested by the Imperial Conference. The so-called Naval Service Act of 1910 repudiated all connection and association with the British Admiralty, and sought to establish an absolutely independent, distinctive Canadian navy. In that respect the Act of 1910 was a distinct violation of the terms of the resolution of March, 1909. Needless to say, it was not on lines suggested by the Imperial conference, as the resolution of March, 1909, required that it should be. I had occasion, when that Bill was before the House, to address the House on that question. In common with the great majority of the members of the Conservative party, I then claimed and I claim now that the Naval Service Act of 1910 establishes a separative, distinctive, independent Canadian navy, owing no allegiance to the British Empire and recognizing no association or connection with the British Admiralty. That is the permanent naval policy to which the Opposition would like to give active and speedy effect, a distinctive and absolutely independent Canadian navy as a means of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire. The last clause of the amendment of the leader of the Opposition is the clause which provides for the so-called two fleet units. These are the words of this clause:

This House is further of the opinion that to increase the power and mobility of the Imperial navy by the addition by Canada under the above Act of two fleet units, to be stationed on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada respectively, rather than by a contribution of money or ships, is the policy best calculated to afford relief to the United Kingdom in respect to the burthen of Imperial naval defence and, in the words of the Admiralty memorandum, to 'restore greater freedom to the movements of the British squadrons in every sea and directly promote the security of the Dominion'; and that the Government of Canada should take such steps as shall lead to the accomplishment of this purpose as speedily as possible.

The House will observe that the leader of the Opposition, in the language which he has employed in this clause, takes no chances on the so-called fleet units being separated from the British navy. He is careful to state that the fleet units are to be added, and added 'under the above Act,' which, as I have pointed out, provides for an independent and separate Canadian navy. And, as if that were not enough to make sure of his purpose in that connection and enough to disown association and connection with the British Admiralty, he adds the further limitation that these units, when completed, are to be placed on the Atlantic and on the Pacific coasts of Canada for the defence of our own shores. Having made this clear by these effective and restrictive words, the right hon. gentleman, no doubt, felt that their import could not be altered by the introduction of a profession or pretense that this narrow un-British scheme would tend to increase the power and mobility of the Imperial navy. Now, I ask the House to test the truth and genuineness of this profession. How can the building of two fleet units of an independent Canadian navy and the placing of them upon the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada, increase the power and the mobility of the Imperial navy, except by releasing vessels of the Imperial navy to traverse, and patrol, and if necessary to fight in other seas? We are all aware that there are no ships of the Imperial navy upon the Atlantic or Pacific coasts of Canada, and have not been for some years. Our protection has been none the less effective, through the operation of what Mr. Silburn, in his recent work upon the Evolution of Sea Power terms 'Britain's silent sovereignty of the seas.' We have no ships of the Imperial navy in Canadian waters. If we release no ships of the Imperial navy in the waters of Canada in which the so-called fleet units are to be confined, I ask, how can we thereby increase either the power or the mobility of the Imperial navy in other seas? Now, the last clause which I have read not only states this impossibility as the Opposition's aim in establishing an independent Canadian navy, but it falsely alleges that, 'in the words of the Admiralty 'this plan is best calculated to 'restore greater freedom to the movements of the British squadrons in every sea and directly promote the security of the dominions.' These are the words of the amendment of the right hon. leader of the Opposition. Now, turning to the Admiralty memorandum, page 9, what do we find as the statement of the Admiralty which the right hon. leader of the Opposition professes to quote in the paragraph I have just read:

> Larger margins of superiority at home would, among other things, restore greater freedom to the movements of the British squadrons in every sea, and directly promote the security of the dominions.

The clause of the amendment which I have just read states precisely the contrary —that the stationing of two fleet units on the Atlantic and on the Pacific coasts of Canada will in the words of the Admiralty, 'restore greater freedom to the movements of the British squadrons in every sea and directly promote the security of the dominions.' The leader of the Opposition has employed the somewhat novel expedient of simply reversing the subject of which the words quoted are predicated by the Admiralty and introducing the garbled quotation as the justification of a policy directly the opposite of the policy recommended by the Admiralty in the words cited.

Now, although these words, which have been misquoted in the Opposition amendment, were doubtless introduced for the purpose of giving a false imperialistic colouring to the Opposition's scheme, in reality they but accentuate the separation between Canada and the Empire. British squadrons in every sea, but on the Atlantic and Pacific coast of Canada; here and here alone, must the line be drawn; send your British squadrons to other seas, wherever you like, we want none of them in Canada; Canada will look after her own defence independently of you.' That is the message which the Opposition, the Liberal party of this country, would send to the Mother Country. Hon. members opposite have talked of an appeal to the country on this question. If this issue should be carried to the country, I am satisfied that the right hon. leader of the Opposition and his party would find that the public indignation and resentment which was aroused less than two years ago by their proneness to lend a hand to President Taft in his attempt to break that great Imperial commercial bond reaching out from England around the world and back again to England would not be a circumstance to the feeling with which they would find themselves confronted upon this question. Defeat was the penalty which our hon. friends paid for their last break; absolute annihilation will be their certain doom if they persist in their present course.

Not only does the Admiralty lay stress in these words which I have already quoted, upon the paramount importance of maintaining the general supremacy of the Imperial navy, but they specifically point this out with even greater emphasis in another clause of the memorandum. Paragraph 7 of the memorandum reads thus:

> Naval supremacy is of two kinds: general and local. General naval supremacy consists in the power to defeat in battle and drive from the seas the strongest hostile navy or combination of hostile navies wherever they may be found. Local superiority consists in the power to send in good time to, or maintain permanently in some distant theatre forces adequate to defeat the enemy or hold him in check until the main decision has been obtained in the decisive theatre. It is the general naval supremacy of Great Britain which is the primary safeguard of the security and interests of the great dominions of the Crown, and which for all these years has been the deterrent upon any possible designs prejudicial to or inconsiderate of their policy and safety.

In the face of this very clear and indisputable statement of the Admiralty that it is the general naval supremacy of Great Britain which is the primary safeguard of the security and interests of the dominions of the Crown, the members of the Opposition persist in their determination that the resources of this country shall be frittered away in the establishment and independent maintenance of a divided, ineffective and wholly useless local navy, incapable of achieving even local superiority.

Local superiority, says the Admiralty, consists in the power to send in good time to, or maintain permanently in some distant theatre forces adequate to defeat the enemy or hold him in check until the main decision has been obtained in the decisive theatre. Will anybody contend that these two fleet units, incapable of cooperating with each other, could under any circumstances constitute a force adequate to defeat or to hold in check such an enemy as would venture to attack Canada so long as Canada remains under the ægis of the British flag? Surely no power will venture to attack Canada as a dominion of the British Empire until it is prepared to challenge Britain's mastery of the seas. When that time comes, what under Heaven, Mr. Speaker, would be the good of the two separated units of a Canadian navy, one on the shores of the Atlantic, and the other on the shores of the Pacific? Their one function, it seems to me, as was pointed out by a Montreal French daily in connection with the Naval Service Act of 1910, would be to elude pursuit. Until that time comes, what possible use can these separated units of a Canadian navy serve? Simply a waste of public money.

Is it necessary, I ask, to argue the question from the standpoint of naval strategy and efficiency as regards either the defence of the Empire or the defence of Canada itself, further than to state these self-evident truths embodied in the Admiralty memorandum? Upon whose advice does the Opposition challenge the wisdom of the British Admiralty? Who is their naval expert? Is it the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham)? Is it the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley)? I came to the conclusion after listening to the hon. member for Carleton, this afternoon that it was most likely the hon. member for Carleton himself.

Mr. CROCKET.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will my hon. friend be good enough to point out in the memorandum of the Admiralty any statement which they make advising against a Canadian navy?

Mr. CROCKET: I thought I had made it very clear that the Admiralty had pointed out that it was the general naval supremacy of the Empire which was the primary safeguard of the security of the Dominion of Canada, as of all other dominions of the Crown, and that the object to be aimed at was not the attainment of what is called local superiority, but the strengthening of the general naval supremacy of the Empire. Possibly the president of the Fore River Shipbuilding Company, of Quincy, Mass., to whose yards the member for St. John recently paid a visit, is the authority who is advising the Opposition to reject the advice of the British Admiralty. The thing seems to me to be so ridiculous as a means of rendering immediate and effective aid to the naval forces of the Empire in the present circumstances that it will not stand serious discussion. Is it any wonder that the British press describes the Opposition plan as playing with the idea of a navy and a sham, intended purely for decorative political effect?

Let us, Mr. Speaker, in dealing with this great and admittedly urgent problem of Imperial concern, rise above these narrow, sectional, political and mercenary considerations. Let our action, whatever it be, be based on the sane, sound and broad grounds of naval strategy and efficiency and Imperial unity. Let us recognize that, upon this question at least, Canada and the Empire are one and inseparable. In this view can there be a shadow of a doubt but that our first duty is to do our part in maintaining the general supremacy of the Imperial navy, which, as pointed out by the Admiralty, is the primary safeguard, not only of the security and interests of the United Kingdom, but of our own? Can there be a question but that one great fleet, under one control, concentrated at the real point of danger, is the most effective instrument for the preservation of that supremacy when it is threatened? Is it not the merest folly, if there is need of Canada's taking a hand in increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire, as both parties admit there is, to ignore these salient principles and to proceed upon diametrically opposite lines, from selfish motives of pecuniary gain?

The right hon. the leader of the Opposition ten years ago used some striking and rather overdrawn language in moving the second reading of the National Transcontinental Railway Bill, as to the duty of Parliament in that behalf. He said:

Such is our duty. It is immediate. It is imperative. It is not of to-morrow, but of this day, of this hour and of this minute. Heaven grant that it be not already too late. Heaven grant that whilst we tarry and dispute, the trade of Canada is not diverted to other channels and that an ever vigilant competitor does not take to himself the trade that properly belongs to those who acknowledge Canada as their native or their adopted land.

Rather far-fetched and high-flown for a matter of the building of a railway, but I would have thought that one capable of being moved to such flights of eloquence by a railway construction Bill might at least have refrained from opposing at this time immediate and effective action with respect to the defence of the Empire and from advising in its stead a policy, not only of delay, but of ultimate and utter futility.

The right hon. gentleman will pardon me for saying that the necessity for action on the part of this Parliament is, in my judgment infinitely more urgent with respect to the defence of the Empire than the alleged necessity which was the occasion of his fervent appeal of 1903 and that he might with far more propriety have said to us of our duty now: 'It is immediate. It is imperative. It is not of to-morrow, but of this day, of this hour (omitting perhaps this minute). Heaven grant that it be not already too late. Heaven grant that whilst we tarry and dispute the crisis may not occur and that an ever-vigilant rival does not take to herself, not the trade that properly belongs to those who acknowledge Canada as their native or adopted land, but the supremacy and sovereignty of the seas from those who acknowledge the Union Jack as the flag of their Empire.'

Mr. GEO. W. KYTE (Richmond, N.S.): I was astonished yesterday afternoon when the right hon. the Prime Minister moved the second reading of the Naval Bill without a word of explanation. It is the privilege of Parliament to be put in possession of all the facts and arguments relied upon for the acceptance of the principle involved in any important Government measure when the second reading is proposed. Of course I anticipate the answer that will be made to this observation by the right hon. gentleman if he should honour me by making a reply. When two months ago he proposed to the House the resolution upon which the Bill is based, he made an exhaustive statement in support of the principle and that may be accepted as the explanation usually given on the second reading. I submit that many things have happened since the 5th of December last. The situation has changed, owing to the added knowledge we have as respects the condition of naval affairs in England and Germany and other matters bearing on this question. I rather suspect that the right hon. gentleman is somewhat in the position of a lawyer who goes into the criminal court to defend a prisoner. If the facts are against him and the character of the evidence on behalf of his client doubtful he does not open his case or call witnesses for the defence, but prefers to take his chances for a verdict on his privilege under those circumstances of having the last word to the jury.

I listened with interest to the speech of the hon. member for York, N.B., (Mr. Crocket). He did not close his remarks without casting a taunt in respect to the attitude of the Opposition upon this question, he did not omit to state that the proposal of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition involved a separatist policy, a separate and independent navy. After listening to the speech of the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) yesterday, a speech delivered in a most conciliatory manner, we thought that taunts of that kind would not be thrown out to hon. members on this side of the House. The hon. member for East Hastings counselled this House to discuss this question upon its merits without importing into it anything of a partisan flavour. I think, therefore, that the time is opportune for me to briefly review a few questions in regard to matters that I have culled in reading the history of this country. In 1838 there was a great and important question agitating the people of Nova Scotia in respect to the rights of the people of that province to responsible government. At that time the government of the province was controlled by the council of twelve, a council appointed by the Imperial Government without reference to the will of the people. That council also constituted the Legislative Council or the upper chamber of the legislative machinery of the province; they sat with closed doors, they did not permit the people to take part in or listen to their deliberations and on that account a very deep rooted agitation arose for the improvement of that condition of affairs. As you, Sir, are familiar with the incident and will remember, on that occasion the leader of the people was the Hon. Joseph Howe who had arrayed against him in those days the whole Tory party of the province of Nova Scotia, and for a time the Tory party of Great Britain. When Joseph Howe thundered against the closed doors of the legislative and executive council he was answered by taunts that he was a separatist, that he was opposed to the interests of Great Britain, that he was endeavouring to set up views contrary to the views of the British Government. I am bound to say that Joseph Howe did receive support from a small section of the Conservative party, but the support he received from them was purchased dearly by those Conservatives. Hon. James Boyle Uniacke, then the leader of the Conservative party and himself an occupant of a seat in the executive council, felt that the principles advocated by Howe were so convincing that he resigned his seat as a member of the executive, came over to Howe and assisted him in carrying on the agitation. Mr. Uniacke suffered the taunts and jeers of his late friends of the Tory party. Not only did they endeavour to deprive him of his seat in the Legislature but a system of social ostracism was inaugurated in the city of Halifax so that the persecution which Toryism meted out to him penetrated the inmost conditions surrounding his domestic life. Howe, I need scarcely say, after he had accomplished for the people of Nova Scotia that which he sought to accomplish in respect of bringing to them the boon of responsible government, showed many evidences of his loyalty to Great Britain and to the Empire. At the time when the agitation was greatest there were rumours that the United States Congress had voted the sum of $800,000 for the purpose of sending troops into the province of New Brunswick to take by force a large portion of the territory of that province which was claimed by the state of Maine. In the legislature of Nova Scotia Mr. Howe arose in his place and proposed a vote of $100,000 to be supplied by the Government of Nova Scotia for the purpose of assisting their compatriots in New Brunswick to repel that invasion. Not only that, but he asked that the militia forces of the province of Nova Scotia be sent to the assistance of their friends in the neighbouring province. When trouble arose in Upper Canada, trouble which was brought about by the same determined stand taken by Toryism against responsible government, the militia of Nova Scotia was again ordered out for the purpose of preserving law and order. A public meeting was held for the purpose of voting money to provide for the wives and children of those soldiers during their absence in Upper Canada. The occasion was taken then by Toryism in Nova Scotia to taunt the Hon. Joseph Howe with disloyalty, but he so successfully answered the charges made by his opponents, that they were scarcely ever repeated on public occasions thereafter. It is well known that at the time of the agitation on the part of a certain number of citizens of Montreal to bring about annexation with the United States, the agitators wrote Howe with the object of getting his assistance and co-operation. I have before me a letter written by Mr. Howe in answer to that request. He said:

> We gather from the 'scholastic production' to which your name is attached, that a convention, called by yourself, is to supersede the Parliament of Canada. This movement for dispensing with the services of the Legislature, it seems to us Nova Scotians, very naturally generated the idea that the building in which it sat was an incumbrance, and that its books and papers, fraught with occult sciences and varied superstition, were dangerous to the progress of society. Lord Elgin, who stood in the way of Mr. Protector Moffatt, was pelted as a matter of course; and as the old Parliament House was too small to hold the convention, it was very reasonable that the mob should exclaim: 'Burn it down, burn it down; why cumbereth it the ground?' The promulgation of your manifesto, and the occurence of subsequent events, take us somewhat by surprise in this benighted province; but nothing appears more natural than the sequence.
>
> As you have appealed to North Americans in your address, and as the mob of Montreal have favoured us with their interpretations of its contents, I am induced to inquire whether it be the true one, and whether pelting the Queen's representative, dispersing our parliaments and burning our books, are to be indispensible preliminaries in joining the British American League.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, he rebuked the men of the old Tory party in the city of Montreal who endeavoured to raise up a power in the Dominion of Canada against British authority and British institutions. I had hoped that the time had come when such taunts as have been thrown across the floor of this House by hon. gentlemen opposite would come to an end. In the course of this debate, probably in default of better arguments or more convincing reasons in support of the proposals before the House, we have had repeated examples of the exhibition to which we listened to-night. I desire to say, in reply to the hon. member for York, who criticised the Naval Service Act which was passed by the Government of the present leader of the Opposition, that it contains only such provisions as are contained in the Militia Act, which has been on the statute book since 1868. I have before me the clauses of the Naval Service Act and Militia Act, and the two important ones I will now read. Section 22 of the Naval Service Act reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council may place the naval forces, or any part thereof, on active service at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of an emergency.

In the Militia Act the clause reads as follows:

> The Governor in Council may place the militia, or any part thereof, in active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof—

The hon. member for York was not as careful as he might be to refrain from giving a wrong impression to this House when he made the criticisms I have referred to in respect to the Naval Service Act. If the clause which I read from the Naval Service Act indicates that the naval service contemplated by the late Liberal Government was a separatist navy, then the Militia of which the hon. and gallant member, the Minister of Militia is at the head at the present moment, is a separatist militia, and it is time that the ultra-loyalists on the other side of the House amended the Militia Act to remove the stigma which the hon. member for York endeavoured to place upon it this evening.

The agitation for responsible government in the province of Nova Scotia was, as I said a moment ago, opposed not only by Toryism in the province of Nova Scotia, but by Toryism in Great Britain. I have before me a portion of a despatch sent by the Duke of Wellington, then Premier of England. In it he said:

> Local responsible Government and the sovereignty of Great Britain are absolutely incompatible.

How familiar this paragraph reads in view of the statements, made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that a Canadian Naval Service is incompatable with loyalty to Great Britain. Further on, in reply to the British colonists' memorial sent from Nova Scotia in 1837, the despatch reads as follows:

> The responsibility of the executive in a colony to the assembly as the executive in England is to the Commons is inadmissible.

We have there the principle upon which Toryism endeavoured to govern the colonies of the Empire fifty years ago, and I regret to say that the principle dies hard, inasmuch as we have living examples of it here in this year of Grace, 1913.

There has been an agitation going on in Great Britain for the last one hundred years in favour of Home Rule for Ireland. I think I am justified in making reference to that inasmuch as during all that period the whole forces of Toryism in Great Britain has been arrayed against that very reasonable movement on the part of the inhabitants of that important section of the British Isles. They fought that persistently; they fought it from one election to another; it has been fought and resisted on every platform in England upon which a Tory or a Unionist found a footing. It has been fought not only by Toryism garbed in its proper clothing, but in certain quarters by Toryism masquerading in the garb of Liberalism. I am glad to think that that agitation has come to a happy conclusion. For one hundred years the people of Ireland fought for self-government, but at present——

Mr. SPEAKER: May I point out to the hon. member that I scarcely see the connection between that subject and the one before the House.

Mr. KYTE: I am speaking of autonomy and local self-government, in reply to the argument of my hon. friend from York that the Liberal party in Canada are separatists. It has also been stated that those who have agitated for Home Rule for Ireland were separatists, that they would set up an independent colony, and use their Parliament for the purpose of promoting legislation inimical to the best interests of Great Britain and of the Empire. That agitation received its final check, I believe, in the election which took place a few weeks ago in the old city of Derry in the province of Ulster. I think we have reason to assume that the agitation has come to an end, and that Home Rule will be brought about by the people of Great Britain, by those who have learned from history that agitation for responsible government does not mean agitation in support of the enemies of the Empire.

I do not propose to-night to go over the whole ground which has been covered in previous debates by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. The statement made by the right hon. the Premier in bringing down his resolution that Canada cannot, for the next twenty-five years or fifty years, hope to engage in ship-building, is a statement which should not go unchallenged and, even at the risk of repeating what has been said over and over again, I think it is the duty of every loyal representative of the people in Canada to protest against it as being entirely unawarranted by the facts. I have before me an article taken from the Canadian Mining Journal, a non-partisan and impartial publication and which, by the way, is edited by Mr. J. C. Murray, a former resident of the city of Halifax. This paper states that 'it is convinced that the Premier erred,' and it proceeds to give its reasons for its conviction. It points out that within the past two decades Canada has built up 'a strong, modern, and well-organized iron and steel industry.' The article goes on:

> In Nova Scotia the Dominion Steel Corporation has an enormous plant. The Nova Scotia Steel and Coal Company possesses at Trenton, near New Glasgow, a steel forging plant that represent the last word in modern practice. Raw material there is in plenty. Labour is obtainable as needed. The splendid harbours of Sydney and Halifax are commodious enough for any purpose.
>
> On the Pacific coast, whilst the necessary industries have not been established, there are abundant sources of fuel, flux and ore. In short, Canada possesses every natural facility for establishing ship-building industries on any desired scale. As for the length of time in which such industries could be established, it is our opinion that, with suitable direction, not more than five, or at most, ten years would be consumed in preliminary work. There is no hidden mystery in ship-building. English and Scotch engineers could be engaged to direct the work. The fact that for some years the cost of construction would be higher here than in Great Britain is of no importance whatsoever. The gain to Canada would be immeasurably greater than any added expenditure in building. Employment would be given to thousands of men, new communities would spring up, the maritime provinces would be incalculably benefited, and the whole industrial life of the nation would be strengthened.

I think that the men who take that patriotic stand on the question of ship-building in Canada are entitled to a good deal more credit, and they appear in a very much better light as patriots and true Canadians, than hon. gentlemen opposite who re-echo the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister to the effect that Canadians are not capable of doing that which has been done successfully by some of the smallest nations under the sun.

The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), referred with great feeling to the Canadians whose valour on the field of battle under the British flag contributed to the glory and triumph of British arms. Coming as I do from the province of Nova Scotia, the mere mention of those names thrilled me with pride because, for the most part, they were names of Nova Scotians whose memories are still kept green by memorials erected in their honour by their admiring fellow-citizens, and whose deeds of heroism are each year made the subject of inspiring addresses calculated to rouse the emulation of the youth of the province. I have no warrant to speak for the province of Ontario but I desire to assure the hon. member for East Hasting that the spirit of courage and patriotism of which he spoke still lives in Nova Scotia. Yet, if the policy of contributing empty and unmanned dreadnoughts to Great Britain is to be the policy of the Government of Canada, I fear that that spirit lives in vain.

Nova Scotia, early in its history, took a foremost part as one of the leading ship-building sections of Canada. Fifty years ago, before steel and iron ships came into use, Nova Scotia had its fleet of sea-going merchantmen. There was scarcely a town, scarcely a village in the whole province that did not have its shipyard and there was no community where the men did not, by their industry and enterprise, show that they were thoroughly capable of giving practical application to the most progressive and advanced ideas with regard to industrial progress. We had thousands of tons of shipping, all of which were constructed in our own yards in Nova Scotia. Nova Scotians were able, not only to go to the forests, hew the timber, haul it to the shipyards and construct the ships, but, when these ships were constructed, they were able to man them and to sail them to foreign parts the world over. There was a time when the flag of the Nova Scotian merchantman was as well known in the ports of Calcutta, Yokohama and Hong Kong as in the ports of Boston and New York. But, that industry has declined. It declined owing to the fact that steel ships have taken the place of wooden ships and as there is no place in Nova Scotia and no place in Canada at present capable of building these steel ships, the ship-building industry has gone down and the ships of other nations are doing the carrying that the ships of Nova Scotia did thirty or forty years ago. The people of Nova Scotia, in common with all the people in the maritime provinces, when they found that it was part of the policy of the late Government to establish a Canadian navy believe that it would mean the revival of that great industry in the maritime provinces. I know that they support the naval policy of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition and that they enthusiastically support it owing to their desire to see a revival of the ship-building business and the carrying trade upon the high seas. I regret and the people of Nova Scotia regret, that the substitute policy of the right hon. leader of the Government is not calculated to carry out the desires and aspirations of the people there with respect to a revival of ship-building in the maritime provinces.

It has been contended by hon. gentlemen opposite that if we had a Canadian navy, men could not be found who would be willing to give their services to man the ships. It has been stated that during the last three years recruiting was carried on so unsuccessfully that the necessary complement of men and officers required for the Niobe and Rainbow was not obtained. That criticism has been replied to several times by hon. gentlemen speaking upon this side of the House, but I desire to place once more upon record the fact that in 1911 hon. gentlemen who now occupy the Government benches were opposed to the principle of a Canadian navy. They gave it to be understood that if their party came into power they would do away with the iniquitous Naval Service Act and abolish all idea of having a Canadian Navy. They came into power and, while they have not carried out too many of their promises, they carried out that promise to the letter. They have so bedevilled the service that recruiting was impossible with the result that officers and men could not be found in sufficient numbers to supply the positions aboard these ships.

Mr. SMITH (South Ontario): Have they been found yet?

Mr. KYTE: They would be found if anybody would go and look for them, but they have not been sought for and therefore they have not been found. The aspirations and ambition of Canadians to take part in the naval service has found expression through enlistment in the naval services of other countries when they had no opportunity of taking part in the naval service of Canada. I have before me a statement of the number of Canadians who are employed in the Navy Department of the United States, which shows that during the past five years the following number of persons, born in Canada and residing in Canada at the time of enlistment, joined the navy of the United States:

1908, 228 born and 26 residing in Canada; 1909, 256 born and 75 residing; 1910, 196 born and 39 residing; 1911, 190 born and 50 residing; 1912, 165 born and 44 residing.

One thousand Canadian-born youths, and 234 persons actually residing in Canada, have enlisted in the United States navy during the last five years. If the disposition of Canadians towards naval service is so strong that they are leaving their own country and going to another country to take service in its navy, what could we expect if we had a navy of our own? Instead of 234 Canadian-born youths enlisting in five years, not only the one thousand, that represent the native-born Canadians who joined the American navy, would enlist in ours, but double and treble that number would do so within that period. I think there is no warrant for the assumption made by hon. gentlemen that men cannot be found to take part in the naval service of this country. If Canada were to establish a navy of its own, I am sure it would be a navy which would have conditions and attractions for our young Canadians quite as good as the attractions which the American navy has for them. I conclude from the figures which I have just read that the statement made that no Canadians could be found to man a Canadian navy is utterly without foundation and without justification. While the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) and other hon. gentlemen who have spoken in this debate have made it perfectly clear that they are opposed to a Canadian navy at the present time; they have also made it absolutely clear that they are equally opposed to a Canadian navy for all time to come. It was suggested by the right hon. the First Minister, when he proposed his resolution to the House, that this was not a permanent policy, that the policy involved in this Bill was only a temporary makeshift, and that hereafter a permanent policy would be established. The right hon. gentleman, while not saying it in so many words, gave the House to understand that later on he would formulate a policy in which the principle of a Canadian navy would be involved and which would be carried out in accordance with the policy of the late Government to establish a Canadian navy. After having heard one hon. gentleman opposite after another declaim against a Canadian navy, that is a separatist navy, there is not much ground for assuming that the intimation made by the right hon. the First Minister, but not put in so many words, will be carried out in the near future. There seems to be a difference of opinion in regard to this question in the minds of Conservatives themselves. Hon. gentlemen occupying seats on the Government benches have made it perfectly clear that there is to be no Canadian navy, because, if they are consistent, if a Canadian navy means a separatist navy, in order to be consistent—because, of course, they are all loyal—there must be no Canadian navy in the future. I have a statement here made by Mayor Hocken of the city of Toronto a few weeks ago in which he deals with the question of a Canadian navy. In ultra loyal Toronto, people are independent enough to think for themselves and to come to a conclusion of their own as to what is the best policy for Canada to pursue in respect of the naval defence of the Empire:

Mayor Hocken told the members of the Centre and South Toronto Conservative club last night that Premier Borden's navy proposals will be found, when all has been announced, to be of a most sweeping nature. The great superdreadnoughts which he will have Canada contribute to the Empire's defence will be built in this country, of Canadian materials, by Canadian labour and manned by Canadians.

The right hon. the First Minister stated that that consummation could not be arrived at for twenty-five or fifty years; but the Mayor of Toronto is more hopeful for Canada; he has more confidence in the ability of Canada to keep pace with the other countries of the world in respect of industrial development, and he has no such idea as having to wait for twenty-five or fifty years for the building of those dreadnoughts. He goes on to say:

We have here in Canada the world's nickel suppply. Without it the highest type of dreadnoughts could not be built. But Canada does not prohibit the export of nickel. If Germany possessed the same, I believe she would keep it for herself in order to build up the greatest nickel industry in the world.

But Mayor Hocken felt that the question of building dreadnoughts in Canada was not a party question, and that he was justified in expressing his own conviction as to what he thought ought to be done and as to what he thought Canada was capable of doing in respect of steel shipbuilding.

I have a statement here from an address delivered by Earl Grey a few years ago in respect of the policy of having a Canadian navy. He said:

> It appeared to be the opinion of the Imperial Defence Conference in London that for Australia and Canada to contribute money for the building of dreadnoughts was merely a sop—not a policy. What was the message of England to those great colonies? While we keep a ring-fence around you, heavily taxed and overburdened as we are, we shall find the money to maintain the suppremacy of the seas while you grow strong and do your utmost to lay the foundation of a powerful navy, and then you will be in a position to rally to our assistance when the small population of England shall have found the burden of maintaining the great fleet too heavy to be borne.

The policy of the right hon. gentleman to contribute money to the Government of Great Britain with which to build dreadnoughts is described by Lord Grey as a sop, not a policy. He puts himself most emphatically on record as being in favour of a Canadian navy, because that would give permanent and effective support to the naval defence of the British Empire.

The hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), in his argument yesterday evening, stated that one of the reasons why Canada should contribute this amount of money to assist Great Britain to keep up her supremacy of the sea, was because England was poor, the labouring classes were poor that small wages were paid to them so that a penny added to the taxes of the labouring classes of England would make the burden already borne very much greater than that which they had any right to bear. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, during the progress of the debate on the resolution, went into figures to show that the statements made with respect to the poverty of England is not justified by the facts. I am not going into another argument to show that; but simply refer hon. members to the replies made to the argument by hon. gentlemen who have already spoken. In the next breath the hon. member for East Hastings stated that England had done so much for Canada in the way of giving money to build her railways, to build her canals, that we owed a debt, that we owed to her an obligation, which was going to be liquidated by the payment of $35,000,000 into the British Exchequer. It is a fact that £400,000,000 of English money is invested in Canada at the present time; but when hon. gentlemen speak of that money as having been given by Great Britain to Canada to build her railways and canals and to carry on her other great enterprises, they are making a statement which of course will not be accepted by hon. gentlemen who know that the hard-fisted money lenders of Great Britain do not give out their money for nothing. It is not for the purpose of giving assistance to Canada, but it is because they find a more profitable investment in Canada than they can find elsewhere. There is a vast sum of English money invested in the Canadian Pacific railway. I need scarcely remind you that the Canadian Pacific railway is a most prosperous institution, and at the present time is paying ten per cent dividends. Therefore, the British capitalist who has invested money in that railway is not only getting a larger dividend out of it than he could hope to get from any other investment, but in addition to his regular ten per cent on the capital investment, he gets frequent slices of the juicy melons which are cut up and distributed from time to time by the directors of the company.

The question of the necessity of this payment to the British Admiralty need not be argued again. The statement has been made over and over again that when the right hon. Prime Minister went to the British Admiralty last year he went there with a cut and dried proposition to contribute $35,000,000 towards the defence of the Empire, and he simply asked what form that contribution ought to take. The suggestion came to him that if he had $35,000,000 to give to the British Admiralty, it had better be in the construction of vessels. The real opinion of the Admiralty as to how the naval forces of the Empire could best be strengthened can be seen in the speech delivered by Mr. Churchill on the 16th of May, 1912. He said:

> We shall soon receive representatives of the new Canadian Administration who are coming over to consult the Government and the Admiralty upon the course and the policy which should be adopted for the future. If the main naval developments of the last ten years have been concentration of British fleets in decisive theatres, it is not unlikely that the main naval developments of the next ten years will be the growth of effective naval forces in the great dominions overseas. Then we shall be able to make a true division of labour between the Mother Country and the daughter states, which is we shall maintain sea supremacy against all comers at decisive points, and they shall guard and control all the rest of the Empire.

It is therefore idle for hon. gentlemen opposite to say that the policy of the right hon. leader of the Opposition with respect to the Canadian navy is a separatist policy. I quite understand why hon. gentlemen opposite, have not the very highest regard for certain principles which are carried out by the present Government in Great Britain. I can quite understand that hon.

gentlemen opposite would feel a little more comfortable, a little more warmly towards that Government if it were composed of Unionists instead of Liberals. Nevertheless the Liberal party is in power in England. And even its most outspoken opponents, will not say that the Government of the Right Hon. Mr. Asquith is possessed of any disloyalty in regard to the manner in which their obligations to the Empire are to be carried out. If you follow the trend of the discussions in Great Britain as reflected in the press of both parties, one thing seems to be absolutely clear, and that is that the people of Great Britain have confidence in the ability of the present Government to carry on the affairs of the country in a manner consistent with its obligations to protect the country from every foe on land or sea. Therefore when the Right Hon. Winston Churchill states that he believes that the true plan is for the forces of Great Britain to protect the heart of the empire and the navies of the colonies to protect their own shores and adjacent waters, he is stating a policy which receives the overwhelming approval of the electors of Great Britain.

I have here a statement which was made by the German Ambassador in October last, expressing his conviction with regard to the attitude of the German Empire towards Great Britain:

We do not cherish the slightest desire or intention of disputing Great Britain's mastery of the seas, said Prince Lichwonsky. A supreme fleet is, as the Britons claim, a life and death question with them. They are supreme now and no responsible person in Germany dreams of disturbing that pre-eminence, but it must not be forgotten that a powerful fleet is also a vital necessity for us. England must not read hostility into the fact when we now and then lay down a dreadnought. Anglo-German relations are beset with difficulties, but they also offer ample opportunities for an agreement.

Since then, a very significant statement was made by the minister in charge of German naval affairs in the German parliament as well as by the Finance Minister, to the effect that they are coming to the conclusion that the time has come to call a halt in the building of dreadnoughts and in the increased armament which Germany has been carrying on for the last ten or fifteen years. There is every expectation that the statements made by these two responsible ministers will be carried out by a further agreement between the governments of these two countries, Germany and Great Britain, which will do away with any future competition as regards naval supremacy.

I have here a statement made by a gentleman who is high in the councils of the Conservative party, and I purpose reading it, to show that the great Conservative party are not a unit as to what ought to be done in the interest of the Empire in regard to naval defence. It is a letter written by Mr. C. H. Cahan, K. C. of Montreal. Mr. Cahan was for years a very prominent citizen of the province of Nova Scotia. He is a native of that province and has enjoyed high political honours at the hands of his party friends there. For four years he was leader of the Conservative opposition in the legislature of Nova Scotia, and no person will accuse him of desire to give comfort to the Liberal party of this country when he takes a stand hostile to the avowed policy of the party which he usually supports. Writing to the Montreal Gazette, he says:

A careful examination of the reports of recent debates in the English Houses of Parliament will furnish convincing evidence that the members of the present British Government and their expert advisers of the Admiralty are clearly of opinion that the British navy is still supreme upon the seas and competent for all political or other exigencies which can at present reasonably be foreseen. If a majority of the people of Great Britain believed otherwise, it would have been impossible for the Asquith Government to have lived through the recent session; while, as a matter of fact, no effective efforts were made by the opposition to challenge the Government's policy with respect to naval developments.

The 'German scare,' which has been somewhat artificially and altogether adroitly created in Canada, finds meagre, if any, support in the official declarations of responsible English ministers of the Crown.

On July 10, Sir Edward Grey, foreign secretary, in a lengthy statement to the House of Commons regarding England's foreign relations, said:

'Our relations with the German Government at the present moment are excellent. We are perfectly frank with each other about all questions of mutual interest, and I believe that when questions come up, whether they be, for instance, in connection with our respective interests in South Africa, or whether they be in connection eventually with the Bagdad railway, both governments are convinced that their mutual interests can be perfectly reconciled.'

Speaking in the Commons on July 25 ultimo, on Imperial defence, Mr. Asquith, Prime Minister, declared:

'Our relations with the great German Empire are, I am glad to say, at this moment—and I feel sure are likely to remain—relations of amity and goodwill. My noble friend, Lord Haldane, the present Lord Chancellor, paid a visit to Berlin early in the year. He entered upon conversations and an interchange of views there which have been continued since in a spirit of perfect frankness and friendship, both on one side or the other, and in which I am glad to say we now have the advantage of participation of a very distinguished diplomatist in the person of the German ambassador.'

Mr. Bonar Law, leader of the opposition, following Mr. Asquith, said:

'I am quite sure that if this country really believed that there was danger they would refuse no possible sacrifice which the Government could ask. But in spite of all that has been said, does the country, do the House of Commons, do any of us really believe that there is danger and vital danger? I confess that I have the greatest difficulty in believing it myself—I confess it.'

It is true that Mr. Bonar Law proceeded to argue that 'this country has never been in a position of greater peril,' but as England has never really been in peril, his expression may have meant less than would at first appear. It is sufficient for my present purpose, to note that no member on the ministerial benches appeared to give the slightest credence to Mr. Bonar Law's suggestions of peril, and that even he practically admitted that the country did not really believe such suggestions well founded. Perhaps the best evidence of the confidence of England is that in recent electoral contests in that country the alleged 'German menace' and the naval question generally have scarcely been referred to by the respective candidates.

The reason why the English electors are not convinced that there is a serious peril now imminent is doubtless due to their belief in the truth of the statements of responsible members of the Government, who are or should be thoroughly informed of the facts.

On July 2, on the eve of the arrival of the Canadian ministers in London, a debate occurred in the House of Lords upon the naval position in the Mediterranean, when, speaking officially on behalf of the Government, Lord Crewe said:

'So far as our existing position in any part of the world is concerned we are not afraid to declare that we consider the security of the country is achieved.'

And, proceeding to explain the basis of this emphatic declaration, Lord Crewe added:

'Taking March 31 of this year, we find that we have 16 battleships and battle cruisers of the dreadnought type, as against 15 possessed by all the other powers in European waters. Next year we shall have 24 ships of this type as against 21 possessed by all the other naval powers in Europe. These battleships represent a distinct margin over the two-power standard.'

Possessing two dreadnoughts for each and every one owned by all European powers, the Englishman reads with a degree of complacency what he believes to be the exaggerated statements of a few uninformed politicians occupying the opposition benches.

The positive official declarations which I have quoted above categorically affirm:

1. That the political relations between Great Britain and Germany are excellent.

2. That, even if those relations were not relations of amity and goodwill, Great Britain enjoys 'enormously superior power' upon the North Sea; and moreover is, to use the words of Prime Minister Asquith, 'overwhelmingly superior in naval force against any combination which could reasonably be anticipated.'

3. That an increasing superiority of British naval strength is now assured till 1916.

4. That the British Government, in next year's naval estimates, will supply all the moneys that the British Admiralty think necessary to fully and adequately safeguard British interests.

5. That 'a great splash of a programme' is not only not necessary, but would help to bring about the particular evil which you wish to avoid.

6. That to make greater haste in construction must result in waste of public funds; and that even the British Government cannot conceive a condition of affairs for dealing with which 'the margin of time is not sufficient for our purpose.'

7. That, in fact, the British Government has the situation well in hand and 'there is no need whatever for panic or alarm.'

Such are the pronouncements of the highest officials of the Government and of the Admiralty of Great Britain. Is it any wonder that the people of Great Britain refuse to take alarm at the suggestion of politicians out of office, who are unable on the floors of Parliament to make good their querulous complaints? The people of Great Britain are confident that their Government has made, is making and will make adequate provisions to maintain British naval supremacy. That Government is exclusively responsible to the electors of Great Britain!

Only five years ago, the Prime Minster of England, Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman, declared at the Imperial Conference of 1907, that:

'The cost of naval defence, and the responsibility for the conduct of foreign affairs hang together.'

And so long as the British electorate is content with their Government's conduct of foreign affairs, and with the ample provision made by their Government for their naval defence, why should Canadians attempt, by free gifts of their public funds, to express want of confidence in the British Government, which is not responsible to us, or seek to make up an alleged deficiency in British naval construction, when the British Government and their experts of the Admiralty so positively declare that no such deficiency really exists.

I do not desire to say one word against Canada contributing the full share to the naval defence of the British Empire on conditions consistent with equality of citizenship and proportionate participation by Canada in the control and conduct of Imperial affairs and international relations. But that is a problem to be worked out patiently and intelligently in the face of difficulties, due chiefly to the clearly disclosed desire of the executive of the British Government to retain, as firmly as ever, their own exclusive control.

On July 22nd Mr. Churchill stated in the House of Commons that 'Mr. Borden and his colleagues are now in possession of all the facts, and we have discussed with the utmost freedom and confidence the action which should be taken, and the way of surmounting the difficulties which obstruct such action.'

It is inconceivable that any of the facts made known to the Canadian ministers should be inconsistent with the official statements above quoted. If so, there is no reason for immoderate haste; and there is every reason why any contribution that Canada may undertake, while commensurate with our wealth and consistent with our self-respect, should also be made on a basis that shall ensure popular approval in this country and regular and continuous Canadian support for the maintenance of the naval supremacy of the Empire of which we form a part.

C. H. CAHAN.

Montreal, October 3, 1912.

Such is the statement by a leading Conservative on the question of emergency, and with reference to the policy propounded by the right hon. Prime Minister as contained in the Bill at present before the House. Hon. gentlemen will observe that Mr. Cahan is concerned about the manner in which this policy will be received by the people of Canada, as he says that such a policy should be made on a basis that shall insure popular approval in this country. That is the point that particularly concerns Mr. Cahan; he thinks in his heart that this policy will not receive the popular approval of the people of Canada, and the Government which he supports in all other respects will have a very much shorter tenure of office than he and other friends of the Conservative party would desire it to have.

The question as to the constitutionality of the Bill now before the House is involved in the amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). Hon. gentlemen on the other side who have spoken to that amendment seem to make little of the idea that an appeal should be made to the people for the purpose of receiving their determination as to whether or not the policy of the present Government should be carried out. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier, (Mr. Monk), late Minister of Public Works in the present Government, felt himself constrained to tender his resignation to the right hon. Prime Minister a few months ago, and I have before me a copy of the letter of resignation which that hon. gentleman wrote to the Prime Minister on the 18th October, 1912. It reads as follows:

My dear Premier: I regret to find that I cannot concur in the decision arrived at by the Cabinet yesterday to place, on behalf of Canada, an emergency contribution of thirty-five million dollars at the disposal of the British Government for naval purposes, with the sanction of Parliament, about to assemble, without giving the Canadian people an opportunity of expressing its approval of this important step before it is taken.

Such a concurrence would be at variance with my pledges and the Act proposed is of sufficient gravity to justify my insistence; it goes beyond the scope of the Constitutional Act of 1867.

Holding this view, as a member of your Cabinet, I feel it my duty to place my resignation in your hands.

Permit me to add that my decision has been reached with regret on account of my agreable relation at all times with yourself.

Yours sincerely,

F. D. MONK.

That, Mr. Speaker, discloses the attitude of the late Minister of Public Works towards the Government in respect to this important matter. In the course of the observations which I have made, I have endeavoured to put before the House evidence of other parties than those unfriendly to the present Government, and to show that the members of the Conservative party are not a unit upon this question, I have quoted the statements of Mr. Cahan and the letter of the ex-Minister of Public Works. I have here also a statement taken from Le Devoir, written by Mr. Bourassa a few weeks ago, which I propose to read to the House:

I have been told, and my source of information is as good, as the one behind the 'emergency,' that Mr. Borden found some difficulty in obtaining his 'emergency.' The document handed to him in London by Mr. Churchill was such a poor proof of the emergency that Mr. Borden asked for another. The one he was given the second time was so little terrifying that on his return to Canada Mr. Borden wired to London asking for a third one.

Everyone remembers the mysterious declaration of the Prime Minister at the banquet on the 21st September last—the framing up of the 'emergency' plea, was evidently troubling Mr. Borden's mind.

The third document reached him at last, and Mr. Borden kept it in his pocket until the meeting of the Cabinet council, which fixed the direction to be given to the ministerial policy.

But even then, that third document, which had been obtained after so many efforts, was not so convincing that it could prevent Mr. Monk from declaring after his resignation that, even if the emergency were 'more imperative than stated,' the Government could take all the necessary time to consult the people, as Messrs. Nantel, Pelletier, Coderre and Mr. Monk, himself, had promised on their honour to do.

All the ministers themselves have so small a belief in the emergency—with the exception of Mr. Nantel, who dreams every night of Germans, that Mr. Foster, being disgusted with that timid attitude, courageously proclaimed that the emergency plea was false and that the Ministry had adopted that policy in order to respond to the aspirations and needs of the jingoist element of the Cabinet.

The article does not disclose any information that was not known to the House some two weeks ago. At a very early period in the debate on this resolution it was conclusively proved from the Admiralty memorandum itself that there was a certain amount of pressure brought to bear upon the Admiralty authorities in England to get even such a lame and weak statement as the Prime Minister brought down to this House, but we have here some interesting information. It is within the memory of every hon. gentleman that a very close alliance existed between Mr. Monk, Mr. Bourassa and the right hon. the First Minister until a few months ago, and when Mr. Bourassa undertakes to state what happened with respect to the efforts made by the First Minister to obtain a document which would prove that some shadow of an emergency existed, we must assume that Mr. Bourassa knew pretty well what he was writing about.

I come now to the consideration of the question whether or not this subject is of sufficient gravity to ask for the opinion of the electorate of Canada before it is carried into effect. I have here the statement made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty), in the course of the debate upon the Naval Service Act of 1910. It will be remembered that the present Minister of Justice took a leading part in that debate, from a legal point of view. He took the ground on that occasion that the Naval Service Act constituted a fundamental change in our relations with the Mother Country and the rest of the Empire and brought about a position so grave and unprecedented that an appeal was altogether necessary under the constitution. He said:

Why, if a measure involving such consequences from a constitutional point of view, as well as every other, should be propounded in any other country, no one would ever dream of enacting it into law without allowing the people to pass on it. But in this Parliament we are asked to look upon it as an ordinary every day occurrence.

And in order to show that the proposal of the Government stood in the same position as regards its constitutional aspect as a cash contribution the hon. minister made the following statement:

I ask all reasonable people who understand the English language how it is possible to say that if the people of this country choose to give to the Mother Country of their own free will a specific sum of money they are paying tribute. If any gentleman can say 'yes' to that question, then I would ask him how he came to the conclusion that, if the people of this country contribute to the Mother Country for her use ships and men and money, this country is not paying tribute.

The Minister of Justice then proceeded to argue that the question of a cash contribution stood exactly in the same relation to the changed conditions existing in Canada as a contribution of ships for the naval defence of the Empire.

The Prime Minister, then leader of the Opposition, moved a resolution on that occasion in which he stated that this question ought not to be decided by Parliament until it was first submitted to the people. The argument of the Minister of Justice and the First Minister was clear that any contribution that was made for the naval defence of the Empire, whether in cash, as proposed by the present Bill, or in the form of a Canadian navy, as proposed by the late Government, constituted such a vital and fundamental change in our relations to the Mother Country and the rest of the Empire that the Government then in power was not justified in carrying out that policy without an appeal to the people.

The present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) also spoke in that debate as follows:

But, Sir, there is much more than this. It may happen that although an administration is not defeated in the House its strength may have waned; popular opinion may have so changed, especially as some question or other of grave national importance has arisen, as to render it advisable to ascertain the true feeling of the country and enable the people to express it by a renewal, or a refusal of their confidence in the Government. It is this phase of our contitutional practice which does in very truth make it essentially a government by the people, and it is the ignoring of this which stamps a government as autocratic and not democratic.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, as in 1784, the doctrine had been clearly laid down that a government must appeal to the people when defeated in the Commons. So, in 1806, the further practice was established that on matters of grave national import a government was justified in appealing to the country, though no defeat of their policy had been sustained in the House. I particularly commend this to the consideration of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, for he prides himself on his love of democracy, and in his careful following of the practices of the mother of parliaments.

Well, Sir, as in 1806, so in 1910, there are those who think dissolution an abuse of the prerogative of the Crown by the ministers. My right hon. friend's former supporter, and latterly his bitter critic, Mr. Joseph Martin, denounces dissolution as absolutely unjustified. Lord Lansdowne points out that the Government has received no parliamentary check, and that such a course was ousting parliament from a proper opportunity of discussing the question which the Governement had promised full discussion of when the Bill to which the veto-resolutions were only a preliminary, was introduced. I am not going into the question of whether that dissolution was or was not justified, and I am not foolish enough to think this House would care a rap as to my particular views, but I desire to emphasize the point that here is a Liberal Government in Great Britain going to the country after less than a year's tenure of office, having received no defeat in the House. Why? Confessedly to obtain the verdict of the country on a great question which, though partially discussed, was still a question on which they had received no clear mandate from the people.

Mr. Speaker, I have endeavoured to give a fair presentation of the facts connected with constitutional practice, and I now ask the Prime Minister in the light of these facts where he and his Government stand at the present time in the eyes of the people? He will not deny that so tremendous a step as the creation of a costly navy in this country is not a fit matter for the people to give their mandate on.

Thus we have the views of two leading members of the present Administration to the effect that a question as vital and far-reaching as that before the House ought not to be dealt with by the Government of this country until it had received its approval by the voice of the people of Canada. As to what the voice of the people of Canada may be it is not for me to say. The only thing I am concerned with at present is that according to the argument used by hon. gentlemen, now members of the Government, on former occasions under similar conditions, in relation to a similar question, an appeal should be made to the country and the arguments advanced on that occasion apply equally well to the Bill before the House.

The right hon. the First Minister may be content with the majority which he has behind him in this House. He may be content to think that that majority will see his Bill through, and that a majority in this House is a justification for saying that he has the country behind him in respect to this policy which we are discussing. I may say that years ago when the Duke of Newcastle, as Premier of England, desired to get the King's approval of a certain policy, and urged that Parliament was in favour of it, 'You have taught me,' replied the King, 'to look for the sense of the nation in other places than in the Houses of Parliament.' So I may say to the right hon. the First Minister that though Parliament may be behind him, though a majority may enable him to put this Bill through all its stages, the sense of the country may not be found in the Parliament of Canada, but among the common people who read and think for themselves on this important question. With respect to that there can be no two opinions. The amendement of the hon. member for Assiniboia is one which will receive the approval of members on this side of the House; I cannot hope that it will receive the approval of members on the other side of the House, but I am convinced that if this question were submitted to the people of Canada, after the election was over hon. gentlemen opposite will have a little more light as to what the real sentiment of Canada is on the question than they seem to have at the present moment.

Mr. J. A. M. ARMSTRONG (North York): I confess that I listened very carefully indeed to the remarks of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), who has just taken his seat, with a view to securing, if possible, some subject matter on which to speak. I regret to say that throughout his remarks, in my humble opinion, he has said very little worthy of the serious attention of hon. members of this House. It is true, and I am sorry to say it is true, that he took up a considerable portion of his speech in an endeavour to prove to this House that the policy of the Liberal party was not a separatist policy. He also referred in sneering terms, or rather he sneeringly used the word 'Toryism' on several occasions. Permit me to tell the hon. member for Richmond that if he will take the trouble to study the political history of Canada, he will find that the Toryism, at which he sneers, is engraven on the pages of Canadian history, and that the history of that Toryism will live years after the hon. member for Richmond has departed from public life.

I think I am safe in saying, Mr. Speaker, that the question now before the House has been discussed from its various view points pretty comprehensively, and I also think I am safe in saying that it is almost impossible for any member on either side of the House to give anything in the way of new argument. It is not my intention, or desire, therefore, to take up the time of the House at any length, but in view of the fact that I represent a Liberal constituency, a constituency which, for nearly forty years, consistently sent a representative of the Liberal party to this House, I feel I would be derelict in my duty, and recreant to the trust which was reposed in me by the people of the riding which I have the honour to represent, if I failed to take this opportunity of placing myself on record in regard to this great Imperial question that the Parliament of this country is now called upon to decide. I regret exceedingly that the right hon. the leader of the Opposition did not see fit to look upon this question from a non-partisan standpoint. I had hoped sincerely that in this instance we would have an opportunity of seeing the right hon. the leader of the Opposiiton standing shoulder to shoulder, and joining hands with the right hon. the leader of this Government, in sending a message across the seas that Liberals and Conservatives alike in Canada were determined to do their share in maintaining Britain's supremacy on the high seas. While I say I regret the fact, I must confess in all sincerity that I am not surprised, because I have endeavoured, in my own humble way, to follow the political record of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition for the past fifteen years, and I want to say to this House and to the country that, on every occasion the people of this country have been called upon to decide an important question, the right hon. the leader of the Opposition has done his utmost to stir up racial and religious cries throughout this land. I want to tell him that for fifteen long years he has preached the gospel of peace, and that throughout those fifteen long years he has been ready and willing, as appears by his stand on this question, to let loose the dogs of religious and racial war from one end of the country to the other.

Several hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House in the early days of the debate on this question were very vociferous in the charges which they hurled across the floor. I think the hon. member for South Wellington, was the first to cast down the gauntlet, and to call upon the Government to resign and go to the country. I do not blame the hon. member for South Wellington, who I regret is not in his place; I do not blame him a particle, for if I had been as close to the treasury benches as he apparently was, and had seen the fruits of office which were ready to drop into my hand taken away in the twinkling of an eye, I would have been ready to take any kind of chance to get back into the game. The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) also took up the challenge. In the event of an appeal to the people, I wonder if that valiant warrior would be good enough to inform the House where he would carry on the fight. Would he like to go to Brockville where the people know him best, or would he prefer to have the safe seat which he now occupies? The people would be much interested in knowing what this valiant warrior would do in a case of that kind. Now Sir, the whole argument so far as I can learn, is based on the question of whether or not there is an emergency. I think that hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me in saying that if in their opinion there was an emergeny, they would be only too willing to stand shoulder to shoulder with us upon this question. I think there is no divergence of opinion in that regard. The question is whether or not there is an emergency, and how is this House going to determine the question? What have we to work upon? In my opinion, the question comes down to this: Hon. gentlemen opposite say there is no emergency; on this side of the House we have the right hon. the leader of the Government coming here, and on his responsibility as leader of the House and leader of the Government, giving his pledge that, having conferred with the Lords of the Admiralty, there is an emergency or a need. Now I ask hon. gentlemen opposite. is it fair or reasonable to ask us on this side of the House to take the word of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition simply because he says, for the purposes of political expediency, that there is no emergency, and that therefore he will not support that policy? Too much, in my humble opinion has been said in regard to the German peril. I think that the hon. members on both sides of the House should look upon a question of this kind with a good deal of breadth of thought. I think it ill becomes any hon. member to rise in his place and to say anything that is calculated to wound the susceptibilities of any of the citizens of this Dominion who may be of different extraction from those who speak the Anglo-Saxon tongue and come from Anglo-Saxon parentage. This country is in a very peculiar position. Every year according to our statistics we find thousands upon thousands of new comers to our shores, representing every country under the sun. We have citizens from Germany, Spain, France, Russia and other countries. They are making good citizens and no good object can be served by endeavouring to play upon the chords of racial prejudices on a question of this kind. Germany, in so far as her naval armament is concerned, is doing exactly what she ought to do, if she is going to remain true to the traditions of her people. She has every right to increase her naval strength if she sees fit, just the same as we claim that we have a right to increase ours. We should look upon this question from a broad standpoint, we should not look upon it from the point of view as to whether or not Germany is going to attack England, but whether or not England is in a position to maintain her supremacy upon the high seas and her superiority over every other country in the world. If the question is looked at in the right way, if it is argued from the right standpoint, there is no reason for any person in this House or outside of it to say anything that is calculated to wound the susceptibilities of those who have sprung from a different origin than we of Anglo-Saxon parentage.

I want to say a word or two in regard to a phase of this question that has not been brought conspicuously to the attention of the House. There is a certain portion of the community which is opposed to a contribution in any way, shape or form. I have heard it stated on more than one occasion that the giving of money or the building of dreadnoughts is not conducive to the peace and harmony of the different nations of the world. In regard to that, I would simply like to say that in my humble opinion, human nature is the same as it was in the days of Adam, that nations will strive to the end of time, the law of might will prevail as long as man, time and place exist, and that the greatest factor for peace among the nations of the world to-day is the absolute preparedness for war. The maintenance by England of her position amongst the nations of the world and the power which she has wielded in years gone by have constituted a factor for peace and peace can only be preserved by placing her in a position to maintain her absolute supremacy upon the high seas.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have had a great deal to say with regard to manning the ships. They say that we should build them in Canada, maintain them and man them by Canadians. In case of war I have no doubt as to the action which Canadians would take. They have declared in the past that they are willing and ready to defend the honour and integrity of the Empire either on land or on sea and I am sure they will do it again. But, under the conditions existing to-day in this young country where wages are high in every walk of life, it is utterly impossible for us, in times of peace, to man dreadnoughts as proposed by the leader of the Opposition. The statement which I have made with regard to the manning of these ships I have verified by a reference to the number of recruits that were secured by the Naval Service Department during the last three or four years. I think it is quite evident, without my saying anything further with regard to it, that under the present existing conditions it would be impossible for Canadians to man two or three, or even one dreadnought. I would ask the House to look upon this question from a broad, national and imperial standpoint. There is no need for any divergence of opinion. Honourable gentlemen opposite should be willing to take the word of my right hon. friend the Prime Minister whose honesty and integrity are household words from sea to sea. When he comes down to this House and states that there is an emergency, lays on the table the information he has secured from the Lords of the Admiralty and tells us further that he has information which is of a confidential nature and which he dare not disclose to Parliament, it is the duty of this House and of every self-respecting citizen to take his word and give to Great Britain the $35,000,000 that they claim is necessary to secure for them supremacy upon the sea. I would ask the House, therefore, to look upon this question in the right way. I do not believe in introducing a question of this kind into the realm of party politics. That never did any good, it never will do any good and I urge upon the House to take such action on this question that, when the question is decided and Canada has done her part and has declared to the world that she is ready and willing to take her full share in the defence of the Empire, this House will have no reason to be ashamed of the stand that it has taken.

It is not necessary for me to say that, in my humble opinion, both sides of this House are equally loyal. I am not going to question the loyalty of anybody in the House. I take it for granted that hon. gentlemen opposite are actuated by the same hopes, aspirations, and desires in so far as Great Britain is concerned as I am myself, but I do say that in the course of some remarks that have been hurled across the floor of this House to our friends of French-Canadian birth hon. gentlemen opposite have displayed a very poor conception of what I might term the desire to promote peace and harmony throughout the land. They hurled taunt after taunt at our French-Canadian brethren and at ministers of French-Canadian birth. Why, I do not know, but as far as the French-Canadian citizen is concerned, while he may have different ideas from those which we entertain, and while he naturally has a love for the land from which his forefathers sprang I believe in my innermost heart that, should the call come to Canada from the Empire, the hon. gentlemen who have been slurred so often in this House would not be found to be the last to volunteer in defence of the Empire and the flag.

It has been said that this is the permanent policy of the Conservative party. If I for one moment thought that it was the policy of the Conservative party to institute a series of contributions, I would be one of the first to stand up in my place and vote against it. If I thought for one moment that this was the forerunner of other contributions I would raise my voice against it, and I would vote against it. But I defy hon. gentlemen opposite to show me one word, to show me one line, in any utterance of any hon. gentleman who occupies a seat on the treasury benches indicating that it is a forerunner of other contributions of the same kind. It is generally considered and believed throughout Canada that the statement that has been made by my right hon. friend the leader of the Government is absolutely correct, that it is necessary, in order to maintain Great Britain's supremacy on the high seas, that Canada shall at this juncture do something to take some of the burden off the shoulders of the British taxpayer. I appeal to this House in dealing with this question, to realize that we are not legislating only for to-day, that we are not legislating only for to-morrow, but that we are legislating for the benefit of the generations which are to come. I appeal to hon. gentlemen to look at this question not simply from the standpoint of the Liberal, or the standpoint of the Conservative, but to look at it from the standpoint of a Canadian citizen who is willing and eager to do his full share in the upbuilding of the British Empire, and in maintaining its supremacy upon the high seas. Judging from the utterances of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte), I think it is the intention of hon. gentlemen opposite to take up a great deal of the time of the House in speaking of questions of a rather irrelevant nature. In the first place he gave us a dilation on Irish Home Rule. He also spoke of other matters that I do not think have very much to do with the naval question under debate. As far as that is concerned, I presume it is within their rights to obstruct the proceedings of the House to the full extent that they see fit. At the same time I wish to tell them that there is a public opinion throughout this country that they cannot take any chances with. If they see fit at this juncture, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has informed the House and the country that there is an emergency, and that it is necessary for this House to do something and to do it right away, to use obstruction tactics, those tactics will receive their just reward when we go to the people at the next general election. The hon. member for Richmond also made some reference to carrying out of pre-election promises. In my humble opinion, it ill becomes hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House to make remarks about the carrying out of pre-election promises. Up to this date I know of no promise made by the right hon. the leader of the Government that has not been fulfilled. I think hon. gentlemen opposite will find, so far as the naval problem is concerned, that when we go to the people again, he will again fulfil the promise he made to the people prior to the last election, and he will submit to the people a policy that will meet in every way their approval.

It is not my intention to delay the House any longer in dealing with this question. I have taken the stand I will accept the word of the right hon. the leader of the Government and take it for granted there is an emergency. I am satisfied to take the word of an hon. gentleman who has so lately conferred with those who should know all about naval affairs in preference to the word of a man who has nothing to serve at present but political exigency. I am prepared to stand by the right hon. the Prime Minister in the proposal that he has placed before the House; I am prepared to stand by him, and I know that the majority of this House will do so. Even if hon. gentlemen opposite see fit to fight this matter to the bitter end, we eventually will send across the ocean a message from a certain portion at least of the people of the Dominion, that the majority of the Canadian people realize what they owe to the Mother Land, that they realize the privileges and the liberties which they have enjoyed under the British flag in the years gone by, and that for the sake of handing down to their children and their children's children those same rights and those same privileges, they will do what is now asked by the leader of the Government in order to retain the supremacy of that nation upon the high seas.

Mr. ARMSTRONG (N. York (O.)

Mr. J. J. HUGHES (Kings, P.E.I.): Mr. Speaker, it is admitted by everybody that no more important question, no question, fraught with more far-reaching consequences, has been before the Canadian Parliament and the Canadian people since Confederation than the one which we are now discussing in this House. It therefore behooves every man in the Dominion of Canada to give to the consideration of this question the best thought of which he is capable, in order that he may arrive at a correct decision upon it. It especially behooves the members of this House, who perhaps are in a better position to study this question than the ordinary man, to consider it carefully in order that they too may arrive at a correct decision upon it and in order that they may as far as possible guide public opinion along correct lines. I was therefore somewhat surprised to see, while the resolution was before the House, that so many hon. members supporting the Government declined and refused to discuss the question. I do not know whether they found it difficult to give reasons that would even satisfy themselves for the absolute change of attitude that the Conservative leaders and the Conservative party have taken upon this question within the last year or so.

In order that those, who may do me the honour to read the remarks that I make upon this subject, may have as clear a conception as I am capable of giving them, it will be necessary for me to go back to the time when this subject was introduced in this House in a concrete form and to touch at least upon the more salient points from that time down to the present. In the session of 1909, the Hon. Mr. Foster, now Minister of Trade and Commerce, put this resolution upon the Order Paper, which will be found on 'Hansard,' page 3484:

That in the opinion of this House, in view of her great and varied resources, of her geographical position and national environments, and of that spirit of self-help and self-respect which alone befits a strong and growing people, Canada should no longer delay in assuming her proper share of the responsibility and financial burden incident to the suitable protection of her exposed coast line and great seaports.

In support of that resolution, the hon. gentleman was said by those who heard him to have made the strongest, the most pregnant and the most convincing speech that he ever delivered either in this House or out of it. I have read that speech over carefully and I am bound to say that it is well worthy of the praise which has been given to it. It convinced me that the hon. gentleman had thoroughly studied his subject, that he thoroughly understood it in all its phases, and that at that moment he was giving expression to the honest opinions which he held as a Canadian, as a British subject and as a member of this House. In order that I may do the hon. gentleman no injustice, it will be necessary for me to quote an extract from that speech, because it is so much better than anything that I could say upon the subject. He discussed the question from every standpoint; he discussed it from the standpoint of a contribution, he discussed it from the standpoint of a Canadian navy, and he gave his opinion accordingly. Here is what he said:

The first and greatest objection which I have to a fixed money contribution is that it bears the aspect of hiring somebody else to do what we ourselves ought to do; as though a man, the father of a family, in lusty health and strength, should pay his neighbour something per month for looking after the welfare and safety of his home instead of doing that duty himself. That seems to me, when you work it out, to be a basic objection to this form of aid. It goes still further than that. Suppose you contribute this year your sum, and next year your equal sum, and thereafter year after year. After ten or twelve, or twenty, or thirty years, you will have paid out an immense amount of money. You will have been protected in the meantime; but in Canada itself there will be no roots struck, there will be no residue left, there will be no preparation of the soil, or beginning of the growth of the product of defence. Yet some time or other, no one can doubt that with resources and with a population constantly increasing, we must and will have in this country a naval force of our own for our coast and home defence.

The interest that we take in a contribution spent by another is not the interest that I desire for Canada. I want to see something grafted on the soil of Canada's nationhood, which takes root and grows and develops until it incites the spirit of defence in this country, leads to a participation in the defence, leads to that quick interest in it, its glories, its duties and its accomplished work, which is after all the one great thing that compensates a people for great expenditures either on land or on sea in the way of defence and of the maintenance of the rights of the country.

Again, it disjoins what has been joined together from the earliest days of the world's existence—commerce and the protection of commerce. After all, the basic idea of a naval force is the protection of the commerce of a country. A commerce side by side with its protector, and its protector side by side with the growing commerce of a country, flourish best together, and are the surest helpers to each other. That is the idea which is in my mind—that when we make our contributions in the way of a fixed sum and it goes from us, and we are not responsible for it, we have none of the inspiration arising from the growth and development of a system of future defence in our own country. We are deprived of the larger benefit ourselves, and in the future we do no greater service to the empire of which we form a part, in this matter of defence.

Then, again, I think this method ignores the necessities and the aspirations and the prospects of a great people such as the Canadian people are destined to become. We must have beginnings; these must at first be small; but some time, or other, as I have said, our country will have its naval force for the defence of this country if for nothing else.

The point with me is as to whether it is not the greater wisdom to sow the seed at once and cultivate its growth, as best we may, in our circumstances and with our resources, until at last we arrive at that stage of expansion which we have reached in other great lines of our country's progress.

Could anything be stronger? Could the case be put better or more explicitly? Yet we find to-day an entire reversal of opinion, an entire change of attitude on the part of these hon. gentlemen. And for what reason? I have listened carefully to the speeches delivered by hon. gentlemen on the other side, and I fail to find any justifiable reason given for the great change which has taken place. But that is not all. The Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then leading the Government, followed, and he declared that the Government of which he was the leader was prepared to consider this matter along the lines laid down at the Imperial conference in 1902, and establish a Canadian navy for the defence of our own coasts and commerce, and if need be in co-operation with the British navy in defence of the Empire. And the then leader of the Opposition, now leader of the Government (Mr. Borden) made this statement:

In so far as my right hon. friend the Prime Minister to-day outlined the lines of naval defence of this country, I am entirely at one with him. I am entirely of opinion, in the first place, that the proper line upon which we should proceed in that regard is the line of having a Canadian naval force of our own. I entirely believe in that. The other experiment has been tried as between Australia and the Mother Country and it has not worked satisfactorily in any respect. In Great Britain the contribution has perhaps been regarded as rather unsatisfactory. In Australia it failed, in the end, to meet with the approval of the people, for the reason that Great Britain felt constrained to ask Australia that the field of operations of the squadron should be extended to the China and Indian seas; and when the operation of that squadron was so extended, the Australians felt that the contribution which they had been making for some years past was not really being used to give that protection to Australia which her interests demanded. So that, the policy of Australia at the present time is to build up a flotilla of submarines and torpedo boats which, in case of war, would co-operate with the armed cruisers and battleships of the British navy. It was pointed out in discussing this question that Australia in providing a force of that kind would provide a force which it would be very difficult if not impossible for Great Britain to send across the seas, and that in thus protecting themselves they were providing the best possible force for the protection of the Empire. So, I am at one with the Prime Minister as far as this is concerned. I am at one with him in this respect also that I think an expenditure of money designed for that purpose ought, in the main at least, to be under the control of our own Parliament, and that by making an appropriation of that kind and attending to the defence of our own coasts, by co-operation and co-ordination with the Imperial naval forces, we would be rendering a real service in the defence of the Empire, and we would be doing our duty not only to Canada but to the Empire as a whole.

That was the statement of the right hon. gentleman on the 29th of March, 1909, in speaking on this question. Now, I say again, could language be stronger, and could the case be better put? And what has happened in the meantime that these men have changed their minds so absolutely? We know what has happened, everybody in this country who cares to know knows what has happened; but I will come to that a little later on. However, these were the statements made by these gentlemen when they were free to express the opinions that they honestly entertained. I suppose they had given the matter full consideration at that time; I suppose they understood what they were talking about. If they did not understand it then, what are we to think? If they were right then how can they be right now when they advocate a policy entirely at variance with what was advocated then? In accordance with the sentiments then expressed during that session, both parties came together and this resolution was framed and obtained the unanimous support of the members of this House, with the exception perhaps of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), who was absent when the vote was taken, and the member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup), who declared the other day that he did not vote for the resolution. The resolution passed this House after careful and mature consideration. I quote from 'Hansard' page 3564:

> This House fully recognizes the duty of the people of Canada, as they increase in numbers and wealth, to assume in larger measures the responsibilities of national defence.
>
> The House is of the opinion that under the present constitutional relations between the Mother Country and the self-governing dominions, the payment of regular and periodical contributions to the Imperial treasury for naval and military purposes would not, so far as Canada is concerned, be the most satisfactory solution of the question of defence.
>
> The House will cordially approve of any necessary expenditure designed to promote the speedy organization of a Canadian naval service in co-operation with and in close relation to the Imperial navy, along the lines suggested by the Admiralty at the last Imperial conference, and in full sympathy with the view that the naval supremacy of Britain is essential to the peace of the world.
>
> The House expresses its firm conviction that whenever the need arises the Canadian people will be found ready and willing to make any sacrifice that is required to give to the Imperial authorities the most loyal and hearty co-operation in every movement for the maintenance of the integrity and honour of the Empire.

And hon. gentlemen opposite say now that we should agree with them, and they invite us to take up the policy they now advocate. We wonder why they ever disagreed with us, we wonder what has happened in the meantime to make them entirely change their opinions. But that is not all. The right hon. gentleman now leader of the Government went to England during that summer, and in London, at a banquet on Dominion Day, he made a speech exactly along the lines of this resolution and in accordance with the statement he made in Parliament during the previous session. I will read from that speech, in which he was referring to the resolution which, practically speaking, had been unanimously adopted by this House. He said:

> The resolution in the form in which it was passed, while its terms might not upon their surface seem significant at the moment as the offer of one or two dreadnoughts would have been, laid down a permanent policy for the Dominion of Canada upon which both parties united, and which would serve a more practical purpose than any such offer of dreadnoughts.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Who made that statement?

Mr. HUGHES: The right hon. Prime Minister at the Dominion Day banquet in London in 1909. Mr. Speaker, I desire earnestly to come to a correct conclusion upon this question, but from the arguments made by this hon. gentleman, I am not yet convinced that the statements then made were incorrect, or that the policy then laid down would be an improper one for this country to adopt. The right hon. gentleman came back to Canada in the same year, and he made a speech before his constituents in the city of Halifax. These remarks, which, no doubt, were carefully considered and thought out, were made months after the discussion had taken place in Parliament, and the resolution passed. The report appears in the Halifax Herald of October 15, 1909, and the heading is: 'Mr. Borden Lifts the Question of National Defence above Petty Partisanship.' He is reported to have said:

> The House of Commons last session laid down a certain policy touching naval defence in which both political parties united. It may not have satisfied the aspirations of all Conservatives, but it seemed our bounden duty to place, if possible, above the limits of partisan strife a question so vital and far-reaching, and to attain the standard which has for many years governed both political parties in Great Britain with respect to foreign relations. How the present administration will work out the policy which was outlined by the resolution to which I have alluded, remains to be seen. One governing principle at least should control, namely, that out of our own materials, by our own labour, and by the instructed skill of our own people all necessary provision for our naval defence should be made so far as may be, reasonably possible. In this connection, may we not hope that there shall be given a stimulus and encouragement to the ship-building industry of Canada which has long been lacking.

Can it be possible that the same hon. gentleman, two or three years after making that statement in the city of Halifax, declared in effect that not for twenty-five or fifty years would we be able to have a ship building industry in this country, or be able to construct a navy of our own? I cannot understand what has brought about such a change, and I would be very glad indeed to know.

About this time, a certain gentleman—a strong Conservative—came to the conclusion that the leader of the Conservative party had made a political mistake in 1909 in uniting with the Liberals and passing that unanimous resolution. I have heard the statement made that a leading member of the Manitoba Government, now a minister in the present Administration, was strongly of that opinion, and that he influenced others to hold the same opinion, that influence being brought to bear at that time on the leader of the Conservative party. Some persons who desired that this question should remain out of party politics were afraid that sufficient pressure might be brought to bear upon the leader of the Government to cause him to change his mind, and depart from the ground on which he then stood. Amongst these gentlemen was, I think, Sir Charles Tupper. He wrote a letter to the right hon. the leader of the Government, from which I take this extract:

> All difficulty as to the question of autonomy is now removed, as it is fully recognized that the great outlying portions of the Empire are sister nations, and that means are adapted to secure uniformity in the naval forces of the Empire in the design and construction of the ships, and the training of the officers and men. They are also to be interchangeable and thus secure uniformity in every respect, so as to act as effective units with the British navy. Of course the Government of the day will be held accountable for the carrying out of the policy thus agreed upon in a thoroughly effective manner, but I cannot avoid thinking that a fearful responsibility will rest upon those who disturb or destroy the compact entered into on this vitally important question.

Have hon. gentlemen opposite incurred that fearful responsibility foreshadowed in the letter of Sir Charles Tupper? There can be but one opinion on the matter—and it is indeed, a fearful responsibility.

In the next session of Parliament, in accordance with the resolution passed in 1909, the right hon. the leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) on January 12, 1910, introduced Bill No. 95, respecting the Naval Service of Canada, the proposition being along the lines suggested in the resolution passed during the preceding session, and along the lines at present followed by the Liberal party. The right hon. Mr. Borden, now Prime Minister, in the statements which I am about to quote, was getting some distance away from the position he took the year previous, but not very far. Some pressure had evidently been brought to bear upon him in the meantime, but not sufficient to enable him to repudiate the statements he made the year before. This is the statement he made on the 12th of January, 1910, as it appears in 'Hansard' of that year, page 1746:

> It has been suggested that instead of the organization of a Canadian naval force, there should be a system of annual contributions from this country to the Mother Country, and I am free to admit that from the strategical point of view I would be inclined to agree with the view of the Admiralty that this would be the best way for the great self-governing dominions of the Empire to make their contributions. But, Sir, from a constitutional and political standpoint, I am opposed to it, for many reasons. In the first place I do not believe that it would endure. In the second place it would be a source of friction. It would become a bone of partisan contention. It would be subject to criticism as to the character and the amount of the contribution in both parliaments.

I suppose that meant the Parliament of Canada and the Parliament of the Mother Country, and that is just what has happened, just what has taken place.

> It would be subject to criticism as to the character and amount of contribution in both Parliaments. It would not be permanent or continuous, it would conduce, if anything could conduce, to severing the present connection between Canada and the Empire.

Sir, I am opposed to a contribution on the statement made by the man who is now Prime Minister of the country that it would conduce, if anything could conduce, to severing the present connection between Canada and the Empire. Do hon. gentlemen opposite fully realize the position they are taking when they are supporting a policy of which it has been said by the gentleman who leads the Conservative party, the right hon. the First Minister, that it would not be permanent or continuous. that it would conduce, if anything could conduce, to severing the present connection between Canada and the Empire? That is a serious statement and that is what we are up against. Something serious and important must have happened to make the Prime Minister of this country and the whole Conservative party change their attitude and their position of three years ago, what is it? Something happened. In the fall of 1910, I think in October or November, an election was held in Drummond-Arthabaska. After the Naval Bill had been introduced into the House by the Liberal Government an agitation sprang up in the province of Quebec, led by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk), Mr. Bourassa who formerly held a seat in this House, Mr. Lavergne, also a former member, the hon. the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Nantel) and other gentlemen from Quebec. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and the Liberal party were condemned in all the moods and tenses, all kinds of misrepresentations were indulged in and every endeavour was made to incite the people of the province of Quebec. They were told their sons would be taken from them by the machinations of Laurier and the British Government, and the children of Quebec would be drafted upon British ships of war and slaughtered in the wars of the Empire. The Conservatives were looking on, they put up no straight Conservative candidate in that election, but their sympathies were going out to the Nationalists, they were encouraging by every means in their power the Nationalist propaganda, and when a Monreal paper, just before the election, wired the Hon. Mr. Foster, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce, as to how the Conservatives should vote in that election in view of the campaign that was being waged, and the fact that the naval question was then under consideration and was the chief subject of discussion, his answer was:

Defeat Laurier by all means.

The British Empire might then go to Hades, anything might happen, the first consideration was party politics, defeat Laurier by all means, throw overboard the resolution which he had assisted in drafting and passing in 1909, throw over the compact entered into with the Liberal party to leave the navy out of party politics and that we should be a united country in whatever might be done. That was all thrown overboard in order to defeat Laurier by any means, fair or foul. When the result was known this telegram was sent by the chief whip of the Conservative party, George Taylor, and let me say that as, you Mr. Speaker, are the voice of this House so is the chief whip of the Liberal party the voice of that party, and the chief whip of the Conservative party is the voice of that party perhaps to a greater extent even than the leader of the party. This is what the chief whip wired to Mr. Monk:

Accept heartiest congratulations on your great fight and success.

That was what happened, and the result of that election and that coalition is what has caused the Prime Minister to change his mind—that unholy alliance entered into for an unholy purpose. And do these gentlemen think that we are going to follow them in that direction? It may satisfy them; apparently it does satisfy them. I do not know whether or not they are now fully satisfied, I do not know whether they wish that they never had entered into that alliance, probably they do wish it, but the alliance is there and it has been cemented by taking the men who were prominent in that campaign and election into this Government and into the Conservative party. That alliance, in my judgment, will and should crush the political life out of the Conservative party.

These are my reasons for supporting the policy of the Liberal party at the present time and opposing the policy of the Government. I have already said that the speeches delivered on various occasions in this House and outside of it have convinced me that the Conservative party at the inception of this question stood upon solid ground and that nothing has happened since that should induce them to change their minds. It has been stated that an emergency has since arisen and in order to meet that emergency we should send an immediate contribution to the Mother Country. We have not been given any reasons for considering that an emergency of that nature exists; we have been given reasons, in fact, for believing that no such emergency exists. Only a few days ago, the Hon. Mr. Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, speaking at Dundee in the presence of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, made this statement, and I suppose he would naturally know what he was talking about, he would naturally have the first and best information upon this subject. He said as reported in the Daily News and Leader of January 31, 1913:

When I have an opportunity of addressing the House of Commons in March, if I should be called upon to do so on the naval estimates of the year, I am confident I shall be able to show that the navy is not only strong, but is getting stronger actually and relatively, and that there is no danger whatever to that great position we have acquired and which we have set ourselves resolutely to maintain from being diminished or undermined by the progress of time, or by the changes in naval science.

Could anything be stronger than that; could anything be more to the point? Do we want any further proof that the Admiralty are in a position to fully safeguard the interests of the Empire, in the North sea, or in any other place at the present time? This policy of the Government, if adopted, disguise it as you may, is going to be the permanent policy of this country, because, Mr. Speaker, there can be only two policies, either contribution, or a Canadian navy. A few days ago when the Prime Minister introduced the resolution into this House, he made the statement that for the next twenty-five or fifty years, we could not have a Canadian navy, and surely for the next twenty-five or fifty years we are going to do something more than give this contribution at present proposed, if it is given. That is the surest possible proof that, in the mind of the present Prime Minister, and in the mind of his Government, whatever we do during the next twenty-five or thirty years must be along the line of contribution. And yet, only a few years ago, the Prime Minister of this country declared that that would conduce to the separation of Canada from the Mother Land, if anything could bring about separation.

Speaking upon this question yesterday, the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) made the statement that the people of Canada owe Great Britain an enormous debt of gratitude, which can only be discharged by a large sum of money. I have seen similar statements in the newspapers of this country, and a similar idea has been hinted at by other members, though not so strongly advanced as by the hon. member for East Hastings. Well, Sir, I do not subscribe to that statement or idea and I will give my reasons for not doing so. During the seventeenth, elghteenth and nineteenth centuries Great Britain obtained by discovery, colonization, and conquest, possessions in every part of the habitable globe. What was her object in obtaining these possessions? Her object was to extend her power and her trade, and these two objects have been abundantly realized. The overseas possessions that Great Britain has have been the greatest investment she ever made. She has no greater asset today, and has had no greater asset in the past, than the possessions overseas. If that be true, then where does the debt come in?

Let us examine this question a little more closely so far as Canada is concerned. During the eighteenth century, Great Britain and France were engaged in a titantic struggle for the mastery of North America. That struggle was ended on the Plains of Abraham in 1759, and by the result, Great Britain became possessed of the northern half of America, she having at that time the southern half. In addition she got 60,000 or 70,000 French-speaking people as her subjects. Have these people performed their duty as Canadian citizens and as British subjects from that time to this? Let history give the answer. They have increased and multiplied, they have cleared and cultivated their fields, they have built their towns and cities, they have opened their harbours, they have traded with Great Britain, the chief object she had in view in the great conquest; they have paid their debts. When confronted by the stern realities of war, and inducements were held out to them to join the Americans in the American revolution, they were true to their allegiance, and when they had to take up arms to defend their country in the war of 1812, they showed that they were worthy of the race from which they sprang in defence of the British Empire and the British flag. In what respect have those people not discharged their duty as Canadian citizens and British subjects, and where, so far as they are concerned, is there any great obligation? So far as Ontario is concerned, that province was largely peopled with emigrants from the British Islands and with United Empire Loyalists, men who gave up their homes and their property, and everything that is usually held dear, rather than foreswear their allegiance or give up the Sovereign whom they looked upon as their lawful King. They braved all the hardships of pioneer life in a new country. They too have performed their duty surely; they too have cleared and cultivated the land, built their towns and cities, opened their harbours; they have traded with the Old Country and when called upon to defend Canada in the war of 1812 to 1814, during the first campaign at all events, almost alone and unaided, they hurled back the American invaders from Canadian soil and sealed their fidelity with their blood. Have these people not performed their duties? Where is the duty that they owe? In what way were their services rewarded? At that time the old Tory party in Great Britain and the Tory party in Canada were under the impression that Canadians were not fit for the highest duties of citizenship, that they were not qualified to govern themselves, and so a number of impecunious lordlings were sent out from the Old Country to fill the public offices and positions of emolument. They looked down with scorn and disdain upon the ordinary people of the country, the people who paid the bills, and we were governed from Downing Street; and when the people asked for the British privilege of governing themselves, for Home Rule, it was denied to them; their petitions were turned down, their remonstrances were ignored, and civil war ensued before the British Government gave the Canadian people, the people of Upper and Lower Canada, the ordinary privileges of citizenship. The American revolution taught Great Britain how to govern the colonies. It was in that way that the people of Upper and Lower Canada obtained the ordinary rights of citizens. I am afraid that the debt, if there be a debt, is on the other side of the ledger. But, in a matter of this kind as between Great Britain and Canada, we are brothers in the same family, we are subjects of the same country and there should be no talk of a debt on one side or the other. If we do our duty as citizens of Canada and as British subjects in this part of the Empire, we do our whole duty, in my opinion, and there is no debt upon either side.

The conditions that prevailed in Upper and Lower Canada also prevailed in the maritime provinces. The maritime provinces were largely peopled by immigrants from the British islands, by some United Empire Loyalists and by some descendants of France. They were denied the ordinary rights of citizens. It was only after long years of agitation that anything like the privileges we now enjoy were obtained. That was the condition in the maritime provinces generally, but in regard to Prince Edward Island we had all these difficulties to contend with and some additional ones that were peculiarly our own. That province was almost entirely peopled by immigrants from Scotland and Ireland and a few from England, men who had been driven out of the Old Country by the cruel, oppressive and tyrannical landlord system that prevailed at that time and still prevails to some extent. They came to America with very little except their stout hearts and strong arms and their desire to have a home which they could call their own in some part of the world. But the landlord system from which they were obliged to flee followed them to the new country because the Crown of Great Britain was generous enough to give to a few men in England in one day the entire proprietary rights of the province. When the immigrants who had come out had cleared their holdings and built their modest homes and when, for some reason or other through a failure of crops or sickness they were unable to pay their rent, the sheriff came and evicted them, put them out on the roadside and they had to depend upon the charity of their neighbours. That went on for years. At length we got responsible government. Then we began to send petitions to the Old Country praying for the privilege of buying the land from the people, who had never seen it, who hardly knew what part of the world it was in and who had not spent one penny to improve it. These petitions were turned down as fast as they were sent. Delegation after delegation went to the foot of the Throne to see if any redress could be obtained. The delegations were not heard. Act after Act was passed by the local Legislature in the effort to compel the landlords to sell out for some reasonable and equitable consideration, but these Acts were vetoed and it was not until we entered Confederation when the assistance of the Dominion Government was obtained that the people of Prince Edward Island were allowed the privilege of buying out the land they had made valuable by improvement. Thus they came to own their own holdings. They surely have been under no extraordinary debt of gratitude to the Mother Country, the Crown and the ruling classes of Great Britain. Under all these circumstances the people of Canada recognized that the Crown of Great Britain was not so much at fault as the advisors of the Crown. The old Tory party in Great Britain, as in Canada, seemed to be under the impression that the ordinary people of the country were not qualified for the higher duties of citizenship just as they say now we are not qualified for the first duty of citizenship, the duty of defending ourselves.

Look at this question as you may, take it in all its bearings, can any man who judges it dispassionately and apart from party prejudice, honestly make up his mind to support the proposition that the Government now has before the House? Some few years ago, when the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) introduced a resolution saying that the people should be consulted before any policy of this kind should be adopted, every member on the Conservative side of the House voted for that resolution. They are now voting against a similar resolution. It appears strange. I do not know what has happened in the meantime except what I have already pointed out—the alliance that was made with the Nationalist party by which these gentlemen are controlled and bound. They are not free to follow their better instincts, to follow the policy which they advocated so strongly two or three years ago. They have had to change their attitude. But will the people approve of that change? We think not. Therefore, if the Government think they are right, if they think that the people are behind them, why not accept the amendment that has been moved by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff); why not give the people a chance to say what they think of this policy and then abide by the decision? The Liberals are willing to abide by it, the Liberals are willing to take the voice of the country upon it. It is the proper constitutional way of deciding this question since it has been thrown into the arena of party politics through no fault of the Liberal party. As has been pointed out by my hon. friend from South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), it will only take three or four months to decide the question in that way and in the meantime the British Empire will not go to pieces. There is no emergency in Great Britain. The emergency is on the Treasury benches. The emergency has been created on account of the alliance with the Nationalists of Quebec. It is for these reasons that I will vote against the Bill that is now before the House, and for the amendment, and I think I will be amply justified in doing so.

On motion of Mr. Thoburn, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Borden, House adjourned at 11.09 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, February 20, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE—Mr. R. C. MILLER AT BAR OF HOUSE.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I would move, seconded by Mr. Meighen:

That R. C. Miller, now in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, be brought before the Bar of this House to answer questions which, on the 14th of February instant, he did refuse to answer on his examination before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, and which he did also refuse to answer before the Bar of this House on Tuesday, the 18th instant.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Sergeant-at-Arms: Mr. Speaker, the witness R. C. Miller, who has been in my custody since Tuesday, February 18, is now in attendance at the door of this Honourable House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Bring Mr. R. C. Miller in.

Mr. Miller came before the Bar.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I would move that the following question be put to Mr. R. C. Miller, who is at the Bar of this House:

To whom did you pay the sum of $41,026 for the purpose of securing contracts from the Government of the Dominion of Canada amounting to $117,000 or thereabouts, between the month of June, 1907, until you ceased to be president of the Diamond Light and Heating Company, Limited, in June, 1911, as alleged by you on your examination before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts on Friday, the 14th of February, 1913?

Mr. SPEAKER: I might say, before putting this motion, that, if it is desired to take the evidence of the witness under oath, I am not aware that he has yet been sworn.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I may say that it is not the custom in the House of Commons to swear the witness.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Miller: Before making my statement, I would ask the privilege of having my counsel, Mr. A. E. Harvey, K.C., of Montreal, with me, and, after I have finished, that he be allowed to make a few remarks on my behalf, if it is so desired.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I move that the witness to be allowed to appear by counsel.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. A. E. Harvey, K.C., then came and stood beside the witness.

Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, with your kind permission, I wish to entirely withdraw the statement that my counsel made at the time of my first appearance at this Bar, as apparently he did not quite understand the case, owing to the short time at his disposal for considering it. Part of that statement was that one of my reasons for declining to answer the question was that it would incriminate me. Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to especially withdraw that statement, as I did not authorize my counsel to make it, as I was in absolutely no fear that anything I have done would incriminate me in any manner or form. The main reason that I wished to have had given was that owing to litigation now pending, which arose out of this matter, I deemed it inadvisable to make the facts known, as it might influence the results of those cases. I wish to explain that my action in declining to answer was not because I wished to defy this hon. House. Far be it from that, as there is not a man in Canada who has more respect for the recognized governing bodies of our country, and especially this hon. House which represents the people. But when I know that I have done nothing that in any way affects the public of Canada, notwithstanding any opinions to the contrary, and when I also know that a few self-constituted enemies clandestinely so worked that they became the directors of the company of which I was the president for so many years, and of which I at present time own about one-third of the outstanding stock, and for the purpose, not of getting an accounting from me, but, in my humble opinion, for the ulterior purpose, by taking advantage of technicalities, of extorting money from me to divide among themselves. Under these circumstances—

Mr. MEIGHEN: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I take objection, and ask that you interrupt the witness on the ground that his answer is utterly irrelevant. He must answer the question directly or not at all.

Mr. SPEAKER: The question the witness is required to answer is:

To whom did you pay the sum of $41,026 for the purpose of securing contracts from the Government of the Dominion of Canada amounting to $117,000 or thereabouts, between the month of June, 1907, until you ceased to be president of the Diamond Light and Heating Company, Limited, in June, 1911, as alleged by you on your examination before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts on Friday, the 14th of February, 1913.

That is the question that is put by command of the House to the witness.

Mr. Miller: I was leading up to that.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not think it is permissible to go into a history of the transaction in order to answer the question, but I am in the judgment of the House in what I say. In my opinion, it is not permissible to take up, and go into the history of the whole transaction.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I think there was a motion unanimously passed by the House that the witness should be allowed to make a statement, and it seems to me that it would be very unreasonable that this august court should refuse to the person who is before the bar the opportunity of making a statement.

Mr. BORDEN: I was not aware that the motion has passed the House in the terms stated by my hon. friend. I was under the impression that the motion which passed the House was that a certain question should be administered to the witness.

Mr. MURPHY: There was another motion.

Mr. BORDEN: I understood that the subsequent motion was in reference to the application of the witness that he be allowed to be represented by counsel.

Mr. MURPHY: And make a statement.

Mr. CARVELL: And have a statement made by his counsel.

Mr. BORDEN: And that his counsel might be permitted to make some observations if he thought necessary. I should think that the proper course, consistent with the practice of Parliament and correct procedure on such occasions, would be this: that if the witness desires or is willing to answer the question, he should answer it; if he is not willing to answer the question he should say so, and he might be permitted, I would think, in that case, to give any reason for his declining or refusing to answer. The first thing the House should know, in view of the motion that has been passed, is whether or not the witness does propose to answer the question.

Mr. SPEAKER: My understanding was that the instruction of the House was to the effect that the witness should be allowed to consult his counsel, who, I understood, was to make a statement on his behalf after consultation.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: If I may correct your memory, the prisoner at Bar said that he wanted to make a statement. First of all he wanted to have his counsel, Mr. Harvey; then, to make a statement, and, after that, that Mr. Harvey should make a few remarks. If, in the judgment of the House, the witness does not answer the question, it will be for the House to take such action as it chooses; but certainly the man should be allowed to make his statement in his own way.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: My motion was that the witness be allowed to appear by counsel, and that gave the counsel no broader rights than the witness. The question before the House is whether or not the witness will answer the question. He must say whether he will or will not, and then his counsel or he can give reasons for his not doing so.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): The true position of affairs is that up to the moment the question has not been put to the witness.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes, it has.

Mr. MACLEAN: Not to-day.

Mr. SPEAKER: I read the question to the witness after he came to the Bar of the House.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That being correct, then, the witness asked of the House permission to make a statement. A motion was duly and formally made to that effect by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen).

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. MACLEAN: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. That he be allowed to make a statement. He had included other requests of course. That motion having been put to the House and carried, the witnesss surely is entitled to make a statement; and then if, in the judgment of the House, the question has not been answered directly, the House can again put the question to the witness. If there is any doubt as to the purport of the motion which was made, I suggest that you ask of the reporter of the House what that motion was, so that any dispute can be settled here and now.

Mr. SPEAKER: As the motion was not handed to me in writing, I took it as correctly as my judgment enabled me to do, and put it to the House. The motion which I put to the House was to the effect that he might first have an opportunity of consulting his counsel, and then that the counsel be allowed to make a statement in his behalf.

An hon. MEMBER: No.

Mr. SPEAKER: As I can be the only person who would understand what I put and intended to put, I assume that my authority ought to prevail in that regard. If the motion is presented to me in writing, I shall put it in whatever shape the House desires me to put it.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Perhaps the Minister of Justice would enlighten us upon this question, and would inform the House what was the question actually put to the witness.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think it is not the right of the Minister of Justice or any other hon. member to interpret what the Speaker put from the Chair. I think the Speaker is the only one who could properly interpret that.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I doubt that very much.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Do I understand your honour to rule that the witness is not allowed to make his answer in his own way?

Mr. SPEAKER: Not at all.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Then, let him go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am ruling with regard to the motion I put to the House. I have nothing to do with whether or not he should be allowed to make his answer. That is for the House to say, not me.

Mr. GRAHAM: I think perhaps there is a little misunderstanding on your part, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Miller made a request that he be allowed to make a statement, or rather, first, that he be represented by counsel, and then that he be allowed to make a statement, or, failing that, that his counsel should be allowed to address a few words to the House. The hon. member for North Grey had no written motion, but he rose and made a motion which we all took to mean acquiescence in the request of Mr. Miller, and we all so voted.

Mr. BORDEN: I must confess that I for one did not understand it in the way my hon. friend suggests. The request of the witness, as I understood it, was that he be allowed to make a statement, and that his counsel be allowed to add some remarks. Then I understood my hon. friend from North Grey to move that the witness be allowed to appear by counsel, and his honour the Speaker put the motion in the way he has now stated. The misunderstanding, if any, has arisen from the fact that the motion was not in writing. But my hon. friend from North Grey did not, in my hearing, make a motion that the witness should be permitted to make a statement and that his counsel should be allowed to add some remarks. It is perfectly true that the witness did make that request. I desire to give the witness every possible fair play, but I think the proper procedure in a case of this kind is for the witness to state first whether or not he will answer the question. If he does answer the question, there is nothing more about it; no statement is required. If he refuses to answer the question, it is perfectly proper, and only fair, for the House to hear the reasons which he or his counsel may see fit to put forward on his behalf for so refusing. I do not think, however, that it would be proper for him to go into a long story of conspiracy on the part of other people against him, or into any matters that are not relevant to anything before the House. But, within the proper bounds, I hardly think we can refuse to listen. Afterwards we can consider the reasons for the refusal.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I understood that he was proceeding to give his reasons why he was going to refuse. From my interpretation of what he said, I thought it led to that.

Mr. BORDEN: I was unable to understand what it led to.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no motion before the House at present. One was put some time ago and carried. I have a written question which the House has ordered to be put to the witness, and I will send it to his counsel.

The question was handed to Mr. Miller's counsel.

Mr. Miller: I am not prepared at the moment to answer that question, and I would like to give some reasons for not doing so, if I may be so allowed.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear. Go on.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Is the hon. member for North Grey to determine whether the witness is to have the privilege of speaking?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order; hear, hear.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I say, Mr. Speaker,——

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Mr. BORDEN: Mr. Speaker, I would move that the witness be allowed to state his reasons, but I would suggest to you that he should be cautioned in doing so to keep within proper limits, and not to make this an occasion for attacking persons who are not before the House to defend themselves.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood that the hon. member for North Grey rose to make that motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Maclean) was just a little soon. I was on my feet to make the motion that he be allowed to give his explanation.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order; sit down.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion has not been put to the House.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I rise, Mr. Speaker——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I rise for the purpose of seconding the motion made by the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is moved by Mr. Borden, seconded by Mr. Maclean (Halifax), that the witness be allowed to give his reasons for refusing to answer the question put, and that he keep within reasonable bounds with regard to the importation of irrelevant matter into his explanation.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Miller: There was only one course for me to pursue, and that was for me to make an honourable fight against any intrigue. I have followed that course so far without fear or favour, and this is the first time that I have made any public reference to this case. I would not, I can assure you, make any reference at the present time if this unenviable publicity had not been thrust upon me. It is not with a desire to defy this honourable House or any other governing body that I have acted in the way I have. I would like to have been able to have given the reasons for my action, and in my own way, because on the surface it may look as if I were protecting myself against possibly being incriminated, and it might also be suspected that I am taking this line of action in order to protect some person or persons connected with the administration of the Government of the Dominion of Canada. Now, as to that, I have already stated under oath that I never paid any money to any member of the Senate, or to any member of the House of Commons, or to any official of the Government; and I now state that I never gave any remuneration of any kind whatsoever to any member of the Senate, or of the House of Commons, or to any person in the employ of either the Senate or the House of Commons, either directly or indirectly. It might also appear at first sight that my action is based on stubbornness on my part, or a wish to defy the different powers. But I can assure you that such is not the case. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have tried here, as far as lies in my humble power, to make my reasons plain for declining to give to this House the desired information, and, as I claim to be an honourable man, I cannot conscientiously follow any other course than that which I have been doing. I feel satisfied that every hon. member of this House, if placed in the same position and in the same circumstances that I have been and am now placed in, would follow the same course. I therefore place myself in the hands of this honourable House, feeling that I will get fair play, and I beg of the House that it be magnanimous enough to accept my explanation, withdraw the question and discharge me from its custody.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker, shall I be allowed to supplement the remarks made by my client?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I beg to move that counsel be permitted to supplement the statement made by the witness.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker and hon. gentlemen, I appreciate the indulgence you have given to my client, Mr. Miller, and I ask the privilege of speaking very briefly. I wish, in the first place, to call the attention of the House to the fact that the question as it is put has a tendency to put into Mr. Miller's mouth words that he never uttered at all. What Mr. Miller did state before the committee, and what he stated in court, was that during the four or five years that these transactions with the Diamond Light and Heating Company were going on, he had paid the sum of $41,026 in connection with getting business for the company. If you look at this question as it is put, it would appear to give out that Mr. Miller had stated something different from that. It covered all the business that he was able to get for the company during these four, five or six years. It would be unfair to allow that question to be put and to be answered in that form, because it is not correct and does not represent what Mr. Miller said.

I desire to refer to the cases which are going on as a result of the difficulty between the Diamond Light and Heating Company and Mr. Miller, its former president and manager. Mr. Miller was deposed very suddenly from his position, and is at the disadvantage of having no direct communication with the papers, books, and all the paraphernalia in the office, and has found this to be a cause of difficulty to him. As his counsel I know what these difficulties have been. There are three cases pending. Two of these cases have not yet reached the enquete stage, as we call it in Montreal, that is, they have not reached the evidence stage, and the evidence has yet to be given. That is the position, and I think it quite probable that other cases will result from these same transactions. I am well aware of the fact that evidence given by Mr. Miller before the Public Accounts Committee, or before this House, cannot be used as evidence before the courts; but you will not deny that impressions, no matter how received, and working in the mind in a way that we cannot account for, before judgments are given, may, and very probably will, be prejudicial to Mr. Miller, or perhaps to the other side of the case if these matters are gone into as fully as the House is asking Mr. Miller to go into them at this moment and before the judgments are given. We are all human; judges are human; you, gentlemen of the House of Commons, are human, Mr. Miller and myself are human, and we are liable to err and to form impressions which are going to influence our judgment. Although we have the greatest respect for the judges in Montreal, and know their integrity in every way, we say that the very fact of things coming out before these cases are settled will probably have an influence, unconsciously and unwittingly, upon the judgment to be rendered. Would it be fair under these circumstances for this House, just at this time, to order this question, or any other similar question, to be answered, and make Mr. Miller do what he would not do in any court of justice; that is, appear as a witness against himself and answer questions against himself which are going to have an effect on these cases? It seems to me that this House will not go so far, but that it will show some indulgence to my client, at least until these cases are decided. It will not be very long before they are decided, and if this House still thinks that it is in the interest of the country and of Parliament that Mr. Miller appear before it again, it always has the privilege of summoning him to the Bar. In the meantime, it would be conscious of having done simple justice to Mr. Miller in allowing this matter to rest until he can fight these fights that are going on in Montreal, in the cases that I have mentioned and other cases which are liable to come out of the same transactions.

I might refer to one incident before asking anything upon this point, and it is this: We were before the Public Accounts Committee on Friday last. We went away understanding that there would be no meeting on Tuesday. Having heard nothing as to whether we would be actually required or not, at five o'clock on Monday afternoon I took the trouble, by long distance telephone from my office in Montreal, to telephone to the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, and ask him if Mr. Miller would be required here, or in the Public Accounts Committee, the following day, and, when assured that we would be required, both Mr. Miller and myself, through the telephone, told the committee that we would be here, and we prepared to come. That shows the good faith of Mr. Miller. Mr. Miller wants to do what this House wants him to do, providing we are not put in a prejudiced position with regard to the litigation with which we are now struggling in the city of Montreal. I would ask under these circumstances that this question against Mr. Miller be not pressed at the present time, that he be allowed to be discharged by the House until at least this litigation can be settled and until the judgments are delivered; and then, if the House still wants to bring him up again, I am sure that Mr. Miller would be willing to come at any time. I ask as a privilege that the House be generous on this occasion and grant this request. I thank you, Mr. Speaker and hon. gentlemen.

Mr. MIDDLEBORO: I have only a few words to say with respect to this matter. Perhaps I had better move first:

That the witness retire while the House is considering the matter.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I would like to inquire now if the statements made by the witness and his counsel are open for discussion. I would like to know if every hon. member except the hon. member for North Grey is precluded from discussing this matter.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would suggest that the proper course would be to make a motion that the witness retire until the House considers the matter.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I have already made that motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro), moved that the witness retire until the House considers the matter before it.

Mr. PUGSLEY: On that motion, it seems to me that before it is carried the House should consider the statement which has been made by Mr. Harvey, which raises a direct issue between him and the hon. member who has made the motion for the taking of these proceedings. The motion before the House made by the hon. member for North Grey was that the witness should be asked to whom he paid the sum of $41,-026 in order to secure business from the Government amounting to $117,000, as, so the question states, alleged by the witness before the Committee on Public Accounts. Mr. Harvey, who is a King's counsel, upon his responsibility as counsel for Mr. Miller, makes the statement that Mr. Miller did not swear to anything of the kind, but that what he stated was that during a period of some five years he had paid out the sum of $41,026 to get business for the company.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I rise to a point of order. The witness must retire before anything stated by him or by his counsel is subject to discussion in this House. I quote Bourinot, at page 166, and also refer to a case in the Canadian Parliament in 1874. Bourinot stated:

When the evidence of a witness is concluded for the time being, he will be ordered to withdraw and remain in further attendance if required.

That means that immediately after he gives his evidence he must withdraw.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is a matter entirely for the House. Nobody can order the witness to retire except this House. What I am arguing is that this House ought not to order the witness to retire——

Mr. CURRIE: I rise to a point of order. In a case of this kind I think the prisoner is in your custody, Mr. Speaker, and that you can order him to retire if you so desire.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is not a point of order. At present I am speaking to the motion which has been made by the hon. member for North Grey. That is the motion which is now before the House. I am arguing——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I ask for a ruling on the point of order?

Mr. PUGSLEY: My reason for stating that the motion ought not to be adopted is—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. The hon. member is not speaking to the point of order raised, but is speaking to the original motion. The question undecided before the House is the point of order. I thought the hon. member was rising to argue the point of order.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Mr. Speaker, the point of order is not well taken. The hon. member for North Grey has made a motion that this House should order Mr. Miller to retire. I have a perfect right to present reasons why that motion should not be adopted by the House. When the hon. gentleman says that I have no right to present those reasons, he is stating a point of order which is not well taken.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think it is in the hands of the House to order that the witness retire, when it agrees to the motion made to that effect.

Mr. PUGSLEY: After the heated and unwarranted interruptions which have been made by hon. members opposite, and which have had the effect of delaying the argument which I wish now to proceed with as quickly as possible, what I submit is this: We are engaged in the consideration of a question of very great importance as affecting the liberty of the subject. The day before yesterday we were induced to railroad through a motion, contrary to rule 40 of the House, which requires two days' notice of any resolution. We were induced to do what I have never known any court of justice in the country to do, namely, not to give a witness the opportunity to present his reasons why he should not answer the question, and that without giving the members of the House full opportunity to consider what was the proper course to pursue. I am satisfied that the witness has been illegally under arrest for two days; he has been improperly arrested by this House, and that because the hon. member who made the motion had not given to this important question that full consideration which ought to have been given to it. Let us not make the same mistake to-day. As I have said, counsel for Mr. Miller has made a most important statement—in effect, that the action which this House took the day before yesterday was based on an erroneous statement made by the hon. member for North Grey as to what the witness had said.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Will hon. gentlemen keep quiet for a moment?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If the hon. gentlemen will have somebody rise to voice the point of order——

Mr. BORDEN: Is not my hon. friend really discussing the statement made by the witness, rather than the question as to whether or not he should retire?

Mr. PUGSLEY: No.

Mr. BORDEN: I would submit to my hon. friend that the proper and usual course to pursue is that, after the witness has made his statement, and after his counsel has said on his behalf everything that he may desire to say, the witness is directed to retire, and, if he is in custody, of course, to remain in custody. Then the House proceeds to consider the statements which it has heard. That is the course which I have always understood has been pursued, and it seems to me it would be a proper and decorous course to pursue in this case.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What I think differentiates this procedure from former procedures, is that there is a direct issue here between the witness through his counsel, Mr. Harvey, and the hon. member for North Grey. I take it for granted that on that statement, the hon. member for North Grey will feel it to be his duty to make a statement in this House in reference to the statement made by the counsel for Mr. Miller. I would ask the right hon. gentleman if it is not reasonable that Mr. Miller and his counsel should be allowed to remain in order to hear what explanation the hon. member for North Grey will give as to the statement made by Mr. Harvey. That is the reason which I present to the House why the witness and Mr. Harvey should be allowed to remain until that point at all events has been discussed by the hon. member for North Grey and probably by other members of the House.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I think I would be out of order if I started to discuss the question. The motion before the House is that the witness do now withdraw. In the Connolly case, after the witness had made his statement, and after the statement of counsel, a motion was made that the witness do withdraw, and he did withdraw without any discussion.

Mr. MURPHY: Did any such question of veracity arise on that occasion as has arisen on this?

Mr. SPEAKER: It seems to me that is a little wide of the mark for consideration here, especially in view of the fact that it does not depend on the hon. member, whether the statement is correct or not. It is based on the evidence word for word before the Public Accounts Committee, which the witness, I assume would be allowed to read or hear read and to sign before it would become a matter of record in the custody of that committee. I do not think it is quite in point to discuss that question on the motion whether the witness withdraw till the House considers the other question.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I move in amendment, seconded by Mr. Lemieux:

That Mr. Miller and his counsel be allowed to remain at the Bar of this House until the hon. member for North Grey has had an opportunity of informing the House as to whether the statement made by Mr. Harvey that Mr. Miller had not given before the Committee on Public Accounts the evidence which the question put to the witness by Mr. Speaker alleges he gave, is correct.

Mr. MEIGHEN: I submit that the amendment is not an amendment, but a direct negative, and out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Having regard to strict procedure, it must be noted that May lays it down that a direct negative to a motion is not an amendment, though it may be covered up by verbiage—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. SPEAKER: Guided by that, I rule that this amendment is out of order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER: I would remind the hon. member that it is not permissible to debate a ruling of the Chair. He can only appeal to the House from the ruling.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I should hope it would not be necessary to appeal to the House—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: One moment. You agree with me, Mr. Speaker, that you gave your ruling without—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The rule must be strictly carried out, and if there is an appeal, it must be to the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Then, I desire to appeal to this House. Now, before the question is put to the House I desire—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion cannot be debated.

Motion (Mr. Pugsley), to appeal to the House, negatived.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I have a motion to present, but before doing so, I would like to say a few words with regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley). I am sure my hon. friend did not appreciate the position he was taking when he placed the word of a man at the Bar of this House against that of an hon. member of the House. If the hon. member for St. John had taken the trouble to look up 'Hansard,' he would have found that I placed upon 'Hansard' every word of the evidence upon which I proposed the motion in this House. The evidence given by Mr. R. C. Miller before the Public Accounts Committee was to the effect that during the years from 1907 to 1911, the whole business of that company, outside of the business they did with the Dominion Government, was about $2,000. So when the question was fairly and squarely put to that witness in the Public Accounts Committee: 'What did you do with the forty-one thousand odd dollars you swore that you spent for the purpose of securing these government contracts?' I contend it was a fair question. It is most unpleasant for me to do what I am doing to-day; and I want to say that this matter should be the concern of every hon. member of this House. It is in no sense a government matter; it is a matter of upholding the dignity of the first court in the first colony of the British Empire. The witness was subpoenaed last year to appear before the Public Accounts Committee, and the matter arose in this way. As chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, my attention was called to the fact that a man had sworn—I did not know the man—that he had paid out this sum of money for the purpose of securing certain government contracts.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Is my hon. friend speaking to any motion?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I have a motion here, but I was offering an explanation to the hon. member for St. John.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We should have the motion first.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: It is a question of privilege, if nothing else; but, if my right hon. friend insists, I will submit the motion, and speak upon it.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: We must know what my hon. friend is speaking about.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I am speaking to that motion which I am going to make.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Motion.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: The counsel at the Bar said——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order; motion.

Mr. SPEAKER: Will the hon. member send down the motion?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO moved, seconded by Mr. Meighen:

That this House, having considered the statements made by R. C. Miller and his counsel, at the Bar of this House, on the 18th and 20th days of February instant, hereby declares such statements to be no answer to the question put to him by Mr. Speaker on said dates, and that his refusal to answer said question constitutes a breach of the privileges of Parliament, and renders the said R. C. Miller guilty of contempt of this House, and this House doth order and adjudge that the said R. C. Miller be forthwith, by the Sergeant-at-Arms, committed to and imprisoned in the common jail of the county of Carleton, situated in the city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, until the prorogation of this House, or until sooner released therefrom by the order of this House; and the keeper or other officer in charge of the said jail is hereby authorized to receive the said R. C. Miller into his custody accordingly, and that Mr. Speaker do forthwith issue his warrant therefor accordingly.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I was saying, Mr. Speaker, that this witness was subpoenaed a year ago, to answer the very same question as that put to him this afternoon.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise to a point of order. I submit that this motion cannot be considered by the House unless two days notice is given of it. I think it is proper that the rules of the House should be observed, especially as this is an exceedingly important matter, affecting the liberty of the subject. I will refer your Honour to rule 40.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have no objection to the hon. member reading the rule, but I am distinctly of the opinion that the motion is strictly in order. The examination of a witness, in my judgment justifies any member of the House in arising, without any notice, and moving a resolution based upon such examination.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I submit that I am in the unfortunate position of having a ruling made against me before the court has heard the argument.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member can scarcely be so considered, especially in view of the fact that I stated that he could read the rule, and I thought he had waived his right to do so.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I arose to take a point of order, and said I would like to call Your Honour's attention to rule 40; but, without hearing me, Your Honour proceeded to pronounce judgment.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Every member of this House——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon member to say: 'If it is necessary, I will read the rule.' I said: 'The hon. member may read it if he desires,' but I thought he had waived the right.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I certainly did not intend to waive the right, and I am surprised that Your Honour should give judgment without giving me an opportunity of stating my case. With all due deference and consideration for Your Honour, I submit that we all have a right to be heard.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman has not yet read the rule.

Mr. PUGSLEY: This is the rule:

Two days' notice shall be given of a motion for leave to present a bill, resolution or address, for the appointment of any committee, or for the putting of a question; but this rule shall not apply to bills after their introduction, or to private bills, or to the times of meeting or adjournment of the House. Such notice shall be laid on the table before five o'clock p.m., and be printed in the Votes and Proceedings of that day.

Now, this is a resolution. Rule 41 states:

A motion may be made by unanimous consent of the House, without previous notice.

Of course, that does not apply, because there has not been unanimous consent. I contend that rule 40 does apply.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why do hon. members call 'order'? I am arguing a point of order, and contending that there should be two days' notice of this motion. What is it that is proposed to be done? The witness is in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. The privileges of this House are not in peril or in jeopardy. There is no reason for immediate action, or for violating the rules of the House requiring two days' notice of such a motion— a rule made for the protection of the minority, and of those people whose interests may be under consideration by this House. Without the slightest notice, without giving to the witness and his counsel an opportunity of presenting arguments to the House, by petition or otherwise, my hon. friend, in violation of the spirit of the rules of this House —nay, in violation of the actual letter of rule 40—is proposing to make this important motion, to call upon this House to come to a conclusion with regard to this matter without giving hon. members an opportunity of examining the evidence or looking into the statement made by counsel for Mr. Miller; without, as I have said, giving to hon. members an opportunity of determining whether or not it is just and proper that this motion should pass. Questions may properly arise upon which hon. members of this House would like to be informed—as to what are the powers of this House; whether it is in the power of the House to instruct the Sergeant-at-Arms as to the custody in which the witness shall be placed. That is a very important question. We are laying down a precedent for years to come. Surely, as I have said, this is not an occasion on which we should depart from both the letter and the spirit of rule 40 which has so long governed this House and which should govern except on extraordinary occasions when the unanimous consent of the House is asked.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: In the cases of McGreevey and Connelly, the witness was brought before the Bar of the House just as in this case. His case was considered, and the very same day Sir John Thompson moved the order of the House following his retirement.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Was any point raised there?

Mr. BOYCE: I would also remind the House that precisely the same point of order was taken by the leader of the Opposition the day before yesterday when the gentleman appeared before the Bar of the House. My hon. friend took the obejction under this very same rule now before you that no motion could be made committing the prisoner at the bar to your custody or to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms without the previous two days' notice of the resolution under this rule and, very properly, you, Sir, ruled that the point of order was not well taken. Let me remind my right hon. friend and the member for St. John of a case in 1905, when a gentleman appeared at the Bar of the House during the time when my right hon. friend was in control of the Government. No objection of the kind was taken then. The whole transaction took place in two hours, and my right hon. friend himself moved a resolution by which the Speaker was empowered to dispose of the whole case, reprimand the gentleman at the Bar and discharge him from custody. It was never contended for an instant that under the rules of the House any notice should be given; and let me remind my hon. friend, than whom in reality no person is more familiar with the rules of the House, that he is trifling with a very serious matter indeed. The dignity of this House of Parliament is involved and to continually press objections by way of points of order which have been already disposed of by way of precedent—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. gentleman is travelling a little wide for argument on a point of order.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I be allowed to correct the memory of my hon. friend. The other day a report of the Committee of Public Accounts was brought before the House. I raised the point whether or not this report should be taken into consideration without previous notice, and in answer to statements from the other side I stated that in my memory there had been numerous cases affirming one way and the other. Sometimes a report was taken without notice and on other occasions notice was required. In this particular case, if my memory serves me, there was a previous report on this matter made by the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee. I called your attention to it, and it was postponed, for want of notice, to another day.

The books are full of similar questions, as to whether or not a report of a committee may be taken into consideration the day it is brought down; and I leave it to your judgment that in many cases it was decided that we could not and in other cases it was decided that we could. I had intended at some time asking a ruling on this point so as to have a permanent rule for our guidance. But the cases are not at all parallel. The case referred to is not at all like the present case.

Mr. BORDEN: It seems to me that the motion is quite in order as relating to privilege and as being a motion arising out of the proceeding already taken by the House. If the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) were correct in his contention, it would necessarily follow that if a series of question were to be directed to a witness, every one of those questions must be determined by a motion of the House, and the House would have to adjourn for two or three days between each two questions so as to permit of the two days' notice. That is so manifest an absurdity that the hon. member for St. John would not contend that any such course should be followed. It seems to me that the motion is quite in order for the reason stated. The other consideration which the hon. gentleman put forward was not a question of order, but a question as to whether or not the House should forthwith deal with the question or postpone consideration till a future day. That is a question for the discretion of the House, but not a question of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: I think that the procedure in making this motion is strictly in order. It is a question of a breach of the privileges of this House, and rule 45 says:

> Whenever any matter of privilege arises, it shall be taken into consideration immediately.

And any motions or resolutions of the House in consequence of it are moved without any notice. From personal knowledge, because I happened to be in the House, I remember distinctly the procedure followed in the case when Mr. Dunn was brought to the Bar of the House. The questions were written out by Mr. Weldon, K.C., a member of the House, and each question was handed to the Speaker, put to the House, and, on being agreed to by the House, put to the prisoner at the Bar. No question was raised as to the necessity of any notice of motion before that was done. The same procedure exactly was followed in the McGreevy case. I happened to be in the House then, and I remember quite distinctly and have taken the trouble to look up the case since. In addition to that, I might cite several English precedents, exactly in harmony with this procedure, which justify it. Therefore, I think the point of order of my hon. friend is not well taken.

Mr. OLIVER: As one who is not in the legal profession, but is a plain, ordinary citizen of the country, I would say that it strikes me as something entirely out of the ordinary.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. A question of order was raised on the propriety of this motion being considered in the House without two days' notice. That was on a question of order. My ruling was that the point of order was not well taken. The hon. member for North Grey has the floor.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: When I was interrupted by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) I was proceeding to say something as to the good faith of the witness. A year ago when the matter was brought to my attention as Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, the witness was subpoenaed to appear before that Committee. He was paid his witness fees and served in the usual way. He did not appear before that Committee in consequence of which I brought in a motion in this House that he appear before the Bar of the House. We were unable to serve him with that summons because he could not be located in Montreal and the consequence was that we were unable to get him before the Bar of the House last session. This session when he came before the Committee he was asked why he did not appear last year and he said he was sick. When he was asked why he did not send some notice, why he did not have the common courtesy to inform us he was indisposed, he gave no reason but simply said: I did not do it. That brings us to the present time. He is brought before the Committee, he is given every opportunity to make a statement as to the person to whom he paid the moneys for the purpose of securing these contracts. In the Committee he said he would not do so because it would interfere with his private affairs, because he had some law suits on and it would prejudice those law suits if he had to give his answers there. Being pressed by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), as to the status of those law suits he admitted that an action had been brought against him by this same company to make him account for that $41,000 to that company. He admitted that judgment had gone against him and the courts had adjudged that he should account for that $41,000. He admitted that the case had been appealed by him. The hon. member for Portage la Prairie pointed out to him that as that case had been appealed any evidence he might give in that Committee, even if it were not privileged, could not affect the result of that case because the appeal would be heard on the evidence already given. It was further pointed out to him that even if the case were not in appeal, even if the evidence could be used, any evidence given by any witness before any Committee of this House or before this House was privileged. And there were penalties upon any persons daring to give to any court evidence which a witness had given to the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would my hon. friend mention the statute?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: The other day it was suggested in the Public Accounts Committee that another reason why the witness would not answer the question was that it might incriminate him. He came before the bar of this House and he stated. by his counsel, as one of the reasons why he would not answer the question that it might tend to incriminate him. We were perfectly justified in doing what we did, and he comes here to-day and says 'my answer would not incriminate me.' We come to the second question, and to the only defence he now makes namely, that it might interfere with his private affairs. I say here, as I said in the committee, and as I gave my ruling before the committee, that for a man to come before the Public Accounts Committee or any other committee of this House, or before the Bar of this House, and block enquiry as to the expenditure of public moneys by this Parliament, by simply saying that to make him answer would interfere with his private affairs—I say we might as well abolish all the committees of this House. He says that an action has been commenced in the civil courts. But remember it is not in the criminal court that this man is being sued; if he was up on a criminal charge there might be some reason why we should show some leniency towards him, but it is simply a civil suit, and this is the highest civil and criminal court in the land—He might as well go to one court and say, I won't give evidence here because I have another action in another civil court. That would be no answer. He is bound to tell the truth, and especially where it is not going to incriminate him. as he admits here to-day. Therefore, we come down to the simple question of asserting the ancient and honourable privileges of this House of Commons. This is the first case in Canada since Confederation where we have gone the length of putting a man under custody. In every case where a gentleman has been called to the Bar of this House he has submitted to the ruling of the House. But in the present case the witness refuses to submit to the ruling of the House. Then what are we going to do? Are we going to stand still and say to this man at the Bar: You are supreme, you do not need to answer this question; our Public Accounts Committee is a nullity; it has no power and no sanction behind it; if you do not want to answer the question, simply say no, and we cannot do anything. Are we going to take that position? Is there a man in this House who desires to uphold the dignity of this House who will take that position? We have clearly this issue. We have been defied at the Bar of this House, and we have nothing further to do than to pronounce the penalty which the judgment of this House thinks proper. As to precedents for that, we have many. I will quote a few of them in order to show that this is nothing unusual in countries over which there is British jurisdiction and in which parliamentary practice is recognized. Let me quote the first from page 158 of Bourinot:

It is clearly established that the power of commitment for contempt is incident to every court of justice, and more especially belongs to the Houses of Parliament as essential to the maintenance of their undoubted rights and privileges,—that it is incompetent for other courts to question the privileges of the Houses of Parliament on a commitment for an offence which they adjudged to be a contempt of those privileges;—that they cannot inquire into the form of the commitment, even supposing it to be open to objection on the ground of informality;—that when the Houses adjudge anything to be a contempt or a breach of privilege their adjudication is a conviction, and their conviction, in consequence, an execution.

Sir Erskine May lays down this rule:

The power of commitment, with all the authority which can be given by law, being established, it becomes the keystone of Parliamentary privilege and contempt; and if the warrant recite that the person to be arrested has been guilty of a breach of privilege, the courts of law cannot inquire into the grounds of judgment, but must leave him to suffer the punishment awarded by the Commons, House of Parliament by which he stands committed.

Then I would point out:

That an offender may be discharged at any time upon causing a petition, expressing proper contrition for his offence, to be presented.

I will point out a further authority in May's parliamentary practice as follows:

In the case of Sir Francis Burdett, in 1810, a doubt arose concerning the power of the Sergeant-at-Arms to break into the dwelling house of a person against whom a Speaker's warrant had been issued. The Sergeant-at Arms, when upon the execution of a warrant, was turned out of Sir Francis Burdett's private dwelling-house by force. The opinion of the Attorney General was consequently required to determine whether the Sergeant was justified in breaking open the outer or any inner door of the private dwelling-house of Sir F. Burdett, or of any person in which there is reasonable cause to suspect he is concealed, for the purpose of apprehending him; whether the Sergeant might take to his assistance a sufficient civil or military force for that purpose, such force acting under the direction of a civil magistrate; and whether such proceedings would be justifiable during the night as well as in the day time.

The Attorney-General answered all these questions, except the last, in the affirmative; and acting upon his opinion, the Sergeant-at Arms forced an entrance into Sir F. Burdett's house, down the area, and conveyed his prisoner to the Tower, with the assistance of a military force. Sir F. Burdett brought actions against the Speaker and the Sergeant-at-Arms in the Court of King's Bench, and verdicts were obtained for the defendants.

Then on 15th December, 1876, there was the case in which a man named George King was committed to Newgate for six months for publishing a libel.

The power of the House to commit the author of the libels was questioned before the Court of King's Bench, in 1811, by Sir F. Burdett, but was admitted by all the judges of that court, without a single expression of doubt. . . . In 1821 the author of a paragraph in the John Bull newspaper containing a false and scandalous libel on a member was committed to Newgate.

Then May says, on page 90:

Either House will punish in one session offences that have been committed in another. In 1879 C. E. Grissell, having neglected to attend the House to answer for a breach of privilege, was ordered into the custody of the Sergeant, but evaded the execution of the Speaker's warrant by going abroad, until two days before the close of the session, when he was committed to Newgate. On the 2nd March, 1880, a petition submitting himself to the House was presented, when he was ordered to be sent for in the custody of the Sergeant. Being taken into custody, he was ordered to stand committed to the Sergeant, and to be brought in custody to the Bar on the following day; when, having failed to satisfy the House by his apologies, it was ordered that having evaded punishment for his offences until the close of the last session, he be committed to jail of Newgate.

Then Sir Erskine May says:

The modern practice of the Commons is to commit persons to the custody of the Sergeant at-Arms to Newgate, or to the Tower, during the pleasure of the House; and to keep offenders there until they present petitions praying for their release, and expressing contrition for their offences; or until, upon motion made in the House, it is resolved that they shall be discharged.

I could point to seven or eight other cases, but I will not weary the House with them. But I shall now point to a few cases in our own land. In the 'Powers of Parliament' by S. J. Watson, there appears a case which occurred in the old province of Canada in the year 1812. The report is as follows:

The House then authorized Mr. Samuel Street, the Speaker, to issue his warrant, to the Sergeant-at-Arms, for the arrest of Mr. Robert Nichol, of the township of Woodhouse, to answer unto such matters and things as may then and there be objected agains him, touching a contempt of the privileges of this House, with which he stands charged, and abide by the pleasure of the House thereon. On the 26th of February, Mr. Robert Nichol was brought to the Bar of the House.

Mr. Sovereign, a member, 'gave evidence of words used by Mr. Nichol, in his presence, disrespectful to the House of Assembly.' Mr Willcocks, another member, gave evidence similar to that of Mr. Sovereign.

Mr. Nichol was then heard in his defence; whereupon it was Resolved, that Mr. Nichol has been guilty of a breach of privilege, in addition to his former offence, by denying that this House have the privilege of committing an offender, who by them has been found guilty of a breach of privilege.

It was resolved that Mr. Nichol be committed to the common goal of the district, during the pleasure of the House, and that the Speaker do issue his warrant for that purpose.

Then another case is cited, that of Messrs. Coffin and Givens:

Motion, that Nathaniel Coffin, Esq., Adjutant-General of Militia, and James Givens, Esq., Superintendent of Indian Affairs, having been summoned by a committee to appear before them, and not having complied therewith, they be apprehended and placed at the Bar, to answer for such contempt, forthwith. . . . Motion agreed to. Sergeant-at-Arms reports his proceedings upon the Speaker's warrant, and the refusal of those gentlemen to allow themselves to be arrested; report ordered to be entered upon the Journals, nem. con. They are placed at the Bar, and, being called upon for their defence, they severally explain the cause of their refusal; their statements to be taken down in writing, and entered on the Journals. Motion, that James Givens, Esq., has been guilty of contempt of the House, and a breach of its privileges, and that the Speaker do issue his warrant for committing him to the York jail for the remainder of the present session: Several amendments negatived, and motion agreed to. A like resolution, respecting Nathaniel Coffin, Esq.

Mr. GUTHRIE: What year was that in?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: It is not stated here. The other case was in 1812, and I imagine this would be about 1815. Then, in 1829, the case of Allan MacNab is reported as follows:

Motion, that Allan N. MacNab, Esq., having refused to answer certain questions put to him by the Committee on the Hamilton Outrage, and having otherwise misdemeaned himself, is guilty of a high contempt and breach of the privileges of the House. Motion agreed to. Mr. Speaker to issue his warrant for apprehending him. He is placed at the Bar, and called on for his defence, which he makes accordingly. Motion, that Mr. MacNab be discharged, amendment, that he be committed to York jail, during the pleasure of the House, carried. The Speaker submits a warrant of committal, which is approved by the House. Mr. Speaker reports a letter from Mr. MacNab, relative to his imprisonment.

Then that case was appealed and the Chief Justice held that:

The House of Assembly in this province have a constitutional right to call persons before them for the purpose of obtaining information; and if the House adjudge the conduct of such persons in answering or refusing to answer before a select committee to be a contempt, they have the right of imprisoning them.

I would call the attention of the House to a recent case in the province of Nova Scotia, which went to appeal before the Privy Council, and in which case it was held, Law Reports, Appeal Cases, 1896, page 600, that:

The Nova Scotia House of Assembly has statutory powers to adjudicate that the wilful disobedience of its orders to attend in reference to a libel reflecting on its members, is a breach of privilege and contempt, and to punish the breach by imprisonment.

Lord Chancellor Halsbury said:

It is not denied that the respondent intentionally disobeyed the order of the House. He was therefore arrested by the order of the House and on being brought to the Bar of the House was adjudged to have been guilty of a contempt of the House, and was committed to the common jail of Halifax for forty-eight hours.

I have several other authorities that I might cite but I do not wish to detain the House.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The cases which the hon. gentleman has cited are all cases where legislative assemblies or legislatures have committed offenders to prisons under their jurisdictions. It is proposed by the motion to commit the offender, if offender he be, to the common jail of the county of Carleton a prison over which this House has no jurisdiction, but which is under the jurisdiction of the province of Ontario. Has the hon. gentleman any case in which this Parliament has acted in that way, or can he point to any prison over which this House has jurisdiction as a prison to which such a man might be committed?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: According to the common law, the common jail—and that is why it is called the common jail—it is for the purpose of receiving persons who have been guilty of crime unless it is otherwise specified that they should be sent to some other prison.

Mr. GUTHRIE: It is not a crime.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: For instance, if they are sentenced for over two years, they go to Kingston penitentiary. This House has a right to impose a sentence, and under section 1056 of chapter 146 of the Revised Statutes of Canada:

Every one who is sentenced to imprisonment for a term less than two years shall, if no other place is expressly mentioned, be sentenced to imprisonment in the common jail of the district, county or place in which the sentence is pronounced, or if there is no common jail there, then in that common jail which is nearest to such locality, or in some lawful prison or place of confinement.

Mr. GUTHRIE: That is a provision of the criminal law.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: It is simply declaratory of the common law. I have no hesitation in saying that the motion is perfectly legal and perfectly justifiable and the only motion we can make if we are to uphold the dignity of the House of Commons.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would like to ask my hon. friend if he would give me the statute to which he refers and which he says provides that any evidence given by a person before this House cannot be used as evidence in the courts?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I did not say it was a statute. My hon. friend need not be so very astute. I say that, according to the rules of Parliament, which are law, which have been created by precedents and otherwise of the British Parliament and which are also the law of Canada, being the Revised Statutes, 1906, chapter 10 and also I think, section 3 of the British North America Act, all rights and privileges which were enjoyed by the British House of Commons were given to this Parliament, so that we have as free and ample power as the British Parliament has with respect to parliamentary procedure, but no more.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I regret that my hon. friend's memory is so treacherous. My hon. friend made the positive statement yesterday——

An hon. MEMBER: The day before yesterday.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The day before yesterday, but it is immaterial whether it was yesterday or the day before yesterday. When this matter was last before the House my hon. friend made the positive statement that there was a statute which provided that any evidence given by a witness at the Bar of this House could not be used against him. Although my hon. friend was quite positive that it was a statute, he says now that he did not mean to say that it was a statute but that he referred to the rules of the British Parliament which are in force in this Parliament.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: And which are law in Canada to-day.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There is a considerable question as to that. The question came up in the province of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick and it was held that the legislature did not have many of the powers which were possessed by the Imperial Parliament and that one of these was the power of imprisonment for contempt. I think it was held that the legislature had not those powers.

Mr. HAZEN: Does my hon. friend remember the case?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I do not remember the case but I think my hon. friend will find it. It came up, in the form of an application to the court either in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick. I would like to submit to my right hon. friend who leads the House (Mr. Borden) whether he does not think this is a question of sufficient importance that its further consideration might be deferred for a couple of days?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Well, hon. gentlemen say 'no.' May I suggest this? I do not know Mr. Miller, I never heard of Mr. Miller, and I never heard of this account until it came before the Public Accounts Committee. I have no interest in him whatever; but, as one member of this House, I am concerned that proper regard should be had for the liberty of the subject; and we should be very careful as to the course which we pursue. As has been truly stated, this is the highest court in the country. Even although we may make mistakes, even although we may falsely commit a man to prison, it is probable that he could get no redress from any court in the land, because this is the highest court in the country. That being so, I put it to my right hon. friend as to whether he should ask the members of this House to pass judgment on this matter before giving all of us the opportunity of looking into the evidence which Mr. Miller gave before the Committee on Public Accounts, of considering the very important statement made by Mr. Harvey, counsel for the prisoner at the Bar, and also of considering what our rights are with regard to committing this man to the common jail. These are all very important questions. One very important matter in connection with the question which was put by this House, is that it professes to summarize the evidence which was given before the Committee on Public Accounts. It is putting to the witness a leading question, which I venture to say in a court of law the witness would be justified in refusing to answer, if I have read correctly the evidence which was given before the Committee on Public Accounts. I will ask my hon. friend the member for North Grey if the witness swore before the Committee on Public Accounts in the very words of the question which he has put to the witness here through you, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I did not take down the question word for word, but what the witness swore to; but the substance is the same.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I say that is a very important matter, and a matter which it is the duty of every member of this House to examine with the utmost care. We are called upon to-day, on the motion of the hon. member for North Grey, to take away the liberty of a subject; we are called upon to exercise the powers of the highest court in the country to send a man to prison because he has refused to answer a question put to him by you, Mr. Speaker, which question alleges that he swore that he made a certain statement under oath before the Committee on Public Accounts. His counsel has appeared at the Bar of this House and has declared that the witness never made such a statement; he has declared that you, Mr. Speaker, have been asked to put and have put into the mouth of this witness words as having been sworn to before the Committee on Public Accounts, which his counsel says he never swore to. May I ask my right hon. friend whether that is not a matter of importance to hon. members on both sides of the House to consider carefully. If it is, because it is not a party question, we ought to unite in upholding the dignity of Parliament.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. PUGSLEY: To hon. gentlemen opposite the liberty of the subject appears to be a trifling matter; to hon. gentlemen opposite it appears to be a slight thing to send a man to prison, and that it does not require a minute's consideration, that it is not necessary to look into the evidence. They think it is their duty to take the statement of the member for North Grey and to act upon that without examining the evidence themselves. Why, the most inferior court in the country would not do such a thing as that. If, before any court in this land, counsel for the prisoner rose and stated that the facts were not as represented to the court by the counsel for the Crown, the court would ask for time to look into the truthfulness or otherwise of the statement made by the counsel for the prisoner. In this case the counsel for the prisoner has declared that his client did not make the statement which you, Mr. Speaker, have been asked to ask him to say he did make before the Committee on Public Accounts, and which you, not having the evidence taken before the Committee on Public Accounts, have put to the witness. Is it not right that we should look into the matter? Is it not right that we should ask the counsel for the prisoner: upon what do you base that statement? Upon what evidence do you say that the hon. member for North Grey has asked Mr. Speaker to put into the mouth of the witness a statement which he did not make? Surely, common justice and common decency require that we shall take reasonable time for the purpose of inquiring into this matter and determining what is the truth. My hon. friend the member for North Grey complains that I have taken the statement of the prisoner at the Bar as against the statement of an hon. member of this House. I did no such thing. I took the statement of a gentleman who occupies a position of King's Counsel in one of the provinces of this Dominion, a gentleman who stands or who ought to stand equally high with a member of this Parliament. It does not at all imply that I mean to say that the member for North Grey had deliberately misled this House. I did not intend to make any statement of that kind; but when a leading King's Counsel appears before the Bar of this House and makes the statement to us that his client has not sworn before the Committee on Public Accounts in the words which it has been sought to place in his mouth by the hon. member for North Grey, through you, Mr. Speaker, that is a serious matter and one worthy of the most careful consideration of every member of this House. Let me ask my right hon. friend if he will not allow me to move the adjournment of the debate so that we can go into the matter carefully, and so that we may come to a conclusion in accordance with what is justice.

Mr. BORDEN: I would hardly like to break into the debate just at this juncture. It may be a proper subject for consideration later. It would be better for my hon. friend to conclude his address at present, and let other hon. members speak who may desire to address the House on the subject.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I desire to examine the evidence carefully and also the other questions which are involved. If I am compelled to finish my speech now, Mr. Speaker, I would be precluded from speaking afterwards.

Mr. BORDEN: If my hon. friend should desire to make any further observations later on, he can do so.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I thank my right hon. friend for that. I should like to quote the evidence that was given, as it appears in 'Hansard' beginning on page 3458 and closing on page 3460. This is the evidence as given to the House on the 17th instant by the hon. member for North Grey: Let me read it.

Q. And commencing with March 31, 1907, and up to the close of the term of your presidency the company did a business with the Government of some $117,000? A. Well, I could not say whether that is correct or not but I believe it to be correct.

Q. You believe it to be correct? A. Yes.

Q. The evidence showed, Mr. Miller, that a resolution had been passed by the directors of the Diamond Light and Heating Company in the month of June, I think it was, of 1907, authorizing you, as president, to make expenditures of money to secure business. Do you recall that resolution? A. Yes.

Q. Have you the books of the company with you? A. No.

Q. They would not now be in your possession? A. No.

Q. Do you recall the resolution? A. I do.

Q. Was that resolution passed at your request? A. Yes.

Q. I understand you represented to the directors that it took a lot of money to secure this amount of business. A. I represented that it would be necessary to use monies in order to secure business.

Q. Did you explain why it would require the expenditure of money to secure the business you were after? A. No, not in detail to any extent. I do not remember exactly what explanation they were given.

Q. What explanation did you give in general terms? A. I could not say. I do not remember what explanation I gave.

Q. You simply told the directors it took money to get this business? A. I could not remember what I did say.

Q. Can you remember anything else than that? A. No, I do not think there was any explanation given in detail.

Q. You simply said it took money to get this business, and, in pursuance of that request, they passed a resolution authorizing you to expend money to get it? A. Yes, to use what money I deemed advisable in order to secure business.

Q. That was in June, 1907, and it was between the date of that resolution and the close or your presidency that the business amounted to the figure named, $117,000. Now, Mr. Miller will you tell us what monies the company placed in your hands to secure business between those dates? A. The total amount was $41,026.

Q. Mr. Bain gave the total amount, and produced cheques making it some $42,000. A. He was not correct.

Q. Have you checked the cheques over since with his evidence? A. No, but I may state that this matter is in the hands of the courts and the amount was specified in the writ against me for an accounting, and it was checked over at that time and that is why I know the amount.

Q. Do you mean to say it was checked over on sworn evidence in court? A. On sworn evidence, and I also corroborated it at the company's office.

Q. And the amount was $41,026? A. Yes.

Q. So that money was placed in your hands between June, 1907, and June, 1911, in order to get some $117,000 worth of Government business?

The witness does not say 'yes' to that. He says:

A. In order to get what business we could. I could not state the amount.

Q. You have stated the amount as $117,000? A. I said I believed it was that.

Q. That is the evidence given by Mr. Bain which you believe to be correct? A. I believe that to be correct.

Q. And beyond that the business of your company, according to Mr. Bain's evidence, only amounted to about $2,000? A. It was not very much. I could not say as to that.

Q. So that it amounts to this: that you were paid $41,026 by the Diamond Light and Heating Company in order to secure $177,000 odd of Government business? A. That money was drawn by me during those years.

* * * * * *

Q. My next question is this: Will you give the committee a statement of where you paid that money? A. I would beg to state that, owing to litigation at the present time going on in the courts in Montreal, and two cases which have yet to come up on which the evidence has not been given, I would respectfully request that I be not forced to answer that question, because I think it would be prejudicial to my case in court to give these details at the present time.

Yet, from that evidence, you have been asked to put to the witness a question as follows:

To whom did you pay the sum of forty-one thousand and twenty-six dollars for the purpost of securing contracts from the Government of the Dominion of Canada, amounting to one hundred and seventeen thousand dollars or thereabouts, between the month of June, 1907, until you ceased to be president of the Diamond Light and Heating Company in June, 1911, as alleged by you on your examination before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts on Friday, the fourteenth of February, 1913?

Now, there is the question put to the witness—to whom did you pay the sum of forty-one thousand and twenty-six dollars'? as you swore to the Public Accounts Committee you did pay in order to secure Government business? But the counsel for the prisoner at the Bar says that he never made such a statement before the Committee as has been attributed to him. And I say he did not, if the hon. member for North Grey has correctly quoted to this House the evidence given before the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. CARVELL: And he did not read it all even then.

Mr. PUGSLEY: No, he did not read it all. But what counsel said the witness had said was that he had received $41,026—he, Mr. Miller, had received it. He had told the directors it would require money in connection with getting the business—that he would be able to get, and that he had drawn from the company $41,000 odd. But he did not say in his evidence that he had paid $41,000 odd for the purpose of securing government business. Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, as presiding officer of this House, and by whom the question has been put to the witness, in view of what his counsel has stated and of what I present to you as to the facts of the case, what can you think of your having been requested by an hon. member of this House to ask the witness a leading question against the statement that has been sworn to by the witness and based upon something which he never swore to before the Committee? And it is because his counsel stated that Mr. Miller had never sworn to that, and because he has said that the business is entirely private and relates to a matter which is pending in the courts, that this House is asked to declare him in contempt and to take away his liberty by committing him to prison until the prorogation of this Parliament. Sir, if this report of the evidence is true, the man could not have answered that question.

Mr. PELLETIER: Why didn't he say so?

Mr. PUGSLEY: He did say so. His counsel said so.

An hon. MEMBER: No, he did not.

Mr. PUGSLEY: He said that this was putting words into the mouth of the witness, it was seeking to put a leading question alleging that he had made a statement which he had never made.

Mr. RHODES: I am sure the hon. gentleman (Mr. Pugsley) wishes to be fair. And I do not see any reason why there should be any heat over the argument. I was present in the Committee on Public Accounts when the witness was examined. His counsel was present, and not one murmur of objection came either from him or from the witness as to the nature of the question or as to the treatment of the witness.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I am not complaining of what took place before the committee, but of what took place here. It is one erroneous and false question that has been submitted to him—not intentionally but unfortunately—by the hon. member for North Grey declaring that the man made a statement under oath before the Committee on Public Accounts which the record shows he never made.

Mr. LANCASTER: How does the hon. gentleman account for the fact that the man himself never made any such objection as the hon. gentleman himself is now making? Why did not he say that he never gave such evidence?

Mr. PUGSLEY: By permission of this House, he was represented by counsel, and his counsel called the attention of the House to the fact that he had not sworn before the committee as the hon. member for North Grey said he had. But the important consideration is that when we come to examine the record upon which the House is called upon the commit this man to the common jail as an ordinary criminal, we find that the statement of his counsel is borne out in every respect. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Lancaster) is a good lawyer; will he not do the prisoner the justice of looking into the evidence taken before the Committee on Public Accounts——

Mr. MEIGHEN: Has the hon. gentleman read all the evidence?

Mr. PUGSLEY: I have considered all the evidence read to the House by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro), because it was submitted by him as the material upon which he asked this court to act, and, if there is any apology due, it should come from the hon. member for North Grey.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I laid on the table of the House the whole of the evidence given by R. C. Miller, and that evidence substantiates the whole of the proceedings that were taken. I did quote the principal parts of that evidence in my remarks, but they were based upon the whole evidence.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The whole evidence does not appear in 'Hansard,' and that is an additional reason why we should have an opportunity of looking into the matter. I would assume that the hon. member for North Grey selected for the purposes of his remarks the important parts of the evidence —and why should he not do so? He did this for the purpose of asking this House to take criminal action against the prisoner at the Bar. Have we the right to assume that the hon. member submitted to the House that portion of the evidence which was not material, and laid upon the table merely what was material? Have we not the right to assume that he called your attention, Sir, and the attention of hon. members of this House, to what he thought was the material part of the evidence upon which the House should act in calling the prisoner to the Bar of this House? Sir, I repeat there is not one word in the evidence which the hon. member read, and which appears in 'Hansard,' to justify the question which you put to the prisoner. That question professes to sum up what the prisoner swore to, but I contend that it sums up what he did not swear to, and adds words which are not justified by what took place before the Public Accounts Committee. That cannot be denied, and, if the allegation made by Mr. Harvey, the counsel for the prisoner, is true; if what I say is true, let me make an appeal to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. Surely to him, charged as he is with the administration of Justice so far as the Dominion is concerned, the liberty of a subject is of some value; surely he considers that, whether high or low, rich or poor, every British subject is entitled to receive justice, and justice only. I ask my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, after considering the evidence given before the Committee on Public Accounts, to tell me and tell this House whether the witness swore to that which by this question he is alleged to have testified. My hon. friend cannot find in the evidence one single word to justify the allegation made in this question to the effect that the witness swore that he had paid out $41,000 for the purpose of securing government business. This man stated before the Committee on Public Accounts that he had told his directors that he would require money to secure business, and that they had paid to him this sum of forty-one thousand odd dollars, but he said not one word as to his having paid this amount to other people for the purpose of securing government business.

Mr. LANCASTER: If that is so, why did not the witness, when asked this question before the Bar of the House, say: 'I didn't pay it to anybody?'

Mr. PUGSLEY: My hon. friend is proposing to adopt the principle upheld in some countries, that a man who is accused shall be deemed to be guilty unless he proves his innocence. What does my hon. friend now say, in effect? Although there is not a particle of evidence against this man, although this question is absolutely unwarranted by the evidence; although the statement of his counsel may be true, my hon. friend asks why this man did not say that he never swore to such a thing? And, because he did not say that—

Mr. LANCASTER: That is not what I said.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Even though this statement contains a supposed allegation of fact which is not fact, my hon. friend says that because the prisoner did not himself deny it, but left it to his counsel, he should be railroaded off to the county jail and incarcerated as a common felon until such time as this Parliament may see fit to release him.

Mr. LANCASTER: I will endeavour to put my hon. friend right, although I admit that it is a somewhat difficult task. What I said was this: If my hon. friend is right in his very technical, and, I would almost say, fictitious argument on behalf of this man, would not the witness himself, when asked the question to which my hon. friend is objecting have stated that he did not pay that money to anybody?

Mr. PUGSLEY: The witness was, in effect, asked this question: 'Before the Committee on Public Accounts you swore that you had paid out some $41,000 for the purpose of securing government business; to whom did you pay that?' His lawyer raised the objection that the witness never swore to anything of the kind before the Public Accounts Committee, and the record upholds this contention. The witness is now held in contempt of this House for not answering this question—a question which, as I have said, contains a statement as a fact which is not a fact, but is absolutely without foundation. The hon. member for Lincoln is just as technical as I thought he was a while ago, and he says, in effect, that even if that to which the counsel has called attention is absolutely true— that the witness never swore to such a statement —and even though the records show that the position taken by counsel is absolutely correct, yet, because the man did not himself deny it—

Mr. LANCASTER: Who was before the Bar, the witness or the counsel?

Mr. PUGSLEY: Therefore we ought to railroad him to jail; in other words, we hold him guilty not because we have proved his guilt, but because he has not proved his innocence. He appears before this high court of Parliament and is treated as being in contempt; this court tells him that he swore to a certain thing before the Committee on Public Accounts. whereas the records show he swore to nothing of the kind. His counsel called the attention of the hon. member for North Grey and of all hon. members of this House to that fact, and yet we are asked to punish him for not answering a question which is a leading one, containing alleged statements of fact, as I have said, which are not facts at all, and which there is no evidence whatever to support.

It seems to me there is another important consideration which this House ought to have in mind, and that is as to whether. in view of the explanation given both by the prisoner at the Bar and his counsel, this Parliament ought to take action at the present time and commit the prisoner to jail. The prisoner has stated that litigation involving these very matters is pending, I understand the hon. member for North Grey to state that he appealed from the order that he should account for this money, but that is as far as the matter has gone. He has to account for that. The matter has not yet reached what is called the enquette stage in Quebec, when evidence is to be taken. My hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Carvell) says that evidence has been taken in one case. However, that is not material. The evidence is still to be given, the rights of the parties are still to be tried out, and the prisoner and his counsel have asked that this matter be allowed to stand over until this litigation be ended, and the counsel says that his client will appear at any time when Parliament asks him to attend. It does not appear that he has at all sought to evade the process of Parliament. It appears that he came here simply on a telephonic message; because, as you know, the order was only passed on February 17, and on the next day, the 18th, the man appeared before the Bar of the House. I take it for granted that he had not even been served with a summons by the Sergeant-at-Arms, but appeared upon a suggestion that he would be required, and that in answer to an inquiry which he made himself. When, in addition to that, he says under oath that he never paid one single dollar to any member of the Senate, to any member of the House of Commons, to any member of the Government, to any official of the Government or of Parliament, in connection with this business, but that it is a matter entirely as between this company and himself, and when all he swears to is that he simply said to his company that it would require money to get business —not mentioning government business at all—and that he received the money, but makes no statement as to paying it out to get government business—that the matter is entirely between him and the company— it does seem to me that it is a question for the House to consider whether it ought to take the extreme measure of committing this man to the common jail.

There is another consideration to which this House ought to have regard, and which I, at all events, would like to look into, and that is whether this federal Parliament can commit one who has offended against its dignity or privileges to a common jail which is under the jurisdiction of and is maintained at the expense of the provincial Government and the municipal authorities. This House of Commons has a Sergeant-at-Arms, an officer who can take offenders against its dignity or privileges into custody, and the prisoner has already been taken into the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. It seems to me that if this Parliament is to punish at all, it is only justified in continuing the committal of the prisoner to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. It is true that it is said in the newspapers that the tower of this Parliament is not a suitable place in which to keep prisoners. If that is true, I presume my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works might, in the course of two or three weeks, have the tower fitted up so that it could be made reasonably comfortably for the accommodation of prisoners who might offend against the dignity and the privileges of this Parliament. It is a lamentable deficiency of this House that it has not a tower to which prisoners of state may be committed. It is true that in the British House of Commons, when a Mr. Maxse was called before one of the committees of the House, and was asked to declare as to certain persons to whom he had referred, but not by name, in connection with the entering into of a contract with respect to wireless telegraphy, and refused to give to the committee information as to the persons to whom he had referred, and a motion was made in the House to commit him to the tower for refusing, the Prime Minister stated that that was a proceeding which was absolutely obsolete, and declined to move for the commitment of the witness. That was a case precisely similar to this, a case in which Mr. Maxse said: 'These are matters private to myself.' The committee said: We are entitled to know, if for no other reason than curiosity—just as the hon. member for North Grey says that even although this man swears that he had no improper dealings with the Government or with any member or official of the Government or with any member of the House of Commons or the Senate, yet we want to know; although it is absolutely private, although it is a matter which may absolutely and entirely concern himself and his company, yet we have started out upon this important pathway, and we want to follow it to the end, and we are bound to drag out of this man this information, even although it may be entirely private and may in no way concern the public interest, and if necessary we will exercise the powers of this High Court of Parliament and send this man to jail as an ordinary offender, to satisfy our curiosity.

Mr. LANCASTER: He might be a middleman.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That might be assumed. We may assume anything. If we choose to rely on a vivid imagination we may imagine anything. But in England the other day the statement made by Mr. Maxse was one which did concern the honour of the Brish Government and of members of the Government; and, although a motion was made for the commitment of this man to the tower until he would answer, Mr. Asquith said that this procedure was obsolete and declined to take the proceedings.

I would ask what right this Parliament has to commit to the common jail, to be maintained at the expense of the government of Ontario and the municipal authorities of the city of Ottawa or the county of Carleton, a man who has been guilty of a contempt against the dignity of this House. Unless there is statutory authority, it seems to me there is no power to do it.

The hon. member for North Grey has cited the case of a man committed to Newgate; but Newgate is a prison of the United Kingdom. It corresponds in England, I suppose, to the penitentiary at Kingston or at Dorchester in Canada. Why has not my hon. friend gone a little further and moved that this man be committed to Kingston penitentiary at hard labour? Why has he stopped? Is it through the tenderness of his heart, or is it because he thinks this Parliament has not the power to commit an offender to the penitentiary?

Mr. CARVELL: No, it is because he is afraid this Parliament will not last two years.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Outside of the tower, outside of the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, I know of no place or person to which or to whose custody this man may be properly committed, and I do not think there is any power to pass the order which my hon. friend has asked this House to pass. I do beg of my right hon. friend, not for myself, because I have no interest in the matter at all, but for the sake of the honour of this House, to allow some little time for consideration in order that whatever action we do take shall be correct, shall be in accordance with justice and with what is due to this Parliament and to the public which this Parliament represents, and which may not be an improper infringement, an unlawful infringement, on the liberty of the subject.

Mr. CROCKET: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that what my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) has said in defence of what he has been pleased to term the honour of the House is entirely beside the question that is now before the House. The other day this House unanimously ordered that a particular question should be put to Mr. Miller. That question was put in pursuance of the order of the House. Mr. Miller has declined to answer the question which the House unanimously directed should be put to him, and all that my hon. friend from the city of St. John has said is, I think, entirely beside that question. Mr. Miller is certainly in contempt of the authority of Parliament at the present time, apart altogether from what my hon. friend has stated with reference to what took place in the Public Accounts Committee. My hon. friend in the argument he has presented to the House has endeavoured to establish that the question which the House ordered should be put to Mr. Miller, was not a question which was justified by the evidence that has been adduced before the Public Accounts Committee. What my hon. friend objects to, as I understand him, is the implication in the question that Mr. Miller paid $41,026 for the purpose of securing contracts from the Government of the Dominion of Canada amounting to $117,000; when he claims that the evidence shows that the amount paid in connection with the entire business of the company amounting to $117,000. I was not in the Public Accounts Committee when this investigation was going on, but I find from the evidence which my hon. friend has already quoted, that Mr. Miller admitted that practically all the business of the company, all the contracts of the company were contracts obtained from the Government, and that there was very little apart from the business that was done with the Government of Canada. The following is the evidence in that regard:

Q. You have stated the amount as $117,000? A. I said I believed it was that.
Q. That is the evidence given by Mr. Bain which you believe to be correct? A. I believe that to be correct.
Q. And beyond that the business of your company, according to Mr. Bain's evidence, only amounted to about $2,000? A. It was not very much. I could not say as to that.
Q. So that it amounts to this: that you were paid $41,026 by the Diamond Light and Heating Co. in order to secure $117,000 odd of Government business? A. That money was drawn by me during those years.
Q. For the purpose of securing that business? A. For the general purpose of getting the business.

Now, I think my hon. friend stopped reading the evidence at that point. Here are some questions and answers which also appear in the printed evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee:

Q. Your travelling expenses and other expenses were paid besides that? A. Yes.
Q. And you gave vouchers for them? A. Yes.
Q. But for this money that you spent to get business you gave no vouchers? A. I initialled only on the cash book of the company.
Q. All you did was initial for the money on the cash book when it was paid you by the secretary? A. Yes.

Now I think, Mr. Speaker, that that evidence which I have just quoted substantially bears out the statement as it is put in the question which this House ordered to be put to the prisoner at the Bar. But all this as I say is entirely beside the question before the House.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The only evidence I have read is what the hon. member for North Grey submitted to the House. Is that all the evidence there is upon which to base the assertion that the witness had sworn before the Committee on Public Accounts that he had paid out this sum of $41,026 for the purpose of securing public business? Is that all?

Mr. CROCKET: I am not able to say, for the reason that I have not read the entire evidence, but I say that the evidence I have read is sufficient to justify the statement as it is set forth in the question which the House ordered to be put to the witness at the Bar.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am acquainted with the evidence also. I would like to inquire if a motion was passed by the Public Accounts Committee to the effect that the question put to the witness in the House was a question which he should answer. It may have been put, but from a cursory glance of the Minutes, which are in the possession of my hon. friend the member for Carleton, I do not find that the Public Accounts Committee ever determined that this was a question which should be answered.

Mr. CARVELL: Or ever submitted.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Or that it was ever submitted. It may have been asked I fancy, by a member, and a motion may have been made that the papers be transmitted to the House; but I cannot find that the Public Accounts Committee ever determined, or attempted to determine, that this was a question which the witness should answer. If they did not determine that, or requested it, I do not think the House could.

Mr. CROCKET: The very next question, following the questions and answers I have already quoted, is:

Q. Will you give this committee a statement of where you paid that money?

And then the witness declined to answer.

A. I would beg to state that owing to litigation at the present time, going on in the courts in Montreal, and two cases which have yet to come up on which the evidence has not been given, I would respectfully request that I be not forced to answer that question, because I think it would be prejudicial to my case in court to give these details at the present time.

The Chairman overruled the objection, and required the witness to answer. He declined to answer, and I presume the committee referred the matter to the House, and it was disposed of by the House the other day, when we unanimously resolved that Mr. Miller be required to answer the question which was put to him this afternoon.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That hardly answers my question. The Chairman would have no power whatever to determine whether the privilege which the witness claimed was well founded.

Mr. CROCKET: What took place in the Public Accounts Committee is not relevant at all to the motion which is now before the House. As I have already said, this House unanimously ordered a question to be put to the prisoner at the Bar. He appeared at the Bar this afternoon and declined to give any answer of any kind whatever to the question. If what my hon. friend from St. John stated this afternoon is true, the witness in my opinion could very well have answered the question and made the explanation which his counsel—I will not say his counsel—which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) presented this afternoon, and that would have been in compliance with the order of this House. What we have to deal with is the refusal by a subject summoned to the Bar of this House.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would ask my hon. friend if he intentionally made the statement that I was counsel for Mr. Miller? If so, I would ask him to withdraw it. It is a very improper statement to make, and is absolutely without foundation, because I have not the acquaintance of Mr. Miller at all. My hon. friend cannot in that clever way put it and say 'I will not say counsel.' He has made an insinuation that I was counsel, and I ask him if he meant it, or not. If he did mean it, I ask him to withdraw the statement.

Mr. CROCKET: Mr. Speaker, you heard exactly what I stated. I referred to my hon. friend as 'my learned friend' and as 'my hon. friend from St. John.' I used the word 'counsel' and immediately withdrew it. If my hon. friend is not satisfied with one withdrawal, voluntarily and instantly made, I do not think it is proper that I should be called upon to make a second. It was simply a slip of the tongue, which I immediately withdrew.

Mr. PUGSLEY: That is quite satisfactory.

Mr. CROCKET: An unfortunate slip that seems to have particularly annoyed my hon. friend.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It always annoys me to have insinuations made by gentlemen who, while having the facts within their knowledge, have not the courage to state the facts.

Mr. CROCKET: My hon. friend from St. John is very solicitous now about maintaining the honour of this Parliament, and has argued with great earnestness in behalf of the prisoner at the Bar. I submit however that the points that he has endeavoured to make in the long argument which he has addressed to the House this afternoon, should have been made by him when the motion was presented to the House the other day that this question should be put to Mr. Miller. That motion was unanimously adopted and it seems to me that the only thing that this House has now to consider is how we shall deal with Mr. Miller because of his deliberate refusal to answer the question which the House demanded him to answer.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend from York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket) has had so little practice in speaking in this House during the last two or three years that I fear he does not think with his ordinary agility. But now that he has found his voice, I think that in a short time he will come around to his ordinary way of talking, and will talk much more logically than he has done this afternoon. My hon. friend did not seem to grasp the proposition put forth by my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Pugsley) in a very lucid manner. My hon. friend from St. John practically stated that this question, which was put to the witness, Mr. Miller, by His Honour the Speaker, contained an unwarranted assertion of facts as based upon the evidence given by Mr. Miller in the Public Accounts Committee and which was professedly given to this House by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro). My hon. friend from York was fair enough to read to this House practically every word of the evidence given my Mr. Miller in the Public Accounts Committee bearing upon this question. I was present at that meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, as I usually am, and I think that the evidence as taken down is exactly as it was given. I have read this evidence over very carefully and I find only one place where I think there has been the least slip of a word; otherwise it is an absolutely verbatim report of the evidence as given. The point which the hon. member for York has failed to appreciate is that Mr. Miller never swore that he paid money to anybody and that Mr. Miller never intimated that he paid money to anybody. What Mr. Miller swore was that he received from the company $41,026 for the purpose of obtaining government business. However, the hon. member for North Grey turns around and says: What did you do with the money which you paid for obtaining government business when Mr. Miller never said that he did.

Mr. BLAIN: That question was asked the witness and he refused to answer it.

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend, I think could not have been there. I will read what the witness says:

My next question is this: Will you give the committee a statement of where you paid that money? A. I would beg to state that, owing to the litigation at the present time going on in the courts in Montreal, and two cases which have yet to come up on which the evidence has not been given, I would respectfully request that I be not forced to answer that question, because it would be prejudicial to my case in court to give these details at the present time.

Mr. LANCASTER: Does that not mean that he paid it to somebody?

Mr. CARVELL: My hon. friend from Lincoln and Niagara cannot ask me what that meant. That is for him to state. I am only giving the evidence as it appears and Mr. Miller never said that he paid this money to anybody for the purpose of obtaining government business. My contention is that the hon. member for North Grey has placed in the mouth of Mr. Speaker the direct statement that he did pay this money to some person for obtaining government business and he wants the witness to say to whom he gave it. The hon. member for Lincoln, a few moments ago, when my hon. friend from St. John was speaking, asked: Why did his counsel not interfere? If the hon. member for Lincoln had been in the Public Accounts Committee that morning and if he had seen the manner in which this question was handled by the chairman, he would know why counsel did not object to anything.

Mr. LANCASTER: I did not say anything about counsel objecting.

Mr. CARVELL: How could he do so?

Mr. LANCASTER: Will the hon. gentleman pardon me? I did not say a word to the hon. member for St. John about counsel objecting; what I did say was that the man himself never made the statement that the hon. member for St. John says he ought to have made.

Mr. CARVELL: That is drawing a pretty fine distinction.

Mr. LANCASTER: The man knows, and he did not say so.

Mr. CARVELL. If my hon. friend had been in the Public Accounts Committee and had heard the chairman of that committee, in the first place, refuse to give this man counsel, refuse to allow the committee to discuss it at all, telling the committee that this man could not have counsel because the Government did not have counsel; and then, if he could have heard the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee declare the motion to give this man counsel lost when a majority had voted for it, and if, when the chairman was obliged to count the hands that were held up, he could have heard him compelled to reverse his decision and declare that the motion was carried, he would have understood why this man's counsel had not interfered.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I want to tell the hon. gentleman that when this question was first put to the committee, there were five or six members who held up their hands when they were not members of the committee, but when the motion was put a second time they did not hold up their hands, and consequently the motion was lost.

Mr. CARVELL: If my hon. friend can get any consolation out of a statement like that, I have no objection. But I would like to say to my hon. friend from Lincoln that he is not used to being at the Public Accounts Committee; he is used to being at a committee where, I understand, things are run properly, and naturally assumes that they are run in the same manner in the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. LANCASTER: Thanks; I will not say anything further.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am afraid it is not permissible to reflect on the action of this House, or any committee of the House, except upon a motion to reconsider, rescind, or act upon it.

Mr. CARVELL: I want to keep myself, Mr. Speaker, entirely within the rules of the House. I was only complimenting, I thought, my hon. friend from Lincoln on the splendid manner in which he conducts the Railway Committee. That was certainly my object in making the reference.

Mr. LANCASTER: I am glad you take it that way.

Mr. CARVELL: But there is another question to be considered. The counsel for the prisoner, if we are to term him such, raised the question that his client ought not to be compelled to answer this question because it was not properly put and because it was an assertion of facts that never existed. I think counsel was justified in raising that objection. There is not a legal gentleman on this or the other side of the House who would hesitate for a moment in deciding, if he were placed on the bench, that this is not a proper question to be answered. There is not a court in Canada—there is not a justice of the peace in Canada—who would ask a witness to answer a question based upon an improper and imperfect assertion of facts. A responsible gentleman, a lawyer of standing and a King's Counsel, a man about whom I know nothing, comes before this House, the highest court in Canada, as hon. gentleman are pleased to term it, and when a gentleman of such standing comes here and says: I object to my client being compelled to answer a question based on an improper and imperfect statement of facts. I say it is beneath the dignity of this House to force this man off to jail like a felon for the next two or three months if he does not answer the question. We are not living in Russia; we are supposed to be living in a civilized country; I intend to consider that we are living in a civilized country until something takes place which will change my opinion. A very important question has arisen in this debate, a question which I think requires more than a mere passing notice. My friend from North Grey has cited some old cases, some of them a hundred years old or more——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Times of slavery.

Mr. CARVELL: I can only say that times have changed in Canada since then. I am not old enough to remember the days of the old Family Compact; my grandfather was old enough, and I am old enough to remember what my grandfather has told me. It was a very small thing a hundred years ago for the Family Compact to send an ordinary plebeian to jail. It was like the old case down in New Brunswick, when the force of the Family Compact was broken; when responsible government was established and an ordinary plebeian was made a justice of the peace. He went down to the legislative offices, walked in and said: 'I want to be qualified as justice of the peace,' and the old Family Compact official told him, 'I can swear you in but the Lord Almighty cannot qualify you.' That was the spirit which governed things a hundred years ago. I have no doubt that my friends can find lots of authorities a hundred years ago, when men were sent to jail as common criminals for very small offences. I think cases can be found where men were executed for theft in Canada. You need not go back a hundred years or even half a hundred years to find a time when a man was not even allowed to give evidence in a civil case in his own defence, let alone in a criminal case. Fifty years ago a man would not be allowed to give his own side of the case at all against any evidence. Things have changed since then, and I am very glad of it. I have very grave doubts as a matter of law whether we have jurisdiction to commit this man to jail. I have not looked into the matter, but I have seen no evidence so far to justify me in coming to the conclusion that we can do so. I believe that we have the right to imprison this man in the House of Commons in the tower or some such place. My friend has cited a number of cases where men were sentenced to the common jail by the legislative assemblies of the province of Ontario and Nova Scotia; but remember that the province of Ontario creates the authorities which own, control and manage the common jails. The province of Ontario appoints the sheriff and the sheriff is the man who has charge of the jails. The same is true of the province of Nova Scotia and of all the provinces of Canada. There is no doubt that the legislative assembly of any of the provinces has the jurisdiction to sentence a man to the common jail, because the common jail is of their own creation and under the control of one of their own officers. What control have we over the common jail of the county of Carleton or the sheriff thereof? You might just as well send this man down to the common jail in Montreal or Vancouver. The jailer or the sheriff would say: what right have I to receive this man?

Mr. LANCASTER: Supposing he receives him, what then?

Mr. CARVELL: Then I have very grave doubts whether he would not be liberated under habeas corpus.

Mr. LANCASTER: Over this Parliament?

Mr. CARVELL: I am only giving my own opinion. I wish to tell my hon. friend that my opinion is this: If Parliament has not the power at present to put this man in the common jail, the only way in which to do it is to pass an amendment to the Criminal Code. Then we would have the power.

Mr. LANCASTER: What court could restrain Parliament?

Mr. CARVELL: My opinions may not coincide with those of hon. gentlemen opposite. I am only putting these forward as some of the reasons why in my judgment the request for delay in this matter should be granted. Surely it cannot do any harm. This man is now under confinement, he cannot get away. I just want to say before I close that I think it is a great pity that men who have the authority in this matter refuse this man the right to go to the restaurant, as he did the first day, but confine him as a common felon in the House in a cell. I think it is pretty small business, whoever is responsible for it.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CARVELL: When the House rose at six o'clock I had been discussing some doubts I entertained as to the legality of this House to ordering a man to the common jail of the county of Carleton. Of course, I have had no time to look the matter up, but the more I think of it, the more I am satisfied that there is a great difference between the authority of this House of Commons to direct a man to be imprisoned in the common jail and the authority of a legislature or a House of Assembly of the province to so direct. I have not looked into the matter lately, but from my recollection of reading of constitutional law, the sheriff originally was the first subject of the county and represented the King. He carried out the instructions of the King. To-day the sheriffs of the different provinces of Canada represent the King in those provinces, but not in respect of the Dominion; while, therefore, I think it might be quite proper for the provincial legislature to order a man to be imprisoned in the common jail until he purged himself of the contempt of which he was found guilty in regard to the House of Assembly, it might not follow that the House of Commons has the same power. That is only another reason why I think, there should be delay. I may be wrong in my law, and I do not put it forward as an absolute proposition of law, but it is certainly a matter requiring some examination, and I think that this House of Commons, which, as has been said here a number of times, is the highest court in this country, ought not to do anything rashly or put itself on record until after the fullest investigation or without giving every member who sits here in the capacity of judge opportunity to inform himself concerning the matter and reach a conclusion by himself.

There is another reason why, in my judgment, we are proceeding on a wrong principle. This is a matter of great importance to the defendant—I propose to call him the 'defendant' instead of 'prisoner.' He came here and made his statement, and his counsel has made his statement, as to the reason why, in his opinion, his client ought not to be called upon to answer this question. By direction of this House, I think wrongly—not wrong legally, but wrongly as a matter of fairness and right between man and man—the witness and his counsel were denied the right to remain in this House and listen to the investigation. We have no arguments from the defendant's counsel. We do not know what his position is. He might have something to put before us with regard to our right to put a man in the jail of the county of Carleton that we have not before us now. Because, the members of this House, except possibly my hon. friend from North Grey, have not had any opportunity to investigate the matter, for the simple reason that we did not know that it was coming up. I do not suppose that there is a man in this House of Commons who has spent ten minutes over the question except the hon. member for North Grey. No man has had the opportunity to investigate. I think it would be only fair and in accordance with common-sense if sufficient time were given us for investigation.

Another reason, why, in my opinion, is a cogent one is this: It has been stated here as well as in the Public Accounts Committee, and no one will gainsay it, that there are disputes about money matters between this man Miller and his co-directors of this lighting company. As a matter of fact, it is in evidence that there are three suits in process at the present time. One has been tried, and we are told the issue was whether or not this man should render an accounting to his co-directors for the expenditure or non-expenditure of $41,000. It is true, as stated by the counsel for Mr. Miller, that no additional evidence can be used on the argument of this case before the Appellate Court of Quebec. I am assuming the law as stated here, and am arguing the case from these premises. But, Sir, they argued in this instance that this man should render an accounting. And the trial court has decided in the affirmative—that he shall render the accounting to his co-directors. Miller is appealing against that as a matter of law, and saying that the trial judge is in error in saying that he must render this accounting. Suppose the Appelate Court decides that Miller's contention is right—and we know that it is a very common thing for the decisions of trial judges to be reversed on appeal—and that his co-directors are not entitled to an accounting, what then? This Parliament will have compelled the defendant to give information which the courts of the land have decided he is not called upon to give. And if he gives the information, what is the use of his appeal? Is not that a reason why this Parliament should, at least, take some time to consider the matter before this man is forced to give information which he says is purely a private matter?

I do not wish to argue the matter further. I put it on the high ground that justice certainly should emanate from this House, the highest court of this country. No injustice can result from reasonable delay, and by taking reasonable time for investigation and consideration, I believe this House will be doing that which will elevate it in the opinion of the people of this country, for it will mean that we shall view this question from the lofty standpoint that we are not here to prosecute men, to do justice and give fair-play to every man. I commend to the right hon. gentleman who leads the House that he might well comply with the request made by the defendant's counsel. Nobody could be placed in any unfavourable position thereby. There is no question of backing down in this matter. The Government has not brought this up, the Conservative party has not brought this up, nor has the Liberal party. It is purely a matter of the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, who brought this matter before the House of Commons and has asked that this man be committed to the jail of the county of Carleton for refusing to answer this question. It would seem to me that if there is anything in the contention—and I think there is a good deal—that this defendant ought not to be compelled to disclose private matter which he claims will interfere with the proper administration of justice in the province of Quebec between him and his co-directors, no harm should result by delay, not merely of three of four days, but until the matter is settled in law. This defendant is a resident of the Dominion of Canada, and I am told he is carrying on a big business in Montreal. So, even after this case is settled, even if this Parliament wants to bring him before them and to exercise the power, if they possess it, that it is proposed they shall exercise justice, shall be satisfied, the dignity of Parliament will be sustained, and we shall have at least the consciousness that the highest court in this land has not deprived a man of liberty for caprice merely but on well reasoned ground and in high public interest.

Mr. ARTHUR MEIGHEN (Portage la Prairie): I think I see in the more moderate tone of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) since eight o'clock, as compared with the much stronger language he used before that time, a softening of his convictions that there is anything wrong or anything that can reasonably be opposed in the resolution before the House. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) attempted to advance something which merits refutation even though it is aside from the issue which we are now considering. The hon. member for St. John takes serious objection to the form of the question asked of the witness Mr. Miller. The objection which he takes is that Mr. Miller had alleged before the Public Accounts Committee that he had paid $41,026 to secure some $117,000 worth of government business, and he says that inasmuch as that allegation is not correct, the question is unfair and we should not ask him to answer it. There appears to be no question on the other side of the House that this money, whether spent or not, was paid to Mr. Miller by the company for the purpose of getting government business.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. CARVELL: Getting business generally, he said.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Carleton, in the course of his speech, repeatedly referred to the money as being voted this man for the purpose of getting government business. I noted it in his remarks, and gave him credit for not wanting to quibble over so small a matter as the rest of the business which the company secured. The evidence was clear a year ago, and is doubly clear now, that the money was voted for that purpose to Miller by the company, Miller does not dispute it in any part of his testimony, and the member for Carleton expressly admitted it in his speech this afternoon. Furthermore, Miller confirms the evidence of Bain that in all the years following the resolution to pay him this money, and up to Miller's severance from the company in June, 1911, the total business secured by the company, aside from its business with the late Government, was not over $2,000. That their business with the late Government was about $119,000 was the evidence of Bain, but, according to Mr. Miller, the amount was about $117,000. Surely, therefore, it is doing no justice to the intelligence of this House to say that the money was voted for any other purpose than to secure government business. I state again so that my position so far cannot be misconstrued:—It is quibbling and worse than quibbling to endeavour to raise an objection to the motion on the ground that part of this money might have been voted to secure anything else than government business. It was government business they were after; such was the evidence of Bain, and such was the evidence of Miller; and I quote from Mr. Miller when I say that practically all the business that the company did during his presidency, and subsequent to that resolution, was government business, and it was that end to which they directed their efforts. But the hon. member for St. John says: 'Be it so, there is no evidence that Miller ever paid the money.' He says further that Miller's counsel comes to the Bar of this House and asserts that there is embodied in the question put to the witness a wrong and a false allegation, in that the question assumed that Miller stated that he paid that money at all. I presume that I state fairly the position of the hon. member for St. John; if I do not, he is not so modest as to refrain from interrupting me.

Mr. PUGSLEY: It is not exactly as my hon. friend puts it. The question makes an assertion to the witness that: 'You swore that you paid the sum of $41,026 for the purpose of securing government business.' My statement was that there is no evidence before the Public Accounts Committee which warrants that statement in the question.

Mr. MEIGHEN: It would take a mind quite as astute as that of my hon. friend to see the difference between that and what I said. The hon. gentleman stated that Mr. Miller's counsel came to the Bar of this House and asserted that there was a false allegation in the question, in that it alleged that Miller had stated that he paid that money. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. PUGSLEY: No. The counsel stated that the question alleged that he paid that money for the purpose of securing government business.

Mr. MEIGHEN: And the hon. member stood in his place in this House and said the allegation that Miller paid the money at all, or said he paid it, was false, and in this he was supported by the hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. CARVELL: Will the hon. gentleman show me any part of the evidence in which Miller says he ever paid out a dollar of it?

Mr. MEIGHEN: I will come to that too soon for the comfort of my hon. friend. The hon. member for St. John was in that statement corroborated by the hon. member for Carleton. But the elevation to which the hon. member for St. John ascended was even higher than that. He stated that there was a question of veracity as between Miller and his counsel on the one hand and the hon. member for North Grey on the other in that the counsel for Miller had stated that there was no allegation in Miller's evidence that he had paid the money at all, and that, so far as his evidence went, it was quite consistent with his never having paid the money. He put the hon. member for North Grey against the counsel for Miller on this question, as he called it, of veracity. But no reasonable man can read the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee and come to any other conclusion than that the allegation that the money was paid is perfectly justified. In the first place, there was no assumption, either in the questioning or the answering, that the money was not paid; every question was built upon the assumption that the money was paid, and, when Mr. Miller declined repeatedly to deny that it was paid, commonsense would certainly lead to the conclusion that he had paid it, and that that was the impression he desired to leave with the committee. Let me call attention to a question put by myself in the Public Accounts Committee and answered by Mr. Miller. This question is a part of the records of the House; the whole evidence was laid on the table on Friday last and has been before the hon. member for St. John and the hon. member for Carleton for almost a week.

Q. Your travelling expenses and other expenses were paid besides that? A. Yes.

Q. And you gave vouchers for them? A. Yes.

Q. But for this money that you spent to get business you gave no vouchers? A. I initialled only in the cash book of the company.

From these statements, who could draw any other conclusion than that Mr. Miller intended the committee to believe that the money was spent as alleged in the question? Allow me to state also that Mr. Miller's counsel came before the Public Accounts Committee and distinctly repudiated any allegation that the money was not spent. Further than that, Mr. Miller came before the House of Commons to-day and repeated the repudiation of any such allegation, because he stated that he had been guilty of nothing criminal. If he had not spent the money he had appropriated what was not his own. In what part of the evidence can it be found that the allegation that the money was not spent is repudiated? I refer to page 11:

Mr. Chairman: I think it is only fair that you should have the right to state the grounds upon which you refuse to answer the question, but I understand the witness has already given those grounds, and that he has said that he has not paid that money to any government official or member of Parliament.

Mr. Meighen: No, the grounds advanced by the witness are that it is under litigation.

Mr. Harvey (Counsel): The witness has not said that he did not pay the money.

Mr. German: The witness did not make that statement

Mr. Chairman: The witness admits that some $41,000 odd had been paid for securing Government business to the extent of $117,000, then we asked him to whom these payments were made and he refused to say.

Mr. German : On the advice of his counsel, I suppose.

This assumption of the witness was not repudiated, and it was acquiesced in by every possible means that the money was paid to someone. Furthermore, Mr. Miller states in his last remarks to the committee:

Well, Mr. Chairman, I started to give these reasons some time ago and you told me to sit down. In connection with the litigation now on in Montreal, my reason—or rather an additional reason—for not giving the destination of that money is this :

And he proceeds to give the reason why he would not give the destination of that money. If the money had no destination, how could he have referred to it in such a manner? The hon. member for St. John states that it is now alleged by counsel for Mr. Miller that there is a false allegation in the statement, in that it affirms that Miller stated the money was paid. I was surprised at the time to hear this statement on the part of the hon. member for St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise to a point of order. What I stated was that there was not a particle of evidence before the committee to justify the statement contained in the question that Miller had sworn that he had paid $41,026 for the purpose of securing government business. That is what I said, and that, Mr. Speaker, is what I repeat, and if my hon. friend will carefully read the evidence he will see that I am absolutely correct.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member made the statement, he says; but he also made the further statement that counsel for Mr. Miller had stated, and put himself in opposition to the word of the hon. member for North Grey, that there was no allegation in the evidence of Mr. Miller at all that the money had been paid. The hon. member affirms that?

Mr. PUGSLEY: No, the hon. member does not affirm that. What I say is that Mr. Harvey stated, if my memory serves me aright, that the question fallaciously alleged that Mr. Miller had sworn before the Committee on Public Accounts that he had paid this sum for the purpose of securing government business. That is what Mr. Harvey stated, that is what I repeat, and it is upon that ground that I say the question put through you, Mr. Speaker, to the witness, contained an absolutely false allegation.

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member cannot escape by quibbling so long as I am on my feet and have my reason about me. The question is in two parts: First, was the money given for government business? Was that ever denied by him, or did he assume it was? He assumed it was, distinctly, and said so in his evidence at page 5. The hon. member took that up, and went on further to discuss whether or not there was evidence to support the allegation in the question that Mr. Miller had alleged that it had been paid at all, and he distinctly stated and repeated time and again before this House that there was no such allegation, and that counsel for Mr. Miller had denied the truth of the implication in the question that Mr. Miller's evidence supported the paying of the money. I have taken the trouble to procure from 'Hansard' their transcript of Mr. Harvey's statement before this House, and I shall read that to the House just as it came from 'Hansard':

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Speaker and hon. gentlemen: I appreciate the indulgence you have given to my client, Mr. Miller, and I ask the privilege of speaking very briefly. I wish, in the first place, to call the attention of the House to the fact that the question as it is put has a tendency to put in Mr. Miller's mouth words that he never uttered at all. What Mr. Miller did state before the committee and what he stated in court was that during the four or five years that these transactions with the Diamond Light and Heating Company were going on he had paid the sum of $41,026 in connection with getting business for the company.

He had paid the money; so where does the allegation of the hon. gentlemen drop when they state that Mr. Harvey is telling the truth when he asserts that Mr. Miller had never given evidence that he had paid the money at all? And if hon. gentlemen can find, despite the evidence of Mr. Miller, any consolation in the fact that $2,000 of business was got from someone else and the $117,000 or $119,000 from the Government, they are welcome to that consolation. But I apprehend I am within the mark when I say that the whole profits within these five years coming from anyone outside the Government would not pay a very large proportion of the $41,026—would scarcely be enough to buy Christmas cards for their other customers. It appears, then, from the evidence given here and read before this House—it appears from the plain, honest admission of the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), that the money was paid to Mr. Miller, and its purpose was to get government business, combined with the statement read before this House just now, made by Mr. Harvey, counsel for the prisoner, that the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) was doing something derogatory to his own dignity as a member of this House, and doing no justice to Parliament itself, when he asserted that there was any question of conflict of evidence, any question of veracity as between Mr. Harvey and the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro). There could be nothing clearer in substance than that every allegation and imputation which can be drawn from that question as put is supported by the facts in every particular.

Now, what remains for this House? We are now called upon to discharge a solemn duty in deciding whether or not we shall proceed further with Mr. R. C. Miller, at the Bar of Parliament. What is Mr. Miller's record in that regard? A year ago he was summoned to give evidence, after other members of this company had given testimony to the effect that some $42,000, according to Mr. Bain, had been paid to Mr. Miller for the purpose of getting government business. He is summoned, and the summons is served upon him. He refuses to come. In his own words, he ignores the summons of the committee, and he remains somewhere where processes cannot get him. This is reported to Parliament. A warrant is issued, and during all the remainder of the time that Parliament sat it was impossible for the officers of this Parliament to find Mr. Miller to serve him with the warrant. That was the record during the session of a year ago. The matter is now resumed; he is brought before the Public Accounts Committee; he declines to give evidence before the Public Accounts Committee, which that committee has a right to receive. I affirm again that the evidence which he is asked to give is evidence which on every precedent, in every regard for the public interest, the Committee on Public Accounts is entitled to receive. I submit that the Public Accounts Committee is beyond all cavil and doubt entitled to trace the destination of that $41,000, and that it is not enough to aver, in the bald language of Mr. Miller, that he did not pay a dollar to a member of Parliament, a senator, or an officer of the Government. It would be possible for Mr. Miller to pay that money in a thousand ways that would be a breach of privilege, that would be corrupt, and still have his statement true, and it is further possible that cross-examination might bring out the fact that the statement was not true.

I was astonished this evening to hear the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) argue that it was the duty of this Parliament to discharge Mr. Miller from custody and await the result of litigation in Montreal. I was astonished beyond measure to hear it, and why? Because the hon. member is the very gentleman, lawyer as he is, who stood before the Public Accounts Committee and asserted that the litigation of Mr. Miller had nothing to do with his answering questions. I will refer him to what took place there. It is found on page 8 of the report of the Committee on Public Accounts. Mr. Carvell had argued at some length that Mr. Miller was bound to answer, quite irrespective of the litigation. Then the report goes on:

Mr. MEIGHEN: Your position is that the litigation in the courts of Montreal does not affect us, but the whole province of this committee is to inquire whether or not public servants get money?

The House will apprehend the question.

Your position is that the litigation in the courts of Montreal does not affect us, but the whole province of this committee is to inquire whether or not public servants get money.

Mr. Carvell.—Public servants or public men, or whether there has been anything wrong in connection with obtaining this business.

Mr. Meighen.—That is, the committee has not the general power to inquire into what Miller did with the money?

Mr. Carvell.—That is my position.

Mr. Meighen.—Regardless of litigation.

Mr. Carvell.—That is the ground.

And this is the hon. gentleman who to-night comes before this Parliament and asks that the request of Mr. Harvey be granted, and who calls upon the Prime Minister of Canada to discharge the prisoner at the Bar, to let him go at large, and to await the end somewhere in the distant future when he gets through with his litigation in Montreal. It was argued then, and it is argued again to-night, that all this House is concerned with is to ascertain whether or not senators and members of Parliament, or servants of either House, got the money. That was argued also by the hon. member for Carleton before the Public Acounts Committee. He has not changed that part to-night. He affirms the position which he took then. But a year ago, when this matter was up before the Public Accounts Committee, the hon. member for Carleton was the very gentleman who asserrted that the general power of inquiry into the destination of that money was a matter for the Public Accounts Committee. I shall quote what the hon. member for Carleton said. I find it on page 38 of the evidence in the report of the Public Accounts Committee for 30th March, 1912: Mr. Carvell discussing at the time a question which had been put to one of the directors, Mr. Morrison as to what took place at the directors' meeting said:

I do not think this witness has come here to give evidence as to reasons. We are here inquiring about what became of this money, and surely my learned friend is not going to ask this Committee to allow him to give evidence as to what took place in the meeting.

Later on the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., at the same sitting, made use of the following words:

We have not any objection whatever to getting all the evidence you can bring, or all the witnesses you can bring, who know about the paying of this money.

So that it could not have been defined in any clearer or stronger language than the hon. member for Carleton, N.B., used a year ago, that that committee had undoubtedly power to inquire into the destination of the money.

Mr. CARVELL: Was there any evidence at that time of any litigation pending?

Mr. MEIGHEN: The hon. member for Carleton, N.B., is himself authority for the statement that the litigation did not affect it; so that we come to this point, with no shadow of doubt—and surely I did not need to quote any authority before this Parliament in support of the assertion—that as regards the destination of the money paid to get $117,000 of government business, even if you add $2,000 for some other business, this Public Acounts Committee and this House, have not only the right, but the duty cast upon them, to find out where that money went. So that the question is a proper one; no implication, no statement, no allegation, no interrogatory in it that could be objected to by any reasonable man. But, says the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), ex-attorney general for the province of New Brunswick: I object to that question, I object to forcing this witness, Miller, to answer, because the question is a leading question. And he referred in terms of scorn——

Mr. PUGSLEY: I said a leading one. and a false one.

Mr. MEIGHEN: There are many members of this House who are practitioners at the Bar. I do not address myself to them; it would appear to them too ridiculous for discussion. I address myself to the laymen of the House; for who does not know why a question is objectionable on the ground that it is a leading one? There is a rule against leading question put by counsel to their own clients or witnesses in the box, and the ground of objection is that it suggests to the witness the answer to the question; it makes the answer easy for the witness, and leads the witness to understand what counsel wants as an answer. Is that the objection to this question? We have had the spectacle of the ex-Attorney of New Brunswick, a distinguished lawyer, without a doubt, standing in Parliament and asking this Parliament to exonerate a recalcitrant witness because, forsooth, the question is too easy for him and the answer to same too plainly suggested.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise to a point of order.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, sit down.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise to correct my hon. friend. I did not say that the question was objectionable simply because it was leading. I said it was objectionable because it was leading, and also because it contained a statement purporting to be a statement of fact, which was false.

Mr. MEIGHEN: That is exactly what I stated the hon. gentleman said. I took up both his reasons, first that it was false. and next that it was leading, with what success I leave the House to judge. It is affirmed, in rather hesitating language no doubt, but none the less it is affirmed by hon. members opposite that we have not the power to act as we are now undertaking to act, or as we are asked to act by the hon. member for North Grey; that we have no power to commit this man to the common jail of the county of Carleton. I am free to admit that in the history of Canada since Confederation there has not been a precedent for committal to jail. Since the year 1867, when our present Constitution was granted, there has not been a case of committal, for the simple and obvious reason that there has been no instance of a witness defying this House. But while there has been no precedent for committal, there has also been no precedent in this House, or any other precedents that I have been able to trace, for any witness coming before Parliament and defying its request, and persisting in that defiance day after day; no precedent one hundred years ago, or ten years ago, or at any time in the history of the British Parliament or this one, but the Parliaments of the provinces of Canada before Confederation without question, to commit to jail witness witnesses who refused to answer questions. After being given every opportunity to answer, they were, I say, repeatedly committed to jail by the Parliaments that preceded the present House of Commons. Furthermore, in the Old Land, in the Imperial House, from the earliest days to the present, each time a case such as this has arisen, the witness has been first of all committed to custody and afterwards committed to jail. In some cases he has been committed to the tower, in other cases to His Majesty's jail at Newgate or to other public prisons, he has been committed. The authorities go to show that the Imperial Parliament, at all events, had power to commit a prisoner such as this to any common, or as it is stated, to any public jail. In this connection I shall quote first of all the authority frequently referred to in this House, Bourinot. At page 158 he says:

It is clearly established that the power of commitment for contempt is incident to every court of justice, and more especially belongs to the Houses of Parliament as essential to the maintenance of their undoubted rights and privileges;—that it is incompetent for other courts to question the exercise of the privileges of the Houses of Parliament in a commitment for an offence which they have adjudged to be a contempt of those privileges; —that they cannot inquire into the form of the commitment, even supposing it to be open to objection on the ground of informality; that when the Houses adjudge anything to be a contempt or a breach of privilege, their adjudication is a conviction, and their conviction, in consequence, an execution.

If we have here the power to commit, surely we have the power to commit to some place designated by the Criminal Code the statue of this House, for all parties committed by competent authority, to the common jail. We have the power, hence we are a competent authority and hence, under the code, the proper place to commit is the common jail. I quote May:

The power of commitment, with all the authority which can be given by law, being established, it becomes the keystone of parliamentary privilege and contempt; and if the warrant recite that the person to be arrested has been guilty of a breach of privilege, the courts of law cannot inquire into the grounds of the judgment, but must leave him to suffer the punishment awarded by the Commons House of Parliament by which he stands committed.

But, I refer more specifically to another great authority on parliamentary powers and procedure, 'The Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies' by L. S. Cushing. I refer you to him first at page 401:

When a witness refuses to answer the questions which he is directed to answer, or to produce a paper or other document, the proceeding against him is intended not only as a punishment for his contempt, but also to compel him to obey the order. For these purposes a contumacious witness is usually committed, in the first instance, to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

That is our proceeding now.

If this fails to induce him to submit himself to the order, he may then be committed to Newgate, or some other public prison.

Could words be more clear or general? That is undoubtedly the privilege of the Imperial usages of Parliament. They can commit to any common jail or public prison. The question arises: Has this Commons of Canada a power commensurate with the power exercised by the Imperial House? I affirm it has. By section 18 of the British North America Act, this House is empowered to establish its immunities and privileges on any status it cares to by Act of this House, provided that it cannot establish immunities and privileges higher than those enjoyed by the Imperial House. And by section 4 of the Parliament Act, it was enacted that the House of Commons of Canada should thereafter enjoy all the immunities and privileges enjoyed within the Imperial House. This Parliament is now clothed and vested with every privilege requisite to control its procedure which has been vested in the Imperial Parliament. There can be no doubt as to the power of this Parliament to commit and if it has the power to commit, it has the power to commit the same as the Imperial Parliament has, namely, to the common jail and the Criminal Code reaffirms that all commitments legally made by a proper tribunal are to the common jail. There can be no reasonable doubt at all in my mind as to this in so far as I have been able to investigate it and I make no pretence that I have not had time enough. I have had a week in which to do it and, on the authorities I quote, not on my own authority at all, I ask this House to come to the conclusion that it is the undoubted right of Parliament to commit this man and to commit him to the common jail.

It is not only competent for but clearly the duty of this House and for this reason: On the 17th of this month we passed an order that Mr. R. C. Miller be asked a specific question, namely, the question that he has been asked to-day. Then was the time for any hon. member of this House, according to all precedent, to object to the form of the question if he had such objection, and any hon. member who sat in this House and voted for that motion, as all did, is stopped, by all the rules of common sense from afterwards saying that he objects to the form of the question. Hon. members then gave assent to the purpose of the question and the form in which it was put. The witness comes here; surely after he gives his answer, or rather, after he refuses to give his answer, is not the time to object to the form of the question even could a valid objection be made. I affirm that hon. gentlemen are too late and I affirm, moreover, that had they raised an objection in time, there is obviously nothing in it at all. Here a witness stands defying this House, saying that the House can order what it likes, he does not require to submit and his counsel can come and ask that, having done that, he be discharged from custody and this House surrender to the pert dictum of its own prisoner.

Mr. Speaker, the only question we can discuss now, beyond what I have stated is this: Did he give sufficient reasons to this House to warrant us in moderating our course, to warrant us even adjourning this matter to ascertain whether or not it was our duty to commit him to prison? What are his reasons? When we strip his statement of all its verbiage, when we strip it of its self-adulation, when we get down to any bare semblance of reason what is it?—because I have litigation pending in Montreal, I have civil rights in dispute, I ask this House, as the highest court in Canada, to wait until I have disposed of these actions. If that is to become the rule of this House then all a witness has to do at any time when he is summoned before this Parliament is to start a suit against somebody in relation to the matter in question and forthwith he will be discharged from any obligation to the House. If he does not care to start a suit himself, all he has to do is to get a friend of his to start one for him and then we will have hon. gentlemen opposite getting up and saying that this is ample reason for discharging him from the custody of Parliament. A more absurd position or one more derogatory to the honour of Parliament could scarcely be imagined. To cite authority again: I would refer the hon. member for Carleton, N. B. (Mr. Carvell) to Cushing, page 397:

It has already been seen, that a witness before either House of Parliament cannot excuse himself from answering any question that may be put to him (with a single exception presently to be noticed), on the ground that the answer would subject him to an action; or expose him to a criminal proceeding; or be the means of divulging the secrets of his client communicated to him in professional confidence; or be in breach of a judicial oath, as a grand-juror; or of a voluntary oath, as a Freemason, or the like, some of which would be sufficient grounds of excuse in a court of justice. This difference, between proceedings in Parliament, and in the ordinary courts, has been established upon grounds of public policy, and is considered to be fundamentally essential to the efficiency of a parliamentary inquiry.

In other words that even what would be an excuse in a court of justice would be no excuse before this House. What is the reason alleged by Mr. Miller and will it be taken cognizance of in a court of justice? Why in any court of justice it will be looked upon as ridiculous to say that because he has a civil suit pending in some inferior court or in any other court, he should be excused from giving evidence. It would not even be alleged in a court of justice, but here, Sir, is the authority for the assertion that, even if he could allege it in a court of justice, he cannot allege any such reason before the first court of the country, the Parliament of this realm, the grand inquest of Canada.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell), having exhausted what he could say on the points already discussed, comes to this House and asserts that, even though we have the power it is an antiquated one; that it is a relic of the barbarism of a century ago. He calls upon us to rise in our dignity and absolve ourselves from its exercise. What would be the position? A century ago he says is the last time this power was exercised. I affirm that it has been exercised repeatedly, exercised in the lifetime of the hon. member for Carleton himself. Commitment to jail has been exercised repeatedly by the Commons of Great Britain. The last case I can find was in 1879, when one Grissell was committed for contempt and was subjected to imprisonment in Newgate. That is not so very long ago. I stand here and say that so far as I have been able to find, there has been no case since and no case before when any man stood and refused to answer, and after having been directed to answer, after being given every chance to answer, still refused, persisted in his defiance, and was not committed. It has been stated here, as I said a moment ago, that it would be a cruel imposition on this man. What is the result of reasoning like that, to say that a man can bid defiance to this House, can commit the plainest possible breach of privilege, can be guilty of the most open and flagrant contempt and still be absolved from punishment? Where would we be? The meanest court in this country if it can be said that any court is mean, the court in this country of the smallest jurisdiction has power to commit to prison for contempt. We have vested the county courts; we have vested even the police courts; we have vested our higher courts all with the power to commit for contempt of the privileges and of the dignities of those courts. Is this House of Commons, the first court of the realm, to take the position of delegating to the smaller courts of Canada the power to commit to prison for contempt and to withhold it from the House of Commons itself? If there is any way whereby this House could abdicate the functions that constitute the first reason of its being, any way that we could abdicate the duty we owe to the people of this country that would be more flagrant and more disastrous than that, then I would like to have it suggested. It would mean the dissolution of our powers of inquest altogether. We have no recourse now except that of imprisonment. We either have to imprison him or to say: Go on, conduct your case as you like; do not answer if you choose; our powers are exhausted; you can stay in this House in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms or, as the member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) says, you can go free altogether. Our powers are exhausted; if you do not want to answer, you do not have to. It would be stripping Parliament of its powers of inquiry; it would rob the Committee of Public Accounts of all the weapons it has heretofore used in the public interest. It would in a word portray to the world the helplessness of this House. It would simply be proclaiming ourselves as swirling around here in aimless impotence instead of conducting our tasks and preserving our privileges and the rights of the people and inquiring into and ascertaining the facts as to the disposition of public moneys.

It is asserted that we should delay. It is asserted by the hon. member for Carleton that it would be doing an injustice to the dignity of Parliament if we pass sentence on this man. We are told especially that we should delay, because there has been no notice, because there has been no opportunity given to hon. gentlemen opposite to see what can be done in his behalf. Notice! Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. John, the hon. member for Carleton, would actually stand in Parliament and say that if the prisoner who appeared here this afternoon, had answered the question fully and completely, then it would be the duty of some member of this House to give notice that two days from now he would move that this man be discharged from custody. If notice was required in this case, certainly it would be in that. We did not know what he was going to say until he was brought before the Bar. We knew then what he said. Yet the hon. member for St. John would solemnly say that before we could move either to discharge or commit him, we ought to give two days' notice, so that they could get prepared. I ask this House out of deference to the duty we owe the people of this country, to preserve its dignity to-night, to pass sentence upon this man. The case cited by the hon. member for St. John, the Maxse case, is surely not on all fours with this. It has not yet been reported. We do not know the particulars; but we do know that it was a case where a man alleged something wrong about a minister, but it was found out that he had no ground for the allegation and then he came before Parliament for sentence. So far as we have heard, it goes at least no further than that. His offence was committed and was done with; he could do not more than serve a punishment. Perhaps it might have been a fit case for the commiseration or compassion of Parliament. Is that case like this one? Here is a man who is asked to answer a question, who refuses to answer and thereby creates an offence, who is again asked and still refuses, and leaves the Bar of this House a recalcitrant witness refusing to obey the order of Parliament. It is a continuing offence until it is wiped out by his answer, we have no right to exercise compassion in his behalf at all; it is no case for commiseration; it is no case for compassion because it is a continuing and not a complete offence.

I have said now all I have to say. I believe we would be going backwards, I believe it seriously, if we should accede in the smallest degree to the request of counsel for the prisoner, and I believe the alleged reasons adduced by the two hon. members who have spoken on his behalf only make more clear the duty of this House to pass the resolution.

Mr. HUGH GUTHRIE (South Wellington): Mr. Speaker, if I might offer a few remarks on the motion, which is now before the House, I will say in the first instance that I am one of those who believe at all times in maintaining not only the dignity of this House but its power and its authority to the fullest. I am also one of those who are also inclined to treat a motion such as that which we have now under discussion in this House, with the utmost gravity and with none of the levity which has been indulged in by hon. members opposite.

Some hon. MEMBERS : Oh, oh.

Mr. GUTHRIE : And with none of the vociferous applause which was given the last speaker whenever he happened to make a remark that had the slightest trace of partisanship. When I consider that the House is at the present moment dealing with what to my mind is a very grave accusation, involving the liberty of the subject, and when I see as I saw a moment ago, four ministers of the Crown pounding their desks and vociferously applauding what I consider partisan statements, I do not think that hon. members sitting on the opposite side of the House are giving the matter that serious consideration, that non-partisan judgment, which the matter requires.

My hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen) has made what, from his own point of view, might be considered a clever argument in support of his contention that this man, this prisoner who today appeared at the Bar of the House, was guilty of a breach of the privileges of Parliament. If that be so, I would be the last to seek to shield the individual, and I would be among the first to say that the authority of Parliament must be maintained. But I have not been able, from the consideration which I have given to this matter—not the fullest I am free to say— to arrive at the conclusion that there has been that which this House should rightly consider a breach of its privilege. And if, indeed, there has been such, then the proceedings from the beginning up to the present time are most irregular. And in a case such as the present regularity, even technical regularity, is necessary, because all such proceedings should be viewed with the greatest strictness just as you would interpret or administer a criminal statute. I believe the hon. member for Portage la Prairie and the hon. member for North Grey laboured somewhat to-day rather in the hope that they might justify what, to my mind, would appear to be a rather glaring omission which they had been guilty of themselves when this matter was under discussion in the Public Accounts Committee. The hon. member for North Grey has the honour of being the Chairman of that important committee. I am not a member of that committee, and do not think I have attended it more than four or five times in the course of a dozen years. I heard nothing of the present matter when it was before the committee. I assume that the position of chairman of that committee is more or less a judicial position; at all events, it should be an absolutely non-partisan position. Until an hour ago, I had not had an opportunity of reading the proceedings of that committee on the 14th of February last when this particular matter occupied their attention. But, as I read the evidence, I was considerably astonished in the first place at what I might describe as a rather careless, ineffectual—certainly incomplete —method adopted by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie in conducting the examination of the Witness, Mr. Miller, now the prisoner at the Bar. I have read the whole examination with the greatest care, and I say here that the most glaring omission occured on the part of the examiner, my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie. In no instance did he ask the witness, now the prisoner at the Bar, whether he had paid this money to anybody. There was not a question of that kind. The hon. gentleman said this evening that he inferred from this statement or that or the other statement, or that the natural and only reasonable conclusion to be drawn from the whole examination was that he had paid that money to somebody. But, surely the first question which would occur to counsel—which would occur even to a layman not skilled in the law—would be to ask the witness the plain question whether he had paid money or not to anybody. But no such question is in that examination. Now, as I read down I am more surprised as I see the attitude of the chairman of that committee. Notwithstanding that omission, that glaring omission as I have described it, we see in the report of the proceedings of the committee at page 8, at the bottom of the page, the chairman thus delivers himself in reply to a statement of Mr. Carvell:

Not at all. The witness himself has deliberately said that he paid $41,000 in order to get $117,000 worth of business from the Government.

I ask my hon. friend the chairman to read that evidence now and say if the statement is correct or if the witness had really made any such statement.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: The hon. gentleman must not forget that the witness and his counsel were both present and assented to that proposition.

Mr. GUTHRIE: I can only judge of what transpired in that committee by the printed record, and I have read every line of it. And from the first question down to the foot of page 9 the question was not asked the witness whether he had paid the money to anybody, yet the chairman says to Mr. Carvell:

The witness himself has deliberately stated that he paid $41,000 in order to get $117,000 worth of business from the Government.

I only mention this to show the state of mind in which the Chairman must have been when conducting this judicial investigation in the Public Accounts Committee. I go on further in this report until I come to page 11, when the chairman breaks forth in reply to Mr. German who had said that the witness did not make that statement:

The witness admits that some $41,000 odd had been paid for securing government business to the extent of $117,000, then we ask him to whom payments were made and he refused to say.

And up to that point the witness had not made the statement though the chairman on two occasions said he had. The question becomes an important one, in view of the privilege which has been claimed by the prisoner at the Bar, by counsel who appeared in his behalf. The plea made today was that litigation had arisen in connection with this very $41,000 odd as between Mr. Miller and the company of which at one time he was either manager or president.

An hon. MEMBER: Both.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is the claim of the company against Mr. Miller and of Mr. Miller against the company pending in the courts of Montreal. Whether Mr. Miller paid or did not pay the money has a direct bearing on that litigation. If it be that Mr. Miller has not paid that money out to anybody, certainly, it will affect these issues in Montreal which are for an accounting for that very sum. It may be that Mr. Miller has not paid the money; he certainly has not stated so, nor was he asked the question. If he did pay it, then where does the interest of this House or this country arise? Was it paid to any member of the House or of the Senate, any member of the Government or any official, or was it paid in derogation of what one might call the good government of Canada, to advance political interests or otherwise? I submit that the House would have a direct interest in knowing these facts. But in the first place we should ascertain whether the money was paid at all, and the witness should have been asked that question as a foundation for the following questions put by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie at page 5:

Q. All you did is initial for the money on the cash book when it was paid by the secretary? A. Yes.

That refers to the $41,000.

A. Yes.

Q. My next question is this: Will you give the committee a statement of where you paid that money?

Not to whom, but where he paid it. That may be a nice distinction, but, in matters pertaining to the liberty or freedom of the subject, these nice distinctions are constantly evoked, and the courts constanly give effect to them. I submit that the question is a loose and a careless one. There was no foundation for it in the first place, because the witness had never been asked whether or not he had paid the money to anyone. The question to which objection was taken and an answer refused was—if this report is correct:

Will you give the committee a statement of where you paid that money?

That is not the question that was put by you, Mr. Speaker—at least if I read aright the question put to the prisoner as appearing in 'Hansard' of February 18 last, which was: 'To whom did you pay the sum of $41,000, &c. The other objectionable part of the question, as pointed out by the hon. member for St. John, was certainly the concluding clause, which says:

As alleged by you on your examination before the Select Standing Committee.

The imputation being that Mr. Miller himself had stated on his examination that he had made the payments. From all I can gather from the report of what occurred during that meeting of the Committee on Public Accounts, Mr. Miller made no such statement, and I appeal in the matter to hon. members on the other side of the House—particularly to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who has had experience as judge of the higher courts, and who understands the manner in which the criminal law of this country is very strictly considered and administered. I would ask him if, upon a foundation in which there are embodied such irregularities and omissions, any man should in the first instance have been placed upon his trial? I trust that the hon. Minister of Justice will give the House the benefit of his opinion before this matter is closed, and will guide and direct us as to how to act in the matter. I would ask him to state fully and fairly to the House, and I have no doubt he will, what would be the procedure supposing that in the trial of an ordinary criminal case, a discrepancy of this nature arose as between informations and indictments. Would there not be amendments made in respect to the matter? The Criminal Code provides for that, and I would particularly point out the precise manner in which all charges must be laid and evidence adduced when the liberty of the prisoner is in question. That is the case here, and I submit to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister that there is a very marked discrepancy between the question submitted by this House to the prisoner at the Bar a couple of days ago, as well as to-day, and the questions which he refused to answer in the Public Accounts Committee. I do not deny for a moment that this House has the absolute power to compel a witness to answer any question, and I do not think that any privilege can be pleaded when this House deals with the matter by passing the necessary motion. But, after all, the power is discretionary, and the question is not whether we have the power to do it, but whether it is right and proper that we should take such action. For my part, having heard to-day the statement of the prisoner's counsel, I think the House should hesitate before insisting upon an answer to that question, unless it be shown that the public interest of Canada demands it, or that the public service has been in some way contaminated, corrupted or otherwise. Nothing of the kind, so far as I know, has yet been made public. Having regard to the statement made by counsel, would it not be exercising a fair and reasonable discretion towards this man, if the matter should be allowed to stand until his litigation has been settled? If, in answer to the question proposed to-day, the witness says he did not pay the money to anybody, then his action, which is based upon the question of account as between him and his company, will certainly be influenced by his answer. Have we any right to place him in such a position? On the other hand, if he says he did pay the money to this man or that man, might this not also furnish his opponents in that litigation with information to which they are not entitled up to the time of trial? I admit, of course, that if he has paid the money improperly, or for unlawful purposes, it is of vital interest to this House that it should be known, and the matter sifted to the very bottom.

Mr. LANCASTER: He should tell the truth in both cases, should he not; he should say the same thing there as here?

Mr. GUTHRIE: Decidedly, I do not know what the answer to the question will be; I am only assuming that the money has been properly disposed of, and am not supposing that he has been guilty in any respect with regard to it. Another point I would urge is this. We must bear in mind that our present deliberation is in the nature of a trial, and all we have to act upon is the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee and the statement made to-day at the Bar of the House. Our determination of this motion, if it is carried, will be in the nature of a conviction—a conviction which cannot be reviewed, and from which there is no appeal to any court in this country. I ask hon. gentlemen, have we given this matter sufficient consideration? Have we had time to consider it? How many hon. gentlemen of this House have read the evidence that was presented before the Public Accounts Committee? I am aware that probably twenty or thirty members of the House were in attendance at that committee——

Mr. CARVELL: Eight or nine.

Mr. GUTHRIE: My hon. friend says there were eight or nine present. How many of these hon. gentlemen who were present have taken the trouble to read the evidence and endeavoured to understand the question clearly? I am free to say that I only read the evidence at six o'clock, and I think I am well within the mark in stating that over one-half the members of the House have not acquainted themselves with the evidence that was given. In view of this state of affairs, I submit that this House is not in a position to pass judgment upon this person, whose rights and liberties are involved. I contend that we should not determine this question at the present time, and I am sure that all fair-minded members of this House will agree that we should take time to consider this question. I think that the request tnat the matter should stand over for two or three days was a modest and reasonable one, and one which my right hon. friend the Prime Minister should have granted without any hesitation. I submit further that the whole process is irregular. I admit that this House has the power to commit in a proper case, but, Sir, if we do commit we must provide the machinery for taking care of our commitment afterwards; we should have the machinery complete or we should not exercise the power which is given us. I submit with a good deal of confidence that there is no machinery existing in Canada—and none has existed since Confederation—whereby we can take charge of a prisoner after commitment, unless within the precincts of this House. All the cases cited by the hon. member for North Grey were cases which occurred, I think, before the Union Act of 1840 was passed; cases in Upper Canada in which the legislature of that province had sole and exclusive control, subject to county and district interests, of the common jails; and the legislature against which a breach of privilege had been committed could certainly commit a delinquent to the jail under its own jurisdiction. So it is in Great Britain; so it it in those cases cited by the hon. member for Portage la Prairie, where the jails are under the jurisdiction of the House which commits.

The only prisons under the jurisdiction of this Parliament, so far as I know, would be the penitentiaries, and they are governed by our own Act respecting penitentiaries. Where are you going to put the man? The conviction should be a complete affair. I think the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice agree in that. If we have not provided the machinery we should hesitate before we enforce even a power which we have and in this case I am satisfied we have not provided the necessary machinery. It may be that we should have done so but these cases are very infrequent, there has not been a single case, I understand, since confederation, so that probably it would be a useless expense if we did provide a place where those who are guilty of committing breaches of the privileges of this House might be confined after commitment. This resolution is in concrete form and will be a conviction when passed. It says the prisoner at the Bar shall be confined in the common jail of the county of Carleton. I submit with every confidence that the keeper of that jail has not the slightest authority to receive that prisoner. He will be taken there, I assume, under your warrant, Mr. Speaker. That jail is under the jurisdiction of the sheriff and of the county authorities and under the Act of the Ontaria Legislature which pertains to them. Judges of the county courts and the superior courts of Canada may make use of these precincts but so far as I am aware this Parliament has no right to do so, and the jailer of that jail cannot receive that prisoner on any warrant save that of a judge or magistrate having power under local Acts. Then the question comes: what will you do with your motion, your conviction? I submit that in its present form it is absolutely bad in form. It is a conviction against which there is no appeal and no court of review. Where the foundation is so defective, where the original procedure is so irregular, where there is a direct variance between the question submitted by you and the original question which he refused to answer, where the variance is so great, where there is no process to carry out our judgment should we pass judgment, should we under these circumstances exercise a discretion and say that this man should be committed? I do not believe that we should and I do not believe that the consensus of the House will be that we should and I deprecate more than anything else in this discussion the attempt to put some party cast upon the proceedings. We cannot glance over the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee without noticing it, and the reason hon. members on the opposite side of the House laugh when I make that remark is because they did not attend the meetings of that committee and have not read the evidence. If they had they would not laugh, and if they have not they are not in a position to pass judgment upon this case. Why not give time for consideration?

I understand that the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) has given a spectacular or dramatic turn to the whole affair. I was surprised, before the answer was made by the prisoner, to find an interview with the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee in the Evening Journal saying that this was not a matter in which there should be any compromise whatever. That was published even before the House had engaged in a discussion, or the question had been put this afternoon. These matters are, of course, the matters which do attract the newspapers and obtain the large headlines. The whole thing has become more or less spectacular, and I have no doubt that the hon. member for North Grey desired to be right under the spotlight; the day he brought this up, he had to come down to sit beside the Prime Minister in doing it. If anyone is to blame for the irregularity and inaccuracy of the proceedings and the omissions, which were glaring in their first stages, I think the hon. member for North Grey and the hon. member for Portage la Prairie are the two members of the House who are most blameworthy.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): I quite concur in the remarks with which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Guthrie), began his address, in pointing out that this is a very serious question and one that should be dealt with without any tinge of partisan feeling. I so thoroughly agree with him in that that I shall refrain even from resenting the imputation of partisanship to hon. gentlemen sitting on this side of the House merely because of the fact that they applauded the very eloquent and to my mind very conclusive speech of the hon. member for Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen). We are dealing with a very serious question and we have a very grave responsibility. It is a very serious question, for two reasons, one of which has been pointed out by hon. members opposite, and the other of which they seem rather disposed to ignore. I must, however, do the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat the justice of saying that he does seem to perceive the importance of this question resulting from the second reason to which I have referred. It is an important question because it does involve the liberty of an individual subject of His Majesty; but it is important also because it does involve the vindication of the authority of this House, composed of the elected representatives of the people of Canada. I yield to no man in my desire to protect the liberty of the subject, but I feel too—and I am glad to believe that all the members of the House, when they look at a matter of this kind, immediately realize—the importance of vindicating the authority of the people's representatives. We have to determine now a question which calls upon us to perform both duties: the duty of respecting the liberty of the subject in so far as that liberty is entitled to be respected and protected, as it always is, save in cases where the individual has brought himself under the law, and so is liable to be deprived of his liberty; and also the very grave duty of protecting and vindicating the authority of this House. I have difficulty in seeing how anybody can approach a question of that kind intentionally allowing his judgment to be swayed by partisan considerations, and discussion as to whether on one side of this House or on the other any hon. member is acting under the influence of partisan feeling certainly does not help us to reach a proper conclusion, and is something which therefore ought to be carefully avoided.

We have before us a question which originated on Monday last and a question which arose again to-day. For that reason it seems to me that the criticism of the hon. member who has just resumed his seat, of the manner in which questions were put, and the investigation generally carried on, before the Public Accounts Committee, is entirely irrelevant. If this motion is carried, and the person called to the Bar, is committed to jail, it will not be because of anything that happened before the Public Accounts Committee; it will not be because he stated before the Public Accounts Committee that he had paid out this money for any purpose, if he did say so. It will be purely and simply because on two occasions he declined to answer a question put to him by this House through its Speaker. To my mind, the whole question that we have before us, is, did this witness give us a satisfactory reason justifying his refusal to answer the question that was put to him by this House? If he did, he ought to go free. If he did not, unless the authority of this House is to become a byword, this House must have some means of enforcing an answer to that question, and it seems to me it is the duty of this House, if it has that means, to use it.

Now, let us see what are the reasons that are advanced to justify this person's refusal to answer. The party who stood at the Bar himself gave us his reason, and it is a most remarkable fact, in view of the objection which has been most strenuously urged to our committing this man for his refusal to answer, that in those reasons he did not suggest in the slightest degree that there was anything in the question of a nature to mislead him. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley), who spoke this afternoon at great length, complained very vigorously that the question was a leading one, and he invoked that as a reason why this man was not bound to answer.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DOHERTY: I understand my hon. friend also said that it was false, that it contained a false statement. There were two grounds stated for his objection. I have not the slightest desire to misrepresent my hon. friend.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I thought my hon. friend had forgotten the first part.

Mr. DOHERTY: I suppose it will sound very presumptuous for me to say that I fancy my hon. friend, who is a consummate master of words, must have meant that the question was objectionable because it was misleading.

Mr. PUGSLEY: And because it was false.

Mr. DOHERTY: And because it was false. But in so far as he said that it was leading, intending, as I understand it, misleading, he must have meant that it was so because it contained a false statement. Now, looking at this calmly and quietly, is it not a most surprising thing that if that statement in the question, which is now invoked as a reason justifying the gentleman who stood at the Bar for refusing to answer, was untrue, it should never have occurred to that gentleman to say so?

Mr. PUGSLEY: His counsel said so.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am dealing for the moment with what the witness said in giving his reasons for not answering. Though I am willing to give the prisoner at the Bar the benefit of anything that his counsel says, I submit very respectfully that it was for him to give the reasons why he refused to answer. He was the party refusing, and he knew why he refused. His counsel might support that refusal by argument, but we are not concerned with the statement of his counsel. We have to weigh and determine whether what the witness said under examination is, or is not, a proper answer, or a sufficient reason for not answering the question which this House put. Now, as I said a moment ago, is it not surprising that, if this witness never said what is imputed to him in that question—he was brought here on two occasions to answer it, and appeared to-day with a written statement of why he did not want to answer it—he never repudiated, as a man naturally would repudiate, having made the statement which it is affirmed he did make? I do not say, if this was a well founded objection, that that would be a conclusive answer to it, but I do say that it is a most significant circumstance, tending to show that the witness understood that he had made that statement. He did not repudiate that he had made that statement that he had paid the money received. There is the further confirmation that his counsel, when he came to state why his client should not be called upon to answer, also told this House that his client did say that he had paid that money. It is true that he said he had paid it for the purpose of obtaining business generally. Here, then, are two persons who understood that the statement was made, that the man had paid the money, and one of those two persons is the prisoner upon whose behalf it is now stated that he should be held justified in refusing to answer the question because the statement was not true. Now, looking at this thing quietly, can we take that as a reason why the witness should be discharged? We find further that the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro) and other gentlemen who were there, understood that the answers before the Public Accounts Committee, taken as a whole, justified the belief that the witness was conveying, or intended to convey, the idea that he had paid the money, and that the other facts brought out showed that if he had paid money to get business, the business got was business with the Government of Canada. I did not have an opportunity before dinner to read the evidence to see whether there was any statement by this man that he had paid the money to get government business. So far as I have listened to several readings of that evidence and I have listened very carefully and attentively—I have not heard those words read out in that form. But I have heard evidence that conveys to my mind—unless I am prepared without a tittle of evidence to find the man guilty at once of stealing the money—no other conclusion than that he got the money for a certain purpose and paid it out for that purpose. He must mean that; he said what amounted to that; he does not repudiate it, and his counsel thought that he had meant that he had paid the money. His counsel tells us that he had paid the money. My hon. friend from North Grey was not alone in that impression. But let us assume that the hon. member for North Grey was mistaken, and that the statement was not made and that there was not necessarily an issue of veracity between the hon. member for North Grey and the counsel, but that there was a different understanding of the effect of the testimony. It is argued that because the party putting the question made some erroneous statement of fact in connection with something the witness was asked to tell, the witness ought therefore to be excused from telling it. I have practised at the Bar and sat upon the bench for a number of years, and I must confess that that is an odd doctrine to me. I have heard an objection of that kind raised, and I have heard it supported, not quite as eloquently, but almost as eloquently and forcibly, as the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) supported it this afternoon. But it always appeared to me, and in most cases it so turned out, that the argument was for the purpose of giving the witness just a little light as to what it might be wise for him to say rather than for the court. I have time and again seen such an objection over-ruled.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Suppose a question of that kind were asked of the prisoner, and my hon. friend were the judge, and suppose he knew that the question contained a false statement with respect to the evidence which had been given, would he not deem it his duty to correct counsel and to see that he did not put into the question something which was false and not supported by evidence?

Mr. DOHERTY: That would depend entirely on whether what was so stated was or was not of a nature to mislead the witness in the evidence he was to give. It would, furthermore, depend on how far the court felt that it was an intentional misstatement, rather than a statement of what counsel, in perfect good faith, took the testimony that he had just been listening to to mean, assuming that there was ground on which a man might reasonably give that meaning to it. It is difficult to say that the hon. member for North Grey could not reasonably give the meaning to this statement, in so far as the money being paid was concerned, that was put upon it by the counsel for this man. With reference to its having been paid for the purpose mentioned, the witness makes no direct statement of it; but it does appear that this money was advanced to him for the purpose of getting business, and that he got $117,000 worth of business from the Government. We are, therefore, reduced to selecting one of two conclusions: Either this man means us to understand that he used the money to get that business, or he means us to understand that he embezzled it. I think that it would be utterly unfair for us to assume that the man embezzled the money. Surely it is a thing that we ought not to believe until it is proved. Then, what becomes of the assumption that we are asked to make, that, because he has not sworn in so many words that he paid the money, he never did pay it? But, assuming that this is a mistaken inference from the evidence, it is absolutely no reason why this witness should have refused to answer the question. The question is perfectly clear, perfectly intelligible. If the man did not get the money for this purpose, the question would be answered in the simplest possible way by the answer 'no.'

Mr. PUGSLEY: Suppose he had answered 'no,' would not that have been an admission that he had sworn to it before the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. DOHERTY: I was mistaken in saying he could have said 'no' because the question was 'To whom did you pay it? If he had said 'no' he would not have answered the question. But it was stated that he had paid out that money for government business, and if he had said that he had or had not paid it to anybody, that would have been an answer.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Would not that have been an admission that he had perjured himself before the Public Accounts Committee?

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. member says that before the Public Accounts Committee he did not swear at all.

Mr. PUGSLEY.

Mr. PUGSLEY: But the question says he did.

Mr. DOHERTY: At the Public Accounts Committee he is asked: 'To whom did you pay the money? you stated that you paid it for a particular purpose'? If he never made that statement, there is no such money. I do not want to argue about what answer he could or could not have made, but to point out that the question could not possibly be misleading. We have seen that man standing before the Bar, his answer to-day was carefully prepared; and I think we are justified in treating him as an intelligent man. I venture to say that no man of the simplest intelligence could have been misled by anything that was contained in that question, even if there had been an erroneous statement of fact contained in it.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Will you go as far as that?

Mr. DOHERTY: I do go quite as far as that, and it does not seem to me a very long trip.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That is a pretty broad statement.

Mr. DOHERTY: I am sorry that it has not made a favourable impression upon my hon. friend from Rouville, but I have not the slighest hesitation in making it. What further reason has been given us why we should not compel this man to answer? The purpose of this proceeding is not to act cruelly or savagely towards this man, but to compel him to answer. The reason which the hon. member who preceded me gave to us was what he claimed to be the irregularity of the manner of the questioning in the Public Accounts Committee. I am not concerned to defend the hon. and learned members who conducted that investigation, as they are perfectly capable of defending themselves. Whatever may have been the proceeding there is immaterial to us here. What we are concerned with is: did or did not this man refuse on Monday, and refuse to-day, to answer the question put to him by this House, and is he justified in that refusal, for the reason he gave himself, which was that his answer might prejudice his private business? He is being sued in Montreal to account for the money in question. He claims he will be prejudiced in that case. If it is true that he did not pay it out at all, it might be disadvantageous to him; but the people in that case should know what he did with it—that he embezzled it. I am rather surprised that the Parliament of Canada should consider itself interested in protecting a man from the prejudice that might result to him from his telling truthfully that he had kept for himself money that had been confided to him for any particular purpose. I hardly think an argument of that kind would arouse any great sympathy in this House. If, on the other hand, the gentleman paid this money out, when he tells us how he paid it out he will be doing the very thing he has been asked to do; and the people interested, who I think have a right to know what he did with it, will find it out. That is where he is prejudiced. We have been asked, because of those two possible prejudices, to forego the right of Parliament to know what he did with that money, when the undisputed facts are that this man on his own testimony got $41,000 to get business with, that he got business, and that he got it with the Government of Canada.

Mr. PUGSLEY: And with others.

Mr. DOHERTY: And with others to the extent of $2,000. What proportion of $41,000 this gentleman used to get that $2,000 worth of business from the other people, anybody can figure out for himself. Some of the $41,000 he was holding for the purpose of getting business—and he got $117,000 worth of business from the Government of Canada—presumably was used to get that business. I am not saying that that is conclusive that he spent the money for that purpose. Perhaps he stole the money. I do not know; but the Parliament of Canada has circumstances before it now, surely justifying very grave suspicions that some of the money that he got to get business with was used to get the business that he got. With that evidence before the Parliament of Canada, giving rise to that grave suspicion, Parliament through its committee proceeded to investigate. On Monday that witness was passed over to Parliament and was asked the most pertinent question that he could possibly be asked, once he told us that he had got the money, the purpose he had got it for, and where he had got the business from, namely: to whom did you pay the money? Because it is asserted that he may lose some money in a civil suit by telling the truth here, Parliament is asked to say that it will make no effort to ascertain the facts, but will say to this gentleman: depart in peace. Surely if Parliament has any respect for itself, if Parliament has any respect for the duty it owes to itself—and when I say to itself, I do not say to us as individual members, but to that great institution, the House of Commons of Canada,—we who happen to be the members of that House, will not allow it to be published to the world that that House is perfectly powerless to ascertain a fact bearing so directly upon a matter, concerning which the already existing evidence gives rise to the very gravest suspicion that there was serious wrongdoing in connection with the business that was got from the Government of Canada. If that is not the kind of matter in regard to which Parliament should insist on its powers to obtain information, or at least to know what is carried on—

Mr. DEVLIN: Does the hon. gentleman, as Minister of Justice, say that the proper procedure for this House would be to commit the prisoner at the Bar to a provincial jail without the intervention of the Attorney General of the province, rather than to a Dominion penitentiary?

Mr. DOHERTY: Most assuredly I would say so in accordance with the law which says that nobody shall go to the penitentiary unless he is sentenced for two years, and unless he is convicted of crime by a court of the province or territory or district in which the offence is committed. I would most assuredly say that he should not go to the penitentiary.

Mr. DEVLIN: The term of two years imprisonment is under a law which is made by this Parliament, and which can be unmade by this Parliament.

Mr. DOHERTY: This Parliament may repeal that law; but so long as that law is on the statute book I venture to say that this Parliament cannot undertake to disregard the law by the commitment to a penitentiary of a gentleman who is brought before the Bar of this House.

Mr. DEVLIN: Then, where does the hon. Minister of Justice find a law either in the constitution, in the Criminal Code or in any criminal law of the province or of the Dominion authorizing this House to send a prisoner to a provincial jail?

Mr. DOHERTY: I will try to give the hon. member full information if he will allow me to finish the branch of the matter which I was at. I am quite willing to point out why I would send him to jail.

As I was saying a moment ago, if this is not the sort of case where, whatever power we may have to commit a man, and to whatsoever place we ought to commit him, we ought to exercise that power, I am at a loss to know what that case would be. As to our right to put this question and to have an answer to it, notwithstanding the fact that the party says that it would injure him in his litigation with other people, I may say that the courts of this country have dealt with that sort of reason as a justification for refusing to answer, and there are many cases with circumstances not dissimilar to those in this case. There was one case in which it was not a question of the power of Parliament to compel an answer, but of the power of a royal commission appointed under an Act of the Legislature of Quebec. That commission was appointed for the purpose of investigating the circumstances under which a certain sum of money was paid which it was alleged had been paid to influence the action of the legislature. That commission had not gone very far in its operations before the principal witnesses, one after the other declined to answer one question or the other. One of the three witnesses declined for reasons largely similar to those invoked by the party here, to answer as to what he had done with a certain portion of the money which had come into his hands. The commission, under the powers that the legislature gave it, issued an order for the imprisonment of these recalcitrant witnesses. The witnesses applied to the court for a writ of prohibition, and got a writ of prohibition which was maintained in the court of first instance; but the Court of Appeal of the province of Quebec, which, if my memory serves me rightly, was at that time presided over by one of the greatest judges who ever sat on the bench, one of the greatest parliamentarians who ever ornamented the Parliament of Canada, Sir A. A. Dorion, decided unanimously that such reasons were absolutely insufficient, and maintained the rule ordering the imprisonment of the parties who refused to answer. There is a judgment of the Court of Appeal of one of our provinces, and with it I should think that everyman who would give even a few moments reflection to the practical consequences of maintaining the contrary doctrine would entirely agree. If the witness has nothing to say but, 'That is my private affair,' or, 'It will hurt me in my private business to tell you where I spent the money,'—money the spending of which is surrounded with so many suspicious circumstances, and all inquiry is to stop there—then, of course, the whole of the art of cross-examination might as well be abandoned, and we might as well accept the doctrine that we must take the ipse dixit of every witness in future.

Now, I come to the question asked me by the hon. member for Wright (Mr. Devlin), a question from which I infer that he shares the view of the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), that there is some difficulty in the way of this man being committed to the common jail. The reason why this Parliament has power to commit this man anywhere is that, as has been pointed out already, under the British North America Act the Parliament of Canada has power to confer upon this House, such privileges, immunities and powers as may be determined by an Act of Parliament, subject only to the proviso that Parliament shall not confer upon either House any greater privilege, immunity or power than was enjoyed by the Parliament of Great Britain at the time.

Mr. DOHERTY.

Mr. DEVLIN: This is only a branch of Parliament.

Mr. DOHERTY: This is only a branch of Parliament—only the House of Commons; and what the British North America Act said was that Parliament could confer upon the House of Commons—only a branch—all such powers and immunities, &c., as it deemed fit, provided they did not exceed the powers enjoyed by the House of Commons in the United Kingdom at that time. And Parliament, composed of the Senate and the House of Commons, passed an Act, which is chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes of 1906, conferring on the House of Commons all the powers, privileges and immunities which the Parliament of the United Kingdom enjoyed at the time; and among these powers was the power to punish for contempt and for violation of its privileges, by imprisonment in the common jail, people who were guilty of such contempt and guilty of the violation of its privileges.

Mr. DEVLIN: The British Parliament has jurisdiction over the jails.

Mr. DOHERTY: Does the hon. gentleman ask me for authority for the proposition that the House of Commons in England has the power to commit to the common jail for contempt or for violation of its privilege?

Mr. DEVLIN: If the hon. gentleman will allow me, Newgate is under the jurisdiction of the Imperial Parliament, and provincial jails are under the jurisdiction of our provinces.

Mr. DOHERTY: I will come to that argument in a moment. I want to give the hon. member the source of our power, because when you want to measure it, it is well to bear in mind its source Newgate is a common jail in England, and the powers of the House of Commons in England are not limited to committing a man to Newgate; it can commit him to any other prison.

Mr. DEVLIN: Under the jurisdiction of the Imperial Parliament.

Mr. DOHERTY: It could commit him to any other prison in England.

Mr. DEVLIN: Under the jurisdiction of the Imperial Parliament.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not wish to dispute with the hon. gentleman. There is only one Parliament in the United Kingdom.

Mr. DEVLIN: And several in this country.

Mr. DOHERTY: Of course, if the hon. member desires to know how I argue this out, perhaps he will let me go on.

Mr. DEVLIN. All right.

Mr. DOHERTY. As I was saying, the power the House of Commons had was to commit a man to any public prison in Great Britain;—if my hon. friend likes me to say it, I will add under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of the United Kingdom. That was the power that we obtained by the Act passed under the authority conferred on Parliament by the British North America Act. Now, what does the hon. gentleman understand by a prison under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, as distinguished from a prison under the jurisdiction of a legislature? The jurisdiction is one thing, and the power to legislate for the establishment, maintenance and management of a jail is another thing, The Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction throughout the Dominion of Canada in matters within its legislative powers. The hon. gentleman will be puzzled to find any provision in the British North America Act which says that a province has the exclusive right to say who shall go to jail; and the hon. member, who is a distinguished criminal lawyer, knows that the Criminal Code of Canada, enacted by the Parliament of Canada, is full of sections that say that people shall be liable to imprisonment for less than two years and that it furthermore says that everybody who is so sentenced shall be sentenced to the common jail. They go to the common jail in virtue of the law that this Parliament passed, because this Parliament has power to prescribe what shall be the punishment for violation of the criminal laws enacted by this Parliament. A province may say that certain people shall be taken to jail, but this Parliament has also the power to say that certain persons shall go to jail. That which is given exclusively to the legislatures is power to legislate concerning the establishment, maintenance and management of jails.

Mr. DEVLIN: But we are not legislating.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is another reason why we are not interfering with the provinces, because all the power they are given is to legislate concerning the establishment, maintenance and management of jails. That is their only exclusive power. If we were legislating about the regulation or management of a jail, there might be a great deal to be said against our power, but we are not legislating as the hon. member says. By the same Act, the power to provide penitentiaries was given to the Dominion of Canada. But a jail does not cease to be a jail because it was to be erected, maintained and managed by the province any more than a penitentiary ceased to be a penitentiary because the Dominion Parliament was going to manage it; and by far the larger part of the purpose of the penitentiary provided by the Parliament of Canada, is to receive the prisoners who are condemned by the courts of the province. So that it by no means follows that the body having the legislative power with regard to the establishment and management of these institutions, has the exclusive power to say who is to be put in them. As I have already pointed out, the Criminal Code is full of sections providing that men are to go to the common jail. and the common jail is under the jurisdiction of the provinces. We have the power to say—and we are saying it repeatedly—that persons violating our laws shall go there. The fact that the common jail comes under the control of the province does not alter the nature of the common jail, which is described in the old books as a place of detention provided for all sorts of prisoners. The reason why the Parliament of the United Kingdom, committed men to the common jail was that this was a place for all sorts of prisoners, not otherwise specially provided for. When the provinces became entitled to erect and maintain jails, that did not give them the exclusive right to say that only the people whom they admitted should go there. They were given power to erect and manage jails—that is to say, places for the reception and detention of everybody speaking generally, who was, under the law, liable to imprisonment. But here is a law in force in virtue whereof a person found guilty of contempt of this House is liable to be imprisoned; a person against whom the Speaker of this House issues a warrant ordering his imprisonment is a person condemned to imprisonment, and a person condemned to imprisonment within the limits of the province of Ontario. This being the case, he is liable to be sent to the place provided for people who are condemned to imprisonment. It does not make a particle of difference, if there is lawful authority in this House to condemn him to imprisonment, that the province has the duty of providing the jail. I do not know whether that carries conviction to the minds of hon. members or not, but I must say that it seems quite clear to me. If that is not true; if, because it is this Parliament which pronounces the sentence, the man who under the law of Canada is liable to imprisonment cannot be put in jail because it is established by a province, then I ask myself how and why a man who is condemned to imprisonment, even though it be by a provincial court, when he is so condemned for violation of a law enacted by this Parliament.

is liable to go to the common jail that the province maintains.

Mr. BUREAU: The law provides for it.

Mr. DOHERTY: The statute of this Parliament provides for it, and the objection is that this Parliament has no power to send a man to a provincial jail. I think the misapprehension upon which the objection rests is simply this. It is not realized that what the British North America Act did was simply to apportion the burdens of maintaining these different institutions, and not to change the purpose for which they were created. We have imposed upon us the burden of providing for what in the Old Country would be houses of correction—places for persons subject to long sentences—and the provinces bear the burden of providing for persons with shorter sentences, those held in detention to await trial, &c. They were given the duty of providing the common jails; we were given the duty of providing the penitentiaries, but that did not affect in the slightest degree the right of Parliament to provide that, as a penalty for a violation of its laws, a man should go to the common jail. That is, in effect, what Parliament enacted when it was provided that this House of Commons should have all the rights, powers and privileges of the House of Commons in England. One of these powers was to commit men for contempt to the common jail, and we, in effect, enacted that we had that power. In doing so we provided in effect that a man who was guilty of contempt of this House should be liable, upon the order of the Speaker, to imprisonment in the common jail, just as fully as in the Criminal Code we provided for instance that a man convicted of assault should be liable to be committed to such jail. That is the power the English Parliament have, and that is the power we have.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Why is it, if a man is committed to the common jail, the keeper of which is not an officer of this House, that the commitment is not made for a definite period, instead of its extending to the length of the session?

Mr. DOHERTY: The purpose of imprisoning this man is to get him to answer the question. This imprisonment will be just as long as this gentleman prefers rather to be imprisoned than to answer. If hon. gentlemen think that the purpose of this motion is to inflict suffering upon this man, they make a great mistake. The purpose of this motion is to try to make this man understand that it is a serious matter to refuse to obey the House of Commons of Canada, and to make him realize, and cause him by reason of his realization of that, to come forward and obey. The hon. member will notice that the motion does not fix the term absolutely as the period of the session. I have forgotten the exact wording of the motion, but I may say that it is open to anyone imprisoned as he will be under this motion to petition Mr. Speaker that he may be allowed to appear here at any time and purge his contempt and go free.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Does my hon. friend think that the limitation of imprisonment to the duration of the session of the House would be more applicable if the prisoner were committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, instead of being sent to jail, the keeper of which is not an officer of this House?

Mr. DOHERTY: We might fix a term shorter than the duration of the session, but, as I understand, we could not fix a longer term. Our power is limited, and if we undertake to fix a term longer than the session, the man would be entitled to his discharge when the session ended. Then, on the other hand, we might commit him for a shorter period than this session. Without any intention to be vindictive or to inflict punishment, I think it is the duty of this House to use the power so far as it goes which this House has to compel an answer. And after all, that is the purpose. We have heard a good deal about sympathy and being magnanimous and letting this man go. Why, this man's imprisonment is his own doing, and will last as long only as he chooses not to obey the order of Parliament. He will not be punished, and I am satisfied will not be detained, one moment beyond the time when he will comply with the obligation which the law imposes upon him. Under these circumstances, with this unmistakable refusal to comply with Parliament's command for an answer to this question, which was put in our presence here, with what seems to me the clear power to enforce the obligation to answer,—a power which I have no doubt is absolutely unquestionable, and which carries with it the absolute duty of exercising it,—it seems to me that there can be no two opinions as to what the action of this House should be. Should this House fail to exercise the power so conferred on it for the purpose of enabling it to obtain the information which in the public interest it ought to obtain, this House will have failed very seriously in the performance of the duties which the constitution of this country imposes on it. So much for the point of view of our duty to Parliament and to the country which Parliament represents and to the maintenance of the authority of the people's representatives.

If you turn to the other side, so far as we are concerned with the sacredness of the liberty of the subject—and, as I said, no one would be more unwilling than I to unduly or unnecessarily restrict the liberty of the subject—we have the fact that this man is to be deprived of his liberty only so long as chooses to be contumacious, so long as he chooses to stand before the public of Canada, flouting the authority of the people's representatives, and telling them that his private interests are of greater importance than the great public interest of this whole Dominion of Canada.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I have listened with great attention to the able argument of the Minister of Justice, and I must say that except in one particular, I would be disposed to agree with him; but I am not sure that he has convinced me as to the power of this House of Commons to commit the man who was at the Bar to the jail of the county of Carleton or to any other jail in the Dominion. Mr. Miller was brought on Tuesday last to the Bar of the House. Under the advice of counsel he refused to answer the question put to him, and thereupon he was committed. I was a little surprised at the time that the counsel who assisted him made no objection to the motion for commitment, but at all events, he having uttered no protest against the motion, for my part I saw no reason why the motion should not be complied with. The motion which was passed at the time was that he should be committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. To-day he is brought again to the Bar of the House and the same question is put to him and then another punishment, I think I can go so far as to say it is punishment, is inflicted on him in that he is removed from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and sent to the common jail. I interpret this as a punishment. My hon. friend said a moment ago it is not the intention of Parliament to punish in this instance but simply to obtain an answer to a question which it thought it had the right to ask. So far I agree with my hon. friend, but when the House of Commons advances one step and removes the witness from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and sends him to the common jail I cannot interpret that in any other sense than that it conveys a punishment. If it is not a punishment why not leave him where he is? My hon. friend will agree with me that there is a very great difference to the man who was at the Bar to-day in being under the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and being confined within the gates of a prison. There is an indignity to the public at large and to any man in being confined to a prison. There may be no indignity at all in being placed under the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms because, as we know, some of the best men in the Motherland and in this country have been so confined for offences, if offences they were, which carried no indignity with them, and I repeat the statement of my hon. friend that this House does not intend and should not intend, at this stage at all events, to punish the witness. That is not within our province, that is not what we should look to. The only thing we should look to is to maintain the power and authority of this House. As to our power and authority to commit there can be no question whatever. This House, whether it acts rightly or wrongly upon the statement of fact we have before us, has the power to vindicate its own authority. This House has put a question to the witness. The question may have been misleading or not—that is not the point at the present time. This House has put a question and therefore has a right to obtain an answer. So far there can be no dispute. But let us go to the only point at issue at this time, the power to send this man to the common jail. The power to send to jail is within the four corners of the British North America Act. The power of this House to commit is not found within the four corners of the British North America Act. It is one of the inherent powers of any assembly such as this. It is agreed by Bourinot and all other authors who have been cited here to-day, that a body such as this would not have its power complete if it could not enforce the orders which it chooses to give. It gave an order to the witness brought to the Bar to answer and therefore, he having refused to answer, the House is within its sole power, without any written law at all but simply by the fact of its existence as a legislative body, the power to enforce its authority. Can the House go beyond and invade the statute to find the authority which my hon. friend has said it has. My hon. friend will agree I am sure that when it comes to a question of this kind, when the liberty of the subject is at stake the statute must be construed literally. If that is to be the case, and I believe it is, where does the sheriff of the county of Carleton derive his power to receive any prisoners? It is derived, as I said a moment ago, from the letter of the British North America Act. My hon. friend will agree with me in saying that the British North America Act, so far as it goes, and proud as we are of it, is full of inconsistencies, especially in the administration of justice. The administration of justice in this country requires the concurrent action of both the Dominion Parliament and the local legislatures. My hon. friend will not deny that. The courts exist only by concurrent action of the local legislatures and the Dominion Parliament.

Mr. DOHERTY: Not all the courts. The Supreme Court and the Exchequer Court do not.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The provincial court in which my hon. friend sat was under the jurisdiction and concurrent action of the local legislatures and the Dominion Parliament. The local legislature establishes the courts. It is one of the anomalies which exist, and which we have discussed many times on the floor of this House, that while the local legislatures have the right to constitute the courts, they have not the right to appoint the judges. The judges are appointed by the authority of this Parliament, and therefore you have a concurrent action of the two powers in order to have a proper and efficient administration of justice. You cannot have it otherwise. It is an anomaly; I have had occasion to discuss it in this House before. But there it is, and we must abide by it. In the same way, in order to sanction the judgments of the courts, you have also the concurrent action of the local legislatures of the Dominion Parliament. The Dominion Parliament constitutes the offences; it has power over the criminal law. The jails exist, as a rule—there have been exceptions, though I do not have them at present in my mind—only for the carrying out of the criminal law.

Mr. DOHERTY: The right hon. gentleman will recollect that the jails exist to receive people who are committed for contempt, for refusing to answer before the civil courts.

Sir WILFRD LAURIER: I do not know that jails exist exactly for that purpose.

Mr. DOHERTY: They meet that purpose.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: They exist as a sanction to the criminal law. The jails exist for the guilty. Of course the courts will take advantage of the jails to enforce their own decisions, but the argument which I offer to my hon. friend at the present time is, that the jail in its nature is simply a means of enforcing the criminal law, of punishing offenders; and there again, under our system, under our circumstances, it requires both the action of the Dominion Parliament and of the local legislature to give effect to the sentences of the courts. We have here in this Parliament the authority over the criminal law. This Parliament alone has the right to declare what are offences of a criminal nature. But the local legislatures have also the power to make penalties. They do not go beyond that. But in the nature of the case, the jail is there to give effect to our own legislation. So far, so good. My hon. friend's argument was that since it requires the authority of both the Dominion Parliament and the local legislature to correct offenders and to punish them, you might trace an analogy and say that this House of Commons has the right to use the common jail in order to give effect to its own decisions and authority. I would admit that argument except in a case of this nature where, as my hon. friend knows, the statute has to be construed absolutely strictly, because it concerns the liberty of the subject.

Mr. BORDEN: What statute?.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: The Imperial statutes.

Mr. BORDEN: I do not quite follow my right hon. friend. In what respect does he think that it should be construed strictly. I am asking purely for information.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Upon the principle that wherever the liberty of the subject is concerned the statute is to be construed strictly. At the present time, as I said, we are not proceeding here under the authority of the Imperial statutes. We are proceeding here upon a totally different thing, upon the authority which is only inherent to this Parliament, to enforce its own decisions. This argument is technical. I admit, that this Parliament has no power except to commit, but not to commit as Parliament does in England. In England it is a very different thing; the authority of the British Parliament is the supreme law of the land. The British Parliament is the high court, the highest of all courts. Parliament is a court clothed with such extraordinary authority that at this time we should hesitate to enforce its jurisdiction. To-day we heard the opinion of Cushing to the effect that Parliament could compel a witness to give away even professional secrets, which a court of the land would not authorize. But here, we are not bound by any law. We can do just as we please, though I am sure Parliament would hesitate to-day before compelling a witness to give away any professional secret. We have not exactly the case which has just occurred in the British Parliament. We understand from the newspapers that Mr. Lawson was prevented from giving his authority simply by pleading, not professional secrecy, but editorial secrecy, a new privilege which the power of the press has introduced.

Well, I say, that we have to construe the statute strictly in this case, and if that be so, our authority is not paramount as is the authority of the House of Commons in Great Britain. The Parliament of Great Britain has the right, authority and jurisdiction over everything within the Kingdom. It has power over all the courts, and over the jails also. Everything comes under one jurisdiction. But here we have separate jurisdictions. It is not sufficient for my hon. friend to say, as he said a moment ago, that this Parliament with the legislature, has the power to regulate and provide for the expenditure upon jails, upon buildings, and so on. I do not think that under our system we have the power to establish courts. Perhaps we may have power to establish criminal courts of our own, but so far we have not done so, and so long as we use the machinery which we have at the present time, I doubt if we could transfer one jurisdiction to another, and say that because we can use the jails of the provinces for the carrying out of our own laws, we can also use the jails for the enforcing of the decisions of this House. For my part, it seems to me that the point is involved in so much doubt that the House ought to hesitate before it asserts so harsh and so drastic a decision as that which is now suggested. May I go further? My hon. friend this afternoon pleaded for delay. It seems to me that the request is not unreasonable. I offer these remarks in reply to the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Doherty), a very able argument, and one upon which I sincerely congratulate him. He has put his case very clearly, but at this moment he has not absolutely convinced me by his argument, and I would say that under such circumstances it would be well for the House to pause before it authorizes so harsh a treatment, as it is proposed to mete out to this man. I do not know Mr. Miller, I saw him here for the first time the other day, I do not know who he is, but I assume he is a respectable citizen and it is a serious thing to send a respectable citizen to jail or to keep him within the precincts of this House. For these reasons it seems to me that my right hon. friend would be well advised if he would, in his discretion, take the matter into his further consideration.

Right Hon. R. L. BORDEN (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all of us, in approaching this matter, do so with the feeling and indeed the conviction that the very great powers which undoubtedly the House does assume in such matters ought to be exercised fairly, without passion, with a just regard for the liberty of the subject and also with an equally just regard for the public interest, which is very closely concerned with the subject which has engaged the attention of the House this afternoon. My right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) has spoken very dispassionately and very fairly in expressing the views which appeal to him in the consideration of this question. He said that the particular motion which now occupies the attention of the House concerns the liberty of the subject. It does concern the liberty of the subject in one sense, but I would like to remind the right hon. gentleman that even if this motion did not pass, the gentlemen who has been at the Bar of the House, would still be in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and that this motion is merely concerned with the question of the place and manner of his custody during the time that he remains subject to the warrant which His Honour the Speaker has issued under the direction of this House.

I think my right hon. friend has very properly put to one side a great many considerations which have been urged there this afternoon. It may be proper, however, to allude to just one or two of them. As far as the character of the question which was submitted to this witness on Tuesday last and again to-day is concerned, I have been absolutely unable to follow the reasoning of hon. gentlemen who saw anything in the character of that question which would mislead, or embarrass the witness, or would prevent him from giving an answer to the question submitted to him by this House, if he had seen fit to answer that question or if he had desired to answer it. What was the question submitted to him? I have it now under my hand. The question submitted to the witness was this:

> To whom did you pay the sum of $41,026 for the purpose of securing contracts from the Government of the Dominion of Canada amounting to $117,000 or thereabouts, between the month of June, 1907, until you ceased to be president of the Diamond Light and Heating Company, Limited, in June, 1911, as alleged by you on your examination before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts on Friday, the 14th of February, 1913.

It has been argued by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Pugsley) and by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Carvell) that, looking at the evidence, the question contained a mis-statement of fact inasmuch as it is alleged that the witness never did make any such statement as that before the Public Accounts Committee. I hope that I am stating the argument of these hon. gentlemen accurately, as I desire to do. What would be the duty of a witness who had submitted to the jurisdiction of the House if the question had contained such a mis-statement? Would it be the right or duty of the witness to say: I absolutely refuse to answer that question, and then to give reasons that, in my opinion, are absolutely and entirely irrelevant? No, Mr. Speaker, it would be the duty of the witness in a case of that kind, to answer, if it were a truthful answer, something like this: I did not pay that money for that purpose, nor did I so state before the committee. That would be the obvious and natural answer of the witness and no one for one moment can say that there was anything in the nature of the question which would prevent the witness from giving that answer, if it were a truthful answer. Then, the mode of the interrogation of the witness would, after two or three questions, bring the matter to the exact point. He would be asked: Did you pay that money, or any part of it, for the purpose mentioned, he would answer 'yes,' or 'no,' and, if he answered 'yes,' then would follow the question: To whom did you pay it? But the witness adopted no such course as that. It was not in the mind of the witness or his counsel that he was in the slightest degree embarrassed by the form of the question.

I am not going in detail over the evidence, but every one who reads that evidence—and I have read every word of it since this debate came up—must be convinced that it was, in effect, substantially stated by the witness, although perhaps not in so many words, that that money was paid for that purpose and further that, over and over again in the course of the examination, it was stated in the presence of himself and his counsel and he took no exception to the statement, that he had paid the money for the purpose mentioned. It was so understood by the members of the committee, it was so understood by the witness himself, it was so understood by his counsel, and to-day, at the Bar of this House, his counsel stated that he did pay the money. Did the gentleman himself, when answering the question, seek to relieve himself from being pressed to answer this question by stating that he did not pay it at all? No, Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, he stated that he did not pay it to certain persons. Under these circumstances it does not seem to me that there is anything in the objections that hon. gentlemen have raised on that score. With reference to the reason which was given by the witness at the Bar and by his counsel that the disclosure of the truth as to the payment of this money would prejudice him, I fail to be convinced that there is any just cause to be found in that statement on account of which this House should delay its action. What possible prejudice could there be to this witness in stating to this House in answer to the question proposed by Mr. Speaker that he had paid this money to certain persons? What is the litigation in Montreal? What is the meaning of it? What is the occasion of it? As I understand it, an action had been brought against this gentleman by the company of which he was president demanding that he shall account for a sum of $41,000 and upwards which was paid to him according to his own statement for a particular purpose, at his request and on his allegation that the money was necessary to be expended for that purpose. An action has been brought against him to account for that money, and to refund such portion as has not been paid over by him for the purpose which he himself indicated in the first instance and for which he obtained the money. Is it possible that this witness could be prejudiced by any answer that he could give to the question proposed to him by His Honour the Speaker, by showing that he actually did pay the money to some person or persons unknown, when his whole defence to the action, as I understand it is that he did pay the money to some person or persons for the purpose on account of which it was entrusted to him in the first instance? If he really did pay the money for the purpose mentioned, in accordance with the desire and instructions of the company, he would be making good his defence instead of prejudicing it. Apart from that, the public interest is larger than any private interest; and whether or not this would or would not prejudice him in respect of the defence which he has to make in the courts of the country, it is perfectly competent, and not only competent but proper for Parliament to insist upon an answer, if that answer seems to concern the public interest of this country. The witness has on two distinct occasions made it perfectly plain to the members of this House of Commons that he refuses to answer this question and that he sets this House at defiance. I do not suppose any hon. member on either side of the House would admit for a moment that the functions of this House or of the committees of this House in respect of investigation of public matters could be properly exercised if witnesses were permitted to set at defiance, in the first place the committees of this House, and in the second place the House itself. We might as well abolish the Committee on Public Accounts if that is to be permitted. We might as well save ourselves the trouble of a motion in the early part of each session of this Parliament to appoint a Committee on Public Accounts, if that committee can be absolutely set at defiance by any witness who happens to come before it. Therefore it seems to me that it is necessary for this House to take action. This House has already taken action; this House has already ordered this witness into the custody of the Seargeant-at Arms pending the pleasure of this House. The motion which has been proposed by the hon. member for North Grey (Mr. Middlebro), seems to be, as I understand the practice, in acordance with that which is usually carried out in such cases. The witness has been brought a second time to the Bar of the House; the question has again been proposed to him; and a second time he has set this House at defiance. The practice in Great Britain in such cases, as explained by my hon. friend from Portage la Prairie (Mr. Meighen), is this, that the witness continuing to be contumacious is ordered to be committed to one of the jails, usually Newgate, and the warrant of the Speaker issues for that purpose.

The only point on which my right hon. friend disagreed with the Minister of Justice was this, that he doubted the competency of this Parliament to order that witness to be committed to the common jail. It seems to me that the argument of the right hon. gentleman goes too far. I will come, however, to that in just a moment. I wish first to deal with an observation which was made as to the British North America Act. He says that the British North America Act, or the Act of this Parliament, I do not know to which he referred, perhaps he referred to both, must be construed strictly because this question now before the House has relation to the liberty of the subject; and in so far as it does concern the liberty of the subject, the statutes which govern the power alluded to are statutes which must be construed strictly. My right hon. friend has perhaps overlooked the fact that in the first place the British North America Act gave power to this Parliament to enact a certain provision, namely a provision that this Parliament and both Houses of this Parliament should have powers corresponding to, but not exceeding those of the House of Lords and the House of Commons of Great Britain in respect of their rights and privileges. We were given the right to enact laws for that purpose; but those laws must not create powers in this House or seek to establish privileges in this House which are greater than those of the two Houses of Parliament of Great Britain. I do not know any law or any principle of law which requires that statute to be construed strictly. I say that is a remedial statute and, by all the principles of law with which I am acquainted, that statute must be construed in that way, and not strictly as my right hon. friend suggests. In the second place our right to act in this matter also depends upon the Parliament Act, chapter 10 of the Revised Statutes of 1906, and under the Interpretation Act which governs the construction of all laws enacted by this Parliament, every measure in those revised statutes must be construed not strictly but in a remedial sense and as if enacted for a remedial purpose. It seems to me therefore that the argument, which my right hon. friend put forward, and on which he laid some stress, has really not much foundation in view of the considerations which I have brought to his attention.

Let us look at the situation for a moment. We have ordered this man into the custody of the Sergenat-at-Arms. What are we to do with him? Does my right hon. friend or any other hon. gentleman on the opposite side of the House deny that we could set apart a room in this building and order him to be confined there? I do not know whether any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House would deny that. At all events I have not heard it denied up to the present time. Assuming that is admitted, they suggest that, although that might be the case we cannot commit that man to the common jail. I venture to submit that the arguments put forward by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice in that respect are absolutely convincing. The very argument, which my right hon. friend put forward convinced me almost as fully as the arguments of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice. He pointed out that there is a division of power in this country between the federal Parliament and the provincial legislatures. He pointed out also that it would be impossible to carry out the administration of justice in this country under the constitution without the joint action of the federal executive and Parliament and the provincial executives and legislatures. That is the very point, put in another way by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice who has made it absolutely clear to this House that while the erection, the control and the maintenance of jails have been entrusted to the provincial legislature, yet when these jails have been constructed by the provincial legislature, they are then the prisons to which persons convicted of crime under the laws of Canada must be committed according to the laws of this country. And that is precisely what we are doing at this time. What is the situation? The British North America Act gave this Parliament power to enact laws conferring upon this House of Commons all the rights and privileges of the British House. This Parliament acting in pursuance of that statute, has conferred upon this House of Commons the right to commit for contempt. The British House of Commons, by the immemorial usage of Parliament, by what may be called the common law of Parliament, has the right to commit to jail any man who is guilty of contempt of that House. This Commons House of Parliament of Canada, having had conferred upon it the like powers by the statutory provisions to which I have alluded, has also, as I see it, the right to commit any man guilty of contempt to a jail in this country, and it does not seem to me to be pertinent to the question for my right hon. friend or any other hon. gentleman to point out or emphasize the fact that these jails, which are the receptacles of prisoners committed under Dominion laws, are erected and maintained under provincial jurisdiction and by provincial authority. Therefore, it seems to me perfectly clear, so far as I am able to apprehend the question, that this House has the right, in its wisdom if it sees fit, to do so, to order this man to be committed to the common jail of the county of Carleton, situated in the city of Ottawa; and that is the motion my hon. friend from North Grey has proposed.

Now, with regard to the severity of this sentence; I am sure there is not one man on this side of the House or on the other who would approach this question with the idea of administering condign punishment to this man who has appeared at the Bar. It is true that his refusal, on one occasion at least, was conveyed to us in a rather abrupt manner, but that should not in the slightest degree influence our judgment or our appreciation of the duty devolving upon us. Is the sentence proposed a severe one? In the first place, it does not lengthen the term of imprisonment by one hour, because this man was subject to the same length of imprisonment under the order made here on Tuesday last, to which every hon. member assented.

Mr. PUGSLEY: There were cries of 'no' from a great many members.

Mr. BORDEN: What I meant was that there was no division upon it. I think there were some cries of dissent but that feeling was not persisted in to the extent of demanding a division on the subject. At all events, that was the order of the House, and, whether unanimous or not, no division was demanded upon it. And, as I was saying, the motion of my hon. friend from North Grey does not lengthen the term of imprisonment by one minute. What is the position of this gentleman? He has appeared before a committee of this House and refused to answer a question put to him. In the judgment of the committee that refusal was without justification. He has been brought twice before the Bar of this House, and twice he has persisted in his refusal to answer the question which His Honour the Speaker was directed to administer to him. The order which is now proposed is that he shall be committed to the common jail of the county of Carleton in the city of Ottawa and shall remain there until the end of the session unless in the meantime the House shall otherwise order. And the House is perfectly willing, I am sure, to order otherwise to-morrow, or even to-night, if that gentleman will appear at the Bar of this House, retract his defiance of this House, and give the information which the House has ordered him to give. So far as the length of his sentence is concerned, he is absolutely master of the situation. He has refused, as I think without justification, on three occasions, once before the committee and twice at the Bar of this House, to answer a proper, pertinent and reasonable question. The House is asked to assent to a motion that he be committed to the common jail for the remainder of this session, unless in the meantime he submits himself to the judgment of the House in that regard and answers the question. Under the circumstances, I do not see that the House can be regarded as having dealt with the matter in a severe way if it should pass this motion. I am sure that there is not one of us here who would not gladly have been otherwise occupied to-day than in debating a matter of this kind. And I can only say, so far as all of us are concerned, that this duty has been thrust upon us, not of our own accord but by the will of the witness and his defiance of the House. I think the House would place itself in an exceedingly false and humiliating position if it refused to take cognizance of the fact that this witness has defied it and should decline to pass the motion proposed by my hon. friend from North Grey. For these reasons, and without any feeling of resentment against the witness, and purely for the reason that I think the privileges and dignity of this House ought to be maintained by some decided action, so far as I am concerned I think it my duty to vote for the motion which my hon. friend from North Grey has proposed to this House.

Motion agreed to, on division.

Mr. BORDEN moved:

That the witness, R. C. Miller, be summoned to the Bar of the House in order that the judgment of the House which has just been passed may be communicated to him.

Mr. BUREAU: Is this a new judgment on account of a new offence committed by the same witness?

Mr. BORDEN: Is my hon. friend asking that question in a technical sense?

Mr. BUREAU: Merely as a matter of information with respect to the practice of the House.

Mr. BORDEN: I thought that had been made clear several times. The practice seems to be that when a witness refuses to answer a question, and in so doing, disobeys the order of the House, he is committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms. He is then again brought to the Bar of the House, and the question is repeated, and, if he persists in his contumacious conduct, the usual practice is then to commit him to jail.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Sergeant-at-Arms: Mr. Speaker, the witness, Mr. R. C. Miller, is now in attendance at the door of this Honourable House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Admit the witness.

Mr. Miller again came before the Bar of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER: Mr. R. C. Miller, I have the honour, in obedience to the command of this House, to communicate to you the judgment of this House with reference to your case, which has been under consideration, in the folowing terms:

That this House, having considered the statements made by R. C. Miller and his counsel at the Bar of this House, on the 18th and 20th days of February instant, hereby declares such statements to be no answer to the question put to him by Mr. Speaker on said dates, and that his refusal to answer said question constitutes a breach of the privileges of Parliament, and renders the said R. C. Miller guilty of contempt of this House, and this House doth order and adjudge that the said R. C. Miller be forthwith, by the Sergeant-at-Arms, committed to and imprisoned in the county jail of the county of Carleton, situated in the city of Ottawa, in the province of Ontario, until the prorogation of this House, or until sooner released therefrom by the order of this House; and the keeper or other officer in charge of the said jail is hereby authorized to receive the said R. C. Miller into his custody accordingly, and that Mr. Speaker do forthwith issue his warrant therefor accordingly.

The witness then withdrew, in the custody of the Acting Sergeant-at-Arms.

MONTREAL, OTTAWA AND GEORGIAN BAY CANAL COMPANY.

Mr. LANCASTER moved, seconded by Mr. White (Renfrew):

That a message be sent to the Senate requesting their honours to return to this House Bill No. 45, respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company, as it appears that the said Bill as sent to the Senate is not printed as passed by the House of Commons.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. LANCASTER: It has come to my notice that their honours in the Senate will be called upon to consider a Bill presumably passed by this House, but which, if considered in its present form, would put this House in a very ridiculous position. The House of Commons, after due deliberation, passed the Bill referred to, and section 4 of the Bill as sent to the Senate undertakes to repeal the whole of chapter 123 of the statutes of 1912. This House never did any such thing. It was never suggested by any member that we should. What we did was to repeal section one. In some strange way—I do not want to impute motives but I have to have a good deal of charity in my disposition to think this interference was not intentional—after the House dealt with the Bill the Bill was printed in such a way as to strike out the whole chapter instead of what the House actually did. The effect would be that the company would have no directors and provincial rights with regard to water powers would not be protected. It is a strange thing; the House will have to deal with it afterwards as they see fit, but it is my duty now as Chairman of the Railway Committee of the House of Commons to call attention to the fact that this House has been placed in the position of having sent a Bill to the Senate which we never passed as sent, and I move that the Senate be asked to send that Bill back to us in order that a proper Bill as passed by this House may go to them for consideration.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

BONUSES ON THOROUGHBRED STALLIONS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND:

1. What are the dates of the passing and coming into effect of the regulations under which a bonus is paid to the owners or controllers of thoroughbred stallions in Canada?
2. What sums have been paid in each year since said regulations came into effect?
3. What sums have been paid to individuals, firms or corporations respectively, in each year, and what are the provinces in which they reside?
4. Are the horses owned by the parties, firms corporations to whom a bonus is paid?
5. Have these animals been valued by a competent judge on behalf of the Department of Agriculture?
6. Do the owners or controllers of such stallions for whom a bonus is paid, collect a percentage of the earnings or service fees of such stallions from the parties with whom placed, in addition to the $250 bonus per year paid by the Government? If so, how much?
7. Will the Government pay or have they paid the $250 bonus per year on stallions whose actual value is not more than $150.
8. Has the bonus been paid in any case where the horse has not been certified as sound by a Government inspector? If so, in what cases, respectively?
9. Does the sum paid to the National Bureau of Breeding, Montreal, represent the $250 per horse, as per inspection regulations?
10. Is it the intention of the Government to pay a bonus to the owners of horses of a certain standard suitable for military, saddle or harness purposes, when bred by the owners?
11. Is it the intention of the Government to continue the payment of the bonus for thoroughbred stallions?

Mr. BURRELL:

1. The first announcement in reference to the granting of a bonus to the owners or controllers of thoroughbred stallions in Canada was made public on June 21, 1911. The conditions and regulations pertaining thereto were included in this announcement. The awarding of the grant became effective in the case of such stallions qualifying under the conditions above referred to during the service season 1911.

2. During the fiscal year 1911, $8,250 was expended for the purposes of the said grant. During the fiscal year 1912-13 to date, $15,250 has been expended for the same purpose.

3. The information asked for in this question is supplied in the statements attached.

4. In the case of private individuals the stallions are, so far as the department is aware, owned by the parties making application for the grant. In the case of the Canadian National Bureau of Breeding, Limited, Montreal, I understand that, while all of the stallions for which application is made are controlled by the Bureau, not all of them are owned outright.

5. No valuation has been taken of the stallions for which application has been made.

6. In the case of private individuals owning their stallions, the fees are, of course, collected by their owners, into whose hands is also paid the grant awarded by the department. In the case of the Canadian National Bureau of Breeding, Limited, Montreal, the grant in each case is paid to the Bureau, which, according to its published regulations, collects from the parties with whom its stallions are placed, $3 of the service fee charged upon each mare served.

7. The federal grant has been awarded not upon valuation, but upon the report of the officers of the department who have been detailed to examine the stallions with respect, amongst other things, to their conformation, soundness and general utility for improving the light horse stock of the country.

8. No bonus has been paid to the owner of any stallion which had not been passed upon as serviceably sound by the Veterinary Director General.

9. The sums paid to the Canadian National Bureau of Breeding, Limited, represent the actual bonuses awarded in the case of the stallions qualifying under the conditions imposed by the department.

10. It has not been considered.

11. The minister decides from year to year as to whether or not the payment of the bonus for thoroughbred stallions should be continued.

Statement of the sums paid as bonuses to individuals, firms or corporations, respectively, and of the provinces in which they reside:

Mr. BURRELL.

Fiscal Year 1912-13:

Quebec.—John F. Ryan, secretary, Canadian National Bureau of Breeding, Limited, Montreal, $7,250; J. A. Deneault, Montreal, $250; Colin Campbell, Montreal, $250; total, $7,750.

Ontario.—J. C. Anderson, Morganston, $250; Thos. Babe, Shelburne, $250; Jas. Myles, Heathcote, $250; Wm. Lowes, Drayton, $500; Paterson Bros., East Toronto, $250; J. W. Barbour, 112 Davencourt Road, Toronto, $250; R. M. Dale, 18 Kingston Road, Toronto, $250; F. N. Cace, Beaconsfield, $250; H. Leitch, Cornwall, $250; East Elgin Thoroughbred Association, Dunboyne, $500; Jas. Bovaird, Brampton, $250; T. D. Elliott, Bolton, $250; G. Ed. Boulter, Picton, $250; F. D. Parsons, Guelph, $250; total, $4,000.

New Brunswick.—Sheriff Williams, Gagetown, $250; Samuel Jones, St. Jonn, $250; H. A. Jamieson, Cantebury Station, $250; total, $750.

Nova Scotia.—George M. Holmes, Amherst, $250; W. N. MacDonald, Sydney, $250; total, $500.

Alberta.—J. G. Clark, Clark Manor, $250; E. Sandeman, Cowley, $250; J. W. Morrow, Medicine Hat, $250; total, $750.

Saskatchewan.—Samuel Cummins, Fletwode, $250; H. Booth, Edgeley, $250; total, $500.

Manitoba.—William Barry, Shelmouth, $250.

British Columbia.—Mrs. E. M. Daly, Keremeos, $250; W. H. Jones, Grand Prairie, $250; J. B. Leighton, Savona, $250; total, $750.

Fiscal Year 1911-12.

Quebec.—John F. Ryan, Secretary Canadian National Bureau of Breeding, Limited, Montreal, $5,000; Colin Campbell, Montreal, $250; total, $5,250.

Ontario.—J. A. Myles, Heathcote, $500; William Lowes, Drayton, $250; Ottawa Hunt Club, Ottawa, $250; Hugh Leitch, Cornwall, $250; East Elgin Thoroughbred Association, Dunboyne, $250; George Ed. Boulter, Picton, $250; total, $1,750.

New Brunswick.—L. Dec. MacIntosh, Hartland, $250; H. A. Jamieson, Cantebury Station, $250; total, $500.

Alberta.—H. H. Jenkins, Pincher Creek, $250; J. W. Morrow, Medicine Hat, $250; total, $500.

British Columbia.—James Leighton, Savona, $250.

On motion of Mr. Borden, House adjourned at 11.33 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, February 21, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

THE CASE OF R. C. MILLER.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the report of the Acting Sergeant-at-Arms of the House upon the steps taken by him by virtue of the warrants issued by order of the House on the 18th and 20th days of February, in the case of R. C. Miller, and I have directed the Clerk to lay the report on the table of the House.

CONVEYANCE OF LETTER CARRIERS.

Mr. PELLETIER moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 120, respecting the conveyance of Letter Carriers on Electric Railways. He said: This Bill is to implement what is lacking in the postal laws with reference to the transportation of letter carriers. The Postal Act now authorizes the Postmaster General to fix the rate at which the mail and also the officers of the Post Office Department shall be carried over the railways of this country. It has been found necessary to extend this to cover the transportation of letter carriers, because it has been found impossible to agree with all the transportation companies on some reasonable rate. Certain railway companies have asked us for such a large increase that it is not possible for us to pay it. So the intention of this Bill is to regulate this matter, and put it on the same footing as the transportation of mail matter and officers on railways.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. OLIVER: I would call the attention of the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of the Interior to the fact that the file which was laid on the table yesterday in response to my request contains only a part of the information to which allusion was made by the Minister of Public Works in his remarks to the House. This file relates to the north half of the south-west quarter of section 8. The remarks of the minister had relation also to the north-west quarter of section 8 and the south-east quarter of section 7. I thought it was understood that these papers would also be laid on the table, and I would ask the minister to place them on the table.

Mr. ROCHE: I thought the hon. gentleman had simply asked that the file relating to the Donaldson matter should be laid on the table; but if he desires to have the files relating to all the lands withdrawn from the reserve, I shall bring them down.

Mr. OLIVER: I am not particularly anxious to have the original files in these cases; but these were the ones I was most anxious to have, because it was on them that the minister based his argument that he was following the action I had taken, and I wished to have the papers so as to satisfy myself and the House as to what action I did take. I would like to have the files in regard to these lands and also the papers relating to the establishment of the forest reserve and the withdrawal from the forest reserve of a part of it.

DISMISSALS AT DESCOUSE AND WEST ARICHAT.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: May I ask with regard to another motion, that concerning the dismissal of Leon N. Landry, of Descouse, and the appointment of Andrew Landry to succeed him. This is a matter which was under the consideration of the Minister of Justice. I do not know whether he is prepared to bring down the papers or whether he will not bring them down; that is a matter for his discretion.

Mr. DOHERTY: That is the matter which has reference to the papers bearing upon the recommendations to His Royal Highness to release the man, Mr. Landry?

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Yes.

Mr. DOHERTY: I may say that since the matter was up before, I have gone very carefully into the records of what has occurred in the past with regard to similar demands. I would like to point out in the first place that this is a question of the exercise of the power under the Ticket-of-leave Act. I say that merely because I think we are therefore called upon to look at what has happened in the past under that Act. If I had expected this question, I would have brought with me the papers, and would have been in a position to have put before the House the exact records of what has happened on previous occasions, the dates, and so forth, and so have enabled hon. members to verify them. This matter arose—I cannot fix the date—while my immediate predecessor, Sir Allan Aylesworth was Minister of Justice, in the form of a question put to him as to whether such documents ought to be produced, or whether he would produce them. I regret that I am not in a position at this moment to give the exact details. It is suggested to me, and I think probably it would be more satisfactory to the right hon. gentleman and to the House, that I defer answering this question until I can come with the information in a shape to be put before the House in a perfectly clear manner.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: Monday, or Tuesday?

Mr. DOHERTY: On Tuesday at the latest.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BUREAU: I desire to rise to a question of privilege, though I am personally not more interested than any other member of this House. The question is based on an article or a despatch, which appears in a newspaper published in Montreal, and which reflects upon every member of this House, and also upon you, Mr. Speaker, as it puts in your mouth words or a question, that you never put to the witness. It is in reference to the incident of the witness Mr. Miller, who was brought to the Bar of the House. I find this statement in a newspaper published in Montreal, La Patrie, and printed on the first page thereof. I see in big letters: 'Mr. Miller a Prisoner in the tower of Parliament.' It is a despatch dated Ottawa, and I will read it, first in French, and then translate it to the best of my ability.

Ottawa, 19—La Chambre des Communes a un prisonnier depuis hier après-midi, c'est M. R. C. Miller, de Montréal, l'ancien président de la Diamond Light and Heating Company, qui a refusé de dire à quels députés de la Chambre il avait payé $41,026 pour obtenir des contrats pour sa compagnie, de 1907 à 1911.

In English it reads:

Ottawa, 19—The House of Commons has a prisoner since yesterday afternoon. It is Mr. R. C. Miller, of Montreal, the former president of the Diamond Lighting and Heating Company who has refused to tell to what members of the House he paid the sum of $41,026 to obtain contracts for his company from 1907 to 1911.

Further, this despatch contains the following statement:

A la demande de M. Middlebro, M. l'Orateur demanda à M. Miller de dire à quels députés de la Chambre des communes, de 1907 à 1911, il avait payé ces $41,026.

Translation:

At the request of Mr. Middlebro, the Speaker asked Mr. Miller to what members of the House of Commons he had paid, between 1907 and 1911, the amount of $41,026.

The evidence that was read before the House yesterday when the question was discussed, the evidence which is in 'Hansard' and the statement made by the witness at the Bar, show that the statements contained in this despatch published in La Patrie, are totally, entirely and absolutely false. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the witness stated that he had never paid any sum, or any of this $41,026, to any senator, or any member of the House of Commons. I rise at this time to repudiate that statement and to qualify it, as it deserves, as a false statement.

NAVAL FORCES OF THE EMPIRE.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden for the second reading of Bill No. 21, to authorize measures for increasing the effective Naval Forces of the Empire, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Turriff thereto, resumed from February 19.

Hon. T. W. CROTHERS (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, opposition to the measure before the House is offered on many grounds, none of which, it seems to me, can be maintained. In the first place, it is said that the aid provided by this Bill is neither needed nor sought by the British Government; that the constructing of three battleships by this Government and the loaning of them to the British Government, by some mysterious, undefined and undefinable process, would constitute tribute, destroy our autonomy and, in perpetuity, consign us to taxation without representation, that England has more money than we have and does not require any assistance by way of money from us; that the taxpayers of England are able and willing, unaided, to protect every part of the British Empire, including Canada, and will do so without aid from us; that, in any event, this Bill should not be passed by this House until it receives the approval of the people and that what is known as the Laurier naval policy has been approved by the people.

Taking the last contention first, let me say that the speeches delivered by hon. members on the other side of the House, it seems to me, have been based upon three false assumptions. The first is that the Bill before the House contains the Government's whole naval policy; secondly, that the provisions of this Bill have not been approved of by the people already; and, thirdly, that the Laurier naval policy has not been rejected by the people. Let us look at one or two of these points. I want to assert without any fear of contradiction, and I hope to be able to prove it before I sit down, that the Laurier naval policy has been on two occasions rejected by the people of this country, once indirectly and once directly. It will be remembered that, when the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) attended the Imperial Conference in 1912 and the question arose there as to granting aid to the naval forces of the Empire, he said:

At present Canadian expenditures for defence services are confined to the military side. The Canadian Government are prepared to consider the naval system of defence as well.

That was in 1902. He returned to Canada and he had the matter of naval defence under consideration for five years without doing anything—from 1902 until the next Imperial Conference in 1907. At the Imperial Conference in 1907 he stated before the assembled representatives of the Empire that, although they had been considering the question of naval defence for five years in Canada, they had reached the conclusion that they would do absolutely nothing. Let us see if that is so. You will find that at that conference, Dr. Smart, Commissioner of Public Works for Cape Colony, introduced this resolution:

That this conference, recognizing the vast importance of the services rendered by the navy to the defence of the Empire and the protection of its trade, and the paramount importance of continuing to maintain the navy in the highest possible state of efficiency, considers it to be the duty of the dominions beyond the seas to make such contribution towards the upkeep of the navy as may be determined by their local legislatures—the contribution to take the form of a grant of money, the establishment of local naval defence, or such other services, in such manner as may be decided upon after consultation with the Admiralty, and as would best accord with the varying circumstances.

Hon. members will notice there that Dr. Smart proposed any one of several means of granting aid to strengthen the Imperial navy, either by a contribution, or in the form of the establishment of local naval defences 'or such other services, in such manner as may be decided upon after consultation with the Admiralty, and as would best accord with their varying circumstances.' What answer did the representative of Canada give to that proposition? Let me read his answer:

I am sorry to say that, so far as Canada is concerned, we cannot agree to the resolution. We took the ground many years ago that we had enough to do in that respect in our country before committing ourselves to the general claim. We have too much to do otherwise. For my part, if the motion were pressed to a conclusion, I should have to vote against it.

Then Dr. Smart said:

I thought the wording of this resolution would have especially met your views, because the upkeep of the navy may take the form either of a grant of money or the establishment of a local defence force or other services.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

I have said all I have to say on the subject.

Dr. Smart:

I should like very much to hear the opinions of the representatives of the other portions of the Empire.

Mr. Deakin:

I have no hesitation in entering upon the discussion if desired, but if we are not going to pass the resolution is it worth while?

Dr. Smart:

I think it is a great pity we do not pass something. We have done so much in the way of pious affirmation that I am anxious we should do something of a practical character.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier:

It can be passed if there is a majority. For my part, I must vote against it.

Sir Joseph Ward: To do any good we would require to be unanimous about it.

Dr. Smart: Yes, I suppose so.

Mr. Winston Churchill: It is not much good to have a resolution at all if we cannot be unanimous.

The Chairman: I think we had better not proceed any further just now.

And the matter died stifled by Canada's representative. So that I repeat: in the year 1902, Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised the assembled representatives of the British Empire in the Colonial conference that he would take into consideration the establishment of a naval force. He took it into consideration and left it there for five years, and then returned to the Colonial conference in the year 1907, and said: I will have nothing to do with this matter; I shall not make a contribution to the royal navy; I shall do nothing towards the establishment of a local navy; we shall do absolutely nothing towards strengthening the Royal navy or constructing a navy for the protection of Canada herself. That was in the year 1907. A few months afterwards, we had a general election, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier was sustained by the people of Canada. The people of Canada in 1908, said: We approve of the position you took; we do not want to do anything for the navy; we won't make any direct contribution; we will have no establishment of a local naval force; we will do absolutely nothing. Those were the instructions Sir Wilfrid Laurier received from the people of Canada at the general elections in 1908. Two years came and went without any appeal to the people, and in the year of 1910 we had the Naval Service Act of that year passed by this House then led by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and we had it passed without any consultation with the people. We went to the country in 1911; it has been said by several gentlemen on the other side of the House—and the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie), a few evenings ago lashed himself into paroxysms of eloquence in struggling to establish it—that the navy question was not submitted to the people at the elections in 1911. The hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) a few hours ago, prompted the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) to say that the naval question was only discussed in the province of Quebec during that election.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to appeal to a higher authority than either of these gentlemen. I want to appeal to a man who has experience of the joys and sorrows of a long political career; I want to appeal to the present leader of the Opposition to see whether or not the naval policy was a question discussed before the people at the general elections in the year 1911. It will be remembered that a charge was made against the right hon. the leader of the Opposition for delaying the letting of contracts for the construction of cruisers which it was proposed to build under his policy, and what did he say in reply to that charge? His reply will be found in 'Hansard,' page 1063:

We asked for tenders for four cruisers and six destroyers which would cost $11,280,000. We did not choose to award the contract in view of the impending change of Government. Yes, we thought as the general elections were coming, that it would not be fair in a matter of this kind, which was at issue between the two parties, to award the contract in case there might be, as there was, a change of Government.

Mark you, the right hon. the leader of the Opposition says that the navy was at issue between the two parties in the election of 1911, and he was not speaking about the province of Quebec merely but about the general issue throughout Canada. It will be remembered also that the right hon. gentleman made a speech only a few hours ago in this House, in which he used these words, in referring to an amendment proposed by the member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) 'Hansard,' pages 3328 and 3329:

That was in the month of November, 1910. The elections came on shortly afterwards and each party went before the country with its policy. My right hon. friend went before the electors, pledged by his vote on the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier that we should consult the Canadian people, not only upon the question of the navy, but upon the question of contribution to armaments.

I am reading this, Mr. Speaker, to show that the leader of the Opposition realized then, as he realizes now, that the navy question was one of the issues between the parties in the general elections of 1911. He continued:

I need not recall the fact that my right hon. friend triumphed on that occasion. It was his policy which was adopted by the Canadian people; it was not the policy which I had advocated——

Observe, Mr. Speaker; the right hon. the leader of the Opposition says: It was not the policy which I had advocated which had been endorsed by the people:

—it was not the policy which I had advocated which had been supported at one time by my right hon. friend, but it was the policy which he had later adopted and which was the last policy which had been before the people and which was approved of by the people.

Mr. CROTHERS.

In the face of such a condition of things, can my right hon. friend refuse to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville). If the words and the pledges of men, when they are before the electors, mean anything, it seems to me that on the present occasion we have the right to expect that the policy which my right hon. friend laid before the people and on which he triumphed——

Will anybody on the other side say that the naval question was not before the people in the last election?

—is the policy which he must adopt at the present time; and that to depart from it would be a breach of faith with the electorate. The defeat I have accepted already——

'I have accepted the verdict of the people; they did not want my naval policy.' That is what it means, if it means anything.

—the people have decided in favour of the views of my right hon. friend; and it seems to me that there is nothing for this House to do but to carry out the pledges given to the electors.

So, we find the right hon. leader of the Opposition admitting directly on one occasion that the naval question was one of the issues before the people—and that the policy of the leader of the present Government triumphed, while his own policy was defeated. And yet, notwithstanding that defeat you have him coming before this House and asking the House this session to continue that policy which he admits was defeated by the people on the 21st of September, 1911. You will find in the amendment proposed by the leader of the Opposition these words:

It is the opinion of this House that measures should be taken at the present session to give effect actively and speedily to the permanent naval policy embodied in the Naval Service Act of 1910.

That is, it is the duty of this House to proceed this session to carry out a policy which he admits was defeated on the 21st of September, 1911. In 1908 the people approved of his do-nothing policy. In the face of those instructions from the people, he proceeded two years later to carry through this House the Naval Act of 1910, afterwards condemned by the people as he admits. And yet this policy which was so defeated he asks this House to proceed actively to carry out. Now, it will be said that when speaking the other day he was calling the attention of the House to the vote alleged to have been given by the leader of the Government in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Monk). That is aside for the moment; I read it for the purpose of satisfying every reasonable member of the House—and I think I have succeeded—on the evidence of the leader of the Opposition that the question was determined by the people on the 21st of September, 1911, and that his policy was then defeated. In addition to that it is shown that he was urging that those who voted for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier are in duty bound now to vote for the submission of the question to the people. The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier was in these words:

> The House regrets that the Speech from the Throne has no indication whatever of the intention of the Government to consult the people on this naval policy and the general question of the contribution by Canada to Imperial armament.

The contention of the leader of the Opposition in the extract from his speech that I have read is that that was the proposition before the people. Now look at that for a moment. What would that mean: 'I am before you now; I do not propose to do anything by way of contributions or by way of a Canadian navy until I come back and consult you again'. Could there be anything more absurd than that?

Now, the only question between us is: What was the proposition at that time before the people? What was Mr. Borden's policy—the resolution of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier or another one? What was really done, in substance, was to carry out the two divisions of that amendment. The people were asked in 1911 to declare on one of these branches. Which one? The question of contribution. And we propose to go to the people again on the permanent side of it before it is adopted. So, we are strictly carrying out the principle which we have advocated for years, that of consulting the people on all these great questions before they are put into force. It is very gratifying to find our Liberal friends converted to the idea that the people ought to be consulted on these great questions. It is a sudden conversion. Let me give you a few illustrations, both from trade and from the naval question. To go back a little way, it will be remembered that in 1878 the people, by an overwhelming majority, declared in favour of protecting our infant industries. But the Liberal party, instead of bowing to the will of the people and accepting their verdict, so emphatically rendered, proceeded to accuse them of gross folly, credulity and gullibility. We remember that very well. And what was the effect? The effect of that attitude toward the people was to keep the party of hon. gentlemen opposite in the cold shades of Opposition for eighteen years, and I believe it would have kept them in Opposition ever since had it not been for the side issues that were injected into the campaign of 1896. Again, in 1899, in this House, the present right hon. leader of the Opposition declared that the people of Canada no longer desired reciprocity with the people of the United States. And not only did he make that statement but he gave the reason, and the reason he stated was that we were no longer dependent upon the markets of the United States—and he might have added, we were no longer dependent upon the markets of the United States thanks to the policy which he for twenty years had combatted. Well, we had an election a few months after that. in 1900, and the people of Canada sustained the right hon. gentleman, stating in substance: You are quite right; we do not want reciprocity with the United States; we are no longer dependent upon the markets of that country. In 1901, encouraged by what the people had said, the right hon. gentleman stated that not only would he not send anyone to Washington to bring about reciprocity, but that if they came here from Washington, he would send them home without trying to make a treaty with them. In 1903, we had this repeated in substance in this House, when he introduced the National Transcontinental measure. He said, in substance that the people of Canada would not have reciprocity with the United States. What did he say? He urged the necessity of building it right at once, in order to prevent the United States, an ever-vigilant competitor, from turning our trade southward and northward instead of eastward and westward. On that occasion he said: We have done everything possible, by granting subsidies and by other legislation, to force our trade into British channels and keep it out of American channels.' That was, in substance, another declaration to the people of Canada that they were not in favour of reciprocity. That was in 1903; in 1904, a few months afterwards, the people applauded that position, and again in the year 1908 he was sustained by the people of Canada, they thereby saying: 'You are right in what you said in 1899 about reciprocity; you are right in what you said in 1901 about reciprocity; you are right in what you said in 1903 about reciprocity—we don't want it. Notwithstanding this, in the autumn of 1910, without consulting the people or their representatives in this House, he sends two men to Washington and makes the reciprocity pact. And yet they now pretend to be friends par excellence of the people. and state that this question ought to be submitted to them. The attitude of hon. gentlemen reminds me of children; it is only when children are kindly treated in the country that they have any affection or love for their relatives there, and, with our friends opposite, it is only when they are kindly treated in the country that they have any respect for or confidence in the people. In 1878, and, history repeating itself, in 1911, the people of Canada by an overwhelming majority asserted their determination to maintain Canada's fiscal and national independence, but, instead of bowing to the will of the people and accepting a verdict so emphatically rendered, the right hon. leader of the Opposition went up and down the province of Ontario last summer declaring that the result of the elections was due to prejudice and passion and selfishness.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. CROTHERS: Hon. gentlemen say hear, hear; but I say that they have no respect for the people unless the people do as they desire them to do. Challenge after challenge has been thrown out during the last three or four weeks that the Government should go to the country. In truth, these are bold words, summoned rather to dispel timidity and muster up courage than to express sincere desire or firm conviction. Hon. gentlemen know very well that they will now find the atmosphere in the country very unhealthy; they know very well that a trip thither would so decimate their ranks that they would be impotent for service in this House thereafter.

I was quoting a few moment ago from a speech delivered by the right hon. leader of the Opposition, wherein he admitted that the naval question was before the people on the 21st of September, 1911, and wherein he admitted that his policy was rejected by the people. I now desire to direct the attention of the House to the policy that the Prime Minister placed before the people, and, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you will permit me to read an extract from a statement made by that right hon. gentleman in this House. It has been read several times, but I would like hon. gentlemen to listen again to these words spoken by the present leader of the Government on November 24, 1910:

> It may be fairly asked what we would do if we were in power to-day with regard to a great question of this kind. It seems to me that our plain course and duty would be this: The Government of this country are able to ascertain and to know, if they take the proper action for that purpose, whether the conditions which face the Empire at this time in respect of naval defence are grave. If we were in power we would endeavour to find that out, to get a plain, unvarnished answer to that question, and if the answer to that question, based upon the assurance of the Government of the Mother Country and the report of the naval experts of the Admiralty were such—and I think it would be such—as to demand instant and effective action by this country, then I would appeal to Parliament for immediate and effective aid, and if Parliament did not give immediate and effective aid I would appeal from Parliament to the people of this country.

Then, Sir, as to the permanent policy, I think the people have a right to be consulted. I do not know whether I have made my position clear but I have done so according to my humble capacity. I think the question of Canada's co-operation upon a permanent basis in Imperial defence involves very large and wide considerations. If Canada and the other dominions of the Empire are to take their part as nations of this Empire in the defence of the Empire as a whole, shall it be that we, contributing to that defence of the whole Empire, shall have absolutely, as citizens of this country, no voice whatever in the councils of the Empire touching the issues of peace or war throughout the Empire? I do not think that such would be a tolerable condition, I do not believe the people of Canada would for one moment submit to such a condition. Shall members of this House, representative men, representing two hundred and twenty-one constituencies of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific, shall no one of them have the same voice with regard to those vast Imperial issues that the humblest taxpayer in the British Isles has at this moment. It does not seem to me that such a condition would make for the integrity of the Empire, for the closer co-operation of the Empire regard must be had to those far-reaching considerations, a permanent policy would have to be worked out, and when that permanent policy had been worked out and explained to the people of Canada, to every citizen in this country, then it would be the duty of any government to go to the people of Canada to receive their mandate and accept and Act upon their approval of or disapproval of that policy.

That declaration was made in this House —a very proper place, indeed, to make it. But he did not stop there. The right hon. leader of this Government, in his speech opening the campaign in the province of Ontario, discussed the question of immediate aid, favouring it; discussed the Laurier policy, denouncing it; and he went on to discuss the permanent policy in terms similar to those which I have just read to you. I have an extensive extract from that speech, but I will not take time to read it at this stage; I desire only to read a word or two respecting the permanent policy:

> Canada's permanent and effective co-operation in naval defence can only be accomplished by proposals which take account of this consideration, and any such proposals—

Not immediate aid, not a contribution, which he had already stated earlier in his speech he was in favour of.

> —should be submitted to the people for their approval.

That speech was published in every newspaper throughout the province of Ontario, and it was published in Quebec as well—at least as far east as Montreal, because I have read it in the Montreal papers. There was our policy first enunciated in this House, that if we were in power we would go home to England and get the best information that we could from the British Government, and if upon that information we considered the conditions were grave, we would do what? Go to the people? No, we would come to this Parliament and ask for immediate aid, and if this Parliament refused aid, then we would go to the people. That is what we said in this House and on the platform in 1911.

Mr. GRAHAM: Does the hon. member adhere absolutely to that last statement now, and would he adhere to it?

Mr. CROTHERS: About going to the people upon the permanent policy?

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend read a declaration of the present Prime Minister that if Parliament would not pass this proposition for immediate aid, he would immediately appeal to the country. I am asking if we could depend on the Government standing by that proposition.

Mr. CROTHERS: You can depend on the leader of the present Government standing by anything he has ever stood by before.

Mr. GRAHAM: 1909.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): It would be very interesting to know, and I would be glad to have the hon. gentleman to tell us, why it took so long for the hon. gentleman's Government to get started on this policy?

Mr. CROTHERS: It was not very long.

Mr. BENNETT (East Simcoe): It seems long to you over there.

Mr. CROTHERS: This is an illustration of how unreasonable some people are. My junior friend from Halifax knows very well that this Government did not come into power until October 10, 1911. We met the House of Commons a few weeks thereafter. He did not expect us to go to England before meeting the House.

Mr. GRAHAM: The Empire might have gone to pieces.

Mr. CROTHERS: We were engaged for five or six months, and as soon as the session closed the leader of the Government and three or four of his colleagues went to England just as they said they would. I suppose he would expect it to be done in a few days.

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes.

Mr. CROTHERS: We have not taken so much time yet as the Liberal Government took to do nothing.

I wish to repeat that the Liberal policy urged upon this House this session was, on the evidence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier himself, rejected by the people of Canada on the 21st of September, 1911, to use his own words. He says to the leader of the Government:

> Your policy triumphed; mine was rejected. I have accepted my defeat. Now proceed to carry out your policy.

Could there be anything clearer than that, that the policy proposed by the leader of the Government prior to the elections of September 21, 1911, was approved by the people of Canada? You have the evidence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier—pretty good evidence, especially for his followers. If any of the gentlemen opposite desire to look that up, they will find it at pages 3328 and 3329 of the current 'Hansard.' It is worth cutting out and pinning in your hat—the admission by Sir Wilfrid Laurier that his policy was defeated by the people and our policy was approved by the people. Of course, he was then arguing that it was the amendment by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) that we had before the people, but that seemed to me so absurd, that was a proposition that the people should be consulted on both branches of the naval service, the contribution and the permanent side of it. We proposed to the people of Canada on the 21st of September a year ago to consult them with reference to the immediate contribution, 'effective aid,' that is what we told them. The Prime Minister declared to the people of Canada on the 20th day of September, as he had for months and months before declared: If you support me, tomorrow I will do several things: I will grant aid to agriculture, I will grant aid to good roads, I will proceed at once with the roads, I will proceed at once with the speedy construction of the Hudson Bay railway, I will extend a system of rural free mail delivery; I will extend the boundaries of Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec, and I will not gratify the reciprocity pact. I will discontinue the Laurier navy policy, I will proceed to England as soon as convenient and ascertain the facts and if I ascertain that conditions are grave with reference to the conditions of the British navy I will ask Parliament to grant aid immediately I come back. And what did the people of Canada say on the 21st of September, 1911? They declared by an overwhelming majority: We have the utmost confidence in you, proceed with your programme, implement your promise. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been authorized by the people of Canada to do the very thing we are doing to-day with reference to the navy. That authority is coming to us day by day with ever increasing force from all parts of Canada and I say to our hon. friends opposite that we propose to continue to exercise that authority to the successful issue of this whole matter.

One of the grounds I mentioned in the outset was that some of our friends opposite have said: England has more money than we have; we have borrowed two billion dollars; we are sending home to England $80,000,000 by way of interest every year; she does not want our money; what is $35,000,000 to her? The leader of the Opposition said: It is not money that England wants at this moment, but she wants our hearts. I think if the choice were to be put to the British Admiralty whether they would accept a small sum of money or some hearts they would accept the former. The right hon. gentleman said: What she wants are the hearts of her subjects all over the world.

Mr. GRAHAM: That is the Nationalist policy.

Mr. CROTHERS: Let us see what some other of our friends said. My hon. friend from South Renfrew (Mr. Graham) took a hand in that line. He said:

> Sir, there is not a word in the memorandum of the British Admiralty, not a word anywhere in the history of the world within the last fifty years, which points to the fact that there is any danger of the British Empire being defeated on the seas.
>
> If my hon. friend entertains that fear, I do not, and the Admiralty says there is no danger of such a condition, because they are prepared to take care of the British Empire the world over.

That is, the hon. member for South Renfrew says the British Admiralty is prepared to take care of the Empire the world over, including Canada—and he is prepared to allow them to do it.

Mr. GRAHAM: My hon. friend put in something I did not say; he edited that a little.

Mr. CROTHERS: Everybody understood that I was making my own remarks there. Then we have the hon. member for Welland (Mr. German). I think he said something, too, that was very interesting. And my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Clark) said: There is no emergency, but the extreme political situation we are in in Canada is this, that although there is no emergency, we have a government which comes coolly forward with an emergency contribution as its only naval policy. Here is Great Britain. It has $2,000,000,000 invested in Canada, and is drawing from us $80,000,000 in interest annually, and we are told forsooth, that to keep the flag flying, and to keep the British Empire intact, we have to send a miserable dole of $35,000,000 across the seas. My hon. friend from Welland said: Hon. gentlemen opposite say, give money to England, $35,000,000. That is not sensible. Why? Because, he says, England has not asked for it; England does not want it, and she certainly does not need it. Then why should we give it; it is simply and solely and only sentimental. Nothing else but pure sentiment. My hon. friend from South Renfrew says: The British taxpayer is able and willing, unaided, to protect the whole British Empire, including Canada, and they will do so if we act the poltroon and allow them to do it. Therefore, as a matter of logic we should emulate that contemptible character in his cowardice and baseness.

Take another illustration. My hon. friend from Red Deer says: We have borrowed two billion dollars from England, and we are paying $80,000,000 by way of interest. She has more than we have. Why should we do anything for the British navy? Exalted ideas, Mr. Speaker, are they not? And the logic, how cogent. Take an illustration. The chief of police is a very wealthy man. I borrow $5,000 from him to erect a house on my lot. He has a mortgage on it, and I am paying him $300 a year of interest. Therefore, says my hon. friend from Red Deer, I should not contribute anything to his salary for protecting me.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer). I am sure my hon. friend does not want to misrepresent me. I contended that it was my duty under these circumstances to defend my own house. I take his illustration.

Mr. CROTHERS: But my hon. friend also contended that he should not pay anything to the chief of police who is defending him. What are the facts, Mr. Speaker. For one hundred and fifty years the people of Canada have been protected by the Royal navy. The people of Canada are being protected by the Royal navy to-day, and if we were to begin to-morrow to construct a navy for our own protection, it would take us say twenty-five years. That is not too large a number of years.

An hon. MEMBER: Fifty years.

Mr. CROTHERS: What did my hon. friend say?

Mr. McKENZIE: I said fifty years.

Mr. CROTHERS: Make it twenty-five years. The Royal Navy is going to defend us during these twenty-five years, while we are getting ready to defend ourselves, and will we do nothing towards the construction or upkeep of this weapon which has protected us for one hundred and fifty years, is protecting us now, and must continue to protect us for the next twenty-five years? I have spoken that way, Mr. Speaker, for twenty years. I could not understand a Canadian going over to the Mother Country and looking an Englishman square in the face and not being ashamed of himself. When an individual or a nation accepts something without giving an equivalent, a little measure of his or their self-respect is sacrificed, and when an individual holds out his hand to get something for nothing, a little of his manhood oozes out at the tips of his fingers. Now, as I say we have nothing left of these grounds which I started out to deal with except the question whether or not there is any need, any emergency, if you like; call it what you choose. I propose to read only a few short extracts from this memorandum:

The Admiralty set the greatest store by the important material, and still more important moral assistance which it is within the power of Canada to give to maintaining British supremacy on the high seas.

Let us look at that and see what it means.

The Admiralty set the greatest store——

What does 'store' mean? Value, the greatest value, appreciation. The Admiralty says: We regard as of the greatest value, and with the highest appreciation any material assistance which the Canadian people may see fit to give us. Are they saying that when they do not want anything? What does that mean? That comes from the British Government. It is not a clipping from some newspaper in British Columbia or Prince Edward Island or Quebec. That is an authoritative statement from the British Government. It includes Mr. Asquith, Lloyd George, Winston Churchill, and all the members of that Government, and it comes to us as an official document, stating that they would regard as of the greatest value, and with the highest appreciation, any material assistance which the people of Canada may see fit to contribute at this time. Would they say that if they did not want anything? They say more.

But they think it necessary to disclaim any intention, however indirect, of putting pressure upon Canadian public opinion, or of seeking to influence the Dominion Parliament in a decision which clearly belongs solely to Canada.

They say we would consider of the greatest value and with the highest appreciation any material assistance you can give us, but we will not put any pressure on you. What for? Hon. gentlemen opposite say it means: We will not put any pressure on you for something we do not want. Why, it is perfectly absurd to say that they set the greatest store on something they do not want. Then what more do they say:

Naval supremacy is of two kinds: general and local.

And I want you to follow that if you please:

General naval supremacy consists in the power to defeat in battle and drive from the seas the strongest hostile navy or combination of hostile navies wherever they may be found. Local superiority consists in the power to send in good time to, or maintain permanently in some distant theatre forces adequate to defeat the enemy or hold him in check until the main decision has been obtained in the decisive theatre. It is the general naval supremacy of Great Britain which is the primary safeguard of the security and interests of the great dominions of the Crown, and which for all these years has been the deterrent upon any possible designs prejudicial to or inconsiderate of their policy and safety.

In one paragraph they say to you: we would regard it as of the greatest value and with the highest appreciation any material assistance you could give us, and in the next paragraph they say: your safety depends upon the general supremacy of the navy. Then they add: and we advise you to do it by strengthening the general supremacy of the navy; we advise you to do it by contributing battleships. There you have the whole thing in a nutshell. These three paragraphs settle the whole matter. The British Admiralty has not changed its mind. A few days ago we had hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House saying, and it was repeated time after time, that when the representatives of Canada went to England in 1909 the British Admiralty proposed a certain course for them to take. Nothing can be further from the truth. The British Admiralty proposed, in 1909, in substance, the very thing they propose in 1912 to my right hon. leader. They did not change. What did they propose? You will find it in the report of what occurred there in these words:

If the problem of Imperial defence were considered merely as a problem of naval strategy it would be found that the greatest output of strength for a given expenditure is obtained by the maintenance of a single navy with the concomitant unity of training and unity of command. In furtherance, then, of the simple strategical ideal the maximum of power would be gained if all parts of the Empire contributed, according to their needs and resources, to the maintenance of the British navy.

That is what they proposed when the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) went to England in 1909, and that is what they proposed when my right hon. leader went to England in 1912. The difference between the two is that our Liberal friends objected to do what they told them they ought to do, while the present Government accepted their advice. What did they propose? Our Liberal friends said: Well, we cannot do that. Then the British Admiralty next said to them: The next best thing would be to build a fleet unit. They replied: We will not do that either. Then, what will you do; how much money are you willing to spend? You do not want to do anything for the Royal navy, you will not build a fleet unit, what will you do? They reply: We do not know what we will do; we may spend £600,000, or we may spend £400,000, but you must remember that we will have to deduct from that what it costs at Halifax and Esquimalt and also what it costs for the wireless telegraph service. It is a wonder they did not propose to deduct from that their fare across the ocean. The British Admiralty have not changed their views one iota as between 1909 and 1912. They told the Liberal party, or its representatives, in 1909, the same thing that they told us in 1912, and no intelligent man who desires to be honest can read that memorandum without reaching the conclusion that the British Admiralty say: We are in need; we will regard it as of the very greatest value if you will help us; the way you can help us is by a contribution, not for our protection—you will notice that point—but in order to maintain the security of the overseas dominions; the best thing you can do is to strengthen the royal navy, and the best way to do that is to give us additional ships. We are proposing to do that. We are literally carrying out what the British Admiralty asks us to do and in that course we differ materially from the position taken by our hon. friends opposite. We are carrying out this policy according to the will of the people also. Let me say that there is plenty of evidence to corroborate the statements which have been made as to the existence of an emergency. I shall read the resolution proposed by my right hon. friend the leader of the Government and also the resolution proposed in amendment by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. First I shall read the resolution:

(a) That from and out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada there may be paid and applied a sum not exceeding thirty-five million dollars for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire:—

(b) That the said sum shall be used and applied under the direction of the Governor in Council in the construction and equipment of battleships or armoured cruisers of the most modern and powerful type;

(c) That the said ships when constructed and equipped shall be placed by the Governor in Council at the disposal of His Majesty for the common defence of the Empire; and

(d) That the said sum shall be paid, used and applied, and the said ships shall be constructed and placed at the disposal of His Majesty subject to such terms, conditions and arrangements as may be agreed upon between the Governor in Council and His Majesty's Government.

Now let us see what the leader of the Opposition proposes to do with that. He proposes to leave the clause (a) of the resolution and then to substitute the following, and I would like you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members of this House to read carefully this amendment made by my right hon. friend. What does he say?

Several of the most important of the foreign powers have adopted a definite policy of rapidly increasing their naval strength.

He admits that.

That this condition has compelled the United Kingdom to concentrate its naval forces in home waters involving the withdrawal of ships from the outlying portions of the Empire.

He admits that.

That such withdrawal renders it necessary that Canada without further delay should enter actively upon a permanent policy of naval defence.

It is the opinion of this House that measures should be taken at the present session to give effect actively speedily to the permanent naval policy embodied in the Naval Service Act of 1910 passed pursuant to the resolution unanimously approved by this House in March, 1909.

This House is further of the opinion that to increase the power and mobility of the Imperial navy by the addition by Canada under the above Act of two fleet units, to be stationed on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of Canada, respectively, rather than by a contribution of money or ships, is the policy best calculated to afford relief——

Why there is no necessity for relief, they say, no emergency no peril no menace! Here we have the leader of the Opposition saying that this policy is——best calculated to afford relief to the United Kingdom in respect to the burden of Imperial naval defence.——

I thought there was no burden or emergency, or peril, or menace, or no necessity for our doing anything. But this is the best way of doing it! The amendment proceeds:

-and, in the words of the Admiralty memorandum, to restore greater freedom to the movements of the British squadrons in every sea and directly promote the security of the Dominion; and that the Government of Canada should take such steps as shall lead to the accomplishment of this purpose as speedily as possible.

A few minutes ago I read an extract from a speech delivered by the leader of the Opposition in this House in which he said that the aggregate cost of the cruisers which it was proposed to construct in 1911 was, if I remember aright, $11,800,000.

His proposition now is to build two fleet units which would cost about fifty million dollars, and the upkeep of these two units would cost a million dollars a year, at a low estimate, which capitalized amounts to twenty-five million dollars. The right hon. gentleman proposed in 1911 to expend $11,800,000, and he is now proposing to expend $50,000,000 for the construction of two fleet units, and $1,000,000 a year for their upkeep, which, capitalized, would be $25,000,000 more, or $75,000,000 in all. What has happened? I would like to ask my right hon. friend what has happened since May, 1911, to justify him in raising his expenditure from $11,800,000 to $75,000,000. Call it emergency if you like; call it peril, call it menace, call it a change of conditions, call it what you will, and yet we have hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House talking by the hour, by the day, and by the week, trying to prove from newspaper clippings that the right hon. the leader of the Opposition had no justification for proposing to increase the expenditure from $11,000,000 to $75,000,000.

I started out by saying, Mr. Speaker, that the great burden of the speeches we have heard in this House for the last three or four weeks was based upon three false assumptions, namely; that the whole naval policy of the Government is contained in this Bill, which I think I have satisfied every reasonable man in the House is not so; then, upon the second false assumption, that the people of this country have not been consulted as to a contribution; and then, on the third false assumption, that the people did not reject the policy of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition. Let me repeat for a moment—because I am sorry the leader of the Opposition was not in the House when I was speaking about this. He admits in the speech of the other day that his policy and the policy of the leader of the Government were before the people on the 21st of September, 1911, and that the policy of the leader of the Government triumphed and his policy was rejected. And yet he, with his long record of experience, proposes at this very session to resurrect the policy which he himself admits the people rejected on the 21st September, 1911.

Before I conclude, I want to refer to a remark made by a gentleman on the other side of the House that the labour people of this country are opposed to war. That statement, Mr. Speaker, is quite true. Every virtuous man is opposed to war. In my own view war should be confined to the brute creation. I believe it to be a reflection upon humanity that war is possible in this twentieth century after the advent of the Prince of Peace. But, Sir, we must take into account world-wide conditions. Knowing the workingman of this country as I do, he is as intelligent, as patriotic, as loyal as any other class, as devoted to his wife and his children, his country, his king and his God. But I know full well that if the time should ever come when their liberties are at stake, the workingmen of Canada would be the first to come forward to protect their homes and their families, and to defend their country and their king. If I read the plain Canadian aright, militarism, the military tyranny which is the curse of Europe, has no attraction for him. It is repugnant to the genius, education and conditions of our people. Our country, almost boundless in exent, and abundantly abounding in natural wealth of every variety, capable of sustaining 200,000,000 souls, has a population of 8,000,000. From every direction, opportunities beckon on to success and fortune every man of intelligence, energy, and integrity. Under these conditions, standing armies cannot thrive nor can the blandishments of the militarist lure our people from pursuing that higher nobility achieved in the arts of peace. But, Sir, I do not regard this as a war contribution; this is a peace contribution. Our late King, Edward VII, whose name will go down in history as the great peacemaker, said at Liverpool shortly before his death: the best guarantee of peace is thorough preparation for war. So long, Sir, as the maritime sovereignty of the British people is maintained, we shall neither be attacked nor humiliated without attack. But, let that sovereignty once disappear and our prestige among the nations would largely disappear with it, and we would be subject to the loss of our rights and liberties which we appreciate more highly than life itself, by some powerful foe, perhaps even without the striking of a martial blow.

Mr. A. K. MACLEAN (Halifax): It is not my intention Sir, to answer categorically the arguments advanced by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) in support of the measure which the Government has proposed to the House. I shall address myself very briefly to some of the general propositions laid down by that hon. gentleman, and thus indicate in a general sense my own views upon this measure. The hon. gentleman has, by a vast amount of specious and disingenuous reasoning, sought to bolster up the principle of this measure. In a positive and a negative way, he laid down certain propositions. For instance, he said that we on this side of the House deny that Britain either sought or invited aid. I affirm the statement made in that negative form, and I say now that the Minister of Labour can produce no evidence from anybody in authority within the British Empire to the effect that aid and assistance has ever been asked or is desired of this country. The hon. gentleman produced the Admiralty memorandum, which he says is an official document and is therefore conclusive upon that point. I propose arguing later that that document was procured by duress.

Mr. CROTHERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MACLEAN: I propose to show that it was procured and solicited by the Government for the relief of their own political troubles and that it reflects no official opinion whatever in Great Britain. He dislikes the idea that this contribution should be designated, as a tribute. Speaking for myself, I hardly think that the contribution proposed under this Bill is tribute money; but I say it is conscience money, paid or attempted to be paid by men guilty of political sin. We on this side of he House think that the wrong people are asked to pay the money. We say that they have no justification for taking from the treasury of this country thirty-five million dollars, simply to save their consciences, and to save them from the evil effects of their political misdeeds.

The hon. gentleman further stated that we on this side make the assertion, as a ground of opposition to this Bill, that England does not need this money. Generally speaking, that is true. In answer to that, we say that from the financial standpoint England does not require our assistance. If she did, hon. gentlemen on this side would rush to the support of England with our friends on the other side, and would tender to her not only thirty-five millions of dollars, but any amount within our ability to pay, to maintain her supremacy.

The hon. gentleman laid down two or three other propositions in a positive form. He said that this Bill has already been approved by the country. I deny that proposition; I say this Bill was never submitted to the people of this country, directly or indirectly, in whole or in part. He says that the naval policy of the Opposition, as enunciated when the Government led by my right hon. leader was in power, has been disapproved of by the electorate. I equally deny that proposition, as not being true in fact. The hon. gentleman further says that the principle of contribution was an issue in the last election. I deny that. I further deny that hon. gentlemen opposite ever were, during the whole history of the naval question in this country, in favour of contribution. I deny that they are genuinely in favour of it now. I say that this Bill, involving, as it does a contribution of $35,000,000, is here only because of the political misdeeds of hon. gentlemen opposite, and not as a matter of principle, not as a matter of need, not as a matter of urgency. The hon. gentleman, asks this House to support the measure upon the ground that there is an emergency. He says that the memorandum, is evidence of it, and he further says that it voices the sentiments and views of the leading public men of England. I deny, and will endeavour to show, before I conclude my remarks, that there is not the shadow of a shade of evidence of emergency in that document. I challenge him or any other hon. gentleman in this House to refer us to a statement made by any experienced public man in England, upon either side of politics, to the effect that there is any emergency in England justifying this contribution. I shall endeavour to show that the emergency hon. gentlemen opposite have in mind is a political one, and it was the Government and its followers who were in emergent circumstances.

Having said this in a general way concerning the remarks of the Minister of Labour, I will proceed to a presentation to the House of my views upon the Bill. At this stage of the debate it is perhaps difficult to contribute anything that is new to hon. gentlemen on either side upon this measure. The Bill involves so many important considerations that it is almost impossible to measure accurately what will be the consequences of it. Hon. gentlemen opposite, with few exceptions, so far have attempted the justification of this Bill upon the theory of the imminence of war and impending danger to the prestige and permanence of the British Empire. I submit that the foundation upon which they propose to establish the merits of this Bill is absolutely wanting. I repeat that they have not proved that there is an emergency. I submit that their alarms and fears are groundless and the reasons given for them unproven, and consequently their whole argument falls to the ground. I say also that it is incumbent upon hon. gentlemen opposite, before they ask this House to accept the Bill, to prove to the satisfaction of the country, that the prestige and permanence of Great Britain is in any respect in danger. I repeat that so far there has not been a tittle of evidence to support that position.

Hon. gentlemen opposite seek to accomplish their purpose through artificial fear and alarm. They fear the sober judgment of men, and the manner in which this Bill was presented to the House on the 5th of December indicates this. The Prime Minister presented the preliminary resolution to the House in a very theatrical manner. This was the stage, and there were many stage managers. The whole setting of this Chamber on that day displayed artificiality throughout, and there was nothing left to natural and spontaneous impulse. In carefully prepared words, solemnly uttered, the Prime Minister delivered his message, and let me say that that message was delivered to the newspapers of Canada and Great Britain before it was presented to the representatives of the people in this House. We listened to the heralds of war, and we could almost see the waters of the ocean stained with the blood of the victims of a great naval conflict between the two greatest powers of the world. We are told that the clouds were low and heavy; we were asked to listen to the booming of the thunder and to look at the lightnings flash upon the horizon; and, with this vast amount of eclat and unnecessary theatrical display, this measure was presented to the House. At that time, I suppose, and perhaps for a short time afterwards, some hon. gentlemen of this House—and possibly some persons outside of the House—were disposed to attach a certain degree of importance to the statement of the right hon. gentleman. But time, in its ceaseless flight, works many changes, and public opinion in respect to this matter has, since then, changed very much. Many weeks have since passed, an opportunity for consideration has been afforded, and public opinion in this country will change from this time henceforth to as great an extent as it has during the past seven or eight weeks. The war story that was told to this House when the Prime Minister made his statement is now but as as a tale that was told; even the talk of emergency has been almost dropped by hon. gentlemen opposite. They profess a strong dislike for war. They pray that in the future we may have peace, eternal peace. The groundwork upon which the minister based his conclusions on the 5th day of December last has either passed away or been forgotten by hon. gentlemen opposite. In the country generally reasonableness and calm judgment are being manifested. While I would not, of course, be justified in making the statement that hon. gentlemen opposite are opposed to this measure, I am sure I can safely say that in principle the judgment of this country at this moment is against the principle of the Bill.

Hon. gentlemen say: 'You discuss this measure in a partisan way; you are introducing politics,' and one hon. gentleman quite recently asked: 'Why don't you take the word of the Prime Minister as to the fact of an emergency?' I ask, why should we accept the statement of any hon. gentleman on the other side as to the fact of an emergency? Do they ask me to believe that their record upon this question is such, that I should accept the judgment of the Government as final? I would gladly do so if it were possible, but the conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite during the past three or four years upon this issue precludes that pleasant possibility. I may tell hon. gentlemen opposite that we are against this measure. Perhaps we are partisans, but we are partisans of truth and honesty; we hate deception, and we refuse to bend our knees to the war gods which hon. gentlemen opposite are seeking to set up.

This Bill involving the question of naval defence, demands, I concede, full consideration. It is a very important measure, because it indicates first our acceptance and recognition of the responsibilities attaching to us as citizens of a nation and subjects of an empire. It is important because it invites consideration of the problem of the defence of a widely scattered empire, its parts being politically autonomous—a situation without analogy in the world's history. It is a question not only of to-day, it is a question which concerns the future as well, and I am sure that hon. gentlemen opposite will concede that the whole matter suggests difficulites. In this proposed legislation we are ploughing new ground, and our horizon is limited by our experience. To-morrow, and as the years go by, our paths will be gradually illumined by the experience which will come to us; but to-day we are dealing with an important problem which must be settled in the light of our own experience, and in the most practical way. In my judgment, the course is clear. The proper course for Parliament to pursue in this case is, the continuance of the idea of a Canadian naval policy, as promulgated in this Parliament in 1909.

What is the issue respecting naval defence? First, shall there be a contribution to the British Admiralty in ships or money? Technically speaking, the Bill proposes to make a contribution of three ships; practically speaking, it is a contribution of $35,000,000. If it is to be one or the other, I approve of making it $35,000,000. Hon. gentlemen say that these ships can be recalled by Canada at any time in the event of her establishing a Canadian navy; but if we contribute to the British navy these three ships, as proposed by this Bill, we should allow them for ever to be the property of the British Admiralty. I do not know whether hon. gentlemen on this side will follow me to this length or not; but I disapprove strongly of the contribution of these three ships to the British navy with a string attached. If this Bill becomes law by the action of Parliament, I do trust that the Government will propose an amendment to the effect that if there is to be a contribution it shall be in money and not in ships, or in ships without recall. Practically it is that anyway.

Further, it is proposed that these three ships shall be the greatest engines of naval warfare that money can supply or science devise. They shall be the three greatest warships of the world. That being so, their proper place, so long as they are afloat, is under the direct control and ownership of the British Admiralty. They will not for quite a time have a proper and fitting place under any Canadian naval scheme. If the Government in the future adopt a permanent Canadian naval policy, why should these three great ships be found included in the Canadian navy? Could they not perform more effective service for the Empire where it is now proposed to place them? And, further, it does not harmonize with the aspirations of the peace-loving people of this country that the three greatest naval ships of the world shall be found among the naval ships of a comparatively new country like Canada.

Shall it be by contribution, or shall it be by the establishment of a Canadian navy built and manned as far as is possible in Canada, thus assuming a fair portion of the burden of Imperial defence, and ready, so far as our strength goes, when needs be, to battle for the maintenance and supremacy of the Empire? That is the issue. Another and perhaps a better way of putting the issue is, whether there shall be a continuance and extension of the Canadian naval policy unanimously agreed upon in 1909, or, whether that policy shall be abandoned temporarily or permanently, and a contribution in money made to the British Admiralty. I submit that, after all, that should be the issue: whether we are going to continue and extend the present Canadian naval policy. Before this Bill has passed this House, I shall expect the Government to declare their policy respecting the Canadian Naval Service Act which is now in force. They are in honour bound to proceed with the extension of that policy or to repeal the present Naval Act. They should continue to recruit sailors for the Niobe and the Rainbow or sell those ships.

I approve of the idea of a Canadian navy and of the continuance and extension of the Canadian naval policy as outlined in the Naval Service Act of 1910, and I shall give two or three leading principles in justification of my position. First of all, I believe in it because it is an affirmation of the previously declared and unanimous policy of Parliament, and no reason has yet been given for its abandonment. This Bill is in essence an abandonment of the existing Act, and it is incumbent on hon. gentlemen opposite to give to this House a reason for departing from that policy. I believe in the Canadian naval policy because it harmonizes with the opinion of such of our population as yet believe in an expenditure for naval purposes, and because it is the natural, the economic, and the patriotic course to pursue in this country to-day. The Bill is merely a concession to that opinion which preaches war unceasingly, and in no respect does it appeal to true Canadian opinion. I believe in the Canadian naval idea by reason of its gradually educative effect. It will the sooner develop in this new country, with its varied population, a sound public opinion upon the necessity of naval defence and sea-power, and will the more readily guarantee from Parliament a constancy and uniformity in money expenditures and in friendly legislation. Thus we shall by degrees evolve in this country a truly national and imperial spirit, in matters of defence, all of which will tend to lift the question of naval expenditures beyond the realm of party politics. I believe in the Canadian naval idea, further, because at this stage in our history it is a greater guarantee of a united Empire and cordial inter-imperial relations than a money contribution to the British Admiralty, as is proposed by the Bill. Centralization is the view of those who are blind to the lessons of history and of those who will learn no lesson from human experience. There is no emergency or threatening danger to justify the settlement of the question of naval defence upon other than principle and permanent policy; and this is the opinion of the best authorities in the British Empire. These are, in a general way, my views concerning the policy which Canada should pursue, in respect to naval defence, and some time during the course of my remarks I shall discuss them separately, and shall endeavour to give reasons for the opinions which I entertain.

Mr. PELLETIER: I am following closely what my hon. friend says, but I was out for a few minutes, and I am not quite sure if I have exactly understood what he said. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that, so far as he is concerned, he would prefer a money grant to building ships which could be recalled?

Mr. MACLEAN: That is my personal opinion. Now, before proceeding to discuss the several propositions which I have just enumerated, I wish to make brief reference to one or two unfair arguments that are made from time to time against those who oppose the Bill.

On more than one occasion I have heard hon. gentlemen opposite designate the course of those who oppose the Government proposals as unpatriotic. Sometimes we hear the word 'disloyal' used. Now, Mr. Speaker, this form of attack is a more dangerous one than those who use it, know. Any reflecting, intelligent man in this country will, or should, always deprecate that form of attack. You can hardly see the consequences of it. If you study the history of our own Empire in the past, as well as that of other countries, you will find that nothing tends to create such an amount of disastrous political disturbance in a country as one political party questioning the loyalty and patriotism of another political party. That form of argument can only succeed a certain distance till political chaos will follow. No civil power could combat the storms which would follow that form of discussion of public questions, or of that form of attack against one of two political parties. I do not say that hon. gentlemen opposite collectively use that argument. I know that many of them do not. I hope that no thoughtful, honest or intelligent citizen will resort to it. No free and intelligent man will suffer the imputation to be made with impunity. I say it is unjust and dishonest; and it seems like gross flattery, and perhaps profanity, to brand the men who adopt that argument as cowards. If that form of attack is persisted in, there will come a time when men will not tolerate it, and will find some means of resenting it in a very forcible fashion.

The right hon. the Prime Minister of this country was in England last year, and he took upon himself, upon almost every occasion on which he addressed the British public, to certify to the loyalty of Canadians. I am speaking for myself on this question, and say that I do not want the Prime Minister to issue his certificate of my loyalty here or anywhere else. I say he has no right to do so, either on my behalf, or on behalf of the people of this country. It is absolutely unnecessary. I am not making an attack upon the right hon. gentleman. For all I know, my esteemed and distinguished leader may have done the very same thing when he visited England as Premier of this country. If so, I say to him, as well as to the present Prime Minister of this country, that it is about time that the use of these words in that connection for ever ended. I have an extract from a newspaper which professed to summarize the remarks of the Prime Minister in England last summer, when certifying to the loyalty of Canadians. I am not quite sure that this paper has epitomized his exact words. Perhaps it was playing upon them just a little bit, but nevertheless they repesent the sense of his statements. This paper presumes to give the following as excerpts from some of his speeches:

I bear witness that Canada is loyal.

Canada's loyalty is strengthening every day.

The loyalty of Canada is unshrinkable and imperishable.

Dare any man doubt Canadian loyalty?

We are bone of your bone, flesh of your flesh, and blood of your blood.

If any man impugn our overlasting and ineradicable loyalty, let him be anathema!

Language fails me to adequately express the unsoundable depth, the immeasurable height and the incandescent intensity of Canadian loyalty.

I think the writer was possibly dealing humourously with the Prime Minister's remarks, but words conveying the same sense cannot but have an effect in England. Englishmen have cultivated the habit of coming here, and going back and certifying to our loyalty, and one can hardly blame them. This paper also records a fact which I might give to the House. It immediately follows the quotations which I have just given. It is recorded as an effect of the statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada in England:

Aas a result of these eloquent and repeated assurance, Mr. E. Mastin, of No. 2 Chesnut Walk, Stratford-on-Avon, has announced her determination to present to the Canadian Government a small museum of relics of loyalty, among which are a few odd pieces of genuine, old and venerable crockeryware; these articles being a direct reward for, defeating that horrid reciprocity; So there now!

Having protested good naturedly against intermittent and occasional charges of disloyalty made by members of the Conservative party against the Liberal party, and having protested against the loose and senseless use of that word in and out of this country, I will here drop that particular objection that I have endeavoured to answer.

I now wish to refer very briefly to an argument advanced by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Borden) and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen) when they spoke upon the resolution upon which this Bill was founded. I have in my mind particularly the remarks of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He advanced as a reason and justification for the adoption of this measure the fact that Great Britain has made expenditures of many millions of dollars in Canada in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. When that argument was advanced I naturally protested against it. I believe every hon. member on either side of the House objects. It is unworthy of a member of a government to advance an argument of that kind. You would get no member of an English ministry to use it as a justification for naval contribution. The expenditures made by the Imperial Government in Canada were for Imperial purposes altogether and were so intended. They largely were for naval purposes, but some were for military purposes. Incidentally, it meant protection to Canada as well, but primarily these expenditures were made, not for the protection of Canada, but for purely Imperial purposes. If British North America were not British territory, or had never been, there was a time in the eighteenth century when England would have made tremendous sacrifices for some territory in this part of the North American continent because she needed a base on this hemisphere in order to assert her foreign policy. We all, on one side as well as the other, appreciate the material and moral value of our British connection, but that appreciation is not intensified by the number of dollars spent in Canada by the British Government for naval or military purposes. It is un-British argument to advance, and I refuse to measure my appreciation of British connection by the standard of dollars expended.

I wish to proceed to the first proposition that I laid down in the beginning of my remarks, namely, that the Bill before us is an abandonment of the unanimously declared policy of the Canadian Parliament in 1909 and no reason has yet been given for its abandonment. I desire to deal very briefly with the steps leading to the promulgation of that policy and some of the steps relative to its abandonment by the political party which to-day find themselves on the treasury benches. It is uninteresting, I know, to hon. gentlemen, to be reiterating political history and facts which have been given to the House on many occasions by previous speakers, but nevertheless it is necessary for me to do it. The facts which I propose to give to the House, will bear repetition. It is extremely important that we do not permit to pass away from our minds the early naval history of this country. You cannot fairly discuss this Bill if you do. This measure has become a political one. We say that hon. gentlemen opposite are responsible for it. Personally, I believe they are guilty of the greatest political crime ever committed by a political party in this country. Personally, I do not propose ever forgetting it, whether I have the honour of a seat in this Parliament or not. I am always ready and willing to accept in the best possible spirit, the conflicting opinions between one party and another, but the complete reversal of policy respecting naval affairs is difficult to view with equanimity. There are other matters in connection with the early history of this naval policy which I hope to refer to before I have concluded. We know they were playing to the prejudices of a certain province. They knew they were playing with fire, they knew that possibly that game was fraught with terrible consequences to this country and if they find themselves in an uncomfortable position to-day they alone are responsible for it and they must pay the penalty. In 1909, there came, like a bolt from the blue, to the English people the idea, whether rightly or wrongly, that the navy of the German nation was rapidly growing in numbers and strength, to such a degree as to prejudice England's supremacy on the seas and to destroy the two-power standard. A statement to that effect having been made by Mr. Balfour, it made a deep impression upon the people of England and of the overseas dominions. In the month of March, 1909, the Minister of Trade and Commerce discussed in this Chamber the British naval situation in effect as stated by the Hon. Mr. Balfour. It was a most interesting and impressive occasion by reason of the unanimity of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, who moved the resolution, on that occasion expressed his view as to the naval situation in Europe. Mr. Foster said:

To-day peril stands at the gateway. It is not for me to say how great it is, but I cannot brush it aside. To-day it impresses itself upon the greatest statesmen of the Old Country; to-day it appeals to Australia until public subscriptions are taken, and the Government is being importuned to do even more than its settled policy to meet the emergency; to-day little New Zealand gives one dreadnought and offers a second, and, to-day Canada faces that position of peril, that Imperial emergency.

That was an alarming pronouncement. The Right Hon. Mr. Borden spoke on that occasion, and he recognized the force of the remarks of Mr. Foster in respect to the threatened attack upon Britain's naval supremacy. And what was the culmination of that debate? It was in the form of a resolution, from which I shall read two paragraphs. Bearing in mind the alarming statements made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I call attention to what was then the unanimous conclusion of the House:

The House will cordially approve of any necessary expenditure designed to promote the speedy organization of a Canadian naval service in co-operation with and in close relation to the Imperial navy along the lines suggested by the Admiralty at the last Imperial conference and in full sympathy with the view that the naval supremacy of Britain is essential to the security of commerce, the safety of the Empire, and the peace of the world.

That was the deliberate judgment of the House in the face of a situation which was conceded to be alarming, and threatening to Great Britain and the overseas dominions, and still in the face of that real danger, we unanimously agreed that our duty was to commence the construction of a Canadian navy. Then, the other part of the resolution read:

The House expresses its firm conviction that whenever the need arises the Canadian people will be found ready and willing to make any sacrifice that is required to give to the Imperial authorities the most loyal and hearty co-operation in every movement for the maintenance of the integrity and honour of the Empire.

It is under this last clause of the resolution that emergency aid is justified. The present leader of the Opposition and the present Prime Minister in 1909 agreed, and they still agree, that there may be such a thing as an emergency programme and that there is such a thing as a Canadian naval policy. That, of course, is largely a question of fact, but I want to point out to hon. gentlemen this, and perhaps I had better put it in the form of a question: If in 1909 you gentlemen opposite believed that no special contribution was necessary but that a Canadian naval policy was sufficient, how, in the light of present day facts, do you justify the measure which you ask this House to accept? Perhaps, just at this stage, I might read what the present Prime Minister said in 1910. He believed in 1910 when the Naval Service Bill was being considered by this House, that an emergency still existed and he said:

> Has the peril passed? No, Sir, we are nearer to it by nearly a year. Has Germany's policy been modified in the meantime? No, on the contrary, Germany has put forward the greatest naval budget in her history. It is idle to assure us that there will be no war. The war has already begun, the war of construction, the victory will be as decisive there as in actual battle. Does the dissolution of the Empire signify nothing to Canada and her people?
>
> I say to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, so far as my words have any weight with him: Go on with your naval service.

Later, I propose asking, how the present Prime Minister and his ministry and supporters, believing, if they did believe, that an emergency has existed since 1909, delayed until the 5th of December, 1912, to meet that emergency. Well, Sir, no greater danger confronts the British Empire to-day than did in 1909. There is not the same amount of alarm and concern in the minds of the British public to-day as there was then, and present English public opinion endorses that idea. The contribution in the form proposed is as unnecessary and objectionable as it was then, and it is incumbent upon hon. gentlemen opposite to give to this House reasons for their change of position; and those reasons should be substantial.

I say again, that the reasons for starting a Canadian navy are as strong to-day as in 1900. Hon. gentlemen opposite have no right to say: We are going to bring down a Canadian naval policy some day. The mandate of Parliament to commence the construction of a Canadian navy is unrepealed, and they have no right to delay it. Time cannot change a principle. The political exigencies created between the Nationalists of Quebec and the Conservative party can never change a principle. 'Truth crushed to earth will rise again,' and the Government cannot hope to crush what I believe are the aspirations of Canada upon this question by giving us this Bill. We unanimously erected the stage upon which to play the drama of a Canadian navy in 1909. The footlights were lighted; the play and the players were collected, the audience, Canadian citizens, were fairly satisfied. They were fairly satisfied because the leaders of public opinion were the authors of the play. It is true there had been no appeal to the electors. We unanimously agreed that the occasion was such that no immediate appeal to the people was necessary. There are occasions when it is for the leaders of public opinion to formulate public opinion upon great issues. There are occasions when you cannot look to any but the leaders of public opinion to lead the people upon the right course in matters of public affairs. The footlights are burning dimly to-day; some of the players and some of the audience have left; and the natural query is: where and why have they gone? Mr. Speaker, echo answers where, and why? No answer is forthcoming from hon. gentlemen opposite. It cannot come; we need not expect it. There is no answer; but there is a reason which should never be forgotten.

At six o'clock, the House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADA HAIL INSURANCE COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 78, to incorporate the Canada Hail Insurance Company.—Mr. Aikins.

On section 1—incorporation:

Mr. OLIVER: Has an explanation been made to the committee as to the purpose of this Bill?

Mr. AIKINS: The Bill is simply an incorporation of a hail insurance company, with the ordinary powers.

Mr. BELAND: In what respect was it amended?

Mr. AIKINS: It was amended by increasing the amount of the capital and the amount to be paid up before it commences business.

Mr. OLIVER: I notice that clause 7 states that the company may make contracts of hail insurance. That seems to be very unlimited and indefinite, and I think that for the protection of those who find it necessary to take out hail insurance there should be some more definite statement than that contained in these words. Is there any general legislation making that provision?

Mr. AIKINS: Yes. The general legislation which is incorporated in this Bill is found in the Insurance Act.

Mr. OLIVER: If this Bill is passed in its present form, will it then be in conformity with other Bills of a similar nature that have been passed by this House?

Mr. AIKINS: Yes. I am informed by the Insurance Department—and they have approved of the Bill—that it is in exact conformity with other Bills that have been previously passed.

Section agreed to.

On section 3—capital stock:

Mr. BUREAU: I have the original Bill before me, and it states that the capital stock shall be $100,000.

Mr. AIKINS: The capital stock has been increased to $150,000, and it is provided that it may be further increased to $300,000.

Section agreed to.

On section 7—business:

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand the promoter to say that others Acts incorporating similar hail insurance companies have been consulted in the preparation of this Bill, and that there is nothing in these provisions that does not exactly conform with other Acts?

Mr. AIKINS: We were so informed by the department when the Bill came before the committee, and I believe that is the case. The hon. gentleman will notice that clause 8 provides that the Insurance Act shall apply to the company.

Mr. BUREAU: Clause 7 states that the company may make contracts of hail insurance, but there is no indication of what may constitute such a contract.

Mr. AIKINS: That is provided in the Insurance Act.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported.

ATHABASKA NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 7, respecting the Athabaska Northern Railway Company.—Mr. Turriff.

On section 1—extension of time:

Mr. OLIVER: What was the amendment?

Mr. LANCASTER: That section was not amended in the Railway Committee.

Mr. BUREAU: Do I understand that the Bill was amended in the Railway Committee?

Mr. LANCASTER: Sections 1 and 2 are exactly as passed by the railway committee the additional clauses were added for purposes which I will explain when we come to them. The other amendments to the Bill are simply to make it conform to the standard clauses which we insert for the protection of provincial and municipal rights as to water-powers, highways, &c.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

PATENT OF A. D. RICHARD.

House in Committee on Bill No. 100, respecting a patent of Hon. Ambrose D. Richard.—Mr. Fowler.

Mr. OLIVER: I think the House should have an explanation of the purport of this Bill.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I presume that the committee has had satisfactory reasons given to it as to why time should be given the patentee to comply with the Patents Act. I think this Bill is in the usual terms where such application is granted.

Mr. CURRIE: What does it deal with?

Mr. PUGSLEY: With the composition of matter for paint. I do not see very much objection to dealing with this as it has been dealt with many times in the cases of owners of patents.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): As stated by my hon. friend, the Bill is in the usual form, but the Chairman of the Private Bills Committee is not present, and if any hon. gentleman desires it to stand over, probably it would be better to let it stand to ascertain the facts. I have no doubt the facts have been made known to the committee.

Mr. OLIVER: This Bill, extending a patent right, affects the interest of the public that this House is here to protect, and while I do not wish to prevent a proper extension of the patent right, I think it is due to the members of the House that the gentleman promoting the Bill, or the chairman of the committee, should give the reasons for the action which it is proposed to take.

Mr. WHITE: I entirely agree with my hon. friend in regard to that. I have no doubt the facts have been made known to the Private Bills Committee, but they have not been made known to me, and I suggest that the Bill be allowed to stand.

Progress reported.

PATENTS OF F. J. NEWMAN AND OTHERS.

House in Committee on Bill No. 101, respecting patents of Frederick Jacob Newman and others.—Mr. Macdonell.

Mr. OLIVER: The promoter of this Bill is here, and I have no doubt, can give the committee such explanation as will be necessary.

Mr. MACDONELL: The Bill was very fully discussed in the committee. I am sorry that the hon. member for South Wellington (Mr. Guthrie) is not in his seat, for, although the Bill stands in my name, he took a more active part in the matter, perhaps, than I did. However, the facts are that these two patents which it is now sought to renew were not renewed through pure inadvertence. The only offence committed by the proprietors of the patents was that of not paying the renewal fees. They have not violated the Act by importing the invention, or by not manufacturing it within the period, or in any other way; but, through inadvertence, owing to the fact that the owner of the patents was travelling and did not receive the notice which the patent office sent out, the fees were not paid. The proprietor of the patents, in fact, did not know that the patents were renewable and that he had to pay fees from time to time. The patent solicitor appeared before the committee and proved that he had sent notice from the Government offices at Ottawa to the owner of the patents calling upon him to renew them, and the letters sent had been returned to the post office, proving that the owner of the patents did not get the notice. He therefore did not act contumaciously, or in defiance of the patents office. In the belief that his patents were still alive, the patentee has incorporated a company which includes certain prominent men in the city of Guelph who have contributed a certain amount of money—I do not know how much but considerable amount—and they are now embarked in the manufacture of this article in the city of Guelph.

Mr. CURRIE: What is it?

Mr. MACDONELL: It is a patent for an axle for electric vehicles. The patentee also explained that, during the early life of the patent, there was no demand for an article of this kind, and that it had not been actively prosecuted, but latterly, owing to the improvements in motor vehicles and electric vehicles, this article has become of considerable value, and, as I have said, a factory has now been established in the city of Guelph, on a very considerable scale I understand, and sufficient money has been put in to enable manufacture. The parties are prepared to go on and manufacture in a large way providing that this patent is renewed, but they stated before the committee their unwillingness to go into the matter unless they received protection. The committee without a dissenting voice, I think, and having heard all the facts, passed the Bill.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): When does it expire?

Mr. MACDONELL: The default was for some length of time, I think for some years; but as I have said, it was purely through inadvertence. A sworn statement was put in, the member for South Wellington testified to the willingness of this company to manufacture, and the Bill went through without a dissenting voice.

Mr. OLIVER: Was there any protest made in the committee against the passing of the Bill?

Mr. MACDONELL: None whatever, and the usual safeguards were put in, so that if any person was adversely affected, his interests would be protected.

Mr. BUREAU: There was no amendment made to the Bill as it is now printed?

Mr. MACDONELL: None whatever.

On section 2—certain rights saved:

Mr. BUREAU: May I ask why the 9th of November has been put in, instead of the date of the coming into force of the Act? It says:

> If any person, other than any licensee, has in the period between the expiry of six years from the dates of the said patents and the 9th day of November, one thousand nine hundred and twelve, commenced to manufacture, use or sell any of the patented inventions covered by the said patents respectively.

Mr. MACDONELL: Any party who may have commenced to manufacture after the default occurred is protected, and can manufacture still.

Mr. BUREAU: But what is the reason for putting in the 9th of November, instead of the date of the coming into force of the Act.

Mr. MACDONELL: That is the date of the expiry of the patent owing to the default of the owners.

Mr. SHARPE: Possibly that is the date of the notice applying to Parliament for this special legislation.

Mr. BUREAU: That right ought not to be restricted until the Act comes into force, because there is actually no patent in existence until this Act is passed.

Mr. SHARPE: The moment the parties apply for legislation, they may take it up and begin to manufacture.

Mr. OLIVER: I do not think that is a good reason. These people were in default and they remain in default until the fault is cured by legislation of this Parliament. They are not entitled to protection such as my hon. friend has suggested.

Mr. BORDEN: I would like this Bill to stand for a little further consideraton.

as my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) cannot be here tonight, and I would like him to be present before it is finally considered.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN ACCOUNTANTS ASSOCIATION.

House in Committee on Bill No. 88, to incorporate the Canadian Accountants Association.—Sir Rodolphe Forget.

On section 1:

Mr. OLIVER: I have received a very strong protest against this Bill from the chartered accountants at Edmonton. I do not know if that is any good reason for preventing the passage of the Bill, but I would like to have some reasonable explanation of the purpose of the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I also received a communication from the president of the Domnion Chartered Accountants Association with respect to this Bill some time ago. The matter was given very close attention by the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley). Before the Private Bills Committee, where this Bill was considered, the president of the Dominion Chartered Accountants Association appeared and, I understand, reached an agreement as to the Bill in the form in which it now appears before the House. On the face of it, this Bill, I think, required very careful consideration. I understand, for the information of my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), that the Dominion Chartered Accountants Association embraces in its membership the chartered accountants of all the provincial associations, and it appears by the regulations of the Quebec Chartered Accountants Association that only those can qualify who have been engaged in business and have had their signs out, so to speak, for a certain period, I think, one year. These gentlemen, who are promoting this Bill, are men who, I understand, are well qualified as accountants, but they are engaged in offices such as the Canadian Pacific railway and other important offices. I think that no question arises as to their qualification. They were unable to qualify under the regulations of the Provincial Chartered Accountants Association and they take this means of incorporating themselves into an accountants association. I understand further that the Bill was amended by the Private Bills Committee so as to provide that this association should be subject to the provincial laws with respect to accountants associations. That seemed to remove all objection on the part of the Dominion Chartered Accountants Association and I was informed before coming into the House this evening by the hon. member for Argenteuil that the president of the Dominion Chartered Accountants Association had signed, as acceptable to the association, the Bill in the form in which it now appears. I do not know the facts myself, but I pass them on as I understand them.

Mr. BUREAU: An objection was raised in the Private Bills Committee in addition to the one stated by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, and it was one which could not be disposed of by common consent. It was that accounting, as it was discussed before the Private Bills Committee by Mr. Stevenson, Chairman of the Dominion Association and by Mr. Edwards, was a matter involving a technical education and one of the members of the committee, whom I do not see in his seat tonight, raised the question that, if we had made a mistake by granting a charter to the Dominion Accountants' Association, we should not repeat the mistake by granting this one. The question of provincial rights and of the authority of the provinces being exclusive in such matters was raised when I was in the committee that day. I submit it to the committee so that hon. members will know exactly what questions were raised when the application for the charter was under consideration. I am in favour of this Bill and I do not see why, if the Dominion Chartered Accountants Association can get a charter, these gentlemen can not. I fail to see why, because a man is a salaried man, he should not be as good an accountant as a man who has had his shingle out for a year and perhaps has never done any accounting during that period.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): The section which was added to the Bill I shall now read to the committee:

> Nothing in this Act shall be construed to interfere with or impair legislation upon the subject of accountancy now or hereafter enacted by legislative authority of any province of Canada, or as giving to members of the association the right to use any name, title, initial or description as accountant in contravention thereof.

That was the section which was added to meet the objection which was raised.

Mr. SHARPE (Ontario): That will not make it subject to provincial authority.

Mr. WHITE: If the province has jurisdiction, this Act does not purport to override that jurisdiction.

Mr. STEVENS: I think there is a point in connection with this Bill that has been overlooked. I am not a member of the Private Bills Committee and it may have been discussed there. There is in existence at the present time the Dominion Chartered Accountants' Association. It was incorporated by an Act passed in 1902. That Act is almost identical in its words with this Act, with the exception of some minor differences including the one referred to by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. White) regarding affiliation with the provincial organizations and also this last clause which has just been added. The point I wish to make is this: the general public accept a man who claims to be an accepted member of an accountants' association as being more competent and better fitted for important business in the auditing line than a man who does not belong to such an association. It is true that a member of this association will not have the right to the letters C. A. after his name without coming under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislation, but he will have the right to hang out a shingle that he is John Jones, member of the Canadian Accountants' Association. To the average person, who is not familiar with the various forms of legislation, it will be confusing, or in other words, it will convey to the public the idea that this man, who is a member of this Canadian Accountants' Association, is a chartered accountant. By clause 2 you will find that power is given to hold examinations as found expedient and to grant certificates of efficiency. This is exactly the same power as that which is enjoyed by the Dominion Chartered Accountants' Asociation. Then, in connection with by-laws, it says that the objects of the association shall be carried out by by-laws and resolutions passed by the directors and confirmed by the members. I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that, in the Bank Act, it is proposed that there shall be an outside audit, that is that the bank's affairs shall be audited by firms of chartered acountants. It behooves the Government at this particular time to see that every safeguard be taken in respect to those who may be qualified to audit the affairs of the banks. I am quite in accord with that proposal in the Bank Act, but at the same time I am thoroughly convinced that we must have more stringent regulations as to who shall be qualified accountants to examine into the affairs of a bank or any other institution. A large number of men creep into these associations in some way or another, hang out their shingles; are willing to sign balance sheets very recklessly, and some of them are absolutely unfit for the position. These balance sheets are then put before the people in prospectuses, and if signed by a chartered accountant the people are inclined to accept them as bona fide balance sheets. A good deal of money is invested in the country on the strength of such certified balance sheets. The time has arrived when we should very carefully scrutinize all legislation relating to chartered accountants. In past legislation, both in the Dominion and in the provinces, the regulations governing chartered accountants have been entirely too lax. I am strongly opposed to bringing into existence another association which is to a large extent a duplicate of one already existing. I agree in the statement that possibly a mistake was made in not putting more restrictions in the former Act, and I doubt if it is wise for us to pass the present Bill.

Mr. CARROLL: I would ask the Minister of Finance: if this association is granted incorporation, are there any safeguards with respect to the by-laws which may be passed by it?

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): This is a private Bill, and the explanation I have given to the House in answer to my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) was passed on to me for the purpose of submitting it, should it be required. This is a Bill which should receive very careful consideration and I am inclined to think it had better be allowed to stand, especially as the Chairman of the Private Bills Committee and the promoter of the Bill are not present. I am unable to answer the question of my hon. friend off-hand, but I will look into the matter myself, and I shall also ask the chairman of the committee to consider the suggestions.

Mr. CARROLL: I would like the Bill to stand, as I have some interest in it. I hardly think it is proper for the Parliament of Canada to pass such a local Bill as this on the face of it appears to be.

Mr. BUREAU: It was explained in the Private Bills Committee that the by-laws passed by the association must be submitted to and ratified by the Lieutenant-Governor in Council of the province where the by-laws are passed.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I would suggest that the Minister of Finance should consider whether this company can properly be incorporated by this Parliament rather than by a provincial legislature. Under the British North America Act all Bills of a local and private nature are exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. This Bill seems to be purely local in its nature and all the incorporators reside in Montreal.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): The members of it may be all over the Dominion.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I doubt if that gives this Parliament jurisdiction.

Mr. WHITE (Minister of Finance): I believe that feature of it has received consideration and that the Bill is not objectionable on that score. However, this is rather an important Bill and we will take time to look into all these matters.

Progress reported.

BILLS CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill No. 105, respecting the Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Currie.

Bill No. 113, respecting the Pacific and Hudson Bay Railway Company.—Mr. Clements.

NAVAL FORCES OF THE EMPIRE.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Just before six o'clock, I had pointed out that when the debate took place upon the Canadian naval resolution in 1909, and during all subsequent discussions, both political parties were agreed that, so far as any action Canada should take, it was necessary to distinguish between an emergency and a permanent policy, and that the action that Parliament should take should differ according to whether or not, as a matter of fact, there was or was not an emergency. I referred also to the circumstance that in the year 1909 the House unanimously passed a resolution approving of any necessary expenditure designed to promote the organization of a Canadian naval servbice, and voted nothing for the purpose of emergency, in spite of the electrified condition of the political atmosphere in Europe. I then inquired why, in the year 1913, with the facts as they are, the Conservative party urge as a reason for the measure now before the House the fact that there is an emergency when, in 1909, with conditions far worse than they are to-day, they refused to declare that there was an emergency. There is no reason for this change in the attitude of hon. gentlemen opposite.

What excuse can be offered on behalf of hon. gentlemen opposite for their present position upon the naval question? There is no logical reason for it. The leader of the Government and all his supporters in 1909 supported the Canadian naval idea. It has been stated on numerous occasions during this debate that in London, in July or August of that year, the Prime Minister still adhered to his position. As late, I think, as October of that year, he addressed a political meeting in Halifax and still pronounced firm adherence to his position of the previous March. In fact, the Halifax Herald, the organ of the Conservative party in Nova Scotia, declared in its editorial reference to the meeting to which I refer, that the right hon. gentleman was going to lift this naval question beyond the sphere of partizanship, and that it was to be dealt with, so far as he was concerned, on broad statesmanlike lines. But, while the hon. gentleman was in England, an element of his party in the province of Quebec, was proving apostate. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) was a prominent and distinguished follower of the present ruling party when they were in opposition. With him were several gentlemen, two of whom are to-day, and have lately been looked upon, as the leaders of the so-called Nationalist party in the province of Quebec, and together they declared their opposition to the naval policy proposed by Parliament in 1909. And it soon became quite apparent that in the province of Quebec the idea of a Canadian navy would be unpopular, and that a party could win popularity by opposing that policy. In the year 1910—and I am sorry to take time to relate these facts because they have been given to the House several times already—the Government introduced the Canadian Naval Service Bill, making effective the resolution of the previous session To the astonishment of all members of the House at that time and of all thinking and reading people in this country, particularly those who had been following the course of this issue, it was found that the then leader of the Opposition, now the Prime Minister, was not as sympathetic with the idea of a Canadian navy as he had been during the previous year, and he moved an amendment declaring it to be his policy that a contribution should be made to the British Admiralty, but that the Canadian naval policy should still be pursued. Now, to be frank, I must say that I never for a moment believed that the opposition to that Bill was serious, when an amendment was moved. I always looked upon it as a piece of political manœuvering, and I would not have objected had they allowed it to remain there and had they remained faithful to the position they took in 1909. But it soon became clear that the naval question was becoming a political question in this country, and that the Opposition of that period were quite willing to assume the position which would carry most grist to their mill. Later, there occurred an election in the province of Quebec, in the county of Drummond and Arthabaska, in which the naval question was the sole one. I think that was a regrettable campaign. The mere loss of the seat by the Administration of that day was not necessarily a serious matter, although it was, from their view-point, a regrettable fact that they lost the support of the constituency upon that issue, having especially in mind the nature of the campaign carried on. The Conservative party was just as responsible for this as were the leaders of the Nationalist party; the former, exhorted the Nationalist party by letter and by telegram to defeat the Laurier candidate, upon principle or otherwise. I submit that the duty of the Opposition of that day in respect of this issue was to have made it clear in that constituency, that, having pledged their word and their honour in 1909, in favour of a Canadian navy they were, as intelligent leaders of public opinion, willing to adhere to it. I say that the Conservative party of this country can hardly ever purge themselves of their guilt in this connection. Just a year before this, they realized that this issue could not properly be made a political football and they were magnanimous enough to say that they were willing to raise this issue above a mere partisan plane. That was the course, however, they took in respect to that election, and the Conservative party have not since been faithful to the principles which they affirmed in the resolution of 1909; their pledged word was broken and has not since been redeemed. That is the excuse, and the only excuse for the position of that party to-day with respect to this measure, and it is the only reason why this Bill is now before us. Were it not for that unfortunate incident in the political history of Canada with respect to this issue, no man would urge as a reason for the passage of this Bill the fact that emergent conditions exist to-day with regard to the prestige of the British navy.

In these few words I have endeavoured to give the reason for the position in which we find hon. gentlemen opposite upon this occasion. Every one knew that the inauguration of the Canadian naval idea was not a popular one in any province of Canada, including my own. Frankly speaking, I am of the opinion that had an election taken place after the month of March, 1909, in any constituency in any province of Canada, and the issue as to whether this country should commence the construction of a navy were left to the free and unfettered judgment of the electorate of that constituency, it is entirely problematical whether the electors would have voted in favour of that policy. No formulated public opinion had been established in this country with respect to that issue, and a campaign of education, entirely relieved of political colouring was necessary. The leaders of both political parties recognized this, and that was why they pledged their word to keep this issue out of party politics. But, of all the provinces, the proposition met with the least favour in the province of Quebec. In my judgment, that was quite to be expected. I think that the people of Quebec have perhaps, been unfairly judged on many occasions, and possibly this is one of such. We should, like men, recognize historical truths, and should not hesitate to express them in this House. As I have said, it was not expected that the idea of a Canadian navy should meet with great favour in Quebec. All the more reason therefore why the word of the leaders of the Conservative party as given to this House and to the public in 1909, should have been lived up to, for a day, for a year, and for ever? To blaze the path leading to the establishment of a Canadian navy was not an easy task in any province. It was a very difficult one in the province of Quebec, but nevertheless the leader of the Opposition essayed forth upon that task, ready to take the consequences, whatever they might be, believing that he was in the right, and hoping that he would eventually receive the commendation and support of his compatriots—no matter how unpopular the issue for the moment might be—and that he would in due course receive the support of the Canadian electorate. Canadian history will speak kindly of the intrepidity of the present leader of the Opposition in pursuing a consistent course in all the provinces of Canada in respect of this issue. He made possible the step which hon. gentlemen are now pursuing, and, had he not taken the course which he did in 1910, I do not believe there is an hon. gentleman opposite possessing sufficient courage to suggest the introduction of the Bill which is now before the House for consideration.

But that is not all of the record of hon. gentlemen opposite upon this issue, which is censurable. An election took place in 1911. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Crothers) this afternoon said that the naval question was an issue in that election. The hon. gentleman quoted from remarks made by the leader of the Opposition a few evenings ago, and I admit that the words as reported in 'Hansard' do lend some colour to the statement the Minister made; but notwithstanding that, I say that, except in the province of Quebec, the naval question was not an issue.

Mr. CROTHERS: Did you hear an extract I read from our leader's speech opening the campaign in Ontario, and published throughout the whole province?

Mr. MACLEAN: I heard the remarks which my hon. friend quoted, but I must confess I did not follow him very closely. I read carefully a great many speeches delivered by the Prime Minister in Ontario, and I am positive that in those I read he never once mentioned anything about the Canadian navy. I am sure at the London, Ontario, meeting, the question of a Canadian navy was never mentioned.

Mr. CROTHERS: It was from the report of that very meeting that I read; I happened to be present.

Mr. MACLEAN: Then I stand corrected. But I venture to say that the Prime Minister delivered many speeches in Ontario in which he did not refer to the question of a Canadian navy. He did not in the province of Quebec. I can quite understand the Prime Minister referring to a navy, but he took every care never to have any distinct policy then. His idea was to have a humbug policy as nearly as he could. I shall read a section from his address to the Canadian electorate on the naval question, and that is where one would naturally expect to find an expression of his policy.

Mr. CROTHERS: You do not expect details in a manifesto of that kind.

Mr. MACLEAN: The Prime Minister was very glad to get rid of details; generalities pleased him better. In that manifesto he said:

Since the last general election the Government has entered on a new line of policy in regard to naval affairs which is of far-reaching importance.

I think it was in March, 1910, addressing the present leader of the Opposition that the Prime Minister said: "Proceed carefully, cautiously, with the construction of your Canadian navy."

The policy adopted was not debated before the people before the election and bears all the ear marks of a hasty and ill-considered scheme.

This present proposal never was discussed before the people anywhere.

In my judgment our duty to the Empire cannot be properly or effectively fulfilled by such a measure. I hold that the plan of the Government contemplates the creation of a naval force that will be absolutely useless in time of war, and therefore of no practical benefit to Canada or the Empire.

That was the opportunity to declare himself in favour of a contribution of $35,000,000 It would have been a detail, it is true, but one that could have been expressed in a very few words. But this is the part of the manifesto to which I wish to call special attention:

It will cost immense sums of money to build, equip and maintain. It will probably result in time of war in the useless sacrifice of many lives.

I think I should stop there in order to make these last words emphatic.

It will probably result in time of war in the useless sacrifice of many lives.

Why were these words inserted in this manifesto to the Canadian people? Mr. Speaker, these words should be burned deep into the minds and hearts of every Canadian. They should never be forgotten in our time. It was a despicable pandering to prejudices aroused in the province of Quebec. The Prime Minister knew that the Nationalist party, which was an anti-British party in the main in the province of Quebec, at that time, were frightening the habitants with the cry that their children would be taken from their homes, thrust upon the decks of the Laurier navy and their blood spilled in foreign seas.

Mr. CROTHERS: The habitant is not so green as that.

Mr. MACLEAN: That is why these words were inserted in the manifesto to the public, it was for that and no other purpose, and the Nationalists of Quebec seized upon these words, they said: See, Mr. Borden has come right around our way now, he protests against the wasting of precious lives in useless war. He surely never expected that these words would have effect in any other province. There always has and will be a probability that any one going to war will be killed. I do not know how one could escape it. I protest, as vehemently and emphatically as a man can, against the use made by the Prime Minister of these words in his manifesto to the Canadian electors. I say that he was pandering to the anti-naval prejudices of the province of Quebec, that he had no policy, that he was afraid to initiate one, but he thought that these words might be safely inserted in order to add fuel to the flames which were being aroused in the province of Quebec by the Nationalist party against the Prime Minister of that day. The two ministers of the Government who sit opposite, the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), and the Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Nantel), in that campaign were not in favour of any kind of a navy. They were urging then, that whether there be contribution or a permanent policy, there must needs be first an appeal to the electorate. They indulged in the most unpatriotic, unjust, reprehensible, and almost seditious language known to campaigning in Canada, I say, Sir—and I make this remark unaccompanied by any personal feeling whatever — that in my judgment it should not have been possible for these two hon. gentlemen to be invited to seats in the Ministry.

Mr. PELLETIER: Does my hon. friend say that the Prime Minister was as bad as we were?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): Pretty nearly. There are two living reasons in this House, for the Government proposals and they are the Postmaster General and the Minister of Inland Revenue. Perhaps I am attaching too much importance to this, but such are my views. I will always believe that the Conservative party wilfully played false with their publicly pledged word upon this naval issue, and surely nobody can censure me if I chastise them for their violation of that pledge. If there is any conscience in the Canadian electorate, they will never forget the perfidity of the Conservative party on this question. Every Liberal should swear eternal hostility to their course of action. The Bill is the progeny of a marriage of convenience between the Conservative party and the Nationalist party. It is not the product of either true Canadianism, or true Imperialism. It is a short cut from embarrassment created by public men whose sense of public duty was measured by their political necessities. It was not the fulfilment of a desire, or of a promise to perform national or Imperial duties or obligations. This Bill, carefully analysed, is merely an act of executive clemency extended by the guilty to the guilty. They are guilty; they happen to be in power; the executive power of clemency happens to be in their hands, and they are using it for their own relief. And yet, these hon. gentlemen opposite are painted by some in Canada, by some of their Unionist brethren in the Old Country, as patriots and Imperialists pure and undefiled, living high above the region of partisan politics and partisan conduct, and moved only by the highest considerations becoming statesmen. And the Postmaster General went to England last year as one of the Canadian representatives upon the question of Imperial naval defence. It was a peculiar errand, upon which the Postmaster General ventured forth. I do not wonder that some grow indignant about it.

That is the reason, Mr. Speaker, why we find ourselves considering this Bill. That is the explanation of the Government's position. Had it not been for their love of party over national and Imperial needs, there would be no division in this House this evening, or this session, upon this question. We would be where we were in 1909. The Conservative party left the theatre built in 1909 by both parties, and they went to the home of the Nationalists and danced to their tune; and now they ask us to dance to the tune of the jingo Imperialists. They found themselves in a pit they themselves dug. They ask us to help them out of it, but they ask us to take the people's money to the extent of $35,000,000 to do it with. I question, Mr. Speaker, whether this is a case in which the country is justified either in taking these gentlemen out of the pit which they themselves dug and paying $35,000,000 at the same time.

Now, I think they should suffer. There possibly may be a way out of all the difficulty. It has been frequently urged by some of my hon. friends on this side of the House that the Government resign and appeal to the country on this issue. I grant the Minister of Labour, (Mr. Crothers) that from his view point, this is a very undesirable thing. It means a great deal of labour for everybody in this House. Let me suggest this course, namely, that the Postmaster General and the Minister of Inland Revenue resign their seats, appeal to the electors of their respective constituencies, and test public opinion there upon this issue. Then, if these hon. gentlemen were defeated, I am sure the Prime Minister would accept that as a verdict of the people of this country and he would retire from office. Will the Postmaster General and the Minister of Inland Revenue take that into consideration and let us know at the first of next week what they will do?

Mr. PELLETIER: I will take it into most serious consideration.

Mr. NANTEL: Will you do the same yourself?

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): I am under no obligation to do the same myself. If I were in the position of the Postmaster General and the Minister of Inland Revenue, I would not occupy a seat in the Government, and possibly I would decline to occupy a seat in the House. Now, I think I am quite charitable to these two hon. gentlemen who represent the Nationalist party in this Parliament. I wish I possessed the gift and the power of saying what I think should really be said. Burns, the great Scottish singer, once sighed for the power of the satirist Pope:

> Oh, Pope, had I thy satire's darts
> To gie the rascals their deserts,
> I'd rip their rotten, hollow hearts,
> And tell aloud
> Their jugglin' hocus-pocus arts
> To cheat the crowd.

The conduct of hon. gentlemen opposite upon this issue is deserving of the greatest censure. They have cheated the crowd with their 'hocus-pocus arts.'

I submitted that a Canadian navy, administered in Canada and in co-operation with the British navy, was preferable to the scheme proposed by the Government and I gave one or two reasons. I said it harmonized more closely with the views and aspirations of the Canadian people to-day. I said that there was not a developed public opinion upon this issue and that history, experience and nature I suggest this course by a new country, like Canada. After all, this is but another chapter to the story of the great public services now administered by the Government of Canada. It is but the application of the same idea and principle which we invoke in our militia, arsenals and the manufacture of small arms. You may draw a distinction but, after all, it is imaginary and not well founded in fact.

But there is another objection and it is one to which I attach considerable importance. Political questions are human problems, and human problems are historical and biological. The greatest study of mankind is man, and if any political problem is studied thoroughly and scientifically it is necessary that it should be studied from the human view-point. The scheme proposed by the Government will not impart that national, patriotic spirit which is necessary particularly in a new country. This is not the policy characteristic of Anglo-Saxon race which is the dominant and most numerous people in Canada today. If the course suggested by the Government is pursued, and pursued for years to come, what is there to develop that spirit? Patriotism is not developed by reasoning or established by self-interest. We reason upon our feeling in such matters. It is the link which binds the people to the state, it brings affection and sympathy into the state and without it the state cannot endure. Without patriotism you will have nothing left but egotism and self-interest in the state. It is a virtue, some one has said, such as the love of parents. It is the powers by which we can accomplish great things, but I ask how can we develop this spirit? What will give us the national epic? In Canada we have people of many extractions. It is necessary that we should cultivate and develop a bond which will attach these various races to the state and anything which will develop a warm attachment for one's country is a very desirable thing. Where you find a love for Canada by people who are native to Canada, or by those who have come here, you will find that same love and patriotic feeling extended towards the Mother Country.

This Government Bill crushes all hope of realizing that idea. When Nelson, at the battle of Trafalgar, with his flag signalled the message, 'England expects every man to do his duty' it was effective, the most effective message ever given through the instrumentality of a flag. It is as fresh in our minds to-day as it was when it was flown to the breeze a century ago. Supposing Nelson had said: Parliament expects every man to do his duty, would anybody have been moved by that? Supposing it had said: the Imperial Committee of Defence expects every man to do his duty, who would have been moved? Suppose it had said: 'King Geogre III expects every man to do his duty,' it would have sounded cold and it would have stirred no soul. Hon. gentlemen are not reckoning with this aspect of the question. Canadians went to South Africa during the war some twelve years ago. I imagine they were inspired to accomplish brave deeds and were moved to heroic achievements by the recollection of the shores and homes which they had left. I assume that that was the great power moving them to action. I dare say that they, in common with soldiers of the British army, on all occasions had in mind the flag common to all parts of the Empire, but the great inspiration to brave deeds on the part of the Canadians whom we sent to South Africa, was the thought and love of their own native country. Had we sent to the war with Canadian money, men enlisted in England, Canada would have been the poorer in patriotism and the flame of Canadianism and Imperialism would never have burned as it did then and as it has since.

The hon. Postmaster General along with the right hon. the Prime Minister, last year saw the review of the British fleet at Spithead. It was a notable review, a sight which, I suppose, everybody would like to have had the privilege of witnessing. But a review of the fleet in which the visitor could see a Canadian ship, an Australian ship, or a New Zealand ship, would far transcend it and would present the greatest sight that the world has yet seen. Such an event will be seen some day, and it will be the greatest in the world's history. It would accomplish as much in a minute as the policy of money contribution will accomplish in a century, to unify the Empire and to hasten the world's peace. It would give to Canada and Canadians their true position in the Imperial dominions and among the nations of the world. The Prime Minister told us that these dreadnoughts would range themselves in the battle line of the Empire, and we have heard a good deal about that battle line from gentlemen on the other side of the House. Every Canadian would doubtless assist by a contribution in ships and money if he thought Great Britain were in need, but the regard of Canadians for the Motherland is not to be measured by dollars and not by ships. The mere fact that dollars were represented in the firing line would not stir the soul of a patriot. The words of the Prime Minister on the 5th of December in this House were:

> They will be the three most powerful battleships in the world, and they will bear historic names associated with this country. Thus, every Canadian will realize, in seeing or reading of these ships, that they are a gift in which he has participated.

I fear the Prime Minister fails to appreciate the human view-point upon this point. I can understand that three Canadian ships, manned and officered, in whole or in part, by Canadians, would, in the battle line, engage the interest of every Canadian. Though I admit it would be a matter of some pride to him, he could not be stirred with the same enthusiasm by the knowledge that three ships without a Canadian on board, were Canada's contribution to the fighting line in defence of the Empire. I remember in the fall of 1910, when the ship Niobe appeared in the harbour of Halifax, it was my pleasure to be present amongst others to tender a warm welcome to her officers and men. An address of welcome was read by the hon. Mr. Brodeur, then Minister of Marine on behalf of the people of Canada; and, on behalf of the people of Nova Scotia, an address of welcome was presented by the Lieutenant Governor of that province. Never shall I forget that interesting occasion; the chords of human emotion were sensitive and easily responsive that day, on the deck of the Niobe. And why? It was the first Canadian naval ship that had appeared in Canadian waters, and it appeared to us who were present that we had reached a new epoch in Canadian and Imperial history. Let us contrast that picture with this. Suppose the Minister of Finance were to put into a bag $35,000,000 in gold and were to go to Halifax and, beneath one of the fortresses overlooking the harbour, were to present to the English Chancellor of the Exchequer this vast amount of gold, does anybody think it would appeal to the assembled people as the simple message of welcome to the first Canadian battle cruiser did? The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) knows the effect of the point which I am trying to make, because in his address upon the resolution, pointing out the objection to contribution, he said:

> The interest that we take in a contribution spent by another is not the interest that I desire for Canada. I want to see something grafted on the soil of Canada's nationhood which takes root and grows and develops until it incites the spirit of defence in this country, leads to a participation in the defence, leads to that quick interest in it, its glories, its duties, and its accomplished work, which is after all the one great thing that compensates a people for great expenditures either on land or on sea in the way of defence and of the maintenance of the rights of the country.

And, Sir, in my opinion, that was the most important part of the speech delivered by Mr. Foster on that occasion.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have urged that we cannot man a navy in this country; but that is not a fair way of presenting the question, and it is not correct. I say, that we can man a navy in Canada and a very large one at that. Many Canadians would enlist in a Canadian navy and many in Great Britain who would not be likely to enlist in the British navy would undoubtedly come to us. I am sure nobody will say that our kinsmen from across the sea, who would enlist in the Canadian navy would not make good Canadian sailors. I believe that in Canada alone we could soon man a good sized fleet. And, Sir, the men who say we cannot man a navy in Canada are the very men who did everything possible to make the Canadian navy unpopular. By their attacks upon the service, and their 'tinpot navy' shibtoleths, Conservative patriots prevented many men joining the service. The term 'tinpot' navy emanated from and was used by 'tinpot Canadians' and 'tinpot patriots,' and 'tin' is the only currency capable of properly measuring the value of these self-lauded Canadian Imperialists who campaigned against the Canadian navy. Were it not for the accident to the Niobe which prevented her cruising around the coasts of the maritime provinces, to popularize the naval idea, there is not the slightest doubt in the world that she would have secured her full complement of men. Perhaps there is some hon. gentleman here who will tell me the number of men required to man, let us say, the biggest ship of the British Navy.

Mr. PUGSLEY: About a thousand.

Mr. MACLEAN: I thought it was about seven hundred and fifty men. I venture the statement that you could place in commission on the Atlantic coast the two largest fighting ships of the British navy, and in two years you could enlist in the maritime provinces and Newfoundland sufficient men to give these two ships their full complement. I am not referring to officers or men that require a number of years of experience and training. I make my statement after investigation, and I make it upon authority, which I cannot and will not give, but it is the best authority I think that exists. If members of the Government will take the trouble to inquire, they will find that there were hundreds of inquiries addressed to the commander of the Niobe for enlistment, which he could not consider by reason of the circumstances to which I refer. And were it true, that it is difficult to obtain a large enlistment for a Canadian navy, that should not be a wonder, as it has been true of all countries in the world in the beginning of their navies. Had we to maintain a navy, we should be obliged to man it in the best manner possible, and, in the event of being unable to obtain the men in Canada, we should be obliged to do as other nations have done—go to some other country for our men.

Hon. gentlemen opposite raise other objections. They will persist in saying that the policy of the Opposition is a 'separatist' policy. Now I submit, that is not fair. I think that the idea of a Canadian navy in co-operation with the British navy is a policy which spells unity and strength. I think that the idea of concentration, if persisted in, will result some day disastrously. And, after all, this idea of a 'separatist' navy is only a Tory idea. That idea has prevailed in Tory circles for many centuries; and I regret seeing it engrafted upon the Conservative party of this country. Why talk of the policy or proposal of the Opposition as a 'separatist' proposal? Hon. gentlemen opposite voted for it in 1909. They are talking for it in 1913. The hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt), I think, is the only hon. member on the other side, so far as I can remember, who has yet dissented from the idea of the establishment of a Canadian navy. If the Canadian navy, ten years hence, will not be inoculated with the separatist idea, why to-day is it charged with being a 'separatist' navy? And if it is to prove objectionable on account of being a 'separatist' navy some time ten years hence, surely it is clearly objectionable to-day. And yet hon. gentlemen opposite who have spoken—the few who have spoken—all practically announce: We hope that this will be the last contribution in money; we are not proud of it; we have been told there is an emergency, and we are giving it for that reason, but we hope some day to establish a Canadian navy. We have had co-operation and control before in military affairs. Canadian and British soldiers fought together in the Red River rebellion and in the Northwest rebellion. They were together in the South African war. There has been a division of defence on the part of Canada and Great Britain. We have assumed the control and administration of the defenses of Halifax and Esquimalt. They can be garrisoned as well by Canada as by the British army. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not object to that. The British authorities consented to it. If the present policy of the Opposition is a separatist one and objectionable, surely this division of military defence in connection with Halifax and Esquimalt is objectionable. The hon. gentlemen do not object. We have further instances of co-operation to-day. We have the Colonial Defense Committee; we have the Imperial General Staff, and there are local sections of the Imperial General Staff; and we have also the Imperial Conference.

Now Canada, according to the Minister of Labour, has, on more than one occasion, refused to contribute money and ships to the British Admiralty, and that is very probable. Hon. gentlemen opposite did not object. In 1909 they voted against a contribution to the British Admiralty; or, to put it perhaps more fairly, they voted that there was no emergency. This objection to the Canadian naval policy that it is a 'separatist' policy is not a fair one; and I will do hon. gentlemen opposite the credit of believing that they do not think so themselves.

Let me pass on to say just one word in respect to naval construction in this country. I am not going to answer the argument that ships cannot be built in Canada. I have heard nothing very potent so far negatively, and I think the positive side has been pretty well fortified by some hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this side of the House. For the purpose of the discussion of the real principles involved in this issue, it is not necessary really to discuss whether or not we can, efficiently or otherwise, construct ships in Canada.

Hon. gentlemen opposite also make the allegation that the Canadian naval programme which we inaugurated in 1910 was very slow in its growth, development, and fulfilment; and, because of that, they urge that it would be unwise for us at the present moment to continue a Canadian naval policy. Does this objection really call for an answer? Must not a navy have a beginning, like all things made by man? A navy cannot grow in Canada or elsewhere overnight, like Jonah's gourd; the greatest navies of the world have had their beginnings, and if hon. gentlemen are sincere when they say that they believe in the establishment of a Canadian navy some day, I ask them if it is not sound policy to commence at once? They complain about the slow development of the naval policy promulgated by the late Administration; but is that any argument against a Canadian navy? At its worst it is only a charge against administration, and the administration being in the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite, they can cure that defect and remove that criticism. Did hon. gentlemen render to the Government of the day any assistance in the administration of the Canadian naval scheme? They were under bonds to do so; their word and honour were pledged in that direction, yet we received no encouragement from them, and it is little wonder that the administrative portion of the Canadian naval proposition did suffer somewhat by reason of the unfair attacks made upon it by hon. gentlemen opposite.

Let me repeat again that hon. gentlemen opposite have declared time and time again their belief in the soundness of the principle of a Canadian navy. We on this side of the House stand where we did in 1909; but it is nothing more than a piece of vandalism if the ministry of the day does not proceed with the carrying out of the present Canadian naval programme. What do they propose to do with the Canadian Naval Service Act? It is on the statute book, and should be administered. They promised some of the supporters to repeal it; will they do so? Dare they do so? I challenge them to do so. The Niobe is to-day in Halifax harbour, and, I presume, is not enlisting any additional men. I do not think that since she came from the drydock she has been on any cruise. Yet this is a Canadian warship; it is one of the ships purchased by the late Government under the authority of the Naval Service Act, and it is at this moment anchored in the harbour. And that is the price this Empire is paying for the alliance of the Conservative and Nationalist parties? I protest against this price as being unfair to Canada. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, if they are not going to use that ship for the purpose for which it was purchased, what are they going to do with it? Should they not discharge the men now enlisted, put the Niobe up at auction, and sell her to the highest bidder? That would be an honourable course for the Government to pursue; will they do it? I challenge the ministry to take that course of action. I ask them to announce during the second reading of this Bill what they propose to do with regard to the Canadian Naval Service Act, and with respect to the Niobe. We on this side would like no better combat with hon. gentlemen than the settling of this issue with respect to the disposition of the Niobe. I charge hon. gentlemen opposite with cowardice in connection with the administration of the Canadian Naval Service Act. They have allowed it to go into disuse. If that is their policy, I say, repeal the Act. If they have no use for the Niobe, let us know it on the second reading of this Bill. It is too big a price for the intelligent citizens of this country to pay, that that ship, which was bought and paid for by Canadian money under the authority of an Act of Parliament, should be lying idle as the result of political services rendered to the Conservative party by the Nationalists.

The Minister of Labour, and, many other speakers on the other side of the House, attempted to justify this measure by alleging the existence of an emergency. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the word 'emergency' is unfortunate, that the proper word is 'need'; but, in my opinion, no special significance attaches to that distinction. Hon. gentlemen opposite know, I am sure, that the only justification for this Bill is the alleged fact that an emergency exists in naval affairs with the British Admiralty. If it does not exist, this measure has no justification. I need not argue that further, because we on both sides agree upon that point. I want to assert, and to prove if I can, that there is no emergency and no imminent danger to the Empire sufficient to justify the abandonment of the settled policy of the country in respect to naval defence, or to justify a contribution to the British Admiralty of three ships or $35,000,000, in preference to the re-affirmation of the Canadian naval policy which was adopted in 1909.

Mr. BURNHAM: Will my hon. friend state whether the Liberal naval policy means an independent Canadian navy?

Mr. MACLEAN: I am afraid my hon. friend is trying to draw me away from the Bill which is under consideration; but I may tell him that I do not understand the Canadian naval scheme to mean an independent naval policy. The resolution which was passed in 1909 referred to the naval policy as being one of co-operation with the British Admiralty, and this has since remained the policy of the Liberal party. There is an emergency, but it is a political one, and I think it is unfair to endeavour to convert a political emergency into a real naval emergency, for the purpose of justifying legislation intended only to remove hon. gentlemen opposite out of the pit which they themselves dug. The Prime Minister went to England and took some of his colleagues with him. He went with a political emergency, and pretends to have brought back with him a real emergency. I deny it, and say that he has not with him a word of evidence to justify the reason advanced for introducing this measure, namely, a naval emergency. The Postmaster General was taken over with the Prime Minister to discover this emergency. He returns and asks us to believe that he found there a real naval emergency. I have always wondered where and how the Postmaster General ever got into that mental attitude and condition which would render him susceptible at all to the microbe of Imperialism. I fear he must have been tied to the statue of Lord Nelson in Trafalgar square, and he must have had special nurture there at the hands of somebody or he would never have come back here and declared that he found a real emergency in Great Britain. The Prime Minister came back from England with an emergency which some of his friends say was merely a political emergency. Mr. Bourassa should be a good authority and I will read to you what he says:

I have been told, and my source of information is as good as the one behind the 'emergency,' that Mr. Borden found some difficulty in obtaining his 'emergency.' The document handed to him in London by Mr. Churchill was such a poor proof of the emergency that Mr. Borden asked for another. The one he was given the second time was so little terrifying that on his return to Canada Mr. Borden wired to London asking for a third one.

If this memorandum placed before the House on December 5 discloses an emergency, one would need a very vivid imagination to fathom what was in the first emergency which the First Lord of the Admiralty sent to the hotel of the Canadian delegation. Imagine what a beautiful suggestion it would be for a caricaturist. The Prime Minister, and his colleagues are in their hotel in London, and this first emergency document is sent down to them. The Prime Minister is doubtless in high dudgeon, gossip saying so anyway; but just imagine the Postmaster General laughing over this emergency. Being dissatisfied with it they say: This emergency will not do. They call for a second one, and they think that is the real article. But no, when they return to Canada they find it is not good enough, and they ask for a third proof of emergency. The memorandum finally presented affords no evidence of an emergency. Surely somebody is treating the whole subject humourously and not seriously. Hon. gentlemen say to us: Why do you not accept this measure? The Prime Minister says there is an emergency. How can we accept the statement of the Government when we know that hon. gentlemen opposite went to England hunting for an emergency and a justification for the present measure which they hoped would extricate them from the embarrassing position into which they had put themselves.

Mr. BURNHAM: Who got them out of the hole, was it a conspiracy on the part of the Admiralty?

Mr. MACLEAN: Well, you are not out yet, but you are trying very hard and the operation is likely to be very expensive to this country. I said there was no evidence within the four corners of this memorandum that it was the opinion of the Admiralty that an emergency existed or that aid was required or needed. I hope to justify that statement. Hon. gentlemen opposite think that this memorandum gives them some evidence which justifies their claim that there is an emergency. I say emphatically and without fear of contradiction that you cannot find a word or a line in it which will justify the fear which the Prime Minister expressed when he asked us to look at the heavy clouds lying low and to listen to the booming thunder and to look at the vivid lightnings flashing on the horizon. However, the document is here and it is only fair that we should look into it. It would be unfair of me to ask the House to accept my word that there is no evidence of emergency in it without investigating the document itself. It is a queer piece of work, when you read the document along with the speech of the Prime Minister. It is a composite piece of work, a mosaic. It reminds one of the double-hinged door, you can push it either one way or the other. You can see both 'Canadian naval policy' and 'contribution' on each side of the door, you can see anything you want. Anything the Quebec Nationalist wants in his province for political purposes in respect to this issue can be found in the speech of the Prime Minister and the memorandum when he reads them together. But there is nothing substantial after all about the document and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me in that statement if they will look at the matter fairly. The memorandum bears the ear-marks of a document procured by what is law is termed duress, by a political leader who was in dire distress and extremity. He collided with the flotsam and jetsam which he himself put in the water and he sailed over to England with his flag flying in distress, asking for aid. He did not issue forthwith the ordinary Macedonian cry of: 'Come over and help me,' but he 'went over' to the Admiralty direct and said: I have come over here to have you help me out of a political difficulty and the Admiralty had to make three attempts before they got that which he thought might help him. The most you can say of this memorandum is that it was given at the request of the Prime Minister with a view to presentation to the Dominion Parliament as some justification for a contribution to the British Admiralty of three ships or $35,000,000. The document itself says that the Prime Minister asked for the memorandum. It says that the Prime Minister of Canada asked what Canada might best do if it was going to make a contribution to the Admiralty. That in essence is the sense of the document. The first paragraph of this document disclaimed any desire to influence Canadian opinion. And still Sir Rodmond Roblin during a recent election in the province of Manitoba said that the British Admiralty were on bended knees seeking some succor from Canada. This document expressly contains a disclaimer of any desire to influence Canadian opinion in connection with naval defence. The first four paragraphs deal with the power of the navy, that is the British navy, measured by reference to other navies. They set forth the present and future strength of the German navy in various paragraphs, and then paragraph 4 concludes in these words:

The facts set forth above were laid before the House of Commons on the 22nd July, 1912, by the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we are down to this point that the facts contained in this document, which are urged upon this House as a justification for the emergency plea, were presented to the British public on the 22nd July, 1912, and were known to the whole

British public. Now, if in the estimation of the British public, no emergency existed on the 22nd July, and there was no necessity for any contribution by Canada in money or in ships, these facts could not be afterwards distorted so as to make an emergency. That is what hon. gentlemen opposite are seeking to do, but I say Mr. Speaker, that every fact in that memorandum was known to the British public early in July, 1912, and yet not a public man in England, charged with the responsibility of the administration of public affairs, or anyone else, believed that the prestige of the British navy was in danger, or that there was any emergency. If that be true, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it not an incontrovertible fact that the whole groundwork and basis on which the Government proposals have been built, falls to the ground, and that there is only one course for them to pursue, and that is to withdraw their Bill? If there was a feeling in England that Britain's prestige was threatened and that an emergency existed, surely you would hear something about it in England. There have been many elections in England since 1909, and I do not think that the efficiency and sufficiency of the British navy were ever once an issue. I do not remember of any elections since 1909 when it was an issue. It was then made an issue by the Unionist party, but only for political purposes. I dare say an election took place in Great Britain when the Postmaster General was there, but I venture to say that he never heard anything about a German scare being an issue in that campaign. He heard something about home rule, something about Welsh disestablishment; he may have heard something about land reform, or the insurance scheme. The Prime Minister himself heard something about the Franchise Act, as viewed by the suffragettes. They approached him asking for sympathy and aid. He told them, I think, that the Dominion Parliament had not the power of establishing its own franchise. I think he was in error then, but I do not blame him for not retaining a recollection of what was the true state of facts in this connection, and I hope Mrs. Pankhurst and her associates will never learn that, perhaps he did not put the exact facts before them. But anyway, hon. gentlemen opposite have no right to make this so-called German scare an issue in this country, when the English people refuse and have refused for four years to do so in their own country. During last summer two or three prominent Unionists of England were in Canada, and they ventured to speak of the so-called German scare. Now I say it would befit these gentlemen to return to their own country and settle that issue there. They should make it an issue there first, and afterwards come to Canada. I submit that hon. gentlemen opposite are precluded from claiming and asserting an emergency as one of the justifications for their Bill, by the fact that in England, where a wider and more accurate knowledge of international affairs is found than in this country, no one talks about the so-called German scare.

Now, I want to go one step further. I want to say that the leading public men in Great Britain, just before the Prime Minister reached there and afterwards have declared that the British navy was sufficiently strong to maintain her supremacy on the seas, as well as ever in her history. I had intended to read statements of many of the public men of Great Britain, including the First Lord of the Admiralty, the Premier of Great Britain, Mr. Asquith, the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Bonar Law; the leaders of both political parties in the House of Lords, all to the effect that this so-called German menace was non-existent, that the British navy was deemed by the Admiralty to be sufficiently forearmed to maintain British supremacy upon the seas. I do not think I shall weary the House at this late hour by reading their publicly expressed opinions, as possibly they have been read already, and if not, possibly they may be given to the House by some of the hon. gentlemen who will follow me. Do hon. gentlemen opposite wonder that we refuse to accept the word of the Government that an emergency exists? Did an emergency exist, we would gladly join with hon. gentlemen opposite in meeting it. But we have it from the highest authority that none exists.

I want to read one or two opinions respecting the British naval situation that have been made since the Prime Minister left England and returned here. We will see if the clouds are still lying low and heavy, if the thunders are still booming and the lightnings flashing above the horizon. We will see if we can wait or if we can not. Since the Prime Minister left London and returned to Canada, responsible British ministers have on many occasions made reference to existing conditions and one and all have been emphatic in what they have said concerning the friendliness between Great Britain and Germany, the absence of any emergency, and the sufficiency of the land and naval forces to meet existing needs. The Canadian Associated Press cable, dated London, October 25, contains the following despatch:

> The Right Hon. Walter Runciman, president of the Board of Agriculture, a member of the Asquith Cabinet, speaking at a meeting tonight, said, he deplored Lord Roberts' Manchester speech. He did not believe that an Anglo-German war was inevitable, and a statement like that of Bobs was not only deplorable, but pernicious and dangerous.

Mr. FOSTER (Kings): Did the First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. Winston Churchill, have that opinion in regard to Lord Roberts and his speech ?

Mr. MACLEAN : I think so.

Some hon. MEMBERS : No, no.

Mr. FOSTER : He said that he did not have that opinion.

Mr. MACLEAN : I think he said he did have that opinion.

Mr. FOSTER : He denied it.

Mr. MACLEAN : I think I shall be able to prove it in a moment. (Reading):

The rivalry between Germany and Great Britain was more commercial than military, and the only persons who wished to turn it into military were a small group of journalists, a few soldiers and makers of armaments, and a small section of the people who believe that the dignity of the nation was raised by irritating its neighbours. 'It is about time,' he added, 'that the industrial and commercial classes expressed their opinion in a thoroughly organized manner upon this important subject.'

That was the view of a prominent member of the British Ministry. On November 9 two important speeches were delievered at the Mansion House in London: one by the Hon. Herbert Asquith, Prime Minister, and the other by the Hon. Winston Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty. In the course of his speech, Mr. Asquith said:

It is a satisfaction to be able to assure you that so far as this country is concerned its relations with other powers, have without a single exception, never been more friendly and cordial.

Where are the heavy clouds, the booms of thunder, and the vivid lightning flashes? Who was the better judge, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, or a government in political extremes in Canada? Mr. Churchill, in responding for the naval forces, said:

It is with a greater authority than the last time I was here, that I invite you to place your full confidence in the solid efficiency of our naval organization.

Referring to Germany, he said:

The relations have steadily improved between the two countries during the year. . . We have no reason to apprehend trouble of any kind, but my advisers at the Admiralty are satisfied that the number of fleets and flotillas in home waters is by no means unequal to any task that might be imposed upon them.

I want to give you also a few words from a speech delivered by Colonel Seeley, the Secretary for War, who spoke on December 5, 1912, the same calendar day as that upon which the naval resolution was presented to the House. Colonel Seeley, speaking on December 5, 1912, at the presentation of prizes to the London Scottish, said, with reference to the military and naval forces of the United Kingdom:

I feel bound to add this, that after the most searching inquiry, and taking the position at its worst for us at every stage of the investigation, the Committee of Imperial Defence have it as their considered opinion that with our military and naval forces as they stand the danger of invasion may be faced without fear, and this too while leaving a great expeditionary force free to safeguard our vital interests overseas.

All that great theatrical display on the 5th of December, 1912, in the Canadian House of Commons, after all, according to one quite competent to speak, was absolutely unjustified, and the picture painted here was not an accurate portrayal of the facts. What do hon. gentlemen opposite say to this? Surely their reasons for asserting an emergency are vanishing. There apparently never was a time when in England you could get anybody with authority to express the opinion which hon. gentlemen opposite have been expressing. It seems to be getting worse every day and all the time. These are the opinions of public men in Great Britain in the year 1912.

I wish, before I close, to present two further reasons why there is no emergency justifying the measure before the House. The first of these is the attitude of the Prime Minister upon this issue, and the second is the resignation of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). It was on March 29, 1909, that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), with the concurrence of the present Prime Minister, said in the Canadian House of Commons:

To-day the peril stands at the gateway; to-day Canada faces that position of peril, that Imperial emergency.

It was on January 10, 1910, that the present Prime Minister, repeating these words, added:

Has the peril passed? No, Sir, we are nearer to it by nearly a year. It is idle to assure us that there will be no war. The war has already begun.

On October 10, 1911, the then leader of the Opposition was chosen Prime Minister of this country. From that moment he had it in his power to have Canada take some definite and immediate action to meet an emergency if it really existed. Is it conceivable that, if the Prime Minister believed in an emergency such as he has described, he would have allowed Parliament to assemble in 1911 and the speech from the Throne at this first session to be delivered without so much as an allusion to an emergency? Would he have permitted the whole session of 1911 to pass without requesting some authoritative statement from the Admiralty? Would he have allowed the whole year to pass without devising some means of trying to meet a situation so critical? Over a year in office and nothing done.

The Prime Minister and his ministers declined on every possible occasion to state what their views on the naval situation were. They endeavoured to create the impression in the country that it was their intention to repeal the Canadian Naval Service Act; but in 1910 they inserted in the resolution the word 'speedy' so as to bring about the speedy building of the ships for the Canadian navy, and that resolution through all these years has stood as the unrepealed mandate of Parliament. Tenders for the construction of these ships were in the hands of the new Government, but no action was taken. They discouraged recruiting to the Canadian navy and tried to make it appear that these were Laurier navy ships and not ships of the Canadian navy. At last pressure, so great as to be irresistible, was brought to bear on them from various parts of the country, and dreading a second session of Parliament without any naval policy, they fell back upon the emergency scare as a means of escaping from the difficulties they made for themselves. Is it reasonable to suppose that during the many months they were in power without taking action of any kind, the ministers really felt the awful presentiment disclosed to Parliament by the Prime Minister on the 5th of December last? If the ominous words uttered by the Prime Minister the day he presented this policy to the House are not true and yet are believed in by him, then they are evidence of hallucination on his part rather than the words of a responsible statesman. If, on the contrary, they are true, and if the Prime Minister believes in them, how can he justify lack of action on the part of himself and his Government from the date they assumed office, in October, 1911, to the 5th of December, 1912. It is kinder for me to assume that the actions of the Government rather than their words indicate their real belief.

In the resignation of the Hon. Mr. Monk from the Cabinet, there is additional evidence that no emergency exists; an additional proof that there never was a time when hon. gentlemen opposite believed there was an emergency. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier, as a member of the Administration, heard in the most intimate and confidential terms from the Prime Minister and his colleagues who went to England, all the facts they knew in reference to the naval situation; and, having heard them, he was unable to see any necessity for the course proposed by the Prime Minister, and he consequently resigned. I often wonder if the Postmaster General and the Minister of Inland Revenue ever feel conscience-stricken, momentarily even. I wonder if their consciences did not prick them when their old ally and colleague and leader announced that he felt in honour bound to leave the Ministry. I am glad to learn that it is a fact—the newspapers at least said so—that the Minister of Inland Revenue was very undecided for many days as to what he should do. He was almost persuaded to resign and accompany out of the Cabinet his friend, leader and colleague. It is evident at least that he had some conscience left, and may we not hope that some day it will speak so loudly, that he will consider himself in honour bound to resign also. It is important in connection with the resignation of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, to have in mind the following statement made by the Prime Minister in defending his taking of this hon. gentleman into his Cabinet. The hon. member had taken the stand publicly that nothing should be done in the way of naval assistance to Great Britain until the people had had an opportunity of passing upon it. This is what he said on November 20, 1911:

> It is true the Minister of Public Works and I do not see eye to eye, but the point that divided us was at the time essentially not a question of policy but of a fact. Because the Minister of Public Works had said over and over again that when any emergency comes up in the Empire he and those who thought with him would be prepared to do their duty.

Now, I trust hon. gentlemen opposite, or at least some of them have been following this statement of the Prime Minister. And I want them to follow me just a few moments longer. From the statement which I have read, there are two very obvious deductions to be drawn. One is that when the hon. member for Jacques Cartier left the Cabinet he left it on a question of fact. Now, having heard all that the Prime Minister and his colleagues were in a position to disclose, he saw no evidence of an emergency. That is one deduction. The other is this: When he was taken into the Cabinet in October, 1911, and during the year he was in office, the emergency must have ceased to exist in the mind of the Prime Minister.

I want to go just a step further. Either the Prime Minister, in order to gain the support of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and his Nationalist allies at the time of the formation of his Cabinet, must have been prepared to sacrifice for the sake of office the interests of Canada and the Empire—to use his own words, 'We were confronted with an emergency which might rend this Empire asunder'—or he must have believed in the alternative that this emergency no longer existed. Indeed, the Prime Minister saw that his action in taking the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and his Nationalist allies into the Cabinet was capable of only the one construction or the other, both of which I have given; and in stating his position in this House he virtually admitted that he had been wrong, when he had differed with the hon. member for Jacques Cartier on the fact of an emergency. He virtually said—at the time of taking the hon. member for Jacques Cartier into his Cabinet—that he was rather of the mind of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier and that no emergency did really exist. Here are his words:—

I have no fault to find with the hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) for calling attention to the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) when this matter was under debate, two years ago, did not see eye to eye on a question of emergent conditions which at that time, I thought, threatened the Empire. These conditions appealed to me in that way at the time, by reason of very grave declarations that had been made by the Prime Minister, the Foreign Secretary and the Lords of the Admiralty of Great Britain. I am ready to admit, in fact we were afterwards taunted in this House by hon. gentlemen opposite with the fact that these declarations were to a very considerable extent modified by subsequent statements made in the British House of Commons by the Prime Minister himself, I think, and also by the First Lord of the Admiralty.

Now, in view of this apologetic attitude and in the absence of a single statement by the Prime Minister or his colleagues to show wherein a new emergency has arisen since he came into office, can he expect that the people of Canada will regard as a sufficient justification for a departure from the unanimous resolution of March, 1909, and for a vote of $35,000,000 for the three largest battleships in the world; his impatient and alarming pronouncement of December fifth last?

I realize that I have been speaking for some little time, and I am very glad that so many hon. gentlemen opposite have done me the honour of sitting in the House and listening to my remarks; and, in view of the fact that they have shown so little interest in this great and important issue, I feel especially honoured by their presence. I will not, however, detain the House at much greater length on this occasion. It may be that I will have occasion to revert to this question later on in the session.

Mr. PELLETIER: Don't forget the thunders and lightnings.

Mr. MACLEAN: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. PUGSLEY: The hon. gentleman was merely laughing at the idea of an emergency.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax)

Mr. PELLETIER: I was thinking of the hon. member (Mr. Pugsley) running for St. John.

Mr. PUGSLEY: I may say to the hon. gentleman that if he will resign, I will run against him in St. John.

Mr. MACLEAN: I fear the Postmatser General would not venture a contest either at home or abroad. He has received many challenges to enter a contest. I have put the challenge to him to-night—not that I should be one of the combatants in the fray, but I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would be kind enough to release the tension which prevails here and settle the issue by sending in his own resignation and going back to his own constituency. If his constituents then declare against him I am sure that the Prime Minister will at once gladly tender to His Royal Highness the Governor General his resignation, and the issue will then be settled.

Mr. PELLETIER: I am prepared to answer this challenge now. The hon. gentleman has repeated it twice during the course of his remarks, and I have suggested that he do the same thing. But he says no; he wants to be secure and safe in his seat, and let others resign. As far as our own province is concerned, I may tell the hon. gentleman that the whole question was settled on the day of Hochelaga.

Mr. MACLEAN: There is this distinction between my position and that of the Postmaster General. In the county of Halifax I did try very hard to make the naval question an issue, but the Prime Minister would not allow me to do so, as he very adroitly avoided that question. I am not finding fault with him, but the Postmaster General is now in the ministry by virtue of the fact that he made this matter an issue—and a disagreeable and discreditable issue—in the province of Quebec. I may tell the hon. getleman that I do not propose to resign my seat. It would be an absurdity for me to resign without reason. There is a reason, however, why the Postmaster General should do so; he is in honour bound to do it, and in fact, I am astonished that he has not done so long ere this.

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. member appears to be very sorry that the naval question was not an isue at the last election in Halifax, but he has now the opportunity of his life; let him resign his seat, and that matter will be an issue.

Mr. MACLEAN: There is no particular reason why I should engage in any unnecessary contest, but there is a reason why the Postmaster General and the Minister of Inland Revenue should resign. If, however, I am invited to indulge in a pastime of that character, I would suggest that we all do the same thing.

I did a moment ago intend to address the House for a few moments in recapitulating the main features of the argument which I have been endeavouring to make to the House; but as the hour is late, I will discontinue my remarks at once.

Mr. H. H. STEVENS (Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to address the House on this question at any length, but a reference has been made by the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Maclean), and I wish to make a statement pertaining to that reference. I do not think the hon. member intended to mislead the public in his statement, but I feel that it was made in entire ignorance of the actual facts. He made the statement more than once that the First Lord of the Admiralty condemned Lord Roberts in the speech he had made which has gained such notoriety in the Old Country; he repeatedly insisted on that, especially after it was suggested by my hon. friend from Kings, that the First Lord of the Admiralty had supported Lord Roberts. I desire to place on 'Hansard' at this particular time the statement of the Right Hon. Winston Churchill, made on October 30 in this regard, and I think it is a statement that should in all fairness be placed before the people of Canada who are entitled to full and accurate knowledge of this matter. I might congratulate my hon. friend on the rather lengthy discourse he has given us to-day; but the dirge which he has managed to sing seems to me to be the funeral dirge of the debate as far as members opposite are concerned. He asked us to listen to the thunderings and to see the lightnings and a few other things which rather gave us the impression that the hon. member was labouring, which is unusual as we generally expect something rather eloquent from his lips. An hon. member suggests that there was a caucus held this morning and there is no doubt that this dirge was the result of that caucus.

Mr. MACLEAN (Halifax): That is your leader's dirge; do not make any mistake about that.

Mr. STEVENS: The Right Hon. Winston Churchill made the following statement in his speech of October 30:

> We are sometimes assured that the danger of war has become an illusion.

Proceeding he says:

> We can survey the past without a pang and survey the future without a grudge, but we must be prepared.

No. hon. member on this side of the House has intimated for a moment that the British Empire is on its knees as hon. gentlemen opposite have repeatedly implied we did. We do say that there are conditions existing to-day which demand our most serious and immediate attention.

We must be prepared, we must be ready for all eventualities. It is good to be patient, circumspect and peace loving; but that is not enough. We must be strong and self-reliant and in the end, for all our party politics, we must be united.

Speaking generally of the Empire. Then further:

> As First Lord of the Admiralty, I am entitled to remind you that we owe a debt also, in a special sense, to that unfailing succession of skillful sea-captains who, in every kind of vessel, against every kind of enemy, on all oceans, in all centuries, have maintained unbroken our naval power, and—why should we not say it?—our naval supremacy, upon which the greatness and the safety of our country depends. We live in a world of unceasing change. A spirit of decay pervades all human arrangement. No race, no empire, no institution reposes for any length of time on past virtues and past achievements. Unless we renew our strength continually, and revise and exhort without ceasing those impulses of comradeship and duty which are the true sources of national strength, we cannot hope to preserve indefinitely our happy and prosperous position. We must so manage our affairs and organize our corporate life that those who come after us shall have easier, not harder, burdens to bear, shall have fewer dangers to face, and greater resources with which to meet those dangers.
>
> We have to hold what we have won.

This should peculiarly appeal to the hon. member for Halifax who, I understand, is particularly anxious to hold on for a brief spell longer to a seat in this House.

> The tasks which devolve upon us are serious. The times in which we live are critical. We have to hold what we have won.

Let me emphasize that point. Hon. members have been telling us that there is no such thing as an emergency, that Great Britain, the British Empire is in a position where she can even afford to be careless in regard to these matters. But the First Lord of the Admiralty, who heads his speech with the words: 'As First Lord of the Admiralty I am entitled to remind you,' so that he is speaking officially, says:

> The tasks which devolve upon us are serious, the times in which we live are critical. We have to hold what we have won. This is unquestionably the voice of England, whose independent press stands resolutely behind the hero of Paardeberg and Ladysmith. Most Englishmen share the view of the News, when it says:
>
> If Earl Roberts, knowing what he knows, believing what he believes, had held his tongue, he would have been a coward. No one suggests that is a part he is capable of playing. Besides, does any sane man, not blinded by prejudice, believe that Germany is not endeavouring to rival us upon the sea?

I submit that from 1902 to 1911 nothing was done in connection with the Canadian navy beyond the acquisition of two small, incompetent vessels.

Let us look back upon the past and learn from the history of the world what the end of sloth and indifference, have always been. Let us clear our minds of cant and acknowledge the great truth which Lord Roberts, in his vigorous old age, continually tries to bring to our sluggish understanding, that the only way to peace lies in being prepared to meet attack of any moment, in preserving an armed might, which should bid the aggressor beware.

Lord Roberts is a great soldier. That is all for peace. That he should be the subject of attack, when he tells us honestly and straightforwardly, the only way to avoid a bloody and disastrous war, is humiliating to all men who love their country and are willing to give themselves in her service.

That is the statement which I think the hon. gentlemen opposite could well afford to weigh carefully. It has been continuously reiterated on the other side of the House that the statements of Lord Roberts were not in accord with the opinions of those who should know best.

I have one other word to say in reply to allegations made by hon. members opposite and particularly by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. The memorandum from the Admiralty has been pointed to as not containing a statement that the British Empire was in dire straits. Nobody knows better than the hon. gentlemen who have made those statements that there are behind that official statement which is before the House facts and conditions obtaining in the British Empire to-day which warrant our taking a very serious view of the situation. It is not necessary, nor is it desirable for the British Admiralty or for this Government to lay before the country the details of the situation as they exist. Nor, Sir, would it be done by any sane government, and hon. gentlemen opposite well know that, and are continually taking advantage of that unwarranted situation.

Mr. E. PROULX (Prescott): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member for Prescott moves that the debate be now adjourned. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. BORDEN: I think it would be better for the hon. gentleman to go on, for a while at least.

Mr. PROULX: After listening to the eloquent and interesting speech of my hon. friend from Halifax, I beg the indulgence of the House for a few minutes, for I do not intend to speak at very great length. I listened with very great interest this afternoon to the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Labour, and I was not surprised that he did not try to defend the policy of the Government on the ground of an emergency, because it must be accepted by all hon. members of this House that an emergency no longer exists. He tried, with very great pains, to prove that the Government had a mandate to enact this legislation, and that there was no need to appeal to the people. He said that in Ontario in the last general election, his leader, the present Prime Minister, mentioned the subject in a speech which opened the campaign. I do not remember that the question was an issue in the last elections in Ontario. In any event, the question was never mentioned in my own constituency, and I do not remember of seeing it mentioned in the newspapers of Ontario. If we are to believe the hon. member for West Peterborough, there were other questions which carried more weight during the last election, and which had more effect on the results. There were many side issues. There were some local, some racial, and some religious issues thrown into the contest, and I believe that these had more effect on the result of the election in the province of Ontario than the naval question. In the province of Quebec it was different. There it was the great bone of contention between the parties. I do not know whether it was an issue in the other provinces. I have been told that in the province of Nova Scotia it was mentioned incidentally, and my hon. friend from Halifax has stated this evening that when it was mentioned, those who did so were rather in favour of a Canadian navy, and the people of Nova Scotia were given hopes of a revival of the great ship-building industry. My hon. friend from Rouville the other day said that the times had changed very much. Tempora mutantur, et nos mutamur in illis. This is very true.

The Conservative party has taken many different positions since the question was first brought up in this House in 1909. The present Prime Minister was at first in favour of a Canadian navy and he did not ask for an appeal to the people. But when the Bill was brought before the House in the session of 1909-10 there commenced a transformation. His colleague the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was against any contribution to Imperial armaments, and against the building of a Canadian navy before the question was submitted to the people for their approval. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister was in favour of an immediate contribution of the cost of two dreadnoughts, and of an appeal to the people on the question of a permanent policy. He claimed at the time that there was an emergency, and that the Armageddon would take place before 1912. The Armageddon has not yet taken place, and I do not suppose it will take place for many years to come. In the fall of 1910, as we all know, there was an election in Drummond and Arthabaska. Both policies were condemned by the Nationalists in that election, the policy of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition who was then Premier, and the policy of my right hon. friend the present Prime Minister. The candidate of the Nationalists was against both policies. After that election we had the session of 1910, during which the hon. member for Jacques Cartier moved an amendment to the Address, regretting that there was no provision in the Speech from the Throne for an appeal to the people on the question of a contribution to Imperial armaments. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister moved an amendment which, stripped of its verbiage, amounted to about the same thing as the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. After his own amendment was defeated, he voted for the amendment of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier which asked for an appeal to the people on the question of contributions to the Imperial armaments. Well, Mr. Speaker, is a contribution of $35,000,000 to build three dreadnoughts for the British navy not a contribution to Imperial armaments? Why is there not the same need to-day to submit the question to the people as there was in 1910? Well, my right hon. friend may say, we have had an election since then, and the people have pronounced in favour of our policy. As I have already said, the great question at the last election was not the naval question. The question of reciprocity was the deciding question of the election, and if the naval question was an issue at all in the last election it was not in this form, that is, a contribution as against a Canadian navy. In the province of Quebec, it was no contribution at all to Imperial armaments, and no Canadian navy. My right hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue stated in this House in 1910 that the result of the election in Drummond-Arthabaska was a condemnation of both policies, the policy of the Government and the policy of the Opposition. At the last election, the Nationalists in the province of Quebec promised to have the Naval Act repealed. Their leader, Mr. Bourassa asked the people to elect twenty-five independent members and he would promise them that the Naval Act would be repealed next session. The resolutions which were adopted at the meetings held by the Nationalists provided that there should be no contribution to the naval defence of the Empire until the future relations of Canada with the Empire were defined, and that Canada should have a real voice in the questions of peace and war, and in the foreign policies of the Empire. The session took place and there was no repeal. The Government got a sufficient appropriation voted to maintain the Niobe and Rainbow. The Prime Minister declared that after the session he would go to London, consult the British Admiralty and then define his policy. He went to England with three of his colleagues. I do not know whether he asked the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) to go with him, but I do not suppose he did. I suppose he preferred to take with him the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) because he probably knew that the Postmaster General would be more amenable to a change of opinion than the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. I suspect that the policy was framed before they left for England and that they took their emergency with them. When they reached England they were very well cared for, they were invited to many receptions and I noticed that the first speech the Prime Minister made in England was in favour of Imperialism. He spoke of one King, one navy, one flag. Afterwards he changed the tone of his speeches. I suppose that the Postmaster General must have whispered in his ear that it would be well for him to say something for the Nationalists, that he should not forget them. I suppose that the Postmaster General thought that his leader should remember the declaration which he had made in his county when he accepted his nomination. He is reported in La Patrie of the 5th September, 1911, to have said:

> In regard to the navy, I am against the project of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and, I must say that I am against the contribution of Mr. Borden. This is my programme; I must say that I am an opponent of the navy whether it is presented by Mr. Borden or by any one else. I am a candidate independent of both parties and I am for the public interest first.

Mr. PUGSLEY: Who said that?

Mr. PROULX: The Postmaster General. I suppose this declaration must have come to his mind like Banquo's ghost. He must have told the Prime Minister that he must say something for the Nationalists because if he did not say anything they would become uneasy. In his next speech the Prime Minister said that Canada was not going to be an adjunct of the British Empire. I do not know who wanted to make Canada an adjunct of the British Empire. It was not my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) because, when he presented his Naval Act, the chief criticism against his policy was that it was a separatist navy and that he wanted to detach Canada from the Empire. But the Prime Minister did say something to satisfy the Nationalists, he said that Canada was not going to be an adjunct of the British Empire, that before she would co-operate in the naval defence of the Empire the status of Canada should be defined and that she should have a real voice in the question of peace and war. He must have known that this question had been discussed at the Imperial conference of 1911 and that the Prime Minister of England had declared that the British Government could not share with the colonies the responsibility of the foreign policy of the Empire. It will be many years before we have a voice in the foreign policy of the Empire and many elections will be held before the question is settled.

On the return of the Prime Minister to Canada we all expected that his policy would be announced. We waited for a few months. The country was getting very anxious. The people did not know the reason for such hesitancy but now we know that the first memorandum was not satisfactory, that the second was not satisfactory and that he had to wait for a third one. When the third one arrived the hon. member for Jacques Cartier was not satisfied that the emergency warranted the vote of a large amount before the people should have an opportunity of deciding the question for themselves; therefore, he left the Cabinet. We are told that there is some secret information and that that secret information warrants the vote of this money. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier had seen this secret information but it was not sufficient to induce him to stay in the Cabinet. I think that the hon. member for Jacques Cartier is just as public spirited as the Postmaster General, the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Mr. Nantel), and the Secretary of State (Mr. Coderre). The Secretary of State has taken the place of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier. The hon. member for Jacques Cartier is not satisfied, but these hon. gentleman are satisfied. I do not want to impute improper motives but I think that my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B., (Mr. Carvell), gave probably the correct explanation of their continuing to ocupy their positions the other day when he said that there were seven thousand reasons.

We are told that the policy of the Admiralty was not a contribution but that on the contrary the Admiralty would have preferred the building of a Canadian navy like that which the Australian Government is building. That was the policy of the Admiralty in 1909 when the representatives of Canada had a conference with them. This continued to be the policy of the Admiralty. But the Government wanted a modification of that policy, the Admiralty did not want to refuse them and therefore they made a change. They took good care to specify in the memorandum that the Prime Minister of Canada had asked for suggestions, and, as we know, the Minister of Trade and Commerce preceded the Prime Minister and his colleagues to England, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce must have made suggestions to the Admiralty before the Prime Minister reached there. Even after the Prime Minister returned to Canada, it appears to have been the expectation in England that we would have a Canadian navy, and this opinion is confirmed by the statements in the following article:

The Canadian Gazette, published in London, England, is friendly to Mr. Borden, and does its best to support his naval proposals, but is unable to close its eyes to the truth. For instance, it says:

The Canadian people, strongly national as are their tendencies, are most unlikely to desire a permanent system of contributions. The Canadian correspondent of the (London) Times is surely right when he says that 'at bottom Canadians believe that they must ultimately create a strong national navy, and supply men as well as money for sea defence.'

The Gazette quotes the London Times against this narrow view. The Times says:

The great departments in Whitehall cannot concentrate too exclusively upon the circumstances of the moment or on the European theatre of affairs without endangering the respect which public opinion in the dominions would accord to their long training and experience. If the opinion of the Admiralty is to carry weight throughout the Empire it must be supported more and more by breadth of thought.

On the 28th of November, a week before Mr. Borden announced his policy, the London Times said:

Every great dominion has undertaken, or is now to undertake, the creation of a fresh centre of naval power. Their growing strength, as ours has always been theirs. . . . It is not good strategy to urge that a North sea standard should be used as our universal criterion of naval power. Let us fix a European standard according to our European needs, which this country alone is ready and able to meet; and let us then in consultation with the dominion governments decide the needs of security elsewhere. The dominions will require our help even then; but let us keep the two spheres distinct, and reckon on dominion ships only in the wider extra-European spheres. Each of these systems will make for the highest possible efficiency in the conditions of each sphere; but they will not easily amalgamate. The contributed ships must be laid down, too, but must be earmarked for service elsewhere.

The people of England must have been in a state of hesitancy, as we in Canada were, before the policy was announced on the 5th of December. After the right hon. gentleman announced his policy, there seems to have been an impression in the province of Ontario especially, that the Quebec Nationalists had won, and that the Government was not going to declare its permanent naval policy for some years to come, in order that the Nationalists would be able to say in the province of Quebec, that after all, the Government policy was much better than the policy of the Opposition, because there was a payment of $35,000,000 divided into three years, and as that would suffice as a naval policy for ten or twelve years, it was a cheaper policy in the end than the policy proposed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Let me read to the House what L'Evenement wrote the other day after the vote taken in this House, and, as is well known, L'Evenement is a very friendly paper to the Postmaster General.

It is only a gift of money. You will never hear any more of it. There is no danger Britain will hire men at twenty-five cents a day, and Canadian mothers and sisters will suffer no loss. As for the money, Ontario will pay for it, and the West will pay for it. It will not take your sons from your homes, as the infernal Laurier would do.

We can see from this that the Nationalists in the province of Quebec expect to be able to use the argument that this was a contribution payable for ten or twelve years, and that it would be much cheaper for the country than a Canadian navy as proposed by the Liberal party. However, the Conservative papers of Ontario did not like the idea of the Government delaying for too long the anouncement of their permanent naval policy, and they called on the Government to make a declaration, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) came to the rescue of the Prime Minister before the Christmas holidays, and he told us to posses our souls in patience and that it would not be long before we knew what the permanent naval policy of the Government would be. However, the Minister of Trade and Commerce took great care to let the Imperialists of Ontario know that the views of the Nationalists on navy matters had not prevailed, and he used this language:

The leader of the Opposition says further that this product is a hybrid, bred of Tory jingoism and Nationalism. They have been together and this is the result. I am puzzled. Suppose it was, does it make much matter if the rich fruit on the tree comes from one soil or another, is tended by one gardener or another, or by two, provided that the apple itself, in its flavour and quantity is all right? Had not he better savor the apple instead of chemically, or otherwise, analysing the soils out of which it has sprung? But, I am puzzled besides. He says that this is the result of an unholy alliance between the Tories and the Nationalists. Well, I come back to his speech and what does he say? Immediately this realm was passed dissension broke out in the Liberal-Conservative party. There were two sections, one section wanted a contribution only and a navy. The other section wanted neither contribution nor navy. If there was a choice at all they were for the Canadian service, while they utterly abhorred the contribution. Then, he said that this is the result of an unholy alliance between the Nationalists and the Liberal-Conservatives. If it is the result, who won? After which parent does the child take its traits. Here, a measure which says contribution, the Nationalists damns contribution, will have none of it. Evidently he did not get his way. How then does the Opposition leader argue it out that this is the result and that Nationalism has been triumphing, when the very thing that the Nationalists abhor is embodied in the Bill and the very thing that he might look upon with favour, a Canadian service, is not included in the Bill. I take exception to the statement, but I am taking him on his own ground. He says that there is no permanent policy, but that it is all contribution. If that is so, whatever the antecedents may have been, the Nationalists did not get the victory in this matter. That is certain.

He wanted to assure his supporters in Ontario that they did not need to fear the Nationalists in Quebec; he wanted to dispel the impression that the Nationalists had won, and had prevented the Government from announcing their permanent policy before the next general election. I come now, Sir, to a contrast of the two policies. We have this contribution—I should not call it a contribution because the Bill provides for the building of three ships which will be loaned to the British Admiralty, and so it is not a simple payment of money to the British Admiralty. Like the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean), I would much prefer that it should be a simple payment, because otherwise these ships which are to bear Canadian names will be Canadian-owned and may involve Canada in foreign entanglements. They will be in the fighting line as the Prime Minister said, and they will range with the ships of Australia and New Zealand; although I think the Prime Minister was a little beyond the mark when he made that statement, because the Australian ships are to be stationed on the Pacific ocean in the Australian zone. At all events, the Prime Minister told us that these ships are to be in the fighting line, and they will not only be for defence, as the leader of the Opposition would want them to be, but they will be for aggression, if England should decide to be aggressive.

The policy of the Opposition is founded on the principle which they maintained in 1909 and which they have maintained ever since. That policy is for a Canadian navy—not a navy for offence or for aggression, but for defence—defence, first, of our own territory, and for co-operation with the Imperial navy in times of stress, and in case of need and, in order to help England to preserve her supremacy on the seas. It is true that dreadnoughts have been added to the policy promulgated in 1909. It was, I suppose, the intention of the late Government to add dreadnoughts later on when the revenues of the country would permit. The revenues of the country have largely increased within the last few years, and the Opposition is now of opinion that the policy promulgated in 1909 could be extended to cover two fleet units, and that is the policy embodied in the amendment by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. When the Act was passed in 1909, speaking on the second reading of the Bill, I said that instead of dreadnoughts being added to the cruisers which were to be built, I preferred that merchant ships should be built, and that Canada could be of great assistance to England in time of war by having merchant ships to carry our cereals to England, and having cruisers to protect our merchant ships. I was in favour of a fleet of peace, and I am still in favour of a fleet of peace. I admit that to protect our coasts and our ports more effectively it is necessary to have dreadnoughts, and so I accept the amendment of my right hon. leader and approve the policy. I read yesterday a very interesting article published in the Citizen, on 'A Fleet of Peace,' and I will take the liberty of reading it. I understand that this article was written by a very intelligent young Englishman, a Mr. Bowman, who, I am told was at one time in the service of this Government, but he was unfortunately a Liberal and his services were dispensed with. He is now in the service of the Citizen. This appeared in the Citizen of yesterday:

Sir Wilfrid Laurier advocates the building of war fleets in Canada. It would establish a new industry. Give employment to thousands of workers. Keep the money in the country.

There is a great flaw in the policy. The battleship industry is useless, wasteful. It consumes but does not produce wealth. The workers employed on battleships building could be more usefully employed on wealth-producing industries; farming, railway construction, house building, road making, merchant ship construction.

Canada cannot spare a single man from the development of the country. Navies do not develop any country.

Nor can a single dollar be spared from the national treasury. The country needs every cent it can secure: for the great national undertakings.

But loyal Canadians are anxious to contribute to Imperial defence. There is an emergency.

Liberal ministers visited London four years ago. Returned to warn Canada of a mysterious, unmentionable danger threatening the Empire, requiring immediate action.

Conservative ministers have also visited London. Consulted the Admiralty. Returned to bestir Canada. An emergency contribution of $35,000,000 has been voted. Still there is an agitation for naval construction yards and fleets on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

Now ship-building is a very desirable industry. Canadian waterways have not their equal for commercial expansion. Canada must some day be the leading maritime nation of the world. The whole system of railways and canals development is based on the exportation of grain east. Grain is the staff of life to Britain; the indispensable commodity and sinew of war and peace. Stop the supply of grain and the British Isles would be reduced to starvation, surrender and revolution in a week.

There is an alternative policy to the building of battleships in Canada. Let the country guarantee to pour a stream of grain into Britain: in time of peace and in time of war. It would relieve the Imperial Defence Committee of the greatest danger to be feared starvation in England.

Canada could build a fleet of grain carrying liners, owned and operated by the nation, manned by Canadians. A Canadian fleet of peace.

Just as the nation owns and operates the lighthouse supply fleet; the vessels of the Public Works, the Marine and Canals Departments.

The post office is a national undertaking The Intercolonial railway pays a million dollars surplus into the national exchequer. A national Canadian volunteer fleet for running grain into British ports could be far more effectively operated than a fleet of warships for the destruction of life and property.

It would be a wealth producer; not eating up the nation's revenue during times of peace. Rather doing useful service, transporting the western grain to Europe. Possibly bringing back desirable settlers at reduced rates. A powerful medium to offset the shipping ring at present operating on the Atlantic.

Possibly the big interests would oppose national development along such lines. It is the curse of the capitalist system. No objections are made by financiers to reckless expenditure over worse than useless warships. But any national enterprise for the benefit of humanity, the people—national telegraphs, national telephones, national express delivery, national water-power, national land— the cry of socialism is raised at once. Steps are taken to secure the opposition of the press, the politician, even the pulpit.

However the Canadian volunteer fleet need not necessarily encroach on the preserves of the railways and shipping combines.

The Hudson bay railway, a national undertaking will open up a new route. An untried route, possibly dangerous to ordinary navigation; requiring specially designed vessels—vessels strong enough to readily resist ice conditions.

The Canadian volunteer fleet could operate on the Hudson bay route. Wireless telegraph stations could be established to warn the vessels of dangerous ice.

If needs be the liners could be armed with six-inch guns to repel torpedo attack. They could be sufficiently fast to cross in three days to Blacksod bay in Ireland.

And while there would be offensive adventuring into militarism—even the Quebec Nationalists could not object to a volunteer fleet of peace—it may be mentioned that the Russian volunteer fleet proved to be the most effective squadron during the war with Japan; national vessels built for commerce in time of peace.

The Russian ships are termed volunteer cruisers. They are built sufficiently strong to protect themselves against all but battleships. They are fitted with engine power sufficient to escape from any pursuing battleship. Battle fleets are not designed for harassing commerce. Such work is left to the comparatively light cruiser. The volunteer fleet could not only be strong enough to protect itself, it could convoy other liners, freight and passenger across the ocean.

At the present time the shipping interests are complaining loudly against the high insurance rates on the St. Lawrence route.

What will those rates be on Hudson bay route?

It is certain that any private shipping line operating on the Hudson bay will demand a fat subsidy from the Dominion Government, provided any line can be influenced to trade from the bay at all.

The private shipping company would in all probability build ships at the expense of the people of Canada. They would extort innumerable concessions and assistance in various forms.

Canada had far better start right by building national ships operated for the benefit of the people of Canada, and held always ready as a volunteer fleet.

One battleship costs twelve million dollars. Twelve million dollars would be ample to build twelve magnificent national liners, capable of carrying all the grain Canada could export by Hudson bay. And the surplus from such a national undertaking could be devoted to leviathan ice-breakers for opening up routes wherever possible.

A Canadian national volunteer fleet would be a real ship-building policy for Canada. Established on both coasts if need be. Such a fleet would be an example to the Empire; a pattern to the world; a leading step in the direction of world-wide fleets of peace.

I agree with the ideas of this article. I think we should commence as soon as possible the construction of shipyards and dockyards in Canada to build the cruisers and the merchant ships.

The hon. member for Sunbury and Queens (Mr. McLean) stated the other day that we could not build dreadnoughts in Canada at present, and, even if we could do so, that it would cost much more to build them in Canada than in England. But if we could not build dreadnoughts at once, we could commence with light cruisers and merchant ships. Dreadnoughts are not as necessary, I think, as the light cruisers. England has enough light cruisers, and the light cruisers could protect our merchant ships and police the Atlantic. If we cannot build the dreadnoughts in Canada, then we can have them constructed in England. The amendment proposed by my right hon. leader provides that the navy shall be built as far as possible in Canada, and, as I have said, if this is not possible the ships can be built in the Old Country.

Mr. BURNHAM: Does the hon. member think that Great Britain fully realizes that which he has just stated with respect to her efficiency?

Mr. PROULX: I do not know whether England realizes it or not, but I do know that the First Lord of the Admiralty, Mr. Churchill, and the First Minister, Mr. Asquith, have said that the British navy is amply sufficient to meet all combinations, and that there is no need of accelerating the construction of British ships.

Mr. BOYCE: Was the hon. member present in the House not more than an hour ago when a statement was read as the evidence of the First Lord of the Admiralty to the contrary of that which my hon. friend has just stated?

Mr. PROULX: I have not heard any statement to the contrary, but, as I have said, I read a statement that the British navy was amply sufficient to cope with the present situation, and that there was no need to accelerate the construction of British ships. In speaking of the strength of the British navy we must also take into account the alliances which England has with other nations. France has a cordiale entente with England, and Russia is also in alliance with her. The Nationalists of the province of Quebec say that this contribution is all that will be done, but if we read carefully the memorandum of the Admiralty, especially the last paragraph, we see that this is not all, but is only the first step; it is the entering of the wedge of Canadian contributions to the naval defence of the Empire, and when we are told it is only a temporary policy, adopted in a case of emergency, I think the statement is a misnomer, and that the proposition had better be designated as the first instalment of the permanent policy of the Government. The last paragraph of the Admiralty states:

The Prime Minister of the Dominion having inquired in what form any immediate aid that Canada might give would be most effective, we have no hesitation in answering after a prolonged consideration of all the circumstances that it is desirable that such aid should include——

Mark this, Mr. Speaker:

—the provision of a certain number of the largest and strongest ships of war which science can build or money supply.

This paragraph states that what the Admiralty wants is a contribution of the largest and strongest ships of war that science can build or money supply. What does the word 'include' mean? I take it to mean that this is only the first instalment—the first contribution—and that we will later on have to make another contribution, either in men or money. The leader of the Nationalists, in an article in Le Devoir of February 6 last, interpreted this paragraph as intimating that before long England would be asking Canada for men to man her ships. The article reads, in part, as follows:

Let us take good notice of the word 'include.' If it is there, it is because Great Britain wants other things than battleships. Otherwise, the memorandum would have read such aid should consist in the provision of ships. Then what is the other part of the programme? Why did not the Admiralty say all what the aid from Canada should include?

The whole truth is that the British Government wants only equipped ships continues the writer, after mentioning lengthy opinions to that effect, that our dreadnoughts were accepted as a beginning or as a part of Canada's contribution. He says that the ministers are going to start slowly a campaign to induce the people to complete the gift by supplying the seamen.

The cost of the ships is only part of the programme. The other part, the essential one, is the recruitment of men, which is much more urgent, according to all the experts, than the construction of ships. How could Parliament decline to fulfil the most essential part of the programme after it will have established the principle that Canada wishes and must increase the naval forces of the Empire, and when the Imperial document on which the Canadian Cabinet bases its bill, warns the Canadian people that that first measure is but a part of the contribution.

During the last election the Nationalist candidates in the province of Quebec denounced the Laurier policy because it might have the effect of causing their children to serve on the ships, and some of these hon. gentlemen who voted for the resolution the other day were very strong in denouncing the Naval Act on this ground. What will they have to say at the next general election in order to meet the argument advanced in the interpretation of the last paragraph of the memorandum as meaning that this contribution is the first step in Canada's co-operation in naval defence, and that the next step will be a contribution of men? If there is any possibility of England's requiring from Canada a contribution of men to man her ships, would it not be preferable that we should have our own ships in this country, manned by Canadians, and that we should have such control of our navy as was proposed by the Naval Act passed in 1910? We have been told that it is impossible to have a Canadian navy because we cannot obtain a sufficient number of seamen to man the ships and that it was difficult to obtain then recruits for the Niobe and Rainbow. We all know why; it was because there was an expectation that the Naval Act would be repealed and so there was no encouragement to young men to enter the navy. Australia has made the experiment and we know that Australia has had no trouble in finding enough seamen to man her ships. The London Times, of January 25 of this year, has the following despatch from Sydney, New South Wales:

Mr. Pearce, Federal Minister for Defence, to-day declares that the naval position is eminently satisfactory. Recruits are being enrolled in good numbers and are taking kindly to the training. The only trouble is to provide sufficient accommodation for the splendid material which is coming forward. From the Admiralty, said Mr. Pearce, we have received enthusiastic assistance both in the loan of H.M. cruisers Encounter and Pioneer and in the loan of skilled officers and instructors. In fact the Admiralty has shown it is most willing in every possible way to help the infant navy's development.

I saw in the World newspaper the other day a despatch from Australia that they could not accept all the cadets who were offering for service in the Australian navy. I do not see why we would have any more trouble to recruit men in Canada, especially in the provinces by the sea. The Prime Minister said that this policy of contribution was presented as a token of the British tie and that we owed very much to England. I do not dispute that we owe much to England. We owe to England our protection in the past, and our protection today but I think that the Prime Minister exaggerates somewhat our indebtedness to England. Speaking on the 5th of December he said:

So far as the official estimates are available the expenditure of Great Britain in naval and military defence for the provinces which now constitute Canada, during the nineteenth century, was not less than $400,000,000. Even since the inception of our confederation, and since Canada has attained the status of a great Dominion, the amount so expended by Great Britain for the naval and military defence of Canada vastly exceeds the sum which we are now asking Parliament appropriate. From 1870 to 1890 the proportionate cost of North Atlantic squadrons which guarded our coasts was from $125,000,000 to $150,000,000. From 1853 to 1903 Great Britain's expenditure on military defence in Canada runs closely up to one hundred million dollars.

It is true that England has spent a large amount of money for our protection but the wars which she had with the United States were not of our own making. The wars of 1775 and 1812 were not of our making, we were not responsible for them, and in fact the war of 1812 was imposed on us by England, but it is too late at this stage to recriminate and I acknowledge that we owe a great deal to England, that we owe to her our protection. The argument that we do not owe anything to England comes not from the Opposition but from the Nationalists. Some members who sit on the Government side were very loud in their declarations during the Drummond and Arthabasca election and even in the last general election about our owing nothing to England. I was somewhat surprised to see the hon. member for Champlain the other night vote for a contribution, remembering that he said during the Drummond and Arthabasca election that the Canadian had to bore holes in the British flag to breath the air of liberty.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): He denied that.

Mr. PROULX: We depend on the British navy in the future for protection as in the past. We must depend on the British navy, or on the uncertain Munroe doctrine—I prefer to depend on the British navy, and there is no faction in this country who do not acknowledge that we have to depend on the British navy for our protection. This is the purpose and the policy of the Opposition, to strengthen this navy by building a Canadian navy, to provide for our own defence and to co-operate with the British navy in time of need. We are all anxious to strengthen the British navy and to maintain British supremacy, and none in Canada are more anxious for this than the French-speaking Canadians. We enjoy great liberties with respect to our language and to the practice of our religion. As the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) said the other day, we prize those liberties and we are anxious to keep them. It is true that there are some in Ontario who would like to do away with the French language, and who would prefer to have only one language. I was very much pleased at the beginning of the session to hear the hon member for West Peterboro (Mr. Burnham) champion the cause of the French language, because the French was the first language spoken in this country if we except the Indian languages. This country has been colonized by two great races, of which we are the descendants, and the two races have always been on a footing of equality. It is the aim, it is the wish, of the English-speaking and French-speaking people of this country to remain on a footing of equality. It was the aim of the fathers of Confederation, and it was the policy of our statesmen in the past, both Liberal and Conservative, and I was sorry the other night to hear my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Armsrtong) throwing insinuations and slurs at my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. He stated that the policy of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition had been to create racial prejudices in this country, to light the fires of racial feeling. My hon. friend from North York is very much mistaken, I am afraid he has gone to the wrong school, I am afraid he has taken too seriously the statements made by the hon. member for Frontenac. It has been the purpose of my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) since he has been in public life, to do his utmost to unite the two races in this country. He has devoted the best of his life to this task, and I think he has succeeded in a large degree. He has always said, as Sir John Macdonald said before him, that he wanted the two races to be equal in this country. No race should dominate over another; both should be equal. I think my hon. friend from North York, who prides himself on representing an historical county, which elected at one time the Hon. Mr. Lafontaine, should discard these prejudices, and go to a better school than he seems to have gone for some time. Some Conservative organs in the province of Ontario have tried for a few years to fan the flame of racial prejudice. They did it at the last general election, and they are doing it still, and my hon. friend from North York must have been influenced by reading the newspapers of Toronto. I hope that when he has passed a few years more in this House his ideas will be broadened.

Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to speak at any greater length. I voted the other day for the amendment proposed by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. I voted for a Canadian navy. The policy of the Opposition is based on the same principle as in 1910. We have not changed. The change has been on the other side. Our policy is just the same to-day as it was in 1910, and I think it is the policy of the Admiralty, the policy which the Admiralty would prefer if it had been offered to them instead of a contribution. I consider it is the best policy for Canada. We should have the interests of Canada at heart before anything else. We have a great country which is developing very fast. We need our revenues to develop our country, but, at the same time, I recognize that we must spend a certain amount for naval defence, as well as for land defence, to preserve our country from attack, and to allow our prosperity to increase. I am in favour of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). I think this is one of the greatest questions that has arisen since Confederation. In 1911, when the commercial arrangement was entered into between the representatives of Canada and the United States, the Conservatives who were then in opposition, wanted to appeal to the country before reciprocity was adopted. They wanted the country to pronounce upon it. This naval question is just as important as reciprocity, and the people have just as much right to give an opinion on this policy as they had on the reciprocity agreement. The Government may say that they have a mandate to enact this policy. As my hon. friend from Welland (Mr. German) proved the other night, they have no direct mandate. This contribution policy has never been a direct issue before the people. The Government are willing to appeal to the people on the question of a permanent policy. I maintain that this is a permanent policy; I maintain that it is the first instalment of their policy. We do not know what the rest of it may be. It may be a continuation of the contributions as my hon. friend from Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) seems to favour, or it may be a contribution of men the next time. At any rate, I maintain that the relations of Canada with the Empire will be changed, and that the people of this counryt should have an opportunity to approve or disapprove of the policy of the Government, and to approve or disapprove the policy of the Opposition. Some would prefer a plebiscite. I understand that some of the Nationalists would prefer a plebiscite, but I do not think there are many now, if we can judge from the vote given the other night when not one of them voted for an appeal to the people. But it is rumoured that an amendment will be proposed by one of them asking for a plebiscite. This Government does not seem to be enamoured of plebiscites, but suppose we had a plebiscite, I think the people would prefer to have in power a government who would be in favour of the policy which they introduce. If they prefer a Canadian navy, they would want a government in power who was in favour of a Canadian navy, and if they prefer the contribution, they would keep my hon. friends in power, because they are in favour of a contribution. So far as I am concerned, I propose to vote for the amendment proposed by my hon. friend from Assiniboia, and I hope that the Government will in the end consent to accept the policy as proposed in that amendment, and will appeal to the people.

On motion of Mr. W. S. Loggie (Northumberland, N.B.), the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, House adjourned at 12.35 a.m. Saturday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, February 24, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three o'clock.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 122, for the relief of Minnie Edna Brownell.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill No. 123, for the relief of Alfred Milton Durnan.—Mr. Oliver.

Mr. PROULX.

PRIVATE BILLS.

MANITOBA-ONTARIO RAILWAY COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 107, to incorporate the Manitoba-Ontario Railway Company.—Mr. Carrick.

On section 8—line of railway described:

Mr. LANCASTER: There have been several changes in this section, and I would like to read it, as amended in the Railway Committee, so that the House may know what the amendments are:

The company may lay out, construct, and operate a railway of the gauge of four feet and one-half inches, from a point on lake Superior in the city of Fort William, in the province of Ontario, thence by the most feasible route, to a point on the Lake of the Woods at or near Falcon island, thence across the Lake of the Woods to a point, by the most feasible route, in or near the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, together with a branch line, from a point on the main line of the said railway at or near White Fish lake, southwesterly to a point on the international boundary between the province of Ontario and the state of Minnesota, at or near Gun Flint lake, and also a branch line, from a point on the main line of the said railway, at or near Manitou lake, thence northerly to a point at or near Dryden, thence northerly to a point on the National Transcontinental railway within the district of Kenora.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

PATENT OF HON. AMBROSE D. RICHARD.

House in Committee on Bill No. 100, respecting a patent of the Hon. Ambrose D. Richard.—Mr. Fowler.

On section 1—extension of time for payment of fees:

Mr. NESBITT: Would somebody tell us why this patent was allowed to expire, and why they want it extended?

Mr. ROGERS: The father of the Bill does not appear to be in his seat. If my hon. friend has any special objection, we will be glad to allow the Bill to stand.

Mr. CROCKET: This patent expired simply for non-payment of fees. through an oversight. There had been only one default and the application was made very shortly after the expiration of the first six years. The Deputy Minister of Agriculture, who was before the committee, said that there was no objection to the committee passing the Bill.

Mr. MACDONALD: What is the patent for?

Mr. CROCKET: A composition of paint.

Mr. NESBITT: I have no special objection except my disapproval of this method of renewing patents. It is generally understood that whoever applies for a renewal of a patent will give us some good reason why the application should be granted. I do not think that any person should expect the House to renew a patent if he does not take enough interest in it to come to the House and explain why he wants the renewal. If an individual is too careless to look after a patent in the proper way I do not see why we should interfere. There is a clause in the Bill protecting those who have started to use the article, whatever it may be. When patents are allowed to lapse I have never thought that we should renew them without a very good reason being given for doing so. Here we are asked to renew a patent and the promoter of the Bill does not take enough interest in it to come to the House and explain why it should be renewed.

Mr. ROGERS: In order that there may be no misunderstanding, I would like to say that my hon. friend from Kings and Albert (Mr. Fowler), who is in charge of this Bill, has been quite ill for a month; otherwise I am quite sure he would be in his place. I am convinced that he would not have asked this House to renew this patent unless he had good reasons for doing so.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suppose that the Minister of Agriculture, who is in charge of these patents, will have to be responsible for this Bill. It is in his department that the matter rests. If he wishes to take full responsibility in the absence of the member I have no objection, but I think that as head of the department he ought to do so.

Mr. BURRELL: With respect to this particular Bill, I would say that, if there is no justification why the House should allow this Bill to slip through, there is no justification for passing any patent Bill. While I quite understand the objection raised to the renewal of a patent in the absence of the member in charge of the Bill, yet, during the last six or seven years, something like thirty-four Bills have been put through and I think I can fairly say that the majority of them have been passed with perhaps less justification than there is for this Bill. I raise no particular objection to this Bill because it was a sheer matter of inadvertence on the part of the attorneys who had the matter in charge when the last payments were due. There are, with regard to many other patent Bills, considerable grounds for objection, but in this case I do not see why I should take a stand against this Bill unless a much stronger objection is raised than the absence of the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the Bill.

Mr. NESBITT: There has been no ground stated why this Bill should be passed. As the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Burrell) says, there probably have been Bills passed when there were stronger reasons than exist in this case why they should not be passed, but certainly none have been passed with less reason given than in this instance. In fact, no reason at all has been given.

Mr. ROGERS: You must bear in mind that the committee gave consideration to the application for this Bill and unanimously decided in its favour. It must have had some information on the subject.

Mr. NESBITT: Then, the chairman of the committee ought to be here.

Mr CROCKET: I have already stated that this was simply an oversight on the part of the attorneys and the committee, as they have, as with practically every other application of this kind, decided to report the Bill on that ground. Had these fees been paid the patent would still be alive. The payment having been overdue simply as the result of an oversight, they decided to report the Bill to the House. No one can possibly be hurt because the usual saving clause in it. There can be no objection to passing this Bill in view of the fact that the House has time and again passed Bills where there has been less justification for the failure to pay the fees than in this case.

Mr. MURPHY: Would the hon. gentleman say if the department was represented before the committee and if so what position the department took?

Mr. CROCKET: The Deputy Minister of Agriculture stated that if any Bill should pass the committee because of an oversight it was this one. The application was made very shortly after the lapse of the six years.

Bill reported, read the third time, and passed.

CANADIAN ACCOUNTANTS' ASSOCIATION.

On section 2—objects and powers.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I would like to get the opinion of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Doherty). I happened to be at the Private Bills Committee the other day when this question came up and as it has reference to education I thought that this Parliament had no right to legislate on the matter. There was a very long discussion and my view was shared by several members of the committee.

Mr. DOHERTY: The hon. gentleman says that this is a matter of education; but, while the Bill contains a provision for holding examinations, I cannot, beyond that, find any reference in it to education.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Under clause 2 the incorporators are empowered to hold such examinations as may be found expedient; to grant certificates of efficiency to its members; to establish classes of membership; to determine the rights, privileges, terms and conditions of said classes; is not that interfering with education?

Mr. CROCKET: My hon. friend has not the reprinted Bill. The provisions (c) and (d) with regard to establishing classes of membership and determining the rights, privileges, terms and conditions of such classes, have been stricken from the Bill.

Mr. LEMIEUX: The Bill still effects education and does not in my opinion come within the purview of this Parliament. I would like to get the opinion of the Minister of Justice on it before taking any decided stand one way or the other.

Mr. DOHERTY: As I understand it the Bill does not make any provision with regard to education or training; it fixed a standard of efficiency with regard to the practice of the profession of accountant, and provides that this association may examine people, and if the result of the examination be satisfactory may issue a certificate of efficiency. In other words they do not deal with the education of anybody but they, so to speak, take the finished product, the educated man who presents himself and after examining him they may give him a certificate of efficiency as being in their judgment fit to be an accountant.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It looks to me as if there was an encroachment on provincial jurisdiction. The Minister of Justice will remember that when Dr. Roddick was a member of this House, he introduced a Bill to standardize the medical course in Canada, and he created a Canadian council, which, to the best of my recollection, could give diplomas to doctors, provided they passed certain examinations under a Canadian board. But there was a clause inserted in that Bill saying it should come into effect in a province only when the legislature of that province accepted the Dominion legislation.

Mr. CROCKET: Clause 11 of the reprinted Bill provides:

Nothing in this Act shall be constructed to interfere with or impair legislation upon the subject of accountancy now or hereafter enacted by legislative authority of any province of Canada, or as giving to members of the association the right to use any name, title, initial or description as accountants in contravention thereof.

The committee thought that would remove any possibility of conflict between the federal and provincial authorities.

Mr. LEMIEUX: That does not remove the objection. It takes for granted that this Parliament has the right to give the association the privilege of issuing certificates after a certain standard of examination has been adopted. I have nothing against the promoters of the Bill, but I am afraid the legislation is not within our jurisdiction. Perhaps it might be better to allow the Bill to stand so as to get from the Minister of Justice a more elaborate opinion than he has had an opportunity of giving this afternoon.

Mr. DOHERTY: I did not of course pretend to give any elaborate opinion, and it might be that after I studied the question further my opinion would not be elaborate. I have difficulty in seeing any force in the objection, that the Bill, on its face, deals with education.

Mr. LEMIEUX: It is not higher education.

Mr. DOHERTY: I do not see that it touches education proper at all. We are incorporating an association and we are authorizing that association to determine what shall be the qualifications for membership in the association; that is all. The difference between this Bill and the Roddick Bill, if I remember, is that the Roddick Bill provided conditions upon fulfilment of which a person would be entitled to practice the profession of medicine in each and all of the provinces. There is an entire absence of such a provision in this Bill. In the Bill the hon. member has referred to, this Parliament was trenching on the rights of the province, in undertaking to determine who should practice medicine within the province. In this case there is no condition as to practicing the profession of accountancy; a man may be an accountant without ever passing this examination, and the only thing we regulate is membership in this particular association of accountants. We merely authorize the members of this association to say what shall be the qualifications for membership in their association. Although I am not prepared to elaborate the question, I am quite satisfied that the legislation does not trench upon the field of provincial legislation in any way. There is nothing beyond the question of who shall be a member of this association.

Mr. EMMERSON: In this Bill, I see a tendency to centralization which is ob-servable in a great deal of our legislation. The Minister of Justice has said that this Bill does not and would not interfere with provincial legislation along the same lines. In effect it does. So far as this Parliament is concerned, we are frequently passing statutes and Acts having relation to aduiting and the action to be taken by chartered accountants. The provincial Parliaments have in the past incorporated associations of this kind. There is one in each province; I presume there is one in Ontario and indeed similar associations in all the provinces. What is the object of this incorporation? Is it not rather for the purpose of having control in any statute which we pass in this Parliament, where there is a reference to a chartered accountant? Would that be a chartered accountant under the laws of a province or under the laws of the Dominion? Naturally, if there were no qualifying terms, where we had an Act of this character on the statute-book, it would mean a chartered accountant under the laws of the Dominion. In that case it becomes an interference with respect to chartered accountants, who may belong to some associations having provincial authority, but who do not belong to this association; and to that extent their rights are interfered with by this Parliament. We may have the power, which I very much doubt and do not think it was ever contemplated that we should interfere in this regard with the different provincial incorporations.

Mr. DOHERTY: The only privilege a man gets by joining this association is that he becomes a member of it. These gentlemen want to join this association in order to promote efficiency in accountancy; they desire to form an association of people who come up to their standard for that purpose. With regard to any possible interference, the Bill does not propose to give these people any particular status in the profession of accountancy. In the first place, this Bill by its last section specifically provides that it shall not interfere with or over-ride any legislation of the provinces enacted or to be enacted, so that I think more than ordinary care has been taken to guard against any such interference. You will further notice that same section prohibits the members of the association from using any name, title, initial or description as accountants in contravention of any provincial legislation. Therefore the provinces will remain in entire control of what names chartered accountants may take; and no member of this association will be entitled to call himself a chartered accountant in violation of any law of any province, or to give himself any title or description in violation of any such provincial law.

Mr. PERLEY: Perhaps I might explain this Bill as it was explained in Committee. In the first place, we have in Canada provincial associations of chartered accountants in every province except the provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. My hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) was mistaken in saying that there was a provincial association in New Brunswick.

Mr. EMMERSON: It came before the Legislature on one occasion, whether that association was formed or not.

Mr. PERLEY: There is also, under an Act passed in 1902, a Dominion association of chartered accountants, which is practically an affiliation of the provincial associations. No man can become a chartered accountant under the Dominion association unless he first becomes a member of one of the provincial associations; ipso facto he becomes a member of the Dominion association of chartered accountants. The gentlemen who are applying for this legislation are not chartered accountants. They are salaried employees, residing chiefly in Montreal, and are auditors or accountants of some of the large companies such as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company. I think the names of two or three large commercial firms were mentioned as having some of these gentlemen in their employ. They are gentlemen of long experience and receiving large salaries; they have an unincorporated society at present under this same name. These gentlemen, who are working under salaries, would like to be incorporated by this Parliament in order that they may take in men of the same standing all over Canada. It is true the question was raised in the Committee that this was a provincial matter and that they should have gone to the provincial legislature for their remedy. The chartered accountants appeared before the Committee and opposed this legislation as it was originally introduced. The Government suggested that the chartered accountants and the applicants for this legislation should endeavour to come to some arrangement. They did so, and the result is a reprinted Bill which has been agreed to by the chartered accountants. Under this Bill these gentlemen have no power except to decide who will become members of this association. The committee provided in section 11 for absolute protection of provincial rights in this matter, namely:

Nothing in this Act shall be constructed to interfere with or impair legislation upon the subject of accountancy now or hereafter enacted by legislative authority of any province of Canada.

These gentlemen are not allowed to use the name chartered accountant or any initial such as chartered accountants use, and the use of which is by provincial statutes limited to chartered accountants. If the provincial legislatures wish to alter legislation in this respect at any time, they may do so. I do not wish to take any particular stand one way or the other regarding this Bill. As it is at present redrafted, I do not see how it can hurt anyone. If this Parliament passes legislation providing for auditing by chartered accountants, the persons asking for this legislation would not be empowered to use that name or do that work. If there is any objection to this Bill, it had better stand over for a time, until the members of the House have an opportunity to digest it. It seems to me to be innocuous, and I cannot see that, as it stands at present, it can injure anyone. These gentlemen are anxious to obtain the legislation, and I see no particular reason why it should not be granted, but, under the circumstances, I would suggest that the matter stand over for further consideration.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have no objection to the Bill, nor to the gentlemen asking for this legislation. I know nearly all of them, and am quite sure that they mean well; but it seems to me that we cannot ignore clause 2:

> The object and powers of the association shall be to fix standards of skill and competency and thereby promote efficiency in accountants, and for the said purpose the association may—
>
> (a) hold such examinations as are found expedient; and
>
> (b) grant certificates of efficiency to persons who have passed such examinations.

I know that certain other bodies have similar powers, but they come under the purview of the provincial legislatures.

Mr. PERLEY: Does not my hon. friend think that clause 11 remedies that difficulty, and leaves the matter entirely in the hands of the provinces? It was for that purpose that clause 11 was added by the committee to the Bill?

Mr. EMMERSON: It seems a remarkable procedure, when four or five gentlemen from Montreal wished to create themselves into an association for the purpose of fixing a standard throughout the Dominion, that in the Bill proposing the legislation there should be a section which my hon. friend claims would entirely do away with the powers contained in section 2.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): What this Bill purposes to enact is to create a corporation composed of four gentlemen residing in Montreal, in the province of Quebec, and, as such, it seems to me that it is purely provincial legislation, and should not be passed by this Parliament. I would like the Minister of Justice to say whether or not this Parliament should create a corporation for purely provincial purposes, composed of four or five persons residing in one province only?

Mr. MURPHY: One of the objections urged against this Bill by the hon member for Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) was that the legislation was being sought by a number of gentlemen who are not themselves chartered accountants, and that there already exists a body known as the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants. If that is the fact, it does seem to be anomalous—and I direct this to the attention of the Minister of Justice—that a body of men who are not themselves chartered accountants, and all resident in Montreal, should be given authority to fix a standard of accountancy throughout the Dominion. I understand that to be one of the chief objections of the members of the Dominion Association who are opposing the passage of this Bill. These circumstances, and the additional fact that there is already a Dominion body and that another should not be created with co-ordinate jurisdiction, may have been considered and disposed of by the committee, but I would like the Minister of Justice to have these in mind when giving his opinion.

Mr. PERLEY: I may say that representatives of the Dominion Chartered Accountants came here to oppose the Bill as originally printed, and the reprint was made as the result of an arrangement between the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants and the gentlemen who have asked for this legislation. When that was done, the committee thought, if the chartered accountants considered themselves protected by this legislation, that there was no reason why it should not be granted.

Mr. LEMIEUX: If this matter did not vitally affect provincial rights, certainly no great objection could be raised as against the arrangement arrived at between the parties, but, if the evil exists, is it not better to cure it now?

Mr. DOHERTY: I have not the slightest objection to allowing the Bill to stand over. Referring to the remarks of the hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett), I may say that there cannot, of course, be the slightest doubt that this Parliament cannot incorporate an association having purely provincial objects, but I do not think that it follows because persons asking incorporation all live in one province or one city, that the objects of that corporation are purely provincial. I think we can safely put aside consideration of the fact that these gentlemen all live in Montreal. The whole question resolves itself into a consideration of the objects of this corporation. As I understand it, this Parliament has under the British North America Act full powers of incorporation, save in so far as exclusive power is given to the provinces to incorporate companies with provincial objects. So long as it is not shown to us that the object of this corporation is purely provincial, I take it that we have the power to incorporate it. One of the grounds upon which it is claimed that the purpose of this corporation is provincial is that it deals with education, and if I follow the hon. member for Calgary, he suggests that its purpose is merely to carry on its operations within the province.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): It is given merely a corporate existence within the province, and the legislation is, therefore, purely provincial.

Mr. DOHERTY: If they get the corporate existence under this charter they will have power to extend their operations, wherever any of their members may live, throughout the Dominion. I do not quite grasp the objection made by the hon. member for Calgary in that regard. If they have power to carry out their operations throughout the Dominion and they will have that power if we incorporate them—I do not think it would follow, merely because they did not at once proceed to exercise that power in more than one province that we could not incorporate them.

Mr. EMMERSON: If the provincial legislatures have the power to fix a standard of efficiency within the province, and if this Bill does not propose to interfere with any provincial legislation in that regard, why are we asked to authorize the company to fix standards of skill and competency throughout the Dominion?

Mr. DOHERTY: The only standard of skill or competency it has power to fix is the standard of skill or competency required of a member of the association.

Mr. EMMERSON: That is provincial, then?

Mr. DOHERTY: If the association has for its object the carrying out of its purpose throughout the Dominion, then, subject always to the suggestion that this is an educational matter, their object would not be purely provincial.

Mr. EMMERSON: Indirectly it certainly is educational.

Mr. DOHERTY: I have explained my views on that subject. I quite recognize that such eminent members of the profession as the two gentlemen who sit opposite are just as fully entitled to express an opinion on this subject as I am, and that this House is as free to accept their opinion as mine. I have expressed these opinions only because I was asked to do so, not because I claim any particular authority to speak ex cathedra on this subject. With regard to the fixing of the standard, they do not pretend to fix any standard except for membership in the association. However, as it has been requested that the Bill should stand over I shall be very pleased to have it carefully examined.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I need not say that I would always accept the opinion of the Minister of Justice as against my own and I hope he will not think that I would not accept his view because I asked for the postponement of the examination of this Bill; when the hon. minister has looked more accurately into it he may change his view.

Mr. DOHERTY: As long as we live we may change our minds.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN MEDICAL PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

House in Committee on Bill No. 89, to incorporate the Canadian Medical Protective Association.—Mr. Chabot. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

Mr. BURNHAM: There seems to be a great deal of objection to this Bill in its present form. Amongst others, Mr. Hamilton Cassels, of Toronto, the well known lawyer, objects to it as an infringement of provincial rights, although he is not representing the provincial Government. He also says that it interferes with individual rights, and that it does not define the fact that it applies only to members of the association. Generally, the Bills seems to be badly drawn. The promoter says he does not mind adding a provision that it refers to the members of the association incorporated. If he does that, I have no further reason to oppose the Bill.

Mr. CHABOT: I am quite prepared to add that it relates only to the members of the Canadian Medical Protective Association, it does not profess to refer to the homœopathists or the osteopathists or even the Christian Scientists.

Mr. EMMERSON: Section 2 of this Bill is very objectionable legislation. It is practically along the same lines as the Bill we have been discussing, having as its aim and object the interference with a provincial matter. It is another example of the tendency of which I spoke a few moments ago, towards centralizing power in the Dominion Parliament. This is evidently an association formed to fight matters that may arise in the provinces. We are incorporating a body that will be widespread in its membership; every member of this association has to contribute annually certain sums of money which is to be used in litigation in the several provinces with respect to what may be considered unauthorized medical practice. Unauthorized practice covers a large field.

There are certain schools of medicine, certain modes of relief and cure of disease and it is claimed, at least in some provinces, that a great deal more liberty should be given to the patient in the selection of his method of cure than is permitted even under the provincial enactments. This is a Dominion incorporation, apparently having as its aim and object the contestations that may arise in connection with provincial legislation in the matter of medical practice. I do not think we should give power to any corporation having that end in view. Then by section 4 the existing by-laws, rules and regulations of the unincorporated society are made the constitution, by-laws and rules of the association, in so far as they are not contrary to law. Such legislation is absolutely improper in its mode, by it we are making a plunge in the dark, and are incorporating in a Dominion law certain rules and resolutions which have been passed by some society at its meetings.

Mr. CROCKET: Is it making any more of a plunge in the dark than to authorize the association to pass whatever by-laws they want to?

Mr. EMMERSON: Certainly. This is making it a constitution; the constitution of an incorporated society is the legislation creating it. The by-laws are entirely different; they relate to the internal management of the society, which has rightly the power to pass by-laws for its internal management. If we adopt the fourth section we furnish the machinery for the carrying out of subsection (b), of section two, which is:

> To encourage honourable practice and assist in the suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practice.

I think that under the provincial statutes which the medical profession have and which are monopolies of the most extreme character, they have sufficient power to do everything that they would wish to do and, indeed, many people throughout the country think they have arbitrary powers now, powers that are used many times not for the benefit of the patient but of the profession, and if, by this Act, we form a great body which extends from one end of the Dominion to the other and provide methods whereby that body can take action in any province with respect to complaints as to offences against the particular enactments of the respective provinces, we may cause a great deal of trouble. In New Brunswick we have had struggles with respect to osteopathic treatment. I am not competent to discuss the question but I do know that there are thousands in New Brunswick who think that that is the treatment they should have and that they and their friends are benefited by that treatment. They ask and claim the right to have the benefit of that treatment. Here you are creating a great corporate body from one end of the Dominion to the other in its membership, and the members are compelled, under the constitution and by-laws of the incorporated society, to contribute varying amounts to a central fund. I submit that there is a proposed and intentional interference in this Bill with the rights of the subjects in the respective provinces with regard to their medical attendance. I think this legislation is dangerous. It is legislation against the interests of the mass of the people, and is the creation of a monopolistic corporation, which can throw out its powers to-day in one province, and to-morrow in another, covering the whole of the provinces of the whole Dominion, as against the rights of the individual in the matter of the selection of his method of cure and treatment in the case of disease. I think that the fears expressed by the gentlemen who made representations to my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) were well founded. I had not turned my attention to the Bill at all until I had placed in my hands the constitution and by-laws, or report of the Canadian Medical Protective Association, and until I had had an opportunity of reading that report I had no idea of what the aims and objects of this association were. It seems to me that the legislation is dangerous, and that it should not be permitted to interfere with the legislation that is being enacted yearly throughout the different provinces.

Mr. HENDERSON: When I presented a petition a week ago from a number of my constituents asking me to oppose this Bill, I confess I was not at all familiar with its character or objects. Since then, having asked that the Bill stand over for a week and the committee having consented, I have communicated with some of those petitioners, and ascertained more definitely what their objection was. The objection which they pointed out to me is mainly what has been referred to by the hon. member for Westmorland. They are in favour of the practice of osteopathy. Now I confess I am not familiar with that mode of treatment for the purpose of curing diseases. It may be a good thing; I do not doubt that it is. I obtained from a medical work a few days ago a definition of that practice. It reads thus:

> Osteopathy is the science and art of healing and curing diseases without the use of knife or drug.

Well, if any class of people desire to be treated in that way, I am sure I am quite willing that they should be relieved of having to submit to the knife, or of having drugs administered. They say that—this is their theory—

An osteopath regards the body as a wonderful mechanism, and treats it as an intelligent machinist would treat a complicated machine with which he was practically familiar.

They say further, that Disease is regarded as simply disorders. To restore the health the disordered parts must be corrected. Osteopathy believes the giving of drugs for the cure of human ills to be unscientific.

I do not agree with that; however, that is their theory.

The treatment for the cure of disease,—

They say,

—is by manipulation. By exciting the nerves, they cause the muscles to contract and compress a venous flow of blood from the heart. The bones may be used as levers to relieve pressure on the nerves, veins and arteries. The patient is examined from the physical standpoint. In the eyes of the osteopath he is a machine out of order. By his knowledge of the details of a human machine when in health, the osteopath feels able to detect the disorders that are present in the disease. The object of treatment is to aid nature in establishing the normal activities of the diseased parts. The mode of treatment is a scientific manipulation, by which the dislocation is reduced, and the disorder relieved.

Now there are people in the province of Ontario—I believe many of them—in the small county that I have the honour to represent, in one small section of it, there are a number who protest very strongly against the provisions of this Bill, which are apparently directed against the practice of that mode of treatment. I take strong exception to the use of the words contained in clause 2 of the Bill, subsection (b) which gives to this society the power to assist in the suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practices. The words which my constituents take exception to are more particularly 'the prosecution of unauthorized practices.' I understand that this mode of treatment, osteopathy, is an unauthorized practice. I am not aware that it is authorized by the Medical Council of the province of Ontario. I am led to believe that it is not an authorized practice, and consequently, if this Bill passes in its present form it will be a direct blow at those people who practise that mode of healing. My constituents say they are being interfered with, if they are not to be permitted to employ the means of healing which they think is a proper thing; hence my objections to the Bill. There are other clauses of the Bill to which I object. I think it is a very large power to place in the hands of this incorporated body.

Mr. EDWARDS: Do I understand the hon. member to say that he thinks that, if any persons considered that they should treat any disease without drugs, they should be privileged to use their own judgment in the matter entirely?

Mr. HENDERSON: I am not saying whether the theory of those people is a correct theory or not. But I do say that there are many people who believe in this system of treatment, and who do not want to be prevented from having any diseases that may afflict them treated in that way. Permit me to say that a few days ago, without knowing that this Bill was before the House, or the nature of it, I was informed that a medical doctor in the city of Toronto of very high standing—and I say this on very excellent authority—failed to cure his own wife of a malady to which she was subject. He then applied to one of those people practising osteopathy, who brought about a cure to his satisfaction, and he was remonstrated with afterwards by his brother practitioners. He did not think it was fair, and it shows the extent to which people would go if this Bill became law. It shows how individual rights would be interfered with, when a medical man himself is remonstrated with because, after practising on the members of his own family, and having failed to bring about a cure, he succeeded in having that brought about by one practising another mode of healing which I understand is not regarded as being authorized. I think some change should be made in that section. I am not going to suggest the change; I do not feel competent to amend this Bill in a way that would meet the general wish of the people or the wish of those who believe in practising this particular mode of healing. I leave it with the promoters of the Bill to make it satisfactory to the people and to do that I think they would be obliged to strike out the whole clause. There are other sections of the Bill to which I would take objection. I do not like the idea of some eight hundred persons—I am told that is about the number that belong to this unincorporated society—being given these powers. Not only the eight persons named in the first section as incorporators are endowed with these powers but it states that all other members of the present unincorporated society, known as the Canadian Medical Protective Association, shall be members of this corporation. I do not take any exception to those who are named as incorporators, but it seems an extraordinary thing to include as incorporators about eight hundred people of whom we know nothing whatever. I doubt if even the hon. gentleman for Westmorland, who has been provided with a copy of the constitution, knows who these eight hundred people are. I object to other clauses as well. I think they are altogether too drastic. I decidedly object to clause four which says:

Until altered or repealed by the association in general meeting, the existing constitution, by-laws and rules of the said unincorporated society, as adopted in August, one thousand nine hundred and one, and amended from time to time subsequent thereto, in so far as they are not contrary to law or to the provisions of this Act, shall be the constitution, by-laws and rules of the association.

What do we know about these by-laws, rules and regulations? The hon. member for Westmorland has been furnished, perhaps within the last hour or two, with a copy of these but he has not had time, I am quite sure, to digest them and no other member of the House has had an opportunity to really consider what these by-laws, rules and constitution are. Consequently, I think it is unfair to ask this House to incorporate a clause like that in this Bill. I do not think that it is the practice of the House. I am not aware of any legislation of that character having gone through the House and I think we should be extremely careful to know just what we are doing before we adopt a Bill containing such a drastic clause. Clause 5 also says that the present officers shall be the officers of the association. Who are they? I confess I do not know. I think we ought to know something of them. The Bill also provides that they shall have:

All powers and authorities at present vested in them by the said existing constitution, by-laws and rules of the said unincorporated society, until replaced by others in accordance with the constitution, by-laws and regulations of the association.

I point these out as objectionable features. I hardly like any clauses in the Bill. The petition that comes to me asks me to oppose the Bill and I am going to oppose it from beginning to end. I think that is the proper way to treat it because, were I to attempt to amend it, I might make it worse and, Heaven knows, it is bad enough already. Too much power is placed in the hands of these people more particularly in matters such as I have made reference to. Surely we can leave something to the people; surely we can leave them some choice. If a man, or if a member of his family, is ill, surely we are not going to dictate to him exactly what kind of treatment he is going to have administered to himself, or to his wife, or children.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: If we pass this Bill he will still have that choice.

Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. HENDERSON: I would like to know what is the meaning of this provision vesting in the association the power of prosecution with reference to unauthorized practice. I do not understand osteopathy to be authorized by the Medical Council of Ontario. If I understand correctly that is not authorized practice and consequently any man, either in Ottawa, Toronto or elsewhere, may be punished for engaging in this unauthorized practice. That danger immediately arises if this Bill passes. There is no danger as long as we do not pass the Bill. I think it is our duty to protect the people and not pass the Bill. I therefore express my strong opinion against the Bill and declare that I intend to oppose every clause of it.

Mr. EMMERSON: I want to invite the attention of the committee to just what is proposed to be done. We are proposing to incorporate this Bill in the Statutes of Canada without knowing what is contained therein and I therefore propose to read the following as a declaration of that which we would make a part of the statutes if we were to accept section four of the Bill:

We believe it to be in the interest of the medical profession of Canada that an association should be formed by this body for the protection of such members of the medical profession as may become members of this association, and who may be unjustly prosecuted for malpractice. The object of this association is to protect its members from prosecution where such action appears to our counsel and solicitor, as well as the committee in charge, to be unjust, harassing or frivolous.

2. That this association may be formed under the name and style of the Canadian Medical Protective Association.

3. The officers shall consist of a president, a vice-president, a secretary-treasurer, and a solicitor. These officers shall hold office for one year.

Then the constitution provides for the payment of money into the treasury and it also provides machinery whereby an action for malpractice against any member of this association shall be taken hold of by the corporation, and handled anywhere within the Dominion; it may be in the Yukon, or it may be in the province of Nova Scotia. An action of this kind is brought on behalf of somebody against a physician on the ground that he feels he has been unjustly treated and the whole army of this corporation from one end of the country to the other is brought into action to fight the one poor individual who may claim to have a grievance with respect to the treatment he has received. This may be all right for the members of the medical profession who belong to this association but I hold that it is trifling with this Parliament to have a Bill brought before it with all these provisions hidden within the lines and not exposed to the view of the House or of the country. I do not want to use extravagant language, but I do hold that this is the most iniquitous Bill that has been presented to Parliament in my time.

An hon. MEMBER: Oh.

Mr. EMMERSON: My hon. friend may laugh, but I am viewing it from the standpoint of the people. If these gentlemen want any special privilege why do they not go to the provincial legislatures? They come to this Parliament and ask with the main object of creating themselves a monopoly. It is treating this Parliament with want of proper respect to ask us to write into this statute the different things they ask. If you want to create combines to protect individual members of a profession in the matter of litigation, let them go to the provinces that created the medical associations. My hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) has well said this legislation is designed for the purpose of placing each individual in this Dominion at a disadvantage in relation to his medical adviser. The legislation is wrong from the standpoint of the Dominion, wrong from the standpoint of provincial rights, wrong from the standpoint of justice to the individual. I do not wish my remarks to be considered as reflecting upon the medical profession, but I do think that they should not come here to claim rights which other classes in the community do not claim. They have no right to ask this Parliament to place them in a position where they can as one body combine from ocean to ocean to fight an individual in the courts.

Mr. HAZEN: I think my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) as well as my hon. friend from Halton (Mr. Henderson) have discussed this question from an entirely mistaken idea as to what this Bill means. So far as I can gather from the Bill, it is not aimed at any particular class in this community who carry on the practice of healing the sick in a way that is not approved of by what may be called the old line school of physicians. If you read this Bill from cover to cover you cannot find one single sentence that would lead one to suppose that the position of the osteopath or the homeopath or the practitioner of any other school would be any different after the Bill is passed from what it is now. The law which regulates the practice of medicine is provided for by statutes in the different provinces, and this Bill does not purport to change that in any way. If I thought for a moment that this Bill would have the effect of preventing the osteopath from practising in this country I would vote against it. I have had considerable experience in connection with osteopaths having on two occasions acted as counsel defending an osteopath in New Brunswick against whom charges were brought by the medical council of New Brunswick for practising medicine in violation of New Brunswick Medical Act. On both occasions the court held and held properly that he was not practising medicine within the provisions of the New Brunswick Act. I am well aware that the osteopaths are to-day, in the United States particularly, recognized by the physicians who belong to the allopathic school, and I was told by a gentleman in Boston who is a very eminent surgeon, an osteopoedic specialist, that he did not hesitate to consult with osteopaths in the course of his practice, and that he had found it beneficial to do so. I would not vote for this measure if I thought for a moment it would in any way make it more difficult for the osteopath to practice his profession than it is at present; but my hon. friend from Halton and my hon. friend from Westmorland are entirely in error in reading into this Bill something which is not there. It appears that there is existing an association composed of a number of gentlemen called the Canadian Medicial Protective Association, which as the name implies, is for the protection of the medical profession in Canada. There is no reason in the world why these gentlemen as they are to-day, cannot, as medical societies do in the different provinces, take action if they choose against any person who is not practising medicine in accordance with the laws of the province in which he resides. But time and time again associations that have originally been voluntary find that it is more satisfactory to carry on their work if they obtain a charter and become a legal entity, and therefore these gentlemen have come to this Parliament, and have said: we have hitherto been carrying on this as a voluntary association and we ask to be incorporated so that we will have the same rights as other incorporated companies. I cannot see any objection to that. If we deny a charter to these gentlemen I believe we will do something that is improper and I think we should not be stampeded into such action by arguments which have no real foundation. There is not a line in the Bill which makes it more difficult for the osteopath to practice his profession in Canada after the Bill is passed than at present. My hon. friend (Mr. Emmerson) has called attention to section 4, which states:

> The constitution, bylaws and rules of the society as adopted in August, 1901, and amended from time to time subsequently, in so far as they are not contrary to law——

I ask the committee to hear these words:

—in so far as they are not contrary to law or the provisions of this Act shall be the constitution, bylaws and rules of the association.

It seems to me that that clause in the Bill is largely innocuous. Very like chips in porridge, it does neither good nor harm. All that it means is that until new by-laws or rules are adopted, the by-laws and rules of the society at present in force shall continue. If the clause is not in this Bill —I do not think it is of any importance whether it is or not—all that the members of the society would have to do after its incorporation would be to meet together and pass the same by-laws and the same rules as they had before, providing that they are not contrary to law or to the provisions of this Act. If any of those by-laws at the present time are contrary to law or to the provisions of this Act, even if section 4 is passed, those by-laws and rules would not apply, because of the express provision contained in section 4 that they should not apply. I myself would oppose as strongly as any member any Bill that would alter the statute so as to make it more difficult for a man to carry on his practice. I can read nothing of that sort in this Bill. I think it would be an injustice to the gentlemen who are asking for incorporation not to give it to them, because we have given incorporation under similar circumstances to many others in this country.

Mr. CHABOT: I must confess my admiration for the solicitude and devotion of the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Henderson) relative to the mental anxiety and the physical welfare of some of his very anxious, cautious, and apprehensive constituents, and also my admiration for the unlimited confidence which the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) seems to possess in regard to the honesty, integrity and good intentions of medical men as a rule, and for his serious apprehension in regard to matters which really do not exist, and have no relation whatever to the Canadian Medical Protective Association, or to the Bill under consideration. In my opinion these hon. gentlemen are labouring under a misapprehension. They do not seem to understand or to properly interpret the meaning or the intention of the Bill, nor to fully understand its objects. Some time ago, when I introduced this measure, I attempted to explain some of the aims and objects of the association. I mentioned that it was intended to encourage honourable practice, to protect, to advise and to assist its members against injustice and unfair proceedings, against blackmail, and also to protect the interests of the members themselves—and this refers only to members of the society—without any desire on their part to interfere with or to encroach or infringe upon the rights of any other school, whether it be homœopathic, osteopathic or Christian Science. Let me remind hon. gentlemen that the education and practice of medicine are regulated by various provincial Acts, while the code of medical ethics, conducive to the welfare of our profession, which maintains its dignity and its standing, and which determines its professional conduct, is quite conventional and is carried into effect by the members themselves. I think the same applies to other professional bodies and even to commercial bodies. Under those conditions, inasmuch as this society has been in existence for twelve years and has been doing good work in so far as its own members are concerned, as the policy of the Canadian Medical Protective Association is essentially one of fraternity and protection, and not one of aggression or interference, as the gentlemen who are asking for incorporation are gentlemen, in my opinion, of repute, honourable gentlemen, and because this society is identical with the British Medical Protective Union, which is incorporated in the Old Country, it seems to me that there is no reason for any undue anxiety for hon. members' minds to be perturbed to the extent of drawing wrong conclusions, and making a great deal out of little, and that this Bill should be allowed to go through inasmuch as it is intended to protect men, who are working in the best interest of the people without any desire to interfere with or to encroach upon the rights of others, and who are certainly, in my opinion, rendering valuable services to the people of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. STEVENS: I have received very extensive representations in regard to this Bill from some of my constituents. I have a very deep admiration for and a very high opinion of practically all the members of the medical profession with whom I am acquainted. The question of the various schools of medicine is largely a question of opinion. I have some suggestions to make which, if the promoter will take them into consideration, would probably overcome the difficulties in connection with this Bill. In so far as the Bill provides for the mutual benefit and protection of the association named, I cannot see any objection to it except possibly one, which is this: The committee should take into consideration the prevention of by-laws being passed by the association which might place impediments in the way of individuals who did not belong to the association. Let me explain by a particular instance. In the province from which I come, there is a very strong medical association, which makes it exceedingly difficult for medical men to come into the province from the other provinces of Canada or from other parts of the British Empire; and a large number of medical men in the province object to this association. There are medical men in Canada who might not wish to be members of this association. Its collective power, once it is formed under a statute of Canada, would be very large indeed. The association, which is asking for incorporation here, represents one school of medicine, the predominating school at the present time. I think its name should be specified. I think, for instance, clause 1 should read, The Canadian Allopathic Medical Association, so that the public may know that this Bill specifically applies to that particular school. Possibly we could incorporate in the Bill a clause to the effect that nothing in this Bill shall apply to other schools of medicine. That is just a crude suggestion, because I have not attempted to draft an amendment. The object is that this Parliament shall not recognize this particular school to the exclusion of all other schools of medicine. I might point out a fact in connection with this. The allopathic school very frequently uses the methods of the osteopathic, the chiropathic and the other schools. For instance, I know of a case—the circumstances relating to which can, I think, be substantiated by an hon. member of this House—wherein a little girl suffered from paralysis of a certain part of her body, possibly as the result of neglect, or some cause which was overlooked at the time of her treatment. It was not discovered for two or three months, and the regular practitioner of the community attended the child and prescribed a treatment which was purely osteopathic, although applied by the parents of the child. The allopathics frequently use the methods of the other schools of medicine, and I think there is some virtue in it. I do not pretend to know to what extent we might support their claims; as far as I am concerned, I always, in my own family, employ the methods of the present predominating school, and have perfect confidence in them. However, I submit that we should not incorporate in this Bill anything having the appearance of discrediting other schools of medicine, and I think the Bill in its present form can be construed in that way.

Mr. NESBITT: What proportion of the Bill does my hon. friend read in that way?

Mr. STEVENS: In sub-clause (b) of section 2 I find these words: 'to encourage honourable practice.' Hon. gentlemen of this House who are practitioners will immediately say that honourable practice means practice under the allopathic school. If hon. members object to that construction, I would not insist. I am not making these suggestions to throw discredit on that school, but I feel that an ordinary person reading this Bill, and knowing what the medical association is composed of, would naturally take that construction from it. I would suggest that these words be changed to: 'to encourage the practice of the allopathic school and to make research.' I would cut off the other words: 'and assist in the suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practice.' I do not think it is the function of any particular school of medicine to undertake the suppression and prosecution of what is at the present time known as unauthorized practice. It may be that next year the provincial legislatures will change their legislation in regard to the osteopathic and homepathic schools, but we know very well that in the United States these three schools of medicine practice to a very large extent—much more so than they do in our country. As I say, it may be that the various legislatures will see fit to change the scope of the powers of these various schools. I do not think it is wise for this Parliament to give to any other school of medicine the right to suppress or assist in the suppression or prosecution of unauthorized practice, and if this was entirely left out of the Bill, one of the chief objections to it would be removed. In other words, we should limit the powers of the association to the protection of the scientific interests of the association. I would point out that if all the doctors belonged to this association and there was a case before the courts in respect of which one of the doctors was seriously involved. it would possibly be a difficult matter to secure corroborative evidence from other members of the association. On the other hand, this association might assist in bringing to justice any medical man who is guilty of malpractice. It seems to me that we are creating a power in this Act which is fraught with very great danger if the Bill is allowed to pass in its present form. I would repeat what I have already stated, and suggest that the school of medicine to which this proposed legislation refers be specified—the Canadian Medical Association as relating to the allopathic school—thus limiting, to a great extent, the powers of the Bill. I would also change sub-section (b) of clause 2 so that it would simply give the association power to encourage the scientific work of that body, and not give to it the power to suppress and prosecute other schools of medicine. I would not ask the promoter to hastily consider the advisability of incorporating these suggestions in the Bill, but I think they should be carefully considered, as a great deal of objection has come to me and other members with regard to this Bill.

Mr. CHABOT: As sub-section (b) of clause 2 seems to be a strong bone of contention, I would not be opposed to amending that section by omitting everything after the words 'to encourage honourable practice.' I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), to insert a clause to the effect that nothing in the Bill shall apply to other schools of medicine, is a good one. and to this I have no objection. I certainly would not, however, wish to have the name of the asssociation, 'The Canadian Medical Protective Asssociation,' changed to 'The Canadian Allopathic Medical Protective Association.' I think this is not necessary, as the allopathic school is the predominating medical school of Canada.

Mr. HENDERSON: I scarcely understand the promoter of this Bill with reference to the amendment he proposes in the wording of clause 2. I do think, however, that he should eliminate from the Bill the reference to unauthorized practice.

Mr. CHABOT: I said I would do that. and suggested omitting everything after the word 'practice' in sub-section (b.)

Mr. HENDERSON: I do not say that the osteopathic is an illegal practice, but it is not an authorized practice. I do not know that it is authorized by law—I understand that it is not authorized at all: therefore under the provisions of this Bill, it would be one of the things which this association would engage in the suppression and prosecution of.

Mr. STEELE: I regret that some members of the House are suffering from mental delusions in connection with this Bill, which, I fear, allopaths, homœpathists, Christian Scientists, or any other school of medicine will fail to remove. I think they are endeavouring to interpret this Bill as containing that which is not embodied in it. No legislation can be brought before the House to which some exception cannot be taken, and in which some hon. gentlemen may not read something which does not exist. This Bill is asking for the incoropration of a number of men who, I am sure—some of them at least —stand in this country as among the foremost citizens of Canada. When the hon. member for Westmorland objects to the incorporation of eight hundred such men, he should not forget that almost every day in this country bodies composed only of dummies are being incorporated. If opposition were made to that practice, I think there would be reasonable foundation for it; but when any citizens giving their names come before this House and ask for incorporation as representing a body, I do not see that that objection can be taken.

What are the objects of this Bill? That is the chief thing. This association is at present existing and has existed for many years. Its first object, as expressed by this Bill, is:

To support, maintain and protect the honour, character and interest of its members.

Can any exception be taken to that? It may not strike the minds of laymen as it strikes the mind of a medical man how necessary it is to protect the honour, character and interest of its members; and I would emphasize honour and character. In these days when we have occasional actions brought against medical practitioners for purposes of blackmail, some such protection becomes very necessary, and such blackmail is becoming more common in this country all the time. The second object is:

To encourage honourable practice.

It may be unusual for the House to hear the members of any profession asking for incorporation in order to encourage honourable practice. Can anyone take exception to it?

Mr. HENDERSON: No.

Mr. STEELE (reading):

And assist in the suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practice.

Can anyone take exception to that as it is intended? If we attempt to read into it something that does not exist there, exception perhaps can be taken to it, but the legislatures of our Provinces decide what is authorized and what is unauthorized practice.

Mr. NESBITT: Do the legislatures prohibit homœopathic treatment?

Mr. STEELE: No; in fact, they recognize it. In the Ontario Medical Council for instance, there are a number of representatives of the homœopathic branch of the profession.

Mr. NESBITT: That would not apply against them?

Mr. STEELE: No, it is not intended to apply against anyone. There is no right given to this association which every citizen or medical practitioner does not posssess. Every member of the profession has the right to assist in the suppression or prosecution of unauthorized practice. In fact, it becomes a question if it is not the duty of any and every citizen to assist in suppressing anything and everything unauthorized in the medical profession or any other. Perhaps the word 'unauthorized' is unfortunate. If it had been 'illegal' the same objection could not have been taken, because we know that to-day even in the medical profession there are a great many men conducting illegal practice. Every now and then there are prosecutions of medical men for conducting illegal practice. Is it discreditable for men to ask to be incorporated for the purpose of suppressing illegal practice? The Bill gives these men power to assist in every way possible in the prosecution of the men carrying on illegal practices. 'Unauthorized' will include 'criminal' among the illegal and unauthorized practices. The object of the association in that respect is excellent and it probably does not dawn on the mind of the House as strongly as on the minds of the medical profession how necessary that is to-day. In fact we regret that we cannot go further than that and get back to the men who are perhaps originally responsible for some of the illegal practices which medical men are tempted to carry on.

To give advice and assistance to and defend and assist in the defence of members of the association in cases where proceedings of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them.

This right will not be denied any body of men coming to this House and asking that privilege, especially when the words 'unjustly brought' are inserted in the Bill. It would be a remarkable thing if this House denied the medical men of this country the right to protect one of their number against actions which are unjustly brought and these actions are not by any means scarce they would be very much more frequently brought by irresponsible men if they could see an opportunity of getting a few hundred dollars or a few thousand out of a medical man either in the way of settlement of a case rather than defend a lawsuit or by working on the sympathies of the jury in order to have damages awarded to them. It is a right which would be given to any body of men.

The Bill does not give the medical men any right whatever to educate the profession. If it did, many of the objections which have been made to it would be in line. It gives no right or power to have anything to do with the education of the medical profession or the licensing of medical practitioners.

If we called this a club, probably it would more nearly describe the conditions than any other wording. These men are practically asking for the incorporation of a medical association for social and business purposes which, if granted, will not in the slightest degree interfere with the rights or privileges of any other citizen of this country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The mover of the Bill made a statement, but even after that we do not understand the object of the Bill. We have heard from another member of the medical profession, and I believe that we have had some more light on the measure particularly regarding that part of section 2, clause 3:

To give advice and assistance to and defend and assist in the defence of members of the association in cases where proceeding of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them.

I do not suppose there is any body of men who stand higher than those who compose the medical profession, and I believe that the legislation that has been enacted in the various provinces has given the medical man a great deal of power. The Ontario Medical Act places in the hands of the college of physicians and surgeons of Ontario almost unlimited powers. The Government of that province have apparently had a good deal of confidence in the men who comprise the medical profession. But there are others who have to be considered as well as the members of the medical profession. The last remarks of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) would leave one to believe that there was not the slightest danger of any one suffering at the hands of a medical practitioner. Unfortunately I suppose there is scarcely a member of this House who cannot recall instances where, through malpractice or carelessness on the part of a medical practitioner, someone has suffered, possibly during a lifetime, yet you propose by Act of Parliament to incorporate an association whose main object is to protect members of that association in cases where proceedings of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them. The hon. member emphasizes the word 'unjustly.' Who is going to be the judge as to whether a suit is unjustly brought against a medical man until after the trial and in the meantime the medical man will be defended by this association. That is one of the objects of incorporation. I think that that is a question that ought to receive very careful consideration at the hands of this House. I am not aware of what the by-laws of this association that we are asked to recognize under section 4 of the Bill contain. I think these by-laws ought to be placed in the hands of every member of the House before this Bill is passed by this committee. I certainly feel that clause (c) is even more objectionable than clause (b) of section 2 which empowers them to assist in the suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practice. If the schools of medicine referred to were not authorized in the province, possibly there would be some grounds for their not being recognized, but I cannot see that there is any reason why a medical association of any province is not competent to look after the interests of its members without an Act incorporating a body of men who are, you might say, to protect themselves against prosecution, or it may be against malpractices, and who may have laid themselves open to actions for damages. If the individual realizes that instead of going up against a man whom he believes to be guilty, he has to go up against a strong corporation composed of medical men of the country, with a fund at their disposal to fight such cases, I think he will feel that an injustice is being done. I believe we ought to carefully consider that clause of the Bill, and that section 4, which includes the by-laws of this association should be before every member of this House before we pass the Bill.

Mr. KNOWLES: With regard to a Bill of this kind, I presume it is the right of individual members of this House to express their own private opinions, and I wish to give expression to mine. I think that what the medical profession needs is not greater privileges, but more strict regulations. I think that if some member of the medical profession or some group of members, would get together and use their brains and industry rather with a view to preventing imposition upon the public, who experience it at the hands of many dishonourable practitioners, they would be using their time and industry and brains to much better advantage.

An hon. MEMBER: That is what they are trying to do here.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think the tendency of this Bill is to give greater protection, to give the members of the medical profession the idea that there is a powerful institution behind them created by a special Act of Parliament. There is no member of this House who has not the utmost respect for an honourable practitioner, but I do not know of any field where there is more room for a dishonourable man than the medical practice. As the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat has said, there is scarcely a man who has not realized the great injury that can come to any member of the human race by the dishonourable or careless performance of his duties by a medical practitioner in respect to the patients who place themselves in his hands. We have seen many cases of it, and there are many present in this House who could illustrate it. We have seen so much of it, that one almost wonders if, after all, a great number of the medical profession are not fakes. There are a great many who are not fakes, and I certainly except the hon. member who introduced this Bill. I would place myself in his hands with every confidence. But I say that we have all been impressed with the fact that there is something too important in the human body and in the human constitution, to place in the hands of a man unworthy to deal with it. If we were not impressed with that fact, we would not be making these remarks this afternoon. I think something should be done to expose these men for the sake of the profession itself. We all know that a doctor is sometimes careless. He is in a hurry, and perhaps wants to get away to enjoy a game of poker, or something of that kind.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. KNOWLES: Yes, some of them. My hon. friend will not deny that many a member of the medical profession is in a hurry and is careless in his diagnosis. He pretends to diagnose the disease, and he does not diagnose it at all. There is no doubt that that is done every day by doctors, and they befool and befuddle the patient who places himself in their hands. I am not talking about all members of the medical profession, but I say that for the good of the profession there should be greater safeguards for the people. You go to one doctor and he examines you, and tells you he has done something for you, when he is befooling you all the time. You go to another doctor, and he will not tell you that nothing has been done, but he will charge you extra for hiding what the other doctor did wrong. It would be a good thing if some person had brains and industry enough to protect the public against being the victims of that class of practitioners. I am not attacking the medical profession, not in the slightest; I merely wish to call attention to a danger to the public which exists, and I think it is up to the medical men themselves to try to remove that danger in their own interests, rather than use their brains and industry in creating a strong corporation that might stand behind many a man who does not deserve to have anybody stand behind him.

Mr. NICKLE: As the hon. member for Moosejaw (Mr. Knowles) has said, this question is one in which individual opinion must prevail, and without commenting satirically or nastily upon his remarks, perhaps I might say he has been singularly unfortunate in the class of medical men with whom he has been thrown in contact. My experience has been so totally different that possibly it is upon that experience that my views on this question are based. When this Bill first came into my hands, it struck me as being somewhat drastic, and I immediately wrote to a medical man in my town, whose name is well known, and would be well known to the country if I cared to give it, and asked him if he had a copy of the constitution and bylaws of the association, and also what was desired by the Bill. Without any hesitancy he sent me a little book which is termed:

The Canadian Medical Protective Association—Eleventh Annual Report. Edmonton, August, 1912.

From the contents of this work I learn that there are some 800 or 900 members of that association, and that this so-called club came into existence in 1901, pursuant to the report of the Committee on Medical Defence, presented at the thirty-fourth annual meeting of the Canadian Medical Association, held in Winnipeg in August, 1901. The hon. member for Oxford called attention to the fact that subsection (c) of section 2 of the Bill reads:

That the object of the Canadian Protective Association is—

To give advice and assistance to and defend and assist in the defence of members of the association in cases where proceedings of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them.

He raised the question as to who shall be the judge of whether or not these proceedings are unjust. One of the objects of the association as defined in the bylaws is:

To protect its members from prosecution where such action appears to our counsel and solicitor, as well as the committee in charge, to be unjust, harassing and frivolous.

That is the court that is to decide whether or not these proceedings are unjust, and that occurs to me as one of the merits of this Bill. Those of us who are practising in the legal profession know that the worse the medical man is, the more rigorously he fights the suit; the higher position a man occupies in the medical profession, the more readily he settles cases. He is supposed to be injured by litigation. The object of this association is to pass in review the actions of all medical men who are members of the association before a committee of their own, and whenever they find that a man has acted improperly, it seems to me that they will always be ready to advise him that he should make compensation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Why is that not set out in the Bill?

Mr. NICKLE: The Bill says that exactly, because it incorporates as one of the provisions of the Bill the by-laws of the association, and one of the by-laws of the association provides exactly for what I have stated. It is incorporated in the Bill by reference.

Mr. LANCASTER: That by-law might be rescinded the next day.

Mr. NICKLE: Any association can rescind any by-law.

Mr. MORPHY: Why not incorporate the by-laws in the Bill?

Mr. NICKLE: The by-laws might be set out in the Bill, but there would be the difficulty of alteration or amendment. I do not know whether the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Chabot) will accept it or not, but I have a suggestion which I think would get over the objection made to section 4, that we are adopting certain by-laws of which we know nothing and declaring that they shall have the force of law. It is objected that this House should not give countenance to by-laws which might not meet with its approval if they were known. I would suggest that section 4 be struck out and that the following be substituted:

The association, in general meeting, may, from time to time, pass rules and by-laws of the said association in so far as they are not contrary to law or to the provisions of this Act and may, in like manner, alter or amend the same.

If this section were adopted in place of section 4, then this Parliament would not be giving its sanction to the by-laws of the association. It would simply be incorporating an association with the general power of protecting its members where they are harassed and the only by-laws that would have legal force would be such by-laws as should hereafter be passed.

I understand that section 2, subsection (b) is to be amended by leaving out all the words after the word 'practice.' If that is not the case I would like to suggest that the word 'unauthorized' be changed to 'illegal.' As I understand the law of Ontario, at the present time, osteopathy is not an authorized practice. But it is not an illegal practice, and if the only authorized practices of medicine are homœopathy and allopathy this Act might be so twisted, if the word 'unauthorised' were left in, as to permit of the prosecution of osteopaths, or of those who do not adhere to those schools of medicine. The hon. member for Ottawa assures me that such was not the intention of the promoters of the Bill, and I would suggest that, if he does not intend to eliminate all the words after the word 'practice,' he change the word 'unauthorized' to 'illegal' which, I think, will meet the objection of my hon. friend from Halton.

Mr. HENDERSON: It will not meet my objection because unauthorized practice and illegal practice are two very different things. I do not think that the osteopath is practising illegally, but his practising is not authorized. I hope I have made my meaning plain.

Mr. NICKLE: Unauthorized practices might be prosecuted under this Bill as drawn. If a thing is illegal, or against the law of the province in which it is practised, this Bill would then only give, if amended as suggested, to this association, if it obtained incorporation, the right to prosecute. I feel sure that none of us want to give countenance to that which is improper or illegal.

Mr. KNOWLES: My hon. friend (Mr. Nickle) made reference to my remarks as if I had said that my experience had been with unworthy members of the medical profession. I did not say that at all. Every member of the medical profession with whom I had to do has been above suspicion.

Mr. EMMERSON: While there may be a great deal that is not objectionable in the by-laws, as they are set forth in this little pamphlet, I think the committee should know what it is doing. Take for instance paragraph 12:

It shall be the duty of the committee to follow a case through any and all courts until a correct judgment shall be obtained, if, in the opinion of counsel, such a course would be judicious. In no case will the association compromise.

Here is another:

Upon an action being brought for malpractice against a member of the protective association, it shall be competent for the defendant to communicate the facts to the secretary who shall convey the same to the committee, whereupon the said committee shall submit the case to the solicitor who shall decide upon the nature of the defence, if any defence is to to be made.

This Bill resolves itself into a Bill for the creation of a combine to defend and protect practitioners who may have made mistakes or otherwise.

Mr. EDWARDS: Where do you get that in the Bill? You do not get that in the Bill and you do not get it in what you have been reading from.

Mr. EMMERSON: I do not know whether my hon. friend is a medical practitioner or a dental practitioner.

Mr. SCHAFFNER: He is a medical practitioner and a good one.

Mr. EMMERSON: Then I appreciate the effect of the statement that I do not read it anywhere and cannot get it. Section 4 of the Bill incorporates this document into it and creates what is set forth here as a portion of the Bill. The very first by-law says that the object of this association is to protect its members from prosecution where such action appears to the counsel and solicitor, as well as to the committee in charge, to be unjust, harassing or frivolous.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is exactly the object of the Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON: It is all very well to make these qualifications. It is dependent upon the views of individuals. As to what the character of the action may be the committee and the solicitor will have their judgment coloured by the representations of the member. I have dealt with this matter from an impersonal standpoint. I am not assailing the medical profession, but I would not give to any body of men in Christendom the powers that are sought to be given here. Unless you restrain power it becomes tyranny and this would be used in a tyrannical way. Parties who had been injured, or who claimed to have been injured—although it might be that they had contributed to the injury themselves) might seek to put the blame upon the practitioner, but if it were realized that the practitioner had back of him an association of this kind, extending from one end of the Dominion to the other, there would be very few actions. The medical profession, in creating this body, are forming an insurance or guarantee company against all prosecutions. That may be all very well for them but how will it work out in individual cases? A party claims to be injured, the committee are led to believe by the representations of the practitioner himself that everything is all right, that the action should not have been brought and that he is being unfairly dealt with. The committee accept his recommendations and agree to defend the action. The agreement is that they shall follow it up through every court in Canada to the Supreme Court and then to the Privy Council. Where is the individual who can stand up against a combine of that character? It is a combine created by the Dominion Parliament and it is a combine to protect individuals in the different provinces as against provincial laws.

Mr. THOMPSON (Yukon): How does this conflict with any provincial legislation?

Mr. EMMERSON: This Bill is a Bill which should be brought before a provincial legislature.

Mr. THOMPSON (Yukon): Then it does not conflict with any existing provincial legislation?

Mr. EMMERSON: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. EDWARDS: Would it be proper legislation for a provincial legislature to pass?

Mr. EMMERSON: Yes, within the province itself. But I say it is wrong for this Parliament to create a body of this kind, when the character of the protection sought is as against provincial law in a matter of civil rights. You are here creating a great combine under the authority of the Dominion Parliament. I do not go so far as to say it is ultra vires of this Parliament to do that, yet I am inclined to the belief that we are usurping the rights of the provincial legislatures in attempting to legislate in that matter. I am not dealing with the constitutional aspect now, but I am thinking at this moment of the legislation as a matter of right and justice as between the medical profession and the individual patient. I have nothing whatever against the medical profession and I am treating the Bill altogether from an impartial standpoint. If this were an application on behalf of the legal profession, I would consider it even more damnable than it is with respect to the medical profession.

Mr. LANCASTER: You do not think it should be declared a work for the general advantage of Canada?

Mr. EMMERSON: I think it should be declared a work to the great disadvantage of the people of Canada. The amendment suggested by my hon. friend from Kingston is an excellent one and I shall support it. I would like at this stage to move the six months' hoist, but I will content myself with moving that the committee rise.

Mr. CHABOT: I am quite prepared to carry into effect some of the pertinent and valuable opinions expressed with regard to this Bill, but I would like to have the matter considered and decided now.

Motion that the committee rise negatived.

Mr. EDWARDS: I was very much interested in some of the remarks made with regard to this Bill, and, without wishing to be discourteous, I may say that I have been somewhat amused at some of the ideas which hon. gentlemen opposing this Bill have given expression to, and particularly so at the attitude assumed by the hon. members for Moosejaw and Westmorland with respect to it. After arguing most strenuously that this was a very improper Bill to put through this Parliament, and working himself into paroxysms declaring that it gave the medical profession an unjust power over individual citizens throughout Canada, the hon. member for Westmorland said it was perfectly proper legislation if any one of the provinces should pass it. He told us that while it was very improper to pass it from our standpoint, it would be quite proper for any provincial legislature to pass this kind of a Bill.

Mr. EMMERSON: I know my hon. friend (Mr. Edwards) does not wish to misrepresent me. What I said was that it was proper legislation to go before a provincial Parliament and to be considered there, but that did not express my view as assenting to the character of the legislation or its desirability.

Mr. EDWARDS: I asked my hon. friend if he thought it would be proper legislation for a provincial legislature to pass, and he said it would.

Mr. EMMERSON: I meant as to the power of the legislature but I did not refer in that answer to the merits of the legislation.

Mr. EDWARDS: My hon. friend will agree that there are two constructions which might be placed upon the word 'proper' and I evidently took the meaning which my hon. friend did not wish it to have. I accept his explanation. Then, I understand the hon. member to say that he would consider this very improper legislation, having regard to its terms, not only for this House but for any provincial legislature, to pass. I call the attention of these hon. members who have been opposing the Bill to the objects of the association which, amongst others, are to assist in the suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practice, and to give advice and assistance and to defend the members of the association where proceedings of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them. Now, I do not think anyone would argue that it is advisable to have unauthorized practice going on in the country, nor do I think anyone should contend that there can be anything wrong in a body of men joining together for mutual protection when proceedings are brought against them unjustly; bear in mind that word unjustly. What do we find? According to what was read by the hon. member for Westmorland, an association is formed. The rules and regulations contained in that little book are incorporated along with this Act. A medical man finds himself face to face some day with an action for damages. He considers that that action is entirely unjust and unwarranted; but he is not financially in a position to fight the case himself. He appeals therefore to the medical association of which he is a member. Does the medical association meet and say: Here is one of our members who is in difficulties and we are pledged to stand by him? The members of that association are not pledged to stand by him. That is precisely where hon. gentlemen are reading into this Bill something that is not there. The association has a committee which is composed of medical men, who have a reputation at stake, and who are not going to throw away their hard earned reputation in backing up a man who cannot be backed up justly and fairly. The public are perfectly safe with the medical profession. It is not left to any one person whether or not the doctor should be defended by the association. A number of reputable medical men, forming a committee, meet and consider the matter from the medical standpoint as to whether this particular doctor is justified in appealing to them for their assistance and help. To assume that the medical association would back up one of their number and help him to carry his case from one court to another in an action which he is not justified in bringing, would be to charge the members of that committee with something with which they should not be charged. We have a right to assume that if this association is incorporated, the members would place on that committee, not humble or inferior members of the profession, but men who have made their mark, men who have a reputation. That class of men would be selected to form the committee.

Mr. KNOWLES: How does the hon. member know that that class of men will join the association?

Mr. EDWARDS: I will tell my hon. friend from Moosejaw. I was discussing the medical profession and not the legal profession. I have no doubt that numbers of them will join. I might have had some doubts, after what I heard this afternoon, if it was the other profession I think that the objects of this Bill are worthy objects. Some objection might perhaps be found with sub-section (b) of clause 2. The suggestion of the hon. member for Kingston is a good one. The word 'illegal' substituted for the word 'unauthorized' in that sub-section covers that and takes away any objection which might fairly be raised to that clause. The sub-section then would read:

To encourage honourable practice and assist in the suppression and prosecution of illegal practice.

Surely no person could object to that.

Mr. HENDERSON: The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Kingston would read thus:

To encourage honourable practice.

Then strike out all the words to the end of the clause.

Mr. BELAND: No.

Mr. EDWARDS: I understood that the promoter of the Bill, my hon. friend from Ottawa (Mr. Chabot), agreed to strike out all the words after the first word 'practice.'

Mr. HENDERSON: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS: I understood the suggestion of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle), was to substitute the word 'illegal' for the word 'unauthorized.'

Mr. HENDERSON: No.

Mr. NICKLE: The written amendment which I read was the substitution of a new clause for the existing one. The suggestion I made was that, if the promoter of the Bill was not prepared to adopt the suggestion that all the words after the word 'practice' be eliminated, the word 'unauthorized' be changed to 'illegal.' I understood the member for Ottawa to say that he was not prepared to eliminate all the words after the word 'practice.'

Mr. EMMERSON: He expressed his willingness to do so to the House.

Mr. EDWARDS.

Mr. EDWARDS: The correct interpretation of what the hon. member for Kingston said was this, that he would prefer to cut out all the words after the first word 'practice'; but not getting that, then he would substitute the word 'illegal' in place of the word 'unathorized.' He did not consider it to be as good as cutting out all the words after 'practice,' but he considered it better than the clause as it is?

Mr. NICKLE: Yes.

Mr. EDWARDS: With all due deference to the promoter of the Bill and the hon. member for Kingston, I think subsection (b) would be much better, much stronger, and much more in the interests of the general public by substituting the word 'illegal' in place of the word 'unauthorized,' than by cutting out all the words after the word 'practice.' If this Bill goes through, the people who will be protected will not be men of the medical profession, alone, but will be the general public, because the Bill protects the general public very strongly indeed. It is certainly in the interest of the general public that there shall not be illegal practice in the country. It is in the interest of the general public to have a strong association formed, which, having regard for its reputation, will try to prevent and suppress all kinds of illegal practice. My hon. friend from Vancouver (Mr. Stevens), has suggested the introduction of the word 'allopathic'—the Canadian Allopathic Medical Protective Association. I think that would prove a weakening, in this way. In putting that word in, he was assuming that no person could be a member of the Canadian Medical Protective Association unless he belonged to the allopathic school of medicine. His assumption is entirely wrong, as has been pointed out by my hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Steele). The introduction of that word in the title would not obtain for him the end he desires.

Mr. STEVENS: Are members of any other schools of medicine members of the association?

Mr. CURRIE: Not that I am aware of.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have already spoken with regard to my general attitude concerning this Bill, but I wish to make a few additional observations with regard to particular features of it. I have no doubt that the professional men have no desire to put through a Bill which is anything in the nature of a conspiracy, but I do believe they have not given due thought to one or two points connected with it, and it is of these that I desire to speak for a moment. I think we should know exactly what we are doing before we put through a measure of this kind. It has been asserted that this legislation would tend to prevent blackmail.

Blackmailing is decidedly objectionable, and if the Bill prevent this, I would support it. But would it prevent blackmail? If an organization of this kind is going to finance a man against whom I have an action, will this Bill prevent me? If I have to sue him and take the case before the courts, will the existence of this legislation be of any benefit to him? The man who is afraid of blackmail is not the man who wants to get his case financed, but is the man who is so sensitive of his high standing that he does not desire to have it contended in the courts that he has been guilty of malpractice.

Mr. LANCASTER: He does not want a trial at all.

Mr. KNOWLES: Exactly; he does not want a trial at all, and we will never stop blackmailing by placing this legislation behind the decent, honourable practitioner. If we did try to stop blackmailing in that way, how would it work out? This legislation covers the whole of Canada, and there would be one committee, located at the head office, whose duty would be to see whether or not a legal claim should be fought. Is it reasonable that we should pass legislation of this kind? Is a body of men grouped around the city of Ottawa competent to pass upon the merits or demerits of a proposed litigation in British Columbia or Prince Edward Island? I say it is not. These men, holding council at Ottawa, will not know the laws or the rulings of our courts, and the courts of the other provinces. If legislation of this kind were at all justifiable, I say in all seriousness that it would be justifiable only, as the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) has said, in the respective legislative assemblies, where the matter could be dealt with on its merits. It is establishing a dangerous precedent to say that a certain body of men can group themselves together, and if I am a poor man, and have a claim against one of them, the members, and it has become a burden to me to finance the lawsuit in the first court, if he can succeed in getting his fellow members to sympathize with him to such an extent as to finance his defence, I am placed at a disadvantage, particularly if the case goes up to the Privy Council, as would likely be the case, I say that is wrong. Doctor or no doctor, physician or no physician, hon. gentlemen should agree that it is wrong that we should make such legislation as will provide for the existence of a group of men who, because one of their members happens to have their support, will oblige me to fight that great wealthy corporation. I submit it is a principal which is entirely wrong. Then, again, one other objectionable feature is that which exists in the advantage one practitioner obtains over another. Two doctors live in a city, and one, who has seen his way clear to join the association, is enabled to enjoy its protection, while the other may hold such principles as will prevent him from joining. Is it fair that such an advantage should thus be given? If I am a medical practitioner and my brother practitioner across the way joins the association, is it fair that he should have that advantage over me? I say that if they are given power to protect their members, they should have the same power to protect all respectable practitioners. On the whole, I am against the principle of the Bill, and am opposed to the main feature of it.

Mr. THOMPSON (Yukon): The by-laws of the association provide for those conditions which the hon. gentleman has pointed out. The central committee will not be in Ottawa. There are provincial executives as well as the central committee, and these provincial executives will represent the various provinces of Canada, and be in a position to advise the central committee. I desire to resent the imputation my hon. friend made as against the medical profession of Canada in his remarks this afternoon. I venture to say that the medical profession of Canada stands as high as any other profession in this country. It has done its share in the development of the country, especially in caring for the health of the people and establishing the hygenic conditions existing, I am sorry to say, not in the capital of our country, but throughout many of the cities of Canada. When my hon. friend arises in his place and imputes improper motives to the members—

Mr. KNOWLES: I rise to a point of order. I did not impute any improper motives. I spoke highly of the medical profession, the members of which do not need any defense from the hon. member.

Mr. THOMPSON: They certainly do not ask any defense from the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. KNOWLES: I myself said that first.

At six o'clock Committee took recess.

After Recess.

Committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. CHABOT: Although the dangers that have been pointed out in connection with this Bill seem rather far-fetched, I am willing, in order to expedite matters, to accept the proposed amendments to some of its provisions. I would suggest the following amendments: In sub-section (b) of section 2 to eliminate all the words after the word 'practice' in the first line; and to strike out section 4, and substitute:

The association in general meeting may from time to time pass rules and by-laws of the said association in so far as they are not contrary to law or to the provisions of this Act and may in like manner alter or amend the same.

Mr. BARKER: I agree in what has been said as to the very unhappy expression of the object of this Bill. Section 2 goes into matters that should not be entrusted by Act of Parliament to any body of gentlemen. To sub-section (a) of section 2 there can be no objection, but sub-section (b) as it stands in the Bill is very badly expressed. I understand that the promoter is willing to strike out the latter part of the clause dealing with suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practice. The section as it stands is constituting the medical profession detectives or special police or inspectors to prosecute. Surely, when we pass the law it is not necessary for us to provide the machinery for the prosecution of offenders and I think it is rather beneath the dignity of the medical profession that they should thus seek to act in the capacity of informers or prosecutors. The whole object of the society would be embraced by the wording:

To encourage honourable practice of the medical profession.

Mr. CHABOT: I have no objection to the suggested amendment.

Mr. BARKER: I do not think there should be any objection to sub-clause (c) of section 2, which deals with assistance in the defence of members of the association against unjust legal proceedings. Subclause (d) is highly objectionable. It reads:

To promote and support legislative measures likely to benefit the medical profession.

The medical members of the House probably do not quite grasp how that clause appears to those who are not of that profession. If we were to substitute 'legal profession' for 'medical profession' would one of these gentlemen support it? I think not, everyone would say it was highly objectionable. All that is necessary in that section would be to say:

To promote and support all measures likely to improve the medical profession.

I object to the word 'benefit.' We are not passing laws here to benefit the medical profession; if they want to improve the medical profession well and good. Section 4 is highly objectionable, and I am glad the hon. gentleman has agreed to amend it. I have a copy of the by-laws; the little book includes annual reports, resolutions, &c., and members could read it through several times and not know what the rules are. Then, perhaps ten years hence, if this Act were the subject of litigation it would be necessary to have proof of what the by-laws are at this time. The ordinary course is the simple and plain one of giving the new corporation power to make rules and by-laws according to their Act of Parliament and within the law of the land. If we do that there cannot be any trouble because they are adopted and sealed and that is the end of it. The hon. gentleman has adopted a clause that my hon. friend from Kingston (Mr. Nickle) has given to him. So far as I am concerned, I believe that to be an ordinary clause about by-laws.

Mr. EMMERSON: Clause 6 contains that provision now, and no amendment to clause 4 is required.

Mr. BARKER: I take clause 4 in preference to the other. If the same provision is in clause 6, we need not pass it again; we can strike it out in clause 6 when we come to it. It does not seem to me that if you make these alterations there is anything for us to discuss.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: There appears to be some doubt in the minds of some members of the committee as to what the real object of this Bill is. Reading it over, one wonders, that it was necessary to have legislation of this kind to support and maintain the honour, character and interest of the members of this association. I think that sub-section (a) of clause 2 casts a reflection on the members of that association. Then sub-section (b) is:

To encourage honourable practice and assist in the suppression and prosecution of unauthorized practice.

Surely nothing is required to encourage the medical profession along these lines. Speaking in connection with this section before six o'clock, I referred to section 4 of the Bill and was told, I think by the member for Kingston, that the by-laws of the association referred to in this clause, did not conflict, or did not bear out the interpretation that I placed upon sub-section (c) which I contended was the primary object of the Bill. I have had a copy of these by-laws, placed in my hands, and I wish to call the attention of the committee for a moment to certain clauses of them. In section 1 we find this:

We believe it to be in the interest of the medical profession of Canada that an association should be formed by this body for the protection of such members of the medical profession as may become members of this association, and who may be unjustly prosecuted for malpractice. The object of this association is to protect its members from prosecution where such action appears to our counsel and solicitor, as well as the committee in charge, to be unjust, harassing or frivolous.

That looks all very well and very fair if it was carried out as it appears in the by-law. But further on I find under section 9:

It shall be the duty of any member of this association, pending the defence of any action by this body, to aid the defence in every legitimate manner.

This is practically a close corporation in which every member is subject by this by-law, to come to the defence of his brother practitioner, whether he is justly or unjustly accused. Then in sub-section 11:

Upon an action being brought for malpractice against any member of this protective association, it shall be competent for the defendant to communicate the facts to the secretary, who shall thereupon convey the same to the committee, whereupon such committee shall submit the case to the solicitor who shall decide upon the nature of the defence, if any defence is to be made.

12. It shall be the duty of the committee to follow the case through any and all courts until a correct judgment shall be obtained if, in the opinion of counsel, such a course would be judicious.

Note these words in clause 11:

It shall be competent for the defendant to communicate the facts to the secretary, who shall thereupon convey the same to the committee.

The defendant states his case to the committee and to the solicitor. The aggrieved party is not there, and you can naturally suppose that the party being prosecuted will present his case in as favourable a light as possible; and once an action is entered upon, they are pledged to carry it from court to court, and to see that the party accused is freed. Then later on, I find in the president's annual report—I do not know whether it is part of the by-laws or not, the hon. member for Kingston who is a good lawyer, is unable to define what is really the by-law and what is not—but here is part of the president's address. He says:

We have emerged successfully through the courts and have won all down the line. Our most recent victory was in the case of our most esteemed and estimable president of the Canadian Medical Association, who was most unjustly attacked in law, but who came off victorious and with flying colours, as have all others who have been members of the Canadian Medical Protective Association. That our association has achieved its purpose——

Mark the words:

That our association has achieved its purpose goes without saying, and we have struck terror into the evil-minded who have sought to besmirch and even blackmail members of our noble profession.

Surely there is something to be said on behalf of the people who do not belong to this association. If a person finds that he has a grievance, that he has been subject to malpractice, he would hardly dare to go up against a corporation of that kind. I think it is the most unjust, unfair legislation that was ever asked for in any parliament.

Mr. BARKER: I understood that the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill had abandoned that.

Mr. HENDERSON: Is that so?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I did not so understand the mover of the Bill.

Mr. CHABOT: I agreed to strike out clause 4 and to substitute that other clause.

Mr. BARKER: That would enable the by-laws to be made hereafter.

Mr. CHABOT: Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I think the president of the association has made clear what the objects of the Bill really are, and I do not think that the parties who are asking for incorporation here have been fair to the members of this House in attempting to disguise their real objects. They did not have the fairness to put them in the Bill, but sought to incorporate by-laws that have not been placed in the hands of the members of this House; and now that it is suggested to them, they are willing to withdraw them and to substitute something else. But they have not agreed to withdraw what is the most objectionable feature, to my mind, of the whole Bill, that is sub-section (c) of clause 2:

To give advice and assistance to and defend and assist in the defence of members of the association in cases where proceedings of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them.

It says unjustly brought or threatened against them, but who is going to determine whether it is unjust or not? It can only be done through the process mentioned in these by-laws which are in effect to-day. Why does this association ask for incorporation at all? They have been in existence for ten years. What do they expect to gain from it? I contend we should not put such power in the hands of any body of men. I think that the medical association is quite competent to take care of itself. I think that the different provinces have been very generous to them in placing in their hands through the various legislatures, almost every power that could be desired. I know that exception is taken in some of the provinces on the ground that too much power has been given to them. But for them to come here and ask this Parliament to allow them to form an association to defend themselves against any action that may be brought against them, is, I think, unfair, and it is a power that should not be granted by this House.

Mr. EMMERSON: I would like to ask those who are promoting this Bill to point out to the committee anything in the Bill that justifies this Parliament in dealing with it at all. I call the attention of the committee and of those hon. gentlemen to the 92nd section of the British North America Act:

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated.

Coming down to section 13, it says: 'Properties and civil rights in the province' and, 16, 'generally all matters of a merely local or private nature in the province.' I would like to have pointed out to me wherein this Bill seeks for powers which are not exclusively within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures under the 92nd section of this Act. I cannot see what power this Parliament has to deal with the matter. What are the objects of this association?

(a) To support, maintain and protect the honour, character and interest of its members.

That comes within provincial rights.

(b) To encourage honourable practice—— taking it as amended. That is within civil rights because the manner in which the profession operates is under the jurisdiction of the province and its associations are created by provincial laws. Then come to this power, to which exception was taken by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat:

(c) To give advice and assistance to, and defend and assist in the defence of members of the association in cases where proceedings of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them.
(d) To promote and support legislative measures likely to benefit the medical profession.

This Parliament has no right to deal with such matters and it is an encroachment upon the powers of the provincial legislatures to make this enactment. I do not see why they cannot go to their own provinces to seek legislation of this character. The provinces have exclusive powers to grant privileges of this nature. This is a constitutional question and I would ask the promoters of the Bill that they shall designate, within the borders of this Bill, any power that is sought, or any authority that they wish to have, that is not exclusively within the jurisdiction of the legislative assemblies of the Dominion to grant and which as a body we have no right to grant.

Mr. THOMPSON: I would like to point out to my hon. friend from Westmorland (Mr. Emmerson) that everything he has said as to the constitutional aspect of the question could have been said with equal force and effect with regard to the Dominion Medical Act which was passed by the Parliament of Canada two years ago. My hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Barker) tells me that a similiar Act was passed by this Parliament to govern civil engineers. If that is so why does my hon. friend raise a constitutional question with regard to this particular Bill?

Mr. EMMERSON: I do not remember the Civil Engineers Bill, but I know that the Roddick Bill had exception taken to it.

Mr. MACDONELL: It went through all right.

Mr. EMMERSON: Perhaps it did, but that does not cure it.

Mr. THOMPSON: It does not cure it but it creates a precedent.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I think that in the Roddick Bill there was a clause by which the Bill came into operation only after the legislatures had adopted it. It went into operation in some of the provinces, but I think it was only last year that the legislature of Quebec adopted it. It was subject to supplementary legislation by the various legislatures.

Mr. THOMPSON: That is true, there was an enabling clause but the principle of the Bill was adopted by this Parliament.

Mr. LEMIEUX: But it was a dead letter until the legislatures adopted it.

Mr. THOMPSON: Then it was adopted as a matter of form.

Mr. LEMIEUX: No, the medical association which fathered that Bill had to put some water in their wine because otherwise, I know, the legislators at Quebec would not have adopted it.

Mr. KNOWLES: Perhaps the hon. gentleman who promotes this Bill will agree to this compromise, that the Bill should become operative in such provinces as approved of it through their respective legislatures.

Mr. CHABOT: I would like to reply to the observations of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux). Medical education and medical practice are regulated by provincial Acts. But this Bill refers altogether to the conduct of medical gentlemen in Canada, and that is determined to a large extent by the code of medical ethics which is formulated and carried into effect irrespective of any medical Act in any of the different provinces.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I quite see the difference as enunciated by my hon. friend, but I think that the question of honour and conduct is a question concerning civil rights. The code of ethics in the legal profession is regulated by provincial legislation. A barrister who was lax in his practice and who infringed the code of honour would lose his license, but that is a provincial matter entirely.

Mr. EDWARDS: Who would take his license from him?

Mr. LEMIEUX: The Bar Association.

Mr. EDWARDS: Then his case would be considered by his fellow lawyers?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Yes, by the Bar Association of the province.

Mr. EDWARDS: That is what would occur here.

Mr. CHABOT: Just what I contended.

Mr. SMITH (South Ontario): I came in a little late and did not hear a great deal of the discussion, but I am opposed personally to any class legislation of this kind. I think the whole Bill is objectionable and absolutely unnecessary. I therefore move that the committee rise.

Mr. LEMIEUX: May I ask the hon. member for Ottawa a question? Suppose a man should not practice in conformity with the code of ethics of the profession, would he come under the provisions of this Bill, and would he be deprived of his right to practice by virtue of this legislation?

Mr. CHABOT: Speaking for the province of Ontario, I may say that his conduct would be referred to the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario, and they would determine what ought to be done in a matter of that kind.

Motion that the Committee rise negatived: yeas, 26; nays, 34.

Mr. EMMERSON: I call attention to the rule of the House, which says that no member is allowed to vote on any question in which he has a direct interest. I suppose the doctors who are members of this House are members of this association, and they certainly may have a direct interest.

Mr. BELAND: There ought to be a rule of the House excluding jokes.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I ask the Minister of Justice is it within the power of this Parliament to pass this Bill?

Mr. EMMERSON: I submit to the Minister of Justice that under sub-section 16 of section 92 of the British North America Act this Bill, as affecting civil rights and matters of a purely local and private nature within the province, is within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature.

Mr. DOHERTY: I confess I have not given this Bill that careful consideration which might be desirable before pronouncing an absolute opinion. I cannot see the force of the contention of the hon. gentleman that this is purely a local and private matter within the province. The power of incorporation generally rests with the Parliament of Canada save in exceptional cases where the objects of an association are purely provincial in their nature.

Mr. EMMERSON: Could anything be more so than this?

Mr. DOHERTY: Whether the objects of this association are provincial or general in their nature, depend upon where the purpose of this particular association is to be carried on whether its operations are to be general throughout the Dominion or in more than one province. If it appear that the purposes of this association were to be attained within the limits of a particular province, then obviously it would be a different matter, but so long as it appears on the face of the Bill that the purposes of the association are to be carried on throughout the Dominion, I would be disposed to hold that the legislation was within the constitutional power of this parliament.

Mr. EMMERSON: I move that section 2 be amended by striking out sub-section (c) which reads:

To give advice and assistance to, and defend and assist in the defence of members of the association in cases where proceedings of any kind are unjustly brought or threatened against them.

My contention is that if Parliament passes this clause it is creating a combine for defence purposes in the interests of individuals. This is a huge combine for the protection of members of the medical profession in the several provinces as against the rights and interests of the individual patients.

Motion of Mr. Emmerson negatived: yeas 25; nays 42.

Mr. KNOWLES: In my opinion this Bill is drawn up very carelessly, and should be allowed to stand for a day or two, so that it may be amended. No definition is given here as to what will qualify a man for membership in this association. The only place where any reference is made to the medical profession is in the name, The Canadian Medical Protective Association. Sub-section (d) of clause 2 reads as follows:

To promote and support legislative measures likely to benefit the medical profession.

That sub-section has been struck out; so that there is nothing but the name to connect the Bill in the slightest way with the medical profession. We are giving large powers to certain people, whom we simply describe as being members at present or to become members of a certain association. I think a definition should be given here as to what will qualify a man for membership in this association. I submit that there should at least be an interpreting clause in this Bill.

Mr. CHABOT: Any duly qualified physician in Canada may become a member of this association.

Mr. KNOWLES: The Bill does not say so.

Mr. REID (Grenville): A Bill was passed in 1908 to incorporate the Architectural Institute of Canada. It is a Bill similar to this one. Clause 3 reads:

The objects of the institute shall be to facilitate the acquirement and interchange of professional knowledge among its members, and more particularly to promote the acquisition of that species of knowledge which has special reference to the profession of architecture, and further to encourage investigation in connection with all branches and departments of knowledge connected with that profession.

Clause 5 reads:

The institute may make regulations and by-laws for its direction and management, and also such rules as are deemed necessary for the maintenance of the honour and dignity of the members of the institute.

2. The institute may, by by-law, make regulations governing the admission of candidates for membership in the institute.

Mr. DOHERTY: In reply to the hon. member for Moosejaw, in Acts of incorporation it is customary to insert as the persons incorporated the names of the men applying for incorporation and such other persons as may under its by-laws, rules and regulations subsequently become members of the assiciation. That seems to me to be quite clearly done in this Bill The particular persons incorporated are the persons named, the members of the particular association which is mentioned and such other persons as may hereafter become members of the association. There is a provision giving powers to this association to make by-laws which shall determine the qualifications of persons who are to become members. That seems to me to be a very usual and very intelligible clause. This House may consider whether it will or will not give to this association the power of determining who shall be eligible for membership. I do not see anything in this Bill that would give a man the right to practice the profession of medicine, or that would give him any status, other than that of a member of the association.

Mr. LEMIEUX: In this Act, to incorporate the Architectural Institute of Canada, section 9 reads as follows:

Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to encroach upon the rights and privileges conferred upon any association of architects having a charter or which may hereafter have a charter from the legislature of any province of Canada.

Is there a similar section in this Bill?

Mr. REID, (Grenville: I merely mentioned that Act to show that an Act similar to this one had beet passed by Parliament, that it has been done before.

Mr. EMMERSON: That does not make it right.

Mr. GRAHAM: The distinction between the two Bills is this, that all architects are architects, but all doctors are not doctors. That depends on what authority they are qualified under. This Bill is establishing a body which may work an injustice to some other body that has recognition in the provinces but that will not have recognition in this association.

Mr. STEELE: This measure, as has been already pointed out, has nothing to do with the education or licensing of medical men. It provides simply for the incorporation of a number of medical men for the purposes enumerated in it. There is nothing in it which says that any class shall be excluded from membership or shall be attacked by the members. If a number of medical men wish to unite for similar purposes, and wish to have incorporation, I do not see why they should be denied that privilege, when almost every other class of citizens could secure it. Mention has been made of the Roddick Bill; but that was for an entirely different purpose. It was for the licensing of medical men, a matter entirely out of the jurisdiction of this Parliament and entirely within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures. That Bill also provided for the examination of medical men, a matter with which this Parliament could not deal, but with which the provincial legislatures had the right to deal. It seems to me that if it be within the jurisdiction of this Parliament to pass an Act such as this—and the Minister of Justice has given us his opinion that it is, and the passage of previous Bills certainly supports that opinion—then, why should this Bill be objected to? The promoter of the Bill has agreed to strike out the clauses which were criticised this afternoon, to meet the objections raised. Why, therefore, continue discussion on the Bill ? The whole matter is of so little importance that it is not worth the time this House spent on it this afternoon. It makes very little difference to the Canadian Medical Protective Association whether it is incorporated or not, and it makes little difference to the public. I believe that the public receives protection from this Bill, and if the medical men in this House were free to tell all they have experienced in the practice of their profession with regard to the objects of this Bill, we could enlighten hon. gentlemen as to the need of some such legislation as this for the protection of the public.

Mr. KNOWLES : I do not think the members of this committee will accept my hon. friend's statement that this Bill is proposed for the good of the public. Evidently the hon. gentleman himself thinks so, and I do not question his desire to state what he thinks to be correct. I do not think that an association of this kind comes here to benefit the public; they desire to benefit themselves. The Minister of Justice says he likens this Bill to what we would call a business or a commercial Bill, but I would point out that men are admitted into an ordinary company incorporated by this Parliament because they buy and pay for their stock, but men who are admitted to membership in this association do not come in under similar conditions, and I think the Bill should not be considered as being of the class suggested by the Minister of Justice. No money will be paid in, except, perhaps, a membership fee, and I think it is unreasonable that the members should be allowed to run the corporation in such manner as they see fit. They may allow anybody to become a member; they may have male or female nurses, and may make such regulations in this respect as they choose. I am not saying anything about that particular phase of the matter, but we should know to whom we are giving this authority. With regard to the statement of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Steele) affirming the indifference of the medical people as to whether the Bill passes or not, I would suggest that if this is all they care about it, that the Bill be withdrawn. We are not in the habit of granting legislation to people who do not want it, and, besides, we have more important matters to deal with—the naval Bill, for instance. If the members of the profession do not care whether or not they obtain this legislation, and my hon. friend says they care very little—we should not be anxious to devote any additional time to its discussion. With reference to the qualifications for membership in this association, is every qualified practitioner entitled to become a member, provided be pays the necessary fee, and does the matter of his proposed membership require to be voted upon?

Mr. CHABOT : Any duly qualified physician or surgeon in Canada can become a member of this association.

Mr. KNOWLES: We should have such knowledge of the by-laws and procedure of this corporation as will assure us that we are not giving this power to a closed corporation, which, if it has a grudge, or some other reason for doing so, could keep out of its ranks part of the profession. If I am a duly qualified practitioner in the province of Saskatchewan, have I the right to come to the doors of this association, with my fee of $1 or $10, as the case may be, and demand admittance?

Mr. SCHAFFNER : Yes.

Mr. KNOWLES: I have not seen that in the by-laws.

Mr. NICKLE: It is in by-law No. 7.

Mr. KNOWLES: I think this should be in the Bill, because the people who are being incorporated in this legislation could change their regulations to-morrow. We are not dealing with the by-laws—I for one do not know what they are—and, if it is desired to protect the public, we should put this in the Bill and not leave it entirely to a by-law which is controlled by the corporation.

Mr. BUREAU: The association has the right to pass by-laws and determine qualifications of persons who are desirous of joining it. By this Bill we incorporate an unincorporated association already existing under the same name. What control is obtained over the association as to its by-laws? In the Private Bills Committee we had demands for incorporation in connection with the accountants, and their by-laws are approved by the lieutenant governor. In this case, the members of the Association file a copy of the by-laws with the Secretary of State, and publish them in the Canada Gazette. If a man has a grievance, where does he go if he desires to find out where to obtain his rights? If the by-law was made subject to the approval of the Governor General in Council, and a man had a grievance with respect to the matter, there would be a tribunal through which he could obtain a settlement of his grievance.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I desire to move an amendment to subsection (c) of this clause. As I have said, that is the clause which, according to their by-laws, the association is more anxious to preserve intact than any other. According to the by-law I quoted some time ago, the case is so one-sided that I do not think the words 'unjustly brought or threatened against them,' bear the interpretation that they should convey to one reading the Bill. I would therefore move:

That clause (c) of Bill 89 be amended by striking out all the words after 'give' in the first line, and substituting therefor the following: 'assistance to members of the association who have been unjustly prosecuted for malpractice or otherwise after such case has been dealt with by the courts and the said party exonerated.'

Mr. BUREAU : Is it the purpose of this amendment to provide that if a man is prosecuted for malpractice, and loses his case, he shall be entitled to compensation?

Mr. SUTHERLAND: After he has been exonerated by the courts.

Mr. BUREAU: What are you going to do with him? Do you give him some compensation? If he is exonerated by the courts, he goes scot free. I do not understand the meaning of the amendment, and I would like to know exactly what it means.

Amendment negatived.

On sub-section (d):

Mr. BARKER: I suggested an amendment:

To promote and support all measures likely to improve the medical profession.

Mr. CHABOT: I will accept that if the wording is changed to: 'Improve the practice of medicine.'

Amendment changed as suggested, agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON: Mr. Chairman, I would like you to read sub-section (d) as you consider it has been adopted. The promoter of the Bill suggested that it should read 'to encourage honourable practice,' and that all the other words of the sub-section should be stricken out. If it has been amended in that way, it will satisfy my clients, but I do not want it to go through unless it is satisfactory.

The CHAIRMAN: The sub-section as adopted reads:

To encourage honourable practice of the medical profession.

Mr. HENDERSON: Then I beg to move that it be reconsidered.

Motion for reconsideration negatived.

On section 4—by-laws to continue:

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Chabot moved that clause 4 be struck out, and the following be substituted therefor:

The association in general meeting may from time to time pass rules and by-laws of the said association, in so far as they are not contrary to law, or to the provisions of this Act, in like manner, alter or amend the same.

Mr. BUREAU: They have that in clause 6, which says:

The association may make such by-laws and rules, not contrary to law or the provisions of this Act, as it may deem necessary with regard to the government and management of its business and affairs.

Now clause 4, if I understand it rightly, provides for the adoption by the association of the by-laws of the unincorporated society, while, under the new clause, the incorporation shall have power to pass by-laws not contrary to this Act. It simply reaffirms what they say in clause 6.

Mr. NICKLE: The suggested amendment, as proposed by myself this afternoon, was to substitute clause 4, which the Chairman has just read, for the clause as printed in the Bill, and then when clause 6 is reached it can be dropped.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 6—powers as to by-laws and rules:

Mr. NICKLE: I move that this clause be deleted.

Mr. BUREAU: In this clause you define what are the subjects upon which they will have the power to pass by-laws—qualification, classification, rights, admission and expulsion of members, and so on. I do not think that I have heard in the amended clause 4 any enumeration of the subjects on which the association may pass by-laws.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. EMMERSON: I wish to move reconsideration of clause 3.

Motion agreed to.

On section 3, sub-section (b)—promissory notes, etc.

Mr. EMMERSON: I want to call the attention of the committee to that portion of the clause which refers to the making and acceptance of promissory notes, and so forth. I would ask if, in the opinion of those who are promoting the Bill and of the members of this committee, it is usual to grant powers of that kind to an association of this character.

An hon. MEMBER: They will never need it.

Mr. EMMERSON: They never will, and it has not been usual to put it in. It seems like playing with legislation to put that in.

Mr. REID (Grenville): They might want to raise temporarily some money at the bank in connection with the association, and it would be well to have that cause in.

Mr. EMMERSON: I venture to say that in any of the Bills of this character we have passed, we have never granted such a power.

Mr. REID: They might want a small amount from the bank, I do not think the clause would do any harm.

Section agreed to.

Mr. BUREAU: We give, by clause 4, which has been substituted for the old clause, the power to this association to make by-laws at a general meeting. Now associations of this kind do not generally have this absolute power of making by-laws and ratifying them at general meetings, because as had been said by my hon. friend from Moosejaw, this is not a commercial corporation, and it is not a question of investing one's money and taking a chance on the men who are at the head of a corporation. We had occasion to discuss this matter in the Private Bills Committee and they were asked, what protection the people would have against the making of by-laws by the association. They said that these by-laws are submitted to the Lieutenant Governor of the province. They must be approved by somebody, and there must be a kind of court or tribunal, where a man who has any objection to a by-law may have a chance to submit it. But here you say that this association shall have the right at a general meeting to pass by-laws. You do not say it is on matters pertaining to the association. They have the general right to pass by-laws, provided they are not contrary to this Act. Now this Act is pretty vague, and they may pass a lot of by-laws that would not be contrary to the Act. We should amend this section by stating that these by-laws should be filed with the Secretary of State, published in the Canada Gazette, and, within fifteen days of publication, be given force and effect, after being ratified and approved by the Governor in Council.

Mr. GRAHAM: There are some other associations with which this one has been compared. Take for instance the fraternal societies in the province of Ontario by which thousands of people are affected. If they wish to change their by-laws or constitution in any vital way, they have to get the approval of the Inspector of Insurance before they can impose the change on the membership at large. If they want to make any change that would affect or might affect the standing of the society, they have to go to a higher authority to see that the rights of the members are protected. This is a pretty wide power to give an association of any kind, particularly one whose members derive their right or standing from the provincial authorities. It is going a long way to give them a right to make by-laws which will be subject to nobody but themselves. It might never be abused, and it might be. There are different grades in the medical profession, varying in degrees of excellence according to the school to which they belong. I think it is absolutely the fact that this association will be composed of one branch of these schools, or of one of these schools of thought or practice, and the others will practically not be in this association at all. Possibly, if they desired to get in under these by-laws, they might be specifically excluded

Mr. REID (Grenville): What clause are you referring to?

Mr. GRAHAM: I am talking about the question of their being allowed to make by-laws without reference to anybody.

Mr. REID: That is under clause 8.

Mr. GRAHAM: It would be a proper safeguard if the association, or the promoters of the Bill, would insert a clause that before they made any radical change in their by-laws or constitution these changes should be submitted to some authority, such as the Secretary of State, representing this Parliament that gives them their power of existence. Thus the medical profession at large would feel that they had some assurance that nothing would take place which would not be fair and the public would feel better if they had this safeguard. It might never be necessary, but in making a statute, you must assume that it will be literally interpreted and there might come a time when somebody might cease to take advantage of the absence of one word or clause from the law. It would not hurt the Bill at all and it would safeguard the public if a clause were put in to provide that any change in the constitution or by-laws must be submitted to the Secretary of State and given publication before becoming valid.

Mr. BUREAU: I move the insertion of the following as clause 7:

The by-laws of the association shall not come into force until they have been deposited in the Department of the Secretary of State, published in the Canada Gazette and received the sanction of the Governor in Council after one month has elapsed after such publication.

Between the publication and sanction there will be a month allowed for any person to take exception to the by-laws if he wishes to do so.

Amendment (Mr. Bureau) agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. LEMIEUX: I think that the committee will be disposed to adopt a new section of this Bill. I believe that we are encroaching on provincial rights but the Minister of Justice is satisfied with the Bill and I have therefore no more to say. The Minister of Justice is not in his seat at present but I think he would approve of the new clause I am going to suggest. The Minister of Customs referred a moment ago to a legislation similar to this which was adopted by this House in 1908 and by which we incorporated the Architectural Institute of Canada. Parliament added this clause to that Bill:

Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to encroach upon the rights and privileges conferred on any association of architects having a charter, or which may hereafter have a charter, from the legislature of any province of Canada.

I therefore propose that the following clause be added to this Bill:

Nothing in this Act shall be deemed to encroach upon the rights and privileges conferred upon any other similar association having a charter or which may hereafter have a charter, from the legislature of any province of Canada.

Amendment (Mr. Lemieux) agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved that the preamble be struck out.

Amendment (Mr. Sutherland) negatived.

Bill reported.

INTERCOLONIAL TRUST AND INVESTMENT COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 58, to incorporate Intercolonial Trust and Investment Company, (and recommending that the title be changed to Intercolonial Trust Company).—Mr. Barnard. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

An hon. MEMBER: We want some information with respect to this Bill.

Mr. ROGERS: As the promoter of the Bill is not present, I move that the committee rise and report progress.

Mr. GRAHAM: May I make a suggestion? I see this company uses the name Intercolonial Trust Company, and I notice there is a fire insurance company using the word 'Intercolonial' also, and not only that, but using the moose-head trade mark of the Intercolonial railway. It is questionable if this Parliament would allow a company to call itself the Grand Trunk Trust Company or the Canadian Northern Trust Company or the Canadian Pacific Trust Company, unless it were in connection with these companies, and I do not see why this company should be allowed to use the word 'Intercolonial,' in that it may be thought that the company is connected with the Government railways.

Mr. ROGERS: We will deal with that when we are considering the Bill.

Progress reported.

QUESTIONS.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

EMPLOYMENT OF G. ALPHONSE DUGAL.

Mr. GAUVREAU:

1. Is G. Alphonse Dugal, a former Conservative candidate against Mr. H. Bourassa in Labelle, in the employment of the Government?

2. If so, what position does he occupy, what is his salary and who recommended him?

Mr. PELLETIER: In what department is he?

Mr. GAUVREAU: (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what position is really occupied by that Mr. Dugal, who lives in this country and has been a candidate to the Federal House. I would like to know in what department he is employed. If the honourable Postmaster General is unable to tell me, I would ask him to inquire from the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Mr. BUREAU: Do you not know what is going on on your side?

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. member himself does not know.

Mr. BUREAU: He is in the employ of the Government and that ought to be enough.

Mr. GRAHAM: The usual practice is for each member of the Government to give his answer when the question affects different departments, and the answer is given to the House by the Secretary of State.

Mr. PELLETIER: We know that.

Mr. GRAHAM: But I heard the minister excuse himself for not answering on the ground that the question should be more definite.

Mr. BUREAU: The member of the Government who employed this man knows all about it.

Mr. PELLETIER: I asked the member for Temiscouata (Mr. Gauvreau) if he could say what department this gentleman was in, in order that it might save time inquiring in the different departments, and he refused to say. We know the Secretary of State answers the question after inquiry is made in different departments.

Mr. GRAHAM: Then there is no excuse for not answering the question if you know.

Mr. PELLETIER: When we are ready we will answer it.

Mr. GRAHAM: I suggest, Sir, that is not courteous to members of this House.

Mr. PELLETIER: Can we answer a question before we are ready?

Mr. GRAHAM: Yes, but there is an insinuation behind the statement you have just made.

Mr. PELLETIER: We will be ready to answer as soon as possible.

MANITOBA SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. CRUISE:

1. Has the Government received a copy of the following resolution passed by the Union of Manitoba Municipalities?

Resolution 17. That whereas there is in the northern municipalities of the province a very large amount of land which has been classed as swamp land, and which is at the present time unoccupied, and whereas a very large percentage of the swamp lands owe their classification to the conditions at present existing, they being covered with scrub, which prevents evaporation and the free run of water courses, and require but the work of the settler to convert them into arable land.

And whereas the northern municipalities of the province, from the large quantity or vacant and untaxable lands within their boundaries, rendering improvement slow and costly to the existing inhabitants, and this in a class of country where the building of roads is much more difficult than in prairie municipalities:

The convention would, therefore, ask the Dominion Government to throw open for homesteading the lands heretofore known as swamp lands.

2. Is it the intention of the Government to carry out the suggestion made by the Union of Manitoba Municipalities?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. Yes.
2. The matter is under consideration.

ALBERTA NATURAL GAS.

*Mr. BUCHANAN :

1. Has the Government received petitions and resolution from board of trade and municipal councils in Alberta, asking that the piping of natural gas out of the province of Alberta should be prohibited?
2. Does the Government consider that the Dominion has the power to prohibit the exportation of natural gas out of Alberta?
3. If so, does the Government intend taking action to meet the prayer of these petitions and resolutions?

Mr. CODERRE :

1. No such petitions or resolutions have been received.
2. Under the provisions of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act (chapter 16, 1907), the Governor in Council has power to regulate or prohibit the exportation of natural gas.
3. Answered by No. 1.

HOMESTEAD ENTRY FOR WOMEN.

Mr. BUCHANAN :

1. Has the Government received a petition asking that homesteading privileges should be extended to women?
2. Have women at any time been allowed the opportunity to enter for homesteads?
3. If a petition has been received, what action does the Government purpose taking upon its demands?

Mr. ROCHE :

1. Yes.
2. According to the Dominion Lands Act, homestead entry has been granted in cases of women who have satisfied the department that they are the sole head of a family, that is, a widow with minor children dependent upon her for support.
3. This matter is under consideration.

CONTRECŒUR LIGHTKEEPER.

Mr. LEMIEUX :

1. Has Ernest Gendron, lighthouse keeper of Contrecœur been dismissed? If so, when?
2. Who has replaced him?
3. At whose request?
4. Does the Government know that this keeper asserts that he never takes any part in politics?

Mr. HAZEN :

1. Mr. Ernest Gendron was lightkeeper at Contrecœur Verchères back light; (a) Yes; (b) 31st October, 1912.
2. Mr. Joseph Dupuy.
3. Mr. J. H. Rainville, M.P.
4. No.

FARNHAM MILITARY CAMP.

Mr. KAY:

1. How many acres of land are owned by the Government in Farnham in connection with the military camp?
2. How much did this land cost?
3. (a) What is the total sum spent in improvements thereon, (b) and how much of this has been spent since October 1, 1911?
4. Has any of this land been purchased since October 1, 1911?

Mr. HUGHES :

1. 1,303.39/100 acres.
2. $29,572.
3. (a) $48,900; (b) $7,324.
4. Yes, 129·25 acres.

ST. ARMAND MAIL CONTRACT.

Mr. KAY:

1. Who is the present contractor for carrying the mail between St. Armand station and Frelighsburg, and what is the amount of his contract?
2. Was his tender the lowest submitted? If not, what was the amount of the lowest tender?
3. What was the sum paid Mr. J. C. Beeman, the former contractor per annum?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. (a) Arthur Depatie. (b) $660 per annum.
2. Yes.
3. $662 per annum.

YARMOUTH HARBOUR DREDGING.

Mr. LAW:

1. Were tenders asked for the removal of Sollows Rock shoal and dredging in Yarmouth harbour in 1912?
2. If so, how many were received, from whom, and what was the amount of each tender?
3. On what date were the tenders received?
4. On what date was the contract awarded?

5. What caused the delay between receiving the tenders and the awarding of the contract?

Mr. ROGERS:

1. Yes.
2. One tender received from the Dominion Dredging Company, at $9 a cubic yard for class A, i.e., solid rock or boulders containing over two cubic yards, and 22½ cents a cubic yard for Class B which covers all other materials.
3. 6th August, 1912.
4. 19th August, 1912.
5. There was no unnecessary delay.

ATLANTIC, QUEBEC AND WESTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has the Minister of Railways and Canals given effect to the promise made by him in his letter to Mr. William Plender, trustee of the Charing Cross Bank, of June 12, 1912, to appoint an engineer and accountant to go over the lines of the Atlantic, Quebec and Western railway and the Quebec, Oriental railway, which it has been suggested the Government should acquire, with a view to ascertaining the usefulness of these properties from the standpoint of the Intercolonial, and decide what shall be done?
2. If not, does the Minister intend doing so, and when?

Mr. COCHRANE: 1 and 2. No promise was given in the letter referred to. It was merely a general statement that an examination of the suggested branch lines would be undertaken.

GLOUCESTER, N.B. MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. TURGEON:

1. In answer to tenders asked for by the Postmaster General for the carriage of the mails between Elm Tree and Madran and Devereaux, county of Gloucester, N.B., did Isidore F. Roy and Joseph A. Devereaux submit tenders? If so, what was the amount of each tender?
2. To whom has the contract been granted?

Mr. PELLETIER: When the post office at Devereaux was established on 1st November, 1912, the department arranged with Jos. A. Devereaux, the postmaster to perform the mail service between Devereaux and Elm Tree via Madran at $75 per annum. The service between Elm Tree and Madran at $32 was then superseded. The amount being under $200 no tenders were invited.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY SOUTHERN TERMINALS.

Mr. OLIVER:

Upon which side of the Saskatchewan river will the Southern terminals of the Hudson Bay railway be located?

Mr. COCHRANE: The matter is under consideration at the present time.

SOUTH AFRICAN VOLUNTEER WARRANTS.

Mr. OLIVER:

1. How many South African volunteer warrants have been issued to date?
2. How many have been registered to date?
3. How many have been located to date?
4. How many were registered but not located on December 31, 1911?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. 7,323.
2. 6,889.
3. 7,142.
4. 97.

GRONDINES MARITIME TELEPHONE STATION.

*Mr. DELISLE:

1. Has the Government erected in the parish of Grondines, county of Portneuf, a maritime telephone station?
2. If so, who has been appointed operators by day and night?
3. What are their names, ages, and salaries, respectively?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. Yes.
2. Answered by No. 3.
3. J. O. Paridis, day operator, aged thirty-eight years, $50 per month during season of navigation.

Laurent Paridis, night operator, aged nineteen years (appointed temporarily), $50 per month.

SOUTH MANCHESTER POST OFFICE.

Mr. SINCLAIR:

1. Who is the mail contractor between Boylston and South Manchester, N.S.?
2. What amount is payable to such contractor per year for performing the service?
3. Has there been an increase in the mileage of this route? If so, when was this change made and how much has the mileage increased, and if anything additional is payable to the contractor by reason of such increase, how much?
4. What gave rise to the increase, if any?
5. Who is the present postmaster at South Manchester, when was he appointed and what is his remuneration?
6. How many of the inhabitants of South Manchester, who received their mails at the South Manchester post office prior to the change in the location of the said post office, have since such change given notice to have their mail held at Boylston post office?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Charles David.
2. $120 per annum.

3 and 4. By removal of the South Manchester post office on the 1st of December, 1912, the distance between the two offices was increased from four to five and a half miles, entitling the contractor to $45 per annum in addition to the contract price given in question No. 2.

5. Mr. John J. Callaghan, appointed 1st of December, 1912. The salary of the office is $35 per annum.

6. The department has no information on this point.

ST. FABIEN POSTMISTRESS.

Mr. CARVELL:

1. Who recommended the appointment of Mrs. Thomas Bellavance as postmistress at St. Fabien, county of Rimouski?

2. Was there a recommendation, oral or in writing, made to the Postmaster General by the member for Rimouski concerning the above appointment?

Mr. PELLETIER: Mr. H. Boulay, M.P.

DOMINION LANDS AT WYNYARD.

Mr. NEELY:

1. What was the salary per month of the sub-agent of Dominion lands at Wynyard during the year 1911?

2. What is the present salary of the sub-agent of Dominion lands at Wynyard?

3. What was the number of homestead entries applied for at the Wynyard sub-agency during the year 1911?

4. What was the number of entries applied for at the sub-agency at Wynyard during the year 1912?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. $25 per month.
2. $50 per month.
3. 1911—227.
4. 1912—126.

TIMBER RESERVATION.

Mr. OLIVER:

1. Has the southeast ¼ of section 34, township 40, range 14, west of the 3rd meridian, been reserved for park purposes, or for any other reason?

Mr. ROCHE: This land was temporarily reserved with other lands in the vicinity in response to a petition signed by a large number of the residents in the vicinity, asking that a reservation be made in order to furnish a timber supply to the district.

DISMISSALS.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

1. Has the postmaster at Contrecœur been dismissed? If so, when and why?

2. Who has replaced him, and at whose request?

3. If it is for partisanship, does the Government know that the present postmaster is said to be not free from the same charge?

4. Has the mail carrier of the post office at Contrecœur Station been dismissed?

5. What is his name, how long has he had the contract, and what is his salary?

6. Who replaced him, at whose request, and what is his salary?

Mr. PELLETIER:

1. Yes. On the 20th June, 1912, for political partisanship.

2. Mr. Ephrem Lamoureux, by direction of the Postmaster General.

3. The department has no information on this point.

4, 5 and 6. Ulric St. Jean had a contract at $160 per annum, which expired on the 31st July, 1909. This contract was obtained by tender on 1st August, 1901, and was renewed in 1905. It was not renewed in 1909, but was continued as an overdue contract at the same price.

This contract contained a clause providing for its termination on three months' notice. This has been given and a new contract authorized with Ephrem Lamoureux at the same price.

Mr. LAW:

1. Why was Dr. C. A. Webster dismissed from the position of port physician at Yarmouth, N.S.?

2. Were any requests made for his dismissal? If so, by whom?

3. If any requests were made, were they verbal or in writing?

4. If any charges were made against Dr. Webster, were said charges investigated? If not, why not?

Mr. HAZEN:

1. The services of Dr. Webster were discontinued in the interest of the public service.

2. Yes. By persons enjoying the confidence of the minister.

3. Verbal.

4. The facts were sufficiently established not to warrant the expense of an investigation.

Mr. OLIVER:

1. When was Howard Douglas dismissed from the position of park superintendent?

2. What was his salary at the time of his dismissal?

3. What was the reason of his dismissal?

4. Who was appointed in his place, when was he appointed, and what is his salary?

Mr. ROCHE:

1. July 31, 1912.

2. Three thousand dollars ($3,000).

3. Because he was unreliable and was using his official position to advance his personal interests.

4. P. C. Barnard-Harvey, appointed October 21, 1912, salary $3,000 per annum.

Mr. LEMIEUX:

At whose request was Sylvain Lancup, postmaster of Petite Rivière East, county of Gaspé dismissed and for what reasons?

Mr. PELLETIER:

The postmaster was dismissed for political partisanship, by direction of the Postmaster General.

UNOPPOSED AND UNDISCUSSED MOTIONS.

For a copy of all petitions, resolutions, letters, telegrams and correspondence, relating to free or reduced transportation of hay over the Intercolonial railway for the farmers of Antigonish county, Nova Scotia, and also of the evidence taken and report made as to the shortage of hay in that and other of the eastern counties of Nova Scotia.—Mr. Chisholm (Antigonish).

For a copy of all complaints requirements, requisitions, petitions, and correspondence of all kinds made by the Sydney, N.S., Board of Trade, or by the citizens of the city of Sydney, or any of them, having reference to better and increased facilities on the Intercolonial railway on the Sydney division—Mr. Carroll.

For a copy of all requests, petitions, &c., made to the Government, or any department thereof, by the residents of Mira, county of Cape Breton, for subsidies for boats, wharf accommodations, or increased facilities on the Mira river.—Mr. Carroll.

For a return showing separately the amount paid by the Department of Indian Affairs for medical attendance on account of the Indians on the Micmac reserve of Ste. Anne de Restigouche, Quebec, for each year from 1900 to 1913, inclusive, and to whom paid.—Mr. Marcil.

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, recommendations, petitions and documents, relating to the appointment of Mr. Pierre Cournoyer as postmaster at St. Pierre de Sorel, county of Richelieu.—Mr. Cardin.

For a return showing the names of the buildings occupied by the Government as public offices, which are under rent, excepting the Centre, East, West and Langevin blocks; the street on which each of these offices is situated and the number of the street in each case.—Mr. Boulay.

For a return showing the stenographers and secretaries of the House of Commons, and the names of the members for whom each of them works; also the stenographers and secretaries of the Senate and senators, with the names of the senators for whom they work, respectively.—Mr. Boulay.

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, correspondence, charges, evidence, reports and other documents relating to the dismissal of Hugh R. McAdam as postmaster at Arisaig, N.S., and the appointment of Rev. Daniel L. Macdonald as his successor.—Mr. Chisholm (Antigonish).

For a copy of all regulations issued by the Minister of the Interior, relating to the disposition of Dominion lands between April 8, 1905, and October 12, 1911.—Mr. Oliver.

For a copy of all correspondence and documents between the Government of Canada or any officer thereof, and one Miss Mastin, of England, relating to a presentation of certain chinaware and other curosities, made to the Government by the said Miss Mastin, in memory of the defeat at the polls of the agreement relating to reciprocity with the United States.—Mr. Sinclair.

For a copy of all correspondence between the Minister of Public Works and H. Morel, M.P.P., for East Nipissing, in any way relating to the construction of a road or highway from North Bay to Sturgeon Falls, Ontario; and of all petitions, correspondence, surveys, and engineer's reports in any way connected with the building of the said road or highway.—Mr. Murphy.

For a copy of all memoranda, letters, papers, or other documents in the possession of the Department of the Interior relating to the N.W. ¼ of 8-49-26-4, and the S.W. ¼ of 7-49-28-4.—Mr. Oliver.

For a copy of all regulations relating to the disposition of Dominion lands made by the Minister of the Interior from October 12, 1911, to January 1, 1912, and of the regulations for the placing of half-breed scrip on homestead or other lands, made by the Minister of the Interior from October 12, 1911, to January 11, 1912.—Mr. Oliver.

For a copy of all letters and papers relating to the issue of half-breed scrip, warrant number 2155, certificate number 672, to Albert St. Denis, and the disposition of the said scrip.—Mr. Oliver.

For a copy of all memoranda, letters, papers and documents relating to the setting apart of a forest reserve on the north side of the Saskatchewan river opposite the city of Prince Albert.—Mr. Oliver.

NAVAL FORCES OF THE EMPIRE.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden for the second reading of Bill No. 21, to authorize measures for increasing the effective Naval Forces of the Empire, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Turriff thereto, resumed from February 21

Mr. J. P. O. GUILBAULT (Joliette): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, during the last three months a sufficient number of speeches were delivered, and those speeches were long enough to thoroughly inform the House as regards two main points in this debate: What are the respective policies of the Government and of the Opposition on this navy question?

The Government, on the ground of emergency, asks for an immediate contribution of $35,000,000, the said contribution to be granted to Great Britain for the purpose of building warships which are to be utilized for the common defence of the Empire and of Canada, the latter reserving the right to take them back later on, should we decide to have a navy of our own.

The Opposition, on the other hand, sees an emergency of a different kind which consists in carrying out the naval scheme which was provided for and initiated in accordance with the proposal of their leader in 1910.

However, there is another question still more important and in connection with which no stand has as yet been taken: Do the people approve of any of these policies? That question cannot be answered by anybody just now, considering that the people have not been directly appealed to.

I am aware that hon. gentlemen on the other side propose having this question settled through a general election; such is the purport of the amendment moved by the honourable member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff). Honourable gentlemen on the Opposition side have no risk to run, being already on the wrong side of the House; the worst that might happen to them would be to remain where they are. In my view they have not much of a chance to regain power, as the people will not stultify themselves.

In September, 1911, the people declared themselves against reciprocity and in favour of protection. They have not changed their minds. The reasons which then existed in favour of protection still exist to-day. The people want protection, and if an election was forthcoming, I am satisfied the Government would be returned with an increased majority.

Mr. PROULX (Prescott): (Translation.) Does the honourable member claim the people to be in favour of contribution?

Mr. GUILBAULT: (Translation.) I do not think so, neither were they in favour of the former Government's navy bill. A general election would not enlighten us as to the people's views on a certain question. The only means of ascertaining the people's views is to consult them on that point, and on that point alone, without reference to any other political question. That means is the plebiscite.

Mr. LAPOINTE (Kamouraska): (Translation.) That is safer.

Mr. GUILBAULT: (Translation.) It is a safer means and one not liable to mislead. Of course, I realize that a general election would give hon. gentlemen a better chance to regain power. But the Liberal party would not have a plebiscite in 1910 and would not consult the people in connection with this navy question. Why? Because the Liberal party were well aware that their Navy Bill would be generally condemned throughout the country.

To-day the following three questions might be put to the people in the form of a plebiscite: Are you in favour of maintaining the present state of things? Or, are you in favour of building a navy as proposed by the former Government? Or, in the third place, are you in favour of an emergency contribution, which may later on be made permanent, in favour of the British navy?

If the people were consulted on these three points, I think they would declare by a large majority in favour of maintaining the present condition of things, that is to say, they would not grant a contribution and they would not proceed with the building of the navy provided for by the former Administration, I mean a navy that would be controlled by Great Britain in time of war. For we should not forget that the policy of the former Administration provided for the establishment of a navy built by Caandians, with Canadian funds, manned by Canadians, belonging to them in time of peace, but in time of war under the exclusive control of Great Britain. What the people want, to my mind, is the building of cruisers of a type suitable for the protection of the country, and by protecting our country, we are helping Great Britain. The Canadian people is loyal to the Mother Country, and if ever she needs the help of her colonies, Canada will not refuse. But the country will not have loyalty imposed on it by means of legislation; it is desirous of having full credit for the loyalty displayed.

In connection with the plebiscite question, everything has been attempted to prevent its being squarely laid before the House. When the hon. gentleman from Maisonneuve (Mr. Verville) submitted his amendment to the amendment, a very shrewd move was resorted to, by retaining the amendment moved by the Opposition leader which approved of the policy of the former Government. Of course, it was well known that the independent members did not approve of that policy. Now, had they voted for the amendment to the amendment, their vote would have implied approval to a policy which they have repudiated; and by voting against the amendment to the amendment, they left themselves open to the charge of being opposed to an appeal to the people, in other words of being inconsistent. Accordingly those few words in reference to a consultation of the people were tacked to the amendment and that settled the matter. Fortunately, the honable member for Nicolet (Mr. Lamarche) saw through the game of our opponents and explained very fully why independent members should not vote in favour of this amendment to the amendment. What we are anxious for is to know the will of the people expressed without ambiguity, without any mixing up with other questions, in such a way that the verdict may not be obscured by other considerations, and be perfectly clear.

And in order to obtain that result, a plebiscite is necessary. The Liberal party will have nothing to do with it, neither will the Conservative party. Both parties are opposed to it; only the people want it, but I fear they will not have it.

Reference has been made on several occasions to the moral effect which the granting of a contribution or the building of a Canadian navy would have, the conclusion in the minds of foreigners being that Canada was desirous of assisting Great Britain. But such a vote would express merely the views of a majority of the 221 members of this House. How much greater would the effect be if we had instead the free and spontaneous expression of the will of a majority of hundreds of thousands of voters. Then truly could it be said that it expressed the will of the majority of the people, and not merely the views of a majority of the members. However there will be no appeal to the people, as both parties seem entirely in accord on this point.

To use the picturesque expression of the hon. leader of the Opposition, we are bound at any cost to enter into the vortex of militarism, without consulting the people, whether it be in the shape of the building of a navy which will be Canadian in time of peace and Imperial in time of war; or whether it be in the shape of an emergency contribution. In any case, we cannot avoid the vortex of militarism. The people think that the country's revenues should be for some years more applied to the development of our resources. It will always be soon enough for us to engage in militarism.

The people of Canada have never refused to assist Great Britain in time of need, as was stated so eloquently the other day by the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil) when he recalled the glorious deeds of the victor of Chateauguay and the never to be forgotten events of the war of 1812. The people have always shown themselves to be loyal to Great Britain, and we are the descendants of these stalwarts. But, I repeat it, we wish it to be a spontaneous deed on our part, the expression of the majority's will. The people will not be bound in spite of them. A consultation of the people such is the stand I have taken in the past, and that which I intend taking to-day.

Now, it is contended that in the province of Quebec, armaments are regarded with horror. That may be true to a certain extent. But do you know how that originated? It dates back to the nefarious warfare waged by the Liberal party in 1896 when the then leader of the Government, Sir Charles Tupper, asked for a million dollar grant for the purpose of providing rifles. Liberal leaders at the time carried on a violent campaign throughout the country. Now to-day the Opposition not only insists that we should provide for a navy, but their leader has gone even further and has stated that if Great Britain was in danger, or merely in competition with one, two, three or several great European nations, the Government might rest assured that we would put at the disposal of the Mother County not only thirty-five millions, but twice, three times and even four times that amount, nay, all the resources of Canada without a discordant voice being heard.

If there exists in the province of Quebec an anti-military feeling, that is the fault of the Liberal party, who have pushed things to extreme in the past.

So then I believe that the only means of getting at the opinion of the people is recourse to a plebiscite, and I shall within a few minutes move in that direction, seconded by my honourable friend from Rimouski.

Mr. GUILBAULT.

Before taking my seat, I wish to correct certain statements made by honourable gentlemen on the other side in the course of this debate. The honourable member for Welland (Mr. German) and the honourable member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) stated that the navy scheme of the former Government had been approved in 1911 in the province of Quebec. Such is not my view. What carried the day in the province of Quebec, was the personal prestige, the incomparable popularity of the leader of the Opposition. If it had not been for the name of Laurier, the Liberal party would have been utterly defeated in the province of Quebec. His name was used; the party organization was perfect, electoral funds abundant, the press devoted, and it is by means of all these that the Conservative party was routed in Quebec.

The honourable member for Rouville stated that some Conservative members had been returned by accident, particularly the member for Joliette. Of course, I admit that it was an accident as regards the Liberal party, who lost one of their supporters; but that accident was not in the programme and the Liberal party did all in their power to avert it. The honourable member for St. Hyacinthe (Mr. Gauthier) came to the assistance of his Liberal friend in the county of Joliette, but he did not succeed. The same may be said of the former member for Yamaska, Mr. Gladu, who on two different occasions came to address the people of the county of Joliette, and who in the evening of September 21, was a defeated candidate in his own constituency. That was an accident. The former member for Hochelaga, Mr. Rivet, also came to preach the Liberal gospel in Joliette; but on September 21 he met with the same accident and was defeated. The hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Bureau) also came to pay a visit to me, and on September 21, 1911, he saw his majority dwindle to almost nothing. The former leader of the Government, to-day leader of the Opposition, also condescended to pay me a visit, and on September 21, having met with an accident, ceased to be the Prime Minister of Canada, to become merely the leader of the Opposition.

Another accident occurred which I was about to forget. The honourable member for Rouville, who was at the time member for Gaspé, visited Joliette, and by the end of September he ceased to be member for Gaspé and simply remained member for Rouville.

Mr. PELLETIER: Another accident.

Mr. GUILBAULT: A whole series of accidents. Mr. Speaker, I shall not retain the House much longer, seeing that a large number of honourable gentlemen are still listed to deal with this subject.

Accordingly I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Boulay), as an amendment to the amendment—and I believe it to be perfectly in order—that the following words be added to the amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia: 'by plebiscite.'

Mr. BUREAU: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The hon. gentleman has in effect claimed that there was an arrangement between the two sides of the House that his amendment would be ruled out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no foundation in fact for that statement. So far as I know, it was never known by any person not even by myself until it came into my hands.

Mr. BUREAU: My point is well taken then?

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

Mr. GUILBAULT: I did not say there had been any such thing. I said that I expected there would not be such a thing with the sub-amendment to the amendment which I shall propose in a moment, and I shall say also that the amendment I shall propose has not been submitted to this House. I move as an amendment that the following words be added to the amendment of the hon. member for Assiniboia:

By way of referendum.

I move that, seconded by Mr. Boulay.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I do not know if my hon. friend can translate 'plebiscite' by 'referendum.' I see in the French he uses the word 'plebiscite.'

Mr. PELLETIER: There is some difference between referendum and plebiscite. The hon. gentleman (Mr.Guilbault) has used in French the word 'plebiscite.' I think it should be plebiscite in English also.

Mr. SPEAKER: In French it is plebiscite.

Mr. PELLETIER: I do not think it would be fair to use the word 'referendum,' when the member for Joliette (Mr. Guilbault) wants it to be 'plebiscite.'

Mr. GUILBAULT: Plebiscite—it should be the same thing in English.

Mr. SPEAKER: I notice that in the French copy it is 'by way of plebiscite.' In the translation it is 'by way of referendum.' In my judgment it ought to read 'by plebiscite' in the translation as well is in the original copy. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. BUREAU: Has the hon. member a seconder??

Mr. SPEAKER: Is there a seconder?

An hon. MEMBER: He has no seconder?

Mr. PELLETIER: The hon. member for Joliette should be allowed a chance to say if he has a seconder. This motion should not be choked off. It would not be fair.

Mr. SPEAKER: I am asking who the seconder is.

Mr. GUILBAULT: Mr. Boulay, of Rimouski.

Mr. PROULX: Does the hon. member for Rimouski consent to act as seconder?

Mr. PELLETIER: That is not fair; the hon. member has no right to say that. It is for the proposer of the motion to say who his seconder is.

Mr. BUREAU: The Speaker might ask.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not the Speaker's place to determine if anyone seconds a motion or not. The member who sends it up names his seconder, and that is the motion now before the House.

Mr. W. S. LOGGIE (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I rise with some diffidence to make a few remarks on this important question that has been discussed in the House for so long. Ever since the colonies now forming Canada were under the Crown of the United Kingdom, that Crown has done its part in maintaining a naval supremacy of the sea sufficient to protect us in time of need but without any expenditure on our part. Our industries have been fostered, our trade routes have been rendered secure because of the might and prestige of the Royal navy. The prowess of the Mother Country is to-day the same as of yore and she is willing and able to care for her daughter nation. Canada's position to-day in the eyes of the world is that of a great young nation in the greatest empire in the world, the oldest and the greatest of the young daughter nations and it behooves us to do our full duty in our relation to that empire. Our resources to-day per capita are the third of any nation in the world so that I say the time has come when we ought to put on our nationhood. Our total trade last year was over one billion dollars, and we can afford to set apart $35,000,000 for the naval defence of our Empire. It seems regrettable that we should go before the Empire and before the world on a question like this as a divided people. We ask the people of Canada to contribute $35,000,000 for the purpose of building ships when, as a matter of fact, practically one-half of the people of Canada are apparently opposed to any such policy. So I say in the interests of the Empire and for our own self-respect, we ought, on a great question like this, to come to some agreement whereby we can deal with it unanimously in this House. If eternal vigilance be the price of liberty, it is the price we ought to pay to maintain our bonds of love and affection for our King and the Empire, and what we decide upon naval matters should be unanimous if we are to do our full duty. Not one hon. gentleman in this House will dispute the fact that fiscal and political matters are primarily of Canadian concern and Canadian people and the Canadian Parliament should be supreme in matters of defence.

After this brief introduction, let me narrate briefly what has led up to the present situation. We need not go further back in history than the time of the notice by Mr. Asquith in the British Parliament in 1909 that there was a great increase in naval armament by foreign powers. You will remember that alarm was caused in all British territory by the statement. You will recall I am sure what happened in Canada soon after that. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) brought forward a resolution setting out in an eloquent manner Canada's duty to herself and to the Empire of which she forms such an important part. On that occasion the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government to-day was very explicit. I have a few quotations from the speech that he made on that occasion. On page 3515 of 'Hansard,' March, 1909, the Prime Minister is reported to have said:

> But Mr. Speaker let us not forget also that a national status implies national responsibility.
>
> It is no use for us in Canada to speak of this country as a nation and to shirk in any manner from the discharge of our national responsibility.

And then he asks:

> What are these responsibilities?
>
> Acknowledged in every civilized community, recognized among all great nations of the earth, a primal responsibility is the defence of their territories and the protection of their commerce.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, are these not the motives, the plans, and the proposals of one-half of the people of Canada to-day as represented by the members on your left? The right hon. gentleman went on to say:

> 'In my opinion, not less one half of the amount appropriated for defence should be devoted to naval instead of military defence.

What does that mean? The right hon. gentleman to-day proposes to give what, if capitalized, is equal to $1,500,000 per annum. That is all that is involved in this proposed gift of $35,000,000 to construct three ships. The interest on $35,000,000 and also a sum set apart as a sinking fund, would just amount to $1,500,000 per year, and yet the right hon. gentleman in March, 1909, was of opinion that not less than one-half of the amount appropriated for military defence should be devoted to naval defence. How much is that, Mr. Speaker? If you turn to the estimates, you will find that there is no less a sum than upwards of $10,000,000 appropriated for the coming year for military defence; and yet he asks Canada, in connection with this momentous matter, to bear a burden of practically $1,500,000 annually. He gives as a reason that we should have ships to defend our shores and our commerce, for he asks later on: 'Where is the great market of Canada to-day? And then he tells us that the great market is in the Motherland. There is another passage of the speech, which the right hon. gentleman made on that occasion, that I desire to quote. It is this:

> I desire that the policy of Canada on this great question, and the resolution announcing it, should meet with the absolute and unanimous approval of this Parliament and of the country. This is too great a question for the introduction of party strategy.

I regret exceedingly that it has been made a question of party strategy, but the right hon. gentleman was the guilty party when he supported the resolution of the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk), when he sat on this side of the House. Not long afterwards that resolution passed the House—on division? No, it was a unanimous resolution, brought forward by the hon. member for North Toronto, and supported by the right hon. the present Prime Minister, with an amendment moved by the leader of the Government of the day, and concurred in by the present Prime Minister. It was unanimously passed in this House. I say Mr. Speaker that it represented the voice of the people of Canada on that occasion, and nothing has really occurred to change the situation in that regard. It has represented the voice of the people of Canada from that day until now.

Perhaps I may say one word regarding the amendment to the amendment that has been moved by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Guilbault). I understand that his amendment is in favour of a plebiscite being taken on this matter, and that the effect of his remarks was that three propositions should be placed before the people of Canada, namely, the proposition of the Government, the proposition of the Opposition, and a do-nothing policy. I for one am opposed to such an amendment, and shall not vote for it.

The next point, to which I wish to refer, relates to the introduction of the Naval Act. That Act was introduced by the leader of the Opposition and was carried after a long discussion. So far as I am concerned, I regret that this matter got into partisan politics. The right hon. the leader of the Government to-day had but a few months previously voted for the resolution I have already referred to, and as I have pointed out, he had spoken in a most enthusiastic manner of the course that should be followed, namely, that Canada should have a navy of her own to protect her commerce and her territory. Following the resolution and the passing of the Act came the Drummond and Arthabasca election, and the matter became still more a political football. In that election the Nationalists put up a candidate to let the world know that their policy was against Canada taking a part in naval defence which would take their sons away to be disembowelled on our ships in foreign wars. That would not have been so bad, Mr. Speaker, if it had not been for the fact that while that election was going on the sentiment and doctrine preached by the Nationalists received the support of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster), and of the chief whip of the Conservative party. Thus they identified themselves with the Nationalists. They shook hands over the matter, took the Nationalist party in their arms, and led them along so that they might beat Laurier, no matter what happened. That seemed to be the desire on that occasion.

The next division is the dissolution and the election of 1911. I would like to read a few words from the platform of the Nationalists on that occasion. This is what Mr. Bourassa said:

> But confident in the greatness and efficiency of the principles of centralization and of autonomy as solemnly proclaimed and recognized since more than half a century by the authorities of Great Britain and those of Canada, we are opposed to any new policy which would entangle us in distant wars, foreign to Canada.

Any policy that would entangle us in distant wars that are foreign to Canada ! A certain party in the province of Quebec incorporated that phrase in their platform and I understand that some twenty or thirty seats were won in that province on that platform. I do not find very much fault with that, because every man in this country has a right to do as he pleases. But this is what I find fault with: In the city of Halifax, on the 12th or 13th of September, the right hon. leader of the Government held a political meeting and he was supported by no less a representative gentleman than Sir Hibbert Tupper. On that platform, in the presence of the leader of the Government and on his behalf, Sir Hibbert Tupper made this statement:

> He had in the past condemned Mr. Bourassa and his policy, but in the face of the danger presented by this reciprocity pact he would welcome Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Monk or any one else who would help to defeat this agreement.

Could there be a stronger invitation to the Nationalist party to join in and help to defeat the Laurier Government that had enacted the naval policy ? The leaders of the Nationalist policy in Quebec promised the people that the Act on the statute book would be repealed. Then, what happened? The right hon. leader of the Government formed a Cabinet and that coalition of Nationalists and Empire defenders joined hands to advise the Governor in Council as to what would be the naval policy of this young nation as affecting our relations with the Mother Country. When Parliament assembled the first step towards carrying out this policy of repealing the Naval Act was a notice that it would be repealed by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Mr. Hazen).

I want to say a word about the visit to London and the return. Notice that in these twelve or eighteen months this political football was getting larger and larger and when the right hon. leader of the Government and those associated with him returned to Canada and made known the policy that they proposed to the people, that political football cracked and the ex-Minister of Public Works (Mr. Monk) escaped unscathed. I have not one word to say against him. I am, of course, opposed to his policy, but when he found that the Government of the day was going contrary to the understanding that is alleged to have existed, that no expenditure for naval purposes would be made without an appeal to the country, he resigned his position as a member of the Cabinet.

Let me say a few words about the proposal. The first section of the Bill tells us that Canada proposes to expend $35,000,000 for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval services of the Empire. I quite agree with that, I have no objection to it, I will vote for it heartily, but it is the following clauses that I object to and I will frankly tell you why I object to them. I do not suppose that it is necessary to read these clauses but I shall read the summaries. This money is to be used to construct battleships or cruisers, the ships to be for the common defence of the Empire on terms to be arranged with the Imperial Government. The terms proposed, I understand, are that the ships are to be placed in the hands of the Imperial Government as soon as constructed, unmanned, and no provision made for manning or maintaining them. I frankly tell you, Sir, that I am unequivocally opposed to the last three clauses of the Bill, clauses 3, 4 and 5, and I will give my reasons why. You propose expending this money on wrong principles. The proposal is un-Canadian and not in the best interests of the Empire as a whole. You propose building three ships in that way, equipping them and placing them at the disposal of the Admiralty. This means that you leave the British taxpayers to bear the annual cost of maintenance which will be much more capitalized than the cost of the construction or value of the ships. You are actually, by this principle, asking the British taxpayer to do more regarding these three ships than you are doing yourself. I object again because you propose that the British taxpayer shall not only pay the cost of maintenance, but shall manage our property in time of peace. That is contrary to the principles of our Canadian constitution; it is contrary to the spirit and principles of true democracy, it is not self-respecting; it is not magnanimous; it is unworthy of a self-respecting, wealthy daughter-nation, and tends to weaken the golden chain that binds the dominions over the seas to the Crown. You say that these ships are for the common defence of the Empire, but I say that the conditions are unworthy of a wealthy and loyal daughter-nation.

We say on this side of the House that the money should be expended on two of the greatest ships in the world, and the balance on the necessary smaller ships of the most approved and latest type to complete two fleet units to be manned and maintained by Canada, and to be managed by Canada in time of peace in close connection with the Admiralty, our Canadian men to be interchangeable with men from the Royal navy, our ships, while in the zone set apart by the Admiralty, to be absolutely under our control in times of peace, patrolling the waters, as I said, set apart by the Admiralty, and when in foreign waters subject to the rules of the Admiralty as stated for the occasion. It seems to me that we could agree on some terms along this line. The Government of course would not be expected to altogether accept the suggestions of the Opposition, but inasmuch as the people of Canada have pronounced upon this matter, we ought not, in our own interest and in the interest of the Empire, to appear as a divided people. Is it not possible for us to come together on some plan whereby this matter can be disposed of to the credit of the Canadian people?

Let me submit another reason why I think my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries ought to accept some proposal along the line of the unanimous finding of Parliament in 1909. The proposal that we on this side of the House make will have this effect: The argument of the Prime Minister for a vote of $35,000,000 to be used in the building of ships in the United Kingdom is based upon the plea that it is urgent, that there is need, that there is an emergency. I shall deal with that later on, but that is neither here nor there for the present so far as my argument is concerned. If there is an emergency we can deal with it as quickly and more efficiently by adopting the amendment moved by my right hon. leader (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) than can be done by the Bill before the House. If an emergency is in sight, the King in Council can place any one or more of the ships that are available at the disposal of the Admiralty for operation in the zone set apart for them, or if occasion should arise, they can place them along the firing line against the enemy, or in waters where our Empire's interests are subject to invasion and they can be absolutely under the control of the Admiralty while war lasts. In other words, if the emergency so much flaunted about is or will be at hand when two of our ships are constructed and equipped, they can be immediately placed at the disposal of the Admiralty; and also our sons who are trained to do naval service on board such vessels, and whatever men we are able to train in time, can be supplied by the Admiralty but paid by Canada. Then, following along the lines of the amendment moved by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition and the unanimous resolution of the House in 1909, we should energetically go forward with the construction of the ships in Canada, calling for tenders for the building of the smaller ships of the unit in Canada within a definite period. I say we should do more; it is not in the amendment, I admit; but we should call for separate tenders for the building in Canada of the two capital ships within a definite period, and a separate tender for building the said two capial ships in the United Kingdom within a definite period. When we got our tenders, we should act like men and put the work into execution at once. Then, let us act as a wealthy young daughter nation, with hearts overflowing with love and devotion to our Empire as a whole, indicated by the white flag that will be hoisted on the stern of each of our ships.

Let me refer the House to a matter that I think bears very closely on what I have already said, and that is this: The policy of Mr. Borden is in effect that the three ships proposed are to be manned and maintained by British taxpayers, also that the three ships are to be in addition to the regular programme of the British Parliament, and more than Prime Minister Asquith said was necessary to maintain the British standard of superiority. But don't forget, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Churchill, speaking at the Shipwrights' dinner on the 4th of May last, made reference to the anticipated visit of Canada's representatives and said:

> If the main development of the past ten years has been the concentration of the British fleet in decisive theatres it seems to me and I dare say to you not unlikely that the main naval development of the next ten years will be the growth of the effective naval force in the Great Dominion over the seas. Then we shall be able to make what I think will be found to be the true division of labour between the Mother Country and her daughter states, that we should maintain a sea supremacy against all comers at the decisive point and that they should guard and patrol all the rest of the British Empire.

Mark the words, Mr. Speaker. Could there be words more definite, or stronger in support of the proposition made to the country by the right hon. leader of His Majesty's loyal Opposition? Could there be stronger words in confirmation of the unanimous vote of this House in 1909? These are the sentiments of Mr. Churchill as late as May last. Then, on the 22nd of July, the First Lord of the Admiralty made a speech in the House of Commons in which, referring to the visit of Mr. Borden and his colleagues, he said:

> Mr. Borden wished that the aid of Canada should be an addition to the existing progress, and that any step that Canada may take may directly strengthen the naval forces of the Empire—the margin available for its security.

Will hon. gentlemen note that in May Mr. Churchill spoke what seemed to be the views of the Admiralty—and this was shortly before the arrival of Mr. Borden in London—and that his speech of the 22nd of July was made after Mr. Borden had left London. Is it not a reasonable assumption that Mr. Borden sought the concurrence of Mr. Churchill along the lines of some policy that would not unduly conflict with the promises to repeal the Naval Act, and meet the emergency political exigencies of the occasion? Mr. Churchill said that the Royal Navy was keeping pace with the German navy, and also that his proposals were to increase the striking force of the navy with additional squadrons, and he did not propose making the navy stronger in the North sea than his present programme, because to do so would be unnecessary and wasteful. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Mr. Asquith, on the same date, in the House of Commons, said:

> There never has been a moment and there is not now, when we have not been overwhelmingly superior in naval force to any combination that could reasonably be expected against us.

On the same occasion the leader of the Government in the United Kingdom stated that it would be but waste and unwisdom to build more battleships than those provided for in the Admiralty programme. Canada's programme was not then known, and his reference would not include the proposal in the Bill now before this House. Mr. Asquith said:

> I have always held that it is a very great mistake in such a shifting art as shipbuilding to make your provisions too far in advance, or you may find you are left with ships which are obsolete, out of date, and which are not really fit for the growing requirements and exigencies of naval warfare in which case you will have lost your money and will have to spend it over again.

It would seem that the Premier of the United Kingdom and the Minister of the Naval Department consider the programme of the Admiralty sufficient to cope with any reasonable expectation of emergency. The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom thus resisted an enlarged programme of building ships. We in Canada, I am sure, appreciate the fact that although this was the view of Mr. Asquith on the 22nd of July, when later the Government of Canada through the Prime Minister offered to build three ships and place them at the disposal of the Admiralty, the offer would be favourably commented upon, although it meant an additional burden to the taxpayer of the United Kingdom to man and maintain them. Thus it was heralded from one end of the Dominion to the other what a magnanimous proposition was made by Canada for the defence of the Empire. Mr. Borden stipulated that the three ships which he proposed must be in addition to the British programme, whereas, according to Mr. Asquith's speech, the British programme is sufficient to meet the situation as it now exists. In effect we put the burden on the United Kingdom to man and maintain three ships more than the Admiralty programme of the 22nd July provides for. That provision is made for some years in advance, and the United Kingdom is none the less bound to continue her building programme because of Canada's ships, because Canada stipulates that her three ships are to be extra. Is this the wisest course for a young nation like Canada to pursue? May we not surmise that Germany will take a hand in building one or two extra capital ships to meet the three Canadian ships which are to be over and above the British programme? That we should put the Empire in that position is not the wisest policy.

The right hon. the Prime Minister, in introducing the resolution and speaking in regard to the Bill before the House, gave as a reason for the Bill and for the resolution that we in Canada could not have a navy for twenty-five to fifty years. Is this statement warranted by facts? If the people of Canada can install a million dollar plant to build, in a specified time, one of the greatest bridges in the world, namely the Quebec bridge, is it a reasonable proposition that we in Canada cannot build the ships to make a start for a Canadian navy? If contractors of substantial means and long experience offer and bind themselves to build the ships here within a specified time, why does the Prime Minister threw cold water or a wet blanket on this laudable proposition to start steel ship-building in Canada, on a scale in keeping with Canada's advancement along other industrial lines? Our naval school cadets have recently practically all successfully passed examinations in the United Kingdom. If Australia can maintain and man a fleet unit, and do so promptly, is it good statesmanship to say that Canada is not equal to such a task?

Another argument made to buttress the resolution and the Bill by the right. hon. gentleman is this: Why should we have a Canadian navy, when we can have the protection of the Royal navy and have our ships in the fighting line of the Royal navy? What do you think of a statement like that in the face of the statement made by the present right hon. gentleman who leads the House on the 29th of March, 1909, which was exactly the opposite. He stated that it was our duty, our self-respecting duty to do that. Now he says: Why should we have a Canadian navy? Let me answer first: Why should we not have a Canadian navy? Because we owe it to ourselves and to the Empire to have one. Canada has now reached the position of a wealthy young nation within the greatest empire under the sun. The people of Canada through their Parliament have pronounced unanimously in favour of expenditure along the lines of a Canadian navy, something that will take root and grow, something that will give tangible evidence of our love and devotion to our homes and our Empire. It is no argument to say that we have the protection to the Royal navy. We have had that since our childhood, in our days as colonies and in our venture as a union of colonies.

I wish to refer to one other statement that the right hon. the Prime Minister made to strengthen his argument in favour of the resolution and the Bill. He referred to the last clause in the memorandum of the Admiralty, which has been read several times in the House, and it is not necessary to put it on 'Hansard' again. There is not a suggestion in the last clause of the memorandum that it is not the part of wisdom to go on with the Canadian navy; the suggestion is that we should include capital ships. There is not a word about the number of ships. Bearing in mind the Admiralty's finding of 1909 and 1911, it means that the Admiralty suggests as the most effective way to give immediate aid would be to add capital ships to our programme. The clause does not suggest giving these ships to England to man. There is not a hint in that last clause that we are to hand these ships over to the Admiralty in time of peace, to be manned and managed by the Parliament of the United Kingdom instead of the Parliament of Canada. May we not assume that the proposition to build two capital ships of the description set out, to be manned and maintained in time of peace by Canada, is what the Admiralty preferred. It is just what Mr. Winston Churchill stated as late as May last. I am sure Canada can well afford to add two capital ships to the programme of the Navy Act on the statute book, and in doing so we are following along the lines set out in the memorandum. There is no authority in the memorandum for saying that the United Kingdom asked us to build and hand over in time of peace these capital ships. More than that, if there be an emergency in sight, when the two capital ships mentioned in the amendment moved by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier are completed, the Governor in Council has authority to hand them forthwith to the Admiralty, if emergency is in sight. Is it not more businesslike for a rich young nation like Canada to build, man as far as possible, and maintain her ships in time of peace and, if unfortunate war ever comes, then our ships and men will be under the management of the Admiralty? From the remarks made by the right hon. gentleman in reference to the Defence Committee, I gathered that he had come to some arrangement, which had not been previously effected, whereby Canada should be represented on that Defence Committee. If I am wrong, I ask to be excused, but I certainly drew that conclusion from the remarks of the right hon. gentleman, I find, as a matter of fact, that

> The unanimous view of all those present at the Imperial conference on May 30, 1911, was that the representation of the dominions should be not by the High Commissioner but by ministers who would be responsible to their own colleagues and Parliament.

If the hon. gentleman in his speech conveyed the idea that he had arranged with the British Government for Canada's representation on the Imperial Defense Committee, it was an error, because that had been arranged before the hon. gentleman went to London last summer.

I have here a number of quotations from speeches made in the British Parliament, affirming the idea that the superiority of the naval forces of United Kingdom on the North Sea is beyond question. I shall not take up the time of the House by placing them on 'Hansard,' as they are, in effect, along the lines of Mr. Churchill's speech at the shipwrights' dinner, as well as the statements he made on July 22.

I now desire to make brief reference to a few remarks made by hon. gentlemen opposite. I never sat in this House and listened to a more partisan speech than that made by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket), whose remarks, to my mind, were not a proper criticism of the subject matter before the House. In speaking to one of the clauses of the amendment, he said:

> That clause contains one statement of fact, which is untrue. It states that the Naval Service Act of 1910 was passed in pursuance of the resolution passed unanimously by this House in the month of January, 1909.

I think this should be March, 1909.

The resolution of 1909, which has been quoted again and again in the course of this debate, required, and did so very plainly and distinctly in connection with any naval service that might be organized in Canada, that it should be in asssociation with and in close relation to the British Admiralty, and on lines suggested by the British Admiralty.

If a fleet unit is placed by Canada in the Atlantic zone, what does it do? The Admiralty has set apart certain waters which extend farther south than Bermuda. and is within easy reach of the other West India Islands and Newfoundland. If the Canadian Pacific zone is patrolled by Canadian squadrons, it will most asssuredly relieve the necessity of sending a further unit to the Pacific from the Royal navy, and thus give further superiority at home, and the movements of the other British squadrons will not be required in the Pacific zone, in time of peace at any rate. I refer hon. gentlemen to the speech of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, page 1413 of 'Hansard,' where they will find that he said in effect that Canada could have played a great part in the protection of the Empire if she had joined with Australia and carried out the suggestion of the Admiralty and built a fleet unit for the Pacific. He also stated that the placing of these squadrons in the zones would directly promote the security of the dominions adjacent to the several zones, and protect our trade routes on the Atlantic and Pacific. I would ask hon. gentlemen to note particularly the fact that the hon. gentleman stated the motive of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the right hon. gentleman who leads His Majesty's loyal Opposition, to be a false Imperialistic colouring to the Opposition schemes. In other words, he claimed that what Sir Wilfrid did was to put a false Imperialistic colouring upon the Opposition scheme. In reality, he says, they but accentuate the separation between Canada and the Empire; such a statement, is unworthy of criticism. He says forsooth that what the right hon. the leader of the Opposition did accentuated the separation of Canada and the Empire. He laid great stress on what he called a useless separatist Canadian navy and upon the fact that we were protected by the prestige of the Royal navy. Who on this side of the House said that we were not? We have always been protected by the prestige of the British navy. We are to-day; we always will be. More than that, the joint fleets on the Pacific would probably be almost equal to any one power. In the same way if our fleet units were attacked by a stronger power we could not expect to win. But listen to what the Admiralty has to say to that. Hon. gentlemen lay great stress on the statement that a Canadian unit on the Atlantic and on the Pacific would be useless and wasteful and separatist. Let us hear what the Admiralty have to say on that. After bringing forward at the conference in 1909 their suggestion as what Canada should do, namely to put a fleet unit on the Pacific ocean, they add these words:

Such a fleet unit would be capable of action not only in the defence of coasts but also of the trade routes and would be sufficiently powerful to deal with small hostile squadrons should such ever attempt to act in these waters.

That is the answer to the hon. member for York. He said that we proposed a useless separatist navy, the Admiralty and the Imperial conference agreed together that such a fleet unit as we now propose on the Pacific and on the Atlantic would be capable of action not only in the defence of the coasts, but also of the trade routes, and would also be sufficiently strong to deal with small hostile squadrons should such ever attempt to act on these waters. The hon. member for York in effect says that the real issue of the naval question is the safety of the Empire. So say I. But when the hon. gentleman was speaking and waving the flag by such unwarranted statements he showed a more active partisan spirit than in my opinion should be exhibited in a debate on this subject. Speaking of one section of the Bill he said that the Opposition proposed what they failed to do themselves when they were in power, to go actively and speedily on with the programme called for by the Naval Service Act of 1910. Is that true? I say it is not, and I shall attempt to prove it. The statement is not borne out by the facts. He knows full well that the unanimous resolution of this House of the 29th of March, 1909, advocated enthusiastically the speedy formation of a Canadian navy. After this resolution, members of the Government proceeded to London, and, together with the Admiralty, framed a plan for the prompt construction of a navy that the hon. member says would be a mischievous navy. If that were true who were the guilty parties? The Admiralty would be equally responsible for agreeing or acquiescing in the proposal to form this mischievous navy. The Australian Commonwealth agreed to such a navy. Arrangements were completed for going on with the construction in 1911, when the dissolution came and the Government was defeated.

Hon. gentlemen will note that the statement is made that the two so-called fleet units were to be built, manned, maintained and controlled by Canada without co-operation, without reference to the British Admiralty. The hon. gentleman is so partisan that he does not say if this is in time of peace or in time of war. If in time of peace why should we not manage our own property, our servants, paid and victualled by us? If in time of war, the hon. gentleman ought to have said this so-called navy can be—for my part I should say will be—at the disposal of the Admiralty and managed by the Crown for the defence of the Empire. He knows that the laws governing our so-called separatist navy are the same as those governing the Australian navy. I was reminded, when I listened to that partisan speech of the hon. member for York, N.B., of the beautiful, pathetic closing appeal of the right hon. leader of the Government, that pathetic appeal in such large headlines in the Montreal Star: 'Save Canada for the Empire,' wafted through the air from Montreal east to the Sydneys and west to the Pacific coast. I do not wonder that the proprietor of the Montreal Star takes the credit of bringing the Conservative party into power. I wonder when the High Commissionership is going that way? An hon. gentleman tells me that he is to be made a lord, I understood it was to be the High Commissionership. But what I want to draw to your attention is that when the hon. member for York, made that partisan speech I could not help thinking of that pathetic closing appeal at the time of the election, 'Save Canada for the Empire.' The hon. member for York says that the Liberals proposed a useless separatist navy, that the Bill before the House means the defence of the Empire, or in other words saving the Empire. The hon. member for York, N.B., made an allegation which he did not buttress with any logical argument, he stated that the Canadian navy was a separatist one; but did not give one good reason for making such a charge.

The hon. member for Frontenac made the same charge, and stated that the Government plan was imperialistic. What did the Montreal Star say? This is the whole matter in a nutshell. That is what the likely High Commissioner of Canada said. If that is not partisan politics in a matter like this, I do not know what it is. Now I want to make one or two further remarks regarding what the hon. member for York, New Brunswick (Mr. Crocket) has said. I am sorry he is not here. He read part of section 7 of the Admiralty memorandum, but he failed to read the remaining portion. Let me read to the House the balance of the section. This is what the Admiralty say to the people of Canada in presenting their memorandum:

> The rapid expansion of Canadian sea-borne trade, and the immense value of Canadian cargoes always afloat in British and Canadian bottoms, here require consideration. On the basis of the figures supplied by the board of trade to the Imperial Conference of 1911, the annual value of the overseas trade of the Dominion of Canada in 1909-10 was not less than £72,000,000, and the tonnage of Canadian vessels was 718,000 tons, and these proportions have already increased and are still increasing. For the whole of this trade wherever it may be about the distant waters of the world, as well as for the maintenance of her communications, both with Europe and Asia, Canada is dependent, and has always depended upon the Imperial navy, without corresponding contribution or cost.
>
> Further, at the present time and in the immediate future Great Britain still has the power, by making special arrangements and mobilizing a portion of the reserves, to send, without courting disaster at home, an effective fleet of battleships and cruisers to unite with the Royal Australian navy and the British squadrons in China and the Pacific for the defence of British Columbia, Australia and New Zealand. And these communities are also protected and their interests safeguarded by the power and authority of Great Britain so long as her naval strength is unbroken.

In the face of that statement in the memorandum now before the House the hon. member for York has the audacity to tell the people of Canada that we do not need a navy, that it would be a useless navy and a separatist navy. The hon. member for York, it would seem to me, is opposed to the placing of any vessels as a Canadian navy. Earlier in the debate some hon. gentleman made the insinuation or innuendo—I think it was the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Nickle)—that if there was war in any part of the world, in which the British Empire was interested, posisbly our navy would not be on the scene. To me such an idea is unthinkable, and I think it would have been very much better left unexpressed on the floor of Parliament. But I shall deal with that later on. The hon. member for York is reported on page 3704 of 'Hansard,' to have said:

> The right hon. leader of the Opposition has succeeded in securely and firmly laying and fixing in this amendment his pet idea of a distinctive exclusive, and separative Canadian navy.

I do not think that such sentiments should really be taken notice of. Now, let me answer some of the allegations made by the hon. member for York to the effect that this is a separatist navy, which would not be in close connection with the Admiralty and the Royal Navy. I cannot do better than read to the House the sections of the memorandum to the Conference of 1911, submitted and approved by Canada and Australia, because the words absolutely contradict what the hon. gentleman for York alleged. Let me read a few of the sections, they are not long. The very first section says:

> The naval service and forces of the dominions of Canada and Australia will be exclusively under the control of their respective governments.

2. The training and discipline of the naval forces of the dominions will be generally uniform with the training and discipline of the fleet of the United Kingdom, and, by arrangement, officers and men of the said forces will be interchangable with those under the control of the British Admiralty.

Paragraph 3 says:

The ships of each dominion naval force will hoist at the stern the white ensign as the symbol of the authority of the Crown, and at the jack-staff the distinctive flag of the Dominion.

And yet hon. gentlemen opposite go over this country hoisting the flag and crying one flag and one navy while the Government of the day by Order in Council have accepted the proposition that the ships of the Canadian and Australian navies shall hoist the white flag at the stern as a symbol of the authority of the Crown, and their distinctive flags at the jack-staff. Then section 4 reads:

The Canadian and Australian governments will have their own naval stations as agreed upon and from time to time. The limits of the stations are as described in schedule (A), Canada, and schedule (B), Australia.

A large part of both the Atlantic and Pacific oceans is set apart by the Admiralty for the two Canadian units. Then section 6 says:

In the event of the Canadian or Australian Government desiring to send ships to foreign port, they will obtain the concurrence of the Imperial Government, in order that the necessary arrrangements with the foreign office may be made, as in the case of ships of the British fleet, in such time and manner as is usual between the British Admiralty and the foreign office.

Let me skip a number of the paragraphs and read the three closing ones. Notwithstanding that these facts were before him, the hon. member for York had the audacity to tell the people of Canada that the proposed navy was not along the lines of the resolution and that it would not be in close connection with the Admiralty.

Section 15 reads as follows:

15. It is desirable, in the interests of efficiency and co-operation, that arrangements should be made from time to time between the British Admiralty and the dominions for the ships of the dominions to take part in fleet exercises or for any other joint training considered necessary under the senior naval officer. While so employed, the ships will be under the command of that officer, who would not, however, interfere in the internal economy of ships of another service further than absolutely necessary.

16. In time of war, when the naval service of a dominion, or any part thereof, has been put at the disposal of the Imperial Government by the dominion authorities, the ships will form an integral part of the British fleet, and will remain under the control of the British Admiralty during the continuance of the war.

17. The dominions having applied to their naval forces the King's regulations——

Yet the hon. gentleman says that we have no connection whatever with the British navy.

—the Admiralty instructions and the Naval Discipline Act, the British Admiralty and Dominion Governments will communicate to each other any charges which they propose to make in those regulations or that Act.

I want to know if that does not effectually refute the argument of the hon. member for York, N.B. These clauses I wish to tell the hon. member for York, allow and permit in the fullest degree consolidation and co-operation. Admittedly there is not a word suggesting that the fleets of the daughter nations shall automatically become units of the Royal navy. When I read these paragraphs I say that there was not one word saying that our ships shall become automatic units of the Royal navy on the outbreak of war. This disposes of the matter referred to by the hon. member for Kingston but it is practically submitted that such a clause is not required. If we want to help no such profession is necessary. Our spirits, our hearts, go out towards the Motherland, as a loving, loyal daughter would help a loving, loyal mother. So will we voluntarily and of our own initiation bravely and lovingly fly to the rescue of the Motherland if, the unfortunate occasion ever arises. As citizens of the Empire we ought to exert ourselves for the protection of our mutual interests. If the decisive theatre is to be in the North sea, or the Pacific, let us get ready to do our full duty should the occasion arise. Canada has defaulted from her engagement to co-operate with Australia in putting a fleet of ships upon the Pacific. Canada has chosen a downward course. The responsibility for the abandonment of this programme, to which Canada was in honour bound, rests upon the Government. The right hon. the leader of the Government not only intimates that we cannot have a Canadian naval service for twenty-five or fifty years, but he makes no provision for effectively training men for the service in Canada.

Hon. gentlemen have over and over again said that men to man our ships are not available in Canada. I tell them they do not appreciate what can be done by Canada in that regard if an opportunity is given them in this matter. Australia is making marked progress in manning her fleet. It is reported that 3,225 cadets are training for the citizen naval forces reserve. It is interesting to the House to know the approximate strength of naval power on the Pacific:

	Ships.	Tonnage.
Great Britain..		50,000*
United States..	6	81,500
Germany..	2	23,500
France..	2	15,000

* Including Indomitable.

Japan is practically the only power owning any battleships in Pacific waters. Japan has twenty-seven heavy armoured ships, twenty battleships and battle cruisers and she also has seven capital ships building. It is alleged that she is beginning a large programme.

The hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Crocket), claims that a Canadian fleet unit on the Pacific coast would be useless and separatist. It seems to me that it is most important that we accept the proposal of the Admiralty and place in the Pacific ocean one unit or as many ships as can together with other dominion and Royal units make a formidable fleet. Our Canadian, Australian, and British interests should foster in us a desire to make our Empire interests in the Pacific secure. Perhaps we require supremacy in the Pacific as much as in the North sea. Can England trust Ireland, Scotland, or Wales? She can, and she can trust her loyal daughter nation; we are all one in heart and name. Let us encourage self-reliance and foster confidence; then, and only then shall we do our full duty and give our sons and our means in defence of home and empire. In the words of the Conference memorandum, let the white ensign float as the symbol of the authority of the Crown, and our Canadian flag at the jackstaff on the ships of our Canadian fleet. Hon. gentlemen ought to bear in mind that the right hon. the Prime Minister and his Cabinet have confirmed this Imperial Conference memorandum. Let the action of the Government put an end to the inuendos of hon. gentlemen opposite that they are for one flag. Let them hoist the British flag, and say it is the talismanic flag of all loyal Canadian hearts.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say a word or two regarding the remarks of the hon. member for North York (Mr. Armstrong). I would ask the hon. gentleman if he were here how he squares himself with the policy enunciated by the hon. member for York, N.B. The hon. member for North York said that if he believed there would be a further contribution, he would not vote for this Bill, and if there is to be no further contribution, surely there is to be a Canadian navy, which the hon. member for York, N.B. said is useless, and that it is but waste of money to put it into ships that form a Canadian navy. My hon. friend from York, N.B., and the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Cockshutt) are sailing in the same boat. The hon. member for Brantford said:

> There is a very sharp line drawn between the naval policy of the Conservative party, as announced by the Prime Minister and the naval policy of the Liberal party, as set forth in the resolution of the right hon. leader of the Opposition. The Conservative policy follows the line I have suggested of making contributions to maintain the supremacy of the British fleet upon the high seas, and the Liberal policy of to-day seeks to enlarge somewhat on the Liberal policy of 1909 as embraced in the Naval Service Act of Canada.

So I say that the hon. member for North York and the hon. member for York, New Brunswick had better consult together and see if they cannot come to some arrangement because their views on this question are certainly diametrically opposite one to the other. I now want to refer to some remarks made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. At page 1413, 'Hansard,' the Minister of Trade and Commerce said speaking of the Admiralty:

> They made a generous proposition and a most effective proposition. They said: if Australia will build a unit and if New Zealand will do her part as she promised to do, Great Britain will add what is necessary to make Newfoundland a unit and China and India also a unit. Then if Canada will add her unit, these four units, these fifty-four vessels headed by four great fighting machines will be devoted to the unprotected Pacific coast and will aid the Imperial fleet to the greatest possible extent to which aid can be given.

Mr. Speaker, these are the words of the Admiralty as to the efficiency of a Canadian unit on the Pacific coast. To all intents and purposes the Minister of Trade and Commerce supports that view; he practically concurs in that doctrine.

Mr. GRAHAM: He is in favour of a Canadian navy.

Mr. LOGGIE: Yes, he is practically in favour of a Canadian unit on the Pacific coast, and the Admiralty says that the unit will aid the Imperial fleet to the greatest possible extent to which aid can be given. But the Minister of Trade and Commerce twitted the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier because they did not take up a complete unit and place it on the Pacific coast, and he said that in that we lost our opportunity. Let me say a word or two about that. In the Pacific ocean we propose taking one complete unit, as Australia is doing, and probably she is doing more in the Australian zone. These two units, together with the New Zealand, the Imperial Government, and the China and India units will give the Empire, as Mr. Foster says, fifty-four ships headed by four great fighting machines. And yet hon. gentlemen opposite say that this is a separatist navy, and that there is no co-operation in it. This Pacific fleet unit will cost Canada, including maintenance and sinking fund, about £600,000 annually or $3,000,000. Of course, that does not mean the ships only; that means something more than simply the hull and the armament, it means the men and it means the maintenance of the ships. But mark you, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Commerce twitted the Laurier Government because this proposition of the Admiralty was not accepted. He did not give a reason. Was it not accepted because it would cose £600,000 per annum or $3,000,000? Was that the reason? Hon. gentlemen ought to know that it was not the reason. We did not object to the £600,000 annually. But it was well said and it was fully understood and was acquiesced in by the Admiralty that there was a difficulty in placing two complete fleet units on the two seacoasts of Canada at that time, because if two complete units were started upon, it would mean an annual expenditure of not £600,000 but £1,200,000. What the Canadian Government did was to accept that proposition of $1,500,000 per annum and to devote that money to the construction of the smaller ships, a nucleus of two fleet units, in fact all the ships except the one for each unit of the dreadnought type. These difficulties were in the way at that time. Why should I say that there were difficulties in the way at that time? Hon. gentlemen who were in the House in 1907 and 1908 will remember that the Minister of Finance suggested to the people of Canada that they ought to draw the cords, because the financial situation in the Old Country was not very optimistic. The hon. Minister of Finance was, I might say, pessimistic on that occasion. He advised caution; he put in operation caution; and it was only in the following year that the finances of the country resumed their normal state. Therefore, the Government of that day had good reasons for not accepting the proposition of two complete units on that occasion at a cost to Canada of £1,200,000 annually, equal to about $6,000,000. If the Government of the day had accepted the proposition of the British Government for a fleet unit on the Pacific Coast, what a howl there would have been on the Atlantic seaboard that nothing had been done for the protection of commerce on the Atlantic. The Government of the day acted wisely in the interests of Canada. To-day conditions have changed. During the past two years we have had unprecedented prosperity in the history of Canada. We have a surplus in the treasury of some $30,000,000, enough to build these ships. We have a billion dollars of trade, and we can well afford to add to the naval programme one great dreadnought ship in order that we may make these units complete on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, when he brought that statement before the House, hardly treated it with that respect which it ought to have. The arguments of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce for a Canadian navy in 1909 were complete, and supplemented by the Admiralty memorandum as quoted by him and read by me on this occasion, are unanswerable in favour of a Canadian navy. His argument as to the effectiveness of a Canadian navy on the Pacific in 1913 is conclusive. Hon. gentlemen opposite, who say that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has said everything on this question, should stand by what he has said as to the need of a fleet unit on the Pacific coast. If he has not said so directly, he has said so by inference. If the proposal was good in 1909, it ought to be better in 1913, because the difficulties in the way of making it effective in 1909, are now removed by our increased revenue, prosperity and education along these lines. If in 1909 we had accepted the proposition of one unit on the Pacific and not a dollar for the protection of our interests on the Atlantic coast and Atlantic ocean routes, what a howl our friends opposite would have raised.

I want to say a word about the separatist policy. In view of Mr. Foster's statement and the Admiralty finding of 1909, is a Canadian navy of one unit in the Canadian Pacific zone not capable alone of meeting small hostile squadrons, and protecting Pacific ocean trade routes; and in time of war, together with three or more additional units in that ocean, capable of presenting a front of fifty-four of the greatest modern vessels comprising four units? If, as the hon. member for York (Mr. Crocket) alleges our navy is a useless one, our fleet must be a useless adjunct to an Imperial fleet, under one head and one management. This is exactly what we propose for the Pacific coast. This fleet that the hon. gentleman alleges is a useless one, the Admiralty say is just what is required. We are willing to tax ourselves as Canadians to the extent of approximately $3,000,000 annually for the Pacific unit, and we will do the same for the Atlantic unit; yet hon. gentlemen opposite propose taxing the people of Canada about a million and a half dollars annually, because that will pay the interest and the sinking fund on the cost of these three ships. The policy we propose is as imperialistic as the policy proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite. I say that it is not a separatist policy, and I ask the hon. member for York and the hon. member for Frontenac to consider, weigh and digest the matter not as partisans, but as men who love honour and self-respect. The soil of Canadian hearts is good. Let us foster, cultivate and develop those principles that will cause our hearts to beat for the consummation of that which will make our Empire increasingly the greatest power for peace and good-will in the world. The Minister of Trade and Commerce further said, page 1441 of 'Hansard':

You make your fleet construction, tediously and lengthily, extending, perhaps, over a period of six or seven years, finding it impossible to obtain Canadian seamen to man it, because you have to train men as well as get them. In the event of such a consummation, and if the day of Armageddon came and caught us napping, I would like to have the consciousness that I am free from the thoughts which would lie heavily upon me if I had been party to or contributed in that delay.

I take issue, Mr. Speaker, with that statement. I say we can give more effective aid under the original Naval Act than can be rendered under the present Bill. If we have no sufficient seamen trained to man our ships when completed, the shortage can be supplied by the Admiralty at our expense. If our two dreadnoughts are constructed in England, they can, if an emergency is in sight, be placed in the fighting line as quickly and more efficiently than under the present Bill, because our proposition provides for training men and officers, and this Bill does not. If the day of Armageddon comes it will not find us napping if the policy of the Liberal party is energetically carried out. The policy we advocated in 1909 is the self-respecting one, and it can be made effective at as early a date as the plan suggested by the present Bill. As has been stated by Mr. Asquith, our security is paramount.

I regret that the Minister of Trade and Commerce is not in his seat, but I am glad that he is performing a great duty; he is indeed well qualified to do so. The hon. gentleman further stated:

My right hon. friend says further that this product is a hybrid, bred of Tory jingoism and Nationalism. They have been together, and this is the result, I am puzzled. Suppose it was, does it make much matter if the rich fruit on the tree comes from one soil or another, is tended by one gardener or another, or by two, provided that the apple itself, in its flavour and quality, is all right? Had not my right hon. friend better savour the apple instead of chemically, or otherwise, analyzing the soils out of which it has sprung? But, I am puzzled besides. He says that this is the result of an unholy alliance between the Tories and the Nationalists. Well, I come back to his speech, and what does he say? Immediately this resolution was passed dissension broke out in the Liberal-Conservative party; there were two sections, one section wanted a contribution only and no navy, the other section wanted neither contribution nor navy. If there was a choice at all, one section was for the Canadian service, while it utterly abhorred the contribution. Then, he said that this is the result of an unholy alliance between the Nationalists and the Liberal-Conservatives. If it is the result, who won? After which parent does the child take its traits? Here is a measure which says contribution; the Nationalists damns contribution, will have none of it. Evidently he did not get his way. How then does the right hon. gentleman argue it out that this is the result and that Nationalism has been triumphant when the very thing that the Nationlist abhors is embedded in the Bill and the very thing that he might look upon with favour—a Canadian service—is not included in the Bill? I take exception to the statement, but I am taking my right hon. friend on his own ground. He says that there is no permanent policy, but that it is all contribution. If that is so, however the antecedents may have been. the Nationalists did not get the victory in the matter. That is certain.

The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is an expert at drawing upon the imagination, admits that the product is a hybrid one, bred of Tory jingoism and Nationalism. He says in effect that a consultation has been held, and the contribution proposal is the result—and he goes on to analyze the product and its parents. Does it matter, he asks, if this policy is the product of those who cultivated a no-expenditure soil for naval expense and Tory jingoism? He says in effect that it does not matter what soil is fertilized, or who is the gardener, so long as the apple itself, in its flavour and quality, is all right. What does it matter, he asks in effect, if the King's advisers are diametrically opposed to one another on the principles of naval defence? The hon. minister goes on and says:

If the Bill before the House is the result of an unholy alliance between the Nationalists and the Liberal-Conservative, who won? After which parent does the child take its traits?

How does Sir Wilfrid argue it out, he asks, that Nationalists have been triumphant, when the very thing the Nationalist abhors is embodied in the Bill, and the very thing he might look upon with favour, a Canadian service, is not included in the Bill?

I have said that the minister is an expert in drawing upon his imagination, and putting in word pictures that can be used to suit the occasion. He says the Nationalists did not get the victory. Let us see if this allegation is true. The Nationalists are the victors in this hybrid product. I say that although Mr. Monk was pledged to do nothing without the people passing upon any form of naval expenditure, the football grew and grew until at last it cracked and Mr. Monk escaped unstained. Watch the patching since and to be. This opposition, hon. gentlemen will not forget, was because Nationalists were bitterly opposed to the policy of a Canadian navy, as promulgated by the Liberal party. He promised its repeal. The Nationalists have won by forcing the Government to give notice of the repeal of the Canadian Naval Act. They have won by changing the attitude of the Government as to manning our ships with our sons. In spite of this, the minister says the Nationalists did not get the victory.

I do not think the important question uppermost in the mind of the Minister was: Who won? but: Who will win next time, and with what ammunition? So he put in the motion ideas or ammunition that might be of use in a double-barrelled gun, as only a man of his imagination could. I imagine that if an election were called on in the near future hon. gentlemen could, with this statement in their pockets, explain that the hon. minister said on the floor of the House what would suit the special soil they wished to cultivate. In one place they could say that the Nationalists did not get the victory, and so that you could or your friends could load one barrel, the gun could be loaded with effective ammunition for that locality. You, Mr. Speaker, know the right soil to fire this ammunition into, that soil that has for its motto: 'equal privileges for all and special privileges for none.' That fertilizer would be effective in certain soils if used with the skill of our friends; but would it not be dragging high principles unduly into party politics, degrading the highest of high principles in order to retain control of the treasury benches? It takes time to get above using such means for political ends.

But, now, Mr. Speaker, let us load the other barrel of the gun with the effective ammunition available. Suppose, for example, the Postmaster General has charge of the loading: Promise to repeal Act. The first instalment is, in a general way: We won; our promise to have the Act repealed is practically fulfilled; notice of repeal is given and the Act is non-effective now, so we won; you people were right in sending us to Parliament and, although we had a hard time, especially when I was on those fine ships, I would really like to have had some such ships, Quebec ships. Yes and I say, mes dames et mes hommes, we won. We are giving some money to England to build ships. This is not very important to you, mes dames et mes hommes. It means only a trifle of taxation to you. We are not a very large proportion of the population of Canada, and the tax is not capitalized at more than 20 cents per head per annum of the population of Canada. That is not much, and you do not have to give your sons to be disembowelled on Canada's ships in European wars. Who won? We won. Mr. Foster said the Nationalists were not victorious, but he was speaking for effect in such soil as Ontario, you know, mes dames et mes hommes, that we won.

If this is a separatist policy, is it not marvellous that that argument comes from no other quarter than those supporting the Conservative party in Canada? The bald statement is made by hon. gentlemen opposite, not supported by any argument, that the resolution is imperialistic, that one flag is attached to the resolution. Why do hon gentlemen allege by innendo that members on this side of the House are for another flag? That was the cry. After that meeting of the hon. the Prime Minister in Halifax a quarter of the front page of the Halifax Herald was filled up with a large red flag. I suppose that was the flag of the Conservative party, that the Liberal party had nothing to do with it. It is time we got over this spirit of twitting one another across the floor of the House as to disloyalty to the flag of the Crown that we so much love. While it is true that the dominions owning and managing a fleet unit or small ships can fly the flag of authority of our several dominions, hon. gentleman know that the finding of the Admiralty in this regard has been approved and ratified by the Government of the day. If Canadians in foreign lands can say that the British flag is their talisman, surely there is not a Canadian in this young British nation who would say that the talisman flag of the Empire is not their glory, pride and protection at all times. Sending three ships into the fighting line of the Royal navy without our sons being on them would not be inspiring to the Canadian people. The effect would not be so inspiring as if our sons were fighting on our ships to defend our talismanic flag. I am reminded of the enthusiasm in my own town when the war was on in South Africa. A number of young men from my county went out to the field of battle, and when they returned we did the becoming thing. We called a public meeting and presented each of those young men with a gold watch. On that occasion I was mayor of my town, and the scene was an inspiring one. Such would be the case, if our own ships came in sight of the city of Quebec. I was present on the occasion of the tercentenary celebration, and from the Dufferin esplanade I looked down on the noble ships, and afterwards took an opportunity to go on board one of them. If our own ships with our own men on board came to the province of Quebec I am sure they would enthuse us as a loyal Canadian people, representing as we do the brightest and the richest of the young daughter nations in the greatest Empire under the sun.

Mr. Speaker, may I sum up my remarks? I give the following reasons for favouring legislation along the lines of the resolution of 1909 which was the unanimous finding of the two great parties in Canada: Because if made effective it would take the matter of sea defence out of partisan politics where the promoters of the Bill before the House, to their shame, have placed it; because it is in accordance with the naturally expressed desire of the people of Canada, as represented by the two great parties in 1909; because the British taxpayers are asked by the Government's Bill to do what we are able to do as well as they, namely—to pay cost of maintenance; because our revenues enable us to pay the cost of maintenance as well as construction; because other dominions in a like position to ourselves are undertaking in self-respect to maintain and manage in time of peace the ships they construct; because we are the greatest and wealthiest young nation within the greatest Empire under the sun, and ought to put on our manhood and do our part in maintaining the supremacy of the sea-power of the Empire; because the two capital ships can be constructed complete in the United Kingdom as quickly under the policy of the amendment as under the Bill before the House, and can immediately be placed in the fighting line of the Royal navy in the North sea, should the unfortunate occasion arise, or be at hand when the construction is complete; because the people of Canada decided to construct a Canadian navy, and the Act authorizes construction in Canada while the amendment now before the House adds to the Act the authority to construct two capital ships which can be constructed forthwith in England. Thus if an emergency proves to be well grounded we will be fully prepared to do our part by supplying two of the latest capital ships and placing them in the fighting line as quickly as is possible under the Bill before the House; because I believe the constructing and maintaining our ships is more in keeping with the dignity and responsibility of an autonomous nation. Having a double sea board, and an immense export trade in food supplies over the two oceans that wash our shores, the burden of protection of these trade routes rests upon us in an increasing manner, and will do so still more in the future, if the present naval activity is maintained.

Now, I have a word or two to say in reply to those who claim that the Government policy is an Imperialistic policy. One flag, one navy, that is the cry of some members opposite, and especially of the hon. member for York who, in his partisan speech pronounced the Canadian navy to be useless. This was in the face of the Order in Council by the Government of the Dominion agreeing to the principle that two flags shall be used on navy ships of the dominions, in confirmation of the Admiralty plan. If this be true, the Admiralty and the Australian Commonwealth must be disloyal, because both are pushing forward a navy to fly two flags. The Admiralty plan must be a separatist one, if there is any foundation for the allegation that a Canadian navy is a separatist navy. As I have said, already, the project of a Canadian navy was agreed upon unanimously in 1909. The proposition of the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce, then in opposition, came before the, House, and the Government agreed to the resolution, and to an amendment based on the resolution. Then the temptation which came to the right hon. the leader of the Government, then leader of His Majesty's loyal opposition, not to make party capital out of it was too great; he was conquered. He joined issue with Mr. Monk, and voted in favour of the matter being placed before the people, before the proposal of a Canadian navy was made effective. The then leader of the Opposition at that time made the mistake of his life. He could then have kept the question out of the strife of party politics, but he did not do so when the election came on, and he joined hands with those who fought against navy expenditures.

The elections on reciprocal trade took place, an opportune time to test the strength of those in the province of Quebec opposed to navy expediture.

The correspondence between the Prime Minister and the ex-Minister of Public Works clearly demonstrate the understanding Mr. Monk had of the matter. I say it was the mistake of Mr. Borden's political history to identify himself with the men df any party who were not in touch with the unanimous resolution of Parliament on this momentous question.

The principle having been unanimously adopted by Parliament it was, in my opinion, quite improper to bring it into the strife of party politics.

I say, get this momentous matter out of political strife. I would not, however, speaking for myself, concur in a plebiscite. Shall we or shall we not undertake navy expenditure? I consider this has been settled by the unanimous resolution of 1909. The only real question is how we can best and effectively fulfil our duty to ourselves and our empire, our homes and our King. The taunts that a Canadian navy is a separatist policy and that contribution is an Imperial policy is unworthy of a loyal Canadian making it. And the man who preaches this doctrine does not, in my opinion, realize the wrong he is doing to the empire he loves, as much as I do. A Canadian fleet that is owned, manned and controlled by French, Irish, Scotch, English and German Canadians, as well as Canadians of other nationalities, will make us all the more loyal to our King and Empire, because we are the freest people in the world. We are more democratic than are the citizens of the United States under laws that protect life and property more effectively than those of the United States. The voice of the people under our constitution is made effective in a few days, as was the case on the 21st September, 1911, which cannot be said for the constitution of the United States. What has any country in the world that our people cannot have under our laws? Why would any of us be separatists, and why would we want to be separatists? One of the leading daily newspapers of Montreal, speaking of the two policies, set out that the Liberal policy was a separatist one, and the Conservative policy an Imperialistic one, adding that this is the case in a nutshell.

Do the men who advocate this doctrine really mean what they say? Was Parliament all wrong when it passed a unanimous resolution in favour of a Canadian navy? Were the right hon. leader of the Government and the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce then separatists? The criticism is not statesmanlike, it is partisan, it is political, it is out of place in this great undertaking of Canadians. Let us once for all rise to the occasion and place the two propositions before the people of Canada for their finding. If this cannot be accomplished then let us have the permanent policy now and come to some understanding that it can pass the House unanimously. This policy should be based upon the unanimous resolution of 1909. This can be done by the Government of the day without any sacrifice of dignity or prejudice.

Let me tell you what, in my opinion, is the probable effect of the Bill before the House.

Negatively:

It indefinitely postpones a permanent naval policy for Canada, the oldest and wealthiest young nation of the Empire.

It contributes ships unmanned.

It leaves our shores on each sea-board, also our ocean trade routes unprotected.

It is not calculated to foster love and devotion to the Motherland, nor will it give that relief to the British taxpayer that is incumbent upon us in our present situation. 'We are able to do more than build ships, we owe it to ourselves to train and place our sons on our ships, victual and pay them, we are well able to do so.'

It is not in keeping with our position as a nation, for some two centuries or more, we have been protected without a dollar paid on our part, and now we propose meeting the situation by placing three ships at the disposal of the Admiralty unmanned, to be manned and maintained by the British taxpayer.

It does not encourage ship-building in Canada, nor construction of shipyards.

It does not encourage immigration.

It does not develop home industries.

It does not provide increased home markets for our farmers.

Positively:

It keeps naval defence in active partisan politics to the hurt of Canada and the Empire.

Let me sum what would be the effect of the amendment moved by my right hon. friend the leader of the Opposition.

It provides for energetic action in the construction and maintenance of two fleet units and finds employment for about five thousand officers and men, on board ships.

It provides for training and manning two fleet units.

It provides for protecting our shores and our ocean trade routes. (Admiralty memorandum, page 22, No. 1.)

It is calculated to foster loyalty to the Motherland and to relieve the British taxpayer of the payment of the money necessary for the maintenance of men to man our ships.

It is along the lines recommended by the Admiralty in 1909 and it will protect our shores and our trade routes. Our ocean trade is growing by leaps and bounds, thus our commerce will be more secure. The hon. member for York, New Brunswick (Mr. Crocket) says this is unnecessary and useless.

If emergency should be in sight our two fleet units, with sailors and officers, can be at the disposal of the Admiralty.

In times of peace our ships will be in the zones appointed, or set apart by the Admiralty.

Our ships will hoist at the stern the white ensign as the symbol of the authority of the Crown.

Now, a word as to the effect of a compromise, and under this head I would suggest the following considerations:

Perhaps at present as important as anything can possibly be, is that it would, if mutually agreed upon remove the matter of naval defence from the field of active politics.

Responsibility for it being in politics is on the shoulders of gentlemen opposite.

Responsibility is on them to remove it from the sphere of partisan politics; they can do so by legislation along the lines of the unanimous resolution of Parliament under date 29th November, 1909.

If hon. gentlemen cannot agree to do this, or cannot find some other reasonable way to take the question out of party politics, they ought to ask the people which of the two propositions before the House they prefer, not by a plebiscite but by giving the people an opportunity to pronounce on the policies of the two great parties. We ought to ask the people if they want a self-respecting Canadian navy represented by a a fleet unit on each coast, or the policy of the Bill.

Mr. PELLETIER: Why not a plebiscite?

Mr. LOGGIE: I am not talking about a change of Government at all, but I say that we ought to ask the people which of the two proposals they want, or else we ought to legislate along the lines of the unanimous resolution of 1909. Bring in a resolution from that side of the House and I will support it, providing that it is in conformity with the unanimous resolution already passed by this House.

For my own part I have no hesitation in saying that I prefer a policy of two fleet units, built in Canada, if possible, and as soon as possible, manned and maintained by Canada. If construction of the two capital ships cannot be overtaken in Canada promptly, I would favour building them in England, and on completion, if an emergency is in sight, place the ships under control of the Admiralty and pay the cost of maintenance during war. If no emergency exists, the ships, as soon as ready to be placed in the respective zones named by the Admiralty under the control of Canada.

I want to say a word about the amendment now before the House. My hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff) moved an amendment to the motion for the second reading of the Bill that the House should not proceed with it until the Government take up the proposition of a redistribution Bill, submit a measure to the House and then ask the people what they should do in the matter of naval defence.

The constitution makes it almost imperative that when any important change is made in electoral conditions, these new conditions be put to the test and the newly enfranchised enjoy their rights at the earliest opportunities. I ask you Mr. Speaker, is that not a fair proposition in view of the magnitude of the Bill before the House, with practically one-half of the people of Canada against the Bill? Is it not right and proper to consult the whole people? It is an opportune time to bring forward the expected Redistribution Bill and place the naval policy of the two parties before the country. Then, and then only, does it seem to me that we can get this momentous matter out of active partisan politics. Let us calmly and dispassionately determine which of the two propositions the people of Canada prefer. Either that or the Government should amend the Naval Act now on the statutes along the lines of a Canadian navy. These are my concluding words, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. LOGGIE: I am sorry I have spoken so long; but it must be remembered that when this matter was discussed in the House in 1910 I did not take any part in the debate. I am a little bashful, you know, and did not care to take any part in the debate, and I apologize for taking up so much of the time of the House on this occasion. Let me say this closing word to Canadians, loyal and true that they are. Canadian naval defence should be paid for by Canadian money, in ships built as far as practicable by Canadian labour and workmen, in Canada, and out of Canadian material as far as possible, and within reasonable time. If facilities are not available for prompt construction of the largest ships in Canada, then build the larger ones in England and let the work of constructing the smaller ones go on concurrently in Canada. Let them be manned by Canadian men animated by Canadian patriotism, these two Canadian fleet units under Canadian supervision and control up to the point when the Empire needs united action under central control. These ought to be the aspirations of all loyal subjects of our Sovereign the King in Canada, in Australia, and I think I can say in the United Kingdom and her other dominions and colonies.

On motion of Mr. Stanfield, the debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, House adjourned at one o'clock a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, February 25, 1913.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill No. 121, for the relief of Beatrice Emma Mayers.—Mr. Wallace.

Bill No. 124, for the relief of Minnie Kate Clappison.—Mr. Ross.

Bill No. 125, for the relief of George Geddes McDonald.—Mr. Bristol.

Bill No. 126, for the relief of Frederick Frank Saunders.—Mr. Wallace.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

On the Orders of the Day being called:

Mr. BUREAU: Mr. Speaker, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. Last Friday I rose to a similar question, not as I stated, because I had a more personal interest in the matter than anybody else, but because a reflection had been cast upon the House and yourself. I had expected, in view of the explanations that were given and the denials made to the House, that some correction would have appeared in the paper concerned, but it did not. The same thing, a little bit emphasized, appears in another paper, La Presse, of Montreal, under date of February 22. There is an editorial headed: 'General Review.' After talking about the Mexican revolution and the suffragettes in England, they come to the prisoner in the tower. The editor states that the prisoner had to abandon his very comfortable quarters in the House of Commons, that he had been lodged in a cell in the common jail, that there he is reflecting upon the hardship inflicted upon him, and is watching for the silver lining in the cloud and for the time when he shall come out of jail again, and that when the doors of the House of Parliament would close he would be set free because the doors of the jail would be opened. Among other things the editorial says this:

Il est vraiment extraordinaire qu'il en soit ainsi. Voici un homme, qui avoue avoir commis un acte de corruption sur la députation, qui donne le montant des sommes payées pour l'obtention d'un contrat public, qui commet un mépris d'autorité en taisant le nom qu'on lui demande à la barre de la Chambre, et qui ne pourra être puni par le grand corps public qu'il aura ainsi compromis, méprisé et sali! Vraiment, c'est à en perdre toute notion de justice.

Translated into English, it reads:

It is very extraordinary that it should be so. Here is a man who confesses to having corrupted the deputation——

Meaning the members of this Parliament.

—who gives the amount of the sums paid to obtain a public contract, who is guilty of contempt of authority by withholding the names of the men when he is asked to declare them at the Bar of the House and who will not be punished by this great public body which he will have besmirched. Really, it is contrary to all notions of justice.

These comments are becoming too common and if I rise at this time it is to call the attention of the public generally to the fact that we are being accused here and that all sorts of insinuations are being made for which there is no justification whatever either in the proceedings which have taken place before the House, or in the investigation which has taken place before the Public Accounts Committee, or in the statements made by Mr. Miller when he was called to the Bar of the House.

DISMISSALS AT DESCOUSE AND WEST ARICHAT.

Hon. C. J. DOHERTY (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make a statement which was requested of me the other day by the right hon. the leader of the Opposition, with regard to a motion made some time ago by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Kyte) for the production of papers in regard to the release on ticket of leave of a man named Landry. When the motion was before the House I stated that in my opinion it was objectionable that papers of this kind should be produced. I did not suggest then, nor would I suggest now, any absence of power in this House to order the production of such papers, but I did express the opinion that the ordering of such production by this House would be very undesirable, I think I may say improper, save in very exceptional cases at all events. I also intimated that my objection was that the practice had almost invariably been, in so far as cases under the Ticket-of-Leave Act are concerned—and this is a case under the Ticket-of-Leave Act—not to produce such documents. I stated that I would look into the matter and I understand that what was desired by the right hon. leader of the Opposition was that I should give to this House the result of my inquiry. I find that the impression that I expressed with regard to the practice is fully borne out by the result of the search I have made in this connection. In the first place it may be well to begin by pointing out that the practice in England is, and has for a very long time been in accordance with the opinion I expressed, namely, that such documents should not be produced, save, at all events, in very exceptional cases. I shall not go at any length into that question. It may perhaps be well to give one citation from Todd's Parliamentary Government in England, in which he lays down the rule in words which I think are sufficient to cover all that need be said. I quote from page 557 et seq:

No interference by either House of Parliament with the exercise of this prerogative is justifiable, except under extraordinary circumstances. It was said by Macaulay, that he would rather entrust it to the hands of the very worst ministry that ever held office than allow it to be exercised under the direction of the very best House of Commons; and by Sir Robert Peel, that he would leave this prerogative in the hands of the executive, considering that it was the right and duty of the House to interfere only if there be a suspicion that justice is perverted for corrupt purposes, p. 561.

The Government exercise their own discretion as to whether they deem it expedient to reply to such questions or not. But it has been stated by ministers, in both Houses, in reply to questions on the subject, that, as a general principle, it would be inconvenient and unusual to lay before the House the grounds on which that discretion proceeds which dictates leniency or severity on the part of the responsible advisers of the Crown, p. 562.

The author then proceeds to deal with the question at considerable further length, but I think that what I have read is sufficient to justify my statement in regard to the practice in England. In this country I find that the question came up for the first time—so far as I have been able to trace it, but I have no doubt there were previous instances—in 1903, when the Right Hon. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, was Minister of Justice. In answer to a motion similar to the motion of my hon. friend from Richmond, the Right Hon. Sir Charles Fitzpatrick said: ('Hansard' of 1903, volume I, page 567).

Perhaps my hon. friend would allow that motion to stand for the present. It is my intention to oppose it on the ground that it is contrary to the well-established usage in England and also to the practice which has been adopted in the Justice Department. I make this suggestion because I have not been able to put my hand upon the particular case in which this rule was adopted in the Justice Department when Sir John Thompson was head of that department. I hope to have it within a day or two. I move that the debate be now adjourned.

I may say that I have not been able to find in the department the memorandum of Sir John Thompson to which Sir Charles Fitzpatrick refers, but I think we are quite safe in taking the statement of Sir Charles Fitzpatrick that Sir John Thompson had laid down the rule. The next instance in which the question arose was also when Sir Charles Fitzpatrick was Minister of Justice and the reference to it will be found in 'Hansard' for 1905, volume I:

Mr. LAKE asked:

1. Were two men named Hamelin and Gosselin sentenced to imprisonment in the penitentiary for horse-stealing by Judge Prendergast in 1902?
2. What was the length of sentence in each case?
3. Were they released before sentence expired?
4. If so, at what date, and for what cause?

Hon. CHARLES FITZPATRICK (Minister of Justice): In answer to my hon. friend, it is contrary to the well established usage of Parliament to answer questions of this sort; and if the hon. gentleman will permit me I will send him over the reference in Todd where he will find the rule stated.

The next case in which the question came up will be found in 'Hansard' of 1906, volume III, page 183. In this case the following question was asked and answered:

Mr. MACPHERSON asked:

1. Has one Brothier, a convict serving a seven years' sentence in the British Columbia penitentiary, been released?
2. How long did he serve, and on whose recommendation was he released?
3. Will the Government bring down all the papers in connection with the matter?

Hon. A. B. AYLESWORTH (Minister of Justice): His Excellency the Governor General, on 22nd May, 1906, approved a recommendation that the prisoner Brothier be released from further custody. Brothier was released accordingly on 29th May, 1906, having been sentenced on 15th March, 1904, to imprisonment for five years and two years. In Great Britain, for the last sixty or seventy years, the administration of the prerogative of mercy has devolved upon the Secretary of State for the Home Department, who is considered as being directly and exclusively responsible for the same. In Canada, His Excellency the Governor General is, by his instructions under the Royal Sign Manuel, authorized and empowered, as he shall occasion, when any crime or offence against the laws of the Dominion has been committed, to grant to any offender, convicted of any such crime or offence, a pardon, upon receiving in capital cases, the advice in that behalf of the Privy Council for Canada, and in other cases, the advice of one of his ministers. In cases other than capital cases, such advice has been in practice, that of the Minister of Justice. In the present instance, the recommendation for the prisoner's release was made by the Minister of Justice. In the view of His Excellency's advisers, it would be, as a general principle, unusual and inconvenient to lay before Parliament the grounds on which that discretion proceeds which dictates leniency or severity on the part of the responsible advisers of the Crown; the course of general practice in the past has been in accordance with this principle, and it is considered that in the present case no special reasons exist for departing from the general rule.

That was in answer to a request to bring down all the papers and I may note that the Minister of Justice of that time in giving that answer expressly added that he was giving the view of His Excellency's advisers, so that we have in this answer an expression of the view of the Government of the right hon. the leader of the Opposition The next instance will be found in 'Hansard' of 1907-8, volume I, page 510. In this the question was with regard to a prisoner named Gillis who was sentenced to be hanged at Charlottetown, and whose sentence was commuted.

One of these questions was:

Was this prisoner's sentence commuted to imprisonment for life? If so, on what grounds?

The answer to it is:

The prisoner's sentence was so commuted. As to the grounds upon which such commutation proceeded, I am quite unable to answer, but the well established constitutional practice in that regard is that in general, the advice tendered to the Governor General in such cases is regarded as confidential, and not to be communicated even to Parliament unless under very exceptional circumstances. Such circumstances would not appear to exist in the present case.

Another question was:

Has this prisoner been released? If so, when and upon what grounds?

The answer was:

He was released. The reply to question two applies to the latter part of this question.

It was also asked:

From what source did the request for his release come?

The answer was:

From several persons interested in the prisoner who, from time to time during several years, urged his release. It is not the practice to communicate the names of memorialists or petitioners in such cases.

So far as I have been able to find, the next occasion on which this question came up was upon a motion by the Hon. Mr. Foster for a return showing the number of released convicts, their names, and so forth, covering a certain period of time. This matter will be found reported in 'Hansard' of 1907-8, volume 2, page 2831. Upon that motion there was very considerable discussion, and I do not propose to go over it all. Members of the House who are interested will find in that discussion very fully set forth and elaborated by the then Minister of Justice, Sir Allan Aylesworth, the reason why documents of the kind now asked for should not be produced. I think I outlined some of those reasons on the former occasion when I spoke on this matter. To my mind the reasons are conclusive and should carry conviction to the minds of any who read them. I do not think I could set them forth as forcibly or as clearly as my predecessor did; and I shall simply content myself with referring members of the House who may be interested to the statement made on that occasion by Sir Allan Aylesworth.

The matter again came up in the case of a prisoner named William Blunden, as reported in 'Hansard' of 1907-8, volume 2, at page 3468, and following. There Sir Allan Aylesworth expressed the same views as he did upon the motion of the Hon. Mr. Foster to which I have referred. In connection with the latter motion, I might point out that it calls for a list of the prisoners discharged covering a number of years, with the reasons for their discharge and other information. The motion, as finally passed by the House, with the consent of the hon. gentleman who moved it, after Sir Allan Aylesworth had explained why he thought it should not be granted as it was made, was simply to the effect that a return should be brought down showing the number of prisoners discharged and the reasons for their discharge so far as it might be deemed expedient to state them. This was done on account of the position taken by the then Minister of Justice that the documents themselves ought not to be produced, but as a rule at all events ought to be treated as confidential. In the case of Gillis, which I mentioned a moment ago, not only did Sir Allan Aylesworth set forth the views which I have already expressed and support them by a very clear argument; but in the course of that discussion, speaking particularly of the reports of judges which are furnished in these cases, the right hon. the present leader of the Opposition, as reported at page 3471 of 'Hansard' said:

Mr. Speaker, I might recall, if I may be permitted, a discussion which took place a few days ago on a cognate subject, in which the practice of the Department of Justice, in this country and the practice in Great Britain was reviewed. The Minister of Justice stated, I believe without contradiction, that the reports of the judges in cases similar to this one are always made by request of the department, whereas in capital cases the judge is always bound to make a report of the proceedings to the department. The Minister of Justice did not contend the other day, that in all cases, with absolutely no exception, these reports are confidential, but I am not aware that, outside of capital cases, any report of a judge has been brought down.

In the course of a discussion in connection with the case of Blunden, some very interesting remarks of Sir Allan Aylesworth will be found on page 3476 of the volume of 'Hansard' which I have mentioned. These remarks deal with the question whether such documents should be communicated confidentially to anybody, even to individual members of this House. What I have said I think quite justified my saying that my consent to the granting of this motion as it now stands would be a departure from the well established rule and practice, as it is in force in England, and as it has been in force and is recognized in this country at all events since the Right Hon. Sir John Thompson occupied the position which I occupy to-day. I am sure the House will agree with me that, except for very grave reasons indeed, we should not depart from a rule, which has such very conclusive reasons in support of it, and which rests upon so well established a practice, and for whose existence are responsible men of such recognized competency in regard to a matter of this kind as my predecessors in the office of Minister of Justice, namely, Sir John Thompson, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, and Sir Allan Aylesworth. I can see no reason why this case should be treated as an exceptional one. The circumstances in connection with it involve nothing that would enable me to differentiate it from the ordinary case which is dealt with under the Ticket-of-Leave Act. As regards the reasons upon which this rule rests, I am quite prepared to rest my position upon the reasons set forth by my distinguished predecessor, Sir Allan Aylesworth. I might perhaps point out what are in my opinion some very obvious reasons. Let us confine ourselves for the moment to the question of the exercise of clemency under the provisions of the Ticket-of-Leave Act, which is an Act under which His Excellency the Governor General exercises a power not of pardoning people, not of relieving them of their sentences, but of permitting them to pass a portion of those sentences not in close custody, but under supervision and subject to the obligation of reporting to the police from time to time. In regard to cases under that Act, in the past and to-day, when applications are made, we ask the different judges for reports. These reports come to us, not in the performance of any official obligation or duty imposed upon the judge by the law, but as conveying information given at our request to aid us in determining what action should be taken. And it is of very great importance to us, and to the proper administration of this Act—and, of course, I realize that the importance to us is not greatly to be considered, but the importance of a proper administration of this law will be recognized, that these reports should be made under such circumstances that the judge will feel himself quite at liberty to communicate all the facts he may know as to the offence, the character or previous record of the accused, and any other circumstances that may bear upon the question whether leniency should be exercised or not. If it goes forth to the world that these reports are being called for not alone for the information of the minister and through him of His Royal Highness, but that they are liable, even though in the discretion of the minister, to be brought down to the House and published broadcast, I think anyone will realize that the judges will feel that they have to speak always in view of that fact. I am not at all suggesting that the judges would say privately, so far as they were personally concerned, that which they would not say publicly; but there are many things that the judge would naturally put into such a report which, if they went out to the public, would be very damaging to persons connected with the case and, in some cases, to the convict himself. I think it is certainly desirable that, while a judge should be careful in making such reports, yet that he should feel that in giving information to His Excellency and his advisers, he may speak freely and that he should deem it his duty to convey whatever he thinks will help those responsible in the matter to reach a right decision. We seek information not only from judges but from other officers. We have the parole officers, and we address ourselves also to police officers and others who are in a position to give us information; and anything that would be likely to stand in the way of obtaining that information freely and openly would be, in my judgment and as in the judgment of my predecessors, detrimental to the working of this Act.

Apart from the people to whom we address ourselves for information, there are many people who communicate with us in regard to applications. We have many letters from members of the families of these prisoners dealing with private matters which, no doubt, it would be painful for them to have made public. And I think hon. members will agree that such correspondence should be regarded as confidential. So, upon considering the whole matter, I think the established practice should be adhered to as being one that rests upon absolutely sufficient reason. I think I should not be justified in departing from that practice and consenting to the granting of this motion. I do not see anything in this case to differentiate it from the ordinary case to be governed by the general rule. There have been some. I would not say suggestions, but in some way, I think the idea has been sought to be conveyed, that there was something in connection with this case which showed that some political consideration had influenced the action taken. I was not acting at the moment when this case was dealt with. Of course, I do not disclaim the responsibility. But if I had been acting, I should very much prefer to remain under suspicion that might be generated by the fact that the documents were not produced than to consent to their production and thereby lead to the injury which I think would be done to the proper working of this Act. I am confident that no member of this House will suppose that in taking the position I am taking I am guided by reasons other than those I have given, or that in his action the Minister of Finance was inspired by any other motive than to act on the considerations contained in the documents before him. I believe that not only with regard to the members of this House but also with regard to right-minded people of this country, who, after all, are the vast majority; and if there be any people whose minds are so constituted that they will find in the action taken with regard to this motion any indication of desire to conceal anything because the action in a particular case was connected with political motives, then, for my part and so far as I am responsible for the action taken—and I am wholly responsible for it—I am quite willing to be subjected to the unfavourable opinion of people of that kind. I might also add that there was a ruling similar to that which I have cited in the other cases, in the Blyth case brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Centre York (Mr. Wallace).

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: By your leave, Mr. Speaker, might I offer a word with regard to the remarks of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. SPEAKER: I think it ought to be by the permission of the House. The discussion expanded because of the fact that there would probably be no other favourable opportunity for the Minister of Justice to make his statement.

Mr. BORDEN: It is not intended that it shall develop into a debate; and, I think that my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) might be permitted by unanimous consent, to make any remarks he wishes to make.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER: I do not think that the remarks I shall offer to the House will occasion a debate, because I have no dissent to offer from the remarks of the Minister of Justice. He has taken the position which has been taken by all his predecessors, that such communications are confidential and ought not to be brought down to the House. But he has anticipated a possible exception because he has stated that there may be occasion where an exception may be made. I am not aware that such occasions have been many, but I know that in the past there has been one celebrated case, the case of Shortiss, in which the papers were brought before the House. The Government, either for their own reasons or for public reasons, brought down all the papers in that case. And it may be that there are other cases in which the minority think it well to press their claim to such papers. But, as a rule, I am in accord with what the minister has said. Therefore, I am not surprised that in the present case, he does not think it well to bring down the papers. I have no observations to make as to whether the release of this man Landry was advisable or not. That may possibly be subject to consideration. But, as to the rule and the general principle, I agree with what the Minister of Justice has said.

Mr. KYTE: As the Minister of Justice has decided not to bring down these papers, I would ask that the order standing in my name in reference to them be discharged.

Mr. SPEAKER: This is not the proper time for such a motion.

Mr. BORDEN: It can be made when the motions are reached to-morrow.

NAVAL FORCES OF THE EMPIRE.

Consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Borden for the second reading of Bill No. 21, to authorize measures for increasing the effective Naval Forces of the Empire, and the proposed amendment of Mr. Turriff thereto, resumed from February 24.

Mr. R. B. BENNETT (Calgary): I rise with some hesitation to address the House on this question, inasmuch as I recognize that the long discussion has practically exhausted all that may well be said on the subject under consideration. But, after all, each member of the House must give some reason for the faith that is within him, and in this case I give my support to this Bill the more readily because it embodies a principle which I have endeavoured during all my life to support. I think there has been a great deal of confusion of terms during the progress of this debate. I have listened to the hon. gentlemen opposite and I have heard them discuss this measure as though we were embarking upon a permanent naval policy of contribution. None know better than they that such is not the case. I have heard them and I cannot help but think that they did it deliberately, confuse the terms 'Empire' and 'Nation,' and then confuse the contribution we are now making to the support of the Imperial navy with a permanent policy. It must be apparent that these gentlemen were conscious at least of what they were doing. In order that there may be no misapprehension I venture on the very threshold of my remarks to read this Bill, and I say, Sir, that no measure that has ever been introduced into the Canadian Parliament in my time, or in the time of those older than I, embodies more, and says it in fewer words than the measure which is now before the House. The Bill reads as follows:

> This Act may be cited as the Naval Aid Act. From and out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada there may be paid out and applied a sum not exceeding thirty-five million dollars for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire.

I have heard hon. gentlemen in this House say, and I have read in the public press that this was an endeavour on the part of the people of Canada to borrow $35,000,000 from England and pay interest upon it to England, for the purpose of aiding in the building of the British navy. At the very threshold of this discussion it must be apparent to everybody that this money is to come, as the Bill says: out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada; and, when hon. gentlemen endeavour to make it appear that we are borrowing this money for the purpose of building a navy they are saying something which does no credit to their own intelligence. The next point to which I direct attention is in the second section of the clause which says that this money is for the purpose of immediately increasing the effective naval forces of the Empire. Heaven only knows, Mr. Speaker, that during all these long years we have had delay enough. We have had the promises of 1897, 1902, 1909, and of 1911, and what have we? We have nothing. We have nothing, except if you will, possibly three ships that have been contributed to the British navy: the Niobe, the Rainbow and the Minnie M, that splendid privateer whose admiral-in-chief is not in this House but presides over the destinies of the Liberal party in another, and one of whose chief lieutenants finds a resting place here, and others, unfortunately for the country in which I live, find a resting place in the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. To proceed with the third paragraph of the Bill:

The said sum shall be used and applied under the direction of the Governor in Council in the construction and equipment of battleships or armoured cruisers of the most modern and powerful type.

We have here committed ourselves to a policy that we think will be effective and efficient. We have not said that we will supply a ship in eastern Canadian waters to be the chief attraction at an old-home reunion, or that we will raise the hopes of those upon the Pacific coast by supplying something to lie at anchor at their anchoring ground. And, as a third ship is mentioned, we have not endeavoured to supply a privateer—they are very useful and they sail under letters-of-marque sometimes, and one of them sailed from the Soo some years ago carrying forty privateers, to prey not upon the commerce of Canada, but upon the rights of Canadian citizen voters in the great province of Ontario. Then, the fourth paragraph of the Bill says:

The said ships when constructed and equipped shall be placed by the Governor in Council at the disposal of His Majesty for the common defence of the Empire.

It is not within the four corners of that Bill that the autonomy of this country will in any way be impinged upon, or trenched upon. It is not intended, in the Bill that we propose, to detract one whit from our nationality, but it does say that we recognize the duty that devolves upon us, as citizens of the British Empire, to do everything we can for the common defence of the Empire. Therein, Mr. Speaker, as I shall presently show, we differ materially from hon. gentlemen opposite, whose policy, I think I shall show conclusively to this House, has been, and is, a policy of separation, a policy looking to one end, and that end independence, and no other. They have no desire to assist in any way, shape or form in the defence or upbuilding of the Empire. Now we turn to paragraph 5:

The said sum shall be paid, used and applied and the said ships shall be constructed and placed at the disposal of His Majesty subject to such terms, conditions and arrangements as may be agreed upon between the Governor in Council and His Majesty's Government.

There is a clear concise statement of a policy that I venture to say will commend itself to reasonable business men in every part of this great Dominion. It will not only commend itself to the judgment of reasonable business men, but, except a man be a most violent partisan, it will appeal to the rank and file of the Canadian people everywhere. Why? Because it is the first endeavour that has really been made to convert talk into concrete action, and to show that we are really desirous of doing something for the common defence, and for the sustenance and maintenance of the British Empire. I have listened to hours of talk about the willingness of hon. gentlemen opposite to do this and that for the British Empire. I look through the statute-books of this country, and I look in vain to find any just or reasonable effort on their part to convert that talk into something concrete. That is the reason, I say, that if the Canadian people had no other explanation, and nothing more than the mere reading of this measure which is now submitted to the House for consideration, they would be satisfied and content. Now, Sir, I think that one can say with some degree of fairness that any hon. gentleman standing in his place in this House should be able to give some clear reasons, rather than generalities, for supporting the second reading of the measure now before the House. It will be remembered that those who oppose the second reading of this Bill oppose every proposal that is outlined and stated in that measure. They oppose the common defence of the Empire; they oppose a contribution to a common defence; they oppose the putting of our ships at the disposal of the Admiralty; they stand for a policy that negatives in every respect the policy that is outlined and stated in that measure. I support the second reading of this measure for many reasons, but I shall content myself to-day with giving six, with some slight arguments upon them.

I support the second reading of the Bill, first, because we are an integral part of the British Empire; secondly, because the naval supremacy of that Empire is menaced; thirdly, because it is our duty and our privilege, as a self-respecting people, to assist in the maintenance of that supremacy; fourthly, because co-operation in naval defence is essential to efficiency; fifthly, because it makes for and will do much to ensure the world's peace; and lastly, because it makes for the consolidation of a united British Empire, is a step towards Imperialism, if you will. These are the six reasons that I have to give for supporting the Bill and for arguing in favour of its second reading. It should not be necessary for any person at this stage to argue that we are an integral part of the British Empire, and yet, Sir, I venture to say that any stranger who had come to this city and sat in the gallery of this House during the weeks that have gone by, and listened to the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, would doubt, and properly doubt, whether we were a part of the British Empire at all. I listened to the speeches, and these speeches abound in many talks about Nationalism. Before I finish with Nationalism, I think I shall be able to show that the prince of Nationalism is the Postmaster General.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: I mean the ex-Postmaster General. I am glad to be reminded of the fact that I used the term the 'Postmaster General.' I had intended to say ex-Postmaster General. It may well be that at one time the two hon. gentlemen traversed the same road, but it is somewhat pleasing to know that since then the Postmaster General has journeyed to Damascus.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: There are some who have journeyed to Jericho. Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer shortly to a few mistakes in terminology that I think have been made in this debate. It is true that this Canada of ours has almost all the attributes of a nation. It is true that we can exercise almost all the powers that a nation may exercise. It is true that we have the right under the British North America Act to care for our own defence. It is true there has been extended to us from time to time the power to make commercial treaties with limitations. But we should not forget, and I say that hon. gentlemen opposite in their speeches indicate that they do forget, that after all, the Dominion of Canada, self-governing federation though it is, is essentially a creature of an Act of the Imperial Parliament that sits at Westminster, and that our constitution ultimately construed by the court of last resort, is a written document, the British North America Act; and however much you may gloss it over with splendid language and beautiful diction, as the right hon. the leader of the Opposition very frequently does; however much you may attempt by splendid rhetoric to cover up the fact, it still remains that we are not a nation, but that we are a great self-governing Dominion, subject to the Parliament which sits at Westminster, which in practice does not exercise all those powers, but which in theory may well exercise them, so far as this country is concerned. We must remember that fact because it is the basis of every argument made in this House. I care not what may be said to the contrary, the simple fact remains that we are only a self-governing colony, if you will a great confederacy, exercising the powers that are given to us by a statute of the Imperial Parliament. It will be part of my argument to show that this legislation is a step in the right direction, a step towards that goal at which, I say, we should all aim, namely the creation of an Imperial Parliament that, with men from this Dominion, and from that dominion, from New Zealand, Australia and Canada, would legislate upon every subject that effects the common rights and the common well-being of this great Empire. It is for that reason that I draw attention at the very threshold of my argument to the mistakes in terminology which are so often to be found in speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite. I say it should be axiomatic that we are an essential part of the British Empire. Let us concede without further argument that we are subject to its legislation and that the Parliament that sits at Westminster might well legislate for us. Having conceded that, I pass on to the second reason which I have given for my support of this Bill, that is, because the naval supremacy of this Empire is threatened.

Mr. Speaker, if I remember aright, in the year 1906, the Cawdor memorandum, so-called, was given to the British people. That memorandum declared that England should commence the construction of dreadnoughts. Up to 1906 it is apparent that all the nations of the world were secondary in naval importance to Great Britain. She had two ships to one of a combination of the other powers in Europe. But, when it became apparent that the ships of that day were obsolete, that no longer were these ships regarded as being fit to put into the line of battle, when the Admiralty was committed to the policy of dreadnoughts, it must be admitted by every member of this House that at that moment England, Germany and France stood upon almost an equality. It is true that of those ships that have since been called obsolete, England had three or four to the other powers' one, it is true that she had more than a combination of European powers; but when it came to dreadnoughts, she had to face the scientific knowledge, the skill and the workmanship of any other state which had almost as much if not greater scientific knowledge in some lines of action than was to be found within her own shores. We find that when the Cawdor memorandum was published, and when England entered upon the construction of dreadnoughts, the German people commenced a similar programme.

I have a most profound regard and admiration for the German Empire. No people have brought to bear upon the great problems of to-day, a finer skill, a higher knowledge, or a greater desire to translate the knowledge learned in books and schools into concrete action, than have the German people. They have brought about, during the past forty years, the consolidation of kingdoms, duchies and grand duchies into an empire and, thanks to the protective policy of Bismarck, since 1879, they have encouraged within their own boundaries a scheme of industrial development such as has seldom been seen in this world. They have applied their industrial and scientific knowledge, the knowledge learned in schools and books, to the construction of warships in the great works of Krupp and in great works in other parts of Germany, and it must be apparent to hon. gentlemen opposite that to-day they stand on an equality practically with England. They have more people than England has; they have 66,000,000 in Germany as against 45,000,000 in Great Britain. Their population increases nearly a million a year while the population of the United Kingdom increases by but 300,000 or 400,000 a year. Those were the facts which confronted this Empire in 1906 and then the question arose as to whether it would be wise or unwise to continue with this great programme of naval construction upon which we had entered. It will be remembered that the Government of Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman adopted a certain attitude whereby they thought they might be able to curtail this mad race of armaments. During the years 1906, 1907 and 1908 they lessened their naval activity in so far as the construction of warships was concerned, but Germany did not respond to the invitation. Why?—because the German Emperor said: Henceforth, our Empire is upon the sea. He had created the finest army the world had ever seen as far as numbers and appearances go, and now he said: Our Empire lies upon the sea. Britain was beginning to curtail her naval programme, the Germans declared that they would go on and increase theirs. Why did they do this?—because they stood on an equality with England in the construction of dreadnoughts. They can build these ships as rapidly as England can, they can, at the Great Krupp works, construct heavy guns as rapidly as England can and they can man their ships with almost as good sailors as England can, although not quite as good, because they have not the splendid traditions of the British navy behind them. But the fact remains that the German people, in 1906, commenced practically on an equality with England as far as the construction of dreadnoughts is concerned. France, Italy and Austria-Hungary commenced the construction of dreadnoughts. Unfortunately for us, unfortunately for this Empire, those of us who look at the matter closely have found, as any gentleman can find who will take the trouble to look at the books in the Library, that instead of our being supreme upon the sea against a combination of powers, by reason of the change in the character of the ships that are being constructed, by reason of the change in the equipment, construction and plans of ships, the supremacy of Britain upon the seas is challenged by a combination of the powers of Europe. That fact being so, and it seems to me that it cannot be disputed, what do we find? Hon. gentlemen opposite do not deny that fact. I have heard them admit that fact unreservedly in their speeches. The right hon. the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) stood up in this House and said that he knew that the conditions were as I have indicated, that he knew of the menace four years ago. Knew it four years ago and did not lift a hand for the British Empire!

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Knew it four years ago and lifted not only not a hand but not so much as a finger for the British Empire! He was content to utter platitudes and beautiful generalities to the people upon their duty and point to the freedom which we enjoy under the British flag, but when it was pointed out to him that we must have ships and shipyards, when it was pointed out to him that the German Empire, the Austro-Hungarian dual monarchy, Italy and France were building more dreadnoughts and rivalling the power of Great Britain upon the seas, what did he do? What did hon. gentlemen opposite do?—they bought a Niobe, and they placed on the Pacific ocean a Rainbow, a glorious name indicating that faith, which comes to us because we have a promise that the world will not again be destroyed by flood. But, Mr. Speaker, faith without works is dead, dead, dead. That kind of faith is the faith that the Romans had when Rome fell. That is the kind of faith that the colonists of Carthage and Phoenicia had but they are no more. That is the kind of faith which lost them their colonies upon the African coast. That is what reduced the greatness of Rome because Rome fell for want of works. That is the kind of faith which brought about the ruin and downfall of all those kingdoms and empires and just so truly as the history and the experiences of the past repeat themselves, and that the great teachings that come to us from the past shall again be verified so do these hon. gentlemen represent the same faith as that which fiddled when old Rome fell.

An hon. MEMBER: Hurry up and get to Bourassa now.

Mr. BENNETT: I will be very glad to answer the hon. gentleman if he will be kind enough to speak up so that I may hear him. We have a right to ask ourselves, every thinking Canadian has a right to ask himself, and the young men of this country have a right to ask themselves, why there is being massed in the North sea today this great and ever greater navy of the German Empire. Why this great industrial hurry in Austro-Hungary, why are the Germans busy in their ship-yards and why are they increasing their armaments? We have a right to ask ourselves if they are building these navies to protect their trade or if they are building these navies for the great battle which those who think believe must come and which may come not long hence. I have a right to ask myself whether or not the great German Empire has colonial trade to care for, whether she has overseas colonies to protect.

Her people remain largely in their own country; hence the great increase in population. I have my own idea why Germany is building so great a navy. They are doing what we would do if situated as they are and one cannot but admire and respect them for it. There you have a great nation, self-contained if you will so far as her people are concerned. They do not grow quite corn enough for themselves. They are a busy, happy and industrious empire; and they are more loyal and patriotic and more given to the devout worshipping of their national existence than almost any other people in the world. What happens? They do not desire to go abroad and live under a strange flag. They desire to plant the flag of Germany in new lands, as they have seen their kinsmen across the North sea do. They are close students of history, they see what Britain has done, planted her flag in the remotest portions of the world planted her colonies everywhere, and sent her people and the people of other lands to these colonies. The Germans see this and say to themselves: the only way we can make ourselves great and bring about an expansion compatible with our national existence is by planting our colonies in new lands. They ask themselves where the lands are, and see the red flag of England floating in almost every part of the world. They look to the South American republics and see possibilities there, but are told: Hands off. Beware of the Munroe Doctrine of the United States. They are asking themselves every day: Where can we find an avenue for expansion, where commence new colonies, where plant people over seas. These are the questions they are asking themselves. They demand an outlet for their surplus population and are willing if needs be to fight for it, and they tell you that they are following the principle laid down by Lord Nelson on the day of the Battle of Copenhagen: If we cannot beat the enemy we can put him so out of business that he will do no harm to us and no good to himself. That is a proper and sound idea, for a great people to have in their mind and unless we in the overseas dominions, who constitute the greater Britain beyond the seas, we who are now or will shortly be the dominant partners in this great federation of the world, show to our German friends and to our friends in other lands that we are prepared and willing to sacrifice our all for the advancement of the common defence of our common Empire then, Sir, I think they are right in the conclusions they have drawn, and it is for this reason that this measure appeals, as I think it does, so strongly to the younger men who believe in our Anglo-Saxon civilization. I think you will find that wherever men speak the English tongue, they rejoice in the fact that we have entered upon a policy such as this because they say: We do not necessarily believe in war, but this we do believe in, that the best possible way in which a people can secure peace and guarantee ultimate peace is by being well prepared for war. The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), who, too, represents a western constituency, pointed out that he does believe in this great menace and great danger. The hon. gentleman from Queens-Sunbury (Mr. McLean), with military training and experience, recognizes the menace to this country. Other gentlemen opposite declare there is no immediate danger and no menace. Whose word are you to take on this, the word of the eminent gentleman from Edmonton and that of the colonel from Queens-Sunbury or that of the other gentlemen I have mentioned? I prefer that of my friend from Edmonton who has fought many fights, who is an excellent warrior. I have engaged in strife with him myself and sometimes I have not been the victor. I say that frankly, and he should know well when there is a great menace. He knows what menaces are because sometimes he has been menaced from within and not from without. Knowing of this menace, knowing these facts as my hon. friends opposite do, some of them go around with a dictionary to discover the meaning of the word 'emergency.' One of them translates it into 'need' and says that is the very same thing.

Mr. TURRIFF: That was Foster.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. Minister for Trade and Commerce said he used the word 'need' and not 'emergency' but the hon. junior member for Halifax said that need and emergncy were the same. Imagine such conduct with respect to this great menace to the Empire—and it is admitted by thoughtful men opposite; those who know admit it and those who do not know it salve their consciences by saying: 'If I believed.' Having ears to hear they hear not, and eyes to see, see not lest, hearing with their ears and seeing with their eyes, they should believe. That is their position, and the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie), being an eminent elder, will be quite able to appreciate it.

There is one other witness whom I will call to prove this menace. I am not here to-day to argue as to the great expenditures being made by Germany, expenditures greater than those that have been made by any other country in the world's history under similar circumstances. I am not here to argue that in this mad race for armaments this Empire will ultimately be overtaken, but I am here to call as witnesses to the menace—I care not what you call it, I say menace—to the menace to the naval supremacy of the Empire, the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. Who are they? These gentlemen are charged with the responsibility for what? For the safety of the King's dominions, not for the safety of the British Islands, not for the safety of one island or two islands only but for the safety of any land over which flies the flag of Britain, and these gentlemen, with knowledge of the facts, have prepared and submitted to this Government a memorandum. In all the documents of a similar character that have been given to Parliament there is not to be found another document which indicates anything like such a grave state of affairs as the document submitted to this House by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. I am a little familiar with the political history of Great Britain. I have read those great debates of days gone by, when the genius of Pitt and Chatham and Burke flashed across the horizon. The House of Commons used to go into debate upon the state of the nation, and it is in those debates that we read clear-cut statements of the exact condition of the army and the navy, upon the efficiency of which the safety of England depended. You will remember in days gone by the grave discussions in England as to whether or not this or that was sufficient, whether or not the navy at that point was equal to the demands made upon it, whether or not the army being led yonder was equal to the demands being made upon it. But in all the history of this Empire I challenge any gentleman opposite to point to a single instance where you will find so strong a statement of a grave menace as in the document I hold in my hand. And these gentlemen who prepared it, who were they? The most eminent admirals that England has. The right hon. Mr. Churchill, who is the head of the Admiralty, has brought to bear upon the administration of the affairs of the admiralty, as you will be told by people of all shades of politics in England, great capacity, a great sense of order, and discipline and he has improved the service remarkably. The skilled men under him are the men upon whose genius will depend the safety of this empire in the hour of peril. If within the near future the great battle is fought that will determine the future of the Empire and the life of the state, in their hands will rest our destiny, in the hands of these great admirals, of these highly trained technical men, and, forsooth, we are told that there is no necessity of listening to what they say. I have not heard so many naval authorities since I left the maritime provinces as I have in listening to the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite. I have listened to men who know more about guns than the trained men who wrote this Admiralty memorandum. I have listened to greater admirals than the admirals now in command the the British fleets. This House has listened to them; this country has listened to them; but if I interpret aright the views of the people of this country, I do not believe for a single moment that they have been misled. They are not content to take against the opinions of the men, in whose hands must rest our common safety, the opinion of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Loggie) or of members from other places, or even of the hon. member from Red Deer (Mr. Clark). I think I would prefer to take the opinion of the Admiralty to opinions he might give upon any subject except possibly free trade. Let us look at what the Lords of the Admiralty say. I do not desire to burden this House; but this they do say:

> It has been necessary in the past decade to concentrate the fleet mainly in home waters. In 1902 there were 160 British vessels on the overseas stations as against 76 to-day.

A man knows something of what he sees with his own eyes. I was a student in the old city of Halifax, and I remember when the white ensign of England floated over the battleships in Bedford basin. I remember leaving that city and the maritime provinces and going to the West. When I left for the West, I still saw the white ensign of England floating in the harbours on the Atlantic coast. It floats there no more. On my first trip to the Pacific I saw the white ensign of England floating in the harbour of Esquimalt. It floats there no more. Why has it disappeared from the harbours of the East and from the harbours of the West? Why is it to be seen there no more? Why are the overseas ships which were 160 in number when I was a boy, now only seventy-six in number? Why? Because the naval supremacy of England is menaced. Because the peace and the welfare of the Empire are menaced. Because England's power is concentrated at a point, where in the day of peril it will be struck, in the North Sea. In this hour of peril, which must be known to gentlemen opposite, in this awful moment of peril—I do not have to call it an emergency—men, who cavil and joke and treat lightly a memorandum such as this, have little regard for the great duties and obligations of citizenship. They little appreciate the privileges we enjoy, and they little realize the terrible results that will follow in the event of a disaster coming to the British navy. That is not all. I heard what I regard and what I think this House will regard as one of the worst possible attacks that have ever been made upon responsible men by the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean). There dared to rise in his place in this House a gentleman, a member of the Canadian Parliament, who charged the British Admiralty with collusion with the Government of this country in the preparation of that memorandum. Let us look at what he said, because in all the annals of British Parliamentary life, you will find with but one single exception that no such attack was ever made upon responsible men. I turn back the pages of history, and I find that, during the long discussions that preceded the American Revolution, there were some men who dared to stand and attack the good faith of England; but they were few. It remained for the junior member for Halifax, representing one of the oldest cities in this Dominion, where responsible government was given to the people, to come to this House and charge duress against the Admiralty. Mr. Speaker, let us pause and think what this means. Let us consider if he interprets the genius of the Liberal party in what he says. Let us understand it. I turn to page 3884 of 'Hansard', where the speech of the junior member for Halifax is reported. He opens his speech by saying what? He said that he proposed to be able to show to this House—let me read his words:

I propose arguing later that that document was procured by duress.

Mark the words. Then I turn to page 3916, and what do I find? I find that hon. gentleman charging conspiracy between the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and the right hon. gentleman who leads this House and his colleagues. Shame on him for such an attack. Let me read the words. Hon. gentlemen opposite smile. They approve, I take it, of his attack. They desire to associate themselves with his attack. I assume that is their purpose and the purport of their smile. I am glad they desire to do so, because now we will know exactly where they are. These are the words:

But there is nothing substantial after all about the document and I think hon. gentlemen opposite will agree with me in that statement if they will look at the matter fairly. The memorandum bears the earmarks of a document procured by what in law is termed duress by a political leader who was in dire distress and extremity. He collided with the flotsam and jetsam which he himself put in the water and he sailed over to England with his flags flying in distress, asking for aid. He did not issue forthwith the ordinary Macedonian cry of: Come over and help me, but he went over to the Admiralty direct and said: I have come over here to have you help me out of a political difficulty and the Admiralty had to make three attempts before they got that which he thought might help him. The most you can say of this memorandum is that it was given at the request of the Prime Minister with a view to presentation to the Dominion Parliament as some justification for a contribution to the British Admiralty of three ships or $35,000,000.

I cannot stigmatize language like that with sufficiently strong expressions of detestation and abhorrence. Let me go a step further. Let me ask the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) if he approves of this attack upon his friend Lord Morley of Blackburn? Let me ask the right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition if he approves of this attack upon his friend Mr. Asquith? Let me ask the hon. member for Red Deer if he approves of this attack upon his friend the right hon. Mr. Lloyd George. Let me ask the hon. the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux), who in his splendid eulogy of British statesmen the other day desired to draw attention to what they had done to relieve social troubles in England, if he approves of this attack on Mr. Churchill and Mr. Lloyd George. Does he approve? Does he think these men were so derelict to their duty that for a moment they forgot themselves and conspired with the leader of this House? Does he think it? That is what it means. What is duress? I took the trouble to look that word up in the law books. This is what it is. The right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition smiles in anticipation of the definition:

Duress—Personal restraint or fear of personal injury or imprisonment. Duress exists where one is induced by another's unlawful act to make a contract or perform some act under conditions which prevent his exercising free will.

That is the definition of duress; and the junior member for Halifax says that this memorandum was obtained from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty under circumstances that amounted in law to duress, in other words, under a threat to imprison them, to deprive them of their free will. Can you imagine anything more amusing than to find the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, along with his colleagues, going to England and threatening the Prime Minister, his colleagues, and the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, with imprisonment?

In all the history of British parliamentary institutions from the day they first came to us until to-day, you will find nowhere any record to show that any responsible man, much less an ex-attorney general from the old province of Nova Scotia, had charged conspiracy against the men responsible for the safety of the British Empire. It is the habit of the hon. gentleman to attack Englishmen. I read in the parliamentary debates that he was strong in his attack against Right Hon. Walter Long and the Right Hon. F. E. Smith. It is a great thing to be a valiant man and brave under the circumstances in question. The gentleman who charged conspiracy against the British Admiralty might well be forgiven for making attacks against the gentlemen I have named. These gentlemen need no defence at my hands. Those who read the parliamentary history of Great Britain know that in the diary of one of the great Englishmen of nearly three hundred years ago it is noted that a division in the House of Commons was enlivened by the presence of the genial face of Walter Long. And ever since then there has been in that House of Commons one by that name. And there is one of that name there to-day, a man who has given his intellect, his wealth, his life and everything he has to the cause of advancing the cause and interest of our Empire. And the Right Hon. F. E. Smith likewise needs no defence at my hands. He, Sir, is one of the brightest products of the Tory democracy. He has made for himself a great name and a high place in England, without, as Lord Granville said when speaking of Disraeli, the assistance of any of those social advantages which added so much to his career when he entered public life. Mr. Smith has made for himself a great position at the Bar and in public life. But was it not in keeping with the position of an ex-attorney general of the province of Nova Scotia who would charge conspiracy against the Crown, against the Admiralty and its officers, that he should attack these gentlemen also? These gentlemen can well afford to disregard such an attack. But what were they attacked for? Because they ventured to say in this country that they were glad, for the sake of the British Empire, that reciprocity was defeated in 1911. And the hon. gentleman, in addition to his other attacks, attacked also his honoured leader. I dare say his leader was not in when he attacked him, but he said, 'I will not stand to have my honoured leader give evidence of the loyalty of Canadians.' He does not want anybody to testify to the loyalty of Canadians, not even his own leader, and, of course, he objects to the right hon. leader of this House doing it. These are the words of his speech. I say again, as I said on the first day when I spoke in this House, I can well understand the ideas of men who said that reciprocity was a bad thing for the British Empire. I say, the problem was and is a problem in patriotism. I have lived long enough in the western country with its cosmopolitan population to know that bonfires blazed there when British arms were beaten in South Africa. Was not that a matter of concern? There are splendid settlers in western Canada—no finer, no better men, men who bring to bear upon the complex problems of western existence an experience and a knowledge that is not equalled by any other men in the world, men who have a high regard for law and freedom, men desirous of educating their children in right ways.

But, Sir, in 1911, to and fro in that great western land, there went emissaries who told them that one great party in this state favoured reciprocity, and reciprocity was looked upon by the President of the United States as something which would bring about—what? The absorption of Canada and the making of it into a commercial adjunct of the United States. And when they heard these things what did they do? I know, for I have spoken with them, men of high intelligence who could speak their minds. And they said to me: 'Mr. Bennett, I am voting for reciprocity because Uncle Sam wants it, and what he wants, I want.' That is what I have been told a hundred times. I have talked with them in the little hamlets and in the great towns. I have heard their sneering remarks at times after the speeches delivered to them by these gentlemen who told them forsooth that reciprocity would be a great thing for them. And they have said to me: 'Yes, a great thing for us if we lived in the United States, but not for us here.' And then they have said: 'Ah, well, since Uncle Sam wants it, I will vote for it. Was that a problem in patriotism or not? The greatest problem which lies before the Canadian people today is assimilating the vast population flocking to the West. How are we going to do it? By having hon. gentlemen stand in their places and charge conspiracy between the Lords of the Admiralty and the leaders of this House? Are we to have duress alleged against British public men? Are we to have our country made a commercial adjunct to another? These are the things we have to consider. But, these gentlemen tell me: They have assimilated a great population in the republic to the south. But I should like to make an observation about that. I stood in the city of New York last fall, after the Balkan trouble arose, and there saw flocking from the inland towns of the United States and from the prairies, Servians, and Bulgarians, and Greeks, selling their little all, converting it into cash and rushing to the front to fight for their country. Had that population been assimilated to the institutions of the United States? And if under their conditions they were unable to assimilate such population, what about this country? What about this country if we are to have here men who endeavour to stir up strife and try to make the people believe that one party in the State is a party that they should not trust because of something which happened in days gone by before there was a Canada? The hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) has gone to and fro throughout western Canada and told the American settlers that the Conservative party were the descendants of the party who brought about the American revolution, and the dumping of tea into Boston harbour. What brand of patriotism is that?

Mr. OLIVER: I wish to correct my hon. friend. He is absolutely in error in making that statement.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I may be absolutely in error, but I should like to say that the stock speech of the hon. gentleman in 1908 was a review of Canadian history as he saw it with his distorted vision, and he told the American people then the Conservative party to-day was the old party that forced the revolution.

Mr. OLIVER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what he did.

Mr. OLIVER: May I correct my hon. friend? I said that the Tory of to-day was the lineal descendant of the Tory party that had forced the rebellion of 1837.

Mr. BENNETT. It was not 1775 the hon. gentleman said?

Mr. OLIVER: No.

Mr. BENNETT: I am bound under the rules of Parliament to accept the hon. gentleman's disclaimer; but I may say that I shall hope, in the province from whence we both come, to prove conclusively to the satisfaction of those who may hear us both that the remark I have just made is true.

Mr. OLIVER: Mr. Speaker, is my hon. friend in order in making the statement he has just made?

Mr. SPEAKER: I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he had accepted the hon. member's denial; but he followed that by saying that he hoped to establish his contention elsewhere; and his remark is not one that can be taken cognizance of.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman did not in terms deny it. I understand he did say seventy-five.

Mr. OLIVER: No, I did not say seventy-five. I have tried to make a polite contradiction of my hon. friend, but if he insists I suppose he will give me credit for being able to make it more emphatic.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, I will be delighted to give the hon. gentleman credit for being able to do it in his usual style. I would not like the hon. gentleman to be other than natural.

But to proceed. There is, Sir, another witness whose evidence is worthy of notice. I desire to read a few lines from the last Fortnightly Review. These are written by Mr. Archibald Hurd. In the public press of this country there has been much discussion about Mr. Hurd's book and members of the House have given it study and consideration. In the February issue of the Fortnightly Review they will find a very illuminating article by Mr. Hurd, in which he discusses the whole question as to whether there is really a menace so far as British naval supremacy is concerned. He says:

> Great as has been the rise of Britsh naval expenditure, it has been far less than the growth of the expenditure by some of the great powers on the continent of Europe.

Then he says:

> We are confronted with a simultaneous and dramatic movement towards naval expansion in northern and southern waters. In the North sea Germany is building and concentrating a fleet inferior only in strength to that of Great Britain, and in the Mediterranean her allies, hitherto of almost negligible value as sea powers, are equipping themselves with first-class fleets. These three countries, hitherto relying for their legitimate defensive needs upon armies which upon a war-footing would comprise about nine million five hundred thousand mn, are now creating fleets of a size altogether out of proportion to their legitimate requirements, giving those armies an almost unlimited range of action. In the spring of 1914—that is, exclusive of the vessels which will be laid down this year—the naval strength of the Triple Alliance will be as follows:—

	Germany.	Italy.	Austria.	Italy and Austria.
	North Sea.	Mediterranean.		Total.
Battleships	39	12	11	23
Armoured cruisers	8	5	1	6
Protected cruisers	30	3	4	7
Destroyers	108	22	18	40
Torpedo boats.. ..	..	57	48	105
Submarines.. ..	36	26	12	38

In this table are included only battleships of less than twenty years of age, armoured and protected cruisers of less than fifteen years, and torpedo craft of less than eleven years, thus excluding all obsolescent ships.

This represents the naval conditions which will exist a little more than a year from the present date. By March, 1915, Germany will possess forty-three battleships in the North sea, and Italy and Austria will possess twenty-seven in the Mediterranean, while the strength of the three powers in other types of ships will also have increased.

It is axiomatic that the main strategical theatre for the British fleet is in northern waters, where the German navy is now, and will continue to be, concentrated; there British sea power must be maintained in unchallengeable strength. In order to achieve this end, the British battle squadron has been recalled from the Mediterranean, and thus, while grave injury was done to British prestige, the basis upon which the expansion of the German fleet has hitherto proceeded has been upset.

In view of these facts, can it possibly be said that we are not face to face with a grave menace in this Empire? and if there be a menace how can we possibly meet it except by an earnest endeavour to co-operate for our common defence? I shall not further labour that point, I shall leave it because it seems to me to be conclusively proven by the memorandum so often read to the House, by Mr. Hurd's article, by facts that no man can controvert, because the building of a ship is a fact that any man may know of. These facts speak more eloquently than any words, that there is a real menace to the supremacy of the British navy. Having proved that, I proceed to a discussion of the next reason why I give support to this measure.

I say, thirdly, it is our duty to do so as a self-respecting people. This has been challenged. Articles have been written in the public press and speeches made by hon. gentlemen opposite saying: We owe no duty to England, we owe her no sense of gratitude and are under no obligation to her. I think the hon. member for Queens and Sunbury aptly described the situation by saying that it is quite apparent that if we have about us any sense of that thing which we Anglo-Saxons call duty, any regard for our own self-respect, we should, at least, be induced to make some contribution to the naval forces of Britain. Let us look at the facts stated in 'The growth of the Empire,' a book which hon. gentlemen opposite are familiar with. The author says:

> We should never forget that the home Briton pays in peace time nearly two-thirds of his income tax (5d on the £) as interest on that capital and therefore as the price mainly of colonial freedom. The figures are worth having:
>
> £35,000,000 was the price of Nova Scotia and in part, of India, since the profits of the Assient contract went to establish the British Company in India.
>
> £87,000,000 was the price of American freedom—the expulsion of France from Canada—and if £116,000,000 was spent in trying to retain within the Empire the colonies which had already cost so much it was scarcely too dear a price at which to buy the minister of a personal monarchy and the bankruptcy of monarchial France.
>
> Finally £621,000,000 spent in the great European war that crushed Napolean and established our supremacy on the oceans, is the price of Australia, South Africa and of the power to expand into new lands without disturbance that we enjoyed for seventy years after Waterloo——

And it has been shown to this House that Great Britain has spent not less than $150,000,000 in this country for naval and military purposes since 1867, and upon canals, public works and improvements of all kinds the money of Great Britain was lavishly expended prior to 1867. I do not refer to money we have borrowed, I do not refer to the credit given to us; I shall deal with these presently. But I do say that there is no people in the world who have had so much money freely expended in their country by another nation as the Canadian people and that the duty and obligation under which we are to Great Britain cannot be measured in mere dollars. It is more than dollars—it amounts to millions of pounds sterling, almost in the aggregate a billion pounds. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Maclean) said that was done for Imperial purposes. It may well be that England having thrust upon her these large responsibilities expended these sums of money for her very existence and for Imperial purposes only. But it must not be forgotten that during all these years the commerce of this country has been carried freely on the seas. I was born by the sea, the people where I lived were people who went down to the sea in ships. I know, as no doubt most hon. gentlemen know, that the safety of our commerce on the high seas has been insured by the naval power of Britain. The seaborne commerce of this country amounts to over a million dollars a day. It was over $400,000,000 last year. It has amounted during all the years since we were a people to hundreds of millions of pounds, billions of dollars, and I ask you and I ask this House if it is not fair, to put it on the lowest level, that we should make some payment by way of insurance premium to guarantee its safety. Every man insures his property against loss by fire or cyclone or water as the case may be, and we have been going to and fro on the high seas; as the Minister of Marine says, 'the pathless sea has been our road.' During all these years we have carried the products of our country across the sea in safety because of the naval supremacy and power of Britain and to-day I would vote for this measure because it pays $35,000,000, if you will, as a premium for the insurance of the safety of our commerce. But, Mr. Speaker, the grain growers of the West are as much interested in this as anybody. I saw the other day that they passed a resolution. They said they believed in peace. Certainly, we all believe in peace. But, as we all know, there has been a constant menace of the greatest powers by the lesser growing powers since the world began. The only way in which you can ever be sure of peace is by being so strong that no combination of forces dare attack us. That is the only way in which we can be safe, and by which we can have peace. The grain growers of the West know that their products are being carried to every part of the world secure and safe by reason of the insurance policy which they hold, and which is the flag of Britain. They know that fact, and every man knows it. There are no people in Canada who are more dependent ultimately upon the supremacy of naval power than the men who inhabit the great plains of the West. I have talked with them, and I have never talked with an American settler in that country who has not said that he regarded it as a standing disgrace that we had done nothing to pay our premium on that insurance which enables us to carry our products over the sea in safety. All those years we have done nothing, and I say that, if you put it on the lowest possible level, that is, the material level, the sum we are offering to-day to pay for the maintenance of the security of our commerce by sea is indeed a very small premium.

We owe nothing, they say, to England. Well, Sir, when I was thinking this morning of what I would say this afternoon I was reminded of what the poet Browning said as he was homeward bound from his trip by the Mediterranean. He had left behind him the scene of the great battle of the Nile; he had passed the pillars of Hercules; he had seen the Rock of Gibraltar; he had seen St. Vincent in the distance, and he uttered these words:

> Here and here did England help me:
> How can I help England?—say.

And when I stand upon the deck of a ship coming up the St. Lawrence and gaze upon the plains of Abraham; when I cruise around lake Champlain and see the remnants of the old forts; when I move West and see here and there what was done for the purpose of enabling this country to be secured to the British Crown, I say with Browning:

> Here and here did England help me:
> How can I help England?—say.

And the only way in which we can possibly help Britain at this particular moment of peril and menace is, not by sitting in our places and passing resolutions, but by showing our willingness to give concrete expression to our thoughts, and by doing something for the upkeep and supremacy of that fleet which ensures our safety.

May I pass shortly, because I do not desire to trespass too long on the time of the House, to the next reason, namely, that I believe in co-operation in defence. Every speech to which I have listened from hon. gentlemen opposite, seemed to indicate that they think the supreme thing we should have in mind is a desire to safeguard our own shores. That is their policy; apparently that is their idea of naval defence. Now, I am going to use a few concrete illustrations that I believe the farmers of this country will be able to understand, that are not difficult at least, to understand. I will take one from the West, if you will. A gentleman owns a large forest. He has paid a large sum of money for the limit. It cannot be very easily separated from the limit of his neighbour, except by a line drawn by a surveyor. There are other limits which lie beyond him, a limit here, and another limit there. Take the great timber limits that stand on the banks of the Saskatchewan, for instance. What is the greatest menace to these forests, and to the forest limits in British Columbia? It is fire. Some hon. gentlemen suggest there is another great menace, the menace of graft. But we will leave that out for the present, and say it is fire, the danger of fire. Let us see what this means. Would any intelligent man, whose limit was threatened, not co-operate with his neighbour to devise an efficient scheme of fire defence? What man would sit still and say: 'I do not care about protecting the front of this forest; my limits are back there, and all I am going to do is to blaze a little pathway and if fire comes I will be all right anyway.' But when the fire comes, what happens? Not only is the forest that belongs to his neighbour destroyed, but his goes with it. My hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) knows what happens in the case of prairie fires. I have seen little villages and hamlets in the West threatened by prairie fires. What do they do? The people get together and put a fire-guard round the whole town. They do not content themselves with putting a fire-guard round Smith's house or Jones' house or Brown's house. They do more than that; they say, 'we will co-operate for the purpose of protecting our entire village or hamlet by an efficient fire-guard.' I come as I have said from a province by the sea. What happens there? There are great marshes that have been reclaimed from the sea by dykes. I see before my mind's eye the dong dykes on the Bay of Fundy, by which hundreds of acres have been reclaimed. There is a great sea-wall maintained by the combined action of the proprietors of the marshes. It is not compulsory action, it is voluntary, because they realize that if the sea broke in, their whole property would be ruined. What happens? I remerber one proprietor who said, 'I am tired of contributing to the upkeep of this great sea dyke.' He said, 'My marsh is miles away, and I do not care about it; I will put up a dyke of my own.' And so he built on his own property from the sea dyke to the shore, a side dyke that he said would care for his own property. One night there came a great gale and a huge tide, and the weak dyke, to the upkeep of which he refused to contribute, was broken, the flood rushed in, and not only were these marshes ruined, but his little side dyke which he had put up was swept away in the twinkling of an eye, and his marsh was destroyed with the rest. Sir, that is the case here exactly. Let me go a step further. Suppose I live in a great city. There is one section of that city where there is a great danger from fire, where masses of inflammable material are stored, and there is a great lumber mill. I own a building, and they say to me that I should co-operate with my friends in the same block to put up a great fire-wall to save it from destruction and disaster. I say, 'No, I am going to make my office in this building absolutely fireproof, and I put a fireproof floor in my rooms in the block. One night fire burst upon that block and my building is gone, and with it my own office which I said I was going to make fireproof. That, Sir, is the position of the British Empire to-day. Upon the North sea there is a great fire wall, a great dyke, a great protection to the upkeep of which we are asked to contribute. We are asked to say that we will build here a dyke or a wall that will be sufficiently strong to protect us from the menace that is threatening us. Hon. gentlemen fold their arms and say: 'No, we will buy a Niobe for Halifax, a Rainbow for Vancouver and a Minnie M. at the Sault and we will be safe.' Is that their idea of safety?—a privateer, a gun-boat and a cruiser? The commonest farmer in the country, with the least possible intelligence, the commonest man who toils upon the plains and is threatened by a forest fire, the homesteader, the man with his little home—these men know that co-operation is absolutely essential to efficient defence against a common foe. Every man knows that. Hon. gentlemen prattle about a Canadian navy, they talk about the navy they will build some time in the future while the dyke, while the fire-wall, vanishes. That great floating wall in the North sea would be impregnable with three more dreadnoughts, but lacking three dreadnoughts it might lack the strength which would enable it to withstand the force of the enemy. If history teaches us anything it at least teaches us that if we desire to give a common defence to a common thing, whether we call it an empire or a county, we must do it by co-operation. That has made the United States what she is?—co-operation of the several states. Has each state built a navy? Have the states upon the Pacific built navies, have the states upon the Atlantic built navies? No, they have co-operated for the common defence. Take Germany; does each of the kingdoms, duchies and grand duchies of Germany have a navy for itself? No, they band themselves together by co-operation to make themselves efficient for the common defence. So it is with the dual monarchy of Austro-Hungary, and so it was in England in the days of yore when Drake pushed out from Devon to defend her against the approaching foe. Men came from Devon and from other parts of England but, instead of disputing as to whether they were from one county or another, they united together in the common defence to fight against the common foe. I submit that the strongest possible reason that can be given to this House for the passing of this legislation is that the only way to secure efficiency is by active and vigilant co-operation.

The only difference that exists between hon. gentlemen on your right, Mr. Speaker, and on your left, is that we realize frankly this fact and I submit that they must realize it too but they will not be frank enough to say so. Some of their speeches indicate that they believe that co-operation makes for efficiency. There are a few men who say that the best way of protecting the British Empire is by having a fleet unit on the Pacific and on the Atlantic. Where will the battle against the British Empire be fought? Will it be fought off Halifax or Vancouver, or in the North sea? Some would think from the size of the ships proposed that these hon. gentlemen believe that the battle would be fought in the St. Lawrence or on the Saskatchewan, near the city of Edmonton. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark) would seem to think that it would be fought on the Bow river, or on the Elbow, near Calgary. So much for the high conceptions of these hon. gentlemen. After all, the principle of co-operation is the only one that can be applied to a system of efficient defence. They talk about fleet units, they talk about coast defence, torpedoes, torpedo boat destroyers and they talk about everything except immediate action. I think the right hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition made some classic allusion, and if memory serves me aright, the seer of old to whom he referred gave utterance to these words, 'Attack now,' 'Strike now.' If we are to do anything for the benefit of the British Empire why should we procrastinate, why should we delay, why should we say to-morrow and to-morrow we will do something? Why should we not frankly face the enemy and say that without active co-operation on the part of every Dominion of the Empire beyond the seas with the Empire itself there can be no official defence? They know it and I know it. It is true that in Australia they are building a navy because they have contributed up to the point where the people have reached that degree of patriotism along Imperial lines that they are now content to build their national navy. They know that the menace which threatens them upon the Pacific is not the same as the menace which threatens us. They have the great peoples of Japan and China looking with jealous eyes upon them and during many long years they have contributed to the cost of Imperial defence, as did New Zealand, as did the great self-governing Dominions of South Africa, the Malay States and the other dominions. They have done so with a full knowledge of the fact that if the power of Britain goes down, if it is successfully attacked, down goes Canada, down goes Australia, down goes New Zealand and down go the colonies of Britain everywhere. Let that fact sink deep into our minds. Let us not forget that when the might of Britain has been challenged successfully by an adversary and her floating walls fall before the attack of the enemy, the flag that floats over this building will be struck without a single enemy being landed upon our shores. That is a fact that any man who studies history must know. All the Monroe Doctrines and all the other doctrines in the world will be powerless to save us. Hon. gentlemen complain of the fact that sometimes members of this House talk about the little tinpot navy. You might as well depend upon a navy of tinpots as upon the navy that they are going to build. If the hon. member for Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) believes that there is a real danger, that there is imminent peril, then why does he put off for twenty years the building of a few ships to fight it? Why does he not rise in his might and with all who believe in co-operation strike for the cause of Britain and the cause of a common Empire?

Mr. OLIVER: I did not say that I was going to put off the building of a navy for twenty years. It was the hon. gentleman's leader who said that it would take twenty-five or fifty years.

Mr. BORDEN: Will my hon. friend be good enough to point out where I said that?

Mr. OLIVER: Yes, when my hon. friend was addressing the House upon the introduction of his resolution, I understood him to say in very definite words that Canada could not build a navy within twenty-five or fifty years.

Mr. BORDEN: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I would ask him to point out at what particular place that statement appears. It has been repeated a great many times but not by any person of the position of my hon. friend. I did say that to build up a great naval organization comparable in any sense with the British organization would take twenty-five or fifty years. That statement has been tortured on a great many occasions in the House and notably by the hon. gentleman who has just expressed himself. It is absolutely inaccurate.

Mr. OLIVER: If I am allowed to produce the documents which are before the House I will have pleasure in doing so.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman seems to have a habit of having a difference of opinion sometimes with his own party. I had about concluded what I was going on to say as to this particular reason why we should support this measure. But there is another reason that I would like to urge in support of this legislation and it is because I believe that this proposal makes for peace. If there is one reason more than another for the peace which we have enjoyed within the British Empire during all these years, it is that we have had a naval force such as no other power has had. Although some people may call Britain a bully we have had behind us a power so strong that we have been able to command peace. We talk about our hundred years of peace; we dream the dream when men shall war no more and swords shall be beaten into ploughshares, but the student of history knows that we depend for peace absolutely upon our ability to strike; and we must be able to strike harder than anybody else if we command peace. Hon. gentlemen opposite say they are going to build a Canadian navy, and the hon. gentleman from Red Deer departing from the faith of his fathers and the free trade of which we hear so much and see so little in practice, has told us that they are going to build in Canada a navy. Nothing more wasteful in so far as effort and money are concerned has ever been heard of. I would like to make myself clear upon that point. As I read history the creation of great armaments and the building of great battleships is an industry within itself. You cannot build a great battleship because you can build a merchant liner; you cannot build a great liner in a yard where you can only build a tramp; the building of battleships is a highly specialized industry. Let me read the words of Mr. Hurd in the Fortnightly, page 278:

> The construction of a dreadnought is a matter of such nice industrial organization and requires such a very specialized plant, that even Greece, Argentina, Brazil, Chili, and other fully established countries have refrained from good reasons from embarking on such an enterprise; and Russia, Spain, and Japan rely, partially or entirely, on the resources of the United Kingdom to supply their requirements.

How long do they say it would take to build a ship of war in this country? I say twenty years; I say we cannot build in Canada an efficient dreadnought in twenty years. What is the evidence of history on that point? Look at Japan—the ships that led in the great battle in the Japan sea were not built in Japan. They were built in the shipyards of England and Scotland and took the water on the Clyde and on the Tyne. It is true we could build some sort of battleship in twenty years, but could we hope to build an efficient dreadnought in twenty years? I read the other day from one of the warmest patriots in the United States an article he contributed to a well-known magazine, in which is said:

> We cannot dispute that despite the fact that we have always money, always great resources, we cannot build as efficient a battle ship as they can build in England.

And why? It is because it is a highly specialized business, because there is a certain class of man, as is pointed out by Mr. Hurd, who have acquired a hereditary excellence in the pursuit of that industry. You say you will bring the men to Canada, but when you do you have struck a blow against peace. Why? Because the great battleship shipyards imply the expenditure of enormous capital and that capital is always seeking some return and they are always looking for more ships to build. An hon. gentleman who spoke the other day pointed out that one of the reasons you have battleships is that you had men going around like commercial travellers looking for trade. That is a fact. Since this debate began I read a very carefully thought-out article on the subject, in which it was pointed out that of all the wasteful things in the world, the greatest is the waste of capital in great battleship shipyards. And the reason was given that you cannot build a merchant ship in the same yard as these large war vessels are built in. What follows? It is against peace, that we should have these battleships built in our own country; it is against commonsense and economy because the cost of them would be 60 per cent or 70 per cent more than if they were built in England or in Scotland. As the hon. gentleman from Sunbury and Queens (Mr. McLean) pointed out: why spend eight millions or ten millions or fourteen millions or fifteen millions or more than we are obliged to pay? If we must build battleships, let us build them where they can best be built and most cheaply built without establishing a battleship industry in this country. The industry we want in this country is the steel merchant ship-building industry; we want the milling industry; we want these industries that will give employment to the largest number of our people under the present conditions of this country. And, in this connection let me refer to that convert to a protective tariff which this debate has brought about and which perhaps after all is the greatest thing it has done; it has added to the protectionist ranks the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark).

My sixth reason in favour of this policy is that it is a step towards the consolidation and the organization of the British Empire. What is the destiny of this Canada of ours? What are our ideals? These are two questions of vital importance to the people of this country and especially to our younger men. Men cannot flourish and neither can nations unless they have ideals. There can be but one destiny for this great land, and I wish to examine for a moment the policy now before the House and the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite in the light of what I consider will be their effect upon the destiny of Canada. We must have annexation, independence, or Imperialism. I heard the other day the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) scorn the word 'imperialism': I have heard man after man on that side of the House talk about his particular brand of imperialism. Sir, I have a definition of my own for Imperialism and although it may not commend itself to all the members of this House, I ask you, Sir, what is an Imperialist? An Imperialist is a man who accepts gladly and bears proudly the responsibilities of his race and breed. That in my judgment is an Imperialist. There are, as I say, three destinies that lie before this country, and on the second destiny that I have referred to, that of independence, I wish to speak at some length. I will dismiss annexation, although at one time there was a considerable body of public opinion in this country in favour of annexation, but the idea has been adandoned. On the question of independence let me say that there is no doubt of the fact that the Dominion of Canada may become an independent country if it likes. I have never had any doubt but that Great Britain would not stand in the way of this country becoming independent if the people so desired. The statesmen of England who have shaped and controlled and guided public opinion in the last fifty years have made it apparent that if we desire to become an independent people we might; that nothing would be done by the Motherland to prevent us; that they would raise no objection, but would bid us God-speed and wish us well as we started upon our independent career. That seems to me to be perfectly and reasonably clear. But, Sir, is there any body of public opinion in this country in favour of independence, and should there be? Well, we might almost conclude from the terminology of the language and the derivation of the words, used by hon. gentlemen opposite that they have a settled policy of independence. This comes as no new thing to many men. I am stating a fact that is well understood in many quarters in this country. It is generally understood that many of those who direct the lines of thought and policy of the Liberal party in Canada to-day are men who believe that the ultimate destiny of Canada is to be independent.

Mr. OLIVER: Mr. Speaker, might I ask if my hon. friend is entitled to ascribe to hon. members on this side motives which must be considered treasonable?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not permissible in debate to attribute motives to hon. members.

Mr. BENNETT: Far be it from me to attribute any motives to hon. gentlemen opposite. They themselves have by their actions and words made their motives so clear that there is no necessity for attributing motives to them.

Mr. OLIVER: Mr. Speaker, is my hon. friend entitled to emphasize the statement he made a few moments ago, and which I have had occasion to say was unwarranted?

Mr. SPEAKER: I think the hon. member might well have avoided the inference which he made, after the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. BENNETT: I certainly had no desire in any way to transgress the rules of debate, and I was not in any way attributing a motive to hon. gentlemen opposite. I intend to deal with hard facts of the language before I conclude and to request any reasonable man to ask himself what it means. If the letters i-n-d-e-p-e-n-d-e-n-c-e spell independence, then hon. gentlemen opposite have declared for it; if they do not do so, then the hon. gentleman from Edmonton is right.

The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition, for fifteen years with buoyant revenues and expanding trade directed the destinies of the Dominion of Canada. He attended colonial and Imperial conferences. He refused time after time to take any share in the advancement of the common interests of the British Empire by way of defence. He was within his rights, if he desired so to do. He said that it would be an interference with the autonomy of Canada, and he says that autonomy is dearer to him than the British Empire. That is the effect of his language. He has a right to say that. If any hon. gentlemen opposite concludes that he desires more the autonomy of Canada than the supremacy and maintenance of the British Empire, he has a right to say so. British public men have made it clear, as I have said, that they will not interfere with the views which the right hon. gentleman has expressed.

Mr. MACDONALD: Would my hon. friend be good enough to explain the statement made by Sir Charles Tupper in which he declared that he was proud of the fact that he had prevented any contribution from Canada to England while he was in control of affairs here?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, I would be delighted to explain that, for I have a note of it here; and I am going to discuss that in the light of the then existing conditions. No man should know or knows better possibly than the hon. gentleman from the old county of Pictou that conditions and circumstances change in the twinkling of an eye. He perhaps remembers—

Mr. MACDONALD: Changed with you just now.

Mr. BENNETT: Pardon me. I hope the hon. gentleman will not smile when I conclude.

Mr. MACDONALD: Oh, I will. You need not worry about that.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, there are none so blind as those who will not see. Lord Granville, as Foreign Minister, went to the Foreign Office on a Monday; he was told by the permanent under-secretary that never in his time had the sky of Europe been so clear, and on Wednesday the Franco-Prussian war was on. That is all. Sir Charles Tupper well said that at that time he stood out against contribution, and the reason he did so was because he believed that we should work with an ultimate goal in view, namely the bringing about of a consolidation of all the self-governing colonies of the British Empire where every one would find representation in a truly Imperial Parliament. He believed that at that time to merely make a contribution would be to set back the wheels of the movement to which he gave so much of his long and splendid life. That is what I say to the hon. member for Pictou. I intend to deal a little further with that matter before I conclude. As my friend from Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) reminds me, the best evidence of what Sir Charles Tupper thinks is the fact that he is strongly in support of the Bill, the second reading of which is under discussion.

Mr. MACDONALD: Would my hon. friend be good enough to explain the letter sent by Sir Charles Tupper to the Prime Minister begging him not to go back on the agreement of 1909? That is not so very long ago.

Mr. BENNETT: As I read my 'Hansard,' the right hon. gentleman who now leads this House has not gone back on the agreement of 1909. I read his speech and he declared in clear and unqualified language, which has been quoted time without mind in this House, that if he were to be placed in power, he would go to England and ask those gentlemen who are charged with responsibility for the maintenance of Britain's power upon the high seas—who have since conspired with him—if there was a present danger.

Mr. MACDONALD: That was not in 1909; it was in 1910.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly that was in 1910, but the resolution of 1909 must be read in the light of history of 1910. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark), who reads the free trade speeches of Cobden, knows he must read the utterances of 1854 in the light of the history of 1912. Every man knows that. Those who saw the hon. gentleman from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) as he retained his seat when the National Anthem was sung at the first reading of this Bill, know that you must read that in the light of his subsequent explanation.

Mr. NESBITT: Does my hon. friend mean to say that any man in the world was thinking in 1909 of what he was going to say in 1912? We like to hear a man talk reason.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman from North Oxford has struck the very crux of the difference between the two parties, the one speech of to-day having in mind the obligations of to-morrow, the other speech of to-day having in mind place and power; one speaks with the prescience of a statesman, the other with the clap trap of a politician. Those who speak with the prescience of statesmen sit now to your right, Mr. Speaker.

Let us examine the case of the right hon. leader of the Opposition to see whether I can support my conclusion from his attitude towards this and other questions. That distinguished gentleman has of course left upon the public life of this country a record, one of which I believe he is proud. In 1885, he was endeavouring to obtain power; he had been out of power since 1878. In 1887 there was an election, and he appealed to the national prejudices of the people of one province, because he contended that a man who had been adjudged by the Privy Council to be justly convicted of treason had been as he had said judicially murdered. Those were his words 'judicially murdered.' There is not much difference between a reflection upon the Privy Council of this Empire such as is contained in the two words 'judicially murdered,' and the allegation of duress and conspiracy from the junior member for Halifax. He was not content with that. We have recently, in the published volume of Reminiscences by the late Sir Richard Cartwright, had a lurid light cast on that campaign. We read that the day after the election, the Hon. Edward Blake resigned, and Sir Richard Cartwright says that he gave no reason for resigning, but he also says that he was breaking no confidence when he said to the people of this country that he had the assurance that there were a number of Conservatives from Quebec who had gone back on Sir John Macdonald because he had not prevented the execution of Reil. And Mr. Blake was beyond that bait, as he was beyond the bait in 1891. And it remained for the right hon. gentlemen opposite to accept, the leadership of the Liberal party under the conditions that are portrayed in the reminiscences of Sir Richard Cartwright. But that is not all. We remember the appeals that were made in 1891, when Continentalism was the issue. And I come to a speech that the right hon. gentleman delivered in Boston in that year, in which he said, speaking of the difference between England and Canada—and I want the hon. member for Edmonton to listen:

> But this dependence will not always last, even now Canada and England have many different interests, and the day will come necessarily, when they will have to part. When the hour of separation comes, we will part as friends, as when the son leaves his father's house to become the head of a new family.

Does the right hon. gentleman think that now? The young men of Canada would like to know. I am prepared to sit down and give place to him if he will answer. And I pause for a reply. Does he say that now?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

An hon. MEMBER: Childish.

Mr. BENNETT: It may be childish, but there are thousands of young men on the western plains, men not brought up under English institutions, who are looking to this Parliament to see what are the thoughts and sentiments of the men who direct the policies of great parties. And they are anxious to know, and on their behalf, with their ideals and aspirations and ambitions, I ask the right hon. gentleman, with his seventy years' of experience, whether or not, the opinions he expressed in Boston he holds now. And I have the right to ask any public man his opinions. It is a proper and a pertinent question. He may journey to Damascus and be converted and so become Paul the Apostle; but unless he gives evidence of conversion, and unless he journeys to Damascus, we have a right to assume that he is still Saul of Tarsus, of old. Nor is that all. One would have thought that enough, but what more do we find? A few years later, still carrying on this propaganda by which he ultimately succeeded in the great province of Quebec, he said:

I hold out to my fellow countrymen the idea of independence; but whenever the day comes, it must come by the consent of both countries, and we shall continue to keep the good feeling and the good will of the Motherland. If we are true to our own record we will exhibit to the world the unique, the unprecedented, example of a nation achieving its independence by slow degrees and as naturally as the severing of the ripe fruit from the parent tree.

True to their record are they, some of these hon. gentlemen? They say they are consistent. Have these hon. gentlemen been true to their record? 'By slow degrees.' What evidence they have given of the truthfulness of that! 'By slow degrees'—a Niobe here, a Rainbow there, a fleet unit to-morrow, something else the next day—'by slow degrees!'

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, I can understand the groans of these hon. gentlemen. Sir, it is part of their life as a political party. They founded the Nationalist party in Quebec, as I shall prove. I shall prove by incontrovertible evidence that the men who set the heather afire in the province of Quebec and made their base appeals to Nationalist sentiments of that province were the men who now sit to the left of the Speaker. I heard the ex-Postmaster General (Mr. Lemieux) talk about his 'stalwart Canadianism.' He was the prince of Nationalists. Let us look at his record. Let us listen to this Minister of the Crown as he speaks with his voice, which is now on the other side—or at least he says it is. I have here a quotation from La Patrie, November 21, 1890. It gives an account of a meeting of the Club National. Who founded it? Who gave it this name 'National'? The Liberal party then out of power in the province of Quebec, and the name they gave to that club for the propaganda of their doctrines was 'Club National.' The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) in the exuberance of his youthful verbosity, brought forward and supported a resolution. He is a student of the political history of this country; he holds himself out as one of its leaders; the young men of Canada have a right to know what he means when he talks to the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) about his Nationalism. It would almost seem that there must be a little jealousy, or something of that sort; but that cannot be, for great minds are never infected with that vice. Let us look at this resolution. I think my translation is fairly correct, and if it is incorrect the hon. gentleman himself will set me right:

The resolution proposed by Mr. Rodolphe Lemieux——

I take it that that is the ex-Postmaster General. Am I correct? There is only one in all this wide world—

Two weeks ago, and adjourned for discussion, reads as follows:—

Whereas the members of the House of Commons recently voted an address to Her Majesty the Queen, expressing the sentiments of the Canadian people in favour of the maintenance of British connection.

We all remember that address passed in 1890, while the great chieftain who is now no more led the Conservative party.

And whereas the members of the Club National of Montreal have already expressed their opinion on this question——

What was the opinion? It was against it, as we all know.

—and that it is the duty of young men to say from time to time what they think of our relations with the Mother Country.

Other times, other manners, other men.

Be it resolved, that without pronouncing on the opportunity of the said address to Her Majesty, and whilst protesting their respect for the members of the House of Commons of Canada, and of their loyalty towards the August Sovereign of the United Kingdom, the members of the Club National disapprove of any policy tending to alienate American sympathies at a moment when public opinion energetically demands the establishment of closer commercial relations between the United States and Canada. That although professing a sincere admiration for the English constitutional system——

Who that heard the hon. gentleman the other day would have thought that this was the Rodolphe Lemieux of long ago.

While professing a sincere admiration for the English constitutional system, the members of this club express their wish and desire to obtain by all constitutional means the independence of our country and its complete emancipation from all European bondage.

British connection called bondage by the ex-Postmaster General; I would ask the hon. gentleman for the sake of the thousands of young men on the western plains, are these his views now, and I am willing to allow him to answer now if he desires?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: The groans of the hon. gentlemen show that they are afraid he might answer. The report in La Patrie proceeds:

After speeches delivered by Messrs Lemieux, LaRochelle and Chaffers the resolution was carried unanimously.

Since when was it the habit of this country to call the ties which bind us to the Mother Country 'European bondage'? Are those the views that he now holds or has he journeyed to Damascus? Or is it that the hand is the hand of Esau but the voice is the voice of Jacob. We would like to know. I commend that seriously to the consideration of that great patriot, the member for Edmonton. I commend this utterance to his distinguished leader for consideration. Let him go to the western plains and explain to the new settlers the aspirations and ideals of the right hon. gentleman who leads his party and the ex-Postmaster General.

Mr. CLARK (Red Deer): That is very easily explained, I can explain that.

Mr. BENNETT: I think so, but not the gentleman who uttered them.

Mr. CLARK: I notice that you do not give me a chance.

Mr. BENNETT: I apprehend that the hon. gentleman will have ample opportunity to speak after me, and as he did not use these words I shall not ask him to explain them. I shall give him the same chance on free trade. I have his little speech in Calgary, where, under police protection, he enunciated the naval policy of the Liberal party.

Mr. OLIVER: Might I correct my hon. friend? I had the privilege of being present with the hon. member for Red Deer at a meeting in Calgary at which a number——

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Mr. BENNETT: I would like to hear what the hon. gentleman is saying.

Mr. OLIVER: I was at that meeting and neither the hon. member for Red Deer nor myself was under police protection, or needed police protection, nor was there any effort, so far as I know, to have police protection, notwithstanding the presence of a number of ruffians, who, I believe were sent there by my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: The city police force were called in by Ald. Frost and the records of the newspaper the next day show it. There is a gentleman in this city—not on my side of politics—who will verify that statement, because he told me about what the policeman did. That is not all. The hon. member for Edmonton called those who interrupted ruffians.

Mr. OLIVER: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: Who were these ruffians?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Conservatives, Tories.

Mr. BENNETT: I will tell you who they were. One stood upon the deck of the Condor before the guns of Alexandria, one stood at Tel el Kebir, and one upon the sands of Egypt as the square was broken by Fuzzy-Wuzzy. These were the ruffians.

Mr. OLIVER: Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT: The men who had always been used to stand to attention when the National Anthem was sung. These were the ruffians, the men who offered their lives for King and Queen and country, who wore upon their breasts the medals and decorations of their sovereign. One stood at the saluting point on the great day when Kitchener and the Khedive hoisted the British and Egyptian flags at Khartoum.

Mr. OLIVER: It may be they were all right there but they were not able to break up a Calgary meeting all the same.

Mr. BENNETT: They were all right? They were ruffians a moment ago, now they are all right. There was no effort to break up a Calgary meeting.

Mr. CLARK: Yes, there was, I was there and there was.

Mr. BENNETT: These gentlemen came there. What prevented that meeting from being broken up but police protection?

Mr. OLIVER: The decency and commonsense and respectability of the honourable citizens of Calgary prevented it being broken up, notwithstanding the presence of the ruffians sent there by my hon. friend.

Mr. BENNETT: It is absolutely false and untrue that I sent these gentlemen or any others to that meeting. It is true that on the evening in question, at Paget Hill, a well-lighted and warm hall, on an inclement night, some few citizens gathered together to hear the Laurier naval policy explained by the hon. member for Red Deer and his colleague from Edmonton. They came there to bear the great explanation and the great renunciation. They came to hear the hon. gentleman from Red Deer renounce his faith in free trade, and to hear the hon. member for Red Deer explain why he kept his seat while those about him sang the National Anthem.

Mr. CLARK: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BENNETT: I mean the hon. member for Edmonton.

Mr. OLIVER: If I may be permitted to correct my hon. friend, there was no person in all that meeting, so far as I remember, who asked any question in regard to whether I stood or sat while the National Anthem was being sung. They had better sense.

Mr. BENNETT: No, they did not need to ask; they knew. Oh, Sir, it was a great night and a great scene worthy of the great occasion, the great renunciation. You can all picture the hon. member for Red Deer as he declared in favour of a navy built in Canada, owned in Canada, manned in Canada; this disciple of free trade, who has gone to and fro throughout this great Dominion, especially in western Canada, condemning, in season and out of season, the steel industry at Sydney; making light of, and laughing at our endeavours to build great industries, suddenly converted to the policy of protection, and saying he believed at least, in giving a little protection to the battleship industry. It was delightful, and it was interesting and amusing. When it came to the hon. gentleman from Edmonton—ah, then, Sir, it was delightful. There they sat, side by side, the little Englander and the little Canadian, the disciple of the Lancashire school and the disciple of that nameless school of obscure vulgarity whose graduates sit in their seats while the National Anthem is sung. No one cared, says my hon. friend from Edmonton, to ask whether he did this thing or not; they knew, and whenever the word 'navy' was uttered, up they stood and sang Rule Britannia, and when the word 'Empire' was mentioned, they sang God Save the King.

At six o'clock, House took recess.

After Recess.

House resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS.

CANADIAN ACCOUNTANT ASSOCIATION.

House again in Committee on Bill No. 88, to incorporate the Canadian Accountants Association.—Sir Rodolphe Forget. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the Chair.)

On section 2—objects and powers.

Mr. OLIVER: This clause is quite different from that which appears in my copy of the Bill. I suppose it is the clause as amended?

Mr. BORDEN: Yes.

Mr. OLIVER: May I ask if this amendment was agreed to when the Bill was up for consideration in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BORDEN: I am not a member of the Private Bills Committee, but I was informed by my hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) and some others that it was considered in the debate before the committee that the powers granted by the original Bill should be very considerably cut down. The Bill as originally drawn was opposed before the committee by the Dominion Chartered Accountants Association. That association stated that they would have no objection to the Bill in its present form. As I understand it, the object is to provide an association which shall be able to include in its membership those persons who do not carry on business for themselves but are salaried accountants for companies and corporations. They cannot be members of the Dominion Chartered Accountants Association. Eventually, after some discussion, this form of the Bill was arrived at. That is what has been conveyed to me by members of the committee. Other than that I nave no more information than my hon. friend.

The membership of the association shall consist of accountants who have passed the prescribed examinations, and of such persons as the directors may admit as non-certificated members until such time as they have passed the prescribed examinations, and of whose qualifications and fitness the directors approve.

Mr. CARVELL: Would not the latter part of the clause practically nullify all value that this corporation may have? I understand that this is an association of chartered accountants. It seems to me that a man can be taken in as a sort of honourary member and remain there until such time as he has passed his examination. Would it not be possible that a member could be taken in without passing his examination and without possessing the necessary qualification?

Mr. BORDEN: I really do not know anything about the Bill except as it appears before the House. I understand that the persons allowed in under these circumstances cannot get any certificate of their efficiency or competency until they have passed the examination.

Mr. CARVELL: I have not the amended section before me but, as the chairman read it, it struck me that any person may be a member regardless of fitness so long as the association chooses to take him in. There is no time limit and he remains there practically forever. If he wants to take the examination at some time well and good, and if not, it does not seem to make much difference.

Mr. BORDEN: I suppose that in the meantime his membership would not do him very much good?

Mr. CARVELL: I do not know, Mr. Chairman, but it might do some harm.

Mr. BORDEN: It might.

Mr. CARVELL: He might be employed as accountant and people might invest money in an enterprise on the strength of this man's certificate. If the thing is to be of any use at all it should be composed of men who are properly qualified.

Mr. PERLEY: The intention of this section is that the regular membership of the association shall be made up of those who have passed the examination. The non-certificated members are young men who want to become members.

Mr. CARVELL: Important transactions may be handed over to these young men and on the strength of their reports the public may be invited to invest money. I think it is a mistake to admit to membership gentlemen who cannot pass the examination.

Mr. PERLEY: I speak from the knowledge I obtained by attending the committee and I may say that in the first place these are not chartered accountants and they have no right to use the name. They are salaried accountants who work for a salary with some of the large companies and the young men are not certificated members but are in reality apprentices and are admitted as non-certificated members until they are permitted to pass the examination.

Section agreed to.

On the preamble:

Mr. OLIVER: This is called the Canadian Accountants' Association, there is also the Chartered Accountants Association; could a member of either association use the letters C.A after his name? If so, it would create confusion.

Mr. PERLEY: Section 11 was inserted by the committee to ensure that the members of this association could not use the letters C.A. after their names. It provides that they can use no title in contravention of any provincial Act and in the province of Ontario the Act specifically provides that only chartered accountants can use the letters C.A. If in any other province there is at present no legislation to prevent these gentlemen from using the letters C.A., section 11 is so worded that the provincial legislature can at any time pass legislation similar to that in Ontario.

Mr. OLIVER: Is there a Dominion statute in regard to chartered accountants?

Mr. PERLEY: There is a Dominion Association incorporated in 1902, known, I think, as the Dominion Association of Chartered Accountants, but the the membership in that is made up entirely of the members of the provincial associations of chartered accountants.

Mr. SHARPE (North Ontario): There is nothing in this legislation to prevent the members using the letters C A.A. (Canadian Accountants Association), and if that be so then it is likely to be confused with the use of the letters C.A. (chartered accountant). Perhaps it would be better to call it the Accountants' Association instead of the Canadian Accountants' Association.

Mr. MURPHY: Perhaps it would avoid confusion if this were called the Dominion Chartered Accountants' Association.

Mr. CARVELL: I would suggest to call it the Montreal Chartered Accountants' Association, because all of these gentlemen come from Montreal.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I asked the Minister of Justice last night to give a more elaborate opinion as to the power of this Parliament to pass such a Bill as this, and as the Minister of Justice is not present perhaps the right hon. the Prime Minister would make a statement on that point.

Mr. BORDEN: The object of the association apparently extends all over Canada; the Bill would permit the work of the association, such as it is, to be carried on in every province. I would not think the objects of the association would be limited by the mere fact that the persons who are incorporated in the first instance may happen to reside in one province only. As far as the name is concerned, perhaps it would be well to have it considered a little further. The object is to select a title which will not confuse the object or the certificates or the membership of this association with those of the other associations alluded to.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend from Argenteuil (Mr. Perley) might consider the advisability of adding to the Bill a clause similar to the one which we added last night to the medical Bill, that is to say, that the present legislation shall not affect the powers granted to similar associations having provincial charters.

Mr. PERLEY: I am afraid my hon. friend has not seen the reprinted Bill. Section 11 specifically provides for that:

> Nothing in this Act shall be construed to interfere with or impair legislation upon the subject of accountancy now or hereafter enacted by legislative authority of any province of Canada, or as giving to members of the Association the right to use any name, title, initial or description as accountants in contravention thereof.

Preamble stands.

Progress reported.

INTERCOLONIAL TRUST COMPANY.

House in Committee on Bill No. 58, to incorporate the Intercolonial Trust and Investment Company.—Mr. Barnard. (Mr. Deputy Speaker in the chair.)

Mr. PUGSLEY: I desire to call the attention of the right hon. leader of the House to this Bill. It is proposed to change the name from 'The Intercolonial Trust and Investment Company' to 'The Intercolonial Trust Company'. Now, 'Intercolonial' is the name applying distinctively to the Intercolonial railway. Would not the name given to this company convey the impression that this was a trust company organized by the employees of the Intercolonial railway? I believe the point was raised when the Bill was in committee by the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. Graham). I think it is worthy of consideration, and I understand that it was to be thought over.

Mr. BARKER: This title was considered by the committee and the words 'and investment' were struck out, because the main business of the company is as a trust company, and so the name was made, 'The Intercolonial Trust Company'. I do not think there is any possibility of confusion as betweeen the Intercolonial Trust Company and the Intercolonial raiway.

Mr. PUGSLEY: What I mean is that it would convey the suggestion that this company was in some way connected with the employees of the Intercolonial railway. Suppose it was the Intercolonial Provident Association, or the Intercolonial Accident Association, the whole public would be under the impression that it was in some way organized by the employees of the Intercolonial railway. The word 'Intercolonial' has no significance in Canada except in connection with the Intercolonial railway. The component parts of this country are not colonies but provinces. This might be called the Interprovincial Trust Company. That would indicate, if the promoters desire it, a company doing business throughout Canada.

Mr. BARKER: This company has been in existence for some years under this title, and it never occurred to the committee that the Intercolonial Trust Company would be confounded with the Intercolonial railway, any more than would an Intercolonial bank. This company comes from British Columbia, where, they do not consider the Intercolonial railway everything in the Dominion. But I really do not see why a trust company or any other company should not be called 'intercolonial' as well as the railway. There can be no possibility of confusion.

Mr. PUGSLEY: If the company has been engaged in business for some time under that name my objection would be removed and I would withdraw my opposition.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill No. 86, to incorporate the British North-Western Mortgage Company.—Mr. Aikins.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill No. 122, for the relief of Minnie Edna Brownell.—Mr. Oliver.

Bill No. 123, for the relief of Alfred Milton Durban.—Mr. Oliver.

NAVAL FORCES OF THE EMPIRE.

Mr. BENNETT (Calgary): Mr. Speaker, when the House rose at six o'clock I was endeavouring to point out that the hon. member for Rouville had a political history that was very interesting to those of us who have listened to him during the last few days in his very strong declaration of a desire to serve the British Empire in its Imperial policies. I referred to the resolution which he moved before the Club Nationale, in 1890, and now I would like to direct attention to another article of which I am informed he is the author. I refer to his famous article under the name of Junius. There was a Junius known to fame and history, and it is quite true that the hon. member for Rouville emulated him. The great Junius, it is said, effected many reforms, and I doubt not that the hon. member for Rouville thought that he would effect reforms, but the reforms he endeavoured to effect under the name of Junius were reforms to which I think some of us do not take very kindly. I find that on April 21, 1893, under the name of Junius he wrote:

> We are being submitted to all the caprices of the cabinet of St. James and the Colonial Office. Let a diplomatic difficulty arise between London and Washington, what will happen? Our country will be used as a battlefield by these two belligerent nations. Not only will Canadians become food for cannons, but what is graver still, they will have to shoot at the million of their compatriots who emigrated to the United States and were naturalized American citizens. That fact alone shows how false and untenable is our position. Independence alone will put an end to the sufferings we endure, and as Mr. Mercier said in Sohmer Park, such independence we must demand—first, through necessity; second, through patriotism; third, on account of its material advantages; fourth, because we are able to live as a distinct people.
>
> The hour has come when the country must be saved——

Save the mark.

> —from disaster and ruin. The moment has arrived when all courageous men must demand with energy our share of the national heritage. Let us cease to be the property (la chose) of England——

I do not think property is a very apt translation but it is the best I could get.

—and let us be free! We have nothing but a borrowed flag, let us hoist our national colours in open daylight, and, for God's sake! let the Canadian flag cover in its folds all the races living on our soil. I should blush for my country if she blessed again the chains which are binding her to England.

The experience of a century must have opened the eyes of Canadians on the blessings of the colonial bond. We have emptied the cup of humiliation, drop by drop. Better it is to disappear than to be for a still longer time the subjects of a foreign Crown. 'Potious mori quain fœdari'.

Mr. LEMIEUX: Does my hon. friend contend that I wrote that?

Mr. BENNETT: I have only the authority of a gentleman to whom the hon. member recently confessed that he was the Junius of that time. Perhaps I am mistaken.

Mr. LEMIEUX: My hon. friend is not well informed. I know that he has been looking for such literature for the last few days, from an employee of the Government. I happen to know that, but he has not been well informed. I never wrote that article and I hope my hon. friend will not contend that I did write it.

Mr. BENNETT: Far be it from me to allege that the hon. gentleman wrote it if he did not. Does he know if he wrote to Le National under the pseudonym of Junius?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I never wrote to Le National.

Mr. BENNETT: I mean Le Canada; did the hon. gentleman write under the pseudonym of Junius?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I have never written to Le Canada under a pseudonym.

Mr. BENNETT: I am delighted to have the hon. gentleman's circumlocution with regard to this letter.

Mr. LEMIEUX: I rise to a point of order. There is no circumlocution; there is a flat denial, and I hope my hon. friend will accept it. He has been badly informed. The gentleman who is employed in the Department of Justice and who gave him that information has badly informed him.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member (Mr. Lemieux) rises to a point of order and I have only to say that the hon. member (Mr. Bennett) is obliged to accept his denial and not attempt to reconstruct it in any way which would leave the impression that the denial is not correct.

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to leave that impression, but I did not gather from what the hon. member for Rouville said that he denied that he had written under the pseudonym of Junius?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Mr. Speaker, there have been many Juniuses in this history of literature, but I am not the one who wrote that letter. Besides I may tell the hon. gentleman that Le Canada did not exist at that date.

Mr. BENNETT: It was Le National; I was quite right in what I said. Will the hon. gentleman say that he did not write to Le National under that pseudonym?

Mr. LEMIEUX: Neither in Le National nor Le Canada did I ever write under that pseudonym.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I understand my hon. friend to say that he did not insert the article in question?

Mr. LEMIEUX: I did not write that article.

Mr. BENNETT: Well, I perfectly understand that the hon. gentleman denies writing this letter, but I can tell him that the gentleman to whom he refers in connection with this matter is not the gentleman that he suspects.

Mr. LEMIEUX: You are all wrong; you do not know Quebec politics.

Mr. BENNETT: I quite admit that I do not know Quebec politics, and I hope never to know such Quebec politics as those represented by public men who a few years ago headed the National campaign and who to-day stand up in this House and denounce others for being associated with that party.

Mr. LEMIEUX: You are all wrong.

Mr. BENNETT: God forbid that I should ever know politics such as those if that is what the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): You had better come down to Quebec for a couple of days and you will know more about that province than you do now.

Mr. BENNETT: Thanks for the invitation; I shall be glad to accept it, for there is no province where I have seen more hospitality or greater kindness extended to visitors.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear; that is better.

Mr. BENNETT: I was proceeding further with the examination of the political history of the hon. member for Rouville. I said this afternoon, what I perfectly well believed, that he was a prince of the Nationalists from 1890 to 1896, and that when the Liberal party assumed power that hon gentleman consistently maintained the campaign which is represented by the resolution which he moved in the Club Nationale. That campaign, throughout the country villages of Quebec, he maintained in season and out of season and when the Naval Act of 1910 came before this House, as is shown by 'Hansard,' one man after the other from that province, rose in his place and said that he supported the policy of the right hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), then leader of the Government, because it made for independence and that is the point I am endeavouring to prove.

The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) this afternoon asked me why this party did not support the resolution of 1909. Hon. gentlemen opposite, then in power, placed upon that resolution the construction that it made for the independence of Canada and for an independent navy. We upon this side of the House said that we would support no policy that does not have for its basis and foundation co-operation with the Mother Country and with the navy of the Mother Country. Speech after speech appeared in 'Hansard' and did the hon. member for Rouville, then a Minister of the Crown, rise in his place and disclaim this sentiment? Did the right hon. leader of the Opposition rise in his place and disclaim this sentiment? No, they were content that throughout that great province of Quebec these appeals should be made and the passions of the people should be inflamed and aroused because they thought that it would get them a few votes, and tend to keep them in power. That was the great desideratum at whatever price might be paid. These are the facts, they are upon record and they cannot be denied. Can any hon. member deny that? Is it any wonder that it created amongst young men of the province of Quebec those who were called Nationalists? It is true I do not know the province of Quebec, but I know that there is no province in Canada where the young men, the middle-aged men and the old men read and think politically as much as they do in that province. Day after day, week after week and year after year, they imbibe political knowledge at every possible opportunity. What happens? They look to their great leaders to lead them aright and yet, at the heyday of his power the right hon. leader of the Opposition, his then Postmaster General and his Minister of Marine and Fisheries, were leading the young men of Quebec and it was by devious pathways that they led them. They led them through the by-ways and highways of nationalism. In resolutions, in clubs, in speeches in the rural hamlets and on the back concessions, in every part of that great province, and notably in the Drummond and Arthabaska election, these hon. gentlemen opposite preached their doctrine. What doctrine did they preach? they preached the doctrine that there should be a navy in this country because it was a navy that led steadily towards the independence of Canada. The time has come when that hypocrisy should be unmasked. The time has come when the people should understand the truth with regard to these public questions. Young men enthusiastic, filled with hope, ambition, and aspirations for the future of their country, followed this lead. They were seduced from their allegiance to this country by the false lights on the shores, and they steered by those beacon lights. You remember that in the olden days the pirates of Cornwall, filled with a desire to wreck a merchantman and rob the cargo, planted false lights upon the shores and the mariner coming up the channel steered by these false lights, ran upon the rocks, his ship was wrecked and fell into the hands of the men who hod placed the false lights. That is what they have done in the province of Quebec. They have placed false lights on the shore and these young men, steered by these false lights until they saw shipwreck before them. The time has come in this country when these ideas should be exploded, when the people should understand where the two great parties stand upon this great issue. For the last fifteen years the party of these hon. gentlemen insidiously preached the doctrine of separation and independence, they preached it in the great province of Quebec, they raised the passions and the prejudice of the French-Canadians, of the young men of that province and with what result? They sowed the wind and reaped the whirlwind; nothing but disaster has beset them. And, what would the people of Quebec gain by independence? Nothing. On the contrary, they would have everything to lose, and why should not our young French-Canadian fellow citizens be told that? The rights which they enjoy against the possible tyranny of majorities are guaranteed them by a statute of the Imperial Parliament and behind it is the might and the greatness of England and interpreting constitutional questions, there is that great tribunal the Privy Council of England free from political bias and the taint of politics, to declare that the constitution shall be maintained and the rights of minorities preserved. When in this House I hear every motion read in the two languages I realize the power and the greatness of Britain; I realize the concessions she has made to minorities and the protection which she affords them. I say to my French-Canadian fellow citizens, in all seriousness, that if they regard highly, as I believe they do, those privileges and rights which are vouchsafed them by the constitution, it is their duty to fight with every power that lies within them against the independence of this country. Look at the French-Canadians in the United States, over one million of them; they have nothing like the rights which the constitution of Britain affords to know that the French Canadians in the Does anyone think that in any legislature of the United States a motion would be read in the French and English languages? We know that the French Canadians in the United States have not the right to have the French language used in their schools. nor have they their religious rights guaranteed to them. When a statute has been passed by the Parliament at Westminster you have the might of England to enforce it, and depend on it England will see that any rights guaranteed by that statute shall not be violated. The time has come when the young men who have been imbued with Nationalist ideas in the province of Quebec should cease to follow the false lights that beguile them and take their stand against the insidious doctrine of independence. I ask these young men to remember that if ever the time should come when a constitution was to be framed for an independent Canada, that that constitution will be framed by the power and might of majorities, and that in time of stress and strain that constitution will not in all likelihood protect them as they are now protected. In South Africa; in every country over which the flag of Britain floats, the rights, the privileges, the concessions which minorities are justly entitled to are granted to them, and maintained by all the might and power of Britain. Nothing could be more unwise, nothing could be farther from the truth than an attempt to lead young men into that false haven of rest wherein they are made to believe that their interest could best be served by the independence of Canada. In 1910 Mr. Henri Bourassa gave to the people of this country some insight into the propaganda that was carried on in favour of independence. He told of the conspiracy that had existed between a few millionaires in New York and certain persons in Canada. The latter we cannot identify with certainty, but we can take what he reports in his paper at a time when he was a confidential adviser of the Liberal party in Canada and a close friend of the leader of that party. Over his own signature in Le Devoir on October 8, 1910, Mr. Bourassa, in an article entitled Le Complot Annexioniste (the annexationist plot), wrote:

> In November, 1892, at the time of the elections which brought Cleveland to power for the second time, I was in New York with my good friend Charlie Devlin. . . We met many Canadians—among others Mr. Gorman, the editor of the Free Press, who died since. . .
>
> Mr. Gorman introduced us to different people, amongst others Erastus Wiman, then at the top of prosperity, and Richard Croker, totally glorious over Cleveland's election,—the last great victory of Tammany Hall.
>
> Erastus Wiman invited us to dinner with a colleague of Mr. Fielding in the Nova Scotia government. and a minister from British Columbia. Naturally, there was no question of any plot, but these gentlemen spoke much of reciprocity and even a little of annexation. . . .
>
> Shortly afterwards, I met an old uncle of mine, a bitter annexationist. . . He began his usual song on the blessings that continental union would spread over Canada.
>
> But, finally, said he, if the Canadians persist in not seeing clearly, in allowing themselves to be dominated by the curés, at least, why not free them from the yoke of England? You are young; you ought to adopt the cause of independence. If any group wished to undertake a campaign in favour of independence, we could find the necessary means of action; there would be a million dollars at your disposal for founding newspapers, organizing meetings. etc.
>
> Where would you find the money? I asked naively.
>
> In United States.
>
> Thank you. I should not take American money for the purpose of making a Canadian propaganda.
>
> You are more scrupulous than your leaders.
>
> That is possible. But, putting aside the question of public morals, do you think that, if the Americans are ready to supply a million to the cause of independence, they will not take proper measures so that this pseudo-independence will be nothing but the vestibule of annexation.
>
> A few months later Mr. Mercier began, in the Canadian centres of the New England States, that campaign, unexplainable in the eyes of the general public, in favour of the independence of Canada. It terminated rather abruptly.
>
> I already had sufficient indication to be convinced that this oratorical tour was connected with the mysterious projects the existence of which I had vaguely suspected in New York and which my old uncle had allowed me to perceive a little more clearly.
>
> But it is only later, much later—towards the end of my stay in Ottawa—that I got the key of the whole mystery.
>
> Was the prime idea started in Canada or United States? I am not sure of that. At all events, Erastus Wiman was the middleman between the negotiators. And some day in the winter of 1892-93, he had them meet in New York. Messrs. Mercier, Tarte, Goldwin Smith, L. J. A. Papineau, were there, on the Canadian side. Who were the Americans they met personally, I really do not know. But I know that Messrs. Levi P. Morton and Andrew Carnegie were among those interested in the scheme.
>
> The affair was well advanced. Mr. Mercier was to take charge of the initial fights in favour of the independence of Canada, which he did shortly afterwards. But when the question of funds came up, Mr. Goldwin Smith spoiled it all. He stated that he was ready to go on with the newspaper campaign he had long since started in the open, in favour of continental union, but that he should never consent to take part in an organization wherein American money would be used to deceive Canadian people by favouring annexation disguised behind the mask of independence.

Mr. LAMARCHE: Does my hon. friend know that in that same article, which I read very carefully at the time it was written, Mr. Henri Bourassa over his own signature concludes that the only logical course for us French-Canadians and all Canadians in this country was to maintain British connection and not to sacrifice it?

Mr. BENNETT: Why certainly, and that is the very point I was leading to. Mr. Bourassa pointed out the false lights which were held out to allure the young men of Quebec and he further warned them of the shoals to which they were drifting. He pointed out to them that the best way to maintain their rights and privileges was by maintaining British connection.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Is my hon. friend willing to state on the floor of this House that the province of Quebec is looking for independence outside of party politics?

Mr. BENNETT: No question could be more simply answered. My friend has not quite followed my argument. I was pointing out to him that the Liberal party, in season and out of season, while out of power openly and while in power insidiously, had been leading the people of the province of Quebec openly to espouse the cause of independence.

Mr. WILSON (Laval): Is this what my hon. friend means—that the Liberal party of the province of Quebec is looking for independence?

Mr. BENNETT: I have no hesitation whatever in saying, as I have been endeavouring to do, that the public utterances of the leaders of the Liberal party are such as to lead the great mass of the electors of Quebec to support independence, and they have failed. But that is not all. They have not confined these appeals to passion and to prejudice to the province of Quebec. I do not say that these appeals were made in that province alone. They were made in every province where it was hoped in a remote locality that an appeal might succeed in keeping hon. gentlemen in power at any cost, at any expense. What do we find? One of the most illuminating speeches that we have heard in this Parliament I submit was the speech made by the hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel), when he rose in his place, representing a great constituency of farmers who came from Pennsylvania and other sections of the United States, some of them Germans originally and some of them coming from the old German families who had landed here and made for themselves a home. This young man openly proclaimed his desire to live under the flag which had given him protection and under which his people had prospered. It was an inspiring sight; but what did we observe last fall? The right hon. the leader of the Opposition openly touring the province of Ontario, went to and fro through that province and there accompanied him the ex-Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackenzie King) and he told the people of that country what they should do against this Administration. I say here in my place in this House that the sentiments to which the ex-Minister of Labour gave utterance at his nomination proceedings in the town of Berlin in the county of Waterloo were such that he should never hold office under the British Crown. Why? I read from the Globe newspaper of the 22nd day of August, 1911, these words:

> Hon. Mr. King reads extracts from Hon. Mr. Borden's speeches in the House of Commons, in which the Conservative leader referred to the danger of war with Germany, and urged the Government to go to Britain's aid with a dreadnought or a cash contribution.

These are Mr. Mackenzie King's words quoted in the Globe:

> Are the people of this country to place at the head of affairs a man who would be precipitated into such a position as this, who will take from the treasury, and who would have taken enough money to build two dreadnoughts and send that money to England, so that they could spend it as they please! and against what country? He was ready to send money to build warships to fight Germany.

Then the correspondence naively proceeds:

> A larger number of delegates were of German descent, and they loudly applauded Hon. Mr. King's statement.
>
> Referring to the candidature of Major Weichel, he asked: How are the Germans of this country going to stand behind him, when he is supporting a man who is taking such a stand in regard to the defences of the Empire?

And again the delegates loudly applauded.

Mr. Speaker, I hold it to be the duty of a minister of the Crown to do something to lead public opinion away from passion and prejudice. It is no wonder that he was rejected by the electors of that county. It is no wonder that those splendid citizens who inhabit that great county of North Waterloo, and who realize the benefits that come to them by reason of the power and might of the British navy, were prepared to say: we will support Mayor Weichel. Why? Because he stands for loyal devotion to the country in which we live, and under whose flag we have protection. Do you suppose that for a single moment any leader of the Conservative party would take upon a platform in this country a man who would make such an appeal to the passions of a people? Do you suppose we would have the sight we had last fall when, going through the province of Ontario, and on platform after platform, this Mr. Mackenzie King was held up as an example He spoke to the citizens in the loyal town of Berlin and appealed to the German people, because Mr. Borden would, forsooth, if occasion demanded, build dreadnoughts to fight for the support of Great Britain against Germany. Under no system of parliamentary institutions that I have ever known would such conduct be permitted. It is alien and foreign to British parliamentary institutions. It is discreditable alike to our country and to parliamentary institutions that such a thing should be permitted, and it calls for the just reprobation of the electorate of the county who relegated back to that obscurity, from which he should never have emerged, the man who was guilty of making that appeal.

Let us go a step further. I notice that some hon. gentlemen opposite are making strong and vigorous appeals for an election, but the appeals come principally from those whom a wise electorate decided should not represent them. It is passing strange, is it not? When I came to this House, and when we were summoned to the Bar of the Senate for the first time to hear the speech of His Royal Highness, I heard a policeman who was standing guard crying out, 'members only,' and I observed a figure pass by under the arm of the policeman standing at the door. I thought I recognized the noble figure, and I discovered to my surprise, and I must say to my disgust, that it was the ex-Minister of Labour. So keen was his anxiety, so great was his desire to be in Parliament that he could not resist the temptation of rushing up to the Senate when the House was opened.

Another hon. gentleman says: We should have a plebiscite. If I understand aright the history of my country, it is the duty of a Government elected to govern to govern when it comes here with a mandate fresh from the people, to give its best thought and its best energy to the solution of the naval problem, having previously said to the people before it was called into power that it would do what it is endeavouring to do to-day. I say it is the duty of this Government to do so, and this Government will be derelict to its duty if it ceases its efforts day or night until it places upon the statute-book of this country this measure that testifies to Canada's unfailing loyalty and devotion to the British Empire and to her desire to maintain the naval supremacy of Great Britain. That is not all. Another hon. gentleman says that, if you pass this Bill, you set back responsible government seventy years. I am not sure whether he said seventy or a hundred. Another hon. gentleman says you cannot vote this money, because it is going to be spent beyond Canada. I look at the statute-books and I find that year after year we voted aid to poor sufferers by famine and calamity in China, Japan, Italy, and in the San Francisco earthquake, and to the victims of earthquake in the West Indies. To every part of the known world we have voted money for such purposes. Why? Because we have done it in the name of our common civilization and for the benefit of humanity. I say, there is nothing that could be done by Britons anywhere, by Canadians in this Parliament or in any legislature that will do more for civilization and the advancement of the rights of humanity than to vote this money for the maintenance of the British Empire. That, Sir, is my profound conviction, and I believe that I interpret aright the genius of the people of that part of Canada in which I live in saying that that is their view. For we realize that whatever our faults and failings—and they have been many—at least you can say that the British Empire has stood four-square to every wind that blows for the purpose of maintaining high and lofty ideals of Christian civilization.

But the hon. gentlemen tell us that responsible government is destroyed. I wonder what kind of responsible government he means? Does he mean the kind of which he has most knowledge, the kind that brought disgrace upon the fair name of the province of Ontario—a government of perjury, of forgery, of false voting papers, of bogus ballot boxes some of which were dropped into the lake, and the very ballots for which were printed in the printing office that he himself controlled? That is the kind of 'responsible government' I take it the people of this country think that he means; it is the kind that any man would understand him to mean. It is the only kind of 'responsible government' that could be mentioned that would be set back. What is responsible government? Every child in the fourth standard knows that it means that the money of the people shall be expended as their representatives in Parliament declare. And when the representatives of the people in Parliament declare that thirty-five millions of dollars shall be devoted to purposes of our common defence, that is responsible government in every sense of the term, and that is thoroughly understood by every man. It is a lovely state of affairs in this country when we are told that the King's subjects, sitting in one of the King's Parliaments, voting money for the defence of the King's Empire, are guilty of destroying responsible government and are acting ultra vires of their rights. That is a lovely state of affairs.

I said this afternoon that I believed that perhaps this debate, after all, will be note-worthy in history for having seen the conversion of the only free trader left in Canada. It is no small thing, Sir, to bring to the ranks of protectionists so distinguished a gentleman as the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Clark). We honour his great talents and are glad to welcome him to the ranks of the protectionists. It is a delightful thing to think, as I said this afternoon, that Saul of Tarsus has now become Paul the Apostle, that he who threw the stones at Stephen—Stephen being the protectionist policy—now lauds him whom once he stoned. It is good to think that protection should be given to the ship-building industry, though the steel industry of Nova Scotia should be destroyed. Gathered at the memorable meeting at Calgary, there came many to hear the great renunciation. I remember reading in history somewhere that Galileo, who had said that the earth went around was called upon to renounce his faith, and as he declared his renunciation, he still said under his breath, 'But it does go round just the same. There are those in this country who believe the tradition that as the hon. member concluded his address in favour of protection of the battleship industry, he was heard to mutter under his breath, 'I am a free trader just the same'. There is that tradition current on the streets of Calgary, the great city I have the honour to represent. It is indeed a notable victory that we have brought over to us so distinguished a disciple of the doctrine of free trade.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh oh.

Mr. BENNETT: This is nothing to laugh about for I remember how the hon. gentleman's political life began in the province from which we both come. He sought the nomination of the Liberal party; they did not give it to him; and he published a letter and denounced them as not being what they should be—and ran just the same. And I remember his friendship for and great faith in one of the greatest of Englishmen, John Morley, now Lord Morley, of Blackburn. And I commend to his attention the words of that great literary man and statesman, 'Fidelity to conviction is one of the great mainsprings of human progress.' The Saul of yesterday is the Paul of to-day. I see the hon. gentleman is writing that down. I hope he will write it down. It will be a splendid thought to inspire him to noble zeal in the cause of protection; it will give greater brilliancy to his efforts, it will give greater power to his enthusiasm; and I hope, yea, I am sure, that in the years to come, we who witnessed that great conversion will be able, even as those who lived in Paul's day, to rejoice over this brand that has been plucked from the burning. I sometimes wondered, in the days before his conversion, why my hon. friend was so earnest a disciple of Cobden. I searched the works of Cobden, until I found what I thought must be the reason. I found something in one of his splendid letters—a paragraph—and then I thought I knew why my friend was a free trader and a Cobdenite. Cobden said in 1842:

> The colonial system with all its dazzling appeals to the passions of the people, can never be got rid of except by the indirect process of free trade which will gradually and impereptibly loosen the bonds that unite our colonies to us by a mistaken notion of self interest.

So it was that Cobden preached free trade to get rid of the colonies. And I can readily understand my hon. friend, coming as he did to this country with that strange idea of political economy with which his mind was obsessed, might well say with Cobden: The only way we can get rid of these wretched colonies is by the indirect process of free trade. And so we leave him. But in doing so I commend him once more to the splendid sight that must have dazzled his eyes when he beheld his honoured leader, a few years ago, wearing the Cobden medal. Think how his vision was dazzled as he saw that medal gleaming upon the breast of his leader. And I think how now he must feel like saying: No more can I reverence or revere that medal because I have departed from the faith of Cobden and become a disciple of the hated protectionist: Roll up the map of Europe, said Pitt: Put away the Cobden medal, says my hon. friend, it will be seen no more in the halls of Parliament; no more will it shine on the breast of his leader.

Now, I assert that in my judgment, independence is not in the interest of any part of this country. I quite understand that appeals may be made to younger men, to men who have not lived under British institutions and are not in full accord with British history. I understand the insidious appeals that can be made to such men. But I say that this must be rejected by the Canadian people, the veil of hypocricy and cant with which the true policy of my friends opposite has been disguised is be torn asunder the veil that keeps it from the vision of the Canadian people will be torn asunder and it will be seen in all its hideousness, and all its horror by those who love peace and hold truth in reverence. There remains but one thing more and what is that? The doctrine we have called imperialism. The sneers and jibes with which hon. gentlemen opposite have spoken of imperialism are not warranted. I cannot conceive of any man who reads the history of this Empire being ashamed to profess his belief that one day we will be able to confederate these great groups of self-governing colonies and dominions with the Motherland into a great Imperial whole, one grand empire that will be the surest and best and noblest influence we have for peace, truth, justice and freedom. Wherever the British flag has gone, wherever Englishmen have planted the outposts of Empire, there has followed order, justice, liberty, freedom, equality under the law. That is the great thing, the right to worship God in any way men please, under their own vine and fig tree, and none may say them nay. Whether they be Mahommedans, or Hindoos, Buddhists or Catholics, Protestants or atheists, it matters not, all have equal rights under that great flag, and I say it is our bounden duty as loyal devoted British subjects to do what we can to maintain and sustain that civilization and the Empire that has made it possible.

I would like to point out what this means. I have been attacked time without number because they have said I have talked Imperialism. The Imperialism I have talked in the country I talk here to-night. It is the ideal and destiny of the Canadian people. What ideal are you to hold out to our people? By what word are you to conjure them, leading them in this young country into a broad and splendid patriotism? I have the words of a great historian, a gentleman whose conclusions will commend themselves to the judgment of every man in this country, the late Professor Lecky, who said:

> In the conditions of modern life no power is likely to maintain long a vast, scattered, heterogeneous empire if the central governing power within it has declined; if through want of efficiency, or moral energy, or moral purity, it ceases to win the respect of its several parts. It is no less true that the cohesion here may be permanently maintained by the wide diffusion of a larger and imperial patriotism, pervading the whole like a vital principle; binding men by the ties of pride and of affection to the great empire to which they belong, and subordinating to its maintenance local and party and class interests. If this spirit dies out, the movement of disintegration is sure to begin. No political machinery, no utilitarian calculation, will in the long run be powerful enough to arrest it.

I say the only destiny that can be left for our people, the only ideal that we can cherish, is the ideal of a great united Imperial Empire. I say that and I should like to direct the attention of the House to the fact that Canada needs it most of all. In the great island of Australia the governors of the several provinces are appointed from England, the population is largely English, and the same is true of New Zealand. In South Africa you have conditions somewhat similar and yet dissimilar. In Canada we are inviting into our country the greatest population in the world. The problem is essentially a western one. The members who represent eastern constituencies will in the long run have little to do with its solution. It is a problem that rests largely with the energy and youth of the West. I find as I look at the population returns that during the last seven years there have been brought into western Canada 663,625 people of British, continental and American origin and of that vast number less than 200,000 came from Great Britain and the United Kingdom. So that with a population of less than 1,500,000 inhabiting these three great provinces we have this vast proportion of that population drawn from sources that are not British, without knowledge of our history, with little regard to our traditions, caring nothing for our glorious past and asking us for a national ideal, some aspiration, some ambition, some hope by which they may be led. It is a great problem, a vast problem. Who can contemplate it without a realization of the greatness of our responsibilities. We have privileges such as no other people ever had. We have the richest country in the world. I have maintained and do maintain that our responsibilities are co-extensive with our opportunities. Therefore what must be the responsibility resting on this Parliament to give to these young men an ideal, an ambition and aspiration that will lead their minds along Imperial lines. The splendid example of the Scotchman, the Welshman, the Irishman and the Englishman, these men who still preserve their nationality while sinking it and subordinating it to an Imperial patriotism, is ever before me.

The problem is this: How can you maintain the autonomous rights of the several component parts that make up the whole and give to them a stalwart patriotism and love of their own country while at the same time subordinating everything to an Imperial vision? That is the problem; it demands the minds of statesmen, it demands the consideration of the best intellects and minds of our age. It is a problem worthy of solution and worthy of our race. Since when did we fear to accept great responsibilities through craven fear of being great? Since when did we palter with our destiny? It was Lytton who said: You cannot haggle with destiny, and we cannot haggle with the great destiny that has come to our race. Did you ever contemplate the awful responsibility if, by our failure to do our duty towards the Empire, Britain should fall. Contemplate a disaster in the North sea. Some scoff, some sneer. Sir, we in the West know better than anybody else what it would mean. I walk the sidewalks in Calgary or in Edmonton, I look upon our tramways and our railways, our lines of transportation and communication and I know that I have them because I am a British subject. I know that to old England our people went and got the money that built those lines of communication. I contemplate not without anxiety the possibility that the money that goes for western development would be paid in tribute to the successful nation in a disastrous war, and then where would western development be? Where would our cities grow, where our street and railway lines and where the means of transportation and development? It would set back the wheels of progress a century. There are some who sneer and jeer and smile. The following article shows the vast amount of money which Britain has invested throughout the Empire:

It has been estimated that home investments within the Empire amount to the enormous sum of £1,652,000,000, or some £32,000,000 more than our investments in all other countries put together; and that of this total £391,000,000 has gone to Australasia and £365,000,000 to Canada... It is calculated that the preference given to the Colonies by the terms on which the British people provide their fellow-subjects overseas with capital is, at least, 1 per cent, and it has been stated by Sir Edgar Speyer—who cannot be suspected of Unionist prejudice—that the interest saved to the Dominions and Dependencies in this way is at least £10,000,000 a year. That is certainly a very handsome preference, given very largely out of sentiment, just as sentiment had much to do with the admission of some £650,000,000 of Colonial and Indian stocks to the list of British trustee securities. The Times, January 2nd, 1913.

Sir, this responsibility is the most awful that ever came to the representatives of a free democracy. It is a responsibility that might cause men to realize that we cannot palter with our destiny, Did you ever think what disaster in the North sea would mean to the teeming millions of India or the teeming millions of Egypt? Some smile and say, we will not accept these responsibilities. Why not? They are the responsibilities that belong to this race, this Anglo-Saxon race. There are our responsibilities. Britain did not seek them. Britain did not desire India or Egypt; she had them forced upon her. To let go our rule in India would be anarchy. It would be such anarchy as the world has never seen. The teeming millions of India would crush one another. There would be internecine strife, internal warfare, kingdom against kingdom and ruler against ruler. Look at Egypt; the same state of affairs would prevail. Blood would flow in the streets and rivers of that country. When I read the history of India under Curzon I find that he spoke of the ruins of ancient civilizations that he found on every side as he journeyed to Delhi. He saw these signs there. It is our duty to remember something of history. Phœnicia fell, Athens fell, Rome fell. The Dutch at one time commanded the seas even as we do, and they have fallen and are remembered as a world power no more. What assurance have we that Britain will not fall? The only assurance we have is the assurance that some day these great self-governing colonies, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and Canada will get together, and with the Motherland create an Imperial Parliament where you will find their representatives sitting with the men who sit for English constituencies. If you sit in the gallery of the English Parliament at Westminster and look down on the House, you will see them devoting their time to Welsh disestablishment or to home rule; but the same men determine the policy of the Empire, though divided on the lines of partyism in their domestic politics.

I preach a new parliament, an Imperial parliament, where Canadians, Australians, South Africans and New Zealanders shall sit side by side with the English, Welsh and Scotch and Irish, and legislate for this great Imperial Empire. I have held out to the constituency which I represent, as I hold out to this House the vision of a wider hope, the hope that one day this Dominion will be the dominant factor in that great federation, when we may be able as the dominant partner to protect the destinies of the race and breed to which we belong, and the destinies of the civilization of which we are so proud, and of the Empire of which we will then form the predominant part. Ah, Sir, it is jeered at, laughed at, scoffed at. Hon. gentlemen opposite prefer independence to that vision. The difference between us on this as on this naval question is fundamental. It goes to the very root of the differences between the parties. The Liberal party legislates for to-day, and for power. It is content to preach any doctrine that will give votes and bring advancement, and give place and power to its leaders. It is content if there be something 'for the boys,' a little something here and a little something there; it is content with the doctrine of sufficient to the day is the profit thereof. But we preach a grander doctrine. The Conservative party believes that it is but trustees for posterity, that one day it will be held to account for what it has done with this great heritage of ours. I believe that ours is a land that we hold in trust for the millions that are and will be. The difference I say is fundamental, and the difference in the attitude of the leaders of the great parties is also different. Daniel Webster said that great men coined their age and stamped it with their own image and superscription. The Liberals of this country contend that the right hon. the leader of the Opposition has coined his age and stamped it with his own image and superscription. I ask, Sir, what is the image that he has stamped upon it, and what will be the superscription? Ah, it is the superscription that counts. You know, Sir, and we all know, that men's minds are lifted up to nobler things by the superscriptions on the banners under which they serve. Sometimes a sentence inspires men to nobler actions, to higher ambitions and to loftier aims. The Liberal party goes to the young men of western Canada, men of hope and energy and youth, of ambition and lofty aspirations and high ideals, with this superscription upon its banner: 'Independence by slow degrees and as naturally as the separating of the ripe fruit from the parent tree.' On our banner there is inscribed a motto that will live as long as the language is spoken and the world lasts. Sometimes when I have a spare moment in the metropolis of the Empire, I like to visit the Abbey Church at Westminster, and read upon the floor and walls the lettered story of men of science and art, of statesmen, sailors, and authors who made this Empire great. And then I like to go to the other end of the city, to the old Cathedral Church of St. Paul's, and look upon the blood-stained banners on the walls which tell of the heroic effort and great endeavour of men who have made this Empire possible. Then I like to go down to the crypt, turn sharply to the left and gaze on the marble features of one who once sat in this House. And the superscription that he left to us is the superscription with which he stamped his age, and which still inspires us. The superscription that you see beneath the sculptured face in the crypt of St. Paul's of that great patriotic statesman, that great devoted British Canadian is this: 'A British subject I was born; a British subject I will die.'

Mr. M. CLARK (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, if rhapsody were argument, and interjections logic, my hon. friend from Calgary would be an apt logician and a brilliant debater. I cannot recollect that I have ever had to speak in answer to a speech which ended with a peroration of one hour's duration, and having passed through this formidable and new experience I am sure I may very sincerely cast myself upon the sympathy of the House. Whenever I hear my hon. friend, and it is a good many years now since I heard him first, he reminds me of a story which Mr. Bright told once. Mr. Bright was listening to an hon. member of the Imperial House, and, as he listened, he turned to a friend and said, 'Mr. So-and-So makes a very good speech, if you do not listen to what he says.' That anecdote is not without some distant application to the hon. member for Calgary. Perhaps I ought to apologize for saying anything at all in reply to my hon. friend, because I belong to a class of the community, for whom, I am afraid, my hon. friend has very scant respect. I am a member of the great class—great in numbers, I mean—of Canadian farmers, and my hon. friend referred to the farmers in his speech to-night in a way which I think justifies me in saying that he has very scant respect for them. He referred to a certain number of them anyhow, as the commonest farmers with the least intelligence.

Mr. BENNETT: I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The hon. gentleman misquotes me. I said that I would appeal to the commonest farmer, or to the man of the least intelligence. I did not say, and the hon. gentleman knows that I did not say, 'farmers of the least intelligence' because he is a shining example to the contrary.

Mr. CLARK: I accept my hon. friend's correction. His distinction is very slight, and as a member of the farming class I must say that he put them in company so unintelligent that I still rather resent his reference to my class. It may be that I am one of the class of the least intelligence. I have considerable reason to think though that the Alberta farmers have made out a prima facie case for being considered intelligent by the scant attention that they always give to the speeches of the hon. member for Calgary. If I might further presume, belonging to this humble class of the community, I would like to give my hon. friend a piece of advice, and that is that he should always give other people credit for the same strength and honesty of conviction which he claims for himself and which I readily concede to him. He does not do that. My hon. friend, at the very outset of his remarks, said: 'No one knows better than hon. gentleman opposite that what I am saying is correct,' although he had been criticising them because they spoke in the opposite sense. Further on in his remarks he said that hon. members on this side of the House agreed with him if they only had the frankness to admit it. That is language which should not be held between one set of gentlemen and another, because there are two cool assumptions at the root of a statement of that kind. The first cool assumption on the part of the hon. gentleman who uses that language is that he is always right—let there be no doubt upon that subject. The second is that everybody would concede that he is right if we were only as honest and frank as he is. I wonder that he has got to the middle period of life with a creed of that kind at all, because it is one man against the race. I would humbly offer him one word of warning, and that is that he would be well advised not to parade that particular state of mind too much in this very critical and commonsense assembly.

My hon. friend delivered a long speech. He talked for three hours by the clock, and much that he said might have been cut out of his speech if he had really referred only to what was pertinent to the question before the House. I do not know that a long description of a particular meeting was in order. I very much question it. I do not object to the description he gave of the meeting, although, if my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) and myself had had any idea that the holding of a meeting in my hon. friend's constituency would set him in such a condition of hysterical excitement, we would have abstained, on the ground of common humanity, from going there. We have got him corralled in Calgary anyhow, in so far as Alberta is concerned. He is the sole representative of this great imperialism from that province, and we might have been, on grounds of common humanity, content with that state of affairs. What I was struck with, in reference to the Calgary meeeting, was the intimate knowledge which my hon. friend possessed of the people who attempted to break it up. Personally I did not resent the attempts of this body. It is always pleasing for me to hear any one sing Rule Britannia, although in the country in which I was raised we never sing it over empty ships. We always put men on them. If it had been desired only to have a policy that you could sing Rule Britannia and make a noise over, I should think that my hon. friend could have grown just as eloquent over the noise of big drums, and he would have given vent to just as strong expressions of his loyalty. Judging from some of the expressions of loyalty that we have heard I have no doubt that my hon. friend could have given utterance to the same expressions of loyalty over empty drums as ships. I do not intend to discuss the Calgary meeting further than to say that if the holding of a meeting in Calgary was any offence to my hon. friend, as an humble farmer, I tender him my apologies. I try to talk commonsense as a farmer sometimes, and I wondered whether, with such a gentlemanly and well behaved imperialistic following, the hon. gentleman, who has usually so much light to dispense, is living up to his traditions when he sometimes encourages breaking up a meeting even with singing Rule Britannia.

The hon. gentleman has referred to the young men of the plains. I do not understand where he gets authority to speak for the young men of the plains. He, like myself, has a political record in Alberta. He tried to lead the young men of the plains, but he was a horrible failure. The Tory party in Alberta went into one election under my hon. friend, and out of twenty-five members returned there were two Tories and my hon. friend was not one of them.

Mr. BENNETT: The crew of the Minnie M. were there too.

Mr. CLARK: Is not three hours and ten minutes pretty good? Try the silent rule. Modesty sits with much grace on inexperience, although it is not one of the most common adornments. Then, at the subsequent election my hon. friend had the honour again to lead the Tories, and in consequence of the success with which he did lead them in that election he elected two followers. Then he gave it up as a bad job and came to Ottawa. He does not seem to be quite comfortable here. He has been travelling the Atlantic a good deal, but I have nothing to say about that. My point is that, although my hon. friend speaks for the farmers of the plains he is not entitled to very high standing as the representative of those farmers.

Some of the reasons that he advanced tonight with reference to the question before the House make me think that he is not au fait of the subject. He tells us something about fire-guards and about how a man guards his limits. I never heard of people guarding limits in that particular way. To put a big guard around twenty miles of timber would be a very bad way of guarding it; because, if the fire reached it at one point, it is very clear that all the timber would be liable to go. If I had a limit I would try particularly to guard my own limit and let the other fellows do the same. That is what I want to do in the British Empire. I think my hon. friend's illustration is an unfortunate one. What he proposes, as far as I can understand, what he wants to teach us in this House and what he wants the men on the plains to understand, is that he should as a citizen of Calgary hire the fire brigade of Edmonton at three and a half cents on the dollar. I do not think he is happy in his illustration any more than in his argument.

He was very anxious to find out what the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) thinks of the opinions he held twenty-two years ago. Personally I am sure that my hon. friend from Rouville will not be offended when I say that I do not think that his opinions of twenty-two years ago are of very great interest to any human being. He was a very young man at that time; and, Mr. Speaker, some men get sense as they get older and some do not. I want to put it to my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett), who has any amount of brains: does he place any importance upon the thoughts of a man not much more than twenty years of age? I recollect very well that Sir Charles Dilke, who became a perfect encyclopædia of parliamentary knowledge, was a Republican in his youth but he grew out of that and became an honoured servant of the King. Young men are flighty; I congratulate my hon. friend upon still being young.

The hon. member had great fun with me as a free trader. Like the Minister of Trade and Commerce, he thinks he has found some inconsistency in me because I believe in building ships in Canada. Would he argue that if I should refuse to import railways I would be an inconsistent free trader? I do not think so. Where the free trader comes in is that he wants to buy the material for constructing his railroads free of duty, and in the matter of ships in the same way you have a splendid example of what free trade could do in the case of Germany. No one but a free trader can believe in ships; the protectionist cannot. The protectionist would have a Chinese wall all around the country, and if you had a Chinese wall around the country you would not need ships. It is only the free trader who can have any belief in ships at all. How does the German Empire build her ships but by departing from the general policy of protection and introducing the material for the building of her ships under free trade principles? My hon. friend, I suppose, knows that Germany has no duty on the materials used in ship-building, and that is how Germany has made some progress in overtaking Britain in the matter of shipbuilding. I certainly cannot see where my inconsistency comes in. I say a free trader is the only man who has any use for ships and the only man who can build ships. It is because Britain is a free trade country and not a protectionist that she owns and builds one-half the shipping of the entire world. And, Mr. Speaker, I contend that I am within my rights as a true son of Britain when I want to see this daughter country emulating the Mother Country and becoming a great shipping power. There is no inconsistency about my views if my hon. friend would only take time to study them; he wants time to get to know about them and to see their full bearing. You cannot build ships if you have a nation suffering from hydrophobia; you must not be afraid of the water; if you want to build ships you must not be afraid of foreign commerce; you must be a free trader.

The hon. gentleman from Calgary paid scant courtesy to a very large section of the people of Alberta when he described me as the only free trader in Canada. That is a distinction to which I do not for one moment aspire. Why, there lately met in the city of Calgary—and the hon. member ought to know what takes place in that city—600 delegates representing 14,000 farmers of Alberta, and they passed a resolution unanimously in favour of free trade. The poor information of my hon. friend about the state of public feeling in the province of Alberta accounts for his failure to lead the Tory party to any fair measure of success in that province.

Mr. LAMARCHE: Will my hon. friend from Red Deer tell me if at that same meeting in Calgary to which he has referred a resolution was not passed respecting the naval policy of Canada?

Mr. CLARK: I am very glad to supplement the information I have already given by saying that five hundred and eighty-eight out of six hundred delegates voted absolutely in favour of no navy at all, and I will tell my hon. friend further that you can hold a good many meetings in Ontario which would give the same opinion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. Clark: Is that so? I thought the Grange had carried through a similar resolution, and the Grange is an Ontario organization.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh.

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friends opposite laugh; take care they are not misguided about the opinion of Ontario. So far as I am concrned, I want to know the true way of handling this question, and I want to know also as correctly as I can find out what is the true opinion of the people of this country, because, great as is the imperialism of the member for Calgary, I do not think it is any greater than the apparent fear he has of going to the people of Canada. So far as I am concerned, I want to know what are the opinions of the people of Canada. There is a very large section of the people who, at any rate, are tired of this scare business altogether. We have been talking of having navies for the last four years, and the new ministry instead of looking into the needs of the people they were sent to govern, spend most of their time across the Atlantic hobnobbing and banqueting with the aristocracy over there. And one of these days the people will tell them where their duty is and in no uncertain way, if I am any judge of public opinion.

I want to make one more reference to my hon. friend from Calgary, and that is as to what he said about shipbuilding being a specialized industry and warning us off the idea that we can build dreadnoughts in Canada. The hon. member referred to the specialized industry as it exists in the Old Country. I know something about that industry. I was brought up near the banks of the Tyne, and the very things to which the hon. member referred brought my mind back to a course of thoughts diametrically opposite to his as to our duty at the moment. Let me tell this House something about the ship-building industry of the Tyne. Sir William Armstrong as we knew him best became Lord Armstrong. In his youth he was a solicitor's clerk in Newcastle and had nothing to do with ship-building; there were no Armstrong works. Lord Armstrong died only a few years ago. He was, as I have said, a solicitor's clerk; but following the bent of his great genius he turned his attention to the application of hydraulic power, and to the manufacture of guns, and in his own lifetime he built up the stupendous works which give employment to some 25,000 people in the west end of Newcastle. That all happened in the lifetime of one man. Coming from the banks of the Tyne where that happened, I say: are we to produce no geniuses in the direction of manufacturing and ship-building in Canada? That is the answer to the argument of these hon. gentlemen opposite on that point. The Tyne, in the boyhood and infancy of men still alive, was a brook which would scarcely float a canoe, but the indomitable pluck and energy of the British people dredged and dredged until at some thirteen to fourteen miles up from its mouth they can take the proudest and largest vessels from Armstrong, Whitworth and Company, and from other firms down at Wallsend to the mouth of the Tyne and on to the open sea. We do not need to do that dredging in Canada; we have noble rivers ready to put our planks upon. The only thing that is necessary for our building ships is a little pluck and courage on the part of the present Government.

I do not apologize for taking a further part in the discussion of this very great question. It is so important that I hold that no debate can be too long, if it is going to help us in arriving at a wise decision. I was very glad to hear the remark with with which my hon. friend from Calgary (Mr. Bennett) began his speech. He said he felt that it was his duty to declare the reasons for the faith that was in him. I only hope that his example will be infections, and that some other members on that side, from whom we would like to hear, will not shrink from their duty. I hope their confessions of faith will be a little more condensed than that of my hon. friend from Calgary. They cannot be more sincere than he is, I am sure.

The extent to which this debate has gone has already done a good deal for a better understanding of this question The first thing it has done, in my judgment, is that it has established the unanswerable nature of the argument of the Opposition on this question. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister talked to us on this side the other night about speaking glibly of certain things with a want of knowledge. I hardly think that this was in accordance with his usual fairness to his opponents, because I should like to remind him that, if we talked glibly, a great deal of our talk was the mere quotation of speeches which he and his hon Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Foster) made in March, 1909. If we did not have any knowledge at any rate we are within four years of the omniscience at which the party opposite has now arrived. A little patience should be extended to us because we do not come up as far as we might to the superior standard which it has now arrived at. I do not know what my hon. friend from Calgary was doing in regard to this question in 1909. The only hon. member of this House, who has declared that he could have led his country aright at that time if he had not suffered from his self-imposed silence, was the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup). He told us that he knew at that time they were all wrong, but he kept quiet. My hon. friend from Calagary was not in this House, but he was a prominent, an extremely prominent and influential member of the Conservative party. We never heard that he made very much noise at that time. I do not think he dissented from his leader. In fact, I am very sure that if my hon. friend had been in this House in 1909, though he lectures us about our partisanship and seems to think he occupies a frame of mind which is as near impartiality as a human being can attain, he would have sat at the feet of the Gamaliel from North Toronto, and cheered to the echo one of the finest speeches that was ever delivered in this House against contribution.

When we talk glibly, we quote my right hon. friend the Prime Minister in favour of a certain governing principle, which was the governing principle of the right hon. the Prime Minister and of the party opposite at that time, and which is along the lines of the speeches that we are making on this side now. It was along the lines of the speeches which my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver) and myself dared to make in the town of Calgary. The governing principle at that time was a governing principle, the very foundation of right thinking upon the subject, that out of our own material and with our own labour we should build a Canadian navy and have it manned by Canadians. When we go to Calgary and announce that principle now, the people of that city sing 'Rule Britannia.' Why did they not sing 'Rule Britannia' to the hon. member for North Toronto and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister when they commended exactly the same truths?

The arguments on this side of the House on this question are unanswerable. I wish to give one or two illustrations of how the Government and its supporters are derelict in their duty, until they either answer arguments that have been put up on this side or defend arguments which have been put up on their own side, or else admit that our arguments are correct. Take the case as between my hon. friend from Beauce (Mr. Béland) and my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Middlebro). A dispute arose on a question of fact. I myself and others had quoted Mr. Winston Churchill's speech to the shipwrights. My hon. friend from North Grey comes along before the bar of public opinion—he would be before the bar of public opinion on this question in North Grey—and says: 'Oh, but that speech of Mr. Winston Churchill's was made before he knew what the German naval estimates were.' That was a statement of fact.

Mr. BELAND: He insisted on that.

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friend from Beauce comes along, and says that that speech was not made before he knew what the German naval estimates were.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: Does my hon. friend say that the speech made by Mr. Churchill on the 17th of March was not made before the German Naval Bill was brought down?

Mr. BELAND: The speech to the shipwrights was not.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: My hon. friend said just now that the speech made by Mr. Winston Churchill on the 17th of March—

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. CLARK: I said that the question of fact was this. Mr. Winston Churchill's speech to the shipwrights was made in the month of May. I quoted from that speech; so did other members on this side. My hon. friend from North Grey comes along and says that that speech in May was made before Mr. Winston Churchill knew of the plans of the German people. I am not bound to give an opinion on the question. I am dealing with the difference of fact and duties of the Government and of its supporters in debating this question. My hon. friend from Beauce put himself on record as distinctly contradicting in a matter of fact the statement of my hon. friend from North Grey, and no other member on the opposite side has yet contradicted my hon. friend from Beauce or supported my hon. friend from North Grey.

Mr. MIDDLEBRO: I was referring particularly to the speech of Mr. Winston Churchill on the 17th of March, and I said that that speech, which was delivered in the House of Commons, was delivered before the German Navy Bill was brought down. It is true that the speech which my hon. friend was referring to was delivered afterwards.

Mr. CLARK: I leave that point to the bar of public opinion. 'Hansard' will put us right in that little matter; but it is certainly a distinct difference upon a question of fact, which should demand the attention of other gentlemen who have not given a reason for the faith that is in them.

I come now to some difference of opinion between my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Macdonald) and my right hon. friend the Prime Minister. There was a very striking incident to show how our case is unanswerable in argument; at least it is unanswered. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister claimed, or we understood him to claim, that the right of a Canadian minister to sit on the Imperial Defence Committee was obtained by him last summer at the time he had consultations with the Admiralty. My hon. friend from Pictou comes along—and if ever a case was gone into carefully, he went carefully into that one—and he showed that the promise of a seat on the Imperial Defence Committee was made to the right hon. the leader of the Opposition a year before. Before a Government closures its supporters and then attempts to close down comment on the opposite side of the House, I contend that the Prime Minister or some member of the Government should clear up that difference of opinion on a question of fact. My hon. friend from Pictou elaborated in a most perfect manner the argument from Australia. This argument once appealed to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, because he told us in so many words in this House in my hearing. I have read the words over and over again. This may be new to those who detect disloyalty in our opposition to contribution. The Prime Minister told the House in my hearing that contribution had been tried in Australia and had failed. Sir, the Australian case had considerable weight with the present Prime Minister at one period of his gyrations and travellings-round on this great question. If the argument from Australia was a good argument three years ago, it is our rights as an opposition to know from the other side why it is a bad argument now. The onus of explanation is absolutely upon the Government and their supporters.

Now, this debate has been useful because, it has proved how absolutely necessary debate is for the purpose of elucidating what the policy of the Government really is; and

I contend that no man can positively say at this moment what the policy of the Government is from the speeches which have been made on the other side of the House. And I am bound to say that this is a use of this debate which will become more apparent. There is room for a great deal more elucidation. There has not been much accomplished in the way of clearing up what their policy is. There is one line of debate which will never elucidate anything. We cannot forget the fact that we had intermittent and prolonged silences on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. Silence will not elucidate anything. I do not complain, I was not even surprised at it as it emerged from time to time. When a responsible party in this country proposes to represent Canada by three empty ships in the fighting line of a navy which never knew defeat, one need not be surprised at their running away from the defence of their own proposition. But it is difficult to say whether my hon. friends are most obscure in their silence or when they speak. When they are silent, they are silent, and you cannot get any further with it.

> Theirs not to reason why;
> Theirs but to vote and sigh,—
> Silent one hundred!

But I do say, their obscurity becomes almost greater in their speech, because when they depart from silence, it is scarcely an exaggeration to say that each contradicts the man who preceded him. I want just to illustrate the truthfulness of that statement. The policy was presented by my right hon. friend the Prime Minister—and I must say I always admire his courage—and I think he wanted to make clear what was the policy of his Government at the time he was speaking. I think he wanted to make it clear, and he conveyed to my mind the idea that he proclaimed in unmistakable terms a new departure in the way of centralization. That is how I understood him when I spoke on the resolution on this subject. I will deal with the merits of the policy in a short argument; I only mention it now to contrast the speech with that of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who followed the Prime Minister immediately on that side. The Prime Minister said: We are going to centralize this thing, we are going to co-operate with headquarters. The hon. member for Calgary said the same thing—at least in part of his speech he said the same thing, in another part he said differently. I will show that too. The Prime Minister said: We are going to have a great scheme of centralization, of Imperial federation. Now, I am trying to get at what the policy of the Government is; the country have the right to know it before their representatives pass any portion of it in Parliament. It is their bounden duty to find it out if they can. My right hon. friend the Prime Minister—I think under the too great influence of my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier)—proclaims himself for the contribution policy—this one now, and others to follow. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, with the smell of the sea breeze in one nostril and the smell of an oil-tank in the other, says: That speech will not do; it is all right for Quebec, but it will not do for New Brunswick. And so he says: We are working out a permanent policy; we are working it out stealthily, subtly, in the dark, but still we are working out a permanent policy, and one day the sons of New Brunswick will come into their rightful heritage upon the ocean. That gladdens again the heart of a free trader, and must have gladdened the hearts of the people of New Brunswick—although, I must say, I have seldom heard anyone become so energetic and eloquent upon a prospect of a remote posterity. And my hon. friend the Postmaster General cocks his ears and says: That will never do; he is giving the whole thing away. That hon. gentleman restores the Quebec balance, so to speak. He says: Build a navy? What? Pay men fifty cents a day? Never. You can get them for twenty-eight cents in England. Give them fifty cents? Not for L'Evenement. I indicated in no unkind way when I spoke before upon this question that my hon. friend the Postmaster General had not the makings of a first-class jingo in him when he spoke on that subject. Now I gather he is coming along. My hon. friend from Calgary has got him in tow,—and says he has got him to Damascus now. My recollection of the Damascus incident is that the apostle to the gentiles went there blind, and he was blind for three days. He must have met a very skilful physician, possibly from a place like Calgary. If my hon. friend the Postmaster General is really anxious to become a thorough paced jingo, I would advise him that he could not find a better physician than the hon. member for Calgary for in that gentleman you have the full-blown and thorough article. Now, the Postmaster General has no use for the smell of either the sea breeze or the oil tank. He prefers the musty smell of a portfolio. He will be able to go to Quebec and tell them: Thirty-five millions and you are done with it. The hon. member for Calgary will say, too: You are never done with it—a glorious vision, don't you know, expanding and expanding. Then in the elucidation of this policy, when my hon. friends opposite were ill-advised enough not to keep the policy of silence, there jumps into the arena the master-artist, my hon. friend who probably is now suffering from sea-sickness—I hope he will soon recover—the Minister of Trade and Commerce. He says: That is all wrong. Talk about the Postmaster General and Quebec; there is Ontario to look to. He says: You must distinguish sharply between a temporary policy of contribution and a permanent policy. And he, like the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, was working at it. Now, there is a navy for you. There is a Government for you, four of them. Two of them say contribution and be done with it, and the others say: Not at all; we are working on a permanent policy. Then the hon. member for South York (Mr. Maclean) comes along and puts things right. He says both policies are the same; this is a permanent policy. That is the way they are elucidating the policy which is to guide a great intelligent country—with the exception of a few farmers who have not very much commonsense. Like leaders, like rank and file. The hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Edwards) says that a Canadian navy would be a separatist navy. It would not have been that in 1909, when the Tory leaders were supporting it; it is only when Sir Wilfrid Laurier supports a Canadian navy that it becomes separatist. There is nothing wrong with the thing constitutionally; the baby is all right, but it is the wrong nurse. Then the hon. member for North Ontario (Mr. Sharpe) says that this contribution is all right to go on with, but he is a good Canadian, he is hard to muzzle, one of the worst of them to muzzle over there; he does not wear his muzzle with either grace or freedom, and he says: A contribution is all right but we have to have a Canadian navy by and by. So we have the position of the hon. member for Frontenac turning to the hon. member for North Ontario and saying: You are a separatist. As long as there is a quarrel like that between members on the Government side we need not trouble much about the attacks made by the hon. member for Calgary. It would be well to heal the troubles on their own side of the House and let the country know what they are really after.

The Prime Minister has spoken briefly once since his first utterance. I thought that on the second reading he would expand that brief speech. He went one better than any other member of the Government or of the rank and file because he expounded both policies in that one short speech. I think the hon. member for Calgary came near the same thing. He said to-night: It is not a case of continued contribution; he says that we are wrong on this side in saying that there is to be no Canadian navy. That was in the early part of his speech of over three hours, and at the end of a speech of that length a man is apt to forget what he said at the beginning. So that my hon. friend has made it clear that in time we are to have a Canadian navy and we are very wicked on this side for suggesting anything to the contrary. He tells us at the end we are to have one great Imperial navy. Where does the Canadian navy go if we have one great Imperial navy? My hon. friend said that if we were perfectly frank we would agree with him, and if he were frank he would perhaps agree with himself at some points. And if he is frank he will admit that his ideal is one of centralization, a great navy at the heart of the Empire, wherever that heart is for the time being. Under a scheme of that kind, as great minds have been working on the question of Imperial federation for a century and a quarter without getting any further forward, a Canadian navy seems to be postponed into an indefinite future.

In a speech the other night my right hon. friend the Prime Minister seemed to be a little touchy on being reminded that he spoke of twenty-five or fifty years as being necessary to build an organization. We have the information that what he did say was that we would not be able to get anything efficient in twenty-five or fifty years. I pass on to his expression of the other evening. He was afflicted with the same fears as my hon. friend from Calgary and he said that to build ships such as the leader of the Opposition is proposing would postpone an effect to an almost indefinite period. Does any hon. gentleman who is frank and honest with himself and with his policy see any prospect of a Canadian navy in talk of that kind? Postpone to an almost indefinite period? At the end of that very same speech, which was very brief, what was the other position he took? He departed from the statement he had made in his previous speech that this was to be a gift and adopted the argument and the language put into his mouth by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Northrup) and he said: 'This is a loan, we retain the ownership.' I put to myself a question at the time, 'When does a gift become a loan?' The only answer that I could see to such a conundrum would be, 'If Great Britain lent us money and we gave her the ships, the gift would be a loan.' But my point is that if we own these ships and if the ownership of them is mentioned with any serious purpose it must be to lead us to think that there is a possibility of our bringing them back. Shall we then bring them back before we have men to put on them? I do not see how. The Prime Minister agrees with the Postmaster General that we cannot get the men in Canada for an indefinite period.

Mr. PELLETIER: That is not what I said. I have already contradicted that statement two or three times.

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friend was more on the prices of them, I admit.

Mr. PELLETIER: I do not think that even the hon. member for Red Deer has the right to put things in the mouths of his fellow-members. I stated that I did not say that. Whether my hon. friend considers that fair or not I do not know. It depends on the way you look at things.

Mr. CLARK: If I said any word that in any way wounded my hon. friend I am sorry.

Mr. PELLETIER: That is not the point.

Mr. CLARK: I am desirous always in this House of presenting just such argument as I am able to and of presenting them in a fair way and with the most honest desire to arrive at what is best for Canada and the Empire, and truth and justice the world over, and I express regret to my hon. friend if I have hurt him in any way.

Mr. PELLETIER: I do not think that he has hurt me but he puts words in my mouth that I never uttered.

Mr. CLARK: I was dealing with an apparent contradiction which appeared to be evident to me in the statement of the Prime Minister. My right hon. friend said that if we were to wait until we could build ships and man them it would postpone our doing anything to an indefinite period. He said: 'You cannot have a Canadian navy.' His answer, so far as our lifetime is concerned, does not differ from his previous statement as to twenty-five or fifty years, and I submit that a period of twenty-five or fifty years means practically never. If I say to the right hon. the Prime Minister: 'When are you going to have a Canadian navy?' the answer, so far as he is concerned, is: 'Never.' And when I come along with another question founded upon the latter part of the same speech and say to him: 'When are you going to bring the ships back from Britain, if he is an honest controversialist, and I believe he is, he is bound to give the same answer to that question and answer: 'Never.'

Another gain from the continuance of this debate is that, except in a very few cases on the other side, commonsense has prevailed over scare-mongers, and the belief in an emergency has been frankly given up. The hon. member for Calgary (Mr. Bennett) is the exception. He has changed the name. They all have their own name for this thing. My hon. friend from Calgary calls it a 'menace' and even he is not very sure about it because when he was speaking to-night he said: 'Imagine a great menace.' Well, that is the only way you can find one. I owe something in the way of a logical nature to a good Scotch mother, and I have so much of that logical nature that I hesitate to found the serious policy of a great nation upon the imaginative efforts of the hon. member for Calgary. My hon. friend from Hastings (Mr. Northrup) said 'there is a something.' It is not a menace with him, or an emergency, or urgency, or even need, as it is with my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My hon. friend from Hastings says 'there is a something, call it what you like,' something ethereal, atmospheric; something in the spiritual region. It must be, because my hon. friend from Calgary says you can only get it by using your imagination.

Now, I do not know whether it is worth while discussing further such an intangible need as this, but it is necessary, as I have said, that we should find out what the policy of this party is and where we stand. I want to glance for one moment more at this emergency. If we are to change to the word 'need,' following what would usually be the very good leadership of the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce, let us see how he proves the need. Why, he did not even try to prove it. He based it entirely upon the secret information given to the Prime Minister, following in that matter the example of my hon. friend the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier). Well, I have not been trained in a school of thought which leads me to attach too much importance to information which cannot be laid on the table of this House for its guidance. We used to have a song in England when I was a boy:

> Hark, hark, hark,
> Here comes the bogey man.

In this case there are two bogey men: my hon. friend the Postmaster General and the hon. the Minister of Trade and Commerce. O for an artist's pencil to put them both on a piece of canvas! They say, 'we know whereof we speak,' it is this horrible secret information that you have to accept in the last analysis. Do they really think it worth while to mention a thing of that kind in this House? Why it only prompts curiosity. Personally I am not very much afraid of anything they could tell us; judging from what we know, there is nothing very formidable in the secret information. I would not be afraid to tackle it, if it is as harmless as the memorandum upon which they have founded their whole case. For the more that memorandum is studied, the more it becomes apparent that it was dragged out of the British Government. When I spoke previously, I referred to the last section of the memorandum, which is the section upon which the Prime Minister based his argument most strongly, and I want to refer to that again in this connection. There were words in the last paragraph of which I did not call attention at the time. They were: 'after a prolonged consideration of all the circumstances.' The Admiralty say that it took prolonged consideration to write this precious memorandum, to get rid of it. This is how they did get rid of it, 'after a prolonged consideration of all the circumstances; when we were asked by the Prime Minister of Canada in what form Canada could give immediate aid, we said, give it in the form of these ships.' What were the circumstances which required that prolonged consideration? There could only be one set of circumstances. My right hon. friend and his colleagues must have told the Government of England that Canadians would not make sailors. They must have told them that; these must be the circumstances. They are the only circumstances which they have mentioned in the debate here as proving the difficulty of building a Canadian navy. No wonder that a British Government which represents what I believe, at any rate, to be the pluckiest nation that was ever upon the face of the earth, gave prolonged and anxious consideration to such an account of her sons, coming to her from the Government of one of the daughter nations of the Empire. It is a pitiable story, if that was needed to create a situation. It traduced Canada. We on this side do not believe it for a moment, and if we change the Government, as we propose to do at the first time of asking, we will give the Admiralty a different story. That is the need, and that is the kind of information they have that is not secret. I am not frightened of the secret information.

Now, just a word or two upon the need. My hon. friend from Calgary has a profound contempt for figures; he did not mention one in his whole three hours oration, and he did not quote an authority. Well he did not need that, because he is sufficient. Now, on this question of the need of the Empire, he said that Germany in 1906—I think that was the year mentioned by my hon. friend—was almost on an equality with Britain on the sea in dreadnoughts, and this was where he began to be eloquent, and almost awesome in his description of the menace. Now, I happened to be in Britain in 1906, and I remember Mr. Lloyd George speaking in the town of Grimsby on the east coast at the very time to which my hon. friend referred in his speech. Mr. Lloyd George was then a member of the present Ministry, and as I have said he was speaking in the town of Grimsby on the east coast of England right opposite Germany, on the North sea. I remember reading the speech as if it were yesterday, to the effect that we were so perfectly safe, that if the German navy was to make its appearance in the North sea or German ocean against a British fleet, it would be at the bottom of the ocean so quickly that it would not know what had struck it. So he was not feeling the menace very badly, and he is nearer the scene of action than my hon. friend. Distance lends enchantment to the view, so to speak, in the case of my hon. friend. I repeat that Mr. Lloyd George used that very language at the time when my hon. friend says Germany was rapidly approaching an equality with Britain in dreadnoughts.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what I said. I am sure the hon. gentleman would not deliberately mis-state what I said. What I said was that in 1906 England made obsolete a number of ships, and commenced to build dreadnoughts, and Germany was then on an equality in regard to these

Mr. CLARK: My hon. friend has elaborated his statement. I am replying to a speech just delivered, and before I can read 'Hansard' I take notes as carefully as I can of what anyone to whom I have to reply says, and I do not want to misrepresent my hon. friend. I thought that was what he said, but I am very glad that it was not as bad as it appeared.

I just want to give three figures or so regarding the relative strength of Germany and Britain at the present moment, and then I shall pass on to a few more remarks and conclude what I have to say. I think I shall compress all I have to say in the main debate on this question in two speeches in less time than my hon. friend from Calgary consumed in his speech. I have a copy of the British 'Hansard,' containing a question put by Lord Beresford a few weeks ago to Mr. Winston Churchill on this question of dreadnoughts, and the strength of the two fleets, and I just want to quote his figures. They have been quoted before, but they put in the very smallest shape the evidence that there is no need, and no emergency at the present time.

In 1915 the dreadnoughts of Britain will be thirty-nine as compared with thirty-three of the triple alliance.

I should like to tell my anxious friend opposite that in my reading of the sea fights in which Great Britain has been engaged, she has very often tackled ships superior to her in numbers and generally with pretty good results. As a man born in Great Britain, and believing as much in Britain and in the Empire as my hon. friend from Calgary ever can do, I want to tell him that if Britain had any more ships than she ought to have in proportion to the total, I would not care to see her go into a fight because it would be no credit to her to lick the enemy. In pre-dreadnoughts, battleships and armoured cruisers she has three to one in fighting force in her favour. That does not indicate any possibility of Germany or any other nation getting Great Britain in the immediate future. In rapidity of building she has an immense superiority over Germany. I know so much of these scares, I have read so much of them, that I feel we can get along when I know that this is the condition of the respective fleets of Europe. What is the need if it is not ships? Is it men? I do not think it is men. The best information that I can gather is that there are two British-trained tars to every single German conscript marine. What kind of a Britisher is he that wants a greater superiority than that? I want to assure the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier), in case he has any dubiety on this subject, that two Britishers will have a fair chance with one of any other race. It was Dean Swift who said that it was recognized as true that ten armed Englishmen were a good match for one Irishman in his shirt. I think that two well-armed Britishers are usually fit for one member of the distinguished race from which my hon. friend from North Waterloo (Mr. Weichel) has sprung.

Then, about the money. I have been very much criticised by hon. gentlemen opposite for what I said about Britain not needing our money. But, after all, it is a very serious consideration when we are giving away $35,000,000, especially when it is for a useless purpose and I contend that my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B. (Mr. Carvell), the other night proved that this money, if given at the present juncture, will be used for a worse than useless purpose. May I reiterate his argument upon that point? There is not an arrangement between Germany and England, but there is a distinct basis of arrangement. Mr. Churchill has said that he would be content with a sixteen to ten ratio in dreadnoughts. The head of the German Admiralty says: Very well, so will we. Mr. Churchill has also said that the Canadian dreadnoughts will be counted in addition to the British fleet itself. If we give these dreadnoughts—and I want Canada and every Canadian to be seized of the full responsibility of what we are doing—we not only proceed to relieve the burden of the British taxpayer by increasing it, which seems to be a very unwise proceeding, but we also throw a distinct provocative element into the European situation and tempt Germany to go on with this mad war of armaments. I do not think that our financial condition justifies us in giving this money away unless a better case is made out. I should like my hon. friend from Calgary to pay attention to the representations that are coming from the West as to the condition the people are in that part of the country. I would like every hon. gentlemen opposite to pay careful attention to the words that fell from such an excellent business man as the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Lalor) the other night when he pointed out, in words almost of panic, that the money situation in Canada is such that it demands the serious attention, not only of every member of this House, but of every person in Canada. The money question is not unimportant. I would like to refer to the words that fell from the lips of the hon. member for Calgary about what we owe to Great Britain. He said, or hinted—I do not want to misrepresent him—that somebody on this side of the House had declared that we did not owe anything to Great Britain. I think it is perfectly easy to exaggerate what Canada owes to Great Britain, especially in financial matters; but when my hon. friend says that no nation ever owed as much as we do to Great Britain for the money spent upon the development of the country, he puts the case in an exaggerated way. Britain has fifty per cent more money invested in the United States than in Canada. Does the United Kingdom invest money in the United States with a platonic or a utilitarian object? She invests money in the United States because she gets good interest for it, and she invests her money in Canada for the same reason. Money has no sentiment. The only thing that people who lend money know about is getting interest for it. The obligation between Canada and Great Britain is a mutual obligation. We offer her a field for investment, it is true, and she puts money in here in the way of investment. I am not going down on my knees even to my own father if for any money that he lends me he takes a whacking good interest. I think it is perfectly easy to exaggerate the obligation. The obligations are mutual. It is a business matter, the matter of money lending—pure business. I cannot understand why any party, with these facts before them, still persist in the feverish anxiety to give an emergency contribution when the last vestige of a pretended argument in favour of the existence of an emergency has disappeared, when the hon. member for Calgary has to get the menace out of his own imagination and when the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. Northrup) has to get it by gasping wildly about the atmosphere. They should give up talking about this emergency.

The possible basis of understanding between Germany and Britain seems to offer a splendid opportunity for the Government to take time to look the matter well over and, for that matter, the Opposition too. We have been told that we on this side waited a long time. The Government waited quite a long time too. I do not blame them for that. I think there is a splendid chance of looking around and seeing whether there could not be another memorandum got out of the Admiralty of a little different description. Now that Germany and England are about falling upon one another's necks, do not go and send $35,000,000 to keep them apart. When we find that in Europe they are going about arm in arm and exchanging resolutions to restore peace and harmony, we should keep our $35,000,000 to see if the happy marriage is consummated without our aid. We are bound to keep up this debate until we know something about what is really the policy upon the Government side. In the last analysis we must have a definition of the policy from the right hon. the Prime Minister. I have said things in his absence which I will repeat in his presence; I said that I believed that in his first speech on this subject he honestly endeavoured to give us his own mind, to tell us that the time had come, that we had arrived at the point in the evolution of our relations with the Empire, when we should reverse our policy and return to a policy of centralization. We know what his policy was in regard to a contribution and I venture to read for the information of the hon. member for Calgary some very clear language which the hon. the Prime Minister used and which was quoted by my hon. friend from Carleton, N.B., the other evening. Referring to this question of a contribution, my right hon. friend said:

> In the first place, I do not believe it would endure. In the second place, it would be a source of friction, it would become a bone of partisan contention, it would be subject to criticism as to character and amount of the contribution in both parliaments, it would not be permanent or continuous, it would conduce if anything would conduce to severing the present connection between parliament and the Empire.

My hon. friend from Calgary gave the Prime Minister the testimonial that when he was speaking in 1909 he had prescience. Well, we on this side have caught up with that prescience, because we are saying what the Prime Minister was saying in that paragraph. Why should not my hon. friend the Prime Minister and his henchman from Calgary give us credit for possessing this valuable prescience now? I extend to my hon. friend a respectful invitation to join us in the possession of prescience because we are saying now what the right hon. the Prime Minister said when the hon. member for Calgary described him as having prescience. I have quoted that language of the Prime Minister, not because I want to base an argument upon it, but because it embodies in my mind the height of political wisdom on this question. I appeal to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister; he is more reasonable than my hon. friend from Calgary; he does not give way to his imagination so much; I feel there is much more chance of making a convert of him than there is of the hon. member from Calgary. My hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) would want us to feel that he is open-minded. I doubt it; I am afraid he is a little partisan. I quote those remarks of the Prime Minister because I think in them are to be found the essence of political wisdom. And surely that last sentence which refers to friction shews its own wisdom by what is happening as a result of this contribution. Is there no food there for thought in the fact that the delegates representing 2,000,000 trade unionists in Great Britain have met and said they do not want this thing, one of the grounds being the natural and commonsense ground that it increases the burden of the British taxpayer instead of relieving him? Is not that a ground off friction? My right hon. friend had prescience indeed when he uttered these words and prophesied that friction which has come now before our eyes. And, Mr. Speaker, at the very moment when these workingmen in England say they do not want it the grain growers of the West say they do not want to give it. Now, there is a nice frame of mind on which to build up a harmonious Empire, isn't it? The thing certainly has become a subject of criticism in the parliaments of Canada and England; we have criticised it here to the Prime Minister's content, and if the papers tell the truth they are going to try to persuade the British Government that it is a wrong line of policy, so that my right hon. friend spoke truly when he said it would lead to friction. I want to emphasize this point on my hon. friend from Calgary, because of what I must describe without any desire to be offensive as so much unprofitable talk in the speech he gave us to-night.

I have referred to the folly of my hon. friend (Mr. Bennett) basing an argument on this question on what my hon. friend from Rouville (Mr. Lemieux) said when he was little more than twenty years old, when, as a matter of fact, hon. gentlemen opposite do not pay much attention to what the hon. member for Rouville says now that he is over forty. What am I to say also of my hon. friend from Calgary taking up all this talk about disloyalty? If I wanted to follow that line I would tell my hon. friend, not that he is disloyal, but that his policy is. So far as I can understand the lessons of history and so far as I can understand human nature, it is not our policy but his which makes for the break up of the British Empire. I have to appeal to my hon. friend to give us credit for sincere conviction upon this point, with the example to be found below the international boundary line in the great Republic who broke off from us because of an attempt at this very centralization. Are we to be told, forsooth, when we protest against centralization, that we are disloyal and are going to break up the British Empire? I say it is these gentlemen who are breaking up the British Empire, and history and human nature proves it.

However, my right hon. friend the Prime Minister changed his mind. He told us he did not like these contributions because they would not be continuous and permanent, and I presume he likes his policy now because they are going to be continuous and permanent. Am I not justified in drawing that conclusion? It certainly would be good logic; if he did not like contributions because they would not be continuous and permanent, then I must draw the conclusion that he is only reconciled to them because they are going to be continuous and permanent. Parliament has the right to know this; the most important thing for Canada to know at the present time is the exact mind of the Prime Minister as to his policy. We are bound to take his own word on that, and he has given us a perfect guide. He has told us in his first utterance on this question that he believed we had arrived at a point in the evolution of nations when we must change. I wish I had time to enter into the question of evolution as a scientific study. I am not able to cope with the Prime Minister on a question of constitutional law, but on a scientific matter like evolution I might break a lance with him with some chance of success. There are certain facts about the evolution of Canada —if my hon. friend will have me enter into scientific study—and they are as plain as the nose on a man's face to see; they are as plain and palpable as history can make them.

I said I was interested in a speech delivered by my right hon. friend in Lindsay twelve years ago on this very question of the evolution of Canada as a nation. I pass over the statement of my hon. friend from Calgary that we are not a nation—and I do not think the Prime Minister would endorse that statement of his supporter. I do not think my hon. friend from Calgary would go before any public meeting in Canada very successfully with that statement for a text. Just think of it; just think of him going to Quebec and saying that Canada is not a nation; fancy him telling the people of Quebec: This country, which has been made sacred by the blood of our fathers and your grandfathers and your great grandfathers, is not a nation. Fancy his going on the other hand to the descendants of Wolfe and saying, we are not a nation. Why, Sir, it was determination to be a nation that led to all the fights in this country. We are not a nation, says the hon. member for Calgary. What constitutes a nation? It would be just as sensible to argue that Britain is not a nation. As I understand it, the British Empire is a commonwealth of free states, and states that are loyal because they are free. No inferiority for Canada any more than there is inferiority for Britain. Free states, a commonwealth of them; do not let us hear any more about Canada not being a nation. If my hon. friend preaches that doctrine continuously in Canada, I do not know that he would ever come back here. I am perfectly sure he would not if we had a few more of these meetings where they send people to down the speakers with the National Anthem and Rule Britannia.

What are the facts of the evolution of Canada? That is a very important matter for the Prime Minister, because if we can find out which side is on the side of evolution on this question, we can tell the side that is going to win. To fight evolution is to fight fate, and I am sure the Prime Minister would not be foolish enough for that. I am perfectly certain that if the Minister of Public Works could find out what side fate is on, you would see how quick he could get over there. The evolution of Canada has been marked by two features, one material and the other political. The material development of Canada has been marked by these features: people of other countries come to our shores and take hold of and cultivate raw lands which previously have been inhabited only by the savage and the buffalo; immigration has brought the people to Canada mostly within the last fifteen years—in spite of the disloyalty of Sir Wilfrid Laurier; and when the immigrants come they have to have a policy of land settlement to deal with; and my hon. friend from Edmonton (Mr. Oliver), with all his disloyalty, introduced a good policy of land settlement, by which he said no land should go to the corporation or the railway companies in the West, but all of it to the settlers. When the settlers were brought into the country and settled upon the land, they produced. These are the steps in the material development of Canada. Production necessitates a system of transportation. The first step in that system of transportation, the most magnificent step that has been seen not only in Canada but in the world, has been that of the great corporation of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I am very much surprised that a party, which is always claiming that as one of its great achievements—and it is a great achievement carrying people on land and sea—have the pusillanimous frame of mind into which those hon. gentlemen have brought themselves in regard to Canada's ability to build ships. Immigration, land settlement, production, transportation—where to? To the sea shore, to leave it? No. To foreign commerce; that is your next step. In a few words those are the steps of Canada's material evolution. I go to my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce for the next step, because he says that with a foreign commerce you must have steel-built ships. That is where the trade question touches the navy question. The two questions are one. My right hon. friend is right when he appeals to evolution, but he misreads his science; he has not studied the question carefully enough. Foreign commerce comes next; and the next step is sea power, as my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce in his speech of March, 1909, put it. Commerce and the protection of commerce have gone together in the whole history of the world, and they must go together here. That was one of the reasons the Minister of Trade and Commerce gave for being opposed to contribution and in favour of Canada's defending her own shores. That is a complete chain, which I offer in all honesty and sincerity to my right hon. friend, of the steps of Canada's material evolution.

What accompanies that? Pari passu, with that you have had the political evolution of Canada; and the outstanding characteristic of the political evolution of Canada has been that at each successive stage you have extended the area in which Canada is mistress of her own affairs. I need not trace the steps; nearly every member of this House knows them better than I do, because you have been trained in Canadian history, having grown up here. There was the time when you did not have your trading rights; you got them and you were still loyal. There was a time when Canada had not the right to collect her own customs; that was done by an officer appointed by the Imperial Government; you got that right and were still loyal. There was a time when you ceased to have your post offices regulated by an officer of the Imperial Government and you remained loyal. There was a time when you ceased to have your judges appointed by the Crown and you remained loyal. There was a time when you claimed treaty making powers and you still remained loyal. During all this time you were developing your nationhood; and yet my hon. friend from Calgary has not discovered that he lives in a nation. Still later you claimed the right to look after more of your coast defences. This brings us very, very close to the question which we are debating. You took over Esquimalt and Halifax and you remained a nation. What is the next step? The next step is into the ocean. You have taken all the others; but my right hon. friend and his supporters come along and say: Oh, it is all right, Canadians are good for self government on land, but, in spite of the smell of the sea breeze in the nostrils of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, you must not try any self government on sea. Is that the evolution in which my right hon. friend believes? Does his scheme of evolution break down at that point? It breaks down if he turns back on his own statement of three years ago. The more he thinks about scientific evolution, the more probably he will see that we have arrived at a period in our history when we must walk warily. The building of a navy is the next logical step in the development of the country, just as reciprocity was the next step in getting more markets for the Canadian people. I do not believe that you can build an Empire on false economic laws. You cannot, do what you will, confine the trade of the Empire within the nations constituting that Empire. My right hon. friend has taken a wrong step. I feel that I can speak very freely to him on personal grounds. I think politically he has gone wrong. History and evolution and nature, to which my right hon. friend appeals, are all against him. In evolution, it is true that we have limitations to our beliefs. We do not all believe in organic evolution to the extent of believing that a monkey turned into a man; but if you undertake what is known to scientists as a step of retrograde metamorphosis, you may go some distance in turning men into monkeys. For a little while, I was afraid that the process had begun when so many men on the opposite side lost their power of articulate speech. My fears on that point have been very much relieved by the evident retention of his powers by the hon. member for Calgary. I do not know that I need do more than leave that argument on evolution at this juncture.

I wish to keep my twice-made promise that I will not talk as long as the hon. member for Calgary. I feel that I have said as much as anyone could at this stage of the measure. I think myself that the more we look into it, the more we shall see that the feature of it that will absolutely fail in the end to commend it to Canada, is the feature which sends those vessels over the sea without any of our men on them. I feel confident of that. I have not lived twelve years in this country without realizing what Canadian spirit really is. I cannot detect any difference between Canadian spirit and English spirit. People say to me: You believe in trading freely with all countries, and you a Britisher? You do not believe in sending contributions to Britain, and you a Britisher? I believe in trading freely and I believe in defending my own shores, because I am a Britisher. I believe the opposite of what the teaching of hon. gentlemen opposite is on this point because I was brought up under the British flag, which, if it taught me anything, taught me to believe in courage and freedom. There is no courage in sending empty boats to Britain; there is no freedom in saying that you cannot trade with the United States without being annexed. They can annex the steers, as I have said, but not me. I hold these views because I am a Britisher. The hon. member for Calgary quotes Browning. Browning said:

How can I help England?

The hon. member for Calgary says: By a first instalment of three and a half cents on the dollar. Browning would never have given that answer to the question. He would say: I would help England with all I have got and with myself at the finish. You can do that if you begin to build a navy, however small, because you will be following your father's example; and that is always good if he is a good father. I want to call up any portion that is mine of a virile Canadian manhood to protest once more against this contribution and to protest particularly against that feature of it. My hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce held that view when he said: If we have anything of the strong joys of conquest, contribution would have no attraction for us. I wonder where the strong joy of conquest comes in in our sending empty ships and saying: Canada cannot man these ships, but she will do so by substitutes. Is there any strong joy of conquest about that? It is something very like turning tail in the presence of the enemy. Not for Canadians, under this scheme, is there any of Kipling's exaltation when he exclaims:

If blood be the price of Admiralty,
Lord God, we ha' paid in full!

Canadians cannot say that under this scheme; under it they never will pay. I do not traduce Canadians. I did not supply the circumstances upon which the Admiralty memorandum is based. I have never yet found any Canadians who could not and would not join in these words of Kipling that I have just quoted. In England they cheered and sang Rule Britannia over Kipling—there was something to sing about in that. There is one point at which the Nationalists and the Imperialists touch elbows—they both have a wholesome disinclination to be disembowelled. I was much touched with the evident sincerity of the words of the Prime Minister the other day, when, in his own simple way, he dwelt upon the merits and virtues of the heroic Captain Scott whose death we all lament. But, under this scheme, Scott is the full blood brother of Britishers, but only the distant relative of Canadians. Build your own navy! I believe in the British lion, and I believe in the lion breeding cubs; I do not believe in the role of the jackal for Canada. They are breeding full-blooded cubs in Australia; and we will breed them here, too. There is nothing but defeat awaits this scheme. Take it to the Canadian people, and begin by telling them: You are not a nation; and end by telling them: You cannot fight; and they will say: Take it away; we do not own it; it does not belong to us; it is a corpse; by this time it stinketh!

Mr. H. BOULAY (Rimouski): (Translation.) At the outset I had made up my mind to abstain from taking any part in this debate over the proposal of a contribution. The same statements have been so often made and reiterated by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, that the matter is now thoroughly threshed out, and there is nothing new that could be added. However, our friends who sit on the other side of the House have expressed a strong desire to be informed of what a certain group termed Nationalists think of this Bill. I took it that under that designation reference was made to the seven Conservatives who thought fit to differ from the Government by voting against the resolution introduced in the first instance. As I am not in the habit of concealing what is in my mind, and especially to my opponents, I think it is incumbent on me to meet their wishes, aware as I am that they will not fare any the better for it, nor I any worse.

If by Nationalists it is meant to designate those Conservatives who were returned in their various constituencies after protesting against the provisions of the Laurier Navy Bill and the proposal to contribute to the British exchequer, I am a Nationalist, Mr. Speaker. If by Nationalists it is meant to designate those patriots who respect our institutions and the laws of the country, who courageously vindicate our right to conserve our tongue, our customs and our religious beliefs, again I say, Mr. Speaker, I am a Nationalist, satisfied that I am only fulfilling my duty as a free citizen such as every man living under the protection of the British flag should prove himself to be.

The debate which is now going on in this House is without doubt the most important which has taken place since the conclusion of that great Federal compact. If I rightly grasp its meaning, the proposal now before the House will cause Canadian politics to assume an entirely new aspect. Accordingly, the whole Dominion of Canada has its eyes fixed on those who are now wielding the destinies of the nation.

The hour is critical, Mr. Speaker, and the action we are about to take is of interest not only to politicians, but to those, and more particularly to those, who are called upon from day to day to pay the tax-bill, to carry the burden of imposts which even now are heavy in the form of cash, and may later on be supplemented by contributions of a still more painful nature in the shape of human lives. I mean the labouring classes, that farming community who toil and strain every nerve towards supporting not only their families, but all other classes which are dependent on them. Casting a glance over hon. gentlemen who make up the House of Commons, I find only very few representatives of the labouring class. Put to one side those who belong to this or that liberal profession in this House, and it will be found that those who represent the business and industrial classes are very few indeed.

One of the speeches reported in 'Hansard' as delivered on March 29, 1909, for or against the motion of the hon. member for Toronto, strikes me as differing only slightly from those delivered in the province of Quebec by the most fiery of Nationalists. However, the man who spoke those words was one of the supporters of the then Government and, to my knowledge, was never repudiated by his party, nay, was recognized by them as their candidate in the last general election. I refer to the hon. member from the Yukon. I propose reading part of his utterances for the benefit of hon. gentlemen opposite, who may after that show less indignation at certain statements made by ourselves in the province of Quebec.

Here are some of the things which I find in a speech delivered by the hon. gentleman from the Yukon (Mr. Congdon) on March 29, 1909:

(Text.) There can be no doubt as to the loyalty of Canada and of every other dominion of Great Britain to the Empire, and the question resolves itself into this: What shall the various portions of the Empire do in order to put themselves in such a position as to be able, at the critical moment and at the proper time, to render the greatest assistance to the Mother Country. In Canada it is generally recognized that there is no military spirit dominant in the country and very little in favour of military establishments, unless such military and naval establishments as are absolutely essential for our welfare and the defence of the Empire. There are better investments we can make in behalf of the Empire and of Canada than expenditure upon navies or greater military organizations in the immediate present. If Canada desires to become a great nation, a nation that shall be a tower of strength to the Mother Country as well as a sure bulwark of defence to herself, I do not see what better policy she can pursue than that of husbanding her strength and resources and thus enabling herself to become a powerful factor in the British Empire. Were we at present to engage in a naval programme what would we require to do? It would be necessary to take the money of our people and go outside the boundaries of the Dominion to spend it. It seems to me that it would be better for the Government and Parliament of the Dominion to sanction such aid to our steel and iron industries in the East and West as will make it possible to us in a few years to build our own navy. You can never induce the people of Canada to make contributions for expenditure of that kind outside her own limits.

I venture to say that no greater danger could arise to the Empire than would follow if we agreed annually to contribute to the British authorities either a battleship or sufficient money to build one. That would create friction and controversy between the Mother Country and Canada; and any arrangement whereby the control of the money contributed by us would be under the authority of British statesmen and not shared in any way by Canada would lead to conflicts and difficulties between the Mother Country and the Dominion as would be a source of danger to the Empire I believe that the best policy for us to pursue is the one we are now following and from which I see no reason for departing. That is the policy of being ready, as the people of Canada are always ready, to furnish whatever they have that may be necessary for the defence of the Empire in times of need. But if we start at present into any vast naval or military outlay we shall so impede our growth that in the course of a very short time we will be of much less assistance to the Empire than if we permitted our country to advance and prosper as she is doing now. I do not think that there is at present anything so critical in British relations as to cause us to get excited. One of our greatest publicists has said that of all the nations in the world, there is none so governed by their humour as the English. He said that two hundred years ago, and it is not less true to-day, and it is pleasant and consoling to find that the Scotchmen who are to-day in the cabinet of Great Britain do not share the excitement of some of the music halls of London regarding the danger hovering over the Empire at present. I listened with some regret to the exordium of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Foster). I could not but think that if some heathen had been listening to that address he would have thought that the hon. gentleman was a great high priest of pessimism performing the funeral rites of Christianity.

(Translation.) Had Mr. Congdon heard the remarks made the other day by the hon. member for North Toronto, he certainly would have reiterated this statement:

(Text.) It may be that wars will come, it may be that we cannot prevent the recurrence of warfare, but the people of Canada are inclined to peace, and the efforts of our public men should be directed not to inflaming passions among nations, not to arousing hostility but to endeavour to bring about that time when war will cease and be looked upon as a vanity out of date, and battleships as a superannuated piece of folly.

To-day there is talk of danger of war between the two great nations of Germany and Great Britain—Great Britain the greatest contributor to the liberty of mankind in a political sense; Germany, the greatest contributor to the liberty of mankind in an intellectual and philosophical sense. These are the two most advanced nations of the world and why to-day is there any danger of hostilities between these nations? Is the fault entirely on the part of Germany? Is it not due to a large extent to the fact that each of these two nations is abusing the other, that their papers are full of abuse and ridicule, the English making fun of German awkwardness, and the German of English awkwardness, saying all sorts of witty and offensive things, instead of treating each other with courtesy and attempting to conduct themselves in such a way as to render impossible a war between the two nations? Richter said that Providence had given to the French the empire of the land, to the English the empire of the seas and to the Germans the empire—of the air. I do not think any one could expect that Germans would be satisfied with the empire of the air. It must be remembered that Germany is a vast and important and a great people, one of the greatest peoples of the world to-day and there is no instance in the hostory of the world of as great a nation as the German nation tying itself up within the narrow confines of an empire like Germany of to-day and not seeking and succeeding in obtaining some outlet for its population. Great Britain to-day has an outlet in all its vast empire for its surplus population, and I do not believe that anything could be better than that Germany should obtain some such outlet for hers. I believe the object in the creation of the Germany navy is to obtain an outlet of that kind, but I am satisfied that that aim could be best obtained by negotiations with other nations.

I do not think the people of Canada will cease to be patriotic but I am sure they will never become hysterical in their patriotism.

(Translation.) I am not aware that the man who spoke those words was ever termed a Nationalist; on the other hand, never were such statements uttered in the province of Quebec:

(Text.) I hope they will continue to keep erect above them in regard to this, as in regard to other matters, the banner of sound common sense, and in the discussion of this and every other question they will overlook homely self-interest, coupled with a due regard to and a due sense of what is reasonable and what is right. It seems to me you might as well have asked the old settler cutting down hardwood trees in Ontario in the days of tomahawk and scalping knife, to buy a uniform and enroll himself in a regiment of soldiers to protect those hardwood trees, as to expect Canada to give up the development of this country, its settlement and the working of its vast resources and to turn her energies to developing a great military and naval strength. If that is ever done, if that is immediately done in Canada, you will divert from Canada her greatest attraction for increased population.

I venture to assert that if Great Britain would adopt the policy of the old tribes, when migrations of natives began, of dividing up the population, and placing in each portion a number of the noble and ignoble, the rich and the poor and then drawing lots as to which should get out of the country, we would gladly take one of those portions, help to bring them to Canada, and help to build up here a further bulwark of strength for the British Empire. I believe that some such sane, sensible scheme as that would be a thousand times better for the British Empire, would make Canada a stronger support of the British Empire than spending money on dreadnoughts and on the military fuss and feathers some people would like to see in this country. The people of Canada will not submit to the drums and tramplings of militarism. They are going to defend themselves, but they are prepared to take some risk. Every man has to take the risk of loss of life or property; any one of us may be assassinated, but still the authorities will not allow us to carry guns for our own protection, and why cannot a large nation like the British or the Canadian take a certain risk? I would sooner be conquered by any people than go along as some people in London would have us, frightened to death that some foreign nation will conquer us. Even if Great Britain lose her navy, and be in such a position that the New Zealander could stand on London bridge and view the remains of this old Dreadnought grounded on the Thames, I do not believe that Canada would be in the slightest danger from any foreign aggression.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. CONGDON: (Text.) I hope that hon. gentlemen do not think I am prophesying any such disaster as that. If the hon. gentlemen in dissenting from my views thought that I was speaking of such a calamity as likely to occur Great Britain, they misunderstood me, I was merely quoting Lord Macaulay's expression regarding the New Zealander standing upon the ruins of London bridge. Any reader of history knows that such disasters have occurred to the greatest empires.

Well, it is not to my knowledge that in the province of Quebec any of those who are designated Nationalists ever spoke in that strain.

Mr. PAQUET: (Translation.) Is the hon. member aware that the gentleman whose 1909 speech he has just quoted from, voted in support of the war navy of the Laurier Government?

Mr. BOULAY: (Translation.) I have read his speech and the House no doubt has noticed that he came out strongly against such a policy. I for one cannot understand how people can speak one way and vote another way.

Mr. BELAND: (Translation.) It happens all the same.

Mr. BOULAY: (Translation.) In this instance it happened not to a supporter of this Government, but to one of your supporters.

As for me, brought up as I was in the midst of an agricultural community, taking my share of their sorrows and troubles, as well as of their joys, I am in duty bound to defend their interests and give expression to their views. I have acquired a knowledge of the farmer and labourer in his modest home; I am acquainted with all his peculiarities; I have led the same life, and I know how every nerve must be strained in order to provide for the needs of a Canadian household. Now, I have no hesitation in saying that this class of people in the province of Quebec—as I believe throughout the Dominion—is opposed to any measure involving armaments. While old-country people in Europe are overburdened with taxation, weakened morally and physically by conscription, and desert thousands at a time their native country with the object of securing some degree of liberty, we, for one hundred and sixty years, under the folds of the British flag, have developed, grown in numbers and extent of territory. That work of nation-building we have carried through without firing a gun, without building a single battleship, without breaking open the door of a single home for the purpose of securing recruits, without tearing away a single boy or man from his mother's or his wife's embrace. Why should we now do away with these peaceful and wholesome habits? Why should we deceive those immigrants who are coming to our shores by the thousand every year, leaving their native land to breathe in Canada the air of liberty?

What was considered a passing whim on March 29, 1909, has materialized into a full fledged policy, replete with the most serious consequences for our future.

We are entering the vortex of militarism with its inevitable complement of heavy expenditures, under whose burden the nations of Europe are wailing. Have the people entrusted us with the mission or given us a mandate to justify our giving to Canadian politics such a sudden turn?

I for one will answer: No. The only men likely to answer in the affirmative to such a question are to be found in the ranks of the Liberal party of the province of Quebec. In our province, indeed, that burning question of the navy and of a contribution to the British exchequer has been a bone of contention during the election; but in all the other provinces of the Dominion, both parties have striven to conceal that great issue from the people, and the men returned to represent those provinces have no authority to deal for the time being with that great question of militarism, whether it be in the shape of a cash contribution or of a war navy. If the Liberal party in the province of Quebec has been entrusted at the last election with the duty of discussing here that navy question, that same party is also responsible for the state of public opinion in that province. Indeed, on going through the debates of this House for 1902, I find the following expression of opinion emanating from the then leader of the Government, who is to-day the leader of the Opposition (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In contemporary political life, he says, we meet abroad as well as in Great Britain and in Canada, nay even in this House, a certain class of people who are anxious for nothing so much as to plunge Canada in the vortex of militarism, which is at present the curse of Europe. I am not a supporter of such a policy.

When that statement of the year 1902 is confronted with the resolution of 1909, and the famous Navy Bill of 1909, one cannot help exclaiming: Alas, what a change of opinion! The Liberal party of 1902 took a stand quite different from that which the Liberal party subsequently took in 1909 and 1910. Two men have torn away from that party and have remained faithful to the original policy of their leader. In spite of all that may be said at present in an effort to ridicule them in this or that quarter, the unbiased historian will say that these men were the only two members of the party who did not vary in their professions of political faith. They may have made mistakes, who does not commit any? But at any rate they have had the courage of speaking out what others were content with thinking secretly. Bourassa and Lavergne at the time started in the province of Quebec a movement which was approved of by the bulk of the people, and the last phase of which will likely soon materialize in this House. Other public men later on followed in the fotsteps of these two leaders and advocated not only in this House, but at public meetings, the policy which they later induced the people to sanction in no uncertain way. I went through my constituency making similar statements.

We who have inhabited this country for three hundred years, have we not the right to give expression to our views? We who have made and are still making sacrifices of money and men for the preservation of this country, can we not say in the words of the poet:

Nous sommes des fils de guerriers,
Et nos pères, pleins de vaillance,
Vinrent au bord d'un fleuve immense
Planter leurs étendards altiers.
Durant un siècle, sur nos plages
Ces lutteurs au bras redouté
Pour la France et la chrétienté
Déployèrent tous les courages.
Debout, Canadiens français!
Luttons comme ont lutté nos pères!
Au milieu de races prospères,
Déroulons au vent du progrès,
Qui souffle à travers les forêts,
Nos vieilles et saintes bannières
Luttons comme ont lutté nos pères?
Debout, Canadiens français!

.. ..

Parcourez, attentifs, toute l'histoire humaine
De l'éclat de Ninive à la splendeur d'Athènes,
Des travaux de Lincoln aux actes de Zénon,
Du grand Démétrius au grand Napoléon,
Et vous ne lirez pas de plus sublime page
Que celle écrite, au bord de l'Ottawa sauvage,
Avec un sang aussi hardi que généreux,
Par nos soldats français qui furent nos aïeux.

Having no inside information as regards Imperial politics, I shall now look into the question before the House solely from the viewpoint of the advantages which may result therefrom for Canada, and in accordance with the assurances given by us during the last election campaign. I may be allowed to state my disagreement with the views expressed by some of the previous speakers and to stand by the statements I made in my constituency and which were repeated in the various constituencies throughout the province of Quebec.

To those hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who state here and cause to be repeated in their papers from one end of the country to the other, that the Laurier scheme provided for the building of warships in Canada, I oppose a flat denial. When we reached power, we found tenders filed in the departments in connection with the building of warships. But was it laid down as a condition that such ships should be built in Canada? No, there was no mention of that; on the contrary, it was understood that those ships would be built in Great Britain. Out and out Canadians as you are to-day now that you are no longer in power, why did you not insert in the specifications for the building of warships a clause requiring their construction in a Canadian shipyard?

You have not done so at the time; your papers should refrain from deceiving any longer public opinion; but I was forgetting that the press in the service of our opponents was always guided by that celebrated saying of Voltaire: 'Keep on lying all the time; there will always be found some one to believe you.'

Every Liberal speaker spoke in the same strain; insisted on the desirability of finding work for our people by laying down as a condition that these ships should be built in Canada. Why did you not come forward with those reasons, with these representations, when your own party was forcing this famous Navy Bill through the House? Not at all; you approved everything that was proposed; not one of you dared open his mouth on that question. Why? Because you realized that it was impossible to build that navy just now in this country. If it was impossible at the time, what is there to make the undertaking so very much easier now? I am quite willing to admit that the Conservatives are better managers than hon. gentlemen opposite, but they should not be expected to accomplish what is practically impossible.

We are in power because you tried by means of that recoprocity treaty to hand over Canada to the United States. In the province of Quebec, you lost your hold on the people, because you resolved to build a navy against the will of the people of the province and of the great majority of the people of the Dominion. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), who, as far as I know, is not a Nationalist, acknowledges in his speech that his constituency is for the most part opposed to armaments. Here is what he says:

> I am satisfied that if my electors were consulted individually, a great many would be found to be opposed to the establishment of any kind of navy.

It is contended that Great Britain requires some substantial help. I am not ready to admit that Great Britain is bankrupt, when she herself contributed the millions needed for the development of our industries. Neither an I ready to admit that the nation whose flag floats over an immense empire, the nation which, owing to the strength of its fleet, was able to overcome the proudest and most gallant people of Europe, I mean France, on this very land of Canada, should now be in such straights as to beg for assistance from its colonies. The British navy has known darker days than those we are now going through, and always, like at Trafalgar, it has succeeded in routing the most formidable foes.

Those 35 millions which we are to give, where will we borrow them? On the very spot, in Great Britain.

To hon. gentlemen opposite, I may be allowed to say: You demanded the construction of a war navy; you are aware that sailors are required to man these vessels and operate these guns; you have had some experience with the 'Niobe' and the 'Rainbow.' How many recruits have you found in this country? How many lawyers, doctors and professional men of all kinds have enlisted as soldiers or sailors? You may be sure those advocates of militarism will not be the most forward when the time will come for the fray; as usual the farming and labouring classes will supply the men who at the risk of their lives will enable the country to abide by the Imperialist speeches of the day.

How many deserters did you have in that small number of recruits which you got for the navy? If we are bound to have a naval policy, that outlined by this Government is by far the least objectionable of the two, because it does not involve compulsory service for our youths.

If Great Britain needs men, let her say so, and I am satisfied that many of our young people, as in 1775, as in 1812, 1813 and 1814, and as in the days of the South African war, will be happy to respond to a call for voluntary service.

We object to the enactment of a system of conscription such as would be required following on the establishment of those two naval units proposed by the leader of the Opposition. We wish to remain on friendly terms with our neighbours; in the words of the poet Chapman, we say:

> Le sang ne rougit plus nos prés;
> L'astre du travail y flamboie,
> Et sur tous nos foyers en joie
> La paix répand ses fruits dorés.
> L'espoir de ses rayons innonde
> Tous les cœurs et tous les cerveaux...
> Demain nous serons les rivaux
> Des grands peuples de l'ancien monde.
> Debout, Canadiens français!

Should we be getting ready to build warships when the wise men of the older European nations are organizing conferences with the object of bringing about general disarmament? The old Latin saw: 'Si vis pacem para bellum' has no longer its application. Who are those who call for armaments and the building of warships?

Millionaires, who control arm factories and foundries, and shipyards.

That British diplomacy should call on us to grant some millions to save Great Britain some expense, I do not wonder at that. But from a practical standpoint, what will be left to us in return for the gift which we are asked to make? A 400 million dollars debt, railways and canals to be built, innumerable industries to develop and which are awaiting in vain an outlay of Canadian capital. The hon. member for North Toronto considered on March 29, 1909, that he was doing very good service for the British Crown, while at the same time giving concrete form to the views he had formerly expressed in this House. Again on this occasion he deems it his duty to tie down the country to a new policy without previously obtaining its consent. I believe he is mistaken and will not attain his purpose. The hon. member for North Toronto is not infallible; he has erred before, and I think he is to-day making another mistake. Far from tightening the bonds which unite us to the British Empire, that new scheme, whether it be called war navy or 35 million dollars contribution, will have as its conclusion, what? The independence of Canada, if we do not cut it short.

We are in need of funds for building our canals, our great national highways, but we consider ourselves rich enough to make a wee gift of $35,000,000 to people who are better off than ourselves. That is a puzzle that I am unable to solve, and neither will the people of this country be able to solve it, and neither will future generations of Canadians succeed in making anything out of it.

During the memorable election of Drummond and Arthabasca, in which I had the honour of taking a hand as one of the rank and file, we used to say that our children would curse the day and hour when their forerunners imposed upon them the burden of militarism, and I do not intend going back on what I said at the time.

If we are desirous of efficiently assisting Great Britain, let us protect our seaports, let us build forts, and let us take steps, if you will, towards repelling any fleet of invaders, but let us not imitate that giddy farmer who assists his neighbour in seeding down his field when his own is not even ploughed. We have not a single fort along the shores of the St. Lawrence, our borders may be invaded at any time, not a single fort has been built, and still we are supposed to be in a position to make presents. If it is desired that Great Britain and Canada be safeguarded, our harbours and sea routes should be protected, and means taken to repel any attacck directed against our seaboard. Thus will our funds remain in the country and will a patriotic work have been accomplished. Should the British fleet undergo defeat (which I consider an impossibility), what could we do to stop the progress of a foreign fleet going up the St. Lawrence? We would be utterly helpless in any effort to impede the advance of a single warship; death and destruction might be wrought all along the banks of the St. Lawrence without Canada being able to fire a single volley for its defence.

There is a proverb as old as the world which says: Well ordained charity begins at home. Let us put that in practice for the benefit of this country. Besides, we have reached a point in our history where we should be looked upon not as mere dependents, but as a nation, and as a result we should make preparations towards soon taking a place among the peace-loving nations. The spirit of liberty after passing over the countries of the old world, is now penetrating into Canada, and the bounds which make of us a colony may be broken before long; and let us be prepared for that memorable day.

May we hope that the change will take place without any spilling of blood, in the same way as when Norway and Sweden separated—supposing such a disturbance is to take place—but such is not the wish of the province of Quebec. We love our present institutions and we are desirous of conserving them.

There is still another reason at the back of the stand I have taken in this matter, and it is this: any serious man should abide by his principles. I have blamed the Liberal party and particularly its leaders for having broken their election pledges, for having in 1896 appropriated the fiscal policy of the Conservative party and casting aside the policy they had advocated for eighteen years previous to that; for entirely renouncing the stand they had taken on that question of armaments, and going in for undertakings of the most drastic character without even hinting of it to the people. I also claimed that the people are sovereign in this country, that the people alone can properly settle, through special consultation at the polls, such issues as are binding them for the future. Now, if they are not consulted in regard to them, how can they settle them to their satisfaction? How can they decide knowingly, if public men conceal to them their intentions?

Some of the previous speakers have stated that during the last electoral campaign we had repudiated the right hon. gentleman's (Mr. R. L. Borden's) leadership. Not at all; we have always acknowledged and still acknowledge the leadership of that distinguished gentleman, who is entrusted with the government of the country; and though we may differ from him in connection with the present issue, that does not prevent us from recognizing the earnestness, honesty and fair-mindedness of the man who is so worthy of the confidence reposed in him by the country on the 21st of September, 1911.

The gift pure and simple of $35,000,000 is a trifle in comparison with the cost of building two fleet units, one for the Atlantic and one for the Pacific, as desired by the whole Liberal party (apparently at least), and as stated by the right hon. leader of the Opposition in his speech of December 11, 1912. If we are bound to choose between two evils, the contribution of the aforesaid amount is surely the less objectionable. We have moreover from this Government the assurance that nothing more will be done previous to the people having been consulted and having decided as to its desirability. Which means that this contribution will not be taken as a precedent to justify a similar gift another year.

I blamed the Liberal party for having wasted millions right and left without saying a word about it to the people during the elections, and what I have found fault with in the case of my opponents, I am not ready to approve in the case of my friends. The people of Canada should be given an opportunity of saying what they think of the desirability of such a gift, and whatever be the verdict of the people, I will have redeemed my pledge, and my electors, as well as those all over Canada, will be satisfied. The province of Quebec does not object more than any other to assuming its own responsibilities or fulfilling its obligations towards its associates; but under our democratic system of government the people alone are masters; they are called upon not only to supply the funds, but also the men to fight our battles. That is why the people should be called upon to settle these great questions which involve a fundamental change in the political organization of our nation. There are moments in life when one feels that he is called upon to fulfil an imperious duty, and among these imperious duties there is none so important as that of safeguarding one's honour.

I was elected to this House to oppose the granting of a contribution towards the building or maintenance of a war navy, to demand the repeal of that famous Navy Bill, and I wish to carry out proudly and faithfully the mission entrusted to me. I wish to bequeath to my family not honours, but honour and respect for the pledges given to my constituents. It is painful at times to tear away from one's friends. Having for twenty-five years battled in the interest of the party, having remained faithful to that same party while so many others were receding from it, having stood by the party through periods of darkness and disaster, I have the right to-day to say to that same party what I have in mind, and to oppose a step which I consider a flagrant violation of the rights of the people. I for one consider that it is incumbent upon me to withhold my support from the proposed resolution until the people have been consulted in this connection, and I shall vote in favour of the amendment moved yesterday by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Guilbault) in favour of a plebiscite.

Mr. L. P. PACAUD (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, this question of defence which is the subject of this debate, is important, not only by the actual burden which it is called upon to impose on the people of Canada, but important above all by its far-reaching consequences. It appeals to us and rightly so, from a double point of view—as Canadians and as British subjects. This dual sentiment, if I may call it so, carries with it certain well defined obligations, the foremost of which I believe, Sir, is the protection of Canada, and her growing commerce by the immediate organization of a Canadian navy. This was, Mr. Speaker, from the very moment this question was brought up four years ago and this is still to-day the policy of the Liberal party. During the general elections of 1911, this policy was severely attacked by the two factions of the Conservative party. It is necessary not to lose sight of what was then said by hon. gentlemen opposite, so that we may understand more fully the true meaning of their rapid change of opinion which has brought them to adopt this measure which I am convinced Sir, no true Canadian could sincerely adhere to. Outside of the province of Quebec, the imperialist faction of the Conservative party, as I understand it, spoke but incidentally on the navy—reciprocity was the principal issue. Nevertheless this question of defence also occupied their attention. They were directing their attacks not so much against the principle of a Canadian navy, they hardly dared condemn such a principle, but against what they believed to be the ineffectiveness of our naval programme, as proposed by the late Government, against what they called the tendency of separation of our naval forces from those of the Mother Country. On the other hand, what happened in the province of Quebec during that time? The policy of a Canadian navy as advocated by the Liberal party was severely attacked by the Nationalist wing of the Conservative party—now represented in the present Government by the Postmaster General, the Minister of Inland Revenue, and the Secretary of State. They were against the very idea of formulating a policy, of whatever nature it might be, touching the naval defence of this country. They condemned alike and with equal force the proposal of both parties, and refused to accept either the principle of a local navy or the principle of contributions. But they went further than that, and styling themselves the champions of Canadian autonomy, they went through the province of Quebec attacking the right hon. the leader of the Opposition for having sacrificed our Canadian autonomy, because in the Naval Act was to be found a clause which would have permitted the Governor in Council with the approval of Parliament to send the Canadian navy to help the British Empire in time of need. Such a clause in the Act, which should have united all patriotic Canadians, for the double reason that it allowed us Canadians to conserve intact the principle of self-government which is closer to our hearts to-day than ever, and permitted us also as loyal subjects to do our duty to the Empire, gave to the Nationalists of Quebec on the contrary their battle-cry in their unpatriotic attempt to inflame the minds and hearts of French-Canadians—'a navy' Canadian in time of peace, and Imperial in time of war' was repeated in every husting of the province of Quebec. But such a cry, luckily for us French-Canadians, luckily for Canada as a whole was not taken up by the majority in that province in the spirit in which it was intended to be accepted. French-Canadians, faithful to the best traditions of their race, were not to be led astray. Sincerely attached to the political institutions of this country, they readily understood and approved of a policy which would have left a Canadian navy under Canadian control. But they also understood and approved with equal force the policy of the right hon. leader of the Opposition who placed in the Naval Act a clause giving to Parliament the right to say in a moment of peril, the British Empire will not fall, if the help of Canada can prevent it. And, lastly, Sir, the Nationalists promised the people of Quebec, that if they returned twenty Nationalists to this House, that number would be sufficient to force any government to consult the people on such an important question. This was the position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite belonging to the Nationalist party. They spread these opinions throughout the province of Quebec. They claimed to be alone independent; alone possessing sufficient conscience to rise above party exigencies, and speak out their minds. They alone could force any government, whether they were Liberal or Conservative, to come before the people and consult them on this question. By means of such appeals they have entered this House, three of them are members of this Government—what have they done, Sir, since the beginning of this debate—these same hon. gentlemen who were to take by storm not only the Government but the Opposition as well and force them to the people—these great warriors of Nationalism, started off by not uttering a word in this debate. A tame beginning, Mr. Speaker. Their second move was to vote unanimously against the sub-amendment of the member of Maisonneuve, which would have had for effect if adopted to submit both propositions before the people. The third act was an amendment by the member for Joliette, calling for an appeal to the country by a plebiscite though the hon. member had already voted against such a proposition a few minutes before and you decided, Sir, it was out of order because it was the same in substance as the sub-amendment of the member of Maisonneuve.

Now, we have another sub-amendment from the member for Joliette claiming again an appeal to the country—by a plebiscite. Mr. Speaker, this is trifling with a great national question. The only proper constitutional channel, I believe, Sir, by which we may consult the people is by a general election. Let the Government stand or fall with their policy.

We have now at least the satisfaction of knowing the true merits of Nationalism. This false nationalism came into existence under false colours; it is disgraced to-day; it will be crushed and annihilated at the very first opportunity. It was a double attack on the late Government. In Quebec a do-nothing policy was openly proclaimed by the Nationalists; in Ontario, an enlarged navy was the creed preached by hon. gentlemen opposite. We heard this afternoon the hon. member for Calgary, an ardent Imperialist, giving his sentiments and his ideas as to the future destiny of this country. I shall not follow him in his remarks, but I will point out that while he was striking his hardest blows at the Nationalists these gentlemen applauded his remarks with the utmost confidence. The exhibition. Be it sufficient for me to conclude from this that the alliance still lasts and that Nationalists and Imperialists, although they preach different creeds, are still united in a strong desire to maintain in power the Conservative party.

The present Government has been in power for nearly two years. Within the ranks of the Cabinet are to be found hon. gentlemen, representing alike the two wings of the party. Their duty was to solve the greatest problem which has ever been sub mitted in this Parliament since Confederation—and a divided Cabinet was to achieve this work. Naturally enough the people of Canada have been waiting anxiously and I may add with a great deal of curiosity to see what would be the answer of this Nationalist—jingo Government, what results had crowned their efforts, and what solution would be proposed. The answer to the people has come at last. We have it in the form of a resolution which has been adopted in this House, and of the Bill which we are now debating, and coupling them with the speeches delivered by hon. members of the Government in explanation of its aims and consequences, we may divide the answer into three parts. First, we have as yet no policy. Second, we propose, instead, to the people of Canada an expediency measure which will cost the taxpayers of this country $35,000,000. Third, we are seriously considering a permanent naval policy, but as to what that policy will consist of, as to whether it will be a Canadian navy or periodical contributions, we refuse to tell the people of Canada at the present time.

It is not surprising, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada are disappointed and dissatisfied. The alliance of Imperialists and Nationalists has been tried and found wanting, and I believe, Sir, that from now on the present Government cannot safely count on the charity that thinketh no evil. The general cry throughout the country is for an immediate general election. The Liberal party heve declared itself ready and anxious to meet their opponents. There is now an amendment before the House proposed by the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), which calls for redistribution and an appeal to the country. Hon. gentlemen opposite voted a few years ago for an amendment requesting such an appeal to the people on this question. The Postmaster General, after he had became a minister in the present Cabinet, told the electors of Quebec county that they would be consulted on this question. Will he vote for the amendment of the member of Assiniboia? It gives him, at least, an opportunity to redeem his pledges. Will he do so?

Mr. Speaker, we are discussing whether or not we should give $35,000,000 as an emergency contribution to the Imperial exchequer. The right hon. leader of the Opposition has already stated, in the name of the Liberal party, that if there was an emergency, we would gladly give the money, and more if needed. So the point in debate is narrowed down to whether or not there is an emergency. It rested on the Government to prove this emergency. Have they done so? In my opinion, Sir, they have absolutely failed to do so. The Government rests their whole case on the memorandum of the Admiralty. This memorandum has been thoroughly sifted during this debate; every line of it has been closely scrutinized. I do not wish to repeat in detail the arguments which have been brought forward in support of the Liberal party's contention. But permit me, Mr. Speaker, to single out to you what seems to me most remarkable in this document. Nowhere do we find a word in this memorandum conveying to us the thought that there is an emergency. The Prime Minister of England, and the members of his Cabinet, tell us there is no emergency. But supposing for the sake of argument, though no member in this House would believe it, that we were deceived by the great statesmen of England and that an emergency did really exist. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the danger lies in the North Sea. It is the reason given by them why we should give up the idea of a local navy and concentrate our proposed dreadnoughts in home waters. How is it, then, Mr. Speaker, I ask, that the British people who are told by Canadians three thousand miles away of a danger which confronts them at their very door, are not stirred by such a grave announcement? How is it while we in Canada are talking nothing else but emergency, in England, at the very heart of the Empire, and the very place where the danger is supposed to exist, they are slowly but surely pursuing the great social reforms which are of paramount interest to the English people to-day? How is it, if such an emergency really exists, recognizing the truth that finance is at the basis of naval power, that England which is the wealthiest nation in the world, does not, and has not, though well able to do so, extended still further her margin of security? The British Government has paid its enormous naval expenditure out of current revenue, while European nations have had to borrow to meet these expenditures. But they do not believe in an emergency, and they tell us so very plainly in paragraph 9 of the memorandum:

> Whatever may be the decision of Canada at the present juncture, Great Britain will not in any circumstances fail in her duty to the overseas dominions of the Crown.
>
> She has before now successfully made head alone and unaided against the most formidable combinations and she has not lost her capacity by a wise policy and strenuous exertions to watch over and preserve the vital interests of the Empire.

This paragraph is divided into two parts, the first, in which the Admiralty tells us of their intention not to fail in their duty towards the self-governing dominions; the second, in which they tell us of their ability to put into effect this intention of theirs to protect us. No sign of an emergency in that, Mr. Speaker. But hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the Admiralty has requested the gift of three dreadnoughts. Mr. Speaker, the Admiralty could not answer otherwise the question that was put to them by the Postmaster General of Canada.

> The Prime Minister of the Dominion having inquired in what form any immediate aid that Canada might give would be most effective, we have no hesitation in answering after a prolonged consideration of all the circumstances that it is desirable that such aid should include the provision of a certain number of the largest and strongest ships of war which science can build or money supply.

There could only be one answer: You wish to give us immediate aid, well, then, give us money or ships of war. But there is nothing which directly or indirectly suggests to us an emergency confronting the Empire at the present time. The Admiralty could not, and was not even given a chance to express their views on the merits of a Canadian navy or a system of contribution. If that chance had been given them, I maintain, Sir, they would have refused to contradict themselves; they would have answered as they did in 1909, that strategy was not alone to be considered, but that the national sentiment of the self-governing dominions had to be considered above all. But, Sir, I also maintain, that there being no emergency, it does not belong to the Admiralty to shape Canadian policy, and that such a right belongs alone to the Canadian people. It is so plain and so convincing, Mr. Speaker, these words of the Admiralty, they have been so well understood by the people of Canada, that the Minister of Trade and Commerce seeing that this emergency cry fell on deaf ears, that it was ridiculed throughout the country, decided that it was time to shift from the word 'emergency.' He did not hesitate, and in his speech delivered during this debate he told us that the new word to be used, to describe the present situation, was the word 'need.'

Mr. Speaker, we started this debate with an emergency contribution as our subject of discussion. Half way round the course, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, happily dispelled from our anxious minds the very thought of an emergency. But strange to say, though there is no emergency, we are still left with the prospect of a contribution on our shoulders. Let us hope that we may still be saved from this ridiculous process of solving a great national problem. No, Mr. Speaker, I am firmly convinced, and I owe it to those whom I have the honour to represent in this House to express freely my opinion on the subject, that England does not need our money or our ships. What she needs is our co-operation in defence. What she needs from her self-governing dominions is not relief at home; she is well able to defend herself in home waters. But the immediate duty of the hour is to create throughout the Empire centres of strength, to organize at once in Canada a Canadian navy, whose principal function should be to protect this part of the Empire.

But, Mr. Speaker, why do the Government persist in the course which they are now following? The answer is easily found. Unable to agree among themselves on a permanent naval policy, they must either cling to this present measure, which is not a policy at all, or else face a grave emergency within the ranks of the Cabinet. A short review of the position of the Tory party on this question will clearly prove my contention. On the 29th of March, 1909, a resolution was introduced by one of their leaders, the present hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and unanimously accepted by both political parties. Canada, through her representatives, then decided for a Canadian navy, and condemned the principle of regular and periodical contribution

The present Prime Minister of Canada wished that the word 'speedy' be added to the words 'organization of a Canadian naval service.' The right hon. gentleman goes to Halifax, in October, 1909, seven months after the passage of this resolution, and still entertaining the same views as in March, prophesies a new era of prosperity for his native province of Nova Scotia, by the revival of the ship-building industry, which, in his opinion, the building of this new Canadian navy would surely encourage. In 1910, we note the passage of the Naval Act by the late government on the lines suggested by the resolution of 1909, and the alliance of the Tory party with the Nationalist party of Quebec who condemned alike and with equal force the policy of a Canadian navy, or a system of contribution. The right hon. leader of the Government had to choose between standing by his principles as enunciated in March, 1909, or else break up his alliance with the Nationalists. He did not wish to part with the Nationalists, so he gave up the policy of a Canadian navy. To save the alliance, to please alike his Nationalist friends and his jingo followers, he had to make a compromise; an emergency contribution was promised to the latter; a plebiscite was promised to the Nationalists and the net result to-day of this double policy is that we are asked to vote a contribution though there is no emergency, and the people of Canada, who were led to believe that they would be consulted, are completely ignored by the present Government. The leader of the Nationalist party, the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk) resigns his portfolio—and his reason as stated by his letter of resignation, is precisely the fact that the people are not to be consulted on this measure of contribution.

But, Sir, may I ask you, how is it, if the member for Jacques-Cartier, feels bound to resign his seat in the Cabinet, can the Postmaster General (Mr. Pelletier) remain comfortably seated on the treasurer benches? On the 3rd of October, 1911, after the general elections, speaking at Montmagmy, here is what he says:

> They tell me I will be a minister—I do not know not having yet been called by Mr. Borden to form part of his cabinet. At all events I will be a minister only by following the line of conduct which has been traced to me by Mr. Monk.

The hon. member for Jacques Cartier resigns. By what process of reasoning does the Postmaster General expect to persuade the people of Quebec that his duty was to remain in office? He spoke during this debate, but not a word was uttered by him to explain to the people of Quebec why it was that he did not follow 'the line of conduct which had been traced to him by Mr.

Monk.' This is the record of the Tory Party on this important question.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is the duty of an opposition to watch with vigilance these extraordinary changes of opinion, by hon .gentleman opposite, to challenge them at all times, to put them on trial on every occasion. Let us now examine the policy of the Liberal party. They voted unanimously for the resolution of the 29th of March, 1909, favouring a Canadian navy and in 1910, the Naval Bill became law. To-day the Liberal party says: Four years ago, we believed in the policy of a Canadian navy. Conditions which at that time prompted our action, have not changed to-day; therefore, we stick to our guns; we are now convinced by the memorandum of the Admiralty that there is no emergency, otherwise we would not hesitate to do our share in a moment of need; we stand by a Canadian navy, and under the control of the Canadian Government. This is the policy, as I understand it, of the Liberal party; this is the policy embodied in the amendment introduced by the right hon. leader of the Opposition in the beginning of this debate and it is the only policy, I sincerely believe, which is consistent with our national honour as a self-governing dominion.

But there is, Sir, another reason why I favour a Canadian navy. The West to-day is getting the benefit of the construction of three transcontinental railways built at the general expense, and is increasing in population by leaps and bounds. I rejoice as a Canadian to see this growth and prosperity of the western provinces, though I regret the defeat of a measure which would have made them still more prosperous.

But the eastern provinces, which have furnished the bulk of the money to build these railways, are stationary. Prince Edward Island has lost population, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have barely held their own and the province of Quebec has gained somewhat due principally to our pulp and paper trade. Surely then something should be done to compensate the eastern provinces for the sacrifices they have made. The best compensation that could be given them would be to restore to them the ship-building, ship-owning and navigating business they enjoyed forty years ago, when Canada was the fourth in rank of the ship-owning countries of the world. In those days, Sir, the merchants of the city of Quebec owned and navigated over ne hundred ships and Quebec, Halifax, St. John and Yarmouth ships were to be seen in every port of the world. Thousands of men, many of them French-Canadians from the lower St. Lawrence, Labrador, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, were the captains and sailors that manned these ships. To-day they have disappeared as if they had never existed. The grain and other products of the western provinces will give employment to a vast tonnage of ocean ships to carry these products to Europe. Why should not we eastern people do this carrying trade in our own ships? We are clever enough to build great transcontinental railways and to manufacture our own steel rails; why should we not build, own and navigate our own iron and steel ships, do our own carrying trade, and educate our people to a sea-going life? We have in our eastern coasts and in Newfoundland the greatest nursery for sailors in the world. A Canadian navy, built in Canada, would bring this about. The building of warships in our ports would have led to the building of mercantile steamers, and we would once more have been ship-owners and navigators, doing our own carying trade, the most lucrative trade in the world and the most beneficial to a nation. But, Sir, I favour a Canadian navy for another reason. It possesses the advantage of finality. It settles a principle and it raises it above party warfare. It gives expression to a national sentiment which is stronger than ever to-day in Canada, and which we cannot lose sight of in the discussion of our national defence. But if the policy of a Canadian navy possesses the advantage of finality, the Government proposition is surely one of uncertainty. We are dealing to-day with an expediency measure which in itself is exceptional in its character by the fact that we are asked to vote a sum of money to be spent outside of Canada. But this is only the first step. We are told that this will be followed by a permanent policy—a policy of which we know nothing, but which will be realized on condition that Canada obtains a voice in questions relating to war or peace. What voice will Canada have in this Imperial Council? What is the price that will be demanded from us, if such a voice is ever granted? Mr. Speaker, it is clearly evident that the price will be periodical contributions. We will have to do something, for there are but two ways of solving this problem: Build a Canadian navy, or else pay out contributions. The Prime Minister tells us that we are going to have a permanent naval policy; that a Canadian navy is impossible for at least fifty years. So the only conclusion that we may draw from this is that Canada will be called upon to pay out her annual tribute—for what amount nobody knows as yet. Sir, the rule of Downing street will then be close at hand. Self-government will have received a death blow from which it would not easily recover.

The member for St. Antoine division of Montreal (Mr Ames) told us very frankly what, in his opinion, would be the ultimate result. He told us: Autonomy has done its work, of which we are proud. But the word of the twentieth century is co-partnership.

So the price demanded will be the loss of our local autonomy. The people of Canada would not stand for it. Whatever may be their opinions touching the question of Imperial unity, I believe, Sir, that they are unanimous that it should be attained only through diversity of legislation. It tends not to sacrifice but to confirm Imperial unity.

Canadians believe, Sir, that within that Empire of which they form part, Canada is called upon to play an important part. Situated as we are, our ambitions, our national aspirations should be to spread in this new world the ideas of freedom and of justice which we have learned to cherish from England, and for the defence of which she has given her strength, her power and her intellect to introduce and to maintain in the old world.

To achieve this work, we need what we already possess, that without which England herself would have been powerless for good local, self-government.

With a Canadian navy, Sir, we have no such difficulties ahead of us; we have no such controversies to face; we have a clear view of the course we are going to follow, we help the Empire when in need; we build, we man at home the ships which will be under our own control. We spend Canadian money in Canada for the general benefit of Canadians, we let the world know that what a good Australian can do a brave Canadian can also do. Finally, we do not hire somebody else to do what we ourselves should do.

Such a policy, Sir, I heartily support. I heartily support also the amendment of the member of Assiniboia (Mr. Turriff), which, if adopted, would at least give the people of this country the right to say which party is wrong on this important question.

Mr. P. A. SEGUIN (L'Assomption): (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, if I rise just now to address the House, it is because I deem it is incumbent on each one of us to express our personal views on the great issue which is now under discussion. When, hardly two years ago, I had the honour of stating my opinion in regard to the establishment of a navy for purposes of national defence, I was far from thinking that the debate would be taken up once more at so early a date and under such altered circumstances. Politics has in reserve such sudden changes, and present experience shows us that not only circumstances but political men themselves are subject to strange transformations.

It is not without some misgivings that we undertake the discussion of a Bill such as that introduced by the right hon. Prime Minister. In these days of extreme Imperialism and false patriotism, our opponents are not slow in charging us with ingratitude and disloyalty. We are told high and low that it is on our part showing very little gratitude for all the kindnesses showered on us by Great Britain, and for the freedom which our race enjoys under her protection, to frown on this proposal for a small gift of $35,000,000. And if we were to be as free in our expressions of opinion as formerly were some of the opponents of the Laurier naval scheme, what protests would we not hear from all quarters! Fortunately we are in a position to answer to those people that the Mother Country cannot and should not deprive us of the first of all privileges she concedes to all her children without distinction or origin: that of giving frank and loyal expression to their views. If some people are left free to fight a proposal which they deem obnoxious, contrary to the interests of the country and the dignity of the Mother Country as well, the same right should be conceded to those who hold the contrary view.

I was saying a moment ago that public men as well as politics were subject to striking changes. Indeed, if we go back only a few years, we find that the most strenuous advocates of the Bill now under discussion were absolutely opposed to any kind of contribution in favour of the British fleet. It would be useless taking up the time of this honourable House if I were to quote extracts in support of my present contention. Besides they are already to the knowledge of the House; they have been quoted by others, and no one has even tried to repudiate them. I shall also pass over the disloyal campaign carried on in the province of Quebec against the Laurier naval scheme and against any proposal of contribution for the defence of the Empire.

I repeat it, odd changes of front have taken place. It is just possible that such changes were the result of corresponding changes in the opportunities at hand, as hinted not very long ago by the most disappointed and broken-hearted member of this House, and the only one among the old-time Nationalists who has shown enough self-respect, attachment to principle and regard for the word given to sacrifice his own personal interest rather than approve of such principles and pledges being disregarded.

But let us glance over all that, and rather consider to what results the carrying out of the Bill under discussion is likely to lead. As with individuals, so also with people; they develop and grow strong through struggling. The man who never has to fight, remains a weakling; he has no self-reliance. That is so well understood, that the father who takes an interest in the welfare of his child allows him to fight his own way through life. Struggle for a living, coupled with foresight, makes for individuality. The same may be said of nations. Possibly if circumstances had been such that Canada at the beginning of the last century had been, like the United States, left to itself, our country would have prospered and developed to the same extent as the neighbouring republic. Please note that I am merely giving the facts, without drawing any conclusions therefrom.

If I may be allowed to carry this comparison to its conclusion, I say further that nations like individuals having turning points—I do not mean changes of front—in their history. These turning points are sometimes a cause of perplexity: should the forward march towards progress be arrested? Should the onward movement be maintained at any cost? The answer comes of itself. Since nations are like individuals—and it stands to reason, since, after all, a nation is made up of individuals governed by the same laws, desirous of exercising the same rights, nurturing the same ideals, venerating the same flag—and since individuals, as soon as they feel themselves strong enough to engage by themselves on the voyage of life and attain alone their destiny, break away gently and respectfully from the trammels of paternal authority, though continuing to love and respect those who brought them into life; in the same way is it not fair and reasonable that we should foresee the day when also we Canadians will have to take the risk of journeying alone towards the fulfilment of our destiny. I do hope nothing in what I have just said will grate upon the feelings of the most hardened Imperialist, should there be any in this honourable House. So then it is not only our right, it is more especially our duty, our imperious duty to look into the future. No one can blame me, if I endeavour to discover something of our future destiny.

Now it is in connection with such a Bill as this one that we should endeavour to look beyond the present and far into the future. I surmise that this proposal to make that modest gift of $35,000,000 to the Mother Country is not merely a matter to be viewed from a sentimental standpoint. If sentiment was the only consideration under the circumstances, we would all be at one. The heart will always have reasons which reason itself knows nothing of. But just now it is not sentiment which should be consulted. And my reason tells me that in a question of that importance, and under circumstances so serious, it is my duty to look beyond and above such things and not to be content with sentimental considerations.

If then I cast a glance beyond and above those sentimental considerations, I foresee the day when Canada, by the sheer force of circumstances, will take its place as a free nation under the sun, a place to which it is entitled. Please note that it is not here a matter of hastening or deferring that happening; to hasten it would be an act of disloyalty towards the Mother Country; to defer it would be an act of disloyalty towards ourselves. The one is not any better than the other. But in the same way that the son, without being a traitor, may long for the hour of liberty, so also may colonials long for the hour of full independence for his country. Time and circumstances are the decisive factors.

The wise course to follow for a colonial government consists, it seems to me—and history shows that I am right—in abstaining from any interference with the free development of the colony, while at the same time refraining from any attempt to painfully and brutally sever the colonial tie. We should bear witness to the Liberal administration that during their fifteen years in power, they never lost sight of the principle I have just stated. Little by little, imperceptibly, but effectively, Canada, from being an obscure and unknown colony on the face of the world, was promoted to the rank of a quasi-nation. All eyes were then turned towards us. The vastness and wealth of our territory, the immensity of our resources, were truly a revelation to all. Our trade developed beyond all our foremost expectations and within a few years reached incredible figures; our population nearly doubled in numbers, owing to the strong attraction exerted by the news of our progress. New provinces were opened up. That was the beginning of an era of prosperity which is a sign of the times for those who are anxious to see into the future. And it was stated that the twentieth century would be the century of Canada, in the same way that the nineteenth century had been the century of the great neighbouring republic. Everything seemed to point that way; everything fostered such a hope. And to crown that work of wonderful progress, the Laurier administration, which through its foresight and grasp of things, had carried on that work, resolved in the interest of the Empire as well as for the supreme benefit of the country to establish a national war navy.

At that time the opponents of the Government did not scruple to denounce wasteful expenditure. Millions are being thrown into the sea, they would clamour together. Gauging their view of the situation solely in accordance with their aims, which were directed to attaining power, they endeavoured in certain provinces to work on prejudice with the words 'targets for bullets,' while in other provinces they would sing, 'Let the voice of Toronto be the voice of the country.' At that time also there were Nationalists, and those Nationalists who insisted on the maintenance of the statu quo, contended that the country having heretofore been able to dispense with a war navy, could still and indefinitely dispense with that formidable toy. And those Nationalists, what have they become most of them? Ministers and favourites of power, no doubt. And this would be the time to speak about the changes which are evolved in men's opinions as well as in politics.

The Liberal party, thank God, has no such record. It has remained faithful to its policy. It might have retained power by swerving from the straight path. But power becomes unworthy of the party, and the party unworthy of power when such wobbling is permitted. The Liberal party has not deviated from its former stand. Neither has the party lost faith in the future of the country; it has its eye on our country's destiny. Now as formerly it preaches that it is incumbent on the Government to refrain from any deed of a nature to impede the free development of a young country. Now as then it is satisfied that the most effective form of assistance that can be extended to the Empire is not the inconsiderate giving away of a few millions for the benefit of the admiralty, with the words: Here is some gold, defend yourself and defend us against our enemies. The better plan is to equip one's self for future encounters. Now as then the Liberal party is satisfied that the establishment of a national war navy can but contribute to the prosperity of the country through the establishment of new industries. Now as then it keeps in mind that great truth that as we form part and parcel of the Empire, to enrich the country is to enrich the Empire, to strengthen our home defences is to strengthen the defences of the Empire, while on the contrary, to impoverish our country even in the interest of the Mother country is to impoverish the Empire.

The duty of a Government on taking hold of power, is to direct a country's course towards a certain point settled beforehand in a policy which every party is supposed to have for its guidance. In 1911, we witnessed this probably unique occurrence in the history of politics; the Conservative party on reaching power had no defined policy. No, I am mistaken, they had one, which was to beat Lauier and the Liberal party by all means available. That was the supreme object, the only aim. With that in view, during the few weeks that the campaign lasted, the candidates of the Conservative party made to the electorate the most extravagant as well as the most contradictory promises. While in Ontario racial and sectarian prejudices were being worked upon and that the well known ditty 'Let the voice of Toronto,' etc., was being sung, a ditty which was quite recently modified by the hon. Minister of Publics Works to 'The hell with Quebec'; in Quebec, dependent on the Conservative or Nationalist tendencies of the speaker, the promise was made either of an appeal to the people in case of an emergency contribution being required, or of the repeal pure and simple of the Laurier naval scheme. What has since been the aim of the Government's policy, if the word policy may henceforth be used to designate what hon. gentlemen have done? They were not in a position to live up to their pledges, and we know why. They did not even make it a point to give effect to the mere administrative acts initiated and pledges given by the former Liberal Government at the previous session.

For instance, I had obtained for the county of L'Assomption, which I have the honour to represent, a first vote of $5,000 for a wharf at L'Assomption; a vote of $5,000 for an ice-breaker at St. Gerard de Magella; another vote of $5,000 for an ice-breaker at Achigan river; a vote of $10,000 for a post office in the town of Laurentides. Those moneys had been voted by Parliament in the usual manner. It was the duty of this Government to carry out the pledges of the Liberal Government, or if such pledges were deemed excessive or illegal, to withdraw them and state the reasons for such withdrawal. Nothing has been done. The moneys were voted, the pledges are outstanding; the people interested are still waiting.

They are waiting, because it seems that the primary concern of this Government is not to fulfil its promises, but to be on the most pleasant terms with the Admiralty, and subserve occult interests which we know nothing about. What concerns the Government more than anything else, it is not carrying on the work undertaken by the Liberal party towards ensuring the progress of the country and our national prosperity; it is to pass around the magnifying glass to find out some genuine indication of a German menace and the dangers it may hold in store for us. Its main concern is not to make sure that Canada retains the prestige gained under the Liberal Administration, but to have the country recede to the rank of a helpless colony, relying on the Mother Country for the protection of its own territory. In short, it is to give away millions heedlessly, even should this action weaken the Empire by impoverishing this country. And what seems to me the worst feature of it all, the Government is about to make us go through this sorry comedy of causing us to borrow those millions from the people who have been our purveyors of cash heretofore, for the purpose of handing that money over to these very same people. There will not even be any displacement of the funds; we will only have to agree to pay interest on a loan of money which will never go through our hands.

I said and I say once more that the Government in asking us to drop that $35,000,000 in the hat which the Admiralty is passing in our direction, is causing Canada to recede from the rank of a quasi nation which Canada attained under the former Government, and to fall back into the position of a mere colony incapable of protecting itself. I said and I say once more that this gift of $35,000,000 is inimical to the interests of the Dominion and the dignity of the Mother Country, who never begged alms from her colonies. I may say further that this policy of the Government is dangerous, inasmuch as it constitutes a precedent which may lead to the worst abuses as well as to the most nefarious results. I am not alone in thinking so. I shall not insist on the differences of opinion which may exist throughout the country in this connection; I may be told in reply that these differences of opinion are the result of party prejudices and interests. But when a moderate paper such as the London ' Daily Chronicle ' gives out matter such as the following:

In Canada, as elsewhere, the general public believes what it is told, when repeated often enough. And heaven knows that Canadians have often enough heard about their loyalty, their services, their debt towards the Empire. They never cease hearing that long, everlasting ditty. The information forthcoming from Great Britain is disfigured...

When we read in the London 'Nation' such statements as the following:

People in the colonies are seldom in a position to afford making such costly presents; they need all their revenues to carry on their own government. We should in no case accept such gifts when the people have not had an opportunity of withholding their consent.

When we read in the London 'Advertiser' such things as these:

The naval policy of the Borden government consists in a $35,000,000 contribution. It rests on no reasonable or national principle. It is repugnant to true Canadian sentiment; its effect is to cast on the Mother Country the burden of maintaining three useless warships of the most costly type.

When we reflect that Mr. Asquith stated in the House that a memorandum had been prepared by the Admiralty, it is true, but that such memorandum had been prepared, please note the words, Mr. Speaker, at the request of Canada—which shows plainly that the request is not made by the Mother Country—when we read all that and a great deal more, it is impossible for us not to conclude that the feelings of pride and independence which have always distinguished the British people could not but be offended at the action which this Government wishes the House to take presently.

I understand that people in the habit of dealing with millions, such as the leaders among those who for some years past have been trying to induce the colonies to contribute towards the defence of the Empire, by keeping up the cry of the German menace, I understand that such people are not oversensitive in matters of dignity and fine feeling. I understand also that the true British sentiment is fully expressed in these wise considerations appearing in the London 'Times.'

If Canada is worth the bread it eats, it will take the means of protecting its coasts. Canada wants a navy which will be its property, constructed, manned and maintained by Canadians.

And the feeling of every Canadian, who is a Canadian first and a Britisher afterwards—and there is nothing wrong in that—finds expression in these weighty utterances from the mouth of S. H. Blake, of Toronto:

Canada should not even be called upon to contribute to any war expenditure, unless it can be shown that the proposed war is a just one. The ridiculous representation granted to Canada in the council of Imperial defence, if it is accepted, will go to show that Great-Britain is quite capable of making fun of Canada, as if it were some wretched lump of clay, and how cleverly she does make fun of it! It will be amusing to observe the shower of compensations in the shape of knighthoods which will be forthcoming, if the trick succeeds.

And Mr. Blake says further:

If Canada should contribute to the unjustifiable slaughter of our fellow-creatures, it will have to abide by the judgment of Him who has said: Vengeance belongs to me; chastisement is in my hands.

In short, Mr. Speaker, it is because I am absolutely satisfied that the duty of all of us, as Canadians and British subjects, is to endeavour to strengthen the Empire by making of Canada its strongest colony and the best equipped for the defence of its own territory, that I will refuse to support by my vote this proposal of the Government to grant millions not to Great Britain—we have seen that Great Britain is not the applicant—but to the Admiralty; and it is because I am satisfied that the principles previously enunciated are sound, that I shall continue advocating the establishment of a local navy for the defence of our coasts, along lines warranted by the resources and requirements of the country.

On motion of Mr. Graham, debate was adjourned.

On motion of Mr. Rogers, House adjourned at 1.20 a.m. (Wednesday).

INDEX

SECOND SESSION—TWELFTH PARLIAMENT, 1912-1913.

Abbreviations: 1r., 2r., 3r.=first, second, or third reading. Amdt.=Amendment. Com.=Committee. Con.=Consideration. Div.=Division. M.=Motion. Rep.=Report. Res.=Resolution. Sec.=Section.

Accountants' Association. See Private Bills.

Achim, Mr. Honoré (Labelle)
Simard, A., account of, 3121.

Acton Vale public building, 8858.

Address in reply to Governor General's Speech, 6, 84, 158, 207, 288, 375, 478.
Amendments proposed: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 41; Mr. Mondou, 570.

Adulteration Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 10281. 2r., 11648. Com., 11648. 3r., 11649.

Advocate, schooner, 1168, 1562.

Agricultural Instruction Bill. Res., 2146. 1r.,2159. 2r., 8061. Com., 8116, 8507. 3r., 8814.
Amendments proposed: Mr. Oliver, 8814; div., 8815. Mr. Bureau, 8816; div., 8818.

Agriculture
Credits, 3124.
Department
Estimates, 6289, 6728, 10257, 10378.
Mailing list, 624.
Encouragement of, 10, 17, 139, 376, 458, 1952, 7464.
Lecturers for Quebec on, 8651.

Aikins, Mr. J. A. M. (Brandon)
Alberta Interurban Railway Company Bill, 8586.
Bank Act Amendment Bill, 82.
Banks and Banking, 10094, 10097, 10119, 10363.
Canada Hail Insurance Company Bill, 3778.
Chairman, acting as, 5816-5875.
Dominion Lands Act Amendment Bill, 1946.
Grain Bill, 9873.
National Transcontinental Railway estimates, 11223.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1171.
Royal Mint, 8672.
Rules of the House, 6353, 7481.
Terminal elevators, 8683.

Alberta
Land sale, 7467.
Natural gas in, 3889, 6419.
Sheep imports, 4062, 4425.

Aldershot camp supplies, 2725, 5155, 6256, 8130, 9213.

Alien Labour Law
Dismissal of inspector, 8121.
Importation of photo-engravers, 7725, 8036, 8227.

Ames, Mr. Herbert B. (Montreal, St. Antoine)
Banking and Commerce Committee, 6250, 8854.
Banks and banking, 10283, 10290.
Budget, 10448
Taxation and revenue, 10448.
Surplus, uses of a, 10452.
Trade of Canada, 10456.
Immigration, 10458.
Tariff revision, 10459.
Cost of living, 10461.
Canada Northwest Loan Company, 7344.
Canadian Explosives, Limited, Bill, 2876.
Dominion Trust Company Bill, 3412.
Independent Order of Foresters Bill, 7342.
National Transcontinental Railway estimates, 11099, 11137.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1292, 9473.
Railway Act Amendment Bill, 9822.

Amherst Point wharf, 1164.

Amherst paving inspector, 1549.

Ammon post office, 11942.

Amundsen, Captain, 4098.

Animal Contagious Diseases Bill. Res. and 1r., 9622. 2r., 9863. Com., 9863. 3r., 9865.

Animals, health of, 6290.

Annuities. See Government Annuities.

Antarctic expedition. See Scott.

Antigonish
Food Inspector, 4059.
Public Works
Estimates, 2371, 2617, 3551, 11972, 12122.
Proposed censure of Minister, 10191-10257.

Antwerp, Canadian agent at, 3035.

Apple trade of Nova Scotia, 6414.

Archives Bill. 1r., 11460. 2r. and com., 11939. 3r., 11941.

Archives estimates, 11540.

Arctic expedition. See Stefansson.

Arisaig postmaster, 2370.

Armouries
Amount expended on, 6232.
List of, 6297.

Armstrong, Mr. J. A. Macdonald (North York)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Macdonald by-election, 179.
Immigration, 180.
Banks and banking, 180.
Naval defence, 181.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3625.

Armstrong, Mr. Joseph E. (East Lambton)
Chairman, acting as, 4628, 5770-5782.
Express rates, 3444.
Highways improvement, 8206.
Judges, increase of, 11641.
Parcel post, 1521, 11827.
Radiotelegraphy, regulation of, 786.
Telegraph service, inter-Imperial, 9031, 11663.

Art. See National Gallery.

Arthabaska post office, 597.

Arthurs, Mr. James (Parry Sound)
Agriculture Department estimates, 10272.
Banks and banking, 10135.
Georgian Bay canal, 2648.
Highways improvement, 8594.
Post Office estimates, 11422.
Public buildings in Quebec, 1161.

Askwith, Sir George, report of, on Industrial Disputes Act, 3184.

Asselin, Olivar, employment of, 592.
Report of, 1951.

Atlantic and Superior railways, 2169.

Atlantic. See North Atlantic, Ocean, and Transatlantic.

Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway, 3891, 6743.

Auditor General, office of, 8033, 9216, 10144.

Automobiles
Purchase of, 1154.
Militia Department, 8132.
Post Office Department, 8126.

Avignon post office, 5153, 6745, 7622.

Aylmer, Quebec, post office, 7811, 8128.

Baie des Chaleurs Railway, 2168.

Baie St. Paul wharf, 11073.

Baillie, John, employment of, 603.

Baker, Mr. George H. (Brome)
Banque Immobilière Bill, 2146.

Ball, Mr. R. J. (South Grey)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Tariff, 198.
Canada, prosperity of, 199.
Cement duty, 202.
Naval defence, 202.

Bank Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 82; 710.

Bank Bill. Res., 1170, 1267. 1r., 1271. 2r., 1841, 2285, 2419. Com., 10082, 10282, 10348. 3r., 10651-10676.
Senate amendments, 11576; div., 11601.

Bank certificates, issue of by Treasury Board, 2210.

Bank notes of Canada, circulation of in United States, 8672.

Banks and banking, 16, 180, 208, 468, 2317, 3124, 6484, 10135. See also Bank Bill.

Banker's Island hospital, 4059.

Banque Internationale, 2199, 4278, 11202.

Bar of House. See Miller.

Barker, Mr. Samuel (East Hamilton)
Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation Bill, 2605.
Canada Permanent Trust Company Bill, 2606.
Canadian Medical Association Bill, 3871.
Chairman, acting as, 5906-5917.
Delvigne, Maurice, patent bill, 11019.
Fenian raid bounty, 6671.
Independent Order of Foresters Bill, 7341.
Intercolonial Trust Company, 3981.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5893, 5906.
Parliamentary procedure: second appeal on one question, 5893.

Barker, Mr. Samuel—Cont.
Railway Companies Incorporation Bill, 8121.

Barnard, Mr. Geo H. (Victoria, B.C.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 159.
By-elections, 160.
Election promises, 160.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8492.

Barry's Bay drowning disaster. See Mayflower.

Bassano public building, 807.

Bathurst letter box service, 6496.

Bay Fortune breakwater, 6259.

Beattie, Mr. Thomas (London)
Port Nelson Company, Limited, 2656, 7185.

Bedford mail service, 2169.

Beland, Hon. H. S. (Beauce)
Agriculture, aid to, 8521.
Berthierville wharf, 2368.
Conservation Commission, 6467.
Customs seizure at Notre Dame des Bois, 620.
Debates, official
French translation, 11963.
Omission of pairs, 8463.
Dismissals
Beauce customs officer, 1504.
Berthier employees, 1953.
Bleriot, postmaster, 634.
Dorchester postmasters, 3420.
St. Anselme postmaster, 635.
St. Frederick postmaster, 634.
St. Gabriel de Brandon mail receiver, 1745.
Dorchester County mail contracts, 619.
Fenian raid veterans, 601, 2614, 9595.
Immigration bonuses, 601.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 8872.
Japanese treaty, 7155.
Lanoraie wharf, 2619.
Mail bag locks, 7214.
Money and coinage, 8358, 8460.
National Transcontinental Railway: employment of Alexander Alexander, 1015.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2533, 2549, 4624, 4807, 5003, 5438, 6032, 5707, 9587, 9708.
New Zealand battle cruiser, 4421.
Panama Canal, 601.
Parliamentary procedure: Friday sitting, validity of after midnight, 5003.
Pilotage commission, 6189, 6498.

Beland, Hon. H. S.—Cont.
Privilege, 6047.
Public Works estimates, 11080.
Quebec harbour loan, 8044.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7827.
St. Gabriel de Brandon property purchase, 2166.
Seven Islands lightkeeper, 9222.
West Indian trade, 601.

Bellemare, Mr. A. (Maskinongé)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: naval defence, 576.
Naval Forces of the Empire, 576, 4213.

Bennett, Mr. R. B. (Calgary)
Banks and banking, 10123, 10368, 11585.
Canadian Accountants' Association, 3839.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4366, 11775, 11786.
Companies Act, 2961.
Experimental farms, 10264.
Freight rates, western, 8965, 8971.
Highways improvement, 11999.
Judges, increase of, 11629.
Lead bounties, 10184.
Natural gas exports, 6428.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3942, 3982, 4775, 5928, 5822, 5907.
North Empire Fire Insurance Bill, 4411.
Parliamentary procedure
Irrelevance, 5822, 5907-5910.
Money grant, amendment of, 5857.
Power, Lenore, divorce bill, 11746.

Bennett, Mr. Wm. H. (East Simcoe)
Canadian Northern railway subsidy, 11773.
Central Railway Company Bill, 2160.
Chairman, acting as, 5928, 5958.
Dredge Industry, 611.
Freight rates, western, 8943.
National Gallery of Canada, 9002.
Naval forces of the Empire, 9527.
North Atlantic rates, 9068.
Power, Lenore, divorce bill, 11745.
Public Works estimates, 11149, 11497.
Trent canal, 11264.
Beresford breakwater, 1737.
Berthierville wharf, 2368.

Best, Mr. John A. (Dufferin)
Fruit marking, 9686.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5725.

Bickerdike, Mr. Robert (Montreal, St. Lawrence)
Cattle embargo, 617.

Biological Board, 3554.

Black Cape East post office, 4424.

Blain, Mr. Richard (Peel)
Agriculture, aid to, 8079.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1979.
Census of Canadian-born and British-born, 3414.
Chairman, acting as, 5277-5283, 5734-5735, 5985-5989, 6026-6041, 6214.
Freight rates, western, 8956.
Parliamentary procedure: appointment of temporary chairman, 6006, 6026-6041.

Blondin, Mr. P. E. (Deputy Speaker)
See also Deputy Speaker, and Chairman's rulings.
Naval forces of the Empire, 9296, 9299.

Boivin, Mr. Geo. H. (Shefford)
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9731.
Dismissal of postmasters, 12095.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11527, 11530, 12109.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1610, 4991, 5005, 5875, 9348, 9580.
Parliamentary procedure: Chairman and French language, 5875, 5877.
Post Office estimates, 11280.
Public Works estimates, 12116.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7605, 9350, 9361, 9580.

Bonaventure
Census enumerators, 2369, 2416.
Government expenditures, 7219.
Patronage, 3416.
Signal station, 10415, 11074.
Weights and measures inspectors, 6744.
Works overseer, 7622, 7623.

Bonaventure river buoys, 11204.

Borden, Rt. Hon. R. L. (Prime Minister)
Accountants' Association, 3977.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cartwright, Sir Richard, the late, 42.
Monk, Hon. F. D., retirement of, 43.
Transportation, 43.
Naval defence, 43, 578.
National Transcontinental Railway, 44.
Cement duty, 45.
Redistribution of representation, 45.
By-elections, 46.
Reciprocity with United States, 47.
Mr. Mondou's amendment, 578.
Antarctic expedition: death of Captain Scott, 3454.
Archives, 11460.
Baldwin, Eugene O., dismissal of, 8032.
Banks and banking, 10, 291, 2298.

Borden, Rt. Hon. R. L.—Cont.
Banque Internationale, 2227.
British Columbia, financial claims of, 6736, 6942.
Brown, Mr. James P., the late, 11461.
Canadian Explosives, Limited, 2578.
Canadian Northern Railway subsidy, 11747. 11793, 11847, 11850, 11853, 11855.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1967.
Cement duty, reduction of, 45.
Civil Service
Commission, 6469.
Murray, Sir George, report of, 1360.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 5622, 6105.
Conservation Commission, 6456, 6721, 9697, 12060.
Debates, official: reporting in committee, 5149.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9766.
Dismissals in Nova Scotia, 917.
Dismissed employees' right to have counsel, 8182.
Farmers Bank: reimbursement of depositors, 12164.
Fenian Raid veterans, 6419.
Georgian Bay Canal Company, 2592.
Gold and silver marking, 3174.
Government Railways Claims Bill, 11905.
Grain Bill, 8682, 9125, 9129.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company bonds, purchase of, 1576.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, loan to, 11861, 11871.
Haggart, Hon. John, death of, 5613, 5632.
High Commissioner's office, 3356, 6452.
Highways improvement, 8188, 8843, 11981.
House of Commons
Ascension Day adjournment, 8739.
Ash Wednesday adjournment, 2656.
Business of the House, 10416.
Christmas adjournment, 1170, 1266.
Committees, select standing, 368.
Easter adjournment, 6047.
Government business, precedence of, 2279, 3181.
Internal Economy Commissioners, 5.
Law branch, 2720, 10412.
Morning sittings, 8739, 9227.
Staff, classification of, 11952.
Wednesday sittings, 2279.
Housing problem and town planning, 12056.
Immigrants, female, protection of, 12166.
Imperial conference of 1911: explanation, 7722.

Borden, Rt. Hon. R. L.—Cont.
Imperial Underwriters Corporation, 4418.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 8554, 8868, 12027.
Estimates, 6752.
Extensions in Nova Scotia, 2003.
Halifax terminals, 6790.
Japanese Treaty, 6497, 6949, 7050, 7138, 7148, 7200.
Letter from Hon. T. Nakamura, 7550.
Justice Department estimates, 12035.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8476, 10834.
Mail bag locks, 6933.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3647, 3733.
Mounted Police, Royal Northwest, 6166, 6474, 12055.
White, Comptroller, retirement of, 6412.
National Transcontinental Railway: extension of time, 3351.
Naturalization in Canada, 7636, 7818.
Naval affairs
Imperial squadron at Gibraltar, 10066.
Policy of Government, 43, 578, 952, 12139.
Naval Aid Bill. On 1r., 676, 1019. On 2r., 3235, 4257. In com.: sec. 1, 4283, 4335; sec. 2, 4458, 4486, 4656, 5160, 5163, 5208, 5270, 5458, 6013, 6030, 6041 (m. to rep. progress), 5638, 5815, 5846, 7223, 7237, 9243, 9275 (m. to postpone); sec. 3, 9314, 9328, 9329 (m. to postpone); sec. 4, 9349, 9374, 9410 (m. to postpone); sec. 5, 9433, 9437 (m. to postpone); sec. 6, 9437, 9443 (m. to postpone). On m. for con., 9445, 9539. On m. to rep., 9573, 9575. Rep., 9590. On m. for 3r., and amdts., 9950, 9957, 9982, 9991, 10026.
Later sittings on, 3546.
North Atlantic rates, 9093.
Ontario Superior Courts Bill, 6640.
Panama canal tolls, 969.
Parliamentary procedure
Adjournment motions, 7844.
Answers of length, 3042, 3119.
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 4826, 6013, 6017.
Irrelevancy, 5815.
Money grant, amendment of, 5832, 5846.
Obstruction, 6043.
Papers, original, production of, 9224.
Questions, notice of, 6878, 7036.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding without notice, 3663.
Returns, copies of, 1563,3124, 4282.
Rules for limitation of debate. See that title.
Speaker resuming chair without committee report, 6162, 6310, 6392.

Borden, Rt. Hon. R. L.—Cont.
Statements of members, acceptance of, 5825.
Parliamentary representation, 45, 6941.
Patents, extension of, 2574, 4317.
Pulp duty in United States, 12137.
Quebec and Saguenay railway, 2190.
Quebec merger, 2184.
Railway Commission, 9693.
Reciprocity with United States, 47.
Redistribution of representation 45.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2989.
Royal Northwest Mounted Police, 717, 886.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7388, 7830, 8240, 9352, 9364, 9446, 9452, 9575.
Russian Canadians sent to Siberia, 7636, 7818, 10067.
Russian immigrants, treatment of, 10955.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6166.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6528.
Schreiber, Mr., salary of, 6455.
Scott, Sir Richard, death of, 8457.
Sheep, purchase and sale of, 649.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6863.
Stefansson arctic expedition, 4167.
Stewart, W. J., salary of, 12057.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11899.
Tuberculosis, Friedmann treatment of, 4169.
Turpentine, purity of, 11649.
West Indian trade agreement, 43, 2121, 8774.
Wolseley, Field Marshal, death of, 6733.

Boulardarie Centre post office, 2616.

Boulard lighthouse keeper, 8858.

Boulay, Mr. H. (Rimouski)
Debates, official
French daily edition of, 11076.
French translation of, 11965.
Experimental farms, 10267.
French, reading of estimates in, 6479.
House of Commons messengers, 2162.
Intercolonial Railway
Dismissals, 933.
Estimates, 12074.
Revenues, 11204.
Trains, speed of, 6802.
Langevin, J. O., employment of, 9221.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10709, 10746.
Militia estimates, 11056.
National Transcontinental Railway, 11251.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4026.
Pilotage Commission, 7637.

Boulay, Mr. H.—Cont.
Post Office estimates, 11375.
Preston, W. T. R., employment of, 2370.
Public Works estimates, 11085.
Quebec immigration officers, 1367.
Railway Commissioner, Chief, salary of, 9935.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10860, 10882, 10890, 10916, 11311.
Rimouski public works, 3041.
St. Lawrence channel buoys, 10413.

Les Boules mail service 10413.

Bounties. See Lead.

Bourassa, Emile, payment of, 6300, 7217.

Bourassa, Mr. J. Boutin (Lévis)
Dismissals
St. Lambert postmaster, 3421.
St. Romuald d'Etchemin postmaster, 3421.
Verrault, Joseph, postmaster, 7626.
Eureka, steamer, chief engineer of, 8655.
Intercolonial Railway
Chaudière Junction employees 11570.
Roadmaster Lavery, 11571.
St. Jean caretaker, 8655.
Sale of papers at Lévis station, 6262.
Lévis
Camp supplies 6261.
Military property 11941.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5013.
Quebec Harbour Commission, 11803.
Seed grain for Quebec, 8650.
Three Rivers mail service, 8654.

Boyce, Mr. A. C. (West Algoma)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Macdonald by-election, 255.
Reciprocity with United States, 259.
Naval defence, 262.
Fruit marking, 9687.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3662.
Naval forces of the Empire, 262, 4727, 4918, 5771.
Parliamentary procedure
Offensive personal references, 5775.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding without notice, 3662.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3313.

Boyer, Mr. Gustave (Vaudreuil)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 135.
Aid to agriculture, 139.
Macdonald by-election, 142.
School question in Manitoba, 147.
Agriculture, aid to, 139, 8519.
Highways improvement, 8529.
Hudson wharf road, 957.
Ile Perrot
Bridge, 11199.
South wharf, 9842.
Naval forces of the Empire, 135, 4535, 5972, 5657.
Rigaud
Arsenal, 7624, 10416.
Post office, 808, 6745, 8131.
Wharf, 11804.
Ste. Justine Mongenais mail contract, 808.
Ste. Marthe postmaster, 809.
Vallée des Erables post office, 1161.
Graham wharf, Vaudreuil, 809.

Boys, Mr. W. A. (South Simcoe)
Power, Lenore, divorce bill, 11742.

Bradbury, Mr. George H. (Selkirk)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Macdonald by-election, 388.
Cement duty, reduction of, 389.
Chairman, acting as, 5724-5728.
Fruit marking, 9678.
Indians, Cote's band of, 8642.
Flags, Use of, Bill, 6.
Grain Bill, 9892.
Highways improvement, 8598.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5724.
Pollution of navigable waters, 6, 8607, 11666.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 9934.
St. Andrew's dam, 11179.

Brandon quarter section, sale of, 7385.

Brennan, V., fishery guardian, 1160.

Bridgewater drill shed, 1164.

Brinston postmaster, 1369.

Bristol, Mr. Edmund (Centre Toronto)
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3364.

British Columbia
Claims of, 6735, 6942.
Fisheries
Decisions respecting, 4064.
Protection service, 3031.
Regulations, 2616.
Public buildings, 6231.
Telegraph lines, 6242.

British trade preference, 2013-2107.

Broder, Mr. Andrew (Dundas)
Highways improvement, 11993.
Immigration, female, 12165.
Post Office estimates, 11272.

Brouillard, Mr. Ovide (Drummond and Arthabaska)
Arthabaska post office, 597.
Dismissals
Arthabaska works overseer, 635.
Bon Conseil postmaster, 811.
Daveluyville postmaster, 811.
Drummondville caretaker, 635.
Ste. Clothilde postmaster, 810.
St. Cyrille de Wendover postmaster, 811.
St. Paul de Chester postmaster, 810.
St. Remi de Pingwick postmaster, 811.
Victoriaville, collector, 636.
Warwick postmistress, 636.
Wickham West postmistress, 636.
Gilbert, Arthur, employment of, 621.

Brown, Mr. James P., death of, 11461.

Brown, Mr. James P. (Chateauguay)
Naval forces of the Empire, 5232.

Buchanan, Mr. William A. (Medicine Hat)
Agriculture credits, 3145.
Alberta
Indian reserve, 622.
Natural gas, 3889, 6419.
Sheep imports, 4062, 4425.
Woolgrowers, protest of, 4062.
Banks and banking, 2440, 10135.
Bassano Government building, 807.
Boards of conciliation, 699.
Burdett, port of entry, 807.
Canadian Northern railway, 4369, 6195.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1972.
Canadian Western Railway Bill, 4410.
Cardston collector of customs, 1017.
Customs estimates, 11544.
Elevators, grain, 2503.
Emigration from Canada, 4428.
Experimental farms, 10265.
Freight rates, western, 8945.
Fruit industry, 9671.
Gleichen customs office, 807.
Grain Bill, 9898.
Grand Trunk Pacific loan, 11863.
Hay and straw grades, 11943.
Homestead entries for women, 3889.
Homesteaders' pre-emption fee. 9840. 11569.
Homesteading in dry belt, 11568.
Indians, estimates for, 11563.
Kootenay Rifles, 1018.
Letter carriers, western, 11920.
Mail bag locks, 7215.

Buchanan, Mr. William A.—Cont.
Medicine Hat
Homestead inspectors, 9220.
Lands agent, 807.
Mail delivery, 2416.
Post offices, 806.
Mounted police, 6476.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4604.
Police Point reserve, 6253.
Pre-emption payments, interest on, 3035.
Railway Commission, 9693.

Buckhorn bridge, 1949, 3553.

Budget, 9624, 10419, 10530.
Delay of, 6435.

Buoys
Contracts, 802, 4427, 5152, 6947.
Supervision of, 6181.
Vessels, construction of, 6221.

Burdett customs port, 807.

Bureau, Mr. Jacques (Three Rivers and St. Maurice)
Accountants' Association, 3784.
Agriculture, aid to, 8524, 8816.
Arcand M., employment of. 8463, 8645, 8741.
Canada Hail Insurance Company, 3779.
Canadian Medical Association, 3882.
Cap de la Madeleine wharf, 1560, 1744.
Estimates in French, 6411.
Experimental farms, 10268.
Forest fires, 6466.
Grand Mere public building, 1018.
Mail bag locks, 7213, 8355.
Minister of Militia and Defence, speech of, 9841.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4655, 5107, 5957.
Patents, renewal of, 4316.
Pointe a Citrouille lighthouse keeper, 6948.
Private secretaries, 6472.
Privilege, 3747, 3932.
Railway Commissioner, Chief, salary of, 9940.
Three Rivers
Letter carrier, dismissal of, 6262.
Public building, 1550, 1744, 9840.
Translators, access of to reading room, 9844.

Burnham, Mr. John H. (Peterborough West)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
By-elections, 118.
French Canadians, rights of, 127.
Banks and banking, 11586.

Burnham, Mr. John H.—Cont.
Buckhorn bridge, 1949, 3553.
Canadian Medical Association, 3842.
Election Act Amendment Bill, 950.
Female immigrants, protection of, 12166.
Floods in the United States, 6624.
German army, increase of, 4482.
Highways improvement, 8593.
Lead bounties, 10154, 10191.
Marriage laws in federal territory, 583.
Militia estimates, 11043.
National Gallery of Canada, 9008.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4680, 4829, 9401.
Old age pensions, 943, 6939, 10527.
Parcel post, 11842.
Public Works estimates, 11505.
Railway subsidies, 11669.
Titles of Honour Bill, 1547.
Trent canal, 11263, 11297.

Burrell, Hon. Martin (Minister of Agriculture)
Agricultural Instruction Bill, 2146, 8061, 8117, 8507, 8814, 8817.
Agriculture, Department of, estimates, 6728, 10258-10278, 10378-10411.
Animal contagious diseases, 9613, 9615, 9620, 9863.
British cattle embargo, 1565.
Conservation Commission, 6467.
Experimental farms, 6289, 10258-10278.
Fruit and vegetables, duty on, 6944.
Fruit marking, 9662, 10082, 10084, 11931.
Highways improvement, 8606.
Japanese treaty, 6991.
Lead bounties, 10190.
Meat inspection, 6290.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5706, 9323, 9996.
Patents, renewal of, 3833.
Pollution of navigable waters, 8631.
Railway subsidies, 11688.
Sheep, purchase and sale of, 648.

Butter, imitation, at Saskatoon, 2831.

By-elections, the recent, 36, 46, 53, 103, 116, 118, 133, 142, 179, 195, 203, 208, 215, 221, 224, 246, 255, 265, 278, 318, 343, 379, 388, 408, 425, 463, 478, 492, 510, 515, 553.

Cabinet changes, rumoured, 4279.

Cable lines, lower St. Lawrence, 6241. See also Radiotelegraphy.

Cable rates to Great Britain, 3031. See also Telegraph.

Campbellton-Gaspé steamship service, 3418, 4420, 7214, 7621.

Canada Grain. See Grain.

Canada Shipping Bill. Res., 787. 1r., 792. 2r., 913. Com., 913. 3r., 1654.

Canadian Biscuit Company, 4423.

Canadian Northern Railway
Subsidy Bill. Res., 11693, 11746. 1r., 11801. 2r., and Com., 11843. 3r., 11847. Div., 11858.
Amdts. proposed on 3r.: Mr. Oliver, 11847; div., 11848. Mr. Macdonald, 11850; div., 11851. Mr. Graham, 11853; div., 11854. Mr. German, 11854; ruled out, 11856; appeal and div., 11856.
Maximum grades, 11572.
Mileage, 11570, 11805.
Payments, 6948.
See also Private Bills.

Canadian Pacific Railway
Control by Railway Commission Bill. 1r., 2415.
Employees' strike, 1957.
Irrigated lands, 4423.
Stock, issue of new, 606, 631.

Cap de Madeleine wharf, 1560, 1744.

Capilano Indian reserve, 8640.

Cardin, Mr. P. J. A. (Richelieu)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: Richelieu by-election, 515.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4697, 5582.
St. Pierre de Sorel, postmaster, 3415.
Ste. Victoire postmistress, 7629.
Sorel workshops, 7889.

Cardston customs collector, 1017.

Carleton
Light keeper, 11075.
Revetment wall, 11073.
Wharfinger, 11075.

Caron, J. E., Quebec Minister of Agriculture, 9341.

Carroll, Mr. W. F. (Cape Breton South)
Accountants' Association, 3784.
Banks and banking, 10095.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1978.
Criminal Code amendments, 11614.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9811.
Dismissals, 846, 1003.
Main-à-Dieu postmistress, 702.
Whitney Pier postmistress, 703.
Fenian raid bounty, 6675.
Government annuities, 9605.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11532.

Carroll, Mr. W. F.—Cont.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1816.
Estimates, 6787.
Lobster canning licenses, 4421, 12054.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10806-10808.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3104, 5724, 9446, 9579, 9987.
New Waterford customs office, 6901.
Photo-engravers, importation of, 7725, 8036, 8227.
Pollution of navigable waters, 8633.
Polson iron works, 8641.
Post Office estimates, 11280.
Power, Lenore, divorce bill, 11741.
Railway mail clerks, 11914.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10909.
Rules for limitation of debate, 8371.
Scaterie Island fog alarm keeper, 631.
Steam trawling, 3340.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6866.

Cars, official private, purchase of, 592, 798, 3175, 6298, 12087.

Carson, A. B., appointment of, 3121.

Cartridges, manufacture of, 6257.

Carvell, Mr. Frank B. (Carleton, N.B.)
Accountants' Association, 3978.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 223.
Macdonald by-election, 224
Mounted police, 232.
West Indian Trade, 234.
Reciprocity with United States, 236.
Agriculture, aid to, 8089, 8116.
Agriculture, Department of, estimates, 10402.
Archives, 11940.
Asselin, Olivar, 592.
Banks and banking, 1269, 1932, 10089, 10104, 10283, 10307, 10354.
Budget
Agricultural implements and the tariff, 10557.
Automobiles, duty on, 10563.
Boots and shoes and the tariff, 10564.
Butter and eggs, imports of, 10567.
Cotton industry, 10554.
Expenditures, increase of, 10534.
British preference, 10536.
Tariff and taxation, 10535, 10574.
United States markets and reciprocity, 10539.
Woollen tariff, 10552.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4399.

Carvell, Mr. Frank B.—Cont.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1957.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6113.
Conservation Commission, 6462.
Criminal Code amendments, 11616.
Customs estimates, 12105.
Dismissals, 834, 848, 8025, 11574.
Divorce court, need of a, 6737, 11740.
Dominion notes, printing of, 6487.
Fenian raid bounty, 6687.
Fisheries in New Brunswick, 12051.
Florenceville, Upper Wicklow, mail service, 8128.
Forest fires in New Brunswick, 6462.
Fredericton
Military grounds, 1555.
Pier washout, 7035.
Land purchase at, 621.
Freight rates, western, 8958.
Fruit marking, 10083, 11930.
Gobeil, Antoine, employment of, 10824.
Gobeil, Joseph, employment of, 10825.
Haggart, Hon. John, death of, 5614.
Highways improvement, 12014, 12091.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4414.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11517.
Japanese Treaty, 7085, 7152.
Judges, salaries of, 8055, 11638.
Laforce, J. E., employment of, 3120.
Landry, A., appointment of, 6583.
La Patrie printing contract, 8125.
Lead bounties, 10149.
Macdonald by-election, 224.
Mail bag locks, 7034, 7212, 7617, 8124, 8356, 8649, 9214, 9595.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10775.
Militia estimates, 6726, 11012, 11024-11063.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3360, 3686.
Montreal
Harbour master, 9841.
Immigration officials, 618.
Post office, 2167.
National Transcontinental Railway
Estimates, 11131, 11206, 11227.
Freight rates on, in New Brunswick, 6815.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3532, 3556, 4286, 4435, 4757, 4997, 5133, 5169, 5935, 5974, 5992, 5638, 5841, 5876, 7357, 9242, 9336, 9438, 9588, 9976 (amdt).
Ontario superior courts, 6630.
Ottawa Government buildings, 6230.
Parliamentary procedure
Chairman and French language, 5876.
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 5878, 6007.

Carvell, Mr. Frank B.—Cont.
Friday sitting, validity of after midnight, 4997.
Money grant, amendment of, 5841, 5859.
Previous question, moving of in committee, 9336.
Questions without notice, 7035.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding without notice, 3360.
Patents, renewal of, 3078, 3353, 4317, 11016, 11020.
Post Office department
Automobile for, 8126.
Law clerk, 8358.
Quebec legal adviser of, 7810.
Privilege, 6050.
Public Works estimates, 11164, 11185, 12118.
Railway subsidies, 11673, 11691, 11843.
Railway works, inter-sessional, 594.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10843, 10856, 10890, 10922.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 764, 1133, 1307, 2954, 3315, 3362.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7492, 8308, 9587.
St. Fabien postmistress, appointment of, 3893.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6168.
St. John and Quebec Railway, 622, 11673, 11691.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6509.
Salmon fishing regulations, 6226.
Southampton Railway Company, 10415.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11877.
United Shoe Machinery Company, 11667.
Volunteer bounty, 8906.
West Indian trade, 334, 905, 8743, 8802.

Cash, Mr. Edward L. (Mackenzie)
Cardinal canal tolls collector, dismissal of, 1744.
Yorkton homestead inspectors, 1018.

Cattle
British embargo on, 610, 1564.
Exports of, 611, 624, 1366.

Cement
Duty, reduction of, 30, 45, 52, 85, 188, 202, 274, 296, 302, 336, 389, 413, 457, 496, 542, 550, 611, 9645, 10605.
Imports, 599, 816.
Purchases, 7382.

Census of Canada, 960, 3414.

Chabot, Mr. John Leo (Ottawa)
Canadian Medical Association, 3402, 3842.

Chairman and Acting Chairman, rulings of Appeal, no second on one question, 5895; appealed from: div., 6024.
Chairman understanding language not that of Speaker not applicable to temporary chairman, 5874.
'Closure,' term applied to action of House unparliamentary, 6036; appealed from, 6039.
Crown grant, purpose of, not changeable, 5854.
Friday sitting, validity of after midnight, 5004.
Irrelevancy, 4473, 4508, 4775, 5824, 5832, 5874, 5880, 5888, 5917.
Merits of bill, on m. for com. to rise, 5868, 5883; appealed from: div., 5869, 5884.
Order of day on m. for com. to rise, 5931; appealed from: div., 5931.
Personal arguments why com. should rise, 5881; appealed from: div., 5882.
Principle of a Bill in com., 5816; appealed from: div., 5817.
Question of, may be raised by member, 5832.
Quoting from previous debate, 5983; appealed from: div., 5984.
Out of order to ask for unobtainable information, 4628.
Point of order debatable only by permission of chair, 4823; appealed from, 4824; ruling reversed, 4825.
Previous question
Not movable in com., 9330.
Not movable on non-debatable motion, 9339; appealed from: div., 9339.
Rules of debate, new, interpretation of, 9362, 9363; appeal: div., 9377, 9571, 9589.
Section regularly before com., 9372; appeal, 9377; div., 9377.
Tedious repetition, 4509, 4515, 5832, 5920.
Undebatable: m. to postpone further con., 9370; appealed from: div., 9370.

Chambly canal, 2723, 10823.

Champagne, A. George, employment of, 10414.

Charlton, Mr. William A. (Norfolk)
National Sanitarium Association, 963.
Naval forces of the Empire, 10054.

Chartered Accountants. See Private Bills.

Chisholm, Mr. Alexander W. (Inverness)
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 6015.

Chisholm, Mr. Alexander W.—Cont.
Fishery advisory board, 3417.
Hants, strike in, 8647.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 1822.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10804-10806, 10813-10815.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5385.
Port Hood harbour, 956, 1734.
Public Works estimates, 11184.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10918.

Chisholm, Mr. William (Antigonish)
Antigonish
Estimates, 2371, 2617, 3551, 11972, 12122.
Food inspector, dismissal of, 4059.
Arisaig postmaster, 2370.
Biological board, 3554.
Crispo, Jeffery M.: complaint, 3416.
Cross Roads-Ohio-James river mail service, 3178.
Dismissals
Intercolonial Railway employees, 9222.
Macdonald, A., 988.
McNeil, Lauchlin, 834.
Postmasters, 12095.
Fenian raid bounty, 7810, 8652.
Fish trawling, 3285, 3329.
Government railways provident fund, 745.
Grosvenor mail service, 10412.
House of Commons Law Branch, 10412, 11969.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11518-11529.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 8873, 8875.
Country Harbour branch, 2416.
Hay transportation, 1015, 3175.
Freight rates, 12066.
Pension fund, 8146.
Judges in Nova Scotia, 11807.
Kentville public building, 3031.
Landry, Adolphe, employment of, 1362.
Linwood mail contract, 605.
Minister of Public Works, proposed censure of, 10192.
Mint, Ottawa, employees wages in, 12113.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4137, 4511, 4899, 6015, 9205, 9234.
Post Office estimates, 11432.
Public Works estimates, 11477, 12115.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11897.
Tracadie lobster hatchery, 962.

Civil Service
Age limit, 800.
Murray, Sir George, report of, 1360, 4469.
Vacancies and appointments, 598.

Clark, Mr. Hugh (North Bruce)
Banks and banking, 10130.
Election Act amendment, 8459.

Clark, Mr. Michael (Red Deer)
Agriculture
Aid to, 8064.
Credits, 3157.
Banks and banking, 2481, 10355, 11587.
Didsbury postmaster, 6752.
Freight rates
Equality of, 10959.
Western, 8950, 10959.
Highways improvement, 11985.
House of Commons staff, classification of, 11954.
Immigration, female, protection of, 12166.
Japanese treaty, 7159.
Lead bounties, 10151, 10163, 10189.
Luncheon with Minister of Militia and Defence—denial, 9950.
Mint, Ottawa, 8672.
Natural gas in Alberta, 6433.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1196, 3999, 4311, 4353, 4478, 4521, 4914, 5278, 5402, 5892, 5961, 5970, 5985, 6021, 7320, 7345, 9387, 9452, 9528.
Parcel post, 1518, 11829.
Parliamentary procedure
Appeal, second on one question, 5892.
Privilege, questions of and personal explanations, 1985.
Post Office estimates, 1138.
Rules for limitation of debate, 8433.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6172.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6869.
West Indian trade, 2020.

Clarke Mr. W. A. (North Wellington)
Customs estimates, 8732.
Highways improvement, 8841.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 9929.

Clements, Mr. Herbert (Comox-Atlin)
Experimental farms, 10265.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6873.

Clocks for public buildings, 7467, 8124, 8462, 9216.

Closure. See Rules.

Coal miners in British Columbia, 12134.

Coal, Welsh, purchases of, 795.

Coast Guard newspaper, 1550.

Coasting trade of Canada, 1561.

Cochrane, Hon. Frank (Minister of Railways and Canals)
Canadian Northern and Quebec Railway, 3410.

Cochrane, Hon. Frank—Cont.
Canadian Northern Railway Bill, 4365.
Canadian Northern Railway subsidy, 11693, 11846.
Freight rates
Equality of, 10970.
Western, 8935.
Government railways provident fund, 719, 721, 729, 777, 8135-8156.
Highways improvement, 949, 8183, 8581, 8591, 8820, 11973, 12091.
Hudson Bay Railway, 10940.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 937, 2001, 8551, 8859, 12024.
Car shortage, 288.
Employees, transfer of, 645.
Estimates, 6753, 12066.
Freight rates, 938.
Halifax terminals, 10896.
Pension fund. See Government railways provident fund.
Running rights over, 157.
National Transcontinental Railway
Estimates, 11099, 11128, 11210-11255.
Operation in New Brunswick, 6936.
Quebec terminals, 12063.
Statement, 6810.
Time, extension of, 3350.
Peterborough lift-lock contract, 156.
Quebec and Saguenay railway, 2190.
Quebec bridge, 11255.
Railway Commission, 9688.
Railway Commissioner, Chief, salary of, 9918.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 7718, 9930.
Railway subsidies, 11669, 11843.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10816, 10844, 10952, 11255-11268, 11294, 11319, 12061-12095.
St. Peters, expropriation of lands at, 977.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11873, 11878.
Toronto terminals, 11073.
Walberg claim, 6343.

Cockshutt, Mr. William F. (Brantford)
Banks and banking, 10139, 10365.
Budget
Condition of working classes, 10500.
Manufacturing in Canada, 10502, 10511.
Tariff and expenditures, 10506.
Imports and exports, 10515.
Imports of agricultural implements, 10518.
Financial outlook of Canada, 10522.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1620, 9481.
Technical Education Commission, 2724.

Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6050; div., 6159.

Coderre, Hon. Louis (Secretary of State)
Archives, public, 11939.
Election charges, 6064.

Coinage, Canadian, 8460.

Cold Storage warehouses, 1558.

Cole Harbour wharf, 3033.

Colonels, honourary, 2174.

Companies Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 150.

Companies, incorporated, 604, 605, 2575, 2700, 2879, 3014, 3023.

Conciliation, boards of, 699.

Conservation Commission, 6456, 6721, 8651, 12056, 12060.

Conservation Commission Bill. Res., 9696. 1r., 9697. 2r., com. and 3r., 9946.

Co-operation. See Agriculture Credits.

Co-operative Credit Societies Bill. 1r., 9039.

Cost of living, 2164, 6442, 6622, 10444, 10468, 10494, 10603, 10620.

Country Harbour postmaster, 8462.

Criminal Code Amendment Bill. 1r., 10,070. 2r. and com., 11603. 3r., 11623. Senate amdts., 12138.

Crocket, Mr. Oswald S. (York, N.B.)
Meek divorce bill, 11740.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3682.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3591, 5883.
Patents, renewal of, 3832.
Power, Lenore, divorce bill, 11743.
Southampton railway, 8121.

Crothers, Hon. Thomas W. (Minister of Labour)
Alberta, natural gas in, 6425.
Alien labour law: dismissal of inspector, 8122. See also Immigration.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1962.
Devereaux, Charlotte, dismissal of, 6711.
Donaldson homestead entry, 7957.
Farmers Bank, 8293.
Forest reserves and parks, 10065, 11649.
Hutchinson, Lois B., bounty for, 10679.
Immigration
Estimates, 11548, 11554, 11562.
Female immigrants, protection of, 12168.
Importation of photo-engravers, 7741.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8489, 10839.
Labour estimates, 12131.
Living, report on cost of, 6622.

Crothers, Hon. Thomas W.—Cont.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3748, 4709, 5431, 5769, 10022.
Offensive personal reference, complaint of, 5770-5775.
Ontario superior courts, 6638.
Railway Belt water powers, 9592, 11921...
Rules for limitation of debate, 8301.
Russian immigrants, treatment of, 11077.
Strikes commission, 6840.
United Shoe Machinery Company, 11668.
Volunteer bounty, 8905, 9941.

Crown lands, sales of, 614.

Cruise, Mr. Robert (Dauphin)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Macdonald election, 203.
Reciprocity with United States, 204.
Freight rates, 205.
Manitoba boundaries, 206.
Banks and banking, 208.
Experimental farm in Dauphin, 6417.
Fishing on Lake Winnipegosis, 6259.
Mail bag locks, 7617.
Manitoba
Separate schools, 206.
Swamp lands, 1888.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4886.
Riding Mountain
Drainage, 6416.
Forest reserve, 6255.

Cumberland postmaster, 1017.

Currie, Mr. John A. (North Simcoe)
Banks and banking, 2317.
Chairman, acting as, 4821-4824, 4826.
Criminal Code amendments, 84.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9739.
Dredging contracts, 6406.
Naturalization Act amendment, 1362.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4299, 5547.
Privilege: wire fencing, 154.
Public Works estimates, 11162.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3385.
Wednesday sittings, 2282.
West Indian trade agreement, 2103.

Customs and Fisheries Protection Bill. 1r., 1097. 2r., 3272. Com., 3280, 3318. 3r., 9845.

Customs
Estimates, 6295, 6881, 8014, 8690, 12105, 11544.
Foreign vessels, importations in, 3416.

Customs Tariff. See Tariff.

Dairy imports and exports, 595.

Davidson, Mr. Avard L. (Annapolis)
Dismissals in Nova Scotia, 1000, 8163.
Fenian raid bounty, 6695.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10789-10795.

Debate, limitation of. See Rules.

Debates, official report of. See House of Commons.

Delisle, Mr. Michel S. (Portneuf)
Conservation Commission, 8651.
Dismissals
Harvey Junction postmaster, 4429.
Portneuf lightkeeper, 2179, 2373, 2374.
Rivière à Pierre postmaster, 633.
St. Marc des Carrières postmaster, 633.
St. Ubade postmaster, 632.
Grondines maritime telephone station, 3892, 7624.
Ice breaking in the St. Lawrence, 808.
Lord, Dr., employment of, 11571.
Minister of Justice, payments to, 8127.
Newville mail service, 619.
Portneuf telephone operators, 6745.
Postal orders tariff, 8653.
St. Bazile mail service, 618.

Demers, Mr. M. Joseph (St. John and Iberville)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Banks and banking, 468.
Canada, prosperity of, 471.
Naval defence, 472.
Banks and banking, 469, 1929.
Chambly canal, 2723.
Champagne, A. George, employment of, 10414.
Dismissals
Ash and Bloody Island lightkeeper, 1953.
Point à la Mule lightkeeper, 638.
St. Jean collector, 635, 7634.
St. Jean lockkeeper, 638.
Naval forces of the Empire, 472, 3200, 4775, 5671.
Noyan customs officers, 620.
Post Office estimates, 11452.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7789.
St. Jean immigration building, 1166.

Deposits in banks and with Government, 1166.

Deputy Speaker (Mr. P. E. Blondin)
See also Blondin, Mr. P. E. and Chairman's Rulings.

Deputy Speaker (Mr. P. E. Blondin)—Cont.
Reading of documents in French, 1120.
Proposed censure of, 9710; div., 9820.

Deschamps, Raoul, employment of, 699.

Desjardins, A., employment of, 2174.

Des Prairies river dredging, 935.

Devereux, Charlotte, Indian school teacher, 612, 6699.

Devlin, Mr. Emmanuel B. (Wright)
Aylmer post office, 7811, 8128.
Georgian Bay canal, 2591, 2621, 9230.
Highways improvement, 12010.
Hull wharf, 585.
Investigations of political partisanship, 2161.
Labouring classes, condition of, 1738.
Living, high cost of, 2165.
Mail bag locks, 7890.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2505, 4633, 4641, 5326, 5967, 5768, 5827, 9546.
Ottawa river dredging, 656.
Parliamentary procedure
Irrelevance, question of, raised by Chair alone, 5827.
Money grant, amendment of, 5839.
Privy Council, Canadian appeals to, 1580.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7674.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6530.
Schooner Advocate, 1562.
South Onslow-Quyon mail service, 6261.
West Indian trade agreement, 2049, 2122.
Wright county post offices, 585.

Diamond Light and Heating Company. See Miller.

Dickin, George, homestead inspector, 1161.

Digby customs official, 8654.

Dismissals
Abel, P., lightkeeper, 8858.
Alain, J., postmaster, 11573.
Alameda postmaster, 657 (i)
Aldershot camp caretaker, 5155.
Allaire, Dr., 944.
Andover preventive officer, 634.
Anse aux Gascons wharfinger, 10529.
Arthabaska overseer of works, 635.
Ash Island lightkeeper, 1953.
Astephen, A., emigration inspector, 3422.
Aultsville postmaster, 1368.
Barrington fishery inspector, 1160.
Barss, A., postmaster, 7811.
Bayfield, H. A., captain of dredge, 3030.
Beauce customs official, 1504.
Bellemare, W., postmaster, 4429.
Bergeron, C., postmaster, 9222.

Dismissals—Cont.
Beyter, D., lightkeeper, 8640.
Bezanson, J., postmaster, 3179.
Bleriot postmaster, 634.
Boulardarie postmaster, 2616.
Bourdages, P. B., lightkeeper, 7628.
Bourgeois river lighthouse keeper, 1500.
Bourk, Lt. Col., mail clerk, 1745.
Bourque, A., Bonaventure marine employee, 7628.
Brennan, J. F., lockmaster, 8656.
Bujold, L., lightkeeper, 7627.
Burriss, R. A., immigration agent, 810.
Cacouna Indian agent, 1746.
Cape Traverse postmaster, 1501.
Cardinal canal toll collector, 1744.
Caribou Island lightkeeper, 640.
Chiasson, Edouard, customs collector, 8726.
Chisholm, D., customs official, 4059.
Cleroux, A., immigration agent, 7386.
Coaticook customs collector, 8018.
Coleraine postmistress, 2179.
Contrecœur postmaster, 3893.
Descouse and West Arichat, 818, 917, 3746, 3933, 4064, 6540.
Deseve, A. L., fishery overseer, 11574.
Devereux, Charlotte, Indian school teacher, 612, 6699.
Didsbury postmaster, 6752.
Disraeli postmaster, 637.
Doctor's Brook sub-collector, 988.
Dorchester county postmasters, 3420.
Doré, F., lightkeeper, 8858.
Douglas, Howard, superintendent of Dominion parks, 957, 3894, 7220.
Drummondville public building caretaker, 635.
Dunn, Albert, engineer, 7221.
East Mountain Lake fishery inspector, 1954.
Ehler, W. E., lightkeeper, 8133.
Fafard, J. E., 1953.
Farran's Point postmaster, 1369.
Fraser, A., postmaster, 12095.
Fruit inspectors, 2619.
Gallant, J. J. D., lighthouse keeper, 3179.
Gallant, P. P., fishery overseer, 3028.
Gendron, E., lightkeeper, 3890.
Giffin C. G., fishery officer, 959.
Grondines lightkeeper, 2373.
Guysborough fishery officer, 631.
Half Island Cove postmaster, 700.
Hanley
Land agent, 7220.
Postmaster, 7220.
Herbertville postmaster, 2178.

Dismissals—Cont.
Heckey, R., immigration agent, 3422.
Hilford fishery overseer, 639.
Hobema Indian agent, 639.
Inman, C. R., immigration inspector, 1162.
Intercolonial railway employees, 933, 2162, 3038, 7387, 8655, 9222.
Irish, F. R., postmaster, 12095.
Joliette
Arsenal keeper, 1555.
Customs official, 1502.
Postmasters, 2373.
Kingsborough postmaster, 6259.
Habillois, Alex., postmaster, 7627.
Labour Gazette correspondents, 805.
Lacroix, E., postmaster, 7221.
Lancups postmaster, 3894.
Landry, J. E., lightkeeper, 8133.
Landry. See Descouse.
Lanigan, Martin, postmaster, 940, 6736, 7632, 11808.
Larry's River preventive officer, 8733.
Lavoie, Calixte, postmaster, 811.
Leclerc, L. P., postmaster, 811.
Lions, V., dredge captain, 2620.
L'Islet postmasters, 1745, 1746, 3037.
Livingstone, G., New Campbellton customs officer, 2617.
Lotbinière county, 816, 9215.
Macdonald, Gordon, homestead inspector, 810.
MacKenzie, J. B., fire ranger, 9344.
MacKenzie, J. B., fruit inspector, 9842.
McDonald, Duncan, customs officer, 812.
McGraw, B., lightkeeper, 8655.
McLean, J. W., medical officer, 3422.
McLellan, J. A. L., lightkeeper, 12163.
McNeil, Lauchlin, postmaster, 834.
Main à dieu postmistress, 702.
Malpeque customs collector, 1501.
Marcotte, Madame, postmistress, 7627.
Marcotte, Omer, postmaster, 811.
Middle Country Harbour postmaster, 701.
Morrow, J., customs collector, 8132.
Mulgrave preventive officer, 639.
Munro, W. L., 10687-10703.
Nadeau, E., immigration agent, 9344.
Niobe, H. M. C. S., 8226.
Normandin postmaster, 2178.
North Sydney
Immigration agents, 3422.
Medical examiner, 3422.
Oxford customs collector, 712, 978.
Paquin, Ernest, postmaster, 939.
Pelletier, J. H., engineer, 933.
Pelletier, Odilon, excise officer, 809.

Dismissals—Cont.
Petite de Grat preventive officer, 6902.
Pettit, W. V., postmaster, 7891.
Phee, J., lighthousekeeper, 3180.
Pilot of steamer Earl Grey, 641.
Point à la Mule lightkeeper, 638.
Pointe A. Citrouille lighthouse keeper, 6948.
Port Daniel fishery overseer, 7221.
Port Felix lightkeeper, 9949.
Portneuf lightkeeper, 2179.
Portneuf telephone operators, 6745.
Postmasters in Maritime provinces, 9609.
Potvin, Pierre, postmaster, 811.
Pouliot, Mr., mail carrier, 3037.
Preventive officers in Quebec, 710.
Printing Bureau employees, 7222, 7383.
Quebec
Customs officer, 6263.
Medical examiner, 6262, 6263.
Radstock mail receiver, 1502.
Regina homestead inspector, 1954.
Richards, Stephen, 10770.
Rimouski
Government employees, 2178, 2179, 3041.
Lightkeeper, 2620.
Postmaster, 2373.
Rivière à Pierre postmaster, 633.
Rouleau, George, postmaster, 810.
Rousseau, Napoleon, postmaster, 810.
Royal Military College employees, 632.
Rutherford, John, forest ranger, 622.
St. Anselme postmaster, 635.
St. Ferdinand de Beaurivage postmaster, 702.
St. Fortunat postmaster, 637.
St. François Xavier de Brampton postmaster, 636.
St. Frederic postmaster, 634.
St. Gabriel de Brandon mail receiver, 1745.
St. Gervais postmaster, 702.
St. Henri de Lévis postmaster, 3420.
St. Henri de Taillon postmaster, 2178.
St. Jean
Inland revenue collector, 635.
Lockkeeper, 638.
Mail carrier, 3894.
St. Lambert de Lévis postmaster, 3421.
St. Leonard, N.B., immigration agent, 11204.
St. Marc des Carrières postmaster, 633.
St. Romuald d'Etchemin postmaster, 3421.
St. Ubalde postmaster, 632.
Ste. Victoire postmistress, 7629.
Salmon River Indian teacher, 612, 6699.

Dismissals—Cont.
Saskatoon Dominion lands clerk, 6263, 6746.
Seven Islands fishery overseer, 9843.
Sherbrooke customs appraiser, 638, 6896, 6899.
Sintaluta postmaster, 10413.
Slack, W. F., clerk of works, Ottawa, 3037.
Sonora postmaster, 701.
Sorel shipyards, 953, 1370.
Standen, J. R., postmaster, 11574.
Stormont, N.S., postmaster, 632.
Stratford Centre postmaster, 637.
Terrebonne postmaster, 617.
Thibadeau, L., postmaster, 11573.
Three Rivers letter carrier, 6262.
Tignish
Customs officer, 1501.
Light keeper, 3180.
Postmaster, 1502.
Tracadie Road postmaster, 701.
Trenton inland revenue officer, 1500.
Trois Saumons lightkeeper, 1745.
Vaudreuil county postmasters, 1954.
Verrault, Joseph, postmaster, 7626.
Victoriaville excise collector, 636.
Viel, J., postmaster, 4429.
Warwick postmistress, 636.
Webber, J. M., lightkeeper, 7811.
Webster, Dr., port physician, 3894, 10796.
Wendover wharfinger, 629.
West Arichat, 818, 917.
White, J., postmaster, 3551, 3555.
Whitney Pier postmistress, 703.
Wickham West postmistress, 636.
Winchester postmaster, 1369.
Yukon officials, 2177.

Disraeli
Property, option on, 8131.
Public buildings, 6742.

Ditching machinery, duty on, 6441, 6642.

Divorce court, need of, 6737, 11740.

Doherty, Hon. C. J., payments to, 8127.

Doherty, Hon. C. J. (Minister of Justice)
Accountants' Association, 3835.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6065.
Criminal Code amendments, 10070, 11604, 11611.
Customs and Fisheries Protection Act, 3299.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9788.
Dominion Police, 8034, 8564.
Exchequer court, patent appeals in, 1838, 3351, 8051.

Doherty, Hon. C. J.—Cont.
Judges, additional, 11624, 11806, 11926.
Justice Department estimates, 6280, 10973-11011.
Landry, Leon N., dismissal of, 3746, 3933, 6571.
Law Lords in Great Britain, appointment of, 7818, 8060.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3715.
Naturalization, uniform British, 2386, 9347.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5849, 5878.
Ontario superior courts, 6305, 6626.
Pardon of convicts: confidential papers, 919, 3746.
Parliamentary procedure: Chairman and French language, 5878.
Pelagic sealing bill, 11321.
Penitentiary Act amendment, 11330-11345.
Prisons Act amendment, 10953.
Privy Council, Judicial Com. of, 7818, 8060, 9834.
Reprieve of prisoners, 1839.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7441.
Russian Canadians sent to Siberia, 7813.
St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary dismissals, 945.
Supreme Court Act amendment, 8057, 8568, 9822, 9826, 9834.
Supreme Court Registrar's salary, 8052.
Waterloo county deputy judge, 6288.

Dominion Lands Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 1946.

Dominion Northwestern Railway Company Bill. 1r., 1547. 2r., 1875. Com., 3400. 3r., 3401. Senate amdts., 6197.

Dominion notes, printing of, 6486.

Dominion Police Bill. 1r., 8034. 2r., 8564. Com., 8564. 3r., 8568.

Donaldson homestead entry, 2720, 3264, 3745, 7805, 7892 (proposed censure of Hon. Robert Rogers), 8012 (div.), 8226, 8360, 8465, 8859.

Doncaster Indian reserve, 4422.

Donnelly, Mr. James J. (South Bruce)
Banks and banking, 10141.
British cattle embargo, 1564.

Doors, imports of from United States, 2172.

Dorchester county mail service, 619.

Dorsett, W. E., investigating commissioner, 1159.

Douglas, Mr. J. M. (Strathcona)
Banks and banking, 2357, 10293.
Canadian Pacific Railway freight rates, 11572.

Douglas, Mr. J. M.—Cont.
Fenian raid bounty, 2614.
Fruit industry, 9673.
Justice Department estimates: penitentiaries, 11006.
Militia estimates, 11029.
Moosejaw immigration building, 11200.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4737.
Orange, George, 2373.
Winchester postmaster, dismissal of, 1369.

Dredges and Dredging
Cape Breton, 698, 1550.
Industry, 611.
Little Passage, 7468.
Miramichi river, 587.
Prince Edward Island, 8653, 9840.
Restigouche, 6743.
Rideau canal, 6249.
St. John, 6207.
Yarmouth, 3033.

Dry Docks, 586, 705, 1290, 1361, 1406. See also Port Arthur.

Duchemin, H. P., payments to, 1016, 7811, 8130, 8462.

Dugal, G. A., employment of, 3887, 4058.

Dullman, release of, 6610.

Dumping clause, 594.

Dussault, G. A., employment of, 3418.

Du Vernet, Dr., appointment of, 8460.

Earl Grey steamer, 3035.

East River, deepening of, 653, 4060, 6229, 6735.

Edmonton
Customs collector, 1018.
Public buildings, 6231.

Edwards, Mr. John W. (Frontenac)
Agriculture, aid to, 8098, 8508.
Budget, 10575
Farmers and the tariff, 10577.
The Liberal party and tariff reduction, 10583.
Liberal pledges, 10587.
Canada's export and import trade, 10591.
Tariff commission, 10594.
The duty on farm implements, 10594.
Canadian Medical Association, 3846, 3865.
Dismissals and appointments, 6607, 8021.
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6658.
Experimental farms, 10271.
Fenian raid bounty, 6677.
Highways improvement, 8546, 8605, 8827.
Hughes, Major W. S., appointment of, 3177.

Edwards, Mr. John W.—Cont.
Milk tests, 8076.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1492, 1582, 4512, 4668, 4712, 5480, 5707, 9454.
Opposition leader, salary of, 8358.
Penitentiaries estimates, 10976, 10989.
Pollution of navigable waters, 8633.
Portsmouth penitentiary, 1156, 1157, 3176.
South African war scrip, 8918.
West Indian trade agreement, 2069.

Election Act Amendment Bills. 1r., 84, 950, 8459.

Emigration from Canada, 4428.

Emmerson, Hon. H. R. (Westmorland)
Accountants' Association, 3836.
Ammon post office, 11942.
Banks and banking, 1271, 2419, 10107, 10314, 10320, 10348, 10351, 10670.
Brazilian Traction and Power Company, 3014.
Canadian Medical Protective Association, 3403, 3842.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4397.
Carson, A. B., appointment of, 3121.
Express rates, 3423.
Foresters, Independent Order of, 7180.
Freight rates, western, 8983.
Fur farming, 2177, 2370.
Gaspereaux river fisheries, 12048.
Gatros wharf, 3178.
Government railways provident fund, 720, 724, 731.
Gutelius, T. P., employment of, 8131.
Hay, free transportation of, 703, 886.
High Commissioner's office, 6452.
Highways improvement, 12016.
Rules for limitation of debate, 8386.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 834, 1746, 1949, 1990, 1949, 3122, 3552, 8860.
Cars and locomotives, 2165.
Dorchester spur line, 2164.
Estimates, 6752, 12068.
Gas plant, 3123.
Kindling wood, 958.
Linoleum purchase, 3417.
Management, 630, 1157, 6839, 6876.
Mail facilities, 6293.
Ocean limited train, 1366.
Pension fund, 8145.
Running rights over, 157.
Sackville wharf, 3548.
Train ticket agents, 2166.
Winter clothes for employees, 2722.
Japanese treaty, 7175, 7188.
Judges, additional, 11642.

Emmerson, Hon. H. R.—Cont.
Lanigan, Martin, dismissal of, 940, 7632.
Life-saving stations, 6201.
Macdougall, C. B., case of, 6604.
Mail bag locks, 7214, 8355.
National Transcontinental Railway: Moncton-Edmundston division, 1950.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4171, 4502, 5122, 5335, 5987, 6010, 5880, 5897.
North Atlantic rates, 9091.
Parliamentary procedure
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 6010.
Irrelevancy, 5881, 5882.
Returns, notification of, 3124.
Speaker resuming chair without committee report, 6161, 6306.
Privilege, 696, 1946.
Privy Council decisions, 1580.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 7722.
Registered letters, the rate on, 11914.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2983, 3366.
Richibucto wharf, 9220.
Rules of the House, 6161, 6306.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6171.
Shediac fishery overseer, dismissal of, 3028.
West Indian trade agreement, 2079, 2119.

Erinville post office, 7616.

Escuminac River post office, 4424.

Esquimalt dry dock, 8641.

Estimates. See titles of departments.

Ethier, Mr. Joseph A. C. (Two Mountains)
Lacroix, E., postmaster, dismissal of, 7221.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4852, 9475.
Privilege, 6047.

Eureka chief engineer, 8655.

Exchequer Court Bill. 1r., 1838. 2r., 3351. Com., 3352. 3r., 3355. Senate amdts., 8051.

Experimental farms, 2171, 6417, 7386, 7808, 8651, 10258.

Express rates, 3423, 6256, 9343.

External Affairs, department of, 3356, 6456.

Fairville post office, 3034.

Farm Weeds, distribution of, 624.

Farmers Bank, 629, 803, 2725, 6734, 12164.

Farnham military camp, 3890.

Fenian raid veterans, 612, 625, 700, 801, 1741, 2171, 2614, 6418, 6509, 6659, 6726, 7219, 7810, 8652, 9595.

Financial Statement. See Budget.

Finance Department estimates, 6480-6496.

Fisheries
Advisory Board, 603, 3122, 3417, 10818.
Bounty, 8461.
Exhibit at Toronto exhibition, 10818.
Fighting Island, rights on, 2724, 3036.
Fisher, Ward, inspector, 1164.
Lobsters
Canning licenses, 4421.
Fishing licenses, 9950.
Hatcheries, 627, 628, 806, 7216, 9950, 10816.
Packers, 4427.
Licenses to Japanese, 1165.
Mowat, M. M., appointment of, 7219.
Oyster culture, 10814.
Protection of, 6222, 6507, 10815, 12046. See also Customs and Fisheries Protection Bill.
Regulations, 8127. See also British Columbia.
Winnipegosis lake, 6259.

Flags, use of, Bill. 1r., 6.

Floods in the United States, 6624.

Fore river shipyard, 4290, 4328.

Foreign vessels, sale of goods from, 3416.

Foresters, Independent Order of, Bill. 1r., 949. 2r., 1310. Com., 7178, 7337. 3r., 7337.

Forest Reserves and Parks Bill. 1r., 10064. 2r. and com., 11649. 3r., 11655.

Forget, Sir Rodolphe (Charlevoix)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: Richelieu by-election, 478.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2992.

Fortier, Mr. Edmond (Lotbinière)
Bergeron, C., dismissal of, 9222.
Boulard lightkeeper, 8858.
Dismissals in Lotbinière county, 816, 8858.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5552.
Post offices in Lotbinière county, 9215.
Public Works estimates, 12130.
Seed grain for Quebec, 8649.
Wharf construction, 8858.

Fort Lawrence dredging inspector, 1549.

Foster, Mr. Arthur De Witt (King's, N.S.)
Animals, health of, 10406.
Fisheries, protection of, 12046.
Fruit growing, 9675.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10776-10785, 12046.

Foster, Mr. Arthur De Witt—Cont.
Militia camp supplies, 9213.
Minister of Public Works, proposed censure of, 10239.

Foster, Hon. George E. (Minister of Trade and Commerce)
Grain traffic diversion, 2505.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1371.
Ocean freight rates, 2504.
West Indian trade agreement, 890, 2012, 2111.

Fournier, H., employment of, 1740.

Fowler, Mr. George W. (King's and Albert)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cement duty, 336.
Redistribution of representation, 337.
Transportation, 337.
St. John improvements, 337.
Trade of Canada, 339.
By-elections, 343.
Naval defence, 350.
Reciprocity with United States, 339, 351.
Auditor General's office, 9216, 10144.
Judges in New Brunswick, 11639.

France, Canadian flotations in, 1953.

Fredericton
Land purchase, 621.
Military grounds, 1555.
Pier washout, 7035.

Freight rates
Equality of, 10955; div., 10972.
Ocean, 1561, 2504, 9040.
Western, 1496, 6255, 8923, 11572, 11782.

French Canadians
Repatriation of, 3032, 3123.
Rights of, 127.

French investments in Canada, 2180.

Friedmann treatment for tuberculosis. See Tuberculosis.

Fripp, Mr. Alfred E. (Ottawa)
Criminal Code amendments, 11608.
Naval forces of the Empire, 9517.
Ottawa City water supply, 8550, 8629, 8640.
Public Works estimates, 11487.

Fruit
Industry, 2279.
Inspectors, dismissal of, 2619.
Tariff on, 6943.

Fruit Marking Bill. Res., 9662. 1r., 9687. 2r. and com., 10081, 11927. 3r., 11939.

Fur farming, 2177, 2370.

Garland, Mr. William F. (Carleton, O.)
McGrath, E. A., employment of, 7386.
Printing Bureau, re-organization of, 7808.
Public Service Commission, 7808.

Gaspé
Railway facilities, 1777, 1793, 8555, 8880.
Steamship service, 3418, 4420, 7212, 7621.

Gatros wharf, 3178.

Gauthier, Mr. Louis J. (St. Hyacinthe)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Monk, Hon. F. D., resignation of, 113.
Naval defence, 115.
By-elections, 116.
Bourassa, Emile, 7217.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 5621, 6050, 6156.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1716, 4630, 5536, 5911.
Privilege, 5150, 5621, 6050.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7879.

Gauthier, Mr. Louis P. (Gaspé)
Ile-aux-œufs lightkeeper, 9220.

Gauvreau, Charles A. (Temiscouata)
Agriculture, aid to, 8104.
Amqui mail contract, 3037
Dismissals
Cacouna Indian agent, 1746.
L'Islet postmasters, 1745.
Pointe Rivière du Loup postmaster, 4429.
Port Joli lighthouse keeper, 1745.
Rimouski lighthouse keeper, 2620.
Rivière du Loup railroad engineer, 933.
St. Roch des Aulnaies excise officer, 809.
Village des Aulnaies postmaster, 1746.
Dugal, Alphonse G., employment of, 3887, 4058.
Fenian Raid veterans, 1741.
Fraserville harbour works, 1019.
Highways improvement, 8840.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11533.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 2172, 8870.
Cacouna water tank, 8358.
Estimates, 6807.
Ice contract, 1742.
Operating rules, 8645.
Sunday observance on, 8131.
Tobin branch, 8640.
Isle Verte
Mail service, 4427.
Wharf, 1743.
Laferriére, J. Alban, employment of, 3550.
L'Etoile, Joseph, investigation, 2162.

Gauvreau, Mr. Charles A.—Cont.
L'Islet
Post offices, 1740.
Preventive officers, 2170.
Wharf, 1739.
Mail bag locks, 7618.
Marine affairs at St. Roch, 804.
Militia, 4426, 5154.
Morin, David, employment of, 1740.
Morin, Joseph, employment of, 2615.
National Transcontinental Railway—Esdras Morin, 955.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4182, 4757, 9284.
North Sydney public building, 3550.
Parcel post, 11838.
Post office estimates, 11349.
Quebec Central railway, 1739.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10906.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3397.
St. Eloi mails, 1019.
St. Patrice and Notre Dame du Portage mail service, 3415.
St. Roch des Aulnaies
Government lightship, 953.
Preventive officer, 2615.
Seed grain petitions, 4278.
Temiscouata
Veterans, 700.
Public works, 11804.
Trois Pistoles breakwater, 11200.
Tuberculosis, Friedmann treatment for, 1556.

Georgian Bay Canal, 1154, 2621, 3074, 9230.
See also Montreal.

German, Mr. William M. (Welland)
Banks and banking, 1268, 2475.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4405, 11758, 11791, 11845.
Conservation Commission, 6458.
County court judges, 6280.
Criminal Code amendments, 11605.
Dominion notes, printing of, 6488.
Dullman, case of, 6610.
Fisheries patrol service, 6223, 6507.
Fruit marking, 10085.
Geological Museum building, 6234.
Highways improvement, 8223, 11996.
Hudson Bay Railway, 10942.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 8561.
Japanese treaty, 7021.
Judges, additional, 11806.
Militia estimates, 11029.
Natural gas exports, 6425.

German, Mr. William M.—Cont.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1305, 1311, 3505, 4332, 4457, 4512, 4516, 5101, 5275, 5604, 9138 (amdt.), 9276, 9316, 9389, 9410, 9584, 9951, 9957 (amdt.), 9984.
New Westminster Harbour Commission, 2545.
Ottawa government buildings, 6230.
Peace centenary conference, 11943.
Picton postmaster, 7891.
Post Office estimates, 11423-11429.
Privy Council, Canadian appeals, 9826.
Public Works estimates, 11079, 11485-11490, 11503.
Railways and Canals estimates, 11302, 11311.
Railway subsidies, 11685.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7568.
Supreme Court Amendment Bill, 9826.
Welland Canal construction, 934, 6525.
West Indian trade agreement, 2094.

Gilbert, Arthur, employment of, 621.

Girard, Mr. Joseph (Chicoutimi and Saguenay)
Agriculture, aid to, 8105.

Gleichen customs office, 807.

Gobeil, Antoine, employment of, 10824.

Gobeil, Joseph, employment of, 10825.

Gold and Silver Marking Bill. 1r., 3174. 2r., 8674. Com., 8674. 3r., 8742.

Gold production in Canada, 8668.

Good Roads. See Highways.

Goulman's Point breakwater, 4424.

Government Annuities Bill. Res., 9596. 1r., 9613. 2r., 9845. Com., 9845. 3r., 10069.

Government Railways Claims Bill. 1r., 2108, 9233. 2r. and Com., 11905. 3r., 11906.

Government Railways Provident Fund Bill. Res., 719. 1r., 777. 2r., 8135. Com., 8136. 3r., 8183.

Government Savings Banks, 6481.

Government steamers
Contracts for, 582, 797.
Eureka, 8655.
Pictou, at, 8354.
Supplies, purchase of, 6174.
Wages of officers, 6260

Graham, Hon. Geo. P. (South Renfrew)
Adulteration Act amendment, 11648.
Agriculture
Aid to, 8509.

Graham, Hon. Geo. P.—Cont.
Estimates, 10384.
Experimental farms, 10260, 10270.
Banks and banking, 6484.
Brockville and Grand Trunk Railway terminals, 6248.
Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company, 3405.
Canada Northwest Loan Company, 7344.
Canadian Medical Association, 3885.
Canadian Northern Branch Lines Company, 3406.
Canadian Northern Railway Bill, 4362, 8458.
Canadian Northern Railway subsidy, 11731, 11843, 11746, 11794, 11843, 11854.
Canadian Northern and Quebec Railway Company, 3410.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1969.
Civil Service Commission, 6471.
Conservation Commission, 6456.
Dismissals
Brinston postmaster, 1369.
Morrow, Jno., 8132.
Foresters, Independent Order of, 1310.
Freight rates. See Ocean and Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company.
Government annuities, 9605, 9848.
Government railways provident fund, 771, 8135.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, purchase of, 1570.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway loan, 11800, 11860.
Highways improvement, 8200, 8846, 11991.
House of Commons
Business, expedition of, 12132.
Staff, classification of, 11953.
Hudson Bay Railway, 623, 10947.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1826, 8551, 8868, 12031.
Estimates, 6807, 12087.
Pensions, 8135.
Japanese treaty, 7057.
Justice Department estimates, 12037.
Level railway crossings, 623.
Little Current lighthouse, 8640.
Mayflower disaster, 2374, 7037.
Militia estimates, 11026, 11070.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3649.
Mounted Police estimates, 6412.
National Gallery of Canada, 9836.
National Transcontinental Railway
M. Balkam, C. E., employment of, 7891.
Estimates, 11100, 11226, 11240.
Investigation commission, 623.
Works, 6251.
Yards and divisional points, 6252.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1067, 4476, 4950, 5515, 5824, 5383, 5912, 6040, 6045, 9324, 9364, 9435, 10041.
Ocean freight rates, 11665.
Ontario superior courts, 6637.
Parliamentary procedure
Adjournment motions, 7846.
Money grant, amendment of, 5853.
Notice, sufficiency of, 7693.
Questions, answering of, 3888.
Statements of members, acceptance of, 5824.
Patents, renewal of, 3833.
Personal explanation, 704.
Public Works estimates, 11078, 11148, 11170, 11174, 11483.
Quebec bridge, 11256.
Railway accidents, 6173.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 7718, 9923, 9930, 9932.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10846-10860, 10886, 10899-10953, 11294-11319.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 1309, 3388.
Rideau canal lightkeeper, 8655.
Rideau Hall improvements, 6233.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7693, 7695, 7846, 8286, 9364.
Rural mail boxes, 6938, 7038.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6534.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario subsidy, 11802, 11873, 11895.
Walberg, claim, 6242.
West Indian trade agreement, 2100.

Graham wharf, 809.

Grain Bill. Res., 8678, 9109. 1r., 9134. 2r., and Com., 9866. 3r., 9918.

Grain
Commissioners, 6270.
Elevators, internal, 2503.
Imports and exports, 595.
Traffic diversion, 2504.

Grand Mere public building, 1018.

Grand Rivière wharf, 2173.

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway
Atlantic seaport, 799, 1160.
Montreal, connection with, 933.
New Hazleton station site, 1365.
Regina mail service, 1953.
Saskatchewan river bridges, 6742.

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bill. 1r., 477. 2r., 764. Com. and 3r., 2146.

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Bonds Purchase Bill. Res., 1566. 1r., 1582. 2r., and 3r., 1840.

Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Loan Bill. Res., 11798. 1r., 11801. 2r. and Com., 11860. 3r., 11872.
See also Private Bills.

Grand Trunk Railway
Directors, 602.
New England extension, 2175.

Gray, Ambrose, employment of, 11572.

Green, Mr. Robert F. (Kootenay)
Fruit marking, 9676.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4414.
Lead bounties, 10147, 10155.

Grondines telephone station, 3892, 7624.

Grosse Isle lighthouse, 616.

Guilbault, Mr. Joseph B. O. (Joliette)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: Naval defence, 576.
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, 2110.
Joliette postmasters, 2373.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3260 (amdt.), 3896, 10024.

Gunhild steamer purchase, 1741.

Gutelius, F. P., employment of, 605, 6813, 8131.

Guthrie, Mr. Hugh (South Wellington)
Agriculture, aid to, 8510.
Banks and banking, 2361, 10136.
County court judges, 6281.
Customs estimates, 8699, 8707, 8723, 8730.
Fenian Rail bounty, 6665.
Foresters, Independent Order of, 7178, 7343.
Highways improvement, 8589. 8820.
House of Commons staff classification, 11954.
Japanese treaty, 7140.
Judges, superior court, 6627.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8486.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3707.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1404, 1407, 4700, 5845, 5856 (amdt.), 9319, 9368, 9521.
Parliamentary procedure
Money grant, amendment of, 5845, 5859.
Previous question, moving of in committee, 9334.
Patents, renewal of, 4316.
Photo-engravers, importation of, 7751.
Rules of the House, 6324, 8251, 9368.

Guthrie, Mr. Hugh—Cont.
Sheep, purchase and sale of, 651.
Tariff, customs, 6448.
West Indian trade agreement, 2082.

Guysborough
Buoy contractors, 4427.
Customs officials, 8857.
Fish trap licenses, 626.
Fishery guardians, 1498.
Lobster packers, 4427.

Gypsum products, importation of, 2174.

Haggart, Hon. John, death of, 5612, 5632.

Halifax
Dockyard, 1554.
Harbour, navigation of, 6806.
Terminals, 603, 6790, 10893.

Hansard. See House of Commons Debates.

Hants county strike, 8647.

Harbour au Boucher customs sub-collector, 3416.

Harbours, federal control of, 2583.

Hay, free transportation of, 703, 1015, 2656, 3038, 3175, 10208.

Hay and Straw grades, 11943.

Hazen, Hon. J. D. (Minister of Marine and Fisheries)
British Columbia fisheries decisions, 4065.
Buoys
Contract, 924.
Service, 6185.
Supervision, 6181.
Vessels, construction of, 6221.
Canada Shipping Bill, 787, 913.
Canadian Medical Association, 3849.
Companies Act, 2886.
Conservation Commission, 6461.
Criminal Code amendments, 12138.
Customs and Fisheries protection, 1097, 3272, 3280, 3318.
Dismissals in Cape Breton, 830, 855, 6560.
Dry dock Duke of Connaught, 705.
Fisheries
Exhibit at Toronto exhibition, 10816.
Hatcheries, 10817, 10819.
Oyster culture, 10814.
Protection service, 6222, 6508, 10815. See also Customs and Fisheries.
Trawling, 3281, 3345.
Foreign fishing vessels in Canadian waters, 949.
Forest fires, prevention of, 6462.
Ice breaking in Great Lakes, 6217.

Hazen, Hon. J. D.—Cont.
Ice conditions in North Atlantic, 6505.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11348.
Judges in New Brunswick, 11641.
Justice Department estimates, 12034.
Landry, A., appointment of, 6560.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10682-10748, 10753-10821, 12046.
Montreal Harbour Commission, 694, 913, 1539.
Munro, W. L., dismissal of, 10696.
National Gallery of Canada, 8998.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1039, 4303, 4435, 4447, 4627, 5168, 5294, 5923, 5947, 5992, 5571, 5890, 5911, 9149, 9165, 9308, 12150.
Canadian fleet unit, cost of, 4447.
Previous question, motion for, 7415.
New Westminster Harbour Commission, 2542, 2573.
North Fraser Harbour Commission, 2582.
Parliamentary procedure: appointment of temporary chairman, 5992.
Patronage committees, 6201.
Pelagic sealing, 6508, 12045.
Pilotage commission, 2283, 2374, 6187, 6624, 6498, 7638.
Pollution of navigable waters, 8620.
Privy Council, Canadian appeals to, 9829.
Quebec Harbour Commission, 6732, 7293, 8038, 8563, 8893.
Radiotelegraphy, regulation of, 778, 786, 787, 2419, 8686.
St. John harbour improvements, 4279.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6513.
Stefansson expedition, 12058.
Supreme court, 8580, 9829.
Vancouver Harbour Commission, 7292, 8501, 8900.
Wrecking plant establishments, 6178.

Henderson, Mr. David (Halton)
Agriculture, aid to, 8110.
Canadian Medical Protective Association, 3401, 3844.
Customs estimates, 8711, 8729.
Farmers' Bank commission, 2725.
Highways improvement, 8603.
Post Office
Rate on drop letters, 11918.
Rural mail delivery, 11414.

High Commissioner's office, 6452.

Highways Improvement Bill. 1r., 949. 2r. 8183, 8529. Com., 8581, 8591. 3r., 8820. Senate amdts., 11973; disagreed to, 12023, 12162. See also 26, 375, 799, 12091.
Amendment proposed: Mr. Guthrie, 8820; div., 8850.

Hobson's Nose lighthouse, 1163.

Hog cholera and glanders, 6290.

Homesteads and Homesteading
Entries, 4061, 8354, 8856.
Inspections, 2720, 3178.
Inspectors
Estevan, 700, 1161.
Humboldt, 802.
Medicine Hat, 9220.
Moosejaw, 805.
Prince Albert, 803.
Regina, 615, 805.
Saskatchewan, 615.
Saskatoon, 803.
Yorkton, 1018.
Pre-emption
Fee, 9840.
Payments, interest on, 3035.
Regulations, 11569.
Women homesteaders, 3889.

Hough, John, employment of, 10415.

House of Commons
Accommodation, need of increased, 6238.
Ascension Day adjournment, 8739.
Ash Wednesday adjournment, 2656.
Business of the House, 2279, 3180, 10416, 11971.
By-elections in 1912, return of, 5632.
Christmas adjournment, 1169, 1266.
Committees, select standing, 368.
Debates, official report of Distribution, 11076.
French daily edition, 11076.
Lengthy answers to questions, insertion of, 3041, 3118.
Omission of pairs, 8463.
Reporters, appointment of, 5.
Reporting in committee, 5149.
Translation, 11955.
Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, temporary, appointment of, 1405.
Easter adjournment, 6047.
Estimates, 6730.
Government business, precedence of, 2279, 3180.
Ice supply, 12134.
Indemnity of members, 11082-11087, 12131.
Internal Economy Commissioners, 5.
Law branch, 2720, 10412.
Messengers, list of, 2162, 3041.
Morning sittings, 8739, 9227.
Parliamentary procedure. See that title.
Reading room, admission of translators to, 9844.
Returns, questions regarding, 1370, 1563, 3124, 3185, 4280, 4282, 6943.

House of Commons—Cont.
Rules for limitation of debate. See that title.
Rules of the House. See Parliamentary procedure.
Sergeant-at-Arms, acting, appointment of, 1405.
Speaker, salary of, 11081.
Staff
Appointments, 6732, 6939, 11873.
Classification, 11803, 11952.
Salary increases, 7615.
Translation of returns, 11076.
Translators, appointment of, 1405, 11665.
Vacancies
South Bruce, 11072.
South Lanark, 12024.
Chateauguay, 11803.
Ventilation of chamber, 6230.
Water supply, 2417.
Wednesday sittings, 2279.

Hudson Bay, patrol of, 6277.

Hudson Bay Railway, 623, 1563, 10940.
Terminals, 3891, 4058.

Hudson wharf, 957.

Hughes, Hon. Sam. (Minister of Militia and Defence)
Dismissals, 866.
Fenian raid bounty, 6682, 6726.
Mackenzie, General, resignation of, 10418.
Militia estimates, 6296, 6726.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4723, 4936, 5575, 5607, 5701, 9314.
Official private car, 6298.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6169.

Hughes, Mr. James J. (King's, P.E.I.)
Banks and banking, 2348.
Bay fortune breakwater, 6259.
Customs estimates, 12105.
Dredging
Northumberland straits, 2722.
Prince Edward Island, 8653, 9840, 12126.
Highways improvement, 8606, 8838.
Ice, artificial, 2620.
Intercolonial Railway freight rates, 12067.
Kingsborough postmaster, 6259.
Little Sands breakwater, 6259.
Lorne Valley mail service, 8653, 9594.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 12051.
Militia estimates, 11012-11015, 11022-11072.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3632, 5070, 5565, 9200, 9468.
Post Office estimates, 12103.
Prince Edward Island
Car ferry, 2721, 3179, 9217.

Hughes, Mr. James J.—Cont.
Dredging, 8653, 9840, 12126.
Mails, 7890.
Provincial subsidy, 4023.
Public works engineers, 8653.
Supreme court, 9341.
Railway, 12086.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10926-10940, 11318.
Returns, inquiry for, 5146.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7793.
St. Peters Bay wharf, 3035.
Souris breakwater, 5152.
Steamer Earl Grey, 3035.
Steamship subsidies, 12106.

Hull wharf repairs, 586.

Humboldt homestead inspector, 629, 802.

Hutchinson, Lois B., Bounty Bill. Res., 10064, 10678. 1r., 10680. 2r., Com. and 3r., 11647.

Hydrographic surveys, 12057.

Ice
Aldershot camp contract, 2725, 6256.
Artificial, contract for, 2620.
Breaking, 808, 6217.
House of Commons supply, 12134.
Intercolonial Railway contracts, 1742, 2010.
Navigation and, 808, 3034, 6217, 6505.

Ile-aux-œufs lightkeeper, 9220.

Ile Perrot
Bridge, 9947, 11199.
South wharf, 9842.

Immigration, 20, 180, 548, 609.
Bonuses, 601.
Estimates, 11548.
Montreal officials, 618.
Naval and military league, 600.
Oriental, 1164.
Quebec officers, 1367.
Regulations, 3028.
St. Jean building, 1166.
Societies, 3032.
United States, from, 6253.

Immoral literature and the mails, 11906.

Imperial Conference of 1911, 7630, 7722.

Imperial Defence, Minister of Militia and Postmaster General on, 591.

Incorporation. See Companies Act.

Indians
Alberta reserve, 622.
Coté's band, 8642.

Indians—Cont.
Estimates, 11562.
Land sales, 8123, 8465. See also Capilano and Kitsilano.
St. Anne de Restigouche reserve, 4423.
Schools, 1158, 6621.
Shelburne county, 1555.
Vernon, B.C., inspector, 4420.

Industrial Disputes Act
Amendment or repeal, question of, 1016.
Askwith, Sir George, report of, 3184.

Inland Revenue estimates, 11345, 11534, 12108.

Inspection and Sale Act. See Fruit Marking.

Insurance companies' statements, 3413.

Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, bill for acquisition of. Res., 4167, 8551, 8859. 1r., 8893. 2r. and Com., 9658. 3r., 9822. Senate amdts., 12024; disagreed to, 12034, 12163. See also 128, 834, 935, 1746, 1795, 1949, 2172, 3122, 3552, 6806, 12094.
Cacouna station water tank, 8358.
Car shortage, 286, 1156.
Chaudière Junction employees, suspension of, 11570.
Conciliation board, 6256.
Dismissals, 8137, 8143, 8655.
Dorchester spur line, 2164.
Employees
Rating of, 8358.
Transfer of, 642.
Wages increase, 6257.
Winter clothes, 2722.
Estimates, 6242, 6898.
Extensions in Nova Scotia, 1986, 2416.
Freight rates, 937.
Gas plant, 3123.
Grand Narrows section, 3414.
Guysborough branch, 583, 1952.
Halifax terminals, 603, 6790, 6937, 10893.
Hay, free transportation of, 703, 1015, 2656, 3038, 3175, 10208.
Ice contracts, 1742, 2010.
Kindling wood contracts, 958.
Lavery, roadmaster, 11571.
Lavoie, L., trackman, 2720.
Lévis station, sale of papers at, 6262.
Linoleum, purchase of, 3417.
Management, 630, 1157, 6839, 6876, 8354, 9594.
New Glasgow subway, 934.
Ocean Limited train, 1366.
Operating rules, 8645.

Intercolonial Railway—Cont.
Patterson, C., employment of, 1560.
Pictou freight, 1157.
Provident Fund. See Government Railways.
Revenues, 11204.
Rolling stock additions, 2165.
Running rights, 157.
St. Edouard station, 934.
Sackville wharf, 3548.
Sayabec station, 2168.
Stellarton employees, 5151.
Sunday observance, 8131.
Ties contract, 2170.
Tobin branch, 8640.
Train ticket agents, 2166.
Trenton station, 934.
Works unauthorized, 594.

Interior Department estimates, 11547.

International Waterways Commission, 4362. Salaries, 9695.

Investigations into political partisanship, 2161. See also Duchemin and Lane.

Isle Verte wharf, 1743.

Jamaica, trade with, 1019.

Jameson, Mr. Clarence (Digby)
Fenian raid bounty, 6692.
Highways improvement, 8830.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 1769.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5039.
Public buildings, cost of, 9839.
Trawling operations, 3295, 3325.

Japanese immigration, 7550.

Japanese Treaty Bill. 1r., 6497. 2r., 6949, 6975. Com., 7021, 7040. 3r., 7138, 7187.
Amdt. proposed: Mr. Oliver, 7138; div., 7177.

Joliette customs office, 1498.

Jones, J. P., grain commissioner, 9593.

Judges Act Amendment Bill. Res., 11624. 1r. and 2r., 11647. Com., 11806, 11926. 3r., 11927.

Judges' salaries, 2009, 6280, 8053, 9691, 12043. See also Ontario Superior Courts Bill.

Judicial Committee of Privy Council. See Privy Council.

Justice, acting minister of, 1363.

Justice Department estimates, 6280, 10973, 12034.

Justice, Minister of, payments to, 8127.

Kay, Mr. William F. (Missiquoi)
Brigham-Farnham mail contract, 2172.
Farnham military camp, 3890.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4610.
Noyan customs officers, 619.
Post Office estimates, 11437.
Rules for limitation of debate, 8227.
St. Armand mail contract, 3890.

Kennedy, Isaac, claim of, 1561.

Kentville
Experimental farm, 6945, 8856.
Public building, 3031.

Kildare postmaster, 1498.

Kingston penitentiary, 1156, 3176.

Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8465, 8741, 10826.

Knowles, Mr. William E. (Moosejaw)
Canadian Medical Association, 3859.
Canadian Northern Railway Bill, 4363.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1974.
County court judges, 6281.
Fruit marking, 9663, 9669.
Grain Bill, 2284, 2419, 2504, 9110, 9876, 9888.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway: Saskatchewan river bridges, 6742.
Homestead inspections, 2720.
Japanese treaty, 7064.
Lead bounties, 10175.
Moosejaw
Customs appraiser, 10144.
Land district, 2721.
Lands office, 10823.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4215, 4813, 5949, 6008, 5732, 9372.
Parliamentary procedure: appointment of temporary chairman, 6008.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7797, 9372.
Russian immigrants, treatment of, 10529.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6873.
Swift Current lands office, 10822.

Kootenay rifles, disbandment of, 1018.

Kyte, Mr. George W. (Richmond, N.S.)
Aldershot camp
Dismissal of caretaker, 5155.
Supplies for, 6256, 8130.
Apple trade of Nova Scotia, 6414.
Banks and banking, 2449, 10340, 10343, 10360, 10373.
Chambly canal superintendent, 10823.
Coast Guard newspaper, 1550.
Dismissals
Bourgeois lighthouse keeper, 1500.
Cape Breton, 818, 867, 925, 6540, 8713.
Devereaux, Charlotte, 612, 6699.

Kyte, Mr. George W.—Cont.
Fougère, Peter, 6902.
O'Brien, Michael, 10754, 10768.
Fishery inspector Ward Fisher, 1164.
Fruit inspectors, 2619.
Government Railways provident fund, 757.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 8871.
Estimates, 6782.
Judges' salaries, 8054.
Justice, acting Minister of, 1363.
Kentville experimental farm, 6945, 8856.
Landry, A., appointment of, 6540.
L'Ardoise breakwater, 7382.
Mail bag locks, 7619.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10754, 10795.
National Gallery of Canada, 9003.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3605, 4570, 5224, 9278.
Pollution of navigable waters, 3174, 8639.
Prescott marine yard, 7465.
Privilege, 1167.
Public works in Maskinongé, 10143.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10905, 10950.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7454, 7468.
St. Peters
Canal improvements, 798, 6625, 9231.
Expropriation of lands, 971, 6625.
Harbour improvements, 1556.
Salmon river Indian school, 1158.
Seed distribution, 10391.
Steam trawling operations, 3343.
Tanner's Point lighthouse, 9341.
Trent Valley canal, claim of Corry and Laverdure, 10825.
Welland canal, resident engineer, 934.

Labour
Condition of labouring classes, 1738.
Estimates of department, 12131.
Hours on public works Bill. 1r., 695.
Pay on public works, 959.
Strike-breakers, importation of, 7725, 8036, 8227.
Sydney, conditions at, 11566.

Lachance, Mr. Arthur (Quebec Centre)
Cartridges, manufacture of, 6257.
Montcalm, postmaster, 7621.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4739, 5640.
Quebec
Customs officer, 6263.
Dry dock, 7381.
Harbour Commission, 8123.
Harbour loan, 8045.
Immigration assistant, 6263.

Lachance, Mr. Arthur—Cont.
Medical examiner, dismissal of, 6262.
Railway terminals, 12076.
Transcontinental railway station, 6258.
Rules for limitation of debate, 8339.
St. Charles river
Dredging, 6417.
Lock works, 6258.

L'Achigan breakwater, 801, 3549.

Laferrière, J. A., employment of, 3550.

Laforce, J. E., employment of, 3120.

Lafortune, Mr. David A. (Montcalm)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 352, 366, 382, 387.
Trade of Canada, 354.
Reciprocity with United States, 356.
Immigration, 358.
Nationalists, the, 360.
Highways improvement, 375.
Agriculture, aid to, 376.
By-elections, 379.
Salaries of government officials, 382.
Members' indemnity, 384.
Automobiles for Militia Department, 8132.
Female immigrants, protection of, 12170.
Mail bag locks, 7889.
Money by mail, transmission of, 11909.
Montcalm public building, 376, 11073.
National Transcontinental Railway estimates, 11231.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1127, 1134, 4902, 5399.
Public Works estimates, 11188, 11197, 12117.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10924.
Rural mail service in Montcalm, 10068.
St. Anne experimental farm, 8651.
Supreme court, 9824, 9832.

Lalor, Mr. Francis R. (Haldimand)
Agriculture
Aid to, 8091.
Credits, 3160.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5782.
Patents, renewal of, 11018.
West Indian trade agreement, 2094.

Lamarche, Mr. Paul E. (Nicolet)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: naval defence, 577.
Banque Internationale, 2250.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3210.

Lancaster, Mr. Edward A. (Lincoln and Niagara)
Alberta Interurban Railway Company, 8586.

Lancaster, Mr. Edward A.—Cont.
Banks and banking, 10105.
Canadian Northern Branch Lines Company, 3406, 7757, 8587, 11395, 12134.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4364, 6195, 8458.
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, 11397.
Canadian Western Railway, 4409.
Companies Act, 3016.
Dismissals, 1005.
Dominion Northwestern Railway Company, 3400.
Fruit marking, 11936.
Georgian Bay Canal Company, 2593, 3075.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway branch lines, 2144.
Hudson Bay, Peace River and Pacific Railway, 8584.
Huron and Ontario Railway Company, 2539.
Manitoba-Ontario Railway, 3832.
Manitoba Radial Railway Company, 8587.
Moncton and Northumberland Strait Railway, 8585.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4973, 4998, 5836.
Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway Company, 3411.
Nipissing Central Railway, 8584.
Pacific and Peace River Railway Company, 8583.
Parliamentary procedure
Friday sitting, validity of after midnight, 4998.
Money grant, amendment of, 5837.
Railway companies' rates, control of by Railway Commission, 2144.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 9928, 9931.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 1309.
Shuswap and Okanagan Railway Company, 3509.
Van Buren Bridge Company, 11391.

Lanctot, Mr. Roch (Laprairie-Napierville)
Banks and banking, 2354.
Intercolonial Railway ties, 2170.
Judges' salaries, 11643.
Mail bag locks, 7618.
Mines Department, 2167.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2933, 5359, 9994.
Public Works estimates, 11085.
Railway Commission, 9691.
Sayabec postmaster, 2170.

Landry, A., appointment of, 6540. See also Dismissals, Descouse.

Land titles, Manitoba, 11942.

Lane, C. S. payments to, 1558.

Langevin, J. O., employment of, 9221.

Lanoraie wharf, 2619.

La Patrie printing contract, 8125, 8459.

Lapointe, Mr. Ernest (Kamouraska)
Colonels, honorary, 2174.
Desjardins, Auguste, employment of, 2174.
Dismissals
Herbertville postmaster, 2178.
Normandin postmaster, 2178.
Rimouski, 2178, 2179, 2373.
St. Henri de Taillon postmaster, 2178.
Fenian raid veterans, 7219.
Gilbert, Arthur, employment of, 621.
Grosse Ile lighthouse, 616.
Highways improvement, 8533.
Lavoie, Louis, employment of, 2720.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4098, 5292, 5971.
Quebec Harbour Commission advocate, 617.
Quebec Minister of Agriculture, 9341.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7870.
Ste. Anne experimental farm, 7808.
St. Germain wharf, 2173.
Sayabec station contract, 2168.

Lapointe, Mr. Louis A. (Montreal, St. James)
Montreal postal stations, 9593.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4995.
Parliamentary procedure: validity of Friday sitting after midnight, 4995.
Public Works estimates, 11194.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6523.

L'Ardoise breakwater, 7382.

L'Assomption public works, 801,3549, 9342, 11805.

Laurier, Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid (East Quebec)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cartwright, Sir Richard, the late, 25.
West Indian trade agreement, 26.
Naval defence, 27, 578.
National Transcontinental Railway, 29.
Tariff, 30.
Cement duty, 31.
Redistribution of representation, 35.
Macdonald and Richelieu elections, 36; proposed amdt., 41.
Antarctic expedition: death of Captain Scott, 3455.

Laurier, Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid—Cont.
Banking and Commerce Committee, sittings of, 8854.
Banque Internationale, 2219.
Brown, Mr. James P., the late, 11461.
Canadian Northern railway subsidy, 11697, 11788.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1965.
Cement duty, reduction of, 30.
Civil Service Commission, 6469.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6098.
Conservation Commission, 6459.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9801.
Deseve, A. L., dismissal of, 11574.
Donaldson homestead entry: personal explanation, 7945.
Forest reserves and parks, 10065.
Gold and silver marking, 8675.
Government Railways provident fund, 8140.
Highways improvement, 26, 8184, 11973.
House of Commons
Morning sittings, 8739, 9228.
Sessional business, 3181.
Staff, classification of, 11953.
Wednesday sittings, 2280.
Hudson Bay Railway: one mile strip, 1563.
Imperial conference of 1911, 7630, 7724.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 12024.
Japanese treaty, 6497, 6962.
Justice Department estimates, 12036.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8480, 10837.
Lead bounties, 10156.
Macdonald election, 36, 41.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3358, 3648, 3729.
Mint, Ottawa, 8660, 9106.
Mounted Police, Royal Northwest, 719, 887, 6474, 12056.
National Transcontinental Railway, 29, 12061, 11217, 11230.
Naval Aid Bill. On 1r., 694. On res., 1022 (amdt.). On 2r., 3231, 3259, 4238. In com.: sec. 1, 4283; sec. 2, 4472, 4484 (amdt.), 5156, 5163, 7224, 9445, 9533; sec. 4, 9352; m. to rep., 9574. On 3r., 10012 (amdt.), 12139.
Denial of rumour, 10890.
Imperial squadron at Gibraltar, 10066.
Naval defence, 27, 578, 951.
Northern waters, patrol of, 6275.
Northwest provinces, representation of, 34.
Ontario superior courts, 6625.

Laurier, Rt. Hon. Sir Wilfrid—Cont.
Ottawa
Major's Hill park, 8465.
Canadian Pacific Railway entrance, 8550.
Pardoning power, 3941.
Parliamentary procedure
Adjournment motions, 7843.
Answers, lengthy, insertion of in Hansard, 3120.
Money grant, amendment of, 11792, 11798.
Papers, original, production of, 9224.
Questions without notice, 7037.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding without notice, 3358, 3662.
Rules for limitation of debate. See that title.
Speaker, authority of to resume chair without committee report, 6162, 6383.
Pollution of navigable waters, 11667.
Prince Rupert Marine Depot, 1562.
Public Works estimates, 11091.
Quebec and Saguenay railway, 2192.
Quebec Harbour Commission, 8563, 8896.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7429, 8230, 9352, 9364, 9446, 9452, 9575.
Russian Canadians sent to Siberia, 7636, 7817.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6527.
Savings banks, Quebec, 10146.
Scott, Captain, death of, 3455.
Scott, Sir Richard, death of, 8457.
Soulanges canal superintendent, 8857.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 1737, 5147, 6860.
Supreme court, 8570.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario railway subsidy, 11882.
Vancouver Harbour Commission, 8502, 8901.
West Indian trade agreement, 26, 2117.
Wolseley, Field Marshal, death of, 6734.
Yukon dismissals, 2177.

Lavergne, Mr. Armand, 582, 590.

Law Lords in Great Britain. See Privy Council.

Law, Mr. Bowman B. (Yarmouth)
Banker's Island hospital, 4059.
Barrington fishery inspector, 1160.
Brennan, Vincent, 1160.
Cousins, A., appointment of, 8654.
Customs estimates, 8697.
Du Vernet, Dr., appointment of, 8460.
Government annuities, 9603.
Immoral literature and the mails, 11908.
Indians of Shelburne county, 1555.

Law, Mr. Bowman B.—Cont.
Lane, C. S., services of, 1558.
Long Beach property purchase, 6260.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10711-10745, 10796-10819.
Militia estimates, 11030.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3211, 5469. 9487.
Port Maitland post office, 11570.
Postage on departmental mail matter, 9218.
Post Office estimates, 11411.
Public Works estimates, 11475.
Railway subsidies, 11689.
Shag Harbour buoys, 11074.
Steamer Petrel, 1497.
West Indian trade agreement, 8764.
Yarmouth
Dredging, 3033, 3890.
Port physician, dismissal of, 3894, 10796.
Post office, 3034.
Preventive officers, 1368.
Public building, 11181.
North post office, 2726.

Lead Bounties Bill. Res., 10147. 1r., 10191. 2r. and Com., 10527. 3r., 10527.

Leblanc, Maurice, employment of, 7622.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe (Rouville)
Accountants' Association, 3834, 3980.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Canada, its prosperity, 484.
By-elections, 492.
Quebec merger, 495.
Cement duty, reduction of, 496.
Naval defence, 497.
Agriculture, aid to, 7464, 8095.
Political favouritism, allegations of, 1952.
Archives department, 11540, 11940.
Arctic expedition, proposed, 3552.
Baie St. Paul wharf, 11073.
Banks and banking, 10116.
Banque Internationale, 2199, 2254, 4278, 11202.
Les Boules mail service, 10413.
Bourassa, Emile, payment of, 6300.
British cattle embargo, 610.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1957, 1981.
Car, private official, purchase of, 592, 3175. See also Militia.
Clocks for public buildings, 7467, 8124, 8462.
Cornwall-Summerstown mail contract, 1364.
County court judges, 6287.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Cont.
Criminal Code amendments, 10076.
Customs estimates, 6882.
Deschamps, Raoul, employment of, 699.
Dismissals
Aultsville postmaster, 1368.
Cleroux, Amédée, 7386.
Contrecœur lightkeeper, 3890.
Contrecœur postmaster, 3893.
Dunn, Albert, engineer, 7221.
Farran's Point postmaster, 1369.
Nicolet mail clerk, 1745.
Paquin, Ernest, 939.
Petite Rivière postmaster, 3894.
St. Ferdinand de Beaurivage postmaster, 702.
St. Gervais postmaster, 702.
Doncaster reserve, 4422.
Drilling on Fletcher's field, 2173.
Ducharme, G. N., 4059. See also Public Service Commission.
Estimates, printing of in French, 6165.
Exhibitions, international, 10379.
Experimental farms, 6289, 10258.
Fiset, Elzear, appointment of, 1160.
Fisheries regulations, 8127.
France, Canadian flotations in France, 1953.
French excise stamps, 6295.
French trawlers, 3298.
Government annuities, 9598, 9601, 9845.
Grain traffic, division of, 2504.
Grande Rivière wharf, 2173.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, purchase of, 1573.
Haggart, Hon. John, death of, 5612.
High Commissioner's office, 3355, 6452.
Highways improvement, 8594.
House of Commons
Accommodation, need of increased, 6238.
Debates, French translation of, 11955.
Elevator service, 6238.
Hudson Bay Railway, 10948.
Ice breaking at Gaspé, 6220.
Ice conditions in North Atlantic, 6505.
Imperial Defence
Minister of Militia on, 591.
Postmaster General on, 591.
Immigration
For 1911-12, 609.
Female, protection of, 2169.
Regulations, 3028.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4413.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11516.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1789, 6806, 8555, 8886.
Managing board, 9594.
Trains, 6248.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Cont.
Japanese Treaty, 6419, 6975.
Judicial salaries and administration, 2009, 8058, 11926, 12043.
Justice Department estimates, 10974.
Kennedy, Isaac, claim of, 1561.
Lavergne, Mr. Armand, 582.
Law Lords in Great Britain, appointment of, 7818, 8058, 9828.
Magdalen Islands wireless letters, 6241.
Malbaie mail carrier, 10416.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10718-10747, 10754, 10802-10818.
Militia Department private car, 592, 3175, 6298, 6727.
Militia estimates, 11047, 11064.
Monk, Hon. F. D., resignation of, 590.
Montreal
Armouries, 7035, 7204.
Bridges, 2369.
Drill hall, 2614.
Government offices, 2167.
Harbour Commission, 1497, 1534.
Immigration officials, 618.
Military cemeteries, 11665.
Murray Bay post office site, 6262.
National Gallery of Canada, 9006, 9837.
National Transcontinental Railway
Construction, 3175.
Estimates, 11100, 11242.
Quebec terminals, 584, 7809.
Naval defence, 497, 596.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3043, 4344, 4493, 4934, 4947, 5615, 5623, 5829, 5872, 5884, 5924, 5938, 5996, 9289, 9962 (amdt.).
New Westminster Harbour Commission, 2540.
Ottawa
Federal district, 2176.
Water supply, 8630.
Paris agency, 11541.
Parliamentary procedure
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 5996.
Money grant, amendment of, 5849.
Statements of members, acceptance of, 5829.
Peterborough lift-lock contract, 156.
Piedmont post office, 592.
Pilotage on the St. Lawrence, 2282, 6188, 6743, 7810.
Pontbriand wharf, 584.
Portneuf ex-lighthouse keeper's pension, 2619.
Post Office
British postal notes, 6495.
Estimates, 11354-11390, 11399-11457.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Cont.
Improvements, 6235.
Mail bag locks, 6294, 6748.
Money order rates, 9595.
Newspaper postage, 600.
Parcel post, 585, 1504, 1533, 3555, 11823.
Police Gazette and postal privileges, 8132.
Post Office Bill, 11907-11926.
Rural mail delivery, 7218, 7616, 7810, 7812, 8037.
Stamp-vending machines, 11203, 11568.
Transatlantic mail service, 10417.
Privilege, 6047, 6160.
Privy Council, Judicial Committee of, 1573, 7818, 8058, 9827.
Public Service Commission, 796. See also Ducharme.
Public Works estimates, 11087, 11095, 11097, 11190, 11193.
Quebec
Arsenal, 8648.
Customs collector, 584.
Dry dock, 797, 1735.
Harbour Commission officers, 2167.
Harbour loan, 8044, 8897.
Legal agents of government, 7465.
Marine agency, 8647.
Merger, 1499.
Railway, Light, Heat and Power Company, 1735, 2180.
Quebec and Lévis dry dock slip, 4428.
Quebec and St. Charles river improvements, 4168.
Quebec and Saguenay Railway, 1367, 2185, 4168, 6268.
Railway Commissioner, chief, salary of, 9938.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10874-10880, 10889, 10948.
Reciprocity with United States, 489.
Richelieu election, 494.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3305, 3390.
Mail subsidy of, 584.
Ross' Mill post office, 1497.
Ross rifle, 6496, 8126.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7649.
Ste. Anne des Monts mail service, 11567.
St. Charles rifle range, 7382, 8126.
St. Charles river works, 698, 4428, 8461, 8641.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6167.
St. Lawrence river
Accidents to navigation on, 588.
Damming of, 800, 1559.
Water levels, 6524.
Ste. Lucie and Lanthier mail service, 4422.

Lemieux, Hon. Rodolphe—Cont.
St. Simeon and Tadoussac mail service, 10414.
St. Tite des Caps and Baie St. Paul, mail service, 3418.
St. Urbain-Baie St. Paul mail service, 6259.
Salvation Army and convicts, 6289.
Scott Antarctic expedition, 3452.
Sorel
Government shipyard, 953.
Marine railway, 581.
Wharf, 584, 970.
Steamboat inspection, 915.
Steel rails, duties on, 802.
Stefansson expedition, 6274.
Supreme court, 8577, 9827.
Telegraph lines, government, 11512.
Telegraph service, inter-imperial, 9021, 9945, 11656.
Welsh coal, purchases of, 795.
Wickham West post office, 7616.
Wire fencing, 585.
Wrecking plant establishments, 6177.
Yacoloff, reprieve of, 1839.

Lesperance, Mr. David O. (Montmagny)
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 1309, 3397.

Letter Carriers. See Post Office.

Lévis camp, supplies for, 6261.

Life Saving Stations, 1735, 6201, 12053.

Lightships
St. Roch, 804, 955.
Tenders for, 4425.

L'Islet
Customs officers, 2170.
Post offices, 1740.
Wharf, 1739.

Little Sands breakwater, 6259.

Living, cost of, 2164, 6442, 6622, 10444, 10468, 10494, 10603, 10620.

Lobsters. See Fisheries.

Loggie, Mr. Wm. S. (Northumberland, N.B.)
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1814.
Estimates, 6898.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10813-10820.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3902, 4849, 5545.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10849-10859.
West Indian trade agreement, 2093, 2123.

Lord, Dr., employment of, 11571.

Lotbinière post office, 9215.

Lumber, duty on, 817.

Lunenburg customs officer, 802.

Lynch-Staunton G., employment of, 605, 6813.

Macdonald election, 36, 41, 46, 53, 103, 116, 120, 133, 142, 164, 203, 208, 224, 245, 255, 278, 323, 343, 379, 408, 463, 466, 492, 554. See also By-elections.

Macdonald, Mr. Edward M. (Pictou)
Agriculture, aid to, 8527.
Aldershot camp, ice supply, 2725.
Back Shore and Pictou mail service, 600.
Baillie, John, employment of, 603.
Banks and banking, 11586.
Bayview lobster hatchery employees, 806.
Buoy service, 6183.
Canadian Explosives, Limited, 2575, 2884.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4401.
Canadian Northern railway subsidy, 11763, 11795, 11845, 11851.
Canadian Pacific Railway employees' strike, 1975.
Census of Canada, completion of, 960.
Civil Service reform, 8017.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6130.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9710, 9816.
Dismissals
Caribou Island lightkeeper, 640.
Earl Grey, pilot of, 641.
Gordon, J. A., Intercolonial Railway watchman, 7387.
Labour Gazette correspondents, 805.
Niobe, H.M.C.S., 8226.
Royal Military College, 632.
Trenton Island revenue officer, 1500.
East River public works, 4060, 6229.
Fenian raid bounty, 6666.
Fisheries Act, breach of, 4061.
Government Railways
Claims Bill, 2108, 9233, 11905.
Provident fund, 723, 728, 741, 8137.
Government steamers
At Pictou, 8354.
Supplies for, 6177.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway and New Hazelton, 1365.
Highways improvement, 8207, 8834, 12011.
Industrial Disputes Act, 1016.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11345, 11515.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, acquisition of, 935, 1819, 8870.

Macdonald, Mr. Edward M.—Cont.
Employees, rating of, 8358.
Estimates, 6768, 12065.
Management by commission, 8354.
Patterson, Charles, employment of, 1560.
Stellarton employees, 5151.
Transfer of employees, 642.
Trenton, new station at, 934.
Japanese treaty, 7126.
Judges' salaries, 6286, 8057, 11628.
Lightship tenders, 4425.
Mackenzie, General, resignation of, 10418, 10824.
McLean, De Wolfe, payment of, 1163.
McLeod, G., employment of, 603.
Marine officers, wages of, 6259.
Maritime provinces inland revenue inspector, 2370, 2616.
Meadowville-Murrayfield mail service, 4167.
Militia estimates, 6296.
Millville-Dalhousie Mountain mail service, 7619.
National Transcontinental Railway, operation of, 6821.
Naturalization, uniform British, 2374, 2726, 9346.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2755, 4287, 4339, 4463, 4795, 5233, 5922, 5936, 5998, 5480, 5507, 5697, 5890, 5898, 7270, 9184, 9356, 9441, 9564, 9584, 12158.
New Westminster Harbour Commission, 2544.
Official private cars, 12090.
Pardoning power, 922.
Parliamentary procedure
Appeal, second on one question, 5891.
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 5998.
Money grant, amendment of, 11795.
Rules of the House. See that title.
Parliamentary representation, 6939.
Patronage system, 6186.
Pictou
Freight, 1157.
Life boat crew, 961.
Mail service, 4060.
Marine hospital, 7385.
Pictou-Seafoam mail service, 4060.
Pictou-West River mail service, 7619.
Post Office
Estimates, 11429.
Mail bag locks, 7213, 7618, 8125, 8355, 9213, 9215.
Parcel post, 11834.
Prince Edward Island car ferry, 960.
Public Works estimates, 11467-11473.

Macdonald, Mr. Edward M.—Cont.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10880, 10928-10939.
Royal Military College, reported resignation of Colonel Crowe, 10824.
Rules of the House, 6340, 8411.
Scotsburn-River John mail service, 4060.
Scow tenders, 4426, 5151.
Seed distribution, 10391.
Sheep, purchase and sale of, 645.
Solicitor General, office of, 618.
Stellarton public building, 960, 1162.
Tariff, 2010, 6435.
Tatamagouche-Brulé shore mail service, 6259.
Technical education, 961.
Telegraphs and telephones, nationalization of, 4401.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11873.
West Indian trade agreement, 907, 2038, 2116.

Macdonell, Mr. A. C. (Toronto South)
Brazilian Traction Power Company, 3018.
Foresters, Independent Order of, 1310, 7179, 7338.
Gold Medal Furniture Manufacturing Company, 3079.
Patents, renewal of, 2110, 3781, 6193, 8590.
Photo-engravers, importation of, 7741.

Mackenzie, General, resignation of, 10418, 10824.

Maclean, Mr. Alexander K. (Halifax)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
By-elections, 425.
Cable rates, 426.
Senate reform, 427.
Naval defence, 427.
Transportation, 430.
Government ownership of telegraphs, &c., 436.
Railway capitalization, 439.
Mergers, 444.
Agriculture, aid to, 8102.
Amherst paving inspector, 1549.
Amherst Point wharf, 1164.
Annapolis river ice piers, 7034.
Banks and banking, 1861, 10118, 10139, 10364, 11582.
Banque Internationale, 2232.
Bedford mail service, 2169.
Bridgetown drill shed, 1164.
Budget, 9657.
Development of commerce, 10419.
Tariff, 10421.

Maclean, Mr. Alexander K.—Cont.
Lumber duties, 10422.
British trade, 10422.
Tariff commission, 10425.
Revenue and expenditure, 10426.
Surpluses and taxation, 10431.
British Columbia subsidy, 10440.
Cost of living, 10444.
Canadian Northern Ontario Railway Company, 6948.
Cement
Duty on, 816.
Imports of, 599.
Customs officers in municipal councils, 1500.
Dismissals
Northumberland dredgemaster, 2620.
Oxford customs officer, 984.
Experimental farms, 10261, 10264.
Fenian raid bounty, 801, 6659.
Government Railways provident fund, 722.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, purchase of, 1574.
Halifax dockyard property, 1554.
Halifax terminals. See Intercolonial Railway.
Halifax-Prospect mail service, 2614.
Highways improvement, 799, 8581.
Hobson's Nose lighthouse, 1163.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4416.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 8553.
Halifax terminals, 603, 6799, 10893.
Privy Council, Canadian appeals to, 1574.
Mack, S. E., appointment of, 802.
Middleton-Port George mail service, 6745.
Militia permanent force, supplies for, 2724.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3648.
National Transcontinental Railway
Capital account, 9221.
Constitution, 9947.
Naval enlistment, 9840.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3766, 3787, 4336, 4474, 4825, 4828, 5758, 5831.
Nictaux fish hatchery, 7216.
Niobe, H.M.C.S., repairs to, 1741, 2169.
Ocean freight rates, 2504.
Parliamentary procedure
Chairman, temporary, 4825.
Irrelevance, 5830, 5868.
Money grant, amendment of, 5837, 5840.
Notice, sufficiency of, 7681, 7693, 7695.
Parrsboro public building, 1163.
Port Lawrence dredging inspector, 1549.
Post Office estimates, 11439.
Privilege, 7634.

Maclean, Mr. Alexander K.—Cont.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7680, 9357, 9359, 9584.
Proposed amdt., 7695; ruled out, 7715.
Rural mail service, 8652.
Salmon River-Hectanooga mail service, 4062.
Sherbrooke-Sheet Harbour mail service, 2615.
South Milford-Lake Munroe mail service, 2169.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6840.
Supreme court, 8573.
Tariff interpretation: counsel fees, 599.
Tuberculosis, Friedmann treatment for, 4169.
Veterinary Director General: visit to Nova Scotia, 8857.
West Indian trade agreement, 699, 892, 2013, 6503, 8754.
Wilmot mail service, 4062.
Wrecking plant establishments, 6180.

Maclean, Mr. William F. (South York, O.)
Banks and banking, 1875, 11595.
Canadian Pacific Railway: new issue of stock, 606.
Coinage, subsidiary, 8662.
Divorce court, need of, 6737.
Freight rates, equality of, 10955.
Government annuities, 9601.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway
Bonds, Government purchase of, 1572.
Government director, 602.
Government loan, 11860.
Payment to by Government, 602.
Naval forces of the Empire, 427, 2520, 5630.
Ocean freight rates, 2504, 9076.
Parcel post, 11830.
Post Office estimates, 11370.
Privy Council, Canadian appeals to, 1572, 1578.
Railway capitalization, 439.
Railway Commission, 9688.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2944, 3303, 3311 (amdt).
Telegraph service, inter-Imperial, 9024.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11894.
Transportation question, 430, 9688.

MacNutt, Mr. Thos. (Saltcoats)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: Macdonald by-election, 163.
Animal contagious diseases, 9618.
Fruit and vegetables, tariff on, 6943.
Macdonald election, 163, 1983, 2010.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4644, 5284.

MacNutt, Mr. Thos.—Cont.
Privilege, 1983, 2010.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7717.

McCoig, Mr. Archibald B. (West Kent, O.)
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6642.
Fighting Island fishing rights, 2724, 3036.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4733.

McCraney, Mr. Geo. E. (Saskatoon)
Canadian Northern Railway, 4378.
Dismissals
Hanley Dominion land agent, 7220.
Hanley postmaster, 7220.
Saskatoon Dominion lands office clerk, 6263, 6746.
Ullyot, G. M., 6746.
Donaldson homestead entry, 8008.
Highways improvement, 8199, 8591.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4413.
Mail bag locks, 7890.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4580, 5244, 9396.
Nipissing Central Railway, 8585.
Prince Albert homestead inspectors, 803.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7819.
Saskatoon
Grain inspection terminal, 8680.
Homestead inspectors, 803.
Volunteer bounty, 8914.

McCrea, Mr. Francis N. (Sherbrooke)
Freight rates, equality of, 10965.
Mail robberies, 7615.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4623.
Sherbrooke customs appraiser, dismissal of, 638, 6896, 6901.

McCurdy, Mr. F. B. (Shelburne and Queens)
Banks and banking, 10322, 10343, 10651, 11592.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 1805.
Steam trawling operations, 3340.

McGrath, E. A., employment of, 7386.

McKay, Mr. James (Prince Albert)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Canada, its prosperity, 288.
Transportation, 291.
Cement duty, 296.
Banks and banking, 10093, 10114.
Donaldson homestead entry, 7988.
Freight rates, western, 8992.
Northwest Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company, 2596.
Railway subsidies, 11687.
Transportation question, 291.

McKenzie, Mr. D. D. (North Cape Breton)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Trade conditions, 184.
Transportation, 185.
Cement duty, 188.
Tariff, 193.
By-elections, 195.
Agriculture, aid to, 8515.
Banque Internationale, 2246.
Boulardarie Centre post office, 2616.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6149.
Contracts, advertising of, 6183.
Criminal Code amendments, 11614.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9747.
Dismissals, 852, 998, 3422, 6611, 8162, 9609, 11917.
Dredge Cape Breton, 1550.
Fenian raid bounty, 6680.
Fisheries protection, 3281, 3336.
Foreign merchant vessels, sale of goods from, 3416.
Government annuities, 9855.
Government steamers, supplies for, 6176.
Ice breaking at Sydney, 6219.
Immigration, Syrian, 11559.
Indians: estimates, 11564.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11526.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1799, 1986, 8876.
Estimates, 6778.
Pension fund, 8148.
Sectionmen east of Grand Narrows, 3414.
Japanese treaty, 7031, 7169.
Judges' salaries, 8052, 11630, 11646.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10712-10727, 10779-10820.
Maritime provinces, development of, 185.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2805, 4507, 5350, 5782, 10004.
New Campbellton customs officer, 2617.
Ontario Superior courts, 6634.
Patent appeals, 3352.
Pilotage commission, 6217.
Post Office Bill, 11917.
Post Office estimates, 11453.
Printing Bureau, wages in, 11546.
Public Works estimates, 11184, 11187, 11466-11478.
Public Works, Minister of: proposed censure, 10229.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10914, 10919, 11298.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7551.
St. Peters channel improvements, 1365.

McKenzie, Mr. D. D.—Cont.
Steamboat inspection, 791, 916.
Telegraph service to Quarries, 6242.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11903.
Tug boats for Government dredges, 698.
Vancouver Harbour Commission, 8902.
West Indian trade agreement, 2131.

McLean, Mr. Angus A. (Queens, P.E.I.)
Agriculture, aid to, 8513.
Government Railways provident fund, 744.
Highways improvement, 12015.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 8562.
Naval forces of the Empire, 9561.
Prince Edward Island dredging, 12128.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10930, 10934.

McLean, Mr. H. H. (Sunbury and Queens)
Militia estimates, 11041, 11052, 11061.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2871, 2891.

McLeod, Malcolm G., employment of, 603.

McMillan, Mr. John A., (Glengarry)
Naval forces of the Empire, 5395.

Magdalen Islands wireless service, 3033.

Mail services
Actonvale, 804.
Alain, 11567.
Amqui, 3037.
Baie St. Paul-St. Tite des Caps, 3418.
Bath, N.B., 7624.
Bonaventure, 8648.
Boylston, 3892.
Brigham-Farnham, 2172.
Bromptville, 5154, 6292.
Carleton Centre, 7625, 8129.
Cornwall-Summerstown, 1364.
Crossroads-James River, 3178.
Danby-Ste. Christine, 803.
Florenceville-Upper Wicklow, 7623, 8128.
Gloucester, N.B., 3891.
Grosvenor, 10412.
Guysborough, 626.
Guysborough-Heatherton, 1364.
Halifax-Prospect, 2614.
Isle Verte Station, 4427.
Larry's river, 2726.
Les Eboulements, 7890.
Linwood, 605.
Longs, 9218.
Lorne Valley, 7890, 8653, 9594.
Meadowville-Murrayfield, 4167.
Middleton-Port George, 6745.
Millville-Dalhousie Mountain, 7619.
Montreal, 7619.
Pictou-Seafoam, 4060.

Mail Services—Cont.
Pictou-West River, 7619, 8641.
Quyon-South Onslow, 6261.
St. Andrews-Bayside, 7623.
Ste. Anne des Monts, 11,567.
St. Armand-Frelighsburg, 3890, 4425.
St. Bazile, 618.
St. Eloi, 1019.
St. Justine, 808.
Ste. Lucie-Lanthier, 4422.
St. Patrick-Notre Dame du Portage, 3414.
St. Simeon-Tadoussac, 10414.
St. Urbain-Baie St. Paul, 6261.
Salmon River-Hectanooga, 4062.
Scotsburn-River John, 4060.
Sherbrooke-Sheet Harbour, 2615, 3121.
Sherbrooke-Sunnybrae, 11573.
South Milford-Lake Munroe, 2169.
Three Rivers, 8654.
Tolleton-Hatfield Point, 3416, 3456, 7038.
Trois Pistoles-Les Escoumains, 9219.
Wilmot Station, 4062.

Mail. See Post Office.

Maisonneuve
Election suit, 3036.
Postal station, 612.

Malbaie mail carrier, 10416.

Manila rope, price of, 10414.

Marcil, Hon. Charles (Bonaventure)
Agriculture in Gaspé peninsula, 10386.
Alain post office, 11567, 11573.
Atlantic and Superior railways, 2169.
Atlantic, Quebec and Western Railway, 3891, 6743.
Avignon post office, 5133, 6745, 7622.
Baie des Chaleurs and Atlantic Railway, 2168.
Black Cape East post office, 4424.
Bonaventure
Census enumerators, 2369, 2418.
Government expenditures, 7219.
Government patronage, 3416.
Mail service, 8648.
Public works foreman, 7622, 7623.
River buoys, 11204.
Signal station, 10415, 11074.
Campbellton-Gaspé steamer service, 3418, 4020, 7212.
Carleton
Light keeper, 11075.
Revetment wall, 11073.
Wharfinger, 11075.
Carleton Centre mail service, 8129.
Clocks for public buildings, 9216.

Marcil, Hon. Charles—Cont.
Dalhousie steamship service, 7621.
Dismissals
Bourque, A., marine employee, 7628.
Bujold, L., lightkeper, 7627.
Chapados, Simon, wharfinger, 10529.
Dea, Edmund, lobster hatchery overseer, 7221.
Labillois, Alex., postmaster, 7627.
Landry, J. E., lightkeeper, 8133.
Marcotte, Madame, postmistress, 7627.
Mowat, M. M., fishery officer, 7219.
Thibodeau, L., postmaster, 11573.
Escuminac river post office, 4424.
Intercolonial Railway branch lines, 1777, 8879.
Mail bag locks, 7215.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10724-10742.
Miguasha wharf, 11073.
Militia estimates, 11027.
Montreal mail deliveries, 7619.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2707, 2727, 4881, 5370, 5797.
New Carlisle
Experimental station, 2171, 7386.
Public building, 7621.
Nouvelle river damages, 10529.
Paspebiac wharf, 10529.
Post Office estimates, 11283, 11410, 11418.
Public Works estimates, 11081, 11187, 11191.
Quebec weights and measures inspector, 8129.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10911, 10917.
Restigouche Boom Company, 7626.
Robitaille post office, 5153, 9219.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7757.
Ste. Adelaide de Pabos breakwater, 962, 1157.
Ste. Anne de Restigouche Indian reserve, 4423.
St. Godfroy buoy, 10415.

Marcile, Mr. Joseph E. (Bagot)
Acton Vale-St. Theodore d'Acton mail contract, 804.
Acton Vale public building, 8858.
Agricultural lecturers' for Quebec, 8651.
Danby-Ste. Christine mail contract, 803.
Intercolonial Railway: Station at St. Edouard, 934.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3187, 4531, 9402.
River Scibouit public works, 1162.

Marine and Fisheries estimates, 6174, 6201, 10682-10748, 10753-10821.

Maritime Provinces Inland Revenue inspector, 2370, 2616.

Marriage laws in federal territory, 583.

Martin, Mr. Mederic (Montreal, St. Mary's)
Chairman of committees and French language, 5874.
Estimates, printing of, in French, 6164, 6409.
Mail bag locks, 7213, 7617, 7890.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5916, 5872.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6523.
Victoria drill hall, 4061.

Martin, Mr. William M. (Regina)
Banks and banking, 2307.
City post office clerks, 2418.
Closure, application of term to action of House, 6035.
County court judges, salaries of, 6282.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9719.
Donaldson homestead entry, 7946.
Female labour in Saskatchewan, 3414.
Freight rates, western, 8923.
Grain Bill, 9113.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway mail service, 1953.
Homestead inspectors in Saskatchewan, 615, 3178.
Hudson Bay Railway terminus, 4059.
Jones, J. P., grain commissioner, 9593.
Letter carriers, 2418.
Mounted police pensions, 6480.
Natural gas exports, 6431.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2833, 5262, 6034, 5691.
Parcel post, 1516.
Prince Albert Dominion lands, 2720.
Public buildings, sub-letting of, 8132.
Regina homestead inspector, dismissal of, 1954.
School lands, western, 3419.
Terminal elevators, 3419.
Union Life Assurance Company, 8227, 8360.
Volunteer bounty, 8917.
Winnipeg river water power leases, 9839.

Maskinongé public works, 10143.

Mayflower, steamer, loss of, 2374, 3186, 7037.

Meat inspection, 6290.

Medicine Hat
Lands agent, 807.
Mail delivery, 2416.
Post offices, 806.
Police Point reserve, 6253.

Meek divorce bill. See Private Bills.

Meighen, Mr. Arthur (Portage la Prairie)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: Macdonald by-election, 246.
Agriculture credits, 3124, 3171.
Banks and banking, 10089, 11588.
Canadian Explosives Limited, 2574.
Canadian Northwest Loan and Mortgage Company, 2598, 7344.
Chairman, acting, 4665, 4670.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6137.
Companies Act, 2995.
Co-operative Credit Societies, 9039.
Japanese Treaty, 7163.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3361, 3646, 3693.
Ocean rates, 9040.
Parliamentary procedure
Adjournment motions, 7850.
Crown grant, right to amend, 5835.
Friday sitting, validity of after midnight, 4996.
Irrelevance, 5864-5867, 5873, 5964.
Merits of bill on m. for com. to rise, discussion of, 5864, 5867.
Notice, sufficiency of, 7682.
Offensive personal references, 5779.
Previous question, moving of in com., 9331.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding without notice, 3361.
Rules of the House. See that title.
Speaker, authority of, 6315.
Statements of members, acceptance of, 5824.
Summons to recalcitrant witness, motion for without notice, 3361.
Prudential Life of Canada, 7186.
Railway Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 951.
Rules of the House, 6315.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7519, 8321. 9357, 9367, 9579, 9585.

Michaud, Mr. Pius (Victoria, N.B.)
Dismissals
Andover preventive officer, 634.
St. Leonard immigration agent, 9344, 11204.
Fenian Raid bounty, 6676.
National Transcontinental Railway estimates, 11239.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4738, 9499.
Railway subsidies, 11671.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3397.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7785.
Van Buren Bridge Company, 11391.

Middlebro, Mr. William S. (North Grey)
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9753.
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6656.

Middlebro, Mr. William S.—Cont.
Grain Bill, 9118.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3357, 3451, 3645, 3648, 3652, 3654, 3658, 3664.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1441, 1448, 4514, 5952, 5886, 9966.
Parliamentary procedure
Appeal, second on one question, 5892.
Irrelevancy, 5885-5888.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding without notice, 3357.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2973, 3375.

Miguasha wharf, 11073.

Military cemeteries, desecration of, 11665.

Military property, Lévis, 11941.

Militia
Drilling on Fletcher's field, 2173.
Estimates, 6296, 6726, 11012, 11022.
Minister of, utterances of, 4426, 5154, 9345, 9841.
Permanent force, supplies for, 2724.

Miller, R. C., case of Motion to summon before Bar of House, 3357.
Attendance at Bar, 3451, 3645.
Statement of Mr. Miller, 3646, 3651.
Statement of Mr. Miller's counsel, 3652.
Motion to commit for contempt, 3659.
Commitment to jail, 3741.
Question of cost, 5153.

Mines Department
Estimates, 11562.
Reported transfer of, 2167.

Mint, Ottawa, Bill. Res., 8658. 1r., 8674. 2r. and Com., 9102. 3r., 9109. See also 12113.

Miramichi river dredging, 1548.

Molloy, Mr. John P. (Provencher)
Manitoba Radial Railway Company, 8121.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5021, 5719.

Mondou, Mr. A. A. (Yamaska)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: Naval defence: amdt. proposed, 570.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3244 (amdt.).

Money circulation, 8358.

Monk, Hon. F. D.
Private secretary of, 561, 593, 961.
Retirement of, 43, 51, 113, 561, 596, 4510.

Montcalm
Postmaster, 7621.
Public building, 11073.

Montreal
Armouries, 7035, 7204.
Drill hall, 2614.
Government offices, 2167.
Harbour master, 1499, 9841.
Post office, 2167, 9593.

Montreal Harbour Commissioners Bill. 1r., 694. 2r., 913. Com., 913. 3r., 3272. See also 1497, 1534, 9842.

Montreal Island and Vaudreuil bridges, 2369.

Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company Bill. 1r., 1266. 2r., 1448. Com., 2591, 3074. Senate amdts., 3741.

Montreal river improvements, 6240.

Moosejaw
Customs appraiser, 10144.
Homestead inspections, 2721.
Immigration building, 11200.
Lands office, 10823.
Post office investigation, 7622.

Morin, Joseph, employment of, 2615.

Morphy, Mr. H. B. (North Perth)
Agriculture, aid to, 8516.
Chairman, acting as, 4508.
Experimental farms, 10262.
Fenian Raid bounty, 6678.
Government annuities, 9603.
Immigration, 12170.
Independent Order of Foresters, 7341.
Naturalization, 2386.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1686, 1697.
Pollution of navigable waters, 8637.
Rules of the House, 6344.

Mortimer Lithographing Company, 6417.

Moulin Basinet post office, 3123.

Municipal councils, government officials in 1500.

Munro, homestead entry, 8856.

Munson, Mr. Charles A. (West Northumberland, O.)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
By-elections, 466.
National policy, 467.

Murphy, Hon. Charles (Russell)
Accountants' Association, 3840.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Immigration, 548.
Highways improvement, 549.
Naval defence, 549.

Murphy, Hon. Charles—Cont.
Cement duty, 550.
By-elections, 553.
Barnes, Professor, experiments of, 3034.
British naval and military emigration league, 600.
Canadian Northern Railway, mileage of, 11805.
Civil Service Commission, 6470.
Companies Act, 604.
Companies, incorporation of, 605.
Conservation Commission, 6466.
Cumberland postmaster, 1017.
Dismissals
Conway, M. T., 7222.
Slack, W. F., 3037.
Georgian Bay canal, 1154.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway: Canadian port of shipment, 799, 1160.
Gutelius and Lynch-Staunton, Messrs., services of, 605.
Justice Department estimates, 12037.
Marine Public Service Commissioner's report, 4426.
Miller, R. C., case of, 5154.
Mortimer Lithographing Company, 6417.
National Gallery of Canada, 9836.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4066, 4779, 5922, 5977, 5481, 5912.
Osgoode station postmaster, 1016.
Ottawa, Government land purchases, 2725.
Parcel post, 11837.
Parry Sound weights and measures inspector, appointment of, 4061.
Post Office estimates, 11417.
Printing Bureau: women proof readers, 7809.
Private Secretaries
Ministers', 953.
Monk's, Hon. F. D., 593, 961.
Public Service Commissioner of Marine, alleged report of, 4426.
Public Service Commission: printing of report, 1743.
Public Works estimates, 11080, 11092, 11095, 11172.
Rideau canal: cleaning and painting bridges, 6252.
Rockliffe rifle range, 593.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7852.
Russell county postmasters, 593.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6170.
Tye, W. F., employment of, 604, 1362.

Murray Bay post office, 6262.

Murray, David, preventive officer, 959.

Murray, Sir George, report of on Civil Service, 360, 6469.

Nantel, Hon. Wilfred B. (Minister of Inland Revenue)
Adulteration Act amendment, 11648.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11345, 11515, 11534, 12108.
Natural gas, export of, 6427.
Petroleum and naphtha inspection, 11647.

National Gallery of Canada Bill. Res., 8995. 1r., 9009. 2r., 9622. Com., 9622, 9836. 3r., 9838. Senate amdts., 10680.

National Transcontinental Railway
Alexander, A., employment of, 1015.
Balkam, C. E., employment of, 7891.
Capital account, 9221.
Construction, 3175, 9947.
Estimates, 11099, 11206.
Extension of time Bill. 1r., 1406. 2r., and Com., 3350. 3r., 3351. See also Grand Trunk Pacific Railway.
Grade, changes of, 29, 6251, 6455.
Gutelius, F. P., employment of, 605, 6813, 8131.
Investigating commission, 605, 623.
Lynch-Staunton, G., employment of, 605, 6813.
Moncton-Lévis section, 586, 1950, 6936, 12094.
Quebec station, 6258, 6812.
Quebec terminals, 584, 6811, 7809, 12061, 12076.
Temporary structures, 6251.
Tye, W. F., services of, 604, 1362.
Workshops and sites, 9948.

Natural gas, 3889, 6419.

Naturalization
Amendment Bill, 1r., 1362.
Uniform British, 2374, 2726, 9346. See also Russian Canadians.

Natural resources, provincial control of, 6942.

Naval Affairs
Act of 1910, question of repeal, 12135.
Admiralty, statements from, 679, 4770, 4853, 5138, 5167, 5208, 5460, 5638.
Armament building, cessation of: proposal of Mr. Churchill, 6451.
Canadian fleet unit: statements of cost, 3546, 4280, 4341, 4435, 4447, 4786, 5141, 5296, 5547, 9153.
Defence, 12, 21, 27, 43, 110, 115, 135, 159, 181, 202, 223, 252, 263, 327, 350, 366, 382, 387, 427, 472, 497, 514, 546, 550, 560, 570, 576, 951, 10066, 12139.
Enlistment, 9840.
Estimates, 6272.

Naval Affairs—Cont.
Imperial squadron, 10066.
Monk, Hon. F. D., views of, 596, 4788.
Tupper, Sir Charles, views of, 4808.

Naval Aid Bill. 1r., 676. Res., 1019, 1098, 1292, 1311, 1371, 1407, 1582, 1654, 2505, 2657, 2704, 2727, 2833, 2891, 3043, 3084, 3187; div., 3262. 2r., 3457, 3748, 3787, 3896, 3941, 3982, 4066, 4170; div., 4277. Com., 4283, 4319, 4434, 5156, 7223, 7293, 7345, 9134, 9144, 9233, 9348, 9444, 9487, Rep., 9591. Con., 9698. 3r., 9950; div., 10061.
Amendments proposed
On res: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 1038; div., 3242. Mr. Verville, 3103; div., 3239. Mr. Mondou, 3244; ruled out, 3260.
On 2r.: Mr. Turriff, 3482; div., 4274. Mr. Guilbault, 3901; div., 4272.
In com.: Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 4486; ruled out, 5832, 5855. Mr. McKenzie, 4516; ruled out, 5832, 5855. Mr. Guthrie, 5856; div., 9571. Mr. German, 9148, 9277, 9390, 9413; div., 9571, 9572, 9573. Mr. Carvell, 9438; div., 9573.
On con.: Mr. Pugsley, 9698; ruled out, 9698; ruling appealed, 9707; div., 9707.
On 3r.: Mr. German, 9957; div., 9960. Mr. Lemieux, 9966; div., 9974. Mr. Carvell, 9982; div., 9986. Mr. Carroll, 9991; div., 10010. Sir Wilfrid Laurier, 10024; div., 10059.
Closure applied, 9277, 9329, 9410, 9437, 9443, 9445, 9571.

Navigation and Ice. See Ice.

Neely, Mr. D. B. (Humboldt)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Reciprocity with United States, 406.
Macdonald by-election, 408.
Cement duty, 413.
Dismissals, 417.
Redistribution of representation, 421.
National resources, provincial control, 422.
Transportation, 424.
Animal contagious diseases, 9614.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4384.
Crown lands, sales of, 614.
Donaldson homestead entry, 7974.
Elevator terminal sites, 625.
Freight rates
Equality of, 10968.
Western, 8936.

Neely, Mr. D. B.—Cont.
Fruit marking, 9681, 11927.
Grain Bill, 9878.
Highways improvement, 8192.
Humboldt homestead inspectors, 802.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4636, 5013, 5316, 5933, 6028.
Post Office estimates, 11272, 11291, 11443.
Railway Commission, 9693.
Reciprocity with the United States, 406.
Redistribution of representation, 421, 615, 5323.
Saskatchewan forest and fire rangers, 630.
Selkirk election, 962.
Settee, question of appointment of, 631.
Smythe, A., homestead inspector, appointment of, 629.
Wynyard, Dominion lands at, 3893.

Nesbitt, Mr. Edward W. (North Oxford)
Agriculture, aid to, 2156, 8073, 8508.
Agriculture credits, 3152.
Banks and banking, 2285, 11589.
Canadian Explosives, Limited, 2580.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4374.
Canada Permanent Trust Company, 2613.
Cattle shipments to the United States, 624.
Cement imports, 611.
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6441, 6655.
Government annuities, 9847, 9851.
Highways improvement, 8596, 8842.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1475, 5047, 5277, 5542, 5913, 9459.
Parcel post, 1519.
Patents, renewal of, 3832.
Post Office estimates, 11416.
Public Works estimates, 11167.
Railway Commission, 9691.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3383.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7575.
Tariff, 6441.

New Campbellton customs officer, 2617.

New Carlisle public building, 7621.

New Chester postmaster, 3179.

Newcombe, E. L.: increase of salary, 12034.

Newfoundland, trade with, 4166.

New Harbour
Breakwater, 9842, 12121.
Postmaster, 7811, 8462.

Newspapers
Patronage list, 8124.
Postage on, 600.

Newville mail service, 619.

New Westminster Harbour Commissioners Bill. 1r., 1405. 2r., 1696. Com., 2540, 2573, 3009. 3r., 3074.

Nickle, Mr. William F. (Kingston)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cartwright, Sir Richard, the late, 14.
Banks and banking, 16.
Agriculture, 17.
Penitentiaries, 19.
Immigration, 20.
Naval defence, 21.
Agriculture credits, 3155.
Banks and banking, 16, 10290, 10330, 10359, 11583.
Canadian Medical Association, 3860.
Chairman, acting as, 5958, 5998.
Highways improvement, 11997.
Parliamentary procedure
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 5998.
Rules of the House, 6376.
Penitentiaries, 19, 10986, 11338.

Nictaux fish hatchery, 7216.

Niobe
Dismissals from, 8226.
Repairs, 1741, 2169.

North Atlantic. See Ocean.
Ice conditions on. See Ice.

Northern waters, patrol of. See Stefansson Expedition.

North Fraser Harbour Commissioners Bill. 1r., 1405. 2r., 1696. Com., 2581, 3012. 3r., 3074.

Northrup, Mr. William B. (East Hastings)
Lead bounties, 10166.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3483, 5465.
Rules for limitation of debate: m. that Mr. Hazen be now heard, 7412.

North Sydney public building, 3550.

Northwest Territories, government of, 6622, 6479.

Nouvelle river damages, 10529.

Nova Scotia apple trade, 6414.

Noyan customs officers, 619, 620.

Ocean rates, 2504, 9040.

Old Age Pensions, 943, 6939, 10528, 10677.

Oliver, Hon. Frank (Edmonton)
Accountants' Association, 3783, 3977.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Government pledges, 49.
Cement duty, 52.
Macdonald election, 53.
Agriculture, aid to, 2157, 8084, 8118, 8507, 8814.
Alberta Inter-urban Railway Company, 8586.
Animal contagious diseases, 9864.
Banks and banking, 2332, 10092, 10096-10141, 10291-10375, 11590.
Budget
Revenue and national prosperity, 10597.
West Indian trade agreement, its effect upon taxation, 10599.
Cost of living and the tariff, 10603.
Cement duty, 10605.
Our foreign trade, 10608.
Tariff and the wheat grower, 10610.
Immigration, 10612.
Expenditure and taxation, 10613.
Calgary, Edmonton and Fort McMurray Railway, 6199.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4370.
Canadian Northern Railway subsidy, 11776, 11793, 11844.
Canada Permanent Trust Company, 2608.
Canada Western Trust and Mortgage Company, 2597.
Capilano Indian reserve, 8640.
Companies Act, 3024.
Conservation Commission, 12061.
Customs estimates, 8692.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9758.
Dismissals
Douglas, Howard, 3894, 7220.
MacKenzie, J. B., 9342.
Port Arthur immigration agent, 810.
Postmasters, 843.
Dominion parks, superintendent of, 957.
Donaldson homestead entry, 3272, 3745, 7826, 7839, 7843, 7892, 8226, 8360, 8465, 9223.
Edmonton
Bridge, 11507.
Customs collector, 1018.
Public buildings, 6231, 11492.
River bank protection, 11501.
Experimental farms, 10274, 10277.
Express rates, 9343.
Forest reserves and parks, 11650.
Freight rates
Equality of, 10961.
Western, 8940, 10961.
Fruit marking, 10082, 11934.
Georgian Bay canal, 2591, 3074.

Oliver, Hon. Frank—Cont.
Grain Bill, 8679, 9120, 9868, 9901.
Grain Commission, 6271.
Grand Trunk Pacific loan, 11800, 11860, 11867.
Highways improvement, 8592, 12004.
Homestead entries, 4061, 8354.
Hudson Bay Railway, 3891, 10940, 10946, 10951.
Hutchinson, bounty for Miss Lois B., 10679.
Immigration, 11554.
Chinese, 11560.
Female immigrants, protection of, 12169.
Indians
Estimates, 11563.
Land sales, 8123. See also Capilano and Kitsilano.
Japanese treaty, 7023, 7136, 7138, 7198.
Judges, increase of, 11634.
Justice Department estimates, 11003. 11007.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8465, 10826, 10843.
Lead bounties, 10180, 10186.
Macdonald election, 53, 1955.
Militia estimates, 11022, 11048, 11056, 11071.
Munro homestead entry, 8856.
National Gallery of Canada, 9001, 9623.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1336, 4126, 4511, 5377, 5927, 5966, 5812, 5892, 9322, 9353, 9553, 9705.
North Fraser harbour, 2581.
Ocean rates, 9061.
Original papers, production of, 9223.
Parcel post, 11839.
Parliamentary procedure
Appeal, second on one question, 5892.
Money grant, amendment of, 5836.
Papers, original, production of, 9223.
Statements of members, acceptance of, 5823.
Patents, renewal of, 3780, 11021.
Penitentiary Act amendment, 11335-11343.
Police
Dominion, 8565.
Mounted, Royal Northwest, 886.
Pollution of navigable waters, 8636.
Post Office estimates, 11279.
Prince Albert forest reserve, 5146.
Privilege, 1955, 3270.
Public Works estimates, 11151, 11490-11494, 11499, 11507, 11513.
Railway Belt water powers, 9592, 11921.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10940, 10946, 10951, 11302.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2969.
Rideau Hall improvements, 6232.

Oliver, Hon. Frank—Cont.
Roblin, Sir Rodmond, reply to statements of, 1955.
Rogers, Hon. Robert, proposed censure of, 7805, 7892, 9223.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7638, 8431, 8921.
Russian immigrants, treatment of, 11078.
Saskatoon Dominion lands clerk, 6748.
Survey lines, township, 56, 9221.
Telegraph service, inter-Imperial, 9033.
Timber reservation, 3893.
Union Life Assurance Company, 8369.
Vancouver Harbour Commission, 8505, 8900.
Vernon Indian inspector, 4420.
Volunteer bounty, 1370, 3892, 8907, 9942.
Western Canada Mortgage Corporation, 2603.
West Indian trade agreement, 2012, 2036, 2113, 8780.

Ontario Equipment Company, 8124, 8126, 8649, 9213, 9215, 9595.

Ontario Superior Courts Bill. 1r., 6305. 2r. and com., 6625. 3r., 6642.

Opium traffic, 4420.

Opposition leader, salary of, 8358.

Original papers, production of, 9223.

Osgoode station postmaster, 1016.

Osler, Sir Edmund (West Toronto)
Banks and banking, 1894, 6485, 6489.

Ottawa
Canadian Pacific Railway entrance, 8550.
Federal district, proposed, 2176.
Government land purchases, 2725.
Major's Hill park, 8465.
Public buildings, 6230, 6232-6240.
Water supply, 8550, 8640.

Ottawa river dredging, 656.

Oyster Ponds preventive officer, 7465.

Pacaud, Mr. Lucien T. (Megantic)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech: Naval defence, 252.
Coleraine station postmistress, dismissal of, 2179.
Naval forces of the Empire, 252, 4038, 4985, 5711.

Panama California Exposition, 7220.

Panama Canal, 601, 965.

Papineau, Mr. Louis J. (Beauharnois)
Naval forces of the Empire, 4894, 5559.

Paquet, Mr. Eugene (L'Islet)
Colonization and immigration societies, 3032.
Dismissals in L'Islet, 3037.
Farm hands in Ontario and Quebec, 3032.
Highways improvement, 8532.
Immigration: report of Mr. Olivar Asselin, 1951.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4117.
Privilege, 8742.
Railways and Canals estimates, 10873-10880.
Repatriation, Canadian, 3032, 3123.

Parcel Post Bill. Res. and 1r., 10070. 2r. and com., 11809. 3r., 11843. See also 585, 1504, 3362, 3555, 7551.

Pardee, Mr. Frederick F. (West Lambton)
Banks and banking, 2470, 10130.
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6657.
Fenian raid bounty, 6681.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3084, 5114, 5887.
Ontario Superior courts, 6631.
Public Works estimates, 11175.
Radiotelegraphy, regulation of, 785.
Steamboat inspection, 791.
Supreme Court, 8575.
West Indian trade agreement, 2086.

Parks, National. See Forest reserves.

Parliamentary documents, distribution of, 11534.

Parliamentary Procedure
See also Rules for limitation of debate, Rules of House, Speaker, and Deputy Speaker.
Adjournment motions, 7826, 7839-7852, 8464.
Appeal, second on one question, 5896.
Chairman and French language, 5874, 5880, 5990.
Chair, reflections on action of, 9591, 6998.
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 4825, 5878, 5989-6025.
Closure rules, application of, 9275, 9329, 9410, 9437, 9443, 9445, 9451, 9571, 9589.
Disorder, Speaker resuming chair to stop, 6018, 6020, 6022, 6161, 6164, 6374.
Estimates in French, 6164, 6452.
Friday sitting, validity of after midnight, 4995.
Irrelevance, 4473-4477, 4508, 4775, 5822, 5832, 5880-5896, 5907-5964.
Merits of a bill on m. for com. to rise, 5861-5870, 5882-5885.

Parliamentary Procedure—Cont.
Order of the Day, discussion of on m. for com. to rise, 5929.
Personal argument why com. should rise, 5881.
Principle of a bill in com., 5816.
Quoting from previous debate, 5964-5984.
Money grant, amendment of, 5832, 11792.
Naming of member, 6019.
Notice, sufficiency of, 7681-7695.
Offensive personal references, 5769-5782.
Official documents quoted from, laying on table, 7926, 7944, 8012, 9223.
Out of order: to ask for unofficial information, 4628.
Papers, original, production of, 9223.
Point of order, permissibility of discussion on, 4823.
Press comments on proceedings in House, 7457, 7955.
Previous question
Motion for, 7412.
Form of, 7413.
Not admissible in com., 9330.
Proposed amdt. after, 7695, 7715.
When admissible, 7416.
Privilege, questions of and press attacks, 712.
Questions and answers
Lengthy, 3041, 3118.
Without notice, 7036.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding, without notice, 3660.
Refusal of member to obey order of chair, 6039.
Rules of the House. See that title.
Rules for limitation of debate. See that title.
Speaker resuming chair without com. report, 6018, 6020, 6022.
Authority of to do so, 6161, 6306.
Statements of members, acceptance of, 5823.
Tedious repetition, 4509, 4775, 5822-5832 5880-5896, 5911, 5920, 5926.

Parliamentary representation, redistribution of, 34, 35, 45, 305, 337, 421, 615, 3482, 4274, 6939.

Parrsboro government building, 1163.

Parry Sound weights and measures inspector, 4061.

Paspebiac wharf, 10529.

Patents
Appeals on. See Exchequer Court.
Renewal of, 3078, 3780, 3832, 4316, 6193.

Patronage, Government. See Newspapers.

Peace centenary conference, 11943.

Pelagic Sealing
Bill. 1r., 11321. 2r., com. and 3r., 11603.
Claims, 2724, 6508, 12045.

Pelletier, Hon. Louis P. (Postmaster General)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Reciprocity with United States, 507.
By-elections, 510.
Quebec merger, 512.
Naval defence, 514.
Alameda postmaster, dismissal of, 664.
Atlantic mail service, 7204, 10417.
Banque Internationale, 2235.
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 5623, 6119.
Dismissals of postmasters, 839, 9607.
Estimates, printing of in French, 6410.
French translation of Debates, 11959.
Government annuities, 9597, 9599, 9606, 9845.
Letter carriers, conveyance of, 3745, 11463.
Mail bag locks, 6294, 6749, 6910.
National Sanitarium Association: use of stamps, 964.
National Transcontinental Railway, 11249.
Quebec terminals, 6812.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1093, 1098, 3812, 5002, 5915, 5700, 5890, 12155.
Parcel post, 1522, 10070, 11809, 11838.
Paris agency, 11542.
Parliamentary procedure
Appeal, second on one question, 5890.
Friday sitting, validity of after midnight, 5002.
Post Office Act Amendment, 11906.
Post Office estimates, 11268-11294, 11351-11390, 11398-11457.
Quebec harbour loan, 8046.
Quebec and Saguenay Railway, 513, 2194.
Railway Commissioner, chief, salary of, 9937.
Returns, production of, 4281.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3394.
Rural mail service, 6938, 7812, 10068, 12103.
Telegraph service, inter-Imperial, 9009, 9034, 9944, 11660, 11668, 12161.
Transatlantic mail service, 7204, 10417.

Penitentiary Act Amendment Bill. Res., 11330. 1r. and 2r., 11345. Com. and 3r., 11603.

Pensions. See Government Annuities, also Old Age Pensions.

Perley, Hon. Geo. H. (Argenteuil)
Accountants' Association, 3838, 3979.
Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, 2606.
Gold and silver marking, 8674.
Grain Bill, 8679, 9111, 9866, 9899, 9903.
Grain Commission, 6270.
Guarantee Company of North America, 3404.
House of Commons staff classification, 11953.
North Atlantic rates, 9085.
Patents, renewal of, 4316.
Private secretary, allowance for, 6272.
Stefansson expedition, 6273.
Trade and Commerce estimates, 6728, 12106.
West Indian steamship service, 6269.
West Indian trade agreement, 8742, 8748.

Peterborough lift-lock contract, 156.

Petrel, government steamer, 1497.

Petroleum and Naphtha Inspection Bill. 1r., 10281. 2r. and com., 11647. 3r., 11648.

Photo-engravers, importation of, 7725, 8036, 8227.

Picton postmaster, 7891.

Pictou
County mail service, 600, 4060, 8354.
Life-boat crew, 961.
Marine hospital, 7385.

Piedmont post office, 592.

Pilotage on the St. Lawrence, 2282, 2374, 6187, 6498, 6624, 6743, 7637, 7810.

Police
Royal Northwest Mounted, 3355, 6166, 6174, 6480, 12055.
Bill respecting. Res., 717. 1r., 719. 2r., 886. Com., 886. 3r., 1653.

Pollution of Navigable Waters Bills
Mr. Bradbury: 1r., 6. 2r., 8607. Ref. to com., 8639. rep., 11666.
Mr. Kyte: 1r., 3174. 2r. and ref. to com., 8639. Rep., 11666.

Polson iron works, Government contracts with, 8641.

Pontbriand wharf, 584, 970.

Porcupine strike, 2110.

Port Arthur Dry Dock Bill. Res., 9838. 1r., 9838. 2r. and com., 10079. 3r., 10081.

Port Daniel Centre post office, 4424.

Port Hood harbour, 956, 1734.

Port Maitland post office, 11570.

Post Office
Amdt. bill. Res., 11801. 1r., 11802. 2r. and com., 11906. 3r., 11921.
Automobile for department, 8126.
Clerks in cities, 2418.
Dismissals. See that title.
Estimates, 6292, 6909, 11268, 11349, 11398, 12095.
Free departmental matter, 9281.
Intercolonial Railway mail facilities, 6293.
Legal adviser, 7810, 8358.
Letter Carriers
Conditions of work, 2418.
Conveyance of Bill. 1r., 3745. Withdrawn, 11466.
Service, extent of, 1951.
Mail bag locks, purchase of, 6294, 6742, 6748, 6910, 7034, 7212, 7617, 7889, 8124, 8355, 8649, 9213, 9214, 9595. See also Ontario Equipment Company.
Mail services. See that title.
Money orders tariff, 8653, 9595.
Police Gazette and postal privileges, 8132.
Railway mail clerks. See that title.
Rented offices, 8359.
Robberies of mails, 7615.
Rural mail service. See that title.
Savings banks, 1561, 1741.
Stamp-vending machines, 11203, 11568.

Power, Lenore, divorce bill. See Private Bills.

Power, Mr. William (West Quebec)
Naval forces of the Empire, 4891.
Quebec harbour improvements, 8049.

Prescott marine yard, 7465.

Preston, W. T. R., employment of, 2370.

Prince Albert Dominion lands, 2720. See also Donaldson.

Prince county fishery officer, 10413.

Prince Edward Island
Car ferry, 960, 2721, 3179, 9217.
Provincial subsidy, 4423.
Supreme court, 9341.

Prince Rupert
Marine depot, 1562.
Public building, 2620.

Printing and Stationery Department, reorganization of, 7808.

Printing Bureau
Wages in, 11546.
Women proof readers, employment of, 7809.

Prisons Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 10953. 2r., com. and 3r., 11466.

Private Bills discussed
Alberta Interurban Railway Company, 8586.
Alberta Railway and Irrigation Company, 3013.
Algoma Eastern Railway Company, 2144, 2145, 6197.
Athabasca and Grande Prairie Railway Company, 8970.
Athabaska Northern Railway Company, 3779, 3780.
Banque Immobilière, 2146.
Bishopric, George Frederick, patent of, 2573, 2693.
Brazilian Traction, Light and Power Company, Limited, 3014.
Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company, 3405.
Burrard, Westminster Boundary Railway and Navigation Company, 10749.
Calgary, Edmonton and Fort McMurray Railway Company, 6198.
Campbellford, Lake Ontario and Western Railway Company, 2145.
Canadian Explosives, Limited, 763, 2574, 2694, 2876.
Canada Hail Insurance Company, 3778.
Canadian Medical Protective Association, 3401, 3842.
Canadian Northern Railway Company, 4362, 6195, 6196, 8458.
Canadian Northern Branch Lines Company, 3406, 3409, 7757, 8587, 11394, 12133.
Canadian Northern Quebec Railway Company, 3410, 11397.
Canadian Northwest Loan and Mortgage Company, 2596, 2614, 7344.
Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation, 2605.
Canada Permanent Public Trustee Company, 2606.
Canadian Pacific Railway Company, 8969.
Canadian Premier Provident Fire Insurance Company, 9097.
Canadian Western Railway Company, 4409.
Central Railway Company of Canada, 2160, 11565.
Collingwood Southern Railway Company, 3013.
Commercial Acetyline Company of New Jersey, patent, 11016.
Delvigne, Maurice, patent, 11019.
Dominion Trust Company, 763, 3411.

Private Bills discussed—Cont.
Ebro Irrigation and Power Company, 3022.
General Accountants' Association, 3783, 3834, 3977, 6194.
Gold Medal Furniture Manufacturing Company Patent, 3078.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway
Branch Lines Company, 2143.
Time extension, 1406, 3349.
Guarantee Company of North America, 3404.
Hudson Bay, Peace River and Pacific Railway, 8583.
Hull Electric Company, 3026.
Huron and Erie Loan and Savings Company, 2595.
Huron and Ontario Railway Company, 2539.
Imperial Traction Company, 8969.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4413, 6196.
Intercolonial Trust and Investment Company, 3887, 3980.
Kootenay and Arrowhead Railway Company, 3077.
Manitoba and Northwestern Railway Company, 2145.
Manitoba Radial Railway Company, 8587.
Meek, F. W., divorce bill, 11566, 11738.
Middlesex Trust Company, 9095.
Moncton and Northumberland Strait Railway Company, 6050, 8585.
Newman, F. J., patent of, 3780, 4316, 6193, 8590.
New Orleans and Grande Isle Railway Company, 763, 933, 3023.
Niagara, St. Catharines and Toronto Railway, 3411.
Nipissing Central Railway Company, 8584.
North Empire Fire Insurance Company, 4411.
Northwest Guarantee and Accident Insurance Company, 2596, 2614, 6198.
Ottawa Northern and Western Railway Company, 3013.
Pacific and Eastern Mortgage Company, 9096.
Pacific and Hudson Bay Railway Company, 3027.
Pacific and Peace Railway Company, 8582.
People's Trustee and Security Company. 3412.
Port Nelson Company, 7185.
Power, Lenore, divorce bill, 11741.
Prudential Trust Company, 7186.
Real Estate Loan Company of Canada, 9095.

Private Bills discussed—Cont.
Richard, A. D., patent of, 3780, 3832.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 1133, 1307, 2572, 2694, 2943, 3303, 3362, 3399.
Shuswap and Okanagan Railway Company, 3409.
Southampton Railway, 8970.
Toronto Terminals, 11072.
Van Buren Bridge Company, 11390.
Western Canada Mortgage Corporation, 2603.
Winnipeg Water Supply, 10751.

Private Secretaries, salaries of, 953, 6272, 6471.

Privilege, questions of Beland, Mr., 6047.
Borden, Mr., 6265.
Bureau, Mr., 3747, 3932, 8464.
Carvell, Mr., 6050.
Clark, Mr. M., 6268.
Crothers, Mr., 3456.
Edwards, Mr., 4066, 8035.
Emmerson, Mr., 696, 1946.
Ethier, Mr., 6047.
Forget, Sir R., 2265.
Gauthier, Mr. L. J., 5150, 5621, 6050.
Guilbault, Mr., 4066.
Kyte, Mr., 1167.
Lemieux, Mr., 6047.
Maclean, Mr. A. K., 7634.
MacNutt, Mr., 1983, 2010.
Oliver, Mr., 1955.
Paquet, Mr., 8742.
Pugsley, Mr., 6266, 6499.
Rhodes, Mr., 708, 717.
Rogers, Mr., 3264, 3270.
Sharpe, Mr. S., 5149.
Sinclair, Mr., 4361.
Smith, Mr. Wm., 7035.
Verville, Mr., 4360.
White, Mr. W. H., 5149.

Privy Council, Judicial Committee of
Apptmt. of Law Lords to, 7818, 8058-8060.
Canadian appeals to, 1572-1581, 9826-9836.

Proulx, Mr. Edmond (Prescott)
Criminal Code amendments, 11607.
Dussault, Arthur, employment of, 3418.
Fenian raid veterans, 625, 2171.
French translation of Debates, 11965.
Georgian Bay canal, 2645.
Highways improvement, 8602.
Ile Perrot bridge, 9947.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11517.
Judges' Act amendment, 11625, 11926.
Land titles, Manitoba, 11942.

Proulx, Mr. Edmond—Cont.
Meek divorce bill, 11566.
Morin, J. B., employment of, 3418.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3815, 4841, 5549, 9513, 12135.
Penitentiary Act amendment, 11333.
Public Works estimates, 11081, 11083, 11508.
Railway Commissioner, chief, salary of, 9938.
Rockdale Tower postal service, 2171.
Rural mail delivery, 2177.
Supreme Court, 9833.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11889.
Wendover wharfinger, 629.

Public Accounts Committee. See Miller.

Public Buildings
Cost of, 9839.
Sub-letting of, 8132.

Public Service Commission, 796, 1743, 4059, 4426, 7808.

Public Works
Engineers, Prince Edward Island, 8653.
Estimates, 11078-11098, 11143-11199.
Buildings, 6229-6240, 6402, 11483, 12114.
Dredging, 11502.
Harbours and Rivers, 6240, 11466, 11495.
Roads and bridges, 11507.
Telegraph lines, 11508, 11512.
Minister of: proposed censure. See Antigonish.

Pugsley, Hon. Wm. (St. John City)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cement duty, 302.
Redistribution of representation, 304.
Transportation, 307.
Trade of Canada, 310.
By-elections, 318.
Naval defence, 327.
Banks and banking, 1279.
British Columbia financial terms, 6942.
British preference and Canadian ports, 586.
Canadian Explosives, Limited, 2579, 2694, 2879.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4364.
Customs estimates, 6884, 8018.
Debates, official: reporting in committee, 5149.
Dismissals, 863, 8018.
Deputy Speaker, proposed censure of, 9730, 9772.
Dry dock Duke of Connaught, 586, 705.
Fairville post office, 3034.

Pugsley, Hon. Wm.—Cont.
Fisheries protection, 3279.
Fishing regulations in New Brunswick, 6227.
Georgian Bay canal, 3077.
Government steamers, contracts for, 582, 797.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, purchase of, 1576.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 8864, 12029.
Car shortage, 286.
Intercolonial Trust Company, 3980.
Japanese treaty, 6960, 7000, 7040.
Justice Department estimates, 12038.
Life-saving stations, 6202.
Mail bag locks, 6923.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3655, 3661, 3670.
Miramichi river dredging, 587, 1548.
National Gallery of Canada, 8996.
National Transcontinental Railway
Moncton-Lévis section, 586.
Operation by Grand Trunk Pacific Company, 6822.
Naval forces of the Empire, 327, 1654, 4284, 4319, 4438, 4443, 4489, 4626, 4810, 5029, 5051, 5146, 5167, 5267, 5280, 5460, 5952, 5964, 5989, 6003, 6013, 5769, 5829, 5870, 7245, 9148, 9155, 9321, 9577, 9698 (amdt.), 12150, 12171.
North Fraser harbour, 2583.
Ocean rates, 9088.
Parliamentary procedure
Adjournment motions, 7404, 7417, 7840.
Appeal, second on one question, 5889.
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 5989, 5991, 6003, 6013.
Chair, reflections on action of, 9591, 9698-9704.
Irrelevance, 5829, 5863.
Merits of bill on m. for com. to rise, discussion of, 5864, 5867.
Money grant, amendment of, 5833, 5857.
Offensive personal reference, complaint of, 5769-5781.
Point of order, permissibility of discussion on, 4823.
Previous question
Admissibility of, 7416.
In committee, 9330-9339.
Recalcitrant witness, motion regarding without notice, 3660.
Rules of the House. See that title.
Patents, renewal of, 3780.
Patronage, political, 6192.
Privilege, 6499.
Pulp duty, United States, 12135.

Pugsley, Hon. Wm.—Cont.
Railway Commission, 9695.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3377.
Rideau Hall improvements, 6232.
Rules for limitation of debate, 9577.
Rules of the House, 6359, 7404.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6518.
Smith, Lyman, dismissal of, 6885.
Telegraph service, inter-Imperial, 9029.
Tolleton-Hatfield Point mail contract, 3416, 7038, 9232.
Transportation facilities, 307, 4279.
Vancouver harbour, 5155.
West Indian trade agreement, 891, 2032, 2111, 8765.
West Indies, steamship service to, 6269.

Pulp, United States duty on, 12135.

Quebec
Arsenal, 8648.
Bridge, 11255.
Customs collector, 584.
Dry dock, 797, 1735, 7381.
Floating dock, 1735.
Harbour Commission, 2167, 8123, 8038, 11803.
Advocate, 617.
Quarry, 11803.
Harbour improvements, 4168. See also St. Charles river.
Legal agents of Government, 7465, 7810.
Marine agency, 8647.
Merger, 1499, 1735, 2180.
Post office, 6237.
Morin, J. B., employment of, 3418.
Public buildings, 1161.
Weights and measures inspector, 8129.

Quebec and Saguenay Railway, 1367, 1407, 4168, 6268, 8360.

Quebec Central Railway Company lease, 1739.

Quebec East election: returning officer's account, 3121.

Quebec Harbour Commission Bill. 1r., 6732. Res., 7293. 2r. and com., 8563, 8893. 3r., 8994.

Radiotelegraphy Regulation Bill. Res., 778. 1r., 787. 2r., 2419. Com., 8686. 3r., 8742.

Railway Act Amendment Bills
Ames, Mr. 1r., 9822.
Cochrane, Mr. Res., 9687. 1r., 9696. 2r. and com., 9918. 3r., 9941.
Meighen, Mr. 1r., 951.

Railway Belt Water Power Bill. 1r., 9592. 2r., 9946. Com., 11921. 3r., 11926.

Railway Commissioner, chief, salary of, 9687, 9696, 9918.

Railway Companies Incorporation Bill. 1r., 8121.

Railway crossings, level, 623.

Railway divisional points, removal of, 7718, 9688, 9920.

Railway Mail Clerks Bill. Res., 11801. 1r., 11802. Com., 11916. 3r., 11921.

Railway Subsidies Bill. Res., 11669. 1r., 11801. 2r., com. and 3r., 11843.

Railways and Canals estimates, 6752, 10843-10953, 11098-11142, 11206-11268, 11294-11320.

Rainville, Mr. Joseph H. (Chambly and Verchères)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Prosperity of Canada, 6.
Finances, 9.
Aid to agriculture, 10.
Naval defence, 12.
Automobiles, government, 1155.
Banks and banking, 10107, 10659.
Experimental farms, 10269.
Highways improvement, 8218, 8533.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5045. See also Address in Reply.

Receivers General, assistant, 6481.

Reciprocity with the United States, 47, 104, 129, 204, 213, 236, 259, 271, 339, 351, 356, 406, 453, 507, 528, 10539.

Redistribution. See Parliamentary Representation.

Reid, Mr. James (Restigouche)
Intercolonial Railway ice supply, 2010.

Reid, Hon. J. D. (Minister of Customs)
Canadian Medical Association, 3879.
Customs estimates, 6295, 6881, 8014, 8690, 8724, 8728, 8733, 8735, 12105.
Dry dock Duke of Connaught, 705.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 9932.
Sherbrooke customs appraiser, dismissal of, 6899.
Smith, Lyman C., dismissal of, 6890.
West Indian trade, 2080.

Repatriation, Canadian, 3032, 3123.

Restigouche Boom Company, 7626.

Revelstoke public buildings, 2620.

Rhodes, Mr. Edgar N. (Cumberland)
Amherst public building, 11180.
Dismissal of L. Bent, 712, 978.
Government Railways provident fund, 732.
Grand Trunk Railway officials, proceedings against, 2175.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1832.
Extensions in Nova Scotia, 1996.
Privilege, 708, 712.
Sheep, purchase and sale of, 650.

Richards, Mr. James W. (Prince, P.E.I.)
Dismissals
Cape Egmont lighthouse keeper, 3179.
Cape Traverse postmaster, 1501.
Fish Island lightkeeper, 12163.
Malpeque collector, 1501.
North Cape lighthouse keeper, 3180.
Prince county fishery officer, 10413.
Tignish postmaster, 1502.
Tignish River lighthouse keeper, 3180.
Tignish sub-collector, 1501.
Life-saving stations, 12054.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4989.

Richelieu election, 39, 116, 221, 284, 318, 343, 379, 478, 494, 509.

Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, mail subsidy to, 584. See also under Private Bills.

Richibucto wharf, 9220.

Rideau canal: painting of bridges, 6252.

Rideau Hall improvements, 6232.

Riding Mountain
Drainage, 6416.
Forest reserve, 6255.

Rigaud
Arsenal, 7624, 10416.
Post office, 808, 6745, 8131, 10822.
Wharf, 11804.

Rivière du Loup harbour works, 1019.

River Scibout public works, 1162.

Roads. See Highways.

Robb, Mr. James A. (Huntingdon)
Agricultural estimates, 10393, 10405.
Butter imports, 595.
Cream exports, 595.
Dismissal of Duncan Macdonald, 812.
Grain Bill, 9127.
Independent Order of Foresters, 7337.
Militia estimates, 11053.

Robb, Mr. James A.—Cont.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4567, 5632.
Oats, imports and exports of, 595, 1291.
Sixth Hussars, 9342.
West Indian trade, 8761.
Wheat
Duty on imported, 1291.
Imports and exports, 596.

Robidoux, Ferdinand J. (Kent, N.B.)
Chairman, acting as, 5919-5926, 5990-6024.
Lanigan, Martin, dismissal of, 7632.

Robitaille post office, 5153, 9219.

Rockdale Tower mail service, 2171.

Rockliffe rifle range, cost of, 593.

Rogers, Hon. Robert, proposed censure of
Antigonish public works, 10191-10257.
Donaldson homestead entry, 7805, 7892; div., 3686, 8012.

Rogers, Hon. Robt. (Minister of Public Works)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Macdonald by-election, 208, 215.
Reciprocity with United States, 213.
Richelieu by-election, 221.
Antigonish public works estimates, 10225.
Donaldson homestead entry, 3264, 7914, 9223.
Dredging contracts, 6403.
East river, N. S., deepening of, 655.
Freight rates, western, 8947.
Grain Bill, 9885.
House of Commons
Accommodation, need of increased, 6238.
Ventilation of chamber, 6230.
Immigration, Chinese, 11560.
Inland Revenue estimates, 11528.
Japanese treaty, 7197.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8483, 10840.
Macdonald and Richelieu elections, 208, 221, 12004.
National Gallery of Canada, 8995, 9830.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5811, 7263.
Parliamentary procedure
Irrelevance, 4473, 4476.
Notice, sufficiency of, 7693. See also Rules.
Patents, renewal of, 3082, 11016, 11021.
Port Arthur dry dock subsidy, 10079.
Prince Albert homestead entry. See Donaldson.
Public Works estimates
Buildings, 11483-11494.
Dredging, 11502-11507.

Rogers, Hon. Robert—Cont.
Generally, 11079-11098, 11143-11199, 12114.
Harbours and rivers, 11466-11482, 11495-11502..
Miscellaneous, 11509.
Roads and bridges, 11507.
Telegraph lines, 11508, 11512.
Railway Commissioner, chief, salary of, 9919.
Rideau Hall improvements, 6232.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7693, 8921.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6526.
Saskatchewan elections, 5733.
Saskatoon Dominion lands clerk, dismissal of, 6747.
Volunteer bounty, 8912, 9943.

Roper, Commander, services of, 6255.

Rosenfeldt, A. D., employment of, 8647.

Ross, Mr. Duncan C. (West Middlesex)
Banks and banking, 1284, 1897.
Cattle exports to United States, 611, 1366.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5079.
Rural mail routes, 609.

Ross' Mill post office, 1497.

Ross rifle, 6496, 8126.

Roy, Dr. J. N., expedition of, 4057.

Royal assent, 2107, 2125, 4832, 4946, 6939, 6974, 7464, 7501, 10102.

Royal Military College, reported resignation of Colonel Crowe, 10824.

Rules for limitation of debate, 7388, 7468, 7502, 7551, 7638, 7757, 7819, 8227, 8371; div., 8455.
M. that Mr. Hazen be now heard, 7412; div., 7413.
M. for previous question, 7415; div., 8453.
Interpretation of, 9352-9370, 9445, 9451, 9571-9591.
Proposed amdt., Mr. A. K. Maclean, 7695; ruled out, 7715.

Rules of the House. See Parliamentary procedure, Rules for limitation of Debate and Speaker.

Rural mail services, 609, 2177, 3416, 3456, 6938, 7038, 7218, 7616, 7810, 7812, 7890, 8037, 8652, 10069, 12103.

Russell county postmasters, 593.

Russian Canadians sent to Siberia, 7636, 7813, 10067.

Russian immigrants, treatment of, 10529, 10955.

Ste. Adelaide de Pabos breakwater, 962, 1157.

St. Charles, Mba., rifle range, 8126.

St. Charles river works, 698, 4286, 6258, 6417, 6984, 8461, 8641. See also Quebec Harbour.

St. Fabien postmistress, appointment of, 3893.

St. Gabriel de Brandon public building site, 2166.

St. Gerard de Magella breakwater, 3549.

St. Germain wharf, 2173.

St. Godfroy buoy, 10415.

St. Irenée lighthouse keeper, 2619.

St. John Ambulance Association, 6166, 6302.

St. John and Quebec Railway, 622, 11671, 11691.

St. John harbour improvements, 4279.

St. Lawrence river
Accidents to navigation in, 588.
Channel buoys, 10413.
Damming of, 800, 1165, 1559.
Ice conditions in, 3034.
Water levels, 6509, 6533.

St. Lin
Post office, 800.
Public building, 3549.

Ste. Marthe postmaster, 809.

St. Mary's river fishery guardian, 7809.

St. Peters bay wharf, 3035.

St. Peters canal, 798, 962, 971, 1365, 1556, 3183, 6625.

St. Pierre de Sorel postmaster, 3415.

St. Roch des Aulnaies customs officer, 2615.

Sackville wharf, 6499.

Salmon River Indian school, 1158, 1292.

Salvation Army and convicts, 6289.

Saskatchewan
Coal lands, 3420.
Female labour in, 3414.
Forest and fire rangers, 630, 631.

Sault Ste. Marie canal, 629.

Savings Banks, Quebec, Bill. Res., 10145. 1r., 10147. 2r. and com., 10524. 3r., 10527.

Sayabec postmaster, 2170.

Scatarie island fog alarm keeper, 631.

Schaffner, Mr. F. L. (Souris)
Animal contagious diseases, 9619.
Banks and banking, 10312.
Grain Bill, 9896.
Immigration from United States, 6253.
Interest, rates of to agriculturists, 1167.
Volunteer bounty, 8919.

School lands, western, sales of, 3419.

Scott Antarctic expedition, 3452.

Scott, Sir Richard, death of, 8457.

Scows, steel hopper, tenders for, 4426.

Seamanship, London, England, examinations in, 2110.

Secretary of State estimates, 11546.

Seed grain for Quebec, 8649.

Seguin, Mr. Paul A. (L'Assomption)
Dismissals
Joliette keeper of arsenal, 1555.
Radstock postmaster, 1502.
Terrebonne postmaster, 617.
Joliette customs officer, 1498, 1502, 1503.
Kildare postmaster, resignation of, 1498.
L'Assomption public works, 801, 3549, 9342, 11805.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4047, 5687.
Rules for limitation of debate, 8351.
St. Gerard de Magella breakwater, 3549.
St. Lin
Post office, 800.
Public building, 3549.

Selkirk returning officer, 962.

Senate reform, 10822.

Seven Islands lightkeeper, 9222.

Sevigny, Mr. Albert (Dorchester)
Banque Internationale, 2242.
Canadian Biscuit Company, 4023.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4498, 4698, 4838, 5451, 9294.
Pilotage Commission, 2374.

Sexsmith, Mr. John A. (East Peterborough)
Agricultural estimates, 10390.
Banks and banking, 10340.
Fruit industry, 2279.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 7718.

Sharpe, Mr. Samuel (North Ontario)
Accountants' Association, 3979.
Banks and banking, 1166, 1910, 10096-10134, 10286-10374.
Companies Act Amendment Bill. 1r., 150.

Sharpe, Mr. Samuel—Cont.
Farmers Bank inquiry, 629, 803.
Fenian raid veterans, 612.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, purchase of, 1577.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1724.
Parliamentary procedure: Second appeal on one question, 5889.
Privilege, 5149.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2960.
Standard Paint Company, 7615.

Shediac fishery overseer, 3028.

Sheep, purchase and sale of, 645.

Sheet Harbour Passage wharf, 6254.

Shellfish Commission, 2619.

Shipping
Casualties in Canada, 4166.
Registered tons of, 1561.

Sinclair, Mr. John H. (Guysborough)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Canada, its prosperity, 450.
Transportation, 451.
Reciprocity with United States, 453.
Naval defence, 454.
Cement duty, 457.
Agriculture, aid to, 458.
Highways improvement, 458.
Government pledges, 459.
Dismissals, 461.
By-elections, 463.
Age limit for appointments, 800.
Agriculture, aid to, 458, 8087.
Banks and banking, 10133.
Boylston-South Manchester mail service, 4425.
Buoy contracts, 4427, 6182, 6947.
Canada-Jamaica trade, 1019.
Canadian coasting trade, 1561.
Canso lobster hatchery, 627, 9950.
Cars, official private, purchase of, 798.
Civil Service Commission, 6469.
Cole Harbour wharf, 3033.
Companies Act, 3025.
Country Harbour postmaster, 8462.
Customs estimates, 8701, 8710, 8733.
Customs officials in Guysborough, 8857.
Dismissals, 461, 860, 993, 6184, 8151, 8701, 8710, 8733, 9949, 12099.
Clementsport postmaster, 701.
Ehler, W. E., 8133.
Guysborough fishery officer, 631.
Half Island Cove postmaster, 700.
Middle Country Harbour postmaster, 701.

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Cont.
Mulgrave preventive officer, 639.
Munro, W. L., 10687, 10703.
Newchester postmaster, 3179.
Richards, Stephen, 10770.
Sonora postmaster, 701.
Stormont postmaster, 632.
Sydney postmaster, 3555.
Dredging at Little Passage, 7468.
Duchemin, Mr. H. P., payments to, 1016, 8130, 8462.
Erinville post office, 7616.
Esquimalt dry dock, 8641.
Express charges on fish, 6256.
Fenian Raid veterans, 6418, 6509, 6662.
Fisheries
Advisory board, 603.
Bounty, 8461.
Licenses to Japanese, 1165.
Lobster licenses, 9950.
Protection to on Pacific coast, 3031.
Salmon, 2616, 12048.
Shellfish commission, 2619.
Goldboro lobster hatchery, 628.
Goulman's Point breakwater, 4424.
Government Railways provident fund, 726, 765.
Gunhild, steamer, 1741.
Guysborough
Buoy contractors, 4427.
Charles Cove mail service, 626.
Fishery guardians, 1498.
Heatherton mail service, 1364.
Lobster packers, 4427.
Trap licenses, 626.
Harbours equipment of, 8047.
Immigration, 1164, 11555.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 1807, 8563, 8871.
Dismissals, 8151.
Employees, transfer of, 643.
Estimates, 6775.
Freight cars, 1156.
Guysborough branch, 583, 1952, 1992.
Pension fund, 8151.
Isaac's Harbour
Buoys, 802.
Lobster hatchery, 959.
Japanese Treaty, 7173.
Labourers pay on public works, 959.
Larry's River-Charlos Cove mail contract, 2726.
Life-saving stations, 1735, 6190, 12053.
Lobster fishing licenses, 9950.
Long's post office, 9218.
Mail bag locks, 7215, 8124, 8649, 9215.
Manila rope, price of, 10414.

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Cont.
Marine and Fisheries estimates, 10684-10738, 10770, 10806.
Minister of Public Works, proposed censure of, 10247.
Montreal
Harbour Commissioners, 9842.
Harbour master, 1499.
Murray, David, salary of, 959.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1243, 4284, 4472, 4590, 5252, 5699, 5904, 9323, 9968.
Newfoundland imports and exports, 4168.
New Harbour
Breakwater, 9842, 12121.
Postmaster, 7811, 8462.
Newspaper patronage list, 8124.
New Westminster harbour, 2544.
North Fraser harbour, 2589.
Ocean freight, 1561.
Ottawa water supply, 8628.
Oyster Ponds preventive officer, 7465.
Panama California exposition, 7220.
Panama canal, 965.
Pelagic sealing, 2724.
Port Bickerton buoys, 5152.
Post Office
Departmental purchases, 9215.
Estimates, 11419, 11440.
Savings banks, 1561, 1741, 6481.
Privilege, 1168.
Radiotelegraphy, regulation of, 784.
Railways and Canals estimates, 11316, 11320.
Roper, Commander, services of, 6255.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7587.
St. Mary's River fishery guardian, 7809.
Salmon fisheries, 2616, 12048.
Sault Ste. Marie canal traffic, 629.
Seed, impure, 10393.
Senate reform, 10822.
Sheet Harbour-Sherbrooke mail service, 3121.
Shellfish commission, 2619.
Shipbuilding in Canada, 10411.
Shipping at Canadian ports, 1561.
South African trade from St. John, 7212.
South Manchester post office, 3892.
Steamboat inspection, 914.
Steam trawling, 1499, 2009, 3282, 3318.
Sydney postmaster, appointment of, 3551.
Telegraphs and telephones, nationalization of, 3415.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11890, 11902.
Torbay lightkeeper, 7811.
Tracadie road postmaster, appointment of, 701.
Trent canal, 11266.

Sinclair, Mr. John H.—Cont.
Victoria, B.C.
Breakwater, 8461.
Post Office, 11202.
White Head customs officer, 2168.
Yukon telegraph service, 4167.

Sixth Hussars, 9342.

Smith, Mr. Wm. (South Ontario)
Animal contagious diseases, 9616.
Canadian Medical Association, 3877.
Dismissals in South Ontario, 869, 6894.
Experimental farms, 10276.
Fruit marking, 9683.
Horse breeding, 10404.

Solicitor General, office of, 618, 2656.

Sorel
Marine railway, 581.
Pontbriand wharf, purchase of, 584, 970.
Work shops, 7889.

Soulanges canal, superintendent of, 8857.

Souris breakwater, 5152.

South Africa, trade with from St. John, 7212.

South African Veterans' Scrip, 601, 1097, 1290, 1370, 3892. See also Volunteer Bounty and Veterans.

Southampton Railway Company, 10415.

South Manchester post office, 3892.

South Pole Expedition. See Scott.

Speaker (Hon. T. S. Sproule), rulings of. See also Parliamentary procedure.
Adjournment motions, 3452, 7827, 7839, 7842, 7847, 7849, 8464.
Anticipating notice on order paper, 6642.
Authority of Speaker to resume chair without com. report, 6161, 6164, 6339, 6372-6374.
Chair, reflections on action of, 9701-9707. Appeal and div., 9707.
Disorder, resuming chair to stop, 6018, 6020, 6022, 6161, 6374.
House of Commons staff, classification of, 11958.
Indulgence of House, meaning of, 1986.
Interim report of com., discussion of, 10528.
Irrelevance, 7014, 7174, 7836, 7839.
Miller, R. C., case of, 3361, 3645, 3651, 3663, 3741, 3745, 5154.
Money grant, amendment of, 11792, 11794, 11797, 11844, 11856, 12093.
Naming of member, 6019.

Speaker (Hon. T. S. Sproule)—Cont.
Naval Aid Bill
Introductory resolution necessary, 693, 912.
Amendments out of order, 3259, 3261, 3901.
Notice, sufficiency of, 7694.
Official documents quoted from, tabling of, 7926, 7944, 8012, 9224.
Out of order proposed amendment after motion for previous question, 7715.
Papers, tabling of, 7211, 9224.
Point of order, permission of discussion on, 4825.
Press comments on proceedings in House: when not quotable, 7457, 7955.
Previous question, m. for
Form of, 7413.
When admissible, 7417.
Privilege, matter of
How far a member may go in stating, 3266, 3270.
Press statements not debatable as, 713, 1984, 2266, 3266.
Motions arising from without notice, 3663.
Proper time to bring up, 1986.
Questions and answers
Criticism of answers, 2372, 3041, 6877.
Form of answer optional, 697, 2720.
Lengthy answers, 3042, 3118, 7385.
Questions without notice, 6736, 7036, 7039.
Statements in questions, members responsible for, 8122, 9345.
Recalcitrant witness
Motions for summons to without notice, 3361.
Motion for committal without notice, 3663.
Refusal of members to obey order of Chair, 6040.
Relevance, 7975.
Speaker, action of, challengable only on notice of motion, 6162, 6373.
Unparliamentary expressions, 7715, 7865, 8262, 8263, 8299, 8385, 8388, 8496.

Stag Harbour buoys, 11074.

Stallions, thoroughbred, bonuses on, 3742.

Stanfield, Mr. John (Colchester)
Animal contagious diseases, 9618.
Government Railways provident fund, 765.
Intercolonial Railway employees, transfer of, 644.
Sheep, purchase and sale of, 648.

Steamboat inspection, 12058.

Steamers. See Government Steamers.

Steamship subsidies. See Trade and Commerce estimates, also Subsidies.

Steele, Mr. M. (South Perth)
Agriculture, Department of, mailing list, 624.
Canadian Medical Association, 3855.
Farm Weeds, distribution of, 624.
Farmers in Canada, number of, 625.
Meek divorce bill, 11738.
Parcel post, 11833.

Steel Hopper Scows, tenders for, 5151.

Steel rails, remission of duty on, 802, 1737, 2180, 5147, 6840-6875.

Stefansson expedition, 3552, 4167, 6272, 12058.

Stellarton public building site, 960, 1162.

Stevens, Mr. H. H. (Vancouver)
Accountants' Association, 3784.
Burrard Inlet Tunnel and Bridge Company, 3405.
Canadian Medical Association, 3852.
Canada Permanent Insurance Company, 5146.
Chinese opium traffic, 4020.
Japanese treaty, 7010, 7104.
Kitsilano Indian reserve, 8494.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1222, 3813, 4491, 4702, 4805, 5029, 9379.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3381.
Vancouver Harbour Commission, 8501.

Stewart, Mr. Dugald (Lunenburg)
Coderre, Hon. Louis, charges against, 6149.
Sheet Island Passage and Sober Island wharves, 6254.
Steam trawling, 3334.

Stewart, Mr. Thos. J. (West Hamilton)
Doors, import of, 2172.

Strikes, commission to investigate, 6840.

Subsidies
Mail and steamship, 6269, 11457.
Railway, 11669, 11801, 11843.

Supply Bills
For $33,044,961.78. Res., 6936. 1r., 2r., com. and 3r., 6944.
For $123,288,860.64. Res., 11602. 1r., 11603. 2r. and com., 11603. 3r., 11668.
For $23,470,316.65. Res., 1r., 2r. and com., 12133. 3r., 12139-12161.
For details see titles of departments.

Supreme Court Act Amendment Bill. Res., 8052. 1r., 8061. 2r., 8568. Com., 8568, 9822. 3r., 9836. Senate amdt., 10680.

Sutherland, Mr. Donald (South Oxford)
Agriculture credits, 3163.
Canadian Medical Association, 3857, 3872.
Farm labourers and domestic servants, commission for, 1951.
Horse breeding, 3742, 10400, 10406.
Immigration to Ontario, 11549-11559.
Seed, impure, 10392.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11886.

Swamp lands in Manitoba, 3888.

Swift Current lands office, 10822.

Sydney
Postmastership, 3551.
Railway facilities, 6787.

Tanner's Point lighthouse, 9341.

Tariff Bill. Res., 10628. 1r., 10651. 2r., 11459. Com. and 3r., 11460.
See also Budget and 102, 599, 2010, 6435, 6943, 9639.

Taylor, Mr. James D. (New Westminster)
Banks and banking, 11592.
Debates, French translation of, 11962.
Donaldson homestead entry, 7961.
Fisheries reference, the Dominion and British Columbia, 4064.
Freight rates, equality of, 10966.
New Westminster Harbour Commissioners, 2540, 2573, 3009.
North Fraser Harbour Commissioners, 2581, 3012.

Technical Education Commission, 961, 2724, 3185, 11921.

Telegraph and telephones, nationalization of, 3415, 4401.

Telegraph Service, Inter-Imperial, Bill. 1r., 9009. Res., 9944. 2r. and com., 11656. 3r., 11668. Senate amdts., 12161.

Temiscouata public works, 11804.

Terminal Elevators, 8679, 9122, 12108.
Sites for, 625, 3419.

Thoburn, Mr. William (North Lanark)
Chairman, acting as, 4817.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway bonds, purchase of, 1580.

Thompson, Mr. Alfred (Yukon)
Agriculture Department estimates, 10266.
Canadian Medical Association, 3870.
Mint, Ottawa, 8666, 9108.
Mounted Police, Royal Northwest, 6475.
National Gallery of Canada, 9005.

Thomson, Mr. Levi (Qu'Appelle)
Banks and banking, 2467, 10345.
Canadian Northern Railway mileage, 11570.
Fruit growing industry, 9676.
Grain Bill, 9890.
Moosejaw homestead inspectors, 805.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2681, 2704, 4688, 5575, 9495.
North Atlantic freight rates, 9073.
Post Office estimates, 11273.
Power divorce bill, 11744.
Regina homestead inspectors, 805.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7883.
Sintaluta postmaster, dismissal of, 10413.
Smith, Jacob K., employment of, 11200.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6871.
Swift Current homestead inspectors, 805.

Thornton, Mr. Chas. J. (Durham)
Fruit marking, 9685, 11938.

Three Rivers
Coal dock inspector, 8463, 8645, 8741.
Public building, 1550, 1744, 9840.

Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway Subsidy Bill. Res., 11802. 1r., 11803. 2r. and com., 11873. 3r., 11905.

Titles of Honour Bill. 1r., 1547.

Tobin, Mr. Edmund W. (Richmond-Wolfe)
Bromptonville mail service, 5154, 12100.
Dismissals
Disraeli postmaster, 637.
St. Fortunat postmaster, 637.
St. François Xavier de Brampton postmaster, 636.
Stratford Centre postmaster, 637, 861.
Disraeli public building, 6742, 8131.
Naval forces of the Empire, 9421.
Public Works estimates, 12115.

Torbay lightkeeper, 7811.

Toronto Terminals Bill. 1r., 11072. 2r., com. and 3r., 11466.

Tracadie
Lazaretto, 597.
Lobster hatchery, 962.

Trade and Commerce Department estimates, 6728, 12106.

Transatlantic mail service, 7204, 10417.

Transportation facilities, 307, 337, 8047, 11773.

Trawling, steam, 1499, 2009, 3281, 3318.

Trent canal, 10825, 11262, 11294.

Trois Pistoles breakwater, 11200.

Tuberculosis, Friedmann treatment for, 1556, 4169.

Turgeon, Mr. Onesiphore (Gloucester)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Intercolonial Railway matters, 128.
Reciprocity with United States, 129.
Naval defence, 133.
Macdonald election, 133.
Banks and banking, 10115, 10285.
Bathurst
Harbour improvements, 12125.
Letter box service, 6496.
Beresford district, proposed breakwater, 1737.
Dismissal of Edouard Chiasson, 8726.
Dredge Restigouche, 6743.
Gloucester, N.B., mail service, 3891.
Highways improvement, 8539.
House of Commons ice supply, 12134.
Intercolonial Railway
Branch lines, 128, 1773.
Freight rates, 12067.
Naval forces of the Empire, 2564, 2657, 4618, 5431, 9414.
Railway subsidies, 11670.
Railways and Canals Department estimates, 10885.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7662.
Steam trawling, 3344.
Tracadie lazaretto, 597.

Turpentine. See Adulteration.

Turriff, Mr. John G. (Assiniboia)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
By-elections, 265, 278.
Naval defence, 266.
Highways improvement, 267.
National Transcontinental railway, 268.
Tariff, 269.
Reciprocity with United States, 271.
Cement duty, 274.
Alameda postmaster, dismissal of, 657, 842.
Banks and banking, 1284, 2450.
Bayfield, H. A., employment of, 3030.
Brandon quarter section, sale of, 7385.
Canadian Northern Railway, 4367.
Canadian Pacific Railway
Control of by Railway Commission Bill. 1r., 2415.
Irrigated lands, 4423.
Issue of new stock, 632.
Canadian Western Railway, 4410.
Coal lands, Saskatoon, 3420.
Dickin, George, homestead inspector, 1161.

Turriff, Mr. John G.—Cont.
Dismissals for political partisanship, 815.
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6659.
Dorsett, W. E., investigating commissioner, 1159.
Dumping clause, 594.
Estevan homestead inspectors, 700.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4414.
Mail bag locks, 7216.
Moosejaw post office investigation, 7622.
Morrison, F. A., employment of, 1496, 6255.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3457, 4559, 5197, 5214.
New Westminster jail: refusal to accept prisoners, 1363.
North Empire Fire Insurance Company, 4411.
Post Office Department, rented offices for, 8359.
Prince Rupert public building, 2620.
Revelstoke public building, 2620.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 2957, 3312.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7831.
Rutherford, John, forest ranger, 622.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6537.
Saskatchewan coal lands, 3420.
Western Canada Mortgage Corporation, 2603.
West Indian trade agreement, 2044.
Young, Murdock, employment of, 3030.

Union Life Assurance Company, 8227, 8360.

United Shoe Machinery Company, 11667.

Vallée des Erables post office, 1161.

Vancouver Harbour Commissioners Bill. Res., 7292, 8500. 1r., 8507. 2r. and com., 8900. 3r., 8995.

Vegetables, tariff on, 6943.

Verville, Mr. Alphonse (Maisonneuve)
Alien Labour Law
Inspector, dismissal of, 8121.
Photo-engravers, importation of, 7756.
Antwerp Dominion agent, 3035.
Budget
Economic conditions in Canada, 10465.
Cost of living, comparative statements, 10468.
Foodstuffs and cold storage, 10482.
Coal, supplies and prices of, 10490.
Tariff on necessaries, 10494.
Cold storage warehouses, 1558.
Dominion steel works, 11566.
Hough, John, employment of, 10415.
Inland Revenue Department, wages of cooper for, 12108.

Verville, Mr. Alphonse—Cont.
Intercolonial Railway
Conciliation board, 6256.
Wages, 6257.
Labour, hours on public works, 695.
Letter carrier service, 1951.
Magdalen Islands, wireless letter, 3033.
Maisonneuve
Election suit, 3036.
Postal station, 612.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3098, 5040, 5989, 6026, 5741, 9502.
Public Works estimates, 11082.
Rules for limitation of debate, 7865.

Veterans grants to. See Fenian Raid and South Africa.

Veterinary Director General: visit to Nova Scotia, 8857.

Victoria, B. C.
Breakwater, 8461.
Drill hall, 4061.
Post office, 11202.

Victoria Memorial Museum, 6234.

Volunteer Bounty Bill. Res., 8905. 1r., 8921. 2r., 9622. Com., 9941. 3r., 9944.

Voters' Lists, printing of, 6730.

Warnock, Mr. David (Macleod)
Alberta land sale, 7467.
Animal contagious diseases, 9616, 9863.
Banks and banking, 2465, 10290.
Canadian Western Railway Company, 4409.
Forest reserves and parks, 11654.
Mail bag locks, 7617.
Meat inspection, 6290.
Naval forces of the Empire, 3220, 5030, 5728.
Volunteer bounty, 8919.

Water Powers. See Railway Belt.

Webster, Mr. John (Brockville)
Horse breeding, 10399, 10405.
Railway divisional points, removal of, 7718, 9920.
Seed, impure, 10395.

Weichel, Mr. William G. (North Waterloo)
Naval forces of the Empire, 3524.
Welland Canal
Construction work, 934.
Resident engineer, 934.

West Indian Steamship Service, 6735.

West Indian Trade Agreement Bill. Res., 889. 1r., 910. 2r., 2012. Com., 2042, 2110. 3r., 8742.

West Indian Trade Agreement Bill—Cont.
Proposed amendments
Mr. Carvell, 8747; div., 8812.
Mr. Pugsley, 8771; div., 8812.
See also 26, 43, 601, 699, 2832, 6500.

Wheat and Oats, imports of, 1291.

White, Mr. Gerald V. (North Renfrew)
Georgian Bay canal, 2628.
Gypsum products, importation of, 2174.

White, Mr. William H. (Victoria, Alta.)
Gray, Ambrose, employment of, 11572.
Mail bag locks, 7618.
Naval forces of the Empire, 5059, 5556, 7294, 7346.
Privilege, 5149.

White, Hon. W. T. (Minister of Finance)
Accountants' Association, 3783.
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Cement duty, 85.
Tariff commission, 102.
Macdonald election, 103.
Reciprocity with United States, 104.
Naval defence, 110.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 111.
Agriculture credits, 3165.
Auditor General's office, 8033.
Banks and banking, 1267, 1841, 2340, 2488, 10086, 10091, 10098, 10100, 10108, 10282-10378, 11576, 11596.
Banque Internationale, 2199, 4278.
Budget, 9624.
Revenue and expenditure, 9625.
Loans maturing, 9629.
Net debt, 9630.
Trade tables, 9632.
Immigration, 9637.
Tariff changes, 9639.
Cement duty, 9645.
Lead bounty, 9657.
Reply to criticisms, 10614.
Cost of living, 10620. See also 6442.
Canadian Explosives, Limited, 2575.
Canadian Northern Railway subsidy, 11701, 11790.
Canada Permanent Trust Company, 2607.
Canada Western Trust and Mortgage Company, 2596.
Cement duty, reduction of, 85, 9645.
Departmental char service, 6300.
Dismissals for political partisanship, 813, 993.
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6649.
Dominion notes, printing of, 6486.

White, Hon. W. T.—Cont.
Farmers Bank inquiry: printing of report, 6734.
Finance Department estimates, 6278, 6481.
Foresters, Independent Order of, 7181.
Fruit and vegetables, duty on, 6943.
Government savings banks, 6481.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company
Bonds, purchase of, 1566.
Government loan to 11799, 11865.
Guarantee Company of North America, 3404.
Huron and Erie Loan and Savings Company, 2595.
Imperial Underwriters' Corporation, 4415, 6196.
Japanese Treaty, 6972.
Landry, Andrew, pardon of, 931, 6594.
Lead bounties, 9657, 10157, 10527.
Militia estimates, 11044, 11066.
Mint, Ottawa, 8659, 9102.
Naval forces of the Empire, 110, 5107, 5772, 5978, 5992, 9134, 12149, 12171.
Charge of obstruction, 6500.
Parliamentary procedure
Chairman, temporary appointment of, 5993.
Offensive personal references, 5772.
Rules of the House. See that title.
Patents, renewal of, 3780.
Public Works estimates, 11160.
Regal Trust Company, 3413.
Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company, 3367.
Rules of the House, 6330, 6371, 8263.
St. John Ambulance Association, 6302.
Savings banks in Quebec, 10145, 10525.
Steel rails, remission of duty on, 6851.
Tariff, 102, 6442, 9624, 9639.
Timiskaming and Northern Ontario Railway subsidy, 11880.
Union Life Assurance Company, 8366.
Western Canada Mortgage Corporation, 2603.
West Indian trade agreement, 2026, 8785.

White Head customs officer, salary of, 2168.

White slave traffic. See Criminal Code Amendment, also Immigration, female.

Wickham West post office, 7616.

Wilcox, Mr. Oliver (North Essex)
Cable rates, 3031.
Dismissals, 850.
Ditching machinery, duty on, 6651.
Naval forces of the Empire, 1322, 4725, 9491.

Wilson, Mr. Charles A. (Laval)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Naval defence, 560.
Monk, Mr., resignation of, 561.
British preference, 564.
Transportation, 566.
Civil Service reform, 566.
Automobiles, Government, 1154.
Civil Service vacancies and appointments, 598.
Criminal Code amendments, 10078.
Customs estimates, 8016.
Des Prairies river dredging, 935.
Grand Trunk Pacific Railway connection with Montreal, 933.
House of Commons law branch, 2720.
Justice Department estimates: penitentiaries, 10975, 10980, 10996.
Long Sault dam, proposed, 1165.
Monk, Hon. F. D., retirement of, 561.
Naval forces of the Empire, 4683, 5001, 5090, 6011, 5589. See also 560.
Parliamentary procedure
Chairman, temporary, appointment of, 6011.
Friday sittings, validity of after midnight, 5008.
Penitentiary Act amendment, 11330-11344.
Public Works estimates, 11153.
Roy, Dr. J. N., voyage of, 4057.
St. Lawrence water levels, 6533.
St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary dismissals, 944.
Trent canal, 11266.

Wilson, Mr. Gordon C. (Wentworth)
Address in reply to Governor General's Speech
Reciprocity with United States, 528.
Tariff, 536.
Trade of Canada, 538.
Cement duty, 542.
Pre-election promises, 542.
Transportation, 545.
Naval defence, 546.

Winnipeg city water supply, 10751.

Winnipeg river water power leases, 9839.

Winnipegosis lake, fishing in, 6259.

Wire for fencing and free list, 585.

Wireless Telegraphy. See Radiotelegraphy and Telegraph Service.

Witness, recalcitrant. See Miller.

Wolseley, Field Marshal, death of, 6733.

Wrecking plants, 6177.

Wright, Mr. William (Muskoka)
Banks and banking, 10094.
Naval forces of the Empire, 9464.

Wynyard Dominion lands agency, 3893.

Yacoloff, reprieve of, 1839.

Yarmouth
Customs officers, 1368.
Dredging, 3033, 3890.
Marine hospital, 4059.
Post office, 3034.

Yarmouth North post office, 2726.

Yorkton homestead inspectors, 1018.

Yukon
Government of, 6480.
Telegraph service, 4167.