> That an order of the House do issue for copies of all contracts dealing with publicity and/or information entered into by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce in the fiscal years 1970-71 and 1971-72.

That notice of motion for production of papers was agreed to. Then in the very next instance, as recorded on the next page, notice of motion No. 46, again standing in the name of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, was moved, asking as follows:

> That an order of the House do issue for copies of all contracts deaing with publicity and/or information entered into by the Department of National Health and Welfare in the fiscal years 1970-71 and 1971-72.

The parliamentary secretary replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, we cannot accede to the request of the hon. member because a contract is a confidential document between the individual and his employer.

What kind of situation do we have, Mr. Speaker, when in one instance one parliamentary secretary says the motion is perfectly acceptable and that the government is prepared to respond by tabling papers and documents, and the very next moment another parliamentary secretary says it would not be proper for such a motion to be accepted? I think this illustrates that at the present time the only rules governing production of papers in this House can be very simply stated as follows: Yes we want to do it, no we don't.

Quite frankly, Sir, I think in your capacity as senior officer of the House a special responsibility falls upon you, and particularly on those concerned with the procedures used in this place, to scrutinize very carefully what the House adopts as its customary practice in regard to the tabling of documents. It is a matter of increasing concern not only to Members of Parliament but to the general public that larger and larger amounts of government information are being labelled as confidential, as highly confidential, as secret, as top secret, as not for public distribution, as an interdepartmental communication, as a special study, as an advisory report or whatever the label that is applied.

In effect, we are seeing an attempt to block a basic democratic process, that of the right to know. In recent days we have had debates in the House touching on this very issue, and we are clearly seeing that on this question the government is using its opinion regarding the production of a particular document or paper as the criterion for deciding whether so to produce the information.

I think we must establish very clearly that there are basic ground rules in respect of the tabling of documents. Instead of adopting the attitude that whenever the government feels it necessary, it may maintain that things are confidential, we should reverse this trend and say that generally it is in the public interest to have this information unless it can be conclusively proved that documents if made public will create substantial harm in one form or another. Now it appears the burden of proof is the other way and members are drastically limited in this regard.

We know that at the end of a session, even at the end of a very brief one such as this, there remains a long list of motions which hon. members have brought forward for the production of papers. A few are adopted, fewer still are voted on, and most are completely ignored. I do not think this is good enough. I do not think a system of government as complex as the one we have evolved in this country can work effectively if information is increasingly denied the people and their representatives.

If ever there was proof of lack of policy and clear procedure for the House to deal with the production of papers, it was pointed out in yesterday afternoon's performance in this House. We would not need constantly to go through a repetition of the kind of thing the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and myself have done in respect of these specific papers on CIDA in Viet Nam if we had clear procedure and if there were a clear delineation as to what should be made public and under what conditions. At the present time this business is increasingly frustrating; it is frustrating to the point of delaying the work of government and denying public participation.

I think it is most difficult for any government spokesman to prove that the public does not have the right to know what has been our performance, policy and activity in respect of aid programs in such a sensitive situation as that in Viet Nam. I for one would be most interested to know why, particularly after a long passage of time, it is generally thought that reports submitted should not be made available. I should like to know why these reports cannot now be in the public domain. I think the burden of proving the necessity of maintaining them as confidential documents should be with the government. I will be very interested to hear what the government has to say in this instance.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, there are two aspects of this debate on the motion for the production of papers moved by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). One is the policy of the Canadian government in respect of the war in Viet Nam. Every debate on a motion for the production of papers brings with it a substantial discussion on the material that is said to be contained or may be contained in those papers. Then there is the question—this was raised in the last few minutes of the remarks of the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—of the confidentiality of documents exchanged between public servants and ministers of the Crown. Those are the two aspects of this debate.

With regard to the first aspect, the policy of the Canadian government on the war in Viet Nam, we on this side of the House do not accept the allegations of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Egmont. During these remarks I shall not enter into the question of what is Canadian policy in respect of the war in Viet Nam or what it should or should not have been. I shall not engage in a refutation of the remarks of those who preceded me. That matter might better be discussed in a debate on external affairs which gives ample scope to discuss the substance of the question. I want to address myself particularly to the concluding remarks of the hon. member for Egmont when he spoke of confidential papers and what the government ought to do about them.

This motion provides a good case for examination. First of all, who is Dr. Vennema? That has been very ably dealt with by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway. If I might just refresh the minds of hon. members for a moment, he was project director of the Canadian tuberculosis centre in Quang Ngai from 1965 to 1967. He was appointed director of Canadian medical services in Viet Nam shortly before his departure. Following the 1968 Tet offensive, he returned to Viet Nam briefly to report on the status of Canadian medical aid projects.

During his assignments in Viet Nam, Dr. Vennema prepared several reports for the government, including two following his February 12 to March 28, 1968, visit. He recommended, among other things, the withdrawal of all Canadian medical personnel from Viet Nam. He had some very vivid things to say about his experiences in Viet Nam. He is a person of great sincerity whose work and ability as a medical man won for him the medal of the Order of Canada. He is a man of unquestioned integrity and reputation. Having heard him speak on television following his assignment, I think he can only be regarded as a good Canadian with a message in which he sincerely believed and wanted to convey to the Canadian people.

The questions with which we must deal in the case of the papers of Dr. Vennema are: What was his relationship with the government, and what was his relationship in respect of the reports he submitted? There was a relationship of confidentiality. Whatever may have been said by Dr. Vennema subsequently in making his case, which he had a perfect right to do, he was at that time bound by confidentiality in his reports. I think he respected that fact in the reports he made to the Canadian government.

All experts such as Dr. Vennema who perform a particular service under contract—to CIDA in this case—submit reports on their projects as a matter of routine. These reports are part of the requirement of service and are all submitted on the understanding that they will be treated as confidential and privileged documents, because frequently they contain information and personal opinions about individuals as well as views about the projects in which they are involved.

These reports are of considerable importance in improving CIDA's assistance programs to developing countries and, in fact, in improving the ability of the government of Canada to assist in a particular situation. Public distribution by the government of such reports could be interpreted by the experts working for CIDA as a breach of confidence. Moreover, if it became the practice to make such reports public it would inhibit officials of CIDA or any other officials from expressing their views.

We must remember that confidentiality is part of the daily life of employers and employees working together in a particular situation. Confidentiality enters into our discussions in this House as the business of the House moves forward: there is confidentiality in respect of meetings of House leaders, confidentiality in conversations between whips, between members and ministers and between members on both sides of the House about the business we put forward.

If what was said by them were to be made into a press release, then what was said between employer and employee and what we said in this House to each other when discussing business in confidence, would be only what we were prepared to see printed for publication. So, if we were to move, as suggested by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), to a position where a report from a public servant could be made public unless, as he put it, it were conclusively proven that it would be harmful to the public interest, then we could be assured that the reports the government receives from its public servants in departments everywhere and abroad would contain only those matters which they were prepared to see published. In this event, the minister and the executives in the public service would know no more about what was going on than what they read in the papers. If confidentiality does not and cannot exist in documents of this kind, there would be no sense whatever in asking for a report from a man of Dr. Vennema's stature and undoubted integrity for he certainly would not report in all honesty what he felt if he believed his opinions were to be made public.

If we ask a man his opinion in confidence the answer will be different from one given for publication. This is something we all know.

An hon. Member: Dr. Vennema wants it published.

Mr. Deachman: The government of Canada has a position to maintain in respect of its public servants. If it took the position that it would, from time to time, pluck a confidential report out of the basket and make it public material, as is being suggested now by the hon. member, then all I can say is that public servants will report to their employers precisely the kind of material that the hon. gentleman and I see every day of our lives and shove into the wastepaper basket. That kind of material is cranked out by the public service day after day. We know a great deal about it. The scrap paper people become wealthy just carting away the press releases which contain that kind of information in the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: This is not that type.

Mr. Deachman: I know the kind of information to which the hon. gentleman is referring. He is referring to a confidential report made to the government of Canada, and made in confidence so that the government could make a judgment. I think we must respect our public servants and be prepared to deal with them in confidence. Although this is most unlikely, I say to the hon. member that if the day should ever come when he occupies a seat on this side of the House or a seat on the cabinet bench, I doubt very much that he would tell his senior officials that they should not tell him anything they do not want published because they would be likely to find themselves in a most embarrassing position since confidentiality between him and them had gone out the window. That is not really what the hon. member would do if he found himself in that position. Dr. Vennema knew that would not happen when he sent that report to the government of Canada advising the government about conditions.

An hon. Member: Why does he say he wants it made public now?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member has the floor, and I think he should be allowed to continue his speech without interruption.

Mr. Deachman: I think that is a matter the hon. gentleman and others should take up with Dr. Vennema.

In closing, I simply want to make the point clear once more that there is no question about the confidential relationship which must exist between senior officials of the government of Canada and ministers in respect of reports. If that relationship cannot exist, they certainly cannot work together. That is the way it has been when other governments have been in power. That is the way it was when the Conservative government, the party of the hon. member for Egmont, was in power. That is how it would be if, as I say, it should ever fall to the NDP to form a government in this country.

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the motion of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) again brings up, among other things, the traditional question of the obligation, for the government authorities, of making public all documents, letters and reports that originate from or are addressed to a minister.

Is it in the public interest to bring out in broad daylight all the reports on private or public inquiries, special surveys and expert advice ordered by various departments, boards or government agencies, in the daily administration of public affairs?

Vennema Report on Viet Nam War

Mr. Speaker, in some cases, would publishing all their correspondence and reports really be honest towards the employees of the government, government boards or agencies? For my part, I do not hesitate to say that we would be doing a disservice to the country and to the Canadian people, contrary to what has been suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

For example, would the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway be ready to authorize the publication of her entire correspondence with a department, or with a board, etc?

As pointed out earlier, who is Dr. A. Vennema? As stated he was head of Canadian medical services in Vietnam in 1967 working for the Canadian International Development Agency which—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

• (1750)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The hon. member is rising for the purpose of asking a question. Does the parliamentary secretary allow the hon. member to ask his question?

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a speech which I should like to have enough time to deliver this afternoon. The hon. member made his own speech; therefore, I wish he gave me the same opportunity, after which he might ask his questions.

Dr. Vennema is recognized as a highly competent specialist who carried out the particular work entrusted to him in Vietnam most ably and successfully, on account of his medical knowledge and the human character he gave to his work there, in the circumstances known to all of us which prevailed in that area of the world then and unfortunately are still prevailing now. The high professional ability of Dr. Vennema is beyond any doubt. Besides, Canada has recognized his achievements.

Dr. Vennema is a Canadian who in the early 60s first worked in Vietnam, as stated by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, under an American medical program designed to alleviate the plight of the civil population constantly pressed by the war actions that were and still are breaking up on that territory.

At the request of the Vietnamese government, Canada agreed to contribute to the construction, the equipment and the operation of a anti-tuberculosis centre. In accordance with that agreement, our country, under its foreign aid program administered by the Canadian International Development Agency, built a modest two-storey building. This country provided the necessary equipment and medical supplies, as well as a team of experts for ensuring the effective operation of that centre. On the other hand, the Vietnamese people provided the lot and shared the operating costs. The Canadian medical team included the project director, who was Dr. Vennema from 1965 to 1967, nurses, technicians and administrative personnel, whose tasks included management of the training given to the Vietnamese people who were eventually to take over the administration of that centre and who in fact did so in 1972.

The centre which, by the way, is located in the city of Quangngai in the province of the same name, was inaugurated officially at the end of 1967 at which time Dr. Vennema was appointed director of the project. However, as a result of the events we are all aware of and which accompanied the Tet offensive early in 1968, the centre was closed temporarily and the Canadian medical staff pulled out of Quangngai. At the end of his tenure, in 1968, Dr. Vennema was replaced by Dr. Michel Jutras, who remained director from December 3, 1967 until July 6, 1971.

Mr. Speaker, Canada spent $2,000,000 on that anti-tuberculosis clinic project. The project has proved very efficient in that province of Viet Nam owing to the generous contribution of the Canadian personnel, including Dr. Vennema and other Canadians just mentioned.

In fact, the responsibility for that project has been transferred to the Minister of Health of South Viet Nam on March 22, 1972, and all the Canadians who were affected completed their contract and left QuangNgaï as expected.

During his stay in Viet Nam, Dr. Vennema has naturally prepared and presented several reports on behalf of the Canadian government including two in 1968, in order to evaluate the consequences of the Tet offensive. Among other things, these reports recommended, as said earlier, the withdrawal of all Canadian medical personnel from Vietnam as of 1968. Later on, Dr. Vennema made the newspapers' headlines by commenting the use of poison gas in Vietnam, the massacre of Vietnamese civilians and the presence of Canadians.

As for Mrs. Culhane, whose name was mentioned by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, on her arrival in Vietnam she criticized the Canadian policy and presence in that country. Apparently, at least from the newspapers' reports on Mrs. Culhane and Dr. Vennema, their criticisms were rather of a political nature and were not in the least aimed at the high quality of the Canadian medical assistance to the Vietnamese civil population and how welcome was this assistance in Vietnam. The issue of Vietnam policy had nothing to do with the assignment of the Canadians who went there to establish hospitals. In fact, part of Dr. Vennema's report recommended the creation of several hospitals and this recommendation was implemented by Canada; several hospitals have been set up throughout Vietnam.

Over the last two years, similar motions have been introduced by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) doubtlessly following the failure of the "Voice of Women" in their efforts to obtain copies of those reports and correspondence and also following the repeated criticisms from Mrs. Culhane. The department refused to release the reports prepared by the advisers of the Canadian International Development Agency because they are considered as classified and, as I said earlier, I think that in the public interest those documents should be recognized as such.

[English]

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I have your permission and the unanimous consent of the House to revert to routine proceedings for the purpose of presenting a report by a standing committee?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is there agreement of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURES TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the third time and do pass and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment hour I had been speaking about the difficulties that would be created under this bill because of the bureaucracy that will be necessary to monitor family income as a result of the adoption of this plan. I had an opportunity to reread the remarks I made on March 28 when this bill was before the House for second reading. At that time I referred to the administrative nightmare that would be created. I have not changed my mind one iota in the interval. As a matter of fact, I think the committee hearings have confirmed the fact that the administration of the bill will create a great deal of difficulty.

Seemingly the public has been lulled into a false sense of security as a result of the lengthy interval between second reading and now, when the government insists on coming back with the bill in the dying hours of this session of Parliament in an effort to get it accepted. The bill is political window dressing, Mr. Speaker. I am not quarrelling personally with the minister on this score. I blame the whole administration for it. I have said the same thing with regard to Bill C-201, the so-called take-overs bill. I predict that we will see some more bits and pieces of legislation tossed out during the course of the summer in an attempt to make sweeter to the Canadian public what up to now has been a very unpalatable situation in the anticipation of the possibility of a fall election. Indeed, the context of an election must be considered in connection with all these matters.

In a constituency of the kind I represent, this type of bill is resented. In view of all the protestations of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) with regard to the social egalitarianism that he talks about, and his plan for an attempted redistribution of income, obviously he does not believe in the doers in this country. He believes in the non-doers. He neglects the fact that what makes this country go forward, what pays my salary, pays the minister's salary, pays the member's salary, and pays for all of the so-called income adjustments, is that section of the people who are the doers.

The hon. member speaks about a built-in welfare society. Those are the non-doers. We are building more and more of them into our society. If you want to find out about them ask the small employers who tried to get workers during the winter time. Ask the ranchers if these people would accept employment in the winter time. They prefer to draw unemployment insurance.

Mr. Gleave: Never mind the winter, just try it in summer time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is the non-doer mentality. All of us have a certain amount of non-doism in our makeup. We have a certain reluctance to get out and scratch. It is much easier to sit back and receive than to get out and produce. Yet the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre would seem to favour the non-doers in this philosophy that he has, that presumably is shared by his party, when he says that the product of the doers must be shared, and to the point of equality, with the non-doers.

Mr. Peters: Aren't they just the kids?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This statement was not limited to the kids. This was the total philosophy expressed by the hon. member. I am not worried about this particular bill. I am concerned about the policy of social egalitarianism that was propounded this afternoon as being righteous and the epitome for Canadian society. This I disagree with fundamentally.

• (2010)

There are those people who will work longer hours, who will suffer from high blood pressure and who will face the problems of meeting payrolls and holding inventories. These people will work harder on their farms and in their businesses in order to get ahead. I am talking of the man who might be an ordinary plumber but decides that he wants to start his own business. He may hire another fellow and ask his wife to work with him, and together they will build up the business.

These are the doers, Mr. Speaker. And what do we do to them? We take away their incentive. We tax them too heavily. We say, "We shall take the money you have accumulated and spread it evenly." No philosophy more false has ever been expounded in the free world. Yet this is what the hon. member was propounding. And what the minister proposes in this bill is not contrary to that philosophy. There is, in an artificial sense only some separation between his ideas and those of the hon. member. Of course, the minister in this proposal includes an income test and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) protests this; but I have not heard him protest the income test applied under the guaranteed income supplement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But I have protested repeatedly.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Under the guaranteed income supplement there is an income test.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There should not be one.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member says there should not be one. In other words, I suppose pensions can rise without limit in the process of redistribution of income. At least he is consistent. However, he suffers from schizophrenia when he views other programs. Does he not think that under the student loans plan, for example, there should be an examination of the resources backing up the student? But there is such an examination, and rightly so.

Under the war veterans allowance program there is an examination; the means test is there and the principle is acceptable. It is acceptable in many provinces with regard to medicare and forgiveness of premium charges. That principle applies in many provinces and discriminates in favour of those who are over 65; they need not pay any medicare premium. Therefore, there is no universal rejection or approbation of a means test or income test. These tests are here in living colour!

Under this program the minister says that there shall be a means test or income test to determine the family's entitlement. As I said in my speech on second reading, there is some inconsistency here because there is no allowance to make up for the child care allowance. Why was not that deducted from family income in this instance? It is deducted under the Income Tax Act. Surely we must be consistent, Mr. Speaker. As I said before, the minister will rue the day—mark my words—when he first agreed to this measure under which he shall set up a huge bureaucracy. I am not talking about any individuals who are concerned; I am talking about the machinery.

Even if the act were to come into effect this summer, benefits could not be paid under it until next March or April. Why? Because all parents or all persons who might claim benefits under the plan must register. They must set out their income in the base year, the year prior to the coming into force of the act. That registration form must be checked out. The hon. member wonders about this. He objects to the means test. How will this income be checked out? Will the investigation be perfunctory? Will an inspector check the application? How are the minister's monitors or inspectors to check out these claim forms?

If the scheme were set up negligently, if it were found that officials had been careless in administering the system and that claims had been checked only perfunctorily, and if it were found through a perusal of next year's Auditor General's report that there were vast overpayments, the minister would be pilloried in the House and he would merit every word of criticism. On the other hand, what will the public say if the minister's monitors, in checking these applications, enter each home involved and ask questions? For instance, let us say they go to the home of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters).

Mr. Peters: The hon. member is flattering me. I do not think we will have any children; we are past that stage.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then let me talk about the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) who has three young children eligible for family allowance. Let us say the officials enter his home and ask him and his wife, "Is this a true statement of your income?"

[Translation]

This, Mr. Speaker, is the "Great Visitation" by representatives of the minister.

[English]

In other words, every home in which there are children will receive a visit from on high and the visitor will check out the representations made in the application. Will the public accept this? People are used to the family allowance scheme that has operated since 1945. For 27 years the government accepted the registration of a child when it was born—

[Translation]

Mr. La Salle: Is it the income tax return?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No. The hon. member for Joliette is asking whether it is the income tax return? No, it is not, because this plan includes the wife's income. It is the income of both spouses. This does not show at all in the taxpayer's return.

Mr. La Salle: Everybody makes an income tax return.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, not necessarily. The hon. member should know that the wife is allowed a certain minimum income.

Mr. La Salle: Can it be claimed?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, but it has to be examined.

[English]

Child care allowances, under these particular circumstances, are not to be allowed. They are not to be exempt; they are to be included in family income along with unemployment insurance. Neither is there any exemption of welfare; that too is part of income. Mr. Speaker, this is going to be the grand inquisition but we are being asked to foist it on the Canadian public.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member whether he is prepared to sell his patrimony for only a few dollars?

Mr. La Salle: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Is it worth it, for an increase of only $15 to $20?

Mr. La Salle: Go and ask those who need money.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member can make a speech later. In my opinion, it is not worth it. Not at all.

[English]

I want to return to the central theme and purpose of my remarks tonight. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has put forward an amendment. He wishes to eliminate any means or income test. To the extent that the payments might be subject to income tax, we would support the amendment. After all, the Canadian public has some stake in this. Unfortunately, too many people in discussing government projects, laws and proposals, think the Canadian people can be kicked, can be pushed, can be prodded; they think anything can be done to them.

Mr. Peters: Not us.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) says, not us. I just want to go over some of the proposals he and his party put forward in this House. The Canadian public would have been in a straightjacket had they been accepted. They would not have been able to blow their noses without your permission.

This is another in the category of "big brother knows better" proposals; he will run the Canadian people. I suggest that the Canadian public not only has had a bellyfull, but has had it right up to the eyes with government interference with their rights. I have talked to my constituents. They are worried about this bill because they will have to make one more annual accounting to government inspectors. What are we running? Is this to be a sort of prison society?

Some members may say I am exaggerating, but I lived three years in a type of society where someone else did the thinking and I did the reacting. That was in a prisoner of war camp, and perhaps it was a traumatic experience. I apologize to hon. members if I am over-sensitive. However, there is no way any member of this House can convince me that I have not got the right to make up my own mind. If I want to act foolishly that is my privilege, as long as I do not injure my neighbour. How deficient in recognizing this right so much of our law is. On the other hand, I recognize the public interest and I must not injure my neighbour. I will recognize a paramount public interest in that my actions in labour disputes and so forth shall not transgress that greater public interest. However, when it comes to matters of this kind, I say the state does not belong in my home. That is why I dislike this bill intensely.

I fully agree with the change; it has been the philosophy of my party for a number of years. This bill is part of a re-examination of our whole welfare structure in order to put the emphasis where it is needed. We should put our funds, and the good Lord knows they are limited even though my friends to the left think they are unlimited, where they will do the most good. If a man needs two blankets, it is no answer to give him and another each half a blanket. All too often this is what we do. I look at the whole government plan. Within the family allowance plan, I will recognize the principle of universality to the extent that the allowance be paid for each child but when we come to the income tax that should be based on ability to pay. We may disagree with some of the details, but we agree that the criteria for taxation should be the ability to pay.

In the province of Ontario, the ability to pay is the basis of the program for grants to individuals with lower incomes. In order to recover this amount, those with the ability pay a higher proportion of sales tax, customs duties and so forth. We should be heading in this direction. The formula in this bill is a step out of pace with the general formula that we place our funds where they will do the most good. If the amounts are to be $15 and $20, I am quite prepared to accept that. However, I do not accept the minister's statement that those amounts shall be the net cost to government. By making the family allowance universal, those at the higher income level will pay an increased proportion of that allowance back to the government on the basis of their marginal rates. After all, we are doing that with unemployment insurance and the retraining allowance. We are making them repayable to government at the marginal rate of the tax payer, so why not here?

Some of my friends have a high income of $30,000 or $35,000 a year net. How do they do that? They work 16 hours a day, sometimes seven days a week. They have eight or nine children and they work like beavers. Even though these people pay a good deal of income tax, they would still keep 50 per cent of their family allowance. They do not feel penalized because, even though they have a large family, they work hard for their family. As such they must not be penalized. A city policeman does not consider that he is very high in the pecking order of wages. If he is earning $9,500, has a wife who is not working and two children, he does not get a thing. He will lose all the family allowance, so why not put it under income tax and leave him some of it? If we accept that principle, this is where it should be. We have the old age security, unemployment insurance, the retraining allowance and a number of other things under that head, so why not family allowance?

Mr. Peters: Will the hon. member permit a question? I agree with the hon. member's objection to the large support staff that will be necessary to supervise the plan set out in this bill. Therefore, is the hon. member in favour of the amendment which will eliminate this situation, but still leave the family allowance?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the point is that this amendment does not say that the family income support shall be subject to income tax. If the mover of this amendment will assure me that the allowance is to be subject to income tax, I will support it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): For those in the middle and upper brackets, yes.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If it is within the framework of the income tax as it exists today, yes, I will support it. If I can be assured of that, as far as I am concerned, I will support the amendment.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we have before us tonight the 1972 edition of the family allowances or, as indicated in this bill, of the benefits in respect of children.

Clause 1 of the bill accurately states the range of this legislation regarding family income security plan. Clause 2 deals with definitions and we can sum it up as follows: this clause is important since it must be constantly referred to when considering the bill. For example "the base calendar year" means the year for which the family income is computed and on the basis of which benefits claimed are determined.

Moreover, subclause 2(2) contains a definition of a person's income for a calendar year, which is his income computed for income tax purposes minus death benefits paid under a pension plan.

It should be noted that, in accordance with the legislation, the family income to be considered for the family income security plan is computed by adding the income of both the father and the mother.

Clause 3 provides that benefits will be paid out of the Consolidated Fund in respect of each child less than 18 years of age who is maintained by a person resident in Canada. Should a province pay any benefits in respect of children between the ages of 16 and 18, as is the case with Quebec, then no benefits are payable to these persons by the federal government if the latter provides tax abatements in this regard to the province.

How will the amount of benefit be determined? This is dealt with in clause 6 of the bill which is unquestionably the most important and most complex of them all.

First of all, monthly benefits of $15 for children less than 12 years old are provided. There are also monthly benefits of $20 for children aged 12 or more but under 18.

As clause 6(1)(a), (b) and (c) indicate, there is a ceiling on the income of families. And when the family income is equal to or over that ceiling, the allowances decrease insofar as children are concerned and become nil according to the income or the number of children.

Now we come to the most interesting part of the scheme: the computation formula. In the case of an only child, the amount of the allowance proposed by the minister—$15 or $20—will be reduced by 33 cents for every $100 over the family income of $4,500.

When there is more than one child, in order to understand the computation, the basic income eligible must be added, namely $4,500 plus $500 per child in excess of one to obtain the basis of the computation. Then one has to proceed as I outlined above in the case of an only child.

Here is an example, Mr. Speaker, to show what boat we are getting in. Let us suppose the case of an only child. The family income is $6,000; by subtracting the allowed income of $4,500, one gets $1,500. Now as the rate decreases by 33 cents for each $100, there would be a decrease of $4.95. The allowance for a child under 12 would therefore be $10.05

In the case of children from 12 to 18, the $20 allowance would be reduced to $15.05.

Mr. La Salle: That is easy; you managed to figure it out.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) says the calculation is easy since I managed to figure it out. I recognize that I did, but I owe my thanks to the research service.

But, Mr. Speaker, the citizen s of our riding will never be able to manage that complicated calculation.

If a family with two children has an income of $6,000, the basic income will be $4,500 plus $500, that is $5,000. The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) should listen: he would learn something! In that case, the allowance would be reduced by $3.30, that is 10 times 33. The allowance for a child under 12 would therefore be $15 less $3.30, that is $11.70, and for the child between 12 and 18, of $20. less $3.30, that is $16.70.

Such is the calculated munificence of the government! Instead of paying a universal benefit for all children, the government is basing it on income.

Let us consider the case of a family with four children, Mr. Speaker. Since up to now some members have been unable to understand I will quote them more figures. They should listen and wait afterwards to make jokes.

In the case of a family with four children, since the allowable income is $6,000—that is $4,500 plus 3 times $500 or $1,500—the basic benefits will be $15 for each child under 12 and $20 for each child from 12 to 18 years of age.

If a family has 5, 6, 8 or 10 children, the benefits will be the same because they will have reached the maximum amount.

For an income of $8,000—Mr. Speaker, I always expect to be called back to order because my speech does not deal with family allowances but with mathematics—the following computation is made: $8,000 less $4,500, that is $3,500. The decreasing rate is 33 cents for each full $100, so the reduction will be 25 times 33 cents or $11.55 The benefit for a child under 12 will be $15 less $11.55, that is $3.45.

It may have cost $50, $100 or $200 for public servants to make the calculations, to print the forms, to mail and return them because of mistakes, etc., in order, finally, to pay only $3.45.

For a child between 12 and 18, the allowance will be $20 minus $11.55, or $8.45. For two children, and a family income of $8,000, the maximum income allowed is $4,500. If $500 is added it makes $5,000. So, $8,000 minus $5,000 makes $3,000. Let us multiply each $100 by 33 cents and we get $9.90. The allowance will be $15 minus $9.90, or $5.10, a very generous allowance from this government as a reward to a couple for having earned $8,000 in one year. For children 12 to 18, the allowance will be $20 minus $9.90, or $10.10. That is the reward that this couple is getting for having worked.

For a family of 4 children with an $8,000 income, if you make the famous calculation, $4,500 plus $500 multiplied by 3, or $6,000, then substracted from $8,000, you get $2,000. Twenty times 33 cents make $6.60. So, for a child under 12, the allowance will be $15 minus $6.60 or $8.40. We go backwards instead of forward. For children 12 to 18, if $6.60 is substracted from $20, the benefit amounts to $13.40.

I have in mind another case, Mr. Speaker. This one is a little more serious. I am thinking about the minister's "jokes". Here is a real and not so funny case. The husband's income is $6,000 and he is entitled to benefits. Of course often on investigation he gets them. But he cannot make ends meet. Once food, housing, clothing and care are paid for with $6,000 and three children, it is impossible to manage financially. And Mr. Speaker, there are many Canadian families with a $6,000 income. I will call to mind the Croll report on poverty. This will give you a good idea of the situation. A couple with three children cannot live.

So the husband and wife talk things over. They try hard to find a solution and the wife says: there's no choice; I must find a job. This happens often also. The wife decides therefore to go to work if she can find a job of course. Let us say that she is paid $4,000. This is quite reasonable. My colleagues agree on $4,000. That means they have just lost their family allowances. With $6,000, that couple cannot make ends meet. They decide to make sacrifices, to divide the family in some way, making immense sacrifices to make ends meet and bring up their three children, and because the wife is working, because she has earned an income, she will be rewarded by the loss of family allowances.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the system the minister wants to force on us tonight. It is a negative system, whereby the more you try to help yourself, the harder you try to get along and improve your own lot, the less assistance and the more kicks in the pants you get from the government.

However, the government does not forget to give fantastic fiscal advantages to both Canadian and foreign corporations. And they call that a "just society." To my way of thinking, family allowances, or benefits paid regarding children, mean financial assistance to the family, for the maintenance of children. I consider them as a calculated handout. They should, instead, be a spontaneous gift from the government, without selfish motives, without complications, without civil servants and without confounded bureaucracy. Let them make a spontaneous gift to children and families, instead of discouraging them.

In other words, Bill C-170 proposes to increase benefits to $15 and $20 and administration costs will be as high as the benefits paid.

Mr. Speaker, the first point I want to make is this: These benefits will be based on the combined income of a couple during the year preceding the implementation of the act. Consequently, this will cause the following difficulties: the couple will apply for benefits as soon as the act is implemented. The first operation will be to complete forms, to compute their income on the basis of the year preceding the implementation of the act. They must send that information to Ottawa or to regional offices.

When those forms are received, they will be fed into the government's IBM computers.

An hon. Member: Thirdly—

Mr. Fortin: Thirdly—the hon. members seem to be interested because they realize as I do that this involves several operations. The civil servants and the computers will study the application. They will wonder whether mistakes have been made. And what will they do? The minister did not mention that.

An hon. Member: This is hypothetical!

Mr. Fortin: It is hypothetical but they will do it anyway. This is what the minister is trying to hide.

They will check the income tax return of the couple for the previous year for any mistake. If there is no error, after the complicated computations I have just mentioned—and I saw you were quite bored by them, Mr. Speaker—the families will finally get $5.90, $6.20 or $9.38, etc.

It will have been necessary to go through a large number of bureaucratic operations so that a mountain could give birth to a mouse.

Every time there is a change, upwards or downwards, in the income of one of the spouses, the couple is going to have to submit a new application and every time the bureaucrats are going to change the $5.30 payment to $5.90 or to $4.30, as the case may be.

Mr. Speaker, what is being established here is a bureaucratic monster.

Mr. Corriveau: As you were saying, with the guaranteed income supplement, there should not be any problems.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I am becoming most annoyed with the interruptions of the hon. member for . . . What is your constituency again?

Mr. Corriveau: Frontenac.

Mr. Fortin: Frontenac. I wish the hon. member would rise and make a speech, but would he please cease interrupting me. If he is not man enough to rise, let him at least be quiet and listen to those who have the courage to make speeches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. I would invite hon. members to co-operate with the Chair in order to allow the hon. member who has the floor to continue his speech. I will also take this opportunity to remark that at present there are several conversations going on on both sides of the House, which makes it difficult for the Chair to hear the remarks of the hon. member who has the floor.

[English]

I also invite hon. members who are undertaking private conversations to do so either behind the curtains or in very low tones in order that the Chair may hear the hon. member who has the floor. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin).

[Translation]

The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Fortin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Concerning family allowances, the government wants them to be based on family income, whereas they should be based on the needs of the child. I would like to explain this to the minister. If they agree that family allowances, that payments made in respect of children, have to be based on family income, the minister and the government recognize the existence of a problem with family income security.

If this is the problem, Mr. Speaker, rather than have the mountain give birth to a mouse, rather than increasing allowances to $15 and $20, let us establish a guaranteed income for every Canadian, and problems will be over. Instead of doing this, and in order not to maintain the present level of allowances, which is ridiculous, what does the government do? It bases its payments on the income of the parents, and completely forgets about the children.

Mr. Speaker, I claim the government's plan will help neither the children nor the families; it will simply confuse them; it will simply entail more red tape in Ottawa and in the regional offices.

This administrative red tape already gobbles up millions of taxpayers dollars.

Mr. La Salle: And distributes them to those who need them.

Mr. Fortin: I would refer the hon. member for Joliette and his friends to the booklet "How Your Tax Dollar is Spent", 1972-73 edition. It is outstanding; one learns unbelieveable things in it, Mr. Speaker. For instance, we are told about the cost of administering the health and social security programs in Canada.

The problem, Mr. Speaker, is not one of ensuring social security or income security to the civil servants but of ensuring an income to the Canadian citizens, to the underprivileged, to the needy. That is the problem.

But here is something still more serious: up till now the family income was something secret, something sacred. Someone living at 30 Roger Street, for instance, did not know the salary of another person, of his neighbour on the same street, unless the latter divulged it. But as soon as this benefit system for children is set up one will only have to say how much he receives in benefits for the other person to know automatically his income or that of his spouse.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, the government is placing people within a spying and mutual distrust system. I claim that this is further evidence of the weakness of this legislation.

Why do we have to introduce a 24 page bill creating so much red tape for so little? Why not give directly to the child, his parents or his guardian, regardless of tests? The answer is quite simple: The Liberals who established the plan in 1945 recognizing universality deny it today and will pay those benefits to certain groups of individuals. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the famous selectivity concept is established.

Mr. Duquet: It is matter of justice.

Mr. Fortin: In short, if an individual has an income under $10,000, he receives more or less and has to complete forms. If the family income is over $10,000, as a reward to the working couple, all familly allowances are cut off.

Mr. Speaker, a family whose head earns $10,000, $11,000 or $12,000 a year, and which has 5, 6 or 7 children will not get a penny in family allowances.

A family whose income is $12,000 and which has 6 or 7 children will find itself penalized because it has worked too hard or has too many children.

I would like to end my remarks here and say that I object to this bill. I strongly oppose the principle of selectivity. In my view, it is not up to the government to determine who has a right to live in Canada; the government must ensure that everybody has the right to live in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, selectivity is therefore a monstruous and unthinkable concept; the government has no right to pester people like that, and its first moral obligation is to support efforts made by Canadians.

It is not only in that field that we are negative, Mr. Speaker.

As I was saying a while ago, if the head of a family who earns $6,000 cannot make both ends meet his wife will look for a job. Afterwards this couple will receive $10,000 and, as a reward, will lose their family allowances.

Mr. Speaker, at least two answers can be handed me in this regard: the wife should not go to work and all the government has to do is to set up the income security plan. It will have to do it because either this couple cannot make both ends meet, or they earn a sufficient amount of money to do without allowances.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if this second proposal is justified, the hon. minister should not lower the eligibility age but rather the amount of eligible income. One can easily see that this is a stupid reasoning. Therefore the principle of selectivity based on the combined income of husband and wife is meaningless.

There is another thing that one must keep in mind: that is, a child of a family whose income amounts to $4,000 should be entitled to the same rights as the child in a family whose income amounts to $10,000. The child in a family whose income amounts to $10,000 must enjoy, if all Canadians are equal, the same rights as the other one, whose family is poorer. The government may say that it means a waste of money. Its tax policy—which is described in 190 pages—will easily compensate this by taxing the people. There is no problem here. Our tax experts can find enough money to pay for these benefits. Let us recognize at least this basic right to every child in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the minister should not bring in a negative bill which discourages the individual, but rather a positive one. The bill now before us is ridiculous! To be entitled to allowances, we must revamp our whole welfare system, in order to arrive at a meaningful and positive overall policy.

As to the welfare allowances, Mr. Speaker, the less a man works, the less he helps himself; the more he abides by officialdom, the more he bows before officials to get his public assistance, the more he gets. The more he tries to help himself, the more he tries to work, to find a job or to perform a small job of some sort to add to his income, the lower the welfare allowances. Governments will then say that people are lazy. And the same governments have established those negative programs which discourage the individual. The law says: the less you help yourself, the more money you get.

As to unemployment insurance, the first condition to get benefits is not to work. That is very positive. That is ridiculous. The second condition is to be available for work. According to the law, what does the expression to be available for work mean? It means a man remains at home, does not limit his availability to one city and is ready to accept any job anywhere in Canada. In any event, the person knows no one will call and waits for the unemployment insurance cheques. These will even be paid for up to 51 weeks.

Mr. Speaker, on examining the FISP legislation, one sees it is well drawn up. The same goes for the bill on family allowances. Close examination of the unemployment insurance act also under which up to $90 or $92 a week are paid the unemployed, reveals that it too is well drawn up. But if we study them together within the social security system in Canada we realize that the basic philosophy of those various bills which are intended to improve the lot of Canadians is negative, so that more and more Canadians depend on the various governments to live and survive, when the opposite should be true.

Mr. Speaker, an ever increasing number of Canadians are living off a decreasing working minority and, according to the new bill passed by the House, from now on the middle class will pay for others and through the nose.

In this regard, socialists say: Take some away from the rich, and give it to the poor. That is exactly what the minister does with this bill. He says: Take some away from the rich—$10,000, and God knows that is not much in Canada in view of the constant increase in the cost of living—and give it to the poor. This is a socialistic bill, Mr. Speaker.

The government will then tell us: Let us establish a just society where each citizen can live freely, enjoy security, and grow to full maturity in his own country. It is perfectly ridiculous and inconsistent.

Mr. Speaker, I urgently request social measures to guarantee income security to each Canadian citizen without any red tape or investigation so that he will automatically receive his benefits as his share of the national production which reaches $100 billion a year. A bare minimum should be provided for each Canadian citizen and we should refrain from harassing him. I have enough confidence in my fellow citizens to know that they will make way and not live off the fat of the land.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I will point out that this bill brings up the entire philosophy of the government on social security legislation. I say to the minister that I will vote against his bill because it is one step closer to socialism, a measure which will annoy people and create huge problems with forms, paper work and red tape. What will the bill provide in the long run for the people?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADJOURNMENT OF DEBATE ON BILL C-170—ORDER OF GOVERNMENT BUSINESS

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have had discussion with members on all sides of the House and I think it might be useful to switch our discussion to a number of matters on which there is greater chance of agreement. I would therefore move that this debate be adjourned. But before making the formal motion I would indicate to the House that if the motion is agreed to we shall call the bill in respect of the Pension Act, for report stage and third reading, then the bill on the Farm Credit Act.

• (2100)

Since my discussion with members on the other side of the House, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Béchard) has indicated that there may be a disposition to pass, without discussion, the bill to change the names of the territorial courts. If that were agreeable we could call it after the Pension Act; however, if it is not agreeable I should like to know before we do so. With those comments I should like to move the adjournment of this debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. It has been moved by Mr. MacEachen, seconded by Mr. Laing, that the debate be adjourned. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Motion (Mr. MacEachen) agreed to.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would call government order No. 40, report stage of Bill C-215, to amend the Pension Act.

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE NUMBER OF COMMISSIONERS AND AD HOC COMMISSIONERS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-215, to amend the Pension Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that Bill C-215, to amend the Pension Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Laing moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we have agreed not to debate this bill at this stage and we shall stand by that arrangement. May I ask the minister just one question? Is he, or is he not, concurring in the recommendation made unanimously by the veterans affairs committee that the number of ad hoc commissioners be increased by another five?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this bill I do not wish to take more than a couple of minutes. I had to make a judgment as to whether the additional members totalling seven could do the job of clearing up the 8,000 cases we have ahead of us, and I have made the judgment that they can. I wish to voice my appreciation, because this may be the last few remarks I make in this House, of the work of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs. The thought has been prevalent, I believe, on all sides of this House that a man or woman who offers his or her life for this country is a rather special person. That has been the attitude of the committee on veterans affairs all the way through. I hope that it continues in the future.

This bill pertains to the clearing up of a backoog of cases, and it is my opinion that the additional seven persons will obtain that result.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, if I do not eulogize the minister for half an hour I hope he will not think I do not appreciate the service he has rendered to the country.

Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand): Mr. Speaker, I rise simply to say that I concur in what has already been said. We on this side of the House agreed to go along with the minister's amendment to this legislation. I want to commend the minister for taking the action he has. I should also like to echo the sentiments expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) about getting the question of the basic pension rate before the committee at the earliest possible moment.

In closing, may I pay tribute to the minister who has been with us for only a short time in veterans affairs. He has shown deep compassion and understanding for the plight of the veterans. While the increase in the number of commissioners will help in cleaning up the backlog, I think the minister should also keep in mind that representations were made to the committee that the lack of medical personnel was a factor in preventing the clearing of this backlog because of the need to obtain a medical opinion in these cases. I am sure the minister will pay particular attention to finding a way of bringing in more doctors. I might also point out that over the years we have suggested that the number of pension commissioners should be increased, and for that reason we are happy to pass the bill.

[Mr. Laing.]

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank you for giving us the opportunity of expressing our appreciation to the minister for what he has just said. We support the amendments he moved as well as the proposal to increase the number of members on the committee.

I take this opportunity to say to him that we also appreciate his work within the committee and that of his department, as well as his devotion to work for a category of such underprivileged people.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

[English]

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, before the next item is called, I believe there is an understanding that we could slip in at this point second reading of the bill to change the names of the territorial courts: there is no great issue or principle involved, and we might get it through. I would suggest that Your Honour call that item. I might mention that if this bill is given second reading it would be necessary to deal with it in committee of the whole.

TERRITORIAL SUPREME COURTS BILL

CHANGE IN NAMES OF COURTS OF YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill S-3, to change the names of the territorial court of the Yukon Territory and the territorial court of the Northwest Territories, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

• (2110)

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House in committee of the whole on Bill S-3, to change the names of the territorial court of the Yukon Territory and the territorial court of the Northwest Territories. Clause 1 stands. Shall clause 2 carry?

On clause 2—Amendments.

Mr. Peters: Are both these courts now located in permanent quarters in their respective capitals? Has this been established, or is some territorial work still being done in Ottawa?

Mr. Lang: In both cases the quarters are in their capitals. I would not want to say whether they are permanent or final; there are some improvements to be made in the future. The general position is that the administration of justice is in the hands of the two territories, but we still appoint judges in these courts as we do in the case of the provinces.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

FARM CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LOANS AND POWERS AND CAPITAL OF CORPORATION

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-5, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I thought last night that perhaps this bill might pass and there would be no further debate on it. However, I would like at this time to bring to the attention of the House some of the difficult problems that agriculture faces. The fact that the government has brought forward this bill is an admission on their part that there are serious difficulties in agriculture and that provisions must be brought in to assist people who engage in the production of agricultural products throughout the country.

On second reading we moved an amendment which was turned down by the government. It was brought forward in an attempt to provide incentives for young farmers who become involved in agriculture, to initiate better programs to enable young people to get started, and to assist those people whom the government is trying to remove from the farms. We believe that incentives should be given to young people to stay on the farm.

This bill provides a little more money. The amount of $56 million has been increased to $66 million in the financial resources of the Farm Credit Corporation. I believe this was done in recognition of the fact that more money is needed to help young people stay on the farm and to assist those engaged in farming to carry on. The bill also provides that loans will be granted to facilitate efficient operation of a farm. Under the present act, loans are available only if the money is necessary for efficient operation. I must admit that this is a move in the right direction—away from negative, last resort aid, to more positive help. This seems to be action taken before last-ditch efforts become necessary. Any move in that direction will, I am sure, be a good thing for the agricultural industry.

Also, under this bill loans will become available to persons under 21 years of age. Previously they were not able to obtain loans, but this legislation brings the age requirement down to 18. In addition, farm improvement loans which are available through the banks can now be obtained without a prior commitment from the Farm Credit Corporation. This seems to be reasonable and will provide money to those engaged in agriculture. It will cut down the red tape which so frequently exists in these matters.

Then in this bill the appraised value of land will include the productive value of a second non-farming enterprise that might be carried on by the same individual. I suggest that this provision may not be all bad: it will be possible to get an increased loan on a smaller parcel of land. The amendments in this bill are good but in our estimation they are not good enough. We would have liked the bill to include a provision for partial non-repayment of loans when young farmers meet certain performance standards. Before anyone in the NDP jumps up and says young farmers would have to be perfect before qualifying, I would point out that "performance standards" simply means meeting the payments they agreed to meet when they obtained loans.

We also would have liked a provision in the bill that interest payments in the initial period of a loan could be delayed, so that a new enterprise could show some results in a financial way before a farmer had to repay large commitments. However, the government majority voted against us on that suggestion.

Some government members suggested that we would not support this bill. This is not true, Mr. Speaker. They seem to enjoy preaching throughout the country that we oppose for the sake of opposing rather than for the sake of being constructive. This is not true. The measures proposed in this legislation are not that bad, but we say they could be a lot better; and at second reading, committee stage, report stage, and now on third reading, we have endeavoured to improve the legislation. In the House of Commons our aim is to improve legislation. If government members complain that they have trouble getting legislation through the House, it is because government legislation has often been hastily brought forward, ill conceived, and has not served a purpose satisfactory to the people of the country.

I am disappointed that the government stood fast in upholding clause 1 of the bill, giving them all kinds of power, without offering any real explanation of how that power would be used. We voted on that matter last night. I am happy to say that I registered my vote against it.

There are all kinds of precedents for providing incentives to new borrowers. CMHC has provision for partial non-repayment of loans. During the last four years incentives have been provided to various businesses to start operations all across the country. The Financial Administration Act gives the government power to forgive a tax, penalty or debt, in particular cases. If housing and business can receive these incentives, why cannot agriculture have the same privilege? It is often said that what is good for business is good for the country. This was preached by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) in his last budget. I suggest that what is good for the farmer is also good for the country.

The major industry in the constituency of Huron is agriculture. As agriculture goes, so goes the economy of Huron county. So long as I have the privilege of being a member of the House of Commons, agriculture and its betterment will be one of my first priorities. It is disappointing that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) did not see fit to accept some of the amendments put forward by the hon. member for Mackenzie (Mr. Korchinski) and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). Had he done so, this would be a much better bill.

The government seems to think that those engaged in agriculture are to be used only to produce cheap food, so that in turn industry may have a chance to export industrial products to other countries. This is not acceptable. If farmers received a profitable return for their products, it would have an expansionary effect all across the country. If the primary producers had dollars in their pockets, they would become purchasing consumers of the industrial products which provide jobs.

We also urged the provision of open-ended loans, that loans could be increased without going through all the red tape involved in obtaining the original loan. One report shows that of the $115.2 million in loans approved during 1970-71, $36.4 million went to repay existing loans. We do not disagree with the provision of additional money for loans to single family farm operations, up to the amount of $100,000; but if the government had listened to our suggestions this would be a better bill. We have offered good suggestions but the government has not listened to us.

We have offered suggestions of the type that would make the Liberal party popular, but they seem to feel that they know all, control all, can do all and are the only people who ought to govern. I suggest they had better start listening, for before long they will discover that what they think is not true.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks on the third reading debate I wish to make three points briefly. First, we in my party feel that the small farms section of the bill is somewhat vague and we are under the impression that the government itself is not too clear as to what it wants in this regard. Second—and I am still talking about the first point—it appears there is some overlapping of provincial and federal jurisdiction. This applies especially to Saskatchewan. Apparently two acts, one federal and the other provincial, are concerned in the administration of similar types of programs. I have suggested this before but wish to repeat my suggestion now for the benefit of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson). If two, similar programs are to be run by two levels of government, then those governments should join hands and turn them into a single program.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister is not here and does not care.

Mr. Thomson: We could thereby avoid duplication of costs.

Mr. Mazankowski: The minister is not interested.

Mr. Thomson: The minister may not be interested, but I am sure that the people of Saskatchewan and the rest of Canada who will be paying the shot for this program are very interested.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Thomson: In any event, I am sure the minister can speak for himself; he is pretty eloquent. I suggest to the minister that he should not rush in and implement these small farm provisions before he has worked out the details of the program with the provinces concerned, because we do not want duplication in this area. I am concerned about this and I hope he is.

Second, I suggest that the Farm Credit Corporation should look carefully at how much money it will lend against land of certain value. I am concerned about land values. Although I support that the corporation has done in the past with regard to farm credit loans, I feel that some actions of the Farm Credit Corporation tended to force up land prices. People have bid more per acre and values have increased. This has left some farmers in an awkward position. They have found it hard to repay loans. I want to emphasize this point.

Officials of the Farm Credit Corporation, along with farmers and governments, were getting very excited over the large wheat sales made to Russia and to China. This excitement was evident in my province. Consequently, some farmers when they bought land paid prices which were unrealistic. The Farm Credit Corporation helped them to pay these prices. I draw to the attention of the minister and Farm Credit Corporation officials that these farmers are not very happy. Some of them are behing the 8-ball, so to speak, and cannot meet their interest payments. This is a regrettable situation. That is not how we ought to use funds provided or subsidized by the government. I do not think anyone intended that to happen, but happen it did as a result of an oversight or error. I feel the Farm Credit Corporation was in error in this regard.

Third, I should like to emphasize again that not all agricultural problems are to be solved by lending money. It is sometimes thought that if farms were bigger they would become more efficient, that big farmers can produce barley for 64 cents a bushel and oats for 40-odd cents a bushel. I suggest that this is not necessarily so because factors other than borrowing are involved in farm economics. In other words, you cannot, in all circumstances borrow your way out of trouble.

Of course, those who need to borrow money will be helped by this legislation and that is its intent. However, let us not be carried away by the idea that we can borrow our way out of trouble. Price is important too. The minister from Saskatoon-Humboldt seems to think that an increased volume of sales will solve our problems. Volume is important, I agree, but price is also important. Mr. Speaker, those are the three points I wanted to bring to the attention of the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this bill, I should like to say a couple of words about it.

Having had the advantage of sitting on the Committee on Agriculture for four years, I should like to say that this bill is of a very great significance and has definitely a very great value. In fact, this bill completes remarkably well the farm legislation that this government has passed during the past four years.

I know that in my riding, they have succeeded, through favorable farm measures, in stabilizing the dairy industry so that producers may derive a satisfactory income from it.

I think also of Bill C-176 which, thanks to the co-operation of the officials of the agencies concerned and of the provinces, will also bring forth quite interesting improvements.

And we are now considering Bill C-5 which will enable some agencies to take out loans in order to consolidate incurred debts following certain difficulties with some farm products. On the other hand, this legislation will enable agencies to make investment permitting them to operate a more profitable business.

It is clear, as the previous speaker said, that loans will not solve problems but I think that even so they are important for those who are thinking in terms of growth because we are now aware that expansion is absolutely necessary to enable the producer to get an adequate income and meet competition.

I would like to say a word about the repurchasing program regarding small farms. The minister's objective is fine but I am a little concerned about the bill. Discussions with the provinces, more precisely possible agreements with them regarding the program dealing with the management or repurchasing of small farms do not seem to have been completed. The minister has clearly indicated to the committee and in the House that he did intend to apply that program. How can this program be 100 per cent efficient if one, two, three or four provinces refuse to co-operate with the federal government? I think it is time to say it and I invite the minister to do his utmost to give evidence that this program is efficient and will benefit the provinces.

I should also like to invite the minister to show very great understanding about the provinces' priorities. It is something that we should respect. We know very well that on account of different conditions and mentalities, some provincial priorities are very different from those of the federal government.

I should not like to prolong my comments unduly, nor to insinuate that this problem can be settled without agreement. Quite the opposite, I have confidence in the understanding and ability of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and in view of his respect for the provinces I am sure he will manage to hold prior consultations with them and demonstrate that it is in the common interest to seek solutions resulting in suitable agreements while respecting provincial priorities, which the federal government might consider as difficult to accept. However, whatever the province involved the producers should not lose the great benefits which Bill C-5 nevertheless does provide.

Mr. Speaker, I have made these few comments merely as an appeal to the minister's consideration of the importance of respecting provincial priorities, without however neglecting the benefits of this legislation for any producer wishing to avail himself thereof.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the time my comments will be brief. I want to make a couple of points before the bill is read the third time. My principal point is this: if the minister feels this bill will solve many of the problems of prairie farmers and others, he is mistaken. Basically, this bill does two things, one of which I am very concerned about. First, it gives additional power to the Farm Credit Corporation. That is in clause 1 of Bill C-5 which is before us, which provides:

> The corporation has all the powers necessary to carry out such duties or functions as may be assigned to it by the governor in council in relation to the administration of any agricultural program or as are assigned to it pursuant to any other act of the Parliament of Canada.

Under that clause we know that the minister's intention is to bring in through the back door the small farms development plan. I do not judge this to be democratic, I do not think it is what most people think of as parliamentary democracy about which members opposite talk so much. Many farm people in western Canada are very concerned about that program and the report of the task force on agriculture. I do not want to see this clause in the bill become the opening for the small farms development plan and many recommendations of the task force, especially without their being debated in this House. I say this very seriously because I know that most farmers are concerned.

I wish to read a short quotation from the statement made by the National Farmers Union when in Ottawa:

> The National Farmers Union has called for rejection of a government bill to amend the Farm Credit Act because it "is designed to move farmers off the land and move land out of agricultural production."

This is a fear of the farmers' union. In my opinion, and in the opinion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), our party's spokesman on agriculture, the minister has not given adequate answers to questions such as those raised by the National Farmers Union and others concerned about agriculture and rural life in this country. I think he should provide us with those answers. He should not use this bill as an excuse to bring in the small farms development plan which has many ramifications for the rural life style, farmers and those living in small towns and villages on the Prairies. Our small farms are being eliminated quickly enough. According to Statistics Canada, between 1966 and 1971 the number of farms in this country decreased by 15 per cent. The minister should seriously consider this. I believe that the members of this House who represent urban Canada take this fact very seriously.

Many members from urban Canada have a good understanding of farming and rural life, but many people have the mistaken conception that the farmer is not efficient. He is very efficient. Figures show that in the past 10 to 20 years, the farmer's efficiency has gone up at twice the rate of the non-agricultural sector. The farmer is very productive; he knows how to manage his affairs and business.

The problem is that in the past 20 years the farmer's income has increased by only 20 per cent while his costs have doubled. No wonder the farmer is being forced off the land. The price he receives for commodities such as wheat and eggs has gone down between 1950 and 1970 despite the rise in the cost of production. I could elaborate, but that in a nutshell is the problem facing the farmer. That is why I am very concerned about clause 1.

If the small farms development plan is to be introduced, it should be as a separate bill so that we, the people's representatives who are concerned can debate the bill, move amendments and offer suggestions. If implemented, this move can change the life of many people in rural Canada and, indeed, in many of the urban centres in this country.

My second point is that this bill will raise the ceiling of borrowing from a maximum of $48,000 to a maximum of $100,000. This may be necessary in many cases, but the area of Saskatchewan that I represent is primarily comprised of small and middle-sized farms. Although a clause like this probably will not do any harm, it will not do much good. I recommend that the minister seriously consider subsidizing interest rates for small farmers. For example, on loans up to $30,000 there should be an interest rate of either 3 per cent, 3½ per cent or a maximum of 4 per cent. This would really help to keep the average guy on the farm, and would preserve rural Canada.

These are the points about which I am concerned. I am not satisfied with clause 1. I urge the minister to reconsider some of the ideas and suggestions put forward in this debate, as well as the suggestions of farm organizations, the National Farmers Union, the Federation of Agriculture, wheat pools and others.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in the remaining few minutes we could call a short bill that I have been holding in the wings for some time. It might meet with the favour of the House. It is Bill C-203, to amend the Representation Commissioner Act. If we give this bill second reading it might be possible to then deal with it in committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REPRESENTATION COMMISSIONER ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE AN INCREASE IN SALARY

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (for the Secretary of State) moved that Bill C-203, to amend the Representation Commissioner Act, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Boulanger in the chair.

On clause 1—Salary

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would like an explanation from the government as to why this bill is being introduced. We are aware that there have been changes in other government departments and that probably this department has not kept pace because it is under a specific act. It is a rather unique kind of job that operates on a ten-year basis. If we pass this bill we shall, in effect, be providing one man with $400,000 for doing a job which has to be carried out only when a census is taken and the electoral boundaries are redefined.

It seems to me that rather than make the change in the bill as proposed, we should relate the salary of this office to the salaries of deputy ministers, for example, in accordance with whatever criteria are used in those cases. The method used for making this change is similar to that used when we are changing our own salaries. In either case it does not meet with my approval. It is true this gentleman is in a unique position. No one is inclined to raise any particular objection to his salary or he might find his constituency going to Siberia and back.

I am not prepared to move an amendment, but it seems that we are making a long-term salary adjustment covering a ten-year period. If conditions continue in the future as they have in the past, the salary we are talking about today may end up being no more suitable than it was previously. We should consider arriving at an appropriate formula to cover the salaries of people such as Members of Parliament, the Auditor General, the Representation Commissioner and others in that category so that it will not be necessary to pick out individuals and make salary adjustments for them on a periodic basis. Their salaries would then be adjusted in the same way as those of senior officials in government departments.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed that this should be the only change being made in the legislation. There is some ground for advocating a wider review of the operations of this act. While I recognize that the motives for which the original act was introduced, the desire to take the redistribution of constituency boundaries out of the arena of politics, I believe it should be admitted that there are some shortcomings in the system.

Two changes are needed if we are to arrive at a basis. First, provision should be made to take into account representations from the public before the original set of boundaries is drawn by the provincial commissions. Once those boundaries are drawn, they tend to be fixed and it is difficult to secure meaningful changes. The second point is this and I present it as a personal view: I still feel that final responsibility for the approval of electoral boundaries must rest with the legislators of this country. They are the people who should take the final responsibility for any changes which are made.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the passage of this bill but I should like to point out that in this particular year the Representation Commissioner will be engaged in the very heavy task of participating in the work of the ten provincial commissions. Shortly—as a matter of fact tomorrow, or within a few days—the governor in council will be making public, on the recommendation of His Honour the Speaker, the names of the ten provincial commissioners. The Representation Commissioner is, of course, a member of each of the provincial commissions: thus, he will be carrying a heavy burden. It is for this reason that we are proposing that his salary should be equal to that of the Chief Electoral Officer or, as it is stated in the bill, equal to that of a judge of the Federal Court of Canada. It would be unfortunate if we were to lose the services of a commissioner who had rendered such valuable service to the country as an official of Parliament.

Having said this, I agree with the point made by the hon. member for Timiskaming about the need to review the role of Representation Commissioner. The commissioner himself has indicated in testimony before the standing committee that some changes will have to be made because the burden of work in the off years is not great enough to justify the maintenance of the full-time services of any particular person, especially the present commissioner.

It is clear to me that some changes will have to be made, but it did not seem wise to introduce changes just as we were on the threshold of a major redistribution and because of my feeling that members of the House would wish to make use of the services of the most experienced man in the field. Having said this, I would certainly undertake that after the present redistribution the standing committee will have an opportunity to give immediate consideration to what permanent arrangement ought to be made in connection with this particular function. It seems to me the matter ought to be considered along the line of the suggestion made by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. gentleman feel he will be able to implement that commitment from this side of the House?

Clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, before we rise may I ask the House leader about the business for tomorrow? Is tomorrow to be an opposition day, or is the government insisting upon appropriating the day for its own purposes? If so, what is the business that the House leader will put before the House?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I propose to call the remaining items that have been on our list for consideration. The opposition will be king tomorrow because it will decide what will pass. However, I propose to try to get before the House the Canada labour bill as the first item, and I have not yet decided whether to call FISP or the foreign takeovers review bill following that. I shall be able to advise my hon. friend early in the morning which bill has been favoured for the attention of the opposition.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—ALLEGED INADEQUATE QUOTA FOR NEWFOUNDLAND IN PROVISION OF WORK UNDER STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on June 20 I asked the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Benson) a question regarding the summer student employment program which was part of the Opportunities for Youth program. The government had expounded the magnificence of this great program and announced that there would be 15,000 extra jobs created for students.

I realize that on the "late show" debate the answers we receive are dictated by the department, but before I receive an answer tonight from the parliamentary secretary I want to tell him that I do not agree with the answer he is going to give me. Out of these 15,000 student jobs this summer, 10,000 will be allocated under program No. 3, which relates to the regular student militia and reserve. This has been an ongoing program for many years although other new programs have been announced. This leaves only 5,000 student summer employment opportunities, which to my mind is not realistic.

In the province of Newfoundland, student unemployment is very high and the need for jobs there is greatest. Over-all, I agree with the student militia and ancillary programs; I think it is one of the good programs announced by the government. But it seems that the government does not give highest priority to areas of high unemployment.

Another thing that bothers me relates to program No. 4, which is citizenship and community assistance. Students in the militia are given jobs relating to community assistance, consisting of cleaning up projects and other tasks which employ them for the summer. In Newfoundland, 50 students have been allocated to this program so that in the capital city of St. John's, Newfoundland, a military tattoo can be held on Signal Hill.

This is another program that has been ongoing for many years. These people were taken out of the militia, which is under category 3, and shifted into category 4 under citizenship and community assistance. This means that the 50 personnel allocated to the one program were taken out of the military portion and put into another category which has nothing to do with the military tattoo. This leaves the province of Newfoundland with not one allocation under category 3. This surprises me because every other province has a good allocation and I wonder why the Atlantic region has again been left out.

I do not think the deadline arrives until July 10, so I would ask the parliamentary secretary to urge the minister to reconsider the situation. I have said on a number of occasions that this is one of the best programs the government has ever introduced. I commend the government for it. If it intends to put on a program, why does it tell the people of Canada it will involve a certain number when in reality in involves a much lower number?

In the community in which I live I have experienced 25 years of militia service and that service has allocated 50 people to this program. From information I have received, the allocation will now only be 30. If this is a good program for Canada, I do not think we should be told this is what the government is doing when in fact there is no intention of carrying it out. This is a good program and it creates the opportunity of raising a bit of money in order that the students can continue their education.

It also creates the opportunity for building up our militia and reserve forces. I say this facetiously because the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Macdonald) and his predecessors for 25 years have been telling me at meetings of the Canadian Infantry Association that great things are happening in the militia, that we have a great bunch of officers and that the militia will do a great service for the country. Contrary to that, what has been happening over the past 25 years has been a steady deterioration of the militia. Certainly that is true of the militia in Newfoundland.

If the present policies are continued, it will not be long before the reserve forces become ineffective and eventually deteriorate to nothing. I ask the parliamentary secretary to pass on my representations to the minister, so that he will tell the militia officers who have performed great service over the years what is going to happen to the militia and whether this program is to be continued. Let them know what is going on, rather than telling them something of a negligible nature.

[Translation]

Mr. J.-Roland Comtois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, before answering the question put by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), I would like to commend him for the great interest he is showing in the student summer employment program established by the Department of National Defence.

I am happy to notice that his interest is not limited to that field alone, but also includes the program that is now under way in connection with the militia.

However, before dealing specifically with the allegations of the hon. member, I think it would be useful to summarize the employment programs offered this summer by the Department of National Defence. As it was mentioned before, within the framework of employment programs established by the government to provide 70,000 students with a chance to work or to acquire experience, we provide supplementary employment for 15,000 students all across Canada.

It should be recalled that this program is in addition to the usual summer employment program for reservists and cadets, whereby valuable training is given to over 25,600 young people.

First of all the program involving civilian employees during a fixed period will supply work for some 2,000 students. These will be assigned to general clerical work, administrative tasks, food services, jobs as drivers or labourers.

The program for cadets, over and above the usual summer training program will involve about a thousand more cadets than formerly.

The training program for reserve forces has been substantially increased and it is anticipated that 10,580 students will benefit from it this year.

[Mr. Marshall.]

Finally, within the framework of the community assistance and citizenship program, some 2,400 students will be involved in community assistance programs, fighting pollution in all its aspects.

The hon. member would surely like to know what are the criteria for the distribution of jobs under the above-mentioned programs. Those criteria are as follows: the number and location of defence establishments; the work to be performed in such establishments; the educational capacity of each reserve unit and the experience acquired as the result of the previous year's program.

In Newfoundland, the summer employment program for students made 326 jobs available for .062 per cent of the inhabitants of that province. Apart from the number of cadets, those figures represent an increase of 26 jobs, that is a 14 per cent increase in comparison with past years.

The hon. member has asked that the quotas he reviewed, so that they may be fair for all provinces. We have complied with his request, using the same statistics as he did while making his computations. The results for each Canadian region are as follows: for the Maritimes, .102; for Quebec, .054; for Ontario, 0.55; for the Prairie provinces, .083; for British Columbia, .077—

INDUSTRY—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO PREVENT CLOSURE OF PORT MOODY PLANT OF CASCADE-DELTA BENCO COMPANY

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I being to the House tonight a very sad tale which unfortunately under this government has been replicated far too many times all over our country. My specific concern tonight is with approximately 150 employees of the Cascade-Delta Benco Company of Port Moody, in my riding, which plans to close its operation in the next three months and move its operation and manufacturing unit into the golden triangle of the Toronto area.

We in western Canada constantly decry the concentration of secondary and tertiary industry in central Canada, forcing the principal economic preoccupation in western Canada on primary resource and extraction industries. What we in western Canada are losing is an industry of tremendous growth and export potential at a time when western sensitivities are much aroused against the concentration of manufacturing in specifically one area of the country.

To understand completely the motivation behind the Cascade plant closure one must go back in history at least five years. Perhaps before we indulge in the flashback we should know that recently Cascade merged with Delta-Benco of Rexdale, Ontario, an 80 per cent British-owned firm which manufacturers a complementary line of cable television equipment to that of Cascade in my riding. But long before the merger it must be said that Cascade, which is a west coast firm managed by men who are pioneers in the cable TV industry, attempted apparently without much success to secure federal government assistance in one form or another.

I am told that in spite of their access to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, lubricated by Members of Parliament from British Columbia, all the management of Cascade got was the brush-off by the department. With an export record of between $1½ million and $2 million to the United States, and because of the quality of their product which is six months ahead of similar products anywhere else in the world, and unsurpassed, Cascade tried to interest the government in two basic ideas. Cascade asked for federal backing or guarantees on export sales of about 90 per cent in case the corporation in the foreign country declined to honour its indebtedness upon receiving the import from Cascade. This is neither a wild nor a particularly radical suggestion: it is done in many other countries interested in enhancing their export position.

Second, Cascade requested government backing in order to finance sales, both foreign and domestic, somewhat in the manner that large U.S. multicorporations in similar fields are able to do when a cable television distributing company wishes to use a certain manufacturer's product to wire a city or suburb. They need that kind of financing to advance the sale in this instance. But all Cascade got from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was stony silence. They never met the minister, so far as I know, and I understand it has been suggested that the Cascade principals did not receive a better reception mainly because Cascade was, in the opinion of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, under-financed in terms of equity capital and much too dependent on loan or debt capital.

With the decision to move the plant, all these details are really irrelevant when it comes to giving 150 jobs in my riding of Fraser Valley West. Some of the people who will be unemployed are undoubtedly subscribers to the same group of companies which owned Cascade originally before they merged with Delta.

What we must address ourselves to, I think, is how we might reverse this decision which was occasioned by a reported loss of something like $200,000 per year on Cascade's operations, regardless of the fact that CRTC foreign-ownership limitations of 20 per cent forced the CBS, an American firm, to divest its interest to the point where Cascade was required to scurry around looking for purchasers or a partner. We are dealing with people's lives and incomes—real people who live in my riding. I think this is the responsibility of a manufacturing industry to those employees who have employed their skills to build the reputation which the company currently enjoys. What we need right now, with government assistance, is to do these things immediately.

I make four suggestions: First, to apply the 90 per cent export guarantee to Cascade which was requested some years ago. Second, to assist in advancing the financing of foreign sales of Cascade's products through a financing mechanism which I suggested earlier. I am not asking for a loan. Third, a government underwriting, perhaps through a means such as DREE or in some other way, to ensure the ultimate profitability of this company which has great potential. Fourth, that we should consider under DREE, when you consider the 9 per cent unemployment rate in the lower mainland of B.C., some kind of special spot zoning assistance, especially for those companies outside designated areas and for those companies which have an important technological growth potential, even if they are located outside designated areas.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, first of all I was asked by the minister to express his apology to the hon. member. He had intended to be here and was here earlier, but was called out on another assignment.

I am advised that his department is aware of the situation at the Port Moody plant of the recently merged Cascade-Delta Benco Company which is being phased out. Delta Benco Limited had originally intended to maintain the Port Moody plant, but due to its unprofitable operations it has reluctantly been obliged to concentrate all operations in its Toronto plant. The company is investigating the transfer of a number of its employees to the Toronto area. This decision will allow Cascade-Delta Benco to compete more effectively in the large U.S. market for CA-TV equipment, with greater benefit to the Canadian economy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REPORTED REQUEST TO GROUP VISITING QUEBEC HOUSE IN PARIS TO REMOVE CANADIAN FLAG LAPEL PINS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, some time ago I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) a question in respect of the regrettable incident which was reported in reference to the visit of Alderman Seguin of Hull to Quebec House in Paris, where the honourable alderman reported he was criticized vehemently by one Mr. Michaud, the cultural aide of the province of Quebec, for wearing a pin which was a replica of the Canadian flag.

The last thing I would like to do would be to exacerbate any tension among peoples in our country, but in my opinion the Secretary of State for External Affairs is the man who is responsible for the well-being and the welfare of Canadians abroad. It is the Secretary of State for External Affairs who issues passports for Canadians abroad and he, and he alone, is responsible for the welfare of Canadians abroad. While he might want to emulate his leader and shrug off a question such as was asked three days ago, I think it is not incumbent upon him, as the pre-eminent and most prominent member of the government in respect of external affairs matters, to shrug off these responsibilities and to say that it is a matter for the Premier of Quebec, or for any other provincial leader, to decide what should be done.

I think it has been clearly demonstrated, as was stated in this House by the illustrious former leader of the government, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, that in all matters concerning Canadians abroad, in all matters concerning the diplomatic expression of Canada abroad, it is the government of Canada and not the government of any province or any section of the country which must express itself.

In my opinion it is extremely important that when a Canadian is abroad—in this case it is alderman Seguin of Hull—he carries with him the passport of the government of Canada signed by and issued in the name of the Secretary of State for External Affairs who guarantees the good passage and good reception of that particular Canadian abroad. It is totally unbecoming of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, sardonically, absentmindedly or otherwise, to shrug off his responsibility. I know that he might want to emulate his great leader in terms of shrugging, but it is still the responsibility of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to look after Canadians who are abroad.

I say to you, Sir, and to the Secretary of State for External Affairs—who is not here tonight—that it is the responsibility of that distinguished officer to take note of the rights of Canadians abroad; and the rights of Canadians abroad, guaranteed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, transcend any provincial office whether it be Quebec, whether it be Ontario or whether it be Atlantic Canada. This has been demonstrated. Mr. Pearson mentioned some years ago that the prime responsibility, diplomatically, resides with the government of Canada.

I would like to remind the Secretary of State for External Affairs, had he deigned to be here tonight, that this is his responsibility. He who issues a passport to Canadians abroad should stand behind that passport and guarantee the rights of the Canadian citizen abroad, so that that Canadian citizen be not subjected to the denigrating, humiliating circumstances which, regrettably, was the case when this very distinguished alderman from Hull visited Quebec House and apparently was told not to wear a Canadian flag replica because that was provocative to one particular province of Canada. This kind of thing is very conducive to disunion in the country.

I think any decent Canadian cabinet minister should assert himself in every way possible to exalt the rights of this dominion, of this country, and—as Mr. Pearson said—should remember that it is the country and not the province which is supreme.

Mr. Jack Cullen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, although the subject matter of the question was somewhat belaboured by the hon. member this evening, this incident was reported this morning in the Montreal newspapers as a harmless and playful incident. I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) was done a disservice this evening, because he looked into the matter that the hon. member raised in his question. The Secretary of State for External Affairs addressed himself to this question in the House recently and noted that the Prime Minister of Quebec was reported to be looking into the matter.

As I understand it, the deputy premier of Quebec has now indicated in the Quebec national assembly that the remarks reported were not made in any official context and were, essentially, in jest. In view of this, I am gratified to note that in the Quebec government's view no slight was intended to the Canadian emblem. A press report on the incident notes that the Quebec provincial legislature thinks that this was merely a "harmless, playful and teasing cocktail conversation."

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.29 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT

On the order: Motions.

June 22, 1972—The Prime Minister:

That, when the House adjourns following the Royal Assent on June 30, 1972, it shall stand adjourned until a time fixed by Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Government, when the House may meet for the purpose of the giving of Royal Assent to any bills that have not been given Royal Assent;

And that, after the giving of Royal Assent to any such bills or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or stand adjourned, as the case may be, until September 28, 1972, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rise on a point of order to inform the House that it is not our intention to call this motion at this point in our proceedings. We would like to see it stand for the time being. I have had discussions with the opposition House leaders and I am seeking authority to be in a position to call the motion later in the day at four o'clock. We hope that circumstances will make it possible at that time to call this motion and adjourn at that time.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Mr. Baldwin: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

MOTION FOR CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Motions.

June 28, 1972—Mr. McKinley:

That the Fourth Report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, presented to the House on Wednesday, June 21, 1972, be concurred in.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, this motion should stand because of promised government action when we return in the fall.

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Mr. Jerome: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the undertaking I gave the House on Wednesday we have a number of written questions that can be answered today. Therefore I would seek the consent of the House to call written questions at this time.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION—BOARD OF REFEREES

Question No. 42—Mr. McBride:

Does the government intend to request that the Chairman of the Unemployment Insurance Commission's Board of Referees request that a person making an appeal against a UIC ruling appear in person more frequently than has been the practice to date in order for the Board of Referees to question the appellant in person and thus arrive at a better informed opinion and a fairer judgment?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, adequate action has been taken in this connection.

*GUIDELINES FOR RELEASE OF PRISONERS PRIOR TO RELEASE OF YVES GEOFFROY

Question No. 136—Mr. Woolliams:

In the Minister's statement in reference to the Yves Geoffroy case, made in the House of Commons on Monday, February 21, he referred to new guide lines to improve the release of prisoners from penitentiaries, what were the former guidelines prior to the release of Yves Geoffroy and his wrongful escape?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the reply to this question is rather lengthy. It runs to a couple of pages and hon. members might agree that it be tabled and printed in Hansard as if it had been read.

[Mr. Mackasey.]

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The reply referred to is as follows]

The former guidelines pertaining to Temporary Absence were based on individual assessment and stemmed from Section 26 of the Penitentiary Act which states:

"Where, in the opinion of the Commissioner or the officer in charge of a penitentiary, it is necessary or desirable that an inmate should be absent, with or without escort, for medical or humanitarian reasons or to assist in the rehabilitation of the inmate, the absence may be authorized from time to time

(a) by the Commissioner, for an unlimited period for medical reasons and for a period not exceeding fifteen days for humanitarian reasons or to assist in the rehabilitation of the inmate, or

(b) by the officer in charge, for a period not exceeding fifteen days for medical reasons and for a period not exceeding three days for humanitarian reasons or to assist in the rehabilitation of the inmate."

Factors considered in individual assessments were as follows:

(1) the inmate has demonstrated by his conduct, industry, attitude and active participation in the training program that he has a sincere desire for self-improvement;

(2) there is evidence of the existence of good family relationship;

(3) the conditions at home are such that the granting of the absence will not create a hardship or be too upsetting to the inmate or family;

(4) the granting of the absence will assist in maintaining and strengthening family relationships;

(5) the granting of the absence will provide incentive for further self-improvement and rehabilitation, and

(6) supporting information from a medical practitioner, clergyman or social agency, dependent on the nature of the need shall be obtained whenever possible.

COST OF MAINTENANCE OF INMATES IN FEDERAL INSTITUTIONS, 1971

Question No. 150—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What was the average cost of maintaining one inmate during the year 1971 in (a) federal institutions of all types (b) maximum security institutions (c) medium security institutions (d) minimum security institutions (e) farm and work camps?

2. What is the average cost of parole supervision per parolee for the year 1971?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): 1. (a) (i) Operation and Maintenance, $8,597; (ii) Capital Expenditure, $1,557; Total $10,154. (b) (i) Operation and Maintenance, $9,861; (ii) Capital Expenditure, $2,518*; Total $12,379. (c) (i) Operation and Maintenance $7,290; Capital Expenditure $645; Total $7,935. (d) (i) Operation and Maintenance, $4,642; (ii) Capital Expenditure, $1,340; Total $5,982. (e) Farm and Work Camps are, in fact, classified as minimum security institutions. Accordingly, maintenance costs for inmates of farms and work camps have been included in (d) above.

*Amount of this item due mainly to the construction of Regional Reception Centre (Quebec).

2. $1,105.

N.B. The above figure includes the cost of maintaining the National Parole Board, the cost of supervision, the cost of communications, travel, training and education, stationery, supplies, administrative support, capital cost, and the cost of revocations and forfeitures, plus the cost of case preparation for those inmates not granted parole.

ALLOWANCES ON INDIAN RESERVES

Question No. 153—Mr. Godin:

1. On Indian reserves, which level of government is responsible for (a) social allowances (b) disability pensions (c) allowances to needy mothers (d) unemployed individuals not eligible for unemployment insurance?

2. What is the federal contribution to the payment of these allowances?

3. Are these allowances paid unconditionally and, if not, what is required of the recipients?

4. What documents must be produced as proof of a person's right to receive these allowances?

5. In case of fraud, who is in charge of recovering the money?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. (a) On Indian reserves the social assistance program is the responsibility of the federal government; (b) and (c) Disability pensions and needy mothers' allowances are the responsibility of provincial governments; (d) Unemployed Indians on reserves not eligible for unemployment insurance are the responsibility of the federal government.

2. (a) 100 per cent, except in Ontario where in accordance with a federal/provincial Indian welfare agreement, the federal government contributes approximately 95 per cent; (b) and (c) 50 per cent. (d) Same as 2 (a) above.

3. Each program has its own specific eligibility conditions which are applicable to all recipients (non-Indian or Indian).

4. (a) An Application for Social Assistance and whatever other documentary evidence the Social Assistance administration may require, having regard to the circumstances of the case. (b) and (c) Not applicable.

5. (a) Federal government; (b) and (c) Not applicable.

Mr. RAYMOND DENIS

Question No. 194—Mr. Coates:

1. On what date was Raymond Denis sentenced to a term in a federal penitentiary, for what charge and for what term?

2. On what date did Raymond Denis begin serving his sentence and in what institution?

3. (a) What was the actual period of time that Mr. Denis served in a federal penitentiary (b) was it all served in the same institution and, if not, what is the breakdown of time served and at what institutions?

4. Was Mr. Denis released on parole and if so (a) on what date (b) for what period of time (c) has the period of parole now ended?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): By the Department of the Solicitor General: 1. December 15, 1967; obstructing justice (Section 119(1) CC): two years imprisonment.

2. Mr. Denis was held at the Carleton County Jail, Ottawa, pending disposition of his appeal. The appeal was dismissed on January 20, 1969 and Mr. Denis was admitted to St-Vincent-de-Paul Penitentiary on March 19, 1969 to serve his sentence as a federal inmate.

3. (a) Nine months. (b) (i) St-Vincent-de-Paul Penitentiary, three months and seven days. (ii) Cowansville Institution, five months and twenty-three days.

4. Yes. (a) December 19, 1969. (b) 397 days. (c) Yes, January 19, 1971.

AGRICULTURE—RELEASE OF ASSISTANCE PROGRAM INFORMATION TO SMALL FARMERS

Question No. 215—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. For each year 1968 to 1970, what amount was expended to inform the farmers living on small farms of the government's policies and its various assistance programs?

2. How was this government information transmitted to the farmers?

3. To date, what amount has been spent by the government for distributing information to the farmers on Bill C-244, the Prairie Grain Stabilization Act?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Agriculture Canada and the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board as follows: 1. No information releases are directed exclusively to small farmers nor was any expenditure made in the years in question for information on assistance programs designed specifically for farmers living on small farms.

2. N/A.

3. Dissemination of information on the Prairie Grain Stabilization Plan, Bill C-244, by the Department was part of an information package about the over-all Prairie Grains Policy which included eight other programs, either implemented or proposed. The amount spent on this package information program was $135,014.62.

COMMUNICATIONS SATELLITE ANIK

Question No. 292—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How many Canadians north of 60° will be served by Anik, Canada's communications satellite?

2. How many in the same area are being served by existing communications facilities?

3. (a) Will programs originating in the Territories and designed specifically for Northern communities be available through Anik facilities (b) are local programs available through existing facilities (c) what will be the percentage increase in local programming when Anik becomes available?

4. Will Anik operate on a strict economic basis or will services to the North be subsidized?

5. What is the estimated cost of providing service to the North?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): 1. There are three types of telecommunication services that can be carried on the Anik satellite: (i) telephone and data channels (ii) television program channels (iii) radio program circuits. When the Telesat satellite system is developed to its planned extent about 16,000 people will have access to telephone and data services in the Northwest Territories. The communities concerned will be primarily in the districts of Keewatin and Franklin where satisfactory telecommunications services do not now exist. Based on 1966 census data, approximately 27,000 or 61 per cent of the population will receive the full, live network TV schedule via the Anik satellite during the first year of operation, as opposed to the limited, four-hour recorded and delayed program package now available to 24,000 or 54 per cent of the population. The gain will thus be significant in terms of greatly increased hours of programming per day for the population now receiving only the recorded television package as well as in terms of the increased population to be reached during the first year. The communities to be served are primarily in the Yukon and the district of Mackenzie in the Northwest Territories. The satellite will not be used in the first year for distribution of CBC radio.

2. The population presently served in the same areas by existing communication facilities offering comparable telephone and data services to the satellite system is 7,800. About 24,000 of the population, or 54 per cent, now receive the limited four-hour recorded and delayed program package, as explained in answer to part 1 of the question. Radio is now available to approximately 29,300 or 66 per cent of the population, based upon the daytime coverage provided by the signals of existing radio stations.

3. (a)and (c). The CBC advises that it is their intention to include in the programming made available to northern communities through Anik facilities program materials related to the lives and interests of the people in the north. Some of this will originate within the Territories themselves. The extent to which this will be possible will depend on the production facilities available which will be limited at the outset but which will be enlarged as budgetary conditions in future years permit. (b) The CBC advises that local programs are now available on radio but not on television.

4. Telesat Canada advises that their system using the Anik satellite will operate throughout Canada, including the north, on a strict economic basis.

5. Presumably this question concerns the financial administration of the satellite program and it should be addressed to the President of Telesat Canada for reply.

NOTE: The assumptions used in the answer to the question are as follows: (a) CBC information on television coverage is based on the 1966 census statistics, (b) information on telephone and data services is based on preliminary information supplied by Statistics Canada based on the 1971 census, (c) the CBC has provided information on the population that will receive television services in 1973 while the information on telephone services is based on full development of the thin route system in 1975.

AUDITOR GENERAL

Question No. 298—Mr. Guay (St. Boniface):

How many days was the Auditor General out of Canada during the year 1970 and also during 1971?

Mr. Judd Buchanan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1970, 106; 1971, 54.

STUDY OF REGIONAL IMPACT OF CANADIAN TARIFF

Question No. 460—Mr. Nystrom:

Has the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce conducted a study of the regional impact of the Canadian tariff?

Mr. Bruce Howard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No.

REPRESENTATIONS TO FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ON BEHALF OF PAPER PRODUCTION INDUSTRY

Question No. 465—Mr. Rodrigue:

Has the president of International Pulp and Sulphite made representations to any department asking that no investment be made in Canada during the next ten years in the paper production industry?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): No.

*GUIDELINES FOR USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT DURING ELECTION CAMPAIGNS

Question No. 476—Mr. McCleave:

Have ethical guidelines been issued by the Prime Minister to other Ministers regarding the practice of ministerial use of government aircraft during an election campaign and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, guidelines governing the use of official aircraft by ministers during an election campaign were issued in May 1968 by the Prime Minister, and these still prevail.

Official aircraft may not be used for purposes related to the election campaign. This means not merely that government business must be involved in any such journey, but that official aircraft may be used only when the performance of government business is the sole public purpose of the trip. Therefore, governmental aircraft should not be used in cases where the minister, or party concerned, will be engaging in any public political activities even if the trip also involves some government business.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES BOARD

Question No. 483—Mr. Burton:

1. (a) Who are the members of the Industrial Incentives Advisory Board (b) what is the occupation, employer and principal address of each member?

2. What remuneration is paid to the members of the Industrial Incentives Advisory Board?

3. What amount has been paid to date to each member of the Board?

4. On what date was each member of the Board appointed?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): 1. (a) and (b) E. Kendall Cork, Vice-President and Treasurer, Noranda Mines Limited, Toronto; Jack B. Estey, Executive Vice-President, National Sea Products, Halifax; Robert H. Jones, Executive Vice-President, The Investors Group, Winnipeg; M. W. Mackenzie, Chairman and President, New Brunswick Multiplex Corporation, Como, Quebec; Henri Lorrain, Canadian Director and First Vice-President, International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Papermill Workers, Montreal; J. D. Love, Deputy Minister, Department of Regional Economic Expansion, Ottawa; T. K. Shoyama, Assistant Deputy Minister, Department of Finance, Ottawa; A. G. Kniewasser, Senior Assistant Deputy Minister Industry and Trade Development, Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Ottawa; J. P. Francis, Assistant Deputy Minister, Planning, Department of Regional Economic Expansion, Ottawa; W. J. Lavigne, Assistant Deputy Minister, Incentives, Department of Regional Economic Expansion, Ottawa.

2. The members of the Regional Development Incentives Board serve without remuneration.

3. Travelling and living expenses to February 18, 1972 were paid as follows: E. Kendall Cork, $919.07; J. B. Estey, $1377.14; R. H. Jones, $1466.53; M. W. Mackenzie, $400.00; L. Beaudoin, $176.00 (resigned 1/1/72).

4. All members of the Board, except Mr. Lorrain, were appointed May 18, 1971. Mr. Lorrain was appointed December 15, 1971.

DEMURRAGE CHARGES

Question No. 497—Mr. Korchinski:

How much demurrage charges have been paid in the past 20 years as a result of grain loading difficulties?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Essentially the Canadian Wheat Board becomes responsible for demurrage when stocks of Board grain are insufficient to supply the entire requirements of a vessel at the time of berth allocation of the said vessel or to provide a continuous loading operation. The reasons for such a situation are manifold and, more frequently than not, are the result of physical breakdowns in the movement of grain from the Prairie region, usually as a result of extreme weather conditions. Assuming that the phrase "grain loading difficulties" used in the question is in reference to such circumstances, the following figures indicate the demurrage charges resulting therefrom, and paid by the Wheat Board in each of the last 20 crop years.

Crop Year	Total
1951-52	$ 1,039.92
1952-53	53,833.10
1953-54	855.53
1954-55	71,907.94
1955-56	20,852.91
1956-57	14,085.13
1957-58	Nil
1958-59	387,362.30
1959-60	40.921.10
1960-61	796.15
1961-62	Nil
1962-63	5,698.26
1963-64	7,849.65
1964-65	29,100.00
1965-66	590,636.00
1966-67	423,283.00
1967-68	86,187.00
1968-69	1,635,185.00
1969-70	543,178.00
1970-71	204,162.00
Total	$4,116,932.99

BUTTER IMPORTS

Question No. 502—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

From April 1, 1971 to March 31, 1972, did Canada import butter and, if so (a) from what countries (b) in what quantities (c) at what price (d) did the Canadian Dairy commission or any other agency import the butter (e) at what price was the butter put on the Canadian market?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by Statistics Canada and the Canadian Dairy Commission as follows: (a) Canada imported butter during the period April 1, 1971 to March 31, 1972 from New Zealand and the United States. (b) and (c). The quantities and prices of butter imported from April 1, 1971 to March 31, 1972 are shown below:

	Quantity (pounds)	Average Price per pound
New Zealand	6,800	.50
U.S.A.	11,339,300	.52
	11,346,100	.52

FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN TOBERMORY AND SOUTH BAYMOUTH

Question No. 506—Mr. Noble:

1. What were the terms of the proposals made by the Department of Transport to the Government of the Province of Ontario in respect of supplying more efficient ferry service between Tobermory and South Baymouth?

2. Did the Government of the Province of Ontario make any counter-proposals and, if so, what were the terms?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): During the negotiations in connection with the Tobermory-South Baymouth ferry service, a great many proposals and counter-proposals were made by both the federal and Ontario governments. In the end, agreement was reached between the two governments as announced in a press release dated June 6, 1972:

"Under the new agreement the Province of Ontario will be responsible for the financial operation of the service. The agreement calls for the Federal Government to contribute $3 million to the Province of Ontario and to make the usual domestic shipbuilding subsidy for new ferries. The Province will assume the costs for dredging, for building wharfs and terminal facilities and for the construction of new vessels for this service. The Federal Government will continue to own the wharfs and to be responsible for their subsequent upkeep as well as for the maintenance of the channels."

Questions

*RELEASE OF PRISONERS SERVING LIFE IMPRISONMENT ON MURDER CHARGES SINCE JANUARY 1, 1971

Question No. 520—Mr. Woolliams:

1. (a) How many prisoners, who were serving life imprisonment on a conviction of murder, have been released or temporarily released from a penitentiary since January 1, 1971 to date (b) how many have failed to return on their own and how many are still at large at the present time (c) what are their names?

2. Has there been any crime committed by these prisoners who have been so released and what has been the nature of these crimes?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again this reply is rather lengthy. I wonder whether it might be tabled and reported in Hansard as if it has been read?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The reply referred to above follows:]

1. (a) (i) The number of inmates paroled under authority of the Governor in Council, pursuant to Section 684(3) of the Criminal Code, was 19. (ii) The number of inmates granted the privilege of a temporary leave of absence permit in accordance with Section 26 of the Penitentiary Act was 169. (b) Five. As of May 4, 1972 none is still at large. (c) Mr. Yves Geoffroy, Mr. A. Kendall, Mr. S. J. Sinclair, Mr. R. A. E. Swearngen and Mr. R. Foucher.

2. Yes. One was charged with escape and his case is still before the Court; one has been charged with being unlawfully at large and is awaiting appearance in Court; one has been charged and convicted for being unlawfully at large; one at large and for robbery; and one was charged and convicted for armed robbery; break, enter and theft; possession of an offensive weapon; being unlawfully at large; theft over $50 and escape from lawful custody.

UNCTAD—GENERAL PRINCIPLES

Question No. 530—Mr. Rowland:

1. Did Canada oppose (a) General Principle Two (b) General Principle Three (c) General Principle Seven (d) General Principle Eight adopted by UNCTAD I and listed in the "final act" of that conference and, if so, for what reasons?

2. Did Canada abstain from voting on (a) General Principle Four (b) General Principle Five (c) General Principle Eleven (d) General Principle Twelve (e) General Principle Fourteen (f) General Principle Fifteen and, if so, for what reasons?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1 (a) Yes, Canada opposed General Principle Two because it called for the adoption of trading methods to eliminate discrimination based on socio-economic systems. This principle was put forward by the Soviet bloc which sought to eliminate all reference to trade restrictions based on strategic grounds. (b) Yes, Canada opposed General Principle Three regarding the sovereign right of each country freely to trade with other countries and freely to dispose of its natural resources because this right was not qualified by any reference to international law, to agreements freely entered into, or to relevant UNGA resolutions. (c) Yes. While Canada had no difficulty with that section of General Principle Seven which dealt with access to markets, we opposed the concept of stabilization of commodity prices at artificial levels and the relating of those price levels to those of manufactured goods. (d) Yes. General Principle Eight sought to deal with the application of the most favoured nation principle to the question of tariff preferences for developing countries. At that time Canada was unable to accept this principle. Canada is, of course, among those developed countries which subsequently accepted the Generalized Preference Scheme established at UNCTAD II.

2 (a), (b), (c) and (d). Yes. While often sympathetic to the general tenets of these Principles, Canada could not, at that time, accept the phraseology which was in many cases unbalanced and arbitrary. For example, Principles Fifteen and Four concerned respectively the special needs of the least developed of the developing countries, and the requirement for all nations to pledge themselves to pursue policies designed to accelerate economic growth. The Canadian abstention in both cases reflected difficulty with the uncompromising text rather than disagreement on substance. Delegations of other major trading nations, including Canada, were likewise unable to envisage that national policies could feasibly be directed towards a completely new international division of labour (General Principle Five). Canada, together with other major aid donors, could not accept that there should be no element of discretion in the choice of aid recipients (Principle Eleven), that UNCTAD should prejudge the conclusion of an agreement on general and complete disarmament (Principle Twelve) or the implication that the colonial period had brought no economic benefit to developing countries (Principle Fourteen).

ROYAL VANCOUVER YACHT CLUB

Question No. 531—Mr. Lewis:

1. Does the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club occupy a waterlot in Coal Harbour, Burrard Inlet?

2. How many square feet does this waterlot comprise?

3. (a) What is the rental rate per square foot per year for the waterlot occupied by the Royal Vancouver Yacht Club (b) what is the total rental paid by the RVYC per year?

4. What is the rental rate paid by commercial users for waterlot areas in the vicinity of Coal Harbour, Burrard Inlet, per square foot per year?

5. When does the lease for the waterlot occupied by the RVYC expire?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. Yes.

2. 1,291,031.2 square feet.

3. (a) .0038cent per square foot; (b) nominal rental only established in 1953, $50 per year.

4. The only commercial leases which the National Harbours Board have in Coal Harbour are for fillable waterlots at an annual rental rate of six cents per square foot. Policy is that permits to fill waterlot areas are only issued provided tenant agrees to pay 8 per cent of market value as land on completion of fill as annual rental.

5. March 23, 1974.

FEED GRAIN TRANSPORTATION

Question No. 544—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What is the percentage of feed grain tonnage transported eastward (a) on the St. Lawrence Seaway (b) by rail?

2. Is there a price difference between both means of transportation and, if so, what is the difference per bushel?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): 1. For domestic feed grain utilization in Eastern Canada: (a) Crop year 1969-70, 89.4 per cent; Crop year 1970-71, 82.7 per cent. (b) Crop year 1969-70, 10.6 per cent; Crop year 1970-71, 17.3 per cent.

2. The difference in the cost of moving feed grains from the Lakehead via water and rail are not constant at all destinations in Eastern Canada, or at any point in time. Water freight rates fluctuate depending upon the supply and demand for vessels. Storage and interest costs accrue on grains stored in Eastern elevators during the winter months, a cost not applicable to the rail movement. A typical comparison of costs on movement of barley during the open navigation season from the Lakehead to a feed mill at Granby, Quebec, would be:

(a) Shipment by water Lakehead to Montreal and truck to Granby, Quebec: (i) Lakehead terminal costs, 4.900 cents bushel; (ii) Water freight, insurance, tolls, and brokerage, 9.740 cents bushel; (iii) Montreal Terminal Costs, 5.300 cents bushel; (iv) Trucking, 6.240 cents bushel; Gross Total 26.18 cents bushel; Less Freight Assistance 15.36 cents bushel; Net Cost 10.82 cents bushel.

(b) Shipment by rail Lakehead to Granby, Quebec (i) Lakehead Terminal Costs, 5.196 cents bushel; (ii) Rail freight and Brokerage, 22.37 cents bushel; Gross Total, 27.57 cents bushel; Less Freight Assistance, 15.36 cents bushel; Net Cost, 12.21 cents bushel.

(c) Shipment by rail Western Country elevator to Granby, Quebec: (i) Lakehead Terminal Diversion, 2.75 cents bushel; (ii) Rail Freight and Brokerage, 22.37 cents bushel; Gross Total, 25.12 cents bushel; Less Freight Assistance, 15.36 cents bushel; Net Cost, 9.76 cents bushel.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—OPERATION DEFICIT

Question No. 546—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What was the operation deficit of the St. Lawrence Seaway during the years 1968-69, 1969-70 and 1970-71?

2. Does the United States of America share the deficit incurred on services offered to international navigation on the Seaway with Canada and, if so, in what proportion?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows: 1. There was no operating deficit in the years 1968, 1969 and 1970. The Montreal-Lake Ontario section earned an operating profit (i.e. before providing for interest and for replacement of machinery and equipment) which was greater than the deficit on the Welland Canal. The following are the Canadian operating results for these years:

(000's $)

Operating Profits (Losses)

	Montreal-Lake Ontario Section	Welland Canal
1968	$13,576.5	$(8,268.8)
1969	10,133.0	(7,075.9)
1970	12,476.3	(7,140.8)
	$36,185.8	$(22,485.5)

2. There are five Canadian locks and two United States locks in the Montreal-Lake Ontario section. By agreement the tolls revenue of this section is now divided between Canada and the United States in the ratio of 73:27. There is no sharing of costs. The following are the United States operating results for these years:

(000's $)

Operating Profits (Losses)

	Montreal-Lake Ontario Section
1968	$ 4,726.0
1969	3,668.1
	$12,935.5

All revenues collected on the Welland Canal accrue to Canada which bears the entire cost of the operation.

RAILWAYS—DELAYS DUE TO SNOW AND MUD SLIDES

Question No. 561—Mr. Korchinski:

1. On what dates were the railways operating from the prairie region to Vancouver rendered inoperative due to the snow slides or mud slides?

2. What was the total hours of delay in each case?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. Although there were numerous and serious interruptions to through service at certain times during the winter, at no one time was the railway completely inoperative all the way from the Prairies to Vancouver. As indicated below there were many instances of mud and snow slides which delayed trains and service for certain lengths of time, nevertheless, traffic was kept moving forward on the various subdivisions of this territory and held at various locations along the line pending the clearing of the slides:

Boston Bar to Hope, 0900 until 1400, Jan. 24th, acct. snowslides

During this period the CPR were also impassable until the PM of Jan. 22 at which time CN commenced detouring over that Company's tracks.

February 6 Yale Sub.

Mileage 33.4, 0615 until 1200, acct. snow and mud slides

February 7 Ashcroft Sub.

Mileage 93.8, 1410 until 2030, snowslide

February 15 Yale Sub.

Questions

Mileage 7.7, 0400 until 1005, rock slide

February 16 Yale Sub.

Mileage 16.3, 1130 until 2350, 17, slip out

February 27 Yale Sub.

Mileage 22.9, 1125 until 1200, 28, rock and snowslides

March 5 Yale Sub.

Mileages 19 and 21.7, 0320 until 1620, snowslides

March 10 Clearwater Sub.

Mileages 19.3 and 19.8, 1205 until 2130, snowslides

March 11 Clearwater Sub.

Mileage 19.8, 2220 until 0505, 12, snow and trees

March 11 Ashcroft Sub.

Mileage 76.5, 2100 until 1145, 12, rock slide

March 12 Ashcroft Sub.

Mileage 31.5, 2300 until 1530, 13, washout

March 13 Albreda Sub.

Mileage 53, 1700 until 0545, 14, snowslides

March 16 Yale Sub.

Mileages 5.7, 14, 16.2, 20.6, 33.4, 0130 until 2350, snowslides

March 19 Clearwater Sub.

Mileages 51.5 and 52.3, 0900 until 2120, 21st, Slip out

March 19 Ashcroft Sub.

Mileage 113.3, 2130 until 0545, 20, mud and rock

March 27 Yale Sub.

Mileage 22.9, 1315 until 1000, 28, snow

Mileage 109.5, 2355 until 1500, 29, snow

2. The Company does not maintain records that would readily disclose the total hours of delay in each specific case as such information has no managerial significance. To develop the data to answer the question would require considerable expenditure of time and money.

POLLUTION—GREAT LAKES

Question No. 574—Mr. Matte:

1. By what means is the government presently preventing pollution of the Great Lakes?

2. Is the government aware that owners of boats are throwing waste into such waters?

3. Is the government aware that many hundreds of cans of paint are thrown into such waters?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of the Environment and Transport as follows: 1. The Federal Government is preventing pollution through the application of anti-pollution legislation, such as the Fisheries Act, the Canada Water Act and the Canada Shipping Act, and through such agreements as the Canada/United States Agreement and the Canada/Ontario Agreement. The Department of Transport enforces the Oil Pollution Prevention Regulations and the Garbage Pollution Prevention Regulations throughout the Great Lakes. These Regulations apply to ships and both carry a possible fine of $100,000 against offenders. Marine surveyors employed by the Department of Transport investigate reports of infractions of these regulations and lay charges whenever necessary. Coast Guard vessels employed by the Department of Transport carry out regular surveillance in Great Lakes waters. A Coast Guard aircraft with departmental surveyors acting as observers also carries out regular anti-pollution patrols throughout the area.

2. The Garbage Pollution Prevention Regulations were promulgated specifically to deal with the problem of waste from vessels in the Great Lakes and in other Inland Waters.

3. No.

NATIONAL REVENUE—COST OF TAX RETURN PAMPHLETS

Question No. 585—Mr. Mather:

What was the cost of the booklet, including its distribution to taxpayers, dealing with the revised system of income tax effective respecting 1972 income?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): In so far as the Department of National Revenue, Taxation, is concerned: It prepared and distributed 11 tax reform pamphlets to date on various aspects of the new tax law, two mailed to all 9,800,000 taxpayers and others on a selective basis according to subject. The cost was $770,-903.75 for printing, $70,000 for inserting and $720,000 for mailing. Included in the cost are supplies available over the desks of the 28 District Taxation Offices.

DAYS OF GRAIN SHIPMENT LOST AS A RESULT OF ADVERSE WEATHER CONDITIONS

Question No. 605—Mr. Murta:

How many days of grain shipment were lost in the past 10 years on a per year basis because of adverse winter weather conditions?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): While adverse winter weather conditions may prevent the grain handling system from operating to capacity, grain gathering from the country elevator system and vessel loading normally continues while lines difficulties are being resolved. A precise record of the duration of stoppages of rail movement at individual locations has not been maintained.

INSTALLATION OF INSTRUMENT LANDING SYSTEM, DEER LAKE AIRPORT

Question No. 612—Mr. Marshall:

What is the status of the installations of an ILA System at Deer Lake Airport?

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Tenders were called on June 23, 1972, for the installation of an Instrument Landing System at the Deer Lake Airport. It is expected that the work will be completed and the facility commissioned by the end of this year.

NEWFOUNDLAND—NUMBER OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE OFFICES

Question No. 614—Mr. Marshall:

1. How many units of the Department of Agriculture are there in the Province of Newfoundland?

2. For each unit, what is (a) the location (b) the total number of employees, by descriptive job-title?

3. Is it the intention of the government to establish a division of the Farm Credit Corporation in the Province and, if not, for what reasons?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): 1. Eight.

2. (a) (1) Argentia, Consolidated Grading and Inspection; (2) Cornerbrook—(a) Consolidated Grading and Inspection, (b) Health of Animals; (3) Grand Falls, Consolidated Grading and Inspection; (4) Port aux Basques, Consolidated Grading and Inspection; (5) St. John's, (a) Research Station; (b) Consolidated Grading and Inspection; (c) Health of Animals.

(b) three Agricultural Officers; four Primary Products Inspection; one Engineering and Scientific Support; one Administrative Officer; one Stenographic; two Clerical. (c) two Veterinarians; eight Primary Products Inspection; one Clerical.

3. No. There is insufficient concentration of business in any one locality to warrant the opening of an office. Applications from the Province of Newfoundland are handled directly through the Branch Office at Moncton, New Brunswick, with regular pre-scheduled visits by Credit Advisors.

*RCMP—MUSICAL RIDE

Question No. 616—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many cities, towns or other urban centres have contracted to have the Musical Ride of the RCMP for the present year?

2. What are the names of such centres and how much has been agreed to be paid by each of the centres to cover expenses, transportation, or other costs incurred by the participation of the force?

3. Are there any cases in which no charge is made and the government pays the costs and, if so, what are the names of the cities, towns or villages receiving such special treatment?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Here again, Mr. Speaker, there is a great deal of statistical information involved in this reply.

I wonder whether the reply might be tabled and printed in Hansard as if read?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The reply referred to above follows:]

INFORMATION CANADA

Question No. 621—Mr. Mather:

1. What was the number of employees, including the clerical staff, of Information Canada in 1970?

2. What is the number today?

3. What in dollars was the amount paid to such employees in 1970?

4. What is the amount today?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): 1. On April 1, 1970, out of an authorized strength of 520, there were 362 employees on staff, of which 126 were transferred from the Queen's Printer and 228 from the Canadian Government Exhibition Commission.

2. On May 25, 1972, there were 545, including 179 for Expositions. Of the 545, 120 were on short term temporary clerical duty.

3. Since the inception of Information Canada on April 1, 1970, salary and wages paid to December 31, 1970, were $1,842,373 which included $902,173 for the Expositions Division which operated on partial cost recovery.

4. Salaries and wages paid from April 1, 1971, to December 31, 1971, were $2,071,014, exclusive of salaries and wages for Expositions.

CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO COMMONWEALTH PROGRAM OF EDUCATIONAL TRAINING FOR REFUGEES FROM RHODESIA AND SOUTH AFRICA

Question No. 632—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What is Canada's contribution to the Commonwealth Program of educational training for refugees from Rhodesia and South Africa?

2. Are the refugees involved alleged to have committed "political" crimes by their native governments?

3. Are contributions being channelled through educational institutions or through nationalist organizations in exile?

4. Does Canada make any contribution to the African National Council of Rhodesia?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. During the present fiscal year Canada is contributing $75,000 to the Commonwealth Secretariat for a Program of Training for Rhodesian Refugees. Canada is also contributing $50,000 to the Inter University Exchange Fund of Geneva for assistance to refugees from the whole southern African region and is contributing $100,000 to the United Nations Education and Training Fund for Southern Africans. Canada expects to repeat this year the grant of $10,000 which the Canadian Government gave last year to the United Nations Trust Fund for South Africa. Canada also contributes to the support of refugees from southern Africa through its contribution to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees.

2. It is not known whether the recipients of funds from these programs have been alleged to have committed political crimes by their native governments or not. It is our understanding that the organizations through whom this aid is channelled take into account all relevant factors.

3. The contributions are being channelled through the international institutions listed above.

4. No.

EXPORTS OF WHEAT TO MEXICO

Question No. 642—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. How much wheat has been supplied by Canada to Mexico during each year since 1968?

2. Of this, what proportion does this represent of that country's total wheat import?

3. Did the Wheat Board make any offers of Canadian wheat to the Compania National de Subsistencias Populares (CONASUPO) during this period?

4. Does Canada have international suppliers and brokers representing her in connection with the sale of seed, wheat or other cereals to Mexico?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): 1, 2, 3 and 4. Since the 1963-64 crop year, with the exception of 1968-69 when a negligible quantity (1,000 tons) was imported, Mexico has been a net exporter of wheat. The Canadian Wheat Board and private trade continue to represent Canada's interest in this and other markets for Canadian grain and oilseeds. No business in wheat sales to Mexico was concluded during the period in question.

STUDENT APPLICATIONS FOR POSITION AS HISTORIC PARK GUIDES

Question No. 643—Mr. Muir:

1. What was the total number of applications received by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development from students in the Atlantic Provinces for positions as Historic Park Guides?

2. Of this total (a) how many of the applicants specified they were unilingual English (b) how many specified they were unilingual French (c) how many specified they were bilingual?

3. How many applications were accepted and of the total number provided employment (a) how many were unilingual English (b) how many were unilingual French (c) how many were bilingual?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I have been given the following information by the Public Service Commission. 1. The Regional Office received 563 applications.

2. Of these 563 applicants, the Selection Board identified (a) 475 as unilingual English; (b) 2 as unilingual French; (c) 86 as bilingual.

3. Of the 85 applicants appointed (a) 41 were unilingual English; (b) none were unilingual French; (c) 44 were bilingual.

OLD AGE SECURITY—ADVERTISEMENTS

Question No. 648—Mr. Nystrom:

1. How many newspapers and how many magazines have carried or will carry the advertisement "Attention old age pensioners, Guaranteed minimum income levels have been raised"?

2. Of the newspapers, how many are dailies, weeklies, bi-weeklies and monthly?

3. Have or will any newspapers or magazines carry the advertisement more than once and, if so, what is the maximum number of times and in which of the above categories do such newspapers fall?

4. (a) What was the total cost of these advertisements (b) what was the cost per category (c) how much did the most expensive advertisement or series of advertisements cost in a single newspaper and magazine and what are the names of that newspaper and magazine?

5. Was any advertising of the pension increases (for old age security pensioners) done in either radio or television and, if so, what was the cost?

6. What is the name of each advertising firm through which the above advertising was placed and at what charge?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Nine hundred and sixty one newspapers.

2. Dailies, 112; weeklies, 818; bi-weeklies, 17; monthly, 14.

3. Yes. Dailies, two insertions. One insertion for all other newspapers.

4. (a) Total cost of advertisement, $168,965. (b) Dailies, $60,470; weeklies, $101,945; bi-weeklies, $3,460; monthly, $3,090. (c) $3,600, the Toronto Daily Star.

5. Yes. Radio, $31,856.

6. Advertising agencies: Huxley-Irwin-Price Limited; Agence Canadienne de Publicité Limitée.

There was no charge to the department for placement because the agencies are compensated by a 15 per cent commission allowed by all media to enfranchised agencies for national advertising.

BLUE WATER BRIDGE AUTHORITY

Question No. 662—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. On what date or dates did the Government in Council, or any authority designated by the Governor in Council, order the Blue Water Bridge Authority to make its cost records and its cash receipt and disbursement records available, pursuant to section 19(1) of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act which was enacted May 21, 1964?

2. On what date or dates did the Blue Water Bridge Authority provide the Governor in Council, or his designee with itemized, detailed and verified reports of the Authority's receipts and disbursements under section 19(2)(a) of the Act?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated in the House on May 19, 1972 that a submission to the Governor in Council was being prepared requiring the Blue Water Bridge Authority under Section 19 of the Blue Water Bridge Authority Act to submit a financial report annually to the appropriate Minister. The submission is expected to be completed shortly.

What was the total production of industrial milk delivered to processing industries and subsidized by CDC (a) for the month of April, 1971 (b) for the month of April, 1972?

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Deliveries by industrial milk and cream shippers on which subsidy was paid by the Canadian Dairy Commission for the month of April were: (a) 1971, 21,366,000 pounds butterfat; (b) 1972, 22,055,369 pounds butterfat.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

Question No. 678—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the total cost of the Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism?

2. What income was paid to each of the chairmen of the Commission?

[Mr. Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean).]

3. What was the total amount of salaries paid to persons working for the Commission?

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. $9,049,386.

2. Mr. Laurendeau, $105,220, (Deceased 1968); Mr. D. Dunton, $69,750; Mr. J. L. Gagnon, $133,650.

3. $4,456,553.

ROYAL COMMISSION ON BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

Question No. 686—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the actual cost of The Royal Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism thus far?

2. If the work is to be continued what would be the projected additional cost?

Mr. Barnett J. Danson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. $9,049,386.

2. The Commission ceased its operations in 1971. No further costs are projected.

*PRINCE ALBERT NATIONAL PARK—GOLF COURSE

Question No. 720—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many employees are there on the Golf Course at Prince Albert National Park as of this date?

2. How many were there last year?

3. For what reason has there been a reduction in staff?

4. How many green keepers and maintenance staff were employed in each of the years 1968, 1969 and 1970?

5. How many are employed as of this date?

6. Have the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and/or the Department received complaints that the condition of the Golf Course is deplorable?

7. Will immediate action be taken to bring the Golf Course back to its former excellent condition?

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there are at this date nine employees on the golf course at Prince Albert national park.

Last year there were also nine employees.

The third part of the question is not applicable.

In 1968, 1969 and 1970 eight employees were engaged as green keepers and maintenance staff.

This year, as I say, there are nine.

The department has not received any complaints regarding the condition of the golf course.

Lastly, because of the very hot, dry, unseasonable weather this spring and the lack of rainfall, the golf course is being watered considerably more than usual to assist in maintaining the course to its regular standard.

Question No. 377—Mr. Robinson:

Will the government support the Canadian Youth Hostels Associations's quality approach to hostelling in order to maintain standards in accordance with International Federation rules?

Return tabled.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

Question No. 535—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. For each year 1967 to 1971 inclusive, what was the total amount of money received by each province (or Canada) for exporting (a) skim milk powder (b) cottage cheese (c) cheddar cheese (d) cattle (i) beef animals (ii) dairy cows (e) beef (f) butter (g) hogs (h) pork?

2. For the same period, what was the amount expended by province (or Canada) for importing (a) skim milk powder (b) cottage cheese (c) cheddar cheese (d) cattle (i) beef animals (ii) dairy cows (e) beef (f) butter (g) hogs (h) pork?

3. For the 5-year period, 1967 to 1971, how many head of cattle (a) beef animals (b) dairy cows did Canada export to (i) US (ii) USSR (iii) European Economic Market (iv) Britain (v) Scandinavia (vi) other?

4. For that same period, how many head of cattle (a) beef animals (b) dairy cows did Canada import from those countries?

5. In each case, if the information is not available, for what reason?

Return tabled.

PENSION BENEFITS STANDARDS ACT

AMENDMENT TO REQUIRE THAT TRUST AGREEMENT BE MADE AVAILABLE TO EMPLOYEE CONTRIBUTORS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-228, to amend the Pension Benefits Standards Act (information to employees).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to legally recognize that, whereas pension funds are financed by both employer and employee contributions, employee confidence in contributory pension programs can be enhanced if more information is made available to them, therefore requiring that a copy of the trust agreement be made available to employee contributors.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

COPYRIGHT ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR REMUNERATION OF PERFORMERS OF LITERARY AND MUSICAL WORKS FOR SUBSEQUENT REPRODUCTIONS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-229, to amend the Copyright Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that performers of literary and musical works are remunerated for subsequent reproductions of those works broadcast over the electronic media. Current practice is for the performers' right to cease once the contractual recording session is fulfilled.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have a motion I should like to move under the provisions of Standing Order 43.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member appreciates that we have proceeded beyond motions which were called some time ago. He would need the unanimous consent of the House to revert to motions for this purpose.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is no agreement. The hon. member will appreciate the difficulty in which the Chair is placed in this regard.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

DECISION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEAL JEOPARDIZING MAINTENANCE PAYMENTS ARISING FROM DIVORCE SUITS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice who will recall that earlier in the week I asked him about a decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal which seems to put in jeopardy or question the validity at least of thousands of court orders relating to the maintenance of divorced wives and children under the Divorce Act. Has he had an opportunity to consider that decision and does he propose to take any action in connection with it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my examination of the question is not yet complete. Therefore I cannot make any comment on whether action is required.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question in view of the difficulties in which thousands of children and women may find themselves. Without offence, will the minister consider this problem post haste? Will he and the House leader examine Bill C-69 standing in the name of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, which in my judgment exactly fits the situation, and consider the possibility of moving with this bill today? I suggest that in the circumstances it might proceed through the House very rapidly and prevent thousands of women and children in this country suffering hardship.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, while I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, one of the problems is whether any action wich fits the situation is in fact constitutional. That is a further very serious situation which has to be examined. I would not want to have anyone misled by thinking a piece of legislation which would not stand up would solve any problems.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—PROSPECT OF SETTLEMENT IN LIGHT OF ARBITRATION AWARD

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour, and I do so strictly to obtain information. May I ask whether the position taken by the government House leader, the President of the Privy Council, in respect of the motion for adjournment of the House means that matters are progressing in the conflict between the longshoremen and employers in the Quebec ports and that one may expect some kind of satisfactory conclusion to the problem today?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I can reply quite clearly to at least one aspect of that question. Mr. Justice Allan Gold, the arbitrator, did render a very explicit award last evening. That award will be considered beginning at one o'clock this afternoon at a general meeting of the membership of the longshoremen's union in Montreal. So that kind of progress is taking place. I think we have to await the results of that meeting before we can be more explicit as to real progress in the dispute.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I join the minister in the hope that the union will abide by any arbitration award as is required by the agreement and by the law. May I ask whether, when this meeting is held at one o'clock, the negotiating committee or executive committee or some group of leadership in the union is ready to recommend acceptance of and obedience to the award?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I am not privy to the position the union leadership intends to place before the men. I think we have to rely upon the good judgment of the longshoremen now that their agreement has been clarified for them in very explicit language. I think we as members of this House would expect them as good Canadian citizens to live up to the law of Canada as it has been clearly placed before them and to honour their agreement which they bargained for and sealed about three months ago. I trust that the meeting this afternoon will consider all these aspects of the position they are now clearly in.

QUEBEC—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF BACK-TO-WORK LEGISLATION BEFORE HOUSE ADJOURNS

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Labour. Since it took the government eight weeks to find out through Judge Gold that the dock strike is illegal and since you are waiting until this afternoon for the decision—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should address his question to the Chair.

Mr. Rock: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister of Labour is waiting until this afternoon for a decision by the meeting of the dock workers, would the government consider introducing back-to-work legislation immediately before adjournment of the House, in order that Parliament will not have to be recalled for this purpose?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question clearly has to be no. Surely it is not desirable. This House would not wish to be in the position of being called upon to pass legislation to order men back to work on the ground that they are breaking the law, because the law already requires that they go back to work. Legislation to require Canadians to do that which is already required by the law does not seem to me to be appropriate at this time.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister, if at the meeting this afternoon the longshoremen decide to refuse to go back to work, what does Parliament intend to do?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Témiscamingue on a supplementary.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Labour.

He has just stated that the law requires them to go back to work. Undeniably, the person mainly responsible for the situation is the president of the union, Mr. St-Onge. Is it not the minister's opinion that the government should teach Mr. St-Onge that the Canadian government is more important than the president of the union.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That, in my view, is an argument. I do not believe the question as worded is in order.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JUDGMENT ASSERTING RIGHT OF ACCUSED TO CONSULT COUNSEL BEFORE BREATHALYZER TEST FOR IMPAIRED DRIVING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. I assume he has now had a chance to read the reasons for judgment in the case of Regina v. Brownridge dealing with an impaired driving charge and refusal to take a breathalyzer test. In light of that judgment I suppose the minister has had a discussion with other distinguished lawyers in the cabinet. Can the minister now indicate whether it is the intention of the government to bring back in legislation to nullify the effect of the judgment, or does the government accept the decision of the Supreme Court?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is no present intention to undertake legislation. The practical matter, I think, is that it is important to have working enforcement in connection with drinking drivers, and the breathalyzer is extremely useful in that regard. I do not at the present time see any inconsistency between that and the decision of the Supreme Court in terms of the ability to contact counsel in certain circumstances. A careful reading of the judgment indicates, I think, the court's concern that this should not interfere with the ordinary taking of breathalyzer tests. The only case I can see for further legislation is if there is uncertainty about the extent of the right and the period of time which could be taken up in consultation with counsel.

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF SECTION OF CRIMINAL CODE PROVIDING FOR FURNISHING OF BREATH SAMPLE TO POTENTIAL ACCUSED

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question deals with a companion judgment which came out at the same time. When does the government intend to proclaim that section of the act, now three years in arrears, regarding the furnishing of a sample to the potential defendant?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Work is continuing on the perfecting of an adequate device to allow such a sample to be taken and furnished. It is our intention to proclaim the section as soon as a reasonable and workable device is available.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REASON FOR DELAY BY KINGSTON CUSTOMS OFFICE IN RELEASE OF MACHINERY PART

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. It is an all too frequent case pertaining to the adverse effect of bureaucratic red tape on industrial enterprise.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Will the hon. member ask his question.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have given the minister notice of this question. Why was the machinery part recently consigned to the Napanee Brick and Tile Works Limited from a firm in West Germany held by the customs office in Kingston for more than two weeks after arrival at great cost and inconvenience to the corporate and local economy?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that normally a question such as this should be put on the order paper or considered at the time of adjournment. Since it is unlikely that we will be here at ten o'clock this evening, perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for bringing this matter to my attention. I have given instructions that it be looked into and I will make a report as soon as I hear from my officials on the matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AGRICULTURE

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST BY PROVINCE FOR REVISION OF DEVELOPMENT PLAN IN LIGHT OF DROP IN FARM INCOME

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Has there been any request from the government of Prince Edward Island to revise the comprehensive development plan operating in that province as it applies to the agricultural segment of the economy in view of the drastic drop in farm net income in that province in 1971 to less than 45 per cent of what it was in 1970?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I will have to check with my officials to see whether we have received a communication from the P.E.I. government.

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—REPRESENTATIONS BY PROVINCIAL MINISTERS CONCERNING UNITED APPROACH TO OVERCOME DECREASE IN FARM INCOME

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has there been any request by some or all of the Ministers of Agriculture of the five eastern provinces of Canada on the subject of the drop in net farm income in 1971 compared with the previous year with a view to a united approach of both levels of government in an attempt to alleviate this serious problem?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there were some discussions about this several months ago when it was clear to us that this was going to be the situation, particularly in the latter part of 1971. There has been a marked improvement in the first part of 1972. I have had some discussions recently so that we can have policies and programs later this year to avoid what happened, for example, in the potato marketing situation.

YOUTH

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM—POSSIBLE EXTENSION TO NON-STUDENTS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Secretary of State, primarily related to the Opportunities for Youth program.

Could the Secretary of State tell us whether the program was created exclusively for students or whether it also applies to unemployed young people in general?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have already had the opportunity to clarify that point in the House. The program's main objective is to provide work for students during the summer vacation, but those in charge of the program were considering inclusion this year of an additional group of non-student young people who, after approval of the projects, will make up some 7 per cent of those availing themselves of the benefits of this program.

MANPOWER

SUGGESTED PROGRAM TO ASSIST PEOPLE AGED 45 TO 65

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

In view of the fact that most elderly people recently received an increase of the old age pension and that many young people will be able to avail themselves of the Opportunities for Youth program, could the hon. minister tell us whether he has considered announcing the creation of a permanent program for the thousands of Canadians aged 45 to 65 who are unable to find jobs?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the government has considered the matter, of course, but it does not come under the jurisdiction of my department and I do not believe I am qualified to reply to the hon. member's question.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—USE BY FORD AND CHRYSLER—POSITION OF GENERAL MOTORS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Chrysler Corporation has now joined the Ford Motor Company in exporting cars under the DISC provisions from the United States to Canada, can the minister inform the House whether or not he has obtained assurances that General Motors Corporation will not so act, or has he simply found out what General Motors intends to do?

• (1130)

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that Ford and Chrysler account for approximately half the production of automobiles in Canada, and as their parent firms are now operating under DISC in clear contravention of the auto pact, is it the minister's view that even if General Motors does not join with them this violation of the pact will result, in effect, in terms of its consequences on unemployment and on trade in the automotive industry, in the abrogation of all the positive effects of the pact that were intended when it was signed?

Mr. Speaker: Order. My interpretation of the hon. member's question is that he is inviting the minister to express an opinion. In those terms the question is scarcely in order.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED INTERFERENCE WITH RIGHTS OF BROADCASTER, ROY JACQUES

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister undertake an inquiry into the case of broadcaster, Roy Jacques, and specifically into the allegation of interference on the part of the Secretary of State and the Minister of State from Calgary South, in violation of the Bill of Rights of Canada in so far as it guarantees freedom of speech and of the press?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I will not. I am satisfied there was no such interference of any sort.

Mr. Hellyer: Will the minister prepare legislation to establish the position of ombudsman reporting directly to Parliament so that citizens opposed to this government would have someone to turn to for the justice they cannot obtain from the government?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—USE OF CUSTOMS PROCEDURES TO ASCERTAIN COMPANIES MAKING USE THEREOF

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce supplementary to one asked earlier. Has he asked for the assistance of his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, in scrutinizing and tabulating all invoices that accompany cars coming into Canada from the United States under the DISC program?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said a week or two ago, which was confirmed by the Minister of National Revenue, that we are looking at a customs procedure by which companies using DISC, or similar direct export subsidies provided by countries other than the United States, would have to indicate that they were doing so through a customs declaration.

Mr. Hales: Do I understand the minister to say that they have not started this tabulation program? In the meantime, what records will be kept?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this has not been set in motion yet.

CANADA-UNITED STATES—INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF DISCUSSIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the questions that have been asked today may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce what is happening with respect to the trade talks between Canada and the United States? Have any steps been taken to resume the trade talks, or is there nothing happening at the moment?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was giving that answer yesterday when we were interrupted by a question from the gallery. If the hon. member will refer to Hansard he will find a very complete answer to his question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LAY-OFF OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEES AT CAMP BOUCHARD—REQUEST FOR DELAY TO SECURE OTHER EMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. It concerns the plight of 120 men, each with over 20 years service, who are about to be laid off today at Camp Bouchard in Montreal. Would the minister use his good offices to see whether or not this lay-off could be delayed until such time as offers of alternative employment could be made to these men, many of whom are veterans and are married?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter and report to the hon. member.

BROADCASTING

CABLEVISION—NATIONAL POLICY—POSITION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES—REVIEW OF MISSISSAUGA CABLEVISION DECISION

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the stated intention of three major provinces, Alberta, Ontario and Quebec, to enter into the cablevision field, can the minister tell the House whether he has been able to negotiate an effective national cablevision policy to take into account provincial interests in this field?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, negotiations, as is well known, have been going on for over a year. I must say that certain results have been achieved, that others are expected and that we have not given up.

[English]

Mr. Nowlan: I have a supplementary question dealing more specifically with the cablevision field. Has the minister proceeded to act on the recommendation from the broadcasting committee on the Mississauga Cablevision decision rendered by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission that the cabinet review that decision, and the direct request by the corporation of Mississauga to the cabinet that it review the decision? Has any action been taken?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: The request of the town of Mississauga has been considered by the government, Mr. Speaker, but it was rejected because the cabinet did not feel there was sufficient reason to warrant asking the CRTC to review or to change that decision.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

POSSIBLE NEW WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the undertaking by the government of Canada to the provincial governments that before any new winter works program is undertaken there will be consultations with them. Can he assure the House that such consultations will take place and, if so, when and in what form will they be conducted? Will they be in the form of a conference, or will there be consultations with individual provinces?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that any undertaking which was given by a minister of this government will be lived up to, in a manner to be announced.

AGRICULTURE

HOG DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS—PROCESSING OF REMAINING APPLICATIONS

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture relating to hog deficiency payments. Inasmuch as many producers have not yet received their hog deficiency payments, and since it is rather difficult to trace the status of the applications, can the minister advise the House when the remaining applications will be processed and, in fact, paid?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give a precise date. I can say that almost all of the applications that were accompanied by original grading certificates have been paid or will be paid by the end of this month. The others will take somewhat longer because we require an audit to make sure there is not duplication of payments. I am sorry that it takes so long to make this investigation but we are obliged to do so.

Mr. Mazankowski: Can the minister advise the House whether there is any mechanism set up to trace applications inasmuch as it is very difficult to find out whether or not applications have been received by the board?

Mr. Olson: There is a mechanism, Mr. Speaker, but unfortunately it is a difficult one to go through rapidly. Until the applications do in fact come up for processing and then are indexed according either to area or in alphabetical order, it is a matter of ploughing through the thousands that are in the pile awaiting processing.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO ISSUANCE OF LISTS OF PERSONS ON TEMPORARY LEAVE WHO ARE SERVING PRISON TERMS FOR VIOLENT CRIMES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. In view of recent unfortunate events, will it be the policy of the government in the future to issue periodically lists of those serving prison terms for rape, murder and other crimes of violence who are from time to time on leave from the prison so that the public can be aware of this and be on the lookout for these dangerous criminals?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if such a policy were to be adopted, it would be necessary to do it also in connection with those who defraud small savers by cheating on the Stock Exchange, by going into fraudulent bankruptcies or by getting hold of companies for illicit trade purposes.

[English]

Mr. Hees: Would the minister not agree that there is a great difference between those serving terms for rape, murder and other violent crimes and those who have defrauded customers in the stock market?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is an argument between the minister and the hon. member.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE TO CANMORE MINES TO MAINTAIN AND DEVELOP MARKET IN VIEW OF EMPLOYEE LAY-OFFS

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce concerning the announced lay-off of two-thirds of the employees at Canmore Mines. Can the minister assure the House that his department will use its influence to ensure that the foreign markets of this company are maintained and that new markets are developed in conjunction with the government if his department is asked to assist in that way?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, we will try to do that. Canmore is actually renegotiating its contract with its Japanese clients. With respect to the international marketing of coal, last year we sent a mission to Europe and this year a European mission is coming to Canada. Sample sales have been made. We will also have a group going to Latin America soon to enhance Canadian exports of coal in that area.

DEVELOPMENT OF EASTERN CANADIAN MARKET FOR WESTERN COAL—MEETING BETWEEN INDUSTRY AND GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Is the minister giving consideration to convening a meeting of industry and government officials in order to attempt to develop an eastern Canadian market for western Canadian coal and to assist the industry generally in long-term aims?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, arrangements are now being completed to meet with western Canadian coal producers during the month of July to discuss both the short-term problems such as Canmore and the long-term problems of the industry. I would anticipate that the issues discussed by my colleague and referred to by the hon. member would come up at that meeting.

REQUEST THAT PRESENT MAINTENANCE SERVICES AT SYDNEY AIRPORT BE RETAINED

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I direct my question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact the minister has asserted on innumerable occasions that his job is to create employment in the Atlantic region of Canada, would he join with the Minister of Transport who is responsible for Air Canada and try to persuade that corporation to retain its present maintenance services at the Sydney airport as the removal of these services will create more unemployment and add to the already burgeoning load in that area?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will surely be glad to discuss that with the Minister of Transport.

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTED GRANTING OF PERMISSION TO UMBERTO PAGAN TO DEPART VOLUNTARILY TO COUNTRY OTHER THAN UNITED STATES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that extradition proceedings against Umberto Pagan which were initiated by the United States have been dismissed by a judge, subject to appeal, will the minister undertake to permit Mr. Pagan to effect his voluntary departure to some country other than the United States so that the extradition proceedings which have failed will not be indirectly enforced?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Pagan arrived in Canada on August 31 on what is alleged to be a false passport and a false birth certificate and was subsequently arrested by the RCMP and ordered deported. His case was referred to the Immigration Appeal Board which upheld the deportation order. I understand that his lawyer has now appealed that decision to the Federal Court, so anything I might say at this moment could prejudice the case. In regard to the extradition charges against Mr. Pagan which were dismissed recently by the courts, I understand that an appeal against that decision will be launched by the Puerto Rican government.

Mr. Brewin: Assuming, however, that the extradition proceedings continue to be dismissed and the appeal is not allowed, will the minister, as I believe is the usual practice, permit Mr. Pagan to effect his voluntary departure?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that the question is hypothetical phrased in those terms, or should be considered to be a representation for the consideration of the minister. The hon. member for Témiscamingue.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, but since he is not here, I will not ask it.

An hon. Member: Come back here, Jean.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants has graciously resumed his seat. Obviously he will allow the Chair to recognize the hon. member for Témiscamingue. I will then go immediately to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Mr. Caouette: I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC AUTHORITIES AND BUSINESSMEN TO ESTABLISH NEW INDUSTRIES IN TEMISCAMING

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Did he recently meet Quebec officials concerning the establishment of new industries in Temiscaming? Has his department been making suggestions to the Quebec government or to businessmen concerning the establishment of industries in Temiscaming?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): I know some meetings were held, Mr. Speaker, and that discussions are continuing. However, I will have to inquire about the latest developments to answer adequately the hon. member's question.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON LOW-INCOME HOUSING

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he arrange to have the Michael Dennis report on low-income housing tabled later this day should this interesting document arrive from the printer as I am informed will indeed be the case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have no knowledge of that, Mr. Speaker, but I shall look into it.

TRANSPORT

ATLANTIC PROVINCES—INQUIRY AS TO MEETING BETWEEN MINISTER AND PREMIERS TO DISCUSS PROBLEMS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister which I would direct to the Minister of Transport if he were here. Possibly the Prime Minister can be of some assistance. Can the Prime Minister inform the House whether an arrangement has been made between the Minister of Transport and the four Atlantic premiers to discuss specific problems in the field of transportation in the Atlantic region?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such meeting but I shall inquire of the minister.

Mr. Coates: When the Prime Minister communicates with the Minister of Transport, will he ask him to make a statement indicating to the transportation industry in the Atlantic provinces and the people affected when such a meeting might be held?

Mr. Trudeau: I shall convey the suggestion of the hon. member to the minister, Mr. Speaker.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

STEPS TO INCREASE SPENDING ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology and is prompted by the report of the Science Council of Canada that spending on national research and development has fallen well below the target of 2 per cent of the gross national product. Can the minister advise what steps he will be taking to improve the situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the minister could reply briefly but the hon. member is inviting the minister to make a rather general statement. The minister will be given the opportunity to make a very brief statement at this time.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I think the implication is that a target of 2 per cent of the GNP was set. To my knowledge there is no such formal target. I think the right way of looking at research and development expenditures is to look at them on an individual basis in support of national policies and national objectives rather than to quantity them by 2 per cent or any other percentage figure.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS—SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS TO ALBERTA BOARD TO PROTECT PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the position taken by the Independent Petroleum Association in representations before the Alberta Energy and Resources Conservation Board to the effect that the price of gas should be set not on the basis of cost of production but rather on what the market will bear, a position which would result in private greed working to the detriment—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is making a statement to the House. Perhaps he might ask the question.

Mr. Saltsman: I am coming to the question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister making representations before the board or does he intend to make representations before the board in order to protect the public interest?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the province of Alberta is the basic owner of these resources and it is within its rights to have this type of hearing and make its own decison about the type of price structure there should be for this as for other commodities. This government will, of course, accept the judgment of the government of Alberta with respect to a commodity such as this which is under the jurisdiction of the province.

Mr. Saltsman: In view of the harm that may be done to the industry and to consumers in general, is the government making any study or giving any consideration to public ownership of the oil and gas industry?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. member that the government has a very extensive stake in Panarctic Oils, but otherwise we are not considering the hon. member's suggestion.

CANADA DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

PURCHASE OF CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT PRICES OF INSULIN AND OTHER PRODUCTS WILL NOT BE INCREASED

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the grave concern over the sale of Connaught Laboratories, made famous by Banting and Best with the discovery of insulin, to the Canada Development Corporation and the fear of many diabetics and others that these famous laboratories will now become the pawn of a profit-making organization, can the minister assure the House that safeguards will be written into the contract to avert price increases in products like insulin, blood products and vaccines, and that research will be continued?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that Connaught Laboratories had been sold to the Canada Development Corporation under duress. I would have thought the laboratory would find it very advantageous to be under the umbrella of the Canada Development Corporation.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NORTHERN NEWFOUNDLAND—PROGRESS ON PROVISION OF TELEVISION FACILITIES IN ISOLATED COMMUNITIES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Can the minister advise what progress is being made in the government's program which was announced many months ago to provide television communication facilities to isolated communities in those parts of the country that do not have them now?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Important progress, Mr. Speaker. The CRTC and the CBC have started consideration and planning of the development of transmitters and production centres which must be established in order to obtain the anticipated results, and the first part of this plan has just been submitted to the government.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to ask a supplementary. I understand the hon. member for Simcoe North had a supplementary which was lost when the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe was recognized. He will be recognized following this supplementary.

Mr. Marshall: Will the minister look into the particular problem of northern Newfoundland as the people there have been waiting many years for a tower to be built to provide them with television facilities? Possibly the minister could reply by letter.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, this question was taken into consideration not too long ago and I think that it will appear among the rather high priority objectives in the expected developments.

INDUSTRY

MUSIC RECORDING—POSSIBILITY OF REPORTED DROP IN CANADIAN PRODUCTION BEING DUE TO UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce relates to an earlier series about export and import problems. Is the minister aware that in spite of the 30 per cent Canadian music content required by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission for recordings played over radio stations in this country, it has recently been reported that Canadian recording production is down by approximately 50 per cent this year? Has the minister had an opportunity to find out anything about this phenomenon?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, but offhand I would say that it is contrary to everything I have read on the subject. However, I will look into the matter.

Mr. Rose: Does the minister have any evidence to come to the conclusion that perhaps United States recording companies with subsidiaries in Canada are cutting production in this country in order to profit from the DISC program in the United States?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the general situation about the effect of DISC on Canadian industry, I have developed a position which is to be found at the top right-hand side of page 2191 of Hansard. At that time I said I would look into any particular situation, and we will look into this one.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister state why nine ministers are openly defying his own roster system and attending the House today when they should not be here? Also, can the Prime Minister say whether this is a hangover from Harrington Lake on Wednesday night?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this will probably be the last day of this Parliament, I graciously gave consent to these ministers to come and see the hung-over members of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bell: Is the Prime Minister not aware that this is the last time these ministers will be here in their present capacities?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA LABOUR CODE

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS, LABOUR RELATIONS BOARD, INDUSTRIAL INQUIRY COMMISSION AND CONCILIATION BOARDS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, June 27, consideration of Bill C-183, to amend the Canada Labour Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

That Bill C-183, to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by deleting lines 33 to 39 on page 3 thereof and by substituting therefor:

"(ii) entitled to receive remuneration for driving the vehicle in addition to and separate from the amount he is paid for providing the vehicle, and"

[Mr. Rose.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, the gist of this motion is to register some concern about the fact that one result of the subclause which defines dependent contractor may be the demise of the independent contractor. This subclause of the bill as presently drafted appears to be the only attempt to differentiate between independent and dependent contractors, and is based on a common purchasing arrangement which does not take into account two distinct situations.

I would like to point out the situations of which I believe the government was not fully aware when drafting this bill which, of course, deals with the owners of trucks or the drivers of trucks, as the case may be. There are two distinct situations. The first is the truck which is owned and operated by a company. The problem arises in the second situation. This is where the same company is employing trucks, owned or leased and operated by persons on a contractual basis. In this regard, we have to ascertain who, in fact, is a dependent contractor and who is an independent contractor. I find no qualms with respect to giving the opportunity to a dependent contractor to become involved with this act but the subclause is drafted in vague generalities.

The purpose of this amendment is to at least clarify the difference between a dependent contractor, who in fact receives remuneration for the operation of his truck plus a further sum for the use of his driver, and an independent contractor who is usually paid one sum, whether it is a flat rate per mile or for the use of the truck in these particular circumstances. Although there is no question about the need for this particular subclause in the definition section, I think it is too broad and we cannot afford the demise of the independent contractor. As a matter of fact, many letters have come to my attention, as well as to the attention of two other members, to the effect that the independent contractor does not like nor does he have the desire to be involved as a driver with drivers of company trucks. One can readily see that a very serious situation can develop when company drivers are involved in union matters or union agencies with independent truckers who drive their own trucks. It is obvious that this can result in some problem.

It has been pointed out to me by the independent contractor that he negotiates his own contract, owns and drives his own trucks, arranges his own maintenance, his hours of work are arranged to suit the operation of the truck and the hours of work, the working conditions and the earnings are not related to carrier-owned trucks or drivers. What I am seeking to do is to clear up cases which involve a contractor working under a contract which entitles him to receive remuneration for driving a vehicle in addition to an amount paid for providing a vehicle. The clause as presently drafted is not clear on this point; it covers common carriers and other employees. The amendment seeks to clarify a complex clause.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): This subject has been examined again by officials of my department. I have looked at it as well. I appreciate the hon. member having raised it previously in committee where a discussion took place, and again here this morning. He says he sees no difficulty about the provision in principle, but finds it too sweeping and inclusive. On the other side, we think the definition proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is unduly restrictive. On balance, therefore, I would ask him to accept the best judgment of those familiar with the industry in my department and allow the definition to stand. If we followed the line he is suggesting, it would cover a very small category in our view.

The key to the definition is not really the question of remuneration but the use of the vehicle. If the vehicle is governed by a contract, that is the determining factor, not the manner in which remuneration is received. Undoubtedly, if the labour relations board were asked to determine whether such and such a person was an employee under the terms of this act, that is to say, a dependent contractor, the question would revolve around the use of the vehicle in terms of the contract. It would involve, also, the entitlement of the owner or operator to retain whatever amount was left over after expenses. That amount might, in the ordinary course, be thought of as remuneration but it could be a broader concept. I hope the House will allow us to retain the definition as it now stands.

Mr. Alexander: Are we not placing ourselves in the position in which an independent contractor will be unduly affected by the definition section? In other words, will he not be associated for bargaining purposes, or when applications are made for union certification, with the drivers of a common carrier? Is this not the problem? Should there not be some concern in this regard?

Mr. O'Connell: I do not share that concern. If a man is truly an independent contractor and can use his vehicle as he determines, the question of remuneration is not the governing one. I cannot see how a truly independent contractor would be pulled into a collective agreement or into a bargaining unit. The issue would hinge on the use of the vehicle as determined by the contractor.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion No.2 (Mr. Alexander) negatived on division.

Mr. Mark Rose (for Mr. Barnett) moved:

That Bill C-183, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by deleting from Clause 1, lines 1 to 8 at page 4, and substituting therefor the following:

"(b) a fisherman who is engaged in commercial fishing and accepting or receiving payment, according to the volume and price of fish caught and delivered, from a commercial buyer of fish, whether such fisherman (i) owns and operates his own fishing vessel, provided he as master-owner of a fishing vessel does not employ or engage more than two additional fishermen who share in the proceeds of the fishing voyages, or (ii) shares in the operation of a fishing vessel owned by another person and receives in payment for his services a share or portion of the proceeds of the fishing voyages, or (iii) operates a fishing vessel owned by another person under a rental agreement or conditional sales agreement or any other form of oral or written agreement, or (iv) receives wages for all or part of his employment on a fishing vessel or in fitting out a fishing vessel on which he will be employed."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am speaking on behalf of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni in whose name this motion stands. I regret that my hon. friend is not here. He has been very diligent in pursuing this whole question during committee hearings. He has concerned himself with the representations we have heard from the Fishermen's Union and other groups interested in this matter.

It is an important matter to me because a great many fishermen reside in my constituency. Unfortunately however there are far fewer fishermen there now than there were before the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) introduced his new licensing regulations. But that is another question.

• (1210)

A look at the motion reveals the nub of the issue in this case, which is whether or not fishermen can be regarded not as part of some shared venture but as employees for the purpose of this legislation. This question is extremely important to the fishermen. Their national annual income is not very high. It is true many of them work on a share basis, but in many instances they have no alternative. A great number of fishermen are not adequately represented by a union and because of this are forced to work under appalling dangerous conditions at not very remunerative rates at the behest of the large, well-organized, vertically integrated fishing companies. We all know what vertical integration implies. In my view these fishermen are in no way part of a shared venture; they are in fact, employees. The bait—if I may use a fishing term—that is dangled before them in terms of shares is acceptable to them only because up until now for many there has been no reasonable alternative.

During the hearings of the standing committee I was most impressed with the representations made by the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union, and I should like to quote what one witness, Mr. Homer Stevens had to say, as found at page 10:49 of volume 10 of the committee proceedings:

We believe all fishermen, whether they are working aboard vessels owned or operated by fishing companies that are vertically integrated to the point where they own and operate the plants as well as the boats, whether they are employed on vessels owned by other fishermen who deliver under various forms of contract to those same companies or whether fishermen are employed on their own one-man or possibly two-man boats operated in a partnership in which they either own the vessel or are attempting to own it under various kinds of contracts, mortgage contracts or conditional sales agreements—all these should be covered under the new legislation so that the right to bargain collectively would be there to provide equal opportunity to them as with other employees and in order to have their unions certified under the law. This would remove the courts as they are now in the role of sole supreme arbitrator with the power to classify fishermen's unions as illegal conspiracies or during strikes, to state that fishermen are not on strike, that since there is no employer-employee relationship, in their opinion, they are nothing more than illegal conspiracies in defiance of various parts of the common law, with the end result being that fishermen who are attempting to improve their conditions of life, their job opportunities, earnings and so on can find themselves faced with heavy fines, goal sentences, damage suits and all the attendant legal expenses arising out of appeals on that kind of case.

I recognize that exists some doubt whether or not this amendment is constitutionally sound. There are various legal opinions on this and the department, through Mr. Mitchell, expressed one opinion. Various consultations with lawyers held privately by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and others indicated that the constitutional question is not closed at all. The kind of thing envisioned by this amendment would do a great deal to enhance the security and the income of fishermen on both coasts and I think it should be tried.

I think it is well recognized that special provisions are made for fishermen under the unemployment insurance legislation. The reason is that, for the purposes of that legislation, fishermen are recognized as employees not as co-adventurers at all. I do not want to make a long speech on this subject since a great many words have already been said on it already. However, the evidence upholds the validity of UFAWU's argument, and I do not understand why the government tends to be reluctant to embrace this requested definition of an "employee" concept, unless it is because the government is unduly influenced by a strong lobby by the various wealthy fishing companies, though we do not need to use the fingers of both hands to count them since the number in this country is very small and is decreasing.

The position of these companies is virtually one of monopoly, of vertical integration. Therefore, I urge the minister in the strongest terms at my disposal to recognize the rights of these people as employees and to accept the motion.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose), who is not only giving his own views but those of his colleague from Comox-Alberni. The views of his colleague were very ably and extensively presented to the standing committee. I met at least twice with delegations from the United Fishermen and Allied Workers' Union and I received representations from the Fisheries Council of British Columbia. In addition, I have had representations from my colleagues on this side of the House, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour (Mr. Perrault) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Goode).

There is a very high degree of interest in this question and I have publicly stated I am not unsympathetic to it. In fact, at one point I went further than perhaps I should when I said I thought the fishermen had an unassailable case. But sympathy for a cause does not necessarily make it legal to go further than we are proposing to go. There is no question that the modes of work in the fishing industry are quite varied. Where employees on fishing vessels work for the owner, the situation is clear cut. We have gone beyond that and made available the benefits of the Labour Code to those who share the cash return, those who are co-adventurers, and this is a significant step forward. However, it still leaves out that group of fishermen who would undoubtedly benefit, as in my view the industry would benefit, from their inclusion in collective bargaining arrangements.

I cannot bring myself to ask this House to pass a provision which, according to the best legal advice that I have been able to get, would be ultra vires the powers of Parliament. We have therefore defined "employee" in such a way as to make available collective bargaining for more members of the fishing industry than has hitherto been the case. We believe that this is within our constitutional jurisdiction.

Although we are sympathetic to, and concerned for, this other group, I cannot ask the House to lead us into an area which in the present circumstances we think would be unconstitutional. There was a very extensive and useful discussion in the standing committee which is on the record, but I must ask my colleagues to let us proceed with the present definition, and to hope that as a result of provincial and federal activity in the future collective bargaining will in fact reach all of the members of this industry.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise to see whether even at this late date I can persuade the minister to ignore the bureaucratic legal advice that he has received and to look at this proposition more favourably. I address myself to him in what I hope is a co-operative plea that he reconsider his position. Let me put this to him. What he has done in the amendment he has proposed is to define the word "employee" as something beyond what an employee is under the common law. He has already taken the legal step which, in effect is that even where there is no employer-employee relationship as recognized in the ordinary law, such people can still come within the scope of the act.

If I may, I assure the minister that what I say is a correct statement because under various labour relations acts in this country, not only the federal act but also the Nova Scotia act, there have been cases before the courts where this has been decided. Without having had time to make a search, I can recall what I always have known as the Lunenburg case in which the courts of Nova Scotia held that co-adventurers such as are described in the amendment the minister has proposed to the bill are not employees. Because they are not employees under the common law, they cannot be considered to be employees under the Nova Scotia Labour Relations Act.

Clearly what the minister has done in the amendment he has proposed with regard to co-adventurers in the fishing industry has been to say in effect that, notwithstanding the fact that these people are not employees in the ordinary legal sense of the word, they are to be recognized as employees for the purpose of this act. I think that is a correct statement of what he has done. They are not employees and the courts have held that. That is not my statement, the courts have held that in the Lunenburg case and in others. They have held that co-adventurers are not employees in the ordinary common law sense of the word. I repeat that what the minister is saying in this proposed law is that although fishermen who share the catch and are co-adventurers in their fishing trip are not employees ordinarily under the law, he makes them employees for the purpose of this act. This is clearly within the powers of the legislature.

What the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and the United Fishermen's Union say to the minister is simply this, and I ask him to consider it in this light because, with great respect, I think he has misled himself: You are recognizing that a co-adventuring relationship will be an employee relationship for the purpose of this act. We are saying to you that this only covers a small or large proportion and I really do not know which, of those engaged in the fishing business. There are other situations such as a fishing vessel with an arrangement with a commercial buyer. The commercial buyer will buy all the fish caught by that vessel and the remuneration to the fishermen engaged in the catching will depend on a division of the spoils, and they are usually pretty darn small, which they get from the commercial buyer. That is really what this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni says.

The hon. member suggests four ways in which this may come about, and the minister could have changed the language to avoid some of the traps he thinks are there, but essentially what we are saying to the minister is that there is a large number of fishermen who are not co-adventurers in the sense in which he describes them in his amendment to the law, but are co-adventurers in another sense. At the request of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni I read the minutes of the parliamentary committee and the discussion between the member and Mr. Mitchell from the minister's department. As a lawyer as well as Member of Parliament, I am really at a loss to understand the basis of Mr. Mitchell's argument. Surely, the situation is this. The entire labour code is applicable only to those areas of activity which come under federal jurisdiction. Anything that is in the labour code which goes beyond that is therefore ultra vires. It is still understood in the law in the many cases that have come before the courts that our federal Labour Code, under its previous name as well as its present name, applies only to industrial activities or operations, whatever you want to call them, which come under federal jurisdiction.

That is how the minister is saddled with the longshoremen's problem in Montreal. Some years ago there were cases before the courts in which stevedoring companies took the position that all the activities connected with stevedoring that take place as they do in Toronto, Montreal, Trois-Rivières or Quebec, come under provincial jurisdiction. I forget the name of the case, but it is there and the minister's advisers can find it. That case went to the Supreme Court of Canada which held that in view of the specific provisions in Section 91 of the British North America act, making shipping and related matters federal, all the operations which relate to or are connected with shipping operations come under federal jurisdiction. That is how the poor minister is now loaded with the problems of the longshoremen. There was an argument as to whether it came under federal jurisdiction and the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that since it was connected with an operation which was specifically under a heading in Section 91 of the BNA Act, it was federal. I say to him that fishing is under a specific heading, I forget which one, in Section 91 of the BNA Act. Therefore, if he accepts this amendment he would be in no different position from the one he would be in as a result of the amendment he has proposed.

I cannot understand the legal argument that was made because the amendment he proposed will be constitutional only to the extent it is held that co-adventuring operations in which fishermen participate come under federal jurisdiction. In the same way, the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni would be constitutional to the extent that the operations of fishermen there defined come under federal jurisdiction. What in heaven's name is the difficulty?

The minister cannot now decide whether these operations will come under provincial or federal jurisdiction. I say to him in all kindness that it is impossible for Mr. Mitchell or anyone else to make that decision, because that decision can only be made by the courts after they have heard the facts of the case, after they have had before them all the facts of the relationship regarding the operation and the facts regarding the way in which the fishing is done. That is the only way a decision can be made. It cannot be made in the abstract, and I am surprised that the legal advisers are trying to make it in that way.

Let me repeat again my plea that the minister reconsider, because I am bold enough to suggest that the legal advice he has given needs at least a second look. The legal principle is not different as between the amendment he proposed and the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni. As far as the legal principle is concerned there is no difference. Either both of them are unconstitutional or both are constitutional, and I think they are the latter. They are constitutional only to the extent that a court would hold the operations being carried on are operations under federal jurisdiction because of the presence of fishing under a specific heading in Section 91 of the BNA Act.

It is really just as simple as that at this stage. It may be very complicated later if a buyer of fish, for example, challenges it and goes to court. That may be a complicated case, but I suggest to the minister, and I am putting it strongly, that it is wrong for him to decide in the abstract now that his hands are tied. There are many things which have been passed by Parliament and by our legislatures which have gone to the courts and which the courts have said are ultra viries. This would not be the first time that has been done. That result has come about following some legislation. I do not think the minister is right in deciding that in this case he will make this decision now concerning its constitutionality, instead of taking the position that he wants to extend this law to the fishermen of Canada so that they may have advantage of the Labour Code and collective bargaining. He should extend it within the parameter of the constitutional provisions and let the courts decide on that parameter as no doubt they would do.

The merchants of fishing are a pretty tough lot and they may take the matter to court. It may be that the minister's argument will lose. We do not guarantee that it will win. However, I suggest the minister really is being misled in his view in deciding that he cannot now have this House pass this amendment, because I am confident in my own mind that in some areas this amendment would stand up as valid, just as I think there are possibly other areas in which the amendment would not stand up as valid. That would depend entirely on the decision of the courts. I repeat that the minister cannot make that decision when he does not have the facts. That decision can be made only on the facts of each case and to make that decision in abstract is a disservice to the fishermen. He cannot, in my opinion get away with dealing with some of them and not dealing with the others. In legal principle, both are in the same boat if I may put it that way. I earnestly appeal to the minister and say to him that I believe this is an important matter for the fishermen.

Since the minister has agreed to take a partial step, he ought to take the complete step and not be, as the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) would put it, pusillanimous about it. He should take a chance and let the courts decide. If the courts should knock him down, he would not be the first minister to be knocked down by the courts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The minister has spoken. If there is consent of the House, the minister may speak again. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I listened with a great deal of interest to the line of argument presented by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). I think I will have to resist any temptation to enter into a legal debate with such a distinguished lawyer and counsel. First, may I say that I am satisfied with the advice I have had from my officials and with my own study of the situation. Perhaps I ought to enter into a little of the legal argument which has been presented. I do not wish to provoke any further argument, but I feel it is necessary at least to show the hon. member some of the grounds for the position in which I find myself.

It is true that the proposal in the bill before us may indeed be tested in the court. I am confident it will be upheld. I am equally confident at this point of time that to move beyond the position we are now in would be to tempt the fates, and might indeed jeopardize the step we are already prepared to take into an area which may not be absolutely clear constitutionally but which, in my view, will stand up constitutionally when tested but which might fall down constitutionally if it over-reached itself. We are in the position of I believe, Macbeth, of whom it was said, vaulted ambition over-leaped itself and fell on the other side. I do not want to be in that position. I do not want to place the House of Commons in the position where the courts would say it has over-leaped itself. I say that for this reason.

It is true that section 91 brings fishing under federal jurisdiction. The bill before us, however, is concerned with employers and employees who happen to be in the fishing industry, but we have to find an employer—

Mr. Lewis: No.

Mr. O'Connell: —if we have a fisherman, who is employing that man. This labour bill is about collective bargaining between employers and employees.

Mr. Lewis: Who is the employer or co-adventurer?

Mr. O'Connell: I am asked who is the employer or co-adventurer. We think we can discern an employer who is the owner of the boat, or the other persons can be deemed to be employees of an employer among themselves. But the employer is not a fishing company on shore.

Mr. Lewis: That is legal nonsense, for heaven's sake.

Mr. O'Connell: The hon. member says that is legal nonsense. He will soon be leading me into a legal debate, and I have said that I do not wish to co-adventure with him in that boat. I would merely state that we feel the step we are taking will stand up and that the next step would take us into an area where we could not find an employer under federal jurisdiction but would find somebody on the shore, perhaps a fishing company which is a processor not within our jurisdiction. I think there is a difference between the two positions advanced. I should like to accede to the very cogent case put forward by the hon. member for York South, but I must persist—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In being wrong.

Mr. O'Connell: —in being not pusillanimous, whatever the word is. I hope the bill as it is will be supported.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what that bad word is either, but if it means pussyfooting around, the minister sure is doing that. The minister rose to explain why he does not intend to accept this amendment. I certainly do not intend to become involved in the argument because fishermen are rather scarce in my area. What really bothers me about much of this legislation, however, is that the minister obviously is not able to change his mind because his officials have decided that is the way it is to be.

Mr. O'Connell: That is not so.

Mr. Peters: I am sure it is. This minister is considered to be one of the smart ministers in this House, a man who can make up his own mind. He heard a very good argument. I do not think he disagreed with it but decided that it did not meet the views of his officials. He sounded more like Paul Martin than a bright young cabinet minister in 1972.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): His name is Martin.

Mr. Peters: It seems to me the whole situation has changed, particularly in respect of western fishing. I have listened to the argument of Homer Stevens for many years now. It seems to me that as a result of the license changes and the assistance we have given in terms of developing very large canneries on the west coast, where we have in effect amalgamated all the facilities, we have made it impossible for most fishermen to own their own boats. We have amalgamated them into what the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) would call a more viable industry. We have made so many changes that the people who are engaged in the fishing industry on the west coast are having considerable difficulty in labour relations or in understanding whether or not the fact that they are fishing from the boat means that they are employees of the man who owns the boat, employees of the man who buys the fish or, as the minister said, co-adventurers.

I know nothing about the law but I think it is not my job as a legislator, and I suggest it is not the job of the Minister of Labour as a legislator, to decide whether or not the Supreme Court, under a given circumstance would make a favourable decision. But I do suggest that we have an obligation to meet the condition as we see it today, and to draft legislation that will solve that problem. So far as I am concerned if the Supreme Court decides that we were wrong, then we have an obligation to come before Parliament again and change the legislation to accomplish what we wanted to do in the first place. If the Supreme Court says that it must be done in another way, we should pass amending legislation.

The role of the legislator is to solve the problems of the people whom he represents, and in this case those who are engaged in the fishing industry are in serious difficulty. They are in a totally unique industry in which the Unemployment Insurance Commission has had to make all kinds of exceptions. There are other industries in the same position, but it seems to me that until cabinet ministers decide, after hearing the advice, that they know the problem, until they make up their minds to introduce legislation that will solve the particular problems affecting the Canadian people without always looking with one eye at the civil servants, who obviously feel that they would be in a bad position if they recommended any course which would not be upheld by the Supreme Court, we have to press the Supreme Court to make decisions. If the Supreme Court is the viable body that it must be in making final judgments it will also look at modern, up-to-date conditions rather than attempt to interpret the legislation in a cold and distant way. I suggest that we should press the Supreme Court to make decisions and in this way our constitution will be viable and up-to-date.

If the minister will not even introduce legislation that will enable the Supreme Court to make a favourable decision, then he is less than responsible and certainly not very adventurous.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I realize that I have already spoken but may I, through you, ask for consent to take two or three more minutes?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) have consent to make additional remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: I just want to address myself again to the legal point which the minister raised. It is the advice which he received that makes me so upset about the decision he made. If Mr. Mitchell or any of the minister's other advisors are in the gallery, I hope they will forgive me for speaking frankly, as I do. What the minister has said, and what the argument of Mr. Mitchell was as I read it in the committee's proceeding, is that they are probably dealing with a person, using "person" in a legal sense, namely a company, that does no more than purchase and sell the fish or does no more than process the fish. What right has the minister or his advisers to make that decision? If those are the facts in a particular case, if the company in fact has nothing to do with the fishing operation, then there may be constitutional difficulties, although I would not be certain of it even in that case. But in the modern fishing industry and in other industries as well, those are not always the facts. A company that purchases or processes is often very likely to have made some kind of capital advance to the owner of the vessel or may even own the vessel or may have some kind of business arrangement with the people who operate the vessel.

There are all sorts of sets of facts that may come before the Court. We are dealing in this case, as in many other cases, with an integrated industry, and frequently the buyer and the processor have an interest in the fishing operation in one form or another. For all the minister knows, he may find cases, and I have read about them in the law books when I practiced labour law, where the company has the authority to decide who will be master of the vessel and to decide who will be hired to operate the vessel. I say to the minister that these things are not simple. They are complex sets of facts, and I can visualize a situation where it would be possible to persuade the court that the particular set of facts in that situation, the involvement of the purchaser and the processor in the fishing operation, is such as to make him a fishing employer for the purpose of this act.

This is the situation, and the minister is really running away from his responsibility by taking the advice which he has been given on the basis that this is a simple factual situation. Well, it ain't, Mr. Speaker, if I may use that well known Oxonian term. These things are not like that at all. In labour relations, with regard to the constitutional problem, there have been cases which have turned on the facts of the case, cases which may appear to the minister or to me to be very similar which have gone in the other direction because of facts which were brought before the court. I say to the minister that there is nothing in the situation that would justify his acceptance of the advice which he has been given, there is nothing that would justify his assumption of facts which have not been tested, and I think that his duty is to enable all the fishermen to come under the Labour Code now that he has taken that step. I congratulate him for taking it. I am very pleased that he has done so, and so is the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) and all my other colleagues.

I suggest to the minister that it is his duty to take this step and to let each case depend on its facts. The courts will decide. There is nothing humbling or humiliating about this Parliament saying that we want the fishermen covered by this law and then finding that in some cases the courts say they are not covered by this law because the law to that extent is invalid. To assume that a particular company carries on certain operations and therefore cannot possibly be involved in the fishing operation is a false assumption; it is just not factual. The facts will be the basis of any court decision, and the minister should not make the decision without giving the court a chance, and without giving the fishermen a chance, to fight their case in court. Let them go to court and fight the case. It will not be up to the minister to fight it. In any problem like that, even though the constitutional argument may be involved, it is not necessarily the Attorney General of Canada or of a province who is involved because they are usually given notice so they can be there if they want to, but it is not necessarily they who carry the case. In this case it will be the fishermen and the alleged employer who will carry the case. I do not think the minister should take from the fishermen the opportunity to fight their cases through the courts. Some cases they will lose and some they will win, and those that they win will be very important for the people involved.

• (1250)

Again, I appeal to the minister not to rest on the advice he has received. Since we are almost at one o'clock, and if the minister is ready to reconsider, we might call it one o'clock to give him another opportunity to discuss it with his advisers. But if he is not ready to reconsider it, what can one do?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

That Bill C-183, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by deleting lines 15 to 22 on page 4 thereof and substituting therefor:

"employee" means any person employed by an employer and includes a dependent contractor and a private constable, but does not include a manager or supervisor or any other person who, in the opinion of the Board, performs management functions or is employed in a confidential capacity in matters relating to industrial relations;"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. The motion is negatived on division.

Motion No. 5 (Mr. Alexander) negatived.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

That Bill C-183, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by deleting line 44 on page 35 thereof and substituting therefor:

"logical change, or"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the please of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I have a suggestion to make at this particular time. Since some government members have an interest in this motion, and have indicated that they want time to look into the matter further, in order to acquiesce in their suggestion I would call it one o'clock, if I may.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will put the matter so that hon. members may indicate to the Chair whether they are in agreement. Is there agreement to call it one o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no consent.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of those who said no on the government side, I would like to say that the suggestion I put forward came to me from the government side, and in order to co-operate I was prepared to do that.

Mr. O'Connell: Let us try it again.

Mr. Alexander: I think it is extremely unfair. Some members really do not know what is going on. They have holidays on their minds, and from force of habit stand up and say no.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They did not even stand up to say it.

Mr. Alexander: They did not have the courtesy to stand up so that at least they could be recognized. I am sick and tired of that type of pussyfooting. The only thing I was trying to do was bring some sense of responsibility to the House. I repeat that the suggestion was made to me by a government member. I do not want to single out any particular government member; I don't think that would be fair, but it came from one in high authority. It was he who came over and asked me if I would defer this particular motion. I might say that it was the Minister of State from Calgary who voiced one very loud no. Now that he knows what the situation is, perhaps the suggestion could be put once again.

Mr. Mahoney: Mr. Speaker, if it is the wish of the hon. member to stand the motion, perhaps he could ask consent of the House to stand it.

Mr. Alexander: No, that is not the point.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, during the course of this discussion we have come so close to one o'clock that I think we would be prepared to call it one o'clock and rise.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there agreement of hon. members that I call it one o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order, please. When the House rose at one o'clock we were about to consider Motion No. 6.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the more interesting sections in the entire bill. First, we would be faced with a situation that we did not have to be concerned about in the present labour bill inasmuch as we have brought into play the results of technological change and its effects upon employer and employee.

I should like to say that notwithstanding what we may do regarding the bill presently before us management and labour, particularly labour leaders, must realize that it is important and necessary for them to have at least three criteria in order to save the whole collective bargaining process. I shall elaborate on them in this way.

First, we cannot continue to have the collective bargaining process involved with confrontation rather than negotiation. It is necessary that the parties realize that the third party involved in the collective bargaining agreement, that is the Canadian public, is becoming very involved in them even though it does not sit at the bargaining table. It is, therefore, incumbent upon labour and management to bargain in good faith and this should be one of the foundations of the whole system. At the present time I do not think that employers and labour leaders are bargaining in good faith.

The second criteria to be met is that the two parties should approach the bargaining table from flexible positions. We will never get anywhere unless they do.

The third criteria would provide for full disclosure. There is no point in going to the bargaining table unless all the facts are put on the table so that solutions can be arrived at which will benefit the employee, the employer and, more important, the third party.

When this bill was first introduced as Bill C-253, there was a great furor and cries of dismay and despair. And rightly so, Mr. Speaker, because in the first place, there were no escape clauses. There was no way for management and labour to decide by themselves whether they could reach the type of agreement that this bill calls for in terms of the effect of technological change, so in its wisdom the government introduced another bill. And this is where we come in now, Mr. Speaker, at clause 149, which I refer to as the escape section.

There are three instances, and I shall not elaborate upon them, in which the parties would not have to rely on clauses 150, 152 and 153, which are the basic clauses dealing with technological change, if, first, notice is given prior to entering into a particular collective agreement. The second escape clause is, of course, 149(2)(b), which reads:

> the collective agreement contains provisions that specify procedures by which any matters that relate to terms and conditions or security of employment likely to be affected by a technological change may be negotiated and finally settled during the term of the agreement;

As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, there was some question whether these two clauses were disjunctive. We now know that is so and we have two escape provisions so far. The third escape provision is the one referred to in clause 149(2)(c) which reads as follows:

> the collective agreement contains provisions that
> (i) are intended to assist employees affected by any technological change to adjust to the effects of the technological change; and
> (ii) specify that sections 150, 152 and 153 do not apply, during the term of the collective agreement, to the employer and the bargaining agent.

What concerns me, and this is the gist of my motion, is that subclause (c) is not just junk. I pose this question because it seems that within subclause (2)(c) you have some groundwork whereby if the parties in the collective agreement can bring about some formulae which are intended to assist employers affected by technological change to adjust to the technological change, that should stand by itself and rightly so. If two parties can sit down and say this is what we will have in our agreement in order to show an intention of what labour and management desire in terms of the effects of technological change, why can it not stand by itself? The government says no, we cannot do it that way; we have to bring in the words "and acquire a waiver".

This is the part that not only bothers me, but many on this side of the House as well as many on the other side of the House. The government says you can make such an agreement, but at the same time you must acquire a waiver. In this regard, a waiver of the provisions of clauses 150, 152 and 153 is a further burden on the negotiating process inasmuch as management will have to attempt to buy that labour in order for it to have any meaningful contract in the long run. On the other hand, as it has been explained to me, the union will in turn have to go back to its membership and say, before we can enter into an agreement under this particular section, we must get your permission to exclude a waiver of something which is legally yours. This places the union in a very peculiar situation, a situation which they do not accept nor want.

Why can the second portion of subclause (c) not stand by itself? In other words, instead of having the word "and", why can it not read, "or specify that clauses 150, 152 and 153 do not apply". What is wrong with leaving that decision to labour and management? Surely they can, through any means which they can conceive and devise, say they will agree to this; we do not have to worry about the technological change because we know what is going to happen; we can guarantee security, jobs or anything that affects the employee without having to go into the act. It should be their right to say that they can opt out of the technological change sections of this bill.

There are a lot of reasons for asking the government why they are now imposing this particular section on labour and management when, in effect, technological change and its effects should be something that is settled around the bargaining table. There is a great concern in management. I could read off many other points of concern, but I do not want to waste the time of the House. They are afraid of harrassment. They are worried that there will be more negotiations, more strikes, unnecessary government interference, as they call it, double jeopardy, planning difficulty and disclosure of the technological change. They have every right to be concerned. The concern would be minimized if we could be assured that labour and management would approach the bargaining table in good faith, with flexible positions and make full disclosure. I am trying to arrive at industrial peace. That calls for the opportunity of the parties opting out of the technological change section. It is not a difficult argument to follow. It just depends on whether the government believes there is some merit in this type of argument.

I am concerned about the technological section. If we relate our thoughts to the present situation of a Montreal port strike, we have a labour bill, a collective agreement, an arbitrator who has handed down a decision, union leadership and the wishes of Parliament as expressed through the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) all being ignored. Even if we pass this bill, it probably will not have any effect because of the attitude that some union leaders have taken that they are expressing the wishes and desires of the whole trade union movement. I disagree with this. There is one thing we have to be concerned about, and that is the public interest.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: The public interest must prevail no matter what the two parties may be thinking or may conclude. As Parliamentarians, it is our job to step in when the public interest is being adversely affected. Certainly, the collective bargaining process is the best process so far, but we have to question it at this time because it is not working. What I am trying to do with my amendment is make it work because with the imposition of the technological change section and the resultant ultimate need to reopen a contract that has already been duly signed, there is a great fear. If no agreement can be reached, there will be a strike. This is what many people fear. The Canadian people would be concerned if they knew that that is the principle behind this bill.

The polls are giving us some indication that governments must be responsible. I am not talking only about this government. I do not intend to be partisan this afternoon. I have a charitable spot in my heart because I hope we are going home. Here is an opportunity to show that we are bringing in an innovation, something that has never happened before, whereby a collective agreement which has been duly signed can be reopened if there is a disagreement and the possibility of a strike. This is what many people are concerned about in 1972.

All I am trying to do is look at the situation and throw in another escape clause. I think the parties are entitled to it. When two parties come to an agreement, they can say this is what we intend to do if technological changes affect a significant number of people within any organization. They make their decision and the contract is closed. On the other hand, if the union and labour can make some arrangement whereby they can maintain the security that employees are rightly seeking without having any recourse to this bill, why can they not do that? That is what I am talking about. This clause, together with clauses 150, 151, 152 are the clauses of the bill on which the most emphasis has been placed.

There is some talk about the balance of power. I do not know who, in fact, has the balance of power, but I do not want to talk about that. I want to talk about what is good for the Canadian people. This bill can only be good for the Canadian people if there are enough escape clauses in it in order that the true collective bargaining process can be left to those who are directly involved. We cannot sit idly by and hope things will get better. There are indications right now that things are not going well with the collective bargaining process. Here is an ideal opportunity to relieve some of the fears of both management and labour. The clause will work much better, if amended, because there will be more avenues through which to proceed. If better prospects for industrial peace are what we want, I respectfully suggest that hon. members give this motion profound thought.

We cannot afford industrial strife and subsequent strikes leading only to unemployment and lost markets. Right now there is a strike in progress which is costing Montreal, I have heard, $1 million a day. And that is only an estimate for Montreal itself. Heaven knows what it is costing the Province of Quebec or, indirectly, the Province of Ontario, the rest of Canada and western Canada in particular through its affect on the grain trade. It is bound to be an astronomical figure. With these things in mind we should attempt to amend the bill so that its shortcomings are corrected to some extent. This is all I am asking—that sub-clause (c) should use the word "but", making it disjunctive, rather than the word "and" whose presence would result in a most complicated process being followed.

You see, Mr. Speaker, the unions will not ask for a waiver. They could not get one, because their membership would not agree. So they will rely upon subclause (b) or upon subclause (a). Thus, instead of having three options available the number of options will in practice be reduced to two. I am trying to ensure that there will be all three as intended by the minister. Why should the unions ask for a waiver? Why should they ask to be relieved of their rights? Unless the disjunctive word "but" is introduced, the subclause will not work. All I am trying to do is to get some sense into this bill and have a clause which would have some chance of working.

I have attempted, to the best of my ability, to present the motion and explain the reasoning behind it. I now hope that hon. members, after some debate, will accept the proposition I have put before them and vote in its favour.

Mr. Charles H. Thomas (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words in support of the proposition which the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) has so eloquently placed before the House. This is probably the most important motion before us today.

As my hon. friend has said, industrial relations at the present time could be a great deal better than they are. The general public is dissatisfied with the way in which collective bargaining is working. They fear their interests are being completely overlooked in the course of the continuing battle between management and labour. One would have thought that at a time like this, in the course of the critical situation facing the Port of Montreal, any government would hesitate before doing anything which might in any way heighten the tension which exists between the two parties to a labour dispute. One might think that any government worthy of the name would be solely concerned about bringing in legislation which would lessen the tension between the two parties to a dispute, that it would introduce changes to the Labour Code designed to lessen mistrust and antagonism between the parties involved.

Reading the preamble to this bill one receives the impression that the government did intend to do something to improve industrial relations. The last paragraph reads:

> And whereas the Parliament of Canada desires to continue and extend its support to labour and management in their co-operative efforts to develop good relations and constructive collective bargaining practices, and deems the development of good industrial relations to be in the best interests of Canada in ensuring a just share of the fruit of progress to all—

This would encourage one to believe that something was contained in the legislation which would improve the bargaining process. Mr. Speaker, when the forerunner to this legislation, Bill C-253, was introduced it was immediately attacked both by management and by organized labour. It was criticized by management because of the clause concerning technological change to which my hon. friend has referred. This clause was included, ostensibly, to give both parties a better basis upon which to bargain. But according to management, instead of improving relations it would damage relations between the parties. It might be said that management has certain vested interests and, of course, this is true. But regardless of this aspect, the clause is disliked by management, whether its position is right or wrong. Thus, rather than contributing to the lessening of tension, such a provision could only contribute to the growing distrust between the parties. To me, this is the most objectionable feature of the bill.

I have read the briefs and I am aware of the representations which have been made. In the circumstances, I am amazed that the minister can be so intransigent. He refuses to compromise. He says, in effect: This is what I have decided and this is what you will get. My hon. friend, in his wisdom, has suggested a way out which may appease one side at the bargaining table and which will certainly not damage the other. I think the provisions are strong enough. We are now entering a new area of bargaining and destroying the sacrosanct nature of a contract. We are saying that under certain conditions contracts can be broken. It seems to me that if you are bargaining in good faith and arrive at a contract, both parties to the contract should be bound by it. It is very disturbing to see a situation exist in this country today in which parties to a contract not only refuse to honour the contract but refuse to obey the law, and publicly so state, in which event, to use a common phrase, the contract is not worth the paper it is written on.

• (1430)

What is the point of trying to legislate for co-operation and for bargaining in good faith? Legislation cannot produce that. You must convince parties to an agreement that both must act and bargain in good faith. Unless that is done all the legislation in the world will not make them reach an agreement that either of them would respect. That is the dangerous part of this clause. I should like to see the entire clause deleted. It is amusing to sit in committee and listen to various witnesses and departmental officials say that most contracts now contain provisions to cushion the effects of technological change, but that because there is the odd employer who does not agree to such provision the government must bring in an all-embracing clause like this and thus drag everybody into the net. In my opinion, this kind of provision endangers the entire collective bargaining process.

I think we should admit that we have given up trying to get the government to withdraw completely the clauses dealing with technological change. But in all fairness to both parties to a dispute the government should be prepared to accept the amendment that has been put forward by my colleague which provides one more opportunity for two parties to reach agreement. I strongly urge the minister to accept the amendment in the interests not only of management and labour but of good relations and industrial peace.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise for just a moment or two to express the hope that on this occasion the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) will not be pusillanimous. I hope that he will reject this amendment. As I see it, what we are dealing with in global terms at this point is the whole business of writing a technological change provision into the labour code. We think it ought to be there, that it ought to be stronger, but at least there should be support for it in the legislation as far as it goes.

What we are dealing with in the immediate amendment to the escape provisions of the bill is an attempt to make it possible under certain conditions for the technological change provisions not to apply. Clause 149(2) provides a set of conditions under which the technological change provisions need not apply. The one in particular that is dealt with by the amendment moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) is a two-part escape provision providing, in effect, that the technological change provisions do not apply if both of two other provisions are written into a collective agreement: one, a provision intended to assist employees in the event of technological change; two, specific recognition of the fact that the technological change provisions of the bill do not apply.

I suggest that if you change the "and" to "or", you will make the escape clause that much wider. You will make it possible for the technological change provisions not to apply, on the very flimsy ground that there can be found in the agreement provisions which might seem to assist employees affected by technological change. The provisions in this whole area of the bill are weak enough as they are that I do not think that they should be weakened further. If the minister will indicate his opposition to this amendment, he will find that we will support him.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in this discussion we are again at the very heart of the Labour Code. A very important section of the bill is clauses 149 to 153. These provisions bring into the collective bargaining process the impact on employees of technological change. The object of these clauses we are currently debating is to ensure that the provisions are viable in the administrative sense, that they do contribute to constructive industrial relations, and that they bring about equity as between the two parties.

I was very interested in the case made by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as they struggled with this, as indeed the standing committee did over an extended period. I am not adopting a position of intransigence, but I am not able to compromise on these provisions, as suggested to me, since what has been suggested as the compromise would undermine my view of constructive industrial relations as they bear upon technological change.

[Mr. Thomas (Moncton).]

It has been suggested that we make paragraph (i) and paragraph (ii) disjunctive. At the moment the two paragraphs are connected with an "and", which it is suggested we change to "or". In my opinion, the effect of that change would jeopardize agreements that are made between employers and employees and would, from the employers' point of view, expose them to a reopening of the bargaining to which they have been party. If we accepted the amendment we would indeed open the door to the reopening of collective agreements after they had been sealed with the intention that they remain sealed.

What we have been trying to do in constructing the sections of the bill that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre described as escape clauses is truly to make agreements final from the point of view of equity between the two parties. There must be a seal on the agreement, and the only way to seal it is to leave the word "and" connecting paragraph (i) and paragraph (ii) of subclause (c) of clause 149(2).

Let us consider what would undoubtedly happen when a technological change occurs in a situation where an employer and the employees have agreed upon a substantive provision to deal with it. Let us assume we are in the position the hon. member for Hamilton West suggested, and we have made this disjunctive. The bargaining agent may take the position before the Canada Labour Relations Board that he has provision for technological change as a result of bargaining, but not for this particular change. He may say the union did not contemplate this change when they made the bargain, and this is an extraordinary change which is going to significantly affect in an adverse manner a number of employees. There would be constant litigation in that event before the Canada Labour Relations Board, because the parties would not have sealed the bargain and said for the term of the agreement, two years or three years, they had provided for technological change with these substantive provisions and, as risky as it may be, they are acting in good faith.

The bargaining agent may say to the employer that the union has bargained for these provisions and will live with them for that period without opening the agreement or running to the Labour Relations Board to plead that this was not the kind of thing about which they were thinking.

Mr. Alexander: That section will never be used.

Mr. O'Connell: If that is what is being suggested I must be intransigent, but that is the position I have to take.

It has been said that trade unionists will find it virtually impossible to follow because the bargaining agent will not want to go before his men and say he has made these various bargains, accepting this and giving up something else, but on the whole package he is satisfied; now, he must tell them about the technological change provision. In order to get this and this and this, there are these technological change provisions and we are required to waive our further rights to open the agreement to deal with technological change. That may be difficult to do.

Mr. Alexander: That is what they told me.

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, that is what they may have told you. It may be difficult to do but it is their business to do it, and if the men do not want to agree to that waiver then the employer knows where he stands and will know this could happen. He knows what kind of provisions he is satisfied to give in exchange for the protection to which he is entitled. Again, if that is a difficult thing for the men to agree to or for the employer to agree to then there are other avenues. They may fall back upon the giving of notice or upon some method of resolving the dispute in a binding and official way when difficulty arises over the question of technological change. So, the employees are not necessarily closed off. Those employers who have made provisions and have gone the whole way—

Mr. Thomas (Moncton): They don't need this act.

Mr. O'Connell: They do need the act. If they have made these provisions, they should be protected against reopening, and it is the "and" that protects them. The provisions are there, and the parties agree that those provisions are sufficient for the purposes of this act for this period of time. I am sure it is not in the mind of the hon. member for Hamilton West or the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Thomas) to expose agreements to reopening. They simply see the difficulty in the ordinary course of bargaining. I agree there will be difficulty, but that is why there are bargaining agents.

I think the hon. member for Hamilton West said these are issues for the bargaining table. I certainly agree they are, and that is the place to settle them. That is where assurance should be given the employers, just as it is given the employees, that these are bargains struck in good faith.

I said in opening that to make this administratively feasible we need the "and", so the Canada Labour Relations Board is not continuously drawn into litigation over whether this provision did in fact deal adequately with the situation. Without the "and" what would the question before the board be? The bargaining agent could then say they have some provisions but they are not adequate to cover a certain change. We have then transferred the question of adequacy away from the bargaining table and put it before the board. The board should not be drawn into this kind of question at all. We say to the parties, if you bargain for these then seal them, close the matter and accept it but do not ask another agency to enter into bargaining and tell you whether you have done an adequate job.

From an administrative and an equity point of view I suggest the "and" is necessary. The employer would undoubtedly trade the technological change provisions for the non-reopener clause. He does not want things reopened. From the point of view of the trade union in accepting these provisions, it must have known that the employer offered the provision to the union in order to get a closed contract. Having gone through all that, it would not contribute to constructive industrial relations to then leave an opening for reopening because of the inadequacy of the deal that was arrived at. That would create a situation which I do not think any of us would want.

In closing, let me say again that this was thoroughly reviewed in the committee. I have spent many hours considering this and discussing it with employers and associations of employers. I have discussed it with trade unionists as well. Many hon. members, particularly those on this side from British Columbia, have made a very strong plea and presented a very cogent case during the number of occasions I have met with them. They have a particular interest because employers on the west coast have put a strong case to them. I feel very strongly that I would be letting down the employers as well as the trade unionists if I gave in on this point. At the risk of being what is called intransigent, I must ask the House to resist the amendment before it and accept the original proposal advanced in the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The question is on the motion moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): All those opposed to the said motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel: Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the motion stands deferred.

[English]

The House will now proceed to the consideration of Motion No. 7 standing in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved:

That Bill C-183, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by deleting lines 1 to 34 on page 44 and substituting therefor the following:

"Revocable Check Off

162. (1) Any employee who is represented by a bargaining agent may authorize his employer in writing, at any time after the date on which the bargaining agent becomes entitled to represent him, to deduct from his wages the amount of the regular monthly membership or union dues payable by him to the bargaining agent and to remit that amount to

(a) the bargaining agent; or

(b) the registered Canadian charitable organization, as defined in the Income Tax Act, designated by the employee, and the employer shall deduct and remit that amount in accordance with the authorization.

(2) An employee may, by notice in writing to his employer, revoke an authorization given by him pursuant to subsection (1), and that revocation shall have effect thirty days from the date upon which it is received by the employer.

(3) For the purpose of exercising any rights he may have under this Part, an employee who exercises his right under paragraph (1)(b) shall not thereby lose the status of a member in good standing of the bargaining agent.

(4) No person shall discriminate against an employee who exercises his right under paragraph (1)(b) either in regard to employment or any term or condition of employment or in regard to membership, for the purpose of exercising any rights he may have under this Part, in the bargaining agent or any term or condition of membership.

(5) Nothing in a collective agreement that is inconsistent with the provisions of subsection (1) is valid."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I had some considerable discussion in the committee with regard to the principle advocated in this amendment. It also represents the heart and core of private bills I have presented in this House since 1969. In 1971, the bill was known as C-138. I shall not go through a recital of the other numbers. However, they stem from the Hoogendorn case in Ontario and similar instances of that kind in the province of British Columbia, in my own province of Alberta and I am sure other provinces. As an individual, I was absolutely repelled and amazed that here, in Canada we would allow to happen what happened in those cases. These cases involve the fact that, by reason of conscience, a man or woman objects to belonging to either a closed shop or a union shop organization. Such a person does not believe in that type of unionism. This is a matter of true conscience. Yet, the effect of the closed shop and the union shop is that such an individual cannot maintain his or her employment.

This might involve the case of an individual who had worked in some undertaking which was not unionized, and then later the work force became organized. He or she is forced to belong to the union and to pay dues to the union in order to maintain employment in complete contradiction of that person's bona fide religious beliefs. That is why I have put forward this motion. I suggest the Labour Code is in fact contrary to the Canadian Bill of Rights, insofar as it says to unions that they can deprive individuals of their work because of their religious beliefs. I am not arguing here the validity or otherwise or the justification or otherwise of the religious belief held by the individual. I may say, however, that there are many people of the Reform Church in this country who do not believe in this. In addition, I have before me a letter from the General Counsel of the Seventh-day Adventist Church in Canada. For the benefit of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) who argued against me on this matter, may I say that this letter comes from the executive offices of that church in Oshawa. I want to read the letter:

The members of our communion have long felt that closed shop and union shop contracts in many instances force them to belong to unions when their conscientious convictions prevent them from doing so. The provision that your bill would make in the federal legislation would certainly meet this problem.

Seventh-day Adventists do not wish to enjoy the benefits that come from the work of trade unionists and trade unions. However, some of the methods employed by trade unions in achieving their goals are such that conscientious Christians with strong views against the resort to violence and intimidation find themselves in a difficult position. They are prepared to make a contribution equivalent to union dues to some charity of the union's choice and even go so far as to have the union get credit for this contribution. They would appreciate the opportunity to work, in return, without in any way frustrating or thwarting the legitimate aims of their fellow employees who happen to be members of a trade union. But, neither do they wish to be forced to join an association or organization where conscientious scruples prevent them from doing so.

I hear snorts of disbelief from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby who I say, frankly, epitomizes to my way of thinking some of the worst features of big unionism in his attitude toward this matter.

While I may not agree with the Quakers or others who for reasons of conscience do not accept that they should bear arms in service of our country, yet we accord them this privilege. They enjoy the full benefit of membership in Canadian society. It is asserted that because these individuals about whom I am concerned share some of the benefits—not all because the unions do not get all the benefits on behalf of their workers even though they believe they do—they must make their contribution and must belong. It is suggested that they should be grateful to belong. Since there is a limited amount of time, I wish to read and place on the record what is stated in the Canadian Bill of Rights. I shall read, first of all, from the preamble:

The Parliament of Canada, affirming that the Canadian Nation is founded upon principles that acknowledge the supremacy of God, the dignity and worth of the human person and the position of the family in a society of free men and free institutions:

I would reiterate the acknowledgement of the supremacy of God, the dignity and worth of the human person and the position of the family in a society of free men and free institutions. That is something many people appear to wish to deny today. The quotation continues:

Affirming also that men and institutions remain free only when freedom is founded upon respect for moral and spiritual values and the rule of law;

I commend those words to hon. members, and particularly to those who wish to steamroller individuals who would dissent.

And being desirous of enshrining these principles and the human rights and fundamental freedoms derived from them, in a Bill of Rights which shall reflect the respect of Parliament for its constitutional authority and which shall ensure the protection of these rights and freedoms in Canada:

Then, the following is enacted:

1. It is hereby recognized and declared that in Canada there have existed and shall continue to exist without discrimination by reason of race, national origin, colour, religion or sex, the following human rights and fundamental freedoms, namely:

(a) the right of the individual to life, liberty, security of the person and the enjoyment of property, and the right not to be deprived thereof except by due process of law;

This is the provision regarding the right to work. Then, we have paragraph 2:

2. Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of the Parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared,

Then, there is a particularization, but no limitation. Part II, section 5 (1) reads:

Nothing in Part I shall be construed to abrogate or abridge any human right or fundamental freedom not enumerated therein that may have existed in Canada at the commencement of this Act.

Then, sub-sections (2) and (3) state:

(2) The expression 'law of Canada' in Part I means an Act of the Parliament of Canada enacted before or after the coming into force of this Act, any order, rule or regulation thereunder, and any law in force in Canada or in any other part of Canada at the commencement of this Act that is subject to be repealed, abolished or altered by the Parliament of Canada.

3. The provisions of Part I shall be construed as extending only to matters coming within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada.

It is clear to my mind that, in so far as the Canada Labour Code refuses to recognize the right of the individual as propounded in the amendment, it is an infringement of the Canadian Bill of Rights. The government of Ontario in 1970 amended its labour code and put in section 35(a) to take care specifically of the point that I have put forward. Unfortunately, I think the government of Ontario did not go far enough because this provision indicates that if an individual joins an organization where there is a collective agreement in force, and it is one of a closed shop or union shop nature, the act shall not apply to that person. But in effect I say that the rights granted under the Ontario amendment of 1970 are more illusory than they are real.

I say that we should recognize the principle that there is a freedom of conscience, a freedom of religion. There has to be something that is real, or do we just pay lip service to it? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the failure of the government to include such an amendment as I have put forward, or a provision to accomplish the same end, means that the government is paying less than lip service to the rights of Canadian workers as enumerated under the Canadian Bill of Rights.

I hope that the House accepts my amendment. If it does not, I can promise hon. members that I will be back next year with a similar type of amendment if I am a private member. This is a matter that goes to the heart and core of labour law in this country. After all, so many of the people who belong to the party on my left talk about the right of individuals to dissent from the political views of the government and of other people, but when it comes to conforming to union law there is no right to dissent.

Mr. Rowland: That is rubbish.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): One must conform or lose one's employment. Under the closed shop and under the union shop, as these workers conceive it in their conscience, they are unable to dissent.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to take part in this debate, but my hon. friend who is figuratively and literally on my right has provoked me to say a few words in support of the bill as it now stands and contrary to the amendment that is supported by the Conservative party. I would like to come to grips with what I think is the essential philosophical point of dispute here, and that concerns something called one's conscience.

The argument offered by the hon. member who preceded me was that the state must take into full recognition the obligations that one imposes upon oneself because of conscience. I say to the hon. member with all respect that never in my studies of philosophy and ethics have I had much intellectual respect for that kind of argument. I will tell the House why. If you study history you will find that the most scandalous deeds ever performed were often performed by men who claimed they acted in conscience. Men who have performed the most vile and inhuman practices in human history almost invariably have said they did them according to conscience, and indeed in many cases I would be prepared to accept that they were acting according to conscience; in other words, that they were doing what they deemed to be right and correct.

However, in any ethical decision it seems to me that one does not primarily consider motives but, rather, one has to consider the implications and the consequences for society as a whole and for other members of the group affected. For example, I could cite cases in medieval history of Catholics who thought it was entirely morally appropriate to torture, to put on the rack and to burn at the stake early Protestants because they as Catholics were acting in good conscience, they thought it was entirely appropriate and justified to so act.

Would we now sanction, in terms of our perception of morality, of our understanding of what is socially good, such activity? With respect, I would say no. One could cite in early renaissance history similar acts by Protestants who thought it was entirely appropriate and good to burn a Catholic every Thursday afternoon at three o'clock if they could get their hands on one. These Protestants in our history also thought they were acting in good conscience, and I would say with respect that they were acting in good conscience. It is simply a matter of ethical right and wrong, in my view, that their conscience was leading them to profoundly immoral acts.

In short, conscience is by no means a sufficient criterion to judge the goodness or badness of an act. Therefore, I submit that the argument put forward by the hon. member that conscience is to be relied upon, that conscience may lead one to a conclusion contrary to that which is proposed by this legislation, is without any serious philosophical justification. To cite a particularly horrendous and unrepresentative example, perhaps there were literally thousands of Germans in the 1930s who thought that the political actions of a man called Adolph Hitler were entirely good and appropriate, and that a German in good conscience could do nothing other than support the kind of policies that Hitler was advocating.

Mr. Alexander: You don't need to go that far; you can refer to the government.

Mr. Broadbent: Therefore, we come to the matter at issue. If we dismiss the philosophical argument of the conscience, and accept the utilitarian argument that you have to look at social consequences, then it seems to me that the legislation before us, and not the amendment, must be supported.

I categorically reject the anti-union attitude of the hon. member who preceded me, because most unions in this country are democratic organizations and are very much concerned with improving the well-being of their members. To suggest that they are always, or even usually, dominated by so-called big trade union bosses misses the point of reality.

The point is that by passing this kind of amendment we would be saying to a member of a trade union that although in most instances it was the trade union that had led to the doubling of that person's income in recent years, that the union had got him benefits so that he could no longer be fired at the whim of his employer, that the union had succeeded in getting him paid holidays, that the union had done for working people what political democracy in this century had done for society as a whole—that is, it had brought a degree of civil rights and civil dignity to the working people in Canada—the member had no financial obligation to that organization if he deemed it to be a matter of conscience. We would be saying to the worker that if he thinks it is not a matter of philosophical commitment, then he does not have to support the union; he does not have to support the thousands of workers who preceded him, who had to strike, on many occasions in terribly bad weather, in order to attain the financial gains and civil liberties in the workplace that he now enjoys.

I for one will not support a measure that gives a worker the right to opt out of a union and no longer pay his share toward achieving very desirable social aims.This is analogous to saying to the citizen of a democratic state, "You no longer have an obligation to pay your taxes if as a matter of conscience you are in profound disagreement with the government." I dare say that some members of the Conservative party are in profound disagreement with the present government. Therefore, if we followed the logic of the hon. member who preceded me they would be under no obligation to pay taxes to such a perfidious regime.

If it is wrong to say that to a citizen of a democratic state, I say it is equally wrong to say to a member of a democratic union that he has a right not to pay his share if he disagrees with the union. I urge that the House strongly vote against this amendment.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I realize that we are in a very tight time situation. We have heard two points of view that explore this complex and difficult question which involves conscience. I point out that it goes further than that in the amendment: it involves the right of persons to be members in good standing in an organization, and taking its benefits, without being fully pledged to it in the sense of responsibility. That subject was canvassed quite thoroughly in the standing committee.

I read with a great deal of interest the presentation made by one group on this matter. I have listened to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and I simply conclude by saying we would be well advised to accept the bill as it presently stands.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 7 (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) negatived.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved Motion No. 8 as follows:

That Bill C-183, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by deleting lines 45 to 48 on page 63 thereof and substituting therefor:

"194.(1) Except with the consent in writing of the minister, which shall not be unreasonably withheld, no prosecution shall be instituted in respect of an offence under this part.

(2) Where the minister withholds his consent, he shall do so in writing within two weeks after the application for his consent and shall state his reasons therefor."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this amendment is quite simple. Clause 194 reads at present:

Except with the consent in writing of the minister, no prosecution shall be instituted in respect of an offence under this part.

It stops there. I think it is time we looked at the arbitrary power given to the minister. I can give one example which is of prime importance and will bring home to hon. members the reasoning behind my amendment. Some time ago during the Montreal port strike, the Maritime Shipping Association asked for the minister's consent in order to prosecute the longshoremen's union for certain actions which it took. The minister in fact denied his consent, but the application was on his desk for heaven knows how long until I asked a question about it in the House. Now that we see the result of his arbitrary decision, we wonder whether it was the right one for him to take. My amendment stipulates that no prosecution can be launched without the minister's consent "which shall not be unreasonably withheld", and then I add a second paragraph which is of importance. It reads:

Where the minister withholds his consent, he shall do so in writing within two weeks after the application for his consent and shall state his reasons therefor.

We do not know his reasons for denying consent in the Montreal port case. Denial of consent may vary from one minister to another. This minister chose not to give consent; another minister might have given it. I do not know whether the minister's predecessor would have given his consent; but I do not want to get involved in personalities because that would not be fair. Another matter that bothers me is that a minister may give his consent if it is politically expedient to do so. In other words, if there is an industrial dispute, and it enhances the attractiveness of the government to the public for a minister to give his consent to a prosecution against a union, he may be tempted to do so.

I hope the minister will see some merit in my amendment, but I know what his answer will be; I heard it in committee. He will say that this is making provision to adjudicate on whether the minister unreasonably gives or withholds his consent. Again I say the minister should not be given this total power to make arbitrary decisions and not be required to give reasons for those decisions.

I think it is high time we checked on this sort of attitude. I believe it gives too much power if we do not know when the minister gave his consent and what the reasons were. I should like to know right now his reasons for the decision regarding the Montreal port strike. Maybe somebody on the other side knows why he did not give consent. Without being repetitious, Mr. Speaker, I hope the minister sees some merit in my motion.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be very brief. I support the legislation as originally drafted, and oppose the amendment. The amendment does not say so, but in effect it throws into the courts, into litigation, a review of the minister's judgment in this matter. The minister is responsible to this House and I do not think the courts are responsible in any way to the House. This is clearly an administrative matter and one of very delicate discretion, in view of all the circumstances. I would much prefer to have this sort of thing determined in the House by a minister rather than being a matter of litigation in the courts.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I will only say a few words in respect of the amendment to clause 194 dealing with the consent of the minister before prosecution.

This matter has been raised very often and it assumes that a strong relationship exists between the judiciary and the political powers. The mover of the two amendments has in mind the protection of the legislative authority, that is the authority of the Canadian people to express itself against those two powers.

It seems to me that both amendments should be passed since the minister is responsible before Parliament and not before the judiciary. It would be quite acceptable, Mr. Speaker, that the minister should agree to include in the legislation a provision making it necessary for him to state the reasons for his acceptance or refusal of a request to prosecute. Otherwise, it becomes a unilateral decision and, in any event, it could be construed as being a matter of political interests.

This is why these amendments should be passed both for the protection of the House of Commons and the parties involved.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No.8 (Mr. Alexander) negatived.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The House will now proceed to the consideration of Motion No. 9 by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West) moved:

That Bill C-183, An Act to amend the Canada Labour Code, be amended by inserting therein, next after the heading "Promotion of Industrial Peace" where the same appears above line 1 on page 64, the following:

"194A. For the better assuring that industrial relations continuously serve the promotion of the common well-being as well for the better promoting of industrial peace in the public interest, the Minister shall promote and encourage, in the field of labour-management relations,

(a) research in the social, political, economic, legal, psychological and other aspects of such relations, including employer and employee organization, personnel administration, social security, and labour legislation;

(b) full discussion and the exchange of ideas regarding the planning and conduct of such research;

(c) the public dissemination of significant results of such research;

(d) the improvement of the materials and methods of instruction used in such research; and

(e) the planning, supervision, co-ordination, analysis, and appraisal of industrial relations for the purpose of securing the most efficient co-operation of all groups and persons engaged in the production and distribution of goods and the provision of services."

[English]

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 9 points out the necessity to stress once again the need for industrial peace. The heading of this section which appears on page 64 of the bill refers to the promotion of industrial peace.

Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence to give credit to the parliamentary intern who assisted me on this bill, Miss Kathy Swinton. Many of us who have had an opportunity of working with parliamentary interns hope that the government, although I understand the foundation is a little short of money, will promote this internship. These interns give us valuable assistance, because it is impossible for many of us to keep up with our chores without their help.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I think that all members who have had an opportunity to work with these young men and women and avail themselves of their expertise would appreciate the program being continued.

Mr. Speaker, the preamble to this bill can only have strength if the bill has some guts. My motion suggests the inclusion of the following:

"194A. For the better assuring that industrial relations continuously serve the promotion of the common well-being as well for the better promoting of industrial peace in the public interest, the minister shall promote and encourage, in the field of labour-management relations,

(a) research in the social, political, economic, legal, psychological and other aspects of such relations, including employer and employee organization, personnel administration, social security, and labour legislation;

(b) full discussion and the exchange of ideas regarding the planning and conduct of such research;

(c) the public dissemination of significant results of such research;

(d) the improvement of the materials and methods of instruction used in such research; and

(e) the planning, supervision, co-ordination, analysis, and appraisal of industrial relations for the purpose of securing the most efficient co-operation of all groups and persons engaged in the production and distribution of goods and the provision of services."

The minister will probably tell me that is what he is doing now. But where does he get the authority? All I am asking is that the act give some guts to the preamble. Without some meaningful direction such as this, I feel the preamble is nothing but window-dressing, a political gimmick to appease one side of the bargaining process. I do not think I have to elaborate on this motion any further, Mr. Speaker. I hope that at long last the minister will think kindly toward this side.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think kindly of all the remarks and the many contributions made by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) during the committee hearings and today. I want particularly to congratulate him on the work of his parliamentary intern who has done the right thing in drawing attention to the needs for a vastly expanded research effort to support industrial relations in the federal jurisdiction.

The hon. member asks where the authority and impetus is for research and publication of material. Mr. Speaker, it is in the very statute that founded the Department of Labour in about 1900. That was a very skimpy little act because in those days perhaps there was not much support for a federal role in labour relations. One thing in that act, however, is the requirement to establish the Labour Gazette in order to publish statistics.

On the basis of that we are raising a major research effort which will cover many of the grounds put forward by the parliamentary intern and which were mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for Hamilton West. As he knows, I have asked the department to expand in a significant way the non-legislative initiatives that we need in this field. Basic to them is an enlarged research effort. We have gone through Treasury Board with that effort and we are now in the clear. We are going to put a major shoulder to the wheel in that field. The hon. member will be happy to see the result. It is in the statute establishing the department and it really does not need a home in the bill before us, worthy as the idea may be.

• (1530)

Mr. Rowland: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Speaker: Will the minister accept a question from the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)?

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, as a sort of prologue to the question, I understand the reason for rejecting this amendment; but cannot the minister find a way of providing the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) with some of the information he seems to require, so that for his next intervention in a debate on labour the hon. member will be better informed?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member rising on a question of privilege?

Mr. Alexander: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I listened to that snide, nasty remark which just came from one of the uninformed members to my left. He has not had anything to say in this debate since it began. He did not attend any of the committee hearings. That shows how much he is interested in this subject.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should indicate his question of privilege. Would the hon. member resume his seat. If the hon. member has a question of privilege, he should indicate it. From what the hon. member has just said, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) may have a question of privilege in relation to the words spoken by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander).

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege revolves around the fact that by implication the hon. member has suggested that I am misinformed.

Mr. Lewis: It was a joke.

Mr. Alexander: Maybe I am also joking. Now and again some of these members have to be spanked, and I am big enough to spank most of them around here. If the hon. member wants to interject in a debate, he should have at least made a meaningful contribution prior to his interjection. We could then have allowed his interjection, which certainly was not called for.

Mr. Speaker: That, of course, is not a question of privilege; it is debate between the hon. member for Hamilton West and the hon. member for Selkirk. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the said motion lost on division.

Motion No. 9 (Mr. Alexander) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: House will now revert to the deferred divisions on motions Nos. 3, 4 and 6. Call in the members.

The House divided on motion No. 3 (Mr. Barnett) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-183, to amend the Canada Labour Code, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Some hon. Members: By leave, now.

Mr. O'Connell moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT DEFERRED—HOUSE TO MEET NEXT ON JULY 4 AT 2 P.M.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, at eleven o'clock I asked that the adjournment motion stand in the expectation that the situation in Montreal might have clarified in the meantime so that the motion could be put and carried at this point. However, I am advised by the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) that the situation has not cleared up sufficiently that it would be desirable from the point of view of the government to put and carry the adjournment motion at this point.

Mr. McCleave: In other words, "See you on Monday".

Mr. Baldwin: No, Tuesday.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask whether we come back on Monday or on Tuesday. We on this side are as confused as perhaps they are on the other side. On which day do we return?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I may respond to the question raised, under Standing Orders the House would normally meet on Monday at 2 p.m.

Mr. Forrestall: Why don't you call an election and quit playing games with the people of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) has the floor.

Mr. McCleave: I understand there might be disposition by the House to agree that we meet on Tuesday and that this could be ordered now.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have considered that point. In view of the arrangements many members have made, and the fact that members of the staff could normally expect a holiday, I would be agreeable to our meeting on Tuesday if that is the general wish of the House.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As hon. members know, according to Standing Orders we would be required to be here on Monday, but we can dispense with the provisions of the Standing Orders by unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It appears there is unanimous consent that the House will reconvene on Tuesday next.

May we have order, please. Hon. members should realize that the House is still sitting. If hon. members, and particularly a number of ministers, wish to have conferences I suggest those should be carried on outside the House.

It being after four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROVISION FOR TEN GENERAL HOLIDAYS WITH PAY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved that Bill C-21, to amend the Canada Labour Code (provision for ten general holidays with pay), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I dare to hope that the action the House has just taken in agreeing to take a holiday on Monday puts this House in a favourable mood toward my Bill C-21 which has now been called for second reading. In fact it is a bill which proposes that two additional holidays be added to the list of general holidays in the Canada Labour Code. Perhaps I might be permitted to point out that the Canada Labour Code does not cover the holidays we observe in the House of Commons; rather, we are governed by our own Standing Orders. We have just demonstrated that by unanimous consent we can alter our own rules and in this instance it is good that we have done so.

Bill C-21, as I have already indicated, relates to the Canada Labour Code, the legislation we have amended today by the passing of Bill C-183. My bill proposes an amendment to another part of the Canada Labour Code and I hope it will find favour with the faithful members who have remained for this final hour.

The Canada Labour Code as it now stands provides for eight general holidays—that is the legal term in the legislation, although most people call them statutory holidays—and I suggest that two more should be added. May I make it clear that this bill is a successor to a bill that I have put in a good many times in which I used to ask for one additional general holiday each year. The one that I asked for was the first Monday in August.

That bill, when it was reached in former sessions, was always attended by an interesting debate but I thought that the debate the last time this bill came up for second reading was particularly interesting. There was some criticism of the fact that I had not put a name to the holiday which I proposed for the first Monday in August. One of my friends to the right said he thought it would be awkward to suggest that this was the "first Monday in August holiday" every time we wanted to refer to it. At any rate, the criticism was that an appropriate name should be found for the holiday that we would provide for the first Monday in August.

Obviously, I have avoided using the term "civic holiday" because that might suggest to someone that a constitutional argument could be raised since we are dealing with the federal labour code. The other criticism that I met with last year came, I suppose, from skiing enthusiasts and such types who felt that if we were going to have a ninth general holiday it should be in February rather than in the middle of the summer. The point was made that there was a fairly long gap between the Christmas and New Year period and Easter, and that it was in that part of the year that an additional holiday should be provided.

Well, I am one to listen to criticism of my proposals and of my bills, and it seemed to me that the obvious answer to the suggestion that the holiday should be in February rather than in August, particularly in view of the fact that some members thought it should be in August, was to bring in a bill providing for additional holidays in both of these months. This bill, in that it provides for an additional holiday in August and an additional holiday in February, is genuinely and honestly the result of discussion that has taken place on the floor of this House of Commons.

Regarding the point about naming these holidays, about which there was criticism last year, I am trying to meet that by suggesting in the bill that either in the committee or by a proclamation made afterwards appropriate names could be put to these two holidays. It seemed to me that that was wiser than for me to try to name them. The choice that I prefer is that the names might be decided by the committee to which this bill would be referred after second reading, but in any case I hope that I have met the criticisms of last year and that the House will look upon this bill with favour.

As I say, it is a very simple bill which proposes that the Canada Labour Code provide for a total of ten holidays. The two additional ones that I am suggesting are a holiday in February and a holiday in August, so we meet the wishes of both the skiers and the swimmers, and that the names of these holidays be decided by the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to which this bill would be referred.

I would point out that the general provisions in the labour code regarding holidays, regarding pay for those days, regarding the possibility of substituting some other day if that is desired in some part of the country, and all other such provisions remain as they are. The bill does nothing extraneous; simply proposes these two additional holidays, one in February and one in August, the names of both of them to be determined either by the committee or by a proclamation to be issued by the governor in council.

I might also point out that this bill would govern only those who come under federal labour jurisdiction. It would not govern us in the House of Commons—but we look after ourselves very well; we demonstrated it just now when we decided on a holiday for Monday even though it is not in our rules. As for those who come under provincial jurisdiction, it is a historical fact in this country that when a lead is taken in one jurisdiction, whether it is federal or provincial, in the course of time the other jurisdiction tends to follow. My hope would be that if we put ten general holidays into the Canada Labour Code, in due course that would be the number of holidays in the various provincial labour codes as well.

I think this is a sensible and desirable bill. I do not take all the credit for its being sensible; I give credit to the House because, as I said, when the House discussed last year my bill for a ninth general holiday the upshot of that discussion was that there should be a ninth and a tenth holiday, one in August and one in February, and appropriate names should be affixed to those two holidays. So I give back to the House the bill that it proposed last time we discussed this measure, and I hope the House will see fit to give it second reading and send it to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in the hope that it might meet during the holidays and advance this bill a further stage.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself specifically to the announcement just made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). I am sorry he is not here because in my judgment he is the outstanding parliamentarian on the government side—and that is not because he is Gaelic as I try to be. I will speak with more brevity than the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) but probably with less profundity.

I commend the President of the Privy Council for noting and appreciating that Dominion Day is the most important day for Canadians who want to celebrate that particular historic event which made a new country on this great North American continent. I commend the hon. member, who is a professor and a man of knowledge in history, for noting this. Personally, I would like to have Dominion Day celebrated on July 1, regardless of the day of the week on which it comes, and I condemn wholeheartedly, completely and with all the strength of my being the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) who issued invitations to all and sundry for an event on a day which was called the "national day of Canada". According to the statutes, according to the law and according to the rules, July 1 is Dominion Day.

I commend the President of the Privy Council for his sensitivity. I think I speak for all my associates who love our country, who cherish its history, who prize and love those traditions which made this a great country, and for all my colleagues in the official opposition when I say that we do not want to be here on Dominion Day but the moment immediately thereafter we will be here to do the nation's business, despite how ill-organized may be the government's order of business.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the intervention by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) was hardly beneficial to the matter of considering the bill before the House and discussing its merits or shortcomings. And, of course, the official opposition had to seize on the opportunity to attempt to drum up the spurious idea that somehow the government is working against the best interests of national unity and national institutions. It was not the kind of attitude we expected on a day such as this.

The purpose of this bill, Mr. Speaker, is to increase the number of paid general holidays provided for in the Canada Labour Code from eight to ten by adding a day in each of the months of February and August, to be fixed by proclamation. At the present time, another day could be substituted for any of the holidays listed in the statute.

This is not the first time the hon. member has advanced a similar proposal; indeed, similar bills have been introduced on five previous occasions. What is the present situation? The Canada Labour Code in part III, labour standards, provides for eight general holidays with pay. It should be observed that this standard which came into effect on July 1, 1965—just about seven years ago to the day—was far in advance of the standards obtained by collective agreement in federal industries. The government then, as it has done in so many different areas affecting the working people of Canada, gave real leadership.

It is equally true that this agreement required a substantial adjustment by the employers under federal jurisdiction. As desirable as the proposal for ten holidays may appear to be, it is still far in advance of the general norm, although it is true that since 1965 there has been an increase in the number of employees receiving in excess of eight days' holiday. No federal government can be unmindful of the norms which prevail in the various regions of Canada. We have a responsibility to consider provincial implications and this responsibility extends as well, for example, to such areas as minimum wage legislation where there is substantial variation in minimum wages from east to west across the country.

According to the survey of working conditions conducted by the Canada Department of Labour on October 1, 1970, 71 per cent of all non-office workers in Canadian industries as a whole were receiving nine holidays or more in 1970. For office workers the corresponding figure was 84 per cent. The figures for ten days or more, however, were only 37 per cent of non-office employees and 51 per cent of office employees in 1970. Comparative figures for 1965 were, 44 per cent of non-office workers and 63 per cent of office workers receiving nine holidays or more, while those receiving ten holidays or more numbered 10 per cent of non-office workers and 40 per cent of office workers.

When we compare the proposal before us with existing provincial legislation, we see that only three provinces, Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta, have legislation similar in principle to the federal holiday provisions. Three other provinces, Manitoba Ontario and Nova Scotia, have laid down requirements regarding pay for work done on public holidays. Saskatchewan and British Columbia provide for eight public holidays and Alberta provides for five. Both Manitoba and Ontario require payment of overtime pay for work done on seven public holidays. The Nova Scotia provisions, which are contained in minimum wage orders, require payment of overtime for work done on public holidays but do not stipulate the number of public holidays covered.

In the United States, the matter of paid general holidays has been left to collective bargaining. In the area of paid general holidays, the government of Canada, in establishing a minimum of eight paid days, may still be said to be in the forefront in this country, and indeed on this continent so far as legislation is concerned.

Part III of the Canada Labour Code dealing with labour standards is aimed at providing an acceptable minimum standard, and not at setting the pace for collective bargaining. Hon. members are aware that there has been no unwillingness on the part of the government to advance the boundaries of reform. When we talk in terms of providing better working conditions for Canadians wherever they live, we should remind ourselves that the minimum wage was increased by this government only a short while ago and may well be increased in the near future.

Maternity leave has been enacted for the women of Canada. There have been strengthened provisions for equal pay for equal work. Measures to provide protection against the adverse effects of technological change have been introduced, and today were passed by this House. We can look at the new unemployment insurance legislation which provides for sickness benefits, maternity benefits, and so on. There are few governments in the world which have advanced so much useful social reform in such a short period of time.

The government has concerned itself with progress and with the rights of the individual. When we look at the legislation as it exists with respect to the public holidays, we see that an employee in an industry to which the federal code applies is entitled to holidays with pay on each of the following general holidays: New Year's Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day and Christmas Day. The code also provides that under certain conditions an alternative holiday may be substituted for any of the eight holidays specified.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the parliamentary secretary a question?

Mr. Perrault: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Since the parliamentary secretary is enjoying giving this bit of history, would he also note that when the statutory holidays provision was first brought in by the Liberal government, it provided for only seven general holidays, and that it was because I moved an amendment which was carried in the House that the number was increased to eight?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Speaker, I think that in many areas we have made progress in Canada, and I think any government member would be the first to acknowledge that government supporters do not possess all of the desire for social reform in this country. There have been useful contributions made by members who sit in all parts of this House; that is freely acknowledged.

Earlier in his speech the hon. member pointed out that what we do here is very important provincially, that provincial governments are affected by the laws we pass. This is a factor in the thinking of the government. For example, when it comes to minimum wage legislation, the fact, for example, that in Manitoba the minimum wage is lower than it is under federal jurisdiction, as it is in some of the other provinces, has an affect on the federal government when it moves to set an adequate federal minimum wage within its jurisdiction. Because we know that our actions affect the competitive situation in the provinces, if we fail to take into account their standards, unilateral actions here would be the actions of an irresponsible federal government. The relevant federal statute provides:

If Christmas, New Year's Day or Dominion Day falls on a Saturday or Sunday that is a non-working day for an employee, he must be given a holiday with pay on the working day immediately before or after the general holiday. These provisions regarding alternative days off do not apply, however, to employees covered by a collective agreement that entitles them to at least eight paid holidays a year.

Mr. Speaker, other members wish to speak on this bill and I do not want to continue my remarks at their expense. It can be seen that the picture is a rather mixed one across the country and that different standards appear to apply, depending upon regional considerations. Undoubtedly, the hon. member's proposal may come to pass in time, but the time may not yet have arrived.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It will come in time, but not in Liberal time.

[Mr. Perrault.]

THE ROYAL ASSENT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I have the honour to inform the House that the following communication has been received:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE
OTTAWA

30 June 1972

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th day of June, at 4.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Colonel
Administrative Secretary.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PROVISION FOR TEN GENERAL HOLIDAYS WITH PAY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) that Bill C-21, to amend the Canada Labour Code (provision for ten general holidays with pay), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

[Translation]

Mr. Albert Béchard (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Labour Code has provided so far for eight general holidays a year with pay for all employees under the jurisdiction of the Canadian government.

Bill C-21, moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), does not amend in any way section 51 of the Code under which, in order to conform to special or local conditions, another holiday may be substituted for one of those listed in the act.

The new provision, increasing the number of holidays with pay in the year from eight to ten would allow all employees covered by the federal Labour Code to benefit from at least ten holidays with pay during each year of employment.

Here are the proposed holidays: New Year's Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day, Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day, Christmas Day—these are the eight days already provided for in the Labour Code—plus the two new holidays with pay covered by the bill: one day in February and another in August, to be fixed by proclamation.

The definition of "holiday" appearing in section 26 of the Canadian Labour Code would be repealed and replaced by the one appearing in section 1 of Bill C-21 today before the House, reading as follows:

"general holiday" means New Year's Day, a day in February to be fixed by proclamation, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day—

—or Canada Day, according to the expression used—

Labour Day, Thanksgiving Day, Remembrance Day and Christmas Day and includes any day substituted for any such holiday pursuant to section 51;"

Subsection (2) of section 51 of the Canada Labour Code is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) Where a collective agreement that is in effect on the day this Part comes into force provides for at least ten holidays with pay in each year, exclusive of any annual vacation, the employer who is bound by the collective agreement may designate a holiday specified in the agreement as a holiday in lieu of a specified general holiday under this Division and, on notification thereof to the Minister, that designated holiday shall, for those employees of the employer who are mentioned in the collective agreement, be a general holiday for the purposes of this Part during the period the collective agreement is in effect.

This proposal by the member for Winnipeg North Centre is a definite improvement over the conditions prevailing in the industry. We must recognize, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Perrault) did, the value of some representations made by members opposite. However, we note—and we hope that hon. members opposite do as well—that since 1965 the number of employees who have more than eight days of general holidays has substantially increased.

Thus, according to the survey made by the federal Department of Labour, on October 1, 1970, 71 per cent of workers other than office employees enjoyed nine days of general holidays. For office employees, the proportion was 84 per cent. According to the same survey, relating to ten paid holidays, the percentages are as follows: 40 per cent for office employees and 21 per cent for other employees.

The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said earlier that only Saskatchewan, British Columbia and Alberta have legislation similar to that of the federal government. Thus, for example, the first two provinces have eight paid holidays and Alberta five. In Manitoba and in Ontario, it is stipulated that work done on any of the seven holidays will be paid at overtime rates. In Nova Scotia, the number of paid holidays is not stipulated. In Quebec, legislation provides seven days when stores must close.

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak in this debate because I have always had a great deal of respect for the hon. member who proposed the bill. Although the proposals made in other years were not successful, this bill now before us gives an opportunity to look at the whole picture of statutory holidays.

The concept of general holidays with pay as a legal requirement was introduced in 1965. Holiday observance is a matter of custom which has been built up over the years. Whilst these holidays usually apply to people who work from nine to five, I think we should consider the many people in this country who must work on statutory holidays. I refer to the farmer, the fisherman, the self-employed man for whom such interruptions of work are not always possible. For this reason we should think seriously about increasing the number of statutory holidays. In certain agricultural areas, for instance, there has been some difficulty with regard to daylight saving time; some farmers have had difficulty in adjusting to it. I believe, too, that today's system of collective bargaining gives an opportunity to workers and management to work out proposals together without it being necessary for the government to legislate their rights. This is another case in which we would be doing just that.

• (1650)

We talk about days of celebration such as Christmas. In Canada we also celebrate Boxing Day, a custom which is not practised in the United States. I do not know whether it is generally known, but in the United States Good Friday is not a statutory holiday. We in Canada celebrate it. We celebrate Labour Day, which is a tribute to labour. That is certainly a holiday we should recognize. We also have other holidays in the year, such as birthdays of monarchs, and so on. These are not another day off for everybody. Through collective bargaining, hours of work are regulated. We do not put in nearly as many hours of labour as we did in years gone by.

It appears, Mr. Speaker, that I have had the last word in this House of Commons.

An hon. Member: Until Tuesday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1700)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-195, an act to amend the Adult Occupational Training Act—Chapter No. 14

Bill C-204, an act to amend the Canadian Wheat Board Act—Chapter No. 16

Bill S-3, an act to change the names of the territorial court of the Yukon Territory and the territorial court of the Northwest Territories—Chapter No. 17

Canada Labour Code

Bill C-221, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending 31st March, 1973—Chapter No. 15.

At 5.10 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, until Tuesday, July 4, at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to special order.

TABLING OF REPORT, "THE CANADIAN NORTHWEST TRANSPORTATION STUDY"

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson), and pursuant to Standing Order 41(2), I wish to table in English and in French a report entitled "The Canadian Northwest Transportation Study", prepared for the Minister of Transport by Hedlin Menzies and Associates Limited.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN COMMITTEE REPORT ON BROADCASTING OF DEBATES AS FOUND IN "VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS"

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to suggest a correction that needs to be made in Votes and Proceedings for Friday, June 30, at page 475. I apologize to my hon. friend the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), who tabled the report of the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization on Friday, for not having reached him before two o'clock, but I am sure he will agree that this correction should be made. At page 475 in paragraph 28 there appears this sentence:

> Here in Canada the Legislature of Saskatchewan has been broadcasting certain of its proceedings by radio since 1964.

Sir, that should be changed to read "1946". I may say that in the French edition of Votes and Proceedings for Friday of last week the year is correct, 1946.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—PROSPECT FOR SETTLEMENT IN LIGHT OF PROPOSALS BY DEPARTMENTAL MEDIATORS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Would the minister bring us up to date and let us know where matters now stand in the dispute concerning the St. Lawrence river ports?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to do that in as brief a compass as I can. During the weekend four days of mediation were held in Montreal in the Department of Labour's offices, with the deputy minister and assistant deputy minister assisting the two parties in an effort to reconcile their differences. As a result of that, a set of proposals was placed in front of both parties yesterday evening. Those proposals have been considered this morning at simultaneous meetings in the ports of Quebec City, Trois-Rivières and Montreal. I am awaiting clarification of the results of those meetings. Various reports have come forward, but I am not yet on firm enough ground to know the exact response made to them by the unions at their meetings or by the employers.

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the report that the Montreal local has put some new conditions on the proposals put forward by the mediators, can the minister indicate to the House what those conditions are?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I have heard about the conditions only as reported generally through the press. We are trying to confirm them officially. In general, if they are as reported they relate, first, to a start-up date for the job guarantee to cut in or, putting it another way, to the date on which the suspension of job security would be lifted. Second, they relate to the withdrawal of all court actions for damages and other actions now pending. As I say, these conditions have not been confirmed to me officially, but these are the conditions that one hears about in unofficial reports.

Mr. Stanfield: Does the minister propose to discuss these conditions with the Maritime Employers Association? What procedure does the minister propose to follow?

• (1410)

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, the procedure I propose to follow is to wait a very firm clarification of the situation in the three ports. I should like to assist the hon. gentleman as much as possible, but I do not think it would be helpful for me to propose any line of action now until the situation is more fully clarified.

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. How many dock workers will be allowed to return to work inasmuch as there is a serious loss of shipping business at the three ports?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, that is a question I cannot answer at the present time. In the normal course one would expect that suspension of employment at some point would be lifted and the men would return to work as called by the employers in relation to the work that is available. I offer that as an answer.

QUEBEC—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—TIME LIMIT ON PROPOSALS OF DEPARTMENTAL MEDIATORS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, would the minister advise the House whether there was in fact any time limit fixed for the parties involved to accept the proposals as submitted?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As mediators my officials undertook to give today, July 4, for the purpose of considering the proposals developed in the mediation process and making their relative responses, one against the other.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise whether in fact he has back-to-work legislation in the wings in the form of a trusteeship or perhaps in some other form?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, the government is prepared to take its responsibility when the situation has been more fully clarified.

BILINGUALISM

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING UNILINGUAL NATURE OF PROGRAM ON PARLIAMENT HILL ON JULY 1

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State who is supposed to be here I should like to direct this question to the right hon. Prime Minister. If I may say so, I think the Prime Minister and other members know I have supported the official languages bill and the bilingualism policy without any hesitation. In view of that I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether there was any discussion and consideration of what happened here on July 1 in Ottawa, and was it deliberately decided to have the affair here in Ottawa conducted mostly or almost entirely in one official language rather than in both?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this was not discussed outside of the department before the event. Since July 1, however, our own members from Ottawa West and Grenville-Carleton have raised this—

An hon. Member: I bet they have.

Mr. Bell: It is a little late for that.

An hon. Member: Where is Pelletier?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I see that hon. members are not interested in a serious answer.

An hon. Member: Yes, we are.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

Mr. Alexander: Please continue.

Mr. Trudeau: I have discussed this with the minister who is in Montreal today at a meeting scheduled long ago with the film industry where he intends discussing policies of the government in respect of that industry. I am prepared to say on behalf of the government that it is unfortunate when an event of a national character does not reflect the realities of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: It sure is.

Mr. Trudeau: The report I have of the manner of presentation of the program on Saturday night here on the Hill is that it did fall into this category and did not reflect the national character of this country. I feel this is very regrettable and I do want to offer an apology on behalf of the government. I hope the situation will not repeat itself, and we have taken steps to ensure that it will not.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I asked the question with the hope that the Prime Minister would give the answer he has given, and all of us are grateful to him for it. May I simply ask this supplementary question. In view of the fact this kind of thoughtless act by the department is harmful to Canada and the official languages idea and to bilingualism, the idea which the Prime Minister and many of us support, would the Prime Minister tell the Secretary of State here publicly that this kind of behaviour must not again be repeated in this country?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROGRAM ON PARLIAMENT HILL ON JULY 1—REASON FOR NOT CONSULTING CANADIAN FOLK ARTS COUNCIL

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister say why the Canadian Folk Arts Council was not consulted on the July 1 program as it has been for the past four or five years, with the result that there was no participation by that group representing the many ethnic communities? If you will keep that member over there quiet, perhaps the Prime Minister would be able to hear me.

Mr. Trudeau: Of course I cannot say why such and such a group was not consulted. I do know that the Department of the Secretary of State, which is responsible for a series of manifestations in and around the Hill between the end of June and the end of July, has taken in as many groups as possible. They could not all be involved within one night but if the hon. member looks at the over-all presentation I am sure he will find that many groups have been involved and, indeed, that the language balance has been, over-all, respected. In some cases in the past I think there has been a tendency on occasions of national importance to forget that the French language exists. I think this was very regrettable, and if the contrary happened on Saturday night I think it is equally regrettable.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I should like to follow the supplementary of the hon. member for York South who put a very good one to the Prime Minister which was not answered. I think it represents the feeling of the whole House. Would the Prime Minister undertake to speak very seriously to the Secretary of State to make sure, in the interests of the unity of the whole country, that this kind of thing does not happen again?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think I can give the hon. gentleman the undertaking that after the next election the Secretary of State will be in another portfolio.

An hon. Member: That's for sure.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A number of members are seeking supplementaries on this subject. The Chair will recognize first the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster.

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING UNILINGUAL NATURE OF PROGRAM ON PARLIAMENT HILL ON JULY 1— SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister. In view of the ramifications of the July 1 celebration as evidenced by the unfortunate incident last Saturday, would the Prime Minister undertake, since it is apparent we will be back this fall, to refer this matter to a House of Commons committee so that members can put forward their ideas on these very important matters since we ultimately are blamed for them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the premise of the question when the hon. member includes himself in the sentence, "we will be back here next fall."

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING UNILINGUAL NATURE OF PROGRAM ON PARLIAMENT HILL ON JULY 1—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. In view of the reported statement of the Secretary of State, I gather in Montreal—and the Prime Minister alluded to the history of this country—that other Dominion Day or Canada Day or July 1 celebrations seemed to be too much unilingual the other way, will the Prime Minister speak to the Secretary of State and have him make a statement or make a statement himself to ensure that future July 1 celebrations will be truly bilingual in character and not reflect the unilingual character of one race or the other?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, I can assure the hon. member that future July 1 celebrations organized by this government will be bilingual and multicultural.

[Later:]

ALLEGED FAILURE BY ONTARIO TO SPEND FEDERAL MONEY ALLOCATED TO ENCOURAGE BILINGUALISM IN SCHOOLS FOR THIS PURPOSE

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would he investigate the charges by some school boards in Ontario that the money allocated by this government to the province of Ontario to support and encourage bilingualism in the schools is not being spent for this purpose? Perhaps more people would be able to understand programs, regardless of the language, if the province of Ontario did what it is supposed to do with that money.

Mr. Alexander: What is your point?

Mr. Muir: Ontario is not all of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, this matter has caused us some concern as regards the practice followed in various provinces. The Secretary of State has said that he would review the way in which federal money had been spent by various provincial governments to ensure that the ends and goals mentioned by the hon. member will in fact be pursued with this money.

QUEBEC—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—POSITION OF CERTAIN STRIKERS RESPECTING RETURN TO WORK

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary to the question put by the hon. leader of the opposition to the Minister of Labour.

Can the minister tell us whether groups of longshoremen from Quebec or Trois-Rivières have advised him, by telephone or otherwise, of their wish to return to work?

• (1420)

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have had no personal appeals from or consultations with groups of longshoremen in Quebec or Trois-Rivières.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REQUEST TO SENIOR CITIZENS TO PAY INCOME TAX ON QUARTERLY BASIS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker. It arises from many complaints I have received and I am sure other members have also received such complaints. It has to do with the request made to senior citizens in particular to submit their income tax on a quarterly basis whereas they have been paying it on a yearly basis. Would the minister give special consideration to these senior citizens and allow them to pay once a year rather than quarterly?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is essentially a matter of tax policy. It was dealt with in part by a provision in the recent budget which I believe would not require instalment payments from people who would have to pay less than $400 a year in tax, if I am not mistaken.

AIRPORTS

EARLTON—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister has had the opportunity to visit Timiskaming and to use the facilities at Earlton airport, would he give immediate consideration to the rebuilding of those totally inadequate terminal facilities at the Department of Transport airport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly take up this matter with the Minister of Transport. I landed there without any difficulty and was happy to see that there was enough room for the many Liberals who had come to greet me.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: You don't need much room for them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: I regret that the hon. member did not follow the example of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings of sticking close to me to get into the pictures that were taken.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister was very obviously standing close to me in Prince Edward-Hastings to get some publicity there.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

BLACK FLY OUTBREAK IN ALBERTA—ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS SUFFERING LOSSES—POSSIBILITY OF USE OF DDT

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the severe outbreak of black flies in some parts of Alberta, notably Athabasca, does the federal government intend partially to assist farmers who have suffered financial losses as a result of this outbreak?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of that question. The matter has not been drawn to my attention.

[Mr. Hales.]

Mr. Yewchuk: Would the minister consider a partial and controlled reintroduction of DDT to control this insect?

Mr. Olson: If there is a possibility or indeed a spreading of disease by any insect, there is already provision in the act whereby some use of DDT can be made to control insects that may be spreading disease.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, would the minister undertake to investigate this matter and make a statement to the House when his investigation is completed?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that I will make a statement to the House, but I will be in touch with the hon. member as soon as I have had an investigation made.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JUDGMENT ASSERTING RIGHT OF ACCUSED TO CONSULT COUNSEL BEFORE BREATHALYZER TEST FOR IMPAIRED DRIVING—POSSIBILITY OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the attention of the Prime Minister. It is further to questions asked the other day of the Minister of Justice with regard to the Supreme Court ruling on the application of the breathalyzer legislation. Having in mind the fact that this ruling clearly undermines the ability of that legislation to protect the public from drunken drivers, is the government giving any consideration to this situation, possibly with a view to introducing further legislation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, for sending me notice of his question, but I received it only five minutes ago and I have not had a chance to communicate with the Minister of Justice. He will be in the House tomorrow and I will ask him to deal with the question.

EGGS—USE OF IMPORT CONTROLS TO PROTECT INDUSTRY

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the fact that the government has spent considerable time, effort and money on developing a profitable egg industry in Canada, can the government assure the House that adequate provisions have been made for import controls so that importation of eggs will not destroy the profitable egg market for farmers in this country?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have some obligations under international agreements that we have to respect. There has been a significant improvement in egg prices. Indeed, there was some room previously to allow an upward movement in prices before this would attract any imports, as set out in the agreement that I have with the provinces. Of course an attempt will be made to supply the Canadian market from domestic production, and in this respect we would hope that a national egg marketing plan, agreeable to all the provinces, would take care of this situation as well.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask the minister whether there are any departmental provisions that can be enforced if imports are seriously affecting the Canadian market for eggs?

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there are some pieces of legislative authority to which we can refer in order to take care of such a problem.

PROVISION OF MILK AND EGGS TO POOR PEOPLE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the report of the Montreal Diet Dispensary on the importance of a proper diet and adequate food for mothers and families in poverty or low-income areas in Canada, will he undertake to study ways and means whereby basic foods such as milk and eggs can be provided to people at or below the poverty level?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a great deal is being done by the government to provide food to people who are unable to buy it through payments to the provinces.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, when objectives are set for Canadian egg and poultry production under the proposed supply-management programs, will the minister take into account not only the needs of the commercial and export markets but also the needs of those Canadians who are unable—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously debate.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, could the minister be permitted to answer my question?

Mr. Speaker: Of course not. I indicated to the hon. member that his question is out of order.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DIVERSIFICATION OF HOLDINGS OF U.S. DOLLARS OR GUARANTEE OF EXCHANGE RATE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis-Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. A few days ago I asked him whether any effort was being made by the government or the Bank of Canada to seek a guarantee of the exchange rate on our abnormally large holdings of U.S. dollars, or whether we were diversifying our large holdings of U.S. dollars, and the minister replied that there was nothing being done about a guaranteed rate on our international exchange holdings. Has anything been done by the government or the Bank of Canada to diversify our holdings of U.S. dollars in view of the more favourable exchange rate today?

• (1430)

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the matter is being looked into but, as I suggested to the hon. member the last time he brought up the question, it is a matter that would take some explanation and some debate.

Mr. Nowlan: I appreciate the complexity of the problem and perhaps my question was not too explicit. Is something being done to diversify the exchange holdings and to seek a guarantee for those holdings?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Not in the terms that the hon. member has posed the question, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF CANADIAN COMMITMENTS RESPECTING INVESTMENT OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE FUNDS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Finance undertaking any renegotiation of the existing Canadian commitment about the investment of our foreign exchange fund in certain categories of U.S. commitments? Is the minister letting that ride along or is he undertaking any renegotiation of the commitments that Canada made a few years ago?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West brought that question up some time ago. My answer now to the Leader of the Opposition would be that any renegotiation of that type would probably have to await a general renegotiation of the international monetary picture.

PENITENTIARIES

POSSIBILITY OF FREE TRANSPORTATION FOR RELATIVES TO VISIT INMATES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Is his departments studying the possibility of free transportation for relatives to visit inmates of federal penitentiaries and, if so, when can a decision be expected?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, with regard to LIP, we made an experiment in one of our penitentiaries; representations have been made asking that the program be applied across the country. Off hand we know it would be very costly, and I asked that studies be made to know more specifically where we would be going. We must stop to consider the obvious problem posed by the fact that some institutions are very far from urban centres, and that this imposes a heavy financial burden on families that want to visit prisoners.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. member ought to know that several provinces have already acted in this field and that the federal government has examined the various policies which are being developed throughout the country in order to see that there is a certain uniformity and also some generosity toward the victims of crime.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF LAW PRIOR TO EXPIRY OF BAN ON HANGING

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question for the Solicitor General of Canada. In view of the fact that several persons have been convicted of killing policemen and the present government has not carried out the law dealing with such offenders, is it the intention of the government to bring in amendments to the present law before the five-year ban on hanging expires on December 27?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, first I should like to say that this government has always stuck to the law concerning these criminals, and that this question is being considered by the government. It is certainly difficult, in the present situation, to make an accurate assessment of the five years trial period since it has not yet expired. Furthermore, we know very well that we cannot get the required statistics in order to consider this period before one more year has elapsed so as to enjoy a certain retrospective and thus give a better opinion.

TRADE

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—REPORTED AMENDMENTS TO IMPROVE—CONSULTATION WITH CANADA

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, if I can get his ear. In view of the fact that in a recent report from New York it is asserted that the United States government is very happy with the results of the establishment of over 2,000 DISC corporations, and as the U.S. Treasury Department is planning to introduce two amendments or proposals to improve the DISC program so that the results will be even more beneficial to them, can the minister inform the House whether the government of Canada has been consulted about these new proposals and, if so, can he tell the House whether they are likely to have serious effects on Canada-U.S. trade?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, and neither did the Canadian government consult with the United States government on the employment maintenance program a few months ago.

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—INTENTION OF GENERAL MOTORS RESPECTING USE THEREOF

Mr. Broadbent: I wonder whether the minister has been in touch with the General Motors Corporation since the House last met to find out if it intends to export into Canada under the DISC program?

Mr. Pepin: I have not personally, Mr. Speaker, and I have not seen my officials who are in charge of that since early this morning, but I shall inquire.

[Later:]

UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM—ASSESSMENT OF POSSIBLE DAMAGE TO ENABLE CANADIAN INDUSTRIES TO TAKE PROTECTIVE MEASURES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the prime importance of the effects that the institution of the DISC program in the United States could have on some of our major industries, may I ask the minister whether his department has yet devised any reasonable method of assessing what this damage may be in order that our industries will have an opportunity to institute measures to combat these effects?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. Our position is that the budget recently announced will go a long way toward compensating for the DISC advantages, and I have already informed the House that we are developing ways and means by which we will be informed about other countries in the world using export subsidies in their trade with Canada.

ANTI-DUMPING TRIBUNAL—SUGGESTED NAMING OF CHAIRMAN

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last I put a question to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which should have been directed to the Minister of Finance. I would refer him to page 3643 of Hansard, where I asked whether, in view of the fact that there are hearings before the Anti-Dumping Tribunal and that some sort of cloud still hangs over certain decisions of that board, the minister would advise the House when it is intended to appoint a new chairman of the board so that the board will be regularly constituted for its investigatory work as well as any particular hearings that may be held over the next few months?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I consider that to be an urgent matter. As the Prime Minister said, I have had discussions with him.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): When may we expect the announcement and the regularization of the membership of this board?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): When I have found an appropriate person to fill the position, Mr. Speaker.

DEPORTATION ORDERS—ACCESS TO IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether any consideration is being given to eliminating the present practice that an order of deportation is made at the time of the special inquiry and the only way a bona fide immigrant may appear before the Immigration Appeal Board is through the making of a deportation order and an appeal from that order?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, under the present practice the deportation order is issued at that particular stage. As the hon. member knows, we are reviewing all our practices so that the next piece of legislation to be introduced this fall will reflect a different approach.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

USE OF GREATER PROPORTION OF SCIENCE BUDGET TO SOLVE PROBLEMS OF GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Does the minister endorse the view of Dr. Solandt that more of the government's science budget should be devoted to solving the problems of the day—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question cannot be asked in this way. The hon. member is referring to a statement made outside the House. The question should be asked directly by the hon. member.

• (1440)

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase the question. Will the minister be suggesting to the appropriate government department that more science money should be spent on solving the problems facing government departments?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the ministry and the minister will be looking at science expenditures from the viewpoint of whether they support national objectives.

AIRPORTS

MOUNT HOPE, ONT.—PROVISION OF DETAILED EXPANSION PLANS TO MUNICIPALITIES INVOLVED

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Minister of Transport but as he is not here perhaps his parliamentary secretary could answer. Can the parliamentary secretary advise the House whether detailed plans regarding the Mount Hope extension have been forwarded to the municipalities involved? If so, will the detailed plans be made public?

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I shall take note of this question, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member. The hon. member for Hamilton West rises on a point of order.

Mr. Alexander: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and with all due deference to the parliamentary secretary, I did not have my earphone on and could not understand the reply.

An hon. Member: He took the question as notice.

Mr. Alexander: He took it as notice, did he? I hope you will follow it up, contrary to what you did the last time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he ought to address the Chair.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF PROGRAM "NEW HORIZONS FOR THE AGED"

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I wonder if the minister could advise the House whether there have been co-ordinating discussions with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to the New Horizons program for senior citizens? Would he advise the House when he will be able to give us some information regarding the introduction of such program?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare said last week that he would be announcing the specific details of the program as soon as he has completed his discussions with the provinces.

INDUSTRY

MICHELIN TIRE COMPANY—SUBMISSION OF REPRESENTATIONS TO UNITED STATES AGAINST COUNTERVAILING DUTIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Have the minister and his departmental officials completed all the necessary research and work relative to the submission to the United States government to exempt the products of the Michelin Corporation from countervailing duties?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the date for the submission is July 12. We still have eight days.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISABILITY PENSION AND ALLOWANCE RATES—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. As the House is still in session and as the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs has reported back to the House on all the references given to it thus far, will the minister consider presenting to the House this week a motion referring to that committee the question of the basic rates of war disability pensions and war veterans allowances?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to make a study of the current recommendation that has been presented to the House. Concurrence in it has not yet been moved and I want to study it with my officials.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister give that consideration as quickly as possible in the hope that the reference we are requesting might be made before the House again tries to recess?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is a representation.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my supplementary question to the President of the Privy Council. As the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the chairman of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs have agreed that the matter of basic rates of pensions should be referred to that committee, would the minister take this necessary action before the recess?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I have said that I would have no objection at all if this matter were referred to the Standing Committees on Veterans Affairs. In addition, the president and certain officers of the Royal Canadian Legion are to meet me within a week to discuss the same matter.

STATISTICS CANADA

REQUEST THAT VITAL STATISTICS FOR BURLINGTON, ONTARIO, BE SEPARATED FROM THOSE FOR HAMILTON

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who is responsible for Statistics Canada. As vital statistics for Burlington, Ontario, with a population of 90,000, are included with those of Metropolitan Hamilton, thus denying these people the services of Statistics Canada, will the minister give consideration to correcting this injustice?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the matter as soon as Bill C-201 is passed.

Mr. McCleave: The minister must be joking.

ENERGY

PRICE OF NATURAL GAS—SUGGESTED REPRESENTATIONS TO ALBERTA BOARD TO PROTECT PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in his capacity as ombudsman for the consumer. Is the minister following the hearings of the Alberta Energy and Resources Conservation Board, from which it appears that there will be a substantial increase in the price of gas which will affect every consumer of Canada? Has the minister a representative at those hearings and does he intend to make representations on behalf of the consumers?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no to both questions.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

IMPLEMENTATION OF HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS REGULATIONS IN REGARD TO CRIBS, PLAYPENS, WALKER-JUMPERS AND PACIFIERS

Mr. Steven Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If the minister cannot answer, perhaps the Prime Minister can. Is the government making a study of baby cribs, playpens, walker-jumpers and pacifiers in order to implement regulations under the Hazardous Products Act? If not, why not?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will note the hon. member's representation and find out if these products are being examined. It is quite likely they are, but I cannot be sure.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBLE REPLACEEMENT OF CENTURION TANK BY SCORPION—CONTRACT DETAILS—MANUFACTURE IN CANADA

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It is my understanding that the government is determined to purchase the Scorpion as a replacement for the Centurion tank. Would the minister indicate whether these vehicles will be manufactured in Canada, whether the contract has been let, what the amount of it is, and how many units will be constructed?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I never said that we would purchase that particular vehicle. Negotiations have been going on with respect to that vehicle. We have considered others. It is probable we will purchase that vehicle, but it has not been decided at this point.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask one supplementary and then we will call orders of the day.

Mr. Rowland: Mr. Speaker, is it government policy that whatever replacement is purchased it will be manufactured in Canada?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, it is government policy that we seek offsets.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

The House resumed, from Monday, June 26, consideration of Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and Motions Nos. 4 and 18.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to support the amendment incorporating the principle that there should be consultation with the provinces on matters related to foreign takeovers. I say that because, too often, this principle has been neglected. When we discussed this bill in committee, the question as to whether provinces should be heard arose. I was assured, and had reason to believe, that the provinces had been consulted regarding this bill and that there was some kind of agreement regarding foreign takeovers.

Our experience since then has shown that there has not been any consultations with the provinces and that this bill, whatever its value may be, is a bill that has been introduced by the federal government without consultation with the provinces. Throughout the discussions on foreign ownership and takeovers, the federal government did not appear willing to become involved with the provinces on this matter. I think that was regrettable. In the final analysis, one of two things must happen if there is to be a policy on foreign ownership. Either the provinces must agree to it, or the provinces will be confronted with it. The federal government, in acting, will need to go over the heads of the provincial governments and appeal directly to the people of Canada.

I realise that the insistence upon consultation with the provinces may create difficulty for the federal government because many provinces are strongly opposed to any restrictions on foreign ownership, and takeovers in particular. British Columbia does not seem to be happy about the idea, neither does Alberta. The Maritimes are too desperate to look any gift horse in the mouth. The debate over foreign ownership appears to arise mainly in a couple of the prairie provinces and in the great province of Ontario. This being the case, it would be a great error to try to slide into a policy without consulting the provinces. Sooner or later a conflict is bound to arise between the federal government and one or more of the provincial governments should the federal government intend to act at all. Before we can advance further, it may, I suggest, be necessary to bring about a polarization of opinion on the question of foreign ownership.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, in your wisdom, you might try to do something about the acoustics in the chamber.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the hon. member for bringing this to my attention. I suggest to hon. members that if they wish to carry on conversations they should do so in the lobby or behind the curtains.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The federal government realizes, perhaps, that unless there is a polarization of views, people expressing themselves for or against in a positive way, we shall never be able to deal effectively with the issue of foreign ownership. In the case of Quebec, the policy of the government was to force a polarization of opinion in the province; the people of Quebec will have to choose whether or not Quebec is to stay in Canada. At the moment, the situation looks encouraging. For a long time we carried on pretending there was really no problem in Quebec—that with the help of quiet diplomacy things would work themselves out. But that was not the wisest course to take. Until people are confronted with a choice, no decision can be reached. A similar situation arises in connection with foreign ownership. I realize that many difficulties will present themselves if the amendment we are discussing is accepted. On the other hand, I believe it is necessary to confront this issue head on.

When the House was debating tax reform, members of this party called attention over and over again to the necessity of taxing all industries equally. We argued that the resource industries in particular should pay their full share of taxation to the federal government. It is often said that if the resource industries do not pay their full share of taxation to the federal government they are escaping scot-free. In fact, what happens just as often is that when the federal government decides not to tax on behalf of the people of Canada as a whole the provinces move in to take the available revenue. This creates a situation in which some provinces accumulate wealth for themselves. In Ontario, where the principal occupation is manufacturing, the taxes on the manufacturing industry which goes to the federal government are spread across the country and the rich province of Ontario thus helps to support the poorer provinces of Canada. This is the way it should be.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

But when resources are not taxed as heavily as they might be, the rich provinces, Alberta, for instance, try to take as much of the revenue as possible for themselves. A good many people who live in Alberta will, doubtless, say: They are our resources and we are entitled to the revenue. But every government in Canada could argue that the wealth it produces is a product of its resources, or its talent, and that it is entitled to all the benefits. This is not the basis upon which we are trying to build up our society, however. We are trying to build it on the basis of sharing and, for the reason I have explained, when the government does not tax equally we are not sharing equally. Oil and gas have now been discovered in the Maritimes and the maritime provinces want to keep the revenue themselves. Why should they not do so? After all, this is what Alberta has been saying for years, as well as other provinces, to the extent that they possess such resources. On this basis the Maritimes are fully justified in insisting that the benefits from offshore mineral rights should accrue to them. The federal government contends that the revenue must be shared with others. But it has failed to follow the principle of taxing resource industries equitably across the country and in these circumstances it is difficult for the federal government to argue convincingly that maritime resources should be shared with the rest of Canada. This is the problem which the federal government has created for itself.

As I said earlier, we are all aware that great difficulties will arise when an attempt is made to negotiate the foreign ownership and takeover issue with the provinces. But I believe these conflicts of opinion should be brought into the open so that they can be discussed and dealt with. This is really the point of the amendment. I do not really believe that the amendment, if accepted, will make things easier either for the federal government or for the provinces. It may be we are in trouble now because in the past we have looked for the easy way out instead of trying to do the proper thing. I am suggesting that we agree to the amendment, face the problem and oblige the federal government to discuss with the provinces the whole question of foreign ownership and takeovers so that we can reach a settlement which will be of benefit to this country and, more especially, lead to the establishment of an intelligent policy of foreign ownership. It will probably mean that some day a way will have to be found to share all of the resources of this country among the people. Whether they are resources in Alberta arising from mineral deposits or whether they are resources in Ontario in the form of manufacturing, they will have to be distributed across the country if we are to solve the long standing difficulties existing between the provinces themselves and between the provinces as a whole and the federal government. The sooner there is consultation with the provinces and they are asked to consider foreign ownership and foreign takeovers, the closer will draw the day when an intelligent policy is devised.

• (1500)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that my colleague, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who proposed this motion is absent today. He is a member of the board of governors of the University of New Brunswick, and the board is meeting today to choose a new president. Obviously he finds his presence is required in Fredericton rather than here today.

This is a debate that was unannounced beforehand and which in any event seems to be serving a rather ulterior purpose for the government. Ostensibly we are being held here to deal with the dock strike in Montreal, but instead—and despite vehement protestations to the contrary—the government is carrying on with its normal legislative program and we do not know when we are going to deal with the dock strike. So much for the credibility of the government in setting down a motion in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the right hon. gentleman's statements on television and to private members, that this House was going to complete its deliberations on Friday. We understand the seriousness of the labour problems in Montreal, but I want the minister to tell the house straightforwardly how long this pretext that we are here to deal with the dock strike is going to continue and whether we are going to deal with this and other legislation purely on an ad hoc basis?

This situation typifies the government's mishandling of the business so far. There was no question of there being ample time to consider this legislation prior to June 30 so that we might accept it. In the first place, it is badly drafted legislation which embraces, in many instances, utterly false concepts. It is then presented to us almost on the eve of the close of the session, the government having full knowledge of the number of supply or allotted days that had to be called in June. Although there was nothing the government could do about that rule, it blithely put forward this legislation which involves a most important principle, namely, whether the government of Canada can unilaterally set itself up as an economic czar, or create the office of an economic czar through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), with regard to the development of industry and growth of business across the country involving a very limited degree of foreign ownership, as outlined in the bill.

The amendments to clause 2 of the bill, and the amendment that has been put forward by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, crystallize the fundamental question underlying this bill, which is how much unilateral authority the government believes it has in relation to the economic development of this country. This amendment provides that there must be some degree of consultation with the provinces. My colleague questioned the minister about this as will be seen by reading page 24:13 of volume 24 of the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs on June 20. The minister gave a reply that can be contrasted with that of his colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray), who had consulted the provinces. To the surprise of every member of the committee, the latter minister refused to give any indication of the attitude of the provinces, except to say in a general way that some were in agreement and some were not. The minister wasted the time of the committee during one evening's session, and it is no wonder that my colleague for Fundy-Royal quit the meeting. It was a disgusting performance and an effrontery to the committee that the minister spoke in this manner.

His colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will say, was much more forthcoming, though he did not indicate that a particular province made any particular point. I think he should have done so, since I read in a daily newspaper in my home city of Edmonton that the government of Alberta had taken the stand that it wanted full consultation. I agree with that stand. There is no way the government of Canada can declare that, by virtue of section 91 of the British North America Act, it has jurisdiction to move into this area unilaterally. One can only move in unilaterally in the same way that one can try to butt down a brick wall with one's head. The brick wall is not knocked over; the only thing that suffers is the head. This is what the federal government is trying to do in this case.

The minister has indicated that his officials will consult with the provinces, but I should like to know what sort of mechanism there is for this. We have the minister's word that there will be consultation, but if this minister is moved to some other portfolio, some other minister in the future may say that he could not care less about consultation, that there does not have to be any consultation with the provinces. Perhaps some form letter is to be sent out to a provincial authority, to some as yet undefined ministry. The minister has not indicated with whom or with what department of the provincial government there will be consultation. Is it to be a secretary-treasurer, a minister of mines and minerals, or will it be through a minister of intergovernmental affairs? We have no indication with whom the consultations will take place. If the minister will forgive my saying so, I think he is doing some wishful thinking in this regard. He is really grasping at straws. Why is it necessary that there should be this consultation? Unless the minister has indicated something that is not factual, the registrar's bureau of which he speaks, and which the deputy minister indicated would be manned by about 28 people, does not contain one-tenth of the people with the expertise required to deal with the problems that exist in the provinces.

I have taken pains to point out my grave doubts as to whether the government of Canada has the constitutional right to deal with a company or a business interest, and this could be an individual, that is in the hands of a provincially incorporated company or a foreign company registered under the foreign companies provisions of the provincial act under which the business is conducted entirely within the province in question. The same holds true in respect of a business organization which may be a partnership and is taken over by foreign interest. There is no way that can be touched.

If this measure were the result of a substantial degree of agreement with the provinces beforehand, then I think one could say that the worrisome problems of takeovers might be dealt with in an efficacious manner. I share with the minister his concern about takeovers which are the result of a U.S. conglomerate acquiring the assets, or a portion of them, of any corporation which involves Canadian companies. I have been concerned about this for years, and long before this minister came into the House. I have been concerned about estate taxes and the fire sales of Canadian businesses to interests abroad, because we have forced these businesses to be the sacrificial lambs of some governmental greed for revenue. One might have been able to rationalize this problem in respect of succession duties with the provinces. We know that the province of Alberta has said it will not impose succession duties in order to have an advantage over other provinces. British Columbia has moved in that direction and Quebec has said it is hopeful it can move that way. The same is true of Ontario.

What a mish-mash; what a jungle, and just after a commission has considered the problem of taxation for years and recommended that there be some rationalization of our taxation system this government makes changes in the estate and income tax provisions. It has been like a kid with a big spanner let loose on some delicate machinery. It tinkers here and smashes there, but the net result is bad. Now, we can see the fruits of the government's lack of consultation and its unilateral action. I know the temptation is great to move into this provincial field. Provincial governments are elected by the same people who elect the representatives in this House, and to whom this government is responsible. One would think this government was responsible to itself only and did not have to answer to the Canadian people. This government seems to think it can fly in the face of provincial governments which represent the same citizens.

As I said on a previous occasion, does this government think that provincial representatives are from outer Slobovia? This government seems to act that way, but I suggest to the minister he will have to indicate how he can act with expertise, without consultation, in dealing with the disposition of oil lands, leases and interests in the production of oil and gas. Where does the minister expect to find the expertise to deal with the disposition of timber interests in British Columbia or in Ontario? How does he intend to deal with potash in Saskatchewan? These are matters in respect of which there will be very serious questions asked, and I am not satisfied that the proper answers are forthcoming. The Atlantic provinces' interests are entirely different from those in the province of Alberta. We have heard the representations from those provinces loud and clear, yet I suggest these matters will be resolved by some economic Czar here in Ottawa. I make that suggestion because a provision has been included that a transaction will have to be of significant benefit to Canada. Who will make that decision except the minister? He will make a recommendation to his Cabinet colleagues who will pass an order in council in respect of these transactions.

I have not spoken yet about the administrative side of the fantastic bottleneck this legislation may create. We are not dealing with some 150 actual takeovers, we are dealing with hundreds and hundreds of transactions. If that is not so then the minister's advisers have been hiding their heads in the sand, or are lost on a cloud in cuckoo land. This measure will involve hundreds of transactions; as a matter of fact, even thousands. Some may argue that the transactions may be rebuttable, but that means the individual firm must undertake the burden of proof. There is always uncertainty, but I should have thought the government would accept the amendment from the committee in my name which was suggested by a number of public real estate companies in Canada. The burden should not be upon those conducting the transaction to show there is significant benefit to Canada, the burden should be on the government to show there is a significant negative effect rather than a benefit. Why should the people have to prove this to the government? Why is the onus on the individual?

The philosophy of this administration militates against the individual and benefits the God-Almighty state. We are mere numbers. We are now regimented more and more. The burden of proof shall be on those in business who are carrying out these transactions. It will be up to them to prove that the transaction is of significant benefit to Canada. Even in the case of a neutral transaction, an exchange of portfolio investments, the burden of proof is still there and is mandatory. Who among the advisers shall be qualified to advise the minister? Is this another area in which special representations will have to be made? If Bill C-259, shall we say, created a lifetime pension scheme for tax lawyers and tax accountants, this bill will be manna from Heaven for corporation lawyers as they beat their way to Ottawa on so many transactions which may be the subject of careful scrutiny and study by the Minister.

Then, what about the, shall we say, indefinite pressure which could be brought to bear concerning this or that transaction and whether or not it is of significant benefit to Canada. Such a judgment would depend upon who saw whom or who had what for breakfast. The decision would come down in that way. In my estimation, the burden must be on the Crown if it is to administer the legislation this way. The burden should be on the Crown to prove the disadvantage of the transaction and to negative the transaction.

I see you are becoming anxious about my time, Mr. Speaker. I wish to finish by saying the amendment put forward by my colleague from Fundy-Royal points out one of the fundamental difficulties in respect of this bill which has not been resolved. If this provision is not incorporated in the bill, more and more trouble will be created with the provinces and goodness gracious, I say on behalf of the Canadian people that there has been enough trouble between the provincial and federal governments involving well meaning but bull-headed people.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I should in the first place thank the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) for some of his comments on the importance of Bill C-201. So many people have stated that the bill was a pip-squeak or nothing, etc., that it is good to hear an hon. member acknowledge the importance of the concepts involved and admit that the application of that bill will be quite difficult. I am one of those who have said so on many occasions since the beginning of the debate. In fact, the consideration of takeovers from an administrative point of view would be so complex, that if the government had wanted to go any further, it would have been reluctant to do so, due to the tremendous administrative task involved. I therefore thank the hon. member for Edmonton West for having used this argument in my stead, because I tried to do it several times without much success, I confess. However I am not going to go as far as the hon. member for Edmonton West concerning the debate on the constitutionality of Bill C-201 nor concerning the point he raised as to whether the way of taxation would not be better to defend the Canadian interests than that of the examination of takeovers. I do not agree with him either concerning his request to get the opinion of the provinces. As I said in committee, provincial politicians have excellent channels of communication with the people and when they want to say to the federal government where to go or what they think of certain federal initiatives, they usually find a way to do it without our having to show them the proper way. So, if some provinces have not said in public all that they have told the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray), it is because they did not want to reveal their attitude. What they have said in public was what they wanted the people to know regarding their position.

Nor do I follow the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) in his analysis of Canadian federalism as regards foreign investment. I shall only keep to the two amendments now before us, and to remind hon. members about them, I shall read them. The amendment of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) aims at changing clause 2(2) concerning factors to be considered in rulings on the approval of takeovers. The hon. member for Fundy-Royal suggests the following addition and I quote:

after consultation by the Minister with each province that is likely to be significantly affected . . . the effect of the acquisition on the industrial and economic policies of each such province.

In other words, should we accept such an amendment, the federal government would have in each case of takeover to consider the effect of that acquisition on the economic and industrial policies of each province "significantly affected" by the said takeover.

Amendment No. 18 which we are also considering provides that the minister, in conducting a review of a takeover, and I quote:

—shall consult with the appointed representative of the province or provinces concerned with the proposed acquisition.

These two amendments are joined for discussion.

In committee, Mr. Speaker, I tried to indicate the reason why it was impossible for the federal government to commit itself to formal, compulsory consultation because this would be giving in a significant way to the province or provinces concerned an explicit or implicit right of veto over a takeover.

I indicated however that the government was committed to a maximum of consultations, of informal consultations having to do specifically with a particular takeover, and also general consultations having to do with takeovers as a whole with respect to policy.

In committee, we also adopted an amendment that has become sub-clause (2) of clause 13, if I remember well, which does away with the obligation that the minister had previously of securing the consent of the parties concerned in a takeover before consulting the provinces.

Because of representations made by some provinces and of opinions expressed by some members of the committee, the matter was put aside.

The bill in its present form empowers the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to consult with the provinces in future cases of takeovers. However, subsection (2) of clause 13 does indicate the following:

on such terms and conditions and under such circumstances as are approved by the Minister.

In other words, the Minister is free to consult with the provinces or not, according to circumstances.

The amendment proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal—again it must be re-read if it has not been done already—is not very accurate on certain points which I wish to emphasize to some extent. Unfortunately, he did not do so himself when he moved it. I am very sorry he did not have the time to do it. That was on June 26. He did not tell us then whether or not the consultation with the province or provinces concerned would be compulsory. He did not say anything about that, at least not according to his remarks. If the hon. member for Edmonton West thinks that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal made himself clearer than I think, than I claim he did, then he should point it out to me.

According to this amendment, we do not know whether the consultation will be compulsory or not. Does the hon. member know?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what my colleague would say, but it seems to me the expression "after consultation" presupposes that there has been consultation. There must have been some consultation.

Mr. Pepin: Consultation would be compulsory, then.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It would seem so.

Mr. Pepin: I would also think so, but I would not dare pass judgment without knowing exactly what the hon. member for Fundy-Royal had in mind.

The question that follows is this: does the province or do the provinces affected, to use the words of the amendment, have the implicit or explicit right to veto the decision of the federal government?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The answer is no.

Mr. Pepin: The answer is no. Very well. In that case the consultation is simply informal.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The consultation is compulsory.

Mr. Pepin: Then, consultation is mandatory.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes.

Mr. Pepin: I only say that there might be some circumstances where such consultation could well be impossible or even undesirable. Briefly, this is what I mean:

In certain cases, the takeover might very well be unimportant whereas in others, it would be such an obvious bad move that it would therefore not be necessary to consult with the provinces concerned before refusing it. In other cases—which also could very well arise—time might be lacking. Urgent cases might very well come up which would not allow us to enter into formal consultations with all the provinces concerned.

That is all; I am speaking in all sincerity and frankness.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And the provinces?

Mr. Pepin: It means those that are involved in that takeover, of course.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The provinces?

Mr. Pepin: Of course. But they are not necessarily parties to that takeover. They can very well be interested in those takeovers. But I am trying to sum up the debate now, so that I will not have to repeat it.

I would also like to know how, according to the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, it will be possible to determine the provinces—

[English]

"—likely to be significantly affected"

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Which states quite clearly what is going to be determined—

[English]

"significant benefit to Canada"

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: But I mean that in many cases, a province may quite well claim to be—

[English]

"significantly affected"

—even if its interest is rather marginal. Then a conflict may exist.

What is even more important is that situations may arise where the interest of a province or of a group of provinces will obviously be poles apart from that of another province or group of provinces. Then the mendatory formal consultation process might very well amount to a federal-provincial conference without a very clear decision being reached at the end of the debate.

Anyway, I wanted these arguments to be on record. I also wished to point out the dangers of this formal consultation as implied, a few moments ago, by the hon. member, that is to determine when a consultation is valid and when it is not. To force the central government to consult with the provinces or vice versa amounts to virtually including as a prerquisite for a marriage contract that love should exist. All this is somewhat redundant.

At all events, I wanted to prove that if this consultation were mandatory, it might create real problems.

As for the second part of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, it reads as follows:

—the effect of the acquisition on the industrial and economic policies of each such province.

[Mr. Pepin.]

This wording—if I may be a bit harsh—is defective since the problem is not to know, what might be the effect of this acquisition on the industrial and economic policy of the province, but whether this acquisition is compatible with the industrial and economic policy of the province or provinces involved.

I simply point this out to show that the wording of this amendment is somewhat defective, at least in my opinion.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes.

Mr. Pepin: I hesitate because I thought the hon. member for Edmonton-West, who is very keen on such shades of meaning, would be pleased and would appreciate and admire others when they seek to follow his good example.

Mr. Speaker, in any event, even there, there are some hazards. Why? Because the wording of the amendment of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal would require the federal government to implement those provincial industrial and economic policies with regard to certain takeovers. Therefore, one could very well say: You have a very poor knowledge of our policies! Why don't you mind your own business?

• (1540)

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What are you going to do now?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, all this shows that the problem is much more complex than would appear at first sight. My remarks were intended to show that considerable difficulties do exist.

However, I do not see, quite frankly, how we could ignore economic and industrial policies in the provinces affected by a takeover, especially in the very province where it happens. And this simply because the purchaser, the one who takes control, first of all will have clearly to understand and afterwards take into account the provincial policies in the industrial and economic fields.

The problem in such acquisitions of control is not one of impact on the economic policy, but rather of consistency between the takeover and the economic and industrial policies in the province or the provinces involved.

Mr. Speaker, all I want to say concerning compatibility is that those responsible for administering Bill C-201 will necessarily have to take it into consideration, "compatibility" and "taking into consideration" being the two key words.

Mr. Speaker, I think that one could very well assume that. One can also say so. I have handed to my two hon. friends copy of a possible amendment. If they are interested and wish to support it, I am ready to introduce it, by unanimous consent of the House. As a sixth factor or, still better, as a complement to the fifth factor, that is compatibility of the acquisition with the industrial and economic policy of the federal government, one could add the following:

(e) the compatibility of the acquisition with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policies of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition.

There it is. If my hon. friends are in favour of this amendment, I am ready to move it since it represents the situation which will in fact exist when the bill C-201 becomes law.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Edmonton West asked who will administer the Act? He is also concerned as to whether we will have enough expertise to overcome the complexity of situations that will have to be faced. I think the answer is yes. There are in the department people who are competent enough, I would even say quite competent, and of course, we will call upon all the other departments. The consultation process will also give us access to the provincial expertise and if we should need more than that, we will call upon the hon. member for Edmonton West to enlighten us on some particularly difficult aspects of this legislation. Of course, I am saying this with a smile, Mr. Speaker. The department and the minister are aware that the legislation will be difficult to administer and they will use "all the government's lights" and even those of private enterprise in order to clarify the many mysteries to which the hon. member for Edmonton West referred.

The hon. member for Edmonton West was also wondering with whom we would consult at the provincial level, when the need for consultation arises.

In my opinion, the answer is very simple. It will be up to a province to decide which one of its ministers will deal with the federal minister and his officials. I think it is customary for provincial premiers to write to the Prime Minister, as it happens frequently enough, as follows: My Minister of Federal and Provincial Affairs will consult with the responsible federal minister, or conversely, the Prime Minister of Canada indicates which of his ministers will participate in some federal-provincial negotiations. I do not expect difficulties to arise but, as a matter of principle, such talks should be held between the Ministers of Industry, Trade and Commerce on both the federal and provincial levels, except when a province objects to it and prefers to deal through its Minister of Federal and Provincial Affairs which is a department already existing in some provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I have attempted to show why the federal government could not commit itself to compulsory consultation through an understood or expressed right of veto. However, I have tried to indicate that informal consultations on takeovers, as well as generally on the whole of economic problems, are a foremost concern for the federal Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I have proposed an amendment which could make matters a little more formal if hon. members so desire.

[English]

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, the minister has made a suggestion on how some of the objectives contained in the two amendments before us could be achieved. In a moment I will give what I believe will be the answer to the Official Opposition to his suggestion, but first I wish to emphasize that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) was on the right track when he suggested, in his amendment, the setting up of a process of consultation.

These days all provinces have a pretty heavy stake in industrial development. I know that the provinces in Atlantic Canada certainly do. We are all hungry for capital, for business, for the creation of jobs, and we set no national or parochial limits on where we may go to obtain the necessary funds. So, it is a matter of serious consequence to us whether any of the help that is given to industries which may come to our provinces will clash with some national policy administered by a government that may or may not be friendly to the interests of our regions.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal and the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) have made valid points in the suggestions they put forward. The question really boils down to whether there should or should not be consultation when the minister and his department administer this legislation. While he has rejected the process of consultation, the minister at least has shown some spirit of co-operation in his proposed amendment. Perhaps I should read the English version because when it was read in French by the minister the interpretation did not come through quite as we envisaged it. The English version would be to strike out lines 25 to 27 on page 2 and substitute the following:

(e) the compatability of the acquisition with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policies of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition.

At least there would be a direction to the minister and his officials. If they exercised this function in a mean way rather than a generous way, or in a way that was not within the spirit of the proper operation of the legislation, they could be held to some kind of account, either in Parliament or in a parliamentary committee, and eventually the country would judge them for being cavalier or contemptuous with respect to the position of any province. This amendment provides a bridge toward the position staked out by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal and the hon. member for Waterloo. It does not go all the way. But around here, no matter how hard we grumble, we are conditioned to accepting the proferred half-loaf, and so on behalf of myself and my colleagues I say that we would be prepared to see the withdrawal of the two other amendments and acceptance of the one suggested by the minister.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is useful that the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) presented their motions for our consideration. The government's record in dealing with the provinces on the question of foreign ownership has been most inadequate. I want to make it clear that I disagree very strongly with the stance taken by some provincial governments on this matter. As the minister knows, some provinces have protested that the legislation now before us is inadequate, while other provinces do not want to do anything that would scare off foreign capital. Indeed, I am sure that some provinces would prefer to take a more reasonable stance within the framework of developing a better Canada. The fact that they feel forced into taking such a stance reflects the bankruptcy of the federal government's policy when dealing with such things as establishing an adequate Canada Development Corporation, an adequate regional development policy and in terms of developing alternate sources of capital for investment purposes in Canada.

Dealing with the amendments now before us, I agree with the contention which has already been made that we cannot simply ignore the role of the provinces in developing a national policy for a sound and strong Canadian economy controlled by Canadians. If we are to achieve this, we must take the interests of the provinces into account and this means regional interests. We must also take into account the powers that the provinces hold in a number of fields, the concerns that they have and the stresses and strains that are imposed upon them.

When the government announced its policy last May, after a long gestation period, there was no mention of the role of the provinces or how they would be involved with the federal government in carrying forward this policy. The position was the same when the legislation was introduced, and even when it came forward for second reading, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that after all the provinces could introduce their own legislation. Mr. Speaker, how can a province introduce adequate legislation to cover the problems that we must be concerned with in the field of foreign ownership and foreign control, including takeovers, unless it has some sort of framework within which to establish that legislation? The Prime Minister's statement, which he made on several occasions, is meaningless unless we have federal initiatives in this field. We have heard nothing about a joint federal provincial conference to study takeovers or the broader framework that we have here, and nothing about an effort to orchestrate a policy across Canada. I acknowledge the difficulties of producing a consistent and coherent policy across Canada.

Finally, it would appear that the government felt it had to respond to some of the pressures placed upon it or upon the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Gray). He was sent on a mission across Canada to consult with the provinces about a month and a half after the legislation was introduced. He was to explain it to the provinces to try to clear up some of their concerns. When the Finance Committee was considering this bill, it was suggested that the Minister of National Revenue might be called so that the committee could learn what he found out in his consultations with the provinces. The government members of that committee did everything they could to prevent this but nevertheless, on June 19, the minister appeared and presented an interesting rationalization of the limited action being taken by the government. This must have been difficult when one considers the total study for which he was responsible. However, he made a brief opening statement to the committee urging support for the bill, but made not a single reference to the fact he had been holding consultations with provincial governments about it. Of course, it did not take committee members long to put questions to the minister about these consultations. His reply was that his discussions with his provincial counterparts and provincial premiers were on a government to government basis and therefore considered to be confidential. This is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Burton.]

The minister later stated that at no time had it been indicated to him that he was expected to say anything about his trip across Canada to consult with the provinces. He said that he had received an oral communication from the chairman of the committee asking him to appear, but there was no formal request to talk about any particular aspect of the bill. This is pretty far fetched when it was obvious that it had been made clear in committee why we wanted the minister to attend. I suggest that the minister's attitude is hurting federal-provincial relations which are difficult enough. The minister indicated that he would be consulting with the provinces whenever possible, but he did not want to be tied to an obligation to consult with them.

I was very interested in the proposed amendment which was placed before the House by the minister a few minutes ago. I believe I can say on behalf of my colleagues that this is an improvement in the particular clause to which it refers. When assessing a proposed acquisition, in addition to taking into account the compatibility with national and industrial economic policy, this amendment requires the minister to take into consideration the industrial and economic policies of provinces likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition. I think we recognize, in this way, some of the regional characteristics of Canada and some of the regional considerations which the minister, quite legitimately, must take into account. I must say in all honesty that this amendment will not make a fundamental difference to the legislation before us and will not result in any basic change in our stand on the legislation. This, still, will be a most inadequate piece of legislation. It will still be totally inadequate although, in terms of defining the types of factors the minister has in mind, and I am referring to one of five points, the minister has made an improvement in that particular wording.

• (1600)

I prefer the wording the minister proposed to the wording proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in Motion No. 4, as originally placed on the order paper. Although we might be sympathetic towards the amendment that was proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, that particular wording tended to place some degree of paramountcy on the views of the province of provinces concerned instead of taking national factors into account and giving them paramountcy. Really, I prefer the minister's wording to that originally proposed by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal.

May I raise another point? By proposing this amendment, the minister has committed himself to consultation with the provinces. I do not see how he can say, in future, that he has taken into consideration the industrial and economic policies of any province affected by a proposed acquisition unless he has carried on a process of consultation with that province. Actually, I suggest that he has committed himself to that course of action. If that is so, I put it to the minister that, although there may be some technical considerations involving the amendment moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) which have not yet been taken into account, why could he not remove any doubts about the matter by accepting our motion No. 18. Perhaps, if the minister has some improved wording in mind and wants to make some changes, why could he not do that? Why can he not accept the principle embodied in motion no. 18 and include it in the legislation?

The principle of the amendment is that the minister will consult the provinces when he is carrying out any sort of meaningful review of a proposed acquisition. Why could the minister not accept this principle instead of rejecting it out of hand? I suggest it would be an improvement. I want to co-operate with the minister. I always want to help him, as he knows. I suggest it would be helpful to the legislation the minister is interested in if he were to accept motion no. 18, or the principle of it, because that acceptance would remove one of the emotional roadblocks that may be encountered from time to time in connection with the administration of this legislation.

Then, there is something to be said for the amendment the minister has proposed. In dealing with this entire question, it is vitally important for us to give adequate consideration to the role that is to be played by the provinces. We must consider the concerns, interests and powers of the provinces in dealing with the economy of our country. Neither the federal government alone nor the provincial governments by themselves can find adequate solutions for our national economic difficulties. More and more we shall need joint federal and provincial planning for our economy. The efforts of the provinces and of the federal government will need to be orchestrated, so to speak, with the federal government playing, quite rightly, the central role. Often the federal authority must play the role of initiator. If the federal government is to take account of the concerns and aspirations of the entire country it must, in any action, take into account the legitimate regional concerns of the various parts of Canada. With that in mind I hope the minister will, in addition to responding as he has to the motion that is now being considered, respond favourably to the other amendment proposed by my colleague for Waterloo.

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make some observations in connection with the motions presently before the House. I think every member of this House must pay a great deal of attention to the provisions embodied in Bill C-201, since it affects the interaction between the federal authority and the various provincial governments in a most important area. So, in making some observations relative to these proposed amendments I am conscious that there are many avenues of consideration in connection with this subject matter which affects the unity of Canada. We must keep in mind that we live in a large country. The distance from sea to sea is in the neighbourhood of 4,000 miles. I do not know how far it is from the forty-ninth parallel to the Arctic Circle; certainly, it is a great distance. In a country with an area of nearly 3.5 million square miles, with various regions which produce such varieties of goods, products of the soil, products of the sea and products of the forest, it is most difficult to produce legislation that can be uniformly applied.

The present minister, or any other minister, must administer such legislation in the general public interest and bear in mind, at the same time, that there is great variation between the different parts of Canada. Since Canada is such a vast country, we must show a great deal of sympathy for the minister. The minister in turn, I am sure, listens sympathetically when we bring before him the various views held by the various regions of the country from which we come and for which we are responsible. It is difficult to enact a statute which will have uniform application across the country. I acknowledge that. It is difficult for the interests of all to be considered. In the final analysis, any decision of this sort must combine, in fairness, the interests of the regions with the national interest. When you try to combine the interests of all the regions of this country, you are apt to run into difficulties. That is what we are discussing in this House at present.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) suggested, and I agree with him to a great extent, that the government is trying to make slaves of people for the benefit of a collective body known as the government. It is saying to the people concerned, "You must prove, to the satisfaction of a group we will select, that what you contemplate doing is definitely in the public interest." The hon. member for Edmonton West suggests that the people concerned ought to say to the government, "This is what we propose to do," and it is up to the government to show that the takeover is not desirable. I think I have interpreted correctly the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West. That, substantially, is his proposal, and that was his criticism. He argued that the individual should not be required to prove his case, but that the government should show beyond a reasonable doubt that the proposed takeover is detrimental to the general public interest.

The minister is arguing with a certain amount of conviction that the federal government cannot possibly commit itself to a policy of this sort, a policy which allows anything approaching veto power to anyone. I am not arguing strongly that this is a wrong opinion. I have always been impressed by the general idea that you make a great country if you create within that country an atmosphere of opportunity so that an individual may be able to use the talents he possesses for the benefit of the whole body, the whole system, the whole country. If you set up an atmosphere in which an individual can do things for himself and make a contribution to the country—and I see many such people within the range of my voice—then I consider that the whole collective body will benefit, because those same individuals, working for themselves and doing things for themselves, will, of necessity, contribute to the good of the country as a whole.

The minister said this afternoon informally, that he agrees with the very thing which the amendment put forward by my hon. friend from Fundy-Royal proposes, though he had certain reservations reflecting his own opinion and taking into account administrative considerations. He agrees there was an informal understanding in the committee along the very lines of this amendment. He might well consider a move which would put into appropriate language the informal understanding which was concluded. Since the minister has already agreed to do so, I suppose those words taken from notes I had prepared, will do no particular good at this point. On the other hand, they will do no particular harm either. This is exactly what he has done, and he has done it without any consultation with me, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker. This only serves to prove that great minds run in the same channel.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flemming: My opinion of the effect of this legislation on my native province is well known. I am afraid it will establish a barrier against the in-flow of capital into my province. I have expressed this view in committee and I have expressed it privately to the minister. In our part of the world we need such an in-flow of capital. New Brunswick is neighbour to the State of Maine and the New England States of the United States. They buy our goods, our livestock, our forest products, our products of the sea, things which are surplus to our own requirements. The New England states are closer to us than the markets of central Canada. I am not going to argue about what took place 105 years ago. No one knows what would have happened had those two provinces in the centre not united with the two important ones in the east to make up Canada. But we started a course of sending our goods east and west rather than north and south. In a way, perhaps, we were working against geography and the trade pattern which existed at that time, because my native province was trading very freely with the United States during that period. The province was very prosperous as, indeed, were all the Atlantic provinces.

The point to which I should like to draw the minister's attention is this. I understand the difficulties which are bound to arise in the course of the administration of this bill. I believe I am conscious of the minister's determination, and I have no reason to say I am not conscious of the government's determination, and I have no reason to say I am not conscious of the government's determination, to do some screening for the benefit of the country at large. In the event that certain propositions are likely to be definitely detrimental to Canada's interest, I would be the last person to say that action should not be taken. At the same time, I trust the minister is concerned to assure that takeovers whose effect would be desirable are not prevented simply because someone may say that such and such a company or corporation would then be owned by an outside interest. I do not intend to go into that subject, either, this afternoon. I would merely point out that the bill emphasizes the word "control" rather than "ownership". I have always believed that the really important aspect is management, the manner in which management performs relative to the community in which the business is located and to the country of which it is a part.

It is only a few weeks ago that I stood in this House and told the story of the success of an enterprise in my province which grew from a very modest beginning with the help of the government of which I was a member. Its bonds were guaranteed by that government. Today it has plants in England and in Australia; it has grown to be a tremendous international food processing company. I refer to McCain's Foods. The assistance which the government gave to that company to enable it to expand has been well justified because it has contributed to the development of the part of New Brunswick in which its major operations are centred. No unemployment problem arises there; men and women know they can always get a job at McCains. There are 1,600 people working in the province and another 3,000 on the payrolls in connection with various activities which are not confined to Canada. Some of these activities are in Australia, others in Britain, but there has been a continual story of progress and success.

I pointed out to the House that this company produced to the government figures showing the amount of French fried potatoes being imported into Canada. It then told the government they could be manufactured in Canada and there was a market for them. As a result, we guaranteed their bonds and it never cost them a cent. My point is that had it not been for the great market to the south of this country, this company would never have existed.

I am not one who is fearful about who owns a business; what I am concerned about is who manages the business, that the business obeys the laws of the country, that it pays the prevailing wage rates, and that it contributes to the community. As for the matter of ownership, it seems to me that only in the most drastic situation should you interfere with the flow of capital coming into this country. I am not arguing that it should not be interfered with, but from the point of view of the national interest it would be well carefully to examine the situation. This is what the minister says his staff is going to do. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), speaking on behalf of our party, has accepted the minister's suggestion concerning an acceptable amendment and I do not propose to differ. Naturally, I also accept the suggestion. The fact that the minister understands the views of opposition parties and is prepared to recognize those views should gratify All members of the House since it indicates that at least one occupant of the front benches is prepared to listen to us, that our words are not falling on deaf ears. Some members of this House do not speak very often because they feel that no one pays any attention to them. Today, there has been a change in the situation; the minister is paying attention and is going to accept an amendment, and to me this is very stimulating.

At the disposal of the minister are the collective views, knowledge and experience of all 264 members of this House. As I say, he has recognized those qualities and is going to accept an amendment. I have had enough experience to know how difficult it is for ministers of the Crown to accept amendments put forward by the opposition, since the government seems to think that the opposition are going to crow about it until they are blue in the face. In this particular case, I am glad the minister has been big enough to take note of the representations that have been made. I am convinced they will be of benefit to the country, and I hope they will make his duties of administration a little less difficult.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I may say I sincerely believe in consultation. I started out by saying that it was difficult to pass statutes of uniform application that are still fair. According to the minister there are going to be informal consultations, and the provinces will be consulted. Their views will be considered and so will certain other matters that affect them as well as the central government. In view of that, it seems to me we might hope that Bill C-201 will be of benefit to this great country of Canada. I see you are about to stop me, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude by saying that I appreciate the interest the House has shown in what I have had to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A point of order, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, my colleague from Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) is necessarily away this afternoon but we received word that he will be back here during the supper hour. Rather than moving that the House agree to a withdrawal of his motion, since we are agreed on the minister's proposal, I wonder whether we might defer the motion so that the hon. member can withdraw it. I think he will agree to do this, but I would not want to do it on his behalf. We do not want to dispose of his motion at the present time if he is going to withdraw it. I am merely asking that we defer the matter until his return at eight o'clock, when I think it will be very satisfactorily resolved and we can then take action on the minister's amendment.

Mr. Saltsman: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I agree that the hon. member who moved the amendment on behalf of the Conservative party should have the opportunity of withdrawing it if he so chooses. Since my amendment is grouped with his, I should like to indicate that I am quite prepared to withdraw my amendment in favour of the one proposed by the minister. I think his proposition is a reasonable one as far as the bill goes and I would be quite prepared to have mine deferred as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Do I correctly understand that the House is agreeable to letting motions Nos. 4 and 18 stand until eight o'clock tonight?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I suggest we adjourn debate on this particular motion till the hon. member is here and can withdraw his own amendment. It is only for that purpose that we defer it, not for the purpose of further debating it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Perhaps I did not use the proper wording but may I say that we shall suspend the consideration of motions Nos. 4 and 18 until eight o'clock. I think that is roughly what I said previously. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Then we can move on to the next group of amendments, motions Nos. 5 to 9 inclusive.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I respectfully suggest to Your Honour, in view of the fact that motion No. 5 moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has a thrust in one direction whereas motions nos 6 to 9 have a thrust in another direction, though they do have some superficial resemblance to each other to group them together for debate, that we debate motion No. 5 separate and apart from motions Nos. 6 to 9 inclusive, and that they be voted on accordingly. I did not raise this point when Mr. Speaker made his suggestions the other day with regard to grouping, but I do make that respectful submission to Your Honour at this time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): With respect to the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to support what has been requested by the hon. member for Edmonton West. It seems to me it is a bit unfair, particularly to our friends in the official opposition, that their motions Nos. 6 to 9, should be more or less attached to our motion. Although we think they are wrong, surely they have the right to press their point of view on a level equal to the level given to us. I therefore think it a good idea that No. 5 should stand by itself for the purpose of both debating and voting and that Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 should stand together for both debating and voting.

• (1630)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should only like to add a few words to what has been said. It is not in respect of my friends literally and liberally to my right that a distinction should be made, but also in respect of my colleagues in this party who would not want any confusion to occur as a result of the suggestion that in substance our motions are essentially related.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, knowing full well that my bill can pass only if the opposition agrees with it I will let them debate the matter. If we take them separately, that is motion No. 5 and then motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9, the only thing I am losing is an argument.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I will have to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to debate motion No. 5 separately.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby) moved:

That Bill C-201, An Act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by deleting therefrom in paragraph (1) of subsection (2) of Clause 3 the figure "25 per cent" and substituting therefor the figure "5 per cent" and that paragraph (ii) of subsection (2) of Clause 3 be amended by deleting therefrom the figure "40 per cent" and substituting the figure "20 per cent".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be relatively brief in my remarks on this motion because the change was dealt with at some length in the committee. I am looking forward to the minister's explanation as to why he felt it necessary to change the bill from the form in which it was originally before being sent to the committee.

The thrust of my amendment would be in agreement with the essential recommendations of the government on this point. In other words, the percentages I proposed in this amendment are exactly those percentages which the government believed to be essential prior to all the advice it got from the business community in Canada. My point is that I believe, as do the members of my party, that a prima facie case for low level foreign ownership should be seen as the basis for concluding there is foreign control. We, therefore, do not subscribe to the view that we should support the change the government brought back to the House which would raise the level of foreign ownership substantially in percentage terms before the operative clauses of this bill are brought into effect. I will leave the matter in that way until I hear what the minister says in justification of the changes he has made in the bill.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will try to answer that point.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, all the hon. members know we are talking about control and presumptions. I am unaware that anyone until now objected to this procedure.

The question asked by my good friend the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) is this: Why this increase from 5 to 25 per cent in the presumption which exists in the case of the purchaser's eligibility in connection with public corporations, the shares of which are publicly traded, whereas the 5 per cent proportion is not increased for those same corporations when their shares belong to only one individual, government or corporation? It is only in the first instance that the presumption was increased from 5 to 25 per cent.

The reason for this is quite simple: it was done at the request of several witnesses. I remember Mr. Gordon, in particular, who said that presumption was so low that "it was a plain nonsense". Therefore, it is at the request of several witnesses and also certain committee members that we have taken this decision. There are two main reasons for it: the first one is of psychological nature. The corporations themselves which are Canadian-controlled and which involve a significant foreign capital participation, took exception to the fact that the presumption was 5 per cent only, while 10, 15, 20 per cent of their capital were in the hands of non eligible persons. These corporations' officials suggested that this was a reflection on their "Canadianity," if there is such a word. To accommodate this psychological reaction, we have decided, I repeat, to raise the presumption from 5 to 25 per cent.

I shall answer to these people, to these shareholders: If you are so proud of your Canadian identity, why do you not show it more often by refuting presumption? This argument does not seem to have convinced representatives from concerned enterprises.

The second reason for the change or the second impediment for Canadian controlled enterprises was the difficulty of proving their Canadian identity, wherever their shares were broadly distributed. Then, in order to please them, we have raised the presumption from 5 to 25 per cent. The only practical difference involved is that from now on, instead of having the burden of proof lying with the enterprise itself, whenever the presumption is between 5 and 25 per cent, the government will bear the burden of the proof.

That is why we have raised the presumption from 5 to 25 per cent in the case I referred to.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, one of the more slaphappy aspects of the original bill submitted to the committee was precisely this point which has been corrected now. The mover of the motion wishes, however, to turn back the clock and adopt what was originally presented to us. There was strong objection to the government formula at that time, and those who took the objection managed to persuade the minister to see the light. It would be a shame if we went back to something which really would cause a great deal of commercial confusion and would not assist the measure. Very shortly, we are rejecting the suggestion now being presented to us.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I find the remarks of the minister this afternoon in respect of the motion moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) very interesting. The minister can really engage in some pretty piteous reasoning in trying to justify his case. He defies all attempts at understanding. He does an excellent job of losing himself in the woods. He gets so concerned with the trees he completely loses sight of the forest. I must confess it is somewhat difficult at times to follow him when he is dealing with some of these technical points. He seems to take delight in spinning a very complex web in attempting to develop what I am sure, on many occasions, he does not himself understand.

This motion, of course, involves some technical considerations but also some very fundamental considerations. I should like to ask the minister, first of all, why he chose 5 per cent as the threshold level of shares in relation to the assumption of control, as provided in the original bill. This, of course, applies to shares of companies which are publicly traded on the stock exchange. Does the minister suggest the department did not have a rationale for that 5 per cent figure and just pulled it out of a hat. Does he suggest that there was no basis for this figure and that it was just an arbitrary figure? Does the same thing apply in respect of the 20 per cent figure relating to public and private corporations where the shares are publicly traded? Was this simply an arbitrary figure which the minister or his officials found some place and one which was not arrived at after a decision? I say I really cannot accept such a view.

During another debate, the minister commented that he has very competent officials in his department. I do not doubt that for a second, but what is lacking is some sort of current policy to provide an adequate framework in which the officials can do the job I am sure they would like to be doing. Surely, the minister must have had some rationale for the figures of 5 per cent and 20 per cent when he inserted them in the original bill. He seems to have thrown these figures totally out the window at the present time. In doing so, he has come up with a much higher level of figures, 25 per cent and 40 per cent. This would seem to be a rather high level when dealing with this area of presumption as it is involved in this rather complex concept in this particular clause. When this level was torn down as a result of some of the representations made—and I want to say quite frankly that there were some legitimate concerns and problems raised in respect of these figures when this particular clause was under study by the committee—the minister simply shifted totally from the 5 per cent and 20 per cent figures up to the 25 per cent and 40 per cent figures.

The minister was attempting to assuage the feelings of the business community. After all, the minister has been in plenty of difficulty with this community in Canada. I am sure the fact that the business community apparently has been quite unhappy with this government, whether justifiably or not, is a matter of great concern to the minister and the government. The minister indicated that one reason for making the change was that he simply wanted to satisfy the minds of those in the business community that they should not be worried about this legislation or any possible effect it might have on their dealings and transactions. I suggest that the minister has not come forward with a rationale for the change made in the bill at the committee stage. What he really has indicated is that he has submitted to political pressure from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the manufacturers association and the business interests in this country. That is the sole reason for making this particular change, because I suggest if the minister were to respond to some of the problems raised when the bill was under study in the committee he would have come forward with a much different type of amendment to the bill than that which has been brought forward.

Rather than simply making the total shift from 5 per cent and 20 per cent to 25 per cent and 40 per cent, the minister would have come up with a meaningful change to take into account some of the real problems which may exist, such as the problems in respect of affidavits and burden of proof. He would have come up with some other solution than the one he has in respect of this bill. It seems to me the minister is destroying any chance this legislation might have or might have had of having any impact on the Canadian economy. I believe the change that has been made in the bill should be rejected. If the minister cannot come up with any better solution than he has up to the present time, we should return to the old figures of 5 per cent and 20 per cent. If he can come up with some change which takes into account some of the problems which may exist or if he can demonstrate some thought has been given to the problems which might be involved, this might be acceptable. However, I suggest the explanation provided by the minister for the change which has been made as a concession to big industry, and which was adopted by the majority of the committee, is unacceptable. It demonstrates that the government is not prepared to come to grips with the problem of foreign ownership or foreign take-overs. It simply indicates a bankruptcy of government policy and the failure of the government to come forward with any sort of meaningful policy.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, as you know and as the minister well knows, I do not think this bill is worth the paper it is written on so far as protecting Canada's interest in the economy and so far as regaining Canadian control of the economy is concerned. I am certain, if this bill becomes law, the minister will have some interesting discussions with some takeover enterprises and may arrive at some arrangements which he will think are advantageous, but which in the end will be a sell-out of some other part of Canada's economy. It is, therefore, with some reluctance that one rises to speak on any proposal for changing so innocuous and useless a piece of legislation as the minister is attempting to push through this House. However, I think it ought to be said that the explanation the minister gave for the changes in the proportions in this clause of the bill really raises the question of whether he is serious, because the problems he is trying to solve are not soluble at the level of 25 per cent and 40 per cent any more than they are at the level of 5 per cent and 20 per cent respectively. The problems will still arise at no matter what level. We find the proof of the situation in the fact that we still have the words, "the corporation is, unless the contrary is established a non-eligible person" which were used in respect of the 5 per cent and 20 per cent.

Under the original clause it would have been possible for certain trustees, or whatever, of some shares of a company to be able to come to the minister and say that such and such is the case and therefore the contrary is established, that they are not foreign controlled. That was as available in respect of the 5 per cent and 20 per cent originally set out as it is in respect of the 25 per cent and 40 per cent level because it was there in the original bill. In view of the fact that a solution is not visible at any level—and at whatever level there will always be some gray area—in view of the original objections made by the people concerned and in view of the possibility of establishing that the contrary is the case at whatever level one is talking about, it really is impossible to escape the conclusion that the only concession the minister was willing to make was the concession demanded by the Canadian Manufacturers Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and the Bankers Association of Canada.

He was not prepared to make any concession in the bill that would strengthen the ability to do something about foreign ownership in this country. Oh, no, he would not go for that, no matter how reasonable the proposition might be, and add some factors that would give him some power. He did not want that because, as I have said on more than one occasion at various stages of the bill, this minister and the government do not intend to stop takeovers. That is not the purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is not to limit takeovers, it is to give the government the façade of having done something about foreign ownership when in fact it has done nothing. It is not an honest purpose because the minister is far too intelligent—and I say this because I have great regard for him as a person—and far too knowledgeable about the Canadian economy. He is far too aware of the facts of the situation to have even needed the Gray report to have made him aware of it, but with the assistance of the Gray report he cannot but know that the area with which this bill deals is a minor one in the problem of the Canadian ownership of the economy.

I want to put on the record that it seems to me significant that the minister did not need any amendment for the purpose of solving the problems with which he dealt in his reply a few minutes ago. The original bill had the loophole, but because the enterprises wanted a higher place so that more of them would get under that line, the minister gives in to them. I respectfully submit that that is merely another item in the proof, if another item is needed, that neither the minister nor the government are serious about protecting Canada's place in its economy. The sham which this bill is, is again underlined by the way in which the minister bowed graciously and smilingly to the demands of those forces in this country that have sold out Canada before and will, with his assistance, sell out Canada again.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in this particular field I have always wondered where the blind spot exists. I know that in the economic field the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made some very dubious statements, and the litany of those is long. But I must say, after listening to the short intervention of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), that I can accord him the palm of economic confusion.

Mr. Lewis: That proves that I am right. I need no further proof.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I can assure the hon. gentleman that what he has been advocating in the last two or three minutes clearly indicates that the badge of honour should go to the New Democratic Party because their philosophy merely entails more bureaucracy and more red tape not only with regard to the problem of takeovers but in the whole field of foreign ownership. I agree that this only touches a corner of foreign ownership, but that is not the problem at the present time under this bill. In so far as takeovers are concerned, let me point out to him, as if he did not know, that every time business, whether it is sole ownership, partnership or a corporation, has to make a move it costs money. Going to government, making returns to government, waiting for government to make a decision and sending representatives to Ottawa, costs money, and where does that cost go? It is on to the backs of the hon. member and the rest of the people who support him since they are Canadians.

I have never heard of another party in the last two years that in its programs has piled more cost upon cost upon any economic activity in this country, and yet it expects us to be competitive with the world where we sell 75 per cent of our production in the export market. Not only would we tie one another's hands behind our backs but we would put hobbles on our feet, if we listened to them. At every turn there is additional cost, and it has to be met, not only by those abroad but by the Canadian public. What is this for? It is to keep those people employed who would be put out of work if we became non-competitive. That is why I accord to the Leader of the NDP the badge of honour for economic misunderstanding in so far as Canada's position is concerned. Every suggestion that he makes is counter productive to the advancement of the Canadian economy and also a guarantee of employment to those people who he thinks support him.

I ask him and his supporters, would they get support from those people who could not work, who could not produce because the products could not be sold and because of the high cost with which those commodities would be saddled? I was pleased to see the minister make this change because, in so many instances, it is impossible for a corporation to know whether or not it is 5 per cent foreign owned. Shares are held by nominees, and a 5 per cent ownership in a company is a relatively small amount which can fluctuate back and forth. There is no way of knowing, but the act as originally designed imposed a mandatory duty upon a company by creating a presumption of foreign control with a 5 per cent ownership, when all the evidence before the committee and all the evidence the minister has ever received by letter or otherwise was that 5 per cent could not control a company, even if the shareholdings were concentrated in one hand. I do not want to anticipate the debate on my own motion which would increase the other percentage from 5 per cent to 10 per cent, but I fully agree with the minister that in using the figure of 25 per cent he has gone as far as the Bank Act, as far as the Life Insurance Companies Act—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Before I call it five o'clock, I must remind the House that motion No. 5 will be deferred because, as I understand it, at eight o'clock we will come back to motions No. 4 and 18 as previously agreed to.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland)—Pollution—Date of publication of regulations under Northern Inland Waters Act; the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay)—Pensions—Canada pension plan—Contributions by self-employed—Possibility of relieving provision; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave)—Grains—Possibility of increase in initial prices.

[English]

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PUBLIC BILLS

IMMIGRATION APPEAL BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS TO ENLARGE BOARD, PERMIT SITTINGS IN PROVINCIAL CAPITALS AND WIDEN GROUNDS FOR APPEAL

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale) moved that Bill C-23, to amend the Immigration Appeal Board Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the warm welcome which hon. members give to this debate on Bill C-23, which I reintroduced last February 25. I hope that they will give favourable consideration to the amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act which it contains. As one who took part in the debate on the Immigration Appeal Board Act when it was passed by the House in March, 1967, I am convinced that the accumulated experience we have had of it over the past five years demonstrates the necessity for a re-appraisal of the legislation, and of amendments to make it more effective. I believe there is urgency to amend the act and to improve the existing regulations.

This need was recognized by the responsible minister in 1970 when he ordered a one man inquiry into the problems arising out of the act, particularly as a result of the large number of appeals against deportation. Today the Immigration Appeal Board is faced with a backlog of approximately 10,000 cases. Furthermore, the board is operating with only seven or eight members, instead of nine as provided by the act. One of the members resigned in April last and no appointment has been made to fill the vacancy. The board has a shortage of members and of staff. It sits in Ottawa and Montreal, and only recently began sitting in Toronto. As a result, it is able to hear just about 100 cases a month. Its 1971 budget of approximately $1 million and its staff of 68 people are not enough to clear the backlog of 10,000 cases. Some of the appellants have been waiting for three years to present their cases. Many hardships are experienced by these people during these long delays and due to the restrictive regulations and the lack of proper counselling.

We welcome the statement which the minister made last month that his department would re-examine its position, and take special measures to deal with the backlog of cases. My proposed amendments to the Immigration Appeal Board Act number only three, and are easy to understand.

My first proposed amendment is to section 3 and would increase the number of members on the board from nine to at least 14, but not more than 18, to be appointed by Governor in Council. This increase in membership would help the board to hear more cases. As I have already mentioned, there is already a backlog of 10,000 cases. Hearings at the present rate would take ten years to clear that backlog, and the backlog itself is increasing every year.

I also wish to amend section 6 to allow the board to sit in all of the provincial capital cities, and in other cities as required. People have to incur a lot of expense when travelling from Vancouver to Toronto or Ottawa in order to present their cases and make oral submissions to the board. They must also meet the expense of a lawyer, and travelling expenses for any witnesses that they wish to accompany them.

My third amendment concerns section 17. It would add another ground on which the board could quash deportation orders. Members of the board, when hearing an appeal, would also be allowed to take into consideration reasons of merit, not only legal facts, and reasons of a humanitarian and compassionate kind. This could affect exceptional scholars, athletes, and other people who would make good Canadian citizens. At present if they do not qualify under existing regulations, and there are no humanitarian grounds involved, such people are asked to go back to their countries of origin.

However, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the government should also improve its procedures and services in immigration matters. I believe it should broaden the categories of persons who can launch an appeal, or the category of sponsors who can launch an appeal. It should also provide better counselling services. At present we hear many complaints from people who are at the mercy of so-called immigration experts who charge exorbitant prices for their counsel. These people are in no position to pay such high fees, particularly for poor advice. I also believe that the government should inform appellants to a greater degree about their privileges. It should make this information available to appellants in their own languages, so that they may understand it. If the government does not inform people of their rights, then an injustice is done.

• (1710)

Only a few weeks ago we were all shocked by the tragic suicide death of Alicia Wiercioch of Toronto who tried to appeal her deportation but failed and lost all hope. I believe that if some of the measures which the government has already announced are adopted, and some of the amendments which I propose are accepted, many hardships will be eliminated. This afternoon I appeal to all members of the House to put forth their views, and with dispatch send this bill to the appropriate committee of the House for further study and the examination of witnesses if necessary, so that it can be passed, given third reading and sent to the Senate.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in some sympathy withh the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) in regard to the motives for presenting this bill but there are some points that I should like to clear up.

The bill which was enacted in 1967 to set up the Immigration Appeal Board contained some very good provisions. Unfortunately, there is one lacunae, and it is one that the Supreme Court of Canada has had to move into under the Grillas case and one or two others in order to give more flexibility to the interpretation of the act. If there is an order for deportation which has been confirmed by the Immigration Appeal Board, no one but the Immigration Appeal Board itself can change the order. If deportation proceedings have gone forward to the point of exit from the country, they cannot be undone. Apparently someone thought that it was absolutely essential to remove all discretion from the minister. Personally, I think that was wrong because it also removed a good deal of humanity from the process of immigration.

I do not think that the difficulty lies with the Immigration Appeal Board and I would have liked the hon. member for Parkdale to give us his views on changes in the Immigration Act, particularly the regulations therein and their interpretation. Every year I have appeared before the Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration to question, to protest and to call for some action but nothing has been done. There is no flexibility in the consideration of the regulations and the interpretation of them.

To illustrate, at one time if someone representing an immigrant were to inquire as to that person's rating under the point system the file could be seen by counsel or a Member of Parliament. However, because some Members of Parliament dared to raise questions, and in many cases to point out errors and omissions which resulted in a change of verdict, the files have been closed. An applicant cannot see his assessment, nor can counsel, until the special inquiry and so does not know what type of evidence or questioning is to be faced there. At these special inquiries I have seen questioning which would not be allowed in a court of law where the rules of evidence protect the accused. An immigrant applying for landing is questioned far more irrelevantly than an accused in a criminal court. Is that right? Of course, it is not but it is the practice.

I have asked why an applicant for landing in this country should have to go through the ignominy of a deportation order because he questions the point system. He may merely want to question the assessment, but would have to go through a deportation order and then appeal it. For three years the department has been telling me that this procedure would be changed but we have not seen any progress. It is no wonder people feel despair when they tackle the immigration process. It is a traumatic experience for a stranger to this country, a stranger to our language or culture and our customs, to be faced with this procedure. I would have thought that Canadians would extend a hand of welcome to those people we would like to have join us, but we make it very difficult. The present system is totally wrong for Canada. I would suggest that all those people who came to Canada before the passage of these regulations might be invited to leave because today, according to our regulations, they were admitted under the wrong criteria. But I do not agree with that, Mr. Speaker.

With regard to the hon. member's bill, I might say that if there were not so many appeals, if the immigration regulations met present day requirements, there would be no need for this great increase in the Immigration Appeal Board. Does it not sound rather ridiculous and paradoxical that the appeals procedure should require a greater number of personnel than the admissions procedure? The Immigration Appeal Board has a large administrative and service payroll and the salary of the commissioners, I might point out, is not as low as that of Members of Parliament. Is it not a sad reflection on the system that we must increase the size of the Appeal Board?

Why should there be almost 10,000 appeals, Mr. Speaker? I know that the system has been abused. The government was warned from the beginning that they were building up difficulties. People are not stupid and they soon find the loopholes. Why do we need 14 to 18 members on the Board? I do not think this will cure the situation at all, nor will the changes made by the government at the present time. I was surprised the hon. member for Parkdale said that he welcomed the changes being made. Of course, they torpedoed the whole system. He either accepted the system as it stood or, if the changes were to be welcome, it meant that the system did not mean anything. The minister, even when the prospective immigrant scores only five points may, under certain circumstances, agree to the landing of an applicant who is here in Canada. These considerations do not affect one iota the individual who is offshore and who is being sponsored.

• (1720)

In most instances, the difficulty lies with those people who have applied to be landed from within Canada. I agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member that subdivisions of the appeal board should be enabled to travel to provincial capital cities. I recently appeared before the board in a case. There was some question as to whether I should recommend to the appellant and her husband that that young woman, along with a witness and an interpreter, should come all the way from a rural area outside Edmonton to Ottawa to appear before the Board for about 20 minutes. Eventually, I decided to do this by way of affidavit and the case was resolved satisfactorily. The idea of presenting evidence by affidavit represents a terrible dilemma which the average immigrant does face. I have acted in other cases, and the immigrants did not know how to proceed. I am thinking of one case in particular; I suspect I may have to appear on behalf of the parties because they have no money. In that particular case, the sponsor is over 80 and bedridden. Affidavit evidence will be required. Good gracious, there is no way one can get the best possible hearing on the basis of affidavit evidence. Therefore, I fully agree with the second part of the amendment proposed by the hon. member.

As to the third part, speaking as a lawyer, I suggest that is superfluous because, in the appeal part of the act there is provision for reasons of merit. The proposed section reads in part:

> A person ... may appeal ... from a refusal to approve the application, and if the Board decides that the person whose admission is being sponsored and the sponsor of that person meet all the requirements of the Immigration Act—

The requirements of the Immigration Act include reasons of merit. I continue:

> —and the regulations made thereunder relevant to the approval of the application or that there exist compassionate or humanitarian considerations—

That is the wording of the act, as well. The hon. member would add, "or reasons of merit". There is already, within the Immigration Appeal Board Act, provision for granting landed status on compassionate grounds.

Let me cite a case I was on last month. After the deportation order had been made, the young person involved had married and had a child. If that person were deported, it would mean that the mother and child would be separated. The board was not greatly concerned about the husband; he was innocent in this case, not having known of the deportation order. There was no way that the board could separate the mother and child; there was no way, also, for the mother to be sent back to her country, with any guarantee of coming back to rejoin her husband and their child. Therefore on compassionate grounds, for the sake of the child, the board was able to review its previous decision, discharge the order for deportation and immediately direct the landing as an immigrant of the young woman who was now married to a Canadian and the mother of a child born in Canada. It is for reasons like that that section 17 is included in the act. I would say, therefore, that the third clause proposed by the hon. member is a tautology, since the matter is already covered in the existing section.

I have made my observations on the other clauses. I think, myself, that the bill ought to be sent to committee so that these various matters may be examined and, if necessary, amendments put forward.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise, briefly, to support the general proposals put forward by the sponsor of this bill. In sponsoring this bill, it seems to me the hon. member is dealing only with a small part of existing difficulties in this area. These difficulties are well known to every member of this House and particularly well known to those hon. members who represent urban centres in which there are large ethnic populations.

We last amended the Immigration Act and set up the Immigration Appeal Board some five years ago. We thought that we had adequately dealt with the difficulties then apparent. Obviously, we dealt with them in a somewhat imperfect and half-hearted way.

The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), when introducing this bill, told us that about 10,000 appeals are pending and that the board, as presently constituted, can deal only with about 1,200 cases per year. Obviously, unless drastic changes are made, the situation will become worse. It already is intolerable. Let me commend the present minister for doing as he proposed several weeks ago and attempting to clean up the backlog of immigration cases. Although I commend his intentions, his methods entail ignoring the immigration law and ignoring the regulations drafted and approved by the government he supports.

The present immigration law and the regulations drafted thereunder have led to the tremendous numbers of people appealing their cases. In recent years, fewer immigrants have come to Canada than in earlier years, owing, I suppose to the downturn in Canada's economy. People in western Europe, where there is virtually no unemployment, are not likely to rush to Canada, where unemployment, seasonally adjusted, has been running at 6 per cent for two years and more. Although fewer people have tried to enter Canada, more people than ever have appealed to the board. This has resulted partly from our previous revision of the law. When we last revised the act we inserted a clause which permitted people who had come to Canada as visitors to apply for landed immigrant status and so stay in Canada permanently. Previously, we had not permitted that. Under present procedures, large numbers of people are coming to Canada as visitors and then applying for permission to stay in Canada permanently. If their application is turned down by the department, they appeal the deportation order to the Immigration Appeal Board, as is their right. As a result, the number of appeal cases has increased, and it has been difficult for the board to deal with the increased number of appeals.

Although I agree in general with the proposals of the hon. member for Parkdale and think that these should form the basis for discussion in committee, either during the present session or in future, I submit that we need to look at the entire act and all the regulations. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has already referred to some of the anomalies that arise under the act. When a person applies and does not score the 50 points required if he is to stay here, he is not told how many points he scored or why he was turned down. We need more public information about the criteria used.

Let me join with the hon. member for Edmonton West in saying I deplore the decision we made in 1967, I think it was, to remove from the minister the discretionary power which he possessed. I know it has been said that ministers are subject to political pressure. I can only speak for myself. I have dealt with a fairly large number of cases in the ten years in which I have been in Ottawa as a Member of Parliament: not as many, I am sure, as members from cities such as Toronto but, nevertheless, a considerable number of cases.

Speaking for myself, when having taken up a case with the minister or the department I have been shown that the application about which I have been making inquiries did not meet the law or the regulations, I have immediately dropped the case. I assume that other Members of Parliament follow the same practice. But when the minister possessed discretionary power, a Member of Parliament and, I presume, anybody else who took up a case with the department, was in a better position. I have found successive ministers responsible for the Immigration Department—and there have been a number of them in my time—to be reasonable, decent people.

When I had the opportunity to take up a case on the basis of common sense, on the basis of compassion, I cannot think of a case in my ten years when I felt the minister was being insensitive. I believe the hon. member for Parkdale would agree with me that had the Toronto case to which he referred happened while the minister possessed discretionary power, it could have been taken up with the minister and permission to stay would have been granted.

So I think this situation has to be looked at. The regulations need to be examined. The whole act needs to be examined. I commend the minister for what he did a couple of weeks ago. At the same time, his action demonstrated the bankruptcy of the present law, of the present regulations and of the procedures we now follow. We can excuse a crash program of clearing up a backlog which has now become intolerable. It certainly should not be allowed to happen again. It is the responsibility of the government to amend the Immigration Act, to amend the act dealing with the Immigration Appeal Board and to change the regulations so that the situation which has arisen in recent years does not recur. I certainly support the proposals made in this bill and I support reference to a committee, but I believe we must get down to making more fundamental changes than are proposed here.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Essex-Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) for bringing this subject before us. He has already given me instructions: I do not know whether you heard him, Mr. Speaker, but he said, "Don't talk it out." I do not intend to do that, but I believe there are statements I should put on record agreeing with what he said and others which perhaps reflect a somewhat different view.

What is the Immigration Appeal Board, and what are its functions? I have heard many people speak in this House about immigration. I have heard people talking on radio about immigration. I have heard great newsmen giving their views on immigration one morning, on transportation the next, and maybe on agriculture the next. I wonder how the same persons can be such experts, telling the nation what should be done about these difficult problems during a five-minute period early in the morning. I have heard them at it at night, too—different people.

I have appeared before the Immigration Appeal Board both as a witness and acting on behalf of immigrants who could not afford high-priced lawyers to appear for them. Since I am not a lawyer, I cannot charge them anything: I do this out of what I feel to be my duty as a Member of Parliament to look after these people when no one else seems to be looking after them. I may say I have yet to see a member of the press gallery attend an Immigration Appeal Board hearing. Maybe it has happened lately. These hearings are open to the public, but I have never seen a press reporter there and it beats me how they can be so knowledgeable in these circumstances. This goes for some members of the House, too, who speak about immigration but have never attended one of these hearings. They do not know what they are talking about. The Immigration Appeal Board is one of the fairest boards I have ever appeared before—and I have been in public life for 27 years and appeared before a great many boards at various levels. I disagree with the hon. member for Parkdale that the board does not take humanitarian grounds into consideration.

Mr. Haidasz: I did not say that.

Mr. Whelan: Well, I got the feeling that you did. Perhaps I misinterpreted the hon. member. I wish to say the board does act on humanitarian grounds and has done so in many of the cases in connection with which I have appeared before it.

The Immigration Appeal Board is made up of nine members. Who are they? I recently read an editorial in the Sun: I do not know whether the sun has risen yet or not, but if it is as inaccurate in all its articles as it was in that editorial, it has not. It called the members of the board political hacks and asked what they knew about immigration.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you to check the background of these people, their experience and the contribution they have made to our society. There is a group of highly qualified people who understand human nature, who understand human feelings. Their qualifications are high, in fact higher than those possessed by members of most boards of which I have had experience. One did not always win the case in which one was interested, but on leaving a hearing—which was always conducted by at least three members—one always felt it had been a good hearing, an honest hearing and that the members were really concerned about the people involved.

As a Member of Parliament I never presented a case before the board or appeared as a witness until I had personally investigated the applicant. I make the charge that many lawyers take money from these people without doing a proper job of investigating their backgrounds. They then blame the board, saying they did not get a fair hearing. I recall a case in which a large sum of money was taken from a would-be landed immigrant against whom a deportation order had been issued, and because my letter did not reach the board in time for the hearing they said the case had been lost. Can you imagine—a letter which cost me only a few cents, which was sent under my franking privileges and which got there one day late, was said to be insufficient to win the case! And they had charged this immigrant over $1,000! I say, shame on these people who take this money from people they know to be desperate. I know they have slackened the reins on this one.

• (1740)

There is a provision in the Immigration Appeal Board Act that provides for the cost of transportation and legal costs for such people. Yet I have yet to see this done. The hon. member's motion is a good one, though he seems to think I doubt that. The board can be enlarged and do a tremendous job. It can be composed of highly qualified people who can make independent decisions. We all know of many good prospects who are looking for such jobs. Who are they? In my area there are people who are retired—bankers who have retired before the age of 60 and are members of the teaching profession. They are still highly qualified citizens who have been dealing with the public all their lives and would accept a five-year appointment on such a board. As far as I am concerned, they would do a wonderful job. They would also be independent of the civil service.

Mr. Hees: Are they Liberals?

Mr. Whelan: I do not care what their politics are, as long as they are qualified. There are some Conservatives who would qualify for such a position, as well as members of the NDP. We even appointed one to be chairman of the citizenship court. A lot of people could qualify for this job and they would be independent, which is something that both we and the country want.

It has been suggested that these appeals should be handled by the bureaucrats. Have you ever seen, Mr. Speaker, one bureaucrat overrule the decision of another bureaucrat? I have yet to see that. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) pointed out that section 29 was tested in the Supreme Court because it was wrongly interpreted. I say it is still being wrongly interpreted. Section 29 gives the reviewing officers power to review an appellant's case before it goes to the Immigration Appeal Board. If a person is able to prove that he has adjusted to the Canadian way of life and has established himself, then he is given extra points to enable him to qualify as a landed immigrant. This is all the minister of immigration is proposing at the present time, and I say the proposal is long overdue.

I should like to make one thing clear at this point. Many articles in the papers have stated that the death of the unfortunate woman in Toronto who took her life was a factor in the suggested changes made by the minister of immigration. This is not the case. Several weeks before this occurrence I attended several meetings with the minister, and although we did not know what the minister was going to propose we knew he was going to make some proposals within a short time. During the interim, this unfortunate occurrence took place; but it had nothing whatsoever to do with the minister's decision.

We are all concerned about the backlog of appeals by people who want to remain in Canada, but I would like to know why some members say it is a bad thing that so many want to stay. I saw an article recently which stated that 30 million tourists a year visit Canada. Are they suggesting that we prevent these tourists from coming here? Over the course of three years there have been 10,000 appeals from people wishing to remain, which gives us a percentage of one-ninth of one per cent who decide to stay in Canada. Ten thousand out of ninety million is a very small fraction.

Many of these would-be immigrants have no way of receiving a proper hearing in their own country when they apply to come to Canada. Is it so wrong that when these people come here, they like what they see and want to remain? Have hon. members ever bought a car, a tractor or taken a wife without first seeing the product? Why should these people not have the right to see what could be theirs for the rest of their lives? I say that the principle of letting visitors to this country apply for landed immigrant status is a correct one.

Hon. members declare that these people are bypassing the procedure. I have a case in my files of a person who wanted to bring his sister to Canada. The department sent him a form letter which was almost the same as one sent the previous year, and the decision was that the sister should stay with this person's brother. It turned out that the brother had died and the mother migrated to Canada. This is the sort of review that applicants get. The department was in error. This proved to me that the department did not even review the application. So how can I feel that these overseas officers do their job properly? How do I know that the same thing is not happening in many other cases?

Some people go so far as to say that we do not need any more immigrants. I wonder how these people reach such a decision. Is their idea that we should aid people in foreign countries, but that we must not let them come to Canada and share what we have? Some environmentalists are declaring that we already have sufficient people in Canada, with 22 million, and that we do not need any more. I say shame on them and on anyone else who adopts that philosophy. This is a great, big country with room for many more people.

There are those who say, "Let us have immigration, but selective immigration. Let us just admit the educated, those whom we steal from other countries, because it is easier and cheaper to do it in that way." I recently attended a high school graduation. Two of the students who received very high awards and scholarships would not have done so had their parents not established themselves in Canada. One of these kids would be running around the hills of Italy, picking up branches to cook low-nutrient soup; the other would be running around the hills of Serbia trying to find something to eat. However, under a Liberal immigration policy they came to this country; one of them is now training to be a doctor and the other is entering the field of higher education, both having achieved outstanding scholastic qualifications.

I could go on and talk about this subject, but may I merely say I am sick and tired of people like that great Conservative by the name of Sedgwick who brought in the most damnable report the government has received. I myself could have written a more human and realistic report. According to his report, he contacted many members of the House of Commons—but I should like to know who the hell they were, because he certainly did not contact me. I know more about immigration than he ever will.

Let me say something about the refugees that we quickly screen and admit to Canada. I say there is nothing wrong with that. Most people think this is a good thing. Canada was the first country in the world to admit tuberculosis patients and send them to hospital. There is a plaque in the library acknowledging the fact that we were the first nation in the world to do this. We also let political refugees into this country. Yet now we are asked to be restrictive! I don't care who it is, Members of Parliament, members of the press gallery, members of the judiciary or any others—they don't know what they are talking about when they speak about immigration. But they ask us to be restrictive!

An hon. Member: Let it come to a vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: Keep talking.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Whelan: I could not hear all that was being said over there, Mr. Speaker, but I gather some hon. members think what I am saying is not sincere. I suggest that perhaps this is a good motion and we should pass it this afternoon so these people can be appointed tomorrow. As I have suggested on several occasions, I agree with the hon. member for Parkdale. This is something we should have had a long time ago, when perhaps we would not have this backlog.

An hon. Member: Let it go to a vote.

Mr. Whelan: Hon. members can have a vote or whatever they want. Our Immigration Appeal Board may not be the best possible procedure, and perhaps not as good as it should be; but I suggest it is not all bad.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member rising to ask a question?

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I very much appreciate the remarks of the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan). I should like to stress once again, for clarification and in order that there is no misconception, that I did not complain that the Immigration Appeal Board was not taking into consideration humanitarian and compassionate reasons. As I stated, there are no federal funds available for legal counsel to assist appellants in defence against deportation orders. The only free legal advice they receive is that provided under legal aid in those provinces which have such a system. We do not have legal aid for needy persons in all provinces in Canada. I checked this an hour ago with the registrar of the Immigration Appeal Board, and he said the board only pays reasonable travelling and living expenses in connection with the attendance of the person before the board.

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments on this motion.

An hon. Member: Now we are going to hear it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deakon: Perhaps if we could cut down the jeering on this side I could make a few comments in the few minutes remaining before six o'clock. Let me sincerely commend the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who is always a staunch supporter—

Mr. Hees: We just want a vote.

Mr. Deakon: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) always shows a capacity for interjecting when a person is speaking.

Mr. Hees: We want a vote.

Mr. Deakon: I should like a little courtesy on his part in order that I may make a few comments. I should like, again, to commend the hon. member for Parkdale for his staunch and consistent support for a review and revision of our immigration policies. Some of our problems are a result of lack of immigration offices in various parts of the world. People who desire to come to this country very often circumvent the law and arrive in Canada as visitors. At that time they apply for landed immigrant status. We all realize that when these people apply for landed immigrant status after entering Canada as visitors, they sacrifice ten points in the inquiry officer's review. Contrary to what the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan) complained about, I believe the majority of legal professional men sincerely endeavour to give good advice to those they represent. The hon. member suggests they charge exorbitant fees. There may be a few rotten apples in the barrel, but I believe the majority try to do the best possible for their clients.

Some difficulties arise because there are many people who hold themselves out as experts in immigration law. I refer especially to people in the province of Ontario who are notaries public. Many of them hold themselves out as experts in the immigration field. They advise prospective immigrants of their rights. This is also true of travel agency employees who hold themselves out as experts. It is remarkable that Immigration Appeal Board people can enforce the regulations the way they do when one realizes that many of them are not legal people and can only—

Mr. Hees: One more minute and you have talked it out.

Mr. Deakon: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings is very successful in his attempts—

Hr. Hees: You're not very successful.

Mr. Deakon: I might tell the hon. member that during a recent visit to the Soviet Union we were successful in re-uniting many families and we did not encounter any difficulty so far as Canadian immigration laws are concerned.

An hon. Member: Let's take the vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: We'll get Paproski after you.

Mr. Hees: You will get another trip in September.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps hon. members would give the Chair indulgence for just one moment. In order that there is no misunderstanding in the future, the Chair would like to point out some doubt about the procedural acceptability of this bill. The matter is academic now in that it is six o'clock, but were it to proceed further I wanted to point out that it does seem to the Chair that clauses 1 and 2 involve an expenditure of money while there is no royal recommendation attached to the bill. I think the Chair's opinion is confirmed by the words of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). The hon. member was not arguing about acceptability in a procedural way, but suggested that commissioners cost money. I think that if clauses 1 and 2 were implemented we would then find a difficult procedural situation. I raise the question at this point in order that we do not create a precedent and difficulty in the future.

The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' bills having expired, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motion No. 4 (Mr. Fairweather) and motion No. 18 (Mr. Saltsman).

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon in the absence of my hon. friend from Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) who introduced amendment No. 4, I explained, and I shall do it in a very few words now, that while committed to the principle of consultation with the provinces on matters of takeover I found it impossible to accept the formal and obligatory character which seemed to me to exist in the amendment presented by the member. I also expressed some fear concerning the provision which appeared to be included in the amendment, in respect of having consultation with all the provinces, "significantly affected by a takeover". Who would make the decision, I asked? After that I introduced a special amendment which I should like my hon. friend to support, if he finds it acceptable. The amendment would read as follows:

That Bill C-201, as amended and reported by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be amended by striking out lines 25 to 27 on page 2 and substituting the following:

(e) the compatibility of the acquisition with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policies of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition.

I think that is the best I can do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, in the interest of getting on with this innocuous bill I shall withdraw my amendment. The reality, of course, is that the minister does not want to swallow any amendments proposed by people in the opposition, so he has done a semantics dance—a summer dance, I suppose. The rest of us would like to do a summer dance somewhere else, but the minister seems to like to do it here. He has done it, however, and I believe basically he has caught the intent of my amendment.

The secondary reality is that without the provinces being carefully apprised of the factors the minister will use in deciding whether the takeover is of significant benefit, the provinces will have a major input or the bill will not work I wanted to institutionalize this by an amendment. The minister has gone some way to meet my proposal; the provinces will have to go the rest of the way.

• (2010)

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is there unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Agreed.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, would you like me to read it again?

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): There is a slight delay. I am waiting for my spectacles. I apologize to hon. members; I was in a bad position so far as either the English or the French texts are concerned.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I do not think Mr. Speaker should see through the minister's glasses.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved:

That Bill C-201, as amended and reported by the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be amended by striking out lines 25 to 27 on page 2 and substituting the following:

(e) The compatibility of the acquisition with national industrial and economic policies, taking into consideration industrial and economic policies of any province likely to be significantly affected by the acquisition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (Mr. Pepin) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker: The House will resume consideration of motion No. 5 moved by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock when the House adjourned for private members' hour I was commenting briefly on the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). I must say that under no circumstances could I recommend to my colleagues that we should return to the original proposal in the bill. The evidence before the committee was almost unanimous in advocating a change at this point. There were also changes suggested from the other side of the House of 5 per cent to 10 per cent at least. However, in this case I do not think any more is required.

I think that within the ambit of this bill, for what it is worth as a bill, this is a move in the right direction. The minister may smile, but he knows that I do not think much of the bill. I do not think the government has moved in the right way on the matter of foreign takeovers. The negative measures of setting up screening agencies and that sort of thing are not of any great value in this country. There are other, much more positive actions that could be taken on the matter of Canadian ownership in addition to enlisting the active participation of provincial governments in this field which have a great deal at stake and which can also scare away investment and deter Canadians and others from investing in the economic activity of this country since, after all, it provides the jobs on which people rely.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, throughout this debate I have been having some difficulty trying to understand the position of the hon. gentlemen to my right on foreign ownership. It seems to me that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has gone some distance in telling us what it is, and I appreciate his explanation. What he is saying is that the only costs are those attached to government intervention in the economy. He went on to say that if there is scrutiny or examination of foreign ownership, Canadian taxpayers will be burdened with the cost; but there are apparently no costs connected with foreign ownership and therefore we can safely ignore it so long as we do not have any government bureaucracy. By implication, if you take this far enough, I presume what the hon. member for Edmonton West is saying is that we should disband the government completely and thus significantly reduce costs in Canada and everybody will be better off. I do not see him objecting very violently, and perhaps that is what he has in the back of his mind.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: While I have been aware of some of the positions of the Conservative party, I was never aware of the fact that they were the anarchists of Canada. I think I had a right to hear from the hon. member while he was decrying government intervention, how governement intervention and the necessity of business to deal with government intervention would raise costs—but what about the amount of money that business contributes to both the Liberal and Conservative parties?

I presume that those contributions are costless if they give money to the Liberal and Conservative parties. I suppose this does not raise the price of goods in Canada, that somehow that is magic money which does not come from companies and therefore does not have to be added to the cost of goods. I presume, also, that the effects of foreign ownership, be they detrimental to Canada, are not levied on the price of goods in Canada. The only thing that seems to significantly affect costs is the government itself and the fact that the government will conduct some kind of scrutiny.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Do you want me to examine union contributions?

Mr. Saltsman: Union contributions do raise costs, but democratic action on behalf of union people is worth a little extra cost. If the hon. member for Edmonton West does not agree, then he and I do not see things eye to eye. I am sure it is much cheaper not to have democracy. If we did away with democratic institutions generally, did away with government and did away with agencies which assist the poor in this country, we could significantly reduce the price of goods.

I am suggesting that there are other values to be taken into consideration than a reduction in the price of goods. Of course, if union dues are a cost, then any kind of participation in our society is a cost. It costs money to hold hearings. The House of Commons is a cost. We could have significant amounts of money by disbanding Parliament, but no one in the House who would wish to see Parliament disbanded permanently, or even perhaps only for the month of July. This is a ridiculous kind of argument. I may be a little unfair to the hon. member for Edmonton West who, I am sure, does not really believe in an extension of his argument to the point that I have taken it. However, the trust of his argument is really in that direction and I think he should be careful before advancing that kind of argument. I support the amendment proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). There is considerable value in it to the extent that by focusing on the level of ownership we are getting to the heart of the matter of foreign ownership in Canada. The level of ownership is not that important, but the government has been playing at a game, pretending that if you have it at one level instead of another, you will be doing something about the effects of foreign ownership. It is called the percentage game.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) said that the minister must have had some rationale in the first place when he suggested 5 per cent before raising the figure to 25 per cent. He has a great deal more confidence in the rationale of the minister than I do, because I do not know why he picked 5 per cent and he has not explained it to us. I think he simply picked that figure out of the air. It is an incredible figure in light of other legislation that is on the statute books. Such legislation as that would be in conflict with the Corporations Act and with some of the objectives of the CDC. If the minister has some rationale behind selecting the 5 per cent level, he should explain it. I know why he increased it to 25 per cent but I do not know why he started off at 5 per cent. All the words he used today have not clarified his position.

What really emerges from an examination of foreign ownership is that playing the percentage game has really nothing to do with the main issue. In some cases even 5 per cent foreign ownership of a corporation might be enough to place it under the influence of a foreign corporation or a foreign country in a way that would be detrimental to Canadian interests. In other cases, 55 per cent, 60 per cent or even 70 per cent foreign ownership might not create that kind of problem.

The difficulty with this percentage game is that you have no way of assessing the effects of foreign ownership unless you have some kind of national strategy or national policy in terms of what you want to do with the economy. That is what we have been arguing consistently since beginning this debate. This legislation is worthless unless the government can tell us its strategy and objectives in terms of trying to direct the Canadian economy. Failing that, Mr. Speaker, we have a semantic argument, an arithmetical gyration between 25 per cent, 15 per cent, 10 per cent and 5 per cent, that leads us nowhere at all.

Even companies which are wholly-Canadian, Canadian pure, do not reassure me and many other people that our national interest is being pursued. If these companies operate under licensing agreements with foreign-held corporations, then very often they behave worse than branch plants of foreign corporations. Very often they have restrictions with regard to the markets they serve and the prices they charge.

Unless a move is made in the direction of planning the further industrial development of Canada, we cannot be persuaded that our percentage of ownership will have any significant effect in reclaiming the economy and ensuring the proper direction of the society in which we live.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are interested in Canadian control of our industry. Industry is the lifeblood of the nation. If you control industry, you control almost every facet of Canadian life. However, I want to go on record right away in saying that I do not want to join any witch-hunt against foreign investment. If we did not have foreign investment in Canada we would be a big cow pasture filled with pine trees. Foreign investment has made Canada the progressive and affluent nation which she is. I have represented the great district of Athabasca for ten years and I say that we need millions of dollars just to develop that district to its full capability.

I do not know where the money could be obtained in Canada alone to develop it.

Some have suggested the issuance of debt-free money. I do not think you can raise money by going into the basement and turning a crank. I know there are a lot of cranks in the government, and they are the cranks I would like to turn out of office. We must maintain Canada as a safe place for investors. I am not at all worried about how much money is invested in Canada. I think the present argument is over a worry that does not exist. So long as foreign capital is invested in Canada to create wealth for Canada and employment for Canadians, without risking our own economic future, then I am all for it. Without foreign investment we would now be a backward nation.

Before passing this bill we should take a good look at what it purports to do. If we are sure it is going in the right direction, we had better make sure there are teeth in it and that it will accomplish what we want it to accomplish. I do not want to waste a lot of time criticizing either the bill or the attitudes of other hon. members. I want to do something for which I am noted, that is to present a few positive ideas of my own, gleaned from listening to other people who know something about industry, in order to awaken the House to the dangers of hasty and ineffective legislation. Up to this time we have attracted foreign capital in large amounts and it has developed our country to the state in which we find ourselves now—progressive and affluent.

We need a bill which will encourage Canadians to invest in their own country rather than one which discourages American capital. I presume most of the criticism we have heard is levelled at American capital because that accounts for about 75 per cent of the capital invested in this country. Why are we not paying more attention to encouraging Canadians to work a little harder and to save a little money to invest in the future of Canada? No country in the world has any greater future. I think it is up to us, as Members of Parliament and as salesmen for our country, to sell the idea to the people of Canada. They are sitting on one of the biggest gold mines of the world and are doing very little about it.

What can we do to streamline this bill in a positive direction in order to get the interest of the Canadian worker, the Canadian saver, the Canadian financier, so that they will put money into Canadian investment? I suggest that one way is through deferred taxation. If every family in Canada saved $1,000 a year and invested it in Canada, the government would be banking money. We allow our neighbours in the United States, France and England to invest in Canada but we are missing the boat with our own people.

As backbenchers we are supposed to be powerless—but if we pulled up our socks we could help the Department of National Revenue draft legislation which would help the average Canadians receive some of the advantages. Up to the present we have failed to do this; that is why there is unrest. Certain elements can arouse labour into a state of frenzy because they have so little left when they pay their taxes and mortgages. We sit here in a country of staggering potential. No one knows the future of the Athabasca tar sands, to take just one area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I do not want to be difficult, but it seems to me that the hon. member who has the floor is not speaking to motion No. 5. We have been generous, but I hope in view of the time the hon. member will speak on motion No. 5.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, this bill has been in committee for a long time and now we are splitting hairs about amendments. There are a dozen or more amendments on the order paper, none of which get down to the nitty-gritty of what we are trying to do. We are now at report stage of this bill and there is nothing here which would encourage me to save a thousand dollars a year to be invested in the future of Canada. I would like to see some of these amendments offer a little hope for Canadians.

We are living in the most exciting 25 years of Canada's history. At least, it should be the most exciting. However, it may not be to the people who find at the end of the month that everything they earn has gone into current expenses and taxes. If there is any virtue in passing legislation to keep out American capital, I should like to know what is proposed to fill the void and to encourage our own people to save money and invest in this bonanza. I apologize to hon. members if I am boring them.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Bigg: In the Athabasca district, which I know something about, we do not know what the potential is. I am sure the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) will agree with this. A conservative estimate—I can use a big "C" or a small one—is 600 billion barrels of oil, enough to last us well into the twenty-first century even with the wasting of our petrochemical resources.

We are talking petty politics here and criticizing each other for not taking the right attitude. I accuse the whole bunch of us of being asleep at the switch because we are not putting into the Canadian taxpayers' pocket the opportunity to make money. Never mind the high-falutin talk about democratic ideals and socialist philosophy; when it gets down to it, our job in this House is to see that Canadians can make a living. If we do not make it possible for them to make a darned good living, we are delinquent in our duty and there should be 264 vacancies in this House. A lot of people in Canada are sick and tired of this nit-picking; they want to know what we are doing to make Canada's wealth available now, rather than waiting 150 years for us to do the job.

None of these amendments—Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11, etc.—gives the little taxpayer or the worker the opportunity that I think he should have to join the affluent society. That is why this is an empty bill, nothing but window-dressing. In its present form it will not do what it purports to do; it will not exclude foreign capital nor will it encourage Canadians to invest in their own future. I think that a bill which does not accomplish these things is useless and I should like to see a little common sense applied to it. We have become bogged down in many words.

I suggest that we put a clause in the bill—anywhere you like—or amend one of the clauses to say that any family in Canada that wants to invest $1,000 in risk capital will be allowed an income tax exemption on that money. If there is no profit in investing in Canada's future, why is this such a happy place for foreign money? We are merely putting our finger on the sore, without putting the band-aid on it. The band-aid is for us to pull up our socks and let our people invest in Canada's future. I believe they will do it.

Mr. Speaker, even a government as extravagant as this one would find ten years from now that they would have a tax base where they could cut income tax to 5 per cent. Five per cent of the potential of Canada would be enough to run any country and give even a greedy government more money than it has at the present time. There would be no need to play politics about it—just give every Canadian an opportunity to invest in his own country!

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on one or two of the points raised tonight. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg) has called for a government incentive which would permit a Canadian to contribute $1,000 a year tax free. He says if that were done a tremendous amount of investment would result. I should like to remind the hon. member and the House that there is such a tax exemption. It is not $1,000 a year, but $3,000 a year which any Canadian can invest and deduct from his income tax: he pays no income tax on the amount it earns every year until he retires. It is the registered retirement savings plan. The exemption was increased from $2,500 to $3,000 a year by the tax reform bill which was passed in 1971. As hon. members rightly know, this was a popular piece of legislation and it is good legislation already on the statute books.

• (2040)

Some might feel that the legislation under discussion is not exciting, that it does not interest many Canadians. Again, I disagree. I think this is an exciting piece of legislation.

Mr. Alexander: One would not expect to hear the hon. member say anything else.

Mr. Kaplan: Foreign takeovers in Canada have increased steadily for the past one hundred years and, for the first time ever, a government has proposed a comprehensive policy to control foreign takeovers. This legislation excites me, as it does many Canadians.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member does not believe that, does he?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: What the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said shows that even the NDP thinks this legislation is of value.

An hon. Member: What?

Mr. Kaplan: Many of that party's amendments could be ignored and considered as not bearing on this point. The particular amendment we are considering in this debate shows that the NDP believes this bill will do some good.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Bigg.]

Mr. Kaplan: That must be so, otherwise they would not be arguing that the bill has been weakened by any one amendment. The hon. member for York South began by saying that this bill is absolutely worthless, that it is of no benefit.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: How can you say that and in the next breath allege that it has been weakened by a particular change? You cannot weaken something that is absolutely worthless and useless in the first place. Therefore, I think they indicated by what they said that this bill is of value.

When members talk about lowering the 25 per cent ceiling, or about a 5 per cent ceiling, they are talking about numbers, about a presumption. They are referring to the level of foreign ownership. These figures have nothing to do with the basic principle underlying this bill, or the basic test. That test is still to apply. In other words, any company which is foreign-controlled and seeks to take over another company, will be screened. That takeover transaction will be screened, however large or small the percentage of foreign ownership in that company is.

I do not concede the point made today by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that you cannot control a company with a 5 per cent ownership. Neither does this legislation concede that. The 5 per cent or 25 per cent figures are only presumptions. The underlying policy of the law remains and is—as strong as when the bill was first put forward. In other words, if a company is foreign-controlled and it proposes to take over a Canadian company, that transaction must be screened whether the percentage of foreign ownership in the company taking over is 5 per cent or even less. In other words, the principle of the bill still applies as strongly as ever. Therefore, I think the amendment is unnecessary.

The NDP seem to forget that a great many companies which are not foreign-controlled would encounter difficulties if the bill as originally drafted were passed. They would need to bring merger or takeover transactions to the notice of the government and demonstrate that they, the companies taking over, are not foreign-controlled. The only point in the minister's amendment is that it relieves a great many companies that are Canadian-controlled of the burden of proving they are Canadian-controlled. In other words, they will not need to go through the screening process in order to demonstrate that they are Canadian-owned. On the other hand, if they are foreign-controlled they will not be relieved in any way by the raising of the presumption referred to. They will still need to be screened.

I should like, finally, to deal with a point raised by the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. Flemming). I had an extremely sympathetic ear to the point he made. For his part, he did not want to see this House pass legislation which might retard the development of his region. I think it is good that he should come here and take that position. However, I do not think there is anything in this bill of which he need be afraid. We know, for example, that it does not apply to foreign direct investment, although in the illustrations he gave that was the kind of situation about which he was concerned.

If I may speak about the area of foreign takeovers, to the extent that there will be foreign takeovers or proposals for foreign takeovers in future, this legislation will protect the people of the hon. member's region. The grounds on which the screening will take place, the issues at which the government will look and the kinds of negotiations that will be entered into will, contrary to possible expectations, ensure that his area develops and that the people of New Brunswick and the Maritimes generally will obtain the greatest possible benefit from any foreign takeover which may take place.

When takeovers occurred in the past, the only consideration by and large which governed was, how much money will the owner get. That must be looked at. I think it is important for that matter and for other issues raised in the bill to be looked at carefully. I think the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte can take pleasure from this legislation. He can tell the people of his region that here is a new definition of public policy and that it concerns the healthy development of his area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): The question is on motion No. 5 in the name of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Pursuant to Standing Order 75(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred. The House will now consider motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West), seconded by Mr. MacLean, moves:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by striking out the figure "5" where the same appears in line 14 on page 5, line 10 on page 6, and line 34 on page 7, and substituting therefore in each and every instance the figure "10".

The next motion is No. 7: Mr. Hees, for Mr. Horner, seconded by Mr. Alexander moves:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by deleting the figure of 5 per cent in line 10 on page 6 and substituting the figure 10 per cent.

Motion No. 8: Mr. Hees, for Mr. Horner, seconded by Mr. Alexander, moves:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by deleting the figure 20 per cent in line 16 on page 6 and substituting the figure of 40 per cent.

Finally, motion No. 9: Mr. Hees, for Mr. Horner, seconded by Mr. Alexander, moves:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended as follows:

in subparagraph 3(3)(c) by substituting the figure 10 per cent for the figure 5 per cent in line 34; and in line 39 by substituting the figure 40 per cent for the figure 20 per cent.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, if I speak to motion No. 6, this question was debated at great length at second reading. I think I crossed swords with the minister at least half a dozen times or more on this point in committee. The witnesses who appeared before the committee and considered this point were unanimous in condemning this provision as it stands in the bill. When I raised this matter the minister said, "Wait until the members from the Canadian Bar Association come, and we will see what points they raise." They raised two points. First, they were not satisfied as to the constitutional power of the government of Canada to deal with the problem as proposed in this bill. Second—and this is their other point—they were in agreement with what I contended, namely, that there are at least half a dozen major acts on the statute books dealing with the ownership of particular types of Canadian business institutions, mostly in the financial field.

There are stringent requirements governing foreign ownership and many of these statutes have been amended in recent years in this field. There is the Canada Corporations Act which says that 10 per cent ownership shall be the limit in connection with insider-trading.

• (2050)

I point to the testimony given before the finance committee, as it then was, now the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The then minister of finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) said that with a holding of less than 10 per cent no one company could gain control of a Canadian bank. Life insurance companies, trust companies, have also been dealt with. Sales finance companies, newspapers, broadcasting, have all been dealt with. The figures are 10 and 25. Now, for some unknown reason, the figures have become 5 per cent cumulative. There is no such thing as 10 per cent or 5 per cent in the hands of any particular individual.

Therefore, all I can say is this: let us introduce a degree of uniformity. If all the expert witnesses say it is impossible to acquire control of a Canadian company with a holding of less than 10 per cent, why on earth have people in the minister's department, people with little or no experience of business, come up with the figure of 5 per cent? If a non-eligible person, within the meaning of the act, acquires a 5 per cent holding in a publicly-traded Canadian company, or 20 per cent of a privately-held company, or if there is an acquisition of 5 per cent in a non-eligible company or an acquisition of the assets of a company, the transaction is subject to screening, subject to the determination that it is of significant benefit to Canada.

There has been a good deal of discussion as to the correct interpretation of the phrase "significant benefit to Canada". As it is, apart from some pious and hopeful words on the part of the minister, there is nothing which defines what may be of significant benefit to Canada. It is true there are certain criteria mentioned in clause 2(2), but these are meaningless as applied to many of the transactions which will arise. This is an area the minister has failed to clarify. There has never been an indication as to the way in which it would be handled.

As an example, I mention a transaction involving the acquisition or exchange of portfolio investments. This brings again to mind the amendment I mentioned this afternoon, the one which was discussed in committee, to the effect that the government should be able to show that a transaction is detrimental to the interests of Canada rather than that the parties to the transaction should show that it is of significant benefit. There is a vast difference, particularly when one is dealing with portfolio transactions. I suggest to the minister and his advisers that they have no conception whatsoever of the volume of these holdings or of the totality of these transactions in the course of a year.

If the minister or his advisers have read the evidence given by the witnesses who came before us, they will have realized that this country has no monopoly of attraction for foreign capital. The picture is very competitive—and if there is any degree of uncertainty, investors will get out. If the proposed degree of uncertainty is allowed to remain, I will make a bet with the minister that in the majority of cases investment plans will be abandoned. Is this what the minister wants? This is the sort of monster he is creating.

After all, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has had no experience in the investment field. Those who do have such experience warned the minister time and again of what may lie ahead. Yet the government plunged headstrong into this area. If the result, a year or two from now, is found to be underdevelopment of resources, undercapitalization, will it be a solace to any Canadian to hear hon. gentlemen opposite say, "we have made a mistake: the patient is being given a fatal injection; he is not being cured"?

I am reminded of the actions of the former minister of finance (Mr. Benson) when he told us he intended to deal with inflation. All that resulted was increased unemployment. Warnings were given then. Fortunately, some of the silly things which were proposed never came to fruition. This is another area in which the government is likely to run into serious difficulties. We have already heard that potential investors are becoming extremely skittish because of this proposal. I can tell the minister that I was asked about the prospects of this bill passing by a firm of corporation lawyers in western Canada the other day. They had a major transaction in hand and there was a clause in the agreement to the fact that if the deal was even challenged, the whole thing was off. The minister does not understand that these people are entering into a deal, one which, incidentally, is of benefit to Canada—

Mr. Pepin: Good. then they have nothing to fear.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But the possibility of intervention by the minister or his officials will kill it. The clause is in the agreement.

Mr. Pepin: What are they hiding?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They are not hiding anything but they do not want to expose the deal to any cockeyed ideas which may be held by the minister's officials. I am not going to repeat the arguments I have made in this regard. I simply draw attention to the fact that they have been made time and time again. The minister has not yet given one good argument for insisting upon the 5 per cent. Why not be consistent and use the figure of 10 per cent? Certainly he would lighten the administrative load in his department, which at the moment is an unknown factor but I am sure has been underestimated by his deputy minister in what he said to the committee.

• (2100)

I know that the minister was reasonably well disposed toward this type of amendment the other day. How can the minister say that the Bank Act is wrong? How can the minister say that the Canada Corporations Act is wrong? How can the minister say that the Life Insurance Companies Act and all the other acts referred to are wrong, but that this one, which incidentally is the only one falling under the responsibility of his department, is right?

I urge hon. members to accept the spirit of the amendments that are before the House at this time. My colleague for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) has amendments that are similar to mine but which make further adjustments with respect to private companies. I have spoken about public companies. I am quite prepared to accept the minister's proposal in order to be consistent, but I think his argument that this bill should provide for 5 per cent is absolutely ludicrous since all the other legislation of this kind passed by the Parliament of Canada during recent years have provided 10 per cent. Has the logic and the raison d'être of that legislation now gone by the board?

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). His remarks were easily discarded by the hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg), who said that amendments 6 through 9 were somewhat irrelevant to the whole question. It is of interest to note that a fellow member of his party finds amendments moved by the official financial critic of the party to be irrelevant. The logic presented by the hon. member for Edmonton West, who aspires to be minister of finance, I suggest is quite unacceptable.

Mr. Bigg: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Pembina (Mr. Bigg) on a point of order.

Mr. Bigg: I cannot let the hon. member's remarks go unchallenged. What I said was that these amendments gave no real effect to a bill that is without basis at the present time. I did not say what the hon. member just said I said.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I will not change my opinion of what I thought I heard the hon. member say. I suppose I could debate that issue for the rest of the evening, thus making the platitudes used by the hon. member in his speech even more irrelevant in terms of debating this bill.

The hon. member for Edmonton West talked about the Bank Act and the percentage used in relation to the amount of foreign ownership in Canada. I sometimes listen to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) with a great deal of mixed feeling, but I assume he is relating this percentage to foreign control, not ownership. Both control and ownership are fundamentally different questions from those posed by the Bank Act.

I find the amendments moved by the Conservative opposition quite reprehensible in the sense that if this is the sort of action that they would take on this measly, inadequate piece of legislation if they were to form the government, then we can well see how they would deal with the question of Canadian independence and Canadian nationalism. The fact of the matter is that they will not, and cannot bring themselves to find an answer to foreign ownership in Canada and to the questions posed by Canadian nationalism. These amendments moved by Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition demonstrate the weak-kneed, lack-lustre approach of that party to independence in this country and can be coupled to the lack of imagination shown by the government in the meagre answer it has put forward today to the question of foreign ownership.

The original bill made reference to levels of 5 and 10 per cent in regard to foreign control, and although the members of this party wish to maintain those levels in the present bill, we find the provisions relating to the value judgments and performance standards required quite reprehensible. As a result, the bill is going to be ineffectual. Indeed, it is mere window-dressing for the forthcoming federal election.

Let us look for a moment at the clauses of the bill to which the Conservative amendments relate. For example, amendment No. 8 moves from 20 per cent to 40 per cent the percentage of voting rights of shareholders, and thus increases the number of loopholes in the act so as to enable large corporations to avoid having to deal with a screening process even as weak and unimaginative as that presented by the bill.

The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) described this legislation as exciting, but I have to disagree with him. It is a piece of legislation that fails to deal directly with foreign investment in this country. It deals with a mere 6 per cent, and does so in such a way as to cast doubt on whether this government or any future government will ever take real action to control foreign ownership. The amendments presented by the Conservative opposition merely serve to underline the other defects in the bill.

I am sure hon. members are well aware that government members are bemoaning the fact that opposition members are continually putting forward negative proposals without offering alternatives. I think the government should recognize that there is one political party in the House that has offered clear and consistent alternatives to the policies of the government, namely, the New Democratic Party. The amendments put forward by my friends in the Conservative party do nothing to strengthen the one small tooth that there is in the jaws of the bill. The government party is always unhappy about any kind of criticism in respect of its legislation, yet we sit here and witness this kind of legislation in respect of foreign control and ownership.

• (2110)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether you might say something to those Liberal backbenchers who obviously require a lot of information. A very able speech is being made, and if they listen they might learn something.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair would like to say, with respect, to the suggestion of the hon. member that while I do not make any assessment as to the source of the undertone, I should like to hear the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight). I know hon. members will co-operate.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, the only thing we object to is the fact that the hon. member has not named the party about which he is speaking—and we should like him to tell us about the Waffles.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, the former minister of industry, trade and commerce is speaking from the past, as usual. He is out of date and irrelevant in respect of the Canadian scene. We in our party have been critical in this debate in respect of these policies and we make no apology. At least this party, which bases its democratic principles on the right of debate, can take credit for the fact that we know what is going on in Canada in the twentieth century.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knight: Hon. members across the way get very nervous when we point out the lack of imagination they show in terms of this foreign ownership legislation. Let me assure the minister that when and if this bill passes we will look at it with a great deal of interest to discover what action will be taken in terms of carrying out the very minor things involved in the bill. We will watch with interest. The amendments moved by the Conservative party in motions 6, 7, 8 and 9 weaken further what is almost an irrelevant bill. I hope members of this House of Commons will vote categorically against each of these amendments.

Mr. Hees: Tell us about Laxer.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I hear a request from the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) that I enter this debate, and I must say I am surprised to note how he and his colleagues are helping the Liberal party.

Mr. Hees: We just want information. We want to hear more about Laxer.

Mr. Saltsman: What the hon. member does not realize is that the Conservative contribution to this debate makes the minister more comfortable. The Liberals like to sit in the middle. They say the Tories are way out on the right and do not want control of foreign ownership. They say the NDP is way out on the left and really wants control of foreign ownership. Therefore, the Liberals must be correct.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: You are reinforcing the good opinion the Liberals have of themselves, an opinion that is not justified on the basis of any reason. I am surprised the Conservative members would be so co-operative in assisting the Liberals in this way. I hope they will desist from this so we can continue the debate on foreign ownership.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) went to some pains to indicate the number of witnesses who appeared before the House of Commons committee and were unanimous in supporting the increased level from 5 per cent to 10 per cent. I might have been more impressed had he related the fact that there were few witnesses who appeared before that committee. There were not enough to really question whether in fact this bill had received the kind of examination it deserves. I think the lines are pretty clear in this debate. We in the NDP want foreign ownership in Canada brought under control and we want to make sure that whatever foreign ownership there is works to the advantage of Canada. The Conservative party is doing everything it can, by presenting amendments and intervening in the debate, to limit any attempt to control foreign ownership. I think it is important that the people of Canada know that this is the Conservative position. The Liberal position is always obvious; they do not want to do anything at all.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed that a bill which does so little, qualified by some as "double zero," could be as potentially dangerous to the Canadian future as forecast by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert).

What the hon. member has told us today is exactly what he told us repeatedly in the committee. I have sympathy for some of what the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) has said. Let us pass this bill and judge it on the basis of what will happen in the future. This is what I have been asking for. But we cannot do that if we do not pass the bill.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That may be fine, but the patient will die.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the omens are good; it is indeed almost providential that we are here today discussing this bill. Obviously, the hand of God has intervened.

An hon. Member: Yes, but he is not in the House.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I think you should bring the minister to order for trying to equate the voice and the hand of the House leader with providence and the hand of God.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think the minister should be allowed to make his own speech and seek whatever help he can get.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I think there is something providential in all events that take place in the world, and the fact that we are here today is obviously one of those events. I agree with NDP members that the amendments contained in motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 would tend to reduce the strength of the bill. They would raise the presumption of non-eligibility from 5 per cent to 10 per cent. That change is in motion No. 6. They would also increase the presumption of acquisition from 5 per cent to 10 per cent and from 20 per cent to 40 per cent in respect of a private company. They would also raise the floor of automatic exemptions from screening from 5 per cent to 10 per cent, and from 20 per cent to 40 per cent in the case of private companies. So the position, of course, would obviously be to make it easier to avoid or circumvent in some way the operation of this bill, and consequently weaken it.

• (2120)

A question was raised concerning why these presumptions and the "floor" for acquisition were placed at the levels at which they were placed. We are asked how we justify these figures. I admit there is some arbitrariness in this, but generally speaking the purpose is to prevent acquisition of control of good Canadian companies, many of them important, with a very low level of non-eligible investment without even the possibility of screening these acquisitions of control. There are differences in the opinion of the experts. My hon. friend from Edmonton West has his experts who appear to be saying, if he quotes them correctly, that these levels are much too low. Others say they are already too high. There is a strong body of learned opinion which suggests that 5 per cent ownership of the voting rights of a public company, in some circumstances and in some instances, could constitute control. In cases where this is not so it would be easy enough to discharge the presumption, either by showing the minister that control does not lie with the person presumed to be involved or that the acquisition of 5 per cent by a person does not constitute acquisition or control. This is the very purpose of presumptions. I have said it so often that I am a little bored repeating it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But the patient will die in the interval.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, we have heard from the catacombs tonight through the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He tells us that this bill will bring about the end of foreign portfolio investment in Canada. I suggest that investors are not as nervous as my hon. friend seems to think they are: they are shrewd, hard-headed guys. If investment is good, I do not think they will be stopped by having to send a letter to the minister pointing out that they are not acquiring a control situation. The answer will be given quickly, in less than ten days. I do not think this will mark the end of foreign portfolio investment in Canada.

I might also remind my hon. friend that the acquisition of less than 5 per cent in a public company and of less than 20 per cent in a private company will not be subject to screening. So investors, in these cases at least, will not actually have to submit to the imperialistic dispositions of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I suggest, also, that most of these gentlemen are accustomed to dealing with circumstances and countries in which the exercise of these regulations is much more strict, much more cumbersome and much more sub rose than it will ever be, I am sure, in Canada. We are not dealing here with kids but with very sophisticated people. I am convinced they are, and will still be, interested in investing in long-term investment in Canada for a long, long time. I suggest that the hon. member for Edmonton West, is overdramatizing here tonight.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, even the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) seemed to excuse his efforts today by saying that it is rather providential that we are here today. I find it difficult to see what kind of rationalization he finds in this. I do not know whether he is a mystic of some sort, has some kind of communication with Mackenzie King in the past, or whether he really needs the help of providence in helping the Canadian economy.

I suggest that if the minister is to make these controls work it is very good that he should draw on whatever aid he thinks he can obtain from providence. I shall certainly not belittle that particular form of assistance. However, I think help should come from a little more substantive source than he has had up to the present time. But I agree with what has been said by him and, more particularly, by my colleague the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) in criticism of the amendments put forward by the Conservative party, because I think in amendments such as these we see which side the Conservative party is on when it comes to the crunch. The Conservative party is on the side of big business: its concern is with big business and industry.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Come on, now!

Mr. Burton: The Conservative party is friendly with the manufacturers' association. They get along very well. That is where its friends are. That is where it will obtain whatever help it can. It seems to me it is attempting to outdo the Liberal party and the government in wooing big business and industry in this country. It is quite clear the government felt it was in trouble with business and industry over the past several months and has been doing its best to calm things down and placate the business community. With these changes and the changes the government introduced at the committee stage, it made a further attempt to placate the business community. Now we see the Progressive Conservative party trying to outdo the government: it would make even more concessions. I think it has been very useful to have these amendments because we know exactly where the Conservative party stands when it comes to the crunch in dealing with the interests and welfare of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The understanding of the Chair is that motions Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 will be put and that the disposition of motion No. 6 will govern the other motions. The question is on motion No. 6. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please will say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Section 11 of Standing Order 75, the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

• (2130)

It is the understanding of the Chair that when Mr. Speaker reviewed the matter when the report stage was first called, he did not make suggestions beyond the stage that we have just completed. I know that if hon. members are not in accord they will so indicate to the Chair, but we might now take motions Nos. 10 and 11. The vote on motion No. 10 would also dispose of motion No. 11. Motion No. 12 might then be considered and disposed of separately.

It is also suggested that motions Nos. 13 to 16 should be combined for the purposes of debate. If necessary, motions Nos. 13 and 14 might be voted upon separately. A vote on motion No. 15 would also dispose of motion No. 16. Motion No. 17 might be considered and disposed of separately. Motion No. 18 has been withdrawn. I will not go beyond that point at this time, and if hon. members have any suggestion on the proposed groupings they might indicate it to the Chair; otherwise we could proceed with motions Nos. 10 and 11.

Foreign Takeovers Review Act

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I am holding up the debate briefly for my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) who is on his way. He has gone for some documentation. I hope the House can await his return for a moment.

Mr. Pepin: To accommodate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) we might take amendment No. 12 so as to use up the time while he is on his way.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I might put motions Nos. 10 and 11. Mr. McCleave moves motion No. 10 as follows:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by deleting paragraph 3(5)(d) and substituting therefor the following:

"(d) The acquisition of any rights described in paragraph (c) shall be deemed to constitute the acquisition of the shares or property to which the right relates except where it is established that the right was acquired for the purpose of safeguarding the interests of the person by whom it was acquired in respect of a loan made by him, or for the purpose of use by the person by whom it was acquired in the normal course of carrying on a leasing business, and not for any purpose related to the provisions of this act.

Mr. McCleave also moves motion No. 11 as follows:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by deleting paragraph 3(5)(e) and substituting therefor the following:

"(e) the acquisition of a leasehold interest in any property used in carrying on a business shall be deemed to constitute the acquisition of that property except where it is established that the interest was acquired from a dealer in such property or from a person owning such property in the normal course of carrying on a leasing business, or except where it is established that the person by whom the interest was acquired had previously owned such property.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, the House is in such an agreeable mood tonight that I hoped that by staying away these very worth-while amendments would pass with little or no discussion, thus adding greatly to the commercial law of the country. However, speaking more seriously, they are here to clear up what may be defects in the present bill. I am not saying that there are defects in this line in the present legislation, but after consultation with lawyers who are much more learned in this matter and have much more experience than I ever could have, I have decided that these amendments should be presented for consideration of the House and, more particularly, in the hope that the minister and his advisers would agree to them.

Perhaps the main purpose of the amendments is to make sure that this legislation not only encourages Canadian ownership of Canadian enterprises but encourages also the use of Canadian-made goods. The anomaly that I think I spotted in this legislation is that there is uncertainty about the leasing business and it might very well pay in large transactions to use American-made chattels rather than Canadian-made chattels. If this were so, and I think it could be so, then we would be defeating the purpose of this legislation.

I think we should not only look at the legislation from the standpoint of encouraging ownership of Canadian operations by Canadians, but also we should encourage if possible the greater manufacture of goods within Canada rather than their importation from abroad. Yet, unless one of these amendments passes, I suggest that companies may find that it is much more advantageous to go abroad to buy such products as large sawmills, jets or the like—the cost of which falls within the figures set forth in this legislation—than to buy them in Canada.

Another purpose of the amendment is to ensure that when businesses are to be financed it is possible to make the loan in the first place without falling in the ambit of this legislation. There have been some exceptions made already, thanks to representations made in the committee, but I think I carried it a logical step further.

The two purposes of the amendments are, first, to solve the problem which would prevent non-eligible companies from providing financial services for Canadian business—and this would involve hundreds of millions of dollars worth of transactions, so we are not exactly dealing with peanuts—and, second, to make it unnecessary for non-eligible Canadian companies to do their major leasing abroad. So it is in the spirit of helpfulness, of trying to make the law as crystal clear as possible, that both these amendments are offered. I hope they will, therefore, find favour with the House.

I understand, also, that discussions have been going on between certain people who are familiar with this type of law and the minister's officials. This makes me perhaps a little more confident that the point I am making is a rather valid one. If the minister wanted more time to study these amendments, and if he cannot accept them now, I hope he will agree that they be stood until just before the votes on these matters.

As I say, it is in the spirit of trying to make the law crystal clear, and seeing that Canadian made goods to the value of a third of a million dollars are encouraged, rather than importation of goods of that amount from abroad, that I have proposed these amendments this evening.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, while I would like to accommodate the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) on his amendments, I have some reservations. I am sorry that he did not take a little more time to be specific on how his amendments would work. I am concerned that in trying to correct some difficulties that occur in a leasing operation, his amendments would provide a large opening to nullify certain provisions of the bill. They might lead to a situation in which businesses, instead of being purchased, would be leased out in order to evade provisions of the bill.

There is a growing tendency for ownership to be somewhat meaningless and for the operation and command of resources to be more important. Many companies are switching to long-term leasing arrangements rather than direct ownership. I am concerned that these amendments would enable such a loophole to appear and in effect would nullify what the rest of the bill is trying to do. Unless the hon. member can persuade me to the contrary, I do not see how we can support his amendments.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, to use the words of the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), with the help of people much more learned than I am I have tried to analyse the meaning of motions Nos. 10 and 11. In general I think I can summarize it by saying that in the case of motion No. 10 it requests exemptions to allow a non-eligible leasing company to acquire property for leasing, and in the case of motion No. 11 to allow a non-eligible company to lease from a leasing company.

I contend that to cover these two situations his amendments are not needed. That which he is attempting to exempt is already actually exempt, but it is only exempt inasmuch as it does not involve the actual acquisition of a business, which is the point that I think the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) was making, situations which involve the acquisition of a full business, or for that matter the leasing of a whole business, which would have to be screened.

May I put this in more specific terms, reading from the notes that I have here, Mr. Speaker. There appear to be some observers who believe that the bill will adversely affect people who are in the leasing business. I want to try to clear up this matter. According to the bill, a person who acquires a leasehold interest in a property used in carrying on a business is deemed to have acquired that property. Does this mean that a non-eligible person who leases or rents a computer, a fleet of trucks, an aircraft or a ship will have to go through the screening process? The answer is no in almost all cases, because that person has not acquired "all or substantially all of the property used in carrying on a business" as stipulated in clause 3(3)(a)(i)(B), or indeed has not acquired "a part of a business that is capable of being carried on as a separate business" as stipulated in clause 3(5)(g).

This person has simply acquired "hardware." A business is more than hardware. A business involves at least some of the following: inventory, good will, a name, customers, suppliers, accounts receivable, accounts payable, and so on.

The government cannot, however, exempt leasehold interests for two reasons. First, a company could go into the business of acquiring businesses and leasing them to non-eligible persons. This would be a clear circumvention of the act. Secondly, circumvention would be possible in another way. Company A buys good will, inventory, etc. from Company B. Company B sells its buildings and machinery to a leasing company. Company A then leases this plant and equipment back from the dealer. He could avoid the act by saying that he has not acquired all or substantially all of the property used in a business. The act must cover the potential splitting of a business.

The conclusion is that taking a leasehold interest in a certain property, a piece of equipment, for example, would in itself rarely constitute taking a leasehold interest in a business. It would be an interest in part of the property used in carrying on a business, and consequently it would not be screened. But if leasing means de facto acquisition of a business, then it would be screened. I put that on the record hopefully for the benefit of those people who have been writing to the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister has indicated that there is an ambiguity in the bill. I am sure he realizes that the people who put forward suggestions for these amendments are cognizant of certain features of the equipment leasing business that may have escaped himself and his advisers. It must be remembered that the forms of transactions possible are legion, and one cannot say that a leased business must be of a stereotyped nature, making it easy for the minister to determine from the beginning that the transaction should not be one to come under the legislation.

On the other hand, as one can readily understand, there is the need for non-eligible financial institutions, of which we have a great number in Canada, to acquire goods from Canadian companies for the purpose of leasing them to Canadian businesses. Because of the wording of the legislation, the minister knows that a subsidiary, or a participant in a syndicate with a non-eligible person, causes the whole group to become non-eligible. For instance, let us look at the equipment leasing organizations that provide equipment leasing facilities for a number of the chartered banks. They are in competition with Citibank of New York, through Mercantile, but the Mercantile Bank is able through its affiliates—not its subsidiaries—owned by Citibank of New York and operating in Montreal, to engage in very extensive equipment leasing operations. And remember that the transactions between Citibank and its affiliates in Montreal are not subject to screening by the minister, but on the other hand transactions engaged in for the Canadian banks, in the Canadian context, could be subject to screening.

The acquisition of the equipment from Canadian companies—and in a road-building firm, say, this is the whole of their business—would be a transaction that would be subject to the screen. The minister says no, but I am willing to put a nickel on it that this will be the type of practice that would go through the screen. This is what concerns me, Mr. Speaker, that the actual practice will not be what the minister says it is going to be, but a lot tougher. What is done is to make Canadian business operations competitive with foreign business operations so that Canadians will not have to go and lease in the United States.

What about our Canadian multinationals, our oil drilling companies? They are going to go abroad. They have to buy equipment and finance it. I would not be surprised if it became to the advantage of our Canadian multinational corporations operating abroad to acquire their equipment abroad because of these requirements. I have always tried to point out that Canadian companies operating offshore will find it to their advantage to enter into transactions in other countries instead of acquiring Canadian machinery. This will now not be subject to any screen or control. I am concerned that by creating difficulties in Canada we are making it much more difficult for Canadian business to operate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister can shake his head, but I want him to get out and talk to businessmen who engage in these practices. The minister should be the first one to encourage Canadian business to operate abroad. He should be the first one to hit his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner), over the head so that Canadian companies operating abroad are not at a tax disadvantage with American companies. This is all part of the package. It is not only for taxation that you can discourage Canadian operations—

Mr. Pepin: The answer I gave is very clear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The point is that in his explanation the minister cannot guarantee this. If there is a dispute, the court will have to decide what the law is. A court cannot consider anything that the minister says in this House. I think the legislation should be amended in order to make sure that the court could make the appropriate interpretation.

I am sure the amendment put forward by my friend, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), is not one that conceals any traps. It is a sensible amendment as suggested by counsel, put forward for the sales finance companies on behalf of the efficacy of Canadian business. It is not trying to circumvent Canadian legislation for some ulterior purpose.

I hope that these amendments will receive real consideration from the minister and his officials and that perhaps tomorrow, if we are going to be back on this legislation, they can tell us that they have looked at it again and are prepared to reconsider it. The minister showed an example this afternoon by looking at the amendment of my colleague, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), and coming back with a modified version which in some ways met part of our desires. That is what I suggest he should do now. On that basis perhaps we could call it ten o'clock.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, before we call it ten o'clock I wonder if I might raise a point of order with respect to the grouping of some of the motions that are ahead of us which Your Honour announced a short while ago. You will recall that it was suggested that motions Nos. 13, 14 15 and 16 should be grouped for debate. You did indicate that there could be separate votes on 13 and 14 and that then a vote on 15 that would cover 16.

The point I wish to make is that the substance of motion No. 14 goes in the opposite direction from some of the others in that group. For the same reason, this afternoon the Chair was willing to separate No. 5 on the one hand from Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9 on the other. I should like to ask that motion No. 14 stand by itself both for debate and for the vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Of course, the suggestions which I made earlier were only suggestions and were for the comment of hon. members. If hon. members agree, the Chair will be prepared to make a group as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested or, alternatively, put the matter over to give hon. members an opportunity to consider his remarks.

[Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West).]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly agree that No. 14 should not be in the group of Nos. 13 to 16 inclusive. As a matter of fact, the spirit of No. 13 is quite different from that contained in Nos. 15 and 16. The context shows that No. 13 would exclude from the operations of this act a provincial government as specifically exempted by order in council of the provincial cabinet. I quite agree, and would propose to Your Honour, that Nos. 13 and 14 could be handled separately both for debate and votes. Nos. 15 and 16, which are twins, could be considered as one for debate and for votes or decisions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this meets our point.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As the Chair understands, motion No. 13 would be considered and disposed of separately; motion No. 14 would be considered and disposed of separately; motions Nos. 15 and 16 would be considered together, and a vote on No. 15 would dispose of No. 16. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCutcheon: A further point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could ask the government House leader, or whoever is in charge, what the order of business would be tomorrow supposing that this legislation would be concluded. Do we assume that we go back to this tomorrow?

• (2200)

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I think we can assume that we will continue tomorrow with the bill we are discussing.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask what else is on the agenda? It would be nice to know.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I believe the agenda is subject to a number of uncertainties. The available items have been listed before and they will be selected as seems fit. The FISP bill is obviously near the top of the list. Some think that wiretapping and election expenses might be considered in the forenoon, if the House agreed to sit then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, has the minister found a sophisticated way of saying he does not know?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

POLLUTION—DATE OF PUBLICATION OF REGULATIONS UNDER NORTHERN INLAND WATERS ACT

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief this evening and need not take my full seven minutes. I have referred to this subject continually in the hope that in the end action will be taken. I raised this matter on May 1, again on May 24, and I am raising it once more tonight. On May 24 I directed the following question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien), as reported in Hansard, page 2519:

> Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On May 1 I asked him a question on a matter of some urgency in light of recent oil finds in the Arctic, namely, when the regulations under the Northern Inland Waters Act would be completed and published. The hon. gentleman took the question as notice and undertook to look into the matter. I wonder whether he is now in a position to reply?

The minister replied as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the act has been proclaimed and I understand that the regulations are being considered by the two councils which have been established in order to implement them. I think that a meeting has been held last week and as soon as the report is submitted, we shall be able to proclaim these regulations. Meanwhile, officials of my department have advised the companies that they should abide by the regulations as if they were actually in force.

I think it is indicative of the government's commitment to the preservation of the Arctic ecology that the minister said, when I first asked my question on May 1, that he was not sure of the status of the regulations—regulations which he had promised would be in force by the end of 1971. He thought that they were in force. His answer on May 24 confirmed information which I had received, to the effect that the regulations had not been promulgated. Moreover, his answer gave no definite indication of just when they would be promulgated and when the regulations would come into force. I hope that information will be forthcoming this evening. I further hope that the actual date of the proclamation of these regulations will soon be here.

The present situation, in which companies are advised to act as if the draft regulations are already in effect, is obviously untenable on two grounds. First, it is dangerous for a government to require any of its citizens, corporate or individual, to follow a course of action which has not been prescribed by law. Second, and this is perhaps more important in the short run, the government would have no legal recourse in the event that a company operating in the north chose to ignore the draft regulations and, in ignoring them, caused ecological damage. The government would not have any legal recourse at all, as the required regulations have not been promulgated as the law requires.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the heightened rate of activity in the north demands that the government should act immediately and bring into effect the regulations which will make the Northern Inland Waters Act an effective piece of legislation. The balance within the ecology of the north is far too delicate to permit the possibility of error; indeed, so delicate is it that one wonders what can possibly be in the mind of a government which permits major efforts to exploit the wealth of the north to take place before laws and regulations to govern such activities have been devised.

I hope the parliamentary secretary will be able to present to the House tonight concrete information with respect to the expected date of the publication of the regulations which will flesh out the bones of the Northern Inland Waters Act, regulations which are urgently required to protect the northern environment.

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) I can give the House the assurance that the regulations should be promulgated this summer. The draft regulations are well advanced. They have been considered by both the new territorial water boards, and their recommendations are being incorporated. Shortly, a draft will be ready for review and comment by the interdepartmental committee on water. Legal drafting by the Department of Justice is expected to get under way by early summer.

The timing of these events still conforms to our original schedule which called for promulgation of the regulations this summer. It should be noted that the primary function of the Northern Inland Waters Act is to license water use in the north. In doing so, of course, precautions against the threat of pollution from the water use can be stipulated by the licensing authority, which is the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) acting on a recommendation from the appropriate territorial water board.

The water boards were created with proclamation of the act on February 28, 1972, and are functioning within the authority of the act at the present time. A public hearing before the Yukon water board in connection with the proposed Aisihihik power development has recently been held. We are confident that this mechanism is adequate to deal with water management problems on a short-term basis pending promulgation of the regulations this summer.

PENSIONS—CANADA PENSION PLAN—CONTRIBUTIONS BY SELF-EMPLOYED—POSSIBILITY OF RELIEVING PROVISION

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, on June 26 I addressed a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner). I asked whether he was aware that self-employed Canadians were obliged to pay the entire amount of their Canada Pension Plan contributions as opposed to Canadians who were not self-employed and who are only required to pay half. I asked whether the minister had given any thought to giving tax relief to this particular group. I received no answer to this question, and since I thought it was a matter of some interest I am taking the liberty of making some further remarks on the subject tonight.

It seems to me, generally speaking, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) opened the lid of a veritable Pandora's box of complaints when he made his now famous statement that the extra revenue to help pay increased welfare costs in this country would have to come from the middle-income class. Middle-income Canadians, though their needs are admittedly less than those of many minority groups and disadvantaged, poverty-stricken Canadians, are being neglected by this administration. One segment of this group, the self-employed, is being discriminated against in a fundamental way. Those who belong to it are in effect being penalized to the extent that they are obliged to contribute to their own retirement benefit through the Canada Pension Plan.

While there may be some advantages left in being self-employed, they are becoming increasingly few. In many instances they are illusory. Constantly badgered by bureaucrats for statistics, caught in arbitrary decisions as to taxation policy, victims of conflicts between federal and provincial administrations, the self-employed Canadian, as things now stand, cannot claim in respect of contributions toward the Canada Pension Plan and in this respect he would be far better off working for someone else. For example, according to the information supplied to me, the average self-employed Canadian makes $6,000 a year, less in many instances, than his key employees. Yet if he pays half of that employee's pension plan contributions of, say, $160, if that is the bracket in which the employee happens to be, he is able to deduct approximately $80 as a business expense. On the other hand, his own personal contribution, if it should also be $160, must be entirely paid by himself and he cannot deduct any part of it.

In my view, this is a type of discrimination which is totally unjustifiable. The government is exploiting a particular group of Canadians. "Exploiting" may be an unfair term, on reflection, but I suggest the government is not treating fairly the average, hardworking middle-income Canadian who is in many instances doing more than his share of keeping this country's economy going.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare, in a moment of candour said, as I mentioned earlier, that it is this group of Canadians who must shoulder an increasing amount of the load to pay for social benefits—in effect, that big business must be given no more responsibility in this regard because any such action would dull the incentive to expand under present budgetary policy.

Somewhere or other the minister and the government have got their priorities confused. As far as cost is concerned, I am not suggesting that it would be proper for the government to contribute directly, as does an employer, to self-employed Canadians' Canada Pension Plan contributions, except I suppose in cases where the government is the actual employer.

While on this subject, it is interesting to look at the revenue that is involved. Assuming that there are approximately 400,000 self-employed Canadians, and that for the sake of statistics their average contribution is $160 a year, if you take half of that sum as the revenue figure, theoretically the contributions would amount to about $32 million. This is about three times the budget of Information Canada, a singularly useless administrative monster, or whatever you want to call it, indeed perhaps the most useless creation of any government.

I am suggesting that the government give equity to self-employed Canadians by allowing them tax credits or deductions for part or all of their Canada Pension Plan contribution. I feel very strongly that every Canadian should have an equal opportunity to contribute toward his or her retirement. I think this is a bad area in which to discriminate.

I am aware that it is possible to take advantage of the retirement contribution plan and that people are sufficiently well informed about it. I am also well aware that, despite my rather partisan remarks, the government is also not unaware of the problems facing middle-income Canadians. But this is an area in which the government should show some concern. When a self-employed person is trying to keep his business going and is facing the many demands that are made for statistics, and so on, by government, surely the very least that this administration can do is to explore ways and means of letting that person have the same opportunity to contribute to a national pension plan for his retirement as people who happen to be working for someone else.

[Mr. MacKay.]

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware of the many reforms made by the government during the last few years which have benefited all classes of Canadians. However, I should like to thank the hon. member for the comments that he has expressed tonight, and I assure him that I shall draw them to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Turner) and the department. I know the hon. member realizes that this is a matter of government policy and that these matters are customarily dealt with by the Minister of Finance during his budget address.

GRAINS—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASE IN INITIAL PRICES

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I asked the responsible minister on June 14 whether he would consider adjustments to the initial price of wheat and barley, and whether he would give some consideration to adjusting the prevailing price for rapeseed sown by western farmers. the minister replied, at least as I understood it, in the negative.

In the very brief time at my disposal may I outline how the price of these grains has declined. The minister can check these figures either from the Wheat Board report or from the current edition of the Western Producer. No. 2 northern wheat is selling at Thunder Bay this year for $1.65-$\frac{5}{8}$ whereas a year ago it was $1.81. If the minister checks the Wheat Board report he will see the general trend from 1949 and 1950 to the present day and the very small interim or final payment that has been made in recent years. In view of the cost of production today, I think it is quite unreasonable to expect farmers to conduct their operations on the basis of the initial prices that are now set.

I would seriously suggest to the minister that this initial price should be increased and so put a floor under the earning power of the farmer. In reference to barley, I would say that the situation is much more grave since the decline in price of barley has been greater. About a year ago the minister added 10 cents and since then took half back. Let me point out that the prairie provinces are trying to do something to maintain feed prices within the provinces. They are very much concerned about the purchasing power left to the farmer through the sale of feed grains. The minister could do nothing more effective to assist these provinces and bolster the internal level of prices than to increase the initial prices under the Canada Wheat Board.

Finally, in respect of rapeseed I should point out to the minister that currently in the Western Producer, Thunder

Bay prices are quoted one day slightly under $2 and now $2.02, whereas a year ago it was $2.50½. When replying the other day, the minister said this was temporary. That is not really so. I would call the minister's attention to the fact that this decline has been constant since the beginning of the crop year. Some peaks have been hit but this price has gone down.

I do not see how the government can divest itself of the responsibility of maintaining the earning power of rapeseed. This is the same government that established a support price for soyabeans and sunflower seeds, yet refuses to move at all on rapeseed. A week ago when I moved to ask that this grain be given the protection of the Canadian Wheat Board, the minister announced before the vote that he would not support this and, indeed, his party voted against giving the farmers that protection. I fail to see how the government can justify leaving the rapeseed grower without a floor price and without any protection in view of the protection given other producers of oilseed crops. The government has given this support to other crops but the price of rapeseed is chaotic.

I have done some research and obtained Vancouver and Thunder Bay prices. There is one price at the crushing plants and there is a premium at some local elevator points. But the total quota system of the Canada Wheat Board is being used to force the farmer to deliver grain at his own cost to those areas where it is wanted.

I have looked up the closing in-store cash prices at Vancouver. The minister may say he would prefer another point and I do not blame him for that. If he can sort out the maze, God bless him. We find that the prices were $2.26, $2.21 and $2.77 for the crop years 1966-67, 1967-68 and 1969-70. As I pointed out to the minister, we are now looking at a price of $2.02 basis Thunder Bay—and it could be higher in Vancouver. Undoubtedly it is higher, and I know that because I use that market when I can. I would point out to the minister that the average farmer cannot get the Vancouver price because usually he has to settle for the prices quoted at Thunder Bay.

In respect of these three grains, regardless of volume, it is unrealistic to expect the western farmer to stay effectively in the grain business with these kinds of prices, and I suggest the minister take some action to correct the situation.

• (2220)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this year, for the second time, we announced initial prices on March 1 giving some advance warning before seeding to farmers about what these prices should be. Now the hon. member opposite comes along with a request to change them, and no doubt to change them again and again instead of simply appreciating the advantage of having these prices fixed at that date.

In fact, when we fixed these initial prices this year we increased the price of barley by five cents despite the fact, as the hon. member pointed out, that there were very definite weaknesses in the barley market. Indeed, at the present time the barley market is not as weak as it has been and this is why I pointed out to him that his point about continual downward prices is quite in error. In the case of rapeseed, the prices go up and down. This is, of course, the nature of the open market. The hon. member knows full well that our position on the rapeseed market is that the farmers can have the kind of market they want, and when they are able to express themselves plainly on the matter we will act accordingly.

Just the other day I had a letter from the rapeseed association saying that after having distributed some 50,000 copies of an analysis of marketing they hoped further time would be available to farmers to discuss the particular marketing techniques for that grain.

Is the hon. member saying the Wheat Board is not getting as much as it can for grain? He is not likely to say that. He does not normally say that. I would challenge him, if he did. The Wheat Board is doing an extremely good job. It is getting the best possible price for the grain. It is getting prices for grain which compete very favourably with what our competitors are getting. It would be more like the Tories would suggest we were making mistakes by selling at prices which are too low, because they would like to destroy the Wheat Board. But my hon. friend would not ordinarily do that. The Wheat Board gets from the market what it can. It does the best possible job, and I give it great credit. If prices are low, it is because of the world situation.

We are making record sales. I should like to tell the hon. member that today, on July 4, I believe I can say with confidence we have now exported more grain this year than we did in the total of last year, with four weeks left in the season. That is because of great action by the Wheat Board and by the trade generally.

In addition, of course, we are not leaving the farmer for his return on his grain alone to the proceeds of sales abroad. We instituted the two-price system. We have marketing development. We are supporting his sales by credit, and indeed our whole foreign policy supports the making of sales and helps the Wheat Board make sales on the farmer's behalf. We have put $42 million into the purchase of hopper-cars to help move this grain. Last winter we put $1.3 million into moving grain from Thunder Bay to eastern ports for export for the first time in history. And so it goes. We go on putting money from the treasury into the hands of the farmer to help him, and that is recognition that the amount he gets, notwithstanding the best possible job by the Wheat Board, is not enough.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF ORGANIZATIONS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to propose a motion dealing with a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, the method of core funding of Indian organizations. It has been brought to my attention that offices of Indian organizations are experiencing great hardship and are in danger of having to close their doors because allocated funds are not being forwarded. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the whole matter of funding of Indian organizations be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for investigation and report.

Mr. Speaker: The motion proposed by the hon. member for Athabasca is submitted to the House under the terms of Standing Order 43 and requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not unanimity and the hon. member's motion cannot be put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

On the order: Introduction of Bills.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had some discussions with the opposition House leaders and it would meet the procedural circumstances at the moment if I could have consent now to calling introduction of bills just before orders of the day. In the meantime I would be happy to explain to my colleagues the necessity for this procedural delay until that time, and I will explain the situation then.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the bill to which the hon. minister has referred will be introduced or presented for first reading at the end of the question period before we call orders of the day. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FEDERAL PAYMENTS FOR CANCER RESEARCH

Question No. 491—Mr. Burton:

How much has the government spent for cancer research in each of the past four fiscal years?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Under the Public Health Research Grant program, the National Health Grant program, and the Medical Research Council, federal payments for cancer research were made as follows for the fiscal years 1968-69 to 1971-72: 1968-69, $2,660,436; 1969-70, $3,498,972; 1970-71, $4,126,339; 1971-72, $4,793,597. In addition, based on projects submitted by the provinces, federal payments totalling $9.2 million in 1970-71, $10.3 million in 1969-70 were made under the Health Resources Fund program to assist the provinces in the construction, acquisition and renovation of research facilities where research activities will be carried out in the various fields of health, including cancer. The analysis of federal payments for the fiscal year 1971-72 is not yet completed.

*ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR 1972 OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROGRAM

Question No. 514—Mr. Burton:

Has an initial allocation of funds been made by province for the 1972 Opportunities for Youth Program and, if so, what is the allocation for each province?

Mr. J. A. Jerome (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have this reply here. It is rather lengthy. I wonder if it might be tabled and reported in Hansard as if read.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The reply above referred to is as follows:]

An initial target allocation was made by regions in consultation with the Department of Manpower and Immigration and with Treasury Board for the 1972 Opportunities for Youth program. This initial target allocation was made in terms of regional disparities in projected levels of student employment based on information provided by Canada Manpower.

CIGARETTE ADVERTISEMENTS

Question No. 586—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given to requiring the inclusion of a health warning in all permitted print media cigarette advertisements?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. The Department is giving consideration to requiring the inclusion of a health warning in all permitted print media cigarette advertisements, as well as other possible ways of combatting the detrimental effects caused by cigarette smoking. It was with the encouragement of the Department that the Canadian Tobacco Manufacturers Council recently decided to include a health warning on all new stocks of cigarette packages. The Department has also placed before the House legislation which it considers to be a significant measure towards controlling the injurious effects of cigarette smoking.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUTH PROJECTS

Question No. 630—Mr. Burton:

1. What is the total amount of money made available by the government for Opportunities for Youth projects in 1972?

2. Of this amount, what allocation was made available for distribution within the Province of Saskatchewan, and what percentage is this of the total?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. $31,071,380.00

2. Opportunities for Youth projects are being recorded by regions. The allocation made available for distribution within the Prairie Provinces and the Northwest Territories was $4,350,126 and represents 14 per cent of the total amount of money granted to Opportunities for Youth projects in 1972.

EXPORTS OF WHEAT TO MEXICO

Question No. 642—Mr. Dinsdale: (Supplementary)

1. How much wheat has been supplied by Canada to Mexico during each year since 1968?

2. Of this, what proportion does this represent of that country's total wheat import?

3. Did the Wheat Board make any offers of Canadian wheat to the Compania National de Subsistencias Populares (CONASUPO) during this period?

4. Does Canada have international suppliers and brokers representing her in connection with the sale of seed, wheat or other cereals to Mexico?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister Responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board): 1, 2, 3 and 4.

Since the 1963-64 crop year, with the exception of 1968-69 when a negligible quantity (1,000 tons) was imported, Mexico has been a net exporter of wheat. The Canadian Wheat Board and private trade continue to represent Canada's interest in this and other markets for Canadian grain and oilseeds. No business in wheat sales to Mexico was concluded during the period in question. This year Mexico has held some tenders for imports of wheat but to date Canadian exporters have not been successful bidders.

CMHC ASSISTANCE—HOME FOR THE AGED, HAVRE ST-PIERRE

Question No. 660—Mr. Blouin:

What was the contribution of the government or of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation toward the construction of the home for the aged in Havre St-Pierre, which was completed in 1971?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation approved a loan of $392,000 in August, 1969, to assist in the financing of a home for senior citizens in Havre St-Pierre. This provides 56 hostel beds.

LOCAL INITIATIVE PROJECTS

Question No. 668—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What was the percentage of local initiative projects submitted by individuals which were proposed and accepted across Canada?

2. What was the percentage of projects submitted by municipalities which were accepted and carried out?

[Translation]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The percentage of Local Initiatives projects submitted by individuals which were proposed and accepted across Canada is 38.6.

2. The percentage of projects submitted by municipalities which were accepted and carried out was 45.1.

WELFARE RECIPIENTS IN CANADA

Question No. 669—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many welfare recipients are assisted by the government in Canada?

2. How many welfare recipients are assisted by the government in each province?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Under the terms of the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal government shares in the costs to provinces of assistance and welfare services. Provinces are responsible for administering social assistance programs. The same procedure is followed in respect to the Blind Persons Act, Disabled Persons Act and Unemployment Assistance Act.

2. The total number of recipients of benefits under the above programs, as of December 1971, were 608,987. (Recipients refers only to family heads and single persons and, therefore, does not include dependents). In Newfoundland, there were 28,001 recipients. In P.E.I. 3,567 recipients. In Nova Scotia 21,944 recipients. In New Brunswick 21,741 recipients. In Quebec 203,380 recipients. In Ontario 149,543 recipients. In Manitoba 36,397 recipients. In Saskatchewan 21,454 recipients. In Alberta 34,575 recipients. In B.C. 79,918 recipients. In N.W.T. 7,338 recipients. In Yukon 1,119 recipients. The Northwest Territories has not yet signed an agreement with the Canada Assistance Plan. Social assistance costs are consequently covered under the Unemployment Assistance Act.

LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Question No. 680—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Who was responsible for analyzing, accepting or rejecting projects submitted under the Local Initiatives Program?

2. What criteria were used to examine and accept the projects?

3. Were special and essential standards used to decide which projects would be accepted and, if so, (a) which standards (b) were they known to the public before the projects were submitted?

[Translation]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) For those projects under $75,000, the regional offices for the Department of Manpower and Immigration in Halifax, N.S., Montreal, Que., Toronto, Ont., Winnipeg, Man., and in Vancouver, B.C., were responsible for analysing, accepting or rejecting projects submitted under the Local Initiatives Program. (b) For those projects over $75,000, a preliminary assessment was conducted by the staff referred to in 1(a) and then dispatched to headquarters along with their recommendations. At departmental headquarters, these projects were re-assessed by senior project officers prior to submission to an executive board which made recommendations to the minister for his approval or rejection.

2. The criteria used to examine and accept projects were announced by the minister in the House on October 27, 1971. A further announcement was made on December 8, 1971 regarding an amendment pertaining to man-months. In addition to the foregoing, public information releases were carried by the media and all LIP applicants or prospective applicants were provided with detailed printed instructions and the criteria. The criteria involved were tabled in the House of Commons on October 27, 1971.

Question No. 700—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Has the Department of Manpower and Immigration discovered the whereabouts of the 52 Guyanese visitors who were not aboard their return charter flight from Toronto during the week of June 12?

2. Have any of these visitors applied for landed immigrant status?

3. If any have applied for landed immigrant status what has been the response of the Department?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The Department of Manpower and Immigration is unaware of the present whereabouts of thirty-three of the fifty-two visitors who failed to depart on the flight in question.

2. Yes. 19.

3. These applicants are being processed in the same manner as any visitor who has applied to remain permanently.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, my questions relate to the dock strike and as the minister is not here and a bill is to be introduced I shall defer them.

FINANCE

BUDGETARY MEASURES—ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING DEPLETION ALLOWANCES—DEFINITION OF "MANUFACTURING"

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance. In light of the survey businessmen in the country conducted recently in which some doubt was expressed concerning the efficacy of the budgetary measures, particularly depletion allowances, will the Prime Minister advise or consult with the Minister of National Revenue and others involved concerning when the regulations will be coming out in respect of depletion allowances in light of the fact that officials of the Department of Finance say it will be months, and will he try to have established a definition of the word "manufacturing" which apparently is to be left to the courts?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will gladly take notice of the question, Mr. Speaker.

EFFECT OF BUDGET ON ALLEVIATING UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING FURTHER MEASURES

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the Prime Minister also take cognizance of the results of this very wide survey across Canada which shows that much less than 50 per cent of the people consulted felt that the budget would do anything for unemployment? In light of that, is it the intention of the government to re-examine the situation in view of what was said during the budget debate, and now confirmed, and to bring forward further measures say in September when the House reconvenes?

Mr. Trudeau: I think we might want to examine the survey first, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that 50 per cent of the businessmen do not think the budget is likely to do anything about unemployment, will the Prime Minister consult with the Minister of Finance to see whether he would introduce measures to increase the demand side of the economic curve by reducing taxes for individual taxpayers?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

PENSIONS

AMENDMENTS TO QUEBEC PENSION PLAN—EFFECT ON UNIFORMITY WITH CANADA PENSION PLAN—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the serious situation that will develop in Canada if the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan get out of line, and in view of the fact that the Quebec National Assembly has passed a bill to amend the Quebec Pension plan effective January 1, 1973, may I ask the minister what steps the federal government is taking to try to cope with this situation?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I had an opportunity to talk very recently to the minister responsible in that province. I do not think there are any changes in the Quebec Pension Plan that are that much out of line. They have the same general thrust as the ones we recommended in the white paper. I am very hopeful we can still preserve uniformity and can get together with the other provinces and come up with changes to the Canada Pension Plan that may fit in very well with what is proposed in Quebec. If there are things proposed as a result of discussion with the other provinces that are not in the Quebec bill, I do not anticipate that that will preclude changes there. In other words, I do not think the prospect is all that dismal. In fact, I am relatively optimistic that uniformity can be preserved.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question may I ask the minister if he will convene a meeting of the appropriate ministers from the other provinces very soon in the hope that plans can be worked out so that the nearest possible approach to uniformity may be achieved before January 1?

Mr. Munro: Yes, that is our aim, to try to meet the January 1 deadline in order to preserve uniformity. Whether the mechanics, in terms of the method of operating that the hon. member has suggested, are the best, I do not know right now. Certainly we are meeting with the other provinces; our officials are talking to their officials. If it seems that the matter could be speeded up by having all the ministers meet at one time as opposed to bilateral discussions, we would be prepared to consider that.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have one more supplementary question. In view of the fact that one of the changes made in the Quebec Pension Plan is to increase to 3 per cent the rate of escalation of benefits after they have been put in pay, and in view of the fact that this was not in the white paper proposals of the federal government, will arrangements be made to include this matter in discussions with the provinces?

Mr. Munro: Whatever changes the government may be prepared to consider with reference to its original proposals would be matters of policy for us to consider, and we have not yet reached that state.

AMENDMENTS TO QUEBEC PENSION PLAN—PRIOR NOTIFICATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he or the federal government was informed about the intention of the Quebec authorities to propose these changes before they were introduced in the National Assembly in Quebec or whether to his knowledge the Quebec minister discussed them with the ministers of other provinces as well as or in place of the federal government?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In answer to the latter part of the hon. member's question, I am not prepared to say what discussions Quebec may have had with other provinces because personally I am not aware of them. So far as the first part of the question is concerned, I think it would be fair to say that we had some notice that Quebec was going to proceed, although perhaps not precisely as to the date on which they would be implementing the legislation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

JAMES BAY HYDROELECTRIC PROJECT—INQUIRY RESPECTING PARTICIPATION OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Would the minister tell us whether the central government contributes one way or another to the James Bay development project or if it is left entirely to the province of Quebec?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): We have not entered into shared programs with the province of Quebec. That province proceeds alone with the development of James Bay. The Quebec government has indicated to us that it would make special requests, including one for the establishment of an airport, for example, but those are matters which will be considered by every department involved and not exclusively by mine.

TAXATION

REASONS FOR JOHN WELDON NOT BEING REAPPOINTED TO APPEAL BOARD

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Would he take the first opportunity on motions, preferably tomorrow, to outline to the House why Mr. John Weldon, whose effectiveness as a member of the Tax Appeal Board has never been questioned, was not reappointed to serve until the age of 70, six years from now, when two other members of the same board, Mr. St-Onge and Mr. Frost, have both been reappointed to serve partial terms until the age of 70?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that it would serve any purpose to analyse in detail the reasons for making a judgment concerning the appropriateness of a reappointment. In fact, of course, of the two men who were reappointed one was appointed by this government and one by a previous government of another party, as was Mr. Weldon. The judgment was made totally on the basis of ability in view of the new functions of the board, the present board having rather different functions from those of the old board.

Mr. Hees: Is this discrimination on purely political grounds part of the just society?

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that that question is clearly out of order.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. J. P. Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thought I made it quite clear yesterday that the Secretary of State would not be changed during the lifetime of this government but that after we had won the election I would be shifting him along with other members of the cabinet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure many portfolios, other than that of the Secretary of State, will be changed after the next election, including that of the Prime Minister—and you too, High Park—

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF REGULATIONS IN LIGHT OF DEDUCTION OF PENSION COST OF LIVING ADJUSTMENT FROM SOCIAL ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister aware that in the city of Ottawa the six months' cost of living adjustment received by old age pensioners at the end of June has been deducted from social assistance payments and, if so, does the minister intend to change the federal regulations under the Canada Assistance Plan to prevent this kind of thing happening?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the regulations have been changed to permit the provinces to take whatever action they see fit as being an area within their jurisdiction in terms of social assistance levels, but there is no obligation for them to do so. I have already indicated that if I had my preference I would prefer that they did not.

NATIONAL PARKS

PROPOSED QUEBEC-ONTARIO PARK—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether he can report favourably on the negotiations he has been having over a period of time with his counterparts in Ontario and Quebec regarding a potential park in the Timiskaming area?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, up to now I made more progress with Quebec than with Ontario.

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether he is continuing his difficult negotiations with the province of Ontario on the possibility of establishing an interprovincial park in the Lake Timiskaming area?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I keep in touch with the governments of Ontario and Quebec, but I must tell the House that the main part of the park which interests the department most is obviously on the Quebec side, because lakes and mountains are on that side. We are always interested in obtaining part of the territory of Ontario if that is possible.

FILMS

GOVERNMENT POLICY—DISTRIBUTION OF ANGLOPHONE FILMS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Secretary of State who, according to the roster, is supposed to be here today, but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister consider that the Canadian film policy as outlined yesterday by the Secretary of State will satisfactorily contribute to the development of the Canadian film industry without an effective distribution network for Anglophone films?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not grasp the import of the question, but I will certainly refer it to the Secretary of State for consideration and deep thought.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR RELATIONS

QUEBEC—LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—GOVERNMENT APPROACH TO PROBLEM OF JOB SECURITY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. It is a little unusual but I would ask for your indulgence in view of the fact that a bill is to be introduced later today and we will not receive printed copies of it for some time. The question might somewhat facilitate deliberations this afternoon in preparation for second reading. Can the minister indicate very briefly what approach he is taking to the solution of the problem of job security?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is true that I intend to introduce a bill in the House later this day, hopefully later this afternoon. As I said yesterday, I should like to assist hon. members opposite as much as possible in these circumstances—

An hon. Member: Answer the question, then.

Mr. O'Connell: —but it would not be appropriate for me to disclose the contents or the principles of the bill until it is introduced in the House.

An hon. Member: Why not?

An hon. Member: You could certainly make a statement.

THE MINISTRY

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister assure the House that the ethical guidelines concerning the use of government aircraft during election campaigns, as outlined on June 30, 1972, at page 3682 of Hansard, were not violated by the Prime Minister on his visit to northeastern Ontario last weekend in the undeclared election campaign?

An hon. Member: Ben, the question is for you.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South. Is the hon. member for Lambton-Kent rising for a supplementary question?

Mr. McCutcheon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Now that the minister is awake, may I ask him a supplementary question, or perhaps I should repeat the first one. Can the minister assure the House that the ethical guidelines concerning the use of government aircraft during election campaigns, as outlined on June 30, 1972 at page 3682 of Hansard, were not violated by the Prime Minister on his visit to northeastern Ontario last weekend in the undeclared election campaign?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the use of government aircraft here is far better than that in the province of Ontario and that we do not violate these principles.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCutcheon: Will the minister assure the House that these guidelines, established as safeguards for just and equal election campaigning by all parties, will not be violated by the Prime Minister or any other minister in the present government? Never mind Ontario; they are doing all right.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that government aircraft in the Department of National Defence are used for government purposes with certain privileges provided for members of the opposition, including the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for my own information I should like to know under what conditions government aircraft are available to the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, there are certain regular flights of armed forces aircraft to Europe and western Canada and if members apply and there is space available we try to make it available to them whether they be in the opposition or on this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are three hon. members seeking supplementaries on this subject. I shall recognize the hon. member for Lambton-Kent and then the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

Mr. McCutcheon: Will the minister be kind enough to comment on the dead-heading of two of our largest helicopters from Ottawa to Earlton in order to fly the Prime Minister a distance of 30 miles and then dead-head back to Ottawa?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we have aircraft available that have to carry out training flights and they carry them out.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: It is a good thing the Prime Minister was on a training flight. He needs some training.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Témiscamingue.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence.

The minister stated that aircraft and helicopters may be used also by members of the opposition. I have had the opportunity of travelling with cabinet members to Rouyn-Noranda because I had been invited. But how is it that when the Prime Minister visited Kirkland Lake, the hon. member for Timiskaming was not invited since he does represent the voters of that area?

• (1430)

[English]

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the hon. member for Timiskaming was already there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a very fruitful exchange. If hon. members think we should return to this very high-flying subject later, perhaps we might do so. In the meantime the Chair will recognize the hon. member for York South.

COMMUNICATIONS

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—REPORT BY MINISTER ON STUDY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I go to another form of communication. May I ask the Minister of Communications whether he has completed his study of the information with regard to the Bell application for increased rates? Has he anything to report?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have completed the examination and have concluded that there is no supportable basis in this case for substituting my judgment or that of the Governor in Council for the considered judgment of the independent regulatory body that is charged by Parliament with setting rates which are just and reasonable.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I must say I am not surprised at the answer. I suspected that the corporate attitude would be the minister's attitude. Would the minister have the courtesy as well as the courage to make a statement on motions in the next day or two informing Parliament of the reasons for his conclusion, the reasons for letting Bell Canada get away with the kind of gouging it has got away with for so long?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED FAILURE OF BELL CANADA TO FULFIL OBLIGATIONS

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister investigate why Bell Canada is not fulfilling its obligations to all parts of Canada, particularly to Newfoundland, and why its service is deteriorating?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to inquire about that. I have asked the president of Bell Canada to meet with me as a result of reports that there has been some cutback from the original expectations for capital investment by the company during the current year. I will be glad to raise this question with him as well.

If I might reply briefly to the hon. member for York South, I think I would owe this House a more elaborate explanation if I were to interfere with the decision of the independent authority which Parliament has charged with the responsibility of setting rates.

BELL CANADA RATE INCREASES—AUTHORITY OF GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL TO RESCIND OR VARY

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister looked into the lay-offs at Northern Electric owing to the failure by Bell Canada to make the level of investment it undertook to make? Also, is the Canadian Transport Commission to be left alone in its decision or, instead of that question, may I ask the minister to inform the House why Parliament placed in the Governor in Council the authority to rescind or vary these decisions if there are grounds? If there are not, we ought to know about it.

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you would not want me to try to assess the motivation of Parliament in passing the National Transportation Act, but I have found no instance in which the Governor in Council has interfered with a Canadian Transport Commission decision on telecommunication rates.

An hon. Member: That interference is long overdue.

Mr. Stanbury: In fact, no petition has been received from any party to do so. I note that neither the hon. member nor his party made any representations at the hearings.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

QUEBEC BILL GRANTING NEW SEARCH, SEIZURE AND ARREST POWERS TO POLICE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister examined the bill, introduced in the Quebec legislature yesterday, granting new powers of search, seizure and arrest to the Quebec police? Will he say whether this bill contravenes the federal government's constitutional jurisdiction over criminal law?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet had time—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether I can interpret the hon. member's question as being one that seeks a legal opinion. If that is what the hon. member is asking now, then he appreciates, I am sure, that the minister cannot give that opinion at the present time. Perhaps I did not interpret the question correctly, and the minister might reply briefly in light of the procedural restriction I have indicated.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, we will be examining the legislation from the point of view of our own interest in it and can then communicate, of course, with the responsible authorities. The usual procedure in connection with legislation is for persons who have doubts about it to challenge it in the more ordinary way rather than for the government to give an opinion about it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister's advisers advise him that this legislation is in fact unconstitutional and trespasses on the federal power, will he consider referring the matter to the courts?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate, I am sure, that put in those terms the question is hypothetical.

DECISION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA COURT OF APPEAL JEOPARDIZING MAINTENANCE PAYMENTS ARISING FROM DIVORCE SUITS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Justice with respect to the decision of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia about which I have questioned him twice. He said previously that he had not had time to complete his deliberations and examination of the decision. Recognizing that the Minister of Justice must walk deliberately, may I ask him whether he has had an opportunity to complete his assessment of that decision and what measures he proposes to introduce, if any, in light of it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am examining the decision carefully but I have not yet completed that task. I will walk deliberately, as the hon. gentleman recommends.

Mr. Stanfield: In the meantime some people could practically starve to death.

AIRPORTS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF IMPROVEMENTS IN RIDINGS OF OPPOSITION MEMBERS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. It arises from the considerable number of press releases being made for the minister by Liberal members in connection with airport improvements. Who is making the announcements in connection with improvements in the ridings of opposition members?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, so far as I am aware I have advised all members of the House, regardless of party, when I have had representations from them. If there has been any change in that, I will be glad to hear about it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Aiken: Is the minister authorizing these press releases only in connection with members of the Liberal party through his own department?

Mr. Jamieson: No, certainly not, and I think the evidence of that is that a good many of these airports are being built in regions other than those represented by members on the government side of the House.

MOUNT HOPE, ONT.—PUBLICATION OF DETAILED EXPANSION PLANS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise us whether any members of the government have made any announcements with respect to the detailed plans for the Mount Hope airport expansion, which is certainly long overdue? If so, will they be made public?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yes, they will be made public. I believe I answered the hon. member a couple of weeks ago, indicating that a number of alternatives were being submitted. I have received those now. It is my intention to convey them, as I indicated to him at that time, to the various authorities in the Hamilton region with a view to getting their reaction to the alternatives.

Mr. Alexander: As we were told a month ago that there would be an announcement within three days, can the minister tell us when he will give some indication as to what these detailed plans are?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, if there were enough hours in the day I would be glad to say Friday but it may be Monday or Tuesday; I am not sure. As soon as I have time I will look over them myself and find out who the appropriate authorities are to whom they should be sent.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTS BY FRANCE—NUMBER PLANNED—RESPONSE TO CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having in mind today's press reports indicating that there have been two French nuclear tests in the Pacific up to this time and that a further test is forecast, may I ask whether the government has information as to how many of these tests are planned, and what response the French government has made to the Canadian government's representations opposing the tests?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unofficially we have reason to believe that there have been two tests. The French government refuses to confirm or deny this fact, but it seems to be common knowledge. I understand that they intend to continue the tests. They have received our representations but the only indication we have is that the French government intends to carry out its program of tests.

Mr. Mather: Is it the government's intention to add to its former protests in opposition to these dangerous tests?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, not only has the government protested both in general and in particular but the House of Commons passed a resolution which has been presented to the French government. I cannot think of any stronger protest than that.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION ON VIEW OF SECRETARY GENERAL THAT BOTH GERMANYS SHOULD BE MEMBERS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does Canada support the view of Kurt Waldheim, Secretary General of the United Nations, that both Germanys should be members of the United Nations? If so, what is this country doing to bring about this result?

• (1440)

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I indicated previously, and I think the Prime Minister has also, that we are hopeful that the negotiations between the Federal German Republic and the Democratic German Republic will be successful and that both Germanys will be able to come into the United Nations together having solved their problems so that they do not import them into the United Nations.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO INTERNATIONAL—SUGGESTED ADDITIONAL DEPOT TO RELIEVE OVERCROWDING

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the chaotic and terrible conditions at Toronto airport last weekend, I wish to ask the minister whether he and members of his department are giving consideration to establishing a depot completely separate or divorced from Malton so that arrivals and departures can take place in a manner very similar to the operation in London?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. In point of fact, the new terminal has only been open for a few days. Last weekend, of course, was the worst weekend of the year. Air Canada established a new record for the number of passengers.

An hon. Member: What about baggage?

Mr. Jamieson: The hon. member may have lost his baggage. I regret that very much, but if he does not lose anything more than his baggage he is in good shape.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jamieson: In any event, Mr. Speaker, we are examining the possibility of moving charters to a separate location as was done last year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPLACEMENT FOR ARGUS AIRCRAFT—COMPLETION OF NEGOTIATIONS FOR PURCHASE OF SCORPION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It is in two parts. Can the minister indicate whether proposals for replacement of the Argus will be invited before the end of September? Also, have negotiations now been completed with the British government with regard to purchase of the Scorpion?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as far as can presently be determined the answer to both questions is no.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

STATUS OF POSSIBLE INCENTIVE GRANT FOR MILK MANUFACTURING COMPLEX IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In view of the fact the Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture, together with producers and major dairy manufacturers in Saskatchewan, has been working for two years to revitalize the dairy industry, can the minister indicate whether his department is now reconsidering its reported rejection of an incentive grant for a milk manufacturing complex at one or more Saskatchewan points?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice.

Mr. Burton: In view of the fact the policies of the Canadian Dairy Commission did a great deal of harm to the dairy industry in Saskatchewan, will the minister find some way to assist—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. A question asked in those terms is not procedurally acceptable.

TRANSPORT

TRENT AND RIDEAU CANALS—INQUIRY AS TO CREATION OF COUNCIL TO CONTROL WATERWAYS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It deals with the proposed creation of a council to govern the Trent and Rideau waterway systems. Can the minister advise whether a date has been set for creation of the council and when it is expected to take control of the waterways?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure how urgent this question may be, but the Chair has to take into account the possibility that the House may adjourn later this week. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's question could more properly be directed to my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who has now assumed responsibility for the waterways in question.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I will look into the question and reply tomorrow.

NATIONAL REVENUE

AVAILABILITY OF INCOME TAX FILES TO OTHER DEPARTMENTS FOR PURPOSE OF INVESTIGATION AND LAYING OF CHARGES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the minister advise the House whether income tax files of individuals or corporations are examined by representatives of other government departments with a view to conducting further investigations or to establish charges in any of the courts under the jurisdiction of the federal government?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member's question arises out of a newspaper report. All I can say at this point is that I have asked for a report on the matter. To the extent that I am able to do so, without transgressing the concept of not commenting on something which is sub judice, I would be prepared to make a report to the House.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Will the minister make a statement indicating precisely the extent of the authority of government officials outside of his department to examine Department of National Revenue files with regard to income tax returns of both corporations and private individuals?

Mr. Gray: As I have said, Mr. Speaker, I have asked for a report on the matter. I will be happy to see what further information I can provide.

[Later:]

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of National Revenue. When the minister is inquiring into the matter raised by the hon. member opposite, will he also inquire whether information from his department is passed along not only to federal but to provincial authorities, because there is evidence that reassessments that have been made by his department have been made within days by the provincial authorities as well in exactly the same figures?

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to do that. It may well be that parts of the agreements which the federal government has with provinces for tax collection purposes call for arrangements for exchange of information. I will look into it further.

DRUGS

DEPARTMENTAL POLICY RESPECTING MONITORING OF SALE BY USE OF AGENTS WHO ATTEMPT TO BUY WITHOUT PRESCRIPTIONS

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the minister's department have a policy of monitoring the sale of restricted pharmaceutical products by recruiting individuals who attempt to buy these without the necessary prescriptions, in effect using agents for surveillance in this regard?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will look into this matter and endeavour to answer the hon. member's question tomorrow if I can.

GRAIN

AUTHORITY FOR MAILING OF ACREAGE PAYMENT NOTICES TO PRAIRIE FARMERS LAST SUMMER

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that the officials of the Canadian Wheat Board who appeared before the Standing Committee on Agriculture last week denied any knowledge of or association with the mailing of certain acreage payment notices to prairie farmers last summer, purporting to have emanated from the Canadian Wheat Board, can the minister advise the House who mailed these notices and under whose direction and authority they were issued? Did the direction come from the minister or some other government department?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There was never any doubt about this. They were mailed under my authority.

[Later:]

INTENTION RESPECTING CONTINUANCE OF ACREAGE PAYMENTS UNDER TWO-PRICE SYSTEM

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Vegreville. In view of the fact we are now less than one month away from the new crop year, can the minister in charge of the Wheat Board state whether it is his intention to continue the acreage payments as a subsidy in respect of the two-price wheat system in the coming crop year? Are plans being made for this?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, further payment will be made. I reject the use of the word "subsidy" by the hon. member. Also, the exact form of payment is subject to further discussions with the producers. My indication so far has been that it is desirable to have a production neutral payment.

PROVISION OF SHARE OF ACREAGE PAYMENTS TO OWNERS OF RENTED LAND

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. In view of the fact that many members from the prairie provinces have received complaints from people who rent land, particularly elderly people, who are not receiving any share of the acreage payments, can the minister advise whether he and his officials are trying to arrive at some method for future payments whereby owners of land, particularly elderly people who rent it to practicing farmers, will receive some share of the acreage payment?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, we do not propose a method for such a division. We do propose to make clear to landlords and tenants that it is very much up to them to make an arrangement in connection with their leases as to how these payments should be divided.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON LOW-INCOME HOUSING

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, who has been absent on his last two duty roster days, may I ask the acting minister or the Prime Minister whether the Michael Dennis report on low-income housing will be tabled this week?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of the question. I am afraid I do not have the answer. I will transmit it to the minister.

CANADIAN CULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO NAMING OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COUNCIL ON MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In May the Prime Minister stipulated that he would advise the House who would make up the formation of the Canadian Advisory Council on Multiculturalism. Would the Prime Minister like to name these people so there could be recognition of the visible minorities of Canada? And please, no Pierre Vallières or René Lévesques!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. Paproski: A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that the Prime Minister would answer my question which was not really meant to be facetious.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will appreciate that the first part of his question was in order, but if he rules himself out of court by an addendum to his question the question cannot be asked and the Prime Minister cannot be allowed to reply to a question which is clearly out of order.

Mr. Paproski: I should like to remove the addendum, if I may, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member might ask his question tomorrow.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RETIRED EMPLOYEES' PENSIONS—REPRESENTATIONS BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT FOR FURTHER REVIEW TO MEET CLAIMS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of complaints that are coming in from Canadian National Railways employees and pensioners concerning the failure of last Thursday's announcement about pensions to meet their just claims, can the minister say whether he has made representation to the management of Canadian National to review this matter in all its aspects as quickly as possible?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have done so. No later than half an hour ago I was discussing this matter with a major executive of Canadian National and I conveyed to him copies of the telegrams which the hon. member was good enough to send me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister underline in his discussions with management the desire of Canadian National employees to have the same pension benefits that are accorded to federal public servants?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As this is in the communication it is obviously in their hands, but I will convey the matter verbally as well.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe the House agreed to return at this time to introduction of bills.

Proposed Legislation

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ST. LAWRENCE PORTS OPERATIONS BILL

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING AND RELATED OPERATIONS

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-230, to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the minister shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Before the House gives its assent, could the minister say whether he will make a statement on the whole situation, whether he will inform the House of the economic effects of the strike on ports, and when will work resume?

I would ask the minister whether, before agreeing—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

Order, please. That is not a point of order. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? By leave, now?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I may raise a point of order, I should like to explain to the House that a full printing from the Printing Bureau will be available later in the afternoon, but very shortly a number of copies will be distributed which have been put together rather quickly within the building. This will give hon. members an opportunity of examining the bill and then later in the day, when members feel they have had an opportunity of examining the bill and are ready to proceed with second reading, we should like to call second reading of the bill.

Mr. Lewis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate entirely the minister's desire, as it is mine, to see the bill before we go to second reading. However, the minister would not have introduced the bill unless there were reason for doing so, unless there were an emergency, and I therefore suggest that the minister propose, and that the House agree, that second reading begin, say, at 4.30 or five o'clock, and that we make it an order of the House so we will know exactly where we are going and how long we will take to examine the bill.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion of the hon. member is quite acceptable to the government. We agree that 4.30 is a good time and we could begin second reading then. In the meantime we will have makeshift copies available for hon. members which, if they regard them as sufficiently official, will enable us to proceed to second reading at 4.30.

Mr. MacLean: That is agreeable to the official opposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the House leader whether, in terms of second reading and the Standing Orders, he would give consideration to making a change from the normal procedure under which this bill would be referred to the labour committee and send the bill, in view of the emergency, to the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have already given consideration to that point. It was my feeling that we would probably facilitate the passing of the bill more rapidly by sending it to a standing committee. It would be the intention when the bill is sent to the standing committee to ask the committee to deal with it as quickly as possible.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, in view of the fact, as I understand it, that the House is in session primarily, in fact solely, to deal with the Montreal port strike, would the government House leader now agree to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Timiskaming and make an about-face in regard to the conclusion he has reached?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed and so ordered that the House will consider the bill on second reading at 4.30 this afternoon?

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker. It seems to me that this is an emergency, and I object to a small committee of the House making the decision on a matter that the government itself considers to be a national emergency. I believe all members should participate and I would be willing to co-operate to that end. However, I would be unfair to myself as well as to dealing with what the government has declared to be an emergency if I agreed to handle this bill in any other way, with the House carrying on business as usual while this very important matter is handled by a committee. If the government House leader does not see some merit in the House itself dealing with this emergency, I see no particular reason for agreeing that the emergency is such that we should waive our rules in other respects. I suggest that we waive the rules in such a way that all members will be able to participate at the committee stage.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, may I underline the proposition put forward by my colleague from Hamilton West. I am sure that the government House leader is fully aware of the rule that provides that when a committee reports back to the House the report cannot be considered until 48 hours later unless, of course, unanimous consent to consider the report is obtained, but then the government might be running a very serious risk. After all, this legislation is the reason we were called back this week. I, too, should like to participate in the discussion of the legislation in this House. I am sure every member recognizes what is its purpose and I think the bill should be considered here.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the comments that have been made and which the government House leader has heard, I wonder whether we could not agree to start the debate on second reading at 4.30 as indicated. We could also agree to leave for further discussion among the representatives of the parties the question of which committee the bill would go to after second reading.

• (1500)

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I accept the suggestion of my hon. friend. I simply want to make the point that we are treating this bill as we treat every other bill under the Standing Orders in sending it to a standing committee. It was my expectation that if the House could give second reading to the bill today, the standing committee could consider it in the morning and it could be back in the House tomorrow afternoon. That is a matter for consideration but that was the idea I had in mind.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I suggest that we have been called to examine the emergency situation created by the dispute in the harbours of the St. Lawrence. We are now being asked to refer the bill to a standing committee of the House, while we have been kept here, as the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said a few minutes ago, especially to deal with this issue. The Committee of the Whole House should examine the bill so that all members have an opportunity of expressing their views. In my opinion, the sooner we shall start this debate, the sooner we shall end it, because all hon. members are interested in this dispute coming to an end in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. We need only agree that the debate should start as soon as possible in the Committee of the Whole House so that all hon. members have an opportunity of airing their views.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The latest suggestion, as I understand it, is that the House order the bill for consideration on second reading at 4.30 this afternoon, leaving in abeyance the question of the referral of the bill after second reading to either the standing committee or committee of the whole, and this would be the subject of discussion among the party representatives. For the time being there will be only one decision for the House to take, namely, to order that at 4.30 the House begin consideration of the bill on second reading. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FOREIGN TAKEOVERS REVIEW ACT

MEASURE TO CONTROL FOREIGN TAKEOVERS OF CANADIAN COMPANIES

The House resumed, from Tuesday, July 4, consideration of Bill C-201, to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and motions Nos. 10 and 11 (Mr. McCleave).

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday at ten o'clock at the adjournment of this debate I had asked the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) to reconsider very carefully the amendment put forward by my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave), and to see whether there was some area of agreement between the minister's thinking and the amendment put forward, with a view to making the legislation more precise and less confusing. I had hoped the minister might now be able to give us his answer.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I still stand on the opinion I gave yesterday which is to be found at page 3763 of Hansard. I hope the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) will accept the explanation I gave at that time.

The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) indicated that if we were to accept the amendment we might open a loophole in the bill which would be most undesirable. This loophole would allow the possible acquisition of a business under the cover of a leasing operation. The hon. member for Waterloo saw the difficulty in the same way I did, and I suggest that this view should be accepted by the proposer of the motion. I am eager to hear his views.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the motion now before us?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on motions Nos. 10 and 11. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motions? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

An hon. Member: On division.

Mr. Speaker: I declare motions 10 and 11 negatived on division.

Motions Nos. 10 and 11 (Mr. McCleave) negatived.

Foreign Takeovers Review Act

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 12 in the name of the hon. member for Edmonton West.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West) moved motion No. 12 as follows:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by deleting line 25 on page 12 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"based on such information and evidence; and, where the opinion is that the person is not a non-eligible person, the minister and his successors in office shall, upon such information and evidence, be bound by that opinion."

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reason I have put forward this amendment is that it embodies the point of view put forward by certain committee members including myself, as well as many of the witnesses who wished to simplify the administration of this legislation by eliminating as much as possible the necessity of having to come to the minister for every transaction. Every transaction which might be considered to be caught by the act would have to be brought to the minister. That would include everyone who is close to the limits but who has established that for the purposes of this act the control is Canadian. Having done that once, surely it is possible for that person or corporation to look forward to a period of peace during which he would not, every time in respect of every transaction, have to come to the minister. If the minister has granted a certificate there should for a time be some reliance placed upon that certificate.

I would place this matter where the onus should lie, that is, with the minister and not with the corporation. Why should the companies always bear the onus of establishing their innocence? It seems to me fundamental that companies should have the presumption in their favour. If having obtained a certificate from information which may be obtained by the minister or lodged with him there is some doubt as to the company's status, the certificate, having been granted some time before, could be called into question. But the onus would be on the ministry: that is where it should be.

This is not the Income Tax Act, although the minister in all cases has acted in the spirit of the Income Tax Act. In other words, the Canadian citizen, the Canadian corporation, must establish its innocence. Since when is that a generally acceptable principle of law or of conduct? We hear everywhere, all along the line, that the individual is the person under this legislation who must establish that there is significant benefit to Canada. The onus is wrong. The government is establishing the regulatory agency; let it act. Why should the responsibility be that of the individual? It is all too easy for government to act in that way. I for one find this provision totally repugnant. It is a matter of personal repugnance to me that in dealing with government it is always the individual who must prove his innocence. That to my mind is not part of a democratic society.

This is the spirit of the amendment. The administration could be handled much easier on the basis of my proposal. If the minister in accepting the principle that I have put forward should have an alternative formula, I am quite open in this regard. I recognize there is no solution that would be 100 per cent in respect of acceptance of my point of view. Perhaps a certificate that is good for three years on balance would be the best method. Once a certificate were granted and the company had not materially changed its circumstances, the certificate would be valid for three years unless revoked. On the other hand, the certificate could be granted for an indefinite period subject to revocation. These are two avenues of approach. But it seems to me it would be infinitely more acceptable, infinitely more just and infinitely less costly, with much less red tape involved, than the procedure now required by the minister where the responsibility lies with the individual person as determined by this legislation.

It must be remembered that every time the government introduces legislation of this kind, the cost in time and endeavour by the citizen or the businessman is an additional cost. The good Lord only knows how in the past quarter of a century costs which are really the responsibility of the government have been piled on the backs of business and economic activity throughout the country. Who pays for the cost of compiling and maintaining unemployment insurance records and filings on behalf of employees? Who pays for the cost of collection of income tax at source? It is the employer. Who pays for the compilation of the Canada Pension Plan and the computation thereof? The employer. Who pays for health insurance, medicare and so on? Then we have Statistics Canada which comes along with a whole series of requests for information so that a business which employs 25 or 30 persons must hire one or two more merely to maintain records for the government. I did forget that there are also workmen's compensation levies and reports. That item is also a cost that is loaded on the back of the employer.

Who pays for these things in the end? It is the consumer, the Canadian public. All these requirements are fed into the machine. Bureaucracy piles upon bureaucracy, increasing the price which has to be paid by the ultimate consumer, John Citizen. What benefit does he get from it? A great deal of it is highly doubtful. This is another instance of the government feeding the cost of more bureaucracy into the economic machine of this country.

It is a completely new departure; it is a completely new input of bureaucracy into the economic affairs of the country. This has to be paid for. I find it repugnant that this should be so. I say it would be far better for the minister to accept proposals which seek to eliminate as much red tape as possible and make it as easy as possible for those involved or coming under the purported jurisdiction of this legislation to carry on their affairs with a minimum of interference, albeit meeting the requirements of the minister under the act. It is for this reason I have put forward this amendment and seek the support of the House for it.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, it is always helpful to me to listen to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) because it sort of reconfirms my reason for becoming a Socialist rather than a Conservative. When he talks about all the deductions in respect of medicare, hospitalization, unemployment insurance and workmen's compensation he rhymes these off as though they were a litany of evil, as though these were evil things for which the employer is forced to pay.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They are costly.

Mr. Saltsman: They may be costly but not, certainly, in the way the hon. member attempted to suggest. There is no way I could support this amendment because really what the hon. member for Edmonton West is asking us to do, in the fine moral fury of presumed innocence which he has worked up, is to proceed on the assumption that once somebody receives a clean bill of health so far as ownership is concerned, he should be left alone. It is like saying the lady of the evening has her certificate and therefore one should never look at her again because she is all right.

The hon. member for Edmonton West, who is very knowledgeable about business and the stock market, knows that a certificate could be issued in the morning and in the afternoon the entire ownership of the corporation could be changed. How does one go about saying that once the minister has made a decision, that decision is forever? I realize the difficulty of the situation as suggested by the hon. member, that the onus of proof should be on the government. This is fine. He brings in other cases where this is done. However, in bringing them in the hon. member neglected to indicate that in these cases there is a disclosure mechanism which makes it possible for the onus to lie with the government. For instance, in the case of income tax a person must declare his income annually. The government can review the income tax return and make a decision.

What makes this more surprising, and certainly not understandable so far as the hon. member for Edmonton West is concerned, is that over the years when in this House and in committee we have debated various pieces of legislation, the hon. member has constantly refused to put disclosure regulations in the Corporations Act and other acts.

I do not like the onus being put on the individual or on the corporation. I think this is not a good principle. But unless you have disclosure in the rest of the legislation, which the hon. member for Edmonton West opposes, there is no other choice. If the disclosure were there, the minister could act on the information which came under other acts and we could say to the minister that he has to initiate proceedings in such a case.

The Canada Corporations Act is useless in terms of disclosure; there is no disclosure below the level of $5 million of assets, whereas this bill calls for examination at the level of $250,000. Therefore, the other acts do not enable the minister to have any idea of what is happening. We have run into similar problems with the minister in other areas and we have not yet solved the problem of disclosure. The one thing on which I can agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West is that as a principle the onus should be on the government. But then you have to say in justice that our disclosure legislation must be improved; at least information must be available to us.

Recently we had the problem of American corporations in Canada which had made application under the DISC program in the United States. No one was as surprised in Canada as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) who thought he had received assurances from these good friends of his that they were not going to apply for DISC. He woke up one morning and to his horror found he had been shafted in so many places that he looked like a pincushion. His friends had let him down. He had no way of knowing that they had made this application until some outside, extraneous information came to his attention. This would be the same case.

I cannot see how you can possibly have any kind of meaning in an act as meagre as this one. The inclusion of this amendment would wipe out the entire significance of the provisions, because all you have to do if you are an American corporation is obtain Canadian corporate ownership; you would then be as pure as the driven snow. The minute you obtained your certificate you could do as you pleased and the minister would have to play cops and robbers and chase you all over the country to find out what had taken place. If we tried to get disclosure incorporated into the legislation, then my friends to the right, the Conservative party, would say that this is useless information and that we do not need it, that it is just probing and prying. Obviously we do need it. If this amendment has any significance at all, it is that there must be disclosure.

Again, this bill would have very little meaning because there is no disclosure and because built into the situation the minister already has enough problems in trying to ascertain the disposition of a business or what its shares may be, without adding this provision. So I think that on reflection, if the hon. member for Edmonton West thinks of the problems that would be created by accepting his amendment and if he is really serious about strengthening or improving the bill, he will withdraw his motion.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of ideas on the same subject to complement what the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has said. I am in full agreement with him on this matter, but I have no intention of joining the NDP because of that. My first comment is that if the minister should get into the business of issuing binding opinions he would very rapidly be subject to accusations, perhaps from the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), of having protected his friends because he would be making exceptions for individual companies. That would be very dangerous politically.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You are going to do it every day.

Mr. Pepin: No, Sir. I do not want to repeat what was said during the hour or two which we spent in committee on this point, but I pointed out that so far as the administration of the act is concerned, where the share ownership of the company concerned has not changed materially after the minister has given an opinion on the eligibility or otherwise of the company, the opinion should be considered as remaining in effect. That is the only thing one can do. Knowing full well, as was emphasized by the hon. member for Waterloo, that shares keep moving constantly, the minister could not commit himself in advance on these matters. But as I said in the committee, administratively speaking the opinion given under clause 3(8) is valid inasmuch as there has not been any material change in the distribution of shares in the company. This is known only to the company. Suppose I give an opinion today, on July 5, and there is no material change in the distribution of shares in the company until September, 1974. The opinion that I have given is then one that the company can use, and that is all it is possible to do under the circumstances.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister is still insisting on the onus being on the individual.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion? All those in favour of the said motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I delcare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 12 (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) negatived.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to agreement made yesterday, motions Nos. 13 and 14 are to be considered and disposed of separately. Therefore the Chair will not put motion No. 13. Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West) moves motion No. 13 as follows:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by inserting therein, next after line 34 on page 12 thereof, the following:

"(b) a business enterprise carried on by a corporation with provincial objects that is incorporated under the laws of a province and is excluded by name from the application of this act by an order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council of that province;"

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, this amendment, which I must admit from the jurisdictional relationship point of view does adduce a certain complication, does allow me to indicate one more area where this act is an expression of unilaterally assumed jurisdiction by the Parliament of Canada. The Canadian Bar Association has recommended to the minister that this bill be tested by or referred to the Supreme Court to see whether the government has jurisdiction to deal with a company incorporated under the laws of a province with objects that are limited to activities within that province.

• (1530)

This amendment was designed to authorize an exception to be made by a province, bearing in mind the legitimate interests of provinces in economic activity within their borders. This is something which is not the sole prerogative of the federal government, extending the unilateral action it has taken, completely disregarding prior consultation with the provinces. The whole question of foreign ownership and of takeovers, so far as the provinces are concerned, was considered in a vacuum; they were not consulted.

I think the minister will agree with me that the provinces have a legitimate interest in the economic activities of companies or businesses that operate within their territorial jurisdictions. This is the first time the government of Canada has dared move into this particular field, which I describe as a form of economic czardom or overseeing.

Therefore I have taken the limited means available to me by proposing that power be given to a provincial government to say to the federal government in this regard, "Keep your cotton-picking hands off." That is a term that has been used by provincial ministers to federal ministers on innumerable occasions. It has been used in dominion-provincial conferences, and that is what is meant by this amendment. There is reason for it. If the minister were on this side of the chamber and looking at the bill, he too would recognize that a province has a legitimate interest in doing this. He could readily see from "le château fort du centre du Canada" that an Olympian decision is being delivered with regard to something that is happening strictly within provincial jurisdiction.

This is something that has never come within the control of the government of Canada. The government of Canada has no control whatsoever over a foreign company coming into a province and registering under its laws. It has not one iota of control in law or otherwise. A company may carry on business within provincial jurisdiction, report to the provincial authorities, be held responsible to the courts of the province and have subsidiaries within a province. But now for some reason or other the government of Canada can say, "We will step in if you dare buy the total assets of a public company, or 20 per cent of the shares of a private company operating within the province." I say that that is totally ill-founded in law. It is for that reason that I have put forward this amendment, to highlight again the action I think should have been taken by the government in arriving at the presentation of a law that at least had the agreement of the provinces.

The provinces also have some concern about takeovers and foreign ownership. Is this action to be taken only by the government of Canada? After all, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said, "This is what we are going to do. If some of the provinces are not satisfied with the way in which we are dealing with the question of foreign ownership, let them take their own action." A province which may not be satisfied with the way the federal government is dealing with takeovers or foreign ownership may well say, "We are going to exempt all companies in our province." That would be quite in accord with what the Prime Minister said.

Indeed, the provinces might take stronger action than the federal government has proposed. Some of the provinces have already moved in an ad hoc way. The province of Ontario has moved in a certain direction because it wants more processing of basic resources undertaken in the province; but it has not done much to encourage such processing. After all, it is the buyer who determines in what form he will take the commodity he wants. There is no such thing as monopoly of supply; there are many alternative sources of supply.

The province of Alberta has moved in a certain direction and has imposed further conditions with regard to the development of the tar sands. Extension of a permit was made conditional upon certain Canadianization features. I believe some of the results may be more apparent than real because Canadian resources may not be able to fulfil all the requirements, but at least this was a legitimate step taken by a province with regard to resources within its own jurisdiction, applicable to a company within its jurisdiction.

The government of Canada hasn't a word to say about the operations of Syncrude until it starts to transport oil across the boundary of the province of Alberta into another province or applies to transport oil out of the country. The federal government has no control whatsoever over the output of oil from that development when completed except when it may be transported outside the province, when the pipeline will come under the control of the government of Canada. The transportation, the utilization and the pricing of the oil are not subject to determination by the National Energy Board. The National Energy Board may determine the market area in a certain part of the country but beyond that there is nothing that would apply.

I find it extraordinary that there has been this attempt at unilateral action. It will be very interesting to see the reaction the first time—this is presupposing that the law comes into force—the minister goes contrary to the desires of one of the provinces in regard to something that is entirely within provincial jurisdiction. Notwithstanding the amendment to clause 2(2), if the action should be contrary to the expressed desires of the provinces I would judge that the law would immediately be tested in the Supreme Court of Canada. While this is taking place we will see if the government carries on under the law.

It is with that purpose in mind and to highlight these difficulties that I have brought forth this amendment. As I have said, I do not think the House will support it because I know the attitude of the minister and his advisers. They have shut not one eye but both eyes to the question of jurisdictional competence; but it is a fact of life, Mr. Speaker.

I know it would be a lot easier for the minister if he could move at will through all the corporations of the country. It would be a lot easier administratively, but we are not a unitary state and it is not the Parliament of Canada nor the corporations branch which gives the right of existence to corporations. All that they do comes under the jurisdiction of the provinces, but it seems that the federal government of Canada now says that it will oversee these activities to the extent that it will seek to determine the quality and quantity of ownership.

I hope that all hon. members will recognize the problem and the Frankenstein they will have created if they support the minister in this bill.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, it has been obvious to me for some time from the amendments moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and his colleagues and the speeches they have made that far from strengthening this bill they have consistently moved amendments which would weaken an already weak bill. They would weaken it to the extent that the bill would give the government no power at all.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What would your provincial administration do the first time its toes were stepped upon?

Mr. Orlikow: I will come to that in a moment, Mr. Speaker. I do not have much faith in the bill, nor do I have much faith in the desire of this government or this minister to administer the bill in such a way that takeovers which have been going on at a very rapid rate will be stopped. I can think of no way in which the hands of the minister could be tied even more than they are by this weak bill than to approve the amendment moved by the hon. member for Edmonton West.

I say this more in a spirit of regret than in criticism, but Canada has a sorry record going back more than 20 years in the field of economic development in various provinces. Which provinces become involved in actively promoting economic development which does not come from the ordinary forces of market activity and the desire of industry to make profits? Not the province of Ontario, which is very active; not the province of British Columbia; not the province of Alberta where the hon. member for Edmonton West comes from. They are the have-not provinces, those where for various reasons such as small population or distance from markets economic growth has not progressed at a rapid enough rate and large numbers of people are unemployed. They are provinces such as Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and my own province of Manitoba. These are the provinces in which provincial governments through one agency or another have become involved in inducing, enticing and persuading private investors to come and build up industry or use the potential resources.

How have they done this, Mr. Speaker? To a large extent it has been through a kind of competition amongst themselves to see how much they could give the private interests in order to get them to come to their province. The record is a sorry one of failure after failure, disaster after disaster and giveaway after giveaway. Let me briefly give some illustrations of this in case the hon. member for Edmonton West does not know about them. Some years ago the government of Newfoundland was involved in this kind of promotion. Three cases come to mind. There was the tremendous hydroelectric development at Churchill Falls in Labrador which cost several billion dollars and produced a tremendous amount of power. Very little of this is needed in Newfoundland or Labrador, so the bulk of the power will be used in the province of Quebec and the remainder sold as surplus power to New York States.

Within the last week or so the minister of finance in the Conservative government of Newfoundland stated that the deal made by the former government with Brinco was so bad from the point of view of the province that it would not even get back the money it put into the deal. The promoters will do very well and will make money, the province of Quebec will get power at a reasonable rate and the State of New York will get power at a good price, but th epeople of Newfoundland will be the losers on this Brinco deal.

Similarly, tens of millions of dollars have gone into a linerboard plant in Newfoundland. Again, the financial arrangements made between the then Liberal government of Newfoundland and the interests putting up that plant were so bad from the point of view of the people of Newfoundland that the present government has exercised its right to take over the plant. The latest example is the oil refinery at Come-By-Chance on which the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Davis) has served notice that it must comply with the federal government's pollution control standards. Unless within the next three weeks they are prepared to invest another $5 million in improving pollution control equipment at that plant, he will order a shut down of the work.

Or you can consider the proposal of the province of Nova Scotia, made by the former Conservative government, for building a heavy water plant on Cape Breton Island. That plant has been in the process of construction for five years or more and has cost the people of Nova Scotia and the federal government, which is involved in the financing of that plan and in the financing of most plans proposed by the provinces, more than $100 million. That is how much the plant has cost the government of Nova Scotia and the federal government. It is estimated that we shall spend $200 million before—or should I say "if"—that plant produces one pound of heavy water.

Or you may consider something that happened in my province. The former Conservative government entered into an agreement with a mysterious group of financiers in Switzerland who were to build a pulp and paper complex at The Pas in northern Manitoba. As an inducement for coming to Manitoba they were given rights to cut timber in virtually a quarter of the province. About $100 million has been spent on building that plant. Without question there was much overexpenditure and unnecessary spending. Mr. Speaker, 90 per cent or more of that money was put up by the province of Manitoba. So bad did the situation become and so behind were the supposed owners in meeting bills of contractors and workers that they were forced into bankruptcy. The provincial government had to take over that plant. Again, the federal government was involved because under our program of grants to slow growth areas the federal government was obligated to pay substantial amounts of money for that project.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. I am trying to tell the hon. member for Edmonton West that the record of provincial governments of whatever political stripe is bad, not because they are incompetent, not because they cannot do a good job but for other reasons. Provincial Crown corporations and provincial hydroelectric systems, most of which are publicly owned in the provinces, have demonstrated repeatedly that they can operate efficiently and provide service to the people at low cost.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Which provinces encountered difficulties? It was precisely those provinces which were in the worst shape. They suffered from the highest rates of unemployment in this country and were forced by pressure, by the need to do things for their people, into poor deals and poor financial arrangements. Despite that, the hon. member for Edmonton West would move an amendment to this bill which would give the very provinces which have demonstrated repeatedly their inability to execute plans which would benefit their people the power of the veto. In other words, they would have power to veto even the limited proposals which would be made by this government.

It seems to me the hon. member for Edmonton West is saying that the provinces will accept almost any deal which will provide some employment and some economic development; they will accept any deal regardless of cost and the concessions they must give. The hon. member would give them power to veto even the very limited steps which the government will be empowered to take under this bill. That means, although the hon. member for Edmonton West does not say so, that the have-not provinces in the vast majority of cases could say, when the federal government deemed a takeover not to be in the interest of the country as a whole, "We need this takeover and therefore we insist that you do not prevent it." If the hon. member for Edmonton West is so obviously opposed to this bill, instead of moving amendments which would cripple the bill he ought to vote against it.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the course of this debate we have supported amendments that would increase the degree of consultation between federal and provincial governments. We felt that this was highly desirable because we think that in making their decisions the two levels of government ought to enjoy a closer relationship. We were agreeable to the amendment suggested by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) which would achieve that end. What we have never wanted—and our position was set out clearly by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow—is a veto power in the hands of the provinces, a power they could exercise against the federal government.

The amendment we are considering supports a kind of economic separatism for it advocates a doctrine that would be totally unacceptable at the constitutional level. I wonder what the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) would say about the constitutional validity of a power which gave each province the right to veto every legislative decision taken by the federal government. I do not think he would approve. He is a concerned member and knows what the effect of such veto would be. At the same time, however, he is prepared to move an amendment that would give the provinces power to veto certain economic-based decisions made in other fields. For some reason or other he distinguishes between economic and political and social activity. That distinction I find hard to make.

If we examine some of the possibilities that might arise, we will see they are pretty horrible to contemplate. I am talking about possibilities that might arise if we gave the provinces the veto power that the amendment would permit. Allegedly, the veto power is justified by the contention that what goes on inside the province and what happens to companies incorporated and operating within provincial boundaries affects only that province and is the sole responsibility, therefore, of the elected representatives of the province. We know that is not true. What happens in one province very much affects the lives of people in other provinces, just as what happens in Canada affects people of other countries and what happens in other countries may affect us all. Therefore, the justification for the veto on the basis of self-determination, on the basis that "It is our own skins that are affected", falls flat.

Consider, for instance, the case of a provincial hydro-electric utility. The electricity sometimes is distributed between provinces; in other cases it is transmitted from a province to a foreign country. Say, for instance, that a province in financial difficulty was made a good offer for its utility, an offer so good that it could not possibly turn it down. Say that it wanted to sell out to a foreign company or concern. If the province could make a reasonably advantageous deal but did not think that provinces ought to assume the kind of responsibilities that we think they should assume, should it be permitted to sell? In other words, should it be given the kind of veto proposed in the amendment?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But such a transaction would not be constitutional.

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. member for Edmonton West, who is learned in constitutional law, says that that would not be constitutional. That is the very point I am trying to make. There are all kinds of precedents to indicate that federal responsibility must be paramount in certain situations.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Which arise outside the country.

Mr. Saltsman: Not only outside the country but inside the country. The federal government is paramount in the field of broadcasting and in some areas of production.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In the production of oil and gas?

Mr. Saltsman: Only to a limited extent. Actually, we have decided that certain things are important. Really, what the hon. member says, and I think I can say this with justice, is that considerations of foreign ownership are not important to the national interest. The implication is that they should not be considered in the same context as telecommunications, transportation, broadcasting and banking and that each province should in effect be able to make its own law. If you give them veto power, you nullify the whole purpose of a national policy on foreign ownership.

• (1600)

Would the hon. member disagree that we have a constitution which gives this kind of veto power to the provinces in other areas affecting the political structure of Canada? In the field of economics, he is quite prepared to say, "Let the devil take the hindmost and let each province determine its own future and priorities. There is always some validity for this."

Obviously, we want to see each province given as much freedom as possible to determine the thrust of its future. But in the final analysis, on a question like foreign ownership and takeovers in particular the national interest has to be considered. Only the federal government can do that. If an amendment of this kind is accepted there would be a very obvious veto in respect of all decisions made by the federal government. If a province chooses to exercise that veto, the effect would be to nullify any meagre effects this bill might have.

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a word of agreement to what the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has said. I sometimes think that the Conservative party considers it to be their role to return to the provinces all the powers of the federal government. There is already within the provinces a growing desire to run their own show, to consider that they alone speak for the citizens who live within the province, open embassies abroad, set up their own communications systems and insist on determining their own economic policy. I remind the members of the Conservative party that we in this House also represent the people of Canada. I speak for the people of Don Valley as members opposite speak for the people in their regions when regional matters are reflected under federal headings.

I do not think we should be frightened about exercising our powers under the constitution. We should not say that the government of the province of Ontario and the elected representatives of that chamber, for example, are the only voices of the people of Ontario on public affairs. We here are very much responsible for regional problems. I am here as a representative of a region, as are all members. In the process of making decisions, when a regional concern is at stake we should not think that somehow or other a province has more right to speak for all concerned than we do. This body represents the whole of the people of Canada as well as all the regions of Canada.

Let us not be frightened about possible constitutional limitations or using the powers that the constitution of Canada has given us. There is a national perspective. This is a problem on which a national perspective has to be taken. Certainly regional interests are affected, but the regions of Canada are represented in this chamber as much as they are in any one of the provincial legislatures.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to get involved in an otherwise very interesting constitutional debate. I could see that the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) took delight in elaborating on very strict constitutional views. One gets the impression that this very experienced "senior" politician is preparing his biography these days and that he already pictures himself in constitutional law textbooks. All this is very interesting.

One thing is certain, however, and many people have noticed it: even though the distribution of power between the central government and the provinces is rather imprecise in the field of industrial development, I for one doubt very much that we could make this division on a territorial basis, as the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) has just mentioned, or on the basis of the place of incorporation of the companies. Yet this is what the amendment proposes.

I can only gather that the amendment is unacceptable because it ignores the purpose, scope and intent of the legislation and would make it ineffective.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the House ready for the question?

[English]

The question is on motion No. 13. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): I declare the motion negatived on division.

Motion No. 13 (Mr. Lambert, Edmonton West) negatived.

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk) moved motion No. 14 as follows:

That Bill C-201, an act to provide for the review and assessment of acquisitions of control of Canadian business enterprises by certain persons, be amended by deleting therefrom paragraph (c) of subsection (1) of clause 4.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. There is in the bill provision for the monitoring of takeovers of companies having a minimum of $250,000 in gross assets and $3 million in gross revenue. The purpose of this amendment is to, in effect, reduce that minimum to zero so that any foreign takeover will come within the purview of the act. The reasons for it might seem rather picayune but they are twofold. Under the present arrangement there are a number of loopholes. I shall give a brief illustration.

It is possible that a foreign corporation interested in gaining a major presence in a certain segment of Canadian economic activity could, rather than undertaking to purchase a Canadian company having in excess of $250,000 in gross assets, purchase a number of Canadian companies having less gross assets and less gross revenue than is provided for in the act. Through small takeovers it could gradually establish a rather imposing presence within a given area of the economy. That is a prospect which the legislation overlooks, and it is cause for just as much concern potentially as the kind of takeovers which the government contemplates screening under this legislation.

The other concern which prompted me to submit my amendment is that when initially developed, a good deal of technology is financed on a very marginal basis. It is quite possible that we could lose a good deal, or at least some new technology to foreign corporations in its inception simply because the gross assets involved in the development of technology and the revenue being gained do not meet the limits proposed in the legislation in the early stages of the development. This has been the case with many great technological breakthroughs.

There is also a tendency in Canadian banking institutions to be reluctant to fund Canadian ventures into new areas of technology. This is because they are considered high risk. On the other hand, funding is readily available if a Canadian inventor of some new technology has the potential support of a United States or international corporation for his product. This gives banks the assurance they need before making development capital available.

• (1610)

This is one of the problems of industrial development in Canada, and as written I think the bill does nothing to remedy the situation. It lets the present position prevail whereby new technological development in Canada, owing to the exigencies of the financial world, are quite often unnecessarily thrown into the hands of foreign corporations.

These are the two major reasons for my submitting this amendment and I should like to hear the comments of other hon. members with respect thereto.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the many discussions on foreign ownership one of the matters often debated is whether the future of Canada's industrial development really hinges on buying back these large, monolithic, developed companies which are so set in their ways, which mass produce certain consumer or technical goods, or rather whether the future of this country depends upon finding new areas of development and on putting emphasis on financing such resources.

The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) who moved this motion made an excellent point when he said that many new ideas originate in the minds of the staff of small companies. It is here where the most dangerous form of takeover takes place, and the provisions of this bill do nothing to rectify the situation. The reason I say this is the most dangerous form of takeover is that these ideas will generate development in the future.

I can recite a long catalogue of inventions which were conceived in someone's basement or small laboratory and which later formed the basis for the establishment of large corporations. It is not the mature companies that are at the heart of the foreign ownership problem; rather, it is the companies that have their eye on future development. The mature companies are more in the past and if we concentrate on them the future will evade us and foreign ownership will continue ad infinitum.

There are many new technologies developed by mature companies and to this extent we must take an interest in large corporations. But it would be a terrible mistake and a gross oversight to neglect smaller companies in the way the bill does. What possible justification can the drafters of the bill have for the exclusion of small companies? Do they feel that there are so many small companies, that there are so many transfers of businesses, that the situation would be far too complex to deal with? Even if that were the case, would it still not be worth while to look at the situation?

The government would not have to take months and months to scrutinize such takeovers. Most of them would be routine. After all, the corner grocery is not going to be taken over by a large international corporation. The transfer of a small plant is usually from one Canadian to another Canadian, often from one partner to another partner or from one group of stockholders to another group of stockholders.

Small companies that develop unique products often do so with the help of government programs sponsored by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The department has done worth-while work in terms of assisting inventors in this country to develop new products. Most of these new products are developed by relatively small firms. I presume the reason the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce offers such assistance is not to make a small outlet ripe for takeover by an international corporation but to develop products that are indigenous to this country, and to promote entrepreneural activity.

Unless smaller companies are included within a foreign ownership policy, a great deal of damage will be done. From the administrative point of view it is possible to establish an initial review procedure to approve transfers between Canadians quickly. There is no reason this cannot be done. If because the procedure is quick the odd mistake is made, then this is the price we will have to pay.

I think this review procedure would also provide an enormous opportunity for the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I have seen many small companies taken over by foreign corporations. After all, no one is going to go after the Steel Company of Canada; it is the small companies that are picked up, the companies that have difficulty getting sufficient financing. This is the sort of company the international corporations look for. Sometimes they are trying to buy out a competing product that might challenge their own. Sometimes they are just gambling, buying up all the new ideas they can. They know that though some will not work, others will. The international corporation loves to do this sort of thing and will continue to do so in view of the exclusion that is built into this bill.

Let me return to what I said earlier about the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce having an enormous opportunity here. If the clause setting the limit at $250,000 were removed and all takeovers had to be scrutinized, the minister's department would have a golden opportunity. For example, if they asked a company why it wanted to sell out to a foreigner and the company replied that it had not been able to get any financing, the departmental officials would then know that the company was having problems and might be able to help. Companies sometimes feel the government does not care about them anyway; there is a certain cynicism in that regard. But here would be a real role for the department to play as the helpers of small industry in Canada.

You might, of course, get a situation where the only way to save the company would be to sell out to a foreign corporation, but on the other hand situations would be brought to the minister's attention of which formerly he and his officials had been unaware. This would enable them to go to the root cause of foreign takeovers in Canada. While legislation of itself might have some value, it does not solve the root problem. There are some things we do not understand about takeovers and about why we are so dominated by foreign ownership. We must deal with these questions, and legislation in itself is not sufficient answer.

This would be a wonderful opportunity for the minister to accept the amendment. His department would look at every takeover and would then be in a position to analyse the reason for the takeover and to consider offering assistance. Perhaps it is the sort of thing his department can do now. I am sure there are people who come to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and are surprised at the amount of assistance available. In spite of publicity and what I think is general knowledge about services available, some small businessmen still have not a clue as to the kind of assistance available to them from the federal government and certain provincial governments.

The minister has talked about rationalization. Perhaps this is a way the minister can engage in a rationalization program. Instead of talking about it and making brilliant speeches, he could do something about this and provide opportunities for development and financing. He may say that his terms of reference are not as broad as he might wish; but if they are not, they should be. After all, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was set up supposedly for the purpose of assisting business generally. If it cannot assist to the extent required, it should seek a broader mandate and greater responsibility.

These are a few of the things that I suggest would be of advantage. If this bill goes through without the kind of amendment proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk, it will in effect be useless. That is one of the reasons we urge acceptance of the amendment.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the enthusiastic way in which the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) speaks about this bill. I cannot for the life of me understand why he qualifies that enthusiasm by saying "if this bill goes through". Why is he not willing to help the bill get through? Obviously what he says ought to be done makes sense, but I cannot understand why members of his party appear not to want the bill to pass: they speak so enthusiastically about it's content.

The reason I must refuse the amendment is that from my point of view, if it were accepted the office of takeovers would be in the business of screening every potential takeover where there was a $2 in assets and $5 in revenue company involved. That is something which cannot be contemplated administratively by me.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I find that the minister has a great deal of difficulty recognizing when help is being offered. We have made very clear our stand on this bill. We feel we need much more comprehensive, and a different type of legislation than that proposed in the bill before us. We are trying to offer suggestions and ways of looking at the particulars of this bill and how we can be of help to the minister. It is interesting to note that in his answer the minister did not deal with a single point raised by my colleagues, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Rowland) and my friend the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman).

Mr. Rowland: Am I not your friend too?

Mr. Burton: I assure the hon. member for Selkirk that he is my friend as well. The minister did not answer one of the points raised by those two members; instead, he raised the administrative point regarding the situation created by having to screen a much greater number of companies than will presumably be the case when this legislation passes the House and the other place.

If the minister wants to grapple with some of the problems involved in foreign ownership and takeovers he must give further consideration to the points raised by my two colleagues. He must do that if he really intends to do something with this legislation. However, we find the minister turning down these proposals carte blanche.

Quite frankly, I think administrative problems would be involved if this amendment were adopted and incorporated in the bill, but at the same time the minister must give some consideration to the proposal. He has not refuted in any way the proposition that there must be some concern over takeovers of small companies as well as companies larger than the minimum size specified in the bill. He has not given any indication that he will move in this direction. I can visualize several different approaches the minister might take if he is to tackle this question and take account of administrative problems. Again the minister has demonstrated he is not really prepared to get down to business and deal with problems with which he should be concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the motion now before us?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the Standing Order, the division will be postponed.

It being 4.30 p.m., it is my duty to interrupt proceedings pursuant to the provisions of the special order passed earlier today.

ST. LAWRENCE PORTS OPERATIONS BILL

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING AND RELATED OPERATIONS

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-230, to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The suggestion was made earlier that this bill might be considered in committee of the whole. I have considered this proposal and am quite prepared, if it is the general wish of the House, to agree that the bill be sent to committee of the whole with the expectation that it will be dealt with without undue delay.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The motion therefore will be that the bill be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is my unhappy duty to bring before this House a bill to terminate the illegal work stoppages at the St. Lawrence ports of Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières and to provide for the orderly resumption of operations at those ports. The government asks Parliament for this enactment because in its judgment the public and national interest require an end to this illegal situation and an end to the economic situation which is working severe hardship and damage not only on the three communites involved but on the country at large.

Acts of Parliament to terminate industrial disputes are infrequent. Indeed, it might not be going too far to say they are rare. There have been five acts over the past 30 years to bring an end to industrial disputes when the parties have failed to reach agreement in the normal process of collective bargaining. This bill, though, is exceptional for an additional reason. It does not terminate a collective bargaining dispute. It does not terminate that kind of dispute where a legal strike may be in progress. It does not terminate it in the sense that various differences between the two parties have been unable to be resolved.

Unlike previous acts of Parliament, this bill would terminate an unlawful situation, an unlawful strike which has been called after a three-year collective bargaining agreement had been entered into in April of this year and at a time when a difference arose over the interpretation of clauses of that agreement. Subsequent to this basic source of dispute, that is to say, subsequent to the disagreement over what was the meaning of certain clauses and over what right the employer had to redeploy men in a certain fashion, there arose differences over the conditions of return to work under a contract which provided for a proper form of job security based on 37 guaranteed weeks of pay. This complex issue of return to work has become part of the difficulty in which we now find ourselves.

The debate in this House on Friday June 16 reviewed many of the basic issues in the current situation. However, I should like to place before the House now a factual account, a sequence of events which led up to this situation. On May 16 a work stoppage began. The basic issue which precipitated it was whether or not management had the right to break up longshoremen gangs prior to the introduction of the computer despatch system to be inaugurated approximately in mid-September. Management in Montreal took the initiative of breaking up work gangs and redeploying men not required to work a hatch to other work in a shed. The longshoremen's union contended management did not have this right until introduction of the computer despatch system, and the work stoppage began. I will come later to the question of the legality of the actions taken.

I immediately instructed our Montreal industrial specialist, Mr. Charles Poirier, to meet with the parties and urge that they refer this matter to arbitration as provided for in the collective agreement. Both sides declined to take that step. On May 15 I received a telegram from the MEA. If I may, I shall use the abbreviation MEA in referring to the Maritime Employers Association which is an association comprising some 51 stevedoring, shipping and other companies. The telegram requested I grant consent to prosecute the union for breach of contract. However, it was pointed out to the MEA that the appropriate remedy for the solution lay in the arbitration procedure of the collective agreement which provided that either party could initiate arbitration.

On May 30 the MEA announced that it had suspended the longshoremen. On June 5 I sent telegrams to both parties again urging that their differences be submitted to the procedure specified by law and asked them to advise me of their willingness to place their differences before the arbitrator named in the agreement. In a further exchange of telegrams in the next few days I continued to urge the parties to submit their dispute to arbitration. On June 19 I informed both parties that unless advised by return telegram that either party was ready to proceed to arbitration on the matter involved in violation of their collective agreement, it would be my intention to appoint an industrial inquiry commission to investigate the dispute, provided that the employers terminated the suspension of the longshoremen and provided that the longshoremen returned to work. I also indicated that I stood ready to meet the representatives of the parties in Ottawa at the earliest possible date to discuss such arrangements.

On June 20 and 21, together with my officials, I met with both parties in Ottawa to discuss the conditions which might be worked out for the lifting of the suspension and the return of the longshoremen to work. My position is, and has been, that there are four types of disputes dealt with in existing Canadian legislation governing the collective bargaining relationship: First, disputes as to representation of employees by a trade union. This is the normal dispute over union recognition. It is not the kind of dispute we are facing. Second, disputes as to the interpretation, application or violation of the provisions of a collective agreement. These are grievance disputes over rights. This is the kind of dispute we are facing. Third, disputes as to unfair labour practices. Fourth, disputes over the negotiation of conditions of employment to be included in a collective agreement. These are interest disputes.

The type of dispute with which we are concerned in this situation falls into the second one mentioned—disputes concerning the interpretation, application or violation of the provisions of a collective agreement. This type of dispute must, under existing legislation, be submitted to arbitration for final settlement which is binding on all parties and on all employees. The legislation requires that every collective agreement must contain a provision for the final settlement of disputes concerning its meaning or violation. Where such a provision is lacking, the Canada Labour Relations Board may prescribe a procedure for final settlement of grievance disputes. This is a distinctly Canadian procedure, dating from 1944.

The collective agreement between the International Longshoremen's Association and the Maritime Employers Association does set out the grievance procedure in article 5. I shall not read that procedure; we covered it fairly adequately in our debate on June 16. Subsequent to my meetings with the parties in Ottawa on June 22, the MEA advised me that it had decided to initiate arbitration and formally requested Judge Alan Gold, the first arbitrator named in the agreement, to arbitrate the issues in dispute. The union, however, refused to participate in the arbitration hearings which commenced on June 27. Union officers, with counsel, made an appearance at the arbitration hearings on Wednesday, June 28, only for the purpose of arguing that the issues in dispute were not arbitrable.

The arbitrator dealt with the four issues that had been submitted to him by the MEA and concluded as follows. I would like to read one or two pages which comprise the conclusions of the arbitrator since I think it would be valuable to all hon. members to have these in front of them. I quote from page 21 of the arbitrator's decision dated June 29 in Montreal.

• (1640)

It reads:

Dealing now with each head of the grievance I conclude as follows:

(1) In so far as article 501 I is concerned, it is evident that there was a dispute between the parties concerning the interpretation and the application of the collective agreement. Under the circumstances, the men were obliged to continue working in accordance with the orders given by management. Their failure to do so is a breach of this clause.

(2) In so far as article 501 J is concerned, it is equally clear that once these orders were given the president and the business agents of the union had no right to hinder or stop the progress of the work nor to —nor to prevent the companies from exercising their right to determine and direct the methods and procedures of operation.

[Translation]

[English]

In intervening as they did and in taking the men off the job, the union, its president and its business agents clearly breached the provisions of this clause.

(3) In so far as article 6 is concerned, it is clear that the partial and total work stoppages that resulted were in direct contravention and breach of this clause and contrary to law.

(4) Article 911, the issue at the root of the dispute, is in a sense irrelevant in view of the larger issues involved, for even if the union were right in its pretension, which I do not believe, it was wrong to act as it did. It should have had recourse to the grievance procedure, the accepted method of dispute settlement under the collective agreement and the law.

The fact is, however, that on the merits of the question the union is wrong. If there is ambiguity between article 3 of the old agreement and article 911 of the new, it is readily dispelled by the clear terms of the memorandum of April 3, 1972.

Upon the proper construction of the new agreement and the memorandum, I must conclude that management's stand was correct. Whatever the practice may have been before, it is clear that under the new regime (including the transitional period awaiting the installation of the computer) the practice was to be changed.

In the result, I find that at all times material article 911 was in effect and the construction put upon its terms by management was in conformity with the agreement between the parties and that the orders given to the workers as a result were lawful and should have been obeyed.

Mr. Mulroney—

I should like to say here that Mr. Mulroney is counsel for the Maritime Employers Association.

—has indicated that although he is entitled to ask for damages against the union he does not do so before me but instead reserves his right for the future. In the result, I find it unnecessary to decide whether or not the grievance, as drafted, is wide enough to encompass such a demand.

Counsel has also asked me to suspend Mr. Jean-Marc St-Onge, president of the union, and Messrs. Claude Guay, Theodore Beaudin and Jean-Baptiste Tremblay, business agents, from any activity on the Port of Montreal for a period of at least five years and to order that their names be struck for life from the registers of the job security fund. While the conduct of these gentlemen undoubtedly merits the severest sanctions, I do not believe that within the narrow compass of the grievance as filed with me I have the authority to apply them. These were not issues of which they had notice and which they might have met had such notice been given to them.

For the foregoing reasons the grievance herein is hereby maintained

[French]

—à toutes fins que de droit,—

[English]

and I hereby find and declare:

(1) That the union and its members have violated the provisions of article 501 I of the collective agreement;

(2) That the union, its president, Mr. Jean-Marc St-Onge and its business agents, Messrs. Claude Guay, Theodore Beaudin and Jean-Baptiste Tremblay, have violated article 501 J of the said agreement;

(3) That the strike by the union and its members is illegal, constituting work stoppages in violation of article 6 of the agreement and contrary to law;

(4) That the construction placed by management upon article 911 of the agreement was correct and that the orders given in consequence were lawful and should have been obeyed by the employees concerned.

Montreal, June 29, 1972

Alan B. Gold,

Arbitrator.

Following the release of the arbitrator's report, the ILA held a meeting and decided that they would not accept the arbitrator's award.

As I indicated earlier, I could not offer the parties mediation services until the provisions of the law and the provisions of the collective agreement in respect of arbitration had been utilized. However, once the arbitrator had made his report, the situation was such that I could proffer mediation on the issues impeding the lifting of suspensions and the return to work.

On Friday, June 30, I directed the Deputy Minister, Mr. Bernard Wilson, and the Assistant Deputy Minister, Industrial Relations, Mr. W. P. Kelly, to proceed to Montreal with a view to arranging meetings between the MEA and the ILA and, if possible, to mediate conditions that would enable the ports to be re-opened.

The key issues involved in a return to work appeared to be the lifting of the suspension of the employees by the employers, agreement by the union and employees to accept the arbitrator's awards and return to work, the calling back to work of the employees as and when work became available, and the most important item which had to do with the job security provisions of the collective agreement. My officials conducted intensive mediation over the holiday weekend for some four days and when it was evident that the parties could not reach agreement, they submitted a detailed proposal recommending the conditions which should prevail to bring about lifting of the suspensions and a return to work. The recommendations were to be submitted to union meetings on July 4, yesterday, and the MEA was to consider the proposal the same day.

I have heard officially from the parties to the dispute in telegrams which I have here with me. I should indicate to the House that late last evening I received a telegram from the Maritime Employers Association which I will read in whole. It reads as follows:

The Maritime Employers Association accepts the proposal outlined in your return to work arrangement dated July 3, 1972 for the ports of Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières.

A. E. Masters

President M.E.A.

• (1650)

I received official notice, although informal notice was available earlier, early this afternoon from Mr. Norman Quigley, international vice-president of the longshoremen's union and president of the local at Trois-Rivières, and in his wire he speaks for the two locals situated at Trois-Rivières and Quebec City. I will read his telegram. It, too, is short.

Dear Sir,

Memberships of local 1846 and 1739 have accepted proposals made by government representatives with one condition that any legal procedures will not be taken against any officers or members and union of above mentioned local.

The reference to legal procedures is to legal procedures initiated by various employers with respect to the illegal work stoppage. I have received a wire today from Mr. St. Onge, president of local 375 of Montreal. Perhaps I should read that in full, but it is rather lengthy.

Mr. Minister, following the recommendations made by your deputy minister on July 3, the International Longshoremen's Association, local 375, held a special general meeting of its membership in Montreal on July 4. While accepting the principle of returning to work as soon as possible, the members of the association have unanimously decided to reject the recommendation concerning the suspension of the job security plan until October 15, 1972 , a date which was deemed totally unacceptable. The members have set as a condition for returning to work that the job guarantee be restored approximately one week after the activities are resumed in the port of Montreal and that management give up the idea of any legal proceedings and action against the union and its officers. The officers of the association are available to meet you at any time in order to reach a satisfactory agreement whereby work can be resumed as soon as possible.

Those were the responses, Mr. Speaker. Work in fact is not being resumed at the ports and in the circumstances I have to assume that the proposals of mediation have not been successful in bringing about a termination of the dispute and that the proposals have in fact been rejected. May I now come to the principles in this bill.

Mr. Peters: Would the minister permit a question? Was part of the agreement that the court action that was contemplated was left in abeyance? Was this part of the recommendation?

Mr. O'Connell: No, Mr. Speaker; the question of court action was no part of the proposals put forward by the mediators. If the House would like me to read the proposals, I will do so. It might take me a moment to locate them.

Mr. Peters: The question I was really asking is this: Is this a new factor in the negotiations that your deputy minister had undertaken? Has this been added since, or was it part of the negotiations in which he had been involved and in the proposition that he put forward to the parties on June 3?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I will check into that to be absolutely precise, but my preliminary answer is that the question of legal action did not enter into the main negotiations, that the proposals had been worked out prior to that issue arising, that Mr. St. Onge raised it at the last moment as he was leaving. But I will check into these factors. I would like to report again, to be absolutely precise on this point.

The bill before us, if enacted by Parliament, expresses the will of this Parliament that the ports be reopened. It expresses the national interest, that the public interest lies in the opening of these ports. The object of the bill, as hon. members will see, is to achieve the resumption of longshoring and related operations in the three ports of Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières. In the bill we notice the requirement that each employer must resume longshoring and related operations in the ports of Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières immediately after the bill comes into force. That is set forth in clause 3. Second, each union officer must give notice to the members of the union that any strike declaration, authorization or direction previously given is invalid. That is in clause 4. Each union officer must comply with any order or request for the dispatch of longshoremen. Again that is in clause 4.

Every longshoreman coming under the collective agreement must, when so required, return to the duties of his employment. That is laid out in clause 5. Again, according to clause 5 union officials shall not impede or prevent, or attempt to impede or prevent the longshoremen from returning to work. Clause 6 provides that a further strike or lockout is prohibited under the terms of the collective agreement. This clause in substance repeats a section of the Canada Labour Code, section 128, except that it also forbids a union officer from declaring or otherwise authorizing a strike which is not provided for in the legislation already in force.

Clause 7 relates to the job security plan, which is a major impediment to returning to work. Clause 7 suspends the provisions relating to the job security plan in the collective agreement until such date as an arbitrator may specify for the resumption of operation of the plan. Under clause 7(2) an arbitrator may fix the date on which the plan will come into effect and may make such modifications to the plan as are required to give effect to it. That is an important part of the bill in front of us, Mr. Speaker. I trust all hon. members are aware of the job security plan. It is that very particular plan in this collective agreement which provides 37 guaranteed weeks of pay to the longshoremen whether in fact they are working or not. The difficulty would immediately be apparent to hon. members that if men report for work but there is no work to be done, the employer is not in a position to live up to the guarantee written into the agreement.

Again, clause 7 suspends those provisions until an arbitrator, considering all of the factors, specifies a date for the operation of the plan, and necessarily in that event the original plan becomes modified and he is given the power under this bill to make such modifications to the plan as are required to give effect to it on the date selected.

Clause 8 provides that the minister may in the future refer a matter in dispute to arbitration if the parties do not do so within a reasonable time. The final clause provides for the coming into force of the bill on the day following its being assented to, and that it expires with the collective agreement on December 31, 1974, unless earlier by proclamation.

• (1700)

I think those are the main facts of the situation, Mr. Speaker. The main reason for coming to Parliament at this time is to ask it to do what it is asked very infrequently to do in the federal jurisdiction but must be asked to do when facilities of such national importance as these three St. Lawrence docks have been closed going into the eighth week in circumstances which give us no assurance that they will be reopened in the near future, and when the public interest has been clearly engaged to the extent that it has. I would, therefore, ask Parliament to support the government in this bill.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I just want to ask a question of the minister, if you will allow it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Order, please. The hon. member for Sainte-Marie wishes to ask a question to the minister. He can do so provided the minister is agreeable. I think that the hon. member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) also wants to direct a question to the minister.

[English]

Will the minister entertain questions at this time before he resumes his seat?

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to answer questions.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I just want to clarify something. Can he tell the House why in clause 7(1) he did not use the recommendations suggested by his own mediator to both parties? In paragraph 3 we have a specific date for the application of job security or limit of job security. I think the minister has this document before him; it is the one he was supposed to refer to earlier. Why was this condition not included in clause 7(1) of the bill? Is there a reason?

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, consideration was given to that possibility. If a date were put in by legislation it would, in effect, ask this House to enter into one of the issues in dispute. I did not want to do that.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: Secondly, this House is not in possession of the economic facts and the financial factors involved. I did not think it appropriate, in the time we have available, to ask hon. members to go into an investigation of the equity of setting October 15 or September 15 or any other date. That is a very complicated matter and it seemed more appropriate to leave that question for determination by an arbitrator who can hear all of the required evidence, rather than to ask members to give to that their technical judgment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: I should like to put this question to the minister. Why did he not put any clauses containing sanctions in the bill? Would he tell the House what range of sanctions he feels the government has available to it if the provisions of the bill are not followed?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, on the first part of that question, I would answer this way. This bill is based on the presumption that when Parliament has clearly expressed its will, and has represented the public interest to the parties in this dispute, they will conform to the specific and express will of Parliament. Second, this is based on the constructive approach to the relationships between the two parties to bring about not only an early resumption of work but constructive relationships for the future. It is not that there are no sanctions behind a bill of this kind.

In answer to the second part of the question, let me quote from section 115 of the Criminal Code of Canada which relates to the disobedience of a statute of this Parliament:

> Everyone who, without lawful excuse, contravenes an act of the Parliament of Canada by wilfully doing anything that it forbids or by wilfully omitting to do anything that it requires to be done is, unless some penalty or punishment is expressly provided by law, guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

Other provisions of the Code, Mr. Speaker, particularly section 646, provide that fines may be imposed in lieu of imprisonment. I think that answers the question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must apologize to the hon. member for Hamilton West. I see the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Murphy) is also seeking the floor to ask a question. I think I should bring to the attention of all members that we are not yet in committee. It seems to me that some of the questions that are being asked now may very well be asked when we reach committee stage. I suggest to hon. members that we proceed in an orderly fashion and wait to give the minister the opportunity to answer questions.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that at this stage we take a very dim view of the makeshift approach exhibited by the activities of this government in the introduction of this bill. As I understand it, they have had this bill drafted for the past two and a half weeks, yet today the government House leader did not have it available for the scrutiny of members. I think all members would have liked to have had an opportunity to see it. He gave us some excuse about printing or something of that nature which meant that another hour passed before we were able to see the bill. When we were brought back here because the public interest was adversely affected, knowing that a bill would be presented, I say the least this government could have done was to have had this bill immediately available for the scrutiny of the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I can understand that the minister and the government did not want to become involved with the collective bargaining process because, after all, this process is supposed to settle everything. The minister did not want to intervene because, as he said, if he did that would be the end of the collective bargaining process. What disturbs me, Mr. Speaker, is that a pattern has been set. We have seen a collective agreement ignored, we have seen the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell's) directives ignored, we have seen the Quebec Superior Court ignored and we have seen Mr. Justice Gold's arbitration award ignored. Mr. Speaker, the third party involved, the general public was ignored; the national interest was ignored.

All I can say is that this strike has been disastrous, has been catastrophic, in its effects. Surely, one does not have to go into great detail in order to point out that it has inflicted severe economic loss. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it has inflicted inconvenience upon the nation. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it has created unemployment, that all these losses are damaging to the economy and well-being of this country. They are irreparable, Mr. Speaker.

I understand that some 100 ships have been turned away from the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. I understand shipping agents have announced their intention to seek other ports through which they can discharge their goods. What does this mean? It means that the entire St. Lawrence Seaway and the port of Montreal have been drastically affected, and as a result that this nation has been drastically affected.

• (1710)

Let us consider some figures relating to the port of Montreal. All cargoes handled at National Harbours Board ports in Canada during 1971 totalled a record of 93.7 million tons, up 7.9 per cent from 1970. The port of Montreal, however, shows a decline of 5.4 per cent, to 23-odd million tons, in the same period. And what has the strike done? Has it alleviated that situation? No, it has aggravated it.

To be honest, I must concede that as a result of what has happened in Montreal the Atlantic provinces have profited. I am sure that the port of Hamilton has profited. However, I am not here to speak about any profit that may come to some as a result of hardship that may be endured in any other area of the country. In the long run we shall all be worse off. What I am speaking about is the public interest of the entire country to which I belong.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: That is why I do not hesitate to stand up and speak on this bill. Everything that comes to mind about this government can be boiled down to a word I heard many years ago before I came to this House, namely, "indecision". There have been some 40 days of indecision on the part of this government. For some reason or other it suddenly awoke to the fact that the most important party in those negotiations was not management nor labour but was the consumer, the Canadian people. It suddenly realized that the public interest must prevail. We on this side of the House have said that constantly. We have said that the public interest must prevail, if necessary to the detriment of the two parties involved in the dispute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I cannot understand nor do I accept the principle enunciated by the minister, when he said he could not move until such time as the parties followed the terms of the collective agreement.

An hon. Member: He did not know how to act.

Mr. Alexander: Is the minister telling me that if the strike lasted another month and a half—I admit that the parties have not yet got together—the public interest would not suffer even longer? In the absence of any attempt on the part of the parties to abide by Judge Gold's decision, the strike would last longer. Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is a time when governments must face their public responsibilities.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I wonder why this government has delayed acting for so long. Is it afraid of the union leadership? Is it afraid of the employers' association?

An hon. Member: Sure it is.

Mr. Alexander: We on this side are not so afraid—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: —and I come from a labour city.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: My friends may laugh and snicker. Which party was it that said, "Let's get tough; let us show the people that the public interest must prevail." That statement did not come from the backbenches to the right of Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: We are not concerned about management and labour as such. We are only concerned about them as they exist in the whole system of our economy.

Mr. McCleave: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Those little ol' backbenchers may smile but they had a rude awakening when the minister brought in a measure they did not think he would bring in.

An hon. Member: He never intended to.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: The one thing that bothers me is the government's answer to a question—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, we did not go home on June 30 and I guess hon. members can take their time. We shall be here, I hope, until Friday. Let me say that we do not intend unnecessarily to block passage of this bill. Actually, we are not going to block it at all.

An hon. Member: Cut short your speech, then.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Why? Just because the government brought this bill in?

Mr. Alexander: We are concerned about the men returning to work, about the employers' ships moving again and about the economy being able to move forward again. That is what we are concerned about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I do not know if this bill will work. I do not know if union or management will accept the terms of arbitration regarding job security.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is no serious penalty for contravening.

Mr. Alexander: I do not know whether clause 7 is acceptable. I want to know why the proposals of the Deputy Minister of Labour, a man with unquestioned expertise in labour matters, were not accepted. Of course, this has already been explained. After four days of negotiation he came forward with certain proposals. Mr. Speaker, the deputy minister knows in which direction we ought to move. He came forward with certain proposals, but this bill does not incorporate them.

I heard the minister say he did not want Parliament to intervene in matters which should be left to the collective bargaining process. Don't give me that nonsense! The government brought in Bill C-183 by which it permitted agreements to be altered if technological change was involved. The government acted effectively in that regard and thought nothing of it. Why? It acted in that field because that was not as contentious an issue as the one we are now considering. The government stayed clear of this issue. It ignored the recommendations of one of the best men that it has in the entire department. Its excuse for not including them is weak and unacceptable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: Let me read what the deputy minister brought forward:

1. The union accepts the arbitration award of June 29, subject to any rights of appeal that it may wish to exercise.

2. The suspension of all of the employees, including permanent employees, will be lifted immediately and they will be called back to work as and when work becomes available.

3. The job security provisions in the collective agreements will not be given effect from the date of return to work until midnight on October 15, 1972. The job security provisions will apply in full during the remainder of 1972 and during 1973 and 1974 as set out in the collective agreements.

4. Vacation pay due under the collective agreements will be paid to the employees as soon as it is possible to have staff available to issue the cheques.

Again, I want to know why the suggestions of a man of great calibre, a man who was given all available assistance by the Department of Labour and who sat in consultation with management and with the longshoremen's union, were ignored. Why did the minister leave his proposals out? Surely the deputy minister had good reason for putting them forward.

Consider the matter of job security which would involve, I think, for each man 35 weeks at about $188 a week. That comes to a lot of money. If these men go back to work, and if the job security part of the agreement is to operate immediately, where is the money to come from? You must remember that in the collective agreement provisions were made not only for that matter but also for a pension scheme that was admirable. So if some sort of time lag is not introduced here, somebody will be in trouble. I expect that the arbitrator who will be involved in this matter will be cognizant of that particular set of circumstances. I do not know why they are not spelled out in the bill. The minister tried to explain this matter.

Let me run over some other matters. Other spokesmen will speak on this. I am pleased to see that the government House leader, after having been enlightened by members of the opposition, agreed that this matter should be considered in committee of the whole. Why not? I know that there is the question of calling witnesses, but surely we know what the situation is all about. The papers have been full of it for the past seven weeks. We have a fair idea. The idea is to get people back to work, not to hear the same arguments over again.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

• (1720)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: The idea is to let those who wish to condemn the government because of their ineptitude stand up and talk about it. On the other hand, I know that the government likes to play games. They have the foreign takeovers bill and the FISP program.

Mr. Pepin: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I hear the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin). He must feel like a lost soul, along with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro). They cannot seem to get anywhere. If they had presented proper bills, those bills would have been passed forthwith. We cannot let that kind of nonsense go to the people.

The disheartening thing about this situation is that after three years of work, we have to intervene. After three years of work by many people, federal department mediators, union representatives and employers as well as a number of committees, an historic document was prepared. I see the former Minister of Labour, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey), smiling. With all respect to the present Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell), it was through the efforts of the former Minister of Labour that attempts were made to resolve these situations prior to them confronting the country. A significant agreement was ratified on March 29, 1970 by the Maritime Employers Association and the International Longshoremans Association, local 371, affecting 3,200 longshoremen. The terms were important. The unions agreed to give up featherbedding. This was the most important thing.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: If you do not know what it is all about, read the collective agreement. Management agreed to meet some of the union's most serious claims. Management agreed to ironclad job security and a vastly improved pension plan. Why the strike? This was supposed to be the classic document which would help put the collective bargaining process on the road. What happened? I do not want to be repetitious. We know what happened. Why the strike? As I understand it, and I can be checked if I am wrong, it was based on the contention that the employers tried to break up the 16 member gang system before the computer could do it properly in September. Does that really make sense? This is how the whole thing started.

Let me tell you what the collective agreement states. I remember the Minister of Labour saying that they must go to arbitration if they have a grievance. The document to which I am referring is approximately one half inch thick. It covers everything you could mention. It provides for a grievance procedure. I may be paraphrasing, but it states that if you have a grievance you have to follow the arbitration proceedings that were determined after three years of blood, sweat and tears. The agreement reads:

A request for arbitration may be initiated by either the union or the Maritime Employers Association. The party requesting the arbitration shall set forth in writing the matter submitted to the arbitrator and send a copy of it to the other party.

I do not know what happened to that provision. It sounds simple. As a matter of fact, after three years of work, we had a very simple solution; submit your grievances to arbitration. This is how we were going to solve our problem.

There is another matter to which the minister did not refer. Possibly he did not have time. My time is running out also. The agreement reads:

Pending disposal of a dispute in accordance with the arbitration procedure,—

This is spelled out on a page and a half.

—men will work as instructed by the companies subject to the provisions contained dealing with help and safety.

I did not make that up. It is in the agreement that was signed by the two respective parties. I could be repetitious and say, as someone else has said, the agreement does not count. The procedure is set out right there. There is one clause in the agreement that should be put on the record because it reveals the hypocrisy of the situation that existed until the government had the intestinal fortitude to bring in this bill. I may be quoting out of context, but it reads:

In view of the orderly arrangements provided by this agreement for the settling of grievances, the union agrees with the companies that during the lifetime of this agreement—

Incidentally, it is a three year agreement.

—there shall be no strikes, slowdowns or stoppages of work, either complete or partial, and the companies agree there will be no lock-out.

Did you know that was in the agreement? What is the collective agreement worth? I did not know it was in the agreement until I saw it three or four days ago.

Mr. Lewis: It is in every other agreement.

Mr. Alexander: You will get your turn to speak, and I know the approach you will take.

Mr. Lewis: It is in all the agreements.

Mr. Alexander: It may be. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, why do the parties not abide by that provision after the three years of blood, sweat and tears it took to arrive at an agreement? It is all right for the leader of the New Democratic Party to say that this clause is in all the agreements, but this is pretty important. It was not drafted overnight by two 15 cent lawyers.

An hon. Member: Who are they?

Mr. Alexander: There are a few. Others will likely want to speak on this bill. As I have already said, we are not going to prolong this matter. However, certain positions, facts and problems have not been explored. They should not only be placed before this government and the members of this House, but the people of Canada.

In closing, I wish to refer to a speech that I was going to give somewhere at some time. It is extremely appropriate at this time.

Many Canadians believe that labour-management relations, whether in the public or private sector, appear to be more concerned about and involved with confrontation rather than negotiation, thereby leaving a lot to be desired in the area of collective bargaining. The whole collective bargaining system is presently under serious attack and question and one is constantly reminded of its imperfections. This case is a classic one when we cite the agreement that was signed in March of 1972. In particular, the strike which is an integral and hard won part of the process, has not escaped serious questioning.

It takes only one or two strikes or the threat of them, particularly in areas where it appears the public interest in terms of health, safety and general well-being of the individual is, or could be, adversely affected, to raise cries about the failure of the collective bargaining system, the need for some alternatives and the need for legislation banning strikes. This growing attitude towards strikes stems in part from the fact that more people who are not involved in union or management, and even some within that area, now realize that strikes are neither against the government nor the private employer, but against them, the ultimate consumers, the vast majority of whom have not been represented at the bargaining table.

That is the point we have to be concerned about today. That is the point I want to emphasize. We must move in the direction of being cognizant of the third party who is not represented at the bargaining table. More Canadians are becoming increasingly alarmed about the disruptive nature of the strike and point to the seaway strike in 1968, the postal strikes of 1968, 1970 and 1972, the strikes of the air traffic controllers as well as electronic technicians, CBC technicians and now the longshoremen. All of these, as I have said, have inflicted economic loss on the nation and created unemployment, thereby giving Canadians reason to demand from the government action for the protection of the public interest and that it carry out its public responsibility. This demand, to me, in view of all the circumstances, is not unreasonable nor unwarranted because the public interest must prevail.

• (1730)

As I have said, Mr. Speaker, we will be pleased to discuss the bill further. We have not really had an opportunity to digest it, but by the time it gets through committee of the whole I am sure it will be a bill that has been given proper consideration in the time allowed. I anxiously await its early second reading and passage so we can get the economy moving again and open the ports of Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Broadbent: Hurry up, then.

Mr. Alexander: I hear a comment from the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). He may not get an opportunity to speak tonight. But let us keep in mind that even if the longshoremen go back to work, it will take about a month to get these ports moving again. Until then, I hear that the employees will have lost some $12.5 million in salary and that the damage and loss of income to the ports, according to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, will be incalculable. So let us put the show on the road again, and quickly.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I begin my remarks by informing you, Sir, and the minister, who I am sorry has had to leave the House, that as far as my colleagues and I are concerned we intend to support the principle of this bill, though it is my intention to draw to the minister's attention one part of it which in my view needs careful consideration. I had not intended to speak very long and I still do not since the issues seem to me to be very clear.

I want to say to my good friend—I hope we will still be friends—the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) that I have listened to him make speeches on labour relations on a good number of occasions, including the speech he made today, but his studied attempt to be in both camps at the same time is not going to stand him or his party in very good stead. He is invariably talking about the rights of management, as he did in this case, and says he is in favour of the rights of labour. But he then proceeds to make a speech that obviously condemns labour and strikes, and says he wants the government to intervene without defining when he wants it to intervene. As far as I am concerned, he left the implication that the government ought to intervene on the first day of any strike which he decides is against the public interest.

As a matter of fact, every one of the hon. member's amendments to the labour code dealing with technological change was an attempt to weaken the provisions put before the House, provisions that were not very strong. I do not think it serves the interests of labour and management, nor does it serve the public interest, to make the kind of statements on both sides of the issue in this case, as well as in other cases, that I listened to a few moments ago.

The hon. member for Hamilton West resented an interjection that I made. He said that he did not know there was a clause in the collective agreement providing that, pending the arbitration procedure, everyone has to obey the collective agreement. I simply said to him that this is in every collective agreement, merely informing him that those who are acquainted with labour relations do not even have to see the particular clause. Not only is it in every collective agreement, it is in the law of Canada and in every act dealing with labour relations in this country. So there was not any problem about that particular situation.

Mr. Alexander: Just get on with the bill.

Mr. Lewis: That is what I wish the hon. member had done. He did not come to the bill until he had fumed and fumigated for about half an hour. I support this bill because both the employers and the union concerned left Parliament no alternative but to act. In my opinion both the employers and the unions in this case acted in a thoroughly indefensible way, a way that it is not possible for me to support even though the members of this House know my general support for labour, trade unionism, and indeed for strikes when they become unavoidable in negotiations between parties.

[Mr. Alexander.]

However, I make no qualification of my statement that the unions in this case acted not only against their own interests in the ports of Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières but against the interests of labour and trade unionism in this country. They have aroused objections in the minds of the ordinary people of Canada which responsible union leadership ought not to have aroused.

It is impossible to have a labour relations regime if one party to a collective agreement can say, for example, that it rejects an arbitrator's award. Let me remind my friends in the International Longshoremen's Association—years ago before I was elected to Parliament I acted for that association in Toronto and Hamilton and I have known them for a long time—that if it is possible for them to refuse to accept the award of an arbitrator when the award goes against them, they are setting a precedent for the employer to refuse to accept the award of an arbitrator when it goes against the employer. Along that road lies chaos in labour relations; along that road lies the destruction of the collective bargaining process. No labour organization in this country has the right to endanger and to jeopardize the collective bargaining process and the power of a collective agreement in this way.

Even though it were legally indefensible, I can still appreciate the employees going on an illegal walkout since at the start the employers committed an act that they ought to have known would provoke an unlawful strike. That is why I said that the employers were guilty of irresponsible behaviour in this case. You do not have to be a genius or be required to know the operations on the waterfront, even as intimately as I learned them during years of working with the International Longshoremen, to know perfectly well that when an employer takes the step of reducing the gangs and ordering people to work elsewhere than they expected to work, in the knowledge that the union did not believe that such right existed at the time, the employer is provoking a stoppage of work. The employer in this case was utterly irresponsible in taking that step, in the full knowledge that the reaction inevitably would be the employees downing tools and walking out.

I think the unions fell into a trap. I have known many cases where an employer provokes a situation in order to reduce the benefits provided by a collective agreement that he had signed. The unions fell into that trap which was set for them. The changing of the gang, knowing that would result in a stoppage of work, was deliberate because the employers began to fear the job security provisions they had agreed to, and this is frequently the case. The unions fell into that trap with the result that we now have legislation under which the job security plan will again be looked at by the arbitrator even though the employees thought they had an agreement last April.

It was a great mistake to fall into that trap. I can appreciate the workers going out on strike at that moment when they felt the collective agreement was being ignored and destroyed and that going through grievance procedures would cause delays, with fears about what the arbitrator might or might not say. I can appreciate that, but as a Canadian and as a Member of Parliament I cannot agree with that strike being continued for eight weeks.

In this connection I cannot agree with the minister when he said throughout that he could not intervene as long as the law was being broken and wanted the law obeyed before he did so. I suggest to the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell)—I am sorry I say this in his absence—that that is not a very profound remark. The situation after Judge Gold's award was no different from the situation before. The minister was in no more of a moral situation to intervene after Judge Gold's award came down than he was before. This is sheer nonsense on his part. He was simply sitting and hoping that the situation would improve without his having to intervene. I think he was wrong and I do not think he ought ever to do it again.

When the Minister of Labour sees a difficult situation, and he did not require very much to see that this was difficult and the strike is in danger of being dragged on much longer, then he ought not to hide behind some kind of legalism. He ought to have sent his deputy minister and others mediators in his department down to Montreal after three or four weeks of the strike to see what they could do. I suspect the situation would have been much easier to deal with then.

This is where the mistake of the minister comes in. This is where his behaviour is really attackable and cannot be defended. Four or five weeks ago the situation would have been much easier. Losses to the ports would not have been as great. The problem of creating the funds to meet the job security provisions of the agreement would not have been as great, and losses to management would have been less. The whole problem would have been very much easier to solve three or four weeks after the strike began instead of eight weeks later when everything is bitter and has soured and when losses to the ports, the employees and management have grown to very large proportions.

I think the criticism of the hon. member for Hamilton West in that connection is directly justified. The minister would have been much better off and certainly the situation in Montreal much more sensible and in the interest of Canada if the minister had intervened earlier; I do not mean by legislation but by sending his people down to seek a settlement four weeks ago and if that did not work, going himself to Montreal. I indicated this in a question I asked him a couple of weeks ago, suggesting that he should have gone with the authority of the Minister of Labour seeking a settlement. It would have been much easier to do so, particularly with regard to job security, long before the losses which have taken place did take place.

I believe it is important to underline that strikes in large areas and in large industries are no longer matters which concern only those directly affected, and even for those that are directly affected it is necessary to consider pretty carefully what the situation is and what the consequences will be. It is necessary to underline, and I believe this with all my heart, that the right to strike is a necessary right in a democratic society.

It is important, also, to underline that because people have the right does not necessarily mean they should exercise it without consideration for the public well-being and without consideration for their own future and the future of the industry they serve. That goes double as far as I am concerned for the kind of work stoppage which is contrary both to the collective agreement and the law. It does not make sense to break a collective agreement, at least for as long as has been the case here. I say that because sometimes you have a stoppage out of frustration, anger and a feeling you have been let down and it can be appreciated that this happens if it lasts a limited and reasonable length of time. When it goes on doggedly and obstinately for as long as it has in this case, I say the action is not defensible on the part of the union and its members and that legislation which is now before us, or some legislation, was both inevitable and necessary.

Because I get a little fed up by statements frequently made about union bosses doing things, I also want to underline that it was not the union bosses in this case but the membership of those unions that voted. This is the case in many situations. This is why I repeat my condemnation of the employers who knew what the waterfront is like and knew what they did in breaking up the gangs would necessarily provoke a strike. They ought not to have done this in the way in which it was done.

I think the minister ought to look carefully at one part of the principle of this bill, and that is the power it gives the arbitrator under clause 7. I mention it now in the hope that he will consider it. What he does in clause 7 is give the arbitrator two powers. One is to set out when the job security plan may come into effect. Contrary to the suggestion of the hon. member for Hamilton West, I agree that the minister ought not to have included that date in the bill. The minister gave one reason, namely, that he did not want to carry on negotiations through this bill.

I should like to give another reason, which is that the union has already rejected the October 15 date suggested by Mr. Wilson and Mr. Kelly of the labour department, and it would have been the height of provocation for this Parliament to pass into law a date which had already been considered by the parties and rejected by one of them. The minister was right, for both reasons, not to have included the date in clause 7 but to leave it to arbitration.

The arbitration award of Judge Gold, as I understand it, was an award made in a sense in the absence of the union. The union spokesmen were there merely to argue that the matters referred to the arbitrator were not arbitrable. After that, the lawyers for the union sat through the proceedings not opening their mouths, without saying a word, without examining the witnesses, producing evidence or producing arguments. That is my information. If I am correct, then despite the reputation of Judge Gold, which I am sure is fully justified, I would not be terribly impressed by an award which is made on the evidence and argument presented by only one side to the dispute.

It is conceivable that if the other side had produced evidence and argument the judge might have been influenced to go in another direction. I do not know that, but the fact is that his award was based on the evidence and arguments presented by only the management side to the dispute. The union, for reasons of its own, which I find unacceptable, decided not to participate in the arbitration.

So, I would not rely on an award of an arbitrator given in those circumstances. I think the minister was right in not putting the date into the law, both because it is not Parliament's job to make that kind of a decision and because the union had already rejected that date and ought to have an opportunity to present to the arbitrator its reasons and arguments for another date, whatever the date may be. On behalf of my colleagues and myself I express agreement with the approach taken in clause 7 on this point. But in addition to giving the arbitrator the power to set the date for applying the job security plans, this bill also gives the arbitrator authority to modify the plan and the wording for that authority is so wide that the arbitrator, as I read it and I am sure I am not making an error, is given authority to change the entire ambit of the plan not only in respect of the date and not only in respect of those things which affect the date but also in respect of the entire plan. I do not see any need for this.

I ask the minister, as earnestly as I can, that Parliament not be asked to do this and that he give some thought overnight to changing that. I have made pretty careful inquiries and I understand that during the negotiation, and during the mediation proceedings, management, the MEA, made clear, so far as the next two years of the agreement are concerned, 1973 and 1974, that at this stage they see no reason the job security plan should not function in its totality in those two years, assuming of course that there is not another stoppage of work of the kind we have had. If that is so, I see no reason why the arbitrator be given authority under this bill to do violence to the agreement of the parties in 1973 and 1974. I see no reason that clause 7 of the bill could not be amended when we get to the committee stage,—I mention this now so that the minister may consider it—so that the arbitrator is not given that power for 1973 and 1974. The clause could, as I say, suggest he has the power of modification in respect of the date and matters relating to it, but has not the power of modification of the plans as they apply to the years 1973 and 1974.

I say to the minister that my suggestion to him is all the more valid and should be given all the more consideration because of clause 8 of this bill which, if I read it correctly and I have read it several times, gives the minister authority to send a dispute to arbitration under the collective agreement if management or the union fail to do so within a reasonable time. With that proviso, with the power in his hands to send any dispute to arbitration if the parties to the dispute do not do so, he is all the safer in accepting the suggestion I make to him. If something should erupt in 1973 with regard to the job security plan he would be in a position immediately to send the matter to arbitration if the parties did not do so. I, therefore, urge him as strongly as I can to limit the authority of the arbitrator which, under clause 7 as now worded, is far too wide and may cause difficulty in Montreal in respect of the law he is asking us to pass. It is unnecessary for the purpose he wants to serve.

I said, Mr. Speaker, that I would not speak for long and I have come to the end of my remarks because, like every other member of Parliament and I am no more righteous about it than anyone else, I want to see this law passed as quickly as possible. But the passage of this law by Parliament will not end the problem. Let us be frank. After all both parties to the dispute in Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières have ignored the law until now. If they had obeyed the law as now on the statute books, either party would have referred the dispute to arbitration long ago as the law required them to do. They were required to do this not only by the collective agreement but also by the Canada Labour Code. They have, therefore, ignored the law until now. The mere passage of this legislation will not necessarily end the matter unless the employers, the unions and the employees are ready to obey the law passed by this Parliament. Without any presumption I hope, Mr. Speaker, I just wish to add my voice as one Member of Parliament, and in the position of leader of my party, in an appeal to the people involved in Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières.

I suspect Parliament will act unanimously so far as the principle of this bill is concerned. From what I have heard from the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) his party will support it. You have heard from me, Mr. Speaker, that my party will support it and I would be very surprised if the Social Credit party did not. I say to the management, the union and the longshoremen involved that it is a great pity Parliament had to act in this case. With all my heart and soul I detest laws which order people to return to work. In the common law, as members of this House who are lawyers know, there is one injunction under the law of equity in our system of law which the courts would not grant. This is an injunction ordering someone to go back into service. Other injunctions have been granted but not an injunction such as this for many centuries. The refusal to grant an injunction ordering people back to work was based on a very valid doctrine that human beings should be free to work or not to work under some of the conditions which they do not like, and that the law should not descend on them and say that whether they like it or not they must return to work. Therefore, I detest with all my heart and soul any law which orders people back to work.

Work is not so pleasant on the waterfront. Being a stevedore is not so imaginative and creative that people ought to be ordered back to work. I appeal to the men involved in this case that Parliament does not act lightly in these situations. Certainly, my colleagues and I do not lightly support a bill to order people back to work. However, we are obliged to do so, not only in the interests of Canada as a whole but also in their own interests, in the interests of decent collective bargaining and decent labour relations and in order to end a situation which has lasted far too long, for eight weeks now. Through this House I appeal to them that they have a duty to themselves, to the labour movement and to Canada to obey this law when passed, to appear before the arbitrator and make the best case they can. I hope they will succeed in getting the best deal out of the arbitrator that their case and the facts of the situation deserve.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the minister rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I was rising to validate certain intimations I received earlier that possibly members would agree to sitting at eight o'clock to deal with the second reading of this bill.

Mr. Lewis: And only with that.

Mr. MacEachen: That is understood. During the evening sitting we can determine how long we want to sit.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent that the House resume its sitting at eight o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered. It being six o'clock I leave the Chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles-Eugène Dionne (Kamouraska): Mr. Speaker, I have listened as closely as I could to the summary of the events which the minister of Labour has outlined for the benefit of this House and which warrant the approach required from him in these circumstances.

I am not sure that it must be assumed that his reserve of patience has been exhausted, but it is normal to appreciate that this strike has lasted long enough already, and that the appropriate steps must be taken so that work may resume in these Quebec ports.

I have in hand a statement made by the former premier of Ontario, Mr. Robarts, in an address to the members of the Empire Club, and reported in the April 22, 1972, issue of Le Soleil, and I quote:

> You merely have to look at what is taking place in Quebec and in Toronto to realize the extent to which strikes are used to dismantle the whole society.

• (2010)

> He pointed out how Quebec and Toronto civil servants use strikes as a weapon to keep society as a hostage.

That is quite serious!

Something very special happened in the longshoremen's strike: a collective agreement was signed, setting forth the working conditions, salaries and other fringe benefits. Finally, the agreement turned into a disagreement.

I have already mentioned in this House that the complex labour legislation now in force contributed to creating a type of professional deformation particular to negotiators, regardless of which side of the table they sit on. In fact, they keep polishing the same old clauses instead of inventing new ones. Both sides quibble about commas, at the risk of overlooking the fundamental objective of the collective agreement which is to make relations between employer and employee more human.

In La Presse of Saturday, July 1, 1972, we could read the following comments made by a spokesman for the longshoremen group to the effect that the executive had not caught on and I quote:

> A well-organized group of dissidents have published a manifesto accusing the executive of dishonesty, mismanagement and incompetence and demanding the resignation of all labour officials in addition to insisting upon an immediate return to work.
> The spokesman for the group, Mr. Yves Dufour, who named some 20 signatories to the document has stated that the 7-week strike was due to a wrong interpretation of the collective agreement.
> Mr. Dufour said that the union executive failed to understand the collective agreement and wrongly interpreted it. Our problem is due to the fact that the executive is incompetent.

He was evidently referring to the union executive.

This statement proves that there is an atmosphere of complications, and concerning collective agreements, they are trying to live with a labour legislation which, I repeat, is much too complicated for workers. Changes should necessarily be brought in this field.

I should like now to make a very short quotation which applies perhaps to another field but demonstrates very well the complications in the legislative area. This is an article published in La Presse of Tuesday, June 20, 1972, and I quote:

> The President of the Treasury Board has suggested that "in the past, the (federal) cabinet has perhaps relied too much on the advice of experts (technocrats) and in so doing, to a certain extent it (the cabinet) has begun to lose touch with the public."

And this comes from a cabinet minister!

So, we see that in negotiations—and this is what happened concerning the longshoremen—there seems to be a grudge somewhere. In fact, it seems that union representatives do not get the support of all their members. And I ask hon. members to believe that I am well-disposed toward unions, having worked in the labour movement for 10 years, which means that I am a union member, but not a striker as there is a significant difference between the two. I cannot help but see that sometimes, some union officials, out of pride and in order to try and settle some petty personal scores, bring a whole team of workers to strike.

Considering the circumstances, this still seems somewhat in the limelight. In fact, the newspaper La Presse reports as follows:

> While quoting as an example the Picard Act, Mr. Saint-Onge—

—and as people know, he is the union representative, authorized to make decisions—

> —added that the government perhaps would decide "to knock them down with some legislation."

He is in the right mood to face the implementation of legislation!

Further on, one can read this:

> As for calling a strike on May 17 last, Mr. Saint-Onge said that "perhaps it was a mistake, but last year the employers had thousands of times violated the collective agreement and never had the longshoremen taken revenge as their employers are doing at the present time."

So, revenge would be involved. Though this is stupid, it remains that we are faced with a fact, that somebody wants to take revenge because someone, at a given time, took a position which seemed inconsistent with reality, perhaps inconsistent with the spirit of the agreement. But should thousands of workers bear the brunt of a personal revenge? So I say that in matters of bargaining between employees and employers, of necessity we must have more flexible and clearer legislation making understanding easier.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that if the majority of the workers could express themselves freely, they would vote for going back to work. But we know more or less what happens during some meetings; people are afraid to be considered as scabs and vote with the majority. There again, labour law should specify in what way a free vote strike should be taken at a union meeting.

As for the strike, I would like to quote an article published in the Gazette of April 12 last. An hon. senator found that this article gave a good description of the situation since he had it recorded in the Senate proceedings. And I quote:

> An editorial in the Montreal Gazette of April 12 of this year illustrates very well the feeling of many people regarding strikes. Part of it states:
> > A strike is similar in some respects to war. It may be just, although a just strike is as hard to define as a just war. It is a question of causes, objectives and alternatives.

This afternoon, I heard an hon. member—and I would not criticize his statements, since I generally agree with him—speak about the strike. In my opinion, the right to live has priority over the right to strike. I have suggested this idea and it is quite easy to understand; certainly most hon. members will admit that it is more important to give the people the right to live before the right to strike.

Perhaps the legislation about certain rights has been adopted too quickly. Again I repeat what I am not afraid to say under any circumstances: the legislating function has been carried out much more under the fear of an impending election than in the citizens' interests.

Again, I say that the right to live for all is a natural right. This right should be recognized long before the right to strike or the right to make exaggerated profits, and appropriate measures should be taken by those responsible for legislation to ensure to all first the right to live. We should have enough foresight to plan a sensible distribution system for goods available without having to resort to strikes when most people want to work.

I understand that it is not always easy to strike proper balance between justified claims and the demands of the public weal. However, labour legislation must have that objective in view because of the deplorable incidents which have occurred in the field of labour-management relations. Amendments and legislation are required as soon as possible for the general welfare of the nation.

Obviously we endorse the bill now under discussion because it is a solution under the present circumstances. But I maintain that generally our labour legislation is too complicated. Right now we are even eager to see the bill passed so that all port workers might return to work.

Like the previous speaker I ask all these workers to seriously consider the present situation, to take into account all the losses they sustained and caused to a great many other Canadian citizens. These strikers have lost millions in salaries and contributed to the disruption of business in Canada. This strike could have been averted.

[Mr. Dionne.]

For ten years, I have worked in union organizations. My leader was a representative of the Brotherhood in Canada and he never taught us how to go on strike. For ten years, we have negotiated collective agreements with some fifteen lumbering companies, mostly on the North Shore, namely the Canadian International Paper Company, the Anglo Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills Limited, Donahue Brothers Limited and the Quebec North Shore Paper Company, in three operational districts, and these ten years of union work have gone by without a single strike. It is possible to find solutions, but the legislation must enable it.

We are living in such an unbalance system that people come to the conclusion that the only way to solve their grievances is to go on strike. And yet, we must logically admit that all that has been achieved in this world is the result of hard labour. Nobody can deny it. How is it that thousands of workers come to believe that the only means of solving their problems lies in work stoppage? That is a nonsense.

Failing to conclude that strikes are most of the time brought about by demands for salary readjustments or increases would reveal a lack of imagination or a refusal to face the disastrous consequences of a financial system at odds with the present economic situation. Why? It is easy to give a precise answer. Successive salary increases fail to catch up with the ever increasing cost of living. In fact, I might be permitted to use an expression which is well in line with the situation, and say that salaries are going up the stairs whereas prices of goods are going up in the elevator.

We are witnessing a transformation period and I hear a lot about technological changes. Collective agreements mention the fact that we are going through a period of transformation of our means of production. Machines are replacing men in an unheard of proportion. This heavily laden change through automation has become a nightmare for thousands of workers under our present system. Why? Again, it is easy to give a precise answer. The working man is deprived of his wages because he is being replaced by machines. Through research, scientists are exploring methods of modernizing production with the application of improved techniques involving the replacement of men by machines.

At the same time, other scientists or rather those who think they are, are advocating full employment. One thing that is beyond any intelligent concept is that industry or employers, whoever they may be, are apparently being called upon to absorb all the costs of mechanization, as well as salary adjustments and all the grievances which are caused by an ailing financial system.

This is why I emphasize the fact that we must absolutely improve our labour legislation.

May I conclude by quoting a few extracts from an editorial published in today's La Presse. I found this editorialist so familiar with the problem and capable of expressing his point of view on what is going on now that I wish to put it on the record. First, he has found another name for this kind of disease that strike is and I admit I was slightly amused when I read the title: "'Strikulture' yields little profit". So, may I quote from this editorial by Guy Cormier:

In the long history of labour, there have been many necessary strikes.

I have already said that this was a necessary evil but that we should avoid spreading it.

But in 1972, one wonders whether in every case the game is still worth the candle. One of the "high priests" of American unionism, George Meany, pointed out recently that when conflicts are protracted, the financial burden on workers is incommensurate with the benefits they hope to achieve from the confrontation.

The prolonged strike by longshoremen at the St. Lawrence ports, occupies a choice place in the annals of the last uncertain battles. It is inordinate in length: 52 days. It is inordinate in its devastating effects as compared to the hypothetical benefits workers seek to obtain.

It is obvious that if workers themselves were to consider the situation in this light, public authorities would not have to intervene to order an immediate resumption of work.

Further on, the editorial says:

Losses incurred by workers have been estimated at $8 million and the prolonged idleness of the harbours for so many weeks has emptied the till. (It is known that a 65-cent tax is levied on the handling of every ton of cargo. This revenue is used to guarantee longshoremen an annual minimum income.)

As to the guarantee of this annual minimum income they are divesting themselves of it rather deliberately following decisions of some union officers who seem to me quite irresponsible.

As to the damage inflicted on the economy as a whole, it is incalculable. There was talk last week of a net loss of $40 million. The long term effects of this imbroglio will be further compounded by competitors' eagerness (Halifax, St.-John's, N.-B.) to take maximum advantage of the problems befalling our harour facilities.

Is there today any other alternative but a forced settlement through parliamentary action? Willy-nilly, one should acknowledge the facts and answer: no.

As I said a few moments ago and under the circumstances, my party supports this bill. We would like it to be passed without delay in order to bring to an end a situation that is disheartening to the strikers' families. I am convinced that several strikers' families are far from having what they wished, because they have been deprived of an income for too long already.

I hope this bill will be passed as soon as possible; I strongly and sincerely hope that all strikers will understand their role, consider the situation seriously and go back to work without waiting for all sorts of slow procedures to be implemented which do not always solve problems. Right now, they must decide to go back to work so that we do not have a situation such as the one that arose in connection with the employees of G. Lapalme Inc.

• (2030)

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I think that it is quite proper for me to take part in this debate, in order to state my views on the bill which I feel, as the Minister stated this afternoon, is another rather unfortunate precedent in the history of Canadian Parliament.

I am justified, I think, in taking part in this debate, since as you well remember, I introduced a motion in this House on June 16 last in which we told the Minister exactly what the situation was and what solution the government ought to choose to put an end to the longshoremen's strike on the St. Lawrence. The conditions have since remained unchanged. At that time, we told the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell): "You have just one thing to do to settle that conflict: force the parties into arbitration or take suitable measures."

I remember very well that the time that discussion took place, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who spoke then on behalf of his party, had stated that he did not seem to understand the scope of the motion I had brought in, that it was not clear and that my findings or suggestions were not at all in keeping with reality, and that the ways and means we were suggesting to the minister were not those that the government should consider.

This afternoon—I think I must emphasize it, because I should like the NDP's to agree among themselves and tell the House on which side of the fence they stand—the NDP leader (Mr. Lewis), obviously contradicted the spokesman for his party who had taken the floor in this House on June 16 about this matter. This afternoon, the hon. member for York South, who seemed to wish to use this very important debate probably for politic purposes, told the House that he was in favour of the passage of the bill brought in by the government, that we ought to pass it as soon as possible, even though he would do so somewhat reluctantly. He added and I quote from memory: "I want to see this legislation passed as soon as possible". He said later, and I also quote from what I remember: "We are obliged to do so."

Mr. Speaker, if I refer to the debate we had just a few weeks ago, the spokesman for his party, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), gave a completely opposite view. I should like to know what is the real opinion and position of the NDP in the House, not because I want to raise any bitter debate that would be a negative one, but rather in order to know the position of different members and parties on such an important dispute.

May I refer the House to Hansard of June 16, 1972, particularly to page 3112. Speaking on behalf of his party the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, and I quote:

I see the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) disagree with what I am saying about the dispute being a lockout, but if the hon. member has in mind—

—he was referring to me because he did not seem to understand the scope of the motion we had tabled.

I proceed with my quotation:

If the hon. member has in mind calling upon the government to bring in legislation to put these employees back to work, the employees who may not be employees because they have been suspended, we do not agree with that either.

So, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who is his party's House leader stated only two weeks ago that if the government wanted to pass special legislation to force longshoremen to resume work they would oppose it.

Now, the leader of his party in a flash of administrative or legislative consciousness has at last recognized that under the present circumstances there was left only one alternative since the two parties to the conflict after numerous deliberations, consultations and attempts at reconciling their attitudes, have been unable to bring about a solution.

Now it was obvious, Mr. Speaker, a fortnight or a month ago, or since the conflict started that only through legislation could a settlement be reached in this conflict which causes considerable if not irreparable damage to the three St.-Lawrence ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City. Indeed, considerable damage is caused to the economic activity of Montreal and Quebec City as well as to thousands of longshoremen's families who are involved in a conflict from which they would like to extricate themselves but have not yet found the means to do so, since as was pointed out earlier by the hon. member who spoke before me, there was perhaps no mechanism enabling the workers to freely express their views during their union meetings and reach a decision their union has now to make for them.

What was still difficult to accept was the incompetence of the Minister of Labour, his misunderstanding of the situation, in spite of the advice, the information he received from his experts, in spite of the opinions of the House, the members of the Progressive Conservative party, and also from Liberal members from the Montreal area; because I know that some are not happy with the situation.

I know from talking with the strikers that they were not happy with the minister's attitude. They urged him to wake up at last, decide to assume his responsibilities and introduce in Parliament a bill to bring about a solution to that conflict.

The basis of the conflict, the source of the wrongs in this increasingly serious situation is the fact that when the difficulties arose the minister refused to intervene and did not admit that he had at his disposal—and I know the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Mackasey) has enough experience to realize it—the whole apparatus required to attempt a rapprochement between the two parties. Had the minister intervened at the start by appointing a mediator, a conciliator or by setting up any mechanism at all, I am sure the conflict could have been solved without our having to resort to a special act which Parliament as a whole finds repulsive. An act of this type, Mr. Speaker, certainly cannot please the hon. members. We believe that we are too serious and responsible to accept a law which compels workers to go back to work when we know that there are at the basis of the conflict misunderstandings and frictions which can only lead to uncertainty and suspicion toward the employers.

What is wrong, in my view, is that management and labour are eying each other like cats and dogs. The climate of mutual trust which should exist in the field of labour-management relations just does not exist.

The two fundamental instruments of our economic system are the employer and the employee; without either one, I think that no economic system can work adequately.

It was an unpleasant surprise for me to hear the leader of the NDP when, in order to try to conceal his reluctance to fully support the Minister of Labour proposal, he said: We blame the employers, the ship-owners, for provoking the longshoremen by threatening to suspend them if they did not return to work. I think these words are totally irresponsible and I do not believe that we would be serving the cause we claim to defend—equity and justice—by pitting one party involved in this dispute against the other.

This is what is incomprehensible and totally inadmissible: only 15 days ago, on June 16, when we were urging the Minister of Labour to introduce a legislation or to take some steps to bring the parties together, he said: I cannot intervene in that dispute; there is no question of our interfering by means of a legislation.

• (2040)

I want to quote from the minister's statements because I think that they are an admission on the government's part of their failure to give their administration a minister with sufficiently high standards to face not the easy situations—since the minister is not there for that—but the difficult ones and show efficiency and results.

While day after day, for a month and a half, we have been askings questions to the minister, this is what happened, as reported by the Ottawa newspaper Le Droit on June 17, 1972:

> Mr. O'Connell advised that the government did not intend through legislation, to force the stevedores back to work.

In the Minister of Labour, we find inconsistencies, contradictions, reluctancy, inaptitude and, above all, inability to understand his duties while he is directly responsible for that collective agreement. His predecessor, through his good offices, his understanding, his labour experience—an experience actually lacking in the present minister—had managed to develop a formula that could or would ensure stability in the three harbours of the St. Lawrence river.

It is unfortunate that the minister failed to take into account the suggestions made to him by the opposition. We were not trying to take advantage of that dispute, since this would be the most abject thing to do, but simply to offer suggestions likely to help put an end to a situation that threatened the whole future of these three St. Lawrence harbours. The habour at Montreal is the largest Canadian seaport, the largest inland port, the one handling the greatest tonnage of goods, the most important access road for import and export.

Through his unconcern—I would not say his cowardice—because I hate to associate the words "cowardice" and "inability", the minister has failed to truly understand the importance of his decisions, and to take the necessary steps. We know that the government had been asked to act not only by members of this House, but also by the Montreal Port Council, which after sending one telegram after another, one letter after another, demanded that the government take action in order to end this conflict.

The City of Montreal authorities recently asked for action to be taken to that effect. The Quebec Minister of Labour said to his federal counterpart: Do something to solve this conflict, or we will interfere even if this does not come within our jurisdiction.

In the face of all those claims, all those representations, the minister seemed passive and indifferent; he felt that all those pressures were going to undermine his authority as a minister, or that there was really nothing serious in this whole business, and that the situation could solve itself merely through a little agreement between the shipowners and the longshoremen.

That, Mr. Speaker, was playing with fire, and today we have come to this sad situation were we have, through legislation, to say to employees: Whether you like it or not, whether it suits you or not, whether some clauses of the agreement are under dispute or not, we do not care. You are going to go back to work against your will.

I feel this is an almost pre-historic way of solving a conflict, and if the minister had really assumed his responsibilities, if he had realized that the representations which we made in this House and elsewhere, as well as those of intermediary bodies, of provincial or municipal governments, were not without justification, we could have avoided having to introduce special legislation, and we could have avoided the collapse of the harbours involved, particularly that of Montreal.

Mr. Speaker, when on June 16 last I moved the motion which I mentioned earlier, I would have liked to advocate six steps, to suggest to the minister six ways to try and solve the conflict. Hon. members will remember that I was prevented from making those suggestions; fortunately, I was able to send them to the media, and I think my hon. colleague from Lachine (Mr. Rock) who, following his speech, was able to put them on the record. However, I realize that some of the suggestions which I made two weeks ago are exactly similar to the means which the minister used today by introducing legislation.

Unfortunately I see that the minister did not take into consideration an extremely important suggestion in order to avoid this kind of conflicts, so that in other conflicts we are not forced to introduce special legislation, in other words to see to it that we amend the Canada Labour Code to ensure that workers can vote secretly.

There was a successful experience particularly in the port of Quebec City. I have been told that longshoremen had the opportunity to vote secretly on going back to work, in the present circumstances, and that 99 per cent of them—the Minister of Manpower and Immigration is aware of this, I think—were in favour of this. It is the only place where a secret vote has been held.

This mechanism must be included either in the Labour Code, the collective agreements or in any other legislation. The government should not hesitate to ensure the secrecy of the vote.

I represent a labour constituency which is particularly affected by that work stoppage. I receive many longshoremen; I am also acquainted with people doing business with the Montreal port. For several weeks, many longshoremen have come to see me and told me: We would like to go back to work. At a union meeting, we would like to be able to cast a secret ballot and say, without being subjected to direct or indirect threats, if we agree with our leaders. We would be surprised at the results. We could often if not always avoid such painful conditions.

Certainly, the minister is aware of this situation; he knows perfectly well that during a union meeting when leaders are controlling the meeting or its proceedings, it is normal for the union members to rely completely on what the leaders tell them to do. The union leaders explain quite honestly, sometimes not so honestly, the scope of such or such legislation, of such or such contract, and the workers can indicate their views but generally, they rely on those elected to represent them.

But when you feel that in certain meetings, people have been ordered to be there by union leaders to influence and intimidate the union members, it is difficult for an individual to vote against the instructions of his leaders and we should put an end to this situation. This situation could be clarified by simply using the democratic election system of this country and ensure that the votes are kept secret. In this manner, I am confident that we will be able to avoid such legislation as that which we are obliged to debate today. We would also prevent many inconveniences to some families most affected by situations such as this one.

We should not forget that in such disputes, maybe the shipowners can afford to skip a season even though some cannot afford it; maybe the businessman can afford the luxury of staying idle for a season but the workman, the longshoreman as any worker with a family cannot afford the luxury of a year without work.

• (2050)

It is a human problem which should interest us first and this explains why a few weeks ago I brought in a motion and said to the minister: You have but one and only solution; the appeal to arbitration, and the only way to have this arbitration accepted is to intervene personally. And the minister replied: I regret but I cannot intervene. Today he is directly intervening. Through the bill brought in today I note that he corrects a defect in that procedure. And I refer to clause 8 of the bill which stipulates:

8. The Minister of Labour may refer any matter in dispute between an employer and a union to an arbitrator selected or chosen as provided in the collective agreements—

So the minister becomes the necessary and essential lever, if the two parties involved in such a conflict do not ask for or resort to arbitration. The minister can step in then.

The minister came up with the following argument: I cannot intervene since the collective agreement provides mechanisms to settle grievances and according to which both parties must ask for arbitration and if they don't, they will have to pull themselves out as they can. That was stupid since a section of the collective agreement whose number I do not remember exactly provides that should there be a conflict as to the selection of an arbitrator, the Department of Labour may name the arbitrator. Therefore, the minister was implicitly party to the contract, to the collective agreement. Had the minister been the least intelligent, he would surely have used that little "technical opening" in the collective agreement; he could have intervened by selecting an arbitrator and obliging both parties—not today but three weeks ago or one month ago—to resort to arbitration, which would probably have settled the conflict without Parliament having to step in with the introduction of special legislation.

Mr. Speaker, having read this bill rapidly we realize it does not mean much, except that its object is to correct minor weaknesses that obviously did not exist in the collective agreement. I spoke about clause 8 and I could also have mentioned clause 7. I find it hard to understand that a few days ago the Minister of Labour delegated his mediators, his associates, his special assistants in labour relations who made recommendations to both parties. The minister referred to those recommendations this afternoon, without quoting the document of which I have a copy here and which unfortunately I could not get from the minister but got from some other source.

These recommendations contain suggestions which, in my way of thinking, might have been useful in settling the conflict. What surprises me most is that these recommendations which have resulted from the conciliation or mediation exercise carried out by the Department of Labour with the directly interested parties, have not been included in the bill which the Minister has introduced. Does this mean that the Minister is disavowing the work done by his mediators? Is he suggesting that those four days of negotiations between the mediators and the interested parties did not achieve the results which were expected? It may be the case of an unofficial disavowal by the minister. However, the fact remains that I find it quite unacceptable that recommendations submitted by the mediators who are specialists and whose capacities have never been questioned, who are used to discussing problems of a difficult enough nature in this kind of conflict, have not been considered in the drafting of the bill introduced by the minister today.

Mr. Speaker, it is with much regret that we will support the bill. As the minister said, it is a matter of public interest, of the future of the Montreal economy, of the future and the survival of the three ports of the St. Lawrence; it is also the whole Canadian economy which is feeling the backlash, since it is quite well known that thousands of businesses are awaiting their goods. The government of Quebec complained recently that it could not get the machinery necessary to complete certain public works.

Thousands of people are directly or indirectly involved with port activity either through regular or casual employment. I think in particular of those longshoremen who are known as overtime longshoremen who, normally, are counted by the thousands and work 35, 37 or 40 weeks; they will not be able to hope to benefit from that overtime this year.

It is also unfortunate about these labour difficulties that no legislation provides for any assistance to fathers and to children of unemployed workers—no welfare allowances, no unemployment benefits, no strike fund—which I suggest should have been provided for in normal agreements. There is no machinery to enable the community to assist children of striking longshoremen.

This year, we know that the dispute will soon be settled but we know very well also that before these thousands of ships come back to the harbours of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec, there will be a delay of four to six weeks.

The season now is ruined, we all know, and the minister knows also. It is not possible for Montreal harbour to recover this year's business. We will have to think about next year. What about the effects of this situation? Will the shippers, the businessmen and the firms that do business with Canada regain confidence in the facilities of the three ports concerned? I hope so! Whichever part of the country we may come from, and in particular hon. members from the Montreal area, and whatever our party is, we are all aware of the extremely disastrous effects of the situation on the Quebec economy.

Before passing the bill—as there are still 12, 14, 16 or 24 hours left—both parties still have time to settle on the technical terms of the agreement so that Parliament is not forced to pass this legislation because, as the minister said this afternoon, this may be the sixth time Parliament has legislated in similar circumstances.

For my part, Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to support the bill. I believe all the members have indicated their wish to support it, but we do so, I know, with great reticence. We hope that if there are other conflicts, the Minister of Labour will not wait till the last minute, in short, till the corpse has reached the cemetery to call in the doctor to take care of the patient. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that the government will assume its responsibilities and that, thanks to his foresight and his sense of responsibility, whatever the consequences may be for him—even taking into consideration his responsibilities toward the country and Parliament—the minister, by taking steps beforehand, will prevent the recurrence of such a disastrous situation.

Once again I invite the minister to tell us whether he really intends—and I want to close my remarks on this suggestion—to consider changing the Canada Labour Code in such a way that in all labour conflicts, union members are guaranteed complete and full freedom in expressing their views by secret ballot at union meetings where work stoppages, agreements, or the signing of collective agreements are dealt with.

[English]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the report given by the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) and in the statements made in connection with this dispute. I happen to represent people who are very dependent upon the services that have been disrupted and who are far removed from the scene of this dispute. The speaker preceding me expressed his concern at the total effect of the dispute on the economy of Montreal, and quite properly so. I am sure that the effect of a disruption of this kind must be very severe.

What has impressed me in the discussion of the situation not only today but over the last seven or eight weeks has been the importance given to this particular dispute and to the kind of agreement reached after three years of thought and work had been devoted to it. Those of us who live on the Prairies and have taken the trouble to try to understand, surprisingly have a fair working knowledge of what is involved in the labour disputes at our two shipping points in Canada, that is, the St. Lawrence and the west coast. For most of us who move grain those are the terminals we use. Most of us who use Halifax ship by train to that area.

In times past I have taken the trouble to inform myself about disputes which have occurred on the west coast. I know that negotiations can be extremely difficult. An attempt is made to give security to the workers. If they have security, then those who hire the men have security. A real attempt was made to reach this objective but negotiations broke down. I agree with those who said action should have been taken sooner.

In the last day or two I have checked my sources of information and have come to believe that we are on the very edge of a real slowdown or indeed breakdown as far as the movement of grain is concerned. Mr. Hurcomb, manager of the Dominion Marine Association, stated publicly that the strike is causing delays of up to six days in the movement of grain. One can check with the companies and co-operatives on the Prairies which are responsible for moving grain and will find that we have now pretty well filled the facilities at the terminals.

The lakers can move the grain down the lakes and the terminals can take the grain from them, but when you take the grain out of the terminals you must have longshoremen with the ability and know-how to load these boats and see they go to sea properly. This is the point we have reached and I do not understand how we as members of this House can do otherwise than discharge our responsibility by finding ways and means to bring this work stoppage to an end.

Another point bothers me, Mr. Speaker. I do not think you can solve by legislation all of the conflicts which exist between human beings. We had a government in Saskatchewan which said that if we had enough legislation and labour courts we could bring all these disputes to an end. I have doubts about that. To really meet the needs in this kind of situation and to achieve labour-management harmony in this country, we must make real efforts at bargaining and negotiation between the parties.

The Department of Labour will have to increase its activity in terms of negotiating with both sides in an attempt to smooth the path in working out procedures, arbitration, and so on. This is what will yield the greatest return in the medium and long run. When this fails, as it has failed in this case, then recourse has to be made to the type of action contemplated by this Parliament. I do not think there is any alternative in view of the situation facing us.

I could not go back and face my constituents, the farmers, the businessmen and those dependent on income from grain unless I am prepared to deal with the situation which faces us in the St. Lawrence ports. That is the main thing I wanted to say tonight. I concur in what the leader of our party said, that it is probably proper for the arbitrator, whoever he may be, to be charged with setting the time involved in establishing the number of guaranteed working weeks and the income for workers in this industry. This probably has to be one of his responsibilities.

I doubt very much if whoever is charged with the responsibility of arbitration should be, as is stated in clause 7(2)(b), making such modifications to those plans and provisions as in his opinion are required to give effect thereto on and after the date decided by him. If that means what I think it does, then the agreement in this area, the fine points of procedure and how they are arrived at must surely have been the result of lengthy and careful negotiation.

It must have taken some time for those concerned to reach working agreements in the original contract and I fail to understand the necessity for those charged with arbitrating to go through all these procedures again. I think the time element should have some bearing. I hope a real settlement and working agreement between the employers and employees will be reached very soon and that we do not have to again act in this House to force men back to work.

I believe, among other things, in the rights of individuals. When we come to the point that we have now, of using legislation to force an individual to go to work under certain conditions, I do not like it. By the same token, when we say to an employer that he shall put his facilities at the disposal of the state, and that is what we are doing, I think these are measures of last resort. What these measures really indicate is that our society has failed to solve its economic problems in a civilized and orderly manner. This is what it really means; we have failed to be effective in this area. I hope this will not occur too often. I say to the minister that he should have acted before. I suppose others will say that to him. As a representative of the Prairies where the people are very much dependent on traffic through our ports, I want to say I sincerely hope we can very quickly evolve better and more effective procedures to deal with a complicated society.

On the agricultural front, we are entering a supply-management phase. We are working on the other side of the coin. We are now working out procedures by which the provincial and federal governments will decide how much of certain products will be produced, how they will be marketed, and the price at which those products will eventually be sold. This compares to reaching the point where you bargain for wages, prices and services. I suggest we will move even farther in this area because we are in this type of complicated society. The way in which we deal with human relations must be changed in order to meet a closely integrated society. We can no longer stand at arms length and say that what the other man does is of no concern to us. Someone a long time ago said that we are our brother's keeper. We are at that point now, whether or not we like it.

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, at long last, after a period of seven weeks, the government has decided to introduce legislation to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. In fact, we can say after eight weeks, because many of the dockworkers went on strike a week earlier in sympathy with the general strike in Quebec which also was illegal. On many occasions in the past month my colleagues from Hamilton West, from Sainte-Marie, our leader and I have frequently asked questions of the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) regarding the dock strike. His replies were vague and his attitude was always a laissez-faire attitude. In fact, as recently as last Friday morning, as recorded at page 3692 of Hansard, I asked the Minister of Labour the following question:

Since the Minister of Labour is waiting until this afternoon for a decision by the meeting of the dock workers, would the government consider introducing back-to-work legislation immediately before adjournment of the House, in order that Parliament will not have to be recalled for this purpose?

The answer by the Minister of Labour was the following:

Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question clearly has to be no. Surely it is not desirable. This House would not wish to be in the position of being called upon to pass legislation to order men back to work on the ground that they are breaking the law, because the law already requires that they go back to work. Legislation to require Canadians to do that which is already required by the law does not seem to me to be appropriate at this time.

Many of us felt after that answer that the minister had no intention whatsoever of intervening in this strike by introducing back-to-work legislation. In fact, his answer to me indicated a complete capitulation. However, later in the afternoon the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) made a statement. I shall quote from page 3719 of Hansard for June 30, 1972:

Mr. Speaker, at eleven o'clock I asked that the adjournment motion stand in the expectation that the situation in Montreal might have clarified in the meantime so that the motion could be put and carried at this point. However, I am advised by the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) that the situation has not cleared up sufficiently that it would be desirable from the point of view of the government to put and carry the adjournment motion at this point.

In other words, we returned to this House yesterday and today for the sole purpose of passing back-to-work legislation for the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec. This government has shirked its responsibility in connection with this illegal, wildcat strike for at least four weeks. This government has taken a laissez-faire attitude, as it has always done in the past. This government, by not taking action earlier, has caused more unemployment in the Montreal area and an estimated loss of $1 million per day as reported by the news media. As I have said before this government, through its laissez-faire attitude, has capitulated during every strike under federal jurisdiction such as the traffic controllers strike, the postal strike, the seaway strike and so on. I would not be surprised if, for a change, Liberal backbenchers forced the Minister of Labour to bring in this back-to-work legislation. After all, it is election year and the people of Montreal are very unhappy with this do-nothing attitude of the Liberal government in serious situations such as this.

Mr. Gilbert: You supported them for many years.

Mr. Muir: Then he saw the light.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lachine has the floor.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of speaking for very long in this debate—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rock: —because I want to see these men back to work, as all other members do. I want to see the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec in full operation as soon as possible. In all grievances and strikes in essential services it seems that those people who are most affected, the public, the people of the area, have no say while every strike which involves essential services does irreparable harm to the economy of this country. I believe it is time Parliament thought of the public interest. The opinion of the public is that employees engaged in essential services should not have the right to strike. My constituents were asked the following question: Should persons involved in essential services have the right to strike? A negative answer was received from 80 per cent. In fact, 476 answered yes, 2,501 answered no and 170 were undecided.

I believe Parliament should adopt legislation forbidding strikes in essential services, and should provide other binding methods and means of settling these disputes. The crux of the whole problem regarding this strike is that it was and is an illegal strike, and it has continued because the government has shown weakness. It continued also because the Minister of Labour refused to permit the St. Lawrence stevedoring firms to prosecute a union of 3,250 dock workers who were on strike in defiance of court injunctions.

During this illegal strike, court action should have been taken and if court decisions were not obeyed the government should have acted immediately. Instead, the government's laissez-faire attitude prolonged this strike to seven weeks. Since this government allowed this strike to continue for seven weeks, all grain shipments bypassed these three ports. This strike cost shipping agents in Montreal $100,000 a day. The cost to the community in loss of salary and direct income has exceeded $1 million a day. One hundred and thirty two ships have sailed or have been diverted from Montreal with full holds, and hundreds of other ships never showed up. Ten thousand people depend directly on the port for jobs, and many times that number in service industries are affected. The port pumps approximately $250 million a year into the Montreal economy During this strike Montreal has lost $1 million a day. Over the past eight years labour disputes have virtually crippled the port of Montreal and this strike has done so much harm that the port may not return to its former position. This government knew this and yet they allowed this strike to continue, thus jeopardizing the future of the port of Montreal.

My colleague, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) presented a motion, which I seconded, calling on the government to end the dock strike immediately. This was 21 days ago, and only now the government has taken action. It makes no difference to me now whether this bill is referred to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration or whether it goes directly to the committee of the whole, so long as we give it second and third reading as rapidly as possible in order to get these three ports back in operation.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I shall hold the floor just for a few minutes and only to clarify a few things, following my colleague from Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne).

The Canadian Parliament today faces the unfortunate obligation to intervene in a labour dispute of a magnitude which is difficult to appreciate. The dispute which has now completely crippled the habours of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec for nearly eight weeks, has not been solved despite negotiation, dialogue and pooling of data.

And what is more serious still is the fact that even arbitration was not deemed a suitable settlement for the dispute by both parties. Today, we have a deadlock: the union involved refuses to abide by the decision of the arbitrator.

For his part, the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) does not deserve all the blame but he deserves criticism on one point, and this is why I wish to speak.

This afternoon, the minister himself stated that he did not want to intervene directly as long as the opposing parties were not conforming to the labour legislation.

I think that the minister had foreseen that should there be no other possible means, he would introduce special legislation to force resumption of work.

This is why Parliament is today considering Bill C-230.

Mr. Speaker. I often approve the minister, but I do not approve of his position; I do not approve of his choice and his reluctance to intervene at the appropriate time. I also approve neither the disrespectful attitude of employees towards the laws governing this country, nor the employers for their provocative and uncompromising stance in the negotiations.

Union members have not cooperated in good faith in the arbitration process, as was pointed out this afternoon by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and this is also serious.

In his decision, the adjudicator has dealt with the question of job security, one of the foremost and basic causes of conflict.

Today, the minister introduces a bill in which subclauses 1 and 2 of clause 7 deal with job security and he submits that this bill, once passed, will force both parties to resort to arbitration in order to determine when the job security plan becomes effective.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to support this assertion. Today Parliament finds itself obliged to bring in a back-to-work legislation. As was mentioned by my colleague from Kamouraska, everything that exists in this country is not the result of strikes, but rather of the work of man. And it is not with work stoppages that we shall settle disputes.

It is unfortunate that our laws be based on a rather negative philosophy as far as work is concerned. Actually, they do not encourage employers or employees to settle a dispute as soon as possible, but rather to resort to a very complex procedure so that a dispute may last up to seven or eight weeks, with very serious social, economic and financial implications for the strikers' families, the financial world, the general public as well as the whole country.

Mr. Speaker—and this is what I wanted to emphasize—it seems to me that it is absolutely essential and fundamental that the minister, tonight, undertake to review labour laws in order to make them more constructive for labour so that solutions be found before conflicts break out; these laws must provide for the occurence of conflicts in order to avoid them.

I remember a few labour disputes where the parties had waited until the agreement had expired to start negotiations. Mere logic would require that negotiations should start within the last six months before the expiration of the agreement, in order to prevent a situation where for four or five months or more, there is no collective agreement or to prevent a dispute from lasting as long as the strike we are trying to settle.

I find it extremely unfortunate that Parliament should be obliged to interfere in a private dispute. I think that the role of Parliament is not to negotiate or to legislate on a specific dispute, but rather to provide society as a whole with the instrument required to prevent such disputes and to ensure the progressive development of our economy.

At all events, this dispute has been going on for too long and those responsible are not all on the same side. I believe that even if the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) took a long time to intervene, he deserves our support because the national interest is now in jeopardy.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I will, reluctantly, support this bill.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): May I point out to the House that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

• (2130)

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have very few remarks to make at this stage. I want to thank hon. members for their contribution to the debate. I have listened with a great deal of interest and some points of particular interest have been raised. I want to say first, in answer to a question put to me by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who inquired whether the question of the withdrawal by the employers' association of various charges that had been laid against the union—

Mr. Lewis: Contemplated.

Mr. O'Connell: —or contemplated against the union, had arisen during the mediation sessions over the past four days and had entered into the mediation discussions. The answer I gave then, and it was a correct answer, was that this question had not arisen during the mediation procedures. The answer I gave, therefore, was correct; there was no reference in the mediators' proposals to the possible withdrawal of charges or contemplated charges.

It was correct, also, to say that only after the mediators' proposals had been prepared—it is somewhat unusual for mediators to prepare a set of proposals except in the last instance; they having arrived at that point and having felt there was a reasonable chance of the parties agreeing, then they would make a set of proposals—and presented to both parties that the president of the union, at the point of his departure, raised in a manner which I think might be described as casual the question of the possible withdrawal of those charges. So this question had not entered into the discussions to that point.

I want to reply to a criticism of this by the hon. member for Hamiton West (Mr. Alexander), repeated by the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) and perhaps by others, that it does not include the proposals placed before the two parties by the mediators, senior officers of my department, on July 3. I think that is a very silly proposal to come forward with at this time.

I thought I had fully explained why those kinds of proposals have no place at all in the kind of bill which this Parliament is being asked to pass. The mediators' proposals included a date suggested for the phasing back in of the job security provisions. It is not appropriate—I was glad to find the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) and others supporting me in this position—that we as Members of Parliament enter substantially into the dispute, and we would be doing that if we inserted into the legislation the proposals the mediators set forth as a possible solution, which were not accepted by one of the two parties.

We would not have in our possession the technical facts, the complicated facts as to when the job security plan can be reinstated. That is a matter that will properly come before an arbitrator. This is consistent with the tradition that has been followed in the past. It would be a grave mistake; I would go further than that and say that the hon. gentlemen who propose it must acquit themselves of misunderstanding the whole collective bargaining process, the very charge which they level so lightly on the Minister of Labour. I was somewhat surprised at the naivety that is behind that suggestion.

The hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), who is here at the moment, raised a point which he has raised before and which I think all of us must take seriously, that labour legislation is complicated legislation and it is difficult for persons to understand. But, Mr. Speaker, members of unions do engage collective bargaining agents. They do have the benefit of counsel in these matters. They are at no disadvantage in looking at legislation that Parliament enacts. It may be complicated but the basics are very simply stated. Whereas I sympathize with the point of view put forward by the hon. member for Kamouraska, I do not think we can do anything about it.

The leader of the NDP, the hon. member for York South, raised a very important question to which I would like to address just a few remarks. That question was related to the range in time, the jurisdiction given to the arbitrator over the whole term of the agreement, as the clause now reads, to modify the collective agreement in the restricted area where it applies to the job security provisions. I want to think about this overnight again and consult my senior officers. I do not want to make a commitment that we are prepared to restrict further the restricted range that the arbitrator has in which to make his judgment. First of all, he is restricted in that any modification he may bring in, in an award, is a modification only of the job security part of the collective agreement. That job security plan is suspended by this bill for a period of time to be determined by the arbitrator.

Should he be restricted in time to this shipping season or to the end of this year, and not have the ability at that point in time when he comes to make his decision—remembering that whenever he fixes a date he automatically involves himself in the modification of the job security plan as presently in the collective agreement—or are the uncertainties so great as to the building up of tonnages that he needs the capability of extending his modification in this restricted area down through the full term of the collective agreement?

[Mr. O'Connell.]

I shall give that question very serious consideration because it is not our intention to give wide scope to the arbitrator, and I am sure it would never be the intention of Parliament to give wide scope to any arbitrator to modify the terms of a collective agreement. The necessary scope given in this case to modify an agreement is an exception to the general rule. Arbitrators interpret agreements and make awards with respect to violations. It is an unusual circumstance when they are given the power to modify. Yet that is the power that it is necessary to give here. We want to give it in a narrow range to make sure it is confined to the job security provisions, and we will give additional consideration to the time scope.

To assist hon. members in coming to their views perhaps I ought to make clear that the job security fund, as constituted, is not a direct payment from the employers' treasury, as it were; it is not coming from the employers' funds. The job security fund emerges and becomes established through a levy on the tonnage that goes through that port, so much per ton of general cargo and so much in a higher amount for container cargo. So that in this light we are not talking about bargaining over management's costs but we are talking about the capacity of a fund, developed in this manner, actually to sustain the job security provisions of the collective agreement. I want to give this point full consideration, but it may indeed be very difficult at this time, in view of the uncertainties that face the near-term and the longer-term, to restrict the arbitrator to a given period of time when he has all the facts in front of him and when he considers the future with the best judgment that he can exercise. Those are questions at which we will continue to look.

• (2140)

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say I have noted that all parties in this House propose to give their agreement to second reading of this bill. I think that demonstrates our full acceptance of the engagement, of the public interest in this dispute. It shows a realization of the very grave nature of it, not only in the legal sense but in the economic sense and, I would add, the social sense, and an appreciation of the damage it has unnecessarily done already as well as the damage that any prolongation would bring to these three ports, their communities and the country at large.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would mind answering a question?

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if you permit.

Mr. Lewis: I noted the minister emphasized that the power given to the arbitrator under clause 7 of the bill is confined to a narrow area, namely, the area of job security. I should like to ask the minister whether it is not true that even though that is just one area of the collective agreement, it is qualitatively the most important area, the one that caused the greatest problem in negotiations? Is it not also true that the agreement that was arrived at last April contained a very large amendment to the job security plan that the agreement contained before, and that as far as the agreement is concerned it is no longer based on a particular fund? By giving the arbitrator the powers the law now gives him, to interfere with the future of the parties in the last two years of the agreement as well as this year, does the minister not think that is a very dangerous thing to do in principle? It would also seem to be dangerous in terms of getting the agreement of the union and employers concerned to accept the law with some grace.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I am going to continue to give a good deal of consideration to this aspect. I should like to go one step further and draw attention to the wording of subparagraph (b) which says, in my view, that the modifications which may in the arbitrator's view be necessary are just those modifications necessary to give effect to the job security provisions and to make them viable provisions, not to modify them over a long period of time for any reason other than to ensure that there will be job security provisions and that the sense of the collective agreement will be brought to bear on that situation.

I do agree that the job security provisions are one of the very major aspects of this agreement. I also agree that we are entering upon a serious step when we give an arbitrator the modification power. But, Mr. Speaker, the parties have brought this situation to the point where the ports are not open, the national interest is engaged, and so we are required to take some drastic measures that may not be palatable. However, they are required in the public interest in order to open those ports again.

It is necessary to clear this question of return to work which has been a stumbling block. We must lodge the power to make those modifications in some place. We are lodging it in the place the parties themselves selected, in the arbitrators in whom they have confidence. Perhaps there is no escape from the dilemma, if you like to call it that, no escape from giving the modification powers. However, it may be that subclause (b) sufficiently confines those powers only to the modifications that would in fact make it a viable job security plan.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, I want to consider this overnight. We will have another opportunity to review it at committee stage.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, we are sitting tonight by the general consent of the House. Following consultations, I feel that it would be more in keeping with that general consent if we began the committee of the whole stage at the next sitting tomorrow. I would, therefore, like to move the adjournment of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

On motion of Mr. MacEachen, the House adjourned at 9.50 p.m., pursuant to special order.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT OF SESSION ON JUNE 30, 1972

On the order: Motions.

June 22, 1972—The Prime Minister:

That, when the House adjourns following the Royal Assent on June 30, 1972, it shall stand adjourned until a time fixed by Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Government, when the House may meet for the purpose of the giving of Royal Assent to any bills that have not been given Royal Assent;

And that, after the giving of Royal Assent to any such bills or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or stand adjourned, as the case may be, until September 28, 1972, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rise on a point of order to suggest that because this motion is no longer applicable it might be dropped, with the consent of the House.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT OF SESSION ON JULY 7, 1972

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved:

That when the House adjourns following the third reading and passing of Bills C-170 and C-201 or, at the ordinary time of daily adjournment on Friday, July 7, 1972, as the case may be, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Government, when the House may meet for the purpose of the giving of Royal Assent to any bills that have not been given Royal Assent;

And that, after the giving of Royal Assent to any such bills or in the event the House does not meet for that purpose, the House shall be adjourned or stand adjourned, as the case may be, until September 28, 1972, provided that at any time prior to that date, if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied, and thereupon the House shall meet at the time stated in such notice, and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time;

And that, in the event of Mr. Speaker's being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker or the Deputy Chairman of Committees shall act in his stead for all purposes of this order.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have had discussions with my opposite numbers in the other parties and it appears quite necessary, not only because of those discussions but because of the changed circumstances, to alter this motion. I would propose to move an amendment to the Prime Minister's motion. Without going into all the phraseology, the amended motion would make certain that the House would adjourn on Friday, July 7, tomorrow, at the regular adjournment time, but with a condition. The purpose of the condition is so that hon. members will understand that if at that moment the bill we are presently considering, Bill C-230, having to do with the resumption of operation of certain Quebec ports, has not been given Royal Assent, then the House would not adjourn. I think we all understand that if things go along normally that bill will probably be cleared, but in order to make it absolutely certain and to indicate to the country that we will not adjourn unless that matter has been attended to it seems to me a provision to that effect ought to be included in the motion. If I may, I would move the following amendment:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words preceding the phrase "it shall stand adjourned" and substituting therefor the following words:

"That when the House adjourns at the ordinary time of daily adjournment on Friday, July 7, 1972, provided that Royal Assent has been given to Bill C-230,"

• (1410)

The amended paragraph would then read:

That when the House adjourns at the ordinary time of daily adjournment on Friday, July 7, 1972, provided that Royal Assent has been given to Bill C-230, it shall stand adjourned until a time to be fixed by Mr. Speaker—

And so on.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the motion as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion as amended agreed to.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

ALLEGED INVOLVEMENT OF BANK OF MONTREAL IN TRANSACTIONS OF QUESTIONABLE NATURE—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I seek unanimous consent to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgency, namely, the involvement of the Bank of Montreal in transactions of a questionable nature arising out of the inquiry of the O'Dea Commission in the province of Newfoundland and demanding attention by the federal government. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon):

That the government refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs to inquire into the alleged conflict of interest of the Bank of Montreal arising out of the O'Dea Commission, and report its findings to the House within 60 days.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

MANPOWER

INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister advise the House whether the manpower program, known variously as Canada Manpower Opportunities Program or CANMOP or simply CMOP, which has been in preparation in his department during the past two years, is now ready for presentation to the Canadian people and, if so, will it be announced in the very near future?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if it were completed and ready for announcement I would make that announcement today. Obviously it is not completed.

Mr. Hees: Can the minister advise the House why this long-awaited program has taken so long to prepare, and will he undertake to announce it this summer?

Mr. Mackasey: It will be announced as soon as it is ready, Mr. Speaker, and I am very hopeful that it will be this summer.

Mr. Hees: Would the minister advise the House just what this program is going to cost and how many jobs are expected to be produced by it?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, it will cost as little as possible and provide as many jobs as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Following that non-answer I would like to ask the minister a final supplementary question. Just how much is the government counting on this program to bolster its sagging hopes in the forthcoming election?

Mr. Mackasey: I was going to say that this government—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Winnipeg North on a supplementary question.

POSSIBLE CHANGES IN TRAINING PROGRAMS—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Has he yet consulted the provinces in detail with respect to the changes in manpower training programs he is contemplating so that the programs can be made to fit in with the needs of the individual provinces?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that what most hon. members, including the hon. member for Winnipeg North, are referring to basically is a change contained in the legislation passed by the House of Commons last Friday which permits, as a general rule, on-the-job training as a regular feature of manpower programs and eliminates what has been known as the infamous three-year rule. I mentioned in that debate that I had had consultations with all ten provinces, including the province of Quebec, either personally or through senior officials of the department.

POSSIBLE NEW WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the assurance given by the President of the Treasury Board that any winter works program launched by the federal government would be undertaken in co-operation with the provinces, can the minister advise us that this assurance will be kept and that this is the plan of the government?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Manpower and Immigration was not listening. I asked whether, in view of the assurance that in future any winter works program would be undertaken in co-operation with the provinces, the minister can advise that this is the policy of the government?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am no expert on winter works programs. I do not know what minister is responsible for them. What I have been talking about is a permanent program emanating from the Department of Manpower, which is an entirely different thing.

PROVISION OF SUFFICIENT TIME TO MUNICIPALITIES TO PLAN WINTER WORKS PROJECTS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that many municipalities experienced real difficulties in properly drawing up plans for them to be involved in the Local Initiatives Program, can the minister inform the House what kind of action will be taken by the department to assure local municipalities that they will have sufficient time to draw up plans for winter works projects this winter?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure which minister I am speaking for, but if it is the policy of the government to introduce winter works programs this coming winter, for a variety of reasons, then I am sure the minister in charge would take into consideration the problem the hon. member has raised, as manifested last winter, and would want to meet with his counterparts at the earliest opportunity.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TESTS BY FRANCE—ALLEGED RAMMING OF "GREENPEACE III" BY FRENCH MINESWEEPER

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government been officially or in any other way informed by the government of France regarding the alleged ramming of Greenpeace III by a French minesweeper, and was there any response from the government to that information?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. When I heard the report yesterday or the day before I asked our embassy in France to get in touch with the French government because we had had no information previously about this incident. I am very happy to inform the House that we have reason to believe the crew is safe and well. There are conflicting reports about the collision. The French informed us officially of their version yesterday. They said, essentially, that the two ships were passing slowly alongside each other, that the French ship was about to pass a message to the Greenpeace and the Greenpeace turned by mistake or was blown into the French ship, that damage was light but the Greenpeace asked for help and was towed to Mururoa and repaired free of charge, and that the crew was hospitably treated. The Greenpeace may have left Mururoa now, but we are not certain of this.

Mr. Lewis: Can the minister inform the House what kind of message and what were the contents of the message which the French ship was desirous of communicating to the people on Greenpeace III?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we were not informed about this. We are making further inquiries because, as the hon. gentleman knows, there has been some conflict. Mr. Metcalf has said that the ship was rammed. We have no confirmation of that, but of course we were not there to witness the accident.

• (1420)

NUCLEAR TESTS BY FRANCE—PROVISION OF INFORMATION BY UNITED STATES AUTHORITIES

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the United States authorities have made public the information they have regarding the atmospheric nuclear tests made by France and, if not, can the minister inform the House whether he has any information on why they have kept it confidential in this case when in the past they have always let the world know when they have detected such explosions by the U.S.S.R., China and other countries?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I really could not answer that question. I do not know whether there is any difference in practice and, if there is, why it is so. We have reason to believe that there have been two nuclear explosions in the Pacific by the French government. This has neither been confirmed nor denied, and I do not know whether the United States has a responsibility to make this information available.

Mr. Lewis: Just to clarify the situation, Mr. Speaker, did I understand from the minister that the United States authorities have not yet made any comment with respect to these tests? What source does the minister's information come from?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it comes from a number of sources that we have reason to believe are quite reliable. The fact that there have been tests has not been denied by anyone, and we assume it to be true. I really cannot answer for the government of the United States as to why they follow their practice.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, owing to the continued absence of the Secretary of State my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is the continued absence of the Secretary of State in any way related to the public spanking that he received from the Prime Minister on Monday?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I answered this question yesterday but I will gladly answer it again because the answer appears to have been misunderstood by the hon. member and perhaps by other people. I want to assure the House that it is not my intention to move the Secretary of State from his department because of what happened on Parliament Hill on July 1. What I did say in the House, Mr. Speaker, if I can have your indulgence and if hon. members will look up Hansard of two days ago, in response to cries of "resign" from the other side, was that not only had we no intention of resigning but we were going to go on to win the next election, and that the Secretary of State, like other ministers, would then be in a new portfolio. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I might just add that I am sorry about the misunderstanding and I do want to say publicly that there is no minister in my cabinet who has done a better job with more skill and devotion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: He is sulking outside.

Mr. Trudeau: I think, particularly, that the achievement of having set up a cultural policy for Canada, a bilingual, multicultural policy, is something for which we are very thankful.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: Without agreeing with all the premises of the Prime Minister's answer and not necessarily debating them at this time, if the minister is held in such high esteem may I ask why it is that he has been absent every day this week when he should have been in the House according to the roster system? Today being the last day of this session, in view of the motion moved by the President of the Privy Council, members of this House are not going to be able to examine the minister on the many facets that come under his control, especially the film policy that was announced in Montreal on Monday. Before saying anything else I should like to know if the Prime Minister is aware whether the Secretary of State intends to come into the House during this question period so that we can put some very relevant questions to him in a most non-controversial way?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the practice has been that when ministers are due to be in the House and cannot be here, questions are taken on their behalf by the parliamentary secretary or by the acting minister, and I have yesterday and today shown preparedness to answer any questions addressed to the Secretary of State, whether or not they are addressed by the hon. member. As to absence, this does not seem to be the right day, when his own leader is not here, for the hon. member to draw the attention of the House to the absence of the minister.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. At this stage, neither the Secretary of State nor his parliamentary secretary are in the chamber. The questions I wanted to put to the Secretary of State, regardless of what happened on July 1 or Canada Day or Dominion Day, had to do with the statement of policy made in Montreal affecting some of the major corporations and Crown agencies responsible to Parliament, agencies such as the CBC the CFDC, the Canada Council and the National Film Board.

Mr. Fairweather: And the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: I say in all seriousness that the Secretary of State is physically alive.

An hon. Member: Is he?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): How can one tell?

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know the state of his mental health, but I actually saw the hon. gentleman earlier today.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nowlan: And, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope we will not spend the whole question period debating whether the minister is here or not here to answer questions. The hon. member is raising a point of order. He seeks the floor on a point of order. He should indicate what the point of order is that would require a ruling by the Chair.

Mr. Hees: Let the minister come in and face the music.

Mr. Speaker: I should like to hear the hon. member on that point.

Mr. Hees: Bring the minister in and have him face the music.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will change my point of order to a question of privilege. In the dying days of this session and of this Parliament, hopefully, when people across this country are concerned about the relevance of this institution, the minister responsible for culture has made an important statement in Montreal involving legislative changes to many acts that have been passed by this Parliament. These affect the future of the Film Board—has he come in yet? They also involve the question of the setting up of a film advisory committee which will supplant the film commissioner and perhaps make the minister responsible for culture the film czar of this land. Yet Members of Parliament have not been able to direct questions to the relevant minister. The Prime Minister can say all he wants about the parliamentary secretary accepting questions. That is not the way answers are received, especially, Mr. Speaker, in the dying days of a session. The Prime Minister knows as well as I do that that would be a futile experience, even if the parliamentary secretary were here. I say this is just another manifestation of the contempt that members opposite on the treasury benches show for this institution. This applies especially to the minister responsible for culture who likes to deal in the realm of philosophy and not come into this institution and answer the representatives of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is justified in wanting to ask some questions. I simply assure him that there are ministers present at this time, myself and the second acting minister, who are prepared to deal with those questions, assuming the hon. member, in the dying days of his membership in this House, wants to ask any questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will let history decide who has political mortality in this country, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: May I direct my question to the Prime Minister. In view of the motion moved by the President of the Privy Council, if this Parliament comes back on September 28 and if the Prime Minister can make up his mind when to call the election, which he has not done yet, will the Prime Minister assure the House that the statement made by the Secretary of State involving those various cultural agencies, all under the cloak of film policy, will be referred to the broadcasting committee so that there can be a full explanation of the real intent behind this policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will certainly make that recommendation to the Secretary of State. I am glad to have the acknowledgment of the hon. member that he will still be here and very active in the government. I am sure, with the agreement of the House leaders, that we can refer this and other matters to the standing committee, assuming we sit long enough at that time.

Mr. Nowlan: Once the Prime Minister has made up his mind.

Mr. Trudeau: Once I have made up my mind.

An hon. Member: Is that the only question you have, Pat?

Mr. Nowlan: No, I have many more.

HOUSING

PRICE RANGE OF DETACHED HOUSING STARTS IN MAY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. As approximately 30,000 single, detached houses were started in May, can the minister inform the House if these have continued to be mainly in the high income range?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe so. They cover quite a wide spectrum of income ranges. They have all been properly built houses and they have been aimed at the Canadian market by their builders.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I was not able to hear what the minister said. Would he make a statement tomorrow as to what the average cost of these 30,000 units will be when they are completed? That will give him a little time to undertake the necessary research.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, there are indications that we are building more houses in this country than we have ever built in any year in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Basford: That is an indication of the success that the government's fiscal and housing policies are having in the country today. I do not see that a statement tomorrow is really necessary.

Mrs. MacInnis: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but there was a bit too much noise and evidently the minister did not hear my question. I asked him whether he would do a little research between now and tomorrow and make a statement as to the average cost of these 30,000 housing starts in May?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, the national average is around $16,000.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have not yet completed the first round of questioning. The hon. member for Lotbinière will be recognized and then the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

SOCIAL SECURITY

DISCUSSION BETWEEN OTTAWA AND QUEBEC RESPECTING CO-ORDINATION OF PROGRAMS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare. Since the Quebec government wishes to establish a global social security policy and in view of the attitude of the federal government about the introduction of the bill relating to the payment of family allowances, would the hon. minister tell the House whether discussions were held recently with the representatives of the provincial government? If not, could he tell us when a meeting will take place?

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have recently had meetings, as I explained in the House yesterday in answer to several questions, particularly from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, concerning the Canada Pension Plan and its relationship to the Quebec Pension Plan. There was general discussion throughout the whole area of governmental policies but particularly about the Canada Pension Plan.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON LOW-INCOME HOUSING

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Will the minister make public before the House adjourns tomorrow the critique or criticism of the government's efforts in the low-income housing field prepared by Michael Dennis and now in his possession?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that would not be possible.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Did the minister say it would not be published? If so, why not?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I said that would not be possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO ACT

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the widespread criticisms of the proposed amendments to the National Housing Act, is the minister considering making any changes?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in my experience the proposals before parliament have received very favourable comment from various sectors across the country. Naturally, in the course of approval by Parliament, the legislation will be dealt with by the standing committee of the House and where improvements can be made undoubtedly they will be considered by Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will have noticed that we have not been making much progress. We are still on the third or fourth question. Many members are seeking the floor. If there are five or six supplementaries sought on this question, that may take us to the end of the question period.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON LOW-INCOME HOUSING

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and I am going to put it bluntly to him. In view of the fact that the Michael Dennis report has been in the minister's hands for many weeks, and in view of the fact it has already been translated into the other official language, according to information I have received, will the minister explain to the House why that report is not being made public so that Members of Parliament and the people of Canada may study it and see what in the policies ought to be improved?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the facts upon which the question is predicated are not correct.

Mr. Lewis: The minister cannot get away with a generality. In what respect are the premises not accurate? Will the minister specifically deny the fact that he has had the report for many weeks in his possession or in the possession of his department? What other difficulties are there?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is obviously a debate as to facts between the minister and the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sorry to take the time of the House, but I respectfully suggest that the question I asked—I can rephrase it—is entirely proper. The minister said that the premises of my previous question were inaccurate. It is surely right for me and for this Parliament to ask the minister to indicate in what respect those premises are inaccurate. Is it not true that the minister has had the report for almost two months or more than two months in his hands or in the hands of his department?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, no decision has been made by me or the government about whether to publish any such report. Second, it is a longstanding practice in this country that any publication of the government of any major concern be published in both official languages. At the present time, that is not possible.

[Mr. Basford.]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a further point of order. I suggest, with respect but with some anger—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —that either the minister ought to say in what respect my premises are invalid or he ought to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question. He has repeated it twice. He knows the rules. The minister does not have to reply to a question. The minister has given a reply. The hon. member may not be satisfied with it and may feel it is inexact, but he cannot insist on having the reply which he wants.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister definitely said that the premises on which the hon. member for York South based his question were incorrect; in other words, that what the hon. member for York South said was not true. As a member of this House I say that the minister has a duty either to explain why it was not true or he should retract his statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That is not correct. The hon. member for York South has to take the word of the minister. The minister has to take the word of the hon. member for York South. As a result of this rule, very often there are contradictions, but that is still the rule.

Mr. Lewis: Only in this House do I have to take his word.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

ALLEGATIONS BY FORMER CORPORAL RAMSAY—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION INQUIRY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister. Now that the government must have had the opportunity of reading the allegations in Maclean's magazine concerning the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, is the government giving consideration to the appointment of a royal commission inasmuch as everywhere across the country members of the force are deeply distressed by that article and want the opportunity of having an investigation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I then ask the Prime Minister whether the reason the government does not want a royal commission is the support given to the statements made by Ramsay in Maclean's magazine by Peter Newman, who has a national reputation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —a notorious one for being a writer of fiction?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATURE OF INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGATIONS BY FORMER CORPORAL RAMSAY—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN SERVICE COURT PROCEDURES

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a further question on the same subject to the Solicitor General. I note that he is reading. Possibly he is now reading the article. First, I wish to ask the minister to answer, yes or no, whether he has read the article. Second, what action is he taking, either with the Commissioner of the RCMP or in his department, to investigate the broad allegations in that article?

• (1440)

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have read enough of that article to realize it really deals with generalities. I am waiting for specific information to see whether we should really look into the matter with a view to improving our operations. Among others one thing struck me which was dealt with again this morning in the editorial of a newspaper the right hon. member for Prince Albert doubtless considers very important, that the rate of suicide is a thousand times higher within the RCMP than among the population generally. That is entirely false.

[English]

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask a supplementary question? The minister has chosen to bring me in and I must answer him.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will recognize the right hon. gentleman but first we should perhaps allow a supplementary by the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre.

Mr. Benjamin: May I ask the Solicitor General whether he has been in touch with Mr. Ramsay to obtain further details as to the allegations, and whether or not he will have changes made in the Commissioner's standing orders and in the procedures of service courts in order to allow members of the force their full civil and legal rights?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, if that person is serious and has facts to point out to the government, then it is his duty to do so. But I am not going to bite every time someone casts a bait. Moreover, and needless to say, the government is concerned about the rights of individuals; we are certainly going to examine that matter concerning the RCMP. Finally, if the hon. member wants to know what I think of the RCMP in general, he might, if I may suggest it to him, read the speech I made on June 29 last to the members of the Quebec Police Association.

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Since the Solicitor General has seen fit to mention my name, may I ask him whether he has read the four or five editorials in newspapers across the country saying he has made such a mess of things that the only remedy, is "Go, Goyer, go"?

Some hon. Members: Go, go!

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, the same slogan had me elected with a majority of 24,000 votes at the last election. At any rate, it is true that I read some editorials and I would at times have the same reaction when reading editorials which really lack seriousness, because the writer did not get the facts and sought the truth.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for Lotbinière, but it seems to me the question period so far has not been a very helpful one in many ways.

Mr. Hees: The best we have had for a long time.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps it has been interesting, but I know that some hon. members who have been waiting for an opportunity to ask their questions may feel otherwise.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Solicitor General.

Did he or did he not have discussions with the RCMP in connection with those articles?

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, I have bi-weekly meetings with the Commissioner and his main advisers and we discuss on a continued basis in order to improve the operations of the RCMP and to make it such that it meets the aspirations of Canadians, who consider it very effective and very honest.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LITHUANIA—OCCUPATION BY SOVIET UNION—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister aware of reports that a third Lithuanian citizen has immolated himself by fire in protest against the continued occupation of this Baltic state by the Soviet Union? If so, will he ensure that Canada's support and concern for the principle of self-determination by all peoples of the world are adequately and effectively conveyed to the government of the Soviet Union?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of these reports and I am sure all members of the House join with me in saying that these deaths constitute a terrible human tragedy. In regard to the second part of the question, I am sure the hon. member and all other members know that, while we fully appreciate the de facto situation, the Canadian government has consistently refused to recognize the legality of the incorporation of Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania into the Soviet Union.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO CHANGES IN MEMBERSHIP OF APPEAL BOARD—EXERCISE OF EQUITY

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister giving consideration to changing the personnel of the Immigration Appeal Board during the coming weeks?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): No, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member may possibly have forgotten that the Immigration Appeal Board is an independent body set up by an act of Parliament and composed of nine members. I certainly have no intention of putting forward amendments to that act until late in the fall.

Mr. Nesbitt: Would the minister, then, give consideration to causing an inquiry to be made under the Inquiries Act to determine whether the present members of the board are carrying out the terms and intent of the legislation, bearing in mind that there have been so many complaints about the board's failure to use its power to exercise equity?

Mr. Mackasey: On looking into this question in a preliminary way I have found to my happy surprise that 42 per cent of the cases referred to the board under section 15, that is, on humanitarian grounds, are decided in favour of the would-be immigrant. That is a very high percentage.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Would the minister advise the members of the Immigration Appeal Board that they should exercise equity and be compassionate in all the cases they consider?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ALLEGED WITHHOLDING OF FUNDS FOR ORGANIZATIONS IN ONTARIO

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question was intended for the Secretary of State but in his absence I should like to direct it to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. May I say that I express my sympathy for him in that the Prime Minister does not believe he is doing as good a job as are some of the other ministers. Would the hon. gentleman inform the House why core funding of Indian organizations in Ontario is being withheld?

[Mr. Sharp.]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the funds provided to the various provincial organizations for Indians are administered by the Secretary of State and I do not see why they could have been withheld. I will inquire and report in due time.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: Would the minister be willing to investigate this situation in addition to the circumstances surrounding the withholding of funds for treaty research and undertake to report to the House on motions?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, it is a complex question; when I obtain an answer, I will be pleased to inform the House. If we are not sitting, I will advise the persons concerned, namely the Indians.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS TO EQUIP CARS WITH BUMPERS STRONG ENOUGH TO WITHSTAND TOWING

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It has to do with a matter of some concern to a great many consumers in this country. I refer to the fact that some of the leading motor car manufacturers have apparently failed to equip their new vehicles with bumpers strong enough to withstand towing. Is the minister aware of this and does he intend to give consideration to this matter, possibly in conjunction with the Minister of Transport, with a view to seeing that the deficiency is rectified?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The matter has been brought to my attention and we are giving it some consideration now.

POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN OPERATIONS OF CHARTERED BANKS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Finance. Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry not to have the answer but I will direct the question to the attention of the Minister of Finance.

PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF STUDIES ON CONTRIBUTION OF LAND COSTS AND GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS TO INFLATION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is it the government's intention to make public the research studies of the Prices and Incomes Commission, in particular the study on the contribution of land costs to housing inflation and the study on the contribution of government sectors to inflation and, if so, when can we expect an announcement to be made on these important subjects?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the correct answer would be that the Prices and Incomes Commission intends to publish many of its research studies. I cannot say whether it will be publishing those particular ones; I do not have that information. I will be happy to supply it to the House and to supply the hon. member with a list of the research projects the commission intends to publish.

METHOD OF FINANCING COMMISSION SUBSEQUENT TO END OF MARCH, 1972

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. In view of the fact the House passed estimates for the Prices and Incomes Commission to operate until the end of March, how does the minister expect to operate the commission? Does he intend to bring in supplementary estimates?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a question that my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, will have to answer.

POSSIBLE REPLACEMENT OF FERRY SERVICE TO CHRISTIAN ISLAND BY CAUSEWAY—DISCUSSION WITH ONTARIO

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the very serious disaster off Christian Island on the weekend and the apprehension and inconvenience now being caused, is the government having any discussions with the province concerning the building of the causeway that was being considered ten years ago?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any negotiation being conducted with the Ontario government on this subject but I shall look into it and we will consider the hon. member's suggestion.

[English]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to refer to the fact that there appears to be dual control in respect of this island. For instance, the province of Ontario has control of hydro and some of the roads. That is why I referred to the fact that a causeway was being considered ten years ago.

PENSIONS

SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO LOWER ELIGIBLE AGE TO 60

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the references the minister has made a number of times to the possibility at some point of lowering the eligible age under the Old Age Security Act as well as under other pieces of pension legislation, will the government give consideration to preparing legislation to be introduced when we return on September 28 to start lowering the eligible age to age 60, doing it one year at a time as was done when it was brought down from 70 to 65?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot be definitive as to when the government might be prepared to do what the hon. member suggests.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to be definitive that it will be done some day?

Mr. Munro: As the hon. member is aware, Mr. Speaker, we have already indicated in a general way in the White Paper on Income Security that this is an area for future consideration.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why not do it now?

CANADIAN CULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO NAMING OF MEMBERS OF ADVISORY COUNCIL ON MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In May he stipulated that he would advise the House who would make up the formation of the Canadian Advisory Council on Multiculturalism. Would he name those people so there could be recognition of the visible minorities of Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are giving consideration to this very subject now. The Secretary of State has begun to assemble a list which we will consider in cabinet next week, I believe. I will make sure that members of the Polish community, to which the hon. member belongs, will be given due consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In view of the treatment of the native peoples in the fourth volume of the B and B Commission reports, where their problems were just touched upon and almost excluded, are the Indians and Eskimos also going to be part of this multicultural policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the lists are not final and I cannot say at this time if there is inclusion of representatives of those groups.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A citizen named Lawrence Paul Rubin reputedly worked for the Le Dain Commission some two years ago and was fined $150 in an Ontario court for possession of hashish. Last winter he was working in the prairie provinces and a Manitoba court fined him $350 for possession of hashish. On both occasions he seems to have been working in one way or another in a federally-appointed job. I am wondering whether the minister can tell us what further schemes he or any other minister may have up their sleeves to spread federally sponsored largesse further among the other provinces?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

SUGGESTED USE OF PORTION OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE RESERVES TO BUY FOREIGN-OWNED SECTORS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Canadian foreign exchange reserves have reached an all-time high, some $6.22 billion, and in view of the further fact that the Minister of Finance two or three weeks ago said he would give consideration to a suggestion I made that the government of Canada might use part of these reserves to buy up certain sectors of the economy which are foreign owned, is the Prime Minister in a position to inform the House whether or not the government has decided to act in this way?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I certainly could not answer that question in a positive way without making a long statement of policy.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact the government of Japan has embarked on the imaginative use of part of their foreign exchange reserves in this direction, would he consider sending some of his advisers to Japan to see how this is done?

TRENT AND RIDEAU CANALS—INQUIRY AS TO CREATION OF COUNCIL TO CONTROL WATERWAYS

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I asked a question yesterday that was accepted by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It is of great importance to the people of my area. Has the minister left?

Mr. Alexander: He heard you and he is running away.

An hon. Member: Here he comes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, this question deals with the proposed creation of a council to govern the Trent and Rideau waterway systems. I should like to ask the minister whether a date has been set for the creation of the council and when it is expected to take control of the systems?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will allow the minister to reply but of course this has to be done by consent of the House because the question period has expired.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not answering this question any sooner, but I would like to do so now.

First of all, it is a suggestion respecting the creation of an advisory council to advise the federal and provincial governments about the administration of those waterway systems; it is not a council charged with the administration but an agency that would advise us. This matter is now under consideration and I hope the Ontario government and my department will be able to give the public an answer within the next few weeks.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, as acting House leader, what business the government proposes to place before the House in the likely event that Bill C-230 will be disposed of before five o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, after the question period, which has concluded now, we will call Bill C-230, the ports bill, followed by Bill C-170 dealing with family income security. When that is completed we will call Bill C-201, the foreign takeovers bill. I also understand there have been some discussions through the usual channels of the possibility of reverting to motions in order to make a motion relative to a reference to a standing committee. I would therefore ask leave to revert to motions.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. minister have leave to revert to motions at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ST. LAWRENCE PORTS OPERATIONS BILL

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING AND RELATED OPERATIONS

The house in committee on Bill C-230, to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec—Mr. O'Connell—Mr. Honey in the chair.

The Chairman: House in committee of the whole on Bill C-230.

On Clause 2—Definitions.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, clause 2 is the general clause. This is a piece of emergency legislation. As the minister pointed out yesterday this is the type of legislation the federal Parliament has reluctantly passed on a very limited number of occasions in the past. Hopefully, with the coming into effect of the Canada labour bill we recently passed there will be less and less need for this type of legislation.

Members of Parliament are handicapped in discussing this type of emergency for two major reasons. First, most of us are not familiar with either organization which is involved, whether it be the maritime shipping agencies, their component parts, or the union involved or other unions which may be indirectly involved. Yesterday the minister mentioned that a great deal of national difficulty has been created because of the closing of one of Canada's major ports. I think that is an exaggeration in an extreme sense. I am quite sure the port of Montreal is not closed. I am unfamiliar with the operation of the port authority in Montreal and, therefore, I am not too sure what authority the port council may have. I rather imagine, however, if we were really familiar with the facts rather than with what the media have reported in this particular strike, we might be less concerned than we appear to be. It is always easy to build up the argument that so many people are on strike, that the strike has continued for a certain length of time and therefore the public in some way must be affected either directly or indirectly.

It usually is a fact that the public is directly or indirectly affected. However, I imagine in this particular case the public is affected very little, and probably there have been no shipments of grain either stopped or delayed because of the strike. Some container or merchandising freight probably has suffered considerable dislocation, but this dislocation probably is to the advantage of Halifax, Saint John and other Maritime ports, including I am sure, some of the ports on the St. Lawrence Seaway which are available to ocean-going ships. Probably the ports of Hamilton and Toronto as well have had some benefit. Therefore, we are really discussing this piece of legislation as relating to an emergency situation, without really having been informed about the scope of the emergency.

I am sure that the port of Montreal over the past 50 or 75 years, and until the last three or four years, has always experienced some difficulty because for a period of five or six months in the year the river was frozen. When several new icebreakers were commissioned a few years ago the situation was obviously changed considerably for the port of Montreal. I believe there have been difficulties at the port of Montreal previously which did not have a national consequence, even though the port was totally closed for periods of four or five months in the year.

The point I am making is that we are being asked to pass national legislation to end a situation with which I, personally, am not too familiar and which the minister himself has not outlined. I do not know whether a bushel of grain has been delayed because of the strike. I took it upon myself, in order to obtain information, to make several phone calls to people I know who are very close to the port in Montreal. I asked them whether the port was closed and how many ships were in the port. They said the port is not closed and is operating as usual. They indicated something the minister has not mentioned. There really are four or five major unions operating in the port of Montreal, loading, unloading and handling cargo in that area. They include the CBRT, the CNTU, the Mercantile Union, the Longshoremen's Union and I presume other unions associated with other aspects of moving cargo on the dock.

The port of Montreal I am sure has built up over a period of years, and now on a year-around basis, a very large mercantile trade. It has done so in the import-export field and more recently in the container field. I am sure any disruption in this traffic would have an effect on the community, on the people who work in the dock area and, in fact, on the economy of Montreal in general. Whether or not this has reached the disaster level that would warrant this type of emergency legislation I am not sure. I suggest that no one, including the newspapers and other media which usually are fairly diligent in searching out information that would enable Members of Parliament to make a fairly good decision in respect of the emergency, has been diligent in investigating the rumour that grain is not being shipped as a result of the stevedores' strike. I spoke to some people who work as crew members on ships in the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence Seaway, and they tell me there has not been one of their ships which has suffered any difficulty. There have been changes in places of loading and unloading, the destinations have been changed and other changes have taken place, but there has been no dislocation.

The point I am making is that I am not opposed to us doing something about the situation, but I am of the opinion that we are not dealing with a national emergency in even a very small sense. It may be that this has developed into that type of a problem, but if that is so, I am not aware of it. I have been involved in many strikes and I can assure you that if a large number of people are unemployed for eight weeks they are in serious difficulty. I am sure that if there are others on the management side who are operating businesses, and who are not having their deliveries made to their home port, they are also having difficulties. But I think that this bill contains no provisions that will solve the problems which originally caused this strike and, in fact, the decision on those points is now being left to an arbitrator who is to make a settlement some time in the future.

I suggest it is unfortunate that we did not have available to us the section of the new Labour Code under which a mediator could have been appointed to represent the public before a situation hardened to the extent that a compromise was no longer possible. I disagree with the minister. There is no question about his sincerity, honesty or integrity, but I think that he was overly cautious in not entering this dispute three or four weeks ago. Obviously, the problem did not appear to be any closer to settlement no matter whom he sent to negotiate on his behalf, and it seems to me that the minister had an opportunity to settle the dispute earlier.

This legislation would not be before us today if the former minister of labour had been the minister, because I am sure he would have gone to the parties and said: "I demand on behalf of the nation that this matter be settled. I will assist you to settle it and I will stay here until it is settled". Many of us can remember much more serious situations than this one when the minister went to Montreal and stayed there for several days at great personal sacrifice to his health and to his personal wellbeing. However, the parties did arrive at a settlement because no matter what the problem is only two people can arrive at the settlement and those two people represent management on the one hand, and the workers on the other. Until those two people decide to reach a decision, there will not be a decision. Unless the workers in this case decide that that can be accomplished with the arbitrator acting in the role of a trustee, there really is no reason for them to go back to work and they are not likely to do so. We will not, therefore, be much closer to reaching a solution than we have been in the past.

I do not believe it is fair to Members of Parliament and to the country for us to pass this legislation as emergency legislation. So far as labour relations are concerned, this is a very drastic type of legislation. The government has involved itself in this dispute and they will arrive at a settlement. I congratulate the minister for having introduced what is probably the mildest form of government intervention that he could find, and I sincerely hope that the arbitrator will be able to act on behalf of both parties in the role of a trustee. He will certainly have to have the patience and the ability of Solomon to arrive at a conclusion of a problem which involves technical changes entailing a smaller work force in the future. Therefore, his job will not be an easy one and a solution will not be found easily. I suggest that one of the weaknesses in passing legislation of this nature is that we are not able to call witnesses.

Mr. Alexander: You said you wanted us to deal with it in committee of the whole.

Mr. Peters: Of course I did, and I am sure that we cannot have it both ways, but let us not kid ourselves. I am not so stupid as to think that holding it in committee for three hours—and that is about all it would take—would have warranted the calling of 30 or 40 witnesses to ascertain the extent of the problem. I am sure that most hon. members were not prepared to carry this debate on for two or three weeks, which would have been necessary if we were to follow that procedure.

Mr. Yewchuk: We are prepared to stay.

Mr. Peters: Some of the Conservatives may be prepared to stay, others have already left, as have some members of other parties. I am not suggesting that we engage in that kind of exercise. The only point I am making is that I am not sure there is an emergency simply because I have been told that that is so. My information is that ships are sailing in and out of Montreal harbour.

Mr. Rock: No, passing it.

Mr. Valade: There are only three ships in the port now, out of 150 possibilities.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am getting considerable help and it seems that the committee of the whole now resembles a standing committee with witnesses before it. Of course, the witnesses are not reliable because obviously they have an interest in the subject, and we should really face the problem on that basis. But I did want to say that this is a very serious step that Parliament is taking. I hope that the results of the legislation will prove we were right in taking this step. I sincerely hope that the minister's wish is that in the future the appointment of a mediator will represent a totally new force in labour relations and that the interest of the general public can be served by the introduction of a mediator under the Labour Code at a very early stage of future negotiations. The minister said quite rightly that we should not be making the decision as to the final outcome of this conflict because the facts are so complicated that the mediator who had been appointed by the government was unable to make recommendations, and that therefore we should leave that area wide open. With that I agree, Mr. Chairman, but I do suggest that we are taking a very serious step on only hearsay information.

I would have been much happier with this bill if the minister had outlined not only the difficulty that developed in the labour dispute, which I can comprehend from reading the previous contract and looking at the changes made in the recent contract as well as the recommendations made by those who looked at the recent contract, but had also outlined in more detail the effect on the public interest. If this bill had been introduced in the normal course of a parliamentary session rather than in its dying days, we would never have given consideration to it without considerably more information. I sincerely hope that the judgment made by government members, when deciding to present this legislation, is justified. I sincerely hope that passage of the bill will go some way towards ending a problem that not only involves this union but will involve other unions, as was the case several years ago with the Freedman report on the reduction of railway crews and the retirement of people made supernumerary because of technical changes in industry.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the desired results will be achieved, and that parliament in future, before this kind of decision is made, will be given much more information. We are not here to negotiate contracts between management and unions. We are meeting in an emergency situation to solve a problem that has become detrimental to a large segment of the Canadian population. On that side of the problem, we have received very little information that is not hearsay. Investigations made by hon. members have not been sufficient to date, and therefore reliance on the government is necessary. I hope this bill carries with it a sense of responsibility on the part of the government, and that this action will be sufficient to eliminate the problem.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I had originally intended to enter this debate for a purpose different from that with which I am now entering it. This bill, despite what the hon. member for Timiskaming says, is a necessary one at this time. There is no doubt in my mind that it is necessary. The bill proposes to do two or three things. It requires the employees, the longshoremen, to go back to work, and it requires the employers to re-open their plants for work. It carries with it, through the operation of the Criminal Code, certain sanctions. An officer of a union who does not abide by the provisions of this bill can be fined or put in prison.

Mr. Peters: Only imprisoned.

Mr. Murphy: No, not only imprisoned. Under the provisions of the Criminal Code any crime that carries with it a penalty of five years or less may have the penalty changed by the trial judge to either imprisonment or fine, or both. This clause applies to officers of the union, members of the union, employers—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the remarks now being made by the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie, but I am becoming a little confused. I notice that we are on clause 2 of the bill, the definition clause. I am sure there are other clauses in the bill on which one could ramble and get involved in generalities. Even though not wishing to cut off the hon. member's very brilliant speech, I wonder if he is in order in making it on this clause. If we are going to carry on this way, we will be here for a considerable length of time.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Hamilton West has a valid point. We are now on clause 2 of the bill, a definition clause. The Chair gave the hon. member for Timiskaming quite a degree of latitude. I would be prepared, on the first round of speakers, to give some latitude, but I would suggest that other speeches, when we move from clause 2—

Mr. Brewin: How can you treat one group differently from another?

The Chairman: —should be relevant to the clauses.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I do not understand by what principle the Chairman rules that one group of speakers be given a certain latitude and others not be given the same latitude. I suggest that you apply the same rule to all who seek to participate in this debate.

The Chairman: I am probably repeating myself, but what I intended to say to members of the committee was that with reference to clause 2 the concept of the Chair is that we would have, on the first round at least, relatively wide debate. The hon. member for Hamilton West raised a point of order as to whether or not the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie was in order. I think the hon. member is in order, as I ruled. I think the hon. member for Timiskaming ranged a bit wide, but I did not call him to order. With respect, my ruling is that I would like to have the first round on clause 2 at least relatively wide, with the hope that hon. members would then confine their remarks as closely as they could to the clauses before the committee.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Hamilton West had been a little more patient, he would have learned in short order that I was about to make my remarks relevant to clause 2. It is as a result of the definitions in clause 2 that certain individuals become liable to the criminal sanctions provided in the Criminal Code. Employer, as defined in clause 2, "means the Maritime Employers Association and any member of that association that was, on May 16, 1972, bound by a collective agreement to which this act applies." As a result, when clause 3 of the bill makes it an offence for the employer to fail to resume longshoring and related operations in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City, not only individual employers but the employers association can be charged in a court of law under the Criminal Code.

The same provision applies to clause 6(a) which says "no employer shall declare or cause a lock-out." An employer who causes a lock-out can be prosecuted, and so can the Employers Association. I ask hon. members to look at the bill and see what is on the other side of the coin. If a union member refuses to go to work that union member can be prosecuted in the same way as the employer or the employers association. If a union officer does not abide by the terms and regulations of this bill, that officer can be prosecuted in the same way as the employer or the employers association. But, Mr. Chairman, nowhere in that bill does it say that a union, as an association, can be charged or made responsible in the same way that the employers association can be made responsible.

• (1530)

An hon. Member: Right!

Mr. Lewis: Where do you get that? Read the definition.

Mr. Murphy: I see the hon. member for Hamilton West nodding his head, realizing that I was on point.

Mr. Alexander: I did not say you were on point; I appreciate your argument.

Mr. Murphy: The definition of union is very simple. According to clause 2(1)(b):

"union" means the International Longshoremen's Association and any affiliated locals thereof representing persons ordinarily employed—

Now, I ask the hon. member for York South to read the other sections of the bill. In no place does it say that the union is responsible. It says that every person who is ordinarily employed in longshoring must go back to work when so required, and so on, but it does not say that every person who is ordinarily employed in longshoring means the union. If the bill carried the provision that every person who is ordinarily employed in longshoring or related operation at any of the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec and who is bound by the collective agreement and so on, means the union as defined in clause 2, then I would agree wholeheartedly with the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: There is a legal reason for it.

Mr. Murphy: I suspect the legal reason is that this government does not want to move toward—

Mr. Lewis: A union is not a juridical person.

Mr. Murphy: Neither is an employers' association a juridical person.

Mr. Lewis: This may be but it may be incorporated; it probably is.

Mr. Murphy: Answering the interjections, Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member for York South will have an opportunity to speak in this particular field again in this debate.

Mr. Lewis: It makes it more interesting.

Mr. Murphy: I would say that if this Parliament sees fit to include in this bill a provision making the union as such liable to the same penalties as its members, then this Parliament can do that, whether or not any union is or is not recognized as a legal entity. For the purpose of this bill, it is within the power of this Parliament to make a union responsible.

I make these suggestions because I would not like to see this Parliament fall into the trap—and the hon. member for York South mentioned traps yesterday—of making only members of unions and officers of unions responsible under the law. If that is done, then when a union member or officer is fined for having broken the law and does not pay the fine but goes to jail, he becomes a martyr as a result of breaking the law. In this case, that would involve 3,600 or 3,700 people. The jails are not large enough to handle them and the government would be made to look like an ass.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: If the government is given the power to hit the pocketbooks of the union in the same way that it hits the pocketbooks of an employers' association, then the likelihood of long strikes, and particularly in this case the continuation of the problem, is very remote. Some will say that in this particular case my comments have no real meaning because this particular group of unions does not have any money anyway. But there are clauses in this bill, Mr. Chairman, which provide that the act remains in effect for three years, the length of the agreement that was signed. There is nothing to say that there will not be trouble three years from now, and at that time the union bankroll might be a little larger than it is now, as would be the case with the employers' association bankroll which I would think is also being depleted as a result of the work stoppages.

Some hon. Members: Poor fellows!

Mr. Murphy: I am not saying, "poor fellows"; I am not carrying any cudgel in this debate. I am simply pointing out that what is good for the goose is good for the gander. If you are going to get at the pocketbooks of the companies or associations on the one hand, you should also make similar provisions in the bill to get at the pocketbooks of the union as an association of workers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: The bill does not provide that now. I am not going to propose any amendments.

Mr. Alexander: Why not?

Mr. Murphy: I will leave it to the government to decide whether my representations are worth considering.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I certainly appreciate the arguments the hon. member brought before the House.

Mr. Murphy: You might have mentioned it yesterday.

Mr. Alexander: I do not want to be repetitious but I think they call for a question. I know what the answer probably will be from the minister, but I think in view of the argument that was presented perhaps the minister should tell the House why there seems to be only one cudgel in this bill and the union, as such, has been ignored. I wonder whether there is an answer to that question.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I want to make—

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, I saw the minister rising and I believe he had an answer for me.

The Chairman: Order, please. I saw the hon. member for Greenwood in his place and I recognized him. At that point, the hon. minister was also rising. I think the committee would feel that we should hear the hon. minister, and then I would then recognize the hon. member for Greenwood.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, the object of the sanctions in the bill is to make it as effective as possible. In this instance, in my judgment the most effective sanction with respect to the longshore unions is to proceed through their officials. In this specific instance it has been the wilful acts of officers of this union that have led to the situation in which we now find ourselves.

I address myself to another aspect of the question raised by the hon. member to point out that under the present laws, under the Canada Labour Code, a union as such can be proceeded against for any violation of a labour agreement or the Canada Labour Code. For those purposes there is no question that a union is a corporate person, is a person under the law. We know that in civil proceedings a union can be proceeded against in the courts by way of injunction and by way of contempt proceedings. Yesterday a judgment was rendered which levied fines for contempt of a court order, not only on the union but on individual officers. Therefore, part of the answer to the question is that under the Canada Labour Code, or under civil proceedings, the union may be proceeded against as such.

What we are discussing here, and what we have in front of us is a specific bill, an emergency bill, in which penalties are not specifically spelled out; the penalties are those which flow through the Criminal Code of Canada. In my judgment this would be most effective in bringing about the results we want. The results we want are surely not extremely punitive ones, but to get the men back to work and to get the ports operating. To do that, in my judgment, and I hope that members of the House will support me in this, the most effective way of proceeding is through the officers of the union, as the bill provides.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, will the minister permit a question. It is really a double-barrelled question. First, is it not true that, as this bill does not provide that certain individuals or groups of individuals will be subject to penalties under the Criminal Code, the Code itself does not provide for penalties? Second, if what the minister has told us is really the purpose of the bill, namely, that it is not intended to be punitive so far as the unions are concerned, and that is fine, is there any objection to removing the words "Maritime Employers Association" from the clause, so that it will be the members of the association, along with members of the union, who will be subject to the penalties which are suggested?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that "Maritime Employers Association" is included in the definition of employer in order to obviate the necessity of listing the 50 or more shipping companies, stevedoring companies and shipowners, who belong to and are members of that association, the total composition of which is not available to us. Let me point out that the bill obliges the Maritime Employers Association and the companies to do two things, to resume port operations and to not engage in lockouts.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I understand we are discussing clause 2 of the bill. Clause 2 defines "strike" in part as:

—a cessation of work or a refusal to work or to continue to work by employees,—

There are a few other words which I do not need to mention. By reason of this definition, the effect of this bill will be to limit the right of a person to strike, to cease working, to refuse to work or to refuse to continue to work. I support this clause with extreme reluctance. I was happy to note that the minister also expressed extreme reluctance over it. I believe, and my associations in the past with the trade union movement may be partly responsible for my views, that the right to strike is absolutely essential if we are to maintain an industrial democracy. I think that there should be an order directing people back to work only in cases of clear, national emergency.

I differ with my colleague for Timiskaming here. There is no doubt that this strike lasting eight weeks in those important ports does constitute a national emergency and this legislation is therefore justified, but only, in my view, because there is such a national emergency. When three of our main ports to a large extent have been closed down, when the entire wheat industry which maintains the Prairies and which is an important factor in the economic well being of our country is threatened because farmers are not able to distribute their produce as a result of this strike, I say the time has come to act, although I accept this action with great reluctance. I hope this bill will receive the unanimous support of this House, because I believe it represents the will of the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupras: Mr. Chairman, from the remarks of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) it is certain that no hon. member would oppose the passing of this legislation. Everyone was expecting a settlement to come about well before today. It was never thought that there would be such a long delay before the longshoremen got back to work. The agreement had been signed and accepted in March of this year. All hon. members, both of our party and of the opposition, had hoped that the longshoremen would decide to go back to work on their own accord.

I want to put my support on the record for the legislation that will be passed today, hopefully. It was also hoped that the introduction of such legislation would not be necessary.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister another question. I noticed that when he was asked about penalties and sanctions previously, he related his answer to the Criminal Code. At least, he mentioned the Code. As I understand it, the Criminal Code, in cases like this, comes into effect only when no other law applies. I think this is covered either by section 115 or section 107.

An hon. Member: Section 115.

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister tell me whether, in this situation, the Criminal Code or the present labour legislation would take precedence? Which legislation would take precedence? Does this come under section 147? I understand that Section 115 of the Code applies only if no other law applies. Perhaps I am somewhat confused. I know the minister mentioned the criminal law in the first instance. The penalties may be double-barrelled, coming under the present labour legislation and under the Criminal Code. I want to know which law takes precedence.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I am advised that this being a special act of Parliament, introduced for a specific purpose, it takes precedence over the Canada Labour Code and, therefore, it is the provisions of the Criminal Code that would apply with respect to this particular bill rather than the provisions of the Canada Labour Code.

Mr. Lewis: Briefly put, this is not an amendment to the Canada labour legislation. This is a separate act.

Mr. O'Connell: That is right.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Persons bound by collective agreement.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, may I ask if the collective agreement to which this act is to apply, and especially section 1.09 of the agreement between the employers' association and the longshoremen's association, covers the majority of people affected by the strike in the Port of Montreal particularly. Will other unions that are not affiliated with the ILA and are not direct locals of the ILA be affected in any way by the measure we are considering this afternoon. In short, will any other unions be affected?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, perhaps we could stand this clause until I have had an opportunity to look into all its implications. Other locals, of course, work on the Montreal docks. I do not know if the question of job security, about which the hon. member, I think, is asking, is to be modified by the action we are taking. My impression is that the answer is no, but we had better be sure. Perhaps we could stand this clause.

Mr. Forrestall: May I ask another question, Mr. Chairman. Will this act in any way change or alter the rights of other organized unions which might come under the umbrella of this act? Will it affect their rights to withhold services, if, for any reason, they deem it necessary to withhold them?

Mr. O'Connell: To answer the hon. member's second question, Mr. Chairman, this act would apply only to the locals named in the three ports.

Mr. Lewis: In other words, the employees covered by the collective agreement.

Mr. O'Connell: Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: May I follow this matter through to its conclusion. I am asking about a hypothetical situation now, as this, perhaps, is the best time to do it. If another organized union could, by withdrawing services, effectively shut down the Port of Montreal, what would happen to it under this legislation? Has the minister considered the effect of such action on the ILA and the two principal locals that are involved?

• (1550)

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, that is indeed a hypothetical situation. In this bill we are only dealing with the present situation and the three unions that are involved in the longshoremen's union. If a new situation emerged, it would be a new situation which I do not think we can anticipate in this particular bill.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, there is one point in clause 4 which I am sorry I did not raise before clause 4 passed. Perhaps with the indulgence of the committee, I might be allowed to raise it now.

The Chairman: If the hon. member would like to revert to clause 4, I am sure the members of the committee would agree. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On Clause 4—Notice that strike declaration, etc., is invalid.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, the question I want to ask the minister is simply this. There is a duty laid upon persons who were officers of the union on May 16, 1972, even though they might not be officers now, to do certain things. I do not know whether there is any person actually affected by the wording of this proposed clause, but if there is and he no longer holds an office, he is on the outside. He is required to send out notices to members without the benefit of a secretary, stationery or even having any position of authority. It strikes me that this wording is a little unusual. I do not know whether I am raising an academic question, but when I read the bill yesterday, I made up my mind to ask the minister or his officials for some kind of interpretation of the effect of this on a person who was an officer, but may not be an officer now and is told to do something he may be very powerless to do.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, the purpose is to maintain the obligation on a union officer whether or not he continues to be one, that is a resignation will not lift from him the obligation or penalties for noncompliance with this provision after the coming into force of the act.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, that point did strike me as the reason for it being there, namely that people will not be allowed to duck their responsibilities by resignation. I do not know enough of the facts to know whether this happened or not, but there may be people who have had positions and their union has dealt with them, eased them or pushed them out of office in some way. I can see the point in trying to grab those who might otherwise resign. With regard to the other type of person, I am in a quandary as to whether this is a good measure to have on our statute books to deal with them.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same point raised by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants. I wonder if the minister will agree that clause 4(1) would read better and take care of the situation if after the words "Each person who was an officer of a union", we inserted something along the line of "a person who becomes an officer of the union while this act is in force". An officer may die or be voted out of office and a new officer will take his place. He was an officer when this act came into force.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, in my reading of clause 4, that eventuality of a future officer would be covered by "who is an officer at the time"—well, that might not cover it.

The Chairman: By unanimous consent, clause 4 was re-opened. Therefore, the Chair must again ask, does clause 4 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would once again review the question of clause 4. Like many other members, I am concerned about this. I would like to know what procedure the minister would envisage in the event of noncompliance. Will he also indicate whether he has had discussions with the attorney general of the province of Quebec and, if so, does he have the assurance of the attorney general that action will be taken under the Criminal Code if that should prove to be necessary?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, my legal advice is that the Attorney General for Canada can initiate prosecutions, if desirable to do so, under this act. I was also asked whether I had discussions with the attorney general of the province of Quebec. The answer is no.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, for the benefit of those of us who are not trained in law, would the minister be good enough to indicate under what statute the Attorney General of Canada would intervene?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I am unable to identify the statute that would provide that right. We have been assured by the Department of Justice that the Attorney General would have that power to so initiate.

Mr. Hellyer: That is all very well, Mr. Chairman, but the Department of Justice has been known to be wrong on some previous occasions. In this country, under the British North America Act, the administration of justice falls within the jurisdiction of the provinces. It is up to the provincial attorneys general to institute proceedings under the Criminal Code. I would like a little better assurance than I have received from the minister that in fact this bill is anything more than a meaningless piece of paper.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same point. May I ask the minister whether he was advised that if the Parliament of Canada creates an offence, the representative of the government of Canada, namely the Attorney General, has the right to initiate proceedings in respect of such an offence.

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, Mr. Chairman. Our advice from the Department of Justice is that the Attorney General of Canada has the power to initiate proceedings for any offence committed under this act. I cannot go any further than that.

Mr. Hellyer: Surely, Mr. Chairman, if the Department of Justice gave that advice, having read their opinions on two or three previous occasions, they would have given some background information as to how this would be done. Does the minister not have that available to share with the committee so that we can have the same assurance that he has?

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Hellyer: Not just yet, Mr. Chairman. I think the minister is reaching for some information. We should give him a little time to get it from his files.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I cannot go any further than that. I have already informed the committee as fully as I can that the advice given to the legal officers of the Department of Labour by the Department of Justice is that the authority does reside in the Attorney General to initiate proceedings for offences under this act. We were not advised of the source of that particular authority.

• (1600)

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Persons bound by collective agreement.

Mr. Forrestall: I thought we were going to stand this clause for a little while.

Mr. O'Connell: Oh, yes.

The Chairman: Shall clause five stand?

Some hon. Members: Stand.

Clause 5 stands.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Postponement of job security plan.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, in my remarks on second reading yesterday, I drew attention to what I believe to be a shortcoming in this clause. I was hoping the minister might come forward with an amendment which would overcome what I believe would be a serious difficulty.

I have not asked any questions, nor, as I recall it, have any of my hon. friends, about sanctions and the like because I think it is obvious that if the law which Parliament is seeking to establish by this bill is disregarded and we are placed in the position of having to think of sanctions, the exercise we are now undertaking will have failed. I join the minister in hoping that everyone concerned will obey this law as being the will not only of parliament but of the people of Canada. From my conversations by telephone with some people in Montreal I have great ground for hope that the law will be obeyed, at least on the labour side, and I have no reason to doubt that it will be obeyed on the management side. Obviously, when one is dealing with a large number of people—some 3,000 individual members—it is impossible to say how each one of them will act. But I am not so much concerned about sanctions, whether they are included in this bill or whether those contained in the Criminal Code will apply. I take this position because I hope, as I am sure does everyone in this House, that sanctions will not be required. As a matter of fact, the sanctions in the Criminal Code are probably more severe than any which the minister would probably have placed in this bill had he thought it necessary to move along those lines.

Unlike the hon. member for Trinity I am one Member of Parliament who appreciates deeply the approach which the minister and the government have taken. I do not hesitate to express my appreciation when I believe it to be deserved. I appreciate deeply the approach which the minister and the government have taken in this case, seeking to end this dispute and to get the industry rolling again rather than to produce a punitive piece of legislation.

It is within this framework that I believe the minister has proposed, in 7(2)(b), to give the arbitrator what appear to me to be powers wider than are appropriate in the circumstances. I understand the point which is worrying the minister and everyone concerned. I know a little—not very much—about the workings of these ports. I know, for example, that they are busy in May and June, relatively slow in July and August and the early part of September, and become busy again in September, October and November. What has happened is that the failure to deal with any tonnage during what would normally have been the busy months of the year, May and June, has meant that no funds, or only a very small fund, is now available from which to discharge the guarantee of 40 hours per week and 37 weeks work per year for which, as I understand it, the job security plan under the collective agreement provides. I can well understand that it should be necessary to allow for a period of time, whatever that period may be, during which funds might be collected and placed in the kitty, before the job security plan becomes effective. For this reason I have no hesitation about accepting section 7(2)(a) which gives the arbitrator the right not only to fix the date but to make those modifications which are necessary in reference to the date of the application of the job security plan.

However, it seems to me, and I should like to hear the minister on this point, that it is a serious error to give the arbitrator authority, as is done in 7(2)(b), to make changes in the entire plan even beyond the year 1972. I am not thinking about the unions, now, because the unions are not affected. It is the pocketbooks of the union members that are affected and this provision opens the door to serious and valid objection on the part of union members. I must say, frankly, that if I were a longshoreman and a member of one of these unions I would be very much upset by the proposition advanced in this clause, even if I were the most reasonable longshoreman—and obviously, Mr. Chairman, if I were one I would be reasonable. That goes without question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Don't flatter yourself.

Mr. Lewis: I would accept the proposal that the arbitrator be given the right to set a date in 1972 when the plan was to apply, but I would feel that my rights were really in danger if the arbitrator were also given the right to modify the plan, as is done in the paragraph to which I have referred. The paragraph reads:

> making such modifications to those plans and those provisions as in his opinion are required to give effect thereto on and after the date fixed by him.

The minister said yesterday, I gather, that these words were in some way confining. Perhaps I misunderstood him. I do not find them confining at all. The words are confined to the job security plan, but there is no limit placed on the modifications the arbitrator is empowered to make. There is apparently no limit on his authority to make changes in the plan. I ask the minister to give serious attention to this submission. I am prepared, if necessary, to move an amendment, but our proceedings have gone fairly fast this afternoon and I believe we have a few minutes in which to exchange views. I take the hon. gentleman back to his own statement, one which I not only accept but support, that he is not interested in anything punitive but only in getting these ports rolling.

I say that this paragraph contains an unjustifiable provision aimed not at the unions or something abstract, but at the livelihood of the longshoremen in the two remaining years of this agreement, 1973 and 1974. That kind of provision is provocative. I know the minister did not intend that, do not misunderstand me. I have the greatest respect for the very honourable way in which he has approached this problem, even though I had criticisms about the timing of his intervention. I know he does not intend to provoke them, but I tell him not only from logic but, if I may say so, from some conversations I have had that this clause is provocative and threatening to the longshoremen. I say it is not necessary.

As I said yesterday, the succeeding clause, Clause 8, gives the minister the authority to appoint an arbitrator to deal with any dispute that may arise. I am paraphrasing his statement. If it becomes necessary in January, February or March of 1973, because things develop in such a way the employer has not got enough funds to live up to the agreement and the unions say that he must, the minister would then have the opportunity to say to the unions and the company they must take this matter to arbitration. If they refuse to do so, then he would be able to do it.

I appreciate that I may be stretching the language a little because this arbitration clause may relate only to interpretation of the collective agreement. I am not at all sure the minister cannot bring things within that ambit if the occasion arises. In any case, I am not at all certain what I am saying about Clause 8 is entirely valid, and I freely admit that. I suggest to the minister that the width of the powers given to the arbitrator in Clause 7 in respect of modifying the plan after 1972 is far too great, and will be provocative in the eyes of the persons to whom the minister is appealing. I join him in that appeal that they return to work, but I would very much appreciate, before attempting any amendment, to hear what the minister has to say about the point I have raised.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies to the hon. member for York South I should like to add a word or two to what the hon. member has said. I think this legislation should be confined to as little interference with the normal collective bargaining process as possible. I understand that the matter of the job security plan, so far as it affects the years 1973 and 1974, was not in dispute during this whole period. It was assumed that the agreement, as it related to those years, was to be carried out and no one was raising that issue, yet this clause is broad enough in its terminology to unsettle that whole situation.

I just want to say to the minister that I hope he can yield on this point because I think it is very important, and would be consistent with the principles he announced, that this clause should be limited. It could be limited by saying that this is subject to the fact that the provisions of the agreement in regard to job security for 1973 and 1974 are not to be affected by this legislation.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I thank the minister for his courtesy. I support what the hon. member for York South has said for these reasons. It is generally agreed we are attempting what is a rather difficult thing, that is to bring the power and influence of Parliament to bear on an extremely difficult situation. I do not think we should ask those parties involved to modify the agreement they have reached any more than is absolutely necessary. I say that because of what is involved for us in the prairie part of Canada. Things have gone about as far as they can without completely stopping the movement of grain through our St. Lawrence ports.

I directed questions in the House on June 7, June 15, June 21 and June 29 to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board, and in one case to the Minister of Labour. I asked whether we were able to continue to move grain and the answer was that we were, in part. A news story of June 22 appeared under the heading "Small Ports Busy Shipping Grain". The article stated that Port Cartier, Baie Comeau and perhaps one or two other small ports with reserve facilities were continuing to move grain through the St. Lawrence and the lower part of the Seaway.

We know that lakers can come down to the terminals and, until such time as they are filled, the terminals can take the grain from the lakers. We have now reached the point where those facilities are being rapidly filled. Mr. Hurcomb, Manager of the Dominion Marine Association, has said publicly that this tieup is causing delays of up to six days in the movement of grain. This is the point we have now reached.

I made several phone calls the other day which led me to the almost inescapable conclusion that if this tieup continues we will see an end to the movement of grain through that route. I hope the minister will accede to this suggestion and limit the scope of arbitration to that area which is absolutely essential, with the hope that the parties to the dispute will obey the directions of this House and put this very important trade channel back into operation.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I first want to say that I am in full accord, as the government is, with the desire to circumscribe the modifying powers of the arbitrator as they relate to the job security plan which is part of the collective agreement. This is an unusual power to confer upon an arbitrator, that is the power to modify the terms of a collective agreement. As I said yesterday, and as all of us realize, the normal functions of an arbitrator, within the framework of a collective agreement, is to interpret not to modify.

We are in an unusual circumstance where a very special job security plan is incorporated in an arrangement under the collective agreement, and the job security plan stands as an obstacle to the return to work. So, we need a mechanism for adjusting the job security plan within a circumscribed framework. We do not wish the arbitrator's authority to go one inch beyond that which is required. I believe we are all in accord on this. I was pleased to hear the representations along this line. In the first instance, the power to modify is confined to the job security plan and such related matters as are inextricably bound up with it. That is the first circumscription.

• (1620)

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. O'Connell: Yes.

Mr. McCleave: Since the minister is striving for the same formula as everybody else, why not insert in (b) the words "making such incidental modifications" so that he would be tied down. Two lines down, he is given an option according to opinion. Accordingly this option is a circumscription, but I think if the word "incidental" were inserted it would fasten it down.

Mr. O'Connell: I am not sure whether the hon. member means the word "incidental" to refer to minor or incidental modifications in the job security plan. If it is the latter, I think it is abundantly clear that such modifications in fact are only those which relate to the job security plan. I think that is abundantly clear.

Mr. Lewis: I have no doubt about that.

Mr. O'Connell: I do not see any doubt arising. The other point I should like to come to is that the authority of the arbitrator is to make a judgment at some point in time. Let us say sometime in the future or in the fall, for the sake of argument, he will make that judgment. At that time, he will fix a date. At that time also, he will be considering the modifications which in his judgment are required, and only those modifications as are required to give effect to the job security plan in the altered circumstances that the work stoppage has brought about. I believe the hon. member for York South would agree with me that the arbitrator has that single opportunity. It is not a recurring opportunity to make awards with regard to the job security plan down through 1972, 1973 and 1974.

The arbitrator has an obligation under this legislation to consider all the facts and make his award at a given point in time when he feels he is in possession of sufficient facts to know how the job security plan, particularly the funding operation, is working in view of the operations of the port. At that point, he will make his judgment in respect of any modification he deems necessary. I do not know whether there is any doubt in the mind of anyone concerning whether that is his point in time.

Again on the third point, it seems to me inappropriate to state now in this bill that when the arbitrator comes to making those modifications, being in possession of facts which we are not in possession of now, and having behind him some experience concerning the operations as they resume, he should be confined to December 31, 1972 in respect of those modifications. It might be his opinion that this delay ought to continue until March, April or the end of the first year of the agreement, or something else. He might find in his judgment, looking at the facts, that the putting of a date in the bill would be an obstacle to his making the job security provisions the viable instrument they are intended to be under the collective agreement. That is the reason we have not thought it appropriate to specify a date such as the end of this year.

I think I would be on good ground in going on to say—and I do not want to presume upon the role of the arbitrator—that in all likelihood any modification he is likely to deem necessary should, in fact, not be prolonged beyond the end of the year. The funding arrangements, as I understand them, are on an annual basis, but be that as it may, he is the one in possession of the facts and it is his judgment. I would not want these latter remarks I have just concluded to enter into his judgment when the time comes. I do say that as we stand here today expecting the ports to resume their operations, knowing that a busy season is still in front of the ports of Montreal, Quebec and Trois-Rivières, it would be our hope that modifications would be as limited as they can be in time. I think that is what the hon. member for York South is really getting at. The duration of the modifications should be as limited as feasible.

I think in this matter we are entitled to have some confidence in the judicious decisions of the arbitrator as named in the agreement. He has a thorough understanding of the operations of the port, a thorough understanding of the collective agreements and a thorough understanding of the intentions of the parties, having been their permanent arbitrator for a number of years. He has also been the chairman of the conciliation board which assisted in the production of this particular agreement. He knows the history of the port and is familiar with its operations. In addition, he knows the parties concerned. In view of all this, I think we can have confidence in the judgment he would render and in his ability to make a judicious decision.

There is one further point in respect of the possible bearing on clause 7 of clause 8. The hon. member for York South raised the possibility that the minister, if neither of the two parties took action, might under clause 8 put into operation a regulation which would involve the possibility of modifying the job security plan at some future time after the arbitrator had made the ruling which we expect him to make under this legislation. I cannot read into clause 8 any such possibility. I doubt that the words can be stretched to mean that. That clause is there to cope with the normal exercise of an arbitrator's role under the collective agreement as it continues down to its termination three years hence—that is to say, the interpretation of matters which arise, and the settlement in a final way of disagreements which arise over alleged violations, and so on. It would not, in my view, extend the arbitrator's power to modify the agreement in any way but only to continue to interpret it. The experience we have had up until now is that at one stage neither party was willing to initiate this arbitration procedure. In light of that experience, this clause would give the minister the extra leverage of initiating a normal type of arbitration proceeding if once again neither party appeared willing to so initiate. I would not expect that circumstance to arise, but it did seem wise to incorporate clause 8 in the event that it might arise.

[Mr. O'Connell.]

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to follow up one matter. I know that I was criticized, and perhaps taken to task yesterday, regarding the date that had been set by the deputy minister in this matter, namely October 16, and I do not intend to pursue that. However, I notice that the minister continues to refer to the expertise of the arbitrator who would know what the circumstances are and therefore would set the proper date. I am wondering what is the background of the October 16 date because, as I understand it, tonnage is the basis upon which this fund is collected in trust. I wonder how long, in the minister's estimation, the port will be in a position to maintain a healthy fund. Perhaps I am wrong in my assessment but, as I understand it, the port of Montreal is now practically inactive. If the contributions to this fund are going to be based on tonnage, and not much tonnage is moving in or out—the tonnage is moving to Saint John, Halifax or even Hamilton—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And New York and Boston.

Mr. Alexander: —I wonder how long he thinks it would take before the ports are operating to such an extent that the job security provision under clause 15 could come into effect. If he has any information in this regard, I would certainly appreciate it.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, it is quite impossible for me as the Minister of Labour, and I would say for any of us in the House, to anticipate a date on which that fortunate event would come about. That is why we have to put a person in a position to hear the representations from the parties, who can take a period of time to look into these questions which have become highly technical questions. I could not make that estimate.

What may be in the mind of the hon. member for Hamilton West is the date of October 15 which was suggested by the mediators when they were attempting to resolve the dispute without the kind of action through which we are now going. The date of October 15 has no status beyond the fact that it was suggested after four days of discussion, at which time it seemed reasonable to the mediators to propose to the parties that they might find October 15 a reasonable date on which to resume the job security plan. One of the parties accepted it as a contribution to getting the port open, while no doubt running certain risks in so doing. The three locals accepted it or rejected it in varying degrees, and in each case with a condition. However, October 15 in the case of Montreal and September 17 in the case of the other two ports, were the best estimates of the mediators, not as a judicious date but as one on which they might get agreement. That is all the status it has and it should not loom in our minds as having any more status than, "a best effort basis" to get it going without an arbitrator's ruling. When the arbitrator comes to make his ruling, he will look at all the facts which are available at that time. It may be any date. We hope it is early for everyone's sake, but that is a judgment that only he can render.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I wish with all my heart that I could accept the minister's position, but I cannot. I think he has been in this dispute long enough to learn about longshoring perhaps more than I know, but I know enough about it to know that for many years this particular occupation was so uncertain, the job security was so lacking, that for many decades it attracted the transient type of worker who was available on the docks for a month and then disappeared. Someone else might be available for a week or for a season, and then disappear.

Not so many years ago the turnover of workers in the longshoring occupation was so high that every stevedoring company I met during some years of association with this industry would even then—and that was in the middle and late 1950's—complain about the fact that they could not have a secure and steady work force that knew what was happening, that was committed to the job and had loyalty to the work and to the employer. For all the years that I have known the situation, longshoremen have been fighting like hell—if you will permit me to speak plain English—to obtain some kind of job security in their work. As many of them said to me when I was associated with them in Hamilton and Toronto, they wanted job security so that those of them who wanted to do so could make the occupation of stevedoring a lifelong occupation, which they could not do if they could not be sure of having more than so many weeks of work a year. At that time the employer had the right to say whom he would or would not call, and how many days or weeks of work there were during which a longshoreman would be employed.

So, they have fought very hard for years, and this particular problem in Montreal is not the first one that has arisen out of job security arguments. Finally, they arrived at a collective agreement in April of this year which contains a job security program. What the minister is proposing in this legislation is that the whole of the job security program can be fiddled with by the arbitrator, every aspect of it, and the job security program is at the basis of the whole problem. The minister says—I am sure with utmost honesty—that this clause confines the arbitrator's powers solely to the area of the job security plan. Of course it does, but it happens to be at the heart of the matter. Giving someone an opportunity to pierce your heart, and limiting him to doing only that, will not help the minister's life. A pierced heart is enough to do all the damage that he could possibly tolerate, and the job security program is at the heart of this collective agreement, at the heart of the relationship between the longshoremen and their employers in these ports, as it is in other ports. Therefore, what the minister is suggesting and insisting upon is that the arbitrator have the authority to change any aspect of the plan. There is nothing in the clause which prevents him from saying that instead of a guaranteed 40 hours a week it should be 35 hours a week. Instead of guaranteeing 37 weeks, he could guarantee only 30. He could do that with the powers given to him in this clause.

The minister says he has confidence the arbitrator will do the right thing. I am not throwing any doubt on that confidence. I do not know who the arbitrator will be. Unfortunately I suspect, although I hope I am wrong, that the fact this blessed hassle has gone on, and that Judge Gold has already been used and brought down an award that the unions have rejected, will mean the creation of a difficult situation. I understand that Judge Gold, whom I do not know, whom I have never had the pleasure of meeting or appearing before, is a really great chap who knows this area, knows the port and stevedoring operations, has a great deal of integrity, and a real concern for the situation, just as we have in this chamber. But that will not solve the problem. When you say to a worker or any ordinary person, "You can rely on this man," that does not satisfy him. You could not persuade me, if I were a longshoreman, that I need not worry about the fact that the arbitrator will have all the power necessary to break the basis of my job security. Even if you say to me, "Don't worry, he is a good guy; he is only going to amputate one of your legs not both your legs," I will still worry.

Yet this is the kind of thing the minister is placing before employees whom he is asking to go back to work. He is saying that the very basis of the collective agreement, the very basis of their livelihood, about which they thought they had some guarantee in the collective agreement, is now open to an arbitrator to destroy or to reduce to any extent he likes. I think the minister is unwise in doing that. I have the fullest confidence in his good intentions, but I do not have to remind him of a rather banal road that is paved with good intentions.

Let me make another suggestion to the minister. I am really doing my darndest to persuade him to do this, not only to protect the livelihood of the stevedores which I make no apology for trying to do, but also to make sure that the bill will have the best possible chance of doing the job he wants done. I hope he will take a few more minutes to think about limiting the arbitrator's power to modify just until the end of 1972, and give himself, as Minister of Labour, authority to modify the situation further if either side, management or union, ask him to do so because of complaints they have, or fears they have that the plan will not work. If he would consider some such approach, the workers could go back to work in the knowledge that their job security plan will not be interfered with beyond 1972, at least so far as the arbitrator is concerned. If the minister is worried about what might happen next year if there is not enough money in the fund, and I notice that according to the agreement a certain amount, $2½ million, has to be there for 1973-74, he should give himself the power, on the application of either the employers or the union, to appoint an arbitrator to modify the plan further for 1973 if that becomes necessary.

I am not interested in taking credit for moving an amendment, but I suggest common sense should caution the minister to move year by year. The minister says that an arbitrator sitting in September or October will have the facts before him. He won't, Mr. Chairman. He will not know what the shipping situation will be next spring. From long experience, I assure the minister that the Maritime Employers Association will come before the arbitrator with graphs, facts and figures to show that next year is not going to be good year. They will attempt to show that the agreement they arrived at last April is too rich for their blood, and they will present facts and figures to project what will happen next year. It is that kind of argument which the union and the employees will resent.

The minister would be better off to retain this power to appoint an arbitrator again in 1973 if the association, or a member of it tells him, "I cannot carry out my job security arrangements; will you please appoint someone under the authority you have, so that I can present my case to him." It should not take the minister's advisers more than 15 minutes to draft such an amendment. I plead with him that it is unjust to go to the workers in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City and tell them, "Go back to work; I have given an arbitrator total authority to fiddle with the entire job security plan that you adopted last April." There is great danger in that approach.

Mr. O'Connell: Once again I appreciate the line of argument advanced by the hon. member for York South. I accept the fact that he has been concerned with the situation on the docks for a number of years. I am sure he would accept the fact, in return, that no one has been more concerned with constructive relations on those docks than the Department of Labour over the past several years, and during the term of office of my immediate predecessor very significant improvements in working conditions were brought about by his personal intervention.

Mr. Lewis: I fully agree.

Mr. O'Connell: Two officers of the department have been constantly available in a mediation process. Over the past two years they drew the two parties together to conclude this remarkable collective agreement, the heart of which is the job security plan, perhaps unmatched in any other port in the world. So, we have a united interest in doing the right thing at this particular point in time.

• (1650)

Now we come to the substance of the remarks. If I understand correctly, it has been suggested as an alternative that the Minister of Labour, through some additional provision in this bill, be granted the authority to appoint an arbitrator from time to time during the course of the collective agreement when one party or the other—the hon. member suggested possibly the employer—will come to him saying that they are unable to live up to the requirements of the job security plan because of financial embarrassment. I tried to consider that in the short time available to me, but it is apparent that in this case the pleading would be made in front of the minister on the financial status perhaps—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, no!

Mr. O'Connell: —or other circumstances of the employers, and he would have to judge as to the merits in the case.

Mr. Lewis: No, no!

Mr. O'Connell: If he felt that the party appealing was justified, then he would appoint an arbitrator, the intention being to modify a collective agreement. I would consider that a very serious step, and I would not want to be in the position of hearing pleadings from one party or the other with respect to possible modifications of the agreement. I think it would build into the future the kind of insecurity that would be quite contrary to our best interests and the best interests of those parties. I think it would lead to greater insecurity.

In my view, the object we want, and which I think we will obtain through the present provisions is to have a judgment made. If we think about the position in which the arbitrator is going to find himself at times, it will be obvious that he will hear evidence which is a little overstated here and there. He will have to look at the facts and the past record, and consider that we will be going to a computer dispatch system in periods of greater productivity. He will have all the facts in front of him, but he will be unable to see down to 1974, yet he is going to make a judgment with the best perspective that he has. As I say, I do not want to get into the most delicate area of putting myself in the position of an arbitrator at this point, but I think it would be reasonable to assume that he would extend the time only so far as he felt was required to get the job security plan back on the rails and would introduce modifications only to the extent required. That is explicitly set out in the act. The circumstances are undoubtedly not such that this whole plan could be completely wiped out or drastic changes made in it. As I would read the situation, he is going to make a judgment that extends to the most limited time horizon possible, and the modifications will be circumscribed to only those required to make a viable job security fund.

I am, therefore, unable to accept the argument of the hon. member for York South, persuasive as he always is. I think the merits of the situation lead me to ask the House to maintain the position that is set forth in clause 7 as it is presently constituted.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister, over the supper hour, would look at what I think might be an anomaly between the legislation and the collective agreement. My specific reference is to the job security section under clause 15.08 of the collective agreement which reads:

> Any disagreement which may arise from the use of the moneys mentioned in clause 15.06, will constitute a grievance liable to arbitration as per article 5 of the present collective agreement.

It seems to me that we might get into a situation of double arbitration under the agreement that is reached by the management and by the union. As everybody knows, the grievance procedure that they have decided upon uses a panel of four of whom one is to be chosen, and Mr. Gold is the one prefered. If they went on to choose somebody else as the arbitrator to carry out the purpose of clause 7, and some shift were made which one or the other side regarded as objectionable, then they might come back at the minister under the subsection of the collective agreement which I have just quoted and ask that a second arbitrator be appointed. This would place the whole plan for industrial peace in some jeopardy. It may be that my point has nothing to it, but I think it should at least be considered.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, my understanding of the situation would be that clauses 15.06 and 15.08, as quoted by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, are in fact suspended by the passage of this bill until the arbitrator fixes a time for their reinstatement. That would remove the potential conflict to which he drew our attention.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I quite realize the power of what I would call arbitrator No. 1, but once the provisions of the agreement go into effect, is it not at that point that either of these parties who feel aggrieved may ask for the arbitration that is set forth in that particular clause which I read into the record.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I am at a bit of a loss to see the problem. Once those clauses are reinstated and a grievance arises, it would be carried to the arbitrator named in the agreement. The collective agreement would then be back in force, and the normal arbitration proceedings would be available.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry to be badgering both the minister and the members of the committee, Mr. Chairman. Let me say, first of all, that the minister and his advisers certainly misunderstood me when they thought my suggestion that he give himself power to appoint an arbitrator at any time, next year or the year after, meant that he would have to make a decision on whether there was a case for appointing an arbitrator. I did not intend that, and I am not going to make a long speech because obviously if the minister does not agree, that is the end of it. I intended that such provision would be automatic. When one of the parties requested him to appoint an arbitrator he would do so, and the case would be in the hands of the arbitrator rather than in the hands of the minister.

Mr. Chairman, I just cannot buy the minister's reaction of equanimity to this proposition. He says that the arbitrator will make those modifications that are needed, and only to the extent required. I say to the minister those are just words. All the time that I am arguing here, figuratively I am sitting in the hall where the longshoremen meet in Montreal. As a longshoreman, when this bill is read to me and when the minister or somebody else tells me that the arbitrator is going to do it only to the extent required, I ask myself and I ask him what in Heaven's name is the extent required? He cannot satisfy me by using those general, syrupy words. What is involved is not something abstract. What is involved is my job security next year. What is involved is the question of whether or not I will get paid 40 hours a week for 37 weeks in 1973, and 40 hours a week for 37 weeks in 1974. That is what is involved for me, as a longshoreman, not some abstract query. When you say to me I should accept this law, I will, as a law abiding citizen, accept it; but, let me tell you, I am good and mad because you are giving this arbitrator this kind of power. Do not come back to me again; I am not going to listen to you, because you are selling me down the river. It may be that you are right, and the arbitrator will do me justice; but you cannot guarantee that. I do not know how much he will listen to my employer or how much he will listen to me.

These are practical considerations which anybody who has been in any way involved with the ranks of the working people knows enter the heads of working people. This, after all, is important to the worker's life, to his future and to the future of his family next year and the year after. You cannot persuade me that this arbitrator needs any more power than to set a date and to make modifications for the year 1972. And, if I am an objective longshoreman, I will have to admit that my being out on strike for eight weeks has destroyed the job security plan for this year.

I do not suppose I am getting anywhere with the minister, Mr. Chairman. Let me say this to him, as if I were speaking still as a member of the work force: Last April my union made a collective agreement with management for that job security plan. Last year management did not know exactly where the money was to come from; they do not know where it is to come from this year, let alone next year. Why are you giving anybody the authority to deny me any part of the job security plan in 1973?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lewis: Certainly.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, there have been some discussions and I think there is some disposition to continue debate on the present bill and, for the moment, to delay private members' hour.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, the statement just made by the government whip is correct, so far as we are concerned. We would agree to your not seeing the clock at this time. If we were to finish consideration of Bill C-230 before the hour is up, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) would like to use the remainder of the hour for the consideration of the motion in her name.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is this agreed?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Chairman. I think some of the questions that have been raised this afternoon are of such importance that I think we should look at them during the dinner hour. There is no difficulty, so far as I can foresee, in giving the bill third reading tonight and sending it to the Senate. I respectfully suggest that we carry on with private members' business.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I think it ought to be noted in Hansard and in the press that the hon. member for Trinity who now sits all by his lonesome self in the corner, is the person responsible for this committee's not being able to carry on its work at this time. That responsibility does not rest on anybody else in any part of this House.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. This might be an opportune time to indicate to hon. members the questions that are to be debated this evening at the time of adjournment. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight)—Transport—Leasing of United States boxcars to move grain—Purchase of additional hopper cars by railways; the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe)—Regional Economic Expansion—Request for designating Sherbrooke as "special area"; the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton)—Consumer Affairs—Alleged delay by automobile manufacturers in recalling cars with defective parts until warranties have expired.

It being after five o'clock, this House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, private bills and public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR COPY OF REPORT ON UNITED STATES INTERNAL FOOD-AID PROGRAM

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway) moved:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report undertaken in the Department of Agriculture on the United States Internal Food-Aid Program and its application to Canada.

She said: Mr. Speaker, as my party's House leader suggested, I would have been perfectly happy, in view of the serious nature of the legislation before the House this afternoon, to forgo my opportunity to participate in private members' hour. I am sorry, for my part, that in these circumstances we are proceeding with private members' hour. However, that is what the House has decided, and we must go along with that decision.

My notice of motion for the production of papers refers to something I have wanted to obtain for some time, a copy of the report or study undertaken in the Department of Agriculture with regard to the United States internal food-aid program and its application to Canada. A number of similar requests have been made and refused. I made a request last week which was refused. I suppose the government, in its own mind, can make a case for not releasing documents which might cause trouble for members of the government or others if they were released. However, I cannot for the life of me see that there could be any such objection to this report being released. Certainly, it has nothing to do with internal security. I cannot see how it could affect our relations with the United States.

The documents in question merely have to do with the reaction of the Canadian Department of Agriculture to the internal food-aid program of the United States. I think our great neighbour to the south may be flattered to learn that we are looking at what it is doing in supplementing the diet of low income people. I cannot understand why this report should not be made available to us, unless of course, the government does not like the nature of the report that officials of the Department of Agriculture have made. It may well be the report indicates that a government program ought to be set up for distributing food to low income groups in this country who, because of their poverty, are genuinely undernourished. It may be that there are things in the report the government did not wish to make public, in view of possible public reaction. Frankly, I do not see how anybody's nose could be put out of joint if the report were made available to us. It would not hurt the officials concerned or the government.

There is another possible reason behind the refusal. Possibly this report is not being released because of this government's deplorable tendency to secrecy. It wants to hide all such reports which have been compiled simply because taxpayers' money was available for compiling them. The taxpayers of this country have spent much money on studies, on committee reports, reports of commissions, and all the rest of it. When the government gets these reports, either because it is not inclined to do anything about them or because it is afraid of the reaction of the public if the facts were made known and the government did not act on them or because it is arrogant to the point that it wants to keep these reports as its private property, it refuses to allow the public to get the facts. This is a completely indefensible attitude. This government sits on these reports so long that, after a while there are leaks from one place or another, whether natural or inspired I do not know, and this indicates that the policy does not sit well with the public.

• (1710)

I want to emphasize that the taxpayers have a right to see the results of this report. We, the representatives of the people, also have a right to see the report. Just this afternoon, questions were asked about a report on housing. This whole field badly needs attention. The government has had a whole flock of reports on this situation. We know that the translations of many of them have been prepared. By what right does the government hold these and keep them under wraps? It is simply because they have more members and a greater club. That is wrong. If we cannot do anything else in this House except get rid of the secrecy surrounding the production of reports which are paid for by the taxpayers of this country, we will have done something good. Why do we have Information Canada? Information Canada releases only things which the government wants released. They stand solid and do not yield anything that the taxpayers should have in order that their elected representatives can make judgments.

I now come to the report. The worst of it is that we do not know what is in it and we have no means of telling. We do know that the Department of Agriculture has made a study of the United States internal food-aid program and its application to Canada, but we have no evidence as to what is in the report. The United States has made efforts to get food to low income groups by the food stamp plan and other plans. This government has not lifted one finger to get food to the low income groups who need it. If the government has made a study of the United States internal food program, it would be highly desirable for the public to know what our great neighbour to the south has been doing and what the officials of the Department of Agriculture think about it.

I wish to quote from an article in the June 15 edition of the Globe and Mail:

—the U.S. Department of Agriculture has thousands of "nutrition aides" who give basic nutritional advice to mothers; it prints and distributes literature on the subject; a few school systems and universities provide some training in nutrition. But most do nothing. And nowhere, to my knowledge, is there a co-ordinated approach to teaching the subject of nutrition.

The United States has not gone too far in that direction, but it has at least reached the stage of having thousands of nutrition aides. What is a nutrition aide? Presumably it is a young person, not a college graduate, but one who can grasp the basic essentials of nutrition and can indicate where literature, officers and information can be found. If this government was looking at ways and means of providing jobs for young people, it could hire nutrition aides. We have nurses aides and teaching aides. Hopefully, if there is another government in power, we will one day have day care centre aids. This government does not have the stamina or willpower to open these. The United States has at least created the position of nutrition aide.

We know that Canada's low income groups need help in getting a proper diet. Let no one tell me that there is poor nutrition in all groups. I know that. However, the difference between poor nutrition in upper income and low income families is very great. Those in the upper income groups can read and study what is nutritionally advisable if they wish. No matter how those in the low income group study and read, they cannot have a better diet because they do not have the financial resources.

At the risk of boring some members, and I find some are easily bored when it comes to problems affecting the family in this country, I want to refer to a very important editorial that appeared in a recent edition of the Globe and Mail. This is an article about a remarkable woman, Agnes Higgins, the director of the Montreal Diet Dispensary. For years she has been conducting research into diet deficiencies in low income groups who require social assistance. I and other members in this House have been quoting the findings of Mrs. Higgins for a long time. Mrs. Higgins has now made an important study about the nutritional needs of Canadians. I will not go over all the knowledge on which this is based, but this report of Mrs. Higgins and her colleagues on their Montreal experiment was one of five nutrition papers chosen for presentation to the International Congress of Endocrinology in Washington. That is what the world thinks of Mrs. Higgins, even though Canadians have not been fortunate enough to know her studies exist because of the failure of this government to inform them. I quote:

Mrs. Higgins based her work on the research of others which had proved, among other things: that it was risky to the baby to try to keep the mother's weight during pregnancy fashionably down; that mothers who were well nourished during the last 15 weeks of their pregnancies produced bigger babies; that bigger babies (7 to 8½ pounds are considered the best weights) tend to have more brain cells than smaller babies; that small babies have drastically increased rates of stillbirths, deaths in the first weeks and months of life, cerebral palsy, mental retardation and lowered intelligence.

Functioning from this knowledge Mrs. Higgins and her colleagues went to work on some of the most deprived mothers in Canada, women from two public clinics in poverty-stricken areas of Montreal.

Between 1963 and 1971 their study group included 1,725 mothers. Of these, 1,055 had five years of education or less, 1,164 were so poor that they were entitled to food supplements, 515 of the pregnancies were illegitimate. Not a promising group, one would have thought; yet only 5 per cent dropped out of the course.

On her first visit to the clinic each mother was assessed on the basis of income and diet. If her income was large enough, she was told what she should eat and given a standard mineral and vitamin supplement.

If her income was too small—and the incomes of 67 per cent of the mothers were too small—she was given food supplements of milk, eggs, oranges and the standard minerals and vitamins. Her needs were carefully calculated to take into consideration underweight, protein deficiency, shortage of calories and special conditions of stress.

All mothers were visited at least once in their homes.

• (1720)

They received the same medical attention.

The average birthweight for these babies was the same as for babies born to private patients at these hospitals. The record with respect to premature births and early death was as good as that for private patients, and significantly better than for other public clinic cases who had not had the diet treatment, and significantly better than the Canadian average.

Now, I come to the part which I hope will touch the cockles of the hearts of even the hardened people who make all their judgments on the basis of how much it costs or how little it costs or how much they can get away with.

A single family can perhaps most graphically paint the picture. A 29-year-old mother had borne 11 children. The first eight were born without diet assistance, and all had small birth weights. One died at the age of one month. For her last three pregnancies the mother had diet assistance, and these three babies all weighed within the ideal range.

A physical and mental assessment of all the children was done at Montreal Children's Hospital. The last three children were found to be normal. All of the others were found to be disadvantaged and likely to require support off and on through life.

Now, I get to the nub of the thing.

It cost the public $125 to give the mother diet assistance, including the free milk, oranges, eggs and vitamins, for each of her normal babies. The cost to the public of maintaining a defective child throughout life in an institution or in the community is more than $100,000.

So, there you have it in terms of actual cost—$125 to produce a healthy baby and $100,000 to keep a defective child in an institution for life. It would pay us a thousand times over in dollars and cents to apply Mrs. Higgins' good sense and compassion whenever circumstances call for it. This is why I want that report. I want to see whether there is anything in it which would supply further evidence of the need to supplement the diets of poor people, people living on social assistance and low incomes. It is no use saying we should wait until the results of the nutrition survey are known. The report will not be completed until this fall, and the best we can hope for is that it will be available next spring. Next spring we shall be told we cannot have it because hon. members on the other side are sitting on it. Why wait for spring? Do it now! Let us begin right away to learn all we can from what our neighbours in the United States have done. Let us get ahead on the basis of what we can learn; let us get going right away and supplement the diets of the people in this country who most need assistance.

[Translation]

Mr. Léopold Corriveau (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) for her work in explaining to us the situation and also for giving us the opportunity of talking about the feeding habits in Canada.

Some may have bad eating habits, even if they have a rather high income. It is not the income of a person which gives him good eating habits, but mainly the way the mother buys the foods and prepares them for the family.

In my capacity of chairman of school boards for many years, I had the opportunity of surveying the eating habits of large families, particularly children attending school, and I am convinced that Canada is a rich country from the standpoint of foodstuffs; we are mainly producers able to supply adequate food to Canadians.

One can spend $50 a week feeding a family of four or five children and even then not eat properly. Indeed, one can buy all sorts of things like hot dogs, as was pointed out earlier, and live on hamburgers just as well as abundant farm products.

Undernourishment should be studied because in Canada, as I said before, people suffer from it, not for lack of money but for lack of selecting the proper foods to be eaten. I have studied some family budgets. In fact, after a discussion with a housewife who told me, to my astonishment, that she fed her five children and her husband on $50 a week, my first reaction was to wonder if my wife managed my budget properly because I know how much it costs to feed my family.

Evidently, when we have the means to buy products of the highest quality or some luxury goods, we can spend more for food, but it does not necessarily mean that we are better fed. If we closely consider the problem, we realize, for example, that we have not yet reached the point where it is urgent to carry out the American program in Canada.

If on the other hand it has been deemed necessary to study what was going on in the neighbouring countries to determine whether the food aid programs were better than ours, we necessarily had to turn toward the United States to get information on food.

Apparently, under a certain program, the people can buy food in groceries with coupons. Customers cannot exchange these vouchers for money because this is forbidden. If it should happen that the value of their vouchers exceed the value of their purchases, the retailer would be required to deliver some kind of receipt that they could use again.

The system, which was established by legislation passed in the United States in 1964 and amended on a few occasions, and particularly in January 1971, costs the American Treasury $2 billion and perhaps today more than $3 billion.

Of course, when you distribute the cost among 200 million citizens, you do not reach a fantastic sum per capita, but when you want to apply this system in this country, you have to multiply this figure by 10. We then find out that for a food program similar to the American effort we would have to spend more than $250 million. Therefore, if the federal government had to make such an amount available, over and above what it already pays through cost-sharing programs and other social measures, we see readily that astronomic amounts would burden the budget of assistance to underprivileged persons.

It must be realized that Canadians engaged in food production far outnumber those in the United States. We must also realize that the American economy can support measures that we could not add to those already in force. Their effects on the sales of food must also be assessed. What would happen if the people that we are now assisting through social measures benefited from increased assistance under a coupon distribution program?

• (1730)

These are effects that we should consider because of their short, middle and long term bearing. However, I am interested in one aspect of the American program: in Canada we grant direct benefits to the needy through social measures. Considering their skills I sometimes wonder if they properly use the money given to them.

Would a coupon system or something else which would compel them to allot part of their budget to food not be preferable to the present system? It is a question which deserves consideration and further study. We are not now in a position to take such a quick decision on a program which could entail large federal expenditures.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point that should perhaps be considered. Some may think it is rather sophisticated, but a family food-aid program might be conducive to serious abuses. Very often, when money is not available in some families, the coupons distributed under all kinds of forms could be exchanged for money which could be applied to other purposes.

In Canada and in the United States there are quantities of foods rich in protein, such as eggs, poultry, etc. For the last twenty years, the price of these foods have declined sharply. Low income families consume much of these foods. One cannot say that in Canada it is impossible to find protein-rich foods at reasonable prices.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to talk about another aspect. I would like first to indicate that I am not at all opposed, to having now and in the future as many studies and surveys as possible on our national diet. We will have to deal with this problem sometime, hopefully with a great deal of care and attention. I am convinced that there might be a distribution of food in Canada. However, the main problem remains the economic situation of producers. In cases of overproduction, producers are seldom in a position to break even. Insofar as producers are concerned, the distribution of surplus foods products in the homes will not actually resolve economic problems. Surpluses are shipped to another area. A tremendous effort could be made so that producers may be in a better situation and that they may earn at least a decent living which will enable them through taxes to contribute to other programs intended for poor or low income people.

We must export our food surplus. I would be remiss in my duty if I did not comment on the assistance which Canada is extending to developing countries. We are still not doing all we could and should in this field.

I do not think Mr. Speaker, that French Canadians have to eat like the Americans and conduct surveys, in view of the fact that they are in a position to eat with the commodities at their disposal.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is no scarcity of food in Canada. We know that all food and agricultural areas in Canada are showing huge production surpluses. We know also that every farmer and industry which is involved in food production only wish to have more consumers buying their products.

[English]

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by complimenting the hon. member who has just concluded his speech. I assume from the interest he has shown in this debate that he is in favour of the production of papers in respect of the internal food-aid program which for a number of years has been carried on in the United States. I wish, also, to compliment the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) for her excellent outline of some of the difficulties surrounding nutrition in the Canadian setting. I hesitated to take part in this debate because I have no experience of pregnancy; therefore I shall confine my remarks strictly to questions of food, food consumption and nutrition.

The hon. member on the other side of the House pointed out that a program such as that being carried on in the United States would cost $250 million to implement. That may well be so, but it would be extremely helpful if the representatives of the Canadian people could consider the information on the United States internal food-aid program and the views of our Department of Agriculture in respect thereto. Perhaps then we could come to a conclusion as to the cost and, what is far more important to us as representatives of Canadians, the benefits to Canadian citizens.

If the hon. member was speaking in terms of overproduction, let me point out that we who represent western constituencies face the problem of overproduction in terms of wheat. Like the farmers in Quebec who have overproduction in a certain area which I will not go into, nothing would make us happier than to have a program carried out by the Department of Agriculture to increase the number of consumers. If the figures the hon. member mentioned are correct, this would pour some $250 million into the agricultural sector of the economy and give our farmers a reasonable return on their production, as well as increased internal consumption.

As representatives of the agricultural sector of our economy, we are fundamentally interested in any kind of food program which would enhance the internal markets of Canada such as the program undertaken in the United States. If we could put $250 million into our agricultural sector, I would be most happy and excited about such a program. It would get the economy rolling in terms of putting money into the hands of western and eastern producers, to be followed by a flow of money into the hands of the industrial sector as a result of increased purchasing power.

In order to make decisions, we as Members of Parliament must be able to examine studies undertaken and documents relating to them. Many studies which have been made of the agricultural sector in relation to food and food consumption have been hidden in the offices of ministers; Members of Parliament have not been allowed to look at them. One such study was made for the small farms development consolidation program, papers in respect of which I have asked for in a motion for the production of papers that has been on the order paper for months. These papers have not been produced—yet members are asked to deal with legislation such as Bill C-5 in connection with agriculture.

• (1740)

Documents are sent to provincial governments and are looked at by federal civil servants. Members of Parliament and the Canadian people, however, are not allowed to examine such documents. If we wish to take another example in terms of the agricultural sector, the Department of Agriculture and the Wheat Board, we need only consider the whole question of national transportation and the policy drawn up, with the involvement of the Canada Grains Council, the Canadian Wheat Board, the railroads and the line elevator companies, which has been turned over to the provincial governments and which the minister in charge of the Wheat Board said last spring would be tabled in the House of Commons very soon. That transportation study has not yet been tabled in the House of Commons for consideration by Members of Parliament.

I can see great possibilities, in terms of business, in a Canadian internal food-aid program. Western producers, above all other groups, I suppose, in terms of grain, have faced great difficulties in certain years because of their dependence on the international market. A vast percentage of the grain and wheat sold from western Canada and, I suppose, a great percentage of eastern soft wheat, is sold on the international market. If an internal food-aid program would enhance the domestic market for farm produce, this would be a way in which western and eastern producers could see an improvement of their financial position and encouragement in their desire to remain on the land.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway did an excellent job in pointing out some of the difficulties in terms of proper nutrition and proper diet for child raising, and so on. I shall not go into that matter. I hope that when I resume my seat the question of producing this report for those of us who represent farmers, and for the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and my friend across the way, members who have an interest in nutrition as well as the income of producers, will be considered favourably.

I hope, also, that when I resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, you will either allow the question to come to a vote or there will be unanimous consent of the House that this document be produced. I rest my case on the good graces of government members.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) for introducing this motion. I have listened very carefully to her comments and more often than once, I was reminded of the days when I was a student in agricultural sciences at the University of Montreal attending nutrition courses.

I commend the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway for having drawn the House's attention to this ever important situation. I also wish to congratulate her for her work in various committees. I have seen her at work in the Health, Welfare and Social Affairs Committee where social problems were considered as well as problems related to packing and consumers' protection. It is my wish that after the forthcoming great event, the Liberal party will include several female members.

Having said this, I cannot however agree with the comments made by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway in connection with the tabling of the documents mentioned in her notice of motion. I would invite the hon. member to read the reply given to her by the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Jerome) as recorded on page 1280 of our proceedings of November 18, 1970, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Agriculture I may advise the hon. member that no formal report has ever been made by the Department of Agriculture on the United States internal food aid program and its application to Canada.

I suggest that this was not a report, but rather a draft study, and, as pointed out by the Parliamentary Secretary, various departments when it comes to drafting important legislation, usually consider pilot projects so as to determine the feasibility of any specific program.

I think hunger always raises problems, and no human being can remain insensitive to it. Therefore, I would not like the hon. member to think that members of this House are insensitive to the situation which she brought to our attention.

Now, as far as the report is concerned, there are several studies in the United States which deal precisely with the experiment with food distribution, and those studies are available to the public, providing the hon. member can ask for them.

[English]

At the present time the United States operates four major food-aid programs. The first is the commodity distribution program, the second is the national school lunch program, the third is the special milk program and the fourth is the food stamp program. All four programs are administered by Consumer Food Programs of the USDA Consumer and Marketing Service. The special milk program and the food stamp program are examples of food assistance programs which operate on a cash grant for local food purchases. Under the special milk program, federal cash grants are utilized to reduce the cost of milk to children in elementary and secondary schools.

The food stamp program, on the other hand, enables needy families to purchase food stamps which have a redeemable value greater than the purchase price. The difference between the purchase price and the redeemable value represents the federal cash contribution. Both of these programs are based on the assumption that if the food purchasing power of the recipient is increased, food consumption will also increase provided that provisions have been made to guard against substitution for regular food purchases.

[Translation]

To come back, Mr. Speaker, to the problems raised by the hon. member, I do not think we should compare this program with the situation which prevails in the United States and Canada, precisely because of differences in the social policies of those two countries. In Canada, we have a highly developed social policy, including a family allowances policy established for the benefit of school-aged children. If some provinces want to experiment with milk distribution in schools—and I think this problem has been raised on many occasions in Quebec—this comes under their own jurisdiction. If they want to distribute milk in schools, they are entirely free to do so.

The main issue raised by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau) is that of budget administration. If a family lives on a weekly budget of $75 or $100, its well-being will indeed depend on the nutrition value of the products the housewife can buy. As underlined also by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, more information should be provided at the level of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and at the level of the various associations and citizens' committees. The caisses populaires are now doing excellent information work on the nutrition value of the farm products.

Considering their energy and protein value, farm products are available to the consumer at quite reasonable prices. According to an opinion often voiced by the producers, Canada is a "cheap country for food". If we consider prices paid in recent years, broilers sold at 18 cents a pound, eggs at 30 cents a dozen and pork at 24 cents a pound. These are certainly not exorbitant prices.

Our aim should indeed be to try to disseminate more information on nutrition through foodstuffs and especially on comparative prices for various beef cuts. While a student and working in a butcher's shop, I could see to what extent the housewife was poorly informed on meat; she bought some cuts priced at $1.50, whereas, considering equivalent nutrition value, she could have purchased others costing three times less. The question is rather that of educating the consumers on the nutrition value of foods, on the various meat cuts and on the price. I believe we should center our efforts in that area.

I shall refer the hon. member to several departmental publications which are designed to further inform consumers about the purchasing and unit price of various consumer products. Some booklets are available at the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and there are a few excellent ones as well in the Department of Agriculture. Various agricultural television programs were produced with a view to assist the housewife, so that she may get at a fair price several agricultural products, such as poultry, milk, eggs, fruit or vegetable. If such was the case, we should only have reached part of the hon. member's objective.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that we should consider very carefully the whole thing, because, as I stated earlier, we, as human beings, cannot overlook the problem of hunger in the world.

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) spoke about the grain production. I shall only refer to the assistance given by Canada to under developed countries. As far as international food-aid program is concerned, the contribution of Canada amounts to about $95 million. I suggest that we should increase this amount, but once more, we should do it according to our ability to pay.

This was an outline of the situation, and as I stated at the outset of my remarks, I cannot agree with the remarks made by the hon. member about the motion now before us, which reads as follows:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report undertaken in the Department of Agriculture on the United States Internal Food-Aid Program and its application to Canada.

It was rather a survey. I do not object that these compilations be used as a work paper by the ministry and its officials in order to eventually implement, if such implementation is deemed really important, a program similar to that which has been tried in the United States. To me, this was more of a survey than of a report.

Here again, Canada has played its part in the field of assistance provided to needy families. But I think that the situation is quite different from that which prevails in the United States. We have a social policy, a family allowance program directed to children, but I think that we should put great emphasis on information and popularization so that housewives would know not only the unit price of the food products they buy, but also their nutrition value and protein content.

[English]

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Roy (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I think that this situation—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time appointed for private members' hour has expired.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ST. LAWRENCE PORTS OPERATIONS BILL

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION OF LONGSHORING AND RELATED OPERATIONS

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-230, to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec—Mr. O'Connell—Mr. Boulanger in the chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. When the committee rose at five o'clock, clause 7 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 7—Postponement of job security plan.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, when we ended our discussion at five o'clock I had been trying to point out to the minister and to members of the committee the difficulties which in my opinion face the longshoremen in the powers which apparently the minister insists on giving to the arbitrator with regard to the job security plans now in the collective agreement.

I do not want to speak any longer because no purpose can be served by repeating the arguments. I merely say to the minister that management and the union agreed to the job security plans last April, before this year's shipping season started, and the longshoremen have the right that those provisions be retained in full next year. There is no reason why the abritrator should have the power to change those provisions so as to weaken the job security plans for the years 1973 and 1974. I have said all I could say. I had hoped the minister would agree to bring in a proposal to deal with this question, but since he has not I move the following amendment:

That clause 7 be amended by changing the period at the end of line 28 to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"provided that he does not make any modifications in the plans set out in the collective agreements as such plans apply to the years 1973 and 1974."

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will make a few comments on the proposal made by the hon. member for York South. I do not want to repeat the arguments which were made this afternoon when it was pointed out that the agreement worked out between the union and the employers provided a formula for job security for the years 1972, 1973 and 1974. Difficulties have arisen in implementing the plan for this year because several important months, in terms of work on the docks and therefore of payments into the fund from which the work guarantee would be provided, have gone by.

• (2010)

I cannot see why there should be any proposal by the employers or by the government that any person, be it the government, an employer or an arbitrator, should do anything to vary the agreement which has already been worked out and which was agreed to by both employers and employees in reference to the years 1973 and 1974.

Mr. Chairman, in recent months the people of Canada have heard a great deal about the supposed exorbitant, unreasonable demands made by various labour groups. I point out to the minister and to members of the committee that the guarantee which the longshoremen will get for employment and earnings is something like $167 a week for 37 weeks a year. My arithmetic shows that to be just over $6,000 a year. Montreal is the largest city in Canada and its cost of living is amongst the highest of any city in Canada. I suggest to the minister and members of this committee that a longshoreman or any other worker who has to live in the city of Montreal on just over $6,000 a year in 1973 or 1974 will not have a very affluent life.

Mr. Chairman, I simply cannot understand why the minister should now be proposing that an arbitrator might be able to reopen the agreement which has been reached, and to scale down what I consider to be a very modest income guarantee for any worker in the year 1973.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I want to add just a few comments. I have listened to my friend, the leader of the New Democratic Party, and I recall that he said that I fumed and fumigated for about half an hour trying to point out the value of the public interest and what that should mean not only to labour and management but to the public in general. It is in this area that we must accept our responsibility. It seems to me, however, that the leader of the New Democratic Party is attempting—I charge him with this and I hope we can still be friends, as he indicated to me earlier that he hoped I would be friends with him after he had berated me somewhat—to weaken this bill.

Surely we have now reached the stage where it is necessary that this bill be brought to Parliament, that that is our wish. Surely that was the last wish we had, but it seems to me that the very issue we are talking about, job security, is the one that has brought about deep confrontation between the two parties. They had a collective agreement and it was up to them to use the provisions therein to reach a rational conclusion that would be acceptable to all. In their confusion and frustration they failed to do this.

I am impressed with what the minister said, that what we need now is for the arbitrator to set the date on which the job security plan will take effect.

Mr. Orlikow: What year?

Mr. Alexander: Who knows how long? This is the problem. We just hope that in the circumstances, whoever is the arbitrator will decide on an early date; but once he sets that date I would refer the hon. member to the explanation that was given earlier by the minister, who said that once the arbitrator sets the date, at that time he would know all the circumstances and we would not have to worry about the year 1973. But perhaps the circumstances will not be completely known to him at the time he sets the date and he may need more time. That is the position the minister was trying to advance, and I buy that. We are trying to make this a meaningful bill in order to have industrial peace.

I know the leader of the New Democratic Party says that if we accept his amendment such a step will not have to be taken, but surely labour and management must understand now that we mean business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: They have had the opportunity to play around for seven or eight weeks. I do not accept the weakening of what is a very weak bill in the first instance. I say, with all due respect to the leader of the New Democratic Party, that his theory is good but it is not practicable and it should not be accepted at this particular time. This is a bill which has been brought before Parliament, not for the benefit of labour, not for the benefit of management, but for the benefit of the people of Canada as a whole.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: As long as we keep that in mind I think we have to proceed. I know the bill is not the best: it is weak in certain areas; it has no sanctions but no penalties. For the penalties you have to refer to other legislation. But the bill as it stands should not be weakened. Accordingly, on behalf of my party I say that we will not vote for the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the Committee ready for the question on the amendment?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, before this amendment is put to the committee I wonder if the minister could tell us whether he has any estimate of the extent of the damage that has been caused by the strike. Does he have from his department, from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, any agent of government or any independent source a projection of the consequences of the shutdown which has occurred in the last few weeks?

Mr. Benjamin: You tell us.

Mr. Hellyer: It is apparent, Mr. Chairman, that not only has there been a considerable disruption of shipping but there has been a serious loss of confidence in so far as the St. Lawrence ports are concerned, which has influenced shippers to a considerable extent. Before having to decide on this amendment I would be interested to know whether we have any assessment at all of what the long range consequences of this strike are likely to be, so that we may exercise our judgment on that basis.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I regret to have to say that I think the hon. member for Trinity is drawing a red herring across our path at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: It is not for me to try to make an estimate in statistical or measurable terms of the extent of the damage occasioned by this strike. We all know that we are here to confirm and further the public interest in the settlement of the strike.

An hon. Member: Now you are catching on.

Mr. O'Connell: The strike has gone on too long. We know that the public interest is damaged not only because of the economic injuries that have resulted to these communities, ports and the country at large but also because the two parties have failed to find a way out of the impasse that they have created. That, too, is a matter of public interest.

Again I might point out that when the proper processes were used, that is when the services of the arbitrator named in the agreement were employed. He brought in his ruling and we were all in a position then to judge the legalities concerned. At that point the public interest was even more acutely engaged, when the parties found themselves in an impasse notwithstanding the ruling of the arbitrator and notwithstanding the damage that was accumulating as time passed. I do not think it would be appropriate at this time to make an estimation in economic terms of the damage. We should get on with the business of passing this bill and getting these ports into operation.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak again because earlier I made all the arguments that I thought could be made in the proposition I put before the committee. However, I am forced to say a word or two because of what I can only describe as the demagogic remarks of the hon. member for Hamilton West.

• (2020)

I am as aware as he is that this bill is before us because of the public interest. He need not read me or any other member of this committee that kind of lecture. It may give some of his colleagues an opportunity to bang their desks but it does not touch on the subject at all. All I can say is that if the hon. member for Hamilton West is right, then we are really in for trouble and for real injustice. As I understood the hon. member for Hamilton West, he interpreted the minister as having argued that he wants this arbitrator to set the date, not in 1972 but well into 1973; that is when he should set the date.

Mr. Alexander: I did not say that.

Mr. Lewis: With respect, the hon. member for Hamilton West said just that.

An hon. Member: He said it may not be necessary to do that.

Mr. Lewis: I do not think the minister meant that. If he did, he had better think again before he places this bill before the people concerned. That would be the height of injustice to the working people in this area.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member for Hamilton West says he wants a tough bill. Tough in what respect, Mr. Chairman? Does he want a bill tough enough to deprive the workers at the docks of the benefits of the job security plan, benefits which they negotiated last April, even in 1973 and 1974 when there will be no reason to expect trouble, when everyone hopes there will be no interruption of work? We hope that the accumulation of money necessary for the job security plan will take place in 1973, just as last April it was hoped and intended that that accumulation would take place in 1972. The only damage that has been done—and it is serious damage—is that occasioned by the eight-week strike which made it impossible for the money to be accumulated to meet the job security plan in 1972.

I do not oppose, but support the proposition in the bill which gives the arbitrator the right to set the new date when that plan will come into effect, so long as that date is in 1972 and so long as the people who are engaged in that hard work, in that unpleasant work which is not very creative, will get the benefit of their collective agreement in 1973 and 1974—unless, of course, they again indulge in the kind of irresponsible action they indulged in this year.

That is what I am pleading for, that is what the minister should do and that is what the amendment seeks to do. That is all I am pleading for, namely, that the arbitrator should not have the right to cut down benefits which are now in the collective agreement for the years 1973 and 1974. Perhaps he will not do it, but there is no guarantee that he will not. Therefore, when we order people back to work there ought to be some justice in that order.

I have no hesitation in saying and in underlining—I made my position very clear yesterday—that the unions as well as the employers and workers who have engaged in this eight-week illegal strike have acted in an indefensible way. I say that as one who has dealt with these people over the years, and I am not prepared to defend their action in the slightest degree. But that has nothing to do with the welfare and livelihood of these people and their families in 1973 and 1974, when we hope there will be industrial peace. Only thoughtlessness can put in jeopardy their welfare during those two years—and that is what this law does! That should not happen. There is no reason in fact or in theory for putting these people in jeopardy; and that has nothing to do with the public interest that the hon. member for Hamilton West talked about.

Mr. Alexander: I am interested in the public interest.

Mr. Lewis: So am I; and so is everybody here interested in motherhood. I have four children, and I believe in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I have only one, a 22 year-old.

Mr. Lewis: I am interested in virtue—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I hope you are not going to deprive me of this opportunity to emphasize support of virtue.

Mr. Alexander: Carry on.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. It is very difficult for the Chair to hear the hon. member's explanations; I wish hon. members would kindly refrain from making comments and let the hon. member who has the floor continue his remarks.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As usual, you are very kind.

[English]

I was saying, Sir, that this is not a question of the public interest.

Mr. Alexander: Yes, it is.

Mr. Lewis: The public interest will be hurt if these stevedores are unnecessarily hurt next year and the year after that. And if they are, my friends of the Conservative party and my friends of the Liberal party will be responsible. The arbitrator, says the minister and says the hon. member for Hamilton West, will not have all the facts before him this fall and, therefore, what will he do? He will cut down all the benefits that would be available to the dockers under the collective agreement in 1973! Is that the proposition being put forward?

Mr. Alexander: Who made this bill necessary?

An hon. Member: Read the bill.

Mr. Lewis: I have read it. The hon. member for Hamilton West asks, who made this bill necessary? Therefore, he is ready to punish these people in 1973 and 1974.

Mr. Alexander: No.

Mr. Lewis: For him, that is serving the public interest.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: Let him say that to the workers in Montreal—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: —in Hamilton or elsewhere.

Mr. Dupras: The hon. member is playing to the gallery.

Mr. Lewis: Nuts to the gallery, and nuts to the hon. member. I speak plain English.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I think it would be better if hon. members allowed the hon. member who has the floor to make his speech. It is very difficult for the Chair to follow what is going on.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member has taken almost two hours of the committee's time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have not much more to say.

Mr. Alexander: Hear, hear!

An hon. Member: Filibuster!

Mr. Lewis: I must emphasize and underline that these interruptions and interjections merely show the direction of the thinking of some members of this committee.

Mr. Alexander: The hon. member, I must say, has a lot of nerve.

[The Assistant Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Lewis: I say that the objective of the bill is not being served. In some respects we are jeopardizing the bill, and I hope it will not be jeopardized by giving the arbitrator power that he does not need. He is being given power to do things that are unnecessary, and that may harm the welfare of the people involved. That is why I am pleading.

I did not put my amendment in for nothing. I hoped that the minister and his advisers would come forward with a much better amendment which would do in a better way what I am trying to do. I am certain that this is the right thing to do. I am also certain that it is wrong and improper to interfere with the plan in the years 1973 and 1974. That is unnecessary and unjust, and that is why those powers ought to be limited to this year.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, we went over this ground quite extensively this afternoon. The hon. member for Winnipeg North was not present to hear the exchange, but he will find the explanations in Hansard that I gave then to support the provision set out in clause 7. I have given a good deal of thought to this matter and have looked carefully at the proposition the hon. member for York South has brought forward. We have considered it most carefully. We have considered the equities involved and after a brief excursion down that road, which has its attractions, we have returned to favour the present proposition as being one that provides the greatest justice. We must remember that we must provide justice for both parties; there must be equity for both parties. That will be in the best interests of all in future.

The hon. member for York South has brought forward an amendment. However, I must confess to some puzzlement because in speaking to it he opened up another door, and when you go through that door I think you will find that you are going beyond the whole purpose of this bill, certainly beyond the provisions with respect to the arbitrator's authority as provided in the bill. He would be putting the working people, for whom he has expressed concern, into greater jeopardy in the years 1973 and 1974 than any that might be contemplated in this bill.

If I understood the hon. member correctly, at the close of the debate this afternoon he was saying that we ought to make a provision in the bill so that the minister, on petition of one of the parties to the collective agreement, would automatically be able to appoint an arbitrator to modify the agreements in 1973 and 1974. We are not giving any such right for modification of that kind in those future years.

As I understand it, there would be the automatic appointment of an arbitrator of those collective agreements if certain events arose. What are those certain events? As was suggested this afternoon, it might be the plea of the employers that for one reason or another they could not live up to the income security plan, the plan that pays for 37 weeks whether they work or not under the new regime; they could not pay for it and they would be financially embarrassed. Am I to then appoint another arbitrator to open up the whole matter again? Are we to be in continual insecurity in this one field of arbitration? Even if we agreed that was a good proceeding—and I immediately say it is not—would we not be going beyond the whole purpose of this bill, which is not to cure hypothetical events which might occur in the future? What the bill is intended to do, and I read from its title, is as follows:

An act to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports—

Our whole objective is to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports. Surely we would be going beyond what we agreed to on second reading, the principle of this bill, in providing in addition that in some future eventuality which we are unable to foresee at this time we should open up and modify the collective agreement.

Mr. Lewis: That is not what my amendment says.

Mr. O'Connell: The hon. member says that is not what his amendment does. I am glad he has retreated to the confines of his amendment. When he spoke, he went beyond that. We ought to have that perfectly clear in our minds if we are seeking the best interests of the men as well as of the employers, as we must. If it is to be a viable agreement in the future we should not introduce into anything we do any jeopardy down through the succeeding years.

I earnestly hope that the decision can be made soon. I do not mean five months from now, or next year; I mean very soon—as soon as the arbitrator is in a position to judge the operations and, therefore, the facts of the case to make the job security plan viable. All that we are providing at this point in time is that at the earliest possible moment the arbitrator will make his decision. That is his "once only" decision with regard to income security; he will not have another opportunity. He will look as far into the future as he is able to do objectively and he will make his judgment.

I earnestly hope, and I think it is the hope of all members, that when the arbitrator fixes the date for the start of the job security provisions it will be the earliest date feasible, and when he fixes the terminal date beyond which the modifications will not apply that will be the earliest feasible date to make this a viable plan as required in clause 7. It is quite conceivable that it will be in 1972; but I am entering on delicate ground and I know that none of us would wish that. That is for him to decide. However, in the nature of the circumstances I think it is quite reasonable to expect that he will know what we consider to be an early decision, an early date to begin and an early date to terminate the modifications.

If we in Parliament set a date either to begin or to terminate, we take a judgment upon ourselves that we know something about the facts, something about the matter of dispute and we are capable of saying "the end of this year and no longer." It may be longer. I earnestly hope it will be shorter; I expect it will be. However, that is territory upon which it would be imprudent for us as Members of Parliament to trespass at this time in considering this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Chairman, I ask the minister how he finds it more imprudent to accept the amendment of the hon. member for York South than to accept the imprudence that is in the bill as it now stands. I am certain that the minister is more up to date and more aware of the situation than I am, as is the hon. member for York South. What would happen in terms of workers who had struggled for decades and finally got a negotiated settlement last April? What is implicit in the minds of those workers, if not in the minds of the minister and his advisers, is the provocation of what is in the bill and the fear they will have of the provisions of clause 7.

If the minister thinks it is imprudent to accept the amendment of the hon. member for York South, surely what is in clause 7 is equally imprudent. What is to say that the bill as now drafted will not cause more than 3,000 men, after 30 years of fighting for this, to end up in jail? Is there not some imprudence now in the clause that the minister is promoting? If the minister feels that he cannot accept the amendment of my leader, the hon. member for York South, has he given any thought to something more than what is now in the clause?

Would the minister be prepared to accept an amendment that would limit the arbitrator to adjustments in the job security plan providing that he could not go beyond March 31, 1973? Has he even looked at something in between what he wants and what the hon. member for York South is suggesting? I am not sure if that is feasible or advisable. Surely the minister is going beyond prudence in what is now in the legislation. The amendment does not ask for very much. What is now in clause 7 goes beyond the purpose of the bill on which we all agree, that is, to get the ports operating and the men back to work. Clause 7 goes beyond that. I believed the minister when he said yesterday that he does not go beyond that purpose.

If the amendment put forward by my hon. friend from York South is not what the minister's advisers like, one of whom disappoints me somewhat, have they thought about any other kinds of amendment that he himself would be prepared to move which would in some way provide what is needed in clause 7?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak for just a few moments before the amendment is put. In my view, the minister's belated concern for the public interest has a hollow ring. If he was as concerned about the public interest as he appeared to be from his interjection a few moments ago, I would have expected action on his part some weeks ago before the crisis reached its present proportions. I would have expected him to have introduced, not the labour bill which was sneaked through this House last Friday, a bill which would have been more appropriate to the nineteenth century, one which does nothing to resolve these paradoxes which arise from time to time in relations between management and labour—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hellyer: I say the only job security there is in Montreal and the other ports arises from the continuous operation of those ports during the shipping season. I say this to the hon. member for York South: it is not correct that the only damage which has been done is the damage caused during this eight weeks' strike. The effect will continue for some time into the future. Additional damage will be caused as a result of loss of confidence. It will take some time to overcome the disruption caused by the strike and to restore the confidence necessary if shippers are to return to their former practices.

I agree with the minister to this extent: I think we should get on with the bill. But I believe there must be a more enlightened approach to these issues than has been shown in the past by the government or than is evident at this time.

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Mr. Lewis moved:

That clause 7 be amended by changing the period at the end of line 28 to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"provided that he does not make any modification in the plans set out in the collective agreement as such plans apply to the years 1973 and 1974."

Amendment (Mr. Lewis) negatived: Yeas, 12; nays, 63.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 7 carry?

Mr. Osler: I wish to speak on clause 7, Mr. Chairman. I was disappointed with the amendment put forward after the dinner hour by the leader of the New Democratic Party, but before dinner I thought some members on the opposition side were making a point which was most interesting. I should like to submit this view to the minister. If modification means making partial changes, I cannot but agree that neither the union people nor the employers, after all the agony they have been through, should be willing to accept modifications, partial changes in the agreement they have reached. I beg the minister to consider putting the word "temporary" in front of "modifications" in the clause because I think this is what he is really getting at. I do not believe anybody wants to force the parties concerned down an alley from which they cannot escape.

I do not wish to put forward an amendment since it is obvious that if the government is willing to accept an amendment it will do so, and if it does not wish to acdept an amendment it will not do so. I do not want to play games. I beg the minister to consider making this slight change in clause 2(b) which would let both the parties off a thorny hook. If there is no money available, neither party can live up to this agreement; but if money looks like becoming available one cannot, surely, expect the longshoremen or the employers to accept modifications which might be permanent. I ask the minister to consider this point.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is clause 7 agreed to?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Carried on division.

Clause 7 agreed to.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

On clause 8—Where Minister of Labour may initiate arbitration proceedings.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, there is a tricky legal phrase here. Would the minister care to put on record his views with respect to it? Clause 8 reads in part:

—in a time that, in the opinion of the minister, was reasonable having regard to the nature of the dispute.

What does the minister understand by "reasonable time"? Does it relate to an indication from either of the parties who may for one reason or another not want to move? In other words, will the minister react to such a clear indication, or will he have some other reason for determining what is the proper and reasonable time to move under this clause?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, that is a very difficult, indeed an impossible question to answer. It anticipates an event which I trust will not arise again. It might, but I hope it will not.

The opinion I have is that a reasonable time should be taken "having regard to the nature of the dispute". So regard must be paid to the nature of the dispute, its gravity, its duration, its extent and so forth. These would all be factors in arriving at this notion of a reasonable time. It is most unusual—I do not know of any other instances, though there may have been some—for one or other of the parties not to resort to arbitration when a grievance arises. We did run into that in this case and we put a caution in there. I would say that the length of time was entirely unreasonable in this particular instance, having regard to the nature of the dispute and the availability of the arbitrator to get an agreement on a standby basis. I think that is a judgment one has to exercise in a situation as it emerges, and I will have to resist the temptation to comment about the particular length of time.

• (2050)

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister does not interpret the words "reasonable time" to mean that he should take the most unreasonable amount of time he has taken to move in this particular situation.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I think I am entitled to reply to that remark. The unreasonableness in this dispute should be laid on the parties to the dispute. If any members still think the minister took an unreasonable time, what they are saying is they would have preferred the minister to go around the procedures of collective bargaining in certain circumstances and open up the agreement. We know that agreements are closed and that this has become a tradition in Canada. It is a most serious thing, indeed, for any minister of the Crown—

Mr. Alexander: He was only kidding.

Mr. O'Connell: I am told that the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East was only kidding. I do not take it as kidding, because it is a very serious thing to suggest that the government or the minister should intervene when the only manner of intervention would be the seeking of renegotiation of an agreement, particularly when what is required is not renegotiation or a reopener but, rather, interpretation of the rights in an agreement. That is why it was an unreasonable length of time to be taken by parties to do that which they were required to do by law.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure that what I have in mind should be covered by this type of bill. However, would the minister indicate whether the length of time aspect would cover vacation pay, which was recommendation No. 4 of the deputy minister and other officials? This question was in dispute at the time the meetings were being held. I am wondering if it is one of the matters that could be settled under this clause.

The recommendation was that vacation pay be paid to employees as soon as it is possible for the staff to issue cheques. Is this one of the matters that may be involved? If so, I am curious to know why it was such an important part of the settlement and why it was an issue in the recommendations for settlement. I am wondering whether this is one of the matters the minister envisages as having to be settled within a reasonable period of time.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, the answer to the hon. member for Timiskaming is no, we did not have that particular question of vacation pay in mind when drafting clause 8. We did not know of any particular difference of opinion that existed on this question at the time we drafted it. To the best of my knowledge, vacation pay was satisfactorily resolved in the mediation process. I do not know whether it has slipped out of that position now, but it would be only right that I point out that it is the kind of issue which is arbitrable. In the normal course it could indeed come into the arbitration proceedings. This protection in clause 8 was required in order that we will not be caught again in the impasse that locked us out of the action when neither party would initiate that arbitration proceeding.

Clause 8 agreed to.

Clause 9 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I understand that clause 5 was stood. The committee will now revert to consideration of clause 5.

On clause 5—Persons bound by collective agreement.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, clause 5 was stood, and I think we owe it to the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East to provide an answer. If my memory serves me correctly, I was asked whether clause 5 would apply to any other union which may be working on the docks and would we, in anything we are doing here, affect the rights of other unions in these three ports. The answer is no. A clear understanding of this measure is that it will apply only to those unions mentioned in the collective agreement, that is to say, the three locals of the International Longshoremen's Union, No. 375 in Montreal and the two in Trois-Rivières and Quebec City respectively, but not any others: they are untouched by this measure.

Mr. Forrestall: Do I understand the minister to give me the assurance that other unions such as those governing checkers, freight handlers, and so on, who may be working under certification and within the terms of agreement between the Maritime Employers Association and the ILA will not be affected by the legislation we are about to pass in committee?

Mr. O'Connell: I am not in a position to say whether they have an agreement with the MEA. Indeed, they would have an agreement because it is the bargaining agent for these companies. But they are in no sense under the umbrella of this measure. They have their own agreement, although there may be matters in common. Their agreements exist in separate compartments and we do not trespass into them with this measure.

Clause 5 agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. O'Connell moved the third reading of the bill.

• (2100)

[Translation]

Mr. Georges Valade (Saint-Marie): Mr. Speaker, before the adoption of the motion for third reading of this bill, I would like to say a few words.

As I was telling the House only yesterday, we are certainly very reluctant to have to pass this bill which, we hope, will bring about peace, stability and prosperity to the St. Lawrence ports and will permit longshoremen involved in this conflict to earn their living.

Mr. Speaker, while this bill was before the Committee of the Whole, I was surprised at the motion introduced by the NDP. We voted on this motion which was defeated. I voted with the majority and I feel I must explain why I voted against this amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows that we cannot re-open the debate concerning a question already put to the House.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I accept your remarks.

Before this bill is read the third time, I must say that the discussions we had today do not question the ability and the qualifications of the arbitrators who will be asked to decide upon the present litigations in connection with the situation prevailing now in the Quebec ports.

A while ago, Mr. Speaker, some remarks have been made during the debate on this bill to the effect that the government had delayed its decision in order to find another solution to that conflict.

I must remind the House that not so long ago—and I am surprised it took the government so much time to introduce a bill—when the country was almost paralyzed by striking air traffic controllers, barely 24 hours after work stopped the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) said something to the effect that if the strike was not settled within a matter of hours, the government would consider introducing special legislation.

We passed a bill on second reading today; that proves the need for the government to act, in view of the seriousness of the problem. Were the strike to continue much longer, its effects on the ports would be disastrous.

An hon. member—I believe it was the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer)—asked about the harm done to the ports. He also asked the minister if his department had made a study of some kind to know the real extent of the harm caused by the work stoppage.

Mr. Speaker, obviously that work stoppage has done great harm, from the point of view of the economic future of the port of Montreal as well as to the life of the people involved in this conflict. I believe this bill was warranted and will serve the purpose it has in view, namely to settle the conflict. I think it is appropriate to say that as the representative of a constituency that is especially affected by this strike as it is in the geographical ambit of the port of Montreal and because I know many of the people caught in this conflict and I am in contact with them all the time, I must say that most of the longshoremen I have seen and who came to me for advice were really anxious to go back to work.

The special legislation will not be considered as a punitive measure but as one to bring order, to straighten out things in the ports, to enable the longshoremen to go back to work, to earn a livelihood for their family and provide for a better economic future for the three ports concerned, especially that of Montreal.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, had you had been present during the discussion in committee of the whole you would have heard me do all I could to persuade the minister to amend one of the clauses of the bill. Despite the fact that I was unsuccessful, it still remains necessary for this Parliament and for every Member of Parliament, in my opinion, to support the bill so that the expression conveyed to both sides to the dispute in the three ports concerned is a unanimous expression of the will not only of this Parliament but of the people of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I regret, as I know the minister does, that the two parties to the dispute, the union as well as management, acted in a way which made it necessary for Parliament to take this action. It would have been much better for Canada and much better for the welfare of the people concerned in the ports, as well as much better for the welfare oflabour relations in Canada, if the union and management had lived within the collective agreement they had signed and set an example of the kind of industrial relations a modern civilized society ought to have.

It is a great pity they continued on their obstinate course for eight weeks, causing a great deal of harm to themselves, to the employers on one side, the members of the union on the other and to the communities concerned. As the minister rightly said earlier—I am not quoting him, but I got the sense of what he said—this caused a great deal of harm to the notion of industrial relations and collective bargaining and the value, strength and application of collective agreements.

It is, therefore, not with a light heart that we support this bill. I am sure I also speak for all members of this House. I am certain I heard the minister say that is the way he feels about it. It is not with a light heart that we support this bill, but because in our view, and I hope in the view of every member of this Parliament, the impasse created by the obstinacy of the two parties at these three ports has to be broken for the benefit of the country as well as for the benefit of labour relations. This bill is the only agency which can break that impasse and therefore it was inevitable and necessary even though the need for the action is regrettable.

I think the time has come to vote on third reading stage. I hope we are able to pass this bill tonight so that it can go to the Senate—I am getting tired of saying "the other place" and be dealt with so it can come into force as soon as possible and work may resume at the three ports, I hope not later than next Monday, even though it may have to begin in a small way.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I shall not take any more of the time of the House except to repeat that I am sorry this action was made necessary by the behaviour of the parties. I hope with all my heart—I repeat the appeal I made yesterday—that the management and the members of the union will obey this law without cavil, without hesitation and without creating an even more difficult situation than the one with which Parliament is now faced. I am sure they will, as Canadians, and I know that if that happens Parliament will have done the right thing in adopting this bill.

• (2110)

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have not participated in the debate so far but I want to make a few remarks now. I note that the hon. member who sits behind me thinks that so long as someone from his party has spoken, anybody else should shut up. That is their attitude. They have had their say and everybody else should be quiet. However, I will say that I deplore the fact that this Parliament has had to engage in another example of scrambling "ad hockery", because that is what this bill is.

When we were considering Bill C-183 I made several speeches to emphasize what I consider to be one of the greatest gaps in the Canada Labour Code, and I reemphasize to the government that the biggest gap is that there is no provision to take care of the public interest. As the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) said, the public interest in this case overrode the interest of management and of collective bargaining.

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The individuals over there who sit like crows on a fence and shout "Sit down" should make a contribution other than sitting in their place. But they do not. All they do is delay this matter further, because we will have our say.

As I said, the biggest difficulty that faces the country insofar as labour relations are concerned is that there is nothing here that permits the government to act when the greater public interest is being pushed aside or suppressed. We had the example of Parliament sitting right up to the eve of Christmas because of the strike of airline mechanics. The same sort of thing occurred when electronics workers in the public service were holding to ransom the greater public interest.

Some people ask, "Are you going to impose compulsory arbitration?" What is this but compulsory arbitration? This is forcing people back to work. Parliament, after it is pushed and prodded, takes action far too late. Millions of dollars are lost to the dockers and to their employers and the economic future of the port of Montreal is placed in great jeopardy.

I was amazed at the temperance of my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander), in his criticism of the government. He was very moderate in his criticism of the minister. He should have climbed over there with spurs to deal with the government which, quite frankly, has been very lax and very slow in dealing with this matter. I support my colleague, the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade), who suggested that what should apply in a strike of this kind is a mandatory secret ballot. I understand that the secret ballot was used in two of the ports, certainly in the port of Quebec, and there was less trouble there. There is certainly far less trouble when there is a secret ballot, and in matters of this kind it is mandatory that it be a supervised ballot: the public interest demands that.

This bill does not impose any penalties for non-compliance. Someone asked why these should be necessary because penalties are already provided in the Criminal Code. We saw in this morning's press that some penalties have been imposed with regard to this dispute. But how were they applied? They were applied under a very contentious provision in the law, namely, contempt of court. I know that organized labour does not like the provision of contempt of court, but we are relying on that and I think it is a very shaky base. The Criminal Code also deals with the individual. It seems to me that in this legislation, or in the labour code, penalties should be defined far more clearly in respect of union organizations or employers of organized labour so that if in the public interest action must be taken, it is spelled out and everybody knows what it is.

It seems to me that this debate has been an exercise of two days which should not have taken place. I am not assessing blame to one side or the other: I suppose that both sides are to blame. But I do complain because Parliament has had to engage in what I call a scramble of "ad hockery". This may happen more frequently during this year. That is not the way to deal with this type of labour dispute. I am hopeful that everybody will have some sense now and that they will repair as quickly as possible the grave economic damage that has occurred to a section of the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I would feel guilty if I did not say a few words concerning the bill now before us. We did not participate in the debate in the Committee of the whole, presented any argument nor discussed the amendments which were moved, because we considered that this government was entirely right.

Mr. Speaker, as many other people, we want a prosperous, live and progressive economy. We have also felt that the unions had carried things too far, and when this happens, somebody must call them to order. It therefore rested with the government to restore order. The situation prevailing in the ports has caused heavy damages to the Canadian economy but they are rather difficult to assess.

We appreciate what the government has done in that connection. It was high time it intervened to settle that conflict which should not have lasted so long. It should have been settled well before today. In my opinion, the government has given all possible freedom to enable the two parties to come to an understanding before intervening. And as I said a while ago, when things have gone too far, someone must restore order and intervene. It was the duty of the government to assume its responsibilities.

I should like to express all my admiration for the Minister who has so ably stated the whole case, defended this bill and taken his responsibilities. This is why we did not participate in this debate, but are 100 per cent behind the government in this case.

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURES TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (p. 3655).

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, this is a piece of legislation about which no one can be happy. We have observed that the minister himself has become increasingly unhappy with it. As a matter of fact, listening to him on certain broadcasts he seemed really desperate in his stridency, trying to apologize for the legislation. Social workers across the country are not happy about this legislation. The opposition parties, for various reasons, are not happy about it. The one million mothers from whom family allowances will be withdrawn are not happy about it. Taxpayers who have really studied the matter are not happy about it. With all these people unhappy and worried about this family allowance bill, one is driven to inquire why the government introduced a bill of this type.

The government took a long time to get around to it. The government examined the matter and introduced variations of this bill. Finally it reached the tail end of this session and, with great reluctance, the government introduced the bill knowing that nearly all the people concerned feel miserable about it. If all this is the case, why has the government sought to push through this legislation at this stage? It is for the sole and simple reason that the government is unwilling to deal with the question of poverty in the way in which it should be dealt with; it is unwilling to take the type of measures which should be taken if poverty is to be eliminated.

The government is unwilling to face up to the need for a proper quaranteed income plan, a plan whereby people are quaranteed jobs and can make a living according to their abilities. Above all, the government is unwilling to introduce a fair system of taxation by which it could pay for such measures.

This is a crummy piece of legislation, a crummy way of dealing with family allowances. It is unworthy and inadequate no matter what way you look at it. In fact, what the legislation is doing is taking advantage of the desperation of poor people in order to appeal to the sympathy of other elements to get this thing passed. It is an inadequate thing; it is unfair; it is unjust; it is a poor piece of planning. Yet the government is leaning on other sections of the population by appealing to the desperation of the poor people who need more money.

There is no doubt that poor people need more money, and the government is telling the poor people that this is the only way they can get more money at this time. The government has gone to the anti-poverty organizations, to people on low incomes, and said, "This is your only chance for more income." Naturally, people who are on social assistance, people in low income brackets, are frightened silly. In turn they say, "If this is the only way the government will give us any more revenue, then we have to pass this bill." They have sent desperate wires to all members of this House urging us not to stand in the way of their getting more money at this time. I think that is completely unworthy of the government.

The government is counting on people outside this House not knowing the facts. It is telling them that this is the only way to get started on a guaranteed income scheme. Mr. Speaker, this is as far from a guaranteed income scheme as is the city of Ottawa from Timbuctoo. It has nothing to do with a guaranteed income scheme. The principle of a guaranteed income scheme is the establishment of a definite income floor below which nobody will be allowed to fall. This bill is a handout, a pittance to the poor: it has no resemblance at all to a guaranteed income scheme. This is no way to get started on a guaranteed income scheme. In fact, this is a way of avoiding putting a guaranteed income scheme into operation. It is an obstacle in the way of facing up to a guaranteed income scheme.

If you look at the areas which are desperate to get this legislation passed, they are the areas where there are people who desperately need money. The government has turned a deaf ear and a blind eye to them in their poverty, and they see this bill as their one remaining chance. What the government is not telling the poor is probably more important still. It is not telling poor people that under this proposed scheme the new levels of payments cannot be made for at least a year. When the minister introduced this scheme he was confident that the new rates would come into force this summer. But as his officials began to experiment with the procedures necessary to make the legislation effective, they found that the appalling processes of red tape and the complications of administration were putting the legislation farther and farther away from coming into operation. Today the departmental officials tell us that it will be at least a year before the bill can come into operation. That is something which the government is not telling poor people. It is not telling them that their desperation for more money must continue for at least another year.

[Mrs. MacInnis.]

Further, it is not telling them that the new schedule of payments will not even have the buying power of a 1945 family allowance cheque. Between July, 1945, and September, 1971, the consumer price index rose to 230.7. This means that the family allowance for a child 11 years of age should have risen from $7 per month in July, 1945, to $16.15 in September, 1971. Instead, under this bill a child of 11 will get only $15, and only if it is a single child and the family income is less than $4,500.

A family with a working wife will be penalized. If a husband is making $4,000 a year and his wife supplements his income by a mere $1,000, and they have only one child, then the baby bonus will decrease. This new scheme is not only a pittance to the poor; it is a guarantee that they will lose all incentive to work their way out of the trap of poverty. That is what this baby bonus amounts to.

• (2130)

This government is not telling the poor that in this legislation there is no protection against the provinces cutting off their social assistance by the amount that this family allowance would raise it. There is no protection in this legislation to ensure that poor families will get the full amount. The provinces are perfectly free under this legislation to cut down the allowance for social assistance by the amount that this family allowance would have increased it. Let me point out what this means in practice. Recently I received a letter from some poor people in the city of Calgary, the Anti-Poverty Organization, who wrote:

> The bill provides for a redistribution of family allowance payments. Poorer families will receive an increase in family allowance. Because of the increase in moneys involved, there is a proposal that family allowance now be treated as an income, and income tax be paid. In certain areas we feel this to be fair and just. But in other areas, it is not. Particularly when a family is forced, by circumstance, to subsist on social assistance.
> Traditionally, the family allowance payments have never been viewed as income. Therefore, they have been exempt from being so considered by welfare agencies and have not been deducted from assistance cheques. Should they be now viewed as an income they will be deducted. In simple mathematics this might mean that a woman with six children today receives a total of $40 from family allowance per month. Her monthly social assistance maximum cheque might possibly be $275. This gives her an actual cash flow of $310. This is true under present administrative policies. Yet, with an increase payment scaled to her over-all income, this mother may now (under Bill C-264) receive about $160 monthly from family allowance. Viewed as an income it then would be deducted from the $275 social assistance cheque; she would now get $160 in family allowance and $125 in social assistance for a total of $275.

In other words, in Edmonton or Calgary she now gets a total of $310 but when this bill goes through there is nothing in the world to stop officials cutting her, with her six children, down to $275. I raised this point in committee on May 24, 1972, when the matter came up and I should like to quote from the proceedings so that people will see what the government is not telling them. At page 9:21 I said:

> I want to know whether any attempt has been made to ensure that in any discussions with the provinces that when the people get this family allowance legislation, that people in social assistance families getting this amount will not be taken off the rates that are set for social assistance. Have there been discussions with the provinces on this? I know in my own province there would be very great danger that in getting the social assistance rates this particular form of income would be taken into account and deducted from what otherwise would be given.

The minister replied:

There have been discussions to the degree that I have expressed to the provinces when we have talked about this principle of selectivity and getting larger benefits to those in the lower income groups the hope that it would not be deducted dollar for dollar from social assistance levels that are now being paid to families in Canada. It seemed to me that I received protestations from many social welfare ministers that this would not be the case. They would not do this.

I pressed the minister still further and he replied:

That is the only way you can do it. You can hope that that will not be the case. Provinces, as you know, have jurisdiction in this field in terms of the administration of social assistance, and we cannot tell them what to do. We can only hope that they will not do it. So I can only express my own view, I do not think they will do it.

I then pointed out that when dealing with the province of Quebec the minister went throught the whole painful negotiation to ensure that certain points would be observed in the legislation in order to suit that province. I said I could not see, if he could go through the process of negotiation with the province of Quebec in order to get certain guarantees, why he could not go through the process of negotiation with other provinces. He should make sure that the full amount that was being given under the new family allowance would go straight to those people on social assistance for whom it was intended, and that it would not be cut off by the provincial authorities in setting the social assistance rates. The minister insisted that this could not be done and that he was hoping the authorities would not do it in the provinces.

Yesterday in a statement the minister pointed out that in the case of the old age pension the regulations under the Canada Assistance Plan had been altered so that the provincial authorities could deduct those rates. I am pointing out that it is only a matter of time until the provincial authorities also cut down the family allowance to the point where the people might as well not get it. The government is not telling the poor people that they are completely unprotected, as far as Ottawa is concerned, in the new family allowance rate. In my view this is not honest and it is not playing fair with the people for whom this legislation was designed.

Another thing they are not telling the poor people is that this legislation means perpetual paperwork on their part. Every time a child moves from below age 12 to above age 12 a report has to be made. Every time a child moves beyond age 17 a report has to be made to the authorities. Every time a child is born there is a report to the authorities. Every time a child dies there is a report to the authorities. Every time there is a change in the family income there is a report to the authorities. Every time a wife goes out to work for income there is a report to the authorities. Every time a husband goes on unemployment insurance there is a report to the authorities. What is being added to the arthritis of government procedures? We are getting a Saint Vitus's dance of administrative complexities added, making this into a complete mess.

Mr. Hellyer: Hear, hear!

Mrs. MacInnis: I think this is the height of dishonesty when it comes to dealing with people, particularly the most vulnerable element of the population. Above all, what the government is not telling the people is that in order to get this pittance for the poor it was completely unnecessary to replace a good, universal plan. We in this party have an amendment and we have been prepared to compromise by placing one amendment now before the House. We have said, "All right; you are insisting that you cannot do this in the right way, so keep the universal family allowance for everybody and then add for the poor people the new amounts. If you are serious about the poor people needing this, and if you will not do anything else, then our amendment says keep the universal scheme and add on the amounts for the poor people who qualify." But the government will not accept that amendment either. We appeal to them to accept it if they will not accept anything else.

I want to make a last appeal to the minister. It is a very serious thing to wreck this universal scheme that we have had. There are only two things wrong with it. First of all, the amounts are away out of line with what they should be. There is another thing that the government is not telling the people, Mr. Speaker. There is no escalation clause in the family allowance scheme such as has appeared in legislation for veterans and old people.

• (2140)

The inflationary factors that are working against all the people will work against those being paid benefits under this plan. What is wrong with the legislation is that the amounts provided are far too small and there are no provisions for escalating them as living costs rise. Also, no attempt is made to distribute the burden fairly. Taxation will not fall most heavily on those who can best bear it. Actually, a great many families that are being taxed to provide moneys for family allowances will never get any. The million mothers who are to be denied benefits will pay for this measure in taxes. As I say, they will not get any benefits at all.

This plan is a far, far cry from the plan of 1944. The Liberal government of the day then introduced the universal family allowance scheme. They were proud they had introduced it and held their heads high, even though they had been prodded from behind by the party I support. They were proud because the principles underlying that legislation were good. The government recognized that families with children had special needs. That was no attempt at dealing with poverty in any sort of bad way because the payments were directed to all the mothers of this country. We recognized that they were doing a service for Canada and we were prepared to help them perform that service.

I have met university graduates in the last little while who have told me that it was family allowances saved over the years which helped to pay for their education. That, of course, was part of the original intent. We also intended to ensure a greater measure of equality for all children in this country. We intended to help ensure an adequate income for social insurance and social assistance recipients with children while at the same time avoiding grants that would diminish incentives to work. Further, we intended to create a substantial program for maintaining high levels of income and employment in the post-war period. This program worked well for years.

As I suggested, if the minister had been content to increase payments and bring them into line with today's living costs, if he had included an escalation clause to take care of future developments and had introduced a fair taxation scheme to be implemented either by way of general taxation or special, selective taxation as the Canadian Council on Social Development proposed, we would not harbour sad or unhappy thoughts about this legislation. That, however, has not been done.

Furthermore, we now see this universal scheme going the way of the former old age pension universal scheme. Again I say, the million mothers who will not get benefits will feel keenly the injustice of their position. Remember, the Royal Commission on the Status of Women recommended increased family allowances, as has committee after committee and commission after commission in this country. They said we should not withdraw family allowances from some but, rather, should increase them for all.

Carrying out the program will be an administrative nightmare. Altogether, this will be a ghastly failure. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) predicted some time ago, I too predict that it will not be many years before this government—or, what is more likely, the government that will succeed it—will look with shame at this type of allowance as being completely unworthy of the families, households and firesides of this country. Then they will say, "What in the world were they thinking of in 1972?"

We are living in a rich country. We are boasting every year of our increasing gross national product, of our increase in productivity. We boast of our standing among the nations of the world. Practically all nations which call themselves civilized have adopted universal family allowance schemes. But Canada is going back and joining the underdeveloped countries in this regard. I am ashamed of that and I feel sure that in his heart the minister shares that feeling of shame. He, too, is disappointed.

With these words, I again appeal to the minister to look again at this program. It is not too late to change. Often at the last minute people have drawn back and changed their minds. History has shown that they had the courage to do what their conscience dictated. They came through the immediate ordeal and were looked on as men of courage and vision.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, whether or not the revival of Bill C-170 will bring about the desired results will depend on the attitude of all Members of Parliament towards its objectives, which are to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children. I see no purpose in repeating again the many weaknesses and inequities in the bill. My main purpose in speaking on the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is to remind all hon. members that, while we procrastinate in continuous debate on the bill, hundreds of thousands of Canadian children are being denied the increased benefits provided for under the bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), who I realize feels very strongly that the bill is acceptable in its present form, has shown a stubborn attitude in not accepting some amendments which my party introduced during the report stage and which would have improved the bill. It is obvious now that he will not relent and accede to these requests. For example, Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why the official opposition's amendment to have cheques made out to mothers was not acceptable, since we would only be repeating what was contained in the old Family Allowances Act. Neither can I see the reasoning behind the government's refusal to accept an amendment which would only fulfil a commitment made by the government under Bill C-264, namely, that increases in benefits would be payable as of May 1, 1972. Although I have repeated this many times, I will continue to repeat it: the government made a promise to the families involved and they failed to keep that promise. The promise was that whenever this bill became law the government would owe Canadians who qualified some $13 million a month since May 1, 1972.

Another serious fault is that the minister has failed to ensure that provinces will not include income under FISP and set that off against social assistance. Unless remedial action is taken before FISP is enacted, the provisions of the Canada Assistance Plan could undermine completely the stated objectives of FISP, which are to fight poverty. The problem, in a nutshell, is that under the Canada Assistance Plan the provinces are perfectly entitled to lower their rates of welfare assistance to families in proportion to the higher family allowance payments that these families will be receiving when FISP becomes law.

Under section 2(b)(iii) of the Canada Assistance Plan there is provision that the provinces, in determining the degree of need and in making arrangements for social assistance to applicants for welfare, shall take into account all income maintenance payments made through unemployment insurance, old age pension security payments, the Canada Pension Plan and guaranteed income supplement schemes. However, it is optional for the provinces to take into account family allowances and other schemes. This is a decision for each individual province to make.

Certainly, not one of the provinces calculates family allowance payments as income for purposes of social assistance. However, it is entirely possible that when the new, higher benefits to poorer families are paid after FISP becomes law, some provinces may start to include FISP as part of the welfare applicant's income and will lower family social assistance payments correspondingly. It is especially likely that the poorer provinces which have long felt hard pressed by the inflexible 50-50 cost-sharing arrangement entered into with the federal government under the Canada Assistance Plan will unfortunately feel compelled to make such a revision.

Family allowances seem to be making some headway in dealing with regional and individual poverty, but this problem threatens to erode the gains made unless agreement is reached between the two governments. I hope that in the time available to the minister he will ensure that arrangements are made and agreements are reached with the provinces.

Another matter that has not been mentioned so far is the appeal procedure. This should be revamped. The plans for appeal under a new FISP, clause 11 of Bill C-264, are for a government-appointed, government-run tribunal to hear complaints about receipt and amounts of benefits. To ensure that the appeal procedure is conducted in a fair and just manner the tribunal established to hear appeals should instead be quite independent of the government and should not be merely another subsection of the government.

Many members who spoke in the various phases of the debate have pointed out other weaknesses in the bill, but at no time has there been a satisfactory explanation as to how the government will deal with drastic changes in income each year for citizens such as fishermen, farmers and independent truckers. The income floor will be based on the previous year's income. Let me give an example of a fisherman who qualifies for the maximum benefits during a bad fishing year. In the second year he might have a reasonable income. This might put him over the basic income floor. After the fishing season he may find that, based on his income, he will not qualify for that year. In the third season he might have another bad year with little or no income. He may have to resort to unemployment insurance or even welfare. This means that fisherman would have to repay the government for the previous year's benefits when it would be impossible for him to do so, even with the fancy computers available to figure this out for the government. What will this fisherman do?

My concern is that while this bill has dragged on, we have failed to realize the intent, that is, to provide increases in benefits to those with children who are on the no-income or low-income scale. No one seems to be particularly concerned that while we procrastinate, at this very moment hundreds of thousands of children are suffering from malnutrition because of lack of proper food. At this very moment thousands of Canadian children do not have a decent bed on which to sleep. They huddle for warmth in corners of substandard homes, cold and miserable, because the government has failed to provide decent housing for Canadians.

No one seems to want to realize that at this very moment thousands of parents in this country are sacrificing their health from undernourishment in order to give a little extra to their children because governments have failed to provide for them. These parents sit and wonder why we, who are supposed to provide them with care when they are unable to do so, have failed over the years to deal effectively with poverty when, as everyone admits, this should be the most prosperous country in the world.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Does the House agree to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

[English]

TRANSPORT—LEASING OF UNITED STATES BOXCARS TO MOVE GRAIN—PURCHASE OF ADDITIONAL HOPPER CARS BY RAILWAYS

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on April 21 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) a question relating to the leasing of United States boxcars for the handling of grain. The minister informed me that the CNR was leasing boxcars. I asked a supplementary question concerning the fact that the CNR was spending millions of dollars on building flat cars in Montreal while we needed hopper cars for the movement of western grain. The minister said he would look into the matter and deal with the subject when talking with officials of the CNR at a future date.

The situation in terms of hopper cars has changed somewhat since that time, in the sense that the government has decided to build about 2,000 hopper cars to meet the needs of moving western grain and leasing them through the Canadian Wheat Board. I and other members have asked the government on a number of occasions to impress upon the railroads the need of putting hopper cars into service for the movement of grain. I am pleased to see that this has been done. There is some question about whether or not the Wheat Board, in providing the cars for the government, is in some way subsidizing the railways. I do not wish to get into that question tonight.

Since this may well be the second last day before adjourning for the summer, I want to point out that there are still a number of key problems with regard to the grain movement in the west. I propose to present some of these problems in the hope that the government will look at them even though the House may tomorrow adjourn for the summer. On several occasions I have brought a real problem to the attention of the Minister of Transport and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board. It is that at CNR delivery points in the province of Saskatchewan, particularly at nine delivery points in southern Saskatchewan, there has been a real shortage of grain doors. One quite accomplished writer for the Globe and Mail asked what is a grain door. You can have all the boxcars you want at a delivery point, but if you do not have a grain door to put in the boxcar you can not move the grain from the delivery point.

The CNR, which has a public responsibility because it is a public corporation, at one time this spring had 40,000 grain doors in a warehouse in Saskatoon. They were unaware of the fact they were supposed to be repairing them to be used at delivery points in Saskatchewan. That kind of lack of priority by the CNR has to be taken care of for the benefit of farmers trying to meet their quotas, as well as for the benefit of the grain buyer at the local delivery point so that he is not sitting up all night preparing grain doors instead of loading the boxcars. Some hon. members who are not from the west may not find that important, but it is pretty basic to moving grain that you have proper grain doors at the shipping points.

The other problem at the shipping points is the condition of the boxcars which the railways send back after having been to the terminals at Vancouver. It takes many hours to repair them. That is coupled with the problem of terminating quotas. Members from the west are aware that there is some need for terminating quotas in order to meet our commitment and the present demands of our foreign markets. The terminating quota has created some difficulty because at particular delivery points farmers cannot get their grains into the elevator because of problems such as boxcar allocation. Because of the terminating dates they lose their quota in moving, for example, 2CW Durum wheat. They can lose their quota because the boxcars have not been allocated.

As this may be the second last day of this Parliament, I hope the ministers involved will give serious consideration to the extension of quotas, particularly in situations where the farmers are unable to meet their quotas because of boxcar allocations. Further, representatives of the Wheat Board stated before the newly-formed Senate committee on agriculture, of which the former member for Assiniboia is chairman, that they would take the question of the extension of the quotas into consideration. I hope they will do so, having given this undertaking.

There are other aspects which must concern us in relation to the movement of western grain. For example, there are the experiments which have been going on at the inland terminals. I trust that the information forthcoming from these activities will be made available not only to western producers who, incidentally, may well be paying for these experiments indirectly through the Wheat Board, but to all Members of Parliament and to the public at large.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a number of important and positive steps have been taken by this government to facilitate the movement of Canadian grain to market since the hon. member originally placed this question on the list for discussion at the time of adjournment several months ago. One of the questions the hon. member directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) during the question period of April 21 inquired as to the leasing by the railway companies of United States boxcars for grain handling. For the record, CNR leased 400 U.S. boxcars and CPR leased 760 at that time.

The hon. member also referred to the CNR boxcar building program. As he knows, tenders were put out for this work which will involve the construction of 700 boxcars. In addition, CN has initiated an upgrading program involving 2,800 boxcars of various types. This work is being done in CN shops in Winnipeg and Montreal. I am sure all grain producers welcomed the Prime Minister's announcement concerning the acquisition of 2,000 more hopper cars for the Canadian fleet. I am pleased to note the hon. member's recognition of this.

Mr. Prud'homme: He is applauding, you will notice.

Mr. Francis: These, with average use, will carry 150 million more bushels per year. This represents an increase in carrying capacity of 20 per cent and amounts to a major federal government undertaking on behalf of Canadian grain producers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—REQUEST THAT SHERBROOKE BE DESIGNATED AS SPECIAL AREA

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, on June 22, I asked a question to the hon. Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Marchand) in connection with the Sherbrooke area. I asked him whether Sherbrooke was going to be designated as a "special area", in view of the large number of very poor adjacent parishes located in this region.

My constituency is partly included in the Sherbrooke area; in view of the current economic situation, I urge the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to give the Sherbrooke region the status of "special area".

Since several destitute parishes in my region are within the Sherbrooke area from the point of view of the economy, I wonder whether it would not be possible to designate the city of Sherbrooke as a "special area". If not, I would like to make another suggestion to the hon. minister or to his parliamentary secretary.

Would it be possible for parishes in my riding to be detached from the Sherbrooke area? I think of the Scotstown parish which is quite destitute. There are many destitute parishes, but I take this one as an example. Formerly, a rather important industry was operating there employing 400 people. This industry has shut down and no other has been established in this municipality which is now deserted and deprived of everything. A visit there is nothing funny. It is part of the Sherbrooke area and nothing can be done for it.

I would like, if possible, that Sherbrooke become a "special area" encompassing all these municipalities, or alternatively that all parishes in the Compton riding be detached from Sherbrooke to become a "special area" since what happened to Scotstown is being repeated in many parishes in the riding.

Compton is one of the most destitute ridings of Canada. There are various places where something should be done. If we do not act, a number of municipalities would be forced to disappear.

The Lac-Mégantic municipality, where I live, is quite important. With a population of 8,000, it has no industries. A few small industries can be found, some of which operate at low speed. There are certainly great needs to be met.

The situation in the city of Coaticook where 8,000 or more people live, is also tragic. Although this municipality is a little more prosperous than Lac-Mégantic, it would certainly need other advantages for its development.

Before concluding, Mr. Speaker, I want to express the hope that it will be possible to consider the area in which I live and to meet my request that Sherbrooke become a designated area, or else, that the parishes of Compton be taken out of the Sherbrooke area to become a separate area, so that the population can take advantage of the act.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion—whose head is the indefatigable hon. member for Langelier (Mr. Marchand) who, as we know, spares no time or effort to try and eradicate economic disparities between regions—conducts several studies, in co-operation with the Quebec Planning and Development Board, concerning the potential for development of the Eastern Townships area.

A White Paper on development trends in the Eastern Townships area has also been prepared. This document has been prepared jointly by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Quebec Planning and Development Board, and the Regional Development Council.

However, even if studies and discussions are going well, the present "special areas" in Quebec having been designated up to June 30, 1973, the creation of a new "special area" cannot possibly be decided soon.

The hon. member will be happy to learn, however, that review of the policy and programs of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been undertaken. In this review, the whole matter of designated areas will be studied very carefully by the department.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—ALLEGED DELAY BY AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS IN RECALLING CARS WITH DEFECTIVE PARTS UNTIL WARRANTIES HAVE EXPIRED

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday I asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andras) whether his department was investigating cases of large companies, particularly automobile companies, which are possibly delaying recall notices because of defective parts until warranties or a large percentage of them have expired, having the effect of reducing the cost of replacing defective parts to the companies involved.

The reason for my question is a representation by a constituent in possession of a 1967 automobile. This man found he had a defective engine-mount part and subsequently learned by Canadian Press dispatch dated December 7, 1971, that General Motors had announced that the recall involved V-8 engines only. This was in regard to GM cars. It covered 1965 through 1969 regular sized Chevrolets and Novas as well as 1967 through 1969 regular sized Camaros and certain light trucks.

• (2210)

I understand from this release and articles appearing in various automotive publications that the recalled vehicles must still be covered by the General Motors' warranty. I understand there may be some confusion with regard to the extent to which they would be covered by the warranty. The person who contacted me informed me he received a letter on April 4, 1972, some four months after General Motors had announced it was recalling certain vehicles. That was after this person had made an inquiry of General Motors Corporation. I quote from the letter he received dated April 4, 1972:

> We would take this opportunity to explain that in the very near future, a letter will be sent to the owners of all 1967 Chevrolet automobiles involved in the engine mount recall, explaining the procedures to be followed for the installation of an engine restraint device.
> If the particular vehicle has exceeded the warranty limits, the inspection or replacement of any broken mounts will be the owner's expense, whereas the restraining device will be installed at no charge to the owner, regardless of time or mileage.

It seems to me this matter warrants investigation. I want to make clear I am not necessarily making charges against the automobile company involved; I am simply suggesting this is a case which warrants investigation, because it seems to me if the automobile company delays sending out recall notices it has the effect of reducing the liability of the automobile company in replacing the defective parts.

In this particular case I was informed by letter dated May 31 that this man had still not received his recall notice. That was almost six months after General Motors had issued its press release saying that these automobiles would be recalled. Thus, I think this is a matter which should be investigated by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I want to say I appreciate the response of the Minister when he said he was prepared to look into the matter. I wanted to take the time this evening to elaborate on the facts of the case.

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) on behalf of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Duquet) I would like to make it very clear that my answer is limited to the responsibility of automobile manufacturers where recalls are initiated.

Under section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act, manufacturers, importers or distributors of motor vehicles are required to give notification of any defects in the construction, design or functioning of motor vehicles or their components which affect or are likely to affect the safe operation of those vehicles and of which the manufacturers, distributors or importers are aware. This notification of defects must be given to dealers and to subsequent purchasers of the motor vehicle in a prescribed manner.

While the conditions of section 8 of the Motor Vehicle Safety Act are only applicable to vehicles after the act was proclaimed on January 1, 1971, manufacturers do by virtue of other legal obligations follow this practice rigidly with respect to vehicles which were produced prior to that date. Thus, the notification of safety defects or recall campaign procedure is not related to the period of warranty to the production. To the best of our knowledge, manufacturers have been accepting responsibility for the cost of correcting such defects where the problems have been related to the design or production methods and the length of warranty is not in question.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.18 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTES TO MR. SPEAKER

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to do so I would like to make reference on this, the last day of the session and probably of this Parliament, to the services rendered to Parliament and to freedom itself by you, Mr. Speaker, as the presiding officer during this and the previous Parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do so as one who has served under several Speakers. What I am about to say represents, I think, the views of all members of the House who have been greatly impressed by the manner in which you have discharged your responsibilities.

I recall on one occasion a former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, saying in the House:

> There are under British parliamentary institutions two symbols of authority—the Crown which speaks of the sovereignty of loyalty, the Speaker who speaks of the sovereignty of Parliament.

Much could be said, of you, Sir, all of which would be complimentary, but I can summarize what I have in mind by quoting from the translation of the Latin words on the throne that you occupy:

> An impartial hand is an aroma
>
> Mindful and faithful,
>
> A mind conscious of rectitude.

• (1110)

You have discharged your duties with consummate ability. You have combined authority with compassion. The degree of impartiality you have displayed in the discharge of your duties has been such that you will always be looked back on by the present and future generations in this House as one who, in his person, epitomized the finest traditions of the Speakership.

I add one word respecting your wife who in the discharge of her duties has done so with a consideration and regard for the office you are holding and together you have honoured this institution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I might begin by saying that, as with many of the words of the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, his words today are very thoughtful, very well said, very appropriate. But as often happens I cannot necessarily see myself agreeing with the premise, that is to say, that this is the last day of this Parliament. I concede that I have less experience than the right hon. gentleman in such forecasting games, and therefore I am—

Mr. Lewis: You lost last week.

Mr. Trudeau: As the hon. member says, I was not correct as to the date on which Parliament or this session might end. But because I have great confidence in the right hon. member's political acumen, I am at least prepared to concede the possibility of his premise—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: —and therefore find it appropriate to say on behalf of all members of our caucus that we have had constant admiration and respect for your authority, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

More particularly, although your talents as an orator are still unknown to most of us, your talents as Speaker are eminently visible. We have also been in a position, every day of this session, to see that we had good reason to respect your authority which was founded on a great deal of patience, much wisdom, an outstanding knowledge of parliamentary procedure and finally, on a sense of humour which always made us welcome your rulings even when they went against our wishes.

[English]

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the very long experience in Parliament that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) has but I have had a little longer than the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), although not very much. May I put it to you this way, Sir, that in my several years in Parliament I have often come to the conclusion that the sign of the real greatness of a Speaker is when the only people who occasionally become annoyed with him are ministers of the Crown.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be gilding the lily and uncomfortable and embarrassing to you if I went on at length. I say to you, Sir, that every one of my colleagues has had the greatest admiration not only for the manner in which you have carried out your duties but for the fairness and impartiality which you have always shown, for the dignity you have exhibited throughout, a dignity that, to your great distress, you were not able to get from the members of the House on occasion.

I also join the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert in expressing my admiration of Madame Lamoureux and her companionship to you in your duties.

Tribute to Mr. Speaker

Some of us in my party at least, and I believe in other parties, had hoped that the admiration in which you have been held as Speaker would have persuaded everybody in the House to create a situation whereby you could continue as Speaker without having to fight elections on a partisan basis. I regret that this has not been done. I hope it may still be done, whether or not this is the last day of Parliament.

When we adjourn today, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that all of us will return to our constituencies with a feeling of admiration, respect and, what is perhaps more important, very deep affection for you as a person and as Speaker of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my Créditiste colleagues, I join the spokesmen of the other parties in expressing our admiration and thanking you for all that you have done for us in the past. I want to praise you not only for your fairness but also for your fine performance. May I thank you on behalf of the Canadian people, especially my constituents. I wholeheartedly agree with the kind words said about you and while voicing again our admiration, I wish you a long life and hope that you will again be with us at the next session.

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, perhaps you would permit me, as your seatmate and as deputy leader of the independent group that sits in this corner of the House, to associate myself with the words that have been spoken by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker), the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the leaders of the other parties.

As a person who has had the pleasure of sitting in this House for many years I have come to respect and appreciate the wonderful contribution that you have made to this House and to the traditions that it embodies. It is not an easy task that you have filled so very well. It is a lonely position. Yet you have managed somehow to be kind but at the same time to be fair, to be gentle but at the same time to be just. This is a great tribute to you.

May I join in this expression of appreciation to you and to Madame Lamoureux who has stood by your side and who in her own right has made a very great contribution to the affairs of this country. May we wish you well, and health and happiness in the knowledge that you hold our respect and affection for the contribution you have made.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will have noted that today I have not complained of the length of speeches.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Actually, I held back a little wondering whether there would be more contributors to the debate. If there are none, I will deliver a ruling. It will be a very simple one.

The words of praise that have just been spoken leave me speechless, which is obviously a very proper attitude for the Speaker. I will, therefore, simply say from the bottom of my heart a very sincere thank you to hon. members. I want to assure them of my appreciation not only for the much too generous words that have just been spoken but also for the extraordinary co-operation they have extended to me during my term of office as Speaker of the House of Commons.

• (1120)

We all know, of course, that the Speaker cannot discharge his responsibilities in this House without the complete co-operation of hon. members, without their understanding, tolerance and charity. This has been given to me in large measure. For this I am extremely grateful to hon. members.

[Translation]

I thank you, dear colleagues, for your unfailing generosity to me and I wish you all good luck.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

VETERANS AFFAIRS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion for concurrence in the third report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: As there appears to be agreement, the hon. member will be recognized for the purpose of presenting that motion.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Matane (Mr. De Bané):

That the third report of the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs, presented to the House on Monday, June 26, 1972, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

MANPOWER

PROPOSED SUPPLEMENTARY WORK PROGRAMS—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing importance. My motion is as follows:

That this House urges the Prime Minister to rise now, on motions, and outline to the House and to the country the four part supplementary work program which the government had ready for presentation in early June, but has put off the announcement until early September, comprising—

1. A Canada Manpower Opportunities Program, to cost between $70 and $80 million in the first year, and to be operated by the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

2. An Opportunities for Citizens Program, to cost $120 million the first year, and to be operated by the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. Peters: What is the hon. member reading, a throne speech?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: I continue:

3. Operation Retrieval—An operation aimed at reversing the brain drain to other countries, designed to appeal to youth, and to be operated by the Department of the Secretary of State.

4. New Horizons for the Aged, to be operated by the Department of National Health and Welfare.

The total cost of these programs to be between one quarter and one half billion dollars in the first year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate at this point to suggest to the hon. member that he should indicate as briefly as possible what the motion is to be. I am not sure, actually, whether he is now presenting the motion to the House or whether this is a preliminary statement. If it is a preliminary statement I would hope he has reached the point where the motion could be indicated.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have just about reached the punch line.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is the "punch" motion that the hon. member ought to read.

Mr. Hees: I continue. This program should be announced now so that the people of Canada may be advised of its nature and scope. The purpose of withholding its announcement until September is to maximize its usefulness for the election, and is blatantly political.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Trudeau: You botched that one, George.

Mr. Speaker: Without commenting on the procedural aspects of the matter, I may say that hon. members have heard the motion proposed by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

[Translation]

This motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has heard, as I have, that there is not unanimous consent.

HEALTH

STATEMENT RESPECTING CONTINUANCE OF FEDERAL FISCAL CONTRIBUTIONS UNDER MEDICAL CARE ACT

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement to the House with regard to the medical care program. Its purpose is simply to give notice, as required, under the statute.

Section 8 of the Medical Care Act obliges the government of Canada, at least six months before March 31, 1973, to review the amount and manner of payment of the federal fiscal contributions made under section 3 of the Act with a view to formulating proposals for any changes that may appear to be necessary or desirable with respect to the amount and manner of payment. This review has been conducted in the context of discussions with the provinces of the federal government's proposals in respect of health care financing.

I wish to state that the government does not propose any change at this time in the amount or manner of payment of the federal contributions referred to in section 3 of the Medical Care Act outside of the context of these discussions. The proposals under consideration, if implemented, would replace the existing formulae under both the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services and Medical Care Acts.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, as far as I am aware we had no notice that the minister was going to make this statement. That being the case, there will be no comment at the moment.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the minister has not given us very much information but what he has given us causes me a good deal of concern. What the minister is really saying is that he is notifying the provinces that, while there may be no changes at the present time, the government does intend to discontinue the present financial arrangement and negotiate some new arrangement.

Certainly the discussions that have been going on with the provinces indicate that the federal government intends to reduce the basis of its contributions. They also indicate that the federal government, instead of paying roughly 50 per cent of the cost, would prefer some new formula which would place a larger share of the cost of health insurance upon the provinces. While some provinces of Canada might be able to carry a larger share, there are parts of the country where an additional burden placed upon the provinces will mean that hospital insurance and medicare, as we understand them, will no longer be within the financial capacity of the provinces to carry.

I hope that before very long the minister will make a much more definitive statement as to the federal government's intentions with regard to its contribution to these health insurance programs.

TRADE

EFFECT OF USE OF UNITED STATES DISC PROGRAM BY AUTOMOBILE COMPANIES—REQUEST FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT TO MOVE MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion under Standing Order 43. The motion arises out of the recent revelation that the Chrysler Corporation in the United States, in addition to the Ford Motor Company, is exporting cars into Canada under DISC in clear violation of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement. Similar action could well be taken by General Motors with the production of 1973 models later this summer.

The government is permitting a complete undermining of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement, thus jeopardizing the future job security of thousands of Canadians and facilitating a complete turnabout in the multimillion dollar Canada-U.S. automotive trade. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters):

That this House condemns the government for its complete failure to take action which will ensure that violations of the Canada-U.S. automotive agreement cease.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: The motion cannot be put.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA INDIANS' CLAIM TO TITLE TO CERTAIN LAND AND COMPENSATION FOR LOSS OF BENEFIT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It arises out of the visit of the British Columbia Indians and their meeting with the Prime Minister of one day ago. Does the Prime Minister recognize the principle of the claim of the British Columbia Indians to title to British Columbia land and, therefore, to compensation for loss of benefit from that land since there are no treaties covering that area?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat to the hon. member and the House the comments I made to the Indian bands and their chiefs yesterday, that they had presented the government with a long, documented brief, and it would take some time before the government, assisted by the Minister of Justice who was present during the presentation yesterday, would be in a position to respond to that brief.

• (1130)

Mr. Yewchuk: Bearing in mind this presentation by the Indians of British Columbia of a claim based on title, can the Prime Minister tell us whether a new body will be set up to deal with it or whether the present claims commissioner, Dr. Barber, will be asked to deal with the problem?

Mr. Trudeau: Commissioner Barber would not, I believe, be the one to deal with this type of presentation. It was not made to him; the brief itself, I believe, largely ignores the existence of Dr. Barber. This was a presentation made to the government, and it is the government itself which will have to study the brief and respond to it.

Mr. Yewchuk: Can the Prime Minister state whether he would favour a settlement of the British Columbia claim similar to the one which was made in Alaska by the United States government?

Mr. Trudeau: This was also mentioned in the brief; indeed, it was elaborated upon in a large section of the brief. As for the rest of the brief, I would have to study the arguments which were made before I could respond.

INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF TERMS OF REFERENCE OF CLAIMS COMMISSIONER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the terms of reference under which Lloyd Barber, the Indian Claims Commissioner, is working have been extended by the government since his appointment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in the terms of reference of Dr. Barber. However, some correspondence has been exchanged between Dr. Barber and myself. He was asking whether under his present terms of reference he could hear the Indian people make a certain manner of presentation. My answer was that I did not see that this would contravene the terms of reference as laid down in the Order in Council.

Mr. Orlikow: Is the Prime Minister aware that all the Indian organizations have taken the view that until the government gives some indication that it is prepared to consider their aboriginal claims there is no point in making submissions to Dr. Barber? Would the Prime Minister consider making an early statement with regard to this question so that Dr. Barber's mission may not be completely aborted?

Mr. Trudeau: The letter I wrote to Dr. Barber is one which I have authorized him to make public. I believe the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development has also made it public. In my opinion this met a large part of the problem. Not only have presentations been made before Dr. Barber but some awards, some recommendations, have been made by Dr. Barber. I should like to refer all parties in the House to the support they gave to the government's policy when it was brought in in 1969. I would remind them they all said that it was a very good policy except that it came a bit too late.

MANPOWER

PROPOSED SUPPLEMENTARY WORK PROGRAMS—TIME OF ANNOUNCEMENT—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to announce, and, if so, when it intends to announce, the various programs to which reference was made earlier today, such as the manpower opportunities program, the opportunities for senior citizens program and the opportunities for citizens program? Has the government discussed these programs? Does it intend to announce them, and when does it intend to announce them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Some of these programs or, at least, programs under the names which were just recited, have been discussed. Others of them I do not recognize; perhaps they exist in projects under different names. We have discussed these matters and work is proceeding on them. As the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said yesterday, when we have reached a stage at which we can announce them, we shall announce them.

Mr. Lewis: Is it the intention to announce these programs before the winter so as to help municipalities or provinces as well as the people of Canada to deal with the unemployment which may occur during that part of the year?

Mr. Trudeau: Some of these programs are intended to deal not with the general problem of unemployment but with certain very particular aspects of it. I can assure the hon. member, and also the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, that the reason some of them have not been announced as yet is that a fair amount of consultation with the provinces on some of their aspects had to take place. This is why some delay has occurred. In other words, had we received word from the provinces earlier we might have announced certain of these programs, but we have not.

Mr. Lewis: Is the Prime Minister suggesting that the federal government has already engaged in consultation with the provinces about these programs and that the provinces are responsible for the delay? I should like to know whether that is exactly what the Prime Minister is saying, because it is not so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister telling the House that the provinces have all been consulted in the preparation of these programs aimed at alleviating unemployment?

Mr. Trudeau: As the leader of the New Democratic Party has just said, Mr. Speaker, that is not so.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: It is certainly not so. The provinces have not been consulted. How many people does the government expect will be taken off the unemployment rolls when the programs I mentioned this morning are implemented early this fall?

Mr. Trudeau: I can only say that with or without these programs the hon. member will soon be added to the unemployment rolls.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: Did the Prime Minister not learn on Tuesday that these smart, snide wisecracks do not pay off?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NATIONAL REVENUE

AVAILABILITY OF INCOME TAX FILES TO OTHER DEPARTMENTS FOR PURPOSE OF INVESTIGATION AND LAYING OF CHARGES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. On Wednesday I put a question to him regarding the use of information in income tax returns, particularly its use in court in connection with other matters by other government departments. Is the minister now in a position to make a statement on this whole subject in light of arguments which are now being advanced that information contained in income tax returns may be used by any other government department for purposes of administration, or in courts of justice?

Hon. Herb Gray (Minister of National Revenue): I do not think I can give an answer which relates to any matter presently pending before the courts, but I can say that the policy of the Department of National Revenue is to do only what is permitted under section 241 of the Income Tax Act and section 23 of the Statistics Act.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Has the Minister of National Revenue consulted with his colleague the Minister of Justice concerning the contention by the Department of Justice on behalf of the government that the Department of Justice may use such information as it sees fit for the purpose of public administration?

Mr. Gray: Not as yet, but I intend to do so as soon as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR RETURN TO CUSTODY OF FOUR FEMALE MEMBERS OF SONS OF FREEDOM DOUKHOBORS—REASONS FOR RELEASE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Solicitor General. What response has been made to the request of the Attorney General of British Columbia that four female members of the Sons of Freedom sect of the Doukhobors be returned to federal custody, and for what reasons were they released by the Commissioner of Penitentiaries?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, these people were granted temporary leave on medical grounds as three of them had been on a hunger strike since September 1970 and two others since August 1971. According to medical officers of the department and others who were consulted, their physical condition was very poor. It was a matter of life or death because they were fed forcibly through tubes.

We consulted the Department of Justice. Evidently, we had the right to force these people to eat, but not only in extreme cases where lives were jeopardized. On consulting Mr. Peterson, the Attorney General for British Columbia, we were told there was no objection although he did not want to be responsible for the final decision. We tried persuasion and we thought of commuting penalties, but we did not want to establish precedents. We consulted the Parole Board; they were not willing to grant leave. The only possibility left then, according to the law, was to grant temporary leave for medical reasons.

The decision was made public at the time and conveyed to the Attorney General of British Columbia who did not oppose it.

Four of those persons now face accusations before the courts. Another one is behaving very well indeed and Mr. Peterson has no objection to her continuing to enjoy her freedom. With regard to the other four, we are studying the possibilities open to us to ensure that they do not disturb society.

ENERGY

INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF STUDIES OF PROPOSED NORTHERN OIL AND GAS PIPELINES

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Does the government intend to publish soon the studies prepared by and for it relating to the financing and operation and the economic and environmental impact of the proposed northern gas and oil pipelines? If so, can the minister tell us approximately when he anticipates that these studies will be published?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question. As I have indicated to the House several times previously, it would obviously be desirable to publish the studies on environmental questions. However, I would remind him that many of the programs and studies—there are approximately 30 studies mentioned in the documents tabled in the House—are still under way this summer and therefore none will be published before this summer work has been completed. However, I hope they will be toward the end of the year.

With regard to the studies relating to financing and actual operation of a line, these are not so well advanced and several agencies of government are responsible for them. Again I agree it would be desirable to have this information made public as soon as possible, subject only, of course, to the fact that internal or confidential documents probably should not be made public.

[Later:]

PROPOSED NORTHERN OIL AND GAS PIPELINES—REQUEST THAT NO DECISION BE TAKEN UNTIL STUDIES AVAILABLE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the fact that these studies have not been published and some are not far enough advanced for publication, would the minister assure the House that no decision will be taken on construction of a pipeline until these studies are available for examination and debate by the public?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think I have made it clear many times that the National Energy Board and the other agencies of government responsible will obviously not be in a position to make any decision until the end of this year. However, I would be glad to repeat what I said for the hon. member. I think it would be desirable that there should be the fullest public information, and this is why as soon as the work is completed, particularly when the field work is completed this summer, we will make the studies available.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSING OF LA MACAZA BASE—PROVISION OF JOBS FOR EMPLOYEES TO BE LAID OFF

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence which is somewhat related to the question asked about lay-offs at Camp Bouchard. Can the minister indicate to the House what steps the department and other government departments are taking to offset the very real difficulties that will be caused when over 200 people are laid off at La Macaza in September?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, my department does try to move civilian personnel from one base to another. When a base is closing we do our utmost to do this if there are vacancies. Of course, the manpower department contributes its services in order to try to find positions for people who unfortunately are laid off when a base has to be closed.

Mr. Forrestall: Can the minister indicate whether or not the government is making any attempt to find an alternative use for this base which might offer employment to these men?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, we are trying to find an alternative use for the base. Several approaches have been made. There has been consideration of an alternative use within the government. In addition, people outside the government have indicated interest. We will not be vacating the base, as my hon. friend knows, until September, but we do hope to find a new use for the base.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

INQUIRY AS TO FORMAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL AND UNITED STATES COUNTERPART ON SHARING OF KNOWLEDGE RESPECTING ATOMIC ENERGY

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether to direct my question to the Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but perhaps the minister responsible would reply. Is the government seeking a formal agreement on scientific co-operation between Canada's National Research Council and its United States counterpart, similar to the agreement signed with the Soviet Academy of Sciences, for shared knowledge in the field of atomic energy? If so, what progress is being made for scientific exchanges with the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, it has not been customary to have these kinds of formal agreements between the United States and Canada because such exchanges occur in any event. We have the utmost co-operation with the United States in a vast field of scientific, cultural and other matters. The United States and Canada have never felt that it would improve the atmosphere or the number of exchanges to have the sort of formal agreement which is customary with eastern European countries.

AGRICULTURE

NORTHWESTERN SASKATCHEWAN—STEPS TO COPE WITH DROUGHT

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Agriculture. What steps have been taken to cope with the drought situation in northwestern Saskatchewan, as many farmers are having difficulty finding pasture for their livestock or hay to put up for winter feeding?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take notice of that question.

Mr. Cadieu: To avoid these farmers being forced to put their breeding stock on the market, will assistance be given for the transportation of feed from other areas where they have had sufficient rain?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of programs along these lines that come into play when very serious situations exist. The purpose of my taking notice of the question is to determine the extent to which the department has at this stage analysed the situation and the need, and therefore what programs will in fact apply.

RAPESEED—STEPS TO MEET THREATENED INFESTATION BY BERTHA BUG

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask in connection with rapeseed production. I direct it to the Acting Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the apparent danger of infestation caused by the Bertha bug or army worm which, according to agricultural representative Harry Lang, is more serious than last year since there are more moths than there were at the same time a year ago. What is being done in co-operation with the provincial Department of Agriculture to accelerate the campaign so that when the bugs eventually start to destroy the government will be in a position to meet the threat?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the federal Department of Agriculture research operations together with the provincial Department of Agriculture are monitoring the situation using traps and similar devices to determine the extent of the infestation. They are also trying to keep the farmers alerted to the situation because a great deal will depend on individual farmers checking their fields for infestation. Lanate is available and, of course, farmers are being urged to use it at the first sign that its use is appropriate with the hatching of the worms.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister say whether or not a radio program is being carried on to the end that farmers become aware of what they ought to be doing at this time?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, a certain amount of use is being made of the media. I will certainly re-examine the question of whether this is adequate or needs to be intensified.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DISABILITY PENSION AND ALLOWANCE RATES—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Would the minister consider placing before the House later this day, on the understanding that it be passed without debate, a motion referring to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs the question of the basic rates of veterans pensions and allowances so that the matter could be considered by that committee during the recess?

• (1150)

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would satisfy the hon. member if I told him we had a meeting yesterday with the president of the Royal Canadian Legion and a number of his executives. We are exchanging letters on Monday by which our officials with his officials will work on such a committee doing the preliminary and factual work during the summertime.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While we appreciate the audience given to Mr. Smellie and his colleagues, would the minister not agree that my suggestion is one that would make it possible for the committee to meet if the minister found that was desirable?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I would expect that this matter will be referred to the standing committee in the fall of the year, and I would expect that the preliminary work which is going to be done by the officials of the Royal Canadian Legion and our own officials would be a very necessary preliminary to any reference to the standing committee.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that Mr. Smellie, the president of the Dominion Command, expressed quite intensely on television last night that there is great concern across the country on the part of veterans with regard to the basic rates of pensions and as it is doubtful that we will be meeting in the fall, would the minister take the initiative in the co-operative manner he has shown in the past and induce the House leader to meet with all parties so that the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs could meet during the summer to take up this problem?

Mr. Laing: Well, Mr. Speaker, I cannot contemplate this place being empty until Christmas.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SUGGESTED RECOVERY FROM CERTAIN EMPLOYEES OF INCOME TAX PAID ON THEIR BEHALF

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State who is responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. We thought he might have been in the House today. However, I shall address my question to the Prime Minister. Are he and the Secretary of State in agreement with the report presented to Parliament on June 30 by the Public Accounts Committee? If so, has the CBC been requested to collect immediately from the 17 CBC employees involved the $135,000 paid on their behalf for personal income tax while they were employed in the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would be delighted to take notice of the question, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

AIR CANADA

CANCELLATION OF OPTION TO BUY CONCORDE PLANE—PURCHASE OF ALTERNATIVE EQUIPMENT

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. As it is reported that Air Canada has cancelled its option to purchase the Concorde supersonic transport aircraft, can the minister say whether Air Canada has yet decided on alternative equipment purchase plans or whether this decision represents a reduction in future planned capacity?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, it does not represent a reduction. At the time this new aircraft was in the conceptual stage Air Canada, like all other airlines, took an option in order to get a delivery position should it choose that airplane. It has simply decided now against that particular design. In so far as its fleet re-equipping is concerned, the main new aircraft to be added are, of course, Lockheed 1011s, the first of which will be delivered in December.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether the acquisition of the Tri-Star jets is being restored to an acceptable program and what the effect is on the aircraft industry in Canada insofar as supply of components is concerned?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This was a very important consideration at the time the decision was made. I could provide in writing to the hon. member the degree of component construction and related work being done in Canada as a result of the Lockheed contract. It is very substantial.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO MARINE POLICY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. The minister's ruddy seafaring complexion leads me to ask about the long-awaited marine policy within his department. Can the minister give us a progress report on the Darling recommendations on shipping and on the Ripley investigation thereof?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had by now, I guess, 15 or 20 separate sets of consultations. I think the hon. member is as aware as anyone in the House that there is absolutely no unanimity or consensus emerging. Quite honestly, I have not reached the point where I am able to make any what I might describe as comprehensive recommendations to my colleagues or to the House. The exploratory discussions will have to continue.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not think it would bolster his image in the Maritimes if he could show some progress on a marine policy in the next few weeks?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, it is in fact within the Maritimes that the largest amount of disagreement actually exists.

ALLEGED LOSS OF CARGO BUSINESS FROM PORT OF VANCOUVER TO SEATTLE

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport having in mind the recent representations of the longshoremen in the Vancouver area concerning the loss of cargo and business from that port to the port of Seattle allegedly due to the lack of sufficient modern facilities at the port. Can the minister say at what stage the consideration which I believe he is giving to that problem is? Does he have the matter under advisement and is there any hope for action on it?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have received these representations and discussed them with some people in Vancouver on Tuesday. The National Harbours Board and the Fraser River Harbour Commission have both submitted proposals within recent days with regard to the establishment of container activities in and around Vancouver.

I have asked the heads of both these organizations to get together to see if their plans coincide, that is, if they are both logical. Just as soon as I hear from them I am prepared to give a favourable response to this container activity. I might say, with your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, that the irony of the situation is that I had a visit two weeks ago from the head of the United States Maritime Commission complaining that we were stealing far too much American cargo from them.

Mr. Speaker: I think I should remind hon. members at this point that we are running short of time for the question period. I would invite the co-operation of hon. members to make sure that between now and the end of the question period we try to limit the length of questions, the length of answers and the number of supplementaries.

MANPOWER

NATURE OF PROPOSED OPPORTUNITIES FOR CITIZENS PROGRAM

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not it is coincidental, but your warning came just before you recognized me. Be that as it may, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, because of the absence of the Secretary of State notwithstanding the roster system—that political prodigal son of the cabinet is still absent—a question concerning something the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings raised earlier about the particular program called Opportunities for Citizens. Is this an extension of the Opportunities for Youth program which the Secretary of State is administering or is it to be a separate program involving $120 million-odd on a full-year basis.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the hon. member acknowledge the existence of the roster system. I should point out to him that the Secretary of State is not due in the House today.

An hon. Member: He has not been here all week.

Mr. Trudeau: I know he has not been here all week, but I see only three members on the opposition front bench—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Trudeau: As to the question itself, Mr. Speaker, I do not know.

Mr. Nowlan: In view of the commotion, Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister deal with the question and give it any type of answer? Since the Prime Minister is the one who provoked the situation about the continued absence, may I say I was quite aware, and prefaced my remarks by saying "notwithstanding the roster system", of the fact that the Secretary of State has been absent all week. I would like to know whether the Prime Minister is considering the resignation of the Secretary of State.

• (1200)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

HEALTH

MEDICARE AND HOSPITAL INSURANCE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT GOVERNMENT WILL CONTINUE TO CONTRIBUTE 50 PER CENT OF COST

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare arising out of the announcement he made on motions with respect to the notice that is being given to the provinces concerning the Medical Care Act. Can the minister assure the House that, irrespective of what negotiations may go on regarding certain formulas, the government will be providing to the provinces no less than the roughly 50 per cent it is now contributing to both the medicare program and the hospital insurance program after expiry of the six months period?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in essence, yes. The concept under hospitalization and medicare remains the same. We are just suggesting a different formula for making the same payments we are making now. What the formula is really all about is the control of escalation in the future. I think the hon. member would agree that this is a useful exercise.

Mr. Douglas: I do not agree, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister now whether this means that the government is abandoning the position it has been taking, namely, that escalation shall be limited to the increase in the gross national product? In view of the fact that there is no relationship between illness and the growth of the gross national product, will the government continue to pay roughly 50 per cent of the cost of providing these services to the people of Canada?

Mr. Munro: That is the aim and objective, inasmuch as this whole formula is being worked out with the provinces so we can agree on it jointly. It is not designed in any way to reduce the effectiveness of health care for those who are ill. However, what it does do, I believe, is to cut out a lot of waste and inefficiencies that have been pointed out in various studies.

MEDICARE—POSSIBILITY OF WITHDRAWAL OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FROM SCHEME

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister could indicate whether the government has any intention of withdrawing from the federal-provincial agreement on medicare within the next five years or so?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No consideration has been given to that by the government, Mr. Speaker. If some government at some future time wants to consider it, that is their option.

MEDICARE—INCREASE IN SERVICES COVERED

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether there will be a reduction or an increase in the services that are covered by the scheme under the new formula?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, one of the elements of the formula was to add the cost of optometric services that we would be prepared to share and which is over and above what we do now.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Finance and it relates to the announcement this morning of a further increase in the cost of living. Does the government have any new plans to curtail inflation and to stop the further erosion of the Canadian dollar?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Acting Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the cost of living for June rose by 0.1 per cent, bringing the index to 4.1 per cent above the June, 1971, level. My information indicates that consumer prices did not rise as much this year as the normal May-June increase which, historically, is the period of one of the largest monthly increases in the year. The increase this year was very low indeed.

Mr. Hellyer: Is the minister aware that with the present trend in wage settlements, and in view of the productivity rates in the country, within 12 years the total benefit from the Family Income Security Plan will be wiped out for the poorest Canadians and much sooner than that for everyone else.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

MANPOWER

MANPOWER CENTRES AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICES—REASON FOR CO-ORDINATION OF ACTIVITIES

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister concerning a statement made by an official government spokesman yesterday to the effect that the Canada manpower centres and the Unemployment Insurance Commission will mesh their activities across Canada. Is this being done because the government anticipates a greater increase in unemployment?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that some measures have been taken to co-ordinate the services of these offices in order to help better those who are unemployed or who are looking for other jobs or retraining.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ALLEGED INVASION OF PRIVACY BY IDENTSEAL THUMB PRINTING SYSTEM—INQUIRY AS TO LEGALITY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. In view of the statement a few weeks ago that Identseal, an American company, had announced plans to introduce a thumb printing system in food chain stores in Ontario and Quebec—the service is already operating in Alberta—and that the information derived from it will be stored in a Texas computer, can the minister say whether he has investigated the legality of such a practice since it would seem to be a violation of people's privacy? Is he considering prohibiting the introduction of the practice?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the practice referred to is a voluntary one. I have not investigated the legality of it. The government generally is examining the whole question of information which may be involved in computer operations, but that is a fringe subject so far as the question the hon. member is raising is concerned.

COMMUNICATIONS

DATA BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Communications whether he has investigated the matter, and can he tell us when the government policy on data banks will be announced?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Justice and the Department of Communications are working on a joint study of computers and privacy. I hope it will be completed during the summer and will be available for public discussion.

TRANSPORT

ALLEGED DELAY IN DREDGING TO ASSIST LINERBOARD COMPANY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to revert to the important province of Newfoundland and ask the Minister of Transport whether, in view of the fact there is evidence of delay in supplying support facilities to the important linerboard industry, the minister would indicate to the House, since this contract should be fulfilled by the end of July, if he would look into the matter, or has he ascertained whether we can provide the dredging facility so that the mill can go into production on schedule?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have looked into the matter and I have instructed that the work be done as rapidly as possible. I should point out to the hon. member, however, that we received this request only about a month ago, and also that the company involved was cautioned not to bring a ship of the current size to that area as early as this because the dredging could not be completed in time.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN ROLE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Is the minister aware of concern caused to the National Research Council by persistent sniping in reports of parliamentary committees and other organizations and the resulting speculation about its future, and is he prepared to give an assurance that the important work of the council and its morale will not be detrimentally affected by these speculations?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of this question. I am aware and have been told of the concern of members of the National Research Council in respect of their future, based, I think, on their reading of reports and various suggestions from the Lamontagne Committee and from the recently retired chairman of the Science Council of Canada, as well as from NRC itself regarding various changes in their role. I should like to assure the hon. member that these suggestions are under study but that no decision has been made.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—SUGGESTED REDUCTION TO ENABLE ESTABLISHMENT OF INDUSTRIES ON PRAIRIES TO PROCESS RAPESEED

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. With rapeseed today becoming a major element in the western economy, we find ourselves in a position where unfair freight rates against prairie processed finished products, such as oil and meal, make it virtually impossible for industries to be established on the Prairies. I would ask the minister whether, with the support of the Minister of Supply and Services, he would have a representative go before the Canadian Transport Commission to support the stand that western Canada deserves the opportunity to have these industries and that freight rates should be greatly reduced in order to aid the establishment of industries on the Prairies?

• (1210)

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the right hon. gentleman that I share his sentiments and that I have on a number of occasions publicly indicated my wish to see reductions. However, I think he would also agree that it would be inappropriate, as the source of any appeal from a CTC decision, for me to take an active part in the case that is before the commission.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have just about reached the end of the question period. Before calling orders of the day we might recognize a few hon. members for one or two quick questions.

SPORTS

POSSIBLE ENTRY OF UNITED STATES TEAMS INTO CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Does the government have any policy with regard to the possible entry of American teams into the Canadian Football League, as well as the possible invasion of other areas of Canadian football by American interests? Have he or his officials discussed related aspects of this matter with the Canadian Radio-Television Commission?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we have not, to my knowledge, discussed it with the commission. There was some discussion some time ago with the CFL itself when its commissioner was concerned about the problem. I indicated that we would not like to see this development occur in Canada. It is not clear at this stage what we could do about it in a concrete way, if we decided to do anything.

Inquiries of the Ministry

STATISTICS CANADA

REASON FOR ALLEGED DISCREPANCY IN UNEMPLOYMENT STATISTICS FOR CERTAIN REGIONS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who, I believe, is responsible for Statistics Canada. Information reveals that there is a discrepancy in unemployment statistics for the Atlantic region, the prairie region, and the British Columbia region. Can the minister tell the House why there is a discrepancy between the unemployment figures published by his department, the Bank of Canada and the Department of Finance?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, if I knew that, I would be the head of Statistics Canada. I will look into the matter and write to the hon. member.

Mr. Alexander: As a supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the hon. member for a supplementary, but hon. members must recognize that we have gone beyond the time allotted for the question period and the Chair will have to call orders of the day in a moment.

Mr. Alexander: I note that the minister will look into this matter and make a statement, but in order to clear away the confusion can the minister say now to which department should we look for the correct figures?

Mr. Pepin: I will add a footnote to my letter.

RETURNS FROM SMALL BUSINESSES—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT COURT ACTION WILL BE LAST RESORT

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question also deals with Statistics Canada. In view of the fact that a very well known and respected feed grain and mill operator in my part of the country was fined $100 for not filling in and returning a Statistics Canada report, can the minister say if a concentrated drive is being undertaken by Statistics Canada to have all such forms completed and returned? If so, would the minister see that every possible chance is given to small businesses so that they will not be harassed and taken before the courts?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that this is done. It is only after numerous attempts have been made to secure the information and with extreme reluctance, the minister having tears in his eyes, that legal action is taken. As a matter of fact, whenever this is done it comes to the minister's attention and the minister makes sure that it is really an extreme case.

Mr. Hees: Does the minister not realize that this never happened under the previous government?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has had the last word. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FAMILY INCOME SECURITY PLAN

MEASURES TO PROVIDE BENEFITS IN RESPECT OF CHILDREN

The House resumed, from Thursday, July 6, consideration of the motion of Mr. Munro that Bill C-170, to provide for the payment of benefits in respect of children, be read the third time and do pass, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) (p. 3655).

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, last night before ten o'clock I was appealing to all hon. members to realize that while the bill contains many errors and inequities its objective is to provide increases in benefits to the hundreds of thousands of poverty stricken children in this country. Surely, it is time that we got the message. I am tired of repeating it here so often. With all our rich resources, both material and human, there is still one-fifth of our population living in poverty and we do not seem to be able to cope with the problem. Surely we ought to have the common sense to realize that if we do not direct our efforts towards helping the children in the poverty stricken category, we will continue to have these same problems that we discuss almost daily in the House of Commons because these children with grow up to be poverty stricken adults. This will result from the government's failure to deal with its problem. Over the years many speakers have pointed out the government's inability to cope with the problems of the nation. Will someone stop and realize that it is the people of Canada, whether they be affluent, middle class or poor, who will judge the government's capabilities, and decide whether or not this bill is acceptable?

When are we going to realize the importance of our youth? When are we going to show a little bit of statesmanship by living up to the promises we make and fulfilling our responsibilities to the people we represent instead of continuing the political debate that goes on here? I have not heard anyone say anything about the children who will benefit under the provisions of this bill. I urge hon. members to think for a few moments about this. After listening to the debate it has become evident to me that some hon. members do not have poverty in their constituencies. Evidently many Members of Parliament do not visit the poorer sections of their areas, and see the shameful existence of too great a proportion of our citizens.

It is interesting to sit here and listen to those Members of Parliament who seem to have all the answers, those who know everything about everything, those who talk about what should be done and how it should be done. I listened carefully to the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) give his advice on what should happen to make this country of ours a better place in which to live. He called the bill stupid, idiotic and incompetent. I agree that the bill has some terrible errors in it, but as the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) said last night, there is still time to correct some of the errors. I remind the hon. member for Trinity that this bill, or various versions of it, has been hanging around since the famous white paper on income security issued in 1970. Why did the hon. member for Trinity not speak up at that time rather than waiting until the report stage of the bill last Tuesday? He said that the bill filled his heart with despair. It fills my heart with despair when I get letters from constituents telling me they cannot afford to take their children to hospital, and that since they cannot pay school fees a school board will not allow their children in school.

The hon. member for Trinity called for guaranteed annual work instead of a guaranteed annual income. He and the leader of the NDP called for a reduction in the unemployment rate from 6 per cent to 3 per cent, and said if this were achieved there would be no need for welfare. I heartily agree with them, but how do we bring this about overnight? Surely, there are enough indications that the government has not been able to accomplish this objective. What are we going to do in the meantime? What are the thousands of poverty stricken children to do in the next number of years while waiting for the experts to provide a Shangri-la? The hon. member for Trinity also said that we should have a higher minimum wage—again I agree—and that our wealth should be distributed across the various regions. These are wise words and I agree with him, but I ask him when and how can we expect this to happen with this government? I ask him why this did not happen when he had some influence for some years in the cabinet? The member mentioned in his speech the other day the visits he made to garden parties, his talks on TV and interviews with many employees who said they would not work any extra overtime because they would lose all or most of it in taxes.

• (1220)

Well, I do not visit too many garden parties in my district, Mr. Speaker, and I do not appear on TV very often, but I can tell you I visit lots of homes in my district and I see first hand the conditions under which too many of our Canadian children are living. I talk to parents who wonder where the justice is, where all the employment is and where are all the hundreds of thousands of homes that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Basford) tells us he is building for Canadians. I do not see any flurry of excitement in my district, Mr. Speaker, about building homes. Yes, Mr. Speaker, and while I am here in Ottawa I get hundreds of letters every week begging for help. These people do not have enough money to heat their homes, or money to buy food. I invite anyone here to come to my office and see these letters, Mr. Speaker. What am I to tell these people? Do I tell them to wait a few years more and we will reduce the rate of unemployment to 3 per cent. do I tell them to wait until we distribute our wealth in a more fair fashion? Do I tell them to wait until we find jobs for everyone?

I get very angry, too, when I hear that people on welfare do not want to work. I say that this is as irresponsible a comment as anyone can make. Again I say to anyone, come and look in my files and read with distress the number of letters I get from people who do not want to go on welfare and refuse to do so at great sacrifice.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marshall: I get hundreds of letters from people on welfare begging for any kind of a job in order that they may provide a better start for their children. No, Mr. Speaker, it is time we forgot about statistics and reports and studies on poverty, and remembered that we should start to think about our responsibility to give some humane consideration to this problem. We should be ashamed to have to admit that in this supposedly wealthy country of ours, one fifth of our population is living in poverty. This is a situation that must be corrected. There are too many children in this country in this category of our population who will continue to live in poverty, undernourished, living in hovels, with little or no medical care. Unless we provide for them, they will grow up in continued poverty, without proper development and education. This will mean that they will continue in poverty as adults, and it will be our fault in view of all the lessons we should have learned.

It has become obvious throughout the many committee meetings and debates, that the children of this country who need help will have to wait until next summer. The amendment introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) gives us the opportunity to show our concern and deal with some of the weaknesses of the bill at further committee meetings over the next couple of weeks without interfering with the ability of the minister's department to get the mechanics in motion and avoid further delays. Surely the minister would agree to this proposal, Mr. Speaker, and I say we should meet, even on Monday morning. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, the bill takes us part of the way towards reducing poverty and directing our efforts to the many people who will get benefits. In spite of the inequities in the bill, some of which will be a horrendous nightmare for the administrators as I pointed out last night, I hope we will vote for this bill because we are concerned for the poverty-stricken citizens of our country. The minister and the government evidently feel it is a good bill, but I am sure that many of their members do not agree.

If we, as Members of Parliament, and even the people of Canada who will not benefit from the bill, have any feelings within us to make a better Canadian nation, our efforts and our resources must be directed toward those who cannot provide for themselves. I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for pointing out that there is a military lesson which I learned many years ago which indicates that no army can advance any faster than its slowest or its weakest elements. With our richness in material and human resources, our country cannot grow and progress while one-fifth of our population remains hindered by its inability to keep up with our progress. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is our duty and it must be our duty as a state, to provide for the weak and to support the measure before us today.

Mr. Bill Knight (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by complimenting the hon. member who just finished speaking for an excellent and compassionate speech on behalf of his constituents. I should like to point out, however, that many of us in this House, regardless of party, have people who find themselves at the poverty level and we, too, receive these letters setting out their problems. He gave an excellent outline of the bill, but with all due respect I disagree with his conclusion on how one should vote on this legislation, particularly after all his criticism of it.

This has been an involved debate extending over several months, Mr. Speaker, and there have been a number of interesting developments since the bill was originally introduced by the minister. We find from his answers to questions in the House and his statements outside, that this is part of an over-all program to bring selectivity into programs dealing with the health and welfare of Canadians. The amendment moved by my colleague introduces the concept of such services as the family allowance being a social right for all Canadians. I suppose that is the core of the most important factor in this entire debate. In the debate, the question of the administration of the bill has been raised, as well as the question of whether it really helps the lower income people.

When speaking in Quebec, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) made a very interesting statement while attempting to defend his bill. The headline in the Montreal Star of June 21 reads: "Middle-Class Must Pay For Welfare Benefits" and the article reads in part:

> He said there are not enough of the "super-rich" in Canada to pay for all welfare benefits, so most of the necessary money has to be paid by the middle-class—those who provide the overwhelming majority of the tax revenue.

Later, the article continued:

> After his speech, Mr. Munro told reporters that increased taxes on the income of wealthy individuals and corporations would discourage incentive among individuals and harm the competitive position of Canadian industries in foreign markets.

Hurt what incentive, Mr. Speaker, private initiative? Every time there has been a concept of social legislation in this country as well as in Britain, we have consistently heard the cry that we heard on the old age pension scheme in 1926—it was going to hurt incentive. Now, the minister who is in charge of these programs for the whole country allows himself to get caught in that kind of discussion and debate. According to the last federal budget, in 1972-73 the corporations of Canada will contribute 15 per cent of the total federal revenues. At the same time the government will pay out 15 per cent of all federal expenditures to the corporations. This means that the contribution of the multinational corporation to the economy of Canada is zero, yet the minister has the audacity to say in Quebec that the middle-income group will have to carry the burden of all such programs. He ignored the fact of the revenue—

• (1230)

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Eloquent as the hon. member is, I am sure he wants to be accurate. I suggest that newspaper headlines are not speeches. I do not know whether he read the speech; judging from the hon. member's comments, I would say he has not.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Speaker, I looked at the speech and at the newspaper report. I was not referring only to the headlines, being well aware from personal experience that headlines may be quite inaccurate. Allow me to read this paragraph, Mr. Speaker:

[Mr. Knight.]

> After his speech, Mr. Munro told reporters that increased taxes on the income of wealthy individuals and corporations would discourage incentive among individuals and harm the competitive position of Canadian industries in foreign markets.

Mr. Munro: That is an oversimplification.

Mr. Knight: The minister may claim that is oversimplified, but he is alleged to have made those remarks. Those remarks, even if oversimplified, are pertinent, since the Minister of National Health and Welfare is charged with the responsibility for social welfare programs, which include family allowances and medical care schemes, to which the provinces contribute in part.

Next, may I read what the Special Senate Committee on Poverty had to say on page 46 of its report entitled, "Poverty in Canada":

> The popular notion that our tax system takes from the rich to give to the poor is a myth. Before the 1940s, during the Great Depression, there was some indication that an equalizing trend was taking place in the total amount of income shared before transfers. However, research done by the Royal Commission on Taxation (1966) demonstrates that, since the 1940s, our tax structure had surprisingly little effect on the profile of income distribution already described.
>
> Governments rely on a regressive tax structure as a source of public revenue. (Regressive taxes are those which take away a higher proportion of income from the low-income groups than from the high-income groups.)
> An examination of Table 18 shows that 56.5 per cent of the income of those earning less than $2,000 (before transfer payments) goes to paying taxes. If social-security contributions are included, this becomes 60 per cent of their income. By comparison, those with incomes over $10,000 pay only 37 to 38 per cent in taxes.

Let us remember that at one time individuals and corporations contributed about equal amounts in taxes. The trend in tax collection now is for corporations to contribute less than individuals. The corporate tax burden has been reduced by approximately 22 per cent, and the burden on the individual taxpayer correspondingly increased. With that in mind, I suggest the House ought to accept the amendment of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which, if accepted, would maintain the universality of this program.

May I point out that the minister, when making his speech in Quebec, was illogical in saying that the money for financing this program must come from the middle income group. After all, the government party and the official opposition are the captives of the corporate interests of this country and will carry out their policies. They will not introduce a tax system which will more justly raise revenue from all citizens of Canada, including those with corporate interests.

A professional person such as a school teacher with $10,000 per year in taxable income must pay $2,285 in taxes to the federal government. If somebody makes $10,000 in taxable income from a capital gain, that person will pay tax on only half that gain, the tax being $833. On the other hand, if a man receives $10,000 in taxable income from a Canadian registered corporation, he will pay on that $10,000 not $2,285, not $833, but a mere $193 or less. That is the kind of just society this government represents.

Mrs. MacInnis: And it will be worse.

Mr. Knight: As the hon. member says, it will be worse. The middle income groups, those families earning $7,000, $11,000 or $12,000, will lose, for the most part, the family allowances that were introduced by a previous Liberal government and paid as a social right. At the same time, some in the middle income groups have been forced to contribute to unemployment insurance, even though the Unemployment Insurance Commission will do little for them. Such contributions are restrictive in that they decrease peoples' incomes.

Let us not fool ourselves by assuming that it will be easy to draw the line under the new family allowances program and say one family is justified in getting benefits and another is not. Consider, for instance, the situation of the farmer, and compare it with that of the teacher or the industrial worker. There is a time in people's lives, mostly when they are between 20 and 35, when they are trying to get established. Some people, even though they make $7,500, $8,000, or $8,500, at one time in their lives incur the expense of raising children. That is when they need family allowances. This program, which is to be based on selectivity, will reduce the incomes of those individuals. The family allowance under the old legislation was paid as a social right, and for many it is to be curtailed. Allow me to point out some of the figures involved.

A family, with one child, earning $4,500 a year will get $20 under this program. A family, with one child, earning $6,000 a year would get $15.05. If we assume in all cases that the family has one child, at $7,000 it will get $11.75; if it earns $8,000, it will get $8.45; if it earns $9,000, it will get $5.15; and when it reaches $10,000, in theory it will get $1.85 which is not payable.

Let us now consider a family with two children under 12 years old, since that is where the maximum benefit would be available. With an income of $5,000, it would receive $30; with $6,000, it would get $23.40; with $7,000, $16.80; with $8,000, $10.20; and with $9,000, $3.20. It must be remembered that for every increase of $100 in income the basic family allowance decreases by 33 cents. That is an added complication. Also, every time a child reaches 12 and enters the higher age bracket, the department must be notified. The amount of family allowance receivable will be changed. All this involves administrative work. When a child is born, the parents must inform the department and every time the family's fortunes change notification must be sent to the Department of National Health and Welfare. When income falls, the family must notify the department in the hope of obtaining a greater benefit; and when income increases, it must also notify the department. This is all very complicated. I do not know who was involved in the drawing up of this program.

Mr. Benjamin: Some nut.

Mr. Knight: Apparently, nobody considered the way business may fluctuate in rural areas. A farmer's income from one year to the next may vary by thousands of dollars. In one year, if grain is not moving and quotas are not opened, his income may fall to near the poverty level. In the next year, if grain moves and quotas are opened, his income, even though prices may be depressed, may be greater by several thousands of dollars. So, from one year to another there will be substantial fluctuations in economic conditions in rural areas. These fluctuations will make the administration of the plan a nightmare. When this program comes into operation—

Mr. Benjamin: If it comes into operation.

Mr. Knight: —I dare say Members of Parliament will be swamped with letters from irate mothers complaining about the application of the program and the almost immeasurable difficulty in getting payments.

• (1240)

Several days ago the Minister of National Health and Welfare stated in this House that this plan would work as easily as the old age guaranteed income supplement. There are a number of points that ought to be made with regard to the guaranteed income supplement. By the time people reach the age at which they receive the old age pension and the guaranteed income supplement, there is not the same fluctuation in their income as there is in that of young families between the ages of 20 and 35 or 40. The minister should not forget that.

In 1971, some of my constituents received so much a month for the basic old age pension plus the guaranteed income supplement. They received something like $115 or $117 a month. In April of this year, they found that $10 had been deducted. The same was done in May. No one told them the reason for this. They were not told that they were overpaid last year and that it was a mistake. It was not the fault of these people that they were overpaid, it was the fault of the administration. That is a minor problem in terms of the old age pension. It will be one of the major problems this legislation will create.

The unemployment rate in this country is 4.9 per cent. There are 512,000 people unemployed. We are aware of the job creating programs of this government. However, I do not see the need for developing a new bureaucracy in the Department of National Health and Welfare. Double the number of employees will be required to handle this inadequate and incomprehensible program. This program has been designed to bolster the poor of this country. The minister did not refer to any provision that would prevent the provincial governments making a readjustment under the Canada Assistance Plan so that if these payments increase, the poor people, those who rely on welfare, will have their payments reduced by the provincial governments under the Canada Assistance Plan. That is another inadequacy of this legislation.

The minister should consider the fact that his name and his record as Minister of National Health and Welfare will be connected with this piece of legislation. If and when it goes into operation on a selective basis, we on this side or on whatever side of the House we happen to be, will constantly remind him what he was told during this debate because we will have hundreds of letters on our desks setting out the problems involved in carrying out this legislation. I can assure the minister that I will be in his office quite often.

This country developed a social system, which is not by any means perfect, based on the concept of universality. It is based on the concept that family allowances are a social right. This allowance has been paid to the mothers of this country. In a sense, it represents an income and a responsibility for them. To teach their children responsibility, the mothers often gave them the family allowance. In my family, the money was set aside for my university education. This was fundamental; it was very important and the money was very helpful.

With a program of selectivity, one million mothers in Canada will no longer receive family allowance payments. This is incomprehensible in the light of the manner in which the program was introduced. It is difficult to understand, considering the fact this government was elected in 1968 on the concept of a just society. Since this government has taken office, it has divided Canadians into the haves and have-nots. This government claimed it would hold this nation together. It has driven more wedges between the different sections and elements in this country than any government before it. This program, which is based on some kind of selectivity, could only be outlined by a technocrat sitting in an ivory tower deciding in a statistical manner how to deal with the people of Canada. Let us not forget that this government will be held responsible for this legislation.

It will be interesting to note how many thousands of dollars will be spent on publicizing this plan. A great deal of advertising was necessary this spring when the old age security plan was changed. In answer to a question which was placed on the order paper, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was advised that hundreds of thousands of dollars had been spent on advertising and promoting that program. That will be a minor cost in comparison with what will be involved in trying to explain this program to the people of Canada. It will take a horde of Philadelphia or Toronto lawyers to figure this out. Even then, I am not sure they will be able to do it.

I would be interested in seeing the Minister of National Health and Welfare trying to explain and justify this piece of legislation to his constituents. After the very concrete criticisms and proposals which have been made by the New Democratic Party with regard to this legislation, I cannot conceive the logic or the reasoning of the minister in continuing with this program as it is now proposed. I hope he will see fit to support the amendment we have moved, a reasoned amendment based on universality and social right. The minister need not be concerned that should he accept this amendment we shall turn round and say: "We told you so". If he accepts the amendment I shall publicly praise him for his honesty and his strength. I want to tell the hon. member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Whelan) that if he will support our amendment I will do likewise. I believe this is a fundamental change in the restructuring of our social system. We are moving away from the concept that everyone has a right to receive such things as family allowances. We are dividing the people into the haves and the have-nots. We are putting labels on the haves and telling them they must bear the cost of bolstering the have-nots. It is a fundamental concept of ours that the vested interests of this country should carry their fair share of the tax burden.

• (1250)

I have outlined our reasons for opposing this bill and for supporting the proposal put forward in this amendment. I truly hope, as I have already stated a couple of times, that the minister will give consideration to the proposition we have advanced.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Knight) has eloquently outlined the reasons that I think are valid to all Canadians for objection to the selectivity being proposed by the government.

We are very much in favour of raising the family allowance. We have been in favour of this ever since I came here. I can remember having a meeting with union members in my area, a very strong element. They believed they should support any candidate who would endorse the programs in which they were interested, and even 15 years ago they were asking that family allowances be increased. I think I was able to get some of their support by agreeing that family allowances should be continued.

What really worries me is that the minister made a statement again today indicating that there would be a change in the amount the federal government is willing to put into some of the universal schemes which have been developed with the co-operation of the provinces. The government has also been making noises, not very coherent noises admittedly, about a guaranteed income which will get rid of much of the whole morass of government departments.

It was interesting to make a phone call yesterday to a provincial welfare administrator in my area asking him to intervene with a municipality over a temporary allowance to be given to a young fellow who unfortunately is in the Orillia School and has gone home. Unfortunately, he is over 21 and loses the advantage he had, which is provincial care while in that institution. While he is home for two months he cannot get a disability pension, although he is obviously disabled, because it takes six or eight weeks to get it from the provincial authorities so he will have to go to the municipality. That problem is duplicated in every office of every Member of Parliament almost every day.

There is a desire to get rid of this morass of detail, the slight difference between this program and how it interrelates with a fifth program, and so on. The government has been talking about doing something about this problem by the development of a guaranteed annual income. The Social Credit party said recently that it favoured the payment of an income to everyone in Canada based on a flat rate. I wish it were as simple as that. I should like to see an arrangement by which we could pay everybody a subsistence allowance. Then the tax structure would reclaim unneeded amounts. I suggest that if the government had thought about a guaranteed annual income, they would now be in a position that it could not be universal because I am sure there would be a needs test, a means test, an income test or a blood test which would be necessary before you could get that amount of money. That is what is wrong with the system.

We are really saying we cannot afford to give all the young people in Canada a reasonable amount of money for family allowance. This was to buy shoes, extra books and a little extra for the children themselves. The mother was to administer it and she was to have it. We are saying this is not possible now, we cannot do it for everybody. We can only do it for one class of the people. This is not good enough. The rich are not going to agree with it. The poor are not going to agree with it and the middle class are not going to be willing to finance it.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

• (1410)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was urging, and continue to urge, the minister and members of the House to give consideration to the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) which, very simply, would provide the increase for all those in receipt of family allowances and would not eliminate a large portion of the people in this country who we believe are entitled to this increase. I think a government which does not consider increasing either pensions or benefits for any other segment of the social field is, in effect, downgrading its interest and participation in family allowances. It may be that the government wishes to get rid of the family allowance structure. If so, the government should say so. It has been interesting that in this debate not even some of the Conservatives went so far as to say we should get rid of this type of payment to children.

It has been argued very forcibly both here and elsewhere that this type of legislation leads to an increase in the population. In keeping with modern ideas, perhaps for those interested in population control there is some repugnance in the idea of family allowances which are really a recognition of an added financial responsibility for those people who have children. The government, however, has not really reached this conclusion. Of course, I believe it would be wrong to agree to any consideration of such a prospect.

It is interesting to look at the payments which have been made under family allowances. When we originally started these payments back in 1944, there was very great disparity between various areas and regions in Canada in terms of population expansion. The population expansion in the east was considerably greater than it was in other parts of Canada. One of the charges made in those days was that these allowances in respect of large-sized families had an effect on the population increase. I believe it is safe to say that, particularly in the province of Quebec, the birth rate was phenomenally high. It was phenomenally high for two reasons. I believe there was a religious reason and a rural reason, both of which tended to increase the population.

The fact that in 1944 many families in the province of Quebec received very large sums of money was considered by some to be an indication that this type of assistance was wrong and, therefore, should be discontinued. In looking over the situation in the years since 1944, it is interesting to see that circumstances have changed. Although family allowances are still being paid, and while they are really a production bonus, this has really not affected the birth rate in that province. The birth rate in Quebec has been reduced to equal that of any region in Canada and is, in fact, one of the lowest birth rates in the civilized world. The argument that this type of production bonus has created an undesirable situation—and I say "undesirable" from the point of view of the environmentalist who looks at the global situation in terms of overproduction of homo sapiens—is not necessarily a good argument in respect of whether or not we should produce our own citizens or bring them in from somewhere else. I believe I would favour the home-grown population increase rather than an increase through immigration from abroad.

The fact is that the money we pay in respect of family allowances has not encouraged an increase in population. It has not done anything to advance the number of people who have been born. I think everyone, particularly those interested in the social side of the picture, will agree that family allowances in the main when introduced represented a considerable asset with regard to family development in many parts of the country. It meant mainly two things. First of all it established for the mother and the housewife an amount of money that she would have in her own right to distribute to her children as she observed their specific needs. It was not designated for clothing, milk or food, but was designated for the mother to distribute to her children in the best manner for the benefit of the family. I think it is safe to say that the amount paid in 1944 did bring about some change because personally I know of families which were able to buy books for their children so that they would be able to attend school. They were able to buy the necessities and clothing so that the children could attend school. It enabled these children to participate with other children with a degree of equity that they would not have been able to enjoy had it not been for this sum of money.

I think most members will agree that initially that was the use to which this money was put. It is a discredit to successive governments since 1944 that they have not meaningfully escalated the family allowance payment to bring it up to a level that would at least meet the present rise in the cost of living. Such an escalator clause has not been put in the bill. Other speakers have used figures and made comparisons to show that the cost of living has gone up two and a half times, therefore the family allowance should have gone up by the same amount. Since it did not, it has meant that a poor family has had far less spending power, and poor families are not all in the low income group. A poor family may be living in mortgage row in a very expensive house, have a very expensive car, and the mother and father may have expensive tastes, yet you may find in that family a desperate need for some of the essentials that is probably equal to that of a family in the low income group. It does seem to me that equality should be retained, and the government has not done that. It is my opinion that we would be much fairer in our treatment of young people if we were to retain the principle of universality which they have enjoyed over the years and which has enabled these young people to provide their families with the necessities.

It seems to me that family allowances should be provided to all at the maximum or minimum level proposed by the minister in this bill. I suggest that our standard of living and our productivity would indicate that the minister is not being generous at all; in fact, he is being niggardly in raising the amounts only to those levels proposed in the bill. Obviously, if the cost of living has gone up, if the gross national product has gone up and revenues have gone up, we should be able to supply as much money to children today in terms of today's dollar as we were able to provide to children in 1944 when this act was introduced. We are not doing that, we are reneging on one million mothers in Canada by creating selectivity in this bill, a principle which was not originally contemplated.

In terms of the social impact of this legislation, was it true that in 1944, very close to the end of the war, we did not have any poor, we did not have any rich and there were no people in between? In what category were these people, in what economic strata were they that we found it necessary to adopt universality in providing this type of care to all mothers on behalf of their children? What has changed? The minister says that he disagrees with the slogan which has been credited to him, probably erroneously, but it is a nice one. It is that you save the rich, soak the middle class and seduce the poor. Perhaps there is some truth in it. Perhaps we have a new class of people who like paying taxes, a new class of people who like receiving money and a new class of people who do not like to pay their share. If that is so, then my guess is that it has always been so; there has not been any change or any reduction in the need. Those who originally believed in 1944 that it was not fair in social terms to divide children into economic categories should be heard, because in my opinion they still constitute the majority in Canada and they are probably the most numerous group of people even in this Parliament.

I am sure that most of the Liberal members will be going to their ridings very shortly and will be awaiting the call for a federal election. Are they really going to tell the people in their constituencies that we have had to give up social equality in the family allowance structure so that we can pay the poor, that we are only interested in helping the welfare cases in this country? Will some of those Liberals not be saying that they believe that all children in Canada should have the benefit of family allowances because they are Canadians? I think there are many members in the House who will not be selling the government's policy, and I am sure they will have great difficulty in explaining the two or three other recent programs in which selectivity is incorporated. I may not be smart enough, and I am sure my party is not smart enough—in fact I am not sure if anybody is—to follow the reasoning of the government behind this change, but I am sure that the average person in Canada would like to get rid of all the divisive factors in our society and would like to provide equality wherever possible. I am sure we would not want to see a woman having to make the decision as to whether or not she should do a limited amount of work because that may mean her children will receive less assistance in family allowance if she does so. I am sure that the average Canadian wants equality.

[Mr. Peters.]

I have heard very little argument in this country from any political source or from any of the social agencies against the idea of a universal guaranteed income. One of the reasons people are interested in adopting the universal guaranteed income is that it will apply to all people, it will do away with computerization in solving social problems and it will do away with the necessity of having inspectors coming into people's homes. This legislation will mean that decisions will be made by computers and inspectors will have to check these decisions. The average individual will have to make declarations of various kinds every time his income or his family situation is altered in any way. This will be applied to the information which will come from the Department of National Revenue. Officials in charge of this program will have to check the information regarding family allowances against the National Revenue figures. An inspector will come from both of these departments and will harass that family with things that they really do not understand. I am sure that the country does not want that.

The present government seems to think we are so bankrupt that we are unable to provide for Canadians, that we have to divide the rich from the poor, the haves from the have-nots. I am sure that Canadians would not want that. They will not agree with it, particularly since we went through a futile exercise a couple of weeks ago in one minor field of government expenditures. We found that almost $700,000 was being wasted on providing information which was really self-glorification of the government and its agencies. We suggested that it could be eliminated. Mr. Speaker, you will recall that there were a number of votes and the sitting went on until a late hour, but the exercise was futile in the first place.

• (1430)

There is not a member who cannot stand up and say, "I know where we could save $1 million or $1 billion." A couple of weeks ago we were talking about information supplied by departments and by Information Canada. At that time we were talking about something like $1 billion, a billion dollars to sell the Department of National Health and Welfare, a billion dollars to sell the Department of National Defence, a billion dollars to sell all the government departments. Why not put that money into a social program? If the minister were to say, "Let us get rid of family allowances and the guaranteed income supplement; let us get rid of some of these schemes and substitute one plan that would apply to all Canadians," it is possible that I would be in favour of it. But I am afraid that here we are talking about doing away with universality in our social service structure, and substituting a class structure.

At present, old people who are poor have to make application for additional assistance. Originally, old age assistance was given to everyone who reached a certain age. Now, a certain amount of pension is given to everyone on reaching that age, but it is just about half of what it costs to maintain body and soul, and a means test is applied to those who seek an additional amount. Now, we are doing with the universal family allowance. I strongly urge reconsideration of the idea of selectivity, of dividing people up into classes. I firmly believe that almost all mothers in Canada use whatever money they get for the benefit of their children. I know it is said that many family allowance cheques are cashed in the beer parlour, or corner grocery store, but I believe the benefit of the money is applied to the children. No matter how poor people are, they try to take care of their children.

Aside from the argument of selectivity versus universality, I believe we have an obligation to provide for escalation of payments according to increases in the cost of living. Even bodies as heartless as the Canadian Pacific Railway and the directors of the Canadian National Railway have now applied an escalation factor to their workers' pensions. This is true even of as heartless an agency as the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario. But it is not done with respect to family allowances. It is calculated that a 1944 dollar will purchase only the equivalent of 40 cents in 1972. If that is so, a family allowance payment of $16 per child per month is needed in terms of our present standard of living.

I suggest to those Members of Parliament who will be going home shortly that they whould give serious consideration to supporting the amendment, which would provide every child in Canada with the benefit of escalation of allowances in relation to the cost of living and the increase in the cost of living over the last 18 years. If Liberal members cannot do this in good conscience, then it is an admission on their part that they fail, through their amended income tax structure, to get money back from those who do not need it. They know that if they give the baby bonus to the rich, the rich are not taxed at the same levels as others, and will get more benefit out of that bonus.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the speech delivered today by the hon. member for Humber-St. Georges-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall). I have complete sympathy with respect to the problems of his constituents. I am just as concerned about the children of his constituency and of this country as is anyone else, but I still believe that this is a stupid law, and we will be sorry if we let it pass this afternoon. Frankly, I cannot understand why it was introduced in its present form in the first place. In my opinion, it represents the most inappropriate and, in the long run, ineffective solution to what is for many people in this country a very serious problem.

The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe asked why I did not speak sooner. I should like to point out to him that I have been speaking about the fundamentals involved for a long time. I have spoken both outside and inside the House about the alternatives and how they could be achieved. I have been talking about the positive alternatives which are more effective and more humane. I have been shouting it from the hilltops. I have been saying that there is a better way but few people have been listening. I wrote a book to explain, on the basis of the knowledge I have gained over many years in public and private life, how we got into this mess and how we might go about getting out of it. Not too many people have taken the trouble to read what I had to say.

Mr. Speaker, we have to make fundamental changes if we want to solve some of the problems I have been talking about. This persistence with band-aid treatment will never do the job. By putting one band-aid on top of another all we do is exacerbate an already difficult situation. If we want to tackle the real problems in this country we have to do it by fundamental means. These fundamental means are jobs and wages. In the long run, there is no other way to achieve the goals that we want and that is the point of view I should like to discuss. We would have to introduce a system whereby for employables there would be ample opportunities to work for decent wages and, of course, for those who are unable to work due to enforced idleness or because they are incapable, an income sufficient for their requirements.

The amendment before the House offers an opportunity for reconsideration. I listened to the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) with great interest and she made a most impressive speech, one that was worth listening to and worth reading. She spoke eloquently of the needs of the poor people in this country and she spoke compassionately as she always does. I would like to see this House take seriously some of the things she said.

In so far as options are concerned, there are several, of course. The first option would be to refer this bill back to committee and to reconsider the advisability of the universal approach. The payments could be increased under that system of universality which was established in 1944. That would solve the problems, at least in the short run, which were raised by my hon. friend from Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe. Then, of course, if that were the solution we could use the present income tax laws, perhaps with some changes that would be appropriate, to make sure that the benefits of the increase went largely to those who need it, the people at the bottom end of the income scale. That is what the tax laws are for; that is the reason we have a graduated income tax which is very steep in its application. It is, in fact, a redistribution of income. There is no reason in the world why this same technique could not be used if we wished to stay with the universal approach.

The advantages of staying with the universal approach are that it is easy to administer—perhaps I should not say it is easy to administer but compared to this new bill it is easy to administer. The comparison would be the comparison between night and day. It does my heart good to hear the New Democratic Party complain about the increasing bureaucracy in this country. I think this is one of the most desirable and beneficial developments that I have noticed in a long time. Everyone is beginning to recognize that we must have a simpler solution. We cannot go on forever complicating things to the point where we have more and more people passing paper, more and more people on the payroll, fewer and fewer people producing the wealth whilst all of us spend more and more time answering questions, filling out forms and standing in line because of some regulation which may not apply adequately in some cases.

A symptom of this was expressed during the question period today when someone mentioned the experience of a small businessman who was fined $100 for not filling out one of those silly forms sent out by Statistics Canada. I have great sympathy with the small businessman. The bureaucrats of this country are driving him crazy and worse than that they are driving him out of business. In a few years there will not be any small businessmen because they will not be able to survive. Ultimately, they are going to say "A pox on it, we will go to work for the government and go home at three minutes to four every day". What a sad reflection that would be on the traditions which we hold dear. I am not just thinking of traditions, Mr. Speaker, because tradition is only important if it has a continuing function, but of the relationship between businessmen and their customers which really only comes with small organizations and which will be nothing but a distant memory if we proceed much further in the direction we are going. As a result of having operated a small business, I know that now the entrepreneur spends most of his time filling out forms. I have talked to a number of small shopkeepers and businessmen this year, and I know that they take home less pay than any one who works for them. Who would expect them to survive for long under these circumstances? The principle applies to all of us and it is applying more and more to the very people we are trying to help.

What kind of form will we have to fill out in connection with this law? The minister has told us that it will not be any more complicated than the income tax form. I do not know whether other hon. members had the same reaction to that interjection as I, but I thought to myself that he just cannot be serious. The minister is making a case for his own bill and he says that the form will not be any more complicated than the income tax form so we do not need to worry about it. The thing that drives us crazy once a year now will be done four or five times a year by the poor. Perhaps they will learn to enjoy it because they will not have time to do anything else. Mr. Speaker, we can get used to anything. Certainly, the universal system would be less complicated than the one the government proposes. I must admit that I agree with my New Democratic Party friends that it would be socially more acceptable. I know the NDP do not like me to agree with them, and I shall try not to do it too often but I must admit that sometimes they say things with which I can agree.

Mr. Speaker, I do not like to see the country divided the way this bill will divide it. I think the bill is regressive, and I think it just introduces one more division in the country based upon social and economic standing in the community. I think it would be much more acceptable socially if we were to stay away from the introduction of one more means test, particularly one as complicated and hopeless in its application in ordinary circumstances as this one is destined to be.

• (1450)

The second option would be not to increase the levels of family allowances but to leave them at their present rates and try another approach to providing the extra purchasing power needed by the people in this country who are below the poverty line. I admit, frankly, that I prefer the second approach. There need not be poverty in Canada, and the fact that there is more poverty in Canada today, relatively, than there was a few years ago when the anti-poverty campaign was begun is a reflection on the ineffectiveness of the band aid treatments which have been instituted.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

An hon. Member: That's what comes from free enterprise.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I think we need a little more enterprise; that would be the solution. I should like the hon. member to give due and just consideration to what I will say about this. In my opinion, there is no reason in the world, except bad management, for the 6 per cent unemployment rate in this country today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: This is not happening in other countries. I know the government can point with some comfort, I suppose that is the right word, to the experience in the United States, an experience which is about as bad as ours. The reason, I suspect, is that many of the theologians in charge of the United States economy were trained in the same schools and read the same bibles as the theologians who have been in charge of our economy. There is no excuse for this unemployment, none whatsoever. Most countries of the western world do not have unemployment at these levels. Only in Canada, the United States, Italy and Great Britain is a level anything like ours accepted.

I should like to outline three steps that ought to be taken if we are to have full employment. The first step consists of a further reduction in taxes at the low income levels. The last budget may have been successful in offsetting the effects of the American DISC program. It may have provided a stimulus for industry, but it did nothing on the other side of the economic equasion—it did nothing to increase aggregate demand. One could ask why business would want to expand considerably if, at the same time, there is not sufficient purchasing power in the hands of people who need goods and services. Why would business expand if there is not that capability in the hands of the people for purchasing the products of business, if there is not that capability in their hands which, in the first instance, would induce business to provide extra goods and services? So, if we want to get our economy back on the road, if we want to get it rolling again, we must provide an infusion of purchasing power. The best way of infusing that purchasing power is by providing tax relief for those people who need food, shelter and clothing, who need the necessities of life about which the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe talked. Lower taxes would provide an immediate infusion of money into the economy and create the demand which would create jobs which, in turn, would stimulate the economy and get the economy rolling again.

The second step, of course, because, mathematically steps one and two are related, is increasing the total amount of effective demand which would set the total level of employment. Economists call total effective demand total aggregate demand. That is the regulator which sets the total employment level in the country, and anyone who has even a faint knowledge of the dismal science of economics is familiar with that. So, if we want to provide sufficient economic demand to create meaningful employment for the people of this country who want to work, we must increase total aggregate demand. This means, in effect, that we must increase the money supply, as the government has been doing, or rather as the central bank has been doing, to the point that interest rates are driven down.

How can people who want to buy a house afford a house if they must pay 9 per cent interest on the mortgage? That is beyond the reach of the average person in this country. There is no way that the average citizen can buy a home for which he must pay over a period of 35 or 40 years if the mortgage interest rate is 9 per cent. Further, how can the people of this country begin small businesses, corner grocery stores and similar small businesses of any kind, if on the money they borrow they must pay 10 per cent, 11 per cent, 12 per cent or 14 per cent interest? There is no way they can do that, Mr. Speaker. There is no way that people who want to do something for themselves, who want to become involved in the economic system, can branch out in business if the economic dice are loaded against them as heavily as they are at present. So, the second step must be increasing the money supply and driving interest rates down.

The third step is one that the people in authority in this country have rejected. The people who have responsibility for the management of the economy of the country have resisted the No. 3 step which must be taken, the imposition of mandatory wage and price guidelines in this country, the only effective way to control monopoly power.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. I have looked at the amendment and regret having to do what I am about to do. So far, it seems to me that the hon. member has made the sort of speech which he would make in a budget debate. I do not think he is speaking to the amendment. I know we have been generous, but I really think it is time for me to remind the hon. member that we are debating the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I think it would be much better if he could relate his remarks more directly to the amendment than he has done thus far.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly do that. I am trying to point out that there is an alternative, and I was speaking of one particular alternative which the House ought to consider after the bill has been to committee. Certainly, those remarks come within the ambit of the amendment now before the House. I know Your Honour realizes that there must be some latitude in debate and that anything which could legitimately be described as an alternative to the ineffective provisions of the bill would come within the rules and within the ambit of the amendment.

There is no way in which you can have a reasonable degree of economic stability in Canada unless, some day, somebody will be brave enough and sensible enough to impose mandatory wage and price guidelines in this country. I know some members of the government agree with that. I should not be surprised if the minister agreed with me. However, he has some tough friends in cabinet and they are not as easy to get along with as he is sometimes.

Mr. Gilbert: The hon. member ought to know.

Mr. Hellyer: There is no alternative, Mr. Speaker, to this step in view of what has happened in the last few years. The lack of effective controls and mandatory guidelines has distorted the entire economy, pulled it out of shape, to the point where, today, in all ten provinces a married man with two children can get more on welfare than he can by taking a job at minimum or near minimum wage rates. In many cases people can get more by drawing unemployment insurance than by working. I say to the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe that this is true in his province as well. I was told recently of a manufacturer in that province who owns three factories. He cannot fill them with workmen, even though there is a high rate of unemployment on the island. I am not saying this is bad; but I am saying that this shows that, often, people across this country can make more by not working than by working.

The inevitable result, of course, is disaster from all points of view for this country. First, on the economic side, with more people drawing welfare or unemployment insurance, more people are taking from the national income produced and there are fewer working. Consequently, the total pie is smaller than it otherwise would have been and there is less for everyone. Second, we must remember the social distortions that result from people not working. They become used to doing nothing and find it more and more difficult eventually to re-enter the labour force.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? He referred to three manufacturing industries in my province. I wonder if the hon. member would name these industries. I am not aware of them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Boulanger): Order, please. The hon. member's question is a perfect example of the sort of thing I meant when I last interrupted the hon. member who has the floor. That hon. member is so far away from the amendment that he is now being questioned about factories he mentioned. I think the Chair has been very lenient. I have not heard complaints, but the hon. member knows the rules. I ask the hon. member again to try to keep close to the subject matter of the amendment.

• (1500)

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I could not agree more, but with deference I think Your Honour's ruling is really a reflection of how far conventional wisdom and the inadequate bill presented to the House by the government is from a fundamental solution. We are talking about family income. Is that not the name of the bill? Is it not relevant that the family has sufficient income to look after the needs and requirements of its children, including proper food, clothing, shelter, educational and other opportunities? Is that not what we are talking about? Are we not trying to provide income for families so that children of all families, regardless of the circumstances, can grow up in decency and dignity? I certainly think so. That is the purpose of the minister's bill and the amendment put before the House by the New Democratic Party.

If we really want to do something about this situation we must go back to fundamentals. We must provide jobs for those who are able to work. We know how to do it. If we did not know how, it would be different. We wish that others would take seriously what we have to say. We should control monopoly power in this country. If there were a Liberal party in this country—

An hon. Member: There is.

Mr. Hellyer: I hear from a backbencher that there is a Liberal party in this country. There is no Liberal party in this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: If there were a Liberal party in this country it would be fighting monopoly power, fighting General Motors for building front ends that either smash in or fall out, fighting doctors for leaving patients unattended, fighting strikers for not picking up garbage, and fighting the vested interests on behalf of the people of this country. That is what a Liberal party would be doing.

The fact that there is no Liberal party in this country causes much pain and distress to some of us. The government is so involved in band-aid treatments that for one reason or another it has managed to avoid looking at the principles. The principles are Liberal principles. If they would go back to them they would know what to do. The Liberal principle is that when the rights and freedoms of any individual or group in society reaches the point where they trample on the rights or freedoms of another individual or group, they have to be curtailed. The government has not effectively done this in so far as labour and management are concerned. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) can laugh, but he is as guilty as anyone in this government.

The philosophy of Liberalism is in ill hands at the present time. This government is totally removed from and unaware of what Liberalism means. They continue to allow wages and prices to get out of pace with productivity; they do nothing about it. Three years ago the government said it was going to control inflation even if it meant creating 6 per cent unemployment. That is precisely what it did. Now, 300,000 families in this country are in misery economically because this government put them there.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hellyer: That is how they got there. That is the truth. The tight money policy of 1969-70 is the cause of the present level of unemployment. That is one reason the government is now going to such extraordinary lengths to do something about it. If they do not do something about it, it is because they are unaware of the facts. I was interested to learn this morning that new opportunities programs will be introduced. Some of them may be worth while but in many cases it will just be another opportunity for the favourite few of the government to spend a lot of someone else's money; for the majority the only opportunity will be to pay higher taxes.

There is another alternative and I would like hon. members to think about it. We do not have to stay with this outworn, outmoded trade-off theory which the professional economists are pawning off on us. This is nonsense, but it will persist in the minds of the experts as long as you have monopoly power on both the labour and the industrial side pushing up wages and prices out of step with productivity. As long as that continues, the central bank has no recourse except to be involved in this trade-off between too much unemployment and too much inflation or, as we have at the present time, too much of both simultaneously.

We should go back to fundamentals. That is the reason I intend to support the amendment. The committee would do well to take a hard look at this bill and what was proposed last night by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis). She referred to this incredible bureaucracy as a Saint Vitus's dance; I thought it was a most eloquent phrase. Why do we persist in solutions which are so complicated and insensitive to humanity that they get everyone in this country uptight as a result? Surely there is a better way. If the committee cannot come up with one, I will be surprised. As a matter of fact, if given a free choice I will be surprised if the minister does not do that. We should refer the bill back to committee.

The frustration that one feels in a situation like this is real and understandable. Here is a bill that very few people like. Someone told me last night that a group of young programmers, people who learn to put information into computers at school, was largely responsible. I do not know who is responsible for it, but whoever it is I hope he has to live with it and has something docked from his pay every time the computer throws out false information. It is a horrendous prospect.

Members of Parliament, including many Liberal backbenchers and the people of this country realize that this is a poor bill. Many Liberal backbenchers do not want to fight the next election with this bill hanging over their heads. I know this from talking to them. They think it is more bureaucratic nonsense that the system did not have a chance to throw over. Opposition members are divided: some want to get ahead with it, not because they think it is the right solution but failing another solution they feel that half a loaf is better than none. Some want to get on with the job, taking the chance that they will be able to unravel the whole ball of yarn later.

The New Democratic Party made it clear that they do not like the bill. They say it is a bureaucratic monstrosity which removes the principle of universality that has worked satisfactorily over the years. I would venture to guess that given a free vote on conscience the vote of this House would be negative on the bill; it would not carry. I would go so far as to say that the same thing could happen in the country. The people of this country have more sense; they would be able to come up with a better solution. They would not do anything as complicated as this. They would reject this further intrusion into their lives and privacy. They would say that there has to be a better means of distributing income. They want opportunities and meaningful wages. The people of this country want the government to make it possible to start small businesses and do the things they want to do. They want the government to get off their backs with its tight money policy, regulations, bureaucracy and all the other things we have had that make life so complicated and take all the joy out of it.

I understand, but I do not like to understand, that when so many people are against the bill, when the prevailing opinion is negative and so many people think it can be improved or, better still, that it should be scrapped and started over again, nevertheless the bill will be passed because of the old party system of cracking the whip. The whip cracks down and everyone jumps into line whether they agree or not. When the vote is called and the leader stands up, everyone falls into line even though their conscience says no.

• (1510)

Is it any wonder that the young people of this country are cynical about politics? Is it any wonder that the people generally have become cynical about politics? Is it any wonder that when you talk to them they say, "These ideas make sense, but will anybody listen?" Are you not just beating your head against a wall?" Is it not a sad state of affairs that the Canadian people should be losing faith in democracy because once a government has been elected they have no control over it and it persists in doing things of which the people would not approve if they had an opportunity to vote in a referendum. They say, "What difference does it make who we vote for, because the same thing goes on and on." The whip cracks, the bell is rung and the bill goes through; that is the situation.

I personally regret that one after another four or five bills have gone through which do not really make sense for Canada. Some of them can perhaps be reversed. But it is just like the Viet Nam war; you get into it inch by inch and there is no way of getting out. You get all the bureaucracy built in. So much face would be lost if things were changed. The time to avoid that trap is before you cross all the thresholds, before you get too far down the road.

I hope someone else will speak this afternoon. I hope the amendment carries and that the bill is referred back to committee, because if we as representatives of the people cannot come up with something better than this bill on behalf of those who need help, we should be ashamed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, when I came into the House a few minutes ago I had no intention of speaking on this bill. However, having seen the reaction of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald) to the words of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) I feel compelled to speak. After all, the minister was at one time a close collaborater and friend of the hon. member for Trinity, and then the hon. member for Trinity was regarded as holding such high ideals and opinions that he could hope to attain the leadership of the Liberal party.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): No, Sir, you have it wrong.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to miss any of the pearls of wisdom that come from the lips of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. If he wishes to interrupt, all he has to do is stand up and I shall be glad to make way for him.

We have listened to a speech this afternoon by a member of this House who for many years was a strong supporter of the Liberal party. He has found that under its present leadership it is no longer the Liberal party but that it has become the Trudeau-Pelletier-Goyer party.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am sorry the Solicitor General (Mr. Goyer) is not here today, because I have just raised his status a little and he certainly needs elevation; no one needs it more than he does.

On this subject I think I can speak with reasonable objectivity. I have never collected any portion of the baby bonus or the family allowance and as far as the old age pension is concerned, I refused to apply for the pension because I felt that while it purports to be a contributory measure, in point of fact, as far as I am concerned, in view of the few years of contributions made it would not be a contributory pension.

The words of the hon. member for Trinity, spoken with deep sincerity—

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: What was that sickly laugh for?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —were most impressive. Two or three of those backbenchers seem to think they have a monopoly on sincerity as long as they follow the Prime Minister's line. They realize that any deviation means they will never be appointed as parliamentary secretaries. The hon. member for Trinity mentioned the dreams he had about what might have been achieved. He did not mention the just society of which we heard so much in 1968 and of which we have heard so little since. Indeed, the expression "just society" has during the past three years become a dirty word in the vocabulary of Trudeau Liberalism.

I say that this bill, brought before the House in the dying hours of the session, is one which should have been given earlier consideration. I feel sure many hon. members would vote for the amendment were it not for the fact that we are also in the dying hours, as I believe, of another Parliament and that when they return it will be to a new Parliament with, I hope, a new government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: As to social security, I am one of those who throughout the years have given every support to measures to increase social responsibility. It used to be said that social security was a monopoly of the Socialist party: the two were regarded as being synonymous in the same way as in earlier days those who emigrated to Canada were told that here liberty and Liberalism were synonymous. They found that neither of these epitomies are well based in fact.

As to the amendment, I think the government would have done well to have permitted to be carried out what is provided for therein, namely, that the bill be referred back to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs for the purpose of reconsidering the portions of clause 6 and such other clauses that impose a means or income test for the receipt of benefits under the bill.

However, even if the bill were to be referred back to committee as proposed, I would not expect there would be much change. I have often been alone in the House in the past four years in my opposition to the changes in rules which have greatly emasculated this chamber and brought about a situation in which there is no proper consideration given to controversial or bills other subjects in committee. Some contend that committees are successful in the United States. Under the American system they are, because it does not matter in a committee what decision is made in either the House of Representatives or Congress; it does not directly affect the presidency of the United States or the leadership of the party in the presidential office.

However, it is different here. I do not care which political party is in office, because when a measure of a controversial nature is submitted to a committee, members vote on the basis of their political persuasion because to do otherwise, were they supporters of the government, would be to weaken the government.

The hon. member for Trinity said that this Parliament had ceased to hold the respect of the Canadian people. I agree. I find everywhere across the nation the view expressed that the institution of Parliament in these days is no longer effective. If that be so, then we might as well close down the institution. However, it need not be so for much longer for the Canadian people have an opportunity to make a change and to once more bring about the restoration of this institution. While we may differ in our views sitting, as we do, either to your right or your left, Mr. Speaker, there should none the less not be any requirement on members of the House to park their consciences at the door of Parliament. As I view it, that is the great danger today.

With regard to the present motion, I know that there are members in the House who in their hearts entirely support the need for further consideration being given this matter in committee. But they cannot vote that way because to do so would weaken their government.

Where are we going today? I recall when in 1944 the late Right Hon. Mackenzie King introduced family allowance legislation in this House. My own party was opposed to it and I was alone in caucus on the issue for several days. I said I was determined to support it and it was pointed out to me that if I did so it would be contrary to the viewpoint of my own party. Yet I stood my ground. A Member of Parliament is not an automaton to be pushed around as a puppet. Finally my party joined in support of family allowances in this House, with one exception.

With regard to old age pensions, this party has given its support through the years. During my period of administration we raised the amounts of pensions very considerably. We thought that the $6 increase given by the St. Laurent government in 1957 was unjust and unfair and we made sure in the next election that the "six buck boys" did not ride again. When in office we brought about increases.

I am in favour of fair social security measures. But what do we face here, Mr. Speaker? We face a government that refuses to accept the principle of universality. The means test is the meanest test of all because it is applied to the average person across the country and places everyone in a position of mental or physical subservience. I am opposed to anything in the nature of a means test.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

During the last year I was in office the total federal expenditure in Canada was about $6 billion. That was said to be frightful. I remember the mourners sitting over on this side of the House with tears running down their faces. Their speeches were laced with lachrymose sentiments. What are the expenditures of the government today? They are up to $17 billion! In part this is due to the fact that this House has no control over expenditures made today, none whatsoever. The day that this Parliament agreed to place our expenditures in committees for investigation we closed the door of this House against protecting the Canadian taxpayer from outrageous and totally unjustified expenditures. I said that the door to effective examination of expenditures would be closed, and what we witnessed the other night during the late sitting till 2.30 in the morning, in the passage of $16 billion in 4½ hours, was—

Mr. Bell: Disgraceful.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was the most inexcusable conduct that Parliament ever indulged in. But it was the natural fruit of those who planted a tree that they said would make Parliament work but which turned out otherwise.

Today we have the highest taxation in Canada's history. I should like to put on the record what the minister said in the immortal speech that he made in Quebec City. I said "immortal", but as far as the Canadian taxpayer is concerned it was an immoral speech and aimed against the middle class of this country. At page 18 of his speech he said:

> Governments, contrary to what many may think, are not uniformly indifferent or hostile, impersonal or heartless institutions.

I have never heard anyone say that they were, but we now have the imprimatur of the minister.

> They are composed of people who genuinely seek the aristotelian mean—

That indicates a knowledge of the classics.

> —the maximum good that can be evenly distributed.

Aristotle never thought of that, but today he is blamed in the minister's speech. The minister then goes on to say:

> To take the example which most concerns us here to day, measures to alleviate poverty—to increase the economic and social security of those now living a marginal existence—result only from transfers of resources which, in one way or another, come from those who are better off.

That is where the members of this House come in.

> Unfortunately, we do not have enough of the "super-rich" to effect this transfer only from the manifestly affluent. Resource transfers of any magnitude must come from the great middle class—those who provide the overwhelming majority of the tax revenue, but do not by any means see themselves as having reached Easy Street—or fat city, to use the term of the poverty ghettos.

What does that mean? In the next paragraph the minister said:

> We cannot act like Leacock's horseman and go madly galloping off in all directions at once.

He should have given that advice to his fellow ministers because that is what they have been doing in this session in advance of an election. If this government is returned, then in view of what the minister said in Quebec City the middle class of Canada should know what is going to happen to them. Today they are taxed as never before. But they have only just seen the sunrise; taxes are going to go up even further. Let me read what the minister said in this connection when speaking in Hamilton on June 28:

We must convince the middle-income groups that they are the only source of income adequate enough for taxation to really aid low-income groups.

As the hon. member for Trinity said, people are taxed today until in many cases there is no incentive left. In anticipation of an election the prospect is that we have not seen the half of it yet. The government has in mind increasing taxation for the middle class. This is the first time in recorded history that a government has gone to the people and has said that, so far as the middle class is concerned, if they think they have paid through the nose up to the present time, they have not seen the half of what they will be subjected to. The minister went on to say:

If you tax the top groups more, you would run into the law of diminishing returns—

Surely the law of diminishing return applies to those people whose incomes are between $8,000 and $15,000. But not according to the minister.

—because there are not many in that group and you would kill their incentive.

It would ruin the incentive of the high income groups to pay any additional tax, so they have already received some relief in the recent budget. The minister went on to say:

The same would apply to a 10 per cent increase in corporation tax, which would produce only $250 million in revenue—

• (1530)

Hence the tax collectors cannot touch the corporations and they cannot touch the rich. When in that position, what do they do? They will soak the middle class. That is what the minister's speech means. He goes on to say that if we had a 10 per cent increase in corporation tax this could harm incentive among companies facing stiff increases. There you have the picture. The top boys will not pay. They already had a slash on their income tax. Those on the bottom cannot pay. Those in between, however, will be taxed to an extent that can only be imagined at this time.

The blueprint set forth by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) indicates that the middle class have not seen anything yet in taxation. He made a speech to the Liberal Association in his constituency. The House might be interested in the reaction. He was challenged by a worried Liberal. A man has to be pretty worried to go to an annual meeting of the Liberal party in a constituency represented by the minister and indicate that he is worried. But this Joe was worried, and I think he deserves a lift to immortality. The minister was challenged by a worried Liberal crane-operator named Joe Boich. Joe spoke for the Canadian people: he said, "For God's sake, don't tax us any more". I want the minister to take his words to heart because Joe Boich is no Joe-boy. Joe Boich is a Canadian who used these words which will ring across the country in the coming election, and they bear repetition: he said, "For God's sake, don't tax us any more".

Then Joe spoke some more. He got that far without interruption and there must have been some listening to what he had to say. He added that taxes are already hurting the middle-income earners and discouraging them. That is what I have been saying—and Joe Boich, in front of his own minister, at a Liberal Association meeting, came to the same conclusion. His views indicate there is an undercurrent in this country. Then he had some more to say exactly along the line taken by the hon. member for Trinity. Joe expressed it in words the hon. member for Trinity did not use. Joe used simple, direct words: he said, "When we make it, you are going to take it away from us".

Mr. Speaker, those words deserve to be on every billboard in this country—"For God's sake, don't tax us any more. When we make it, you are going to take it away from us". What did the minister say? He did not answer that, but he said that if he listened to the opposition the taxes would be even higher. With all the billions of dollars being spent today, with the lack of examination of those expenditures by this Parliament and with the cry of Canadians everywhere, "Don't tax us any more", what does the minister say? The minister tells them they have not seen anything yet. If the Trudeau government goes back, the Canadian people will get a lesson. Do not think I am looking at this from a biased standpoint—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: —because I am going to quote.

An hon. Member: Look at the Davis government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Over there in the lee section I know that the hon. gentleman from High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Deakon) reads the Christian Science Monitor. He is one of those gentlemen who always read this fine publication. Here is what the Christian Science Monitor had to say—and the writer is a thirty-second degree Liberal, Bruce Hutchison. It is dated July 1, Dominion Day. I do not like to quote but I must place his words before the House:

The ordinary Canadian, neither rich nor poor, has been warned by his government that he must pay for a large transfer of wealth from the fortunate to the unfortunate sectors of society.

The minister's speech is described as a blunt speech. It is not so blunt, however, that the point has not got over to the Canadian people. Then the article quotes the minister as having said:

We must convince the middle-income groups that they are the only source of income adequate enough for taxation to really aid low-income groups.

The article continues:

Already the government has moved to implement its warning by personal income tax cuts in the lower brackets and on corporation producing goods within Canada.

The resulting loss of revenues at the top and bottom of the scale will be made up, it is hoped, by higher taxes at the middle beginning next year. A temporary reduction of 3 per cent on all incomes will be withdrawn then and for the first time capital gains will be taxed.

It is not clear yet, however, that a basic shift in the tax burden can balance a budget of $16 billion which has increased by 50 per cent in the first four years of Pierre Elliott Trudeau's Liberal government—

Division

What is said means a tremendous increase in taxation across this country for Canadians of the middle class. Sir, I wish I had more time because I would like to read some other prize bits in the minister's speech. However, everybody received a copy. Having handed out copies of this, the minister has not found a way of evading responsibility for telling the Canadian people that even though they think they have paid high taxes they have not seen the end yet.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. Shall we now proceed to the consideration of private members' business?

• (1600)

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the hon. member for Trinity objecting to our proceeding with private members' business?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we could have the unanimous consent of the House to extend the time for consideration of public business long enough to put the question on the motion for third reading.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The minister is suggesting what I was asking indirectly, that is, whether we should go to private members' business. In either event we require the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, the time for private members' business has arrived, and this government could have done much better for the poor people of Canada. Perhaps the next government will.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: You are nuts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should not make a speech. The Chair inquires whether there is unanimous consent, and there is not unanimity.

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions. Could we have order, please?

Before the Chair calls the motion which is on the order paper for today, perhaps I could take advantage of the fact that there are so many of us here at this moment to remind hon. members that later this afternoon, after royal assent when we return to the House, all hon. members are invited to room 16 to wish one another a pleasant holiday.

[Translation]

I will be glad to welcome my hon. colleagues who will meet in Room 16 after Royal Assent.

[English]

This cordial invitation is extended, of course, to the senior officers of the House and to members of the press gallery.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received which reads as follows:

Government House, Ottawa,

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wishart F. Spence, O.B.E., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 7th day of July, at 4.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,

Administrative Secretary

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

BROADCASTING

REQUEST THAT POLICY OF CBC REGARDING CORPORATION-PRODUCED PROGRAMS BE REFERRED TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville) moved:

That the policy of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation of preventing or delaying the showing in Windsor of corporation-produced television series or programs in order to sell these series or programs more profitably to broadcasting networks in the United States be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts for investigation and report.

He said: The background of this motion, Mr. Speaker, is that three times within the last year-and-a-half the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has denied to television station CKLW, channel 9, in Windsor the right to carry Canadian-produced television series being carried over the rest of the CBC network. The first two series, "Audubon Theatre" and "Adventures in Rainbow Country", where the CBC was the co-producer with independent producer Ralph Ellis of Manitou Productions in Toronto, were denied to CKLW-TV during the 1970-71 season. The withholding of the third series, "The Whiteoaks of Jalna", where the CBC was the sole producer, occurred in January of this year.

In the first two cases the series were erroneously released to CKLW-TV and withdrawn only after the CBC discovered its error. In fact, 22 of the 26 instalments of "Rainbow Country" were shown in Windsor before the series was withdrawn. With respect to "Jalna" the CBC intended a delay of nine months in the Windsor release after the January 23 première on the rest of the CBC network. However, when it was not able to sell "Jalna" to the American networks even with the sacrifice of the Windsor market, it allowed the series to begin in Windsor on June 18, a delay of five months rather than nine.

After the two instances of CBC discrimination against Windsor last year I raised the subject in the House on April 5, 1971, at the time of adjournment, and in reply the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State read a statement prepared by the CBC. In that statement the CBC claimed that it released all full network programs to all stations of the English television network, including affiliated stations such as CKLW-TV in Windsor, with three stated exceptions.

The exceptions were as follows: first, with respect to television series produced in the United States and acquired by the CBC from a Canadian distributor for full English television network release, in which case the rights acquired by the Canadian distributor seldom include Windsor, since American distributors regard Windsor as part of the Detroit market; second, with respect to television series produced in Canada by independent producers and acquired by the CBC from a Canadian distributor for full English television release, in which case the CBC usually defers for a period of some months the right to include Windsor in its network schedule in order to increase the private producer's chances for United States sales; third, with respect to television series produced in Canada which are co-financed or co-produced by the CBC, in which case the CBC again usually defers its Windsor rights to assist the private production company with its cost-recovery problems. It is readily apparent that the "Jalna" series, which was produced entirely by the CBC with taxpayers' money, does not fall under any of these exceptions, and therefore by the CBC's own statement ought to have been released to CKLW-TV.

To amplify the problems which CKLW-TV has with border-protection clauses, I should like to underline that the station is denied about 25 hours a week of American programming which is available to all other stations in the CBC network. Included are such popular programs as Flip Wilson, The Carol Burnett Show, Laugh-In, The Partridge Family, The Jimmy Stewart Show, Walt Disney productions and specials like those of Jacques Cousteau. In these cases the decision to deny the Windsor television station access to the programs is made by the American networks, in the interest of having Windsor viewers watch the programs on the network stations in Detroit.

An allied border-protection problem is the denial to Windsor sports fans of the opportunity of seeing hockey games played by Canadian teams which conflict with home engagements of the Detroit Red Wings, or baseball games played by the Montreal Expos which conflict with those of the Detroit Tigers. In such cases the programs are not available to viewers anywhere in the Windsor-Detroit area. Again the decision is made by American interests, and it might be assumed that the CBC is here in the position of an unwilling accomplice.

Even though American network programs denied to channel 9 remain available to Windsor viewers, there is still a serious consequence. Since CKLW-TV does not have first-run American network programs as lead-ins for Canadian programs, it is able to attract a much smaller proportion of the audience to Canadian productions than it would otherwise be able to do. As a result, channel 9 has only 23 per cent of the Windsor audience and only 7 per cent of the Detroit audience. It is worth remarking that the station is able to attract a higher 12 per cent of the Detroit market for its American programs even though these are limited to re-runs of earlier American network programs. Its best lead-in, however, is its 9 p.m. local news program. With respect to its competitive position vis-à-vis American stations in Detroit, CKLW-TV is further affected by the fact that CRTC regulations do not allow it to carry many of the advertisements that can be broadcast in the United States.

The financial situation of the station is of public relevance because it affects the quality of programming which it can afford and also because of the CBC's purchase of a 25 per cent interest in the station in 1970 and its contract to take over 100 per cent ownership on May 31, 1975. The Auditor General's report recently revealed that CKLW-TV lost $3,135,000 in its first 13 months of operation and that the CBC will eventually be responsible for all losses sustained by its present principal owners, Baton Broadcasting Ltd. of Toronto.

The bleak financial picture is somewhat alleviated by the fact that $838,000 of this initial loss was for depreciation in the value of feature films which Baton Broadcasting had had to purchase, along with the station, from the previous owners, RKO General, at Detroit market prices which are much higher than those for Windsor alone. The introduction of Canadian content quotas will prevent CKLW-TV from showing many of the films before its rights run out.

It is also worth remarking that CKLW-TV has been adjudged to have made such an imaginative contribution toward local programming that it has recently won the Canadian Association of Broadcasters' award as the Television Station of the Year for 1972. Its 9 p.m. local news program and its efforts to promote the United Community Service campaign have been especially outstanding. It should be added that it makes no effort to do any local programming for Detroit. However, it remains true that the 40 per cent of the schedule which consists of U.S. re-runs has to finance the 60 per cent of the schedule which is Canadian. Channel 9 has a constant struggle to avoid being a re-run and old movie station.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

The CBC has recently been subjected to criticism for entering into an allegedly one-sided deal in favour of Baton Broadcasting and its chief shareholder, Mr. John Bassett. However, this was not an ordinary market transaction but, rather, one into which the CBC was forced by the CRTC, which required it to assume an immediate equity position and to guarantee total acquisition in the near future. In return for the financing of the acquisition of the station by Baton Broadcasting and its turning it over to the CBC at the acquisition price at the end of a five-year period, the CBC agreed to reimburse Baton for its interest and carrying charges and for its share of any operating losses during the period.

This appears to be a reasonable enough arrangement for the CBC to enter into. At the same time, the station will tend to be a financial liability for the CBC when it takes it over in 1975. Indeed, since its advertising policy is more stringent than that of the CRTC, its financial position may well be worse than that of the present management.

Many of the financial disadvantages of CKLW-TV are inescapable regardless of who operates the station, but the CBC's own border-protection policy is not. It is this which adds the final indignity to the situation. Dr. George Davidson, president of CBC, was quoted by Ron Base in the Windsor Star of January 17, 1972, as saying in an interview: "The thing I'm concerned about is the position of the Windsor station when it becomes CBC-owned and operated. I'm saying frankly that when that happens it will have to be treated like any other CBC station." To a Windsorite these words are not so much a reassuring conclusion about what will happen in mid-1975 as a discouraging reiteration of the CBC's intention to maintain the status quo as long as it can. The CBC expresses, not repentance but confirmation in sin.

The peculiar reasoning behind the CBC's border-protection policy is highlighted by the attitude it displayed in April of this year regarding the televising of the quarter-final games in the National Hockey League play-offs. Since the Detroit Red Wings did not gain the play-offs, there was no border-protection clause to interfere with channel 9's carrying the games. If the NABET strike had not been in progress at the CBC at the time, channel 9 could merely have joined the CBC network. However, as a result of the strike McLaren Advertising, which handles the television rights of the games for the NHL, transferred those rights to the CTV network from the CBC.

As a station whose licence from the CRTC provides that it should carry CTV programs, CKLW-TV applied to the CBC under its affiliation agreement for permission to carry this CTV program. The CBC refused permission on the ground that this would involve splitting the network. This argument struck television viewers in Windsor as a mere rationalization, in light of the CBC's willingness to split the network to the disadvantage of Windsor viewers whenever there appeared to be a possibility of financial advantage to it in so doing.

The hockey deadlock was broken by a combination of two factors: CKLW-TV carried the CBC network program as it was required to do, but paid WTVS, channel 56, a non-network UHF station in Detroit, to carry the first quarter-final games for it on April 5 and 6. This pressure, coupled with probable pressure on the CBC from the CRTC, induced the CBC to change its policy on April 7, and from the third game onward CKLW-TV was allowed to join the CTV network to present the rest of the playoffs to Windsor sports fans.

In its statement of April 5, 1971, the CBC ranks the economic factor of increasing the private producer's chances for U.S. sales—and, presumably, its own chances where it is the sole producer, though, of course, it does not admit the possibility of border protection in such a case—over any cultural factors, or indeed over any economic factor relating to the well-being of channel 9. But in point of fact it has not succeeded in selling in the United States any of the programs denied Windsor, so that the economic benefit which it places above all else is not actual but is at best potential.

On the other hand, it has been shown that no actual financial detriment occurs by allowing channel 9 viewers to see programs in advance of or at the same time as the rest of the Detroit market. The BBC sold its series on "Henry VIII" to a major U.S. network even though it had been previously shown on channel 9. Even more striking is the fact that "Harvey", an American special shown on March 22 of this year, was seen on channel 9 at the same time as on U.S. stations. This resulted from the fact that "Harvey" was taped at John Bassett's production studios at CFTO-TV in Toronto and was also shown on the CTV network. Mr. Bassett successfully insisted that any show produced at his studios and shown on the CTV network must be made available to Windsor.

The only conclusion possible is that the CBC's giving in to border-protection pressures, real, potential or imaginary, is an indication of commercial ineptitude. In actuality, no benefit has accrued to the CBC from border protection. In actuality, no detriment has occurred to other networks which have refused to discriminate against Windsor. In actuality, there is no economic sense to the CBC's economic argument. I need hardly add that there is no non-economic argument to which the CBC could appeal, since its position is, from the socio-cultural viewpoint, an absurdity.

In sum, the CBC policy with respect to Windsor television is a tissue of contradictions. A CBC-produced television series was denied to Windsor viewers on January 23, 1972, in contravention of the CBC's own announced policy of April 5, 1971. Channel 9 is beggared by the CBC even though it will have to pick up in 1975 the deficit to which its own policies contribute. The CBC denies programs to Windsor to gain selling advantages in the United States and then fails to sell in that market.

The president of the CBC recognizes that the CBC will have to abandon as untenable in 1975 policies which it now insists on following. The network can easily be split to Windsor's detriment when it is deemed to be advantageous to the CBC, but when a program split would be advantageous to Windsor it is found to be inconsistent and illogical. The CBC, which exists to promote Canadian culture, attempts to limit its availability in Windsor. Of such insubstantial stuff is the CBC's policy towards Windsor fabricated.

In conclusion, I would ask the House to support my motion to refer this CBC mistreatment of Windsor to the broadcasting committee for a thorough investigation, one which would allow the intensive questioning of top CBC officials. I am convinced that such a study and the eventual report of the committee would bring about a change in the present unenlightened and discriminatory policy of the corporation.

It may be, Mr. Speaker, that "Jalna" is the CBC's "Edsel", as president-designate Picard has remarked, but residents of the automotive city of Windsor have the expertise and judgment to carry out their own vehicle tests. It is this cultural choice, so vital to a healthy democratic society, which they are being denied by the CBC. I hope that the CBC will be able, like the rest of us, to accept the consequences of democracy.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that in what may be the last debate of the twenty-eighth Parliament we should be dealing with one of the aspects of national identity. There was a debate of short duration a couple of days ago arising out of the Dominion Day episode. That had to do with our identity. This debate, however, brings us into the equally important arena in which we ask, "How are we to hold on to things Canadian and maintain Canadian values when our large neighbour to the south threatens to overwhelm us?"

From the point of view of the economics of this situation, I would imagine that the Windsor area stands alone. If one examines all the other cultural confrontations along the American-Canadian border one realizes for instance, that Montreal is vast enough to overwhelm any influence of Palm Springs, Maine and similar areas on the other side of the border. Toronto, perhaps, has a much tougher time dealing with the influence of Buffalo; but it is a city large enough to cope adequately with the situation.

• (1620)

Windsor, smaller than Detroit, really is in the nutcracker in this problem. Western Canadian cities are large enough to hold off American challenges. That is the nature of this kind of economics. One area of Canada, represented by, among others, the hon. member who has just spoken, has been suffering because of the desire of some Canadians at least to make dents in the American television market.

If we examine the statistics regarding viewer preference of television stations, the Americans, being much more parochial than Canadians and much more nationalistic-minded, probably will not be seduced over to a Canadian station in any event. They tend to follow the mass media and basic television fare. Our noble experiments in Canada will attract but few.

As for "Jalna," perhaps it is a mercy that the residents of Windsor did not have to see it when the rest of us did. It gives the knowing Windsor person an opportunity to write to someone on the outside to find out what the series was all about. Maybe they could have the program translated into simple terms. It was an extraordinarily difficult production to follow. I enjoyed it, but I did not understand it.

This was a strange year in dealing with estimates of the government. One of the largest and most controversial agencies, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, did not have its representatives appear before the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. This was partly due to the protracted labour difficulties that had gone on between the CBC and NABET. The fact is that when the deadline arrived by which the estimates were to be considered, those of the CBC were not subjected to scrutiny and, perforce, they were passed pursuant to the Standing Order of the House of Commons. It might have been there that the hon. member could have made his mark earlier this session. I realize that he is asking for this matter to be referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. I will support his motion in that regard, but it is a hollow thing. I do not imagine the members of that committee would be overjoyed with the prospect of trooping back to hold hearings this summer. In any event, the hon. member has not indicated that is what he wants to do.

I am sorry the hon. member did not take up this matter when the season of original shows was in full bloom, rather than the present season of re-runs. We could then have called witnesses. It would have given us a chance to examine the CBC on its philosophy without getting mixed up with their labour situation. Perhaps the most ironic factor in this whole strange business involving the Windsor television station is that the CBC, in the interest of expediency and trying to make some sales to the United States, found it necessary to turn its back on the mandate Parliament had given to it. The CBC was formed four decades ago to help Canada achieve its identity, stay together as a nation and help foster Canadians as actors, broadcasters, writers, musicians and all the fields of the dramatic arts. I think it would be this point which would most exercise us if we were to examine the Windsor problem in the broadcasting committee this summer. If not, it will certainly exercise the members of the broadcasting committee who will deal with it at the next session or in the new Parliament.

The CBC has always been tripped when it has shown itself to be overwhelmed by the cashbox mentality. In any event, it has not been conspicuously successful in that regard. It has certainly become a very bad cropper on this Windsor issue. It has left the people of that area down and has not shown a Canadian spirit by adopting the policy that it has adopted. For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I will support the hon. member's motion.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) about the problems of the television station in Windsor, which is next door to the metropolis of Detroit. As the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) said, the general purport and philosophy of this motion will find favour with all members of the House. The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville is aware of the problems surrounding private members' motions. In general, members usually support each other's private motions and discuss them at length, so they rarely come to a vote. Even if this motion came to a vote, in view of the fact we are in the closing minutes of this session, and perhaps in the closing minutes of this twenty-eight Parliament, it is difficult to see what could be done in a meaningful way.

I listened carefully to the explanation of the motion. When I heard some of the scuttlebutt I thought the hon. member was moving a motion to have the House try to bring "Jalna" to the Windsor residents. I have great regard for the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. He was a very esteemed chairman of the constitutional committee which travelled from coast to coast dissecting or trying to arrive at a new charter for Canada. He came in contact with many Canadians. I am relieved to find that, being exposed to Canadians from coast to coast, he was not taking the time of the House to try to have "Jalna" brought to the people of Windsor, good people though they may be. As the hon. member said, "Jalna" has become an "Edsel." I watched it once or twice and I really started to wonder about the CBC.

I think another hon. member wants to contribute his thoughts in respect of another area of discrimination in television service. However, I would like to make a few points. I agree with the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants that it is rather ironic that in the closing hours of this session, or this Parliament we are talking about communications. Communications is one of the real problems in trying to define something that is called Canada. There was worry about the physical bindings which hold this country together, whether they are the CPR, the CNR or the Intercolonial Railway. It was the physical approach that helped to bind this nation. Now we have electronic highways, electronic air. But communications is one of the cohesives or adhesives of a nation.

• (1630)

In Atlantic Canada, where I come from, you turn on the news in western Nova Scotia and invariably get the cookie sale in the Moncton baptist church, or you turn on the news from CBC or CTV in western Nova Scotia and you find out what the Saint John Girl Guides have done at their Brownie festival.

The CBC should not only help to correct the problem of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville but should start to correct the discrimination existing in other areas of Canada, particularly in Atlantic Canada where all we get in Nova Scotia is news from New Brunswick—their news, their stories, their cookie fairs, New Brunswick teas. We are in Nova Scotia and we want Nova Scotia news. It is one thing to have an airport called Halifax, which sometimes gets fogged in, and to have to land in Moncton—I have nothing against Moncton or the province—but I would like to know what Quebec would do if the alternate airport serving a Quebec airport were in Ontario.

I think it is an insult to the jurisdiction of Nova Scotia that the alternative to the Nova Scotia airport should be in another province, four hours away from Halifax. But in transportation we have to accept the fact that sometimes there is fog in Halifax and we have to land in Moncton even though Greenwood, one of the best air bases in western Nova Scotia, is available and is free from fog.

The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), both former ministers of national defence, know the attributes of Greenwood and know there is no fog there. I am glad to be the member from this area which has no fog, even though sometimes I may try to create a little. Be that as it may, there is discrimination on the part of the CBC.

There are only a few minutes left, Mr. Speaker, and there are many other serious things I wish to say. However the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville has brought to the floor of this House in the closing moments of this Parliament a question with respect to the CBC which I think every Canadian taxpayer wishes to see raised before the relevant committee of the House.

We did not take the opportunity this year to discuss the CBC estimates, because of the NABET strike. We did not want to get involved in that sensitive jurisdictional conflict. But the budget this year amounted, I think, to some $190 million. The fact is that the CBC during my time in the House over the last five years has more than doubled its operating budget. This makes the expenses for running the CNR a picnic by comparison. It is time we looked at the operations of this corporation. Maybe one of the good things emerging from the NABET strike is that Canadians managed without a CBC service and were able to live without it and enjoy the programs they received from alternative networks or through cablevision.

The hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville mentioned the CRTC. There are a whole raft of problems connected with the CRTC, cable vision, Canadian content and the whole issue of communications. I, too, hope this whole list of items will be referred to the new broadcasting committee if there is a dissolution of this House before we next meet, or, should the House reconvene in September, that we will deal with it then.

As far as the NABET strike is concerned, it took us years in Atlantic Canada to get the national news at eleven o'clock, the same as every other Canadian community. For some incomprehensible reason, even though the strike is settled, we are still getting the national news at twelve o'clock. This may be thought to be a small and picayune point, but I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, if you watch the national news, that you imagine watching it around twelve o'clock until 12.30 or 12.45. Since we are such God-fearing folk in the east who go to bed early and like to get up early to work a hard day, that difference of an hour at night has quite an adverse effect on our physiology, let alone our psychology. So in these two ways we are affected.

I completely agree with the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville. I was a member of the broadcasting committee and I know he was involved, indeed, overinvolved, in the constitutional issue. I referred to him in jest as the Marco-Polo of the constitution, the way he moved all across the country trying to resolve that large problem. Today, in the dying minutes of this session he is trying to resolve a more local problem. He has my deep sympathy. But I do not want it to stay there: the CBC must expedite its plans for satellite service in western Nova Scotia. It is not good enough to say we will get satellite coverage in Nova Scotia in five years to give us reception in Nova Scotia from Nova Scotia rather than getting it from Maine or New Brunswick.

As far as the national news is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I do not see why, if the staff is in Toronto and the equipment is there—and it was not damaged during the strike—a couple of people not sitting on their buttons could fail to send the national news at eleven o'clock right across this land. So the hon. member has my sympathy and I hope we do something about this problem in the new session.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on the motion before us. I appreciate the motive of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan) in the dying moment of this session and in the immediate pre-election period when something of this nature might be useful by way of improving his local fame.

Although I am prepared to consider his cry for some small thing of the nature of an alternative program, it does not seem very important to me. After all, I have to take into consideration the fact that almost 90 per cent of the geographical area of my constituency is not serviced by any kind of television service. Here we have a situation where the hon. member's constituents are exposed to a great variety of television stations and programs of all kinds, yet he is crying about them not being able to see "Jalna." Those of us who did see some of it, particularly myself, had a great desire to put a motion before the House to take the program off CBC television—and I am not trying to be critical of the efforts which were made by those who produced the show. I realize that those efforts were intended in part to effect an increase in Canadian content, but I think we all agree it was rather an amateur effort and in my opinion the viewers of Windsor-Walkerville did not miss much.

I should like to deal briefly with the absence of a television service in northern Alberta. Consider towns like Fort Vermilion, High Level and Fort Chippewyan, each having a population of 1,500 to 2,000 or more, where there is absolutely no exposure to direct television viewing at all. One of the biggest complaints I receive when I visit these areas is that my constituents do not have the opportunity to see their Member of Parliament on television. That is a various serious matter, I think hon. members will agree.

Mr. Nowlan: It might be a blessing in disguise.

Mr. Yewchuk: It is a very serious matter. People should be able to get the direct news and views from Parliament, to which they are entitled. The citizens of Windsor-Walkerville certainly have not suffered that kind of serious deprivation. Over the four years in which I have been here I think it is fair to say that the CBC has been involved in several controversies, whether over programming, lack of service to certain areas or labour relations. In any event, they seemed to be involved in greater difficulties than one would expect for a Crown corporation.

I have given this matter a great deal of thought and have several suggestions to make which I think would improve the efficiency of this corporation. I do not want to be misinterpreted: I do not want it to be thought that the people working in the CBC as reporters, those in the press gallery and in this area, are not doing a very fine job. Most of them are sincerely trying to do a fine job. But if you look at the corporation as a whole it is not very difficult to agree that there is a degree of efficiency lacking in the corporation. For example, if we look at the coverage given by the CBC of a convention or meeting and the coverage given by a private station, it would appear that almost always the CBC has at least double the staff of the private corporation.

I do not know whether that is the result of union demands, an effort to do a better job or is sheer inefficiency. But in view of the fact that it is a public corporation that is responsible to the public an operation that is paid for in large part out of the public purse, we should look at ways of making the operation a little more efficient. I think experience in the past in other areas have shown that some participation by private enterprise almost always has the effect of improving the efficiency of an operation of this kind or the operation of any kind of business.

Therefore, I suggest that consideration be given to the sale of part of the CBC to private enterprise, perhaps on a 50-50 basis or on some other basis, thus incorporating into the administration of the CBC that element of efficiency which comes from private enterprise, which has to pay its own way. That suggestion is prompted in part by the fact that during the past four years I have been making efforts to get services into northern areas but have been told not to get too excited, that a satellite is just about to be fired into the sky and that everyone will receive TV service and be happy.

I cannot blame the CBC for the absence of such a satellite today. I can only blame the laziness of the government, as portrayed by a good number of its ministers involved in the satellite program. Four years ago I was told that a satellite would be up in two years. We are told today, four years later, that it will take another two years. It is a little discouraging to my people back home constantly to write them year after year and say that we expect a satellite to be up in two years, that receiving stations will then be built and they will have the pleasure of receiving the same privilege as is enjoyed by the rest of the country and seeing direct television on a live basis.

I have received communications from some of the educators in the area, for example the principal of a school who did a study of student marks on current events and their knowledge of current activities in this country. It was his impression that those students who were not exposed to direct news and public affairs programs, or to television viewing, were less informed on various topics. Therefore, from the education point of view his conclusions were that it is definitely detrimental to students attending school in such areas to be denied such facilities. I would be inclined to agree that is probably true. There is no question that education is not the only matter of importance which is a benefit from viewing television; television is also recreational. Unfortunately, not all of the intended recreational programs are useful, though they do take up leisure time and, viewed as a whole, are probably worth while.

I conclude by suggesting to the hon. member that in general I think his motion has been a waste of time. There are some very serious problems facing the country today, such as unemployment, with regard to which there have been no new initiatives recently by the government. The hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) asked today whether any new initiatives were being proposed by the government, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) replied there were none. We are all going home for the summer and are very disappointed at his statement since we were looking forward to talking to our constituents about something. If no new initiatives to combat unemployment are being taken, then the Prime Minister could at least have given us some new alibis to discuss with our constituents.

I see there is only one minister in the House, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Macdonald), so I should like to ask him directly whether he would write down the names of the three towns of High Level, Fort Chipewyan and Fort Vermillion and ask the cabinet to make a greater effort to ensure that television service is extended to the people in those areas.

To get back to the satellite program, I have had further communication with the CBC and apparently there is a lot more to it than just getting a satellite into the sky. There is also the question of allocating funds and doing preliminary surveys, as well as planning for the construction of receiving stations. While I do not know for sure how long it will take to complete these aspects, I am inclined to think it will be two, three years or more. But if we have to wait another two years before the satellite is put in the sky—

Mr. Orange: What about November 1?

Mr. Yewchuk: Which year?

An hon. Member: 1981.

Mr. Yewchuk: My hon. friend says it will be November 1, 1981, which is even later than I imagined. If it is sent up sooner, I will consider that a bonus. Then we must add the time required to obtain all the preliminary information that is necessary to deliver materials to isolated areas, and staff must be recruited to construct the receiving stations. So it appears very much as if it will take a significant period of time before the people, not only in my northern Alberta constituency but in the constituency of the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange), who is not taking this matter very seriously, receive television service.

An hon. Member: He knows more about it than you do.

Mr. Yewchuk: I am informed the hon. member for Northwest Territories knows more about it than I do, and that is quite possible. I hope he speaks as soon as I sit down and shares his knowledge with the House. I have been in fairly frequent and close contact with the CBC—I would say, in continuous contact—but I have not yet been given the information that this satellite is being sent up on November 1. I have been given the information that it may still be a couple of years away, and I would be inclined to think that is closer to the truth.

I see the hon. member for Northwest Territories is very anxious to participate in the debate. While I realize he is retiring from active political life, I am sure he is still interested in speaking for his constituents who are very keen to receive direct, live television coverage as soon as possible. I had the opportunity and the pleasure to visit one of the major towns, Yellowknife, in his constituency about a month ago. I was quite impressed with the degree of desire by his constituents to have a receiving station built there. Apparently no effort has yet been made in that direction. I am a little amazed that the hon. member has not seen to it that construction has been commenced, since he states he had the information that a satellite would be launched by November 1. It seems to me that construction of such a receiving station should have been well under way by this time.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (1700)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

Bill C-183, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code—Chapter No. 18.

Bill C-5, an act to amend the Farm Credit Act—Chapter No. 19.

Bill C-215, an act to amend the Pension Act—Chapter No. 20.

Bill C-230, an act to provide for the resumption of the operation of the ports of Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec—Chapter No. 22.

Bill C-203, an act to amend the Representation Commissioner Act—Chapter No. 21.

Mr. Speaker: Before we adjourn I should like to remind hon. members that tney are invited to join me in Room 16. It will be an occasion to extend greetings and to wish one another pleasant holidays and good luck in any event that may occur in the months ahead.

[Translation]

Evidently, I would ask my hon. colleagues to join me in a moment.

[English]

I would also like to add one word. Earlier today hon. members were kind enough to extend warm congratulations to my humble person in the discharge of my work as Speaker. I think at that time I should have acknowledged that any measure of success of the Speaker depends on the co-operation of hon. members. It depends also on the assistance, guidance and counsel of the officials of the House of Commons.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: On numerous occasions in the past I have had occasion to remind the House, to remind visitors to Parliament and those interested in this institution, of the magnificent contribution made to the House of Commons by our distinguished Clerk, our distinguished Sergeant-at-Arms and the Clerk Assistants who make it possible for us to perform, if I may use the word, and to do our work from day to day as parliamentarians.

[Translation]

On behalf of my colleagues, I want to thank them sincerely and to wish them happy holidays, which they well deserve.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): You are an outstanding Speaker.

[English]

The House adjourned at 5.06 p.m., pursuant to special order made July 6, 1972, until Thursday, September 28, 1972, at 2 o'clock p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, August 31, 1972

The House met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

WEST COAST PORTS OPERATIONS BILL

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION AND CONTINUATION OF LONGSHORING, GRAIN HANDLING AND RELATED OPERATIONS AT WEST COAST PORTS

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to notice given under the provisions of Standing Order 42(2) Mr. MacEachen, for Mr. O'Connell, seconded by Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton), moves for leave to introduce a bill entitled, "An Act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and grain handling operations and operations related to longshoring or grain handling at ports on the west coast of Canada."

Is it the pleasure of the House that the minister shall have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time? By leave, later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if I may rise on a point of order I should like to suggest to the House that it would be agreeable if we could proceed with the second reading of the bill that has just received first reading and, if that is possible, we would like to send the bill to the committee of the whole rather than to a standing committee. At the same time I would like to suggest, if it is agreeable to hon. members, that we might dispense with the private members' hour today in order to proceed with this bill.

Mr. Baldwin: This is perfectly satisfactory, Mr. Speaker. We would like to get to the matter as soon as possible so that the government can explain its inadequacies in this respect.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agree to these two requests, namely, that the bill be considered in committee of the whole and that we suspend the private members' hour. It is always nice to be able to give the government something in the way of help. It needs it.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we are in agreement with the procedure proposed today and we are happy to further in this way the business of the House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members have heard the suggestion made that the House dispense with the private members' hour from five to six o'clock, and also that the bill to which reference has just been made be referred to the committee of the whole House. Is it agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (1410)

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that the bill just referred to has now had first reading and is to be debated on second reading within about 40 minutes, I wonder whether copies of it could not be distributed to members immediately.

Mr. Speaker: It was the intention of the Chair and the Table to see that copies of the bill were distributed immediately, and I think this is being done without further delay.

The hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT AND COST OF LIVING INCREASE—POSSIBILITY OF WITHDRAWAL OF PERSONAL INCOME TAX INCREASE EFFECTIVE JANUARY 1, 1973

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, unaccustomed as I am to applause, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance arising out of the continued high level of unemployment, in excess of 6 per cent seasonally adjusted, and the rapid increase in the—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Make it good, Bob.

Mr. Stanfield: —cost of living.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Stanfield: Has the government taken a decision not to proceed with the 3 per cent increase in personal income tax to come into effect next January in order that people may know where they stand?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the position has not changed on that question since the address I made on May 8.

UNEMPLOYMENT—EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMS FOR COMING WINTER

Mr. Stanfield: In view of this indecision and the prospects for a higher rate of unemployment this winter, can the minister state whether he has yet presented any plans to the provinces with regard to a winter employment program and, if not, when such may be expected?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I had thorough consultation with the provinces, as did my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, and the government's plans by way of special employment programs for the winter will be announced by my colleague.

COST OF LIVING INCREASE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stanfield: The minister may have had conversations but the premiers are very dissatisfied. I should like to ask the minister whether he has any specific measures to combat increase in the cost of living or whether he feels that the disbanding of the Prices and Incomes Commission is sufficient in itself to fight the increase in the cost of living?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister stated in the House, there will be a nucleus from the Prices and Incomes Commission remaining in office and contingency plans are always under review. I might say to the hon. gentleman that if Canadians review the price record and the consumer price index over the last seven months they will see that our record compares favourably with that of the United States despite the fact that they had wage controls and a wage and price freeze.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO MONTREAL PROJECTS AND ACTIONS OF CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION EMPLOYEES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions to direct to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs who, even if the roster applied, would be expected to be here on Thursday, but in his absence I must direct the questions to the Prime Minister. In light of a newspaper report that officers of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Montreal are being or have been charged with having received gifts improperly, and in light of the evidence in the Dennis report that CMHC is oriented toward the developers and the whole situation that that reveals, may I ask the Prime Minister whether consideration is being given to instituting a full inquiry into the various projects in Montreal which have come under criticism in the Charney report, the Dennis report and now in the present situation?

Mr. David Weatherhead (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer the first part of the question. In view of the problems arising from the Projet Abeille, the project in Montreal which was mentioned, the minister formerly in charge of housing, now Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, asked the Solicitor General to conduct a detailed investigation into all events connected with the project. As a result of the investigation by the RCMP, charges were laid against a former and a present employee of CMHC, as well as against persons connected with the building firm. CHMC has suspended the present employee pending the outcome of the trial. The difficulties with Projet Abeille have since been resolved by CHMC to the satisfaction of the home owners, either by buying back the properties from the purchasers or fixing up the properties to the satisfaction of the purchasers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, while thanking the parliamentary secretary for his reply, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister none the less. In view of the fact that the particular project to which the parliamentary secretary referred is not the only project which has been built in a substandard way and against which there have been complaints, in view of the fact there are at least two other projects in the same situation, and in view of the fact that the investigation by the Solicitor General is purely a legal investigation, will the Prime Minister consider, if he has not already done so, making a thorough inquiry into the methods of CMHC and CMHC officers in Montreal with regard to all the projects which have come under criticism from the people who have suffered because of the substandard situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that the answer by the parliamentary secretary indicated clearly that the previous minister and the present minister were indeed very much aware of the complaints of some people as to the application of the programs and that they had acted very diligently indeed to make sure that any abuses were corrected.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF DENNIS AND OTHER REPORTS

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I now ask the Prime Minister whether he, on behalf of the government, is prepared to make public and distribute copies of the Dennis report and the Seadon report with regard to waste treatment plants and the part of CMHC in them as well as the other reports which have been prepared by task forces at the expense of the taxpayers and which would be of help to the Canadian people if they knew what the situation was?

Mr. Trudeau: As the House well knows, Mr. Speaker, the conclusions of the so-called Dennis report were published by the government at the direction of the minister. Therefore the public is informed on the recommendations and conclusions of that report. The minister explained, and it might be worth repeating, that the reason the report itself has not been made public is that it was prepared by a gentleman who had access to very confidential information, not only of the federal government but correspondence between federal and provincial officials and ministers, and that by the very nature of things this confidentiality must be respected.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Dennis report, which I have read, as the Prime Minister no doubt knows—

An hon. Member: And published.

Mr. Lewis: And published. When the government suppresses a document, someone has to put it out for the people to see. In view of the fact that the Dennis report very carefully avoids mentioning names in any references it makes to correspondence or memos, and in view of the fact that the information with regard to discussions within the department and between the federal and provincial governments with respect to the important issue of housing is precisely the kind of information Members of Parliament and the general public ought to have in order to judge what should and could be done, I ask the Prime Minister to inform the House whether his answer is final and all these reports will remain secret, known only to the government, or will he give consideration to making them public before the general election so they can be discussed across the country?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I understand from the question that the hon. member has made public something in the form of a report. I am not quite sure what edition or version he has made public. I have not seen what he has published, but if he has indeed published what he calls the Dennis report I do not see why he is complaining about the government suppressing it. It is there to be read by those who want to see it.

• (1420)

With respect to the content of the report we had prepared for us, the government frequently asks experts, people who have special knowledge, to examine our programs, giving them access to confidential information in order that they may help us to improve policies. Many such pieces of advice are given to the government both from within and from without. Were the government to take the attitude that it would publish all the confidential information given to it, it would—

Some hon. Members: Speech. Order!

Mr. Trudeau: —it would only ask for reports from its friends.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We shall go on to the next debate.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CABANO—GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION IN ESTABLISHMENT OF CARDBOARD PLANT

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

In view of the fact that the Quebec government has agreed to the construction of a cardboard factory at Cabano, could the minister tell the House whether the federal government will share in the construction of this plant and in the creation of new jobs in the Cabano region? If so, to what extent?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I have read in the newspapers that the provincial government had announced the payment of $3.5 million for the establishment of a plant in Cabano. We have been asked for an $8 million grant in addition to a $15 million guarantee, which means $23 million for a $30 million project. It is therefore normal that we should take a little more time to consider the matter.

PENITENTIARIES

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF MILLHAVEN REPORT AND REPORTS ON ESCAPES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Solicitor General a question. I trust he has had a good summer with some of the escapees.

Mr. Bell: Explain.

Mr. Woolliams: In light of the increase in crimes committed by some of those who have escaped from penitentiaries and by those who have already served terms for similar offences, will the minister now give the House an undertaking that he will make public the Millhaven report as soon as possible? Will he also make public as soon as it is available the report of L.P. Landry on the recent escape of six prisoners from St. Vincent de Paul as well as the report on the escapes in Vancouver?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, when we ask outside people to carry on an investigation on security in our penitentiaries, we evidently give them access to all useful information, in order to correct present conditions.

However, if we were to make that report public, we would only be providing to those we wish to keep in jail in order to protect the people some information on penitentiary security and make it easier for them to bring their plans into being.

I think that such is not the intention of the hon. member.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I take it from the minister's long reply that the answer is no and that these reports will be kept secret. Having in mind the minister's criticism of the guards on the ground that they failed to fire on the escapees, can he tell us whether this is part of his new reform policy for the penitentiaries?

[Translation]

Mr. Goyer: Mr. Speaker, there should not be any confusion whatever between rehabilitation and security. On that I was very clear. For a while I have been quite worried about regulations governing security in penitentiaries. In fact, since May the RCMP has been working in co-operation with our security services in these institutions in order to review the whole matter. We received a report recently and we shall act very quickly. Within a few days an assistant security director will be appointed to assess all our programs and regional directors will also be selected so as to make sure that high security prevails inside our penitentiaries and that there is no recurrence of incidents like those we had recently.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. gentleman take a leaf out of the Prime Minister's book and promise us an escape-free election?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRANSPORT

SOUTHWESTERN ONTARIO RAILWAY PASSENGER SERVICE—ACTION ON COMMITTEE REPORT—MOVEMENT OF FEEDER CATTLE

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport regarding the report of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on passenger service in southwestern Ontario. We were assured by the parliamentary secretary to the minister that action would be taken on this report and I am wondering what action has been taken?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that a formal appeal against the judgment was received by me at least from individuals. I am not certain whether I received one from any official body, but the matter is still under consideration.

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, the minister may be a little mixed up since his answer did not make much sense, but also included in that report was a request for some assistance in the form of representations by the minister to the railway companies for additional facilities to transport feeder cattle from western to eastern Canada. The time will arrive shortly when this will have to be done. Has any action been taken in that regard?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize if my answer was not sufficiently clear. Having regard to the second matter of feeder cattle accommodation, of course this was passed on immediately to the railways and I will be glad to make inquiries to find out what they have done about it up to date.

NEWFOUNDLAND—APPOINTMENT OF CONSULTANTS ON GROUND TRANSPORTATION

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport if he is now in a position to advise whether the consultants have been appointed and can he announce the names of these consultants in respect of ground transportation in Newfoundland as it affects the CNR?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can provide the hon. member with a list of those who made submissions. These are now being evaluated. No official decision has been taken but I expect it will be made within a matter of a couple of weeks at the outside.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS' HUMP YARD, EDMONTON—REQUEST FOR REPRESENTATIONS CONCERNING NOISE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the shrieks and squeals at the CNR hump yard in Edmonton are having a hazardous effect on the health of 10,000 to 15,000 people, and in view of the fact no action has been taken to rectify this condition, will the minister take it upon himself to further intervene on behalf of these worthy citizens?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, I will be glad to, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC—CROP DAMAGE BECAUSE OF ADVERSE WEATHER—FURTHER DISCUSSIONS WITH PROVINCES ON ASSISTANCE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he is continuing discussions with the provinces of Ontario and Quebec with a view to giving assistance to those farmers who suffered from adverse weather conditions this summer?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker. There will be further discussions to delineate the areas that will be designated for some of the payments and, indeed, for fodder assistance and that sort of thing, but I have announced a fairly comprehensive program involving both levels of government to make sure the livestock industry remains viable in the entire area, as well as some additional cash grants.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether this assistance will be given in addition to whatever crop insurance may be operative within the area?

Mr. Olson: The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

QUEBEC—PROGRAM TO ASSIST FARMERS AFFECTED BY CROP DAMAGE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER GIVE DETAILS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the minister.

Can he be more specific concerning the program which he has already announced outside the House, which aims at assisting farmers in Quebec, and more specifically those in the Eastern Townships? Could he also state clearly the policy that he meant to announce, a few days ago, in Stanstead particularly?

Would the minister clearly define the already announced program—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me that the hon. member for Shefford is inviting the minister to make a statement which does not belong necessarily in the framework of the question period. It appears that he is asking the minister to make a statement which should normally be made on motions.

• (1430)

[English]

If the minister can reply to the question briefly, he will be allowed to do so.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): All I want to say, Mr. Speaker, is that complete details of all announcements have been sent to each member's office.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—PROVISION OF SPECIAL PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): I should like to direct my question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Transport. Has the government arrived at a decision respecting my numerous representations regarding special public hearings outside of the Expropriation Act in respect of the new proposed airport site in Pickering?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the short answer is that the government has decided that there should be public hearings and that they will be conducted by an independent inquiry. However, in justice to those people who have been affected by the earlier announcement the expropriation proceedings will go forward in the normal course of events, and following that there will be the thorough airing concerning which the hon. member has made representations on many occasions.

Mr. Cafik: My question again is to the Minister of Transport. Can he assure the House that such hearings will provide an adequate opportunity to the public as well as to other levels of government to express their views in respect of this proposal?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my question—

Mr. Cafik: Mr. Speaker, one further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings who appears to have a question of moment to ask. I will recognize the hon. member for Ontario following that.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It is a question of great importance. I should like to address it to the Prime Minister. Would he now inform the House and the country whether or not he has yet screwed up enough courage to call a general election by the end of this week?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: He has no guts.

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—PUBLICATION OF EXPROPRIATION PROCEEDINGS IN CANADA GAZETTE

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Some months ago he indicated to the House that the publication of expropriation proceedings in the Canada Gazette would be taking place in the month of August. Can he explain to the House why this has not occurred and when it will occur?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The reason it has not occurred—this is still the month of August and while it may be possible to do so I doubt we can get it in today—is that a tremendous number of legal searches of property titles have had to be carried out as well as the preparation of individual notices to these people. As soon as these are completed, which I hope will be in the near future, we will proceed.

CONSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAY AND BRIDGE BY QUEBEC THROUGH CAUGHNAWAGA AND LACHINE—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT PARTICIPATION

Mr. Raymond Rock (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but in his absence I will address it to the Prime Minister. Is the government permitting the Quebec roads department to build a highway and a bridge through Caughnawaga and Lachine even though I and the citizens of Lachine and Caughnawaga are against such a project—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Rock: —and what financial aid is the federal government contributing toward this unwanted project?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Rock: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, but in his absence I will again direct it to the Prime Minister. It concerns the rejection of the request by Montreal, Lachine, and the Montreal urban community for the building of the Lachine canal park. Is the minister aware that no request was made to his department to reconstitute the park's historical characteristics, as the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development continues to imply? All the people want is a canal that will be operational for pleasure craft.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

INQUIRY AS TO PROCLAMATION OF AMENDING ACT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the House whether Bill C-183, an act to amend the Canada Labour Code, passed by the House on June 30 and given royal assent in July, has yet been proclaimed and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, that bill has not yet been proclaimed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that there are references to Part V of the Canada Labour Code in the bill to be debated today, will the minister tell us whether the proclamation of Bill C-183 will be made immediately, during the life of the new bill or later?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, the references to Part V are references to the existing or older piece of legislation. The proclamation of the new bill will be proceeded with in due course. We are committed to conducting extensive consultations concerning the appointment of a new board with labour unions, with management and with parties knowledgeable in labour and industrial relations. Those consultations have now been concluded and the government is giving consideration to the appointment of a new board, which should precede proclamation.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the House that all matters about which he is concerned regarding this bill have been completed and that there is nothing left which would prevent the proclamation of the bill in the very near future?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, the new board has not been appointed. Consideration is being given regarding the members of the new board. It is extremely important that it be the best possible board that can be put together because of the very complex and onerous duties it will be asked to perform.

Mr. Alexander: I have a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Hon. members will appreciate that we will be running short of time. If there are too many supplementary questions we will be in difficulty in a short while. The hon. member for Hamilton West will be allowed a final supplementary question on this subject.

Mr. Alexander: Can the minister advise the House as to whether all the regulations applying to this bill have been dealt with and are now ready to be added to the bill in order that it can be proclaimed?

Mr. O'Connell: I would have to check on that point. I believe they are now ready, but if otherwise I will inform the hon. gentleman.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

CLOSING OF LYNCH'S BAKERY, SYDNEY—REQUEST FOR ACTION TO ENABLE OPERATION TO CONTINUE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. In light of the information released today that another industry has folded in Sydney, namely, Lynch's Bakery, putting 70 people on the unemployment rolls and adding to the already estimated 25 per cent unemployment, and in view of the fact that the minister is responsible for the Cape Breton Development Corporation which has been involved in this enterprise, would he cause an investigation to be carried out to ascertain whether some method can be discovered whereby the operation will be continued, enabling these 70 people to retain their jobs?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I will wait for the report of the president of Devco on this very important problem.

Mr. Muir: Would the minister attempt to get through today to see if something can be done because the situation is quite urgent as these people do not have any jobs whatsoever?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): If I can get in touch with the president of Devco, I will do so today.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—PROGRAM TO ASSIST FARMERS AFFECTED BY CROP DAMAGE—REQUEST FOR FURTHER AID

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

This morning he announced that an additional $9 million in direct subsidies would be paid some 22,500 producers, which represents $400 per producer; as this amount will be inferior to the estimated damages, can the minister assure this House that, in view of this information, the producers will be able to get more money next September?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the $400 that I announced this morning is only a very small part, in the case of many farmers, of the total assistance program which was made public a few days ago. The reason the first announcement was made a few days ago was that we wanted to assure all the people in the livestock industry that we were determined they would have adequate supplies of feed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WEST COAST LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE—AWARENESS OF GOVERNMENT OF NEW MANAGEMENT OFFER AND NOTIFICATION OF PARTIES PRIOR TO DECISION TO INTRODUCE BILL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question, although if he intends to give us the information on second reading of the bill that was given first reading a little while ago that, of course, would be satisfactory. I would like to ask him whether he and the government were aware that management had made a new offer on Tuesday morning before the decision was made to reconvene parliament for the purpose of dealing with the bill that has been introduced, and also whether the parties to the dispute were at any time informed of the government's intention to step in if an agreement was not reached?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will of course allow the minister to reply to the question asked by the hon. member for York South, but I think I should caution hon. members that we will reach the consideration of the bill to which the hon. member has alluded in five or six minutes time, and perhaps it would not be entirely in order to anticipate that order of the day by engaging in a debate on the bill itself. However, the minister may reply briefly to the question asked by the hon. member.

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part is yes. As the government was coming to its decision it knew the employers intended to make and, indeed, on Tuesday did make a package proposal to the other side. The answer to the second question is no. I did not and no one in the government told the parties that unless they came to an agreement there would be action on the part of this parliament.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the strange resignation of Mr. Pickersgill from the Canadian Transport Commission the other day, will the Prime Minister, just before the election, assure the House that even though the new appointee will be a well known Grit he will be one who will be knowledgeable and appreciative of the transportation problems of eastern and western Canada?

Some hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORT ON DAMAGE TO HMCS "RESTIGOUCHE"—POSSIBLE REACTIVATION OF VESSEL NOW IN OVERHAUL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether or not he has now received a report with respect to the damage done to HMCS Restigouche, whether or not he is prepared to act on that report and in fact decommission Restigouche and, if that is the course of action to be taken, does he intend to reactivate one of the four vessels now in a continuing overhaul configuration, with the use of the crew from the Restigouche?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the report in question has not yet been received. I expect to receive it in the relatively near future. However, I am informed that the damage certainly is not in the area speculated upon by the press.

SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF NAVAL CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Doug Rowland (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Is it his intention to refer the whole matter of the naval construction program to a parliamentary committee, probably External Affairs and National Defence, for study, especially since the damage to the Restigouche is only one in a long series of blunders?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to say that the damage to the Restigouche is a blunder. I am not sure of this. I am waiting for the report. I would point out that the committee did have before it both the estimates for the Department of National Defence and the white paper on defence and defence policy in the 70's. If the members had cared to go into the question of ship construction at that time we were quite willing to answer any questions.

POLICY RESPECTING CONSTRUCTION AND COMMISSIONING OF DESTROYERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether it is now the policy of his department and the government to build destroyers and then decommission other destroyers because there are not enough personnel to man them?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the policy has been stated many times that we are to have 20 destroyers actively afloat, and we have crews for 20 destroyers. New destroyers have been built to replace those that are becoming obsolete. As the hon. member knows, one of the problems to be faced in the 70's is the fact that the older destroyers will become obsolete.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO SALES AT PRICES BELOW FARMERS' COST OF PRODUCTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Justice who reports for the Canadian Wheat Board. The western farmer is most interested in ascertaining the prices at which his wheat is being sold. As these prices are known to competitor countries, will the minister advise whether or not sales have been made to the U.S.S.R., to communist China and to Japan at different prices for the same grade in the last few months?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the exact selling price for grain is a matter which is decided upon by the Canadian Wheat Board according to their power under their act to attempt to get the best possible price for the farmers. From time to time members of the Wheat Board appear before parliamentary committees and certainly on such occasions they can explain to what extent they are willing to disclose prices and to what extent they are not. For my part, I am not prepared to put pressure on them if they feel it is in the commercial interests of the farmers not to disclose certain matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to put pressure on the minister to tell the truth in this regard. The farmers are asking for information. I ask him this: Is it not a fact that most of the wheat being sold in export today is at a price below the farmers' cost of production? If he can answer that I will want to know what the prices are.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I can tell the right hon. gentleman that I am extremely satisfied with the performance of the Canadian Wheat Board in obtaining, in world competition, the best possible price available and still sell grain.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I understand that the minister can be satisfied with almost anything, because he has been satisfied with 50 ships in harbour in Vancouver waiting for wheat for the last several weeks, without complaint on his part. I ask him now definitely to answer this question: Is it not a fact that in the last six months the Wheat Board has been selling wheat at a price below the farmers' average cost of production?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, the question of an average cost of production is itself a rather complicated one. I am not prepared to state categorically what it is. I simply put back to the right hon. gentleman that if he knows the price below which the Wheat Board should not sell grain he should state it to the House.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked whether I know—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I therefore—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, you are standing, but I have been asked a question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and the government in this respect requires information.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The right hon. gentleman knows he should resume his seat when I try to restore order in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. gentleman has asked a question. I am not sure whether he wants to reiterate or repeat the question—I think the right hon. gentleman prefers the latter word—but it seems to me the question has been asked twice—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: —and answered by the minister, perhaps not to the satisfaction of the right hon. gentleman. I would hope we could get on to the next question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the minister asked me whether I can say that the prices of export wheat from Canada in the past six months in many cases have been below the cost of production. He apparently has not got the information, and I so advise him that such is the fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the minister kindly resume his seat? There is one minute left before the end of the question period. I suggest it is not for the minister to ask questions of the right hon. gentleman or for the right hon. gentleman to answer questions asked hypothetically, I gather, by the minister. We should go on to the next question because there are just 60 seconds left before the end of the question period.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE LEGISLATION TO COMPENSATE FARMERS FOR CROP DAMAGE

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the hon. Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the seriousness of the situation and the farmers resentment, will the minister introduce, during this session, a special measure aimed at correcting this situation, in order to assure the survival of farming in the areas affected by bad weather since spring?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the premise on which the question was based, that there has been general dissatisfaction. I made a tour of the area both in Ontario and Quebec and the main concern was, of course, to make sure that the livestock industries would remain viable. Provision has been made for that, and whether or not the other amounts are high enough I think is a matter of debate. We think they are fairly good.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Following—

[English]

Mr. Horner: How many cows will $400 buy, Bud? Are you in the cattle business? One milch cow at best. Harry Hays said—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have reached the end of the question period. The hon. member for Bellechasse will ask his supplementary, if we are privileged enough to be allowed to hear him. Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Agriculture if the results of his meetings with his Quebec counterpart will soon be made known to us and if the Quebec government is ready to co-operate with the central government in the application of truly efficient measures instead of being content with piecemeal ones—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a speech. He should be asking a question.

[English]

The minister may reply briefly and then I shall call orders of the day.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. There have been very useful discussions with the Minister of Agriculture of Quebec and they have led to a comprehensive program that is going to be helpful and, indeed, more particularly to co-operation between the two levels of government in administering the various programs. I should advise the hon. member again that details of the whole package of programs have been sent to his office.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate rises on a point of order.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Minister of Manpower and Immigration allowed motions to go by without rising to explain the controversy surrounding the unemployment insurance fund, I wonder whether he would be prepared to ask unanimous consent to revert to motions in order to make a detailed statement on the present position?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: There is not. Orders of the day.

VACANCY

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to orders of the day, I should indicate to the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely:

David Anderson, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Esquimalt-Saanich, by resignation.

Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WEST COAST PORTS OPERATIONS BILL

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION AND CONTINUATION OF LONGSHORING, GRAIN HANDLING AND RELATED OPERATIONS AT WEST COAST PORTS

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C-231, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and grain handling operations and operations related to longshoring or grain handling at ports on the west coast of Canada be read the second time and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, no one will regret more than I the necessity of introducing this legislation to the House. The bill that we have under consideration today provides for the resumption and continuation of longshoring operations and, if necessary, grain handling operations at ports on the west coast.

This government, and indeed predecessor governments, does not wish to deprive trade unions, employers and employees of the full rights of collective bargaining. But there are occasions when Parliament must deal with situations, when the full resort to economic warfare by strike or lockout so impairs the ability of others to carry on their activities that it can be said to be against the national interest for the work stoppage to continue. Parliament in this case was recalled as a last resort when it was evident that the ports on the west coast would not resume operations for some weeks if normal collective bargaining procedures were allowed to take their course.

I do not think any honourable member will deny that a critical and urgent situation exists in western Canada as a direct result of the cessation of the longshoring operations of the ports on the coast of British Columbia. Already damage to the economy of Canada is evident and will mount at an increasing rate the longer the ports are closed. By far and away the hardest hit at this time is the grain economy on its external markets. This important sector of the economy is presently in the greatest jeopardy should the ports remain closed. British Columbia, too, has an export-oriented economy, and it is of the utmost importance that there be no prolonged closure of its ports. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said when he announced the recall of Parliament,

> This government does not intend to permit the benefit gained by all Canadians from its international efforts to be dissipated by a prolonged closing of the ports.

Mr. Alexander: When did he arrive at that view?

Mr. O'Connell: The Canadian Wheat Board has undertaken very large sales commitments to Russia and China, in addition to its regular sales to Japan and other nations. Indeed, our capacity for moving grain has been overstrained to meet these commitments. This export movement of grain has been concentrated through the port of Vancouver which has now been closed for 25 days.

The Asian market has been of growing importance for Canadian grain sales and has greatly enhanced the significance of shipments through the west coast ports, principally Vancouver. But one very important element in grain marketing, as it is in other businesses, is the ability of the seller to deliver on schedule. If our customers cannot depend on our shipments they will look to competitors, which can result in the permanent loss of markets. It is estimated that Canada's shipments have fallen behind by 30 million bushels and it will take a great deal of effort and additional cost to catch up. Any further delay in the resumption of operations will make it virtually impossible to do so. Not only have shipments fallen behind, but our grain transportation facilities are seriously dislocated and it is anticipated that it will take up to one month to get grain moving normally again. Future sales may well be precluded or lost by the inability of the system to deliver at a time when delivery capacities are already over-taxed by high sales volumes and catch-up efforts.

Mr. Speaker, it is perhaps desirable at this point for me to give hon. members the background of the dispute affecting the longshoring operations. I am going to say something further in a few moments about another dispute, the second dispute which complicates the first and that is the dispute with respect to grain handling operations as opposed to longshoring operations. In the case of the longshoring dispute, the previous collective agreement expired on July 31, 1972, between the British Columbia Maritime Employers' Association, which represents some 61 member companies in collective bargaining, and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union, which through various locals, represents some 3,300 longshoremen employed by these companies, at the ports of Vancouver, New Westminster, Chemainus, Port Alberni, Victoria and Prince Rupert.

Direct negotiations between the parties took place on five occasions during May and June. No agreement was reached. On June 7, the union requested the appointment of a conciliation officer. Two west coast officials of my department were appointed, but they were unsuccessful in bringing the parties to an agreement. The conciliation officers recommended the appointment of a conciliation board which I did appoint on July 24 with Dr. Noel Hall of Vancouver as chairman. The board met with the parties on July 26, 27 and 28 and reported to me on July 31.

The report, which was unanimous, indicated that the board felt it could serve no useful purpose at this stage because one party to the dispute took the position that meaningful progress toward resolving the dispute could only be made through direct talks between the parties.

Despite the fact that the board was unable to make recommendations on the substance of the matters in dispute, the chairman held himself available to assist the parties in any way possible and obtained an agreement from the parties that they would seek the assistance of the board before there was any breakdown in direct negotiations. The report was released to the parties on August 1, 1972 and, pursuant to the Labour Code, the parties were in a position to strike or lock-out on Monday, August 7 at midnight.

On August 6, complications arose affecting the port of Vancouver only, when longshoremen on regular work assignments resigned and reported for work on the daily despatch that applied to all other longshoremen at Vancouver. The dispute involving the despatch of the men has not been resolved and the port of Vancouver has remained closed since that date.

Various efforts to halt this work stoppage were made by the parties themselves and by my officers, but these met no success. Efforts were also made during this time to work out arrangements with the unions, as was done in 1969, to load grain on a voluntary and temporary basis through the National Harbours Board. The union, however, desired a permanent collective agreement arrangement with the board or another governmental agency to replace the agreement covering this work with the British Columbia and Maritime Employers' Association. The union's proposal had far-reaching implications which would require an extensive study which could not be commenced, let alone completed in the time available. Accordingly, the government felt that it could not accept the union's proposal.

Dr. Hall made further efforts to seek a solution to the dispute, but he was unable to do so. On August 10 and 11 the union took a strike vote of its membership employed at all west coast ports which authorized the union executive to take strike action. The remaining five ports were struck on August 23.

Well before that date, on August 14, I sent Mr. W. P. Kelly, Assistant Deputy Minister of Labour, to Vancouver to assist Dr. Hall and to discuss other avenues to settlement. Again, no progress was made in the resolution of the dispute concerning despatching.

The day following the general shut-down of the west coast ports, I travelled to Vancouver and met with the representatives of the employers and the union. The first meeting took place jointly. Subsequently meetings took place separately.

At the time of my arrival on the west coast, there were no negotiations in progress. Both parties agreed to meet and did so the following and subsequent days. Both parties desired some days of direct discussions because the complex issues involved in the dispute had not previously been explored. Neither party wished to have the assistance of my officials, but they agreed to meet daily and to make progress reports to me daily. While the atmosphere of the meetings appeared to be good, the parties could not assure me that an agreement would soon be forthcoming. Therefore, it became the government's view that the emergency which already existed could only deepen while collective bargaining proceeded over a period of several weeks.

The bill before the House provides for the resumption of longshore and related operations on the west coast while the parties continue to bargain for a settlement of their dispute. It provides for the extension of the collective agreement to December 1972, or until the parties make a new agreement, whichever is earlier. It also provides for further mediation. Strikes or lockouts during the extended term of the agreement are prohibited by the legislation.

Hon. members will observe, Mr. Speaker, that there are two main parts to the bill. Part I deals with the longshore dispute. Let me now deal with Part II of the bill which parallels in most respects Part I. There are separate and distinct operations from longshoring involving grain movement which are carried on in Vancouver by five elevator companies. Some 500 employees of these companies are represented by the International Union of Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers of America. Part II of the bill before us applies to these operations in contrast to Part I which applies to the longshore operations which do indeed involve grain as well as other commodities moving to the ports.

At the outset, I wish to point out particularly that this part comes into effect only on proclamation, and I hope that no proclamation will be necessary. The present situation in this dispute is that the collective agreement between the elevator companies and the union expired on November 30, 1971. Since that time extensive negotiations have been conducted and the conciliation officer and conciliation board procedures have been complied with and followed. The conciliation board reported to me on August 16, 1972 and the report was released to the parties and made public on the same day. Thus a strike or lockout could legally have commenced at midnight on August 23, about a week ago. The companies have rejected the recommendations of the majority of the board. The union accepted the recommendations, but desired some clarification from the chairman of the board. The chairman of the conciliation board has very recently supplied the information requested and it was remitted to the companies and the union yesterday.

I do expect that the parties to the second dispute, this elevator and grain handling dispute, will reach an early settlement. Regretfully, though, it will not be in time to relieve the government of the obligation to deal with this situation in the bill now before the House. It is, therefore, essential that when port operations do resume as a consequence of part one of this bill the movement of grain should not be disrupted again by failure to reach agreement on the second dispute. If there should be a settlement of the second dispute, I repeat, there will be no proclamation with respect to part two of the bill. Because an early settlement of the longshore dispute is not apparent—indeed, it does not seem apparent in the next several weeks—and because of the critical situation in western Canada and in British Columbia in particular arising from the halting of shipments of grain, potash and other commodities from the prairie provinces, and of lumber, mineral and other products from British Columbia, it has been necessary to introduce this bill. I should add that in British Columbia the stoppage of loading operations has paralysed coastal shipping carrying supplies to remote ports and islands.

The basic purpose of the bill before us is simple. It is to bring about a resumption of port operations while negotiations continue toward a settlement. It is to interfere as little as possible with the collective bargaining process. It is to leave the parties, as they wish to be left, to negotiate directly, and, with the assistance of mediators, to arrive at an agreement which they can live with and want to live with during the next period. I sincerely regret that for the reasons outlined to the House there is no practical alternative to the adoption of the bill before us. Mr. Speaker, I now move its second reading.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, here we are again. We are back in a situation similar to that of about two months ago with the government, trying to make up for weeks of doing nothing by pushing the emergency button, pushing this button only after enormous damage had been done to the economy of the country. After a month of watching from the sidelines while every western province saw the prospects of economic disaster grow steadily, the government jumps in an attempt to put over an illusion of decisiveness and decisive action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Sir, the government may delude itself, but it can no longer delude or fool the Canadian people, because it has tried the same trick too often. Here we are again, this time called together by a government which has become so accustomed to lurching from crisis to crisis that it now lacks even the decency to apologize for its failings or to present excuses for its ineptness.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have a great deal to answer for. They have certainly chalked up a long list of failures, but nowhere has their record been worse than in this whole field of labour relations and labour disputes. During the spring and early summer those of us who sit in this chamber witnessed the spectacle of the government and, particularly, of the minister, stumbling along week after week until the Quebec dock situation had deteriorated to a point at which they had no option but to call upon Parliament to act. In the past month we have seen the government, first ignoring and then denying, the importance of what was taking place in the west coast port. It has only during the last month discovered that an emergency existed. It was, of course, only a coincidence that this emergency occurred at the time when the political cabinet was due to meet to discuss the prospects of an election.

I say to the government through you, Mr. Speaker, that this dispute did not spring suddenly from nowhere. It has been obvious for some time that profound differences existed and that an agreement would not come easily. But the government took no action of any significance. Even after the contract of the grain handlers expired last year and the one for longshoremen expired on July 31, after which the threat of a walk-out became more urgent daily, the federal government and the minister failed to take any active part; they did not actively move to achieve a settlement. Even after the Port of Vancouver was shut down on August 7, the federal government continued to tap its heels.

I shall not go through the chronology of events; the minister has done this, to some extent. But on August 17, ten days after the Vancouver walk-out had begun, an appeal from the premier of British Columbia that the situation be treated as an emergency received a somewhat cavalier reception from the Prime Minister of this country. I quote him as reported. "I do not see" he said "what it would accomplish to declare ... a disaster area. What does he want us to do—declare another War Measures Act?" The reference was to the premier of British Columbia. I see the minister from Calgary smiling. I suppose it is amusing to him. The comments of the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) on this request coming from the west were not as amusing as those of the Prime Minister. He was quite clear, though. I quote him as reported. "To elevate the dispute at this time to the category of a national emergency would be premature." This was just a few days ago, after Vancouver had been tied up for some time and after the strike had extended to all the west coast ports, with the result that difficulties were increasing throughout western Canada.

All the rest is history. Even while the minister was muttering that it would be premature to consider the situation urgent, he did go out to British Columbia on August 25, as he told us today. Then, with great fanfare, he announced his success in bringing the two sides together to talk again. Then, just as reports were beginning to circulate, I think originating from the minister himself, that great things were being accomplished by the minister he returned to Ottawa and the next sound we heard was the ringing declaration by the Prime Minister that the situation about which he was exceedingly nonchalant a few days ago, as was the minister, was intolerable and only Parliament could deal with it. Those are the facts, and as in the case of most facts with which this government is connected, they raise as many questions as they answer.

Why, for example, did the Prime Minister suddenly reverse himself in mid-flight, so to speak, and declare the situation urgent when shortly before that he rejected the request of his own western caucus to do precisely this? Why did both sides to the dispute express their astonishment at this turn of events, that is the announcement that Parliament would have to be called? Why did the Minister of Labour not know that discussions were apparently about to take place on serious new proposals? What was wrong with communication? The minister did not even have to rely on the post office. Why, finally, if the government was seriously considering recalling Parliament, did the minister not make a public statement long before when he must have known the urgency of the matter and realized the effect that the tie-up was having upon the economy of Canada, and particularly the economy of western Canada? Why did the minister not make a statement indicating the gravity of the situation instead of he and the Prime Minister playing it down, and perhaps creating the impression even among those who were engaged in bargaining that there was not really very much damage being done to the national economy?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Instead, in their public statements, the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister spoke as though there were no real urgency. I can well understand why those involved directly in the dispute assumed they had plenty of time to settle matters and the government was not all that concerned about the damage being done.

Did the minister at least tell those involved in the dispute that unless they were able to act quickly the government would have no alternative than to ask Parliament to resolve the matter? He indicated today in response to questions that he did not give that indication. Did he indicate to those involved in the dispute not only that the matter was causing serious damage but that he would have to come back and report to the government that it was beyond the capacity of ordinary bargaining to settle this matter before irreparable damage was done?

I say that any way you look at this thing, the minister has lost his credibility. If he knew that Parliament might have to be recalld, he surely had a duty to make it clear to the participants to the dispute. He surely had a duty to make it clear to the participants to the dispute that this was a situation of national emergency rather than attempting to play it down, creating an impression quite the opposite. If he did not know this and did not realize the government was seriously considering calling Parliament back to resolve this matter, then he was certainly overruled in the policies of his own department, and what further effectiveness could he possibly have in the whole field of labour relations. I have to say to the Minister of Labour that he has lost his credibility, and as a result of that loss the whole government has lost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: There are bound to be questions which will arise as a result of these events, and there is bound to be and certainly is confusion and uncertainty about the competence of the government in respect of the whole affair. There is one thing that is crystal clear and that is the undiluted and indisputable political motivation displayed by the government in its handling of this dispute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: It was obvious from the moment it started that this walkout constituted a serious menace not only to grain farmers and others on the Prairies, not only to the whole of the Canadian economy but, as the minister himself said this afternoon, it really constituted a threat to the credibility of our country as a trustworthy supplier of grains and other products. The minister, in the House this afternoon, said this was apparent when he introduced this bill. It was just as apparent the first day the walkout occurred that this was a matter of grave, national concern.

An hon. Member: It is easy to see afterwards.

Mr. Alexander: Go back to sleep.

Mr. Stanfield: My hon. friend says it is easy to see it afterwards. I am sure the hon. member from the Prairies, probably as one who took part in the western caucus, asked the government many days ago to treat this matter as urgent. If he would come clean with us, I am sure he would say it was really clear to him the first day the strike took place that this created a situation of urgency for western Canada. I am sure it was apparent to him, brilliant as he is, and it should have been apparent to his colleague the Minister of Labour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In the past, this government has complacently allowed situations to rot to the point where the damage was becoming almost irreversible before deigning to move. I must say, in comparison with its past record, the government has moved in the present situation with comparatively stunning speed. It only allowed things to deteriorate for about a month this time before making the ultimate move of recalling Parliament.

This has perhaps been a dramatic performance. It was perhaps especially effective because of the secrecy in which this move was planned. If the people who were involved in the dispute had been alerted this move might not have been necessary. If the situation had been brought home to them earlier by the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister, it might very well have been unnecessary for us to intervene as a Parliament.

What is all that compared to the political effect the government hopes to achieve through these manoeuvres? Of course, this stoppage at the west ports has to end. Of course, western grain and other products must be moved again as rapidly as possible. Of course, the ports must reopen and of course the situation is urgent, as I said it was some weeks ago. Of course, in deciding its own moves the present government has looked to one thing and one thing only, and that is the political impact of its decision. Once again, it is the political timetable of this government and not the real needs of Canadians that has dictated the timing of the decision of this administration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: True, we have here a sort of belated recognition that Parliament does have a role to play. When we consider the fact that for the last four years the government has spent much of its time emasculating Parliament, when we consider that the denigration of Parliament was, for a while at least, the favourite indoor sport of this government, I suppose that what is happening here today must be regarded as a victory of sorts. But now the government is forced to call Parliament back if it wants to settle anything in connection with this matter. Unfortunately, however, there is a darker side to this picture because this government's decision to recall Parliament, after it has failed to take any action itself over a period spanning several years and when it saw its last few western seats slipping from its grasp, has to be qualified as a sordid piece of cynicism.

I hope that no one is under any illusion that the bill which has been presented today really offers any solutions to these deep-seated labour problems. Certainly, it offers no solutions to the problem of the disputes in the public service or in essential services in general. It is no secret that we are in danger of witnessing yet another postal strike in the next few months. I am not predicting that this will happen, but we are all aware that this may very well happen. The only comment I would care to make at this time on this subject is that if this strike should materialize during the long-promised election campaign that we are expecting, that is if there should be a stoppage of certain postal services during that campaign, then this Parliament has already given to the government the means with which to delay a general walkout until a new government can take over after the election and work out a satisfactory solution to these difficulties. We have known for some time that the provisions in the Canada Labour Code which were adopted last spring have not been proclaimed. If I understood the minister today, they are not likely to be proclaimed for some time because of the dithering around by the minister. I do not know what his real reasons are for not wishing to proclaim the provisions of the Labour Code after they were passed at the last session. However, I want to make it very clear to everybody concerned that Parliament at that time did give the government the authority to deal, during the period of dissolution with stoppages of the sort, by order in council where it was deemed in the national interest. We would be interested to know whether, in fact, the government does proceed to proclaim this legislation.

I recognize that there is no simple solution to the problems of labour relations. It is a complex field, often filled with tension, and certainly the issues frequently are not easily resolved. To name but one, there is the whole matter of the response of labour and management alike to technological change. This is a factor in both the British Columbia strike and the current postal negotiations. It is one element, and there are others, which demonstrates that labour disputes will become even more complex, and perhaps even more difficult of solution, in the future than they have been in the past. That is why we must all be constantly on the lookout for new ideas and new approaches.

There are many who strongly urge a resort to compulsory arbitration in the realm of essential industries and services, whether they be in the public or the private sector. Something like this may have to come with regard to essential services. I say this very reluctantly, not only because this would be a further limitation on freedom but also because I am convinced that compulsion could poison the atmosphere and raise at least as many problems as it solves. That is why I believe we should certainly try other methods, and that is why any government that I would lead would take urgent steps to set up a public interest disputes commission to deal with the problem of essential services. I do not say that this is a magic wand, but I can see that in this situation, for example, such a commission could have played an active and constructive role in anticipating these difficulties and in trying to resolve them long before the contracts were to expire, and long before the difficulties which resulted in a work stoppage came to a head. Such a public interest disputes commission, consisting of men and women with wide experience in the field who know the problems and who are independent in their thinking, could, even without compulsion, play an active role. The recommendations of such a body would have a degree of moral force that would make anybody, employer, union or government, think twice before ignoring them.

I believe that such a public interest disputes commission could play an active part in reducing substantially the kind of tie-ups and stoppages that have been occurring in essential services, both public and private. I believe that is the kind of policy that the government should have been working out and long since should have had in operation. That is the kind of activity that would have earned the gratitude of Canadians and even the respect of the opposition, at least the respect of the members of my party. That, I believe, is the direction in which the government should have been going. This would not be a cure-all but an active measure that does not restrict freedom but one that would lead to the reduction of tensions and the resolution of disputes in advance of actual breakdown.

The government did not take that course. That is one reason we are back here today, faced again with this kind of difficulty as a result of this government's incompetence. Whatever may be the reasons, we are faced with a measure on which we must take some decisions. Due to the fact that, whatever the reasons, we are faced with a situation of urgency in the Prairies and for the people of British Columbia, I want to make it very clear that we in my party will certainly support and do support the principle of this bill.

I certainly want to make it very clear that we want to get this matter out of the way because we want the work stoppage to end, and we want the damage and the threat of further damage to the economy of Canada and of western Canada in particular, to end. We want to get it out of the way also because then the Prime Minister will presumably be out of excuses for not calling an election. I probably do not need to explain this, but we want the election to be called so that the Canadian people can get this government out of its way and move on to better things.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Red Deer wishes to rise on a point of order.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to your attention that we have been called here to deal with a very urgent situation which has almost become an economic catastrophe for western Canada. We have been called here at some inconvenience to the members of this House and a great deal of cost to the taxpayers. We have just listened to a positive and worthwhile comment from the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition dealing with this issue, and we see the front row of the government benches practically empty. Those who do occupy it, including the Prime Minister, with the exception of the Postmaster General, have not even given us the courtesy of listening to the Leader of the Opposition. Instead they have carried on a series of conferences. This is intolerable and a disgrace.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the fact that the timing of the introduction of this bill is political is something that is very clear. I do not intend to spend much time dealing with that point. I have great respect for the Canadian electorate, a respect which was confirmed by the people of British Columbia yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I am certain the voters of Canada will recognize that the timing of this particular piece of legislation was entirely political, and has much more to do with the possibility of the coming federal election than with the welfare of Canada and the welfare of Canadians. I am confident that the voters will not be fooled by what the government has done. I want to spend my time, which I hope will not be too long, in dealing with, (a) the general subject with which the bill is concerned, and (b) the bill itself.

The questions which I asked earlier during the question period with regard to whether or not the parties were informed of the government's intention, and whether the government knew that a new proposal was going to be made, were simply directed to the point that a government which does not have the foresight and the courage to draw to the attention of parties in a serious dispute that it considers the dispute serious and will act if it is not settled, is escaping its obvious duty.

I am certain that if the parties to this dispute had been informed by the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell), or by his officers in British Columbia, that the government considered that the dispute had to be settled, and that if it were not settled by the parties then Parliament had no alternative but to act, there was a strong possibility that they themselves would have settled it and Parliament would not have had to act. It is this kind of failure on the part of the government that I find very condemnable indeed.

I am told by Mr. Garcia, the president of the union—I mention him so that nobody will have to guess at the source of my information—that in the presence of the Minister of Labour the two sides to the dispute agreed to meet solidly for seven consecutive days for the purpose of trying to reach a settlement. If the minister agreed to that, and if he got the parties to agree to such a procedure to undertake seven days of negotiation, what is the labour movement to think when the government does not give it seven days to do that which the minister had asked it to do? What kind of position does the Minister of Labour hold when he gets the parties to make a serious effort at negotiating a settlement, and two days after that agreement is reached the parties, without any previous warning, are faced with Parliament being recalled and legislation being placed on the books?

I suggest that the major problem facing us in the realm of labour relations is that, even though the Department of Labour has some very competent people in it, the direction of that department is incompetent. The direction of that department is unimaginative. The direction of that department is without policy, with the result that we jump from crisis to crisis in serious labour relations matters without knowing exactly where we are going, how we are going to get there, and why we should try to get there. When the present Minister of Labour was appointed to that portfolio, even though I recognized his kindness, his decency and his sincerity, I questioned whether his particular experience had qualified him for such a sensitive job. I am afraid that what has happened since his appointment has underlined the reasons for that questioning.

This is the second time within two months that Parliament has had to act to order people back to work. I can think of nothing I dislike more, and that my colleagues dislike more, than Parliament ordering men and women to go back to work when they are not satisfied with the conditions under which they work. I find that totally repugnant to any idea of democracy and democratic behavior. For the government to put Parliament in a position where it has no alternative than to do this seems to me to be really reprehensible. I cannot guarantee that this situation would not have arisen, but I do know that the officers of the department who were in Vancouver were simply sitting and watching the parties negotiate, and that when the minister went out to Vancouver he simply watched them talk and had a little chat with them. Mr. Speaker, when you are faced with a serious labour matter, that kind of behavior is irresponsible incompetence.

When you are faced with a serious labour relations situation, one in which you eventually intend to pass a law ordering people back to work, then sitting on a chair, or whatever it was that the officers of the department sat on—some of it too indelicate to mention—and just hoping that the parties will be nice to each other, is not good enough. Effective and active intervention by the officers and effective and active intervention by the minister, banging the table, talking to the parties, pointing out the seriousness of the situation to them, warning them of action that Parliament might have to take, arguing with them about the issues that are involved, all these are the tasks of the Labour Department, and particularly of the minister, in a situation which may end in Parliament ordering people back to work. This total incapacity to understand its obligations and duty in such labour relations matters is another indication of the arrogance and the complacency with which the government regards important matters.

On June 30, we passed Bill C-183 dealing with the Canada Labour Code, in which we made provision to deal with some of the matters that were in dispute on the west coast, and that were in dispute at the Quebec ports in the strike which we dealt with at the beginning of July. But to date that law has not even been proclaimed, and the minister tells us that he does not intend to proclaim it in the near future or, that if he proclaims those provisions, he will change the rules in the middle of negotiations. I happen to know that one of the things that management asked for in its latest offer last Tuesday was that the employers be exempted from certain provisions of that bill which have not yet been proclaimed. That was one of the matters which the union had to face, a demand by management that its members lose the safeguards and seniority that are presently in the collective agreement with respect to job security for members of the work force on the west coast.

We would be in a different situation if that bill had been proclaimed. I want to draw to the attention of Parliament, and to the attention of everybody else interested, that the amendments to the Canada Labour Code which we passed provide that technological change is subject to negotiation even during the life of a collective agreement; that it is subject to conciliation, and that it may be an issue on which people may strike. We write that into the law. We write into the law the right to strike and we write into the amendments to the law the right to strike in the case of technological change, then, owing to the inadequacy of the actions of the Department of Labour, the moment workers exercise it we say, "You can't; get back to work." I am worried when that kind of thing happens because nothing undermines the observance of the law and respect for the law so quickly and so easily as for people to be given a right solemnly by Parliament and when they exercise that right, to be told by Parliament "You can't. Sure, we gave you the right to strike but we didn't really mean it. When your strike becomes effective we are going to pass a law and order you back to work." That is the kind of action that produces disrespect for the law and makes workers and members of unions in this country feel that the law is not really ever on their side.

• (1550)

Mr. Speaker, that is not good; that is destructive of the democratic process. I condemn this government for having permitted the situation to continue to the point where Parliament is forced to do just that, to tell the people who exercise a right that we gave them that they cannot exercise it any longer. And why? Because it has become effective. People suffer as a result of a strike, which in a sense is precisely what a strike is for, and since the strike has become effective we tell them that they cannot continue it any longer, that they have to get back to work. This is what we must avoid, and in order to avoid it, I repeat what I have said many times in this House. The federal Department of Labour must become much more streamlined, must stop watching these crises develop hoping that everything will come out all right and then when it does not, bringing a bill into this House. The minister, and the very able officers of his department, have to stop this game of passivity and become active participants in the settlement of serious disputes so that we will not again have to go through this exercise twice in two months.

The issues on the west coast are basically the same as the issues in Quebec or the issues in Britain and the rest of the world, as they relate to longshoremen. I am told money is not involved, that there could easily have been a settlement on any increase in wages. The real problem is the introduction of automation, computerization and assignment of work, the introduction of technological changes which are perhaps necessary for society as a whole but which threaten the security of the jobs of the people involved. As a Parliament, we cannot say to workers in a particular industry that they have to carry the full load of technological progress from which society as a whole will benefit and from which employers will benefit by added productivity, as well as perhaps added profitability, that the workers are to take it on the chin, losing the security of their jobs and becoming the victims of automation and technological change. That is the situation now, and we as Members of Parliament and the people of Canada must realize that even though the strike of the workers on the west coast has to be ended because it has reached the point where it is harmful to many other Canadians in this country, I want to say on behalf of my colleagues and myself that I hope the people of Canada will recognize that the longshoremen have a right to be concerned about the effects of technological change on their situation and their job security, and that they have a right to fight for security in their jobs—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: —and to expect from their employers in the first place, and from the Parliament of Canada in the second place, some kind of protection of their life work and the welfare and future of their families.

This is the issue that this Parliament will have to face sooner or later. If, from time to time, we are going to take away the right to strike, it is not enough merely to have a provision in the Labour Code that technological change should be a matter of negotiation and in the end people can strike, because that right is worthless if the right to exercise it is taken away. I suggest, therefore, that Parliament will have to deal with the question of the effect of technological change and the need to protect the working people of this country who would be the victims of such change.

Mr. Speaker, I think that in this bill the mediator ought to have been given, by law, instructions to deal with the effects of technological change in a way which would protect the security of the jobs of the longshoremen on the west coast. I intend that either one of my colleagues or myself will move an amendment to this effect in committee of the whole. I hope the minister will consider it carefully, and perhaps agree to it, so that the people involved on the west coast will feel that they have received some justice. Before I indicate exactly the point I am driving at, let me put it in a general social or philosophical context.

When there is a lawful strike, a strike in accordance with the provisions of the law, and for reasons of the welfare of all the people of Canada or some section of the people, Parliament considers it necessary to end that strike by law and order the people back to work, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that those people have a right to have in the law some kind of quid pro quo. They have a right to have in the law some provision that justifies ordering them back to work. Merely to make them go back to work until the end of December under the old agreement and keep on negotiating to arrive at a new agreement is not enough. It is very dangerous from one point of view as far as the working people are concerned. That point of view is the retroactivity of any settlement made in these negotiations. The last agreement terminated on July 31. If you permit negotiation to be carried on without anything in the law guaranteeing or protecting these people in their rights to retroactive application of any term as a condition of the new agreement, then you give the employer an immense weapon and the employees and union have no weapon at all. For the next few months, if the employers do not like what is going on they have the power just to sit there and say no, but the employees from whom this bill takes away the right to strike until January 1, have no power at all at the negotiating table between now and the end of the year. They just sit there and argue as best they can, but if the employer does not want to budge there is nothing they can do about it because the threat of a strike has gone until January 1, and a strike in the coming winter is a great deal more difficult than a strike in August.

I, therefore, appeal to the minister and all members of this House that if we are going to pass this bill, and it will be passed because, for the same reason as every other member in this House we are forced to support it as reluctantly I am sure as everyone else because of the west coast situation, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, we have a social obligation to put into it something that will protect the workers, that will reduce the power of the employers in the next three or four months and put a little bit of power in the hands of the negotiating committee and the working people. I believe that this bill, in the appropriate sections, ought to contain a simple provision that any agreement arrived at by the parties as a result of the negotiations that the law requires them to enter into or any terms thereof, shall, unless the parties otherwise agree be retroactive to August 1, 1972.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1600)

Mr. Lewis: I know the arguments, Mr. Speaker. I have had enough experience in labour relations. I am sure some of the minister's officials know that retroactivity is a matter of negotiation. Sometimes the union sells retroactivity for some other benefit it wants to get and all the rest of it. I suggest to the minister that words can be found to enable that. That is why the amendment which we would move, and I hope the minister will move it, will say that the terms of the agreement or any of them shall be retroactive to August 1, 1972, unless the parties to the agreement agree otherwise. They can negotiate. They can agree on certain benefits, such as wages, going back to August 1 and some other benefits being retroactive to November 1 or some other time. It is up to them to decide. The grain handlers could have the benefits retroactive to November 30 or November 1, 1971, when their agreement ended.

I appeal to the minister and all Members of Parliament. Unless this kind of protection is given to longshoremen, they have none at all. All that Parliament will have done will be to postpone the problem for four months. That is all they will have done. We will not have accomplished anything except to enable the government to enter into a federal election without the anger of people with regard to this strike on the west coast. When that anger comes back on January 1, 1973, it will be after the election has been held.

That is all this bill does. However, because it does make it possible for the grain shipments to start again, every member of this House, myself included, feels compelled to give assistance and support to this bill. I repeat, however, that we have a moral and a social obligation to make sure that it is not only one side in the dispute that will get hurt as a result of this bill.

As this bill is now worded, only the longshoremen will get hurt. The employer will not get hurt. He does not have to worry about retroactivity. As far as the employer is concerned, work will resume on the basis of the old collective agreement and the longshoremen will have exactly the same as they had before. The employer will not lose anything by the passage of this bill. The working people will lose. They will lose their power to force upon their employer the conditions of work they would like to have. In return for that loss to the longshoremen on the west coast, this Parliament has an obligation to assure in the law that the employers will not be able to play cat and mouse with the question of retroactivity.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: I raise this out of an actual experience I have had with the longshoremen on the west coast. I forget exactly when it happened. Two, three or four years ago, there was a voluntary return to work while negotiations continued. The minister nods his head indicating that he knows about it. It was three years ago. I have been informed by the union officials that the employees lost $2 million in wage increases that the employers refused to make retroactive. They lost certain provisions with regard to their pension plan, contributions to the pension plan that were going to be improved and so on.

The longshoremen on the west coast have a right to demand of Parliament that this little bit of justice be done. If they are to be forced back to work, the law should guarantee to them that the managers and employers cannot get around this. The law should guarantee the retroactivity of any benefits which are negotiated in the collective agreement.

I wish to say a few words about part of the bill that applies to grain handlers. The grain handlers have a right to feel aggrieved by the proposition of this bill because they have accepted the conciliation board report. It is the employer, including, I am sorry to say, the Saskatchewan and Alberta wheat pools that have rejected the conciliation board report. To threaten them with action in case they should strike, even before they have taken a vote, seems to be a pretty serious matter. As far as I know, they have not even taken a vote to strike. I may be wrong on that. The minister has indicated that I am right. To threaten them in their situation with this kind of action if they should strike is serious.

The grain handlers' contract expired almost a year ago. It expired last November, 10 months ago. They are working without any new or revised collective agreement. They have gone through all the procedures. It took them months to do this. They have accepted a conciliation board report. This bill gives the government the power to order them back to work when the government thinks it is necessary, without any protection of their welfare. This seems to me to be an immoral act which the minister ought not make this Parliament perpetrate.

In the case of the grain handlers, we should have the same amendment requiring that the provisions of any new agreement, unless otherwise agreed to by the parties, become retroactive to either November 1 or November 30. I cannot remember whether it is the beginning or the end of November. The parties can agree to change that with regard to any provision they have to make.

I did not take any longer than I needed to make the thoughts of my colleagues and myself as clear as I have been able to make them. There is no reason why we should be in this kind of crisis every two months. There is no reason at all. We are in this kind of crisis because of a totally wrong approach to labour relations by this government. I have made that statement many times in the past number of years. This attitude that not only is justice blind, but the labourers in the ports must be blind and have blinkers over their eyes until they and everybody else are kicked into seeing something that any half intelligent person, even this government, could have foreseen is just not good enough.

I believe we will not solve this problem, leaving alone the whole problem of the handling of grain, until this Parliament deals with one matter, namely automation and technological change and unless this government or whatever government follows it has the courage and the vision to make the federal labour department an active participant in important labour disputes, instead of a passive observer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1610)

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have carefully listened to the comments of the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) concerning new techniques or automation. He also told us that the bill does not solve per se the problem now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, the longshoremen's strike on the west coast has been lasting for a few weeks, that is a little too long. The government dispatched the Minister of Transport (Mr. Jamieson) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) to British Columbia and I feel that the latter, during his recent visit in Vancouver, has particularly contributed to the campaign for the election of a New Democratic government.

Mr. Speaker, in fact he went over there and came back to tell the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this: It is impossible to solve the problem; they do not want to make sense. And so, we were ordered back to Ottawa on the double to study and pass legislation ordering the longshoremen of the west coast back to work.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind, the government was a little late in acting to settle the dispute, it knew full well that the negotiations were leading nowhere. The minister or ministers should have been sent to help solve the conflict between stevedores and employers. Today, we face an alarming situation. Hundreds of ships stand at anchor in the port of Vancouver; they can neither be loaded nor unloaded. The western farmers are waiting to ship their wheat; all is at a standstill; no solution has been found.

Mr. Speaker, the government is now introducing a bill to compel the longshoremen to resume work without making any suggestion so that bargaining may lead to agreement between both parties. The government does not give any advice. It merely says: Go back to work! Mr. Speaker, this is putting an artificial leg in a cast. Just telling workers to get back to work not later than December 31 means that we may still face the same situation on January 1.

We have had the same thing in Montreal, Trois-Rivières and Quebec City, not so long ago. We called for government intervention. But they said: We must not interfere, even if the strike must last for weeks and months. Longshoremen in Montreal, Quebec City and Trois-Rivières, as well as their families, have suffered all this time, but the minister kept answering every day: I do not want to interfere. And yet, at that time, there was an emergency in those ports.

Today, they tell us: They could have used the ports of Sorel, etc. What a farce! Everybody knows that longshoremen in Montreal, Quebec City, Trois-Rivières belong to the same unions as those in Sorel. They would not have tolerated that situation. They would not have agreed to get back to work. The minister was well aware of that. However, it took weeks and months before some action was taken. Now, in this case, there is immediate intervention to settle the dispute.

Hence, people are wondering whether the government has two sets of attitudes and policies, one for the people of western Canada and another for the people of eastern Canada, especially in Quebec. That is what we are objecting to. We want the same policy implemented in the province of Quebec, the Maritimes, etc. We want the same policy of justice for the workers to be applied all across Canada whether in Vancouver, Halifax, Montreal, Trois-Rivières or Toronto.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-231 is not the solution to the problem. We know we will have to begin all over again, for the same causes generally produce the same results. He who sows carrots cannot expect to reap potatoes. He who sows cauliflowers reaps just that, not bananas. Most of the time, the same causes produce the same effects.

These conflicts, whether in Vancouver, Toronto, the province of Quebec or Manitoba or elsewhere, all stem directly from an economic system which does not take reality into account and which we try to adapt to the requirements of a small number of financiers who control the flow of the economic blood of the Canadian people and create chaos in various areas of the country. Instead of improving the system or establishing a better one, you punish the workers, the managers, in short, everybody.

Mr. Speaker, as long as we do not adopt a system whereby individual security would be closely dependent upon the production of our nation, we shall run around in circles as we are doing now. The end of a strike will see the beginning of a new one and there will be no end of it. We are acting just like a dog chasing its tail and running around in circles: we will never find a solution.

I heard the leader of the New Democratic Party say that we must ensure job security for the longshoremen and grain handlers in Vancouver, even if new techniques, computers, etc. are used.

Mr. Speaker, it is intended to add job security to the purchase of new machinery. Then let's talk about price and salary controls and see whether that will give prosperity to Canada, whether the Canadian people will be able to benefit from their production!

In fact, we have got new machines, we have got computers. We are using new machinery. But as intelligent Canadians—and not as people lost in confusion—we must ask ourselves: Will their use penalize man or serve him?

• (1620)

If all that has been devised to punish mankind, let us keep up our present system since everything is well and fine. Conflicts regarding grain, dissatisfaction, upheavals, attacks here and there, interunion struggles, union members fighting other unions, lay-offs and unemployment are instances of the uneasiness resulting from this system.

Mr. Speaker, if inventions, technology, computers and new machines have been devised to punish mankind, let us keep to our present course, since we are doing very well. If, on the other hand, these new inventions, techniques, computers and machines are to serve man and not subdue him, there is but one solution which is, not to provide job security, but income security which is the only means of facing up to the situation.

The following conclusion could thus be drawn, Mr. Speaker: if new technology, inventions, machines and computers are called upon to perform workers' jobs—which is actually the case against which both workers and unions are rebelling—briefly, if all these things are to serve mankind, there is only one way to proceed. To the extent that these innovations are put into operation, let us give everyone an income based on the productivity in Canada of these new machines and new technology, an income which would be synonymous with economic and social security, or a national dividend, whatever the name, provided a balance can be struck between the purchasing power and the country's productivity.

It is then, Mr. Speaker, that we would have a balanced economy rather than witnessing such situations as are now occurring not only in Vancouver, but also in many other places. There are lay-offs taking place, for instance, near Contrecoeur, at General Motors, Northern Electric, among longshoremen of national harbours and postal workers.

Dissatisfaction is rampant everywhere. Why? Because people want security and rightly so. The only way to do it is not by collaring and forcing them to occupy a position which is redundant, but to give them the necessary purchasing power to buy whatever products machines are going to produce for them. Then only, would we show respect for man who was certainly not created and born only to be put to work for the sake of working—at cutting branches along highways, for instance, or doing winter works or local initiatives or Opportunities for Youth projects in which hardly anything is ever built and which have no purpose other than keeping those people working and earning a living.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the biggest mistake I ever saw, for you cannot help people in this way as you could logically do by making available to them the means to go and seek the existing production in Canada.

In order to solve those problems, Mr. Speaker, the money issue is not the only thing to be taken into account; there is also the matter of how to come to terms in the field of labour-management relations. I do not intend to go into this in detail, as my colleague from Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne), who was a union president for years, will deal in depth with the matter of labour-management relations.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that a Canadian labour court be created as soon as possible in order to prevent disputes and to maintain the best possible relations between labour and management. This, of course, will require the co-operation of union leaders if unions are to be conciliators, not distributors of boxing gloves.

Managers, who are human beings the same as workers, do not want to be molested or lose their freedom any more than workers do. In order to satisfy both, we would therefore need a Canadian labour court made up of representatives of unions, management and government—in short, unbiased people who really seek solutions to labour problems.

Mr. Speaker, this is the proposition we are making; my colleague from Kamouraska and other colleagues will give more details. However, I would like to say there is only one way to a valuable solution, that is to take into account new techniques, as the member for York South was saying, but not by submitting human beings or workers to a technology that will increase the cost of production without liberating man. Such is real democracy. We are here to govern on behalf of the human being; let us do so. Let us liberate man by the use of machines, science and progress.

Mr. Speaker, lastly I would like to say that it has been reported for some weeks that I was dying in Montreal. Others said that I was dying in Rouyn. Well, I am in parliament today and my health is probably better than that of many people who wanted me out of the way. So, I think that we will be able to go on fighting, not for our personal objectives but for the instauration of a new system in Canada. Let us change what we have so that Canadians can be assured of security and personal liberty.

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, it is in the nature of every strike that it causes harm to persons not directly involved. We have been very conscious of the fact that, in the case of the particular strike at west coast ports, there have been significant amounts of interference, harm and inconvenience caused to a large number of people. We think readily of the situation concerning grain but, of course, there are many other people involved in perhaps smaller ways individually but ways still as serious to them. Even in the Prairie region I think, for instance, of the alfalfa pelleting plants and the difficulties which surround their attempt to move small amounts of products relative to grain through the ports, but who are seriously affected by delays.

The list of those affected on the Prairies and in the west is very long, indeed, and that is the reason everyone must have serious concern about the existence of almost any strike and the inconvenience and difficulties caused to persons not directly involved. In the case of grain, a great deal has been said because of the largeness of its role in the handling of products through the west coast and also because, in the initial closing of the Port of Vancouver it was the product affected much more seriously and for a much longer period of time since a very large proportion of grain moved through the west coast does in fact move through the Port of Vancouver.

In the case of grain, part of our difficulty and problem was due to the fact that we have a program and volume of shipment out of all ports at very high levels, indeed. We completed last year a total export which is roughly estimated at about 815 million bushels of grain and the current program is even heavier than last year's. This meant that in many cases we were going to test the facilities for handling and shipping grain out of the country to the fullest at different points in time. This is particularly true in the case of the west coast.

I have made it clear before that we believe some additional facilities, storage and the like, are needed there to cope with ever larger amounts of grain moving out from the west coast to our new and old customers, large customers such as China and Japan, and customers who have been at smaller levels but extremely important such as Peru, the Phillipines and others. In the last crop year we moved approximately 308 million bushels of grain out of Vancouver, an all time high and far above previous levels. As I have said, in this particular year we have programs to attain levels even higher than that. We were in a position, therefore of needing to strain to the full to accomplish our deliveries, and an interference or delay of nearly a month can have a very serious effect in that context. In the course of that month about 30 million bushels of grain might have moved out of the west coast ports, which therefore we must attempt to move in addition to our regular programs. We will try to do so. It is important, of course, that we get the ports back into operation, and the full co-operation of the whole industry is needed, but every effort will be made to catch up in any way this can be accomplished. That is why the passage of this bill is so important in beginning the operation of catching up on our sales. Our delivery commitments may indeed be caught up if we can start the operation right away. Any longer delay and the matter would become very serious indeed.

• (1630)

We will be making every effort to catch up. Prince Rupert, which has been operating at levels close to its capacity with its existing facilities, is having a second leg put into operation for the receiving of grain and will have a capacity which is perhaps double its present level. We will have to look to extra shifts and the quickest possible turnover of railway equipment if we are to catch up, and we will therefore be counting on the co-operation of everyone throughout the industry, whether they be railwaymen, grain handling workers or elevator agents, to begin the process of moving grain to the coast. We will be looking at every expedient, such as the additional facilities for cleaning or trucking grain, if this becomes necessary to move the required amount. We are fortunate in that we are starting off in the catch up period with a very high volume of grain ready and clean in Vancouver and therefore in a position to go into the ships as soon as possible. In the near future we will begin to receive and put into operation the hopper cars which have been ordered for the movement of grain and which, because of their greater volume and the greater speed in handling in unloading which they make possible, could further increase our capacity. But without a doubt we will be testing in every way our ability to move grain and we will find out exactly what our capacities are both in cleaning and handling grain.

The Wheat Board will be calling on farmers to deliver grain in areas where it is particularly needed for rapid movement, such as areas in the Prairies where the CNR operates. Right now the message will be going out to farmers to deliver grain as they have it available, wheat in particular, so that it can be moved to Vancouver by that railway line to the full of its capacity.

The problem of a strike is one which hurts many innocent people and it is therefore one which is open to easy criticism. We have heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) engage in some criticism without exactly suggesting the techniques which we should choose for a final settlement, except for some hopeful new negotiation procedures.

Mr. Baldwin: A new government.

Mr. Lang: The problem with strikes, and the problem with doing something about them, is that since they are harmful and hurt many people they are therefore an undesirable method. Everyone agrees on the basic principle that the collective bargaining process is valuable, a process which we should try to maintain in our society. The free development by the parties themselves of their positions must be achieved. The question must be what you would put in the place of collective bargaining if you are so critical of it and want to remove it. What alternatives are there that will not interfere with the collective bargaining process itself. What alternatives are there which are sufficiently satisfactory to the men who are involved in the negotiations, alternatives which they will accept, when the strike has been so long associated by them with the need for the protection of themselves and of their rights in situations where historically they were often deprived of them.

[Mr. Lang.]

This is the challenge, and it is not an easy one. It is easy to attempt to make political or instant capital of the desirability of settling a strike. The leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Lewis) indicated his confidence in the able officers of the Department of Labour, and I must say that with the able officers in the department and the able Minister of Labour it is a matter of their judgment as to how they can best attempt to assist the negotiations. Of course, they applied that judgment to the very best of their ability in the processes of negotiation. We are told on the one hand that we should not have waited so long, and then somehow, peculiarly, that when we make this move at this time the timing is political. It is a strange conclusion indeed and one difficult for me to understand, when presumably they mean we should have acted earlier.

The point, of course, is that we had hoped the collective bargaining process would produce a result, and we bent our efforts in that direction. The Minister of Labour has described the situation. He spoke about his officers being present at the scene. There were also descriptions of the situation when grain was one of the products not moving through the port of Vancouver, and special efforts were made to try to get it moving. When this was not possible the Minister of Labour tried to get the parties not just back to the bargaining table, in which he succeeded, but to get the product moving while they discussed the matter because the strike was bound to begin to hurt the economy, perhaps irreparably. When this was not possible, it was necessary, in the government's view, to come back to Parliament and to ask the parties to go back to work while they negotiate.

The bill is careful to preserve the basic collective bargaining principle and this is still extremely important. Anyone who could easily suggest alternatives should know what the impact of his suggestions are. There are very few countries in the world which have found successful solutions to the labour problems which can crop up. Some of the authoritarian governments have found solutions, and it is perhaps significant that they may be among the few who have, with whatever effect upon the rights and freedoms of the parties involved. In other countries a whole variety of solutions have been tried, and yet strikes go on whether legal or illegal. The collective bargaining process is important. We believe in its preservation so that the parties can discuss their problems together and can together attempt to sort out the best possible solution in the situation. It is therefore, as the Minister of Labour has said, with regret that we find it necessary at this point to interfere in the sense that we are at least indicating that the parties must go back to work while the bargaining process goes on. But the bargaining process seemed to be one which would take a significant amount of time and this would cause serious damage to many sections of the community, not only the noticeable ones but also many others which might have been noticed far less.

It is, therefore, extremely important to start the grain moving again, to solve the problems and avoid harm to many other individuals and all kinds of products, that we have the parties working while the collective bargaining goes on. Hopefully, the best kind of atmosphere and the best kind of negotiation can lead to a solution in the near future, and at that point, as the bill itself makes clear, the operation of the bill will come to an end with the coming into place of the collective bargaining agreement. That is an end that we all desire, an end that the economic welfare of the country requires. So, we will certainly not only earnestly ask the House for support in the quick passage of this bill but also earnestly ask for the support of the parties in the discussion, negotiation and mediation process so that a successful conclusion to the work problems at the west coast may be reached. I, therefore, urge all members to support a quick passage of the bill in order that the work of the ports may begin again, and so that the harm which undoubtedly has been caused will be stopped.

• (1640)

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the House that I do not intend to delay passage of this important piece of legislation, but I do wish to express a few thoughts on the government's stand with respect to the present phase in the evolution of strikes and collective bargaining. The hon. member who preceded me said it is of the utmost importance that collective bargaining continue while work is being done. This piece of legislation deals in effect with two unions, the longshoremen's union and the grain handlers in Vancouver port. I point out that the grain handlers have been involved in what might be called collective bargaining since November 30 of last year. This gives some idea of how long they have continued to work without agreement on a contract.

It is interesting to reminisce on labour disputes in Canada in 1971. I do not intend to deal with the whole subject of collective bargaining, but rather with the question of government intervention to ensure that work will continue while collective bargaining takes place. According to one study something like 152,000 man days were lost through strikes and lock-outs in areas under federal jurisdiction during 1971. Those of us involved in the grain industry recently experienced a strike which lasted for about eight weeks in Quebec ports. In fact the strike at Montreal port was an illegal one, but the Department of Labour did not feel it should intervene. Now, the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) intervenes just three weeks after the start of a strike on the west coast. I can only thank democracy for the fact that we are facing an election, and elections make governments act. At election time, governments seem to realize their responsibilities more fully.

The minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board mentioned alfalfa pelleting plants. There are a number of these in my constituency. Their product is in keen demand internationally. No doubt the Vancouver port tie-up is detrimental to their situation, and to farmers generally across the Prairies.

It is important that we examine the whole question of government intervention, of when government should intervene and when it should not. Earlier, in Vancouver, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) suggested that the government had given these people the right to strike, that they should be allowed to strike, and that that procedure should take its course. Now, all of a sudden, with an election coming on, he realizes he must act. I hope that the people on the Prairies and all across Canada realize he is acting solely because of the election and not because of any deep-seated belief he may or may not have.

I have reached that conclusion because on July 7 Parliament passed certain amendments to the Canada Labour Code. One of those amendments gives the government the power, when a strike or lock-out is anticipated during dissolution of Parliament, to decide that a national emergency could be created, and so the government could act without recalling Parliament. That legislation has not yet been proclaimed, and this gives you some idea of the strong feelings of the Prime Minister. Here is pragmatism at work, dealing with crisis after crisis as they arise.

The Prime Minister is not concerned with the crisis on the Prairies; he is concerned with the forthcoming election. He is not concerned with the grain shipments that may have been lost. It is estimated that this strike, which has lasted since August 7, has held up the shipment of something like 38 million bushels of grain. On August 29, some 35 ships were waiting to be loaded at Vancouver. All of a sudden the Prime Minister realized the time had arrived when he must call an election. Therefore he had to act, not to save the western farmer but in an attempt to save his own political skin.

At this stage in the evolution of collective bargaining, governments should have the right to intervene with respect to commodities that are of national importance. No such provision was made in the amendments to the Canada Labour Code. The Prime Minister has not said, as the President of the United States stated when urging passage of a labour bill before Congress:

> For those who argue that the government should not interfere with collective bargaining, the short answer is that the bargaining in this case has thus far failed—and failed badly for 15 months.

As I mention, Mr. Speaker, the terminal grain handlers have been engaged in collective bargaining since November 30 last. President Nixon went on to say:

> I share the belief that government ordinarily should not tamper with the freedom of bargaining, but when the processes have broken down and the nation's health and safety are at stake we in public office have no right to turn our heads.

He was talking about the longshoremen's strike on the west coast of the United States. He added:

> Let us resolve that this stoppage on the west coast will be the last of its kind. The Congress should act immediately to end the west coast strike and, with utmost dispatch, pass the Crippling Strikes Prevention Act.

We have nothing like that in this piece of legislation. This piece of legislation will cease to have effect on January 1, 1973. We must ask ourselves whether a strike which has not yet reached a satisfactory conclusion can be settled by January 1, 1973. I do not think it will be settled by then. The striking workers and the Maritime Shipping Association will look with anticipation to the forthcoming election to see who will be the winner. Let us say that the election is called for October 30. The declaration of the winner may take up to two weeks after that. The removal from office of those now in cabinet posts may take another two weeks. This brings us to the first part of December before a new government can take over, and then we are well into the festive season of Christmas and the New Year.

• (1650)

Of course, this whole subject can be dealt with when we go into committee of the whole, but I should like the Minister of Labour, the Prime Minister, and the whole cabinet to give some thought to adjusting the date of December 31, 1972 to perhaps January 31, 1973 or February 28, 1973. There is agreement by all parties in this House that collective bargaining has broken down, and everybody is anxious to pass this legislation. Today, during the question period, the Minister of Labour admitted that he knew that the Maritime Shipping Association was prepared to make a new offer to the longshoremen, but he still declared that negotiation had broken down. He must have had some inside knowledge in order to reach that conclusion, and to consider that the government needed to intervene.

We have evidence that collective bargaining with the terminal workers at the Vancouver port has been going on since September 30, 1971, so we could conclude that collective bargaining has broken down there. When we see evidence of how long it takes for collective bargaining to work, how can we, as faithful legislators, pass this legislation and expect it to work for the good of Canadians? I could not let it pass without warning this House and the country that January 1, 1973 is not an effective deadline if we think about the farmers of western Canada and the movement of grain.

But we may have an election between now and January 1, and then the Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board (Mr. Lang) can ride their white chargers across the Prairies claiming to have solved the problem. But will the problem be solved beyond January 1? I think that the Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board are only thinking of themselves when asking this House to pass this legislation. The election may be November 7 or October 30 or whatever date the Prime Minister chooses, but I think they should wait until a reasonable length of time past the festive season of Christmas and New Year before allowing the legislation to lapse. Then, I would believe they were thinking of the farmers, of the alfalfa plants, the man in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon who depends on the Pacific ports to provide him with his necessary goods and commodities. I would believe that they were thinking of someone besides themselves.

A government of which I was a backbencher some years ago passed similar legislation in order to end the railway strike, but it allowed nearly six months for negotiations. The piece of legislation before us goes by the board in a relatively short period of time. I see the House Leader on the government side nodding his head in an affirmative manner.

I want the country to realize, Mr. Speaker, that the government is not making a concerted effort to keep up with the times in regard to collective bargaining. This is a temporary piece of legislation offered because they are going into an election, not because they want to save the country or help the grain farmers and people on the west coast who depend on the inward and outward flow of goods. If they are concerned with these people, then they should adjust that date to January 31, 1973. Give them 30 days after the festive season, 30 days after the election; give them to the end of March, but let us make a concerted effort to solve this difficult problem.

Reviewing the list of difficulties incurred in the labour field over the past year, it adds up to something like 400,000 man days lost in 1972 already. Having called Parliament back, are we prepared to reach some kind of conclusion which will have an effect on strikes and the economy during the difficult winter months? By January 1, 1973 we could have high unemployment, and I think the government would be wise to allow the parties involved to negotiate until the end of March, 1973 or at least until the end of February. I urge the government to consider this suggestion when we reach committee stage. Before the coming election, they must prove to the people that they have thought of the grain farmers, the lumber industry and the people who use the west coast ports. We have been called here to pass this piece of legislation, so let us do a man's job which will benefit the whole country and not just the political fortunes of the Prime Minister and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about the situation we face in this House and the situation at the west coast which caused us to be called together. I regard it as a very serious matter when legislators, whatever their position of power, find it necessary to impose their will on the workers and the employers in any particular sector of the nation or of industry. When we do that, we are saying to those who work that they will work for the wages they are receiving, whether they find that satisfactory or not. We are saying to employers who have machines and contracts that they shall put those machines and contracts at the disposal of the people of Canada. We would only do this I suppose, and certainly I would only consider it, if we found that there were no acceptable alternative. We are told by the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) that in effect there is no alternative.

On August 11, I wired the minister urging that mediation be used in the dispute. Somewhere around August 20 or 21, I received a reply that mediation was being carried out. As to what happened in the interim, I only know what I read in the newspapers. Following that, I assume that the minister and his officials did what they could in the way of mediating the dispute.

• (1700)

This House must recognize that at the base of this dispute, and surely the dispute in the St. Lawrence ports, is technological change. Until we deal with technological change, and the manner in which it affects workers and employers, we can expect to find ourselves back in this House on a similar kind of business. It is the failure to adequately deal with this technological change that causes the farmers, businessmen, working people, the citizens of Saskatchewan and, indeed, the whole prairie region, so much unease and to regard any stoppage of the movement of our products to the export markets with great concern. Saskatchewan is probably more affected than other provinces. For a number of years we have been in a sort of limbo with regard to transportation. The MacPherson commission was appointed. It finished its work and made what I regard as a largely negative report.

Since then we have been left in a situation of wondering how soon and how much of our transportation is going to be disrupted or eliminated.

A few minutes ago, the minister in charge of the wheat board made what I call his high volume wheat speech. Not too long ago, the minister arranged a deal for approximately 2,000 boxcars. I wonder how many members are aware that there are many hundreds of miles of branch lines in Saskatchewan over which these cars cannot travel. They cannot travel on these branch lines because the roadbed has deteriorated to such an extent that it will no longer support that kind of load. The railroaders and many farmers know that. I wonder how many members of this House know about it.

Thousands of farmers who normally ship their grain over these branch lines wonder how soon they will be closed and the rails pulled up. They wonder what kind of transportation facilities will then be available to them. Members of this House should not be surprised at the unease, dismay and dissatisfaction that exists among the grain growers in western Canada because of the transportation system and the lack of attention they have received from this government. That is part of the reason we are so concerned about any disruption. We do not know when the government will give more attention to these matters.

This past spring and summer we argued for better rates for rapeseed in order to be competitive. The grains group conducted a study to see what would be the next move in this game of checkers between the two main railroads and the government. A committee of the Canada Grains Council is supposed to bring in a report within the next three years. The Canada Grains Council is loaded in favour of the transportation and grain companies. The farmer will come out second best. That is why he looks with suspicion at what is being done and the way in which his interests are being looked after or, more properly, neglected. The farmer sees reports in which it is suggested there should be 80 or 90 terminals to handle the total volume of grain in western Canada. He knows that is an impractical and unworkable suggestion. When there is a tie-up at the west coast, he views this as the ultimate disaster.

There is also the matter of the movement of potash and, as another member mentioned, the products from our alfalfa pelleting plants. This affects us materially. There are hundreds of workers in these plants. I do not speak only for the farmers in my constituency. Over 60 per cent of the people in my constituency are urban dwellers. There are mine workers who work in potash plants, as well as the food and allied packing house workers who work in the meat processing plants. I am responsible to those people as well. I speak on behalf of all my constituents when I say we expect this government to conduct itself more effectively in the fields of transportation, and labour management. We expect a more effective method in dealing with disputes which arise, such as those on the west coast. We expect the government to have a better understanding of what is involved and to spend more time trying to create a better transportation system, one which will effectively serve the farmer, the business community and, indeed, the total community of western Canada.

The root of the problem is the lack of concern and understanding as to where we have arrived in this technological age in which we depend so completely on the smooth operation of a transportation system that must be geared to handle more products all the time, whether it is potash, grain, sulphur or coal. We must be geared to do this kind of job in labour relations, transportation, industry, and labour. The employer and the worker must assume their responsibility in this field. I am not so sure that the employer has been accepting his full responsibility. I am reluctant to tell any man how he should dispose of his time or under what conditions he should work. This is not appropriate to a free society. Nevertheless, this is what we have to do at this moment in time.

• (1710)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Laniel in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Baldwin: The minister has already given a very limited explanation of this bill, but I should like to ask him to say a few more words at this time in answer to some of the questions which were raised by my leader, by the hon. member for Crowfoot and by hon. members in the New Democratic Party. In particular, I would ask him to indicate with some clarity why the government has not yet seen fit to proclaim the Labour Code which was passed on June 30 of this year. This bill was to be the answer to the maiden's prayer as far as labour legislation was concerned. It was originally introduced by the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Subsequently, it was withdrawn for further study and brought in again with a number of changes. An extensive study was carried out here, yet the legislation has not been proclaimed. There may be a valid explanation.

I have some experience of this government. Ministers bring down legislation such as the tax reform bill, which is alleged to be most important. In due course it is passed. The departmental officials who devised it then come to examine it and find there are impediments to its operation. When they examine its impact on other measures, they realize that new difficulties are involved. I trust I am not being unduly suspicious, since, as I say, there may be a reasonable explanation, but among other things I would like the Minister of Labour to give the House a rational, detailed and understandable explanation of this delay in proclaiming a bill which we passed on June 30 of this year.

Mr. O'Connell: I shall be glad to do so. I am happy to share the hon. member's expectation that any explanation I do give will be rational. The delay in proclaiming the bill which was passed here on July 5 is related principally to the question of the establishment of the new board.

As hon. members know, there is to be a new Canada Labour Relations Board comprised of at least six members. We undertook to consult extensively on this question with the labour unions, management groups, persons in the judiciary who are informed on the subject of industrial relations, persons in the universities, those who are engaged in the provincial departments of labour, deputy ministers and others, and those who have been active in conciliation, mediation and arbitration procedures. I think we would all wish to be sure that this kind of broad consultation has taken place over the summer period.

I may say there has been a very generous response to our requests for suggestions concerning the new board. In the past short period the government has been considering these proposals, analyzing them and studying the question of appropriate appointments to the board. However, even when this work has been done it will take the new board some time at least in which to get itself into position. The persons who will be wanted are undoubtedly persons who are already busily engaged. Procedures will need to be established and staff recruited. A great deal of this work has already been done, though, and I hope we are not too far away from being able to proclaim the act. This is the basic cause of the time lapse.

I think it would be appropriate for me to clarify section 181 of the act which is undoubtedly in the minds of many members here. The question is whether, if the act had been in force, this section could have applied to the situation in which we now find ourselves. It is clear, in my view, that section 181 comes into play only after Parliament has been dissolved. The question becomes the following: if a dispute has reached a point at which a strike or lock-out has become legal before the dissolution of Parliament, then section 181 does not apply. On the other hand, if the dispute had not reached a point at which the seven days which must elapse after the minister has received the report of a conciliation board for a strike or lock-out to be legal, then the Governor in Council may act. It would, therefore, not apply in this situation because the seven days running time has elapsed. It was not the intention of the government, nor the intention of Parliament I am sure, as this was discussed in committee, that we put ourselves in the position of withdrawing rights which had been earned in a period before Parliament dissolved, because Parliament was there to deal with the question if it felt that the situation constituted, or was about to constitute, an emergency. Parliament was still there.

The matter was discussed and clarified in committee and I could refer to the proceedings recorded in the 25th report. The situation is, therefore, that when the seven days elapse before a dissolution use cannot be made of an order in council. When this new bill is proclaimed, in any subsequent dissolution, in any short period of two to three months occurring perhaps on an average of every four years, there is power through order in council to, as it were, postpone the lapsing of the seven days into another period. But the lapsing must begin to take place in a period between parliaments.

I shall be glad to go further into this matter if there are any questions remaining. I appreciate very much the rapid progress we have made up to this point. I feel everyone would expect me, however, to say something about the charge of inactivity which has come, in particular, from the Official Opposition. I am quite prepared to listen to this charge with respect to myself, although I would disagree that it has application. However, I am not prepared to accept it as to the departmental officers who have long and I think recognized, experience in dispute settlement and know exactly what they are doing. I do not think it would be proper for me to let this moment go by without stating that.

Let me say first that in disputes within federal jurisdiction the experience is that over 95 per cent get settled without a strike, and many of those settlements are the result of expert work done in the department. In this particular case I want to point out that the conciliation officers were available and not fully utilized. The conciliation board was appointed and met very briefly because one party in particular did not find it useful to put a case before the board but rather wanted it out of the way, thus having stripped the situation of all the required procedures so the two parties could confront each other. They have the right to do that, and if we believe in collective bargaining we have to go along with it. You cannot force mediation. None the less, the chairman of the board remained available as did the officers of my department in Vancouver. The Assistant Deputy Minister, who is an expert in conciliation proceedings, was dispatched to the area. Subsequently, the Deputy Minister and I went to Vancouver. We have not been inactive at all and it is a mistaken notion, indeed, if one thinks he can press mediation into a situation where the parties prefer not to have it.

Let me remind the committee of the 1969 experience when another contract was being negotiated by the parties. The parties have indicated to me that at least partly because of mediation pressures three settlements were rejected by the membership. There was a strike of 39 days—with grain moving, none the less, in the ports—during which time the negotiators for the two parties came to tentative agreements. In ratification votes, those three agreements were rejected by the membership. The work resumed for three months and in the confusion that followed a fourth settlement was accepted by a very narrow margin, but only after a second strike took place. The parties, perhaps quite properly, did not want mediation pressures. That was made quite clear, and I respected that position. They felt that only by coming to grips together could they come to an agreement under which they wanted to live for the next two, three or one year period, whatever it may be. We have to keep in perspective the fact that mediation is a question of judgment and will differ dispute by dispute.

I did not want to let the occasion go by leaving any reflection on the members of the department who are so skilled and so successful as a rule in this field. I am going to consider very seriously the proposal put forward by the leader of the New Democratic Party in respect of retroactivity as it applies in the case of the grain handlers and the longshoremen's dispute. I do not know that there is anything more I might usefully say at this time. Undoubtedly, questions will arise during the committee stage and I will attempt to answer them then.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might ask the Minister of Labour another question relating to the proclamation of Bill

C-183. I am calling it a question, but perhaps it will develop into a representation. As the minister knows, there is in this clause we are now discussing a reference to Part V of the Canada Labour Code and there are other references in the bill to that same Part V. It came out earlier today that since Bill C-183 has not been proclaimed any references in this bill to Part V of the Canada Labour Code are to be construed for now as references to Part V as it stood prior to the passing of Bill C-183 last June.

There are two or three problems which arise. There is the possibility that the proclamation of Bill C-183 might take place during the four month period this bill is in effect. During that time the parties will be negotiating under the provisions of the bill. They will start out to negotiate under Part V as it stood, but what happens to their position when Part V is changed in the middle of these negotiations?

Mr. Baldwin: Don't ask nasty questions.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for Peace River suggests this is a nasty question. It is one of those legal questions to which three lawyers will give four different answers.

May I point out, and I suppose this is where my question becomes a representation, that it seems to me it would be a good idea for the sake of negotiations between the parties under Bill C-231, for the proclamation of Bill C-183 to be expedited and brought about as soon as possible. I do not know whether it would be legal, but it seems to me if the minister is going to be able to do this in a couple of weeks he might indicate that to the parties now and tell them they had better carry out their negotiations in terms of Part V in Bill C-183 as we passed it in June.

In this connection I might point out, to show that this is a kind of knotty problem, and my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands may have something more to say about this later, that the package the employers put before the union on Tuesday morning included the suggestion that the union agree to the suspension of sections 150, 152 and 153 in Part V of the labour code. In other words, they are being asked to agree to the suspension of something that does not yet exist. The real problem is not the technical one but relates to the fact that these clauses have to do with technological change.

Surely, the minister sees there is a whole area of uncertainty here because it is not clear which version of Part V of the Canada Labour Code will apply at the point when the parties reach agreement, as they are asked to do in this bill. In light of all this, does the minister not feel he should really go all out to provide for the earliest possible proclamation of Bill C-183?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I am going to have my officers come down to assist me in some of the legal and other aspects of this bill. Let me give a preliminary answer which I trust will stand up when they arrive. We might refer to clause 2 which provides that Part V of the labour code applies during this period so long as the reinstatement of the existing agreement is in force. The answer I would give is that Part V of the existing bill, before the new one is proclaimed, applies. It seems to me that if in this interval the new bill is proclaimed, Bill C-183 and the new Part V come into existence, then the new agreement that is made would be under the new Part V. The old Part V relates to the old agreement, and the new Part V relates to the new agreement if the act is proclaimed during the four months interval.

• (1730)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What if it is not?

Mr. O'Connell: The other question was whether one should not hasten in order perhaps to affect or influence the parties or to put them in a different bargaining position. I want to say that I intend to proceed on a normal course with the advice I would give as to the proclamation. The important thing is to launch the new bill on firm ground, on respected ground, and not to establish a new board or get the act proclaimed so that it will alter the circumstances of the present dispute. I intend to proceed on course, and I think we will soon be able to move, to the proclamation of the bill.

Mr. Alexander: I would just like to interject for a few moments with regard to the minister's answer as to why Bill C-183 has not been proclaimed as yet. May I respectfully remind him that during the time prior to the debate of that particular bill there was some pressure—and I use that term loosely—in the interests of attempting to have this bill passed as soon as possible, firstly because the minister was very concerned about the aspect of technological change, and secondly because we were all of the opinion, and I think rightly so, that there was an election in the offing and that the country would be defenseless if section 181 of Bill C-183 were not proclaimed.

All I can say at this time is that it appears to me that the minister has forgotten, in stating his reasons why this bill has not been proclaimed the fact that his colleague, the former Minister of Labour, had put forward a bill similar in nature, with similar clauses, which had been untouched so far as section 181 is concerned. What I am attempting to say is that the minister stated that the reason the bill had not been proclaimed was that the labour relations board had not been established. I say that the minister has had time not only from June 30 to August 30 but from a year prior to that time, because it was the intention of the government to bring in a bill of that sort.

The minister is shaking his head. Surely the minister remembers that we had a previous bill, I think it was C-253, and flak came from both management and labour regarding its contents. We brought back another bill, Bill C-183. Surely the minister knows that the part I am talking about is section 181 of Bill C-183, which is also included in Bill C-253. One of the reasons given was that the country would be defenceless in the event of the dissolution of Parliament, though perhaps it was not the minister but some of the officials who were attempting to explain the bill who told us this.

As a matter of fact, there was no way in which the government or Parliament could handle a strike—unless it was under some measure similar to the War Measures Act—if the strike took place while Parliament was dissolved. This is the significance of the clause in Bill C-183. So in the event that the government calls an election, whether it be for October 30, November 7 or November 13, we have no protection if a strike occurs; the country will be defenceless because Bill C-183 will not have been proclaimed. And we do not know when it will be proclaimed.

This afternoon the minister stated that the regulations under Bill C-183 have just about been compiled and are ready to be appended to the bill. He also said that a conclusion has almost been reached regarding the designation of the members of the board. But he did not state definitely when the proclamation will take place. I would want the minister to clarify this problem. The government would be derelict in its duty if in fact Bill C-183 is not proclaimed. The country would be defenceless in the event that an election was called by "His Lordship" in the next two or three days and the government went to the people on October 30. I want the minister to answer that question because it is extremely important.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Who is "His Lordship"?

Mr. Alexander: I will leave that to speculation.

Another question which was posed and with which I thought the minister would deal related to the proposition that was put by the hon. member for Crowfoot. He said that if we are serious in wishing the parties to negotiate—and I think we all appreciate the importance and the need for collective bargaining—at the same time we should be concerned about the public interest. That is paramount. Although the parties are important, as I have indicated before many people are becoming more concerned about the fact that they are not involved in the collective bargaining process, whether they are with management or with unions. This leaves the consumer boxed in. I think that the parties must be given a fair deal in solving all their differences and I do not think that this can be accomplished by December 31.

The hon. member for Crowfoot gave several cogent reasons. He mentioned the upcoming election. He mentioned the forthcoming winter months. He mentioned the fact that it takes a new government a fair amount of time to make cabinet changes. He also mentioned the fact that before we know it we will be into the Christmas season. I can understand the confusion that may exist in the minister's mind with respect to this because we cannot be sure that meaningful negotiations will take place in the next three months or so.

After all, we know that these parties have been negotiating, I hope in good faith, for the past 10 months or so, so is it really fair to say: "If you do not reach any conclusion by way of collective agreement by December 31, you are back in the same boat again, which means you can go on strike"? They will have gone through the conciliation procedures and through the whole of the labour bill under which they are acting. We cannot afford another strike. I am asking the minister to look upon the request of the hon. member for Crowfoot with some sympathy, because I think we all want the same thing; we all want industrial peace.

I hope the minister can answer these two questions: first, whether the country will be defenceless in the event of the dissolution of parliament; and second, what is wrong with the suggestion submitted by the hon. member for Crowfoot, who is concerned about whether there is enough time left? I hope we can be assured that the parties will bargain in good faith. Labour and management must bargain in good faith. I would like to know whether they are making full disclosure. It is obvious that either side could play hanky-panky with full disclosure.

• (1740)

The third point I have always concentrated upon is whether the parties are taking inflexible positions. If things have been all that tough regarding those three aspects of collective bargaining for the past ten months or so, can the minister give us some assurance that December 31 is the proper date for the ending of this legislation? How did he determine that date? I note that the employers submitted an offer prior to the introduction of this legislation. Does that offer give the minister reason to believe, after due deliberation and having listened to the advice available to him in the department, that December 31 will give ample time?

The hon. member for Crowfoot recalled, in connection with a similar bill dealing with a railway strike, that a former government provided a six months cooling off period. If a six months period was provided some years ago, have we now reached the stage in labour-management relations where three months are sufficient?

Collective bargaining is being severely tested. Many Canadians want the government to act. But the collective bargaining process cannot be easily tampered with because it provides the right to strike. That is a hard won right which nobody wants to remove. That is why I stand here with some regret. But when I analyse the situation I see that the public interest must prevail.

I have asked the minister three important questions and I hope he will give some indication of his thinking on these points.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, approaching the first question I should say that proclamation may be made at any time, whether Parliament is sitting or not and whether Parliament has been dissolved or not. So when the hon. member for Hamilton West asks if the government is defenceless, I do not relate the question only to proclamation. Proclamation can be made any time, but it has to be made in relation to the proper operation of the new act.

Mr. Alexander: But until that time the country is defenceless.

Mr. O'Connell: I do not think we can agree that the country is ever defenceless. This is a new provision in a new bill. We have never had it previously, and I do not know of any other jurisdiction that has this kind of provision in it. I just cannot bring myself to believe that we should use such a word as "defenceless".

I am sure no union would want to be in the position of engaging in a strike of very serious consequence at a time when Parliament is dissolved, Parliament being really the only agency that we have under the labour code to terminate such a strike if a national emergency ensued. If we searched our past experience I do not think that we would be able to find a case where that kind of dispute did in fact arise during a period of dissolution.

Mr. Alexander: Then why clause 181?

Mr. O'Connell: It is a precaution and, I think, a useful one, but its suspension at this time does not expose us to the charge of being defenceless.

A question was asked about the date of December 31 and whether that is a reasonable time. This, of course, is a question of judgment. One of the considerations must be that in fact we are extending the terms and conditions of agreements that have expired, in one case for about a month and in the other case for about ten months.

I do not think we would want to extend former terms and conditions that at least one of the parties is unhappy with, since they want a new kind of agreement. We would not want to extend those any longer than we felt absolutely necessary. It would be unfair to the parties to say that they will live under those old agreements for a substantial period of time. The time should be related to the best estimate we can make for reaching a new settlement.

I would have hopes and expectations that certainly in the case of the grain handlers, where very little separates the two parties, they would quickly come to an agreement. In the other case there are complex, technological, difficult and human issues. But four months is surely an adequate time, and I would expect and hope they would make their agreement well ahead of the end of that time.

The first offers have been exchanged this week. That is a good beginning. In the government's judgment, and certainly in my judgment, the process will take several weeks. Therefore we have tried to find a reasonable balance, in fairness to all the parties involved.

I was asked whether the parties are bargaining in good faith, and I quickly answer yes. I have no difficulty in answering yes. I believe they are. The unfortunate circumstance we are all in is that by the time they got down to business, or were just on the threshhold of getting down to business, the main port on the west coast had already been shut down for 23 or 25 days. The economic situation is too clearly evident to let the strike prolong itself while the negotiations take place. So there is a cooling off period as described by the hon. member for Hamilton West which offers an opportunity to continue the bargaining.

You will note that provision is made for a mediator who will be given the authority of a conciliation board to call witnesses and to assist the parties in arriving at a settlement. It is really a question of balance. I hope we will agree that it is not an unreasonable one.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks of the minister in regard to the situation as it has existed, but the situation in which the bargaining is taking place today is different from what it was the day before yesterday. In regard to the time limit, it seems to me that if the government restricts the time period it will force the parties into an impossible situation particularly if agreement is not reached as the minister expects it to be reached.

It is assumed that we are on the threshhold of an election. When an election is held, 30 days elapse before the writs are returned. In the event that the environment is such that the two parties are carrying on their negotiations in a more relaxed situation because the strike issue is not there, and the disputes not settled before Christmas, then not only would parliament and the government of the day but the whole economy be placed in an impossible situation, one that would be very difficult to manage. It seems to me that it would aid, not hinder, that it would encourage, not restrain, the situation that exists now, and will continue to exist until final agreement is reached, if such an impasse could be avoided. I think the hon. member for Crowfoot took a very practical approach to this problem when he suggested that the date be extended by another two months or 30 days after Parliament had reassembled. This would be an advantage to everyone concerned.

• (1750)

I think it is important to remember that by the end of this year the economy will have lost some 400,000 man days in the area of federal jurisdiction due to strikes and lockouts. This is nearly double the figure for 1971 when we lost 219,360 days, and three times the figure for the year before when 152,030 man days were lost due to strikes and lockouts. Therefore it would seem practical to extend the time in order to make sure that Parliament can deal with this strike effectively, and I would urge that the minister reconsider his position when we come to clause by clause consideration of the bill.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, some aspects of this bill are becoming more apparent as we get into the discussion than were apparent on the surface during second reading debate, which of course was of somewhat unusual brevity. I for one would not want anyone in this House, in the press or in the country to assume that because Parliament gave rather fast approval to what we call the principle of the bill, it was done lightly, at least as far as some of us are concerned.

The answer to a question this afternoon focussed attention on some of the really broad issues encompassed by the introduction of this legislation. I am not going to enter into this discussion between the minister and the hon. member for Hamilton West about what might happen during the dissolution of Parliament, but the minister did say that Parliament is the only agency that can deal with situations of this kind. That remark underlined for me the danger inherent in using this parliamentary agency too lightly and too often.

As I journeyed to Ottawa I must say that I felt quite annoyed at the flippant and casual manner with which the Prime Minister summoned Parliament without any proper notice or opportunity given members from a province like British Columbia, which is of course the seat of the situation, to get here from their constituencies without at least having to travel all night and arrive perhaps not in the best condition to consider serious and broad issues.

I think one of the concerns of members here is the fear that if we are not careful we are going to have Parliament in the position of the small boy who cried wolf once too often. If we ever come to a situation where the will of Parliament is ignored because it is being improperly used to rubber stamp proposals put forward by government to cover up its mistakes, then the country is in trouble.

The minister said that Parliament is the only agency to deal with this situation. I would suggest that if Parliament is to remain an effective agency to cope with emergency situations, the actions of Parliament must be such as to maintain respect for this institution in the minds of the people of Canada, and perhaps particularly in the minds of the people involved in a labour dispute such as this.

The situation in which we find ourselves now, where we are forced to acquiesce to this government's proposal, arises from a long series of bumblings and inactivity on the part of the government. I am not going to repeat some of the earlier discussion about the impact of technological change, but I have been thinking to myself "shades of the Freedman report". I remember hearing the former member for Port Arthur, Douglas Fisher, speak about his involvement in that situation.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The Committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, please. When the committee rose it was considering clause 2.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose for the dinner recess I had made a few comments about my reaction to Parliament being used in what appears to me to be a rather casual manner by the Prime Minister's summoning of the members. One day it appeared, at least to me, that he was shrugging this whole matter off as being of little consequence. The next day we received a rush summons by rather delayed telegram with little opportunity to arrive here and consider what I feel is a very serious matter for Parliament to be called back to act upon.

I suggested that the reason we are being used too frequently is that the government has been ignoring the basic issues that lie behind a developing situation such as the one with which this bill has been designed to deal. I mentioned the fact that a number of years ago Douglas Fisher, a former deputy leader of our party and then the hon. member for Port Arthur, had been involved in the events that led up to the Freedman Report.

It is true that Part V of the new labour code, which has not been proclaimed, touches lightly on some of the matters that relate to technological change. However, I suggest that the government has never considered redefining what might be described as the basic bill of rights for working people in an age when technological change is of daily concern to those involved in almost every industry, whether it lies in provincial or federal jurisdiction.

We are in danger of being called on to support a panic-button-pushing approach of the government. We had a very drastic example of that not too long ago which arose from events in the province of Quebec. I am concerned that it will become a habit of the present administration to rely on being able to draw in Parliament quickly and to use its weight to cover its own lack of action, or the lack of action of a previous administration, in this increasingly important field.

One could go into the whole broad spectrum of a society where, with inflation and various other factors, we have an attitude taken by various segments of society which tends to hold each other up to ransom. There is an atmosphere in which one group is being pitted against another. This is as prevalent in the province of British Columbia as anywhere in Canada, though hopefully that situation may improve for the better in light of recent events in that province.

The present government should note there is a strong indication in British Columbia that people are becoming fed up with being pushed around by the kind of force that was all too prevalent in the relationship of the now retiring government of British Columbia with various segments of society, particularly with the working people who are organized into trade unions.

The cabinet in the province of British Columbia used what I call Star Chamber tactics to be able to do in secret what we are now actively doing openly. I am concerned that we may fall into that kind of trap. We should not let parliament be used for the purpose of accomplishing indirectly what poor legislation, which created a spiteful atmosphere in the province of British Columbia, has done directly by permanent authority given to the governor in council.

One aspect of this matter has been touched upon but has not been dwelt upon. Perhaps it may not be of such broad national significance as matters such as the export of grain. I am referring to the tie-up in the coastal shipping traffic of the province of British Columbia. My observation was that they were coping with this emergency situation. When I received notice of the sitting of this House, I was in one of the northerly parts of my constituency. An airport is located there and I was able to see the airlifting and carrying of goods down the coast to fishing packers in order to ensure that essential supplies were being taken to those communities. One aspect of that matter which should not go unnoted in this chamber is that no action on the part of the longshoremen's union was taken in an effort to halt the flow of that necessary movement of commodities to the up-coast communities. I submit this reflects credit on the manner in which they have been conducting themselves in this dispute.

• (2010)

There is not much more I wish to say but I thought it was important I should make these remarks because I think they may help members realize that it is a group of working people in British Columbia who find themselves in this situation. They are Canadians, they have their rights, and we should not be stampeded into making sweeping generalizations or into infringing unduly upon those rights. Above all, Parliament should not be used by this government or by any other government in the future as an implement to achieve such an end.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have an opportunity to make a few comments once again. This matter was brought up a little earlier by one of the members of the New Democratic Party, who found need for clarification with respect to the reference to clause 5—

An hon. Member: Part V.

Mr. Alexander: I am sorry, Part V—of the Canada labour code. I would like to propose an amendment eventually on this point because I believe there is a definite need for clarification. As a matter of fact, I heard earlier during the debate that one of the parties to this confrontation had attempted to deal, I think, with clauses 150, 151 and 152. No one can deal with these particular clauses right now in view of the fact that these clauses are referred to in Bill C-183 and that that bill has not been proclaimed, which leaves us in a very peculiar situation, and more so those who will be directly offered by this bill.

The amendment I shall propose is based on the following reasons. The present bill contains four references to part V of the Canada labour code. These are in clause 2(2) on page 2, clause 5(2) on page 4, clause 11(2) on page 7 and clause 15(4) on page 8. The reference in clause 15(4) is to two sections of Part V.

Not wanting to be repetitious but rather to elaborate and cement that which I am attempting to point out, I would say that the confusion arises because there are now two Part Vs of the Canada labour code. One is the Part V in Chapter L-1 of the Revised Statutes of 1970. Of course, that is the old Part. The other is the Part V contained in Bill C-183, now Chapter 18 of the Statutes for the present session. This, of course, is the bill which has not yet been proclaimed.

I therefore respectfully submit that there could be some confusion. The first Part V is in full force and effect. I can appreciate my colleagues understanding that. The second Part V has not yet been proclaimed. It could be proclaimed, as my good friend the minister said, at any moment. But having listened to the reasons he gave for its not having been proclaimed, I have cause for concern and worry. When it is proclaimed the Part V now in force and effect will be repealed and the new Part V will come into force, in other words, that Part V contained in Bill C-183.

These new Part Vs differ in content. I do not wish to elaborate because we have all taken part in the debate on Bill C-183 and we know what it involves in terms of measures to deal with technological change the appointment of a board, and so on.

As I read clause 5(2) of the bill before us one can easily see where we are into some difficulty as to what the government is attempting to project in terms of the parties now in dispute. It says:

> The terms and conditions of the collective agreement to which this Part V applies shall be effective and binding on the parties thereto for the period mentioned in subsection (1) notwithstanding anything contained in Part V of the Canada Labour Code or in the agreement, and Part V of that Act shall apply in respect of the agreement as if the period for which the agreement was extended by this section were the term of the agreement.

I notice the Minister of Justice is listening. A man with his legal background can understand why I am concerned and why I am seeking clarification. If the present Part V applies, then what happens—I ask this because it raises an interesting point—if the new Part V is proclaimed during the extension of the agreement provided for by the bill?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: The parties to the agreement would then find themselves operating under a new set of rules. In other words, if the government intends that the present Part V should apply during the life of this bill, Part V of Bill C-183, could then be ignored. I respectfully say that it cannot in good faith proclaim Part V of Bill C-183. This is a terrible situation. We are operating under Bill C-183 because of section 181. But at the same time, if we are indicating to the parties involved in the dispute that what we are talking about is Part V of the old bill, then how can Bill C-183 be proclaimed? If I am right, the government cannot use section 181 of the new Part V.

I should like to ask: Is the government giving up this power to suspend during a dissolution? We have gone over this question but I am asking it again. I am asking whether the government, in its interest to settle this strike, is giving up its power to suspend during a dissolution of Parliament the right to call a strike or lock-out which might adversely affect the public interest.

If the minister would assure the House with judicial certainty, not with any "I think," or "I suppose," or "I would hope," or "It is my opinion," or "We intend to," or "We would like," but with judicial certainty which Part V is referred to, that if it is the old Part V, the new Part V will not be statutory during the agreement and that the power to use Bill C-183 is not prejudiced, then I will be satisfied.

I believe all hon. members are concerned about this because it could lead us into a chaotic situation if this is not spelled out with certainty. If the minister cannot satisfy this side of the House I would propose an amendment to the bill to clarify the uncertainty. I shall leave this with the minister in the hope that with the expertise he has available to him he will be able to come up with an answer very shortly with judicial certainty.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I wish to give an answer which I think will meet the requirement of being judicious. I do not think the hon. member is asking me to give a legal opinion. In respect of the two Part V's of the labour code, the one now in existence and the one to come into existence, it is clear that old Part V, if I can call it that, applies until the date of the proclamation of the new bill. Upon the proclamation of the new bill the new Part V, in my view, would apply except to the extent it is not consistent with any rights accruing under the old.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on!

Mr. Thomas: Is that a judicial opinion?

Mr. O'Connell: No. It is an opinion based upon the Interpretation Act and upon the transitional agreement.

Mr. Bell: Start all over again. You are all fuddled up.

Mr. O'Connell: The requirement under the Interpretation Act and the transitional requirement is that the new bill would apply except to the extent that it would not be consistent with rights accruing under the old. As I understand it, those rights would continue for as long as this act continues. The old Part V is mentioned in terms of this emergency bill. I think that is the answer to the question asked.

The hon. member also asked, I believe, about the technological provisions. If the new act were proclaimed it is also provided in the act that it would not apply to an existing agreement and therefore would not disturb the existing agreement so long as it lasts but could affect the terms and conditions of a new agreement which the parties are now negotiating.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I wonder for clarification if the minister could spell out those parts of old Part V and new Part V which are inconsistent, so that we will know.

Mr. O'Connell: I am not aware of any. I do not think the problem will arise. I was asked to give an interpretation of how the thing would fit and I believe I have given that interpretation. I am not aware that it would cause any disturbance in the transition from one collective agreement to the next collective agreement, or from one Part V to the other Part V.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, after hearing this explanation I must say with respect that it is not based on judicial certainty when the minister states it will be all right so long as there are no uncertainties and no inconsistencies. What kind of nonsense is this! All I want is clarification. We must be sure that we are talking about Part V of the old bill. This government has had a year and some months in which to proclaim Bill C-183. Here we are hung up with this point and the minister starts talking about "provided there are no inconsistencies and provided there are no other problems". This is a lot of garbage, I suggest with due respect.

If we are to pass a meaningful bill which has some sense surely this calls for clarification. It is extremely complicated. My friend from Fundy-Royal asked if the minister would kindly advise us what the inconsistencies are, and the minister did a "flip-flop" and said he did not think there were any. This sort of thing is not good enough. In view of that, unless there are other members who would like to pursue this matter further, I would like to move an amendment. Seconded by the hon. member for Moncton, I move:

That clause 2(1) of the Bill be amended by inserting therein, next after line 2 on page 2 thereof, the following:

(2) In this Act, wherever reference is made to Part V of the Canada Labour Code, such reference is to Part V of the Canada Labour Code, Chapter L-1 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1970, which shall continue in force and effect for the purposes of this Act notwithstanding that Chapter 18 of the Acts of the present session of this Parliament may come into force hereafter.'

and by renumbering the subsequent subclause accordingly.

Some of my friends from all sides of the House will say this will not rectify the situation, but at least it is a sincere, and I respectfully say a credible, attempt to clear up a very unacceptable situation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise briefly to say that I regret that the hon. member for Hamilton West has proposed this amendment. We have no option but to vote against it. I have already made clear we believe it is unfortunate there is confusion about Part V in so far as the terms of Bill C-231 are concerned. However, we believe there are other ways in which to resolve the confusion. One of the best is an early proclamation of Bill C-183. This proposal of the hon. member for Hamilton West would deny to the parties during the life of Bill C-231 any chance, even if Bill C-183 were proclaimed, to make use of the technological change provisions in Bill C-183. The hon. member was against those changes. As I recall it that was his position when Bill C-183 was before us.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I am sure the hon. member is equally as concerned about the workers as I am, but I think in all fairness he should point out that what I attempted to do to Bill C-183 was to make it acceptable not only to the parties to the dispute—that is, labour and management—but also to the people of Canada. In other words, I was trying to put something before this House in the interest of industrial peace.

• (2030)

I resent very much the implication of the hon. member in saying I was against technological change. With all due respect our amendments attempted to improve the bill. I respectfully ask the hon. member to admit that I at least tried to improve things, rather than say I am against technological change.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I readily accept the hon. member's description of what he was trying to do in June. In any case, we had that debate then and I see no point in rehashing it now. It is still true that the effect of the hon. member's amendment is very clear. It will provide that parties operating under Bill C-231 now before us would be denied the right to negotiate under the terms of Part V. Whether the hon. member likes the new Part V is immaterial. The fact is that we cannot accept a denial to the parties of the benefits that are in Bill C-183. Therefore, we hope that this amendment will be turned down.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I want to assist the hon. member for Hamilton West in every way I can. In order to provide the clarification he is seeking, I might go back to the earlier point he was raising and say we have to bear in mind that what we are doing is merely extending the term of the previous agreement. We are not in effect making a new four-month agreement of this measure. Naturally we hope the parties will come to a settlement long before the extended term expires.

What we are doing is extending the term to a limit of four months. This is not a new agreement, it is simply an extension. Part V would apply to that extended agreement so long as this act is in force. This act is in force to the point where they make a new agreement. I do not see too much difficulty in that regard.

Frankly, it seems to me the clarification the hon. member was seeking is of that nature. If the new Part V comes into force because of proclamation I do not think any of us would wish to deny any benefits or rights that might accrue to those parties under the new bill if they were still negotiating a new settlement. If we did that we would be taking a rather different step than that which is the main purpose of this bill, namely to provide for the resumption of operation, not to affect that which would normally come to parties which did not have collective agreements. We would be singling out this group and denying it the opportunity of taking the benefits and responsibilities under the new bill. When he thinks about that he must feel that it would not appeal. I am sure that was not in the mind of the hon. member. We would in fact be denying certain rights which all other parties at that point of time would have access to as they negotiated collective agreements.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up any more of the time of the committee and I think we should call for a vote on this matter. We do find ourselves in an extremely unfortunate position. I hope this will indicate to the government that it cannot pussyfoot in respect of bills. Bill C-183 has been outstanding for a considerable length of time and the minister has known about it for even longer. Section 181 is the same under this bill as it was in Bill C-253. We have no business being put in this position. I do not know how much life this government has left but I suggest this is a lesson for all of us. When a government has a bill passed it should be proclaimed as quickly as possible, particularly when another bill which has something to do with the first bill is brought forward. This is an extremely unfortunate position and I want to register our concern about what I will not call the negligent proceeding of this government.

An hon. Member: I will.

Mr. Alexander: The House leader says he would call it that, but let this be an indication that we cannot pussyfoot by bringing in another bill which creates an area of cloud and confusion. This is not fair to hon. members on all sides of the House and is certainly not fair to the parties involved.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Amendment (Mr. Alexander) negatived: Yeas, 21; nays, 74.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, as one who has the privilege of representing a constituency which will be affected by this legislation, both from the standpoint of those who work on the docks and that of the general public who depend for their supplies on ships, I would like to say a few words about this measure before us. I am particularly interested in the proposal made by the leader of this party this afternoon asking the government for an amendment to the bill to provide that any agreement entered into between the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association, the longshoremen's union, the grain handlers and the grain elevator companies shall be retroactive to the date when the previous agreement expired. It would be of great help to the committee if the minister could indicate whether he intends to introduce such an amendment.

He said this afternoon that he was sympathetic to the idea of introducing an amendment. Could we know when such an amendment could be introduced and under what clause it is going to be introduced? I think it would help a great deal if we were told that. I want to point out, Mr. Chairman, that what this committee and what Parliament face is really a contradiction in two basic principles to which most of us adhere. I think all members of the House, irrespective of party, believe in the basic principle of free collective bargaining. We believe that in a free society people have the right, either singly or collectively, to bargain regarding the terms under which they will sell their labour or their product. At the same time we also accept the principle that Parliament has a responsibility for the national welfare and to see that no action taken by any single group jeopardizes the national wellbeing.

The minister this afternoon made reference to the grain sales, and the Minister of Justice again made reference to it later in the debate. I do not think enough has been said about the fact that the longshoremen's union and the grain handlers have shown a remarkable responsibility with reference to grain sales and a realization of how important grain sales are to the Canadian economy. The grain handlers have indicated their willingness to accept the conciliation report and the longshoremen's union have indicated their willingness to enter into a separate agreement to deal with grain providing the facilities were manned and operated under the National Harbours Board.

The Minister of Justice said that this was not possible, but he did not say why it was not possible. It was not possible because apparently the government was not prepared to take this rather daring and innovative step. I want to make it clear that the workers have also recognized the responsibility which they have for the wellbeing of the Canadian economy.

So Parliament is faced with these two principles: the right of free collective bargaining, and the need to protect the national well being. If, as this legislation does, we are going to remove the right to strike, then surely we have a responsibility to make absolutely sure that while protecting the national interest we do not use that as an excuse to allow the workers to be exploited or to be manipulated into accepting terms which are unfavourable to them.

Nothing that either of the ministers said this afternoon gave the immediate impression that the government is fully seized of the real cause of the dispute on the waterfront of British Columbia. The matter of wages has not been a major issue, and certainly that can be resolved. The major issue on the waterfronts of British Columbia, as it was in the eastern seaports of Canada, and as it was a few weeks ago in the seaports of Great Britain, has to do with the growing threat to the job security of the men who unload the ships. That arises out of automation, out of containerization, out of the proposed telephone computer dispatch system, all of which will change the pattern under which those who unload the ships have operated for a great many years.

It may be that changes are inevitable and that changes are desirable. We cannot be modern Luddites who try to solve problems by smashing machines or refusing to use computers. But if there is to be a process of automation and cybernation then surely Parliament has a responsibility, and this government has a responsibility, first to protect the job security of workers, and second to see that a substantial share of the increased productivity arising out of automation is passed on to the general public and particularly to those who work.

This is not a new problem. The former minister of labour wrestled with this as did his predecessor. We all recall in this House the problem of the firemen on the railroads. We remember the Freedman Commission being set up and we remember the Freedman report which was accepted by all parties in the House and to which the government paid lip service, the report about which practically nothing was done. The chickens are now coming home to roost and there are going to be more problems unless we tackle this problem of technological change.

For instance, in Great Britain even the union officials wanted the men to go back to work, but they would not go back. Why? Because in three years the number of dock workers in Great Britain had been reduced by 23,000. When men get into their 50's and early 60's and see automation taking over the jobs of their fellow workers, and it keeps getting closer and closer to them, these men, who have reached an age when it is not easy to learn a new trade and to get a new job, become panicstricken. They get uptight. That is why we have trouble in ports all around the world.

The fact that the government has this legislation here today is an admission of their bankruptcy of policy to deal with the question of technological change. What does this legislation do? It settles nothing. It does two things: one, it gets the government off the hook until after the federal election is over by sweeping the issue under the rug for four months; second, it helps the British Columbia Maritime Employers Association because after January 1 it will probably be easier to negotiate with the workers in the winter. This allows the B.C. Maritime Employers Association to get over the four big months of shipment and to negotiate after January 1, if they have not reached a settlement before then, under conditions that are much more favourable to the employers and much less favourable to the workers. The government should know that.

Therefore, it seems to me that we in this Parliament are being asked to approve legislation which is going to take away a very basic right of certain workers for the next four months. I think they are entitled to two things. They are entitled, first of all, to some assurance from the present Minister of Labour that the legislation with respect to technological change will be proclaimed, and secondly, that the government's program with respect to automation and cybernation will be stepped up, enlarged and made effective.

• (2050)

Additionally they have the right to know that when they do manage do work out an agreement with the employers, the Maritime Employers Association of British Columbia, that agreement will be retroactive, in the case of the longshoremen to August 1, 1972, and in the case of the grain handlers to November, 1971. That is the least to which they are entitled.

[Mr. Douglas.]

If tonight the minister can assure us that he intends to move an amendment to that effect, and tells us the clause under which he will move it, this will make it much easier for us to get on with passage of the legislation. I would like to say to him that I am sure no member in any part of the House wants to take away from any group of workers the right to strike, and we are not going to take away that right unless we provide them in return with some measure of protection, protection which in our opinion they are entitled to be given by the Parliament of Canada. Therefore I ask the minister if he can give us some information on the results of his sympathetic consideration of the proposal made by the leader of our party, and if he can assure this committee that it is his intention to move such an amendment.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to give the assurance that I will be prepared to move an amendment to clause 7 in Part I of the bill, and to clause 13 in Part II of the bill, to bring about the retroactive results that have been proposed by the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to let this clause pass without making some general remarks with respect to the situation facing us in this chamber, and particularly with respect to the situation facing us on the west coast. For hon. members who have not had the opportunity to be closely associated with it I think I can sketch the situation on the west coast for them in just a few words.

On the west coast we have had a beautiful summer. The days have been very sunny. The people are in the parks, on the beaches in Stanley Park, and driving along the Marine Drive overlooking English Bay. Throughout the summer vessels have been coming into English Bay and taking up anchorage, until now we can look at 20 vessels or more anchored there, and another 20 or so in the inner harbour along the north and east side of the city. It is a magnificent sight to see. Little sailboats go flitting in and around them. The sun and the sea make it a marvellous sight to look at—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, I seem to be working uphill against a great deal of noise not only from members of my own party but from members opposite and I wonder if I could ask for a little order.

The Chairman: Order, please. Of course the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, like other members, is entitled to order, but having said that I hope he will quickly get to the kernel of his remarks.

Mr. Deachman: With respect, Sir, I am dealing directly with the subject before us, a strike which is tying up the city of Vancouver, the province of British Columbia, and the Prairie provinces. We have a disturbing feeling as we look at this because we know that the people of Canada are paying demurrage on these ships at a rate of from $1,500 to $2,500 to $3,000 a day.

Mr. Horner: Would you believe $4,000?

Mr. Deachman: Yes.

Mr. Bell: That is about 10 cents for every word you utter.

Mr. Deachman: Some of the charges range up to $4,000. This is a situation that is costing us as taxpayers something in the neighbourhood of half a million dollars a week, or about $2 million a month. This is a serious matter if only in respect to the demurrage.

Many speeches have been made in this House with respect to the movement of grain, but very little has been said about the other factors in this strike. The strike in Vancouver harbour not only ties up the movement of grain affecting the three Prairie provinces but is gradually tying up the entire economy of British Columbia.

Mines in the interior of the province, not having a place from which to move their ore, are forced to shut down. The tow boat industry which moves ore down along the shore is forced to close. Lumber operations along the coast must gradually come to a halt because there are no ships on which to load the lumber. Bit by bit, inch by inch the economy of the province is coming to a halt, involving its mines, its canneries, its forest industries, the movement of autos and other commodities coming from abroad through the port of Vancouver, as well as the outward movement of bulk commodities such as sulphur, coal and potash from the Prairies, and other bulk commodities from British Columbia itself.

In effect, basically we are looking at a national crisis involving half of Canada. I know it is difficult for members from eastern Canada to realize the importance of this to the west, and the extent of its impact upon the four western provinces, just as it is difficult for we western members to realize the importance of strikes such as the one that recently tied up Montreal harbour.

The settlement of the strike at Vancouver in the long run will not be an easy matter. Lying at the root of the problem is the procedure with respect to dispatching gangs to man vessels. This is an old established procedure based on the hiring hall practices in the port of Vancouver. Interestingly enough the hiring hall is owned not by the union, not by a neutral organization serving both the employers and the union, but by the employers themselves. Union members going to hire on as a gang every morning come into a hall operated and owned by the employers. It is also interesting to know that this hall is the only one owned by employers and operated in this fashion on the whole of the west coast between Mexico and Alaska.

Part of the problem lies in an agreement contained in the current contract to computerize the dispatching operations. One must realize that if the dispatching were computerized, the computer now would be owned by the Maritime Employers' Association, and the union employee, for dispatch purposes, would then be at the mercy of a computer owned by his employer. If I were a longshoreman I feel quite certain that I would not want to live any longer with a practice of that kind. I think the solution would be some form of neutral hiring hall or neutral dispatching service which would serve both management and the union.

From my own experience and my talk with longshoremen and people working on the harbour both at management and employee level, I want to say that I believe this practice of a company-owned hiring hall is at the basis of the trouble in Vancouver Harbour. I hope that in going about the business of finding a long term settlement to the problems of Vancouver Harbour the minister will look deeply into the practices which exist in the hiring hall and the way in which dispatching is done. That is the basis of the problem we are facing today and it will not be easily solved either from the standpoint of management or the employee.

It is not an impossible question, however, Mr. Chairman. Nor is the question of computerizing the operation of dispatching on the harbour an impossible one. But the solution must be based first of all on the realization that when a longshoreman comes to be hired out to a gang in the harbour he is interested in knowing what his own position is. He wants some guarantees that he is being treated fairly relative to others hired on a gang. He wants to know that the advantages are not being weighed and cannot be weighed in the direction of management and he wants to know that the service is giving him an honest break. Because that is his livelihood.

Mr. Chairman, I say this is a human problem dealing with human relationships, with people who work very hard, honest people who are down there every day to work on that harbour and who do an excellent job in moving cargo through our west coast ports. These are not people who kick against technological improvement; in fact, they are people who recognize the advantages of technological improvement. They are not an enormous number of people; they are 1500 skilled people backed up by 1800 people of lesser skill. Their reputation is not one of striking again and again; we have had long periods of peace on the Vancouver waterfront.

At the core of the matter is the recognition that it is a human problem which must be looked at in human terms. I hope that will be the basis of any investigation to secure a permanent solution. In the meantime, it is my personal feeling that these people are prepared to stand by the bill which we will pass here asking them to continue work while a better means is found to regulate work on Vancouver Harbour. I hope we will meet in good faith, as I am sure they will meet in good faith, the question of finding a way acceptable to both sides for the regulation of this dispute.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 and 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—Term of collective agreement extended.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak briefly on clause 5. I listened very attentively to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra on the matter before the House. His remarks caused me some concern and it took some willpower on my part to resist answering him in what might be termed a political debate, but I did wonder whether he was making an attempt to defend the actions of the government in regard to this labour strike.

Mr. Benjamin: And also to save his own neck.

Mr. Horner: As my hon. friend comments, he was also making remarks to save his own neck. I am in no position to judge that comment but I lay it before the committee and let the committee judge as it may see fit.

Reflecting upon the hon. member's remarks I attempted to recall when he might have spoken for the good of the country rather than in defence of the party, but could not do so. He seems to be a trouble shooter prepared to rise on any occasion. When the party seems a bit weak and needs certain defence it calls upon his superior wisdom and his comments may or may not help.

I am not trying to judge whether the party in British Columbia needs some bolstering today, nor would I like to be counted as one who suggests that this piece of legislation needs some particular defence. Having followed the hon. member's remarks closely I feel that deep down he agrees with this legislation and wants to give every opportunity possible for the normal and natural forces to work for the general advantage of the system of collective bargaining, of management and unions settling their own disputes, with the least possible government interference.

In light of that I am sure that he would be the first to agree with the amendment which I am prepared to offer to clause 5, on page 4 of the bill. I gave the purport of my amendment this afternoon. I believe that the system of collective bargaining should be given the ultimate opportunity to solve its own problems.

• (2110)

I believe that this piece of legislation was drawn up in haste. I could go on at length to indicate how I reached that conclusion. For example, less than 10 days ago the Prime Minister said that these people should reach their own conclusion and asked why the government should interfere. All of a sudden, the legislation is before us.

The date suggested in this legislation, December 31, 1972. I suggest that was not fully thought out for the good of Parliament and the collective bargaining system. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Red Deer:

That clause 5(1) of the Bill be amended by deleting the words "December 31, 1972," in line 7 on page 4 and substituting therefore the words "February 28, 1973".

I am prepared to move that amendment because I firmly believe that, in legislating a solution to any conflicting problem between labour and management, ample time should be given to the two parties to reach a satisfactory conclusion before more restrictive and demanding legislation is brought forward. If, after ample time has been given to both parties to reach a conclusion, there is no way the situation can be solved, it may be said that they need punishment, the strong arm of the law and a very firm hand to resolve the problem.

I do not want to take the time of the committee to enlarge on the point I made this afternoon, so I will briefly summarize the conclusion I have reached. We are now approaching September 1. The solution called for here will bring about the dissolution of this Parliament either tonight or tomorrow. It may well bring about the calling of an election on October 30 or November 6. It is my belief that during the election period we will create an atmosphere in this country in which no meaningful discussion can take place with regard to this problem for which this Parliament has already formulated a solution. The two parties will want to wait until after the election to see who wins. If this government is returned to office, they may or may not negotiate. They may force further government action. If another party wins the election, they may wait to see if that party is prepared to demonstrate a spirit which will create an environment in which collective bargaining can reach a successful conclusion. I like to think that will be the case, but I may be biased.

No meaningful solution to collective bargaining will come about during a federal election. We will pass this legislation and the workers will return to work, but they will not attempt to reach any conclusion until October 30 or November 6. What will happen if there is a change in government, or a minority government with the present government still in power? There will be a period of uncertainty. A period of approximately two weeks after an election is required for the issuance of a writ to determine what party and what cabinet ministers are actually governing Canada. Another two weeks is required to appoint a cabinet. This will take us right into the festive season of December and January, January 1 in particular.

The government has been so involved in the political problem of meeting the electorate that it has failed to proceed logically step by step on this whole question. The date they have fixed is not logical. I would like to see all members of all political parties of this House unanimously agree that December 31, 1972 does not allow ample opportunity for the system to work. It does not give ample opportunity for this piece of legislation to work. It may well challenge the union to force more federal legislation upon them.

I did not reach this conclusion because of the recent turn of events in British Columbia. However, because of that, my conclusion is fortified. I ask all members to give serious consideration to this amendment. It does not change the legislation. If the strike is settled by January 1, there is no problem. The legislation will die automatically and there will be no great upheaval. If the strike is settled, the grain will be moving and commodities will be coming into and out of Canada freely, so there will be no problem. There will be no loss of face. In light of the forthcoming election and festive season, which it could be said are as sure as Christmas, why not give the system ample time to work?

Let us put partisan politics aside in this hour of urgency. Let us agree that February 28, 1973 is a far better date to include in this legislation than December 31, 1972. Let us accept this minor change in this legislation. Let us unanimously approve this bill tonight so that we can give it third reading tomorrow, face the electorate, prepare to do battle and let the electorate choose who shall govern Canada after the normal 59 days' notice is duly given. That is all I ask this House. I am not condemning the legislation. I am not condemning clause 5 or any of the prior clauses. Let us put partisan politics aside and accept this logical suggestion.

I regret I did not approach my many friends on the Liberal side and offer this amendment to them, because I know the government might then have been more receptive to the idea. Surely in this hour of crisis the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister, who saw fit to fly out government planes east and west to bring us all back to Ottawa, would agree to put partisan politics aside and accept the logic of my proposal. If they do not like the date February 28, let them agree to January 31, or March 1. Let them choose any other date. But surely they should rise and say: "January 31 is time enough; if solutions are not reached by January 31, if we are returned to this House we shall take further strong arm action".

Mr. Mahoney: Strong arm action?

Mr. Horner: Strong arm action, as the hon. member for Calgary South suggests. I really do not believe they want to take strong arm action. I do not want to take strong arm action.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: I believe we can reach a viable solution to this problem. Grain has to move. Imports have to enter Canada, not only through Vancouver but through every port on the west coast. I feel that because the government is faced with a situation in which it feels bound to call an election, the particular dates involved here are dates which will become subject to the challenge or call of political partisanship, and that is not a good thing. I urge all members of this House to sit down—

An hon. Member: Sit down yourself.

Mr. Horner: —and to think carefully. If anyone has any objection to the date I suggest, February 28, 1973, he should tell me what his objections are. If the matter is settled before December 31, 1972, there is no problem. If it is settled three days after January 1, there will be no problem. Why not give the system a little more time before a new government may have to act, or before a coalition government has to use its weapons?

Having made my plea for some kind of non-partisan solution to the crisis which is presently preventing the movement of grain as well as the movement of goods in and out of Canada, I urge the committee to accept the amendment moved by myself and seconded by my hon. friend from Red Deer. The solution I propose is a simple one. It is one which will cause the least difficulty to the next government, and perhaps it will result in grain and other commodities moving quickly again. I commend to the House this amendment changing the date in line seven on page four from December 31, 1972 to February 28, 1973.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Crowfoot has proved conclusively by his speech in support of the amendment that either the Conservative party knows nothing about labour relations or that he is willfully accepting a system which would place both management and labour under the control of government for a much longer period than the bill presently before us is suggesting.

He says he wishes to give those involved time in which to work out their difficulties. He says the period presently proposed fails to do this. The logic of the argument would lead one to the conclusion that he should propose cutting the period from four months to two months if he wants something known as free collective bargaining. My friends on the right are always talking about the merits of free collective bargaining. But instead of proposing an amendment which would result in management and labour being uninhibited by government control, the hon. member for Crowfoot proposes that there be an additional two months during which both parties are bound by the existing contract. Rarely has one heard such an absurd proposal presented in this chamber. We have listened to a good many but this one comes near to the top of the list.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The legislation before us is not such that it can be approached enthusiastically as, to his credit, the Minister of Labour has pointed out. But politics often offers a choice, not between black and white but between two objectives, each of which is desirable; in this case, the preservation of collective bargaining on one hand and the maintenance of wheat exports from Canada on the other.

We in this party agree that it is necessary severely to inhibit the process of free collective bargaining for a four-month period by passing this legislation. Nevertheless we cannot accept the ridiculous suggestion which has just been made that he extend the process for another two months. This would not encourage the people concerned to work together to reach an agreement. Rather, it would postpone the period of free discussion for a further two months. I urge utter and complete rejection of this proposal.

Mr. Horner: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that if I speak now I close the debate. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre assures me that this is the case.

I should like to correct a misinterpretation which has been placed upon my words. If a settlement through collective bargaining is reached by December 29, 1972, the unions and the other parties involved will no longer be affected by this legislation and there will no longer be any problem. My amendment merely allows for extra time in which to enable the legislation to take effect.

• (2130)

If the hon. member of the New Democratic Party believes that today is a day on which the members of his party should feel a bit chesty and that they should throw their weight around in the House of Commons, I forgive him for his words. But when he misconstrues the words I used and the amendment I moved, I cannot let this go unchallenged.

I want to reemphasize that if an agreement were reached at any time prior to February 28, 1973 this legislation would automatically go by the board. The grain would be moving and commodities would be moving in and out of Canada. It would not in any way superimpose the long arm of the government upon the unions, nor for that matter superimpose the long arm of the government upon management, in any way. When the hon. member rises to enter into a picayune debate with me on this grave occasion I certainly think less of him than I did prior to his remarks. However, being of a generous nature I shall forgive him for his remarks on this particular occasion following the victory of the New Democratic Party yesterday.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Amendment (Mr. Horner) negatived: Yeas, 22; nays, 103.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clauses agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

On clause 7—Employers association and Union to negotiate.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment to clause 7 which would have the effect of producing a new subclause to provide that any new collective agreement entered into in amendment or revision of existing collective agreements to which Part I applies shall, unless the parties thereto otherwise agree, have effect on and from August 1, 1972.

In some respects it might be argued that this amendment is not necessary and that in the ordinary course of collective bargaining the parties would come to an agreement that the terms and conditions would in fact be retroactive. However, to remove any doubt, to add clarity and certainty and to confirm the government's earnest desire that equity prevail in an evenhanded way during this extended period, I am very pleased indeed to move this amendment, which was first proposed by the hon. member for York South. I move the following:

That Clause 7 of Bill C-231 be amended by adding thereto the following subclause:

Terms and conditions of new collective agreement

'(2) Notwithstanding section 5, the terms and conditions of any collective agreement entered into in amendment or revision of the collective agreement to which this Part applies shall, unless the parties thereto otherwise agree, have effect on and from August 1, 1972.'

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question. In view of the fact that there is a recommendation from His Excellency with regard to this matter can the minister assure us that this will be satisfactory to His Excellency in light of the fact that the Prime Minister may be asking a favour of him later on during the week?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, forgive me, but you have not put the amendment. Perhaps before I speak to it you might want to put it.

[Mr. Horner.]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment proposed by the hon. minister carry?

Mr. Lewis: I wish merely to express the appreciation of my colleagues and myself that the minister has accepted the suggestion I made to him earlier this afternoon. Indeed my hope that he would act in this way was raised when one of his assistants requested a copy of the amendment we proposed to move. I want to say to the minister that this change is necessary not only for the purpose of clarity and certainty. He may have been informed that in the normal course of events the parties would agree to make the provisions retroactive. If he has been so informed he has been misinformed. I have been involved in many negotiations where the question of retroactivity was a pretty serious subject. There was no certainty at all that the employers would agree to make any part of the agreement retroactive, particularly in the absence of any possibility of the men taking strike action. Therefore this change is important not merely for the purpose of clarity and certainty; it is important for the purpose of giving some justice in return for the right that is being taken away from the longshoremen on the west coast. I hope this clause will pass quickly along with the rest of the bill at this stage. I am simply expressing the appreciation of my colleagues and myself of the NDP to the minister for having seen the justice of the suggestion and acting on it. I am very glad he has.

• (2140)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I hope this piece of legislation passes this evening but as an old parliamentarian I regret that important legislation such as this has to pass in a committee of the whole where such a bi-partisan position is taken by hon. members. This amendment is evidence that the government has failed to dot all the i's and cross all the t's in drafting its legislation.

There is a customary statement in legislation that it shall begin at or be retroactive to such and such a date, August 1 in this case. I hope in passing this amendment the government acknowledges the fact it has not fully thought out the problems which may arise as a result of such legislation. I hope it is an indication that the government is prepared to accept other amendments put forward in the spirit of co-operation with the intention of improving the legislation for the whole of Canada. Some of these amendments are necessary because the government has not thought out all benefits such as the one covered by the present amendment. Like the leader of the NDP I hope this measure can pass so that operations on the west coast can return to something near normal at the very earliest possible time.

Amendment (Mr. O'Connell) agreed to.

Clause 7, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 8: Termination.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with Clause 8 I think we should consider something that pertains to the future. Many of us have expressed an opinion on more than one occasion about the importance of recognizing grain as being extremely important to our national economy. Before we pass Clause 8 we should give some direction to the government in respect of the future movement of grain. We realize that when there is a tie-up involving the export of grain and other commodities people begin to talk about a national disaster leading to a confrontation. I suggest that the government should accept its responsibility in this regard instead of passing it on to someone else. If the government did this there would be no reason for passing legislation to handle this type of situation.

In recognizing the extreme importance of our export markets we should consider the position of the middleman in the movement of grain. We should decide whether this man is interested in making profits from moving grain and other commodities out of the country. We might also consider the idea of nationalizing our ports and adopting a comprehensive transportation policy.

All this could be looked into by a committee vested with authority to look into the general picture and problems affecting the whole movement of cargoes through ports in Canada. It has been noted in the past that people in the port of Vancouver would rather unload U.S. goods than Canadian goods. It has been suggested that grain could be handled separately. I am sure all members of the House would agree to a study to determine the effectiveness of moving grain as an item separate from general cargo.

With those remarks I should like to move:

That Clause 8, Part II be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"provided however that before December 31, 1972, the government shall initiate a study under the Inquiries Act into the possibility of separating grain from general cargo, such grain to be handled by the Canadian Wheat Board."

There may be some question whether grain should be handled by the Canadian Wheat Board or the National Harbours Board. We support the contention that the Canadian Wheat Board should be made responsible for such handling. If it is to be responsible for moving our grain into export position and making sales, it should be given the authority to move grain through the Port of Vancouver and other Canadian ports. We recognize the importance of this situation, and this amendment would require that some consideration be given to the setting up of a study to determine a better method of moving grain out of the country.

The Deputy Chairman: At first consideration the amendment appears to be unacceptable in that it moves quite far beyond that which the committee is considering at this time. To my mind it embodies a completely new proposal. On the other hand, when looking at the clock I wonder if the best and quickest solution might be to have the committee decided rather than to start a procedural debate. My first thought is that the amendment is not acceptable.

Mr. Baldwin: In view of the fact we have not got copies of the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I wonder if you would read it.

The Deputy Chairman: Without putting the amendment at this time I will read it. It is moved by Mr. Skoberg that Clause 8, Part II, be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words: "provided however that before December 31, 1972, the government shall initiate a study under the Inquiries Act into the possibility of separating grain from general cargo, such grain to be handled by the Canadian Wheat Board."

I will accept the amendment as being put in order that we can have a general discussion without questioning the procedural aspect.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I failed to understand your words of advice to the committee and I would seek your guidance. I have some doubts about the wisdom of the amendment and whether it will be good or bad for Canadian commerce. If I am in order I will proceed with my reasons. I understand that you were somewhat dubious whether it was in order but you were prepared to accept it in view of the time.

• (2150)

The Deputy Chairman: The first impression of the Chair is that the amendment is not an amendment but a substantive motion, but because of the time, if the committee is ready to consider the motion as it is, the Chair will accept it. I have read it to the committee. If the hon. member wishes to speak on the amendment, the Chair is ready to listen.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the amendment, according to my limited knowledge of the rules of the House, is out of order. It does not apply to clause 8 and it does not particularly apply to clause 7. I am not in a position to debate the question as to whether it is in order or out of order, but I preface my remarks by saying that personally I believe it is out of order. The hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) has failed to distribute a copy of his amendment. I would now like to thank the hon. member for personally delivering the amendment to me.

The amendment says that the government shall initiate a study under the Inquiries Act into the possibility of separating grain from general cargo, such grain to be handled by the Canadian Wheat Board. My remarks regarding the amendment were to the point. It seems to me that this is the wrong place at which to move such an amendment. The amendment should be debated at the longshoremen's union level at a particular point.

I am under the impression that there are 3,200 longshoremen at the west coast ports and something like 65 or 70 are involved in the handling and movement of grain. I am diametrically opposed to a complex situation which would involve the important matter of grain movement, which encompasses one fortieth of the total number of workers. It seems to me that this is quite wrong. I have been one who has long argued and fought against the amalgamation of various workers involved in union strikes. I believe that steel workers should be steel workers and grain handlers should be grain handlers, and that each should have the right to unionize.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Horner: This over-all amalgamation of unions gives the total union a great deal of political strength, far more strength in the market place than it should have. I have been long opposed to that practice, and I say to you, Mr.

Chairman, that now is not the time for a bill before the House to propose such a practice. Now is not the occasion for you to allow such an all-encompassing amendment to be put forward.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has caught my eye. If he has half the intelligence with regard to the rules of the House of Commons that the press attributes to him, then he should know above anybody else in the House that this amendment is completely out of order. Any member of the House should realize that we have been called together here to pass a piece of legislation to aid grain movement, not to bring forward a harum scarum provision put forward by the party to my left which is somewhat chesty today because of its victory in British Columbia. It has brought forward an amendment which is completely out of order, and I urge you to rule it so, so that we can get on with the business of putting the longshoremen back to work and start the grain moving.

I urge the House leader to rise and say, with his vast knowledge of the rules of the House of Commons, that this amendment is out of order. Perhaps he is one member who is equal to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have no doubt in my mind that the amendment is completely out of order and I urge the House to voice its opinion before we get into a lengthy debate as to what should belong to a given union representing a whole conglomeration of trades in our economic sphere today.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that it is close to ten o'clock, I wonder whether you might agree not to see the clock for a further period of time.

Mr. Horner: No, Mr. Chairman. I thought the House leader was rising to give his opinion with regard to this amendment and to give you some advice on whether this amendment is or is not in order. If he is not prepared to do so and does not see the clock, others do and will. We are prepared to deal with the grain handling problem. Let us not deal with unions and the whole scope of unions encompassed in this amendment.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. May I point out, without getting into a debate with the hon. member, that the amendment has been put to the House. When the hon. member rose he said that he wanted to comment on the amendment, and at that time the Chair said that it was considering the amendment as put by the hon. member for Moose Jaw and read to the House. So the question is on the amendment.

Mr. Horner: Ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): When shall the committee agree to sit again? At the next sitting of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might rise on a point of order and suggest to the House that it might be profitable for us to attempt to complete the committee stage of this bill. I understand that the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) had some comments in the committee and we could deal with them if we were allowed to go back to complete the committee stage this evening. We would then deal with the third reading of the bill tomorrow. That would be my suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

• (2200)

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform you that I have amendments to move to clauses 8 and 11 of the bill. I am prepared to deal with them this evening provided the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) drops or withdraws his rather out of order amendment, so we could then deal with the subject matter before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Order. The hon. member knows that this would require unanimous agreement. Is there agreement in the House?

Mr. Lewis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think that the issue which was raised in committee by the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) was raised because he did not see the text of the amendment. The amendment that was proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg) did not deal with unions. It deals precisely with grain handling, and suggests that grain handling be dealt with in a collective agreement separate from any collective agreement that deals with other cargo. The amendment does not deal with unions, as suggested by the hon. member for Crowfoot; it deals with grain handling in the way that he says he wants it dealt with.

In view of that, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would change his mind. Because on behalf of my party I wish to agree with the government house leader that it would be desirable to complete the committee of the whole stage this evening and go into third reading stage tomorrow, instead of starting the committee stage all over again tomorrow without being at all certain that we would complete third reading tomorrow. In view of this brief explanation perhaps the hon. member for Crowfoot would reconsider his position on seeing the clock.

Mr. Horner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I now have a copy of the amendment before me. While I think it is substantively out of order, and having asked the government House leader to give his opinion on whether it is in order or not, and he having neglected to do so, I assume the government is in agreement with this amendment. If the government is in agreement with the amendment, I am in no way reluctant to pass it this evening. I see the Minister of Labour (Mr. O'Connell) shaking his head negatively. The minister does not want to separate the 73 grain handlers from the other 3,200 workers. I believe they should be separated. If we can reach no agreement on that point this evening, then all I can say is that I regret that ten o'clock has arrived so quickly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I understand the point of view of the hon. member, but at this time the question concerns the possibility of an agreement to go beyond ten o'clock and allow the House to resume its committee work. I will put the question again. Is there agreement to allow the House to go back to committee and resume its work on Bill C-231?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Horner: Not unless the government is prepared to accept the amendment being moved by the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): It being ten o'clock I do now leave the Chair until eleven o'clock tomorrow morning.

At six minutes past ten o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LAMBERT (BELLECHASSE)—DELAY IN FORWARDING OF COMMUNIQUÉS FROM MINISTERS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to remedy a situation and inform you that I particularly care about certain privileges.

Yesterday, during the oral question period, I put a question to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) concerning the steps the government intends to take to help the Quebec farmers who, because of poor weather conditions, are having a hard time storing the feed required for their herds over the winter months. The minister replied that the details of the assistance program had been sent to my office.

Mr. Speaker, I regret having to tell the minister that had I received the release on cash subsidies before the sitting yesterday, as several other members did, I should have been informed in good time. But I received it this morning only; that is why I protest and ask that steps be taken to ensure, in the future, that such important releases be sent to my office in good time.

I wish to add that I am happy the contents of the release prove that the minister took into account the representations I made to him; that I was happy to hear about it even on September 1 instead of August 31.

[English]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

AMOUNT OF GOVERNMENT CONTRIBUTION TO ACCOUNT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration arising out of the fact that Statistics Canada no longer publishes the contributions made to the unemployment insurance fund and has not done so since December 31, 1971. Will the minister disclose to the House the amount of the contributions that the government is being called upon to make to the unemployment insurance account compared with the estimates produced by the government during the budget debate?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is quite accurate in saying—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: He will be "right honourable" in two months.

Mr. Mackasey: —that Statistics Canada no longer publishes the revenue that the government receives from the Unemployment Insurance Commission. That cannot be done until next April. Members on that side of the House who were on the committee should know that the revenue from offsetting factors such as contributions and income tax is now collected by the Department of National Revenue and that revenue is to be turned over to the Unemployment Insurance Commission next April. There are other offsetting factors such as welfare savings. In a spirit of co-operation I could suggest that one of the deliberate increases in cost to the fund was the change in the regulations to improve the lot of the fishermen in Newfoundland to the tune of $18 million. I could change that back again if that would suit the hon. gentleman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the minister wants to have a debate he can do so on motions and we will be very happy to take part in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he really cannot give us the information required in view of the fact that an estimate was made of the government contribution at the time the budget papers were tabled in the House? Does the minister mean to indicate that there is no estimate in his hands or in the hands of the government today as to the projected contribution that the government will make toward unemployment insurance during the current fiscal year in comparison with the estimates set forth in the budget papers?

• (1110)

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the paid-outs that are made from the fund are subject to certain variables, one of them being the relationship between payments and the weekly wage of people unemployed. The payment is now $66 a week. I do not think that is too much for any unemployed person. Maybe the hon. gentleman thinks it is. We could save by cutting down on that. We know what our payments are—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the minister resume his seat for a moment. It seems to me that we are embarking on a debate between the minister and the Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps we should try to return for a moment to the question and answer period.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to Your Honour, with all respect, that I am asking perfectly straight-forward questions which the minister is avoiding.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: I am pursuing these questions because four years ago the government covered up $500 million.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: What is the minister now trying to cover up?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to leave the impression that I am covering up anything.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mackasey: It might be useful to have the debate about which the hon. gentleman is talking, but I can recall his contribution several weeks ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I interrupted the Leader of the Opposition and I think I have to interrupt the minister. I suggest to both hon. members and to the House that this is debate. I have the impression there are questions that hon. members want to ask today and answers that ministers want to give. We should be given an opportunity to proceed.

Mr. Stanfield: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Stanfield: I assure you, Sir, that I will not press the matter further in the House because there is no need to do so.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Ryan: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is only one member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands and he has been recognized.

REQUEST THAT REGULATIONS BE CHANGED TO ENABLE PAYMENTS TO CERTAIN UNEMPLOYED IN B.C. FOREST PRODUCTS INDUSTRY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister aware of the fact that the forest products industry in British Columbia is stamping all separation certificates as "due to labour dispute" despite the fact that the strike by the fallers was an illegal strike, the fallers have long since returned to work and men who are not now unemployed because of a shortage of logs are being denied unemployment insurance benefits to which they are entitled? Does the minister intend to make any change in the regulations to remove this injustice?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on the one hand I am being accused by the Official Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Mackasey: I will answer the question—of adopting certain regulations that put into the hands of the poor more money than the opposition think these people should be getting. On the other hand I am being accused of passing regulations that deny others payments to which it is said they are entitled. I will certainly look into that situation, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Will the minister advise the House when the government intends to inform the provinces of its plans for a winter works program for the forthcoming winter in view of the fact that unemployment is rising steadily?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps this question might be asked later. I doubt that it is a supplementary. It is of course, definitely related, but perhaps the Chair should recognize the hon. member later for that question.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CURRENT FINANCIAL STATE OF ACCOUNT

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is there anything to prevent the minister from giving a full report on the current financial state of the unemployment insurance account? If there is nothing to prevent him, will the minister make such a report to the country immediately?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): It is impossible to calculate precisely the revenues which the Unemployment Insurance Commission will receive.

Mr. Hees: The nearest million will do.

Mr. Mackasey: This is because the new law is so structured that the revenues from income tax, employer contributions and employee contributions will not be turned over to the department until next April at the end of the fiscal year. I thought everybody understood this. If they do not, I am quite prepared to answer any questions they wish to ask. If the rate of unemployment is under—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We shall return to this obviously interesting and important subject later. I think we should attempt to complete the first series of questions now. I shall return to the hon. member for Spadina and the hon. member for Hamilton West in a short while.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INCREASE IN COST OF FOOD—SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO PRICE SPREADS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the alarming increase in the price of food, particularly food consumed in the home as distinct from restaurants, hotels and so on, is the hon. gentleman considering or has he already decided, I hope, to institute a thorough inquiry into the price spreads between what the farmer gets and what the consumer has to pay?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the pricing of food, in the sense that distributors engaged in selling food might be involved in a combine, is a subject of constant review by my department. We watch price increase in that light.

Mr. Lewis: Investigating the matter in the light of possible combines is surely not necessarily relevant to a rise in food prices which can take place in the absence of a combines situation. I therefore wish to ask the minister whether the department is studying the very large increases in the profits of the supermarkets and food processing companies. Would the minister also advise us whether any attempt is being made to study the cost of advertising and promotion which adds to the increase in food prices? Is the department making any study of these areas, aside from combines, which obviously attach to the increase in food prices?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, the answer, generally, is yes.

Mr. Lewis: If the answer is yes, can the minister inform the House whether there is a report being prepared and, if so, by whom it is being prepared and whether he intends to publish that report?

Mr. Andras: The way this would operate would be that we would exercise our mandate in the department if the evidence from these continuing studies indicated there were contraventions of the combines act.

INCREASE IN COST OF FOOD—CONSULTATION WITH RETAILERS AND WHOLESALERS TO PREVENT FURTHER RISE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): With respect to the serious increase in food prices expected this fall, particularly in urban Canada, have the minister or his senior officials been in touch with the major grocery chains or with the wholesale suppliers to determine whether they are willing to take joint action to head off this very serious inflation in the cost of food?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

INFLATION—INQUIRY AS TO INTRODUCTION OF PRICE AND WAGE CONTROLS

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Does the department intend to resort to the measures suggested by Mr. Young, namely a price and wage freeze?

Probably—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Témiscamingue wants to ask another supplementary question.

Mr. Caouette: It is about the same question but I think the hon. minister did not understand the one I just asked.

Because of the present situation, does the hon. minister intend to resort to the measures suggested by Mr. Young, namely a price and wage freeze?

[English]

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, not at this time, but if such a decision were contemplated by the government I think it would be more properly announced by my colleague the Minister of Finance.

INVESTIGATION OF INFLATIONARY FORCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question with regard to the response of the minister that he is conducting investigations only for the purpose of determining whether there are possible violations of the combines act. Can we take it from this that the minister is not actively conducting any investigations relating to the rate of inflation and the inflationary forces that may be at work in the economy but rather is confining his attention solely to the anti-combines aspect?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the economic causes and effects of inflation and of increased prices would be more properly investigated by the Department of Finance, although we are interested in these matters from the consumer viewpoint and from the point of view of possible contravention of the combines act.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the Minister of Finance what precise steps he is taking with regard to surveillance of the inflationary factors in the economy? What research is going on under his authority, and in what manner is this research being carried out?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Finance is following the price situation on a daily basis. As I said yesterday to the House, the nucleus of the Prices and Incomes Commission that has been retained is also monitoring price movements here, in the United States and abroad. As I said yesterday, on the basis of the figures for the first seven months of this year the movement of prices in Canada compares favourably with that in any other country in the world including the United States.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair will recognize the Leader of the Opposition for a supplementary question, but I have to point out that we have not yet completed the first series of questions. After this supplementary question I think I should recognize the hon. member for Richmond.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Finance inform the House precisely what the nucleus or rump of the Prices and Incomes Commission consists of, how many people it includes and, very briefly, what their roles are, because the complacency he has exhibited toward the recent price increases is not very reassuring?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): I deny any allegation of complacency. This government will act when it has to act.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hees: There is a ringing statement.

An hon. Member: That is very reassuring.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): On the basis of prices, the opinion of the government is that the present situation does not warrant price and wage controls. If the situation should develop where price rises were much more substantial and of a type amenable to general control measures, then of course that would be done. I say that the present situation does not warrant it. I say that the record of the cost of living in Canada compares favourably with that of any country in the world.

Mr. Stanfield: Who is in the nucleus of the commission?

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I pointed out a moment ago that we should try to recognize a questioner on behalf of the party to my extreme left and to that end I will recognize the hon. member for Richmond.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

RECOVERY OF OVERPAYMENTS OF BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR DELAY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Several persons who were in receipt of unemployment insurance benefits will receive shortly or have received letters informing them that they have been overpaid. They are being asked to reimburse the money immediately. These people have been using the money to live on during the winter and are not in a position to reimburse it. Is it the intention of the minister to take the necessary measures in order to delay reimbursements by these people until they have resumed work?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In respect of those people who receive overpayments as a result of their inaccurate statements of income which eventually become known to the Unemployment Insurance Commission, every effort is made to see that reimbursement is achieved in as easy a fashion as possible when they return to work.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Does the minister mean that there will be a waiting period or that necessary arrangements will be taken so that those concerned will go back to work before reimbursing?

Mr. Mackasey: In so much as possible.

[English]

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT PLAN IS ACTUARIALLY SOUND

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this is a related question in that it involves the Unemployment Insurance Commission. During the debate on the Unemployment Insurance Commission the minister continually advised the House that the plan was actuarially sound and he staked his reputation on that. I ask the minister whether, now that he has had an opportunity to review the facts, particularly in the last week, he can in fact now state that the plan is actuarially sound?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will explain it again and I will be glad to stake my reputation on my statement.

Some hon. Members: Yes or no?

Mr. Mackasey: The difference between the payments made to the unfortunate people of Canada who are not working and the revenue received from employers and employees comes from two sources. I will be very short, Mr. Speaker. It comes from weekly contributions from employers and employees with the balance coming from the consolidated revenue fund. So for the first time in history the plan is actuarially sound and, unlike 1961, will not need another blood transfusion.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, in light of the fact the minister indicated to the Canadian people that the government was unconcerned about the cost of this plan and only concerned about whether the unemployed got their cheques, is the minister now in a position to say how sorry he is for having made such a stupid statement?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EXPULSION OF ASIANS FROM UGANDA—REQUEST THAT PROBLEM BE SUBMITTED TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, taking part in this question period is excellent training for the next olympic games.

I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the problem of Ugandese refugees. Could he tell us whether he intends to draw it to the attention of the United Nations, since I feel that it is a matter which does not affect only the member countries of the Commonwealth?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I expect that during my intervention in the General Assembly debate I will be referring to this and other questions that affect human rights. This is one of the principal concerns of the Canadian government, and I know I will be speaking for everyone in the House in raising these questions at that time.

TRANSPORTATION OF ASIAN REFUGEES FROM UGANDA—NUMBER OF IMMIGRANTS TO BE ADMITTED

Mr. Georges-C. Lachance (Lafontaine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question in order to know whether steps have been taken concerning the transport of those Asiatic refugees to Canada, as there is apparently a transport problem. Could the minister or the minister responsible for immigration tell us how many persons up to now have been accepted as immigrants to Canada?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is an advance party from the Department of Immigration in Uganda setting up headquarters and having local support staff. This advance party is mainly from Beirut and is being supplemented from Europe. It is very difficult to estimate the precise number of people that will be coming until our operation begins early next week.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN FOOD PRICES—PLANS TO PROTECT CONSUMERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to a previous question. In view of the fact that rising food prices represent the most serious consumer problem facing thousands of Canadians, has the minister any plans in hand for protecting the consumers of this country, particularly those in the low income group?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Based on the evidence we have at the present time, much of the increase in food prices is due to shortages, crop failures, bad weather—

An hon. Member: And lousy government.

Mr. Andras: —as well as shortages of imported foods and many other things of that nature. While it may distress members of the opposition to face these facts and base a response upon them, I simply say that is the evidence we have now, and I do not think price and wage controls, as my colleague the Minister of Finance indicated, would be the answer.

• (1130)

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary to follow up my earlier question concerning whether or not the minister had contacted the important food distributors in this country to see if they would take concerted action to keep the lid on rising food prices. Has he now got this under consideration, realizing the psychology involved and the important pattern that might be set here by the major food distributors?

Mr. Andras: I do not think I can add anything to my previous comment.

ACTION TO MEET PROBLEM OF FOOD COSTS IN YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the minister. What action is his department taking to meet the specific and serious problem of food costs in the Yukon and Northwest Territories where costs are approximately 25 per cent to 35 per cent higher than the national average?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As I indicated to the hon. member before the recess earlier this year, this matter is under investigation. I will be glad to report to him when I have the full results of our probing into that situation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UGANDA—INQUIRY AS TO REPRESENTATIONS AGAINST EXPULSION OF ASIANS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and welcome him back from his eastern approach. Can the minister advise whether the Canadian government has communicated directly with the government and authorities in Uganda in reference to the racist repression in that country which surely has no place in what is properly called a colour-blind commonwealth?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the House will remember, the Prime Minister of Canada issued a statement at the time. He said that Canada should accept some of the refugees, the Asians who are being expelled from Uganda. In his statement he criticized the government of Uganda and hoped at that time, as I had expressed earlier, that they would change their policy. That is still our hope, but we cannot of course rely upon that and therefore I am sure I have the support of the hon. gentleman in welcoming some Ugandans to Canada.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I assure the minister he has our support in that. Has the government communicated directly with the government of Uganda on the matter apart from press releases and projected speeches at the United Nations?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should point out to the hon. gentleman that if we hope to get the co-operation of the Ugandan government in the issuance of exit visas and otherwise helping in the transfer to Canada of those people who are being expelled, it would be well not to exacerbate relations between our two governments.

ADMITTANCE TO CANADA OF ASIANS EXPELLED FROM UGANDA—STEPS TO AVOID CONCENTRATION IN ONE AREA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I think my supplementary is more appropriately addressed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. If a substantial number of immigrants from Uganda are admitted, will any steps be taken to see that they are not concentrated in any one area of Canada but are spread throughout Canada generally?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is to their advantage to know of the attractions in all parts of this great nation and not to congregate in a ghetto-like situation in some part of the country. In this vein we shall try to encourage them to settle in or at least become acquainted with Canada in its entirety through educational films, and so on. But once having admitted these people we do not want to relegate them to a special status and say that they must do this or that. I am confident that they will make very good Canadians once they are here, and the best we can do is give them every assistance and hope—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hesitate to interrupt the minister, but I think I should remind hon. members that we will be coming to the end of the question period shortly. I am anxious to recognize as many members as possible and I seek the co-operation of hon. members in limiting the number of supplementaries and of ministers in limiting the length of their answers. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

SHIPPING

SUGGESTED COMPLIANCE WITH CANADIAN LAWS BY COMMONWEALTH SHIPS ENGAGED IN CANADIAN COASTAL TRADE

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I will not ask any supplementaries. I am addressing it to him since the subject matter involves several departments. Will he direct his ministers to ensure that Commonwealth ships engaged in the coastal trade of Canada obey such Canadian laws as wages, income tax, hours of work, unemployment insurance—in short, all other Canadian laws than the Canada Shipping Act which is being enforced against them mercifully?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will take notice of the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Champlain.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell this House what particular representations he has made in order to bring about a change in the decision of Hockey Canada regarding the exclusion of certain stars from the team which will represent Canada against the USSR?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, these representations have been made publicly to everyone's knowledge. I have written letters to the three organizations concerned: Hockey Canada, the Players Association and the National Hockey League, asking them to put Canada's interest above their concerns.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF DARLING REPORT RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of foreign flag vessels using foreign crews in our coastal waters, which results in the loss of many jobs for Canadians, can the Minister of Transport now advise the House when he will implement the recommendations of the Darling report on coastal shipping concerning this issue?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Darling report has many particular aspects. I am assuming the member is talking about the rejection of what is commonly referred to as the Commonwealth preference. Last week I invited the four Atlantic provincial premiers, who are in the areas most affected by such an action, to give me their views. As soon as they are received, as well as others, we will make some decision on this matter. But it is not, as I mentioned in the House before, an easy matter to resolve. There are many different points of view concerning the matter, particularly the question of the increase in the cost of living especially for people in eastern Canada.

MANPOWER

CANADA MANPOWER OPPORTUNITIES PROGRAM—INQUIRY AS TO ANNOUNCEMENT—CONSULTATION WITH AND INVOLVEMENT OF PROVINCES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Can the minister indicate progress with regard to the announcement of CANMOP, whether he has had co-ordinating meetings with the provinces and whether they will be involved in the over-all program?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Since the basic concept of the new program is maximum input by the provinces, particularly with regard to the social effects of such a program, there has been continuous dialogue at the official stage. With regard to whether there has been any progress, the short answer is yes.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Public Works. In view of the fact the CANMOP program will be going on with local initiative projects, would the minister advise whether federal works projects have been deferred even though moneys have been allocated in the estimates, why they are being deferred, and why there is no co-ordination between the minister and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Public Works): No, Mr. Speaker. No decision has been taken at the present time either to defer or advance works programs. Each project is looked at and considered on its own merits.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED IMMEDIATE BAN ON USE OF DIETHYLSTILBESTROL IN BEEF CATTLE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the increasing danger to beef sales in Canada, will the minister place an immediate ban on the use of the controversial hormone DBM rather than wait until January of 1973?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will bring the representation to the attention of the minister. I believe, however, that in the current situation the interests of our beef producers and the long-term interests in assuring markets for their beef were balanced rather neatly in the date that was determined, but as I say I will bring the matter to the attention of the minister.

• (1140)

Mr. Nesbitt: If the hormone is dangerous enough to be banned in 1973, why not ban it now so far as the public are concerned?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member will appreciate that this is argumentative.

MANPOWER

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF STATE OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACCOUNT ON EXTENSION OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT DURING WINTER

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact there has been a considerable drain, no matter how the accounting of the financial resources of the Unemployment Insurance Commission is done, will the minister assure the House that this will not interfere with intended plans for dealing with unemployment during the winter months, particularly through extension or improvement of the LIP program? Further, is he in a position now to inform the House whether or not the government intends to go ahead with that program?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must reiterate that they are separate programs. While unemployment insurance is costing a little more than originally anticipated, this is no embarrassment to the government, and any decision on LIP will be made independent of the unemployment insurance program. We certainly would like to go forward with it on principle. We are ahead on plans by at least a month or two. However, I want to talk to the provinces, and I will probably make a statement on motions next week or the week after.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are at least three members seeking the floor to ask supplementaries and that would bring us to the end of the question period. For the time being the Chair will recognize the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby for one supplementary.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of the fact that winter is not far away, can the minister inform the House whether he has consulted with the provinces, or any number of them, and has he obtained agreement with the provinces on some intended program?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, we have consulted with the provinces, in the sense of reviewing last year's successful experiment, to see what criteria would be suitable for the programs of this coming winter if we go ahead with this type of project.

HARBOURS

CHURCHILL—INQUIRY AS TO DREDGING PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can he say whether any recommendation has been transmitted to his department from the National Harbours Board or any other source concerning a very necessary dredging program at the port of Churchill?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Representatives of the National Harbours Board attended a seminar held at Churchill, which the hon. member also may have attended, met subsequently with representatives of the government of Manitoba, and within the last week presented me with a summary of the findings of the seminar, together with certain recommendations which are now being examined to determine their feasibility.

Mr. Simpson: Can the minister say whether at this time plans are being considered for this necessary dredging project?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is one of the matters that was included in the suggestions, and we are trying to determine whether it is practical to do what is suggested.

AIRPORTS

PICKERING TOWNSHIP SITE—AUTHORITY OF SPECIAL INQUIRY TO MAKE RECOMMENDATIONS—PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In light of his welcome answer yesterday to my question regarding a special inquiry respecting the airport site at Pickering, would the minister indicate to the House whether this board will be given the power to make recommendations to the government and whether its report will be made public?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): In both cases the answer is yes, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cafik: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister indicate whether those whose land will be expropriated prior to that hearing taking place will have the option of repurchasing their property in the event that the project does not proceed?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is obviously hypothetical.

Mr. Cafik: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I realize that in technical terms it is a hypothetical question, but it is not a hypothetical problem because many people need to know right now what the government's position is going to be in order to make intelligent decisions on how they will dispose of their property.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Wellington.

[Mr. Simpson.]

WELFARE

REIMBURSEMENT OF PROVINCES FOR PAYMENTS UNTIL UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS RECEIVED

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that thousands of unemployed Canadians have had to wait for their benefits, thereby making it necessary for them to go to welfare offices for subsistence, is it the intention of the government to reimburse the provinces for this added welfare expense?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the act provides precisely for that. The hon. gentleman, who is very close to this particular matter because of his concern about spending, will be pleased to know that despite higher unemployment in the greater Toronto area the number of people receiving welfare has dropped by at least 4,000 as a result of receiving increased benefits through the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

MANPOWER

PROVISION OF FURTHER PROGRAM IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING TERMINATION OF LOCAL INITIATIVES PROGRAM

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and is supplementary to one asked earlier by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby. In light of the fact that the Local Initiatives Program is to terminate on September 30, can the minister assure the participants in that program that there will be no gap between the termination of LIP and any new program he may announce, or the continuation of LIP?

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing the programs that were extended this summer, particularly because I share the general principle that the young man has enunciated, but some of the programs have not met the criteria that were set out in June. I would imagine there could be a possibility that 50 per cent of them might be extended for an indefinite period, but that would be based strictly on quality and whether or not they have deviated from their original intent.

Mr. Nystrom: Can the minister give us any indication of when he will be making that decision and making an announcement as to the future of these projects?

Mr. Mackasey: At the earliest opportunity next week on motions, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF BENEFITS—REQUEST THAT INTEREST BE PAID

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the hon. Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since many computer errors have compelled Unemployment Insurance Commission officials in Montreal to send their files to Ottawa for analysis purposes, would the minister indicate whether the errors of this faulty system which caused a number of persons to wait up to three months, will entitle them to the payment of interest on their additional benefits?

[English]

Hon. Bryce Mackasey (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has the same right as any other hon. member. If he has specific cases he should bring them to my attention. There was a recent review of complaints from hon. members, but I do not believe there has been one from the hon. member's office for many weeks.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF WESTERN CANADIAN AS NEW CHAIRMAN

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is preference being given to the appointment of a westerner to head the Canadian Transport Commission?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Transport): The whole matter is under review, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

OVERFISHING OF GROUNDFISH BY FOREIGN NATIONALS—DISCUSSIONS WITH OTHER COUNTRIES—DATE OF LAW OF THE SEA CONFERENCE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the constant monthly decline in the over-all catch of groundfish by Canadian fishermen because of overfishing by foreign nationals on our continental shelf, has the minister held any recent discussions on this thorny problem with his counterparts in the countries concerned? Would he also indicate whether an agenda has been agreed upon and a date set for the United Nations Law of the Sea Conference which has been proposed for 1973?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the first part of the question could probably be better answered by the Minister of Fisheries. With respect to the proposed Law of the Sea Conference in 1973, it is still our objective to have one in 1973 and at various international bodies we have been working in this direction. Currently an agenda for this conference is being worked out, partly, and I think even mainly, as a result of initiatives taken by Canada.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISPUTE BETWEEN CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES AND UNION—PUBLICATION OF CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. When will he be publishing the report of the conciliation board dealing with the dispute between Canada Steamship Lines and the Brotherhood of Railway, Steamship and Airline Clerks, which I understand he received several weeks ago?

Hon. Martin P. O'Connell (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think that report was published earlier this week.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day. I have to apologize to hon. members. We have run a few minutes beyond the question period. I appreciate that a number of members are still anxious to ask questions, but I would think that in view of the circumstances hon. members would expect the Chair to call orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

WEST COAST PORTS OPERATIONS BILL

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR RESUMPTION AND CONTINUATION OF LONGSHORING, GRAIN HANDLING AND RELATED OPERATIONS AT WEST COAST PORTS

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-231, to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and grain handling operations and operations related to longshoring or grain handling at ports on the west coast of Canada—Mr. O'Connell—Mr. Honey in the chair.

On Clause 8—Termination.

The Chairman: When the House rose last evening clause 8 of the bill was under consideration with an amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw as follows:

That clause 8, Part II, be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"provided however that before December 31, 1972, the government shall initiate a study under the Inquiries Act into the possibility of separating grain from general cargo, such grain to be handled by the Canadian Wheat Board."

Is the committee ready for the question on the amendment?

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed, I wonder whether you intend to rule whether this amendment is in order. It appears to me to be a substantive amendment which is out of order. I wonder if you have ruled or will rule whether it is in order.

Some hon. Members: He accepted it.

The Chairman: I have discussed this with my colleague who was in the chair at the time, and it is my understanding that the amendment is before the committee. At this particular point, my position is that the committee will have to decide on the amendment.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put the position of our party before you. Although I am very impressed with the intent of my friend's amendment, and I say this with all due respect, perhaps if there had not been all the excitement which occurred last night the Chair might have seen that this is a substantive amendment. It certainly negates the intent of clause 8. I think we are here primarily to deal with the strike as it exists in the province of British Columbia and to get the men back to work in order that the grain handlers may also pursue their vocation.

I have every sympathy with the hon. member for Moose Jaw who on August 31 at page 3929 of Hansard said:

> We recognize the importance of this situation, and this amendment would require that some consideration be given to the setting up of a study to determine a better method of moving grain out of the country.

With the interest that my friend has in this matter, Mr. Chairman, surely after giving this some profound deliberation he must know—

The Chairman: Order, please. I apologize to the hon. member for interrupting him, but the Chair has some difficulty hearing him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: I appreciate the hon. members have things to discuss, but I would ask that they move behind the curtains so that the committee may proceed.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased that you admonished members of the House, but it should be pointed out that the members admonished are to the right of the chair. We are now dealing with their bill but they have no interest in it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: The only thing they can do is chat and try to figure out when the election will be called.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not pursue this matter any further, except to say that I think this amendment goes far beyond what we are supposed to be dealing with. If this is true, and I believe it is, notwithstanding what occurred last night with respect to the ruling of the Chair, we in this party will not vote for the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Moose Jaw.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, not having had a ruling from you, I assume that you agree the amendment is in order.

The Chairman: Order, please. With respect I think the hon. member for Crowfoot will agree that when he asked me the question when the committee resumed this morning, I said the amendment was before the committee. At this particular point, I do not think it would be helpful to go back and consider whether the amendment is in order. The fact is that the amendment is before the committee and that is the ruling I made. It is before the committee and that is the fact on which the committee must proceed.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, I do not like to get involved in points of order or rules, but I think it would facilitate my understanding, and maybe that of the committee, if the Chair would advise whether he is prepared to listen to argument for or against the amendment, whether or not it is in order and whether I may make a speech on unions in general. This is my difficulty. I do not know whether to debate the amendment from the point of view that it is out of order, as I believe it to be. If the Chair is ruling that the amendment is in order, I want to make a speech on unions. I have many thoughts on unions and this would be an appropriate time to put them forward. In this particular instance, the grain handlers and the longshoremen's union were prepared to move grain until the head of the union said "No, grain gets no special treatment—all commodities are stopped". Where is the head of the union? He is in Los Angeles. I believe the international head of the longshoremen's union is in Los Angeles. The party to my left supports these unions and thrives on them, but they do not seem to acknowledge the fact that the head of this union deliberately prohibited the grain handlers in the longshoremen's union from going to work and handling the grain which this legislation is brought before Parliament to direct them to do. I have many more thoughts on unions which I should like to put forward, and if the Chair is not going to make a ruling I am prepared to make a speech on the matter.

I see that the Chair is not prepared to make a ruling and therefore I shall say a few more words with respect to unions and this amendment. The hon. member for Moose Jaw moved this amendment purely and simply for political gain so that he may return to his farmers saying that he was on the side of right and that he moved an amendment.

Mr. Skoberg: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Moose Jaw rises on a point of order.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I respectfully suggest that we are dealing with an amendment that has nothing to do with organized labour or unions whatsoever. We are not dealing with international or national unions. I believe that when a member stands in this House and says that directions have been given from outside this country with regard to this tie-up, he should be able to produce evidence to support his contention. I do not think it is proper that any member should be put in this position when he moves an amendment that has nothing to do with the topic that the hon. member is discussing at this time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: Order, please. I think the point that the hon. member raises is really a matter of argument. The hon. member for Crowfoot may argue one way and the hon. member for Moose Jaw may argue another way. The hon. member for Crowfoot.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, what about the rule of relevancy? What about the rule on the expenditure of money? This amendment could cause the expenditure of money and such an amendment is only supposed to be moved by a member of the Cabinet. In any case, I notice that there is some general opinion that the House is ready to vote on this motion so I will not hold it up for more than about another two minutes.

• (1200)

The hon. member for Moose Jaw suggests that what I said about the head of the international union is false or wrong. If I had known he was such a doubting Thomas, I would have brought some newspaper clippings with me. On August 11, the beginning of the strike, the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board said there was no worry, no strike and the grain handlers in the International Longshoremens Union would continue to work. The grain handlers intended to continue moving grain, but the head of the International Longshoremens Union, whose head office is in Los Angeles, stated quite categorically that he would not allow them to move Canadian grain. Perhaps he wanted more traffic to move through the port of Seattle which is south of Vancouver. Perhaps that is what motivated him. I really do not know.

It is high time that we examined the whole question of unions. This legislation deals with two international unions, one with its head office in Chicago and the other with its head office in Los Angeles. They control the economy of a great part of western Canada. If this amendment is in order, surely the government will accept it, set up the inquiry and decide whether Canada could have its own union which would have a responsibility to the economy of Canada and not to some foreign empire builders who control the unions. I believe that this amendment is out of order, but as Your Honour has ruled it to be in order, I am prepared to vote for it.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, in view of the type of discussion that went on last night and this morning, perhaps I should explain a little more what this amendment is all about. I wish to ask the minister to clarify the actions which the government has taken and also what action the Canadian Grains Council has taken with regard to settling some of these long-term disputes at the ports between management and labour.

It was interesting to listen to the labour spokesman for the official opposition, the hon. member for Hamilton West, dealing with the strike which exists in British Columbia today. Surely, this committee is concerned with the long-term effects of all strike. Surely we can make suggestions and amendments to take care of the long time, situation that exists. All this amendment does is set a deadline as to when this government should take action or initiate an inquiry. This type of action should be supported by every member of this House in order to clarify some of the problems that exist.

I wish to refer to three areas where the longshoremen have come up with separate agreements and separate contracts to look after situations on the west coast. I refer to the Burlington Northern, the National Harbours Board and Roberts Bank. They are working in Roberts Bank today. If grain were taken out of the general cargo classification, there is no question but that grain would be moving through that terminal.

There are many areas of dispute about which management, particularly the elevator operators at the port of Vancouver, have no concern. If the hon. member for Crowfoot is going to make an accusation about who wanted to unload the cargo, I suggest that he do a little more homework. The people from the hiring and despatch hall are not the ones who say what cargo will be loaded and from where. It is disgraceful for a member of this House to attack unions without looking at the entire picture.

A grain group was set up by the minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board. Surely, this group should have looked at the overall problem. It is the responsibility of the Minister of Labour or the minister in charge of the wheat board to tell this House whether they are, in fact, looking at a long-term solution. The minister of Labour is not listening. Maybe I had better wait a minute. Can the minister inform this House whether the whole area of taking grain out of general cargoes, as was the case when other commodities were taken out of master agreements, has been considered in the light of the discussions we had last evening and this morning?

All the amendment does is ask the government to initiate an inquiry. It does not direct how the inquiry should be undertaken. We cannot expect the people engaged in this industry to worry about public sentiment and so on. They have to know where they stand. We cannot be expected to pass legislation which compels people to return to work when there is more than one side to the picture. The press invariably gives attention to the union and not the employer or the government. The government may have an answer as to why an inquiry should not be instituted and why grain should not be taken out of general cargo. I would appreciate some response from the minister. Perhaps the government has already done this. If so, I will withdraw my motion.

I cannot understand why anyone in this House would not support an amendment such as this. I was amazed to hear the hon. member for Crowfoot say today that he cannot support the amendment when last night he said he would support it. It seems strange that we cannot resolve some of the differences that have been in question for years and years with no foreseeable solution.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Connell: With all respect, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this bill, which is designed to bring about the resumption of operations in the ports on the west coast, is not the place to introduce an amendment concerning the long-term problem of grain handling at those ports. This is to resume operations at those ports.

As the amendment is available for us to discuss, I want to say that I have been giving consideration to, and I have been discussing with many members of the International Longshoremens Union in Vancouver, the whole question of grain handling. I am not in a position to make any commitment that an industrial inquiry or a study under the Inquiries Act, as was proposed, will be undertaken by the government. I can say that there are unsatisfactory conditions with respect to the handling of grain. I am going to give continuing consideration to the question of whether a study or an inquiry would be appropriate. I have held discussions with some of my colleagues on the subject.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: The Chair has already read the amendment. Shall I read it now or dispense?

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

• (1210)

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment in the name of the hon. member for Moose Jaw. All those in favour will please rise.

Some hon. Members: Order! Out!

The Chairman: Hon. members know that when the question is put they should not enter the chamber. I trust everyone will observe that rule. We shall proceed with the vote.

Amendment (Mr. Skoberg) negatived: yeas, 16; nays, 81.

Mr. Horner: Before clause 8 carries, I should like to point out that I have put down amendments to clauses 8 and 14 which are substantially the same as my amendment to clause 5 seeking to change the date upon which this measure would expire.

I do not intend to move these amendments to clause 8 or to clause 14, since the amendment to clause 5 was defeated by the committee. However, I cannot allow this clause to pass without cautioning the government once again. The present termination date, December 31, 1972, allows too short a period for the act to become effective, particularly bearing in mind the election which is in the offing and the fact that the date the government has chosen coincides with the festive season. Negotiations which have been in progress since November last year can scarcely be expected to be concluded by January 1, 1973. If they are not, I want the government to remember well that it was cautioned, that it was advised that the date on which this legislation is to expire is premature. The government is certainly expecting too much, and may be in trouble in 1973.

Clause 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Grain handling operations to be resumed.

Mr. Skoberg: The minister might be able to tell us now why grain handling and related operations are covered by the bill before us. I realize he referred briefly to this matter yesterday. But is he aware that difficulties have arisen on the coast because management is refusing to live up to the old agreement, or to follow the agreement procedures? It might shorten discussion of the subject, indeed, there might not be need for any discussion of these items, if the minister would deal with points which are of concern to everyone in this chamber.

Mr. O'Connell: We must bear in mind that there are two disputes affecting the handling of grain. One of them affects more than just the handling of grain; it involves the loading and unloading of general cargo throughout all the ports. However, there is a dispute between the five elevator companies and their employees, some 500 men who belong to the International Union of Brewery, Flour, Cereal, Soft Drink and Distillery Workers of America. They are the grain handlers. This dispute has been the subject of conciliation proceedings. It has been the subject matter before a conciliation board. The collective agreement expired almost ten months ago and the union and the companies have gone through all the required procedures.

As of a few days ago a strike or lockout position exists. The president of the union, Mr. Henry Kanes is here and I have had a number of discussions with him. He has made representations concerning the problems which have been encountered in connection with grain handling. I think the union has taken an extremely responsible position throughout this dispute. He is anxious to get an agreement. The conciliation board has reported to me in a majority report approved by the chairman and the union nominee, the elevator companies dissenting. Since that time, of course, grain handling has been virtually at a standstill because of the longshore dispute. Sixty-five or more longshoremen are required to participate in the handling of grain. The 500 or so grain handlers are the main body of the employees in the grain handling business. Some of them are still working, but many have been laid off as a result of the longshore dispute. Those who are still employed are required to carry out general maintenance and other work in the grain elevators.

The difficulty which might confront us is this: when the legislation before us is passed, and Part I is in force and port operations resume, unless a new agreement is not reached in this other dispute, grain handling operations would once again be shut down if a strike were to be called or a lock-out put into effect. This is the practical dilemma which faces us at present when we are taking the responsibility of asking parliament to order a resumption of operations while negotiations continue with the longshoremen. We have sought to handle this practical dilemma in the following way: we would proclaim Part II with respect to the second dispute only if and when necessary. In the meantime, continuous efforts are being made on an urgent basis to bring these two parties to an agreement. Little separates the two parties. Unlike the longshore dispute where very little serious negotiation has taken place, many months have been spent in very serious discussion in this case, and a conciliation board has been able to bring in a set of recommendations which leave the parties very close together. The distance separating them is, in fact, so slight that one would expect that through additional mediation efforts the gap could be closed without there being any necessity for us to proclaim Part II. I must point out that those people are in a different situation but potentially in a very serious one from the point of view of parliament.

• (1220)

Mr. Baldwin: I would like to ask the minister a question. It will not be very long and it is one which concerns all western members in particular. I do not suggest that it does not concern everybody else. In light of the fact the Prime Minister indicated that the reason for summoning parliament to pass this bill was particularly directed at the question of the need for Canada to meet her contractual obligations in regard to transportation and shipment of grain, having in mind what the minister has now said and having in mind the contents of the bill, having in mind the minister's knowledge through his department officials of the current state of a great many possible or potential industrial disputes which might affect the subject matter of our debate, and having in mind that very likely we are now at the threshold of an election which may mean that parliament might not be called until next January, is the minister able to give an undertaking that with the passage of this bill there will not be any industrial disputes which will interfere with the transportation and shipment of grain to meet our contractual obligations?

Mr. O'Connell: I do not think I can give any advance commitment of that kind. If that situation arose on the west coast ports, we have taken the precaution of inserting Part II and we would proclaim Part II. If that was the question then that is the answer. Part II may be proclaimed by order in council at any time if this act is passed.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the minister whether or not the provisions in the labour code adopted last spring, if proclaimed, would enable the government to deal with any lockout or walkout during the period following the dissolution of the House and prior to the return of the writ?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, the proclamation of the new Part V, if I may call it that, would put the government in a position by order in council to postpone any dispute, the right to a strike having been earned in a period after the dissolution of parliament. But we should be clear that in the case of which we are thinking, that is the problem on the west coast, those strike rights have been acquired prior to dissolution and the government is not in a position to override the provisions of the legislation. The dissolution has to take place and then any seven day running period after which the rights are acquired must expire.

Mr. Stanfield: Is it the intention of the government to proclaim Part V of the labour code?

Mr. O'Connell: Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is the intention to proclaim Part V. There is the question of time. I want to insist—and I am sure you would expect me to do so—that Part V should be launched in a proper way so that the new board may be in a position to operate it. We should not launch it simply to do something in an election period, if indeed one occurs. We should launch it when the new board is selected, and we are well advanced into doing that. But it would surely be a very bad beginning to hasten the proclamation of a bill simply to deal with a contingency that might or might not arise and for the sake of a provision that has never been there before. I expect that the proclamation can take place relatively soon.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, the answer given by the Minister of Labour a while ago still does not solve some of the problems that I can see coming up. I should like to ask him directly whether or not the grain handlers now affected have any contract whatsoever, and can the grain elevator companies do as they desire with the people who are employed by them. In other words, will the minister introduce any provision that the old agreement shall be in effect until the new agreement is signed?

The second question which I should like to put is whether or not the elevator companies at one time accepted the recommendation of the conciliation board report which the union people accepted by a 63 per cent vote, and did those companies then go back on their word and offer five cents less an hour?

Third, I wonder whether or not the elevator companies are holding up to ransom the government of Canada by asking for an increase of half a cent a bushel which would mean about $2 million a year increase in their incomes, and are they using this means of political interference to obtain that half a cent a bushel?

These are the questions to which we want an answer from the minister because we have seen reports going out that the elevator companies were at one time quite prepared to do something, but if they accepted at one time the report of the conciliation board and then went back on their word, we should be informed of this. It is high time that we found out whether or not this is correct.

Mr. O'Connell: With regard to the first question, the existing agreement would be extended for up to four months if and when a proclamation brings the part into force, but prior to the proclamation we are doing nothing here which would extend the existing agreement. If we did that, we would in effect be saying that an emergency exists with respect to grain handlers when in fact it does not exist. It exists in the longshoremen's dispute which has closed down the ports. The grain handlers are not on strike and there is no lockout. They may have grievances. I have been hearing of some of them from the president of the union whom I met several times yesterday, but those grievances do not constitute the emergency with which we are dealing.

The hon. member asked a second question. All I can say on that is that the mediation which we will launch immediately will hopefully close a gap which may exist in wages, in shift premiums and in any other matters, particularly in the health and welfare plans.

As to the third question, I do not want to enter into that as Minister of Labour—that is the role of the mediators. They have to discover whether there is any evidence of the companies pressuring governments. That suggestion was made by the hon. member. I have no evidence of that and it would be sheer speculation on my part to pursue that line any further.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, this matter must be clarified in the House if we are to act responsibly. We hear this government talk about industrial peace. As far as I can see, we do not know whether the old agreement will be in effect until the new agreement is signed. By not proclaiming this section of the bill what we are saying to those people is that they should go on strike, because they will have to go on strike before this government sees any necessity to proclaim Part II of the bill. Through you, Mr. Chairman, I sincerely urge the minister to give some protection to the working people of Canada, as well as to the employers if they need it, so far as lockouts may be concerned.

• (1230)

If we do not give some protection to those people out there we will deliberately frustrate the intent of the labour bill we discussed earlier this year. We talked about the preamble in that bill and what we were going to do for the people, but we know now that they will be working without a contract until the declaration of a strike. Surely, this parliament could include a clause which would ensure that the old agreement will be in effect. Surely, we could do that much if we expect any consideration whatsoever. If we do not do that I feel confident that these people on the west coast will say to hell with this government and any legislation it may pass. This is the type of thing that brings about industrial conflict and confrontation, and that is not what we want in Canada.

What is wrong with a simple amendment introduced by the government that will leave the old agreement in effect? Who are we trying to protect? I cannot understand a situation in which we cannot do anything that will protect all the parties at the same time. I am bothered when it is suggested that this clause will not be proclaimed until something happens. There is the suggestion that this may occur, but I suggest that the Alberta Wheat Pool and the UGG agreed to the amount of money involved in the conciliation board report. They are now backtracking because these companies thought they could get off the hook by letting the government bring in legislation. I do not think this House should be blackmailed into a position along those lines. That is not why we were called back here.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I do not disagree with the objectives for which the hon. member for Moose Jaw is reaching. I would simply ask him whether he has considered the effect of his proposal on the rights of the parties, particularly the union, to exercise influence on the elevator companies and vice versa by extending the agreement? The whole scheme of the labour code is to allow the parties to come to the point where they may exert their strength on each other. We have taken the precaution but we would not want to remove the right of the union at this time to exert its economic powers, nor would we want to remove it from the companies. We are in agreement in respect of the search for justice, but there is this question involving the immediate removal of those rights.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I have just one last question. I see I am not getting through to the minister. Perhaps I am not making myself clear. I would be the last one to take away the right of these individuals to exercise their economic power in a democratic society. At the same time, I do not think it is right that we should pass legislation which is there to be used in a so-called crisis, particularly when a so-called crisis can only come about when they do use their economic power to go on strike. At that time the government will proclaim this part of the measure. What I am asking is whether, in fact, the grain elevator companies in Vancouver can do what they want with their employees. Is there anything binding them to a recognition of the rights of the individual workers at that port? If there is not then we are doing a disservice to the workers all across Canada.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, we expect that the distance between these two parties is so slight that, with the results of this conciliation board report now being available and public, and with the additional mediation we are proposing to put into effect at once, we expect the dispute will come to a satisfactory conclusion.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the minister is missing the very important point the hon. member for Moose Jaw is making. He is not asking the minister about settling the dispute. There was a collective agreement between the parties and its termination was last November. The parties negotiated and went through conciliation procedure. By the operation of the law that collective agreement continued in force during that period. The conciliation procedure is now over and the operation of the law is no longer applicable as far as the life of that agreement is concerned. The result is, according to the employees of the union involved, that the employer is saying there is no longer any collective agreement, we are not going to consider any of your grievances and we are going to ignore other provisions of the agreement in respect of seniority and other things.

The vice-president of the local union, the chairman of the committee to whom there has been reference, informed the hon. member for Moose Jaw in a call he received very early this morning that this is what the employers are doing. What the hon. member for Moose Jaw is asking the minister to do is to take some steps to protect the employees. My colleague may want this done by way of amendment to this bill. I hope he does not mind if I say that whether it is done by amendment to the bill or by a declaration here by the minister that the employer ought to observe the collective agreement that was in force until conciliation proceedings were over does not matter. Perhaps he would undertake right now to do this and, instead of saying he will appoint a mediator as soon as possible, he will say a mediator will be appointed just as soon as he has finished his job in this Chamber and that the mediator will be at work tomorrow so as to get an agreement between the parties. It is that kind of thing for which the hon. member for Moose Jaw is asking. Not only the people involved but everybody who is concerned with decent labour-management relations ought to be grateful to the member for Moose Jaw for having raised this point as emphatically as he has. The minister does not answer the problem at all when he talks merely about settling the dispute eventually, and that is the problem he ought to consider.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, a few minutes ago the minister made the point that he did not want to interfere with the bargaining process but wanted to leave the parties to the dispute in a position to follow the normal process of bargaining. I suggest that by virtue of the inclusion of this clause, which can be brought in by proclamation, the parties to the dispute are no longer equal. This is what the hon. member for Moose Jaw is trying to get across. He suggests that fact should be considered here. I think the minister should deal with this either by amendment to the bill or by verbally assuring those of us who are being asked to agree to this measure that fairness and equity will be assured to both parties to the dispute, that the one party which will be weaker by virtue of this measure will not have to resort to desperate action. That is the question being raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Chairman, the minister talked earlier about the unanimous conciliation board report. Could he enlighten the House and the country on the basic wage increase recommended to the companies? I do not want the dollars and cents, but could he give us the percentage? It seems to me that these agreements come up for renegotiation too often. Will this agreement be for a longer period than usual? The minister indicates it will be for two years. Why cannot that be stretched out a little longer so we will not have confrontations and hold-ups in the grain movement as often? Was there any thought given to this?

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, if my memory is correct the majority report of the conciliation board was for 40 cents in each of two years.

Mr. Horner: What percentage is that?

Mr. O'Connell: I would have to guess. It is probably 8 per cent.

Mr. Horner: Is it not 10 per cent?

Mr. O'Connell: The average is probably $5 and 40 cents is 8 per cent. I may not be right on that.

On Clause 12—Strikes and lockouts prohibited.

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a point of information, Mr. Chairman. This is a technical objection. I notice a similar clause appeared in Bill C-230 as clause 6. I know the minister does not have that bill before him. It was in reference to the Montreal strike. Clause 6(a) provided that "no employer shall declare or cause a lockout". I notice in this bill the word "employer" is not used. Rather it states that no company shall declare or cause a lockout. I am wondering what the difference is and whether there is any reason for the change in the wording. Further, I notice in subclause (b) of clause 6 in Bill C-230 there is the following reference: "no person who is an officer of a union shall declare or authorize a strike". In the present bill the wording is, "no person who is an officer or representative of a union". I wish some clarification.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, the explanation is that in the Montreal case there was an employer's association but in the case we are looking at the five elevator companies make five separate agreements. They are referred to here as companies because there is no association through which they operate.

Clause agreed to.

On Clause 13—Company and union to negotiate.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, for the same reason that prompted the moving of an amendment to clause 7 in Part I, I should like to propose that a parallel amendment be now made in Part II to achieve the same objective of retroactivity unless the parties otherwise agree during their negotiations. Therefore I move:

That Clause 13 of Bill C-231 be amended by adding thereto the following subclause:

Terms and conditions of new collective agreements.

"(2) Notwithstanding section 11, the terms and conditions of any collective agreement entered into in amendment or revision of a collective agreement to which this Part applies shall, unless the parties thereto otherwise agree, have effect on and from December 1, 1971.

The Chairman: The question is on the amendment to clause 13. Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. O'Connell) agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

On Clause 15—Mediator.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could give us some information when mediators will be appointed and if he has looked into the situation of whether there is available talent which could be brought into this situation at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, we are giving very close attention to that question. I hope to be able to be in a position to move very, very quickly with regard to a mediator.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, would the minister undertake a very simple thing. On the basis of information Mr. Kanes has given him, will he undertake to telephone the employers' counsel immediately he has a moment and express his view as well as the view of the committee concerning their failure to observe the spirit of the agreement which has legally expired and their refusal to deal with the union as if the agreement were still in force which is contrary to the spirit of our entire labour relations law. Would he urge them to start again, since they should never have stopped, to deal with the union instead of being technical, legalistic and mean about it. I am sure that if the minister got on the telephone to these employers and expressed that view, and the concern the union now has about the way the employees are being treated, he could do so in the authority of his office. I believe this would be a worthwhile bill in that event.

Mr. O'Connell: As Minister of Labour, I do not want to accept any or all of the allegations which have been made about the employers and any grievances which may have arisen in their relationships with the men, but it was my intention to contact the employers, as I have been in touch with the head of the union, to suggest to them that in the interest of order, stability and the best interest of Canada at this moment, it would be good for them to observe the spirit and the provisions of the collective agreement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barnett: During the period in which this discussion has been going on I have had an opportunity to have a look at the former agreement which has been under discussion. Certainly, there is nothing in that agreement as I read it to indicate that it has any continuing force or effect beyond the period of the opening of negotiations. The minister has given us an assurance, but I believe it would be quite useful, and certainly more satisfactory to some of us—and this could be done I would think quite shortly now as I look at the clock—if before we complete our consideration of this legislation the minister could inform members of this House that the employers involved have stated they will give him that assurance. If the minister could announce to the committee that the employers will regard the agreement as being in effect, and will not go into the question of what the minister calls allegations about what may have been going on, then I think the assurance he has just given us would have real significance. We could then perhaps continue the discussion on this bill without having to go away from here wondering whether, in fact, what has been suggested was a necessary prelude to the agreement continuing in force, namely strike action on the part of the union members which might have to take place in order to put the agreement into practical operation again.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Chairman, I know we are looking for the same objective, but I do not think I should go that next step and ask for something in writing. It was my intention to be in touch with the employers as soon as this is passed, and I am quite prepared to say I expect that the mediation process will be effective.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-231, an act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and grain handling operations and operations related to longshoring or grain handling at ports on the west coast of Canada, without any amendment.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received the following communication:

Government House, Ottawa
1 September, 1972

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Emmett M. Hall, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber at 4.45 p.m. today, the 1st day of September, for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a bill and proroguing the fourth session of the twenty-eighth parliament of Canada.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

your obedient servant,
André Garneau
Colonel

Administrative Secretary to the Governor General.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

In the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bill:

Bill C-231, an act to provide for the resumption and continuation of longshoring and grain handling operations and operations related to longshoring or grain handling at ports on the west coast of Canada.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT

After which the Deputy Governor General was pleased to close the fourth session of the twenty-eighth parliament of Canada with the following speech:

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

The fourth session of the twenty-eighth Parliament was opened on February 17, 1972. Since that time you have enacted legislation and approved government actions of great importance to the prosperity and well-being of the Canada of to-day and of the future.

During this session, Canadians were honoured by a visit to Ottawa by the President of the United States and were encouraged by this reaffirmation of our traditional friendship with our closest neighbours.

Canada has continued to develop its relationships with all nations, great and small, in all spheres, economic, social, and political.

At home, our economy has continued to grow and has produced new employment at a rate exceeding that of any industrialized nation. During this session you have had placed before you measures designed to stimulate still further the economic growth of our land.

In this session you have addressed yourselves to the complexities of the Canadian federal democracy and have approved the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act.

You have also continued your work on behalf of the agricultural community. While the government has expanded our international markets for farm products, Parliament has amended the Farm Credit Act and the Canadian Wheat Board Act.

The social environment of Canada has been of much concern to you during this session. You have enacted amendments to the Criminal Law and the Government has announced its intentions to make more modern its policies on the control of the use of drugs. Both the Opportunities for Youth Program and the Local Initiatives Program have been expanded and continued. The Government has also announced a New Horizons for the aged program. As further support for our older citizens, you have enacted a measure to increase the Old Age Security pensions.

During this session you have also approved two measures to improve the benefits provided for veterans and other persons affected by war.

You have been particularly concerned with the problems of industrialization. You have amended the Canada Labour Code as well as the Adult Occupational Training Act.

You have also been called upon to deal expeditiously with two serious industrial disputes and you have enacted measures to protect the national interest in those incidents.

During this session, both Houses of Parliament have permitted their Committees to continue the important task of reviewing government policy and administration.

Many other important initiatives have been approved. In addition, you have had placed before you measures concerning the national anthem, national parks, fair employment practices, income security, mortgage mechanisms, housing, representation election expenses and many other important matters. In the future Parliament must apply itself with great vigour and diligence to these issues and to others as they develop.

Members of the House of Commons:

I thank you for the provision you have made for the public services in the previous and in the current fiscal year.

Honourable Members of the Senate:

Members of the House of Commons:

May Divine Providence continue to bless our country.

This concluded the fourth session of the twenty-eighth parliament.
