FROM DAY TO DAY.

A Chronicle of Unconsidered Trades and a Criticism of the Higher Education.

Considering that the Hon. Edward Blake affects a spin-like character when in Canada and declines with the utmost firmness to talk to newspaper men or to be interviewed, it is singular that he, of all men, should be charged with "babbling."

Seeing an item in a morning paper that a young and versatile writer, who writes for the Toronto Globe, had written a weekly column in the Toronto Globe, I was interested to know who the writer was.

From all I can see there appear to be no elements in the City Council or in the City Commission for the position of the fire department, but for the position of assistant fire chief there is but one opinion, and that is that Chief Ardagh's name should be put forward.

How the Globe will benefit itself in having the Mail-Express as a competitor, I do not know, but I hope the printer will not make the word cross-arguments of the Mail-Express.

A statesman, like old wine, improves as he ripens and mellow. He has time to not and plan; but a chief of a fire brigade has no such leisure. He must ever be ready and instantaneously thoughtful and resourceful; above all, he must be possessed of the necessary activity.

FOR THOSE WHO LOVE MUSIC.

UNBROKEN CRITICISM OF CONTEMPORARY MUSIC.

The Musical Production in South America—What Handel Had to Endure—Plans for a Musical Festival—How Some Famous Men Were Taught Music—Handel's "Messiah" to Be Given by the Toronto Choral Society.

Handel's "Messiah" has recently been performed in South America for the first time at the Teatro de la Opera by a local choral union numbering 300, the Toronto choral society.

Some of the most interesting and valuable music that has been written in the last few years is that of the late composer, Felix Mendelssohn.

Mr. Rodolf Huth, the excellent cello and piano teacher, has met with great success this season, and I hear he will soon have the pleasure of giving a recital in the music hall.

A NATION OF MOURNERS. The Black Corsairs Have Been in the Streets of Toronto. It so happened in Havana, near a century and a half ago, that after one king, by his departure from this life, had succeeded to the throne, the mourning was so general that the king himself was himself moved down by the mourning harvest, and as a result, the king died.

THE CAPTIOUS ONE. Having paid due attention to the church, I will turn once more to sport, and in concluding my remarks for the week, I will say a few words to the "Collier" Cockburn, Canada's champion trap shot, who, defeated Hamilton recently, has challenged Brewer, Ford, Elliott or any other of the 100 birds for $500 or $1000 a side under Dominion rules.

SAINT ANNE DE BEAUPRE

MIRACULOUS CURES CHRONICLED AT HER SHRINE.

The Shrine of the Afflicted Habitant—Heaps of Crucifixes Bear State Witness—Millions of Believers in Miracles—Visit to the Famous Miraculous Shrine of St. Anne—Many Miraculous Tales.

The belief in miracles has not passed away with the rapidly spreading ideas of materialism in religion. Although by many, there are millions who believe in the occult, and are constantly claiming as miracles things which they call "miracles" in religion.

In Europe the principal miracle-working centre is the Grotto of Lourdes in France. In America it is at the Shrine of St. Anne, the mother of the Virgin Mary, in the little village of Beaulieu near the city of Quebec. The celebrity of St. Anne, Beaulieu, as a place where miracles were worked has greatly increased late, and through of pilgrims and tourists have visited the famous shrine.

Not long since, being on a visit to Quebec, we were led to pay a visit to the celebrated shrine and accompanied by my friend D'Armont, I reached there in the short run of railroad which connects the city of Quebec with Beaulieu. As we stepped from the train we saw a village with a single street with houses on each side, and long, narrow farms which ran to the water's edge. The houses were of the same style as those of the town of Beaulieu.

There is one of Shakespeare's plays, "The Merchant of Venice," which is a story of a man who is forced to give up his daughter to a man who has lent him money. The story is a very interesting one, and is a good example of the power of money.

GEMS OF THOUGHT.

Proportion thy charity to the strength of thy estate. No man ever worked honestly without giving some help to his race. Think only of the things that are in thy hand, and not of the things that are in thy mind.

When you look at yourself, look for the things that are in your hand, and not for the things that are in your mind. When you look at others, try to see something good in them.

THE SACRED RELIC.

THE OLD AGE OF ACTORS.

SOME OF THEM END THEIR DAYS IN AFFLUENCE.

The Majority, However, Having Wasted Their Talents, End in Poverty—The Waste That Scatters Bohemian Treasures—A Few Illustrations From Many That Might Be Quoted—The Fate of Patti, Jenny Lind, and Others.

A considerable number of actors and actresses have become wealthy, and at the close of their days on the stage have quietly retired to elegant homes to live in ease. If not in luxury, during the life of their profession, but without exception they were well-to-do in their retirement.

On the faces of all was the impression of the most implicit faith. They prayed to "Saint Anne," to be relieved of their maladies. They had prayed their way to the shrine, and others in their agony fairly crawled. One man whose hair-splitting showed that the physical structure of the eyes had been entirely destroyed by an explosion, and he was blind.

A little child was next, the sight of which attracted us. Weak, emaciated and crooked, the horrible curvature of his spine was plainly apparent. Kneeling, the father laid his helpless child in the arms of the Virgin.

There is one of Shakespeare's plays, "The Merchant of Venice," which is a story of a man who is forced to give up his daughter to a man who has lent him money. The story is a very interesting one, and is a good example of the power of money.

THE CELEBRATION BY THE CALEDONIAN SOCIETY.

OF THE MARRIAGE OF MRS. BLACK.

The Old Man and Scouppem were somewhat constrained after the entrance of the bride, but she soon set them at ease. The Old Man's favorite son was lying where he had left it when the other was announced on a shelf of the cabinet mantle, and the Duchess smiled it.

"Ah, this shows that comfort holds first place here," she said, picking it up. "It does me good to see a man smoke a pipe."

"We are not conventional here," said the Little Woman. "The Duchess may smoke her pipes and lounge about in comfort."

"Charming," said the Little Woman. "I should like to see you in a dress like the one you are wearing."

"Not in the least," was the Little Woman's answer. "It is very warm, but I am not in the mood to wear it."

THE GREAT CATALAN.

The earnings of the great Catalan were larger still than those of the other two. She was engaged in a theatre in London, and her reports of the immense success of her performances were everywhere.

The Swedish singing girl, Jenny Lind, was a very popular singer in her day. She was known as the "Swedish Nightingale" and her performances were highly praised.

"Charming," said the Little Woman. "I should like to see you in a dress like the one you are wearing."

"Not in the least," was the Little Woman's answer. "It is very warm, but I am not in the mood to wear it."

There is one of Shakespeare's plays, "The Merchant of Venice," which is a story of a man who is forced to give up his daughter to a man who has lent him money. The story is a very interesting one, and is a good example of the power of money.

A DASH OF MAUVE.

ANOTHER WOMAN HAD COME INTO OUR LITTLE CIRCLE OF BOHEMIA.

The Duchess at first, afterward we called her "the Duchess," was a good-looking woman, handsome to a degree, with great, dreamy eyes that spoke of a heart that was not only a little soft, but also a little tender.

HOW THE JAPANESE FIGHT

Men who Are Leading the Forces Against China.

ABLE, ALERT AND BRAVE PATRIOTS

A Correspondent's Experience With the Victorious Army.

WHAT HE SAW AND WHAT HE HEARD.

Little is known here about the Japanese generals, though the names of Oyama, Yamagata, Nogi, Oshima, Yamaji and Hasegawa have been printed many a time during the last three months in all the newspapers of the world, and in spite of the fact that some of them are as well known in Asia as the present day Napoleon, Blucher and Wellington are in Europe, a few words about the Japanese, Bonapartes or Grants of Japan may prove of interest.

I had met many of them three years ago, when I went to Japan as a commissioner for the World's Columbian Exhibition, and had found them the most charming men.

One of them, the minister of war—Gen. Count Oyama—I met often at the time. His wife is one of the prettiest, most attractive and most intelligent women in Japan. She was educated in the United States.

When at my request the Empress of Japan appointed a commission of women to send an exhibit to the woman's department of the World's Fair, she did not forget Count Oyama, who, took the keenest interest in the matter. She speaks as well as English perfectly, and on the count, however, is a very hard linguist, and can speak only a few words of French.

"Why don't you get your wife to teach you English?" I asked him once. "Oh," said the general smiling, "she can speak of it for all of us. There she always does all the talking and how."

Count Oyama is tall and stout, in fact, a very big man. He has a large round face, with small, laughing eyes, and one sees at once that he is extremely good natured. He is undoubtedly one of the kindest men in the world.

When I arrived in Toki last August with the aid of the Japanese army during the war, I found that no one had received such permission. There were present a dozen men in correspondence, they had been waiting for weeks, but the permission had not been granted. None of them was able to get an interview with the busy minister of war. I asked to see him, and he immediately answered that he would give me some evening a dinner at the French and Russian military attaches in Tokyo, and he hoped would come.

The dinner took place in the beautiful parlors of the Imperial Hotel, and there were present about 2000 Japanese of high grade, their breasts covered with decorations from all countries.

When I entered the reception room, Oyama came straight to me, his hands extended, smiling that good, kind smile for which he is celebrated.

"It is true that you want to follow our army," he asked me.

"Is that so? Well, how far do you want to go?"

"Pekin!" I quickly answered.

"Well," said Oyama, laughing heartily, "we shall do our very best to take you there, but be sure and do not write that in your paper."

The next day with a special passport, allowing me to pass through any man's army, and with letters of introduction to all the commanding officers in Corea.

and instead of making a simple demonstration, he thought he would try to force the enemy's camp.

The whole army was ordered to start at once at 2 o'clock in the morning and led his troops forward in the morning and led his troops forward in the morning and led his troops forward in the morning.

The fighting there was terrific. For 12 hours Oshima pushed on the forts might have advanced upon the forts themselves, but his men had not eaten, and he was tired out. Just then Oshima himself was wounded.

He was master of the bush a little after 2 o'clock in the afternoon. At 3 he might have advanced upon the forts themselves, but his men had not eaten, and he was tired out.

Soon after the capture of Pin-Yang, the Japanese general very thoughtfully left here many silk blankets. I shall share them with you. He also left many pairs of shoes, but that will not help you any. They won't fit you. I see you have a very big foot.

All this was said kindly and laughingly. The general himself gave me later on a full description of his march between Seoul and Pin-Yang, in the district of the world's Columbian Exhibition, and had found them the most charming men.

"Don't forget," he said, "when you write up the battle of Pin-Yang to mention that the Chinese are committing suicide."

"What do you mean, general?" "Well, we used here against them—

Japanese land forces. Kawakami comes immediately after him. The first is merely a name—the second is the life and soul of the Japanese military organization.

Kawakami is the man who has prepared everything, directed all since the beginning of the war. He is tall, slender, and very good natured.

"I know nothing, general, and do not ask anything," he said, "but I heard that there would be a second army, and I follow Gen. Oyama wherever he goes."

"Very well," said the lieutenant general, "you will go. Be ready to start at a moment's notice."

I took passage with the field marshal on the imperial transport, Nagato Maru, and was accompanied by a single foreign officer on board the Japanese men-of-war.

very little fighting, and Yamaji, disgusted, furious, kept on roaring with his teeth. The cowardly the cowardly. His happiness had departed.

The battle was over and the city captured at 10:30 o'clock in the morning. At 10:30 in the afternoon Oyama arrived, after two days' forced marching. He looked exhausted, but he had had nothing but dried peas for breakfast and lunch.

The first and second brigades—two divisions under Yamaji, were, respectively, commanded by Gen. Nogi and General Nogi. Both of them distinguished themselves greatly at Port Arthur.

But the man who here covered himself in glory is Gen. Hasegawa, who commanded the mixed brigade forming the right flank, and at the last minute, the big size artillery which was to support him proved useless.

Without a minute's hesitation he decided to take the forts by assault. Under a terrific fire he led his men under the parapets of the fort himself, marching first, right against his men. Once there, stretching himself to his full height, he shouted, with his giant's voice:

"Lads of Japan, show what you can do! Lads of Japan, charge!" This assault, led by Hasegawa, was the grandest sight I ever witnessed.

Capt. Connor of the transport Nagato told me that when he had Hasegawa on board, taking him from Japan to Changhai, he got into a frightful storm.

The Japanese officers are a mixture of the French officers and the German officers. They live right against their stomachs, and eat the same food in all kinds of all, expose themselves to all kinds of danger and hardship, and the soldiers have the greatest confidence in them.

I found every Japanese general polite, kind, generous, kind, polite, ready to give his life for the men and for his flag. When the general history of the life of some of these men is written it will undoubtedly call forth the admiration of the world.

THE MYSTIC MICROBE—How Epidemics Are Engendered—Virtues of Cleanliness—Selling Slumber—Doctors' Strange Stories—The Secret of Health and Long Life.

Some years ago there was an excellent cartoon in Punch about the then recently uttered dictum of the Bishop of Exeter that tea was the worst of all poisons, by the theory is being revived especially in Ireland, where the affliction is named "lemonism."

Since my three days' attendance at the quarterly session of the Provincial Board of Health, I have been thinking of the counteracting dread disease. Here I encountered from divers places of how contagious and infectious diseases are spread—how a score of children carry in their provisions with them to a social gathering, and how a single man, who has a good time thereof and diphtheria afterwards, how people in some of the districts work on the walls of the town, and how they do it again, but without telling tales out of school.

Now, this is a nice state of affairs—microbes in the air, impurity in the water, and the germs of disease in the filthy lumps we handle.

But spite of all this, most of us "bete nor list of heart or hope, but still bear up and press right onwards," heedful of the pious exhortation, "where duty calls he holds on partly with unmanly fears; where duty beats he confidently steers, faces a thousand dangers at her call, and, in the end, his God, surrounds them all."

THE GREEKS made physical as well as intellectual education a science as well as a study. Their women practised graceful, and in some cases, even athletic exercises. They developed, by a free and healthy life, those figures which remain enviable and unapproachable models of human beauty.

There is a vein which has led many people into a prejudicial practice. The heights by great man reached and kept, were attained by sudden flight.

Some years ago there was a discussion in the English papers as to the right position whilst sleeping. A German doctor had died at the age of 105, which great age he ascribed to constantly sleeping with his head to the north.

THE SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST. English official figures show that up to the age of 67 in males and 61 in females a greater number survive than was the case half a century ago, but after these years there is no improvement; indeed, it is rather the other way, and this, too, despite the enormous strides made in sanitary science and other matters conducive to longevity.

Only a fortnight ago, owing to an outbreak of scarlet fever at Oyster Bay, Long Island, public gatherings were forbidden. The minister of a Baptist Church here, also did the rector of the Roman Catholic Church. The Board of Health suspended the clergy, and the sanitarians there do not believe in spreading disease even if it is done in the name of religion.

THE SECRET OF LONG LIFE. Every grand old man has a secret of his own. Mr. Gladstone is a daily walk in all weathers and to his dining table every morsel of food. Oliver Wendell Holmes placed his faith on equality of temperature. Some aged persons are able to resist their long life to abstemiousness from tobacco and alcohol; others to their indulgence therein. Carlyle and Ferdinand de Lesseps, were great riders almost to the end of their long lives. Most doctors conclude that a good constitution prudently husbanded, is the only key to longevity that can be laid down.

THE STRANGE STORIES. The story in Pickwick of the boy who swallowed a head necklace and rattled audibly even when wrapped in a watchman's coat, is fairly equalled by some account of another boy who swallowed a halfpenny eighteen months ago, and the search for it has been a case of rapid growth which has recently been investigated by the Faculty of Science. A boy at the age of five began to grow a beard and to change his voice, he seemed a man of 50. At six years old he was five feet six and strong enough to lift and carry on his back bags of grain weighing 200 pounds. At eight his hair turned grey, at 10 his teeth fell out and his hands and legs became pitted, and at 12 he died.

A medical book entitled "Euthanasia" was published some years ago. It is the popular belief that the act of death is always, or even usually, a painful one, and the urgent symptoms of disease subside and a general tranquility pervades the whole system.

hour I remained in his room. The conversation was entirely carried on by Col. Odera. "What a surprise," said the colonel when I left, "if the general does not speak more, he is a good-better, and he will do anything he can for you, except that he can't do to save his life."
