The home of the peanut, or ground pea (also often called pindar and goo-ber), is believed to be Brazil, although it very soon spread to Africa, China, Japan and India and was recognized as a valuable agricultural product in these countries long before it was cultivated on a slarge scale in its native soil, which was not until the year 1870. In the old world, however, it has always been planted and harvested for the sake of the oil that it yields. This is said to rival olive oil in quality and to be used for the same purposes. What to Eat With the Fingers. A man who has forgotien to get married and is consequently obliged to dine about town in various restaurants says that he can readily pick out persons not accustomed to dining away from home from their inexperie we in using their fingers. At table d'hote places especially things are served as courses which are expected : the fingers. No ide as to what is right can be obtained from the waiters, for it is the custor, in put cutlery enough for the entire meal on the tab. with the soup. Olives should be eaten with the fingers, though many of the uninitiated try to split them with a fork. Asparagus should be eaten with the fingers. That is why the cook does not throw sauce over the root ends. Green corn should be eaten with the fingers and not scraped from the cob with a knife. Spaghetti should be eaten with a fork and a crust of bread. In Italian restaurants a man who cuts his spaghetti into small pieces with a knife, as he province and considerable interest was would salad, is looked upon as a rank outsider.

The Peanut. The home of the peanut, or ground pea (also often called pindar and goo-ber), is believed to be Brazil, although it very soon spread to Africa, China, Japan and India and was recognized as a valuable agricultural product in these countries long before it was cultivated on a slarge scale in its native soil, which was not until the year 1870. In the old world, however, it has always been planted and harvested for the sake of the oil that it yields. This is said to rival olive oil in quality and to be used for the same purposes. The this amount or most of it was carried The most popular of the American peanuts is the "Virginia running variety." The pod and nut of the Virginia variety are twice as large as those of

The Latest and Best Improved

Invented by WM. DICKIE, of Campbellton, N. B., Canada.

The above cut shows a new and useful improvement in Shaft-Holders, which is simple in construction, cheap to manufacture, durable in use, and ornamental in appearance

This Shaft-Holder, it will be noticed has a slot through it, which makes it very light. The lining is held in place without the aid of screws, rivets or other fastenings. When the lining is worn out it can be readily replaced, without disturbing other parts of the device. Any part breaking can be readily replaced, and at a small cost. When made of light metal the device is very ornamental and sets the harness off to advantage. Shaft-holders are generally the most cumbersome and awkward part of that portion of the harness.

This valuable invention is fully protected by a strong Canadian patent, and other foreign patents pending. It is for sale either outright or on royalty and on most reasonable terms. For particulars exception, I am well aware of it.' There was a pause. Then Mrs. Ruthven said in an altered tone: "Lady Dorrington goes down to Chedworth to-day and I follow tomorrow. "And how long do you remain."

"Ten days, possibly a fortnight. Now, my dear Shirley, I am going to be rather busy, and must bid you good-morning. "I understand," he said, "and obey.

. . . . Lady Dorrington had written a few lines to her god-daughter, excusing herself for not having called on or sent for her. Time was too short, she said. It was of the utmost importance to get poor dear Mrs. Ruth-ven away to a totally new scene, and among fresh faces. Mrs. L'Estrange smiled as read the note.

"I fancy Clifford Marsden will be her best comforter," she said. "Do you know," returned Nora in a wise reflective tone, "I begin to doubt if Clifford cares as much for her as I thought he did." "Do you?" said Mrs. L'Estrange. "I never quite shared your opinion on that subject, though I think it likely enough they will marry. Mark Winton was saying yesterday that there was an idea at one time among her late husband's brother officers that Mrs. Ruthven would marry Cap-tain Shirley. It is curious that he should still be so much with her. When a man is rejected, communica-

ne held her hand for a moment and was gone. Nora ascended slowly, thoughtfully, to the drawing-room, where she found Mrs. L'Estrange leaning back in an easy-chair, her handkerchief to her eyes, beside a bright 'Why, Helen!'' cried Nora, as advanced toward her. Mrs. L'Estrange started and uncovered her face; the strong light of the flames showed that she had been and was weeping. "Dear Helen, what is the matter?" "Do not ask me now. I will tell you all one day, but not now," said

Mrs. L'Estrange. Rising, she came quickly toward her step-daughter, ressed her lips for an instant to Nora's cheek, and left the room. "Good heavens!" ejaculated Nora to herself, "she has refused him. But why?" Overcome with surprise, she sat down, all dressed as she was, to ponder this unexpected outcome of their pleasant intimacy with Winton. He, too, seemed depressed and unlike himself. Why-why had Helen rejected him? especially as she had evidently felt doing so very keen-

$6.50 SKIRTS FOR $3.50

If these handsome Walking Skirts had been purchased from the makers in the regular routine of business, we could not afford to sell them for less than $5.00 and $6.50, but the manufacturer miscalculated his financial position, the need of ready money compelled him to part with these skirts; he offered them to the Scheffer Bros. Co. at a big concession off the regular prices, got his money, and • skirts go on sale this and next week. $5.00 Skirts for $2.75. $6.50 Skirts for $3.50
