GEO. FRED. CAMPBELL,

GREAT MEN.-Are those who have felt much, lived much—who, in a few years have lived many lives. The tallest pines grow only in the regions of storm. Athens, the city of tumult, was the mother of a thousand great men; Sparta, the city of order, boasted but one—Lycurgus—and Lycurgus was born before his laws, "

Thus we see that great men most frequently appear in the midst of popular agitations— Homer, in the midst of the heroic ages of Greece—Virgil, under the triumvirate—Ossion the wreck of her country and her gods -Dante, Ariosto and Tasso, in the midst of the reviving convulsions of Italiy—Corneille and Racine, in the age of the Frondo—and Milton, chanting the first rebellion at the foot of the bloody scaffold of Whitehall. And if we examine the individual destiny of these great men, we shall find them haras sed by an agitated and miserable life. Camoens cleaves the waves, his poem in his hand. D'Ercilla writes his verses on the * * "I have seen one die; she Those of them whom bodily suffering of mind cautiful; and beautiful were the minis that were given her to fulfill—of dispussition which renders them a burther is loveliness enrobed her; and a grace to themselves and to those who surround to themselves and to those who surround to themselves and to those who sufficient them.
