the whole concourse, solemn, earnest, uncovered, was singing—a thunderous requiem for John Harkless.

The sun was swinging lower, and the edges of the world were embroidered with gold, while that deep volume of sound shook the air, the song of a stern, savage, just cause—sung perhaps as some of the ancestors of these men sang with Hampden before the bris-tling walls of a hostile city. It had iron and steel in it. The men lying on LL morning horsemen had been galloping through Six Crossroads, sometimes singly, oftener in company. At their guns in the ambuscade along the fence heard the dirge rise and grow to its mighty fullness, and they shivered. One of them, posted nearest the o'clock the last posse passed through on its return to the county seat, and advance, had his rifle carefully leveled at Lige Willetts, a fair target in the after that there was a long, complete silence, while the miry corners were undisturbed by a single hoof beat. No road. When he heard the singing he turned to the man next behind him and laughed harshly, "I reckon we'll all morning and wiped her eyes, watch-ing the horsemen ride by. Sometimes they would hail her and tell her there was nothing yet. About 2 o'clock her nusband rattled up in a buckboard and got out the shotgun of the late and more authentic Mr. Wimby. This he carefully cleaned and olled in spite of A gun spat fire from the higher ground, and Willetts dropped where he stood, but was up again in a second, with a red line across his forehead where the ball had grazed his temple.

The mob spread out like a fan, the its hammerless and quite useless condition, sitting meanwhile by the winmen climbing the fence and beginning the advance through the fields, thus dow opposite his wife and often look-ing up from his work to shake his weak fist at his neighbors' domiciles closing on the ambuscade from both sides. It grew denser and larger and gradually rolled nearer. Dimly behind it could be discerned a darker, moving nucleus that extended far back upon the road.

A heavy tremor began to stir the air; faint, manifold sounds, a waxing, increasing, multitudinous rumor.

The pike ascended a long, slight slope leading west up to the Crossroads. From a thicket of ironweed at the foot of this slope was thrust the visage of an undersized girl of fourteen. They had taken their time and had repared everything deliberately, knowing that nothing could stop them. No one had any thought of concealment; it was all as open as the light of day, of life as a tomb, but they beat and all done in the broad sunshine. Nothing had been determined as to what was to be done at the Crossroads more definite than that the place was to be wiped out. They're laid out along the fence waiting the road. Come by the fields. Fer the Lord's sake, spread!" Then as suddenly as he had appeared he dropped down into the weeds again. Lige and those with him paused, and the whole body came to a halt while the leaders consulted. There was a sound of metallic clicking and a thin rattle of steel. From far to the rear came the voice of old Wilkerson:

The house commanded the road, and the rush of the mob into the village was checked, but only for the instant. A rickety woodshed which formed a portion of the Skillett mansion closely joined the "Last Chances" side of the family place of business. Scarcely had the guns of the defenders sounded when, with a loud shout, Lige Willetts leaped from an upper window on that side of the burning saloon and landed on the woodshed and, immediately called a brand to the dry, time worm clapboards. Ross Schofield dropped on the woodshed close behind him, his arm lovingly infolding a gallon jug of SAVINGS BANK DEPARTMENT.

more, who had kept on through the fields to the north, assailed it from befields to the north, assailed it from behind. Their shots passed clear through the flimsy partitions, and there was a screaming like beasts' howls from within. The front door was thrown open, and a lean, fierce eyed girl, with a case knife in her hand, ran out in the face of the mob. At sound of the shots in the rear they had begun to advance on the house a second time, and Hartley the rear they had begun to advance on the house a second time, and Hartley Bowlder was the nearest man to the girl. With awful words and shricking inconceivably she made straight at inconceivably she made straight at Hartley and attacked him with the knife. She struck at him again and again, and in her anguish of hate and fear she was so extraordinary a spectacle that she gained for her companions the seconds they needed to escape from the house. As she hurled herself alone at the enceming torrent they sped from at the oncoming torrent they sped from the door unnoticed, sprang over the fence and reached the open lots to the west before they were seen by Willetts from the roof.

"Don't let 'em fool you!" he shouted. "Look to your left! There they go! Don't let 'em get away!" The Crossroaders were running across the field. They were Bob Skillett and his younger brother, and Mr. Skillett was badly damaged. He seemed to be holding his jaw on his face with both hands. The girl turned and sped after them. She was over the fence almost as soon as they were, and the three ran in single file, the girl last. She was ei-ther magnificently sacrificial and fear-less or she cunningly calculated that the regulators would take no chances of killing a woman-child, for she kept between their guns and her two companions, trying to cover and shield the latter with her frail body. "Shoot, Lige," called Watts. "If we fire from here we'll hit the girl. Shoot!" Willetts and Ross Schofield were still road, perceived the barrel of a gun shining from the fence some distance of the smoke, and both fired at the in front of him and the same second, same time. He rode up the slope and drew rein beyond the burning buildings just ahead of those foremost in the pursuit. He threw his horse across the road to oppose their progress, rose in his stir rups and waved the paper over his head. "Stop!" he roared. "Give me one minute! Stop!" He had a grand voice, and he was known in many parts of the state for the great bass roar with which he startled his juries. To be heard at a distance most men lift the pitch of their voice. Smith lowered his an octave or two, and the result was like an earthquake playing an organ in a catacomb.

"Stop!" he thundered. "Stop!"
In answer one of the flying Crossroaders turned and sent a bullet whistling close to him. The lawyer paused long enough to bow deeply in satirical response; then, flourishing the paper, he roared again: "Stop! A mistake! I have news! Stop, I say! Horner has church was then opened for divine service.

The preacher of the morning was Rev John McLean, editor of the Wesleyan. He chose as his text Psalm 87:3. The discourse was a beautiful prose-poem, a serial of very interesting illustrations of essential truths connected with the Church of God and man's relation thereto.

In the afternoon a platform meeting was held. M. E. Armstrong, M. D., read a carefully prepared historic sketch of Methodism in Nova Scotia, and especially in Granville and Bridgetown, closing with the names of the forty or more ministers who, from 1810 to 1904, have been appointed to the territory which embraces the present Bridgetown Circuit. He was followed by Dr. McLean, who spoke of his experiences as a missionary among the Blackfoot Indians of the Northsent Bridgetown Circuit. He was followed by Dr. McLean, who spoke of his experiences as a missionary among the Blackfoot Indians of the Northwest. He made it very plain that God has not left Himself without virtues, even among those who have not heard of Jesus Christ, and that it is the duty of the Christian people of the Dominion to send the Gospel to the remnants of these dying tribes, as well as to the numerous immigrants who are making homes in our country, and whose votes will have such an important influence upon our national affairs. The next speaker was the Rev. E. Daley, who referred to a pleasant visit he made a few years since to an Indian encampment on the Red River, where he heard and saw striking evidence of the benefit of missionary labor among the Indian tribes. In the evening the Rev. E. England, of Lawrencetown, Chairman of the District, was the preacher. Mr. England leagan his ministry in Bridgetown, as assistant to the Rev. Dr. Huntz, during whose incumbency the church was built. His discourse was based upon the incident of Elijah's rebuilding of the alter of the Lord which had been broken down, and was a very forceful showing of the fact that we do not need a new Gospel, but that the old Gospel truths are still adequate to all the needs of sinful men.

The services were all well attended.

The services were all well attended.

The services were all well attended, especially that in the evening, to be present at which; and to give his people the same opportunity, Mr. Daley very kindly gave up his own service. The singing during the day was under the charge of Miss Beckwith, and was much appreciated. In the absence of the regular organist, Miss Dodge, Mr. H. Bishop ably presided at the chancel and the tasteful decorations of the painter, has been the subject of most favorable remark by all who have seen it.

The collections of the day added a The collections of the day added a considerable sum to the improvement fund, and when the entire expenditure is completed, there is little doubt that the Methodist people will at once make up the small amount which will be required, in addition to the subscriptions already so liberally and willingly given, to cancel the entire indebtedness.

The Committee under whose direction the work has been done, and who deserve much credit for their manifest interest in it, consists of Mr. J. W. Beckwith, Dr. Armstrong, and Mr. L. R. Miller.

Mission of the Deaf Mates.

In all probability one of the most interesting visitors to Bridgetown for some time past came last week in the person of the Rev. S. Stanley Searing, of Boston, Mass. Mr. Searing is the Diocesan Missioner to deaf mutes in the Diocesa Missioner to deaf mutes in the Diocesa of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and other parts of New England. He has devoted nearly the whole of his ministerial life to the work he has now in hand, his interest having been enlisted many years ago by a deaf mute boy. His first definite work was the teaching of a Bible class in the sign language at Saratoga. After his ordination, and on going to take a curacy in Boston, he found there a little deaf mute society conducing meetings, but without special ministrations of any kind. To these he began to minister, and they formed the nucleus of his mission. The results of the work have been most gratifying. Chiefly through Mr. Searing's instrumentality a home for the deaf and dumb who are aged, infirm or blind has been opened in Massachusetts, and this has proved a great blessing.

Though Mr. Searing has visited Nova setts, and this has proved a great blessing.

Though Mr. Searing has visited Nova Scotia four times for the purpose of holding missions to deaf mutes at Halifax, this is his first visit to Bridgetown. Whilst here he conducted services in the sign language in St. James' schoolroom on Wednesday and Thursday evenings and on Friday morning. On Thursday evening he also gave a most interesting address to hearing people about his work, and illustrated the effectiveness of the sign language as used in conducting services for, and preaching to, deaf mutes. This mission to the Maritime Provinces (a mission having been hade in St. John also) has been made possible by the generosity of a lady in memory of a deaf mute son, now dead, but a very touching incident occurred to the sign lady in the standard of the services for and preaching to, deaf mutes. A Remarkable Record

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy has a remarkable record. It has been in use for over thirty years, during which time many million bottles have been sold and used. It has long been the standard and main reliance in the treatment of croup in thousands of homes, yet during all this time no case has ever been reported to the manufacturers in which it failed to effect a cure. When given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even as soon as the croupy cough appears, it soon as the croupy cough appears, it will prevent the attack.
