[From the Illustrated "Journal of Agriculture".] As the raising of cattle r vantage it has over oth quence of the recent developement of our thrives luxuriantly even on the poorest cattle trade, become a very important consideration for our readers, we trust a few value as a poultry food, we advise to give remarks on the best methods of rearing it a trial. calves will prove of service. At first thought, it may seem superfluous to offer suggestions on what is usually considered a very simple subject, one with which every farmer is supposed to be familiar; but, the fact is, very few have given the subject that amount of consider ation which its importance demands. Apart from the number of calves which annually die through errors in feeding and mismanagement generally, great losses are

We do not presume to say that this is universally the custom, but, it is, unfortunately, too often the case.

Breeders under different circumstances have experienced different results from the various methods of rearing calves. Thus, we know some breeders who, under their own direct supervision, have been eminently successful in hand-raising calves, and We do not presume to say that this is ly successful in hand-raising calves, and prefer it to allowing them to suck the

By this means greater size, earlier maturity, and the fuller development of the characteristics of the breed, are ensured.

On dairy farms, or on small farms where milk is required for butter or cheese, it is inconvenient to allow the calf to suck the mother, and hand-feeding has to be resorted to, and, properly attended to can be successfully conducted.

Thousands lose their lives in this way evenue and the surface of the control of the surface of the allowed, will gorge themselves, and suffer from indigestion in the acute form, producing diarrhea, which often proves fatal; or, if it assume the chronic form, the animal becomes potbellied, wastes away, and, even if it recover, it is with retarded growth, and indifferent health. Where too many calves are kept together and are fed in open troughs, the strong overcome the weak, and we have an exmplification of "the survival of the fitest." On a recent visit to the dairy farn of Mr. James Drummond at Petite Cote I was shown a very sensibly planned calffeeding trough. It consisted of a long trough, divided into spaces for two calves; ach calf was secured by his head being placed between two upright posts, one of which is movable and secured by a pin, a plan of securing cattle common enough in many parts of the province; by this contrivance each calf is insured his own share of milk and they are kept secured in this way for a short time after being fed, to prevent them sucking one an others navels: a practice which, in irregularly fed calves, is both common and injurious. The housing of calves is another very important subject, and one on which many of our farmers are far too careless. As a rule they are pent up in dark, where they can be inclosed is thought plant or animal, needs sunshine, therefore let them have light. The delicate young of their bodies, therefore, they must have room to gambol and play. Buckwheat for Fowls.

Buckwheat is one of the most staple articles of poultry food. It is very fattening, an excellent egg producer, and very much relished by poultry. It is not perhaps used so extensively here as in Europe, In England, France, and es pecilally in Germany, it forms not only an important part of poultry food, but is much used for culinary purposes. Contrast the fate of the poor calf with his more fortupate neighbours the foal, or the lamb. While the latter are left to the carrful nursing of the mother, in the full enjoyment of nature's nourishment in its pure and natural condition, allowed to enjoy their youthful gambols in the open air, exposed to the life-g ving sunlight, the poor calf is rudely torn from its mother, in most cases as soon as it is born, and not even allowed to imbibe the medicinal milk intended by nature to act as a mild aperient to cleanse the stomach and bowels of the accumulations of the intra-uterine period. Not only is this the case, but, in some instances, it is, with others, inclosed in confined, dark, and often damp boxes.

The effect of this treatment is to shorten its growth, lessen its vigour, and interfere with its full development.

We do not presume to say that this is universally the custom, but, it is, un-INVALIDS, do you wish to gather flesh

Among the breeders of the valuable, high bred Shorthorns, the custom of allowing the cow to-suckle her own calf, and often to give it a foster-mother besides, is invariably followed with the best results. By this means greater size, earlier maturity, and the fuller development of the characteristics of the breed are ensured. The Death-rate of

FARMERS OF MIRAMICHI. REAR OF CUSTOM HOUSE, CHATHAM We have been Manufacturing IRON FRAME MOWERS For the last four years, and are now offering farming community this, the BEST MOWER

combining greater excellence of mechanical simplicity together with greater durability and entire reliability for all the requirements of the field, that any other Mower extant.—In construction they are similar to the celebrated Walter A. Wood's Iron Frame Mower, and the Richardson Buckeye, both American Machines. Of the former there are over 200,000 in use, and the extraordinary number of 20,000 were manufactured and sold last season, by the Wood Company of United States. We have over 500 of our manufacture now in use, every one of which (no exceptions) stands as a monument of the great and and unprecedented success of home manufacture and our enterprise. A list of our Agents in this section of the Province will be found appended, and farmers are requested to ask information of them relative to our Mowers in use in their respective localities, which will establish beyond doubt their unquestionable superiority over any other mower to be had in our market.

The facility of procuring all parts or pieces within a nominal length of time must show beyond the shadow of a doubt the claims such an enterprise has upon the farmers of the Maritime Provinces.

For the coming harvest of 1877 we will manufacture LARGLY in excess of our numbers of last season, and trust that our gowing enterprise may find such inducements held out to it as will be commensurate with its merits.

Let it be remembered we have no hesitation at all times, in entering into a friendly competition in the field with any other machine in our market.

WEGUARANTEE OUR MOWERS TO BE INFERIOR TO NONE. Farmers would do well to enquire prices and terms before purchasing elsewhere. A large quantity of bottled ENGLISH ALE and IRISH PORTER on hand and for sale by the dozen or barrel.
