"Rejoice."

It was a beautiful Easter morning and the church door stood sjar. "We can hear the music if we sit there, and lumphe some of the sermon, too." was Katie that said this with a glance at shabby Tommy at her side and then at her own poor dress that had gotten far past her skill in mending and had holos and rents in many places.

"I'm so tired, Kutte, said Tommy agein. "Never mind, dear, lay your head in my lap awhile, said Katic, tenderly drawing him near and smothering a little cry that almost escaped her. wish he would talk to the children as the minister used to where mother took us to church." But Tommy's cyclids dropped, the long lashes lay upon his checks, and he cared nothing at all for the sermon, or the music, or the beautiful soushine or even for dear Katte herself, for Tommy was fact asleen She was only two years older than Toning; but now that their sweet mother was gone, Katie telt that she must take her place. With never a thought for her own forforn little life. but a heart full of pity for Tommy, she called him "dear" and "darling" as his mother had, kissed his bumps and benisse, and even tried to prove watchful and comforting.

"My text to day countries of just our sword," the minister began. "It is found all through the Bible and this season gives us more reason than any other for obeying the command, 'Rejoice!'

of wonder what rejoice means," muscel Katle; but the minister was ufnægring akurn:

"Do the children know what rejoice means? They ought to, for they do more reporcing than grown people.

"Oh, he legoing to talk to us," thought the heart images child on the deor-step.
"And now," continued the good man, "I will explain it in words that I am suro you all can understand Rejoice tousies, be glad, and you all know what check!" Mis voice trembled and on his checks it is yourse.

"Of course," responded Kate. "Tom were tears united of longed-for loving A. Garfield. gladnow is."

my and I were glad all the time when mother was alive

"At this season of the year above all others we should rejoice."
"How can we?" remoustrated Kate.
"There should be and is great rejoicing at Christmas time, the season when Christ was born among men, but there should be more rejoicing now, at Easter, because he lives again and forever.

Then he told snew the wonderful story of the resurrection and its recurrent illustration in the coming of the airing and its flowers. He teld it in language that his youngest listener could nucler-stand lifts hearer on the doorstep eagerly granged each word and treasur ed it in her desolate fittle heart.

"Doath is not death!" he exclaimed. "but rather a long sleep with a glorious awakening. The flowers are not dead when we miss them in the winter time, but only sleeping, and when the spring comes again the dowers come with it, brightly awakening when we thought them dead. To us who have lost dear ones, the spring time should bring especial comfort. For as we see the winter that has passed, so may we know that we shall have our dear friends back, more beautiful, lovelier far for the separation and for having passed through the gates of death."

He then spoke a few words about down as tributes to the memory of the dead and of their appropriateness in the church at Easter.

Katic a fracture.

Katic a faco was radiant. See her dear mother again! She was not depreased by the possible years of waiting; not appailed by her own sure journey through those gates of death before the glad remion. She only thought of once again being enfolded by a mother's arms and feeling the shelter of a mother's love.

"I wish you would wake up so that I could tell you about it. We ought to have had some flowers in the church to-day for mother. We didn't think about it, but never mind, we can get some for to night. Oh, Tommy dear, just think of it! Sometime we'll see mother again!" But Tommy still alopt unheeding.

The clowing hymu wakened the little fellow and, after hearing part of the wonderful story, he gladly accompanied Katie in the search for wild flowers to place in the church at the evening service—a tribute to the memory of their beloved dead.

It was a long and weary way the children went; but they were richly rewarded and came back laden with all they could carry of the beautiful symbols of the resurrection. Up the church steps they climbed, only to find that the door was locked

"We must take them to the minster's house," said Katie, nothing daunted. "He will know how to get them into the church.

With folded hands and bowed head the minister sat in the afternoon sunlight. His appearance was dejected and strangely out of place in him who had prosched "Rejoice!" in the morning-It looked as if he who above all others should have been cheured by the services. liad failed to be so. "Your sermon today was very heautiful," his wife said scutly. "It has been a great comfort to lue." "Thank you, my doar," said the min-ister stroking her hand, but his tone was half-hearted.

The wife was atlent a few minutes; then she ventured softly:
"And yet you seem a little depressed

now, deat." It replied, reluctantly, "not only a little, but very much depressed."

His wife looked distremed, and he "The truth is, I want our went on children. It is not enough for me to know that in the hereafter we shall meet. I want to feel their arms around my neck and their warm kinnes on my caremes. Before his wife could speak the doorbell rang, and heathly wiping his eyes the ininister himself answered the summous. There with their arms full of blosnouss, the levelical that the woods afforded, stood the two little motherless children looking wistfully up to his fuce.

"If you please," said Katie, "we want these flowers in the church. We heard your sermon this morning. We couldn't your sermon this morning. come in." with a glance at her ranged come in," with a glance at her ranged dress, "but we sat on the steps and I lioard every word. We never could rejoice since mother died; it has been so lonely; but now we will. We understand it better—we know she had to go—and we shall have her again—and we want the flowers in church, please, in-memory, I think you called it."
"My dear child!" was all the minister could say as he lield out his hand for the flowers; but his wife caught both child-ren in her arms, and kissed them again and again.

"Oh, you poor darlings!" ahe exclaimed. "Tell me about it." And holding them close to her she drew forth the pitiful story. A glance at her husband showed that they read each other's "Of course we'll keep them," said he heartily, "if they will stay and no one else has claims upon them.

A closer questioning showed that the children's father had ded when they were too young to remember him and they knew of no living relative. "What does it all mean, hate?" asked Tonimy bewildered "It means, dear," remarked Katic, thoughtfully, "that this is to be our bome and we shall have two mothers. one in beaves for us to see again some day and one on earth to love and take care of us now."

"I'm so glad," sighed the tired little fullow.

"And so am I." said the minister, and then kinding Katie's wise little face he added, "I believe that with such a brave little woman in the house to make sunshine for me, I shall practice what I I propole and always rejoion.—Carrie G. Nottingham in Young People's Weekly.

It is Pluck That Wins.

Now, young gentlemen, let me for a moment address you touching your brevity of my remarks will increase the chance of their making a lodgment in your minds. Let me beg you in the outset of your career to dismiss from your minds all idea of succeeding by luck. There is no more common thought among young people than that foolish one that by and by something will turn up by which they will suddenly schieve fame or fortune. No, young gentlemen, things don't turn up in this world unless somebody turns them up. Inertia is one of the indispensable laws of matter and things lie flat where they are until by some intelligent spirit (for nothing but spirit makes motion in this world) they are endowed with activity and life. Do not dream that some good luck is going to happen to you and give you fortune. Luck is an iguis fatuum. You may fullow it to your ruin, but not to success. The great Napoleon, who believed in his destiny, followed it until he saw his star go down in blackest night when the Old Guard perished around him and Waterloo was lost. A pound of pluck is worth a ton of luck. Young men talk of trusting to the spur of the occasion. That trust in vaiu. Occasions cannot make spurs, young gentlemen. If you wish to wear spura you must win them. If you expect to nee them you must buckle them to your cwn besie before you go into the fight. Any success you may achieve is not worth the having unless you fight for it. Whatever you win in life you must conquer by your own efforts and then it is yours—a part of yourself.—James

Too Much of a Good Thing.

The subject of over education is just now commanding widespread attention in this and other countries, and many emphatic protests are being made against what has been well termed "The murder of the modern infants. The people of this continent are foud of boarting that they lead the world in enterprise and go-shead-itiveness, and pride themselves on the spirit of cease less, restless activity that pervades all ranks and all vocations. But it is questionable if this is not cause for regret rather than for gratulation Enterprise and industry are all right when exercised with due moderation. but there is a limit beyond which they become an ovil rather than a virtue. and are productive of harm rather than good, and in no other place is this so evident as in modern educational processes. Cauadians glory in the splendid system of education which has been provided freely for every child, but in our cagerness to excel we have in many cases gone far beyond the limits that prudence and discretion would prescribe. Children are now sent to school almost as soon as they can walk, and at once begins that process of craining and over-stimulation of that brain that so often ends so disastrously. Children of from eight to ten years of age are not only compelled to spend six or seven hours a day in ofton poorly-ventilated school rooms. or three hours of home work in [the evenings. They are compelled to memorize involved and to them meaning loss definitions, to solve intricate and unpractical arithmetical problems and do other useloss and very ridiculous things. Often they pass into the High School at eleven or twelve years of age, where the same processes are continued. in an intensified degree, with the the mid-uniner vacation

His course these results do not always follow. Many children. cannot be induced or competical to apply themselves sufficiently to their studies to produce any bad results, and many others are sufficiently robust to endure the strain. The west results come to conductive the more anglely sensitized mands of the more ambitious () tractices of the more highly developed intellectuality. And it is these the highest products of our civilization, who are being thus sacrificed, and whose successful though the really fittest is being made ! impossible. The evil is an enormens ! and ever mcreasing one and east to | specify but it is much more difficult to point out a remedy. The root of the evil doublices nest in the over ambition of parents. Each parent desires to see his child excel and maists on as rapid progress as possible being made, and the teachers whose very hyelthood depends on the good will of the parents, are compelled to carry out their beheats, even though they know that the results are often injurious and not infrequently fatal. A good education is a very desir able thing, but a sound mind in a sound body is infinitely better. Nothing but good would result if the school age was raised to eight years. At any-rate no child should be allowed to enter a school room before it is seven -excepting, of course, a kindergarten, and an age limit of at least fourteen should be fixed for entrance to the high school. Were we to allow the children to enjoy the exuberance of children delights, to cease burdening their music with great masses of dry and unassimilated facts, and to let educational methods, proceed along be lines of natural development. the results will be infinitely better not only as regards the physical well being of the children but also their mental advancement and their moral strength

The August meeting of the Board of Intectors of the American Association to promote the Teaching of Speech to the Deaf was held at Washington on the 19th alt. this day this week the school was visited by a young man who received his education in the Vicina Institution a school where the pure of al method is used and where the use of any signs is strictly forbidden in the schoolmoni This young man is evidently of more than ordinary intelligence and may be fairly taken as a representative ! the sverage of work turned out by oral schools. He has been in America time. years and during that time has picked up a fan knowledge of English from reading, having had no other instruction he says. His speech is of no use, practickily and he depends almost entirely open writing and signs to make inmedi-understood. When one considers that this is the record almost universally of graduates of oral schools, it becomes a ource of wonder that advocates of that sort of instruction have the assurance to make the extravagant claims they sometimes do lt is not so surprising that parents are often inisied by thes theories, it is natural that they should ! listen eagerly to any one promising to secomplish so much for the deal, but to the teacher who has seen the results of such work not once but hundreds of p times, it is provocative of nothing but indignation. In connection with this, we copy the following from Packerophus, the new "Friend of the Deat" which is printed in Los Angeles

The best oral teacher in London was the late Rev. Dr. Stamer, who organized and for many years conducted the oral taught classes of deaf children in the public schools. After long years of labo rious work he resigned his position, and wrote to Dr. Peet of the New York In stitution, in June, 1990 as follows

You may not know that I have returned to my 'hrst love,' and am acting chaplam of St. Saviour's Church for Deaf mutes, where I preach in signs and interpret sermons. My views of oral teaching are modified since 1881, when I visited your country " California News

Dog Franciers are Deaf.

At is a poculiar fact. said Edwin W. It is caused by the incessant barking and howling which one can aiwaya tuid iii a bench show A continuous noise of itself would not pecessarily cause deafness, as men in rolling mills and factories have to stand noise of much greater volume and of a more shocking nature than you find in a dog show But the barking and howling of a dog seems to have a strango and mesplamable effect upon the ear drum. Of course, to affect the hearing it takes a long time, so that only the men who are old in the business are affected. Reproving a Child Before Company.

BY RELEN HUNT JACKSON.

Probably most parents, even very kindly ones, would be startled at the assertion that a child ought never to be reproved in the presence of others. This is no constant an occurrence that nobody thinks of noticing it, nobody thinks of considering whether it be right and best or not. But it is a great rude-ness to a child. I am ontirely sure that it ought never to be done. Mortification is a condition as unwholesome as it is uncomfortable. When the wound is inflicted by the hand of a parent, it is all the more certain to rankle and do harm. Let a child see that the mother is so auxious that he should have the approbation and good will of her friends that she will not call their attention to his faults; and that, while she never under any circumstances allows horself to forget to tell him afterward alone, if he has behaved improperly, she will spare him the additional pain and mortification of public reproof; and, while the child will fay these secret reproofs to heart, he will still be happy. I know a mother who had the insight to see this, and the patience to make it a rule , for it takes fur more patience, far more time, than the common method

Once I saw her little boy behave table, in the presence of guests, that I said to myself "Surely, this time she will have to break her rule and rebuke him publicly. I naw neveral telegraphic signals of rebuke, entreaty, and warn ing flash from her gentle eyes to his, but nothing did any good. Nature was too much for him he could not at any time force immself to be quiet. Present ly shu said, in a perfectly easy and natural tone, "O Charley, come here a minute. I want to tell you something. No one at the table supposed it had anything to do with his bad behavior. She did not intend that they should. As she whispered to him, I alone saw his check flush and that he looked quickly and imploringly into her face. I alone saw that tears were almost tu But she shook her head, and her over he went back to his seat with a manful but very red little face. In a few moments he laid down his knife and fork, and said. "Mamma, will you please to excuse mo a excuse me " "Certainly, my dear." said she. Nobedy out me understood it, or observed that the little fellow had to run very fast to get out of the room without crying. Afterwards she told me that she never sent a chil away from the table in any other way.

English Enthusiasm.

The use of the expression "Hear! is so common in England that Mr. O'Counce declares that American audiences struck him as cold and unsympathetic. Of the House of Commons he says. "A speaker is hardly allowed to otter half a sentence without an in terruption of some kind, either of ament or dissent, while the 'Hear! hear! itself carries a speaker along from point to point in a way that can be un-derstood only by those who have been subjected to its influence." At a time when a contingent of troops from India were visting England, a number of their native officers, arrayed in strange and gorgoous uniforms, were ushered into the gallery for distinguished strangers. The sudden contrast of these Oriental soldiers with British law makers-its proud suggestion of the vastness of the empire to which both belonged, and which both so differently served— House, and spontaneously, from all di-rections and all parties, broke a great "Hear! hear" so loud, so prolonged, so charged with welcome and emotion, that the strangers understood. They started to their feet, and standing erect and soldierly, with grave faces and flush ing eyes, each man brought his hand to his turban in salute.--- Ez.

Eyes Like Telescopes.

It has often been remarked that civilized people toud to become shortslighted This is because in towns and cities their vision is mostly confined to short distancos. Savage races, on the other hand, are generally gifted with remark ably keen sight, and fow tribes are more noteworthy in this respect than the African bushinen, whose eyes are veritable telescopes. This power is no doubt a wise provision of nature, for the bushmen are a small race, and if they were not able to see danger a long way off they would soon be exterminated by their various onemies, whether savages of other tribes or wild beasts.

A traveler in South Africa relates that while walking one day in company with a friendly bushman the savage suddenly stopped, and gazing across the plans cried out that there was a hon shead. The traveler gazed long and earnestly in the direction indicated by the bushman, but could see nothing. "Nonsense," he said. "there's nothing." And he went forward again, with the bushman following at his leeds, trembling and unwilling and still asserting that he could see a lion.

Presently the native came to a dead stop and refused to budge another such, for this time, he declared, he could see a hone-s with a number of cubs. a fact which made the animal more dangerous than over. But the European, who could see no honess, much less its cubs, pushed alicad, declaring the bushman was dreaming. After walking a quarter of a mile, however, he could dimly make out an object moving across the horizon Still doubting that it could be the object which the hushman said he had seen, he continued to advance, and at last wan able to distinguish a lioness, with her cubs around her, walking lemurely to-ward the woods.—Chuns.

Pure Air.

Breathe pure air always. In the lungs a most important physiological process occurs. It is from here that the blood laden with oxygen is sent to all parts of the body, giving off along its course its oxygen, and taking up carbonic acid gas, which it brings at last to the lungs, when it is cast out in expiration. More oxygen is taken in by inspiration and the same process is repeated.

So let your breatling be full and deep, going to the very bottom of the lunga in order that all of the blood in them may receive its full amount of oxygen before again starting upon its tour of distribution through the body. Can one use any more forcible argument in favor of loose clothing than this? It is also intely impossible to secure plenty of oxygen if the clothing is worn at all tight, and oxygon is a food which the body must have always in abundance to keep well

The air leaving the lungs is laden with a very seem le and companionable | that deadly poison, carbonic acid gas, which if given off in a close room wh no provision is made for its escape and the cutrauce of pure air, soon renders the air utterly unit to breathe. Perhaps some night, you will find yourself unable to sleep and tumble restlessly about in bed. When this occurs go to an open window and inhale the fresh air, breath ing slowly and deeply. A few innutes of this and you can return to bed and probably will soon be sleeping quietly. What has happened? By its restless ness the body was asserting its need of more expen. Now, you have given it what it so emphatically asked for, and it is quiet.

I should say sincerity a deep, great, genuine sincerity, is the first character

A Father's Sorrow.

There is nothing more pathetic than the sorom of an old father or mother over a wandering son. A writer in the Vancouver Wood tells a turilling story. related to him by a man who is now a judge in one of the states. At the time of which he speaks he was a rising law-yer in a small Western town, and in this capacity came often in contact with a certain elderly judge. He was the saddest looking man the young lawyer had ever seen. About a dozen years before he had come from the East with his wife, and had soon distinguished bimself as a jurist. The two lived quetly and, to all appearance, seconely, but it was evident that they were growing old before their time. They did not speak of the past, their listery was unknown to their neighbors.

One night the town was thrown into a state of excitement over a robbery and murder. The murderer was captured almost in the act, and the young lawyer was chosen to defend him. Practically there was no defence, however, as every one knew him to be guilty.

He was a stranger in town, a man thirty old years old, with a face hardened by disapation, and disguised by a week's growth of whiskers. In those times the law was not slow and by six o'clock of the second day the prisoner was stand-ing before the judge to receive sentence.

"Have you anything to say why sentence should not be pronounced upon you? asked the judge, after the preliminaries were over.

"I have, your honor, if you are to pronounce that sentence," replied the prisoner. "At least," he added, half-apologetically, "it is possible that, under the circumstances, you mightn't care to pronounce it."

The counsel for the defence here interposed to warn the prisoner that he was acting irregularly, but the judge gravely requested that the matter be left to him. Perhaps some premonition of the truth affected his voice at that moment, for when he tunned again to the prisoner it was aftered and excited.

"Will you be kind enough to explain ?" he said, and his eyes searched the man's

"Well, your honor," responded the prisoner, without a quaver of the voice, 'as I happen to be your only son—"

He got no further. The father's heart told him the words were true, that heart that had grown old before its time through sorrow at the deeds of the son of whose doings he had lately known nothing.

It was the last shock the old heart would hear. Before the prisoner had finished speaking the judge's head fell feward upon the deak in front of him. The son must die, but the father's heart broke before he was called upon to pronounce the terrible sentence.

The whole community combined to hide the truth from the aged mother, She knew that her hubsand had died suddenly when about to pronounce sentence on a criminal, but with the identity of that criminal she was nover acquainted. With tender chivalry all tried to spare her further sorrow, and when, a few months later, she was laid beside her husband, she had nover heard the pathetic story of his death.

If you are but content you have enough to live upon w is comfort, -Plantus.

A laugh to be joyous, must flow from a joyous heart, for without kindness there can be no true joy.

The covetous person lives as if the world were made altogether for him and not he for the world; to take in everything and part with nothing. South.

Helen Kelley at the Boston Art Museum.

IN AND B PARKER.

I had the good fortune to witness the unique scene in the Boston Art Museum. two or three weeks ago, when Helen Keller, the beautiful deaf and blind girl, was taken to "see" the statuary. Helen Keller is now seventeen years old. She has a beautiful form and her face is expressive to a most unusual degree. She gives one an impression of tresh, happy girlhood. There is a slight deformity of the eyes, but every other feature is perfect, and her mouth is especially ex-pressive and whisome. With smiling parted lips, she seems to be filled with a happy expectancy of what the future may bring her-

For some time Helen attended a private school in Cambridge, but she is now studying with a tutor and fitting for Radcliffe. Her careful training in Greek showed during her visit to the naseum. She appeared theroughly familiar with all the old Greek raythologies, and it seems she has just been reading The Iliad. A letter suggesting the visit was sent her by her friend. Most Cobb, formerly a teacher of the blind, and Helen accepted the invitation. saying that she had always wanted to see the silver howed god and the whitearmed godesses."

At the museum the first statue shown her was that of Apollo. A stepladder was brought and she mounted until sho could reach the face. She put both hands on the forehead, touching it light ly with the tips of her fingers. From the centre of the foreliead she deftly followed the curves outward, then down the checks until her hands met at the chin; then both eves were touched; then the nose, and lastly the mouth, her hands moving in unison. Next the arms and other parts of the statue were examined. This was the order pursued each time. Every new curve was a surprise and pleasure to her. She was as eager as a child at each fresh discovery, and when anything pleasest her especially would give a quick gasp of pleasure and class Ler hands, bending forward her whole figure. Helen's com ment on Apollo was, 'It is grand beyond description.' Of another god she said, He cxpression is painful.

The deftuess and quickness with which she could examine a statue were wonderful. but what impressed the on looker as even more remarkable was that she seemed to read the artist's thought through her sensitive fingers as readily as a seeing person could take it in by a glance. She was shown the bas-relief of a mother bidding farewell to her child. In this the arms of the mother were missing. Her first question was Where are the mother's arms? She should embrace her child.' And as she was not at first understool she repeated the word 'embrace,' at the same time putting her arms around Miss Cobb. Of the mother she same lad. the mother she remarked, 'She has sorrowful eyes, wide open; her lips seem to quiver; she lifts up her forchesel a little.

Helon Keller's vocabulary is quaint and bookish, quite different from that of an ordinary schoolgirl. She talks as if she were translating. She enunciates slowly and with an carnest effort to be understood, but in order to catch every word she says one must give close attention. There is a slight thickness of speech. When she desired explanation about any of the statues, she reached for the hand of Miss Cobb, who spelled into her fingers what she wanted to know.

Her quickness of perception astonished everybody. Upon being shown a bas relief of some dancing girls she immediately asked. 'Where are the cheristers?' seeming to detect their absence simply by touch even somer than it would be noted by a seeing person. The adjoining has relief represented singers, there being four or five figures. The lips of one were closed, and as soon as her fingers touched it she announced, * One is silent.' A little farther on was a statue of Neptune, and on feeling the empty hand her instant question was, Where is the trident?

She is not without a sense of humor. She said of Euripedes, laughingly, He is not so handsome as Pericles. The latter she had proviously described as having 'a fine, strong face, full of spirit and thought,' and Sappho was the 'Sappho she had always loved to think of sweet, smiling Sapplio, Julius Cacsar looked 'just like what he was.' She looked 'just like what he was.' She is braced at Brantford, Outarie for particulars address. I be provided the brantford of the particular address.

gelo's group of Mother and Child, and GRIBRAL INFORMATION suparately she placed one hand on the mother's face and the other on that of the child and remained in that position for a brief minute as if touched with the gentle picture of motherhood. Then she said softly. It is very sweet and lovely.

There was an almorbed and expectant silence in the big rooms as the blind girl passed with rapt face from statue to statue. The little group of students following her watched her with an almost breathless interest as she stood on the top of the stepladder, groping and similing. They were eiger to exten every word she might say. With eyes as sightless as the vacant orbits of stone about her, yet with a wonderful intelligence disclosed in every motion, she presented a picture of extraordinary interest and one which will nover be forgotten by those who saw it. - Congregationalist.

How Easter Day is Fixed.

It has been over 1,500 years since tho rule was adopted which makes Easter the "first Sunday after the first full moon after the sun crosses the line." By this arrangement of things, Easter may come as early as March 22, or as late as April 25, but must forever escallate between the dates mentioned.

The word Easter is said to be from the German "oster" trisingt. It is the Christian passover or festival of the resurrection of Christ. The English name for the day is probably derived from that of the Tentonic goddess Osten. whose festival occurred at about the same time as our celebration of Easter. The proper time for celebrating the featival was a thome which gave rise to much heated discussion among early much heated discussion among early christians. The question was fully considered and finally settled at the council of Nice, 325 A. D. by adopting the rule which makes at fall upon the first Sunday after the first full moon occurring after the 21st March. During the present century Easter has fallen from one to four times on every date between March 20 and April 25, except March 21, which has been skipped entirely. Er.
