

PIEASANT HOURS

A PAPER FOR OUR YOUNG FOLK.

VOL. XX.

TORONTO, MARCH 24, 1900.

No. 12

REV. THOMAS CROSBY.

Banner of Missions.
BY GEORGE W. DOANE.

Fling out the banner ! Let it float
Skyward and seaward, high and wide;
The sun, that lights its shining folds,
The cross on which the Saviour died.

Fling out the banner ! Angels bend
In anxious silence o'er the sign,
And vainly seek to comprehend
The wonder of the Lord divine.

Fling out the banner ! Heathen lands
Shall see from far the glorious sight,
And nations, crowding to be born,
Baptize their spirits in its light.

Fling out the banner ! Sin-sick souls,
That sink and perish in the strife,
Shall touch in faith its radiant hem,
And spring immortal into life.

Fling out the banner ! Let it float
Skyward and seaward, high and wide;
Our glory, only in the cross,
Our only hope, the Crucified.

Fling out the banner ! Wide and high,
Seaward and skyward let it shine;
Nor skill, nor might, nor merit ours;
We conquer only in that sign.

PIONEER WORK IN THE NORTH-WEST.

THE APOSTOLIC LABOURS OF REV. THOMAS CROSBY AMONG THE INDIANS OF BRITISH COLUMBIA AND ALASKA—TWO THOUSAND MILES A YEAR IN A CANOE—THE BUILDING OF A STEAMBOAT.

Nearly forty years of toll and travel and self-denying effort for the evangelization of the Indians of the great Northwest, have made the names of Thomas Crosby and wife household words throughout Canada. Few people, even among those who know them best, have any idea of the extent of their labours. The change visible in some locality is witnessed, groups of Indians quit their vicious lives, the women and girls become virtuous and decent, a little church is built and the whole settlement is revolutionized. Then the man and his wife, whose labours have been blessed of God to this glorious result, cease to be residents of the district. They disappear, but they are gratefully remembered, and their frequent visits afterward are festivals to be anticipated, enjoyed and re-collected with delight. Where do they go ? The people whom they have served so well do not always know, but if inquiry is made, they learn that the work that has been done among them is being done with the same laborious effort and the same joyful results in some other settlement. No less than thirteen hundred persons have in this way been brought into church membership and have joyfully professed their faith in Christ. More than six thousand have heard the Gospel and been brought under Christian influences in church and Sunday-school. This, in a thinly settled country, where means of communication are few and precarious, is a stupendous work for one man to have accomplished, involving almost inconceivable labour and hardship.

The instrument God has used for the achievements of this enormous undertaking seemed to human eyes a very unsuitable one. With little education, no college training and no preparatory study, he took up the work, moved by faith and love; and by simple brotherly affection and quiet, unobtrusive helpfulness, he won the good-will of the people in one section after another and led them to Christ. The word of call and inspiration was as simple as it was effectual. In the year 1860 there appeared in a Canadian journal a letter signed "Edward White," in which the writer dwelt on the urgent need of the country. "Thousands of young men," he said, "are coming to British Columbia seeking gold, but where are the young men whom we need to consecrate their youth and strength to the preaching of the Gospel to the miners and the Indians ?"

It was a deplorable picture that he drew of the condition of these people. They were leading lives of practical heathenism, the miners careless, dissolute and depraved, and the Indians sacrificing the sacred ties of fatherhood and brotherhood in pandering to the vices of the white settlers, and squandering the poor proceeds in self-indulgence. It was an awful circle of mutual corruption, vice, and degradation. Who was there with faith in God and conviction in his soul of the purifying and elevating power of the Gospel, who would go and preach it and live it among them ? It was like asking for volunteers for a forlorn hope, or for missionaries for some benighted island of the South Seas, with the added difficulty that some of those to whom it was proposed to send the Gospel were backsliders from Christian lands.

you can repay it, do; if not, I shall never ask you for it." He took the money, and going to his room, he knelt down and thanked God for it, and said that henceforth his whole life was given up to him.

The matter was settled there and then. All attempts to dissuade him from an enterprise that seemed to the worldly mind profitless and foolhardy, failed. His employer was the first to assail him. "What are these people to you?" he asked. "They are savages; they will kill you and eat you. Don't be quixotic; stay with us; you have done well and may do better. Keep on with your work, and from to-day we will double your wages." Tom had but one answer for the kindly tanner. He had promised God and he must go. At home the trial was harder. The father could not see the call in the light that Tom saw it, his mother wept over her boy and declared that she could not spare him. There was a midnight scene that is still fresh in his memory, when father and mother both listened to his story of the call and the consecration, and lamented over him as one given over to death. "I cannot be happy if I don't go," Tom said. Then his mother answered with a voice broken by sobs, "Well, then, my boy, go, and God bless you." Hundreds of times in after years, on storm-tossed seas and lonely desert places, in the solemn night hours, Mr. Crosby declares, the echo of those words fell on his ears encouraging him and stimulating him. The ejaculatory prayer was heard and abundantly answered. God has blessed him.

Setting out alone on his perilous enterprise, with no promise of support from any church or society, he made his way to Victoria, British Columbia, where he arrived April 11, 1862. He was anxious to enter on his work unhampered by an obligation, so he stayed there working with his hands until he had earned enough money to repay his brother's loan. The time was not lost; he gained much knowledge of the field, and he gained strength in lonely communion with God. It was the period of solitude which gen-general unfitness; but Punshon overcame them, declaring that Crosby had given the best of all proofs of his fitness in his success.

MRS. THOMAS CROSBY.

Mr. Crosby remained in that field two years longer, and then returned to Victoria to report his success to the church there, in the hope of getting some thoroughly organized work for reaching the Indians commenced. Two of the brethren there, McKay and McMillan, were deeply interested in his story and made the experiment of mission services in Victoria itself. They hired a bar-room on the corner of Government and Fitzgerald Streets, and Crosby gladly preached in it. There were plenty of Indians there who had come down from the north, with their squaws and daughters, to engage in their loathsome traffic. A great work began in that bar-room, and many of the people converted during those services, more than twenty years ago, are still living, and are leading earnest, faithful, Christian lives.

During the next few months, Mr. Crosby went through Ontario, arousing the churches to the need of the work, and awakening them by his story of what had already been accomplished, and by his testimony as to the readiness of the Indian to listen to the Gospel, to the duty of supporting missionaries among them. During that tour he incidentally awakened in one of his hearers another kind of interest, which finally became a very close and personal one. He was married to the daughter of the Rev. John Douie, and henceforth had a valuable helper in his work.

On the conclusion of his tour, Mr. Crosby kept his promise to the Indians whom he had served at Victoria. A Hudson's Bay ship, sailing to Alaska, carried the missionary and his wife to Fort Simpson, about seventy miles from Mr. Duncan's station at Metlakatla. The converts of the Victoria work had prepared the way for his coming, and Mr. Crosby was received with open arms. After a short time, a church was organized and a building commenced. Mr. Crosby with his own hands cut the timber, and the Indians laboured hard at the building. The skilled labour was paid for chiefly by the Indians themselves, who, although they had no money, brought furs, finger-rings, ear-rings, and surplus blankets, and gave them freely for the building fund. The completion of the church was the beginning of a wonderful work of grace, which spread to distant places. The people who came to Fort Simpson and heard the Gospel went home, and soon messages came from them to Mr. Crosby, begging him to visit them. He went to Queen Charlotte Sound, where there was a similar gathering of souls, thence to Bella Coola, to Bella Coola and to many other places. In each settlement he remained preaching and teaching until a church was organized and he could safely proceed to a new field.

The extremities of this chair of mis-

MISSION STEAM-YACHT "GLAD TIDINGS."

We do not know how many read that appeal from Edward White, but we know that one young man read it and could not forget it. Thomas Crosby was then twenty years old. Four years before, he had come from an English village to Woodstock with his father, mother and brothers, and had settled here. The family was poor, and the father's venture in farming, which at first promised a brilliant success, ended disastrously. The boy must earn his own living, and he took the first opportunity. He went to work in a tannery and was making his way. In his seventeenth year he became a member of the Methodist church in Woodstock, and after a short time was appointed a local preacher. To him Edward White's letter appeared to be a personal call. He dwelt upon it, re-read it, took it to his room and read it on his knees, and finally made an offer of himself in solemn consecration to God for the work. That was all he could do, he left the opening of the way to God. Two days later he had an intimation that his offer was accepted. His elder brother, an unconverted man, spontaneously removed the only difficulty in the way by offering him all the money he needed. "Take it as a loan, Tom," he said; "if erally precedes a life of consecrated work. Moses and John the Baptist, and even the Master himself, prepared for their labours in retirement from the world.

About a year after his arrival at Victoria, he went to Dr. Evans and told him of his purpose. As a practical preparation, Dr. Evans sent him to Nanaimo, Vancouver Island, to teach the first Indian mission school that had been established. There he laboured and taught and learned. In six months he was able to understand the Indian Flathead language, and before the first year was out he could preach in that tongue. Life began in earnest with that acquisition, and Crosby lost no opportunity of exercising it. He journeyed in all directions from his school, preaching the Gospel in the Indian huts and tents and in the open air, and living with the Indians as one of themselves. Soon it was necessary to build a church at Chilliwack. There, to his great delight, he received a visit from Dr. Punshon, who preached in the new church. Learning that he had not been ordained, Dr. Punshon surprised him by proposing to confer ordination upon him. Crosby had scruples on account of his lack of a college education, or his lack of theological training, and sionary stations were two hundred miles apart and this distance was covered by Mr. Crosby in his journeys to and fro, by canoe. For many years he kept up a perilous and often perilous system of travel rowing, on an average, two thousand miles in a year. But in 1882 he realized that some time or other, a locomotive could no longer be depended upon. He must have a steamboat, which would save time and labour, remembering his former success in Ontario, he returned there and lecturing and appealing to the churches, he succeeded in raising a small fund for this purpose. With the aid of a sailor who had been converted in one of his meetings, he built the boat; a small engine, which could propel it at the rate of seven knots an hour was purchased and put in, and thus equipped, Mr. Crosby resumed his labours.

The statistical results of these long years of labour are remarkable. There are now twenty-five churches in regular organization, with day-schools and Sunday-schools, under the charge of a skilful Christian physician, a large industrial school for girls, with forty pupils, and a similar institution for boys where instruction is given in useful arts. There are eight ordained ministers, seven lay missionaries, and eight native assistants. The churches are self-supporting, and in a most thriving condition. Looking back on the results of his thirty years of labor, Mr. Crosby thanks God that his efforts led to take up this pioneer work and for the success with which God has rewarded him.—The Christian Herald

OUR PERIODICALS:

	The last, the cheapest, the most entertaining, the most popular.	Yearly Subs.
Christian Guardian, weekly		50 cents
Methodist Magazine and Review, 50 pp., monthly		2.00
Illustrated
Christian Standard and Methodist Magazine and Review		2.75
Magazine and Review, Guardian and Standard		2.75
The Wesleyan, Halifax, monthly	1.00
Sunday-School Banner, 50 pp., 6to., monthly	60
Our Young Folks, 50 pp., 6to., 3 vols. a year	1.00
5 copies and over.
Pleasant Hours, 6 pp., 16to., weekly, sample copies	20
Over 20 copies	24
Sunbeam, fortnightly, less than ten copies	15
10 copies and upwards	18
Happy Days, fortnightly, less than ten copies	15
10 copies and upwards	18
Our Boys, 16to., quarterly	20
Bureau Senior Quarterly (quarterly)	20
Bureau Leaf, monthly	20
Bureau Senior Quarterly (quarterly)	20
Quarterly Review Service. By the year, 20¢ a dozen; 25¢ per 100; per quarter, Go a dozen; 40¢ per 100.
THE ABOVE PAPERS INCLUDE POSTAGE.

WILLIAM BRIGGS,

Methodist Book and Publishing House, Toronto.

O. W. COOPER, S. F. HARRIS,
212 St. Catherine St., Waterloo Book Room, Montreal.

Pleasant Hours:

A PAPER FOR OUR YOUNG FOLK.
Rev. W. H. Withrow, D.D., Editor.

TORONTO, MARCH 24, 1900

ORGANIZE! ORGANIZE!

Dr. Chalmers, describing Methodism in a phrase said, "They were all at it, and always at it." That is the reason of its success. It is because the people, and all the people, had a mind to work that the walls of Zion have gone up. The Sunday-schools and Epworth Leagues have a very important part to play in bringing to completion this Twentieth-Century Thanksgiving Fund. It would be a disaster if these were left to the generous givers of large sums. It is important that every school, however humble, every scholar, however poor, should have some part in this great work.

This has been the secret of the success of the movement in Great Britain, and also of the grand missionary work of Methodism. It is the pence of the poor that the pounds of the rich, that these missionary triumphs have been won, that hundreds of missionaries have been sent to the foreign field, that thousands of prayers have gone up to God for their success. So will it be in connection with our own great mission work, and especially with this Twentieth-Century Movement.

Dr. Potts has already received pledges for about $600,000 of this fund. The remaining $400,000 will be for the hardest, the obtain. It can only be secured by the hard effort of every school and League throughout the entire of Canadian Methodism. We have pleasure in presenting and endorsing to the utmost of our power the following urgent appeal from the General Secretary of the Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund.

To the Sunday school Superintendent:—My Dear Brother, In the good providence of God you are placed in a position of extraordinary responsibility and influence among the young. The place and power of the Sunday school in the kingdom of Christ and in the Christian work of the Twentieth Century can hardly be overestimated.

The Twentieth Century Thanksgiving Fund should appeal strongly to the Sunday school, the Connecticut Man.

have organized with the determination to place before the world within the year, and if possible by October

Truthfully inform me of your action re the T. C. T. F. Ever yours.

JOHN POTTS, Gen Sec
Victoria College, Toronto.

BILLY'S CRUTCH

"Will you please buy me a geranium, sir?"

A musical voice, a bright face, and a beautiful plant, all belonging to a young girl with dimpled cheeks and laughing blue eyes, brought a smile to the old man's face. "It is well," he said, "but I am hurrying through the world too fast, and wants nothing to come into his life that willadden his heart and renew his youth."

I came to a full stop, and would have missed that sight for a good deal. As the girl stood there on that bright October morning, it was difficult to tell where the sunshine left off and where the girl began. They seemed made for each other. It was a perfect match, with the girl the fine line to discern.

"Have you any objection to tell me your name?"

"Oh, no, sir! My name's Gertrude Wilson."

What a beautiful geranium you have there.

"Isn't it lovely?"

Indeed it is, and the finest I ever saw. Where do you get it?"

About three years ago a lady left a slip lying on the sunroom windowsill. She had got the richest dirt I could find, put it in this old paint can, and then set the slip in it, and it began growing right away. I've given it plenty of water to drink, and kept it in the sun-shine as much as possible."

Why, I should think you would love it very dearly."

"Love it! I guess I do love it. It seems just like a part of myself."

"Well, my dear, if you love it so much, pray tell me why you want to sell it?"

"I want to help God answer Billy's prayer. Don't you think it splendid to help answer somebody's prayer?"

"How do you know I believe in prayer?"

"Oh, I am sure you do, for you have such a prayerful look."

She broke out into a merry laugh, and I joined her in it, as I said,

"Yes, I do believe in prayer. Now tell me who Billy is?"

As I made to request, a joyous look came into her face, and her large blue eyes shone with delight, and as the dimples deepened in her cheeks, I beheld a picture that was worth going a long way to see.

"What? Billy? Oh, he's the nicest and best little fellow in all the city! Why, he is goodness, sunshine and music all in one lump. Somebody let him drop when he was quite young and broke his hip, and ever since he has been a cripple. But his leg is the only crooked thing about him. My mother says the Devil never was the best Christian she ever knew."

Well, when she died last year, everybody in our tenement house wanted to adopt Billy; so you see he belongs to all of us."

He pays his way by selling newspapers, and no one with good legs can get around livelier than Billy can with a crutch. But yesterday his crutch caught in a hole in the sidewalk, broke in two, and let him fall. He managed to get in the house, and was not hurt.

Well, last night, just as I was going to bed, I heard him, all alone, partial to mine, in his room, crying between sobs. I could hear it all. Oh,

I shall never forget his words, as he said:

"Dear Lord, I've never complained about my broken hip, and I am willing to go through life with it, but I can't get on without a crutch. I've no money to get another, and I don't know who to ask, so please, dear Lord, send me another one. Mother always told me to go to you when I was in trouble, and so I come now. Please, Lord, answer my prayer for Jesus' sake. Amen."

I was a good while thinking of that prayer, and it was the first thing I thought of this morning, and I began reciting it if I couldn't do something to help God answer Billy's prayer. Well, while I was wondering I saw my geranium, and then I said, "Oh, maybe I can sell it and get enough to buy another crutch!"

"Now you know who Billy is, and why I want to sell my geranium. Won't you give me a good while thinking?"

I was greatly moved and interested, and I'll own up to a great deal of moisture about my eyes as I inquired, "How tall is Billy?"

"Oh," she quickly responded, "I've got the measure of his old crutch, if that is what you mean."

"Yes, that is just what I mean, so if you please, Gertrude, we'll go and see about a crutch."

She led us along to a store where such things were to be procured, nor a great while to get the keeper of the store as much interested as I was in the girl's story. Just the right kind of a crutch was found, and a minimum price put upon it.

"Well," I said, "I'll give you that for the geranium, Gertrude, and it is very cheap at that."

"Oh, thank you!" she said, and her eyes fairly danced with gladness. "I'll take the crutch, please, but Billy mustn't know a word about where it came from. Isn't it just splendid to help God answer Billy's prayer?"

The moisture in my eyes didn't subside one bit, as I said.

"I want you to do me a favour, Gertrude. I am hundreds of miles away from the place where I live, and I can't carry this plant around with me. Would it be too much trouble for you to keep it for me?"

"Yes, ma'am, do you want me to take care of it for you?"

"Yes, my dear, if it will not be too much trouble."

"Oh, you splendid man, you! I'll be glad to do it, and I'll just take as good care of it as I did when it was mine."

I carried the plant, while she carried the crutch, and after reaching the house, Billy was called in to see me, while Gertrude smuggled the crutch into his room, and then, with her face as happy as any flower could be, but not betraying a trace of sorrow or look that she had been answering Billy's prayer.

To sum it all up, Billy has a new crutch, and he is the happiest cripple in the big city. Gertrude helped answer his prayer, and a happier girl don't live. I own the handsome geranium bush I ever saw, and the one who takes care of it for me is as proud as I am of that plant.

WHO WAS AESOP?

BY D. VIRGINIA FARLEY.

Aesop, the celebrated fabulist, was born about 620 B.C. He is supposed to have been a native of Phrygia, but the place of his birth is uncertain, as a number of Grecian cities claim the honour.

While quite young he was brought to Athens as a slave. He faithfully served several masters, but at last, in consideration of his wit and beauty of mind, he was given his freedom.

As I made to request, a joyous look came into her face, and her large blue eyes shone with delight, and as the dimples deepened in her cheeks, I beheld a picture that was worth going a long way to see.

"What? Billy? Oh, he's the nicest and best little fellow in all the city! Why, he is goodness, sunshine and music all in one lump. Somebody let him drop when he was quite young and broke his hip, and ever since he has been a cripple. But his leg is the only crooked thing about him. My mother says the Devil never was the best Christian she ever knew."

Well, when she died last year, everybody in our tenement house wanted to adopt Billy; so you see he belongs to all of us."

He pays his way by selling newspapers, and no one with good legs can get around livelier than Billy can with a crutch. But yesterday his crutch caught in a hole in the sidewalk, broke in two, and let him fall. He managed to get in the house, and was not hurt.

Well, last night, just as I was going to bed, I heard him, all alone, partial to mine, in his room, crying between sobs. I could hear it all. Oh,

I shall never forget his words, as he said:

"Dear Lord, I've never complained of nothing but tongues! Xanthus, violently angry, demanded an explanation of Aesop.

"Master," said Aesop, "you told me to buy for dinner to-day the worst things in the market. Is there anything worse than tongues? Is not the tongue the instrument of strife, of contention, the fomerer of lawsuits, and the source of divisions and wars? Is not the tongue the organ of error, of lies, of calumny, and falsehood?"

Aesop convinced his master that the tongue when used aright, may be considered the best of all things, and the very worst when put to the wrong use. Soon after Aesop was given his freedom he visited Croesus, the Lydian king, whose name was then, and is now, a synonym for great wealth. He said many wise things to Croesus. When visiting Croesus he met a woman who became wealthy by giving alms to the poor, and was acquainted with Solon, the great lawgiver. He went to Athens, and while composing the fable of Jupiter and the frogs for the instruction of the Athenian citizens.

About 664 B.C. Aesop met with a cruel dealer who met him to Delphi with a large sum of money that he wished to have distributed among the citizens; a dispute arose over the matter, and Aesop refused to distribute the money. Thereupon the Delphians became angry, accused him of malice, and hurried him into prison.

It is claimed by some authorities that Aesop left no written fables; but it is a fact, that fables bearing his name were popular in the city of Athens when the literary period was at its zenith.—Evening Herald.

SOMETHING ABOUT GIVING.

"Aunt Lena, if I were rich I would give ever so much to the poor," said Bessie, who had just finished reading about a wealthy lady's charitable acts toward the poor.

"And what would you give them, Bessie?" asked her Aunt Lena.

"Food and clothes to make them comfortable, and to please the little boys, I would give them lots of hats, sledges, and tops; and to the little girls I would give boxes and boxes of dolls," Bessie answered.

"But why don't you give the poor some of these nice things now?" Aunt Lena asked, stroking one of the girl's long curly hair.

"Why, auntie, you know I have no more to eat than Bessie, widely opening her brown eyes."

But you have three dolls, any one of which would no doubt make little Mary Flannagan very happy," auntie said.

"But I think ever so much of all my dolls, and I couldn't bear to part with one," said the little girl.

"Then you would like to be rich so that you could give to the poor only such things as you would not miss out of your great abundance! Is that true charity to the poor, little niece?" and Aunt Lena took the rosy-cheeked face between both hands.

"No, auntie," said Bessie, and then jumped up.

"Where are you going, Bessie?"

"I am going to dress Rosamond and Rosalie, my two next best dolls, and give them to Mary Flannagan and Katie Humble; and I think I will shine the runners of my old sled and give it to Katie's little brother, Johnny, for, though I dearly love to coast down the hill, I think he will enjoy it more, for he has never had a sled."

And the little girl ran off, feeling happy at the idea of making others happy, even at some cost to herself.—Olive Plants.

Catherine and the Joke.

BY ANNIE HAMILTON DONNEL.

Marjorie's merry and sprightly, Full of her whimsies and jokes; Catherine's gentle and winning, Demurest of little folks.

One night, at the sandman's hour, In these little white beds upstairs, These two little maidens lay talking. After their whispered prayers,

"I'll tell you a joke—now, listen! I overheard Marjorie say. And her clear little, dear little voice ran on,

In its own bewitching way.

And then, of a sudden, it ended; A little silence—a pause. And I knew that Marjorie waited, impatient, for her applause.

But nobody laughed in the darkness. "Can't you see a joke, Catherine Park?" Marjorie cried, and Catherine replied:

"Of course, I can; it is the dark."

PLEASANT HOURS.

Children of the Queen.

BY LLEWELLYN A. MORRISON.

Fair Canada, a virgin Land.
Two thousand leagues along,
By mountain, plain and ocean strand.
Rings out in loyal song,
From Arctic roar to Fundy's tide,
They martial tribute bring,
In city way, on prairie wide,
Her loyal children sing.

Hurrah for Canada! The Right
Doth here her cause maintain,
Hurrah for England! Who is might
And majesty doth reign,
Hurrah for Greater Britain! None
Such Empire vast hath seen.
The boys and girls of Canada
Are children of the Queen.

Her fertile vales abundance yield,
Greater than greatest need—
A mighty Nation's harvest field,
By Providence decreed;
Here hills and shoreways, isles and seas,
Show wondrous wealth imperial'd;
While forests waving in the breeze
Are the pine lands of the World.

Kept by our God since Time had birth,
Hidden and unexplored;
The boast and glory of the earth—
A garden of the Lord.
Within her gates the true and brave
Rejoice to find and feel
he broadest freedom heart can crave,
And highest human weal.

White Morning in continual round,
With light and life, for aye,
forever smileth, sunlight crown'd,
On Britain's royal sway.
Amid the regal realms that grace
Her bold Imperial quest,
Bright Canada hath won her place—
The gem of all the rest.
Toronto, Can.

TIM'S FRIEND.

By Annie M. Barton.

CHAPTER IV.

TIM RUNS AWAY.

All Granny Brown's hesitation and doubt vanished in an instant, and seizing Tim's arm, she demanded roughly: "Where's the silver shilling, with a hole in it and a string, that a little boy gave you this mornin'? Come, out with it, and look slippy."

Utterly taken aback, and bewildered by this very unexpected question, Tim blurted out, "Who told you?" then perceiving what a dangerous admission he had made, changed it into a vigorous shout: "It's a lie! I tell you it's a lie! I've never got no shillin'. I've give you every cent I've earned this day, wisher-may-die if I haven't."

But the old woman was not to be hoodwinked.

"You've got it, and the sooner you turns it out the better," she said, with grim sternness.

"I haven't, I haven't," cried Tim; "you may search me all over and you will find nothing." Making a sudden dart, he tried to slip through the door, but the woman caught him by the collar of his ragged jacket, and dragged him back.

"So that's your little game, is it, to slink off and spend your money on the sly? Not if I knows it. I'll find something as 'll make you speak afore you're many minutes older."

"Not the belt! oh, not the belt!" shrieked Tim, as the old woman picked up a thick leather strap with a buckle on one end.

For answer, down came the strap with a dreadful blow, then another and another, while Tim screamed in agony, and fought like a little wild cat, but, alas! could not get away.

"Where is the money, you little imp? Tell me what you've done with it!" shouted the cruel woman, as she continued to beat the child.

"I won't, I won't! You shan't ever have it! Oh, help! help! help! she's killin' me!"

"Ay, and if you don't tell me I will kill you, you wretched little beggar's brat, even if I have to swing for it!"

In her blind rage and fury it seemed as if the old woman would, indeed, fulfil her threat, and kill the boy, so unmercifully did the blows fall upon every part of his shrinking body, while his agonized screams rang through the room and penetrated to the court.

Bob Fletcher, hitherto an unmoved spectator, began to shuffle uneasily, and at last said gruffly. "Drop it, granny, you've done enough; if this row goes on it'll bring the police, and you'll be put into gaol."

What effect this speech might have had will never be known, for at that instant the room door was flung violently open, and a big, coarse, red-faced woman, with visage written unmistakably upon her features, rushed in like a whirlwind.

Before Granny Brown was aware of her purpose, she had dragged Tim from the old woman's clutches, and interposed her own burly form.

"What d'ye mean by ill-treatin' a bit bairn in such a fashion?" she demanded, furiously. "You wretched, good-for-nothing old hog!" And then she used many strong words and expressions too terrible to be repeated here.

For one instant granny stood petrified by the sudden attack, then, with a wild cry of rage, darted forward and tried once again to seize the boy.

"Oh, no, you don't!" said the woman, Bet Waters by name, keeping Tim safely behind her broad back, and with one push of her brawny arm she sent the old woman staggering into a corner of the room. "If ye want a fight, come on, I'm game!"

"Big Bet" was well known in the neighbourhood as an evil-tongued, quarrelsome woman, who liked not better than a row or a fight. Many times she had been brought before the magistrates for assaulting her neighbours; but neither fines nor penalties of any kind prevented her from repeating the offence.

She was not kind-hearted or fond of children, and interfered now upon Tim's behalf more from a desire to "spite" Granny Brown, whom she hated, than from any other motive.

Tim saw an opportunity to escape, and creeping, unobserved through the half-open door sped swiftly away. He stopped an instant at the old, tumble-down building where his precious shilling lay hid, and, having recovered his treasure, ran on again in breathless haste.

Poor child! he did not know where he was going; but upon one thing he was resolved, that never, never would he go back to Granny Brown.

At last, from sheer exhaustion, he slackened speed, and then, sore, and aching in every limb, sat down upon a doorstep to rest.

The short winter afternoon was closing in; a thick, damp fog made the air chill and raw, and the homeless, shivering child felt desolate indeed.

Crowds of people passed along the busy thoroughfare, but not one paused to ask what was the matter with poor Tim. His whole body was bruised by the cruel beating he had received, his head was aching, his eyes swollen with crying, yet nobody pitied or tried to help him.

When the evening grew quite dark, and the lamps were lit, and the shops brilliant with gas, Tim, rendered desperate by cold and hunger, left his resting-place on the door-step, and wandered about the streets, begging from the passers-by.

People, however, did not seem charitably disposed, and at nine o'clock Tim's whole gains only amounted to twopence.

He looked at the coppers ruefully, jingling them in his hand.

"I must have some grub, so it leaves nothin' for a bed. Well, I must just try and find a corner where the wind doesn't blow so hard," he said to himself as he entered one of Lockhart's Cocoa Rooms and marched up to the counter.

For the next half-hour the boy was blissfully happy, seated at one of the little marble tables with a halfpenny mug of cocoa and a very large currant bun before him. He ate these delicacies very slowly, they had cost him three-halfpence; he had only one small coin left. This also was presently invested in a three-cornered jam puff, and once again Tim was penniless.

Very reluctantly he left the warm, brightly lighted room and passed into the cold, dark street. He stood thinking a long time outside, his nose pressed against the plate-glass window, his gaze riveted upon the steaming urns and the young ladies presiding at the counters. How dreadful it was to be homeless and destitute! He thought of little Johnnie and of Johnnie's kind, loving mother, but he dare not go to her to ask for help; he knew Bob Fletcher would be sent by Granny Brown to watch the house, and poor Tim felt he would rather die of starvation than fall into her clutches again.

Suddenly a plan occurred to him: he would go to Sunderland, it was only about ten miles, there he would try to pick up a living, and perhaps some day he might come across his kind friend John Wilson, steward on board the Argus.

Leaving the town, Tim trudged briskly along the high road leading to Sunderland, and though his bare feet tingled with cold, and the raw, damp fog penetrated every fold of his ragged jacket, his heart was light, for he was free.

As the night grew later the boy's footsteps flagged; he felt he could not go much farther without a rest; yet there seemed no place where he could find shelter.

Suddenly a bend in the road revealed a long, deep hole, a pile of loose stones and gravel, a bright fire, and a watchman's little hut, in which was seated an old man smoking a short clay pipe.

Unconsciously the boy crept near and cowered down beside the welcome blaze. How warm the fire was! how delightful after the long, cold walk! If only he might stay beside it and go to sleep, but that he knew was impossible. In a very short time he expected to be ordered away, and thought, with dread, of the long, cold stretch of road that lay between himself and Sunderland.

But the old man took no notice, he was smokin' his pipe, and Tim was feelin' very happy and comfortable, when he was suddenly startled by the words:

Now, then, youngster, be off. You've had a good warm, and the sooner you make tracks the better."

Slowly the boy raised himself from the ground, and came to the other side of the fire facing the speaker.

"And where would you advise me to go?" he asked, in a very grave voice, though his eyes twinkled with fun.

"Why, home, of course, where all kids such as you ought to have been hours since."

"Sorry I can't oblige you, but seeing as I have no home, it's impossible. I'm on the tramp to Sunderland, looking for work. I say, master, you might let a feller rest a bit by your fire, honest truth, I'm about dead beat."

The old man surveyed the ragged, dirty little creature with no unkindly eyes.

"Where's your father and mother?"

"Hain't got any," was the prompt reply; "I'm on my own hook; fact is, I've runned away."

"Where from?"

"Over there," said Tim, indicating by a backward shake of his head the town he had left a few hours before. "The old woman I lived with beat me terrible to-day, so I cut my stick, and I'll never, never go back to her agen. What d'ye think of that, and that, and that?" added the boy, pulling aside his ragged clothing, and showing dreadful marks on arms, legs, and back.

"Poor little chap!" said the man. "Now, I'll tell you what, if you can manage to curl yourself up on the floor of this little box, you can sleep till daylight, and then move on."

"D'ye mean it?" cried Tim. "My word! you are a real decent chap, and no mistake."

Without more ado he crept into the watchman's hut and rolled himself into a round ball on the wooden floor, doing his best not to inconvenience his new friend, for whose legs there was now no much room.

The fire outside glowed and sparkled, and the heat from it was as good as a blanket to poor little cold and weary Tim. In less than five minutes he was sound asleep.

When he awoke it was broad daylight, the fire was still burning clear and bright, and the old watchman, smoking his pipe, was pacing up and down the frosty road near the hut.

Tim felt stiff, and cramped, and sore, but he got up, and came slowly out.

"You've been very good to me," he said simply, "and I thank you for it."

"Here, drink this afore you go, it'll put some heart into you," said the man, handing to the lad a tin bottle full of warm, sweet coffee.

Tim drank it eagerly, and then a big slice of bread and cold bacon was put into his hand, together with three pennies. Tim could not speak, but shook the hand of his kind friend, then turned away, and the old man stood watching until the forlorn little figure passed out of sight.

(To be continued)

REAL WORTH.

A farmer boy named Steve went away from home to the city, and in the course of years became a very successful railroad man. One warm summer day he found himself at home on a little vacation. He was seated under the old apple tree, with the half of a red-hearted watermelon on his lap. His father, busy with the other half, paused now and then to ask Steve about his new job and what he paid for his fine clothes. Presently he wanted to know what they called his boy on the road conductor, brakeman, or what?

"They call me the General Freight Agent, father," said Steve.

"That's a mighty big name, Steve."

"Yes, father, it's rather a big job, too, for me."

"But you don't do it all, Steve. You must have hands to help you load and unload?"

"Oh, yes, I have a lot of help."

"And the company pays them all?"

Yes."

"How much do they pay you, Steve—$2 a day?"

Steve almost strangled on a piece of ore, and the old gentleman saw that he had guessed too low.

"$3?" he ventured.

"More than that, father."

"You don't mean to say that they pay you as much as five?"

"Yes, father, more than twenty-five."

The old gentleman let his watermelon fall between his knees, stared at his boy, and whistled. Then a serious look came in the old man's face, and, leaning forward, he asked earnestly, "Say, Steve, are you worth it?"

Every man ought to ask himself the serious question concerning every success that comes to him in life, whether he is giving value received to the world in service or the success it confers upon him.

Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

IT SAVES THE BOYS.

The best argument I have found in Maine for prohibition was by an editor of a paper in Portland, that was for political reasons mildly opposed to it. I had a conversation with him that ran something like this:

"Where were you born?"

In a little village about sixty miles from Bangor."

Do you remember the condition of things in your village prior to prohibition?"

"Distinctly. There was a vast amount of drunkenness and consequent disorder and poverty."

What was the effect of prohibition?

It shut up all the rum-shops, and practically banished liquor from the village.

It became one of the most quiet and prosperous places on the globe."

How long did you live in the village after prohibition?

"Eleven years, or until I was twenty-one years of age."

"Then?"

"Then I went to Bangor."

"Do you drink now?"

"I have never tasted a drop of liquor in my life."

"Why?"

"Up to the age of twenty-one I never saw it, and after that I did not care to take on the habit."

That is all there is in it. If the boys of the country are not exposed to the infidelity, the men are very sure not to be. This man and his schoolmates were saved from rum by the fact that they could not get it until they were old enough to know better. Few men are drunkards who know not the poison till after they are twenty-one. It is the youth the whiskey and beer men want.

North American Review.

A WATER ENGINE.

The living body is a water engine. It could not carry on the work it does on any other system. It is a much a water engine as a steam engine is, although I cannot deny that other fluids than water will act as motors, for I have seen a spirit engine; but the body is not an engine of this class, and no one can treat it as such. Some try to make it one, live as if it were one, and at last get themselves into so morbid a condition under it they feel as if alcohol were the only natural fluid, even though fatal, so that the smallest accident may snap the machine or break the balance between mind and matter — The late Sir B. W. Richardson.

BAD READING.

A little fellow sat reading a book. When he saw his father coming he put the book out of sight, and stood up in great confusion, waiting for his father to pass by. Now, I didn't like that, and I herewith advise that boy, and all other boys, never to read anything they are ashamed of. Open every page you read, full and free, in God's light and presence, as you must, and if it is not fit to be opened so, do not read it at all.

Bad reading is deadly poison, and I, for one, would like to see the poisoners—that is, the men who furnish it—punished like any other murderers, yes, more, it's far worse to kill the soul than to kill the body.

In my opinion, parents are not half watchful enough in this matter, and if I were you, young folks, I wouldn't stand it.

Ma, remarked the small boy, isn't it funny that everybody calls my little brother a bouncing baby?"

"Why do you think it is funny, William?" returned his mother.

"Because when I dropped him on the floor this morning he didn't bounce a bit. He cried."

I'm Going to Be a Man

BY A. E. GODFREY.

I'm going to be a man, some day,
I'm going to be a man.
And if life's victories I would win,
And conquer self and conquer sin,
Tis just the time now to begin,
If I'm going to be a man.

If I a pince in the world would take
When I get to be a man
Like the heroes brave who in battle died
Or the men who are now their country's pride.
I must fight for the right and in it abide
When I get to be a man.

I must see that my armor is buckled on
If I'm going to be a man.
I must keep my heart both pure and strong.
And yield no pince to the smallest wrong
And this I'll take for my battle-song
I'm going to be a man.

For a coward now is a coward then.
And I'm going to be a man.
And bravery now is the thing for me
Then all the world will plainly see
What sort of a boy I used to be—
When I get to be a man.

LESSON NOTES.

SECOND QUARTER.

STUDIES IN THE LIFE OF JESUS.

LESSON I.—APRIL 1.

THE BEATITUDES.

Matt. 4. 26 to 5. 12. Memory verses, 3-9.

GOLDEN TEXT.

Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God—Matt 5. 8

OUTLINE.

1. The Multitudes and the Disciples. v. 25. 1, 2.

2. Blessings on the Penitent and the Mournful. v. 3, 4.

3. Blessings on the Humble and the Longing. v. 5, 6.

4. Blessings on the Merciful and the Pure. v. 7, 8.

5. Blessings on the Peacemakers and the Persecuted. v. 9-12.

Time.—Probably the early summer of A.D. 28.

Place.—A mountain in Galilee, probably the Horns of Hattin.

LESSON HELPS.

1. "He went up"—That those who desired might follow and hear, while those without special interest would stay away. "Was set"—The ordinary oriental position for giving instruction.

2. "Taught them"—While the Sermon on the Mount seems to have been specially addressed to disciples, it was, as we read in the first verse, suggested by the crowds that gathered to hear the great Teacher.

3. "Blessed"—"Happy." Not a momentary joy, but a permanent state. "The poor in spirit"—Those who feel a deep sense of spiritual poverty. "Theirs is the kingdom of heaven"—The eternal realities in this life and the life to come. In this verse it is given to the "poor in spirit," in verse 10, to the "persecuted for righteousness' sake," in verse 18, to those who "do and teach the commandments;" and in verse 20, to those whose righteousness exceeds the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees."

4. "They that mourn"—In sorrow for sin. "They shall be comforted"—By the infinite consolation of Christ. Those who in their mourning turn toward God are by that very turning blessed.

5. "The meek"—The lowly minded as opposed to the ambitious. They shall inherit the earth. They obtain true wealth in all conditions of life, and in the final result of the Gospel they will have abundant reward.

6. "They which do hunger and thirst after righteousness"—They who have the keenest, most overwhelming of all the appetites. Righteousness includes right acts, right aims, right affections. "They shall be filled"—Every one obtains as much goodness as he really wants and with all his heart seeks.

7. "The merciful"—(Lam. 3. 22, 23; Luke 6. 37; Matt. 6. 12; James 2. 13.) Read the parable of the unmerciful servant in Matt. 18. 8.

8. "The pure in heart"—Purity of heart is "that steady direction of the heart toward the divine life which excludes every other object from the homage of the heart."—Schaff. "They shall see God"—The pure see God everywhere and always, as in a glass and behind a veil; but in heaven they shall see him as he is.

THE SERMON ON THE MOUNT.

(1 Cor. 13. 12, 1 John 3. 2, Rev. 22. 4; 1 John 1. 7)

9. "The peacemakers"—Those who prevent quarrels because of their love to God.

10. "They which are persecuted for righteousness' sake"—This is not the world's view. We are apt to pity the martyrs, but in God's sight they are the truly blest. "Theirs is the kingdom of heaven"—(See note on verse 3.) "Martyrs are made not by the fact of suffering, but by the cause for which they suffer."—Augustine.

11. "Blessed are ye"—Here is an example of all that has gone before. "Revile you"—Speak of you or act toward you contemptuously. "Falsey"—Notice this important condition.

12. "Great is your reward in heaven"—A reward, however, which is "not of debt, but of grace" (Luke 17. 10). "So persecuted they the prophets"—That which naturally brings distress and despair to men often brings delight in the kingdom of God.

HOME READINGS.

- M. The Beatitudes.—Matt. 4. 25 to 5. 12.
- Tu. Being and doing.—Matt. 5. 13-20.
- W. Trusting and resting.—Psa. 37. 1-11.
- Th. Comfort in suffering.—2 Cor. 1. 1-12.
- F. Rejoicing in suffering.—1 Pet. 4. 12-19.
- S. Privilege of the pure.—Psa. 24.
- Su. "We shall see him"—1 John 3. 1-10.

QUESTIONS FOR HOME STUDY.

- 1. The Multitudes and the Disciples, v. 25. 1, 2.

From what places did the multitudes of Jesus' followers come?
Where did Jesus go to teach?

3. Blessings on the Humble and the Longing. v. 5, 6.

Who are promised possession of the earth?

Mark the connection between the third beatitude and the second, and between the second and the first?

What hunger is a source of blessing?
What is "righteousness"?

Can one hunger and thirst after righteousness who has not already some spiritual life?

4. Blessings on the Merciful and the Pure, v. 7, 8.

Why is mercy commended? See the parable of the unmerciful servant in Matt. 18.

Recall the fifth petition in the Lord's Prayer (Matt. 6. 12). Compare James 2. 13.

Who are promised a wonderful vision?
Can the impure see God?

5. Blessings on Peacemakers and the Persecuted, v. 9-12.

What condition of new family relationship is named?

When should persecution be a source of joy?

What two sources of comfort are pointed out to those evil spoken of?

PRACTICAL TEACHINGS.

Where in this lesson are we taught—

- 1. The blessedness of a holy character?
- 2. The profitableness of an upright life?
- 3. The duty of setting a right example?

HAVE ANIMALS MORE JOY OR PAIN?

Our picture shows one of the most ferocious animals uttering his yell of triumph over the capture of his prey, or

THE TIGER AND HIS PREY.

What two classes composed his audience?

By what title do we call this discourse? What blessings did Jesus' teachings bring to the world? John 1. 17.

2. Blessings on the Penitent and the Mournful, v. 3, 4.

Who are heirs of the kingdom of heaven?

What does poverty of spirit imply? What blessedness is in store for mourners?

What does Paul say about a sorrow that worketh death? 2 Cor. 7. 10.

perhaps calling his mate to divide the spoil. Some people have questioned the kindness of a God who permits in his universe such rapine and slaughter as that of the beasts of prey. Prof. Hitchcock has discussed this subject very philosophically.

He asserts, what is true, that after the first stunning blow the victim's nervous system is paralyzed and it feels nothing. Dr. Livingstone, being rescued from the jaws of a lion, states that though sore wounded he felt no pain, but rather a pleasing sensation beneath the lion's paw.

Most lower animals have a much less sensitive nervous organization than man, in some cases they seem almost incapable of feeling pain. The beetle will continue to eat after its abdominal cavity is removed, and some cold-blooded animals will live on seemingly unharmed, after what look like most painful mutilations.

So the amount of pain in the universe, Prof. Hitchcock states, is very much less than we suppose. The amount of pleasure, he argues, is very much greater. The young of all animals have much more vivid sensations of enjoyment than the old. Kittens, lambs, puppies, colts, calves, and the like, skip and gambol as if in sheer delight, and compress more fun into a day than the sedate old cat or dog or horse or cow in a month.

Suppose the average duration of their life is only three years, whereas the extreme limit might be prolonged to twenty, if they were allowed to linger on and die by rheumatism or hunger in old age. These five generations of three years each would enjoy a much greater amount of pleasure, and suffer less pain, than the one generation that should drag out its life, and creep into some lonely place to die by the slow pangs of hunger. Besides, the pressure of the living upon the amount of subsistence would make life much harder to live, and would be a menace to the rights of man.

Of course, every humane effort should be made to lessen the amount of suffering in the case of animals killed for food for man. Often in their long railway journeys they suffer far more than they would in a natural state; but now law and self-interest require that they should be unloaded and fed, and at last killed as painlessly as possible. In the stock yards at Chicago, cattle are shot by an expert on the spinal cord, so skilfully that they drop without a quiver, and hogs by the million, in an incredibly short time, find themselves converted from squealing swine into wholesome pork.

It is often only shallow ignorance that arraigns the kindness and providence of God. A deeper study and more careful thought will vindicate the eternal providence and justify the ways of God, to man and to the lower creatures. These innocent creatures have no guilt to suffer for, have no fear of death or of the judgment that cometh after death. It is man, man fallen from his high estate, and sunken in sin, who "dies a thousand deaths in fear of one."

Rev. J. Jackson Wray's Books...

"A Song O' Sixpence," for "The Bairns." Cloth.....	$0 35
The Man with the Knap-sack; or, The Miller of Burnham Lee. Cloth	35
Primrose Garth. Cloth.....	35
Jack Horner the Second. Cloth..	50
Peter Pengelly; or, As True as the Clock. Cloth.....	50
Matthew Mellowdew. A Story with More Heroes than One....	60
Nestleton Magna. Cloth.....	60
Paul Meggit's Delusion, and Other Tales. Cloth.....	60
Simon Holmes, Carpenter. Cloth	60
The Secret of the Mere; or, Under the Surface. Cloth.....	1 00
The Red, Red Wine. A Temperance Story. Cloth.....	1 00
A Noble Vine; or, Practical Thoughts on Our Lord's Last Parable. Cloth.....	1 00
Chronicles of Captain Cabin; or, the Children's Hour. Cloth. 1 25
Will It Lift? A Story of a London Fog. Cloth.....	1 25
"A Man Every Inch of Him;" or, The Story of Frank Fullerton's School Days. Cloth.... 1 25
Honest John Stalibras. Cloth.. 1 25
Betwixt Two Fires. Cloth..... 1 25
Garton Rowley; or, the Leaves From the Log of a Master Mariner. Cloth..... 1 25
Old Crusty's Niece. Cloth..... 1 25

WE PAY POSTAGE.

WILLIAM BRIGGS,
Methodist Book and Publishing House.
Toronto.

C. W. Seale, Montreal. S. P. Scott, Edinb.