DEBATES AND PROCEEDINGS

—OF THE—

SENATE OF CANADA

—FOR THE—

FIFTH SESSION OF THE THIRD PARLIAMENT OF THE DOMINION OF CANADA, CALLED FOR DESPATCH OF BUSINESS ON THE SEVENTH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1878.

CHAMBER OF THE SENATE.

Ottawa, 7th February, 1878.

This day, at Three o'clock, p.m., the Honorable SIR WILLIAM BUELL RICHARDS Knight, Deputy Governor, proceeded to the Chamber of the Senate, in the Parliament Buildings. The Members of the Senate being assembled, the Deputy Governor was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and that House being present, the Speaker of the Senate said on behalf of the Deputy Governor that he did not think fit to declare the causes for which the present Parliament had been summoned until a Speaker of the House of Commons had been elected according to law. After which the Members of the House of Commons retired to their own Chamber. The Deputy Governor then withdrew.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

This day, at Three o'clock, p.m., His Excellency the GOVERNOR GENERAL proceeded in state to the Chamber of the Senate, in the Parliament Buildings, and took His Seat upon the Throne. The Members of the Senate being assembled, His Excellency was pleased to command the attendance of the House of Commons, and that

The Speech.

House being present, His Excellency was pleased to open the Fifth Session of the Third Parliament of the Dominion of Canada with the following Speech from the Throne :—

Hon. Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In again summoning you for the despatch of business, I am gl'd to be able to say that nothing beyond the ordinary business of the country requires your attendance.

It afforded me great pleasure to have had an opportunity before my departure from Canada of visiting the Province of Manitoba and a portion of the outside Territories, which visit I accomplished during last Autumn. I have now had the advantage of visiting every Province in the Dominion during the term of my Government of Canada.

I am happy to be able to say that the arbitration on the Fishery claims, under the terms of the Washington Treaty, has been concluded. An award has been made by the Commission of $5,500,000 as compensation to Canada and Newfoundland for the use of their fisheries during the term of the present treaty. This amount is much less than that claimed by my Government, but having assented to the creation of the tribunal for the determination of their value, we are bound loyally to assent to the decision given.

The exhibition of Canadian manufactures and products at Sydney, New South Wales, was successfully carried out. I trust that the result will be the opening up of a new market for Canadian goods even in so remote a region as the Australasian colonies, shipments of Canadian productions having already been made. The expenditure will slightly exceed the estimate, but I doubt not the cost to Canada will be amply repaid by the extension of her trade.

Preparations have been uninterruptedly carried on, during the last six months, for securing an ample but select exhibition of Canada's products and manufactures at the great exhibition to be held at Paris during the current year. A further estimate will be required to meet the expenditure. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, as chairman of the British Commissioners, has assigned a most prominent place to Canada in one of the main Towers, where a Canadian Trophy is now being erected.

A very disastrous fire occurred in June last in the City of St. John, which caused the destruction of a large portion of the City, including all the public buildings owned by the Dominion Government. My Government deemed it necessary to contribute $20,000 to assist in relieving the immediate wants of the people who were rendered destitute by so appalling a calamity. I also sanctioned the appropriation of some public money, with which to commence the erection of new buildings for the public business, which acts you will be asked to confirm in the usual way.

During last summer my Commissioners made another Treaty with the Blackfeet, Blood and Piegan Indians, by which the Indian title is extinguished over a territory of 51,000 square miles west of Treaty No. 4, and south of Treaty No. 6. The Treaty has been made on terms nearly the same as those under Treaty No. 6, though somewhat less onerous. The entire territory west of Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains, and from the boundary nearly to the 55th degree of North latitude, embracing about 450,000 square miles, has now been acquired by peaceful negotiation with the native tribes, who place implicit faith in the honor and justice of the British Crown.

Early in the past summer a large body of Indians, under Sitting Bull, from the United States, crossed into British territory, to escape from the United States troops, and have since remained on the Canadian side.

The Speech.

The United States Government made a friendly but unsuccessful attempt to induce these Indians to return to their reservations. It is to be hoped that such arrangements may yet be made as may lead to their permanent and peaceful settlement, and thus relieve Canada of a source of uneasiness and a heavy expenditure.

The surveys of the Pacific Railway have been pressed to completion during the past season. A complete instrumental survey of the route, by the valleys of the North Thompson and Lower Fraser Rivers, has been made with a view to ascertain definitely, whether that route presents more favorable features than the routes already surveyed to Dean Inlet and Bute Inlet respectively. It is believed that the additional information now obtained will enable my Government to determine which route is the most advantageous from Tête Jaune Cache to the sea. Full information will be laid before you at an early day, of the season's work in this and other directions.

I am happy to be able to congratulate you on the abundant harvest reaped in all quarters of the Dominion; and I rejoice that under this and other influences there has been some improvement in the Revenue returns, thus indicating, I trust, that the commercial depression that has so long afflicted Canada, in common with other countries, is passing away.

My attention has been called to some imperfections in the existing system of auditing the Public Accounts, and a measure providing for their more thorough and effective supervision will be submitted for your consideration.

The prospect of obtaining, at an early day, greater facilities for reaching the North Western Territories and the Province of Manitoba, is sure to attract a larger number of settlers every year and, as much of the prosperity of the Dominion depends on the rapid settlement of the fertile lands in those Territories, it is desirable and necessary to facilitate such settlement as much as possible. In order to affect this measures will be submitted for your consideration concerning the registration of titles, the enactment of a Homestead Law, and the promotion of Railway enterprise in districts not touched by the Canada Pacific Railway.

Your attention will be called to a measure for better securing the independence of Parliament.

Experience has shown that certain changes may advantageously be made in the departmental arrangements existing at present. A bill will be submitted to you for accomplishing this purpose without increasing the expenditure, or the number of Departments.

It is very desirable that there should be uniform legislation in all the Provinces respecting the traffic in spirituous liquors. Hitherto that trade has been regulated by Provincial laws, or laws existing from the Confederation of the Provinces, although there has been lately a conflict of authority as to the jurisdiction of the local authorities. A bill making the necessary provision will be submitted for your consideration.

Various measures found necessary for the amendment of existing laws will also be submitted for your approval.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

The Estimates for the ensuing year will be laid before you at an early day. They have been prepared with an anxious desire to provide for all the branches of the public service and the execution of pressing public works within the limits of the expected revenue, without increasing the burden of taxation.

I have directed that the Public Accounts of the past financial year shall be laid before you.

His Excellency then withdrew.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill, entitled, "An act relating to Railways," which was read the first time.

THE SPEECH FROM THE THRONE.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that His Excellency's speech be taken into consideration on Monday next.—Carried.

The House adjourned at 4 p. m.

The Speech.

THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER took the chair at 3 p.m.

After Routine.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL called attention to the fact, that all the words of the form used by the Speaker of the other House at the Bar of the Senate were not entered in the Minutes.

The SPEAKER—I beg to explain to the hon. Senator, that when a Speaker is elected during the currency of a Parliament, it is not usual to ask again the concession of privileges which were asked for and obtained at the beginning of Parliament. For that reason, although the words were spoken the other day, I had some hesitation in answering the Speaker of the other House. The form in which he put it required the answer to be given in the same form. However, it was not thought necessary to put it in that shape, and after consultation with the Speaker of the other House, it was recorded in the Minutes as it appears, which is as nearly as possible in the same form as in the House of Commons in England.

THE ADDRESS.

Hon. Mr. THIBEAUDEAU, seconded by the Hon. Mr. LEWIN, moved:—

That the following Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General to offer the respectful thanks of this House to His Excellency for the gracious Speech which His Excellency has been pleased to make to both Houses of Parliament, namely:—

To His Excellency the Right Honorable Sir Frederick Temple, Earl of Dufferin, Viscount and Baron Clandeboye, of Clandeboye, in the County Down, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Baron Dufferin and Clandeboye, of Ballyleidy and Killeleagh, in the County Down, in the Peerage of Ireland, and a Baronet, Knight of the Most Illustrious Order of Saint Patrick, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, and Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Order of the Bath, Governor-General of Canada, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY :

We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate of Canada, in Parliament assembled, respectfully thank Your Excellency, for your gracious Speech at the opening of this Session.

We rejoice with Your Excellency that in again summoning us for the despatch of business, Your Excellency is able to say that nothing beyond the ordinary business of the country requires our attendance.

We are glad that Your Excellency had an opportunity before your departure from Canada of visiting the Province of Manitoba and a portion of the outside Territories, which visit Your Excellency accomplished during last Autumn. Your Excellency has now had the advantage of visiting every Province in the Dominion during the term of your government of Canada.

We are happy to be informed that the arbitration on the Fishery Claims, under the Washington Treaty, has been concluded, and that an award has been made by the Commission of $5,500,00 as compensation to Canada and Newfoundland for the use of their fisheries during the term of the present treaty. Though this amount is much less than that claimed by Your Excellency's Government, we agree with Your Excellency that having assented to the creation of the tribunal for the determination of their value, we are bound loyally to assent to the decision given.

We rejoice to know that the exhibition of Canadian manufactures and products at Sydney, New South Wales, was successfully carried out. We trust that the result will be the opening up of a new market for Canadian goods even in so remote a region as the Australasian colonies, shipments of Canadian productions having already been made. Though the expenditure may exceed the estimate, we doubt not the cost to Canada will be amply repaid by the extension of her trade.

It gives us great pleasure to learn that preparations have been uninterruptedly carried on, during the last six months, for securing an ample but select exhibition of Canada's products and manufactures at the great exhibition to be held at Paris during the current year. We are prepared to concur in any further grant that may be required to meet the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. Thibeau.

That His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, as Chairman of the British Commissioners, has assigned a prominent place to Canada in one of the main Towers, where a Canadian Trophy is now being erected; we are also very glad to hear.

We regret to know that a very disastrous fire occurred in June last in the City of St. John, which caused the destruction of a large portion of the city, including all the public buildings owned by the Dominion Government. Your Excellency's Government having deemed it necessary to contribute $20,000 to assist in relieving the immediate wants of the people who were rendered destitute by so appalling a calamity, and Your Excellency having also sanctioned the appropriation of some public money, with which to commence the erection of new buildings for the public business, we shall be ready to do our part towards confirming those acts in the usual way.

We are glad to learn from Your Excellency, that during last summer Your Excellency's Commissioners made another Treaty with the Blackfeet, Blood and Piegan Indians, by which the Indian title is extinguished over a territory of 51,000 square miles west of Treaty No. 4, and south of Treaty No. 6, that the Treaty has been made on terms nearly the same as those under Treaty No. 6, though somewhat less onerous; and that the entire territory west of Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains, and from the boundary nearly to the 55th degree of North latitude, embracing about 450,000 square miles, has now been acquired by peaceful negotiation with the native tribes, who place implicit faith in the honor and justice of the British Crown.

We thank Your Excellency for the important information, that early in the past summer a large body of Indians, under Sitting Bull, from the United States, crossed into British territory to escape from the United States troops, and have since remained on the Canadian side, and that the United States Government made a friendly but unsuccessful attempt to induce those Indians to return to their reservations. We agree with Your Excellency in hoping that such arrangements may yet be made as may lead to their permanent and peaceful settlement, and thus relieve Canada of a source of uneasiness and a heavy expenditure.

It affords us great satisfaction to be informed that the Surveys of the Pacific Railway have been pressed to completion during the past season; that a complete instrumental survey of the route, by the valleys of the North Thompson and Lower Fraser Rivers, has been made, with a view to ascertain definitely whether that route presents more favorable features than the routes already surveyed to Dean Inlet and Bute Inlet respectively; and that it is believed that the additional information now obtained will enable Your Excellency's Government to determine which route is the most advantageous from Tête Jaune Cache to the sea. We thank Your Excellency for the promise that full information will be laid before us at an early day of the season's work in this and other directions.

We accept with thankfulness Your Excellency's congratulation on the abundant harvest reaped in all quarters of the Dominion; and we rejoice with Your Excellency, that under this and other influences there has been some improvement in the Revenue returns, thus indicating we also trust, that the commercial depression that has so long afflicted Canada, in common with other countries, is passing away.

Your Excellency having been pleased to inform us that your attention has been called to some imperfections in the existing system of auditing the Public Accounts, and that a measure providing for their more thorough and effective supervision will be submitted for our consideration, we beg leave to say that we shall not fail carefully to consider such measure.

We agree with Your Excellency in thinking that the prospect of obtaining, at an early day, greater facilities for reaching the North Western Territories and the Province of Manitoba, is sure to attract a larger number of settlers every year; and that, as much of the prosperity of the Dominion depends on the rapid settlement of the fertile lands in those Territories, it is desirable and necessary to facilitate such settlement as much as possible. We beg leave to assure Your Excellency that our most earnest and careful attention will be given to the measures which Your Excellency has been pleased to inform us will, in order to effect this, be submitted for our consideration concerning the registration of titles, the enactment of Homestead Law, and the promotion of Railway enterprise in districts not touched by the Canada Pacific Railway.

We shall also carefully consider the measure for better securing the independence of Parliament, to which Your Excellency has been pleased to inform us that our attention will be called.

We thank Your Excellency for drawing our attention to the fact that experience has shown that certain changes may advantageously be made in the departmental arrangements existing at present. The bill for accomplishing this purpose without increasing the expenditure, or the number of departments, which Your Excellency has been pleased to say will be submitted to us, will not fail to receive our most attentive consideration.

We concur with Your Excellency in the opinion that it is very desirable that there should be uniform legislation in all the Provinces respecting the traffic in spirituous liquors. Hitherto that trade has been regulated by Provincial laws, or laws existing before the Confederation of the Provinces, although there has been lately a conflict of authority as to the jurisdiction of the local authorities. The bill making the necessary provision which Your Excellency has been pleased to say will be submitted for our consideration, will meet with careful attention from us.

And Your Excellency may depend upon the careful attention and consideration of this House being given to the various measures found necessary for the amendment of existing laws which Your Excellency is pleased to intimate will also be submitted for our approval.

He said:—In rising for the purpose of moving an humble address to His Excellency in answer to the Speech from the Throne, I must first crave the indulgence of my honorable colleagues for my inexperience, considering the trying position in which I am placed in this Parliamentary life which is new to me. It is customary to tender the great honor of moving the address to the last appointed member of this House, and in this instance, while appreciating fully the honor, I cannot refrain from mentioning that it becomes a pleasure, as it gives me an early opportunity of expressing my deep and sincere respects to my senior and wiser colleagues. Before entering into the consideration of the Speech from the Throne, you will allow me to congratulate our Canadian people upon the worthy representative of the Queen, our Governor-General, who rules so wisely the destinies of our country, and represents so well by his justice, great learning, and great ability, the British Crown and British institutions.

It is a pleasure to me, both as a French Canadian and as a member of this honorable House, to remember the great and universal sympathies that Lord Dufferin has aroused on his passage through villages, towns and cities throughout our vast Dominion. He has inspired our hearts with loyalty to the British Crown, deep attachment to British institutions, and rendered dear and sacred our allegiance to Her Majesty.

I may say in the name of all nationalities of this country, that a deep sorrow will be felt on the day that His Excellency will be called from the shores of the St. Lawrence to place under another sky his eminent qualities at the disposal of the British Crown.

The same regrets will apply as strongly to Lady Dufferin, whose grace, affability, and distinguished mind have adorned our Canadian society.

His Excellency has been pleased to notice the award of the Halifax Commission, which closed the several difficulties intended to be settled by the Treaty of Washington. By the maritime portions of the Dominion the award is looked upon as inadequate for compensating the injuries resulting from American competition on the fishing grounds. Taking, however, higher views of the question, the people of this Dominion generally hailed with satisfaction this temporary settlement of a very vexed question, and they cherish the hope of removing forever, from our relations with our neighbors, a great cause of irritation. If some regret might be expressed in regard to the framing of the Fisheries clauses of the Treaty, we have every reason to be proud of our representatives in the Halifax Commission, both our Commissioner and our Counsel. The ability, discretion, and high-mindedness displayed in the prosecution of our interests will, every one hopes, be recognized by the country and the Government in a handsome manner, in a way commensurate with the importance of the services rendered.

I hope, I may say I do not doubt, that the United States will accept and act upon the award, and, following the noble example of Great Britain after the Geneva arbitration, will pay promptly and without dispute. It behoves a great nation like the American people, to accept loyally the arbitration and maintain high and untarnished the national honor.

I am sure this Honorable House must feel satisfied, as truly as I do, at the highly gratifying success that has crowned the course pursued by the Government of Canada, in undertaking to bring our products and manufactures into a prominent position before our sister Australian Colony of New South Wales. The exhibition was intercolonial, but almost assumed an international character; and I may say that Canada occupied a foremost position in her exhibit of products and manufacturing industries, which attracted the surprise and admiration of the Australian Commissioners.

The manufacturers of Canada have shown a great deal of enterprise in seeking in Australia a market for their goods, and their manufacturing ability has most favorably impressed the Victorian commissioners, and I am glad to hear that they have received already fair orders in consequence of the fine display made by them.

We French Canadians of Lower Canada, still living in the land settled by France, cannot be indifferent to the action of the Government in taking rank with other nations at the next great international exhibition at Paris. There we shall show to the world that under the British flag we have both kept the traditions of our ancestors, and followed the path of progress taught to us by that spirit of enterprise and great energy which distinguish so highly the English people. Canada will, at Paris, at Philadelphia and Sidney, have good right to be proud of the progress accomplished in all and everything that may concern and help the prosperity, glory and strength of a nation.

The Government will be congratulated for the measures they intend to pass in order to promote the settlement of the North-West territories, which are destined to be the granaries of British North America, and to offer a home, in the future days, to millions of people. When the territories of this continent, more advantageously situated as to climate and geographical position, will be over-populated, these are the regions where the waves of emigration will flow, and change the wild lands into populous and thriving villages and cities. The commercial and financial depression, which has so long hung like a pall over this country, is not disappearing so rapidly as was expected. The phenomena which distress all of us are the diminution in the volume of business, and the shrinkage in values. The first is the cause of over trading, and the second is the result of that period of inflation, extravagance and recklessness which followed the American war, affecting greatly this country, so intimately connected by trade relations with the United States. No great financial disaster can befall a commercial country without affecting every commercial nation on the face of the globe, and it is no wonder then that our Dominion felt the blow both in its depressed trade and prostrated industries. When we shall have ceased to import beyond the legitimate wants of the country, we shall cease to over-credit, which is the harmful and necessary sequence to our over importation and over production.

Business men are anxiously looking for a revival of trade, and some confidently expect it as the necessary result of the abundant harvest with which Providence has blessed our country, but, this alone will not restore the prosperity of years past. The late good harvest will no doubt help us greatly and do much to mitigate the severity of the crisis, but so long as the very large and important element in the industries of this country, the lumber trade, remains in the depressed condition in which it is now and has been for some time, we may be assured that the improvement will be slow. And, as there may yet be a considerable time before prosperity is restored, we should set aside extravagance and economize to recover our lost strength. The whole people must exercise frugality and check expenditure.

The Government of the day had and has no control over those facts, and could not in any way avert or mitigate the calamity. The remedy is in our hands, and we can be our own doctors. Let the commercial community import less, credit less, and spend less, and you will see prosperity and happiness once more shine upon our beloved country.

Hon. Mr. LEWIN—In rising to second the address which has been moved by the honorable senator from Montreal, I will only occupy the time of the House for a few moments. I observe that His Excellency, in his Speech, states that during his term of office he has visited every part of the Dominion of Canada. This is a matter of great benefit to this Dominion. I think it is greatly to our advantage that a nobleman of His Excellency's high, cultivated intellect, should have seen for himself our vast resources, and made himself personally acquainted with the great mass of the people who inhabit this Dominion. At some future day, no doubt, his judgment on Canadian matters may be of very great importance to us. I am sure it will always be given justly, and at the same time with kindness, and with partiality towards us. The next subject in the Speech has reference to the arbitration at Halifax, on the Fishery Commission. I must say that before that Commission sat it always appeared to my mind a very difficult and complex thing to reduce to a money value the balance of the advantages which pertained to the Americans under the Washington Treaty. I cannot help speaking of the great ability, research and zeal exercised by the persons employed by the Dominion in that matter. Whether I refer to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, or the officers of the Fisheries Department or the learned Counsel employed, they all displayed a research and patriotism which, I think, demand the highest praise of this House; and I cannot help thinking that Her Majesty's Government are to be congratulated upon the choice they made in their agents and servants to carry out that Commission, as one of the characteristics of a wise Government is certainly to make a good selection of their officers and servants. I know many persons think that the award was not equal to our claims, but it is a matter of secondary importance whether we obtain a million of dollars, more or less. The great point, I think, was to settle an irritating question between our neighbors and ourselves, and I trust the day may be far distant when any other question may arise to mar the harmonious relations which exist between our great neighbors and this Dominion. I see a reference in the Speech to the Exhibition at Sydney last year, and to the coming Exhibition at Paris. I believe that the country, indirectly, benefitted very largely from these exhibitions, and, judging from personal observations of the one made by our people at the Centennial, Philadelphia, they need not be ashamed in any respect to compete with any other nation in the world. I am satisfied that the benefits derived from these exhibitions will amply repay the expense which has been incurred. I now come to the paragraph which refers to the disastrous fire in St. John—a fire which, comparatively speaking, was the most ruinous ever witnessed on this continent. The fire broke out at two o'clock in the afternoon, and by five o'clock there were two hundred acres of burning city, including the whole business part. Buildings as substantial as these Houses of Parliament in which we are now sitting, melted before the fire. There were burnt, I think, thirteen churches, and out of five banks four were destroyed. The City Hall, the Government Buildings, Post Office, Savings Bank, Custom House, and Receiver-General's Office, were all utterly destroyed; and from the best estimate that has been made, there were from twelve to fifteen thousand people left homeless and houseless. I have no doubt the grant which was sent by the Dominion Government will be unanimously voted by the House, and I feel thankful for the promptitude with which it was sent. There is a further reference in the Speech to the treaties made with the Indians in the North-West. There is no doubt that Canada has to a great extent—more than probably any other country,—succeeded in treating with the Indian tribes and races. They have treated them with a degree of justice, moderation, and good faith, which has commanded their respect. It appears that the same course of procedure which commands the respect of civilized nations, will also command the respect of uncivilized tribes. With regard to our distinguished visitor, Sitting Bull, I hope he will soon return to the United States pastures. Attention is called here to various measures, to which, until they are brought before the House, it will be unnecessary to refer. But one is announced for the better securing of the Independence of Parliament—a most desirable measure, which the present law seems to take an extreme view of. It is a matter of congratulation, as His Excellency states at the beginning, that no special occasion has arisen for calling Parliament together. I very much regret to say that prosperity has not returned to this country. Divine Providence has blessed the West, and indeed the whole of our Dominion, with an abundant harvest, but there are many interests still suffering from depression, especially the great lumber trade, to which the mover of the address has referred, and he might also have added the shipping interest, which is also greatly depressed. Still, there is a small increase in the revenue of the past year over that of the preceding twelve months, and I earnestly trust it may indicate a return to more prosperous times. I beg to second the address.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I do not propose to offer any opposition to the passage of these resolutions. I desire to offer my congratulations to the House on the accession of the hon. gentleman who moved the address; and speaking for myself, I am particularly happy that the selection which has resulted in his appearance amongst us has fallen upon a French Canadian. I think it would have been much to be regretted if a French Canadian had not been chosen. In the part of the country where I live, it was rumored at one time, that another selection was intended. I think it would have been a source of regret if any diminution had taken place in this House in the numbers of French Canadians, who are even now too few. I agree in very much that has fallen from the mover and seconder of the Address. There are, of course, points on which we diverge, but I quite agree with very much that has been said by both hon. gentlemen. I particularly concur in what has been said with regard to the visit of His Excellency and the Countess of Dufferin to Manitoba. It was my good fortune to be in that part of the country at the time that their Excellencies' visit was paid, and it seemed to me there was a remarkable earnestness of feeling in the welcome which they received there. There are a great many paragraphs in the Address relating to the North-West—five or six. In some of those I also concur. I agree in the sound policy pursued with reference to the Indians. It was, I think, a wise course to pursue—to secure a treaty with the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains. Undoubtedly the treaties will involve a large expenditure for land which will not be settled for years to come, and no doubt for a long time hundreds of thousands of dollars will figure in our estimates for the territory acquired by these treaties; but that will be a less onerous burden than might have followed any other course. Any other policy might have produced misconstruction and ill-feeling, and possibly feuds with the various tribes whose lands had not been negotiated for. Of course, when the several tribes west of Manitoba, with whom treaties had been made, received their presents and gratifications, it would have excited in those with whom no treaty had been made great irritation, and I think it was prudent, even at the large expense which this will involve to extinguish the Indian title to all the lands east to the Rocky Mountains. It is, undoubtedly true, as stated by the hon. gentleman from St. John, that Great Britain has succeeded in dealing with the Indians in a more peaceful and useful way to them and to us than any other country. I think they owe that very much to the sway which was for so many years held in the North-West by the Hudson Bay Company. It was in their footsteps that the Crown followed in the treatment of the Indians in that part of the country. The treatment which the Aborigines received in this part of Canada was equally fair, and is to be attributed to the honorable dispositions of the officers of the Crown at the time the English people came to this part of the country, and the course pursued by their successors since. At the same time, I do not think we can claim for ourselves all the merit which the hon. gentleman from St. John is desirous of doing. I believe our neighbors have greater difficulties in dealing with their Indian tribes than we have. We have much larger unoccupied territories, and settlement is not proceeding so rapidly in this country as in the United States. I think in congratulating ourselves (and we may fairly do so) on the manner in which we are dealing with the Indians, we must remember that the United States have other and greater difficulties to contend with than we have. I pass over the paragraphs relating to Sitting Bull, and would direct attention to that which speaks of the completion of the Pacific Railway survey, the opening up of communication with the North-West, and the enactment of a Homestead and other laws there. I hope that the communication with the North-West is being opened up, and that this is a sound reason why we should pass such bills as are proposed; but I confess that the course which is being pursued by the Government with reference to the opening up of communication with the North-West Territories is to me a mystery. There were two means of access to be opened up, one was by way of Pembina through the United States, and the other from Thunder Bay to Red River, through our own country. By neither of these routes does it seem to me that the Government is making exertions which promise any immediate result. It is true that large contracts are going on upon the second route to which I have referred, between Fort William and Winnipeg, and we may, perhaps, receive, during the session, from the hon. gentleman, the Secretary of State, full information upon that point, and also when it is expected that through communication will be possible by means of that route. With reference to the other route, delays have occurred, which seem to me to certainly demand explanation—I was going to say which seem inexplicable,—but certainly they demand explanation. There is a distance of sixty miles between Winnipeg and the frontier, over which the rails might have been laid three or four years ago. The rails are there and ready to be used. The excuse given has been that there was no railway to the south of it with which it could connect. That, indeed, is a very serious drawback; still, the laying of the rails, which are there, on the surface of the track, which is ready for them, would have given to the people of Manitoba sixty additional miles of rail, which would have saved them a very large sum in transportation during the last three or four years. I am glad to see my hon. friend from Manitoba here, and I speak in his presence, and subject to correction, when I say that had those rails been laid three or four years ago, a very large sum, indeed, would have been saved to the people of the North-West in transportation, and particularly in view of the heavy charges which were made by the Steamboat Company which does business on the waters of the Red River. It is a mystery to me why the one route, of which I have spoken, has not been opened up earlier, and how the second route is to be used at all for many years to come. I trust that we shall have information on these points. I can unite thoroughly in that part of the Speech from the Throne referred to in these resolutions, which relates to the Fisheries award. I do not think we have derived, under the arbitration, that amount of compensation to which the evidence entitled us. I think the accumulation of evidence was very great in our favor, and our case was very thoroughly submitted, but I do not think we can congratulate ourselves upon the measure of justice which has been done to us, and the award which yet remains to be paid. I can express myself in the language of this paragraph, that the amount is much less than that claimed, and to which the people of this country are entitled, but as it has been the result of mutual reference, we are ready loyally to submit to it. I do not know about the return of prosperity that is mentioned. I agree with both of my hon. friends who have spoken, neither of whom can see in the bountiful harvest which it pleased Providence to bless parts of this Dominion with, any evidence of a return of that prosperity which we enjoyed some years ago. Other causes besides those referred to—European causes to which my hon. friend from Sunbury alluded some years ago—still affect this country, and it must be from some other and stronger sources of prosperity, than the mere results of a harvest in one portion of the Dominion that we must look for a return of prosperity. I do not concur in the language used by the hon. member who moved the Address, in which he says that the Government could not have done anything to avert the depression. I think the Government and Legislature could have done much, and could now do much, not to avert this commercial depression, but to alleviate the depression in manufacturing, which makes the commercial depression the greater. I believe it is the conviction of a great many members who now hear me, that a great deal could have been done, and it would have been a matter of great gratification to the majority of this House and the country, if there had been a paragraph in the Speech from the Throne showing that an effort was to be made to alleviate the depression which has so long afflicted the Dominion. There seems to be in this Speech from the Throne some sort of display of sympathy. It is certainly very cold, and hardly to be called an expression of sympathy, but in previous Speeches from the Throne in this Chamber, there was no expression of sympathy of any kind. Even now it is only an allusion. It does seem that the Government have no sympathy with the unfortunate state of depression which exists all over the country. They express none. When deputations are sent to them they receive curt answers, and when the Speech is made from the Throne the language is of the coldest character, and offers no promise and no hope of any effort being made to ameliorate the condition of the country. I could not but smile at the allusion which my hon. friend from St. John made to the measure to secure the Independence of Parliament. I venture to ask, if it is not too late? And whether the course pursued by the Government in another place which we are not now allowed to mention in this Chamber, has not been to so honeycomb the independence of that body that it is now too late, in the last Session of this Parliament, to pass a measure to secure its independence. The paragraph which proposes to put in some uniform and complete shape the laws relating to the traffic in intoxicating liquors will meet with the sympathy of the House, and especially my hon. friend from Sarnia, who has so long taken an interest in this question. I hope the measure will be such an one as will recommend itself to the favorable consideration of this House, and that we shall be able to enact a law which will at all events open the way to my hon. friend from Sarnia, and others interested with him, to such measures as are likely to result in the depression (to use one of the words of the Speech), in the traffic in liquor. I do not propose to move any amendment to the Speech, and I am happy to coincide with some parts of it. I wish there was any evidence that the Government were going to do anything to seek to relieve the depression from which the country suffers, or that we were, during this Session to do anything which would result to the advantage of the country, but there seems to be no prospect of usefulness. We are told there is nothing to call us together except the ordinary business of the country, and we are not promised any measures likely to belie this somewhat bald announcement of the reasons for summoning us together.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—I am sure every gentleman who listened to the hon. the leader of the Opposition, concurs in the sentiments he expressed towards the new member who moved the Address. I think the evidence he gave in moving it, proves that the House has received a great accession in his presence here. He is a gentleman largely conversant with the business of the country, and is in every way competent to express his views. I am happy to hear my hon. friend congratulating the Government on the selection they made of the Senator from Montreal. The hon. gentleman has not indulged in any strong criticism of the Speech from the Throne on this occasion. He concurs, and I have no doubt, this House and the country will concur in the greater part of the Speech. He takes exception in the first place, however, to the reference made to the new avenues that are now being opened up to the North-West. He speaks of two routes, one from Lake Superior, and the other through the United States, with one of which he thinks we might have used greater dispatch. Of course the route from Lake Superior to Selkirk is being pushed forward as fast as the finances of the country will permit, and very considerable progress has been made on the other, between Winnipeg and Pembina. He thinks the rails should have been laid in order to facilitate trade going into Manitoba. I beg to differ from him. It would have afforded the Government great gratification, if they could see by going on with that branch that they could have facilitated the settlement, or lessened the freight or transportation into Manitoba and the North-West. My hon. friend is aware also that there is no railway communication up to the boundary past two or three years, have had repeated communications with parties who are in-

interested in the line south of the boundary, and forming a junction between the Northern Pacific Railway and the Pembina Branch, but owing to difficulties, which we need not now discuss, it was impossible to have that hiatus filled. I believe I am safe in saying that by August next not only will the gap between Pembina and Winnipeg be filled, but an all-rail route will be opened up. The laying down of rails between Winnipeg and Pembina would have been of no advantage, inasmuch as the River Company would have controlled the traffic. It is quite obvious that the company in possession of the upper end of the river would have control of the fifty or sixty miles north of the line, and, therefore, no advantage would have been secured by the construction of that portion. However, I am happy to inform the House that we have information which is reliable that this gap will be constructed, and before the month of August next, the all-rail route will be secured to Winnipeg. My hon. friend, who has always taken a broad view of the Indian question, concurs with the Government in the mode of settling Indian claims. It was impossible, after commencing to settle with the Indians west of Manitoba, not to continue the arrangement with them up to the Rocky Mountains. It was impossible, even in the construction of the telegraph line, to obtain the right of way without promising to make treaties with them. It was impossible to go in there with any hope of peaceable settlement without dealing with them in the same way as with the Indians in the eastern part of the country. The policy, not only of this Government, but of preceding ones, has been one of great liberality in dealing with the Indians, and we know that the cost of securing territory from them in that way has been much less than the less merciful policy of the United States. I do not agree with my hon. friend that the cause of the failure of the United States to secure peaceable possession of the Indian lands is that they have a smaller unoccupied territory. I attribute it rather to their inability to prevent white men from trespassing on the Indian reserves. The difficulties with the Sioux are due to the attraction which the gold in the Black Hills has offered to the whites, and wherever such attractions have existed, it has always been found impossible to prevent the whites from encroaching upon the reserves ; and from their difficulties with the Indians have arisen national wars with the tribes. I quite expected that my hon. friend would have adverted, as he has done, to the subject of the prevailing depression, but I think the country, if not the House, will concur in the views expressed by the hon. gentleman who moved the Address, that the depression is really owing to causes over which the Government has little or no control. Among the causes that he mentioned as leading ones, were the stagnation in the lumber trade, and the inability of other nations to buy our products. Another was, as he rightly described it, the extravagance which prevailed in former years of inflation, and the tendency of our people to buy more than they were really justified in purchasing, merchants importing larger stocks than people were willing to buy, and forcing them off on long credits, and inflating trade in an unwarrantable degree. Some hon. gentlemen would lead the House to believe that the Government, by some legislative action, could have stimulated the trade of the country and increased our wealth. I fail to see how any legislation could have given vitality to any special trade without injury to other interests ; and if we went into any species of legislation by which every trade would be subsidized by the Government, what would be the result? We would make Canada a much more expensive place to live in than at present. Certainly, a period of depression is no time to try experiments in our fiscal policy. We see that the United States is suffering more than Canada. I do not hesitate to say that if the figures and facts were gone into that it could be satisfactorily proved. From my reading of that question during the past year or two, I have come to the conclusion, that the suffering is much greater in the over-protected United States than in Canada—that there is a far greater number of persons, according to population, out of employment there than here. As I said on a former occasion in this Chamber, if there had been many factories here, there would have been a larger number of operatives thrown out of employment at a time when they could find no other work. Take, for instance, the boot and shoe industry, which has been very successful in this country. I think the amount of capital invested in that industry is $15,000,000, and yet, though the importations of boots and shoes have been very small, not over $300,000 per annum, there have been failures in that trade, and why? Because the purchasing power of the community was exhausted ; because they chose to manufacture more than the people could consume. That would have been the result in every other trade. If other countries were willing to purchase our goods, there would then be some reason for stimulating trade of that sort, but we know very well the nation with which we have the largest trade, the United States, has built a wall around itself, and will buy from us nothing that they can get at home. The hon. gentleman has made some slight allusion to the act which has more particular reference to another Chamber, and he thinks that we ought to have prepared legislation of that kind before. I might say the same of the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member. If he will look back into the history of the last eight or ten years, he will find that gentlemen who supported his Administration, and some who were in it, were in the habit of violating the Independence of Parliament Act, as frequently, if not oftener, than the friends of this Government. It has grown up in this country, and for years has been utterly ignored. It is necessary in the future that the independence of the representatives of the people shall be secured as far as legislation will permit it.

Hon. Mr. ALEXANDER—I do not propose to discuss any of the subjects or questions referred to in the Speech from the Throne, not any one of which can be said to be of very great significance. That Speech, which is certainly one of unusual length, cannot but be disappointing to the country ; for there is not one word in it to indicate that the Government realize to themselves the serious, and grave position, into which the trade, and industries, of the country have been drifting. No reference is made to the wide-spread anxieties, which are at this moment felt and expressed in every trade centre of the Dominion. The Speech would almost breathe the impress that what our rulers chiefly care about, is that they should be enabled, by the Revenue, or borrowing powers, to meet our public obligations. Is there no responsibility resting upon the Government and Legislature, to foster and strengthen by skilful and able administration all the great and varied interests of this Commonwealth? If we search all the utterances of the leaders of the party now in power, how can we put any other interpretation, than that they are of opinion that they can do nothing to improve our present condition? Are we, as the people's representatives, to look on with passive indifference, upon the vast and endless number of enterprising men, oppressed with anxieties and impending disaster, before them?—and upon our banking institutions, whose standing may in general be regarded as a faithful index of the state of trade, sinking, gradually, under the general depression and wide spread insolvency? While nine out of ten men to whom you speak, wherever you go, solemnly and anxiously assure you that they are not holding their own,—that they are losing ground, and express despondency in regard to the future, the Government of the day have the temerity to declare in the speech from the Throne, "That they are glad to be able to say, that nothing beyond the ordinary business of the country requires our attendance." Is the Senate of the Dominion prepared to declare this to be fitting and seemly language, considering the circumstances under which Parliament is at this time convened? Is this the spirit and policy of public administration, which a people, so remarkable for their industry and enterprise, have a right to expect from their representatives, and rulers? I wish to God that I possessed the health and strength, and power, to unfold upon the floor of this chamber all the means by which we could hope to restore to this country the prosperity which prevailed during the first five years of Confederation. Grave mistakes have been made in the past, by the Government and by the Municipalities in loading the whole country with debt, not unfrequently for enterprises which never should have been undertaken. The public debt of England is a source of strength and not of weakness, because chiefly owing to their own citizens, and the wealth is retained in the country. The annual interest of our public obligations, which is very large for so young a country, goes to foreign creditors, while the taxation in all our cities has become oppressively burdensome to all classes. I do not purpose upon this occasion to particularize the numerous instances of wasteful expenditure by the present Government, which, I am sure, have been sufficiently dwelt upon, by a portion of the Press. No matter what Governments profess, they seem to be carried away by the pressure and influence of their supporters and friends, to enter upon expenditures which no man can approve. The public debt has thus been unduly increased, while the commerce of the country and the taxpaying power have not increased in the same ratio. I am of the number who hold that the stagnation or depression, which we now experience, might have been greatly alleviated by a more statesmanlike policy upon the part of our Government. I cannot understand any enlightened man at the present day applying abstract theories of political science to a country of only four millions, lying alongside the great Republic with its forty millions, maintaining an extreme Protective Policy, which amounts to almost entire exclusion of everything which we manufacture. What justice or reciprocity is there in that? I freely confess that I am of the number who think that we should hold our own markets for our Canadian people, and that we need not be afraid, but that the competition amongst our own manufacturers in every branch of trade will be such as to bring down prices to the consumer. With such means of education and training, and so much enterprise as our citizens possess, we need be afraid of no monopolies enduring for any period. If we desire to see the Dominion hold its own and prosper, we must bring to the front our ablest public men, whatever party they may belong to. The interests of the country must stand above the interests of party. We want the blessing of a more frugal and able administration of our affairs. We must have a more judicious expenditure of the public moneys. We must endeavour to throw in a large additional population into Manitoba, by securing to them at the earliest moment, railway connection with the markets of the world. We ought to make the lands in the Northwest tributary to the carrying out of that object, upon the principle adopted by the Western States—that we ought to be influenced and guided by more patriotic views and principles, to sustain and protect every Canadian institution and interest. Our astute neighbors, the Americans, are gradually picking up our foreign and domestic trade. Their insurance companies are carrying off a large amount of money annually from the country. Their manufacturers, if not met with corresponding astuteness, by our placing in power our ablest public men, will gradually shut up a large number of our workshops and throw out of employment a large population. Then again, have we always been guided by a proper spirit of patriotism, in upholding our own great Canadian railways to which we owe the great and rapid development of our country? Have we invariably shown that consideration to those English capitalists who put so many millions sterling into those railways, no doubt as an investment of money, but from which we have received all the benefit, while they have been receiving no dividends upon such a large amount of share capital. Those two great Trunk lines, as the other railways, have necessarily been worked on ordinary railway business principles. If we are to have railways properly steeled and appointed in all their plant and stock, so as not to endanger human life, and serve all the interest of trade, we must admit that they ought to earn their way fairly. No one in this Dominion can with truth allege that excessive railway fares or freights have ever been charged, but because from competition, those roads have been driven to carry from certain competing points at under-rates and ruinous rates, they should therefore carry from all points at such rates, simply means the whole of such roads being very soon brought to bankruptcy and ruin. The interests of trade would not longer be served, and life would no longer be safe. From this desire to drive our railways to carry at rates which can never sustain any road, have we not launched our municipalities in overwhelming debt, involving taxation which is oppressive to all classes at this moment? If the public, by such means, obtain a temporary advantage, it can only be for a short time, because roads to be properly equipped and sustained, must earn their way. Then again, we are going to be asked, this session, to grant legislation to hand over a leading through Trunk Line to the New York Central, which, if obtained, will strike a ruinous blow at our own Canadian railways, and tend to bring them to the ground. Should we not feel a deep interest in sustaining, by every means in our power, our own first-class roads, as an essential element to our prosperity? Let us behold how our neighbors in the great Republic strengthen and build up every great national interest. We, in our Canadian Legislature, appear to be wanting in that broad patriotism. We have a class of politicians who employ themselves in schooling the people to demand some delusive, small advantage and gain at the sacrifice of the general well-being and prosperity. If we are desirous to secure the great onward progress of this country, we must make it our study to protect and sustain all those great interests and be prepared to sacrifice all small selfish considerations.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT.—I wish to touch on two or three points in the Address merely, and will not long occupy the attention of the House. We all concur in the opinion that His Excellency the Governor-General has made himself thoroughly acquainted with every province in the Dominion. And it will be a matter of so great importance to our future, that the knowledge that he has thus acquired of our people and resources, can be made available in the Parliament of Great Britain, when subjects connected with the interests of Canada come up for discussion, that every one will heartily join in that portion of the Address. With regard to the Arbitration on the Fisheries I entirely think no man could be found in this Dominion superior to Sir A. T. Galt, in conducting it. I have had an opportunity of knowing and thoroughly estimating his statesmanlike qualities upon the Confederation delegation, and I regret now, as I have before regretted, that his great services, his valuable abilities, are not within the walls of Parliament. The Speech refers to the great calamity that has occurred in the City of St. John, and I am sure I express the feelings of every inhabitant of the City and of the Province of New Brunswick, in saying that the warm sympathy evinced and large contributions given not only from every portion of the Dominion, but from our neighbors in the United States and from Great Britain, to assist thousands who were suddenly burned out of house and home, many of them without more than the clothes which they had on their backs at the time, is a matter of deep gratitude. St. John is another extraordinary instance of what well directed labor can accomplish. The fire occurred on the 20th of June last, and now, I am informed, there are some 900 buildings—many of them very large and expensive—erected in various portions of the city.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL.—How many were destroyed?

Hon. Mr. WILMOT.—I cannot give you the exact number destroyed, but it was nearly three hundred acres thickly covered with buildings.

Hon. Mr. LEWIN.—About three thousand houses.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT.—The estimate was that the loss amounted to between twenty-seven and thirty millions of dollars, on which there was about seven millions of insurance. You can imagine the destruction when, what took ninety years to build up was swept away in three hours by the hurricane of flame, which passed over the devoted city. There is one portion of the Address which has been referred to by the leader of the Opposition, the mover and the hon. Secretary of State, relating to the continued commercial depression. I must say on this point, I cannot concur in the views expressed by my hon. friend, the Secretary of State. My opinions are pretty well known with regard to our fiscal and commercial affairs. While I believe we have to depend on Providence for everything we possess, I am not prepared to be simply a waiter on Providence. I think we ought to do something for ourselves, and I say, in this Dominion, with all our various resources, if the Parliament and Government of the country cannot devise some ways and means by which the difficulties which now surround our commercial and industrial interests can be alleviated, they do not exercise that wise statesmanship which our depressed industries have a good right to expect. Take France as an instance, and I am sure that every French Canadian gentleman on the floor of this House, must look with pride to the country from which they claim descent. We see that nation, after going through a most disastrous war, the cost of which amounted to more than one-half of the national debt of Great Britain, yet they are to-day the most prosperous country in Europe. They have to a great extent attained that prosperity by their wise commercial and fiscal legislation. When we look at the United States alongside of us, with their protective policy, and the riots and labor troubles which have occurred there, not, in my opinion, in consequence of protection, but from a determination to so restrict the circulation by withdrawing their greenbacks, which cost the country no interest, in order to come back to specie payments, and issuing debentures bearing interest, a large amount of which were sold in Europe, and taxing the people to pay interest, while the security was as good for the greenbacks as it was for the debentures. The reduction in the circulation between 1865 and 1873 was $1,200,000,000, the circulation of all sorts being in the former year $1,900,000,000, and in the latter $700,000,000; the consequence was the panic of 1873, and wide-spread difficulties ever since. When we turn, to Great Britain, where the policy of so called free trade has been adopted, we find great commercial difficulties and general depression existing there also. In the last year their imports exceeded their exports £120,000,000 sterling, so that the so called free trade, which is a system of free imports, and not a free interchange of commodities on equal terms, which is the only sound system of free trade, is equally at fault with protection; but the subject that we ought to understand lies deeper than either protection or free trade; it is the character of the medium by which commodities are exchanged. I am a freetrader if the policy was carried out by being applied to gold. There the freetraders stop, and then their great panacea turns out a failure. I, last Session, stated my opinion of the cause of the great commercial depression that prevailed as being the withdrawal of £220,000,000 of specie from the various commercial centres to pay the war indemnity from France to Germany; the specie was the base of an immense amount of credit, and when the base was withdrawn the whole fabric of credit, or, rather, debt fell; but France, making the notes of the bank legal tenders, sustained her commerce and industries, increased her revenues, and she now holds one-half, as it is estimated, of all the gold and silver coin in Europe. Therefore, the whole cause of the difficulties in the commercial world is by not understanding this most important subject of money or currency, which is the life blood of trade, and should be the equitable distributor of wealth. Inflation, as it is termed, was a necessity in the United States, consequent on their civil war, but we in Canada derived a very profitable trade from it, as everything we could produce, manufacture, or import, found, during the war, a ready market in the United States. While I entirely concur with the hon. gentleman who moved this Address, that we have been importing too much; we have been expending too much, and there has been a system of extravagance, not only among public bodies, but among individuals; yet, short expenditure is not the remedy for our difficulties. There are just two elements in the wealth of every country: the productive labor and natural resources, and we want wise legislation by which one can be applied to the other in order to create national wealth. That is the true principle, and our Dominion notes, properly secured, will furnish the medium.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear! Hear!

Hon. Mr. WILMOT.—But my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, says the United States have built up a wall between us, and I suppose we must necessarily, therefore, take from them as much as we can, thereby displacing the labor of our own people in our own Dominion, in order to do what? In order to get our goods cheaper. Cheapness is a comparative term. It depends upon what price a man can sell for, in order to buy. Take the farmer who has sons about him, and is able to sell more than he buys. He prospers; but if, on the contrary, he lets his sons lie idle because he thinks his neighbor can supply him cheaper, he would soon find it a dear way of buying cheap. If we buy more than we sell, and have to pay out gold, which is our only money, the very basis of the circulating medium of the country—if we have to bring in fifty millions of dollars worth of goods from the United States, and sell to them only twenty-seven millions of dollars worth, the balance must be paid for, either in gold or in debt, or in bankruptcy. That is the result of it; it cannot be anything else; and I say under the circumstances, I perfectly agree with what Sir A. T. Galt stated in his letter some time since, that he was prepared to adopt a retaliatory policy with the United States, so that if they will not buy from us, we will not buy from them. But the great question after all is the question of money—the medium of exchange. I would not have said anything about this, but I am not prepared to take it for granted that nothing can be done to remedy the present state of things. I will not subscribe to that doctrine. I believe a great deal could have been done. My hon. friend knows I have not agreed with the fiscal policy of the Government, but at the same time, I state distinctly, if they carried out freetrade to its natural sequence, I am a freetrader. They stop, however, just where freetrade should begin, that is in gold. What astonishes me is that other nations of the world have not studied the question as they have studied it in France, and relieved themselves from the difficulty caused by the large absorption of bullion, which is the principal cause of bringing about the great commercial disturbances that still exist in the commercial world. There is one thing that we can all certainly be thankful for, that is the abundant crop that has come in to relieve us, from one end of the Dominion to the other. If we had a second short crop, God only knows what would have been the consequences, but still there are commercial difficulties, and failures are occurring in the different commercial centres of the Dominion. We want something besides good crops; we want a sound fiscal policy initiated by the Government of our country.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD.—So much has been said with reference to Manitoba and the North-West, it seems to me I should be allowed to say a word or two on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne. Reference has been made to the visit of His Excellency the Governor-General to Manitoba. I must tell you, hon. gentlemen, that in the Province of Manitoba we have certainly a feeling of gratitude for the honor conferred upon our province by that visit. Nothing has contributed more to the true progress of the North-West than the visit of His Excellency, and the speeches which he delivered on different occasions to the public, when called on. I was reading to-day in a Manitoba paper that these speeches were now being printed in England, and the remarks on the subject have so merited my appreciation that I will quote them for this hon. House. The gentleman who has undertaken the task of writing these speeches, in regard to the final speech of His Excellency, says:—

“But these utterances were all surpassed by Lord Dufferin, in taking leave of Manitoba, in a speech made at a farewell banquet at Winnipeg. * * * * *

No wonder that the Canadian pioneers who listened to these grand tones and magnificent periods were quite wild with excitement. The reports in the Canadian papers speak at almost every sentence of tremendous applause and tremendous cheering; the Canadians were listening to their own feelings with regard to the beautiful regions which they inhabit, put into language of unrivalled purity and beauty.

A romance has passed into the daily life of every one of them, they were being nerved for further effort, and encouraged in their great and glorious mission of relieving the misery and poverty of Europe by pouring into the lap of their original mother the rich abundance of the West.

Such a speech has a distinctly elevating and ennobling effect upon those who heard it, and upon those who have read it.

To the teeming millions of the Old World, looking for careers for their sons or for themselves, such a speech must operate almost with the inspiration of revelation; it opens up a new prospect, it speaks of a land almost unknown a year or two ago, but which is found, to use a metaphor of the Scriptures, to be flowing with milk and honey.

In the lonely cabin of the Irish peasant, the over-crowded cottage of the English laborer, in the mechanic's work-room, such words must enter as words of life and hope.

To the farmer struggling against high rents and unprofitable harvest; such a speech opens up quite a new vista of the future.”

I may add, hon. gentlemen, that, for my part I would like to see that fine country taken possession of not only by settlers from the Old Country, but by the sons of the inhabitants of the older provinces of the Dominion. I give my full concurrence in the expressions used by His Excellency in his appreciation of the country, and I am sure that his visit will be a great source of profit for us all, and for the Dominion in general. I see by the Speech from the Throne that a satisfactory treaty has been made with the Indians. Indeed, I think peace and order are prevailing amongst the Indians at the present time, and there is a feeling of satisfaction which should be a matter for gratification to the whole Dominion. When we see all the trouble and bloodshed caused by Indian wars in the

Hon. Mr. Girard.

United States, we must certainly approve of the policy which has been followed by the Canadian Government with reference to the Indians of the Dominion. A large sum of money has been expended, but it certainly cannot be compared with what has been expended for the same purpose by the United States—not only money but in the sacrifice of their best men—and even yet there is in our neighbourhood a feeling of uneasiness and far which must stop all settlement for some years to come. The Speech refers to Sitting Bull. Certainly it will be admitted that Sitting Bull is a dangerous man, and the Government cannot take too much precaution on his account. There is no doubt that a great responsibility rests with the Government in reference to Sitting Bull and his band. I think he is now on United States territory, if the information which I have received is correct. I see the hon. Secretary of State says no, but I ascertained in passing through the United States that he has gone over from our side of the line. If such is the case our responsibilities are increasing, for he will be a cause of uneasiness. Amongst our people he is feared, and it will be the duty of the Government to see that he and his band are placed on some reserve where he can be looked after with the greatest care and precaution. It is certain that the mind of that warrior is never satisfied, and though he may for a while exhibit an appearance of gratitude for the good treatment he has received from the Canadian Government, he will on the first occasion that offers, be disposed to give trouble and make the American authorities feel yet that Sitting Bull is not a dead man. The Speech foreshadows the fact that we are to have a chance of coming more into communication with the world than we are at present. It is certainly a great satisfaction for the people of Manitoba to hear this, but it seems to me, it is to be regretted, that it has taken so much time to give us this communication. The remark has been made that the Pembina Branch could have been constructed a great deal sooner, instead of leaving the rails to rust on the banks of German Creek, a small river where thousands and thousands of them are piled. It would have been better to have them laid on the track than to have allowed them to spoil without benefit to any one. Notwithstanding the delay, if we are to have that road, it will be received with the greatest satisfaction. It is to be regretted, that the first opening of the road was not one that would give us direct communication with the outer world, but I suppose in the course of a year, we will have a road from Winnipeg to Fisher's Landing, which we have now to travel by stage. The effect of it will be—and it will very likely last for some years—that the trade, instead of coming into the bosom of the Dominion, will flow into Minnesota and other Western States. The course of trade is like the course of a stream, when once it has taken a particular direction, it is not easy to change it. The people of Manitoba will be accommodated, but the Dominion will not have any profit from the immense amount of money which has been expended, and which is to be expended, until direct communication is opened to Lake Superior. In common with the rest of the Dominion, I am proud to be able to state to this honorable House, that the Province which I have the honor to represent, has not to complain of bad crops. Last year we had good crops, but what will be the profit on them to meet our obligations? We have no outlet for our grain, and our wheat has been sold at fifty cents per bushel. We have an obligation which we have contracted with the Government. At the time when the country was starving, after the crops were destroyed by the grasshoppers, the Government came nobly to our assistance. They gave us seed wheat and provisions. Now the people are called upon to pay for these same things, which were accepted as a loan, and which they expected they would have to pay for at no distant day. But the difficulty is this: the railroad is not built, and we are obliged to give at least four bushels of wheat for each bushel we received two years ago. This is not altogether the fault of the Government, but if the money granted for railway purposes had been expended a little sooner, we would have had a chance of sending our grains to the best market. No doubt facilities will be given for reaching the North-West Territories, but I suppose they will be limited to the completion of the surveys. I don't expect, for my part, to see the road built, as I don't think it is the serious intention of the Government to extend the Pacific Railway beyond the Red River. Immense sums of money have been expended for the surveys of a line which will be of no benefit. If the different sums, or part of them, which have been expended for those surveys had been applied to the location of some railway communication in the Province, my opinion is—and it is the opinion of the people of Manitoba—that at the present time the Province would have been run through by railways from north to south, and east to west. I see with pleasure and satisfaction, that it is the intention of the Government to terminate the difficulties in relation to the liquor traffic. I know there has been misunderstanding between the different Provinces and the Dominion Government, and it is well that we should know where the responsibility rests, with reference to the traffic in liquors. At the present time, while so much is being done in every Province to establish temperance principles, the Government cannot do too much to favor the friends of temperance in every way that they possibly can. It appears that we will not be called upon during the present Session to do anything except the ordinary work assigned to the legislature on such occasions. Sometimes I feel that there is more than one Sitting Bull in the way; certainly there are many responsibilities on every side, but I have no doubt we will find in the members who are now charged with the fate of the Dominion, the necessary wisdom to administer the public affairs of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL.—The occasions have been so very few and far between when I have been able to agree with the Government, in their policy, that I should be wanting in my duty if I did not express my satisfaction with that clause in the Speech which announces that it is the intention of the Government to give some attention to the liquor-traffic question. What may have led to this—whether the late decision of the Supreme Court, or whether it is that the voice of 500,000 people, petitioning for relief, has at last reached the ears of the Government, or whether it is the near approach of that day when they shall be called to give an account of their stewardship to constituencies who are interested in having this question settled, I care not; I am satisfied with the simple fact that the Government have at last recognized the fact that this question is one of sufficient importance to merit a place in the Speech, and to demand the attention of the Legislature. I do not, however, feel that unmixed satisfaction which hon. gentlemen seem to think I should, at the announcement of the proposed legislation, because I am a little suspicious of what we are to get, and because I may not be able consistently to support the measure which may be introduced. We are promised a measure simply to secure uniform legislation throughout the Dominion. If that means that we are to be further fettered with a Dominion law sanctioning and licensing this traffic, and that its interests shall be more deeply and securely entrenched among us by our highest legislative authority, then it is a measure I shall oppose. If it is to restrain the traffic or tend to lessen its evils, I shall most likely support it, even though I may consider it defective; if the Government will take the existing law of Nova Scotia—although it is a license law, and I don't believe in licensing the traffic—still, if they give us that law, I will thankfully accept it as an improvement, and as bringing the law into uniformity with the best standard we have ever yet had in the Dominion. Whatever shape it may take, the Government will have my most cordial support and best efforts to assist them in passing a measure which will in any way tend to lessen the amount of that enormous evil which has hitherto so fettered our country. I hesitate not to say, that proper legislation on this subject will do more to promote the prosperity, happiness and true greatness of this Dominion than any measure, however important, of a fiscal nature, or even than that great enterprise, the Pacific Railway. No family, no interest, no rank or station in life is free from the baneful effects of the liquor traffic, and I shall hail with joy the smallest step in advance towards the satisfactory settlement of this most important matter.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH.—It was not my intention to say anything to day on this subject, as I did not consider that there was sufficient matter in the Address to cause any discussion, but it has elicited several remarks from my friend the Secretary of State, and other hon. gentlemen, which I feel I cannot let pass without some comment. In the prologue (the first paragraph) of the Address, it leads almost to nothingness; it follows with a dozen or more paragraphs in which the Government propound no policy—nothing to go before the country with or to dispose of. A Reform Government should, according to the principles of Reform, always have something to reform. Is there nothing to reform, when under the present Government, we have less money, smaller revenues, heavier taxes and a larger debt? I should think when the Government come down with a Speech from the Throne, in which they say, after four years of power, that they have nothing to reform, their principles or vocation are gone, and they have nothing left of the principles which they advocated, on which to appeal to the country. I think I have read somewhere, that the President of the Council—the late President of the Council now—said when there was nothing more for the Government to reform, or when a Reform Government could find nothing more to reform, he would not be slow to leave it. There has been a sudden change lately in the Government, a reconstruction, and we have not yet been told the reason for this reconstruction; but it must be plain that that vacancy has been caused because the Government have found themselves incapable to deal with the many interests in this country which require reform, and the President of the Council found it to be his duty, on his declared principles, to leave the Cabinet. We have the Government declaring in the first place that we are called together and have nothing to do beyond the ordinary business of the country. That we should be called together and go back to the country without anything to be considered or proposed by the Government is very strange. The hon. Premier, when in Opposition, declared that there should be reform, retrenchment and economy in the administration of public affairs; that the number of Cabinet Ministers was too large, and one would naturally suppose that on coming into power, and after being in power four years, and now going to the people, the Reform Government would at least propose a death-bed repentance—a decrease in the amount of departmental expenditure. We are promised that some measure is to be introduced here with regard to the departmental service, but I do not believe it is in that direction. There are still thirteen Ministers in the Cabinet, and it may be that they are going to appoint deputies, or under secretaries, who will relieve them of their labors, and enable them to attend pic-nics, and party gatherings, and enjoy themselves generally throughout the country. There is little of importance in the Speech but references to the St. John fire, the ramblings of Sitting Bull, and the Paris Exhibition. These matters are all familiar to us. So far as the St. John fire is concerned, we all feel a deep personal sympathy for the sufferers, in common with every person throughout the Dominion, wherever the tale of distress and misery has gone. As to the Fishery Commission, I am sure the result is not all that was to be expected, or desired. Coming, as I do, from that part of the country where we know the full value of our fisheries, I feel that we have not received that consideration in value to which we are entitled. Still, it is to be hoped that this money, when the award is paid, will be properly expended in the interests of the Dominion, and not held out as an inducement for any future tariff or fiscal arrangements with the United States. As regards the Exhibition at Paris, I must say that I do not approve of granting money for such purposes unless the Government turn their attention to developing the manufacturing and other great industries of the country, so that they can utilize the advantages afforded by such exhibitions. As regards the Pacific Railway, we must be all anxious that the Government shall show us the best route to the Pacific slope. When this matter comes before us, I hope we will not have any more exhibitions of extravagance such as have been in the Fort Francis Lock monstrosity, and the Kaministiquia Harbor and the Goderich Harbor jobs. I hope we shall have no more such exhibitions of worse than waste of public money; and exhibition of favoritism, insincerity and incapacity on the part of Government. We are told that there will be a change in the management of the Public Accounts, so as to have a more perfect supervision of them. I hope that will be the case, so that we will not be subject, as we have been in the past, to extravagant expenditures that ought to be obviated, and that there will be a better provision against the extravagance of the

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

Ministers themselves, who also require watching. As regards the promotion of colonization railway enterprises, with land subsidies in the North-West, in districts not touched by the Pacific Railway, I agree with hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, that it will be wise for us to see that such railways are not made tributaries to the railway systems of the United States, instead of to our own Pacific Railway, which must receive our first and paramount attention. With respect to the proposed amendment to the Independence of Parliament Act, it is a subject that requires careful consideration. I opposed the whitewashing bill of last Session, and I think that this House will feel, (after the caution it expressed last year, that it was not to be a precedent after the exposure of the Government's friends illegally, year by year, taking hundreds of thousands of dollars of public money, and other events of last Session) that they will be slow to act in the manner suggested by the present Address. The Government have not been bold enough to declare publicly "to the victors belong the spoils," yet their whole conduct, openly as well as quietly and in the dark, is in accordance with the spirit of that principle. As regards the liquor question, I must say we, in Nova Scotia, have certainly the most restrictive law that can possibly be put on the Statute Book with regard to the sale of liquors. One-third of the whole voting population of any district can, simply by their silence and inaction, prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in such district. It may possibly be too harsh and extreme for general legislation, but I believe we should have uniform legislation with regard to the sale of intoxicating drinks, but my hon. friend from Sarnia will find the Government are not sincere on the question of temperance reform. There are many matters which the Government may consider too trifling to notice, but trifles make perfection, and perfection is no trifle; and it would be better for the Government and for this country, if many things, trifling as they may appear to them, were considered. It would be no trifle to have a tariff such as is propounded by the Opposition—a tariff which appeals to the patriotism of the whole country for its support. A tariff which will bind all the provinces more closely together, each giving to the other a generous, helping hand and starting together on the same high road to prosperity that England and the United States followed. Those countries have left their landmarks and their guides for us. History has recorded their way to union, and national prosperity and greatness. That way was not freetrade, but protection. We cannot have freetrade, because we must raise by revenue about $26,000,000 yearly, to meet and carry on the expenses of Government. It would seem that the Government must favor direct taxation, and it will come to that if this Government should unfortunately retain power, and pursue the same policy as in the past. I do not believe the Government have a right to say, as the Secretary of State today said, that they have nothing to do with the depression in trade, that they could not prevent it, and cannot relieve it but to trust to Providence entirely, and hope by abundant crops that this depression which now prevails throughout the Dominion is to be obviated. I do not believe in that policy; I believe the Government have something more to do than to fold their arms, tax the people and increase the debt of the country, and trust to Providence to help them. I believe that this Government can by a proper fiscal policy—such a policy as Sir Alexander Galt suggests—a retaliatory policy you may call it—alleviate the depression in almost every branch of trade in the country. Let us encourage our natural industries and keep out American stocks. If the Government would look nearer home for a market than New South Wales; if they would encourage our languishing trade with the West Indies and the Brazils, making a reliable market for the fish and other products of this country, so that our ships could bring back sugar to be refined in the Dominion; they could in this manner build up an interprovincial trade that would greatly assist the several interests of the country. Until we can have a Government who feel that office is only second to the well-being, prosperity and advancement of the country, we cannot hope for the future of our Dominion. Through the Government's destruction of our sugar refinery interests, Canada has lost largely the trade of the West Indies. In fact, we of the Maritime Provinces are now obliged to make of the United States a market for produce that we should send to and receive from the West Indies and Brazil direct, and from these Upper Provinces. What we want is a direct weekly line of steamers, subsidized by Government, to carry our fresh and other fish, and other products, so that not only our merchants but others interested in our products can take advantage at all times of proper seasons, and not be constantly subjected to the fluctuations of the West Indian markets. The Hon. Secretary of State has told us of the condition of the boot and shoe trade, and that the purchasing power of the country has been exhausted, and that we must not pamper one trade to the injury of others. I will answer him briefly. Why is the purchasing power exhausted? Simply because we send the money away that ought to be kept in Canada, and spent here to build up and encourage the labour of the country: because other branches of industry have failed and there is not the power to purchase. Each branch of trade is dependent upon the other; all tend to the advancement and advantage of the country, and one cannot prosper at the expense of the other, but all must prosper or suffer together. I agree with my hon. friend that the purchasing power of the country has gone. Our money has gone to build up the United States, and I say, therefore, when he takes this particular branch of trade, the shoe business, in which a large amount of money has been invested, and says it is becoming a failure, it is because the fiscal and commercial interests of the country, our natural resources, productions and labor, have not received the attention they deserved at the hands of the Government. Our tariff should be revised; we should see what branches of trade require to be stimulated; what labor should be encouraged; what are the natural and productive resources of the country, and encourage them. The poor man should not be obliged to pay twice the percentage on his tea, that the rich man has to pay. It is the same in sugar, tobacco and beer, the poor—the mechanical, the industrial classes—pay a larger percentage (at least twice the amount, on the value of the articles which they consume) than the rich man pays on his; instead of discriminating, as the Government ought to discriminate, and relieve as far as possible the laboring classes. See in what way they can assist our industries by taxation on imports. They could, in some instances, as in the United States, put on a duty of over 50 per cent., and in others reduce it far below 17½. But instead of doing anything to relieve the people from their burthens, they fold their arms and live sumptuously from the public chest. When we find that they have, corruptly, might I say?—I will say—illegally interfered with the independence of Parliament; and hear them say we must trust to Providence to get over the depression in trade, I say the Government are not doing their duty to the people in the manner that will be acceptable to the country. The patriotism of the country must be appealed to to help itself, and other men be found to form a Government who will put their shoulders to the wheel to meet the depression.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE.—I think that the House has occasion to congratulate itself upon the general tenor of this debate. Considerable light has been thrown upon the questions which have occupied the minds of thoughtful men throughout the Dominion. Several gentlemen have taken occasion to speak in very appropriate terms, in which I fully concur, of the loss which this colony will sustain by the departure of the British nobleman and his Countess, who are so soon to leave us and return to Europe. Perhaps, not the least important portion of this debate has been that which relates to the causes of the prevailing depression. It has been asserted with confidence by gentlemen on the other side of the House that the depression continues. I concur in that, but not in the views which those gentlemen have expressed upon its causes. I noticed that the leader of the Opposition was less precise as to those causes and the remedy which should be provided. Feeling, no doubt, the future responsibility which might attach to him, as leader of this House, he has wisely abstained from giving expression to his views as to the best mode of healing the depression. The gentleman who followed him, however, treated the question in a speech of great candour and ability from his point of view. I venture, however, to disagree with him. I venture to say that he takes a view of the question which is not correct. If you wish to heal the depression in any particular interest of the country, you must first acquaint yourself thoroughly with its origin and history, and the causes of that depression. You must examine into the industry itself, and see whether it is conducted with due economy and skill, and then you will arrive at just conclusions. Very often it will appear—as in the case of many of our interests—that the causes of the depression are far beyond the control of any Government or legislature that can deal with them. I remember when I first came to this city, five or six years ago, I was told that the lumbering interest of the Ottawa Valley was in a most flourishing condition, and gave employment to twenty thousand men. I saw that those men came down to the city and spent their earnings freely in the stores, and the store-keepers received them with open arms, of course. Their labor was very productive, and soon they sent down larger quantities of lumber than the market required. Since then, the lumbering interest has been in a very depressed state. It would be wise before charging the Government with incapacity for not relieving the depression, to have investigated the matter more thoroughly. The subject is not so very difficult to enter upon, and even with my limited experience I think I could throw some light upon it. I will attempt to do so. It seems to me about the time the lumber interest was in such a flourishing condition, the people of the United States were recovering from a state of warfare. They were with their means set loose from the civil war in which they had been engaged, with their military and naval forces released—settling themselves down steadily and nobly to the business of life, and the grand resources of their country attracted from Europe something like a thousand immigrants a day. Many of those emigrants went west; they required to be housed and would need as much lumber as would build a new city every year, besides which they were large consumers of lumber in other ways. At home, also, we were large consumers of lumber. Is it now the case that a thousand emigrants per day cross the ocean to America? Is it true that there is as much lumber now required for the houses of emigrants as would build a new city every year? Everyone knows that not only has immigration into the United States dwindled to very small proportions, but even the means of earning a living there has become so difficult to obtain that many of those immigrants return to their homes in Europe. There is one cause of the decay of the lumber trade, and so it is with many other industries. If you examine the question coolly and calmly you will find they are beyond the control of the Government. How can you say any legislation of this Government or Parliament can cause emigration to the United States to recommence, and thus increase the demand for our lumber? The thing is impossible. We must look for other markets. If we wish to re-establish our lumber trade we must look for the springing up of a demand for it elsewhere. So it is with other branches of trade, though, perhaps they are not affected in the same way. They are not depressed through the in-action of Parliament or Government, but by causes which we cannot operate upon. We know very well that during the American war a tide of prosperity flowed into the Dominion. That was because the population of the United States having diverged from the path of industry and gone into war, our industries were stimulated to supply their wants. When they resumed the path of peace once more, they manufactured for themselves, and our manufacturers who were dependent upon them, became comparatively idle. We had employed a vastly larger number of people in that business than could find a permanent living. The consequence was, competition produced low prices and finally some broke down, succumbed to the pressure of the time and low prices, and as a consequence when their stocks were thrown upon the market, the substantial men, men of capital, who could have conducted their business well, if let alone, have felt the influence of the times, and their property has also been depreciated in value. Here are causes which are obvious and cannot be disputed, and which no Government or Parliament can obviate. A good deal has been said with regard to the prosperity of France. Whence shall we look for the cause of it? I think my hon. friend who so often enlightens this House upon financial questions, will bear me out in this statement—that the loans which have on various occasions been thrown upon the French market, have been largely taken up by the peasantry of

Hon. Mr. Haythorne.

France. They are industrious and much given to hoarding. There are two investments in which they especially delight, one the public funds, and the other, land, and for those two objects the French peasant will labor in a manner which appears extraordinary even to our industrious colonists. I ask if the prosperity of France is not principally due to the great fertility of her soil, her rich corn lands, her vineyards, her sugar fields, her oil-seeds, clover seeds and other special products. I could refer to a celebrated missive of the first Napoleon on this subject, in which he made the statement that the prosperity of a country based on agriculture could never be broken down by any sudden commercial crisis like this. I would say, with reference to French affairs, that I have looked on during the last few months with exceeding pleasure at the results obtained in France. In speaking with some of my French friends in this country some time ago, I suggested to them that old France needed one thing—the immigration of a few French Canadian gentlemen, speaking their own language, but having experience of our system of Parliamentary Government. That necessity has ceased, however. I see by the papers that Frenchmen have acted in a manner so constitutional and patriotic, and so praiseworthy, that they have little need of examples from other countries. Some observations were made as to the necessity of economy on the part of the Government, and some reflections, I might almost say, with regard to the expenditure incurred in establishing a Government in the "Great Lone Land," yet I would say to the hon. gentleman who alluded to that subject more particularly, and contended that an effort should first be made to settle the lands, that the very first step, preliminary to settling a new country, is to establish a fixed and reliable Government there. Besides that everyday necessity, which every one must feel, inhabiting a country where recognized authority exists, there is this also to be said in favor of establishing a Government in the Lone Land, that for a considerable time past, heavy responsibility I am confident, attached to the Government in that regard, because there was a sort of persistent, chronic warfare between the Indians and the United States military forces, and we all know very well that the United States troops were far from victorious there latterly, though the noble Savage, to whom reference has been made, was obliged in the end to retire to our side of the line. If there had been no Government in the North-West, our territory might have been made a base of operations against the United States. Was that a sort of thing to be permitted in a civilized country? I think not. I think it was the duty of this Administration to establish a fixed Government in the North-West, and I cannot blame them for any expenditure that was necessary in that behalf. With regard to the possibility of operating by local enactments upon the commercial depression, I would just recall to the memory of hon. gentlemen in this House, the dictum of a high authority in the United States, which I have quoted on a former occasion, and am now obliged to give from memory. Mr. Wells, in one of those addresses which, in his official capacity he used to send to Congress every year, on one occasion congratulated Congress upon the universal prosperity which prevailed throughout the length and breadth of that vast country. He said, I think, throughout its vast extent, not a single soul need lack employment, food and clothing, but everyone had employment at profitable wages, but he said that prosperity was due to the great capabilities of the country and the energies of its people and not to legislation. I think that the opinion of a gentleman of his experience on such an occasion as that—he would hardly hazard an expression which he would not be prepared to defend, or his friends for him—is worthy of respect, yet we are told here that all we require to heal our depression is legislation. In the Province I come from, the people were blessed last year with an average harvest. The prospects at one time were so good that I think our merchants perhaps imported more largely than they would have done under other circumstances, in the expectation not only of a large harvest being reaped, but of markets being equally good. Now, observe the failure which occurred. The harvest is good but the markets are bad. How can the Government help that? Our products sold at prices which were so unremunerative that the farmers found themselves in the fall with a comparatively small sum to expend in the stores, and the result was a large amount of goods remained on hand which will probably ultimately be disposed of without profit. Could any Government obviate that? I think not. Oats in Prince Edward Island only realized one cent per pound, and potatoes only 20 to 25 cents per bushel. The very finest of pork which could be raised could hardly be sold, even at six cents per pound. Now that leaves a very small margin for the farmer to go to a store and supply his wants. I should rather seek to find a remedy for this depression in the enlargement of our markets, and economy in sending our goods there. Produce should be forwarded to the best markets at the cheapest rates. We know a great deal has been effected by sending produce from Canada to England, and Europe, and a great deal more can be done in the same direction. I am confident in our own Province much can be yet effected in that way, and I think it is the duty of those who can do anything in this direction to do it. One hon. gentleman speaks of a retaliatory policy. Well, really, I cannot sympathise with that. I think a retaliatory policy is one which is the most difficult to defend of any I have heard advocated. It seems to me a most unstatesmanlike proceeding to say, simply because a country refuses to receive your goods on your terms, therefore you debar yourself and fellow-countrymen from buying articles they want at the cheapest rate. I would say, certainly, that a retaliatory policy would not get rid of this prevailing depression. We should rather encourage our population to enter upon industries for which our country is admirably suited by nature and position. A country like Canada, with such a wide area of fertile land should employ a large number of its population in agriculture and home industries. Have we not intelligence sufficient to develop new industries? Are there not new systems at work in Europe of which we have not yet availed ourselves? I only need to refer to the sugar industries in Europe, and the prosperity which has attended countries which have developed them. All these things have more to do with the prosperity of a country than the causes assigned by some gentlemen here this evening. There is a clause in the Speech which refers to the liquor traffic. I sympathize with that most heartily. I long to see the day when any legislative enactment can find a place on our statute book, which will have the effect of diminishing the intemperance which unhappily prevails in our land, but I hope that whatever measure is brought forward by the Government will be of a practical character, one not suitable only to a few people on the platform, but one which can be carried into effect throughout the country.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS.—I have listened very attentively to the speech made by the hon. member from Prince Edward Island, and I feel if he had been consulted in the framing of one paragraph of this Address, it would not have appeared in the form in which it does. I would call attention to it:—

“We accept with thankfulness Your Excellency's congratulations on the abundant harvest reaped in all quarters of the Dominion; and we rejoice with Your Excellency, that under this and other influences there has been some improvement in the Revenue returns, thus indicating, we also trust, that the commercial depression that has so long afflicted Canada, in common with other countries, is passing away.”

Now, the hon. gentleman tells us—and which, I believe, is a fact—in consequence of the abundant harvest which has been reaped, those engaged in commerce have imported more than they otherwise would—in fact, have been speculating on the returns of this harvest, but the Government have come to the conclusion because the revenue has increased the depression is passing away. If ministers would only give us their experience, gained during the recess while attending the political pic-nics, and coming in contact with thousands of people, I feel satisfied a conclusion somewhat different from what they put here must be arrived at. The Secretary of State's position is this, as far as the Government were concerned, they were not able to do anything to prevent the depression, and cannot do anything to relieve it now. That statement will go to the country with all the importance which it is clothed with, coming from a member of the Government. I, as a member of this House, cannot coincide with this view. I demur to it. My conviction is that a great deal of this depression in manufacturing circles is due to the illegitimate competition from surplus American stock coming here. Will any one tell me if our tariff had been so arranged that we had collected higher duties from those stocks, they would have come in such quantities? No one that knows anything of the business of this country would attempt to hazard a statement of that kind, and yet that has been, and is the state of things our manufacturers have to contend against. What I regret in this Speech is, that notwithstanding the depression which prevails in the manufacturing and lumbering interest, not a word of sympathy is expressed for those who have invested their all in those trades. A word of sympathy would not have cost much, but it is not given. I am rather inclined to think, that if the Government have come to the conclusion not to afford increased protection to the industries of the Dominion during the present Session, the country certainly will require others besides those who are now in power to deal with this question. There is one paragraph to which I would particularly refer—that is, the opening up of the North-West. No one has felt more interested in the opening up of that country than I have, I have been there and looked upon those fertile lands which, undeveloped as they are, are valueless, but developed are mines of wealth. This year the people of Manitoba have a surplus of about half a million of bushels of grain. What are they to do with it? They cannot get it out to market. As the hon. Senator from Manitoba says, wheat can be obtained there for fifty cents per bushel. A railway might have been built into that country from the head waters of Lake Superior during the time the present Government has been in power, yet we find that but a feeble effort has been put forth to build it in patches. But they tell us in a short time connection will be made with the American lines, and the surplus wheat can then be got to market. If so, who is to do the carrying trade? So far as the Red River is concerned, we have not a boat on it. The Americans would not let us run a vessel past the boundary line. That trade will go to St. Paul, and, as has been remarked here to-day, when trade takes a certain course, it is difficult to change it. Colonization roads are spoken of. I suppose companies will be incorporated to build them, and aided by grants of the public lands. The Pacific Railway does not pass through the part of the country that is being settled. It strikes out north and west from Selkirk, and traverses an uninhabited and uninhabitable country, by the narrows of Lake Manitoba, for hundreds of miles. There is not a settlement on the line, except Selkirk, and yet, perforce, we must have other railways built to remedy the blunder in the location of our national highway. All the financial energies of this country, we are told, have been, and are being taxed for the purpose of constructing this Pacific Railway, and yet we are to build other roads and subsidize them with grants of land! I have no doubt this scheme is one that was talked of last Session in the lobbies of this House—to build a line from Emerson, one of our settlements close to the border, and pursue a north-westerly course passing through a section of the country that the Pacific Railway ought to have served. I have no doubt such a railway would pay, but what would be the results?—not a bushel of grain, not an article of export, would pass over our Pacific Railway, but through American channels. Would any person of common sense, looking at the map, imagine for a moment that the products of the country would pass by way of Emerson, and afterwards take the Canadian Pacific route? We have in Canada the best means of doing that carrying trade. What is the Welland Canal being enlarged for? To do not only our own, but also a large portion of the United States' carrying trade. We have in our magnificent water stretches, to which the Secretary of State so frequently refers, the best and cheapest route. We are building the Fort Frances Lock, and yet we are to have a route via Emerson, to carry our trade to the United States. I would like to see the North-West developed. It is worth developing. It is the backbone of the country. It is the great wheat-producing portion of Canada, but in the way the Government are expending our money and proposing to expend it, instead of our getting the benefit from such expenditure, the Americans will have it at our expense. Look at the Fort Francis Lock! I can point to American papers which say that the large expenditure made there is for the benefit of the lumbermen of Minnesota. We have no timber, or but little, on our side, and yet this expenditure is going on, while the very thing our people most desire—the construction of the road from Thunder Bay to Red River—is delayed.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—An hon. gentleman opposite, on your own side of politics, differs from you.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I am only responsible for my own views. I know the people of the North-West are anxious to have our own route opened up.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I am with you.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS.—I hope the hon. gentleman will bring his influence to bear on the Government to have that road built. With reference to other paragraphs of the Speech, I do not think they amount to very much. The fact is, we have had nearly all of those statements made in the public press. It is true, this is the official way of communicating them to us. The only thing new announced this evening, is the statement made by my hon. friend behind me, from Prince Edward Island, and that is, it was highly important that a governor should be sent to Battleford, in the person of Mr. Laird, in order that when Sitting Bull came across the boundary line no complication should arise. I should like to have the correspondence on that subject laid before us. So far as Sitting Bull is concerned, and the negotiations with the American troops and officials, I believe they took place through Col. McLeod, and not through Lieut.-Governor Laird. I think it very questionable whether Governor Laird had anything to do with it, but the hon. gentleman wanted a reason for sending him to the North-West, and found in this Sitting Bull incident an argument in favor of sending him to administer the affairs of an uninhabited country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON moved that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow. Carried.

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

THE SENATE.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

After routine.

THE ADDRESS.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON resumed the debate on the address—he said : I did not intend to take any part in the debate upon the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, because I have always thought it better to follow the British practice if possible, and leave discussion on the Address to Ministers of the Crown and the leader of the Opposition. The debate of yesterday, however, took a wide range, and the friends of the Government, especially my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, seemed determined that the debate should extend, and that the Address should not be carried, as it might have been, at a comparatively early hour yesterday afternoon. In the course of the debate so many questions were touched in which I feel a special interest, that I consider it my duty to address the House. Before entering on the subject of the Address, if the mover of the resolutions will allow me to do so, I will congratulate him and the House upon his accession to the Senate. The facility and felicity with which he addressed the House yesterday, in the language which is most familiar to the great majority of us, was exceedingly gratifying, and his experience as a merchant cannot fail to be of great service to the House. I have no doubt after a short time he will shake himself free of party fetters—if he is fettered by party, and I don't know that he is, for I am not personally acquainted with him—and take an unpartizan view of the proceedings of this House. We are told in the Speech from the Throne that, in summoning us again to the despatch of business, His Excellency is pleased to say that nothing beyond the ordinary business of the country has called us together. This is the fifth time under the auspices of the present Government that this paragraph has been substantially repeated. There has been little or no important legislation during the present Parliament. Now, when we consider the outlay attending every Session of Parliament, it really behooves us to consider whether there cannot be some more economical manner of voting the supplies adopted. That is almost all of importance that we are bound here to do. The cost of legislation is six hundred thousand dollars per Session, making the sum of three millions of dollars for the Parliament. Now,

Hon. Mr. Macpherson,

I put it to hon. gentlemen, has the country got value during this Parliament for this large sum? The cost of legislation to the four millions of people of this country, I venture to say, is unparalleled in the experience of any other four millions of people in the world. I would like to say a very few words with reference to the Governor-General and his departure from the country. He has, I take it, seen more of Canada, knows more of its resources, and has described them more graphically than has been done by the pen or tongue of any other. He possess in a high degree the rare gift of always saying the best thing at the best time, and in the best manner. I believe he is as true a Canadian as any citizen of the Dominion. I feel satisfied that in him Canada will always have a warm and constant friend, and I know I express not only the sentiment of this House, but of every man in the country, when I say that his departure will cause universal regret. He will carry away with him the best wishes of the people of this country for the happiness and prosperity of himself, Lady Dufferin, and family. I am exceedingly glad that the Fisheries Commission arrived at an award. All who know Sir Alexander Galt will know that he brought to bear on that subject a great amount of talent—as great probably as any other man in the country could have brought to bear upon it, and while he may not have got all we consider ourselves entitled to, I believe he did right to accept the award. I agree with the hon. Senator from St. John, who seconded the Address, that a settlement was of more importance than the amount. With respect to the Exhibition that has taken place at Sydney, New South Wales, and the one to take place this year at Paris, I am very glad the Government took steps to have us suitably represented at the former, and are taking steps to have us properly represented at Paris. I hope, in sending the specimens of what this country produces and manufactures, that they will send such specimens as may induce and extend trade with other countries. I think that very great good ought to result from those exhibitions. I do not know that much benefit has resulted so far, but it is an advantage to our people, to our manufacturers, to visit them. It is good for our manufacturers to see what is done elsewhere when they attend with their own exhibits, and, therefore, I think the money expended in this way is well expended. We have heard from time to time a good deal said about the political confederation of the Empire; now, I believe, that to be successful, it must be preceded by commercial federation. I do not look upon commercial confederation as being chimerical; on the contrary, I think if deputies from the Mother Country and all the colonies met together in London, and discussed their various interests, and told what each required and what each produced, and could spare, it would be found that a very much larger inter-imperial trade than exists now would rapidly grow up—that very intimate and beneficial commercial relations could be established, and that the creation of such material interests might be followed, and certainly would be followed by more intimate political federation, and I believe it is the only way in which political federation can be brought about. I think the present time is propitious for suggesting a scheme of this kind. The commercial depression which is felt so much in this country, is felt more or less in almost all the colonies and in the Mother Country. The time is propitious for the further reason that I regard the present Prime Minister of England, Lord Beaconsfield as, of all men in the world, the most likely and the best able to grasp and develop the important and grand national and Imperial features of the project. In my opinion it would be worth the while of the Government of this country to propound such a scheme. I confess I do not expect them to do so, because they tell us they cannot do anything to promote the interests of the country—substantially that is what they say. Now if a scheme, such as I have given but the roughest outline of, could be carried out, the prosperity of this country would be enormously increased, and there would be little left for us to envy in the condition of any other country. It would advance the prosperity of all parts of the British Empire and unite them in indissoluble bonds. In speaking on the subject of trade I may state, as I have often stated, that I, myself, am a free-trader, but I cannot help feeling that our one-sided freetrade relations with the United States have not answered well.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

We have failed to get real freetrade, and the one-sided one has not been successful. One of the maxims of freetrade is "that the proper policy is the one that yields the greatest good to the greatest number." That is sound, but it is always difficult or impossible to ascertain what does really afford the greatest good to the greatest number. Now there is no doubt in a country like this, which is chiefly agricultural, that if our people have to spend all their savings in paying for imported necessities—and in the payment of interest upon our debt, it will be impossible for Canada to become rich, and the country is not enriching as it ought, and our public debt is increasing at an alarming rate. It has been increased by the present Government thirty-two millions of dollars, and I think that the opinion of the country must be that Canada has very little to show for it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Do you include in that the amount taken over from Ontario and Quebec?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—No, I am speaking of the money borrowed in England.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Part of that was to pay old loans.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON— I repeat the Loans negotiated by the present Government amount to thirty-two millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.— Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.— That is the amount. I need scarcely say that I join cordially in the expression of regret in the visitation of the City of St. John, and sympathy for the sufferers. It was a fearful calamity, unparalleled in this country, and I am sure Parliament will readily approve of the grant which the Government made, and would do so even if it had been larger than it was. With respect to what is said in the Address on the subject of extinguishing Indian titles to lands in the North-West, there is no doubt it was wise to do so. It was necessary to secure the peace of the country, but a great deal of unnecessary expenditure has been incurred by the Government in the North-West. The establishment of the North-West Government itself was perfectly unnecessary. Nothing could be more so. The Governor of Manitoba could have administered the affairs of the North-West for a great many years to come, and probably better, even, than the Government at the new capital at Battleford. The Indians had very great faith in the late Governor of Manitoba, Mr. Morris, and I have no doubt, whoever may be the Governor of Manitoba carrying out the instructions of this Government—which I have no doubt will be in accordance with the instructions always issued by the Government of Canada—the Indians will have confidence in him as the Representative of the Queen. But in the haste to establish a Government in the North-West, the Ministry placed its seat at Fort Pelly, and expended a large amount of money there, and then discovered that the place was quite unsuitable. How much money they spent there we cannot tell until the Public Accounts come down. One of the difficulties in discussing a question of this kind, on the Address is, that there is no more information before the House now than there was last Session. However, Fort Pelly had to be abandoned, and Battleford was next selected. I am told that this place is also unsuitable, and the probability is that it will have to be abandoned. All this has occurred in consequence of proceeding faster than was necessary, and before the Government was in possession of information to guide it. An enormous amount of money will be spent in connection with the new Government of the North-West. There is a Lieutenant-Governor and Council, and a departmental staff which up to this time have been idle, and will be for some time to come. It is true the Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Laird, negotiated the latest treaty with the Indians, but the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba could have done it equally well, and it was not necessary to appoint Mr. Laird at a high salary. When the people see what all the expense amounts to they will be astounded. Perhaps it is known to most hon. gentlemen that I visited Manitoba last summer. I heard when there that the Indians were not as contented as they had been, and that there was not the same confidence in the agents employed amongst them as there had been in former times; that they had become suspicious, and were growing more so. As for Sitting Bull, he is a potentate I do not know much about. At the same time, I think the Government might have let him stay without sending one of their number to Washington about him. I fear we may have assumed a responsibility unnecessarily. The congratulations on the abundant harvest are, of course, just. The next paragraph says that the increased revenue returns indicate that the commercial depression which has effected Canada is passing away. I hope it may be so, but I am afraid the belief at this moment is only entertained by the Government. I am afraid the increased revenue indicates excessive importations. It is probable that the imports will be smaller this spring than they were last, and that the falling off will be felt in the Revenue. The business men of the country are unquestionably suffering very greatly from the depression. The Insolvent Act is a measure that I think the Government ought to take some trouble to understand the working of. I am not going to express an opinion of it, because it is a very large question, and is one which should be examined by a commission, but its working at present unquestionably is to enable dishonest debtors to increase their business capital at the expense of their creditors. I am inclined to think the wisest course would be to suspend it for a time and appoint a commission to enquire not only into the working of the Act in the past, but to inform themselves thoroughly on the subject generally, and submit the best measure they could devise to Parliament at a future Session. The Lumber Trade, to which reference has been made, especially the American portion of it, continues to be as depressed as ever. I think I may almost say that for the present it is hopelessly depressed. The forests of Michigan and other States, afford all the lumber that is required in the United States at a cheaper rate than it is possible to export it from Canada and pay the duty which is imposed upon it in the United States. Now I come to the subject of the Pacific Railway, and that is one on which I will speak as lightly as I can, because, no doubt, it will come up more than once during the Session; but there are some errors—errors is altogether too mild a term—some extreme blunders on the part of the Government, in connection with the Pacific Railway, to which I must refer on this the first occasion on which I have the honor to address the House this Session. It will not do for the Secretary of State to say the Government inherited obligations in respect to it from the late Administration, and therefore are not responsible. The country will not accept that explanation. The only thing they inherited from the late Government, was the treaty with British Columbia to build the railway across the continent. That treaty they tore up and left themselves free to deal with the whole question in the way that in their judgment was best for the country. And what have they done? As soon as they succeeded to office they entered energetically upon the construction of the Pembina Branch of the Pacific Railway. They constructed the road bed, built the culverts, got it ready for the track, sent up the steel rails at an enormous freight—fifteen dollars per ton from Duluth to Manitoba—and when all this was done they suddenly stopped and changed their policy. They said the American line would not be built to the boundary, and there was no use in finishing the Canadian one. Now, if the American line was not to be finished, why did not the Government know it before they commenced work on the Pembina Branch? But if they had finished that work, I am satisfied the American part would have been completed to the line before our part would have been open six months. I have no doubt whatever upon that point: but there was a very powerful interest opposed to the construction of that branch—the transportation interest on the Red River. Its influence is very great, and I do not hesitate to say that it may have been felt even by the Government of the country, and that the road has remained incomplete for three years or more to the great inconvenience, disadvantage and loss of the people of Manitoba, and all those going there, largely in consequence of the opposition of that powerful influence. The road was made, the rails were beside it, and yet for the last three years the road has remained in that unfinished condition. How much would it have cost to lay the track? Very little, and if they had but run a train a day, up one day and down the next, it would have cost but a trifle, while it would have served to show, at all events, we had done all in our power to get railway communication with Manitoba. Now, without any special movement on the part of the American company so far as I know, the Government announces its intention of completing the railway. I may be uncharitable, but I cannot help thinking if the general election was not to come off before next year, there would be no movement in the Pembina branch this year. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and one of his colleagues visited Manitoba last year at the time when the hon. Senator from Kingston and myself were there, and they must have learned that unless something was done the Government could not expect a supporter from that Province at the next general election. I cannot help thinking that the movement on that line now is an electioneering one, just as in the case of the Georgian Bay Branch at the last general election, and we may have that enterprise up again as an electioneering card for the coming election. My hon. friend from Toronto—Mr. Aikins—and myself do not agree, as has been observed by the hon. Senator from Montreal, as to the best means of extending communication to the North-West. He thinks the best plan is to build an all-rail line. I think that is beyond the means of the country, and I think, furthermore, it is unnecessary, and will be unnecessary for many years to come. Probably we are now committed to it irrevocably. My hon. friend said yesterday that we constructed the Welland Canal and other canals for the purpose of securing the great trade of the West. That is very true, but it must be remembered that that trade is supposed to pay our shipping and to bring a handsome return to the country. If the trade with the North-West was sufficient to be profitable, I would not object to the building of a line of railway to transport it. If it would pay I would hold up both hands for our having an all-rail route to connect that country with this. But what are the facts? The tide of immigration to Manitoba, and to this Continent generally, has been checked, and is not likely to recover from that check for a long time to come. In the North-West the population is small, and increasing slowly. The whole surplus of the Province last year was from two to three hundred thousand bushels of wheat. Say there was an equal amount of other products—and that is a large estimate—what freight would that afford to a railway? It would not load more than a few trains. It amounts to nothing. My own opinion is that the improved Dawson route was all that was required for many years: that by it a large class of emigrants, sons of our farmers in the older provinces, could have gone into the North-West and taken their teams with them. Very great progress had been made with the route, and it was very passable, but it has fallen into disrepair during the last three years, and if the very demon of destruction had been sent there to ruin the route and destroy the stations, it could not have been more effectually done. I would not have objected to the scheme first proposed by the Prime Minister—a railway from Lake Superior to Sturgeon Falls—and use some 180 miles of water communication; but that is not what has been done. I will not refer to the Fort Francis Lock to-day except incidentally. An all-rail route has been selected for the Pacific Railway from the Kaministiquia to the Red River through a hopelessly irreclamable howling wilderness, where there is no population and where there can never be any, or any traffic. That is the country through which a railway 420 miles in length is being built by the Dominion. Have we the means to construct it? Not content with doing that, the Government have located the line for 150 or 200 miles west of the Red River through the very worst part of the country which, from all the information I could get, is altogether undesirable, if not entirely unfit for settlement. If the instructions of the engineer of the Pacific railway when he went out to locate that line from Lake Superior to the narrows of Lake Manitoba had been to run it where it would be impossible for the people in the settled part of the country to make use of it, he could not have carried out the instructions more fully than has been done. The road has been carried away from the settled portions of Manitoba, and from the country fit for settlement. What will be the effect of that location if it is carried out? It will tend to divert the whole trade of the North-West away from this country which has to pay for the railway, to the United States. The railway as at present located, passes at the narrows of Lake Manitoba, that is, North of Lake Manitoba and South of Lake Winnipegosis, where it can never be of any benefit to the people of Manitoba. If this country has the means to build the railway—I think it has not—the line should have been located as far south as possible so as to cut off all the trade we could from the United States and secure it to our own railway and to our own markets. As it is now, all the trade of that country will be diverted from Canada to the United States, and the railways that we now hear projected and to be subsidized with land, railways running from near the boundary to the Pacific Railway, will be so many feeders for the American lines instead of our Pacific Railway. The trade of that country is small now, and will be small for years to come. Emigration is checked, and even though it were not, the new population would consume the surplus of the country for years, as was the case in the Western States and in every new country. For many years there will be a comparatively small surplus, wholly inadequate to support the all rail line which is being constructed. It will be remembered this House last Session recommended that a survey south of Lake Manitoba should be made. I believe a survey has been made, but I am not aware what the report is, but if the present line is adhered to—and hearing of the projected lateral lines I am inclined to think it will be—I believe it will be a great misfortune to the country. The two ends of the section of the railway between Lake Superior and the Red River are being built, 114 miles running west from Lake Superior and 114 miles running east from Selkirk on the Red River, leaving a gap of about 190 miles not yet placed under contract, and not located, so far as I know. I saw in the press a few days ago, an article congratulating the country on the opening of about 30 miles of the railway from Red River. Why, that piece of road was opened simply to enable the contractor of Section 15 to send in his supplies. There will be no traffic on that piece of road. There are no people in there, not even Indians. There will not be a bushel of potatoes carried over that road until it is opened to Rat Portage, except what is taken in as supplies for the laborers on Section 15. There will be no traffic on the Lake Superior end either, until it and the western section meet, and when they do meet, and the line is completed, it will traverse but a hopeless barren wilderness. I repeat here, that, until the middle section is completed, the two ends will be utterly worthless; they will simply be decaying, and, so far as I know, the middle section of 190 miles is not even located. Now, I think the facts that I have stated with respect to the Pembina branch and the building of those two disconnected ends of the Pacific Railway, and the neglecting of the central section, show an extraordinary amount of blundering on the part of the Government. The Canadian Pacific Railway is being built in a very temporary and flimsy manner. I saw that the Prime Minister compared it to the Intercolonial Railway, the only difference being that the bridges were of wood, while those on the Intercolonial were of iron. Why, the only enduring material used is the steel rails. The bridges and culverts are all of wood, no stone or brick is being used, and the opinion of practical men in that part of the country, with whom I spoke on this subject, is that the life of timber there is not more than eight or nine years at the very outside. On a part of the line—Section 15, as I understand—there would be a good deal of high trestle work. Before the central part of the line can be completed or any useful part of the Railway can be opened, a very considerable portion of it at the two ends, measuring together 228 miles, will, I fear, be far advanced in decay. That is an example of the management of the Government.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS.—The bridges will be rotted down before that middle section is completed.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—I fear they will. And the mismanagement there is only an example of the most unaccountable blundering which seems to attend their management of all the great works. Take the Welland Canal, just the same sort of mistake has been committed there. I may tell hon. gentlemen who are not familiar with the Welland Canal, that the improvements there are not merely to enlarge the Canal, but to feed it with water from Lake Erie. Now, hon. gentlemen would naturally suppose that, in laying out that work, care would have been taken to have the works that are to connect the Canal with Lake Erie completed as soon as the heavy works along the Canal. Instead of that the works along the Canal, including some three hundred feet of lockage towards the lower part of the Canal, are practically finished, while the upper section, the one that is necessary to obtain water from Lake Erie, was, as I am informed, only placed under contract last autumn, so that these works, which cost probably not less than six millions of dollars, will be lying idle for the next two or three years, for want of the completion of the upper section, the cost of which will probably be a million of dollars or less.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—A considerable part of the contracts were given out by the late Government.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—If, after five years of supreme control of the affairs of this country, the hon. gentleman has to fall back upon his predecessors, it is a weak defence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—The useless part of the work was let out first.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—Probably if the late Government had not been displaced they would have let the upper portion. Why did not the present Government do it? If they had done so two years after they came in, it would have been completed in time. Then there is an aqueduct, which may be considered the key of the whole work. That was only put under contract last year, and cannot be completed for a long time. It is hoped, I believe, that the present aqueduct may be used for a time, that a couple of feet may be scraped off its crown, so that large vessels may pass through the canal, but surely this important work should have been put under contract sooner. Another extraordinary proceeding is the deepening of what is known as the feeder and which in former days conveyed the water that fed the canal from the Grand River, but which will not be required when the water supply is taken from Lake Erie. Notwithstanding this, the Government has, I understand, expended between $100,000 and $200,000 in deepening the feeder.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—Those works have been under the charge of Mr. Page, who was Engineer of the late Government.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—My book-keeper has charge of my books, but he is under my instructions. Where is the use or value of a practical Commissioner of Public Works, such as Mr. Mackenzie was represented to be, if he is not to guard against such blunders as I have called attention to. One of the advantages which was hoped for was that he would watch the details of carrying out the great public works, and it would not have given him much trouble to do it. It will not do for hon. gentlemen to turn round and say he had so much to do that he could not attend to such matters. The Minister of Public Works need only have had the profiles—and he must have seen them—of these great public works before him, and he could see what should be done first, and what could be postponed. There is only one other subject I will notice, and that is the last loan. I must say a little more than I did last Session on the subject. I only touched it then very lightly. I really forbore out of consideration for the Minister of Finance, pointing out what I considered the worst features of the loan, but seeing he declared in his last Budget Speech what I did not notice at the time, that it was only one of a series of loans, I desire to bring its most objectionable features before the House and country. There is one thing that every borrower of money, be it individual or nation, must make up his mind to—and that is to pay, in one shape or other, the interest that capitalists consider the securities loaned upon should pay. In the case of public securities the return that capitalists expect can be readily ascertained by looking at the market reports for the quotation of the prices and the rates of interest. Now, our five per cents, at the time the last loan was negotiated, were at 105 to 106½. The Minister of Finance, in his Budget Speech last Session, said:—"The actual value of that loan at 91 being as nearly as possible to 5 per cents. at 108, whereas the current selling price of those 5 per cents. was barely from 105 to 106½, deducting accrued interest." Now, it must be remembered, that this is a borrowing country, and that, in the words of the Finance Minister, the loan he negotiated in November, 1876, was only one of a series of loans, and it behooved him, as it now behooves us, to borrow upon the terms which, all things considered, are the best for this country at present. Now, I maintain that was not done in the case of the loan of 1876. On the contrary, the injudicious system was introduced, of sacrificing a part of the principal and issuing the loan at a large discount, for the sake of a reduction in the nominal rate of interest. The true policy for a country like Canada, that has to negotiate a series of loans, is to pay the rate of interest that will command not less than par for the loans. To issue loans at a large discount, as our Minister of Finance did, involves a large loss of present capital, and was, therefore, burdening the present generation to relieve posterity. A loan at five per cent. should, have sold for about 105—that is, at a premium of five per cent. whereas the four per cent. loan which was negotiated netted this country only about 87½ per cent. Now, the difference in the result, if the loan had been issued at 5 per cent., would have been this—the loan of £2,500,000 converted at the old par of exchange, would be $12,166,666, and at 5 per cent premium, would have yielded $12,775,000. Deducting for agency one per cent., $127,750, would make the net proceeds of the loan $12,647,250. The net proceeds of the four per cent. loan actually negotiated was only $10,645,833, or $2,001,417 less than a five per cent. loan would have yielded. Now, capital is of the very first importance to us. The great works which we are now constructing are not for ourselves alone, but mainly for posterity. By the system adopted by Mr. Cartwright we lost for present use $2,000,000 capital, and have to bear the whole burden of that loss for the sake of a nominally reduced rate of interest. To obtain the nominal rate of four per cent., instead of five per cent., interest, $2,001,417 of capital was sunk. I think that was sacrificing too much for posterity. It would have been much better for us, and have made very little difference to posterity, if, instead of getting $10,645,833 from a four per cent. loan, he had negotiated a five per cent. loan, and received as the proceeds $12,775,000. I hope I have made my views plain to the House. I think the main facts must be sufficiently manifest—that by the plan adopted by the Minister of Finance in negotiating the last loan, he sank $2,001,417 of the principal in the payment of interest in advance to make his nominal rate of four per cent. equal to five per cent. to the lenders for the whole period of the loan. Capitalists generally prefer negotiating a loan at a discount to one at par or above par. They can dispose of it more advantageously than of a loan which stands higher on the Stock Exchange. It is a great mistake to speak of the financial agents, Messrs. Glyn & Baring, as being the agents of this country for the negotiation of our loans. They are the agents of the country for paying interest and attending to matters of that kind. But when our Minister of Finance goes to England to negotiate a loan, they act for themselves and their English clients and make the best bargain they can. In this case they made an exceedingly good bargain. But Mr. Cartwright was at the mercy of the money lenders when he negotiated the last loan. He must have had money. The capitalist knew very well that a wise use of it was not to be made in this country. They knew how money was expended in Canada—a portion lying idle in the Welland Canal, involving a loss in interest of probably a million of dollars, and they knew a further amount was in the Pembina branch, and a great deal more in that most unwise of all works, the Pacific Railway. They knew the misuse that would be made of the capital just as well as we did, and they were necessarily influenced as money lenders lending to prodigal men would be. They exacted a high rate and imposed onerous conditions. The terms were very extraordinary, and we do not know who took the loan. The names of the allottees were refused in another place last Session. I must say the way in which the loan was negotiated, and the price was fixed was so objectionable, that we have a right to full information. We ought to know who the allottees were and what the allotments were. The price of this loan was fixed in secret though there should have been no secrecy about it. I cannot understand how any man acting alone would consent to sink so much of the money of his country as was sunk in this case, without the knowledge of the people, and without submitting it to the strictest audit. I saw by the newspapers that the National Bank of Australia had advertised for a loan last month. How was that done? They advertised for tenders fixing the minimum price in their advertisement at 95., interest at four per cent, while we issued our four per cent loan nominally at 91 per cent, but the various conditions attached made it net us only 87½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

I say that in the face of such facts we are entitled to the fullest information in connection with the fixing of the price and the negotiation of that loan. Every one per cent on that loan amounted to $120,000. I am not going to impute wrongdoing to any body, but whoever understands the matter will see that the transaction afforded scope for a very large amount of secret service money. It was only last Session that the Public Accounts Committee in another place were very much exercised over a trifling amount of secret service money which they knew had been expended in the public service. The circumstances attending the negotiation of the loan have opened a proper field for investigation by that Committee. I say if I were a member of that Public Accounts Committee, I would insist upon the most searching enquiry and bring to light all the facts, and the Finance Minister should desire to have such an investigation. The transaction afforded scope for the creation of a Secret Service Fund which would have rendered it unnecessary for members of the Ministerial party to “come down handsomely” at election times.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—You speak from experience, possibly.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—I dare say the hon. gentleman's experience and mine in that way are very much the same.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—The hon. gentleman will hardly say there was any Secret Service money in Mr. Cartwright's possession.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—I contend that nothing connected with the loan should have been done in secret, and I say when such things are done in secret, openings are afforded for irregularities.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—The hon. gentleman knows very well this was transacted through Sir John Rose and Messrs. Glyn & Baring, and if anything was wrong on the part of Mr. Cartwright, they must have shared in the fraud.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—I am not going to relieve the Government from the responsibility that attaches to them. The Finance Minister alone was responsible. He alone represented this country. The other gentlemen, whoever they were, were the lenders, and were not acting for the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—Sir John Rose was acting for this country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—When the Finance Minister goes to England, he supersedes every other agent, and I have no doubt Sir John Rose and Messrs. Glyn & Baring represented themselves and their English clients.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Sir John Rose acted on the part of Canada.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—We should have the names of the allottees and allotments, and all the facts relating to the matter. With respect to the Independence of Parliament measure, which, we are told, will be submitted to us, I will only say that what has been brought to light has brought discredit and reproach upon parliamentary institutions, and I hope an Independence of Parliament Act will be devised by the hon. gentlemen which will keep their friends pure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And their opponents.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Yes, and their opponents too. With respect to the system of auditing the Public Accounts, there is, no doubt, room for very great improvement, and probably one of the things most necessary is that a uniform system should be observed—uniform year after year. That is very frequently departed from, and is exceedingly inconvenient for those who take some pains to look through the Public Accounts. For instance, in 1876, the details of Customs expenditures were given in the Trade and Navigation Returns, instead of in the Public Accounts, as was formerly the case. In looking at those details, I see that the Customs Revenue in Montreal, in 1876, fell off $1,570,416, while the cost of collecting it increased $17,452. Will hon. gentlemen explain how that was? It is perfectly impossible that the increased expenditure could have been necessary in the public interest. Then I find among the new items wages to lockers and extra clerks, $12,465; extra services at Examining Warehouse, $5,735. Now those were extraordinary additions to that branch of the service in 1876, in the face of a falling off in the Revenue of $1,500,000. Then there is an item for cartage, &c., at the Examining Warehouse.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—I presume that is added to the Customs by the parties whose goods were transported to the warehouse.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson,

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON.—All these details which used to be in the Public Accounts are, for 1876, in the Trade and Navigation Returns. Why was the change made? Then there is a paragraph relating to the temperance question. Whatever that measure may be, I hope it will be one in consonance with the public sentiment of the country. The only other thing which I will notice in respect to the Speech from the Throne is an omission. I am not over strict, but I regretted missing from the Speech what I do not recollect having missed from the Speech from the Throne on any other occasion, I mean an invocation of the Divine blessing upon the labors of Parliament. That is an omission which I think is to be regretted. I shall not take up the time of the House any longer, I regret that I was obliged to speak on the Address, but the Government and their friends rendered it necessary for me to do so.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I cordially share in the congratulations that have been expressed in the tone and manner of the mover and seconder of the Address, on answer to the Speech from the Throne. Since these hon. gentlemen delivered themselves yesterday, the debate has taken a wide range, and, as it appears to me, somewhat irregularly, the question of freetrade has been interjected into the discussion. Irregular and inconvenient it is; but certainly the Government cannot complain of that, since it was in consequence of the dissertation on freetrade with which we were favored by the hon. Secretary of State that this question arose, and gave rise to the criticisms of my hon. friends from Woodstock and Sunbury, and these criticisms have not yet been answered.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was not I who started the debate on freetrade.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Allusion was made by the leader of the Opposition to the question of protection in connection with the commercial depression. It was quite legitimate, but it was wholly incidental, and certainly did not afford ground for the position taken by the hon. Secretary of State, unless it was his desire to get up this debate, which was perfectly legitimate and proper if he desired so to do. But if he had not taken the course which he did, our labors would have been shortened, and this discussion would not have taken place. When I read the first paragraph in the Speech from the Throne, I felt comforted that, as we were to have only ordinary business, we should have a short Session, but, as I found it followed by eighteen other paragraphs, I could not help thinking that we would not have the pleasure of spending our Easter holidays at home, and that there was a good deal of truth in the criticism that "what the Speech lacked in depth it made up in length." The third paragraph refers to the Washington Treaty and the award made under it by the Fisheries Commission. I do sincerely hope that we have heard the last of all those carping criticisms on the Washington Treaty, as ill-timed as they were unpatriotic. I think the Government are entitled to credit, certainly they shall receive that credit from me, for recommending for Commissioner on that Commission of Enquiry so distinguished a man, and so able a statesman as Sir A. T. Galt. The officials of the Marine and Fisheries Department are also entitled to credit for the manner in which the case was presented at Halifax, and I think it is nothing more than due that I should express the opinion which was impressed on my mind when witnessing the closing scenes of that celebrated Convention, that great credit is due to the leading Counsel of the Dominion, Mr. Thompson, for his exhaustive and eloquent summing up of the British case, which extorted even the admiration of his opponents. Whatever may be thought of the provisions of the Washington Treaty, or of the inadequacy of the sum awarded, we must all agree that a new epoch has been introduced in the settlement of international differences, a peaceful arbitration tending to lasting good-will between the two great English speaking nations of the earth. There is a reference made in the 13th paragraph to the necessity of opening up and settling the North-West, but I am sorry to find there is nothing in the Speech or Answer referring to the probable early establishment of communication with that territory. It does seem to me that before talking of settling a country they should at all events afford to settlers the means of getting into it through the highways of our own Dominion, whether it be by the

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

Dawson route or by an all-rail route. Certainly we should complete the communication before we talk about what is to be done when settlers get there. There are other measures foreshadowed in the Speech, which I do not feel it necessary to advert to just now, because I think it is more convenient to reserve criticism until those measures are laid before us. There are some remarkable omissions, one or two of which have been referred to already. There is only an incidental allusion to the great commercial depression which has overshadowed the land. There is not a word about the causes of that depression, or of any remedial legislation to alleviate its pressure, nor by readjustment of our fiscal legislation to aid the struggling industries of this country, while no less than two paragraphs are devoted to the distinguished Indian, Sitting Bull! Whatever my hon. friend the Secretary of State, and the Government may think; however little importance they may attach to this matter, I think they will find ere long there will be a deep feeling of disappointment in the country that there is no allusion made, except a most remote one, to the commercial depression of this country, and there is no remedy proposed to relieve the continued depression of the trade and industries of the Dominion. The hon. Secretary of State announced yesterday, when he said: "What can the Government do? The Government can do nothing." If my hon. friend is sincere in making that statement—and I have the right to think he is—he must have abdicated the functions of Government altogether. Are we not always legislating to assist trade and commerce? What is your free list in your tariff or your varying scale of duties, but a legislative effort to aid the industries of this country? I might go through the list of legislative measures and show without any difficulty in what way you can alleviate this depression by wise fiscal legislation, by placing the burthen of taxation on goods coming into this country that enter into immediate competition with our native industries, and admitting at low duties articles we cannot produce here, such as raw sugar, &c. I am not going into this to-day, but I merely notice the extraordinary statement that the Government have no power, and the sentiment is re-echoed by hon. gentlemen in this House who are supporters of the Government. If they admit their incapacity to deal with this question, they must admit to that extent, they are abdicating the functions of a Government. The hon. Secretary of State will recollect that in the course of this debate the hon. gentleman who introduced the Address, in trying to explain a ground for the depression of trade, spoke of its being the result of expensive living, of extravagance, and to some extent there is no doubt it has a great deal to do with it, but will the hon. gentleman allow me to remind him how that is met in private life. Let him go to London at the present moment where I admit there is very great depression, and he will find thousands of servants thrown out of employment in consequence of gentlemen contracting their expenses in order to meet the altered circumstances of the times. What do we find in this Speech? Do we find the slightest allusion made to the necessity of accommodating our expenditure to the altered state of the country? No, there is no allusion to it, and we only find an allusion in a paragraph that in remodelling the departments the expenses will not be increased. That is the only consolation we get. Under the circumstances there will be a deep feeling of disappointment in the country, and it is vain to escape the conclusion that the country will feel there is neither the power nor the will to pass any legislation which will remove the great cloud of depression that overshadows the Dominion at the present moment. I do not intend to occupy any further time in this discussion because the various matters which I conceive wholly incidental to this debate have been imported into it, and amply discussed, perhaps to our very great profit. We have all listened with much pleasure to the Speech we have just heard, and even members of the Government will accord great credit to the hon. gentleman for the labor and pains he has taken in collecting the information which he has laid before the House, and for bringing to the notice of the Ministers of the Crown matters which deeply affect the interests of this country. Before sitting down I cannot refrain from referring to the paragraph in the Address relating to the Governor-General's visit to the North-West Provinces, and to the very qualified expression that is there given on the Vice-Regal visit, and its results, in terms certainly none too strong. If we are prevented by Parliamentary etiquette from giving any warmer expression of our pleasure, yet, individually, we must all recognize the very great benefit of that visit, and the lucid, stirring and eloquent speeches of His Excellency, so important to the future of this country. I may be permitted to add that the amiable and accomplished lady who accompanied him in all his peregrinations, will share with him the feelings of regret which all of us will experience when the hour arrives for them to leave the shores of this Dominion, in whose fortunes they have ever evinced so deep an interest.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The hon. leader of the Opposition, with the courtesy that he has always shown to this House, in answering the mover and seconder of the Address, has, in the course of his remarks, said that due diligence had not been used by the Government in the construction of the Pembina Branch. This remark has been repeated by other members, and a more serious charge has been made by the hon. member for Saugeen, that it is not unlikely that the Government had some interest in the Transportation Company that prevented the construction of the Pembina Branch on the American side, and some influence must have been used by the Government on the American companies. This is a serious charge, and I hope the House will require some better proof than the hon. gentleman's statement that there has been any corrupt understanding or agreement in this matter. The reason why the Government did not continue the building of that branch is perfectly defensible. Three years ago the Government commenced work on the Pembina branch. The grading of the road was nearly completed, and the rails were brought there with the hope that the American companies would do what they promised to do—extend their lines to the frontier. Unfortunately, since that time, from year to year, something has prevented them, or some influence has been exercised on the American company, to cause delay in building their road. Efforts have been made by this Government every year to have our part of the road built, but seeing that the American companies were not going on with theirs, it was thought by the Government it would be useless to expend thousands of dollars on the Pembina branch until there was a chance of connection being made with the American system of railways at the frontier.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It would have afforded railway communication for seventy miles—from Winnipeg to Pembina.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Still the traffic would have been entirely controlled by the Transportation Company, and everyone knows, that until the branch on the American side is built, the Pembina branch will be utterly useless. It was only last summer we had the promise that one American company will build that road, and we can assure the House now that the money will be provided for that purpose. I hope that I am not saying too much when I say, that in the month of August next we can go to Winnipeg by the Pembina branch. The Government is blamed by the hon. gentleman from Saugeen District for locating and constructing the road north of Manitoba. We cannot be blamed for that, and I am sure that every hon. member who will look at the position of the Government, coolly and without partizan feeling, will see that the Ministry have done all that they could do. We had perfect confidence that the engineers appointed by the late Government were men of large experience in such matters, and had no interest in doing anything that was not for the benefit of the country. We took the very same engineers, Mr. Fleming and Mr. Smith, who were employed by the late Government, and continued them in charge of the work. If hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to look into the report of those engineers, they will see that the only practical route for the building of the road is north of Lake Manitoba. Many gentlemen have asserted it is not a practical route. While in Manitoba last fall, I met gentlemen who told me the same thing, but they were persons who may have an interest in the route south of Lake Manitoba being adopted. We have, however, to follow the survey made by the engineers until better evidence is given. It is impossible for Ministers to explore a route themselves, but we have done all we can to have the best route selected. There may be differences of opinion between engineers who have a better knowledge of the country, but until some proof is given as to who is right, the Government have no knowledge of the fact. I am of the opinion that the presentation of the Address is not the proper time to discuss many of the subjects that have cropped up in this debate. The hon. member from Woodstock has blamed the Government for not having done something to alleviate the commercial depression. I am sure not only the people in Canada and the United States, but the people of the whole world will be very thankful to any hon. gentleman who will suggest some means by which the crisis can be suppressed. The depression is not confined to this continent, but it is felt generally throughout the world. We are not, at least, the only Government to be blamed for doing nothing to relieve their country from the depression. We are told that the adoption of a system of protection would certainly remedy the evil; I believe the best answer to that is to look to the other side of the line, and see what effect protection has had on our friends there. The hon. gentleman from Sunbury asserted yesterday, that protection was not the cause of the depression in the United States. I have read a great many articles, however, by men who are supposed to understand this question thoroughly, in which the policy of the Government is blamed for the depression existing in that country. I am sure if any one can suggest a remedy to the Government the country would be very much indebted to him, but we are only told it is the duty of the Government to suggest something or to adopt a policy. We have also been told that the present Government have increased largely the departmental expenditures. Now is not the proper time to discuss this question, and the Public Accounts, when they are brought down, will be the best answer to this accusation. Of course there is an increase in the expenditure authorized by statute and for public works, but this was not under the control of the Government. The expenditures under the control of the Government since 1873 have not only not increased, but they have actually decreased, as will be shown by the Public Accounts, when they are laid before the House.

Hon. Mr. DEVER.—I wish to express my gratitude for the friendly manner in which each speaker alluded to that paragraph in the Speech referring to the St. John fire. I am the only member present immediately from that city, so sadly afflicted by that terrible conflagration of the 20th of June last, by which our greatest edifices were totally destroyed within the short space of three hours. Our Custom House, our banks, our churches, our beautiful buildings—some of them worthy of being called commercial palaces—some twenty-seven or thirty millions of dollars worth of property were all consumed in this short period, while the insurance did not exceed seven millions of dollars, so that hon. gentlemen will see at once the loss which was sustained. I perceive that the Government claim credit for placing in the estimates a sum of money, $20,000, which they contributed towards the relief fund, for which I feel grateful, as I should. But when I contrast that amount with the generous donations of mere hamlets in Canada, and from cities and towns of foreign countries I feel that our Government might have been somewhat more liberal, and I think in being so they would have been fully sustained by the people and legislature of this Dominion. I feel also in looking back at that great catastrophe that the Government would have been justified in showing greater liberality to our unfortunate city, from the fact that the fire had consumed goods on which duties amounting at least to $500,000, had been paid which goods had again to be replaced, and on which duties had to be paid the second time. There is another paragraph in the Speech which refers to changes that may be advantageously made in the departmental arrangements existing at present. I had the honor on a former occasion, of pointing out that at least one department of the Government of this country might be done away with, by which at least $220,000 per annum might be saved to the Dominion. I refer to the Excise Department. Hon. gentlemen who have taken the trouble to look into the matter, will see that there are only two articles of goods on which excise duties are levied to any extent.—These two items are Spirits and Tobacco, and the manufacture of them is no good to this country but a great loss. Better import them like other goods from natural markets and pay the duty at the Custom House, thereby saving an increasing expenditure of some $220,000 per annum for a host of unnecessary officials. We have a right to expect this piece of economy with others from a Reform Government, especially in reply to the statement that "nothing can be done" for the alleviation of our commercial depression. But, gentlemen, as this commercial question will, no doubt, come up for your consideration again, I will not occupy your time any longer with a discussion which is unsuited to the present occasion. I will advert to the paragraph referring to His Excellency, the Governor-General. I think I may safely say, hon. gentlemen, that the expressions which dropped from the lips of the mover of the Address had an echo in the heart of every man, woman and child in this Dominion, wherever intercourse was had between that excellent man and them. Throughout the length and breadth of this Dominion, where His Excellency is known there is but one feeling, and that is a feeling of pain that we are so soon to lose our popular Governor-General. For as an administrator, as a gentleman of culture, and as an orator, he has won the highest admiration and esteem of our people, and all will regret the day when His Excellency and his amiable and beautiful Countess, will take their departure from these provinces which he has served so well.

The Address was then carried.

THE FISHERIES COMMISSION.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON enquired of the Secretary of State what time the Report of the Fisheries Commission would be laid on the table.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said he was not in a position to give the information asked for. He assumed that that report, though made in the interest of the Dominion, was a report to the British Government, and it had to go there first as a matter of courtesy. Our connection with it was, of course, by the intervention of the Imperial Parliament. He had no doubt, however, when it was completed they should have a copy of it, and that the Government would be able to place it in the hands of hon. members as soon as possible. It was being printed in Halifax under the supervision of the officers in charge of it, but it was, properly speaking, the property of the Imperial Government.

The House adjourned at 5 p. m.

THE FISHERIES AWARD.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU moved—That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that he will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, copies of all documents and pleadings relating to the questions decided by the award rendered at Halifax, on the subject of the indemnity of five million five hundred thousand dollars, under the Treaty of Washington, particularly the twenty-second and twenty-third articles of that Treaty, and all copies of all letters and despatches between Her Majesty's Government and those of the United States of America, and of Canada, on the same subject since the rendering of the award. He said it was unnecessary for him to use any argument to show the necessity of having those important documents printed. Our able and distinguished lawyer, Mr. Joseph Doutre, had informed him that they contained much that was of value and interest to the people of this country. He concurred in the opinion expressed in this Chamber by several hon. gentlemen who had taken part in the debate on the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, that the award of the Arbitration would be paid by the United States Government in the same prompt and honorable way, that the British Government had paid the indemnity awarded to the United States by the Geneva Arbitration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—I learned from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to-day, that he has received a printed copy of the proceedings, and there will be no objection to its being brought down.

The motion was carried.

THE BREAKWATER AT WEST ARICHAT.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved :—That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, all surveys and reports made by any Government Engineer within the last six years, in relation to the Breakwater at West Arichat, in the Island of Cape Breton. He (Mr. Miller) asked the indulgence of the Senate, while he made a few brief remarks in explanation of the motion. The harbor of West Arichat was one of the most important shipping ports in the Island of Cape Breton, and owned a considerable amount of tonnage. It was so frequented by vessels that the late Government considered it necessary to erect a light-house specially for the use of shipping resorting to the port. The harbor was once a very good one, but had suffered serious injury by the drifting of sand and gravel, which was fast filling up the safest anchorage. Before Confederation, the Provincial Government, chiefly through his (Mr. Miller's) exertions, had undertaken to arrest the complete destruction of the harbor of West Arichat, by the construction of a breakwater between Crichton's Island and Isle Madame. The work had been undertaken, and was half completed at the time of the Union of the Provinces, at an expenditure of about $8,000. Since then nothing had been done. The old work was nearly useless, and was fast becoming destroyed. The harbour was also gradually filling up, and would ere long be comparatively useless to the shipping of the country. The Government should do something now to stop its destruction, ere it was too late. He did not know why it was that this important subject had been so long neglected by those whose duty it was to look after the matter. Feeling this, last session he (Mr. Miller) brought the question to the notice of the Government from his place in the Senate, because he considered that the past neglect and injustice had been tolerated too long. He was then met by the hon. gentlemen opposite in a manner that led him to believe that his remarks had produced a good effect. He trusted that either in the regular or the supplementary estimates a sum would be placed this year for the completion of this breakwater. It certainly ought to be completed before the harbour was totally ruined. The work was one of those that was very properly taken over by the Federal Government after Confederation, and surveys of it had since been made. He (Mr. Miller) wanted the reports of such surveys, as he felt sure they would show the public utility of completing the work in the interests, not only of the inhabitants of the Port, but in the interests of the shipping of the whole country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—I am unable to say from memory whether this has been under the consideration of the Minister of Public Works or not. I will be happy to bring down any papers in the possession of the Department bearing on the subject.

The motion was carried.

The House adjourned at 3.20 p. m.

L'ARDOISE BREAKWATER.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved—that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that he will be pleased to lay before this House, a statement showing the amount of money expended during the past year on L'Ardoise Breakwater in the Island of Cape Breton, and the mode of such expenditure with the authority therefor. He said that, before going out of office in 1873, the late Government had ordered a survey to be made of the waters of L'Ardoise, with the intention of constructing a suitable breakwater at that place. The work was estimated by the Engineer to be likely to cost about $60,000, and it was well known to every one who was acquainted with the requirements and important industries of the place, that the expenditure would be a judicious one. L'Ardoise possessed one of the most valuable and productive fisheries in Nova Scotia, and, having a very considerable population, it contributed very largely to the public revenue. These fisheries would be far more profitable than they were, if the coast were provided with a breakwater which would afford shelter to the men, boats and vessels, engaged in the prosecution of this arduous and dangerous calling. The fisheries of Canada were a source of immense wealth to the country, and those employed in them did not receive the consideration from the Legislature or the Government, to which their interests were entitled. It was astonishing how grudgingly a small grant could be wrung from this Government to promote the development of our fisheries, or the security of the lives and property of our hardy fishermen. L'Ardoise Breakwater was a case in point. The estimate of the late Government for a breakwater at that place, as he had already said, was $60,000. The present Government found the work so far assumed by their predecessors, that they were bound to do something in fulfilment of the expectations of the people in regard to it. They did not feel at liberty to throw it overboard altogether, or he supposed they would have done so. But what did they do? True to the policy of this Government towards Cape Breton, instead of accepting the plans and estimates they found prepared for them, they determined to substitute for the contemplated erection, a small pier or block of logs imperfectly ballasted and secured, at a cost of a few thousand dollars, pretty much in the style of their first essays with regard to St. Peter's Canal. That block was built in the summer of 1876, and fortunately the winter following was very mild, and the coast unusually free from drift ice, otherwise the structure would have been carried away last winter. He was told it was very imperfectly secured, and not sufficiently ballasted, when taken off the hands of the contractor by the Government. Money had been expended on it last autumn by day's work, the money having been placed in the hands of a Government partizan, who had some reputation as a valuable man in manipulating votes at elections. Some people were uncharitable enough to say that the mode of expenditure was adopted altogether with an eye to the coming general election, and was judiciously used for that purpose. But he (Mr. Miller) did not desire to im-pute any thing wrong to the individual who had the expenditure of this money, who outside of his erroneous political proclivities was a worthy man, but he did find fault with the manner of expending public money adopted in the case in question. There was nothing to justify it. Apart from the appearance it presented of an attempt to make political capital by tampering with the poorer class of the electors, the money could have been much more judiciously and advantageously expended by tender and contract, when everyone would have a fair chance to compete for it. It was a dangerous thing to permit any departure in such a case from the tender and contract system. The friends of the present Government had boasted that they had secured the electors of L'Ardoise by the expenditure of the money on the breakwater. But he (Mr. Miller) knew that they had not secured the independent electors of that fine community, who were a large majority of its inhabitants, as the next general election would prove. His greatest complaint, however, against these gentlemen was that they had refused to the people of L'Ardoise and all others who resorted to that fishing ground, a suitable and commodious harbor for the carrying on of their avocations. It would have been only a small concession to that valuable industry—an industry that receives very little attention from Parliament, while less important subjects engross much of their time, and receive large appropriations from the public funds. He trusted the Government was not going to allow L'Ardoise breakwater to remain in its present unsafe and imperfect condition, and that they might be induced to act justly, if not generously, (on the eve of a general election) in relation to that and other similar subjects in the ill-treated Island of Cape Breton.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As my hon. friend has not given me any proof that the Government have been guilty of what he has charged them with, I am not prepared to answer that portion of his remarks. I am under the impression the money was wisely and well expended. I am advised by the Public Works Department that there was in 1876 an unexpended balance of $1,300 carried over, which was spent in 1877, the work being done by day's labor. I suppose in so small a way as one involving twelve or thirteen hundred dollars, it is much more economical and satisfactory to expend the money as was done in this case than to call for tenders. Of course, I cannot speak as to the character of the work, whether it was more suitable to be done by day's labor or by contract, but I assume the course was pursued by which the most was done with the money, and this is the first I have heard of any imputation against the Government that they used it for political purposes. If they had had any object of that kind in view, I should think it would have been better to hold the money over, because, as a rule, people are more grateful for favors they expect than for those they have received.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not blame the Government so much as I do the friends of the Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume they are all friends of the Government down there.

The motion was carried.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said that the time for receiving petitions for private bills expired to-day, and, as he understood that a number of petitions were on the way, he moved that the time for receiving them be extended to the 25th inst.

The motion was agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC TELEGRAPH.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS moved—"That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, copies of all specifications on which tenders were invited to construct the Lake Superior and Fort Garry sections of the Canadian Pacific Telegraph; also, copies of all correspondence between the Government and persons tendering for the same; also, copies of all contracts for the construction of the several portions thereof." He said an address had been adopted last session for "copies of all correspondence between the Government and the contractors for the construction of the Pacific Telegraph, and copies of all contracts for the several portions thereof," but, unfortunately, the returns brought down did not include all the information desired, and he now made this motion in order to have complete information on the subject submitted to the House. He made this motion thus early in the Session, because last year some six or seven weeks elapsed before the returns were brought down. He had intended to make some remarks on the subject, but deferred them until the papers were brought before the House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE STANDING COMMITTEES.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the appointment of the Standing Committees. He said they were the same as last year, the only changes being the substitution of the Hon. Mr. Thibeau's name for the late Hon. Mr. Wilson's, and the addition of Hon. Mr. Alexander's to the Contingent Accounts Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

THE HUNTER DIVORCE CASE.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS moved that the petition of Hugh Hunter, praying for divorce from his wife be received.

Hon. Mr. MILLER asked to have it laid over until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS said he saw no necessity for it, and would prefer to have the petition received without delay.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said there was not sufficient evidence that the person who served the notice upon the wife of Hunter was acquainted with her.

Hon. Mr. Aikins.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS said she had been pointed out to him by a man who was present at her marriage with Hunter.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY thought there would be no delay in letting it stand for a day, inasmuch as the Private Bills Committee was not yet organized, and the petition could not go before them even if it were received.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS said it was called to meet to-morrow and it was important that the petition should be read now, in order that delay might be avoided.

Hon. Mr. MILLER raised the point of order, that no notice of motion had been given.

The SPEAKER ruled that the motion was in order.

The motion was agreed to on a division.

ST. PETER'S CANAL.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved:—"That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, all reports, surveys, plans or alteration of plans, contracts or assignment of contracts, and Orders in Council, made within the last two years, in connection with the enlargement of St. Peter's Canal, in the Island of Cape Breton." He said he presumed the Government would have no objection to lay these papers on the table, and he would feel very much obliged if they would do so as early as possible, as he wished to reserve the remarks he had to make on this subject until the papers were before the House.

The motion was agreed to.

MAIL IRREGULARITIES IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved:—"That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, copies of all correspondence between the Post-office Inspector for Nova Scotia and any other person or persons, during the months of November, December, and January last past, in relation to mail irregularities between the Post-offices of Arichat, Hawkesbury, and Antigonish in the said Province, and all evidence obtained and reports made by the said Inspector in connection with the same." He hoped that this return would also be brought down at an early date. He did not think that more than ten days, at the very outside, would be required to prepare the return. As he was desirous to prove a charge against the Post-office Inspector in Nova Scotia of a dereliction of duty in connection with this matter, he wished to have the papers presented as early as possible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said he would call the attention of the Postmaster-General to the matter. He had sent to the Department for the papers asked for, and they had not been received. He presumed they were still with the Inspector.

The motion was agreed to.

COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE moved:—"That a humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that he will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, a return specifying:—

1st. The sums expended in repairing the steamship Northern Light during the year 1877.

2nd. The number of passages made by the said steamship between the ports of Georgetown in Prince Edward Island, and Pictou in Nova Scotia.

3rd. The number of mails received on board the said steamship and delivered up to the 14th instant.

He said:—"It has been my duty on several occasions to call the attention of this honorable House to other branches of this same subject. Upon those occasions I was applying for the fulfilment of certain terms of Confederation, which up to that period had not been carried out. I now come before the House to make a statement showing as briefly as I can that, although those terms have to a certain extent been fulfilled, they have not been attended with that success which might have been hoped for and expected. In making these remarks I must disclaim any intention of speaking in a spirit of hostility to the Government. I am aware that they and this Parliament have expended a large sum in fulfilling the terms of Union with Prince Edward Island; that a steamship has been built specially for the purpose of keeping open winter communication with Prince Edward Island; that it has been built according to the best modern ideas, and that large sums have been expended in repairing that vessel. I also say that under the circumstances, the Government were perhaps justified in making the experiment of carrying the mails between Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, and Pictou, Nova Scotia, inasmuch as those two ports were safe harbors. Georgetown at least had the reputation of being open to a very late period every winter. They also had the further advantage, that each port was the terminus of a railway. Therefore it was perhaps felt proper and justifiable that the Government should make a thorough experiment of the harbors of Georgetown and Pictou, in order to ascertain whether communication between the Province of Prince Edward Island and the mainland could be maintained there. We have now the experience of one entire winter, and part of another, and that experience certainly indicates very clearly that the position in which the Northern Light is now placed is not suitable for the purpose for which she was built and employed. I shall endeavour to show that other localities between Prince Edward Island and the mainland are better suited for this purpose than the place where she is now located. It may be necessary perhaps to give some personal experience on this point, because I do not wish to disparage the capacity of the Northern Light for the work for which she was built. I can say that I spent two or three days on board of her, and had a every reason to be satisfied with her performance, but at the commencement of this season the weather was so remarkably mild and open that she scarcely met with any greater difficulty than would be encountered in the summer; but towards the end of last month, on the first occurrence of cold weather, her course was beset with fields of ice packed in such a manner that she was unable to continue her passages. The hon. gentleman who will second this resolution (Hon. Mr. Montgomery) had some practical experience on board the vessel this season. I have had none. I think my hon. friend went on board on the 31st

Hon. Mr. Miller.

January. I followed him two or three days later. After waiting a couple of days for the return of that vessel, I was induced, hearing the mails were to be sent by another way, to go by the old route, between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse. Now, if personal inconvenience was the only difficulty in this case, of course there would be very little to be said about it, but I can tell hon. gentlemen that the failure of that vessel to return caused a delay, in the transmission outward, of the mails from Georgetown, and also of the inward mails from Pictou to the Island. The former had to be sent a distance of 80 miles to Cape Traverse, the latter by a long circuitous route to Cape Tormentine. On the occasion I refer to, Charlottetown was without a mail during six days. Our mercantile community experienced a difficulty which, I am sure, every honorable member of this House will appreciate—the inconvenience of being without any communication with the mainland except by telegraph for six days, and I see by despatches from the Maritime Provinces that this occurrence has been repeated since then, and the mails have been ordered to be transferred to the old route. There is so much to be said in favor of the route between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse for mail purposes over the Georgetown and Pictou route, that I hope I will be pardoned for presenting them in as few words as possible. Between Pictou and Georgetown is a distance of thirty-five to forty miles, and that space, as the winter advances—generally towards the end of January, sometimes earlier—becomes closely packed with heavy fields of ice, and I leave hon. gentlemen to imagine for themselves what the wear and tear must be to any ship, however well and strongly built, when driven stem on through such fields of ice, for days, perhaps. Allow that vessel any clear space of water, and she will break her way through formidable barriers of ice, but when she is packed in, as we have read of vessels being caught in the ice in Arctic regions, it becomes almost impossible for her to extricate herself. She must await the action of the wind and waves, and if we could be aware of the facts at the present moment, I believe that is the position in which the Northern Light is now—waiting for the action of the south-west wind to release her from her unpleasant predicament—surrounded by seven or eight feet of solid ice. This wear and tear cannot be repaired, of course, for nothing. I make this motion, as I have stated, not in a spirit of hostility to the Government, but to show beyond doubt that the vessel is placed in an unsuitable and inconvenient position. I have heard it said in many quarters—in fact, at one time I advocated the same course myself—that the proper way to proceed would be to issue a commission of enquiry to ascertain the most suitable route. Four years ago that commission would have been exceedingly useful; but at the present day, when we have had the experience of two years, and when it has been demonstrated beyond question that there is but one route suitable, I think a commission of enquiry would only cause unnecessary delay. One of the great recommendations in favor of the route between Capes Traverse and Tormentine is the fact that the straits there are only nine miles wide, and that distance is reduced in winter to seven miles by the “bord” ice, as it is called. That ice seldom or never moves. At that point only can boats cross. Everywhere else any attempt of the kind that has been made has ended in disaster. I think the experience of two winters has demonstrated beyond a doubt that the Northern Light cannot under all circumstances, contend against the ice. If she could, I say certainly retain her there, but I contend she cannot. Therefore, it becomes apparent the mail service of Prince Edward Island should be concentrated at one point, between the two capes, and I am sure it would be as effectually performed as, under the circumstances, it is possible for it to be. Sometimes it would be necessary to use the steamer, and sometimes ice boats. In the early part of the winter the heavy fields of ice have not yet formed, or have not become packed as they do subsequently. It is then the old ice boats experience the greatest difficulty, and in former times I have known three weeks to elapse without mails crossing. This is due to the fact that the straits are gorged with broken ice and half-melted snow, through which no boat can pass, and on which no man can walk. But under such circumstances the Northern Light could run without difficulty, and with very little wear and tear. This renders the situation

Hon. Mr. Haythorne.

I have referred to particularly eligible. The soft, half-melted ice, which is known in that locality by the name "lolly," is always liable to recur during the winter. You may sometimes find a mass of solid ice in the straits, and a few days later it becomes a field of "lolly," creating an impassable space. That is the time the Northern Light would perform her service admirably. I must say the only valid objection I have heard urged against the route between Capes Tormentine and Traverse, is that the Northern Light cannot be placed there without a considerable expenditure in building breakwaters. At the commencement of every winter it would be necessary, before the "bord" ice forms, that she should have protection from the wind and waves. Afterwards, that is not necessary, because the ice is protection enough. One of those breakwaters would be a difficult and expensive engineering work. That I am free to admit: but I do say it is not expedient to abandon a situation possessing so many other advantages simply because such a difficulty stands in the way. Surely there is engineering skill enough in this country to build a breakwater sufficiently strong to resist the natural forces against it! After building the Victoria Bridge at Montreal, and undertaking other splendid works in this Dominion, including a railway across the Rocky Mountains, surely we are not going to be deterred by such a difficulty as the erection of a breakwater at Cape Tormentine. I think it would be a reflection on the Dominion to say so. I think, after a candid investigation of the subject, it will be admitted that the amount which could be economized through this change would go far to make up the cost of the required improvements. I am aware also, there are some short branches of railways required there which would also involve some expenditure, but all that is needed in the first instance is a breakwater on the mainland side. On the Island there is a breakwater already, but, being a local work, it is not, perhaps, sufficiently solid, and it would be necessary to extend, and strengthen it somewhat. The difficulty at Cape Tormentine is by no means insuperable. I have endeavored to take a common-sense view of this question. When the service between Georgetown and Pictou, after a remarkably open season, has ended in a conspic-

Hon. Mr. Haythorne.

ous failure, what is left for the members from Prince Edward Island to do but to bring the matter before Parliament? It is the only course open to us. I do not blame the Government for this failure. I think they were justified in giving the Georgetown and Pictou route a fair trial, but, that trial having resulted in a failure, other steps should be taken to keep communication open in winter. I think we have had sufficient experience now to enable us to decide, without a commission of enquiry, where we should establish our communication with the mainland. I am inclined to think that such a commission would only delay the change which we advocate. In bringing this matter before you I have endeavored to occupy as little of your time as possible. I am quite aware it is a subject which does not possess interest to everybody, although I know it does for many gentlemen from adjoining counties who agree with me that it is not a question for Prince Edward Island alone, but for all the counties and countries having any connection with the trade of the Province. To say it is a local question is a futile argument. It is my duty, knowing well that a time is fast approaching when public men will probably be brought face to face with those whom they represent in this Parliament, in some shape or other, (for this House has, to a certain degree, a representative character), to press the claims of Prince Edward Island upon the Government and upon Parliament, and this is my apology for the course I have taken on this occasion.

Hon. Mr. MONTGOMERY said he thought if the present route between Georgetown and Pictou were continued the Government would find it necessary to put on a second steamer, because if any thing was to happen the Northern Light—if she got stuck in the ice—the passengers and crew might perish. He had crossed the straits on the 31st of January last. Up to that time there had been no difficulty; there had been little or no ice and the steamer made one way trips daily. But in attempting to cross over that day she found heavy ice. She forced her way through for a long way, but was ultimately jammed into the ice so tightly that she could neither back out nor go forward, and had to remain there all night. Next morning they were three miles from land. The captain got a boat out and after a great deal of difficulty, danger and hardship they go ashore seven or eight miles from Pictou. He feared there would always be extreme difficulty in crossing from Georgetown to Pictou in severe weather, and the only safe course is from Cape Tormentine to Cape Traverse. The Northern Light could work there in connection with the ice boats, because if she got stuck the ice boats would be on the spot to take her place. Under the existing arrangement the Island was without mails for a week at a time. He was very sorry that the coal provided last season for the use of the steamer was not sent to Capes Tormentine and Traverse. The steamer would have been perfectly safe there, as a harbor could be cut for her in the hard ice. They would never have regular mails by a steamer running between Georgetown and Pictou. His opinion was the only route was that which he had last mentioned, and that route could be kept open in the summer if proper piers were built, and a branch railway were constructed. It would then be nothing more than a ferry in the summer season and the round trip could be made in two hours.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND said this was a question in which the members from the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec would take very little interest, but it was a matter of very great importance to the whole of the inhabitants of Prince Edward Island and the Maritime Provinces. They, as a matter of course, felt a deep interest in the establishment of regular winter mails. In the articles of Confederation they were guaranteed that that service would be efficiently performed. There was no doubt that the steamer Northern Light had cost the Government a large amount of money in the first instance, and subsequently for very extensive improvements and repairs made to her last summer. He did not think there was so much to be found fault with in the construction of the boat, but that she had been put on the wrong route. As long as she was kept by the Government on the route from Georgetown to Pictou they would have very little satisfaction as regards the regularity of mails or transit of passengers during the winter months, whereas if she were placed on the route between Cape Traverse, P.E.I., and Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, he believed they would not have been so often disappointed with the mails being delayed in the Gulf, or troubled with the necessity of having them transported from the steamer when she was blocked up in the ice, by sleighs, and landed at New Glasgow. Of course, the change would entail expense, as the hon. mover of the Address contemplated, by the construction of a breakwater on the New Brunswick side. The disbursements required on the Prince Edward Island side would not be as great, as there was a wharf there, which by a reasonable expenditure could be utilized so as to be ready for the steamer next autumn. There was no doubt that in the winter season it was impossible to carry on the mail service in the old fashioned style with ice boats during the formation of the ice early in the month of January, when the waters of the Gulf were one mass of "lolly" through which it was impossible to push the boat with boat hooks, and would not support a boat being dragged on runners. They had two or three weeks without having communication with the mainland, and their only means of knowing what was going on in the outer world was by the electric telegraph. It might weary hon. members constantly bringing this matter up before the House, as it had been up so often before, but the representatives of the Island had no other way of calling the attention of the House to this question in which the people of Prince Edward Island felt so intense an interest, now that they had no Minister to represent them in the Cabinet, and those gentlemen who represented the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, knew very little of the wants of Prince Edward Island. Their could only be laid before the Government by means of motions of this kind, either here or in the other Chamber. He believed that if a breakwater were constructed at Cape Tormentine, it would not merely be a place of transit between the mainland and the Island proper, but it would be the proper route for mail steamers to run on during the summer season, because there were only some nine miles between the two capes. All that was necessary to have hourly communication with the mainland would be the construction of these two breakwaters, and a branch line of railway either from the town of Amherst, or from a place called Aulac, down to the Gulf shore, and a short railway of ten miles from the Island Railway to Cape Traverse. It would not cost a very large sum of money, and it would render the mail service efficient all the year round, making Prince Edward no longer an Island, but virtually a part of the mainland.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD said this was a matter of considerable importance, not only to Prince Edward Island, but to the mainland as well, and he congratulated the members for that Island on having arrived at the conclusion that the attempt to establish communication between Georgetown and Pictou was not practicable. There was no doubt whatever, from the experience they had had during the past two seasons—two of the most favorable winters—notwithstanding the amount of money expended on the steamer Northern Light, that she was not competent to perform regular mail service between the Island and the mainland. He had had an experience extending over some fifty years. Hon. gentlemen would perhaps smile when he said so, looking at his youthful appearance.

Hon. Gentlemen. — Hear, hear, and laughter.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD, continuing, said he had had an experience of the Straits of Northumberland of half a century, and he felt that the attempt to place a steamer between Pictou and Georgetown during any ordinary winter must be a failure. The only practicable means of communication between the Island and the mainland was between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine. The seasons—last year and this—had been very mild. He had known winters when it would have been utterly impossible for the Northern Light to have passed over the straits with safety. If communication were established between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine, and a short line of railway were constructed from Cape Traverse connecting with the Island railway, and another short branch constructed to intersect the Intercolonial Railway at Sackville, it would render communication with Charlottetown speedy and safe—a passage of not more than four hours.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What would be the railway distance from Cape Tormentine to intersect with the Intercolonial Railway?

Hon. Mr. Haviland.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD said, it would be thirty-two miles. He would state to the hon. the Secretary of State that an instrumental survey had been made of the proposed railway route, levels had been taken, and it was found that with the exception of two or three miles, it was almost a dead level; and the contractor or engineer who surveyed it for the persons interested in the project had tendered for the construction of the road-bed and stations for an extraordinarily moderate sum, provided the company went on with the work. The company was formed, but there was some difficulty in obtaining rails which prevented the company for accepting the tender. Under the circumstances there was no doubt but what that route would be a favorable one both winter and summer if it were adopted, as there would not be half the danger of loss of life or property that there was by the present route. He fully concurred in the views of the mover of this address, that it was unnecessary to form a commission of enquiry to decide what was the best route. As one who knew the locality he would be of opinion that the route between Capes Tormentine and Traverse was the only route that was practicable. With the aid of the Northern Light, or even a less expensive steamer with small boats something similar to those now used, it would be easy to keep up regular communication between the Island and the mainland, as there were very few days in the winter when mails could not be passed across the Straits. The reasons given by the hon. members who moved and seconded this address, seemed to him conclusive that the formation of a Committee of Enquiry would cause delay. The satisfactory establishment of regular communication across the Straits would be a mutual benefit to the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia as well as Prince Edward Island, and he trusted that this Government would adopt that course. It seemed to him so clear, so palpable, when the whole circumstances were taken into consideration, that measures should be adopted to place the mail on the route where nature intended it should be placed.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE said he was not at all surprised at the confession of hon. gentlemen that the experiment of running a winter steamer between Pictou and Georgetown had proved to be a failure. From the knowledge which he had of the Straits, he felt convinced that no boat could be constructed with sufficient power to force her way across the Straits at all seasons. He was satisfied that the Great Eastern, even, could not be depended upon at all times to force a passage through the ice floe. The Northern Light had a draught of eighteen feet of water, and it was well known that there were not many harbours on the coast that would admit a vessel drawing that much water. At Cape Tormentine, it was well known, there was a very strong current, as the Gulf narrowed between the two Capes. The water was confined to a narrow passage, and the heavy ice that came through there would prevent any vessel from going across at times. Even if there was no current, when there was a north-west wind blowing, the crossing would be impracticable. He had put this question to Mr. Sewell, when he was constructing the steamer, "Suppose your boat to have the power to force her way across the Strait, you will have to leave a certain point where her coal supply is, and on returning you will have to reach it again. But, with the pressure of the ice and current, she will be forced out of her way, so that when she reaches the shore she will be twelve or fourteen miles distant from her coaling station." This had actually occurred several times in trying to cross between Pictou and Georgetown. He sympathised with the people of Prince Edward Island. He believed the Government were bound by the articles of Confederation to establish regular communication between the Island and the mainland, but even if there were no such bond, they were bound in all conscience to use every exertion and incur a very considerable expenditure to test this experiment thoroughly. He believed it had been tested fully, at a considerable expense, and he would look with some curiosity for the amount expended during the past year for this particular service. He imagined it was a very large sum of money that had been expended on it from first to last, and he thought the explanations and the information which his hon. friend had asked for would show that the country had received very small returns for the outlay. His belief was that a Committee of Enquiry should be appointed.

Hon. Mr. Macfarlane.

Such a committee might do a great deal of good. His own experience of the Georgetown route was that on the Prince Edward side, the vessel had not experienced any difficulty; the difficulty had always been met with on the Nova Scotia side. The reason was that when they got down towards Georgetown, there was a large open bay into which the ice was pushed to such an extent that it made a continuous jam through which no vessel could force its way. Ship-masters and others who professed to know this locality better than he did, had told him that further west of that, the ice was constantly moving, and by avoiding this large bay, less difficulty would be experienced. He thought it quite possible that a Committee of Enquiry would elicit evidence of practical men, who could show that a much better port could be selected in Nova Scotia for this service than Pictou. If, however, hon. gentlemen from Prince Edward Island considered that the route between Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse was the best, it would be advisable to test it; not by inducing the Government to undertake large and expensive works, but by putting the steamer on that course and testing the question as to whether she could cross there or not. His opinion was it would be a failure from two causes: one was that the ice floe was two miles from the land—a mile on either side. How were they to reach her in order to supply her with coal? There would be no means for doing so as there was no dock and no place by which she could have access to the coal. Until some means was found to place fuel on the vessel, she would be helpless. If, however, the Northern Light could be placed at that point, the practicability of the route could be tested without a large expenditure for wharves, breakwaters and other works, and satisfy the people of Prince Edward Island, that ought to be done. His opinion was, however, that a Committee of Enquiry would elicit the fact that at some other point a more favorable route than that between Georgetown and Pictou could be found, where there would be less danger from ice jams. It was well known that there were several harbors lying between Cape Tormentine and Pictou where ice jams did not occur, and this fact could be established by an investigation by a Committee of Enquiry, if the Government would only adopt that course.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE said he had endeavored to explain that one of the advantages of placing the Northern Light at Cape Tormentine was, it would not be subjected to the pressure of the ice, and it would thus be saved from wear and tear of that kind.

Hon. Mr. WARK said he had lived for forty years within sight of Prince Edward Island, and anyone who was acquainted, as he was, with the perils and fatigues which not only hon. members of this Senate, but the people in general were subjected to in crossing over to the mainland, must sympathise with them. He did not know that a Commission of Enquiry could elicit much more information than they now had, because there were so few people who had any experience in those Straits, except those who were obliged to cross them in ice-boats, that he feared very little would be gained by it. His experience led him to the conclusion that the flood tide swept around both ends of the Island, and the ebb tide in the same way. The hon. gentleman who had addressed the House last, had spoken of the current carrying the ice with great rapidity up and down the Straits. There was no doubt such was the case, and a vessel would be carried very far out of her course, from where she proposed landing. However, as the tide ran in from both ends of the Island, there would be a time found when, if there was no wind, there would be very little current, and this state of the tide should be looked for, in order to make the passage. The difficulty with the ice floe would be how to secure the boat during the hours she was unemployed. A breakwater was spoken of, to be constructed before the bord ice formed, and when the bord ice was formed, a mile or so on each side of the Strait, the vessel would make her passage each way in an hour, or an hour and a half; that is, she would spend only three or four hours in making her return trip, and where would she be secured during the remaining twenty hours she would be unemployed? That was one of the most serious questions to be considered, and before anything else was settled on, it ought to be tested by actual experiment. The boat might be employed there for two or three weeks as an experiment.

Hon. Mr. Macfarlane,

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND—An artificial harbor could be cut for her in the bord ice.

Hon. Mr. WARK—That would freeze up.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The papers asked for will be brought down. We hoped last Session from the experience we had, that the experiment of winter communication with Prince Edward Island had been successfully solved, and I am sorry to hear that the Northern Light has not been as successful as we anticipated. Last year from the time she commenced work to the end of the season she made thirty-eight round trips between the eighth of January and the first of April. It was apparent at first that between Pictou and Georgetown was the most convenient point to cross at, because there was railway communication already established. This year she has not altogether been a failure because between the nineteenth of December, and the ninth of February she has made twenty round trips. It was very unfortunate that just at the beginning of this month, when hon. gentlemen were on their way to this House, she got into an ice floe and was unable to extricate herself. Of course the same accident is liable to overtake any boat navigating in such waters. I have listened with much interest to hon. members from Prince Edward Island whose observations on this subject are calculated to give us very valuable experience. Still, it is doubtful, from the observations made by one or two hon. gentlemen who spoke in the latter part of the debate, that it is absolutely certain, even if the route between the two Capes were selected, we should make the experiment a thorough success. There seem to be very grave doubts on that point. Of course, if that route were adopted, it would be necessary to reach those two points by railway, which would involve a very considerable expenditure of money. I learn, in reply to an enquiry which I made while hon. gentlemen were speaking, that it would involve the construction of forty-two miles of railway, twelve miles on one side, and thirty on the other. It would also involve the construction of a breakwater at a distance of a mile from the shore, which would be a very serious undertaking, and then it is considered by some hon. gentlemen it might not be a success. I shall have great pleasure in directing the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who introduced this motion, and to those of other hon. gentlemen who gave utterance to the practical opinions they have expressed. I am unable to say how far the Government would be justified in trying the experiment of crossing the steamer between the two Capes. Whether it would be feasible or not I am unable to say, but some gentlemen with whom I conversed on the subject said it might be a success, though they were not prepared to say that success would be assured. The cost last year of repairing the Northern Light was $18,000. It would appear that the vessel, in the first instance, was selected as being the very best model of a boat that could be made for this special service, and I think the design was submitted to a number of gentlemen who represent Prince Edward Island, before it was accepted. Certainly, I had the opinion of several of them before the Government committed themselves to the expenditure entailed in the building of that boat.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE said, practically, the Northern Light had solved the difficulty about where she should lie in the ice every night. She was simply run into an ice floe, and there she remained fixed until morning. But, in the hard ice, she would have a permanent berth cut, where she could lie securely, and he presumed she could be provided with coal between the Capes in the same way as she had been provided with it between Georgetown and Pictou—by means of horses and sleighs—so that she could be no worse off there than where she is now.

The motion was agreed to.

MINISTERIAL CHANGES.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before the House adjourns, as I believe it is usual for the Government to make explanations of the changes in the Cabinet since the previous Session, I wish to give the formal announcement usually made on occasions of this kind. Hon. Mr. Cauchon having been offered the Lieut.-Governorship of Manitoba, and having accepted the appointment, the vacant portfolio was offered to Mr. Laurier, who accepted it, and is now Minister of the Department of Inland Revenue. Subsequently the Minister of Militia, having entertained doubts as to whether he had not inadvertently violated the Independence of Parliament Act, and forfeited his seat, resigned his seat in the House of Commons and appealed to his constituents. I regret to say that he was defeated. He then immediately resigned his portfolio as Minister of Militia, and it was offered to Mr. Jones who accepted it. The other change was the retirement of Mr. Blake from the Cabinet. It was very well known that during the latter part of last Session his health gave way and he was unable to give that attention to the duties of his office which was necessary to their fulfilment. It was hoped that his withdrawal from the office and duties of Minister of Justice, and his acceptance of an office of minor importance—President of the Council—would have enabled him to remain a member of the Government. Although he was away during a considerable portion of the summer seeking relaxation and renewal of his vigor, he felt it was necessary at last to consult with his medical adviser, who advised him to withdraw from all the excitement incidental to the position of a Cabinet Minister. Mr. Blake, therefore, sent in his resignation very many months before it was accepted. It had been hoped that by his withdrawal from the labors of office, and his retirement for a time, he would have recovered his health. I regret to say that was not the case, and his resignation was consequently accepted. Mr. Blake left the Cabinet from no difference of opinion with his colleagues. He was entirely in accord with them on all matters of public policy, and he resigned for the one cause alone—a cause which I am sure this House regrets, as the whole country regrets—that is, from his health having unfitted him to continue in his position as a Cabinet Minister.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

The House adjourned at 4.40 p. m.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS introduced a Bill entitled, "An Act for the Relief of Hugh Hunter."

The Bill was read the first time.

THE DAWSON ROAD.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD enquired if the Government has any determined policy in reference to the Dawson Road; and whether it is to be maintained as a public work of the Dominion, and kept open for traffic and communication? He said:—I look at the Dawson Road as one of the greatest enterprises of the day. As soon as it was decided that the North-West should become a part of the Dominion, the first thing to be done was, naturally, to open up communication with that new territory. It was in the interest of the whole Dominion that the Eastern Provinces should find a larger field for their population. The people of Quebec wished to continue the work which had been commenced long years before by La Corne and many other pioneers of the great North-West, while the Maritime Provinces were interested in seeing the trade with the rich prairies of the West established and developed. It seems to me, although there were many difficulties to be overcome, nothing was spared, until the last three years, to keep the Dawson Road in a passable condition. It was understood that this was the only highway by which passengers and freight could be conveyed through own territory to the North-West. We found the benefit of having that road in 1870, when the Dominion was obliged to send a military force to Manitoba to put an end to the trouble which had existed there for some time; and again, in 1871, when an additional force was sent through to resist the anticipated Fenian invasion. I ask hon. gentlemen if it is not possible that such contingencies may occur in the future, and what the consequence would be if—as I believe the Government intend—that road is to be abandoned? I know the interest which is felt by the people of Canada in our great North-West, and that their best wishes accompany those who are settling it, but what would be the position of that isolated population if circumstances should render it necessary to send troops and supplies to protect them if we had no road through our own territory? It would be like a father whose house was on fire witnessing his children perishing in the flames while he was powerless to save them. We would have your sympathy, but that would not relieve us from our troubles. I have not heard what the policy of the Government is with respect to that road. I know immense sums were expended to build and maintain it, until about two years ago, since which time nothing has been done to keep it in proper condition. Last summer advertisements were published offering to sell all the sheds and depots built on the route for the shelter of passengers and goods. From that fact, I conclude that the policy of the Government is to abandon that great artery—the only road by which it is possible to pass, through our own territory, from the Eastern Province to the North-West. I know the Dawson Route is not very convenient, but still it is possible to travel by it, and something should be done towards keeping it open. As soon as it was closed, our friends in the United States profited by the monopoly which it gave them of transporting freight and passengers to Manitoba. The question has often been asked—what is the cause of the depression which prevails in Canada? In my opinion it is this—while the Americans give us as few advantages as they can, we give them every facility to profit by our heavy expenditures on public works. I have remarked that a great part of the outlay in the North-West, up to the present time, has been more profitable to the United States than to the Dominion. I would respectfully ask the Government whether the Dawson Road is a Dominion or a Provincial work? If the latter, then Manitoba will have to provide the means necessary to keep it in repair, and the repairs are very important. Last summer, the communication was interrupted by frequent rains and the disrepair into which the road had fallen. I had to pass over it myself, and I thought it would be impossible to get through. It was from bad to worse all the way—from Charybdis into Scylla. The road is in this dilapidated condition because we do not know whether it is the duty of Manitoba or of the Dominion to keep it in repair. The Dominion, having large means at its disposal, should not force a poor Province like Manitoba to keep up such a costly work, and, as it was built by them, I do not see how they can shelter themselves behind the plea that it is a local road. With these few remarks, I wait respectfully to hear the explanations of the Government.

After some remarks from Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said:—The view of the Government is this—as the railway from Lake Superior to the crossing at Savanne River will be completed at a comparatively early date, up to that point, at all events, the Dawson Route will not be used, and will more properly fall to the Province in which it is situated. From Savanne, there is navigation through Lac de Mille Lacs, and thence, over certain portages and water communication, down to Rainy Lake. That section will, no doubt, be kept open, and the necessary improvements will be made upon it, until the gap spoken of—184 miles—between Rat Portage and English River has been completed. The railway, on the western side, going east from the Red River to Rat Portage, where it intersects the Lake of the Woods, will also be completed at an early date, and the road up to the Lake of the Woods, on the west side, will naturally fall to the local authorities—that part in Manitoba will naturally be handed over to the Government of the Province. It would not be desirable for the Government to keep it open, when we will so soon have railway communication to the Lake of the Woods.

Hon. Mr. Girard.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Certainly not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say the length of that part of the Dawson Road between Port Savanne and Rainy Lake, or the improvements that would be necessary to put it in good condition, but there necessarily would be a gap between Savanne River and Rainy Lake, that ought to be kept open, and no doubt will be kept open in some suitable manner until the railway from English River to Rat Portage is completed. The present contract covers beyond Savanne up to English River; but that distance would not be available in the water communication, or until the 184 miles spoken of had also been completed.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Is it the intention to go on from Savanne to English River—40 miles—until the railway is completed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Intimation has been given by the Government to the contractor, under the clause which is inserted in all contracts, that work is not to be proceeded with hastily on that portion of the road—that the Government were not desirous that portion should be pressed. The part which could be made available was up to Savanne River.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—If the railway communication is open from Lake Superior to Savanne River, and the Dawson Route is kept open to the North-west Angle until the railway is perfect; that would be a scheme which, I think, would be a complete one, and would necessarily provide, also, a route from the North-west Angle to Winnipeg. But I fancy that the road from the Lake of the Woods must also be kept in order, because the railway from Rat Portage westerly will not be completed, I understand, for three or four years: therefore, unless the Dawson Road is kept open on that section, it would be useless to make improvements in any other part of it. You must make the communication complete, or not at all. One advantage is, that the route, though imperfect, will be through our own country all the way from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not desire the House to understand that the portion of the Dawson Road, west of the Lake of the Woods, should be kept up. My own impression is—but I speak subject to correction, because I have not the dates in my mind—that the railway from Red River to Rat Portage will be finished sooner than the time spoken of—two or three years. If I am right in that conclusion, then the Government would not be justified in spending any considerable sum on the portion of the Dawson Road between Winnipeg and the North-west Angle. A very small fraction indeed of the travel and traffic, between Winnipeg and the Eastern Provinces, would come by that way—nearly all of it is through the United States. It is also to be considered that the gap between our boundary and the American line of communication is to be completed by August next. It has been intimated to the Government, on what has been considered substantial authority, that a reliable company has been organized to complete the link between Pembina and the North Pacific, and it was intended, as hon. gentlemen may have seen by the advertisements calling for tenders, to have railway communication from Winnipeg to Duluth open by August next. It would, therefore, be unwise to make any considerable expenditure on a road, which must after a short time become local or provincial in its character. Whatever value may be attached to it, the road will cheerfully be given to Manitoba, and they can make any improvements they please upon it; but with the experience we have had for the last three years, and the evident desire of the country to secure more convenient and speedy access to Manitoba, the Government would not be justified in expending much more money upon the Dawson Route.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I am pleased to hear that there is such a near prospect of having access by rail to Winnipeg, even if American railways have to be used. I have, however, no hesitation in saying that the course pursued by the Government in opening up a highway to the North-West is not in the interest of this country. My hon. friend, who passed over the Dawson Route the past season, will join with me in the belief that the gap left between English River and Rat Portage, only to be got over by these portages and water stretches, will never establish a successful line of communication into, or out of, Manitoba. No freight or passengers will ever go over that road. So, I think, the conclusion arrived at by my hon. friend from Cataraqui (Hon. Mr. Campbell) is wise—that it is not advisable to spend much money on this Dawson Road. Then comes in the difficulty of spending such a large sum of money on the Fort Francis works. They are not completed, and will not be finished this year, and may not be next; I think the expenditure is quite unwarranted and useless. Looking over a leading journal last evening, I came to the conclusion that the Government had changed their policy on this point, and that we were to have an all-rail route from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg. The Globe, which is a good authority on governmental questions, says, in combating an article which appeared in the St. Paul Pioneer Press:—“That a continuous line of railway from Lake Superior to Red River will be open at no distant day.” From this, I thought I was justified in coming to the conclusion that the Government had abandoned their old policy of part-rail part-water, with sundry portages thrown in, as also the stoppage of any further expenditure on the Fort Francis Locks. From the Secretary of State we, however, learn that there is no change of policy, which the friends of the Government must, I am sure, regret.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY HEADQUARTERS.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved:—“That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that he will be pleased to lay before this House, copies of all Orders in Council, reports, recommendations, and correspondence, and any other information in the possession of the Government relative to the fixing of the headquarters of the Intercolonial Railway at Moncton.” This is a matter about which one would suppose there would be very little doubt, but there is, apparently, a good deal of doubt on the subject, and it is simply with the object of removing the doubt that I make this motion. I do not propose to introduce political questions into what I have to say, except just as little as possible. The impression on my mind previous to the late election in the County of Halifax, with reference to this matter, was as follows :—I was under the impression that in the year 1870 (my authority for it was the gentleman who represents the County of Cumberland in the Commons, in a speech which he made at Halifax some two or three years ago) it was decided on the recommendation of the Intercolonial Railway Commissioners to remove the headquarters of the Intercolonial from Halifax to Moncton. Perhaps that may not be the fairest way of putting it. Up to that time the headquarters of the Government railways of Nova Scotia had been situated at Halifax—the principal workshops, and the office of the Traffic Superintendent and other offices of that kind were in the city of Halifax. In 1872, I think it was, the railway was completed from Halifax to St. John, and, unless I am mistaken, it was in the year 1873 that the offices—what are called the head offices of the Intercolonial Railway—and the principal workshops for the whole road were located at Moncton. The locating of the principal workshops of the railway and the principal business offices at Moncton are the things that were generally meant by the people of Nova Scotia when they complained that the workshops and offices had been moved to Moncton. If it has been stated, it was stated incorrectly, that the workshops were removed from Halifax, because the old workshops which existed in Halifax before the change that I have just spoken of remain there still, and are used as repairing workshops in which a number of engines have been repaired, and other work done, from 1872 or '73 up to the present time, just as before. I don't know whether my impression about the thing is altogether correct or not, and it is for the purpose of ascertaining that fact I have asked for the information mentioned in the resolution. There is a good deal of misapprehension on the subject. For instance, during the recent election campaign in the County of Halifax, there were statements made by gentlemen on opposite sides in that contest which were almost in direct contradiction of each other. My own impression is, that there was perhaps no intentional misrepresentation, but the persons who made the statements looked at the matter from two different standpoints. Those who said the workshops had been removed by the late Government, probably meant what I have said : That the headquarters of the Intercolonial Railway had been fixed at Moncton; and the gentlemen who said that the works had not been removed by the late Government probably meant that the workshops were continued in use at Halifax for the purposes of repairing. One gentleman who seem to be under the impression that the present Government had made the change was the hon. gentleman from Londonderry who ought to be in a position to know the exact facts of the matter, and my impression is that at the time the change was recommended that hon. gentleman was a member of the Intercolonial Railway Commission. I have nothing more to say on this matter, except that I make this motion simply in order that we may get a correct statement about a matter on which there ought to be no doubt. The history of events that happened long ago must be very hard to get at when such contradictory statements are made concerning a transaction that occurred only within the last three or four years.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND said he thought it would be a very bad precedent if this Chamber, which was supposed to be free from violent political partizanship, should be selected as a tribunal to settle questions that might arise between rival political parties during the heat of an election, whether for the Dominion House of Commons or a Provincial Assembly. It might do very well for a question of this kind to arise in the House of Commons, but he thought the Senate was no tribunal to give decisions upon such matters.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The hon. mover of this resolution has reference to me in this matter, and though I agree with the last speaker, that this Senate is hardly the place to bring election questions for decision, I may be pardoned for making a few observations. The hon. gentleman from Halifax states that I took part in the discussion on the removal of workshops during the late election there. Reference having been made to me in the public prints, I was called upon in a short letter to give certain facts bearing on a particular point. The question there seemed to be, which Government had removed the workshops? The result of the discussion appeared to be that the party charging the late Government with having removed them, proved by their own evidence that there has actually been no removal. The gentlemen supporting the present Government published a letter from the foreman, Mr. Appleton, who stated that they had as many engines to repair as they ever had. It appears from this that the workshops cannot have been removed from Halifax. The hon. gentleman seems to have directed his enquiry to the recommendation for the removal of the headquarters to Moncton, and to who gave that recommendation. The Commissioners, looking at the position of the road, and its various branches, considered it important to have the principal works central to the greatest number of miles of road. North of Moncton there were 374 miles of railway; west of Moncton, to St. John, 89 miles, and east, to Point Duchene, and south, to Truro, 127 miles, making Moncton central to 590 miles. Therefore, they concluded that in that centre there should be some arrangement made for the construction and repairs of the rolling stock for that 590 miles of road. This left the sections from Pictou to Truro, 52 miles, Truro to Halifax, 61 miles, and the Windsor Branch, 45 miles, or 158 miles more, that would form another division which would naturally fall to the works then at Halifax. The Commissioners gave a recommendation for the construction of workshops and offices at Moncton; this recommendation was sanctioned by the Government, and workshops were erected there. The charge was made by the friends of the present Government, that the Commissioners had recommended the removal of the workshops that had been in existence at Halifax ever since any portion of the Halifax road was opened. The result, I think, has proved that even if that recommendation was ever given by the late Commissioners, it had never been acted upon by the Government, for up to the time of the change of Administration, it was shown by letters from Mr. George Taylor, who was then superintendent, and from Mr. Johnson, who was mechanical foreman of the workshops, that no tools or machinery had been removed, and that there was more work being then done at the Richmond workshops than had ever been done at any time previous. In confirmation of this, I may add Montgomery & Co., of Halifax, had contracted to build a number of locomotives for the Intercolonial, but getting into financial difficulties when they had only completed one or two, the balance were given to the Richmond shops to construct. This transfer I personally attended to, and know that it made quite an addition to the work. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Power) would refer to the report of Mr. Brydges, made after the change of Government took place, on the 20th of June, 1874, he will find that Mr. Brydges, under an Order in Council of the 12th of May, 1874, was appointed as a Commissioner to examine the Intercolonial Railway and its workings. Mr. Brydges, on the 20th of June, reported upon the whole road, and upon the Mechanical Department among others. He will find that at that time there were very nearly as many men employed in the workshops in the city of Halifax as at the workshops in Moncton. He will find in Mr. Brydges' report, page 44, that he says the total number of men employed in the Mechanical Department was, at Moncton, 198; and at Richmond, 180; so that on the 20th of June, 1874, seven months after the change of Government, there were within 18 of being as many hands employed at Richmond as there were at Moncton. It will thus be seen that the charge which has been brought against the late Government of having removed the workshops from Richmond, does not hold good, if Mr. Brydges' report be correct. I need not weary the House by going into this matter, as we have the particulars before us, but in the same report the hon. gentleman will find that Mr. Brydges recommends that the workshops should be removed from Richmond, because he found the rate of wages to be less at Moncton than it was at Richmond. He makes the rate of wages the main consideration for the removal. How far that report has been acted upon, I am unable to say, but in the supplementary report he states that his recommendations were approved by the Government, and, instructed by the Minister of Public Works, he went down to Halifax and dismissed the mechanical superintendent, Mr. Johnson, and a number of others from the Richmond workshops. But I find that he has not been able to carry out his recommendation in full, of removing the whole of the workshops from Richmond, but he has probably kept them from being enlarged to meet the natural increase of the work. There are now some eight workshops along the line. There is one at Riviere du Loup, one at St. Flavie, one at Campbelltown, one at Miramichi, one at Truro, one at Pictou Landing, and one at Richmond, so that it will be found that the workshops have not really been removed from Richmond; that there are workshops there and at all the points I have named. But what is probably correct is, that since this report of Mr. Brydges, in June, 1874—after the change of Government—the workshops at Halifax have been curtailed. He states in the report that the ground is not favorable for enlargement; and I have no doubt but that the difference in the number of men now employed at Richmond and Moncton is more than in June, 1874. That difference, hon. gentlemen will see on page 44 of the report, was only 18, so that if there has been any curtailment of the workshops at Richmond, it has been since then, and I hope the hon. gentleman will get such reports as will set the matter at rest.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY said he rose not for the purpose of discussing this motion, but of protesting against this House being used as an arena for such discussions as the present one. The hon. gentleman who made this motion had made it expressly, and in terms, for the purpose of removing certain doubts in his own mind, in consequence of contradictory statements made in the recent electoral campaign in his own county. Was it wise that the time of this House should be taken up in fastening a charge upon an hon. gentleman who took a prominent part in the campaign who was not a member of this House, but whose statement could be challenged if necessary in the House of which he was a member. He thought the hon. gentleman would best consult his own dignity by withdrawing this motion after the satisfactory statement of the hon. member for Londonderry. He did not know what course the Government would take upon this motion, but he would protest against this House being used to settle election squabbles that had originated in a campaign in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said there could be no possible objection to the motion going. It was a very ordinary one, asking for papers to be brought down. He was sorry to say that he had not caught all the expressions made use of by the hon. the mover, and he could not say how far this might reflect on the position of any hon. gentleman in the other Chamber. He thought it would be very unfortunate that any statement should be made that would reflect on any gentleman in the other House. As the motion simply asked for information he would let it go, and the papers would be brought down.

Hon. Mr. POWER said he had studiously avoided saying that any hon. gentleman had stated what was not true. He had said that there was a good deal of doubt and misapprehension on the subject, and he was anxious the doubt should be removed as far as he was concerned himself, and as far as other interested persons were concerned, and he was sure that there was nothing improper in that. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Haviland) had objected to anything of a partizan nature being introduced here; but a great many resolutions adopted in this House were of that character. He had only made this motion to elicit information which he thought any member of this House was entitled to, when it was in the hands of the Government to give it. He had said nothing whatever against the selection of Moncton as the headquarters of the railway; that was a matter about which he, as everyone else, had his own opinion. He thought it would have been very much better to have left the headquarters at Halifax, but that was a matter not now under consideration. The hon. gentleman from Londonderry had called attention to the report of Mr. Brydges. He (Hon. Mr. Power) had seen it quoted in a letter of the hon. gentleman to the Halifax Herald, and he did not think there was much importance to be attached to it, because it was not carried into effect. The letter of the superintendent at Richmond showed that there was as much work being done there now as at any other time, and, as he had just said, if Mr. Brydges did report in favor of the removal, his recommendation had never been carried out. He presumed the reason why the disproportion between the number of men employed at Richmond and at Moncton is greater now than at the time the hon. gentleman from Londonderry had spoken of, was that in 1874 the road had not been completed, and the work was being done, at that time, only from Moncton to Halifax, and from Moncton to St. John. Since then the road had been opened north, and there were more hands required.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN, said there were shops north of that now.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4.20 p. m.

THE SENATE.

Thursday, Feb. 21st.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

After Routine proceedings.

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE moved—"that when this House adjourns on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh instant, it do stand adjourned until Thursday, the seventh of March, proximo, at Eight o'clock in the evening." He said—I hope no objection will be made to the motion that I now submit to the House. I know that last Session objections were raised to a motion similar to this, yet I noticed that when we resumed our sittings after the recess, for a long time we met every afternoon and sat only for fifteen or twenty minutes at a time, waiting for legislation to come up from the other House. It is known to us all that of late the other House has been adjourning every afternoon at six, and there cannot possibly be any bills from that body before two or three weeks yet. Moreover, there is very little on our own order paper—nothing that we could not do in a few hours after we re-assemble after the recess. Under these circumstances, there can be no reasonable objection to the adjournment I propose. I know there is an objection. It comes from gentlemen who cannot reach their homes during the time the proposed recess would last, and I believe that is the most serious difficulty. I would remind them that whether we have a recess or not, they would have to stay here. We all know that the adjournment I propose would not delay the work of the Session. During the recess proposed, there are three days on which we would not meet under any circumstances, and the adjournment would affect only five regular sitting days. I hope the motion will not be opposed.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I am sorry indeed that I cannot support this motion, I assure my hon. friend it is not because I would be unable to reach my home during the recess. I am sure such a motive would not actuate any hon. gentleman from the Maritime Provinces. We oppose it because it is a bad system. There is nothing to prevent hon. gentlemen from going home if they choose, but I think they need not go for want of occupation. Many important questions can be discussed in this House while we are waiting for bills to come up from the other Chamber. There is a very important question, of which the hon. Senator from Montreal (Mr. Bureau) has given notice—the remonitization of silver in the United States and the effect it may have upon this country. We all remember the silver nuisance, and the trouble it caused in this country some years ago. Such subjects deserve careful consideration, and there are many of them which might occupy our time in this House. If the Senate wants to maintain its position in this country, these long adjournments should not take place. I am not disposed to act as a dog-in-the-manger, but I am opposed to a long adjournment.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE—I coincide entirely with the views expressed by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. This House has been brought together at a considerable expense to the public, not to be adjourned, but to work. I left my home for that purpose, and I am ready to devote myself to any business that may be brought before us. It seems to me a grave reflection on this House to say that we have nothing to do. Are there no committees organized, and have they no duties to perform? Though we hear so many reflections cast upon the conduct of public affairs, are they to pass without notice in this House? Yet we hear of hon. gentlemen talking of going home for eight days on a stretch in the middle of the Session. If the object were to bring this House into discredit, no better means could be adopted. The hon. gentleman who spoke last used great plainness of language, and I endorse what he said about the inexpediency of adjourning the Senate for eight days. I was opposed to the adjournment when it was proposed last year; I am opposed to it now, and I shall always oppose such a proposition.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—what have the Government to say on this subject?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Government will be guided by the opinion of the House.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I think the hon. gentleman might inform us what public measures are likely to be submitted to us.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I doubt if, in the interim, any important bills are likely to be brought up from the other House.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Have the Government any measures to originate in this House?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite possible that there will be one or two.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I confess I am exceedingly surprised at this motion, made by my hon. friend, and at the reasons he has given for submitting it. As the hon. Senator from Frederickton remarked, there is nothing to prevent any hon. gentleman from going home if he wishes to.

We are asked to pass this motion upon the ground that there is no business to engage our attention here for the next two or three weeks, and the Government sit silent under that, and desire us rather to lie under the impression there is none. I confess I am surprised that the Government, who have the conduct of business in this House in their hands, have not given us a different reply from that we have heard from the hon. Secretary of State, because that hon. gentleman must know better than any of us the condition of the public business. It is not for us, but for him, to anticipate that from day to day public measures of great importance may come before us. We have now on the paper several important matters, and others may come up from time to time. It has been heralded to us that a Bill of an important character—perhaps the most important that could be submitted to this Senate, in its initiatory point of view—will be laid before this House, and we have measures coming from the other Chamber. It would be improper and inconsistent for us to abdicate our functions for eight or ten days. The hon. Member who has made this motion has said, what has been frequently stated before, that he supposes the Members from the Maritime Provinces will oppose it because they cannot get home. The hon. gentleman forces us to retort that this proposition always comes from Members of a particular Province. This motion is unseemly, and if he will consult the feelings of the House he will withdraw it.

Hon. Gentlemen—No! No!

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Well, we shall have the views of hon. gentlemen placed on record, and see who are the Senators who declare that this House was obliged to adjourn because it had nothing to do.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I am entirely indifferent whether the motion passes or not, but I must say I am astonished at the excessive disposition manifested by some hon. gentlemen to attend to the public business and to make a ministerial question of this motion, when I remember that, during former administrations, adjournments of this kind were very common, and none thought the Ministry were or were not doing their duty in permitting it.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Undoubtedly if there is any business to be done we should stay here and do it; and if the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury Benches will give us any idea that there will be business for us during the next two or three weeks, I shall oppose the motion. If, however, there is no business to come up, the question is, apart from any ornament that may be thrown over it, what is the use of coming here day after day if we have nothing to do? Do we accomplish any good by this ceremony of meeting and adjourning?

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I have always been consistent on this question. I do not think it adds to our dignity to discuss it here. I have always opposed it. Last year I yielded on the general understanding that it would never be raised again.

Hon. gentlemen—No! No!

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Well, I let it go past last Session on that understanding. There is work to be done by the Committees, and I believe there are measures to be initiated in this House by the Government. But, apart from that, it is our business to be here. The public expect us to be here, and write here, and come here expecting to find us at the Capital during the Session. I know there is hardly a mail that comes in but brings me some important matter requiring my consideration. There are measures being discussed in the other House, and we are here, not merely to consider them in this Chamber, but to study them carefully and meditate upon public questions to be submitted to us. We would be recreant to our public duties if we permitted this motion to pass. Those gentlemen who wish to go home for a few days can do so, but they should not ask us to pass this unseemly resolution.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—I am very sorry to have to differ from the majority of members from the Maritime Provinces on this question. The view I take of it is this—will the adjournment as proposed lengthen the Session one hour?

Hon. Gentlemen—No! no!

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—Will it prevent any discussion of important questions that may be brought before the Senate? Will we not have ample time, supposing this adjournment takes place, to discuss any important matter which any gentleman wishes to submit to the Senate? I think we will, and under the circumstances I must confess I don't see any particular objection to the adjournment, assuming that I am right in the position I take. In respect to hon. members informing themselves on public questions, I know I shall have plenty to do, if I read all the blue books that have been submitted by the heads of the several departments. I know I have not time while sitting in this House to read and digest those heavy reports. Hon. gentlemen who cannot take advantage of the adjournment to return to their homes, might therefore turn their attention to the blue books, during the Recess, and thereby obtain information of public affairs and enable them to benefit the country.

The House then divided on the motion which was adopted on the following division:—

Hon. Mr. DICKEY gave notice that he would, on Tuesday next, move to rescind the resolution which had just been carried.

FISHWICK'S EXPRESS COMPANY.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved the second reading of the Bill to Incorporate the Fishwick Express and Forwarding Company.—Carried.

BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. McMASTER moved the second reading of the Bill to Incorporate the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society. He said the religious denomination asking for this Bill had been carrying on missionary operations in India and elsewhere, for a long time. They labored under a disadvantage in consequence of not being able to hold property, and this Bill was for the purpose of granting them power to do so, and for other purposes. It had been thought by some that there were portions of the Bill which did not come under the jurisdiction of this Parliament. If such were the case, he did not wish to press it, but without committing of the House to the principle of the Bill he would ask that it be read the second time, and sent to the Committee on Private Bills, where there were several eminent professional men who would remedy any defects in the measure.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said he had no objection to this Bill if it might constitutionally be passed by this Parliament; but from what he saw in the second clause of it, he believed it was merely of a local character—very like the Bill which he (Mr. Bellerose) had brought before this House two sessions ago. If the mover thought it advisable that the Bill should go to Committee, he would have no objection to its being read the second time on a division; but he did not see the necessity of that, because it was a useless waste of time to do so if this House had not the jurisdiction to pass such a measure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said no doubt there were precedents for such legislation in our Statute Books, and a similar Bill was introduced some years ago, but the general feeling of late was that it was inadvisable to pass such measures in this Parliament. While no objection could be urged to any of them, all having praiseworthy objects in view, they should be treated alike. As the hon. gentleman behind him (Mr. Bellerose) had observed, the Bill introduced by him two years ago, in which it was sought to allow a Society to hold land in several Provinces of the Dominion, with the view to sustain education in connection with their Order, was declared to be of a local character. The House on that occasion referred the Bill to the Supreme Court, and the Court decided it was not a subject that pertained to the Federal Parliament. The view expressed on that occasion was that where the functions sought for could be obtained from the local legislatures, it would be more convenient that the Act of Incorporation should be granted by them. He thought the Bill might be read the second time, with the understanding that no Senator was committed to the principle of it. For his own part, he had had no opportunity to examine it thoroughly, but on the face of it there was the objection that had been pointed out.

Hon. Mr. MILLER did not think the case mentioned by the hon. the Secretary of State was analogous to the Bill under consideration. The Bill which had been referred to the Supreme Court two sessions ago, was one whereby it was sought to incorporate the Christian Brothers for the purposes of education. It was referred to the Supreme Court who, on the ground that the question of Education was one altogether within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures, decided, rightly or otherwise, that the Bill should be brought before the local legislatures. This Parliament, under the British North America Act, had no right to deal with the subject of education, and, therefore, it was ultra vires for this House to pass such a Bill as the one asked for by the Christian Brothers. This measure, however, was one of an entirely different character, and he did not see any reason why it should not go to its second reading and be entertained by this House. It was not a local Bill. He could not fancy any measure of this nature which would be less local in its objects. It was not a Bill whose aims and purposes were peculiar to any Province of the Dominion; on the contrary, its operations were to be confined to foreign missions.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—It is for purposes abroad—outside the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said it was a Bill for the purpose of incorporating a body whose missions were carried on in foreign countries. If the Bill were exclusively for purposes within the Dominion, or within any Province of the Dominion, he could understand why it should be looked upon as a local measure, but he saw nothing in it that brought it within that category. On the contrary, he thought it was the very reverse. It might be a question whether the object desired could not be obtained by an Act of Incorporation from any Local Legislature.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the view I take of it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said if there were no reason in principle, or constitutionally, why it should not emanate here, he did not see why this Society should not be allowed to come here. If it established a precedent, that precedent would serve for all denominations. This House would deal equally with all religious bodies coming for acts of this kind. Therefore, he did not see how any injustice could accrue from allowing this Bill to be read the second time. If he had any idea that the Bill should not be entertained by this Legislature, he would oppose the second reading, as this was the stage at which a measure should be opposed, if not approved by the House. There were some provisions in the Bill to which objection might be taken, but as these were matters of detail, they could be regulated in Committee.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL said this question was a very delicate one, and he thought the Senate should stick to a well-defined rule in order to avoid the difficulty which was now suggested to the House. It seemed to him that the principle of the Bill was such as would bring it within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures, and he saw no better reason to admit this measure than the one which had been referred to—the Bill to Incorporate the Christian Brothers. Hon. gentlemen would readily see that whenever religious questions presented themselves, they were very difficult to deal with in this House. For instance, if the Catholics opposed such a Bill as this, it would be attributed to religious feeling. He disclaimed being influenced by such a consideration himself. If such a Bill as this should come before a local legislature, of which he was a Member, he would raise no objection to it; but he could see no difference between a measure to incorporate a private society to carry on the objects of education, and one to incorporate a private company for missionary purposes. He thought the principle was entirely the same. The House would recollect that a Bill was presented at a former Session to incorporate a company in the Lower Provinces, with the object of building ships to be sold in foreign countries, which was rejected by the Private Bills Committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It was sent back by the House, and was afterwards passed.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—I think the Bill did not pass.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It was sent back by the House and finally passed.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL said he thought not. It seemed to him that all measures of this kind came within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures, and he saw great difficulty in allowing this Bill to pass its second reading. This House should, once and for all, adopt a rule to avoid such difficulties. He regretted that he was obliged to vote against the second reading.

Hon. Mr. Miller.

He would do so, not on account of the object of the Bill, but because he thought this Parliament had nothing to do with such a measure.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND could not see any analogy between the Bill to incorporate the Christian Brothers and this measure. The former was to enable a Society to establish educational institutions in the various Provinces of the Dominion. That was in the very teeth, if he might use the expression, of the British North America Act, which declared that all matters relating to education should be dealt with by the legislatures of the various Provinces of the Dominion. The object of the Bill now under consideration was the diffusion of Christian knowledge, not within Provinces of the Dominion, but in India and other foreign countries, and the main object was to enable them to acquire and hold property within the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. Without this Bill they would have to go to the legislatures of Ontario and Quebec for the powers asked for by them; whereas this House had the power to give them what they demanded in all the Provinces. He believed, therefore, the Bill should be allowed to pass the second reading, and he would vote for it.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL thought the distinction between this Bill and the one referred to was well drawn. There was another view which should induce the House to pass this Bill. It was desirable in any case of doubt—if both the local legislatures and the Dominion Parliament had the power to enact measures of a certain kind, that the Dominion Parliament should arrogate to itself whatever power it could. There was no reason why this House should pass any self-denying ordinances, and say they should not deal with a measure because it could also be dealt with by the local legislatures. If this Society were refused this legislation here they would be obliged to go to the Ontario Legislature and to the Legislature of Quebec to obtain the powers they required—which would undoubtedly be inconvenient to them. He thought, however, there were other objections to the Bill which, while they would not render it necessary for him to vote against it, should be dealt with in Committee. The House would view with jealousy the powers such a society asked for to hold real estate. All countries had exercised great care in granting such powers as were asked for in the fifth clause of this Bill. The Society asked for power to hold real estate to the value of $20,000 per annum. Now that was a very large sum, but in addition to that, they asked to be allowed to take any land or real estate by devise to the clear annual value of $10,000 without any restriction as to the period which must elapse between making such a will and the death of the testator, a provision which is constantly found in English Bills. This provision is regarded with great favor by persons who have considered the question, and are anxious to take care that persons in a dying state are not induced by weakness to make devises which, in good health and with strong powers of mind, they would not be induced to do. Therefore, he thought this power should be restricted in the same manner as in similar Bills in England, so that no devise should be legal unless made at so long a period before the death of the testator as to preclude any surmise that he was in a position to be influenced in such a manner as he would not have been if he had been in good health. Then in the last clause, the power was taken to transfer to this Society any property held in trust for them—there was no limit to the amount. First, power was taken to hold property to the annual value of $20,000 by purchase or voluntary conveyance. Then, this additional power was taken to hold property that might, at the present time, be held in trust for the estate; it might amount to any sum—$40,000 or $50,000. He hoped the Bill would be amended in both these particulars, but thought no objection should be taken to the second reading. It would be better to read it the second time and refer it to a committee, and he was persuaded the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMaster) would be disposed to take care the Society was limited in respect to the powers to which he had called attention.

Hon. Mr. McMASTER said there was no necessity at all for hon. gentlemen having any delicacy in discussing this Bill. Although he was ardently attached to this denomination, he should not feel aggrieved if the Bill was rejected on principle; but as other denominations had acts of a similar character he thought there should be no objections raised against this one. However, if it were sent to the Private Bills Committee there were several eminent lawyers there who could bring their professional knowledge to bear on it and make it as perfect as possible. If it was considered contrary to the rules of this House to legislate on such a Bill he would not by any means press it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said the reference of the hon. gentleman from Kingston (Mr. Campbell) to the necessary limitations by way of devise was evidence that this Bill properly pertained to the local legislatures inasmuch as the laws relating to mort main were different in the several Provinces. The enactments in Ontario having reference to devises were extremely strict, and a clause had been settled by the Ontario Legislature which must be inserted in all of this character, debarring the society from receiving gifts in mort main unless under very strict conditions.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE asked the hon. gentleman from Kingston if he did not believe that the second section of this Bill gave power to the Society to establish Christian schools in different parts of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL said he had no doubt that the instruction which the Christian Brothers designated "Christian Knowledge" could be taught by this Society, but the former asked for powers to disseminate secular knowledge as well, and certainly that would not be, under the ordinary acceptation of the term, "Christian Knowledge." No person would say that the Christian Brothers were not disseminating Christian knowledge, but they wanted also the power to teach secular education.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said, that under this Bill, the missionaries might open a school, and that school might be called a Christian School, though in it might be taught arithmetic, grammar and every other branch of secular education. It would be a Christian school, but it would be a secular school also, and if there was an objection to the Bill of the Christian Brothers on that ground there should be an objection to this Bill also. Although the terms in which it was stated in this Bill might be different, the end sought for would be the same, and this was the best proof that the Bill was one that.

ought not to come before this House, but like the Bill of the Christian Brothers, it should go to the local legislature.

Hon. Mr. PENNY said he thought the hon. member from Kingston had not quite caught the point raised by the hon. gentleman behind him (Mr. Bellerose). That hon. gentleman had asked whether under the second clause of this Bill it would not be possible for the Association to open schools in this country. He (Mr. Penny) thought anybody who read the second clause would see that it gave no such power; it had nothing to do with education or anything else in this country. There was nothing in the Bill so far as Canada was concerned, but power given to the Society to hold property. He quite agreed with the hon. gentleman from Kingston as to the impropriety of the very wide powers given in that respect.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD said he rose for the purpose of objecting to this Bill. They were year by year increasing their legislation in matters which, in his opinion, came within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures. This was a Bill that should have been passed through the local legislature, and he, for one, did not wish to encourage applications to this House for Acts which could be obtained through another source. This was the strongest objection which he had to the Bill. The decision of the Judges of the Supreme Court on the Bill of the Christian Brothers, which had been referred to in this debate, was short, and he would read it to show the reasons why the Judges considered that Bill came within the purview of the local legislature.

"In pursuance of the order of reference of your honorable House of the 4th day of April, 1876, we have considered the Bill intituled 'An Act to incorporate the Brothers of the Christian Schools in Canada,' and we are of opinion that it is a measure which falls within the class of subjects exclusively allotted to Provincial Legislatures under section 93 of the British North America Act."

Hon. Mr. GIRARD said he felt a great deal of uneasiness about assenting to the second reading of this Bill, because in the second reading the principle was admitted. It seemed to him there was no difference between this Bill and the Bill of the Christian Brothers that had been before this House two or three years ago. If there was any difference it was in favor of the Bill of the Christian Brothers, who came before this House asking for an act of incorporation, their object being to disseminate education throughout the Dominion. The present Bill was not for the same purpose, though as it was for a praise-worthy object, it should be treated with the greatest liberality. But there was a principle of this House which they were bound to abide by. This Bill was merely a local affair, affecting only two Provinces in the Dominion—the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. If the Association mentioned in the Bill, the Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of Ontario and Quebec, had now a legal existence, there was nothing else required. They existed for the spread of religious principles and education, and could employ as many persons in that way as they pleased. If something more was required—if they wanted an act of incorporation to permit them to employ other missionaries and teachers in other Provinces, they should go to the local legislatures for it. It seemed to him it would be more satisfactory to have the Bill submitted to the Supreme Court for the decision of the Judges, before it passed a second reading. If a motion to refer it to the Supreme Court were made, he would support it.

Hon. Mr. McMASTER said the Society had been under the necessity of acquiring property in India; that property had to be taken in the name of the missionaries. Hon. gentlemen were aware how uncertain life was in those countries, and when a missionary died with the title of the Society's lands invested in him, nothing could be done with it, but it had to remain locked up until the heirs came of age. It was to meet just such difficulties as this that the Act of incorporation was required.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS said he thought the exception of the hon. Member from Kingston was very well taken. To avoid the evil of those societies holding large amounts of real estate, a clause might be inserted, the same as the 6th clause of the Act passed in 1872, for the incorporation of the Wesleyan Missionary Society, by which the association might take devises, but to be subject to provincial laws. The clause was as follows:—

"The said Society shall be capable of taking, holding, and receiving any real or personal estate by virtue of any devise contained in any last will or testament of any person whatsoever, but the clear annual value of such real estate shall not exceed the sum of ten thousand dollars: Provided always that such devise of real estate shall be subject to the laws respecting devises of real estate to religious corporations which are in force at the time of such devise in the Province in which such real estate is situate."

A clause of that kind would just meet the difficulty, and he had no doubt that the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill would be willing to accept an amendment of that kind.

The Bill was read the second time on division, and referred to committee.

The House adjourned at 4.40 p.m.

SENATORIAL APPOINTMENTS.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—An Address was passed by this House last Session, to which, apparently, no answer has been received from the Imperial Government. I allude to certain resolutions passed in this House relative to the intentions the Government once had to add to the numbers of the Senate. Those resolutions, asserting the opinion of this House, were, no doubt, transmitted to the Imperial Government by His Excellency the Governor-General, and acknowledged by the Colonial Office. Whatever the reply may have been, it should be submitted to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer, in the shape of a despatch from Lord Carnarvon, was received some time ago by the Government, and will be brought down to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. DICKSON moved that a committee consisting of Messrs.

Hon. Mr. Aikins.

Dickey, Miller, Leonard, Paquet, and the mover, be appointed for the management of the Senate Restaurant.—Carried.

THE FORTNIGHTLY MAIL SERVICE TO HALIFAX.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY enquired whether the Government intend to provide, by a grant in the Supplementary Estimates, for the dropped grant in the Estimates submitted to Parliament, for a fortnightly Steam Service between Halifax and Queenstown for the ensuing year? About this day a year ago, I felt it my duty to ask a question in terms almost identical with this, and upon that occasion I ventured to enter fully into the question connected with this fortnightly service. I was supported in that by the unanimous expression of opinion of the members from Nova Scotia, with the single exception of the hon. member then lately appointed from Halifax. The result was, I am happy to say, that the Government re-considered the matter and restored the subsidy in the supplementary estimates for the current year, which grant they have now again dropped from the estimates submitted to Parliament. The object of my question is to ascertain whether the Government intend, as I trust they do, to bring down an equivalent sum in the supplementary estimates to be submitted this Session. Two years ago—in the Session of 1876—I felt it my duty to urge upon the House and the Government the claims of Halifax as the great winter port of the Dominion. On that occasion, supported as I was by the general concurrence of the Maritime Members, I ventured to predict that the selection of that harbor as the winter port of the Dominion, after the opening of the Intercolonial Railway would accelerate the delivery of mails and passengers by some twelve to twenty-four hours, and necessarily attract a large quantity of freight and traffic over the Intercolonial. So strong were the representations on that point, that they elicited from the Government a promise that on the completion of the Intercolonial Railway, a few months afterwards, they would be prepared with a policy for the occasion. That promise they redeemed, and I need hardly appeal to the members of this House, as I could with confidence, to say whether the anticipations then expressed have not been more than realized in the results that have followed the adoption of that policy. In all this, I desire to take no personal credit to myself individually, seeing I was simply discharging a public duty, but I think the Senate is entitled to the credit of having taken up this question and urged it upon the Government at a time when the representatives of Halifax did not think fit to raise their voices in another place on the subject. Having gone into this matter at length on a former occasion, I do not now propose to descant upon the position of Halifax and the importance of this fortnightly service, especially in relation to the communication between Halifax and Newfoundland, the Island of St. Pierre and the West Indies. But before I sit down, I would respectfully urge upon the Government, that they will again re-consider the position of this matter, that they will not take away from Halifax a privilege that has been enjoyed by them for nearly forty years, especially in the summer season, and that they will not deprive the Maritime Provinces of the benefits of this important service. I hope the Government will make a favorable response to this appeal; at the same time, if they can give us the assurance that this fortnightly service can be continued without a subsidy, I shall be quite satisfied, but, without that, I would again urge upon them not to let this subsidy be withdrawn, but see that this fortnightly service of nearly forty years' standing, so essential to the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, is continued, especially during the summer season, when the weekly steamers are withdrawn from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I am obliged to my hon. friend from Amherst for the forcible and convincing manner in which he has brought this question, on several occasions, before the Government and this House. It was only by seeing the notice on the paper that I learned this grant had been dropped. I cannot believe it is the intention of the Government to drop the subsidy, unless they are assured that the service will be performed without the grant (which I do not believe); or unless it should now happen that Halifax, persuaded as it has lately been that this Government would not only continue the privileges enjoyed for nearly forty years, but would make it the winter port of the Dominion, not only for mails and passengers, but by encouragement of traffic over the Intercolonial, the freight depot for the whole Dominion. It is quite clear, from the manner in which the hon. Senator from Amherst brought this matter up—supported as he was on all occasions by the members from the Maritime Provinces with the one exception—induced the Government to continue the grant last year, and it is quite clear that the strong appeals made in the Senate as to the importance of this service, has forced itself upon not only the attention of this House, but upon business men everywhere. Since Halifax naturally must become the winter port of Canada—the wharf of the Dominion—we should, by all means, encourage and keep up the mail subsidy, especially since Halifax is the distributing point for the arrival and departure of mails between here, and England and Newfoundland, and St. Pierre and the West Indies. I trust that the Government, after the forcible manner in which the subject has been brought to the notice of the House, and the abundant proof of the benefit derived, will not allow the service to be discontinued, unless the opinion of the hon. Member for Halifax should now prevail with the Government to the great detriment of the public.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—I can only endorse what has been said by both of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken. I can assure the Government it is a matter of great importance, not only to the Maritime Provinces, but to the Dominion. I have no doubt, seeing the good this service has done in the past, it will be continued.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is a matter about which I believe there is no difference of opinion among the members from the Maritime Provinces in this House, and I should not have thought it necessary to say a word on the subject at this time, if the hon. Senator from Amherst had not intimated, that last year all the members from the Maritime Provinces, except myself, had endorsed this action. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman should have made that exception, because I endorsed his action as cordially and heartily as any other Member of the House at that time, but, unfortunately, being rather new to parliamentary life, in the course of the remarks which I made, I stated that I did not think the inconvenience with reference to the mails would be so great as was supposed, but that the inconvenience in other ways would be very great indeed. I believe that the disadvantage arising from the loss of the mail service would be considerable, and the loss in other ways, very serious. I understand that the Imperial Government have withdrawn their half of the subsidy; and if the Canadian Government do not feel in a position to double the amount they formerly paid, no company can be got to perform the entire service for less. I hope that the Government will make some arrangement by which the fortnightly service can be continued during the summer months, when the weekly mails are landed at Rimouski.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I understood the hon. gentleman to say last Session that the inconvenience would not be felt in the loss of the mail service, but was confined principally to passengers and freight. Now, the only ground on which the Government could continue the subsidy is the accommodation which the mail service affords.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I shall read what I said upon this point last year. In the course of the first remarks which I addressed to the House I said: "The practical result, so far as the mails were concerned, would not, I think, be very serious." Afterwards, in explaining my view, I said that "I had not stated it would not be an inconvenience to have the mails withdrawn, but that it would not be a very serious one." I made a mistake last year in belittling the importance of the mail service, but it was not a very serious one, and one which I should have thought might have been overlooked.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The circumstances that existed at the time this joint subsidy from the Imperial and Canadian Governments to this fortnightly steamer was given, were entirely different from those which exist to-day. At that time it was a matter of importance that the mails for the Maritime Provinces should be sent in that way. It was then the most expeditionous mode of delivering them at Halifax and other points in the Lower Provinces. Since then Halifax has been furnished with a weekly mail for nearly six months in the year. Of course it could not be contended that during that time there was any possible inconvenience. During the other portions of the year, when the steamers of the Allan Line come up the St. Lawrence, I am advised—and I think it was generally admitted last year—that the great bulk of the mails for the Maritime Provinces would go as quickly by the regular weekly service as by the fortnightly steamer, inasmuch as the mails could be landed at Rimouski and rapidly conveyed to all points East by rail. As was admitted in the debate last year, the Government would not be justified in keeping up the subsidy for any other reason than for the delivery of the mails. No doubt it would be an advantage to the Halifax merchants, if the fortnightly steamers, carrying freight, were subsidized by the Government, but that is not a principle which the Government can adopt. It was quite understood years ago, that the subsidy was to continue only to the opening of the Intercolonial Railway. The British Government frequently called attention to the fact, and as soon as that railway was completed they withdrew their aid. During the current year, if I am rightly informed, the steamer has only received $7,500; that was paid by Canada, the British Government having, in June last—the end of the fiscal year—withdrawn their portion of it. In answer to the question put by the hon. Senator from Amherst, I may say I do not think it is probable that the subsidy will be continued during the next year.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Perhaps the Hon. the Secretary of State will allow me to correct him on a matter of fact, in which he seems to be strangely misled. His answer is given under the impression that the arrival and departure of the mails at Rimouski will accommodate the people of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island just as well as if delivered at Halifax, and he says he derived that impression from the debate last year. There may, possibly, have been some color for it by the solitary statement of the hon. Member from Halifax, but he has taken the opportunity to-day to correct that impression, and has stated that he did not desire last year to convey any such meaning. But surely the hon. the Secretary of State must know that all the members from Nova Scotia distinctly stated that the fortnightly mail from Halifax, through the summer season was the great source of the delivery of letters to and from Europe with regard to Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. The business has got into a groove, and the people naturally send their fortnightly letters by the steamers that arrive and depart from Halifax. That is the state of the case, so my hon. friend will, I hope, correct the impression on his mind, for he labors under an entire mistake, when he supposes the Rimouski accommodation (of which I will not speak now, though I have heard it spoken of in most indignant terms by passengers who have used it,) will suit our people. I venture to think that the answer of the hon. Secretary of State will excite deep dissatisfaction in the Maritime Provinces.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I assumed that the weekly steamer must necessarily supersede the fortnightly service. It may or may not be the case that the mails are carried by the weekly steamers to Halifax as quickly as by the other line, but a great part of the mails from the Maritime Provinces must necessarily go by the weekly in preference to the fortnightly steamer. Surely a merchant of Halifax would not let the weekly steamer leave and keep his correspondence for the fortnightly steamer. As a matter of fact, I do not know what portion of the mails has gone by the weekly steamer, but I should imagine, from the nature of the service, that the great bulk of it would go that way. It could be ascertained by enquiry at the Post Office Department. However, the conclusion the Government came to was, that the facilities now existing, being a weekly service between Halifax and Europe in the summer, and a weekly service by way of Rimouski the rest of the year—would be more than an equivalent for the old system.

Hon. Mr. ODELL.—There is another question to which I would call attention. I believe there is a subsidy given to the fortnightly steamer by the Government of Newfoundland, and that steamer goes to Halifax to coal. Now, it seems to me that by a very slight subsidy, in addition to that given by Newfoundland, the steamer would bring the mails to and from Halifax direct. Therefore, having those weekly steamers during the winter, the people, not only of Halifax, but of the Maritime Provinces, would be glad to have a fortnightly distribution of mails at Halifax, if it could be carried out by a small subsidy. If I am right in supposing that Newfoundland has given a subsidy for the fortnightly boat, it must be a distinct line from the weekly service.

The matter then dropped.

COMMITTEE ON BANKING, COMMERCE AND RAILWAYS.

MOTION TO ADD TO A COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL moved “that the names of the Honorable Messieurs Hamilton (of Inkerman) and Trudel be added to the Committee on Banking, Commerce and Railways.” He said Mr. Hamilton was at the head of one of the largest banks in the country, and his experience in such matters would render him a valuable addition to the Committee. Hon. Mr. Trudel would also bring an amount of knowledge as regards the laws of Quebec that would be found to be very useful, and he did not suppose anybody would oppose the motion.

Hon. Mr. WARK said he did not rise to object to the motion of the hon. gentleman from Kingston, but he wished to call attention to the manner in which this committee had been increased of late years until it had become unwieldy. The Maritime division was entitled by law to an equal representation on this as well as on other committees. On analysing this committee it would be found that it had increased from fourteen members, as it was composed when the Senate first met, to forty, now. Of these forty, the Maritime Provinces had only eight representatives, while Ontario had eighteen. He called attention to this fact for the purpose of having a change made at the opening of the next Parliament. Hon. gentlemen would also observe that the Committee on Banking and Commerce and the Committee on Private Bills generally sat on the same day. They sat very frequently, and he thought it was desirable that the committees should be composed of different members, as there was no use in placing the same gentlemen on both committees when they could only serve on one. The Committee on Printing should also have separate members from the others, as it sat on the same days as the Committees on Private Bills and Banking and Commerce.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS agreed with the hon. gentleman that the Maritime Provinces should be more largely represented than they were. He suggested that the hon. Mr. Northup should be added to the Committee, as he came from Nova Scotia, and was largely connected with the financial institutions of that Province.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD suggested that in future more consideration should be given to the composition of the important Committees mentioned. Members of one committee should not be members of another committee sitting on the same day. He had intended, when the hon. Secretary of State moved the committees, to call his attention to the great number of members composing the Committee on Banking and Commerce, who resided in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Hear, Hear !

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD said he did not doubt at all the capacity or ability of the hon. gentlemen from Ontario ; he had no doubt they possessed greater experience in the conducting of banks in Ontario than they had in the Maritime Provinces. However, banks were established in the various Provinces, and it was legislation in which each part of the Dominion was equally interested, and the Maritime Provinces should be represented on that committee in fair proportion.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT said the statements of his hon. friend (Mr. Botsford) should carry great weight, but he thought there were other interests in this country that were concerned in this kind of legislation as well as the bankers themselves. He thought the whole public, and all branches of industry were interested in the system of banking that should be carried on.

Hon. Mr. WARK—And commerce ?

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Yes, and commerce as well. He generally, found no matter what side of politics hon. gentlemen connected with banks were on, when banking was concerned they coalesced and looked with a single eye to the interests of those institutions.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Yes, it becomes a ring at once.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT said he believed that banking should be free. It was a great monopoly as it was at present, and he, for one, wished to limit that monopoly if he could. He considered the committee was too large, and that the Maritime Provinces had not a fair representation on it.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS said he had suggested the addition of Mr. Northup to it.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT said he did not object to any of the hon. gentlemen on the committee all he wanted was to see fair play.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY said he entirely concurred in the statement as to the unwieldy size of the committee, and that those gentlemen were looking after their own interests. The reason why the representation of Ontario was disproportionately large on the committee could be seen by glancing over the Bills which went before it. It would be found that nine-tenths of them were from that Province. He agreed that the committee ought to be reduced, but whether it should be the lot of the hon. Secretary of State to do that next year, or whether it should be a member of some other Government, would be a matter for history.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said there was one view of this case that had been completely overlooked by the hon. gentlemen who had discussed it. He was not sure that by any complexion they might give the committee they could weaken the influence of the bankers, because they possessed a controlling influence in this House, and whenever they put their heads together, as they invariably did, no matter what side of politics they were on.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—When they put their heads together you see my hon. friend from Toronto on this side, and my hon. friend from Toronto on the other side “shake hands over the bloody chasm” and join in protecting the interests of the banks.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said no change had been made in the committee since 1874 except by the addition of any hon. gentleman whom the House desired should be placed on it. Next year whosoever duty it might be to arrange the committees might make a better subdivision of them.

The motion was amended by the addition of the name of Hon. Mr. Northup, and as so amended it was agreed to.

CHANGING A NOTICE OF MOTION.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL moved to have hon. Mr. Macpherson's notice of motion changed from Tuesday, as it was on the order paper, to Monday. He explained that Mr. Macpherson had gone to Toronto, and had asked him when the order came up to have it postponed until Monday. He (Mr. Campbell) had subsequently met Mr. Brown who had asked him to allow it to stand over until Tuesday. He had done so without consulting Mr. Macpherson, and that gentleman had since written to him that he wished to take up the question on Monday. He would now move to have the notice on the order paper changed for Monday.

Several hon. gentlemen objected to the change being made in the absence of hon. Mr. Brown, and hon. Mr. Campbell withdrew his motion.

The House adjourned at 4.30 p. m.

THE PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT.

MOTION TO RESCIND WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY said, before proceeding with the orders of the day, it might be more convenient to call the attention of the House to the notice under his name to rescind the motion for the adjournment which had been agreed to last Friday. Considering that the members of the Government in this Chamber had voted against the resolution which he proposed to rescind, it was unfortunate, to say the least of it, that they had not been a little more ingenuous, and told the House the reasons why they opposed it. They would have relieved a great many hon. members in the course then taken, who would have been guided by a decided announcement from the Government. It was not the part of a private member to interfere with the course of parliamentary business, and assume the responsibility which properly belonged to hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, who generally lead the business of the House; and it was only in order to give the Government an opportunity of taking that responsibility that he gave the notice to rescind the resolution, which, on the face of it, appeared to be somewhat an interference with the legitimate parliamentary functions of the Government. As regards himself, individually, he had no desire to be in any way a party to a dog-in-the-manger policy; and under the circumstances, the House would assume that he was taking the correct course when he desired to relieve himself of that responsibility, and throw it upon the Government. He, therefore, asked the Government if they would be kind enough to inform the House whether there was a prospect of any pressing business such as to make it indispensable for the House to remain in session, and on the answer which the House received would depend the course which he would pursue. Having said that much, he wished to relieve himself of the responsibility of the resolution, and to throw upon the Government the duty of informing the House whether the adjournment would interfere with public business.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said, when he moved his resolution last week, it was done without consulting the Government. This was his 24th or 25th Session in Parliament, and he had seen his friends on the Treasury benches, as well as his opponents. It had been customary for both parties, when in power, to leave it to the House to decide whether they would take an adjournment or not. He did not think it was reasonable to throw on the present Government a responsibility which his own friends had not taken in years past. He had taken the responsibility upon himself to act towards the public as an honest man should. It was well known that the principal business of the Upper House was to deal with measures coming from the Lower Chamber, and, consequently, for the first two or three weeks of the Session, there was very little to be done. It was, therefore, customary for the Senate to adjourn for a week or so early in the Session. In his opinion it would be better for this House to decide that in future, after voting the Address, they should take two or three weeks' recess until the Commons would have prepared work for them to do. He did not propose that this course should be pursued, because there was the objection to which he had referred last Friday, that certain members who could not reach their homes during the recess, would feel the time long unless the majority of the House remained with them, but his opinion was, as he had stated, that there was no necessity for the House to remain in session after voting the Address, for two or three weeks at all events. It had always been the custom for the Government to oppose it, and he would have been surprised had the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches taken a different course. But even if the hon. Secretary of State were to rise in his place and say there was work for four hours every day, he (Mr. Bellerose) would reply at once that the statement was incorrect, because it was impossible that there could be so much work in the early part of the Session, and there was no use in trying to throw such a responsibility on the Government. He did not desire the public at large to believe that the House was working when it was not, and it would be only hypocrisy to do so. This House could get through the work of the Session much sooner than the Commons, and the reason was quite obvious. In a body consisting of only eighty members, work could be done much quicker than in one consisting of over two hundred, especially when the latter were speaking to the public, and desired to have their views reported to the country before the elections. He could not say that he was a good judge of English precedent, but if his memory was correct a motion of this kind ought not to be re-considered except under extraordinary circumstances, and this was not an extraordinary circumstance. Even as a matter of courtesy the notice ought not to have been given. He (Mr. Bellerose) understood perfectly well the allusion that had been made to the Province of Quebec. He would advise the hon. gentleman (Mr. Dickey) to let that Province alone. It had never come to this Parliament to ask for better terms or money. He (Mr. Bellerose) might tell the House that it was not on his own account that he had made this motion for adjournment for he had just arrived from home, but there were others on both sides in whose interest he had done so, who might have a feeling of delicacy in moving it themselves, and he believed the members of this House should show courtesy to one another. He hoped that this would be the last time he would have to speak on such a subject as this.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—What do the Ministry say ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. colleague and myself have nothing more to say than we stated last Friday. Neither this Government, nor any former Government had ever assumed the responsibility of an adjournment. As we are frequently told by hon. gentlemen opposite the Government do not control this Chamber, and it would be idle for us to oppose the wish of the House.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The question is the public business.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I also said I was not aware it would embarrass any public business coming before this House. I thought that was a very fair and full exposition from the Government. In addition I was asked by some hon. gentlemen if any bills were coming immediately before us, I said I did not think there were. I was further asked if there were any Bills to be introduced ; I said I thought there would be one or two, but the week's delay would not seriously embarrass us.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—That is exactly what the hon. gentleman said.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY, said he understood the hon. Secretary of State to intimate to the House last Friday, that it was probable there might be measures to be initiated in this House. There was no doubt that was the meaning conveyed : at the same he was very happy to hear the statement that had just been made, and considering the situation in which he was placed, he thought that the House would agree that he was taking the most convenient course, after hearing the explanations of the hon. Secretary of State, in stating that he would not bring on his motion to-morrow.

The order was discharged.

SMALL-POX IN KEEWATIN.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD moved:—

“That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that he will be pleased to lay before this House, copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada, the Council of Keewatin, and the Government of Manitoba, in reference to the Small-Pox disease, prevailing during last spring amongst the Icelanders, with all claims and accounts paid and unpaid relating to that matter.”

He continued—So much has been said in reference to this matter, that the public need some explanations, and this is why I make this motion. During last spring that dreadful disease—small-pox—appeared in the Icelandic Settlement, west of Lake Winnipeg, and also among the Indians. The Icelanders had been settled there only a few months before, and, after their long journey by sea and land, they were quite unprepared for this fearful scourge which appeared amongst them. The Lieut.-Governor of the Province of Manitoba, who was, at the same time, ex-officio Governor of the Territory of Keewatin, was authorized to organize a Board of Health. He did so, the Board being composed of a certain number of gentlemen who were there not only as ordinary health-officers, but as executive councillors of the Council of Keewatin. The measures which they took were most effectual, and, at all events, prevented the spread of the dreadful disease into Manitoba. It was found necessary to establish a quarantine, and, as can be readily understood, considerable expense was incurred. I regret to say that difficulties have arisen as to the settlement of this expense, and I believe at this moment, a considerable portion of it remains unpaid. What I am now looking for is the settlement of the portion pertaining to the Province of Manitoba. When we consider how small its revenue is, and how much is required for the improvement and construction of highways which are absolutely needed by the people, and when we consider, also, that all this expense was due to causes outside of Manitoba, I think we should not be called upon to pay any portion of it. The Province was obliged, it is true, to protect itself, but the disease originated and raged in the Territory of Keewatin, which was under the rule of the Dominion Government. The whole of the expense should, therefore, have been met by the Government of Canada. I understand that the correspondence is very large, and as I only wish to ascertain what proportion of the expense the Government of Manitoba can be forced to pay, I would be satisfied to receive such information as bears upon that point. That is the correspondence in which the people that I represent are interested.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—There certainly cannot be any objection to bringing down the papers asked for by the hon. Senator. It seems to be only a question of expense. The correspondence, claims and accounts asked for are very voluminous, and I am sure it would take one clerk three months to copy them. All the accounts have been carefully examined at Winnipeg by a Committee composed of the Hon'bles Mr. Norquay and Mr. Begg, on behalf of the Government of the Province of Manitoba, and Messrs. McCall and Graham on the part of the Dominion of Canada. The Committee have reduced the claims where it was possible to do so, and have agreed upon the distribution of the whole amount to be paid—$25,000—between the Government of Keewatin and that of Manitoba. The hon. gentleman makes a remark that the whole expense should have been paid by the Dominion Government. I am sure he will be satisfied when he sees that the Dominion Government paid the lion's share—that out of $25,000 the Government of Keewatin (that is the Dominion Government) paid $20,000, and only $5,000 was charged to the Government of Manitoba. As I said before, the correspondence is so voluminous that it would entail considerable expense to have it all copied. I may inform the hon. gentleman that the Minister of the Interior will give him access to all the papers, and will have any documents that he wants copied. With these explanations, I hope the hon. gentleman will not insist upon his motion.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—I have no desire to create any expense that can be avoided. I look at the matter as a very important one, and I must acknowledge the courtesy of the hon. the Minister who offers to furnish any correspondence that is required. I beg leave to withdraw the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY ROUTE.

MOTION TO RE-APPOINT THE SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD moved :—

“That the entry in the Journals of this House of the 27th of April, 1877, relating to the Report of the Select Committee, authorized, amongst other matters, to examine into all the questions relating to the purchase of the property at Fort William for a terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witness under oath, be now read.”

The motion was agreed to and the entry was accordingly read.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD moved :—

“That the Minutes of the Evidence taken before the Select Committee appointed in the last Session of Parliament, to inquire, amongst other matters, into all the questions relating to the purchase of the property at Fort William for a terminus to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witness under oath, which were presented on the 27th of April last with the Report of the said Committee, be referred to a Select Committee composed of the Honorable Messieurs Scott Aikins, Sutherland, Macpherson, Simpson, Wilmot, Haythorne, Vidal, and the mover, to continue the investigation and to inquire into all the questions relating to the purchase of the property at Fort William, for a terminus to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to send for persons, papers and records, and to examine witnesses under oath, and to report thereon with all convenient speed this Session.”

The motion was agreed to.

FORT FRANCIS LOCK.

MOTION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON moved, seconded by Honorable Mr. Campbell :—

“That a Select Committee composed of the Honorable Messieurs Scott, Campbell, Brown, Botsford, Haythorne, Macfarlane and the mover, be appointed to inquire :—

“1st. Whether the Fort Francis Lock when completed can be used for the purposes of commerce, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, so as to form part of the through communication from Lake Superior to Manitoba, and if not, what improvements will be indispensable (in addition to the said Fort Francis Lock) to afford unbroken communication for Steamers between the Railway Stations of Port Savanne (Lac des Mille Lacs) and Keewatin (Rat Portage) and the probable cost of such improvements ?

“2nd. What will be the use to the Dominion of the said Fort Francis Lock if it cannot be used for the purposes of commerce, in connection with the Canada Pacific Railway, so as to form part of the said through communication.

“3rd. What is the distance between the said Lock and the point nearest to it on the Canadian Pacific Railway ?

“4th. What are the dimensions of the said Lock, its estimated and probable cost, the amount expended upon it and upon works connected with it, or in any way incidental to it, so far as is known ; the appropriation from which the money expended upon it has been taken ; whether such application of the money has been in all cases according to law, and whether the said Lock is being built by contract or otherwise.

He said :—The impression throughout the country is that the expenditure on the Fort Francis Lock is not a useful expenditure, and it is a very large one. I therefore think it deserves the attention of this House, and that a Committee should be appointed to inquire into the whole matter. That is the object of my motion. The expenditure has been continued after it has become the general opinion that the work cannot be utilized for the purpose for which it was intended, that is, forming the connecting link between the Eastern and Western ends of the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Lake Superior and the Red River. The expenditure on the Fort Francis Lock, so far as the Public Accounts afford information, amounts to $163,662. That was it up to the 30th of June last: since then there has been six months of expenditure, the amount of which is not before us. I may safely say, however, that the expenditure on that work—for I visited it last summer and saw what was being done—cannot have been less than $8,000 per month, or in round figures $100,000 per year. If it does not exceed that I shall be very much surprised. When an expenditure is going on, especially for a purpose, which to the public mind is not clearly of public utility, I think, at any time, it is the duty of this House to enquire into it; and in the present state of the finances of the country, it is doubly a duty to make such an enquiry. I have searched the Debates of Parliament for information on this question, and the first mention of the Fort Francis Lock that I find is in the House of Commons Hansard 1875, folio 508, and again at folios 1073 and 1074. I shall read what is there said on the subject, by the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, the Commissioner of Public Works and Prime Minister:—

“The entire distance from Red River to Lake Superior is in round numbers 430 miles by the Dawson route. Of this we have surveyed and located a line and asked for tenders for 155 or 160 miles. This leaves a distance between the two points of 270 miles. Of that distance we will be able by constructing two cheap wooden locks at Fort Francis, to obtain from Rat Portage uninterrupted steam navigation for a distance of nearly 200 miles to Sturgeon Falls at the east end of Rainy Lake. From this point eastward towards Lake Shebandowan, although there is a continuous water navigation with a number of small portages, still the country is, on the whole, favorable. * * * * We hope within two years, or two and a half at the outside, that we will have a railway finished at the eastern and western ends and with these and the locks at Fort Francis, we expect that the distance altogether may be traversed in four or five days at the outside, that now takes on the average from nine to twelve days.”

Now, hon. gentlemen, it is quite evident from the passage I have read, that the intention of the Government was to use the water stretches by way of Fort Francis, between Sturgeon Falls and Rat Portage. If that could have been done, I should have been very glad to have seen it carried out, and thus have postponed the construction of the railway between those two points for years to come, as the Minister of Public Works himself appears to have intended and expected. On the third of April, 1875, Mr. Mackenzie moved:—

“That the House do now ratify the contract entered into with Messrs. Sitton & Ward for the construction of the Pacific Railway extending from Fort William to Lake Shebandowan, a distance of about 45 miles, * * * * They obtained the advantage of that chain of water communication for a distance of 246 miles, after some slight improvements were carried out at Fort Francis which were provided for in the estimates. By these a means of communication would be established which would suffice for some years to come.”

These passages and all that the Minister of Public Works said then on the subject showed that he expected to use about 200 miles of water communication, to connect the Eastern and Western ends of the Canadian Pacific Railway, between Lake Superior and Red River. The next reference to the Fort Francis Lock I find in a return to Parliament, dated fifth of April, 1877. The first letter or memo. in that return is from Mr. Brauu, Secretary of the Department of Public Works, saying that the report of Mr. S. Hazlewood the engineer, giving an estimate of the cost of the works, had been mislaid, and that Mr. Hazlewood had been written to for a copy of it.

The estimate is not here and I have not seen it. The next letter dated 11th May 1875, is indeed a strange one. It is from the Secretary of the Public Works Department, to Mr. Hugh Sutherland, of Orillia, putting him in full charge of the works, but subject, so far as engineering was concerned, to Mr. Hazlewood. The following is an extract.

May 11th, 1875.

“SIR,—Referring to your letter of the 1st instant relative to the construction of the proposed locks on Rainy River, at Fort Francis, I am to state that you will have entire charge of the working parties, but in engineering matters will be subjected to the general directions of Mr. Hazlewood, or his assistants who may be detailed for that purpose. * * * * *

“On reaching Fort Francis you will see Mr. Mortimer, Resident Engineer, who will be at once instructed to take soundings with a view to determine the exact points at which it would be most desirable to construct the canal locks at each, and you will then as speedily as possible ascertain the nature of the rock and the depth of various points, so that Mr. Mortimer can make a section.

"When this preliminary work has been accomplished, you will both report to the Department, when more exact instructions will be given. Pending the arrival from Ottawa of such instructions you will proceed with the excavations first of the whole of the earth-work, and afterwards of such portions of the work as must necessarily be taken out."

Now, hon. gentlemen, I think we ought to know how the work was originally determined upon, and what the reasons were which induced the Minister of Public Works to proceed with it. The first communication before the House is one addressed to Mr. Hugh Sutherland, telling him to proceed with the work, and referring to a letter which we have not before us. It may be that the idea of the work originated with Mr. Hugh Sutherland, and we ought to have his letter before the House. The next letter in the return is from Mr. Mortimer, an Engineer, dated

"Fort Francis Railway Route, July 5th, 1875.

"The work of soundings on the various lakes along the railway was completed; regarding it I have to state, that to bring—

The name of the Lake is left blank in the return, but it must be Lac des Mille Lacs.

"To the level of Lake Shebandowan would lay bare about three-quarters of the bottom of the former, also a large portion of Kashabowie and Baie Lakes would be similarly effected; in fact I may say that the plan is impracticable, except under enormous expenses far exceeding what twice the amount of railroad would cost

"I also ran the line from French Portage to Lake Shebandowan inland, keeping the lowest possible ground: the general average of this line lies from fifty to one hundred feet above the level of Shebandowan, and although it is admirably suited for railway purposes, its height above the water precludes it from ever being available for a canal."

That shows that the plans of the Government at the time were altogether undetermined, and indefinite. I am not surprised that it was so, because they do not appear to have had before them the information necessary to lead them to a proper conclusion, but, while in that position, they proceeded with the construction of the Lock at Fort Francis. They seem to have come to the conclusion without information, that communication would be possible along these water stretches, and it might have been if they had adhered to their first plan, which was to build the Railway by way of Shebandowan to Sturgeon Falls, an arm of Rainy Lake.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

It might have been more costly than they expected, but it would have been practicable from Sturgeon Falls to Rat Portage, a distance of 200 hundred miles. But it is, I fear, altogether impossible to make such communication from Lac des Mille Lacs to Rainy Lake, and so on to Rat Portage. The information before me leads me to believe that the Government proceeded with the works at Fort Francis before they had sufficient information to guide them; and that the expenditure incurred there will be of no use to the public. Mr. Sutherland addressed the hon. the Minister of Public Works from Ottawa on July 16th, 1875, on the subject of the work at Fort Francis. Now, I am not aware that Mr. Sutherland is an Engineer. I believe he is not, but these are the terms in which he writes. He says:—

"I herewith transmit Ground Plan and cross sections of the location of proposed locks with a necessary measurements marked thereon.

"Two combined locks will be required, about 200 feet in length each, over all, and 40 feet in width inside of chambers, with a total lift of 23 feet 4 inches.

"The earthworks on top of rock, will average about eight or nine feet in depth, and consist of red and blue clay; the balance of the cutting will be solid grey granite rock.

"The total depth of the cut in upper lock will be about thirty-three feet (33) and in the lower lock forty-four feet (44) 8 inches, which will admit of seven feet nitre sills in low water. There will be about 9,000 yards of earth work and 14,000 yards rock."

The work seems to have been ordered and proceeded with, without plan or estimates from a competent engineer. Mr. Sutherland also sends to the Government a statement of payments made by him for wages. He simply gives the amount paid, but does not state the rate of wages so far as I have seen. On the 24th, July 1875 Mr. Ennis, for the Secretary of the Department of Public Works, writes to Mr. Sutherland to say that full instructions have been sent to Mr. Hazlewood and,

"The Department likewise considers it necessary that he should examine the site proposed for the Canal; together with what works are necessary to control the rapids a mile and a half above the falls, and what works are necessary immediately at the head of the falls to do away with the danger of vessels being carried by the current over the falls themselves.

"These instructions necessarily include the re-examination of the line recommended by yourself and Mr. Mortimer, and should Mr. Hazlewood conceive it necessary to make any "change in the location, you will defer to his opinions and carry on the work on the amended line he may trace out, should he conceive that course to be necessary."

I think it will strike hon. gentlemen that a great deal was being done hastily, that the work was being proceeded with prematurely, and before the Government had really any information, much less the designs and plans necessary for the building of the lock, and the information necessary with respect to the depth of water both above and below the proposed work. The Government seemed to have felt this, for, on the 24th July, Mr. Braun, Secretary of the Department of Public Works, writes to Mr. Hazlewood saying :—

"The Department finds these documents insufficient for any approval of the recommendations made to be placed on record.

"It is proper here to inform you that the Honorable the Minister has given instructions for the Canal in question to connect the waters of Rainy Lake with Rainy River, at Fort Francis, to be at once commenced. The difference of level is represented to be over 23 feet. Accordingly, I am instructed to request that at as early a date as practicable, you will proceed to Fort Francis and examine into the points embraced in this proposition.

"The proposed size of the locks are 200 feet by forty in the chamber, with seven feet on the sills. * * * * *

"You are required to make a design for the Canal in question, comprising the number of locks, their position and their structure. You will report the amount of excavation, both of earth and rock; further, the facilities of obtaining clay for puddling, the localities where timber can be obtained on Rainy Lake, where it is reported a supply can be had without difficulty.

"The Department likewise require a series of soundings above and below the site of the Canal to relative deep water, so that a correct view can be formed of the facilities of egress and ingress. No report on this subject has yet been made, and I am requested to direct you to have this branch of the examination fully and efficiently carried out. You will require to plot this work to the scale of 100 feet to an inch, and it must embrace all the information desirable to obtain."

On the same day, Mr. Ennis for the Secretary of the Department also wrote to Mr. Hazlewood a letter from which I make the following extracts :—

"Sir,—I am instructed to notify you that in connection with the instructions which have been given you to examine and report upon a canal proposed to be constructed at Fort Francis between Rainy Lake and Rainy River, that Mr. Sutherland has been sent by this Department to organize working parties and to commence operations.

"You will observe in the copy of the instructions to Mr. Hugh Sutherland, as per
Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

"margin, which has been forwarded to you that while Mr. Sutherland has been placed in charge of all working operations he is instructed to refer to you for engineering instructions.

"As the site where Mr. Sutherland will commence his excavation has been recommended by Mr. Mortimer equally as by himself, there is a fair reason to look forward to the line selected by them being approved by yourself.

"In this view, the Department has authorized the commencement of the work. At the same time it is desirous that this branch of your examination should at once be made thoroughly to establish the fact, whether or no the labors of Mr. Sutherland are in the right direction, and I have to ask you to report specially upon this matter, so soon as you can possibly do so."

It seems an extraordinary thing that the Government should have proceeded with such a work in the absence of full information. The lock, according to Mr. Hazlewood's plan, was to have seven feet of water on the mitre sills, at the lowest water. In summer time the depth of water in the river is only from 3½ to 4½ feet in some places. In a letter from Mr. Hazlewood to the Minister of Public Works, dated August, he approves of the location made by Mr. Mortimer, and the work seems to have been proceeded with, but suddenly, on the 19th November, 1875, Mr. Braun telegraphs to Mr. Sutherland as follows :—

19th November, 1875.

"Close all Canal works at Fort Francis. Suspend all proceedings. Confer with Mr. Rowan on subject. Acknowledge receipt of this.

(Signed) F. BRAUN,
H. SUTHERLAND,
Winnipeg. Secretary."

There must have been an error in the date of Mr. Sutherland's reply, because it is dated November 2nd, 1875. I presume it was intended for 2nd December, and probably Ottawa was written for Orillia.

"OTTAWA, November 2nd, 1875.

"Complied with instructions relative to suspending works at Fort Francis. Have you any instructions for Fort Pelly ?

(Signed) HUGH SUTHERLAND,
Secretary Department Public Works.

I shall next refer to a speech delivered by the hon. the Minister of Public Works in the House of Commons, on the 6th March, 1876. It was in a debate on the Dawson Route. In reply to gentlemen on the other side of the House, he said :—

“The Government simply proposed while the road was being constructed to utilize a large portion of the water communication available for the passage of boats; as for instance where the road touched, as it would according to the survey now nearly completed, the north-east angle of Lac des Mille Lacs, they would have continued navigation, with some portages doubtless, to the north-west end of the Lake of the Woods; and until the line was finished between the Lac des Mille Lacs and the west side of Winnipeg River, they could use this navigation as long as it was required. If they found it impossible from the circumstances of the country to continue the building of the road between these two points for some years to come, they would have some 64 miles of railway from Lake Superior to the north-east corner of the Lac des Mille Lacs, similar communication being opened between Red River and Rat Portage from the western extremity, so that they would be enabled to bring the two ends of the Province within comparatively short distances of each other. He did not expect that it would be possible for the Government—even though Parliament could furnish the money required—to construct the intermediate portion within less than four or five years, and it was very important indeed that they should avail themselves of almost continued water navigation between two and three hundred miles during that period.”

By that time the Government had, apparently, abandoned the route between Shebandowan and Sturgeon Falls. From Sturgeon Falls, on an arm of Rainy Lake, when the improvements at Fort Francis and at the shoals above and below it had been completed, there would have been water communication for upwards of two hundred miles to Rat Portage. But in March, 1876, that route had been abandoned, and the northern location of the railway had been adopted, carrying it north of Lac des Mille Lacs, and so on by what we understand to be the present location. That, I believe, rendered it impossible to use these water stretches, because Lac des Mille Lacs is 400 feet above the level of Rainy Lake, and above the level of Fort Francis Lock. On the 31st of March, 1876, the Pacific Railway was the subject of debate in another place. On that occasion the Prime Minister said:—

“The line we have adopted now from Fort William will ascend the Kaministiquia Valley for about 20 miles, in round numbers. Then diverging somewhat sharply to the right, and touching the north-east corner of Lac des Mille Lacs.”

This confirms what I have already explained that the route by Shebandowan and Sturgeon Falls had then been abandoned and the northern route had been adopted, rendering it impossible, I believe, to make any use whatever of the water stretches as a connecting link between the eastern end of the Red River section and the western end of the Lake Superior section of the railway. The Premier further stated:—

“The thirteenth contract was to build 45 miles towards Lake Shebandowan, it being supposed that this would be the shortest route westward; but the explorations made show that it would have to wend northward, and we decided to stop short of it about 15 miles. From that point westward the road, passing by Lac des Mille Lacs, would become the subject of a new contract.”

The speech from which I have just read extracts was delivered on the 31st of March, 1876. Parliament was prorogued on the 12th of April. At this time, I would remind the House that the work at Fort Francis had been suspended under instructions from the Minister of Public Works, from the 19th November, 1875, but a week after the prorogation of Parliament the works were ordered to be resumed. Now, I think that is a point on which we require some information. There was nothing said in the House of Commons that I can find on the subject of the Fort Francis Lock, or proceeding with its construction that year. The works were suspended while Parliament was sitting, and remained suspended until after the prorogation. On the 18th of April instructions were given by the Secretary of the Public Works Department to Mr. Sutherland to resume work. I think the country ought to know why the works were resumed then. If I am at all correct, it must have been well known to every gentleman connected with the Public Works, that it would be utterly impossible to use this lock in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and if that is the fact why was the work resumed and proceeded with? It may be that the Government will be able to show that the lock will be of public service irrespective of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I confess I do not think this can be shown, but it is a matter for enquiry. It strikes me as being rather remarkable that the work should have remained suspended from November to April without anything being said about it so far as I can discover, and then that instructions should have been suddenly issued to Mr. Sutherland to resume the work. Mr. Sutherland was at Ottawa at the time, and he acknowledged the receipt of the letter on the very day the letter bears date. He acknowledged the instructions to proceed and made a requisition for funds and he at once got authority to purchase supplies to the amount of $20,000, and also a credit for $15,000 to pay wages etc. In August it seems to have struck the Government that it would be desirable to have fuller information, and the Secretary of the Department of Public Works wrote to Mr. Baillairge, one of the engineers as follows :—

August 3, 1876.

“SIR,—I am directed by the Honourable the Minister to request you to proceed at your earliest convenience to Fort Francis, where a lock is being constructed to connect the waters of Rainy Lake with those of Rainy River, under the superintendence of W. H. Thompson, according to a plan which was prepared from somewhat limited information. You will be pleased to see that the work is being judiciously carried out and give such directions as you may deem advisable for its proper execution.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

(Signed) F. BRAUN,
Secretary.

G. F. BAILLAIRGE, Esq.,
Asst. Chief Engineer. P. W., Ottawa.”

In reply to this request Mr. Baillairge, made a long report which I moved for last session and it was submitted to this House. I will not take up the time of hon. gentlemen in going over it again, but it showed that there were great obstacles in the river both above and below the lock. The lock was to be 200 feet in length, 36 feet in width and seven feet in depth on the lower mitre sill. I might have said, when I was alluding to the fact that the Minister of Public Works had stated in 1875 that it was proposed to construct two cheap wooden locks, that if the hon. gentleman had proper information before him with respect to that country he would not have spoken of wooden locks. The lock now building has to be excavated out of solid granite. The lock as it was originally laid out, was to have seven feet of water on the lower mitre sill at the lowest summer water. But, hon. gentlemen, the reports of the engineer show that the depth of the water in the river is very much less than that, and the Government last summer, I believe—there is no information on the subject in the report of the Minister of Public Works, but I heard it on the spot—that the Government had resolved to reduce the depth of water in the lock to  $4\frac{1}{2}$  feet. Just think of the proportions of a lock 200 feet long with a depth of only  $4\frac{1}{2}$  feet? Could there be better proof that the work had been commenced without anything like sufficient information?

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I think, hon. gentlemen, that I have established enough to justify the Senate in naming a committee to enquire into this matter. I think I have proved that the Fort Francis Lock was entered upon without adequate information, and that I have also shewn that the water stretches cannot be made to serve as a connecting link between the eastern and western sections of the Pacific Railway. I shall submit further proof on the latter point from the Commons Hansard. Mr. Kirkpatrick on the 21st of February, 1877, moved for returns in respect to Fort Francis Lock, and in the course of his speech said :—

“The utility of the work is also questionable, even in relation to the Pacific Railway, and, as the Thunder Bay Branch, passing about 100 miles to the North of Fort Francis, is to be the all-rail route, I ask for what purpose are we to expend money in this connection? The expenditure in question is charged to the Pacific Railway, with which it has no more to do than has the Welland Canal. Two seasons, those of 1875 and 1876, have moreover been spent on it, and one-fifth of the work is done. At this rate, I leave it to the hon. member to judge how long it will take to finish it, without alluding to the improvements mentioned. Mr. Baillairge states that the canal can only be used for four or five months during the year, and are we to spend an unknown quantity of money, in order that for a few months a few barges and tugs may pass through it? When we are to have an all rail route, what is the use of improving magnificent water stretches in addition? I think it is time for the Minister of Public Works to tell us that this work is to be abandoned and no further money spent on it. If the motion is allowed to pass, it will enable the House to judge of the ultimate cost of the undertaking, and the utility which it is likely to accomplish.

“There is no objection whatever, sir, to the motion of the hon. gentleman, but before it is put, allow me to correct some inaccuracies into which he has fallen. He says, sir, that I announced to the House that I would abandon the route by Lake Shebandowan, but it

“ is not abandoned. It is deflected, as the hon. gentleman said, a little to the north in order to obtain a better route. It touches at present west of the Lac des Mille Lacs, or rather the Kaministiquia River at a navigable point, a little beyond which the latter falls into the Lake. From that point there is almost continuous navigation with a few short portages on the way to Rat Portage, the crossing place of the Pacific Railway on Winnipeg River, with only one great obstacle, which could not be overcome in any other way than by constructing a lock at Fort Francis. There are, as I stated roughly last night, two hundred and twenty-eight miles under contract between Lake Superior and Red River, of which one hundred and sixteen miles lie at the east end or westward from Fort William: at about seventy miles from thence we reach a point east of Lac des Mille Lacs, thereby coming into the best navigable system at a place much further west than would have been obtainable if the first contemplated line had been followed out. Those who choose to look at the map will observe that the first line which we hoped to take, went almost in a straight line from Kaministiquia to a place called Sturgeon Falls, this being at the head of a long arm of Rainy Lake stretching north-eastward. That route was found to be not exactly impracticable, but expensive. The line, as the hon. gentleman says, was carried further to the northward, but two-thirds of that, country, perhaps consists of water, and in the vicinity of Rainy Lake, the country to the north, in particular, is intersected by deep, wide channels, which reach either the exact vicinity of the railway or very near it, between Rat Portage, the crossing of the Winnipeg River, and the end of the eastern contract, a distance of one hundred and eight miles—what we may call the Central District of that region. No matter with what speed the road may be prosecuted, that part cannot be completed within four or five years; and, in the meantime, if this lock is finished, as I am informed it will be during the coming season, we will be able to send our steamers to Rat Portage, and to the eastern end of Rainy Lake during the season after next, and from that point to Lac des Mille Lacs is a comparatively short distance, so that in a few years we will be able to avail ourselves of these most magnificent water stretches connecting the two points which the railway would touch east and west.”

All that took place in the debate on that occasion showed that it was the understanding of the House that, by the construction of the locks at Fort Francis, and a very little additional expense there would be unbroken water communication from Port Savanne at the north east end of Lac des Mille Lacs through to Rat Portage. In the same debate Mr. Casey said:—

“ He understood the hon. Minister of Public Works to say, that the route would be used to furnish rails from Port Savanne to the other end of the road.”

Hon. Mr. Mulpherson.

The rails is one of the most serious elements in this question. There is no doubt in my mind that the Minister of Public Works believed at one time, that he could utilize these water stretches for the transport of rails and heavy freight required for the building of the railway. He could not have been then aware of the full consequences of the adoption of the northern location or route; he could not have been aware that it would cut him off absolutely and completely from using the water stretches. Another evidence of this fact, to my mind is, that had he not believed that he could have connected from the western end of the Lake Superior section with the western section at Rat Portage through the water stretches, he would not have commenced to build the latter section as it will be of no use until the all rail road is opened through, from Rat Portage to Lake Superior. If that be the case, surely, the Minister of Public Works would not have commenced the building of the 136 miles of the railway, included in the extension of the Pembina Branch from Winnipeg to Selkirk and the main line from Selkirk to Rat Portage, as the rails required for those 136 miles will have to be sent by way of Duluth, and the Red River, at a freight of fifteen dollars per ton. Those 136 miles of railway, with the sidings, will require 100 tons of rails per mile, so that the freight of the rails alone from Duluth will be $210,000, and this will have to be paid long before the rails will be of any service to the country. The additional cost will probably be $225,000 or $250,000. What the Government should have done, was to have carried on the grading simultaneously but have done all the track laying from the east, carrying the rails with them as they proceeded. In this way they would have saved this enormous freightage on materials from Duluth to the Red River, for the western section, that will be unused until the connection with the eastern section is completed. To show more conclusively, if it were possible to do so, that the Government supposed they could use the water stretches for transporting heavy materials, I will quote from the Scnale Debates a speech of the hon. the Secretary of State, in this House on the 22nd of Feb., 1877, on a motion of mine in relation to the Fort Francis Lock.

“The distance between Lake Superior and “Winnipeg was about 408 miles all-rail route.
 “Of this distance 228 miles were now under “contract. The first portion of the line from “Fort William west to Lac des Mille Lacs, it “was believed from the information before the “Government, would be completed before the “end of the present year. The distance from “Lac des Mille Lacs to Rainy Lake was not “very great, and there were only two or three “very short portages on that route. From “Rainy Lake to Lake of the Woods, a couple of “hundred miles. * * * Then they had water
 “and rail communication already described, east
 “to Thunder Bay. There was a gap from Rat “Portage to the westerly end of the contract “leading from Fort William, of 180 miles, which “was not under contract. That section would “cost a very considerable amount of money,
 “and the impression seemed to be that it would “be desirable to provide this water way in “order to save, at all events for some years,
 “the expense of constructing this 180 miles of “railway, the cost of which was estimated at “$30,000 to $40,000 per mile. The railways
 “now being constructed would, of course, be “available when the 180 miles link was con“structed. He would put it to the sense of the “House, whether it would not be better to “utilize those water stretches for some years, “even at an expense of $200,000 or $300,000,
 “than to incur the expenditure of six millions “of dollars, and the postponement of commu“nication until this 180 miles of road were “built. Although the Government had decided “upon adopting an all-rail route they did not “intend to put the whole line under contract
 “at once.”

I quite agree with the hon. the Secretary of State that, if what he described could have been done for the amount named, it would have been a very wise and prudent expenditure, but I am afraid it could not have been accomplished for anything like that sum. I have here a map of that country which, I think, will tend to make the matter more plain to the House. It shows the located line of the railway, approximately, from Thunder Bay, on Lake Superior, to Selkirk, on the Red River. It shows Lac des Mille Lacs and the water stretches between it and Rainy Lake. It also shows Fort Francis and Rainy River on through Lake of the Woods to Rat Portage. I have already stated that the difference of level between Lac des Mille Lacs and Rainy Lake is 400 feet. The difference between Lac des Mille Lacs and Lake of the Woods is 430 feet. The Premier, in the extract which I read to-day from a speech of his, said the most formidable obstacle between Lac des Mille Lacs and Lake of the Woods was at Fort Francis. There would be, he said, a few short portages between Lac des Mille Lacs and Rainy Lake, which would be easily overcome so that the country might hope in a short time to have communication open for steamers between Lake of the Woods and Lac des Mille Lacs. Hon. gentlemen, I think it will be a serious undertaking for this country to ascend and descend the 400 feet from Lac des Mille Lacs to Rainy Lake. The Minister of Public Works stated that the only really formidable obstacle was at Fort Francis, at which place the fall to be overcome is only 23 feet. But the reports of Mr. Dawson, from which I have had this map prepared, show that instead of the fall of 23 feet at Fort Francis being the most formidable obstacle, it is almost the least formidable. At Brule Portage, the fall is 46 feet; at French Portage, 100 feet; at Pine and Deux Rivieres Portages, 124 feet; at Windgoostegoon, 9 feet; at Island Portage, 42 feet; at Nemeukan Portage, 72 feet; and one at Bare Portage of 9 feet, making altogether about 400 feet. Now, hon. gentlemen, is it not our duty to enquire, when such facts as these are recorded in official documents which were submitted to the House (Mr. Dawson's report of 1868, and Mr. Mortimer's report) how it was possible, with all this information within the reach of the Government—in-formation that you would naturally suppose they would have looked at—that they could have fallen into the error of supposing that a communication for steamers could have been established easily or at all between Rainy Lake and Lac des Mille Lacs, overcoming an ascent of upwards of 400 feet—a greater ascent than is overcome on the Welland Canal from Lake Ontario to Lake Erie?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There never was any such intention.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That is the statement of the Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That must have been a misprint; it must have been an inadvertence.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The Prime Minister, and the hon. Secretary of State himself, have stated frequently that this communication could be easily established.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have stated that there are six portages in that distance.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—There are eight portages exclusive of Fort Francis. The hon. Secretary of State himself, has stated in this House, that there are only two or three very short portages, and there would be great advantage in improving them, as they would be used for some years to Rat Portage before the section of 180 miles of railway between Lac des Mille Lacs, and Rat Portage would be constructed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is my opinion still. Eight portages I think is the correct number.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The number of portages is not material; the fall of 400 feet is what is material. If by reducing the number of portages you could diminish the number of feet of fall, then importance would attach to the number of portages, but as a matter of fact the number is eight. If the hon. Secretary of State was correct in stating, that the number was only two or three and the difference in level only was retained it would not have been of the slightest consequence, because it is the difference in level that is the difference. I think the House will agree with me that there is enough to call for an enquiry. This little plan which I have here, shows the route that was projected by Mr. Dawson from Thunder Bay to the Narrows of Lake of the Woods. It went by Sturgeon Falls. The hon. Secretary of State will probably tell me that the route between Sturgeon Falls and Lake of the Woods is not practicable. It has never been surveyed, yet the route contemplated by the present Government was from Thunder Bay to Sturgeon Falls, and thence utilize the water stretch to Rat Portage, two hundred miles of navigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear;" I hope he will be able to show us how the country will get the benefit of it now, for unless he can show us that the difference of level does not exist, or that by some convulsion of nature since this survey was made, Lac des Mille Lacs and Rainy Lake have been brought to the same level, I cannot see how the route from Port Savanne is to be benefitted by what I have stated. The only other report that I shall refer to, is that of Mr. Mortimer, the engineer who was employed to make a sort of exploratory survey between the Red River and Lake Superior. It is Appendix B, of Mr. Fleming's report for 1877, and is dated "Canadian Pacific Railway Office, January 1875." The date must be an error; it must have been 1876, because he seems to have made the survey in 1875. He describes the country as exceedingly rough. Speaking of the Long Sault and Manitou Rapids, between Lake of the Woods and Fort Francis, both of which have to be improved before any steamer can ascend to Fort Francis, he says:—

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

"The Manitou Rapids are the next impediment; they are short, falling suddenly. Unfortunately, the better channel lies on the American side, but a good one may be had on the Canadian shore by excavating 300 lineal feet of rock; this excavation in some parts may reach five feet.

"It is very desirable these works should be thoroughly complete, as this is the keystone to the uninterrupted navigation from the North West Angle to Fort Francis, a distance of 130 miles; it can be obtained, however, only by a considerable expenditure. I estimate the fall of Manitou Rapids at about six feet."

These rapids are below Fort Francis, between Fort Francis and Lake of the Woods. Another point worthy of consideration is that this expenditure is made upon a river which belongs equally to the United States and ourselves and it is undoubtedly true that if the lock be of service to anyone it will be to the Americans. Mr. Mortimer describes each of the portages, including Fort Francis. Of Fort Francis portage, he says:—

"Respecting Fort Francis, either of two plans may be adopted, the one, tramway the other, a system of locks. It will depend upon the amount of freight and passengers expected to be carried through which ought to be used. I think the lake facilities at the Shebandowan end, even when improved, would hardly justify the expense of putting in locks. Should the traffic hereafter increase to such an extent as to make it an object to use locks, I believe it would pay, inasmuch as it would allow the steamer, plying on the Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods, to have uninterrupted navigation from the North West Angle to Kettle Falls, a distance of 175 miles; this will depend on the amount of improvement on the east-end."

This was written on the 28th of January 1876, and shows that Mr. Mortimer did not consider the plan settled, and his report was in possession of the Department of Public Works anterior to the date at which the works on the canal were resumed.

Another improvement of considerable difficulty and cost has to be carried out at the head of Rainy River before vessels can approach Fort Francis Lock, if vessels should ever desire to approach it. Mr. Mortimer confirms Mr. Dawson's reports on the portages and difference in level between Fort Francis and Lac des Mille Lacs. If the Minister had read those reports he must have known that the obstacles were insuperable to navigation between those points. The country on the American side, although, I believe, very rough and inhospitable, is unquestionably better than the country on our side of Rainy Lake, which is unfit for settlement. There is small timber upon it which will be cut down and taken to the mills at Fort Francis, but that business does not require a lock. On Rainy River, immediately after you pass Fort Francis Portage, you get into a better country, and, from what I could learn, I should think there is a belt of an average of five or six miles from the river inwards fit for settlement. But, hon. gentlemen, if that country was all settled, no portion of the produce raised there would pass through Fort Francis Lock, because the course of trade would be down Rainy River through the Lake of the Woods, and so on to Rat Portage to the railway. From that point it would depend upon the markets whether it would go east or west. No portion of it would be taken upwards through Rainy Lake. The moment you come to Rainy Lake you would encounter this barrier of 400 feet perpendicular, which separates it from the railway at the north-east end of Lac des Mille Lacs. If the time should ever come, and it certainly will not come during the existence of any of the hon. gentlemen within hearing of my voice, when the lock at Fort Francis would be necessary, I think it would be better to allow the United States to build it, because it is they who will be interested in it. Our interests are not likely ever to require a lock at Fort Francis. I think both Mr. Mortimer and Mr. Baillairge said, that to overcome the Long Sault and Manitou Rapids, the best way would be to build a dam, and dam the water back from the Long Sault to the Manitou, so that one lock would be sufficient. But the State of Minnesota is on one side of the river, and I don't know how much of it would be submerged by a dam. A question of some international interest might arise. I feel very much indebted to the House for listening so patiently to my somewhat dry recital of facts. I am very glad to see the hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Brown) in his seat, and if he can say anything in defence of the Government policy touched by my motion, I shall be very glad to hear it. I think the case forms a proper subject for a committee to enquire what amount of public money has been wasted in this work. I think the Government, especially the Minister of Public Works, was anxious to place that part of the communication between Lake Superior and the Red River under process of construction as early and as rapidly as possible. I have no doubt that was his wish, and he may have thought he would not incur much risk if he assumed that by building the lock at Fort Francis communication by the water stretches could be got through from Sturgeon Falls to Rat Portage. He may have commenced the expenditure under such an impression, but why he should have continued to build the Fort Francis Lock after he had changed the location of the railway so as to place the eight or nine portages and the four hundred feet of height between the railway at Lac des Mille Lacs and Rainy River, Fort Francis, and so rendered the utilization of the lock in connection with the railway altogether impossible, I cannot understand. If the Government had said to Parliament that they had believed the best route was by Sturgeon Falls and the water stretches, and in that belief they had gone on and expended $108,000 or $109,000 at Fort Francis, which they afterwards found to be an unwise and useless expenditure, but well meant; but that as soon as they had discovered that the lock could not be used at all in connection with the railway, they had suspended the works, stopped the expenditure, and asked Parliament to overlook their mistake, I certainly would have been one of those to condone it. But to persist in the expenditure as they had done, after it was known to them that the work could not be utilized, was very blamable. How the Prime Minister, who is supposed to have given a great deal of attention to this subject, with all the information contained in Mr. Mortimer's and Mr. Dawson's reports before him, and all the machinery of the Department of Public Works at his disposal, to ascertain exactly the state of the country and what could or could not be done, could have been under any delusion, is a thing I cannot understand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not regret that my hon. friend from Toronto has brought this subject before the House, as it enables us to remove a great deal of the mystery with which it has been shrouded by the hon. gentleman on this and on former occasions, when he has brought it up for discussion. It is very well known that an appropriation was made last Session for expenditures on this canal. At that time explanations were fully given in this Chamber, and also in another place. In order that the House may fully understand the position of affairs, it will be well to go back to the year 1874, when the present Administration undertook the management of the affairs of the country. At that time it was announced that in view of the very great expense that would be entailed in an all-rail route, the Government believed it was in the interest of this country that Lake Superior and other water stretches, lying between that lake and the Pacific coast, should be availed of, to as great a degree as possible, to lessen the expense. Among other points to which the attention of the Government was directed, was the communication between Lake Superior and Lake of the Woods. That portion of the route demanded their attention more at the moment than, probably, any other, because they found a very large and wasteful expenditure was being, at that time, undergone in what was known as the Dawson Road. The expenditure in the year preceding the change of Government was very little short of half a million of dollars. That amount of the money of the people of this country was literally wasted. There was nothing, in fact, to show for it, and in the antecedent two years—in 1872 and '73—a sum in excess of half a million of dollars, I am prepared to show, by reference to the public accounts, was entirely wasted. The only valuable remnant that was left, as the House knows from the evidence of an hon. gentleman who lately visited that country, was the road from Prince Arthur's Landing to Lake Shebandowan and Lac des Mille Lacs, and the road westward from Lake of the Woods to Red River. There were, in addition to the roads, a couple of steamers, one on Rainy Lake and the other on the Lake of the Woods. There are also smaller tugs and boats which are, I believe, of very little value at the present time. They were not very valuable when they were constructed, and from natural decay, they possess little if any value now. The Government felt it imperative that this expenditure should be stopped at once, and they immediately cancelled the then existing system of communication by the Dawson Road. Up to the end of 1873-4, I may say to the House, a sum of $1,326,000, had been expended upon that route. A small part of that was advances made to Carpenter, but, in the following year, in closing up the old accounts of the Dawson Road, we found a sum of $56,000 had to be paid, which was more than the sum paid to Carpenter for the part of the year 1873-4 after the present Government was formed; so my statement is practically correct, that over one and a quarter millions had been expended on the Dawson Route antecedent to 1874. The Government felt that this expenditure was unwarranted; that the great majority of the people who went to Manitoba passed through the United States. It would have been very much cheaper for the Government of this country to have paid the entire passage money of people emigrating to the Northwest and sent them by way of Duluth, than to maintain this Dawson Route, and therefore it was that the Government felt it their duty to cancel the then existing arrangement. In locating the line of railway between Lake Superior and Manitoba, the belief of the Government in 1874 and 1875—as has been shown in the quotations produced by the mover of this resolution—was, that a practicable route would be found by way of Sturgeon Falls, which is considerably south of the present line. If hon. Senators will call to mind the map of that country, they will find that the present route runs north-west to Savanne, where it intersects a river leading into Lac des Mille Lacs. The Dawson Road then bends south-westward through a series of portages and small lakes until it reaches Rainy Lake. Through Rainy Lake the navigation is clear and uninterrupted to Rainy River. There was this impediment at the point where the Fort Francis Lock is being built, which prevented the passage of boats to Lake of the Woods. Having overcome this impediment and minor obstructions in Rainy River, communication would be uninterrupted to the North-West Angle or at Rat Portage, the point where the railway, which is being built eastward from Selkirk, intersects the Lake of the Woods. So it was quite apparent, looking at the map of the country, that the removal of the slight obstructions in Rainy River and the construction of a lock at Fort Francis, at the outlet of Rainy Lake, would give uninterrupted navigation from the east side of Rainy Lake to the North West Angle, a distance, I believe, of one hundred and sixty or one hundred and seventy miles—I am not sure of the exact distance. On the belief, no doubt, that the road would intersect the waters that flow into Rainy Lake near Sturgeon Falls, this work was commenced. In 1875 it was referred to in the report of the Minister of Public Works, and in that year a vote of the House was asked for, and the sum of $150,000 was placed in the estimates. I mention this fact because my hon. friend asks in his motion what authority there was for this expenditure.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That is charged to the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite true it is under the head of Pacific Railway expenditure, but it is put down specifically for the Fort Francis Lock, and Parliament was advised of the character of the expenditure. At that time the belief was that it could have been availed of in facilitating the connection between the then proposed terminus of the Pacific Railway east of Rainy Lake, and the Lake of the Woods. The House will remember that, last year, at the instance of a member of the Committee who takes a deep interest in this subject, Mr. Sandford Fleming was brought before the Committee, and questioned as to why he changed the route of the railway after public opinion had centred upon the southern line. It is quite natural that the southern line, following to some extent the Dawson Road, would have been preferred, because it was in the line of what is known as the water stretches. It gave this 170 miles of water communication, and it was a great object in the building of the Pacific Railway that it could, on the east side, reach those waters, and thus, for a considerable period, have enabled us to defer the construction of an all-rail route through to Manitoba. Mr. Fleming, in his evidence, from which I shall quote, in reply to a question why the located line was selected in preference to one by Sturgeon Falls, said:—

“ We began by making surveys directly on that line from both ends; we spent a whole season and the following winter and part of the following year, but we failed to find a practicable line in the direction referred to, east of Rat Portage. We were driven to look for a line further to the north.”

He then proceeds to show the difficulty of finding a practicable line either by Sturgeon Falls or round by Rat Portage. Mr. Macpherson, puts the question directly to him:—

“ Had you the country between Sturgeon Falls and Lake of the Woods thoroughly surveyed and explored?”

To this Mr. Fleming replied:—

“ Yes, we went in from both ends and had explorations made, but the reports were so extremely unsatisfactory that we did not deem it advisable to make further surveys. Instrumental surveys were continued, but we were driven off the direct line altogether.”

“ Q. Did the explorations extend north and south over a considerable portion of the country?—Yes; they explored to the right and left over a considerable area.”

“ Q. You spoke of Rat Portage as being the only place where the Lake of the Woods could be crossed?—The question of crossing the Lake of the Woods at another point, by a number of islands, had been considered, but the expense would be very great indeed, and the policy of crossing these wide stretches of water is very questionable.”

The evidence is all in the same direction. The Hon. Mr. Sutherland puts the question.

“ Would not a line from Sturgeon Falls through the Narrows, to Winnipeg, be much shorter? Yes, if you could get a line.”

I put the question to him myself, whether the surveys had been at all of a character that might be called exhaustive, and he replied “ yes.” I then asked him if he was prepared to say no feasible line could be found there, and he replied that engineers were unwilling to admit that anything was impracticable in engineering, because money could force a passage through almost any obstacle, but it was on that ground alone he would not say it was impossible. This was the year after Parliament had voted $150,000 for the construction of the lock, and the work had been undertaken. My hon. friend admits if the Government, after spending $109,000, had abandoned the improvements at this particular point, he would have approved of their action. The Government took in the position of affairs thoroughly. They understood it would not have been practicable to avail themselves of this particular water stretch for a number of years as a through route, but they believed it would help them to develop that portion of the country and be valuable for five or six years, at all events, before the link between Savanne and Rat Portage could be completed. One hundred and eighty miles of the centre gap are yet untouched, and it was believed that these improvements, with the water stretches, would be of considerable advantage. They were not justified in abandoning entirely the communication with the North-West by the Dawson Route, on which so much money had been expended, simply because they felt it would take another hundred and twenty-five, or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars to complete this lock and render feasible the navigation of Rainy River. The hon. gentleman did not make any reference to the probable sum that would be necessary for the completion of this improvement. Last year the sum asked for was $75,000, and this year, I believe, the amount is brought down to $10,000.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I do not believe the improvements can be completed on the scale proposed for $500,000.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The $10,000 is merely for the Fort Francis Lock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The sums voted by Parliament directly for this work were $150,000, in 1875; $75,000, in 1876, which also appeared in the estimates.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I would suggest that the hon. gentleman give the expenditure rather than the estimates.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The absolute expenditure, as I have got it from the Public Works Department, up to date, would be $227,000, less certain moneys that were paid out of that sum towards the Pacific Railway, some $10,000. There is a balance on hand at the present time, of $20,000, and plant to the value of $18, 000, which, I believe, can be readily sold for that money.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It will be altogether worthless by the time the canal is completed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This would reduce the actual amount expended to $184,000. If this is really the case, and by the expenditure of an additional $10,000 we are going to avail ourselves of that stretch of water from Rainy Lake to the North West Angle, I think the Government are quite justified in exercising their judgment in going on with the work, even though it were not to form an important link in the communication with the North-West, and, I have no doubt, my hon. friend would have been one of the first to censure the Government if, after spending $110,000, they had abandoned this work and allowed it to go to decay. The Government believe they have built a useful work there; one that will be of permanent value. It is not like a road that can be worn out, or the boats which are now lying up, rotting and perfectly worthless. This country has spent a large sum of money on the Dawson route for which there is very little to show. The present Government stopped that expenditure and tried the experiment of keeping it open by contract. Mr. Carpenter undertook it for $75,000 a year, but even that was too extravagant, and it was found impossible to force travel by that route. When this large expenditure in connection with the Dawson Road was going on, the hon. gentleman did not feel it his duty to ask the House to make an enquiry if this money was properly expended. I may mention, this sum voted for the improvements on Rainy River was entirely expended by days' work and not by contract.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear;" I believe the late Government did endeavor to build the boats by contract, but it was found quite impossible in that remote region to get contractors to take them at a reasonable price. We know in a country where it is so difficult to bring in supplies no contractor could arrive at an estimate of what it would cost to carry on work, and for that reason the Government decided to build the Fort Francis Lock by days' work. The hon. gentleman does not bring any charge against the Government, in a corrupt sense. All he says is the Minister of Public Works did not fairly and justly estimate the loss (from the hon. gentleman's point of view) that it would be to this country to go on with that expenditure; that when he concluded to deflect the line of railway north and this communication would not be in the line of the railway, he should have abandoned this work after the expenditure of $110,000, and let it go. The Government thought differently.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — And spend $500,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman criticises us for expending money in completing a work, which we believe will be of considerable importance, not only to that section, but to the whole of the North-West. I am advised that the land along Rainy River, is of a very superior character; that already a very considerable population has gone in there; that in the last two or three years, some two or three hundred persons have settled there; that the Department of the Interior have laid off several townships, and it is quite evident the country has considerable attraction for immigrants. Another of the advantages that, I am advised, will flow from the completion of those works—though my hon. friend appears to doubt it very much—is that it will afford an avenue for the bringing in of sawn lumber into the North-West. At the present time, as hon. members know, the prices for lumber in Manitoba and the North-West are quite high. I think clear stuff is worth about $50 a thousand, and inferior boards sell for $20 per thousand.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Where? At Winnipeg?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; I was reading in a Manitoba paper and found that was the price.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—You can get clear lumber at Winnipeg for $25 to $30 per thousand.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In a Manitoba paper, which I have now before me, the price of clear lumber is put down at $50 to $55.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—That must be seasoned lumber.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is quite obvious that the price of lumber in that country is very high, and that this communication will enable parties to bring lumber through Rainy River down to the North-West Angle, and thence by rail to Manitoba and the North-West.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—From the State of Minnesota.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It comes from Minnesota now, and the facilities for transporting it will be greatly increased by the construction of this work, and if we can give cheap lumber to our own people it will be of advantage to them no matter where it comes from.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Minnesota will derive all the benefit if there is any.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A gentleman in the Department of the Interior informs me that there is a thousand millions of feet of lumber in the country north and north-west of Rainy Lake, and the outlet for that lumber would be by Lake of the Woods and the railway west from Keewatin. If that is the fact, I am clearly of the opinion—and I am sure any gentleman who looks at this question without prejudice will arrive at the same conclusion—it was much better for the Government to have gone on with the improvements after having commenced them than to abandon them, in view of the two arguments I have mentioned, that is, the population now settled on the fertile lands in the valley of the Rainy River, and the large amount of lumber available on the north and north-west of Rainy Lake, that will have to be taken out by this route. I do not think it is necessary for me to advert to the report of the Minister of Public Works, although I have a copy in my hands, in which attention is called to this particular work. It cannot be alleged, as it has been insinuated, that the Government built it without proper authority from Parliament, because the authority I have already quoted, and the vote appears in the estimates for an amount at least equal to the present expenditure. The hon. gentleman had knowledge of the inception of this work and did not then take means to call attention to it. The hon. Senator from Toronto, (Mr. Aikins) did call attention to it, but went no further than to enquire how fast the work was progressing. At that time it would have been within the direct line of railway communication as then proposed. I have no objection to a Committee of this House following up the enquiry, although it is a very unusual proceeding. It is undoubtedly a sort of censure on the Government, because the information sought is available in the blue books issued from time to time by the Department of Public Works, and the usual way of getting such information is to call for reports, rather than to appoint a body of gentlemen to assume the right of interfering with a work which the Government is supervising. It is a very unusual proceeding, to say the least. Before the Committee is struck, I will probably desire to make a few observations as to how that Committee ought to be formed. Last year, when a committee, somewhat similar to this, was being formed, I took the ground that the Government ought at least to be represented on that committee by a majority of members. I am quite aware that that view was not approved of by the House; that some hon. members who spoke on the subject, took the view that the feeling of the majority of the members of this Senate should be represented rather than the Government. I do not think, in a matter of this kind, where it is, no doubt, a subject into which a good deal of political bias enters, that it is quite fair or proper that the Executive should be judged by a hostile committee, and, while I should be the last to accuse any hon. gentleman in this Chamber of being actuated by a hostile feeling on a committee, still, where the committee is avowedly for the purpose of casting a reflection on the Administration, it is but reasonable to suppose that, unwittingly, gentlemen unfavorable to the Government would come to the same conclusions as the hon. Senator who introduced this motion. The practice in this Chamber is based, I believe, on the practice in the House of Lords. The practice in that body is, where five members desire it, the committee should be struck by the House.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—I would just say in connection with the observations of the hon. Secretary of State, it would afford me great pleasure to be left off this committee. I would ask the House, that some other name be substituted for mine, as I may not be in a position to give that time and attention to the enquiry that the hon. Secretary of State would desire. Whatever selection may be made, I hope that the committee will be able to elucidate all the facts in this case. I confess, from the statements made by my hon. friend from Toronto, there appear a good many things that are hard to understand or believe in connection with this matter, and I trust the committee will carefully investigate it and report the facts to the House. The hon. Secretary of State, in his remarks, has reminded us again, as he has at other times done, of the cost of the Dawson Route. He tells us that road cost something like $1,250,000, and that the Government felt it their duty to abandon it and send all the passengers going to the North-West, through the United States.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We leased it for two years.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The remark of the hon. gentleman was that they found it cheaper and better to send them all by the United States. The hon. gentleman forgets, perhaps, there was a time when this road was an absolute necessity, not only for the earlier immigrants, but to take in the men into the North-West that were necessary for the protection of life and property on the Red River, and to preserve that country to the Dominion. I refer to the time when we sent troops to Fort Garry, and when the United States refused to let them pass through any portion of their territory. I gather from the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State, that he maintains that had the railway been built upon the line first proposed, this lock at Fort Francis would have given uninterrupted navigation for 160 miles, and furnished water communication between the two ends of the railway. Now, supposing this to be the fact, we can see, perhaps, there was some reason for an expenditure to connect the two sections of railway that were being built but, if you admit that, then when the location of the railway was moved further north, and put in such a position as to render the lock at Fort Francis useless, unless the obstructions mentioned by the hon. Senator from Toronto were removed, why did the Government continue the expenditure. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) had shown that the lock would overcome only twenty-three feet of the rise and fall between the two ends of the railway, leaving something over 400 feet untouched. The hon. Secretary of State has quoted from the evidence of Mr. Sandford Fleming to give a reason why the railway was moved further north. I ask the hon. gentleman to quote Mr. Fleming, if he can, recommending the continuation of expenditure upon this Fort Francis Lock. I ask him to quote Mr. Fleming, if he can, ever having recommended the construction of this lock. The hon. Senator from Toronto tells us that he cannot find in any of the papers any recommendation by any engineer for the expenditure upon that work. I have been equally unsuccessful in my search and, I think, surely in the building of the Pacific Railway and its connections, when they had a chief engineer employed—a man standing at the head of his profession in this country—it was but justice to have his recommendation for so large an expenditure as it is shown has been made and is yet necessary for the completion of that work. The hon. Secretary of State has abandoned his previous position, that the Fort Francis Lock is a necessary part of the Pacific Railway, and he drops down to the transportation of lumber from Rainy Lake, on the ground of the high price that is paid for lumber in some parts of the North West. The hon. gentleman ought to know something of the prices paid for lumber in that section of the country. I find the Government are paying for lumber used on the Pacific Railway, $100 per thousand, and I think it is necessary in some way or other to reduce the price.

Hon. Mr. SKEAD—Is it cubic or board measure?

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Board measure.

Hon. Mr. SKEAD—I should like to see such a state of things existing here.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Now let us see if there can be any advantage to the country from the construction of this lock at Fort Francis, and not only of the lock, but of the section of railway they are now engaged upon. The hon. Senator from Toronto has quoted a number of speeches delivered by the Secretary of State, and by the Premier, on different occasions, all tending to this point, that for very many years the intervening link of 180 miles shall not be built by the Dominion. In fact, the Secretary of State told us last year they did not propose to build it at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As a government work.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Yes, as a government work; that, having built these two ends, they propose to rest there and see if a company could not be formed to build the remainder of the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the Act.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—In answer to Mr. Campbell, he said at all events it would be some six or seven years before they would undertake it. Now, suppose the 228 miles under contract were built, and, with all the obstructions that the hon. Senator from Toronto has shown to exist on the water communication, I ask what possible advantage can that be to the people of this Dominion? What possible advantage can the expenditure of $6,000,000,—that is about the amount given by the hon. Secretary of State and the Premier—upon the railway be to this country? We do not know when a connection between the two ends of this road will be established, and without that through connection there can be no traffic. Why, what does the Premier himself say in respect to the country through which the line runs? He says, in one of his speeches:—

“ We have under contract 224 miles of rail“ way from Lake Superior to Red River, the “ largest portion of which is through a country “ never before trod by the foot of man, except
“ own engineers.”

That is the country into which, 108 miles on one end and 116 on the other, they are running a railroad at a cost of $6,000,000. I wish to call attention to the fact that it is admitted by the Premier himself, that they are expending this enormous sum in running a railway into a wilderness wholly uninhabited by white men.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It never will be settled.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN.—Now, if that be the character of the country, and if there be obstructions, forming 400 feet of a rise and fall, independent of the 23 feet at Fort Francis, to the water communication, I ask the House where is the com-non-sense in spending this enormous sum in works which must be idle and useless, at all events, until the 180 miles link is put in, and worse than useless, because they will rot and decay. I was speaking of the prices they are paying for the lumber they are putting into that road. The Premier claims credit because it is being built at a less cost per mile than the Intercolonial railroad. The reason of that is, where we had the best masonry that is to be found on any road on this continent in our piers, culverts, abutments, bridges, &c., they have built all theirs of logs and timber trestle work. Perhaps the Premier may think it is equally good, but I mention the fact to show that no comparison can be established between the cost of the two roads. I have gone over the number of structures of timber on the 228 miles of road under contract, and I find the cost in the schedule for abutments, bridges, culverts and other wood work is over $800,000. We all know, by the system under which they are building, the cost will exceed what is put down here. It is not built as the Intercolonial railroad was, but at schedule rates, and you may safely put down the cost of wood and wooden structures at $1,000,000. Now, you have not only an expenditure on ordinary railway, of $6,000,000, but you have one-sixth of that of wood. Taking seven years as the period in which they will make the connection, this road will be almost worthless by the end of that period. Let us go into a little calculation as to what the result of that will be. You have $6,000,000 expended upon the construction of 228 miles of railroad running into a country upon which the foot of white man never trod before the engineers went there, and which furnishes no local traffic. Now, what liability for interest does that bring upon us? At the rate of five per cent, which money costs us, it is $300,000 a year, and if it is to be worked at all, the expense will be very great. Why, the cost of the Intercolonial railway during the past year was $1,661,000. What shall we put down for the working of this 228 miles, and remember it is in two separate sections, increasing the cost of running? Shall we say one-half or one-third of that amount? If we put it at one-third, it will be $500,000 for working the 228 miles of road running into that barren and forsaken country. You have, then, $800,000 a year as the cost of these pieces of railway. Now, I ask the House where is the traffic to come from? Where are the advantages to compensate this country for an expenditure of $800,000 a year, or half of that sum, or even a dollar of it? I find in the report of Mr. Mortimer, already quoted by my hon. friend from Saugeen, in which he speaks of the Dawson Route—and it will be borne in mind, it is proposed to utilize a large portion of the Dawson Route in the water stretches connection. He says:—

Now, with the additional obstructions to the line that exist upon that portion of the route, added by the change of location—additional portages and 400 feet of rise and fall—I think you will find that it is not possible with any expenditure to pass anything like six tons of freight per day over that route. Nobody will maintain for a moment there can be any local traffic there; it must be all through freight, and if you can pass even six tons of freight per day over the road, what is that to pay its working expenses? We had the statement made by an hon. member from Manitoba, that there would not be a single man or a ton of freight pass over the water stretch route if it were completed to-morrow, because there is a free and unbroken all-rail route by the United States, and I believe the House is satisfied there would not. You have, therefore, the whole $800,000 standing against you, and no return, and at the end of seven years, even though it stands that long, the wood-work, to the value of $1,000,000 in the railroad will, in the main, have to be renewed. This, then, is the position of the matter as it appears by the information before us. Six millions of the people's money is being spent on the construction of two widely separate pieces of road that it is not proposed to connect for six or seven years—in fact, not at all by the Government. This cost involves in seven years a further sum, in interest and working expenses (supposing anything so surprising as the working of it) of at least five millions of dollars, and at the end of seven years, another million in renewals—altogether, a sum of twelve million dollars, for which there can be no possible return, none whatever, until all-rail connection be made through. The hon. Secretary of State gives us the authority for the expenditure, the vote by Parliament of the money; but supposing they had asked and obtained the money, surely, when the facts were known, when the entire worthlessness of the scheme became apparent on examination and survey, they should have stopped proceedings and saved the country's money. I, therefore, support the hon. Senator's motion, but have to ask that another name be substituted for mine on the committee.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I would suggest the name of Mr. Macfarlane, instead of Mr. McLelan.

The resolution was changed as suggested by the mover.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I confess, hon. gentlemen, that so far as I am personally concerned, I exceedingly rejoice that this discussion has been brought on. For some years I have not taken a deep personal interest in public affairs, and I have only a very general knowledge of what has been proceeding those years. I have been noticing very violent attacks that have been made upon the Government with regard to this work of late, with some apprehension. I read a pamphlet, which was sent broadcast over the country, with regard to this very work, and I got an idea there had been something frightfully wrong with respect to this part of the Pacific Railway scheme.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—So there is.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I found in that pamphlet something like this:—

“Is it possible that he (Mr. Mackenzie) did not know that to connect Rainy Lake with Lac des Mille Lacs, for the purposes of navigation, 400 feet perpendicular have to be overcome? Did Mr. Mackenzie know that the work he spoke of accomplishing in ‘a few years’ and ‘years before’ the railway is completed between Port Savanne and Keewatin (Rat Portage) involved the construction of canals through seven miles or more of rock, and the building of forty locks, each of ten feet lift?”

“When declaring it to be the policy of the Government to carry out this stupendous undertaking, surely it was Mr. Mackenzie's duty to tell the country how many millions it would cost to construct the canals and the forty locks required to enable ‘steamers’ from Rainy Lake to ascend four hundred feet to the top of the hill whereon Lac des Mille Lacs reposes.”

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Well, sir, it was very alarming. Millions upon millions to be expended on this work with, the hon. gentleman declared over and over again, no object.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Quite true.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman says it is “quite true.” I have noticed his speech to-day. I have watched every word which fell from him. I have heard what fell from others, and I confess the whole thing oozed away like the soft breezes that come to our ears on a summer evening. It is hard to tell what the hon. gentleman has to complain of against the Administration in this matter. It turns out that instead of millions being involved, the whole amount expended on this work has been $180,000.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — No, $227,000.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman says “$227,000.” That is the character of the figures I find in this pamphlet. The hon. gentleman insists that the amount is $227,000, though it is only this moment the hon. Secretary of State, who ought to be believed by this Chamber, made deductions from the amount which brought it down to $180,000.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I stated that the expenditure was $163,662 to the 30th of June last. That is what appears in the Public Accounts.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman said that, it is quite true, but he said he had not the last six months' expenditure, and he had no doubt there were very large sums to be added to it. He asks how much has been paid up to this moment, and the Secretary of State gives the amount, and says deductions bring it to $180,000. Now, do not let us go away from the point. The matter we have under discussion is the expenditure of $180,000 for a public work which the Premier believed in his heart was necessary in the interest of the country to fulfil the bargain that was made with our fellow colonists in the great North-West. The hon. gentleman says: “I have no doubt Mr. Mackenzie wished to do this, and to do it as soon as possible”; and so, for an expenditure of $180,000, which was gone about with this honest intention, which was submitted to Parliament from the very first, and obtained the approval of the people's representatives month after month and Session after Session; every sixpence of which has been endorsed by the House, by this Senate, and by the hon. gentleman himself, we are asked to give a Committee to overhaul this matter, and before the thing has been enquired into, we have had it sent abroad to the country—and the hon. gentleman has tried to do it in his speeches here—that this is one of the greatest jobs—

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Blunders.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—He says “blunders” to-day, and I do not blame him that he tries to use more parliamentary language. I accept the language he uses to-day, but it is entirely different from what appears in this pamphlet, which has been sent to England and over the country in thousands of copies, not as a blunder, but something very much stronger.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I have never heard such a tribute to the character of any Administration who honestly desired to do what they could for their country, as in what the hon. gentleman has read here to-day.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Oh! oh!

Hon. Mr. BROWN—It is so; I don't know a case. The hon. gentleman read report after report, speech after speech, showing that the Government even changed their minds on this from time to time. I wish it had been the case with other Administrations. This Government, when a doubt came across their minds, whether they were proceeding rightly, hesitated before going forward any further, yet the hon. gentleman complains of this. He complained of the stoppage of work in November—

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not complain of the stoppage, but that the work was proceeded with.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman said the work was stopped in November and resumed in April. Well, I fancy work is generally stopped in that country in November, and commenced again in the spring. Can it be forgotten the way this Administration came into power? Will it be forgotten that they came with a burden thrown upon them which has been borne by few Administrations in any country in the world! They came with a pledge to a handful of people in British Columbia, that a great road—probably, as the hon. gentleman has said, costing something like $100,000,000—should be commenced within two years, and finished in ten. They were called upon to fulfil the bargain that was made. The hon. gentleman talks about there being no estimate or survey of this lock. He knows he voted this bargain through. His friends proposed it and he helped them to put it through without any estimate, or survey or knowledge of what it was to cost the country. We were committed to the building of that road let it be $100,000,000 or $200,000,000. The present Government have endeavoured honestly to fulfil that bargain, while completing those grand canals we are building and which will be monuments to this country which few other countries possess; while completing the Intercolonial Railway, (which was carried by the hon. gentleman's own friends away round the coast, hugging the water, instead of by the North Shore, which was offered to be done for a bonus of $8,000,000, but which now costs the country $22,500,000.)—yet, the hon. gentleman thinks that those who are to complete all that, are to be brought to the bar of public opinion because this blunder (as he calls it) was committed. I say it is no blunder. It is quite clear it has been done with a complete understanding of what they were about. But even if it had been a blunder, it was not from the lips of that hon. gentleman, or any reasonable man, to bring a charge against this Administration that they deserved punishment for. It might be a thing to be regretted. It might be a thing for the hon. gentleman to bring to the House and say “in the midst of this enormous work these men, brought into this position with an immense burden upon them, it is to be regretted, erred.” I consider it extraordinary for men to carry on for five years those great public works, and bring them to the point they have now reached, and that so little can be said against them by the Opposition. I do not blame their opponents for looking so closely into such matters. I would let the hon. gentlemen bring their committees, make motions, and conduct their enquiries as fully as possible. I do not recollect in my career

Hon. Mr. Brown.

—and I have watched the progress of these provinces for 35 years—an administration which could as readily seek an enquiry into their proceedings as the hon. gentlemen who now hold the treasury benches. The hon. gentleman seems to think no improper expenditures have ever been made in the past. I recollect when his friends were in power the Chats Canal was commenced. The first vote asked for was $75,000, and the expenditure went on from year to year until it reached $480,000. And where is it now? It stands as a monument of the utter incapacity of the hon. gentleman's friends for conducting business.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—What has that got to do with this?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Yet the hon. gentleman talks of $180,000 for this great work, which if the country is ever to be anything, ought certainly not to be thrown aside. I confess, having been away so long from public life, I am delighted almost with what has taken place to-night. It shows we have passed away from those old times when the hon. Senator and his friends were in office, from the days of the Baby job, the piers and bridges and other works down the St. Lawrence. One hundred and eighty thousand dollars! Why, a million dollars was thought nothing of then! If you could bring back old Baby to listen to this debate, he would think we had got into the most virtuous days ever heard of. Certainly, in his days such things were never thought of. One hundred and eighty thousand dollars for constructing a great work, conducted by day's labor, and going on, with all sorts of investigations being called for! In those days—no one knows better than the hon. gentleman—they scorned even to ask the consent of Parliament to large expenditures. They gave a contract out for $30,000, and took a vote for that amount, and then, next year, when the Public Accounts came down there was probably $500,000 expended, of which $470,000 had never been voted by Parliament. The hon. gentleman surely does not mean to say that when the Government come down and propose a scheme to Parliament, and that passes both Houses without objection, and then come down next year, report the progress they have made, and ask for more money until the enormous sum of $180,000 is expended to the present day, that an investigation is necessary. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say, with all the figures in these books, with the pile of volumes before him, with an amount of information with regard to this work, which you would scarcely find in connection with the Intercolonial Railway in all the years the hon. gentleman's friends were building it, that he has not information enough? If he wants information how is it he goes to work to write all these pamphlets and comes here and tells us all he does? The hon. gentleman and the hon. Senator from Kingston, and my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Aikins) went a journey to see this work, and they come down and they tell us their experience, and yet they want more than that personal experience gives. They come and bring up their personal experience, and represent this as something extraordinary, but when closely examined, it appears to be one of the most correct and carefully and economically done things I ever heard of. I do not intend to detain the House long upon this point. It appears to me the whole thing lies in a nutshell. I do not speak of the very able and straightforward, and, it appeared to me, very complete answer given by the Secretary of State; but, taking the statement of the hon. gentleman himself, it is perfectly clear that the whole thing arose in the most natural way—that the railroad was originally intended to be run in a different line from that which is now taken. The hon. gentleman says—"why didn't they wait and send engineers?" I suppose with all these enormous public works on hand, there was an immense demand for all these professional men. The Premier could not have gone himself to see it. He could only trust to such information as he could obtain, and it is evident he took the earliest opportunity to proceed with the work. We were pledged to construct a railway to that North-West Territory and draw immigration there as soon as possible. All the difficulty seems to have arisen about that central link, which seems to be so costly, and to require such a long time to execute it that it appeared to stand in the way of getting direct communication between these Provinces and Manitoba. What more natural than that he should use those water-courses as far as could possibly be done? I think both parties agreed to that. The House consented to it, at all events, and it was adopted. Then, the whole thing comes down to this: the hon. gentlemen says, if they had stopped after spending $110,000, he would not have blamed them. Well, it is only $70,000 more, even though it were an error of judgment. The hon. gentleman shakes his head.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I said I believe the blunder will amount to $500,000 before the thing is done. It is not nearly finished.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman is very unbelieving. Now, I have got in my hand the report brought down this year, in which I find the following:—

“The rock excavation of the lock-chamber is nearly completed. The timber for the gates will be obtained during the winter.”

I went to the Public Works Department, to-day, to find out something about this work, and was informed by one of the professional men engaged on it, that very little more money will be required to complete it—that the rock excavation was almost finished.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What is the depth of the lock?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Here is what the report says:—

“This canal will connect the 44 miles of navigable water of Rainy Lake with Rainy River and the Lake of the Woods, making a continuous navigation, from Kettle Falls to the North-West Angle, of 164 miles, with 7 feet depth of water.”

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I state with the most perfect confidence, that cannot be done for $500,000.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Then, the hon. gentleman will see, if it will cost half a million—and it is not wise to spend that amount on this work—it will not be spent, and if the Government come to the House to ask for it, let him vote nay; but let the hon. gentleman not talk of $500,000 at a time when the expenditure has really been only $70,000 more than he says he was willing should have been expended if they had stopped there. It appears to me that the Government in this have acted most wisely, because, admitting, as the hon. gentleman does, that this work was undertaken with the belief that it was for the good of the whole Dominion and necessary for the Pacific Railway, that it was honestly and rightly gone about, I say it would have been folly to have stopped at $110,000, when the connection between these two great water stretches will be made for the people who settle there, at any rate. How would it have done to have left the works in the middle to decay? I say it was far wiser to go on, even for the use of the people who go in there.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—There never will be any settlers there, in all probability.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman says there will never be any settlement there “in all probability.” I was told that when I came to Canada with regard to a great many counties that are now filled with people. It is not long since I heard people say “there never will be any settlement in Muskoka;” there are some of the finest farms in Canada there now; and we were told the same with respect to other counties that are now covered with settlements. The hon. gentleman goes there and, as he passes through the country, sees a little of it—not a millionth part of it—and he comes to the conclusion that it is unfit for settlement. Let him go to Scotland, and see the hundreds of thousands of acres that we were told in his day would never be settled—why, the fields blossom like the rose in places where it was not dreamed in our time anything could be cultivated. It is absurd, in opening up a great country like that, to try and bring down every little thing to bear out their particular view of it. Do they think any member of the other House has taken the ground that is assumed here? Not at all. I very much regret that such a feeling should be shown in this House. I think we should look broader and higher altogether, than to be bringing down little petty things like this, and trying to make accusations against the Government. The whole thing seems as if the hon. gentleman were in a very cross humor. I have known days in which we have seen a very different feeling displayed, when grants of $10,000,000 were spent in public works without much advantage from them, and not a word came from the hon. gentleman against his friends who then held the Treasury Benches. I think it is not for the hon. gentleman who approved of the expenditure of $1,250,000 on the Dawson Route, to complain that an effort was made to go on a cheaper scale—and the Government have certainly succeeded in doing that, and in giving very much more accommodation than the Dawson Route furnished—and when it is admitted that the work was honestly gone about. The hon. gentleman seemed to make a great point about the number of these locks. It appears to me he has not put that fairly. It is not locks the Government have been thinking of, but portages.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—How is Mr. Mackenzie to take steamers over the portages?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I fail to find any mention of a scheme to take steamers over the portages? We have continuous navigation down the St. Lawrence, yet we use canals.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Yes, but not portages.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman says it is all in the 400 feet. If that 400 feet is divided up in ten portages, why should not ten roads be made, no matter what the height?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—But how are you to take the steamers over it?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman remembers very well when the St. Lawrence was not, as it happily is now, improved so that vessels could pass up by means of canals, and he must know that it will be far easier to carry passengers over the short portages between Lac des Mille Lacs and Rainy Lake, than it was in days that he can remember, to convey passengers and freight from Montreal to Toronto.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—No, no!

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman should not say “no. no.” There were a great many places on the St. Lawrence where goods had to be portaged, though I do not recollect it myself. The hon. gentleman sees in all those public documents what the intention of the Government is. Right or wrong, take that if you like, but do not say that five millions or any number of millions of dollars will be required for a work which the Government never contemplated doing. I do not regret by any means that the hon. gentleman should have made this motion, but I would very much have preferred that, under all the circumstances, and in view of the very moderate speech he has made to-day, the tone of which was quite unexceptionable, such a motion should not appear upon the paper. No one would dream of refusing such an inquiry; by all means let him enquire into everything, but I think he should not bring such a motion as this. He asks:—

“1st. Whether the Fort Francis Lock can be “used for the purposes of commerce in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.”

There are a great many other purposes it can be applied to. This is to give an idea of failure, and he takes it from his one-sided point of view.

“So as to form part of the through communication from Lake Superior to Manitoba, and “if not, what improvements will be indispensable?”

Who can tell what will be indispensable! The idea of submitting such a thing to a committee! How can you do that? You must send up there for people who know all about it; you must have engineers and all sorts of witnesses, as if this were not the business of the Government and had not been put before the House from time to time as the work advanced. The Government have concealed nothing; the hon. gentlemen have seen the work themselves. Why do they not bring down a resolution condemning the policy of the Government and say what they will do? That is the fair way to act, and not to put a resolution on record which may never come to anything. This committee may never bring it to a point, but this resolution insinuates all sorts of things against this public work. I think, unless we have a very strong case, we should stand by the Government of the country, and by the credit of our public works. I say it is not right to stand up here and say on mere suspicion, not to our own country only, but to every country in the world, that we bungle our public works, and that we throw money away in an indefensible manner. This resolution will go on the Journals, the speech made by the hon. Secretary of State will not go with it. The statements of the hon. gentleman opposite will be published and republished all over the country, and if the motion is carried to-day it will, in a measure, be regarded as giving color to those statements. If the hon. gentleman wishes to do this in a candid manner—probably he did, but it did not occur to him—he has got, at the end of his motion, all he wants. It is usual to say, here is a subject which requires investigation, and then move for a committee to investigate it. He has got all he wants in number five of his resolutions, which is as follows :—

“5th. And generally to inquire into all matters relating to the Fort Francis Lock, with power to send for persons and papers, and to report from time to time to this Honorable House.”

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—That change could not prevent it from going on the Journals, it will have to go on anyway.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I am sorry for it. The hon. gentleman might consent to withdraw it. There was a time when my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Aikins) would not have done that.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I rise to a question of order. The hon. gentleman says that unless a certain course is taken that resolution will go on the Journals of the House. I merely say that it will go on any way. I want to know if the hon. gentleman wants to make a personal attack on me for saying that.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I can assure the hon. gentleman, I had no intention to make a personal attack. What I wish to say is this—it very often happens that gentlemen get up here—in asking a question, actually—and proceed to attack the Government and make charges, and sit down again, get their answer, and no defence is allowed to go on record at all. Now, I say such things ought to be done fairly.

Hon. Mr. CHAPPAIS—It is a great shame.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—So it is. I hope whatever is done we will act fairly towards all parties, and whether this Government or any other administration is in power, they will be fairly treated. The resolution goes on to say :—

“To afford unbroken communication for steamers between the railway stations of Port Savanne and Keewatin.”

There is nothing to justify the hon. gentleman in putting that paragraph in. He expects steamers to go over those portages. The resolution proposes to enquire :—

Hon. Mr. Brown.

“What will be the use of this lock for purposes of commerce?”

Every person must judge that for himself. What could I tell about that who have never been there? Who can tell that to the committee except the hon. gentleman himself and the hon. Senator from Kingston? Except those, I do not know that there is anyone else on the proposed committee who has been there before. What difference would it be if a vote were taken on it in this House? I understand there has been a committee on this subject before, and the hon. gentleman has cross-examined the whole engineering staff of the country.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—That was not the committee.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—What was the committee?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — The Kaministiquia—another job.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I think the hon. gentleman does not need a committee to ascertain the “dimensions of the lock.” He must know that if he has read the report of the Minister of Public Works. Neither should it be necessary for him to enquire where :—

“The appropriation from which the money expended upon it has been taken.”

I do think the hon. gentleman should withdraw that motion and should move one simply asking for the appointment of a committee. The insinuation that the Government has been spending money without authority is not fair. However, I congratulate the hon. gentleman on having come to a much more calm and pleasant frame of mind than when he wrote his pamphlet.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I simply invite enquiry.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I think you should take that course and not have everything cut and carved for the committee before the enquiry is commenced. If there were some great wrong which had been done, and you were trying to get at the bottom of it, you might possibly move such a resolution for the appointment of a committee.

At six p.m. the House rose for recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I am glad, in some respects, that the Recess happened between the speech of my hon. friend from Lambton (I understand Mr. Brown desires to be known by that term) and my reply to him. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, has always been actuated in this House by the most perfect good nature. Yet he comes with such a tempest of passion that really one desires a little pause between the time it is all over and the time it is necessary to reply to him, lest one should forget oneself and answer in the spirit provoked unintentionally by the manner of the hon. gentleman, who, although he speaks in that violent way, is yet at heart, I am told, a very good natured person. Let us recall the facts which are before the House, and let us try to forget, if hon. gentlemen have not now forgotten—and I dare say they have already forgotten, except my hon. friend from Toronto, who was in the very crisis of an attack when the House rose—the violent defense of my hon. friend from Lambton of his friends in the Government. Let us forget all this, and go back to the facts established by my hon. friend from Saugeen in the speech which I think was characterized by great moderation and forbearance, and which I think, if I may be permitted to say so, contrasted in that respect so admirably with the speech of the hon. Member from Lambton who so warmly defended the Government and desired to inculcate to this House the dignity and calmness which should characterize us, and who set us an example which we all witnessed when the House rose. My hon. friend from Saugeen established, first, that this lock at Fort Francis was commenced on very insufficient information; that there was no such information before the Government as a Ministry usually demands before undertaking works of that nature and magnitude. I think he established that very clearly, and also that the link which this work amongst others—part of the Dawson Route—was intended to establish between two disconnected parts of the Pacific Railway, was likely to be used necessarily for four, five or six years to come. It is not always possible to get accurately what the Government do intend with reference to certain works, and those members of this House, who have been here more frequently than the hon. member for Lambton, know that we have from time to time very great difficulty in getting accurate information from the Government as to the number of years that would elapse between the completion of 116 miles, or whatever it is, from Fort William westward to the beginning, of the other 106 miles, or whatever it is, from Rat Portage to Selkirk, but be that period four, five or six years this link is to be used in the meantime, and is to be composed of the Dawson Route, the Fort Francis Lock, and the intermediate and following stretches of water navigation. That, my hon. friend also established very clearly. He also established, I think, that in November 1875 the line of the Pacific Railway, which up to that time had been intended to have touched the Sturgeon River, so called,—for it is slack water, I believe—had been abandoned and another line chosen away to the North of that line one hundred miles, and at such a distance from the waters which find their level in the Lake of the Woods as to render the use of the Dawson Road and the Fort Francis Lock an impossibility. It is established that they found out this in November 1875. Why did they not find it out before? They had no particular survey of that route made in November 1875, and they were only then availing themselves of the information which they might have made use of, in November 1873, when they undertook the government of this country. They then had all the information which was in their possession in November, 1875; they had, at any rate, Mr. Dawson's report, which my hon. friend from Saugeen has quoted, giving the exact descent from the waters of the Lac des Mille Lacs to the waters of the Lake of the Woods, including the descent at Fort Francis and the rapidity of the current there and the obstructions which are interposed above and below Fort Francis. All this was in the hands of the Government in 1873. Why then did they ever undertake the Fort Francis Lock? You find, in the first place, that they had no special information and there was no pretense that they had that kind of knowledge which usually guides a Public Works Department when commencing the construction of a work of any magnitude. But whilst they had not that special information, and no special engineer's report, and no special survey, they had the general information which Mr. Dawson's report gives of the descent of the waters which they were desirous of establishing as their mode of communication between one end of their section of the Pacific Railway and the beginning of the other. Then, I ask in the name of common sense, knowing all these difficulties which had to be overcome, why did they undertake such a work? And when my hon. friend from Lambton says it is a great pity that you should throw discredit on the Public Works Department, and that this discredit will spread far and wide in this country and other countries, I am sorry that the want of confidence in the Public Works Department of the Dominion is not to be removed by an expression of that kind, and that it has been manifested in the country and in this House, with the strongest reason, from time to time during the past three years. Have we not in this House decided beyond all question that the Public Works Department had most erroneously concluded to commence the Georgian Bay Branch?

Hon. Mr. Campbell.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Had we not established beyond all doubt that they had, without proper thought and due consideration of the difficulties involved, intended to commence the construction of the railway on Vancouver's Island from Esquimaux to Nanaimo? Have we not also had established in this House beyond all doubt that the course pursued by this Government—and I never said more than that it was a blunder, a grievous blunder—with reference to the steel rails transaction.—

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Have we not had established beyond doubt, in this and other matters, that if there is one department more mismanaged than another it is the Public Works Department? Although I have great respect for the head of the Government; although I believe he is a man of great ability, and from whom much was expected,—notwithstanding all that, I say if there is a department in the Government which has not come up to the public expectation, it is the Department over which the Premier presides. I say that after three or four years experience, and after all those matters have been closely examined into in this House, and elicited from members of the Senate from all the Provinces (and in which it has fairly and strongly represented the opinion of the Dominion) an expression as to the want of capacity which has characterized the administration of the Public Works Department since the change of Government in 1873—I am bold enough to say, that it seems to me that we have had from that Department in a number of instances, notably in those I have already referred to, a marked lack of wisdom and judgment in arriving at decisions of great moment, whilst I frankly admit there is great vigour and ability in administration. I think my hon. friend from Saugeen established these points, and I will repeat them—that the work was begun on very insufficient evidence, that the link to be supplied was a link that would be required for five or six years, that in November 1875, at all events, the Government had decided to change the line of the Pacific Railway and carry it one hundred miles north of the original line, so that it would be one hundred miles away from the line they first intended to establish when they decided to construct the Fort Francis Lock. Having, therefore, rendered the Fort Francis Lock useless for the purposes of the Pacific Railway, why did they not stop that work? This committee, if appointed, will ascertain why, and the amount of the expenditure which had taken place up to November, 1875. I fancy it was very small when the Government had determined to change the route of the Pacific Railway, and when they therefore knew there was not a ghost of a reason for continuing to work on this lock. If this matter had been put in any other light we might have shown more forbearance, but the Government from the beginning told us it was to be part of the Pacific Railway. There was no pretence, as the hon. member from Lambton puts it, and as the hon. the Secretary of State partly put it, that it was merely for the purpose of encouraging settlement, and letting the lumber growing on the shores of Rainy Lake go down to Lake of the Woods, and help the people of Minnesota. We are told it was part of the Pacific Railway, and now it is admitted not to be a part of the Pacific Railway. It is acknowledged by the hon. the Secretary of State to be a blunder, and acknowledged by the hon. member from Lambton, who defends it, to be a blunder; but it would never have been so admitted, but would have been completely justified, if it had not been for the perseverance with which the hon. member for Saugeen has pushed this matter upon the Government. By his exertions and his ability and perseverance, he has brought together such facts, and established his case so well, and so thoroughly, that the hon. gentlemen are forced to admit it was a blunder, and of such a gross character that it seemed hardly to admit of an excuse. If they acknowledge now that it was a blunder, as they have, it is because of the exertions of the hon. member for Saugeen, who puts them in a position so that they cannot do anything else. The hon. the Secretary of State has again and again told us this lock was part of the Pacific Railway, and I want to know, if the votes he has quoted from Bills of Supply indicate the character of the work, how they had the face to go and do it by day's labor? What does the Pacific Railway Act say? That it shall be built by contract. If it is a part of the Pacific Railway—and it is, according to their Acts of Parliament—why did they not do it by contract? I am at a loss to say how it is. I find no fault with the way the work is going on, but that is not the subject before the House. I do say that the day's labor and the superintendence was not being done fairly well. But the question is whether it should be done by day's labor or not. If the work were part of the Pacific Railway—and that was the only defence they had originally—and it was to take the place of the incomplete link of the Pacific Railway for a time, then it was their bounden duty to let it by contract.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think we had authority under the Act to build it by day's labor.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I think not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We had to build it as a public work.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It was not an ordinary public work; it was an exceptional public work, a part of the Pacific Railway which, from time to time they have laid down the rule, shall be built by contract only, and which they have made exceptional in the Independence of Parliament Bill, brought into the other House the present Session. I ask if the excuse furnished by the hon. the Secretary of State, and by the hon. Senator from Lambton, is a real excuse—that this work was not a part of the Pacific Railway, but a local work—would the Government ever have proposed it? Is it possible, with the opinion of the hon. Senator from Lambton has of the ability with which the Government has been conducted—does he believe they would have come before Parliament and proposed the construction of a lock at Fort Francis apart from the Pacific Railway? I do not believe it. Nobody in his senses would have ever dreamed of building a lock at Fort Francis merely for local purposes. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to talk about the hills of Scotland, and the "roses that bloom there," and the winds which "ooze" (I think he said) "into gentle breezes," and he may talk of our mistakes—and there have been mistakes I admit with reference to our settling part of the country—but I do not believe that his rose, bloom it ever so fair in the part of Scotland from which he comes, could ever bloom on the shores of Rainy Lake, and I am quite sure the hon. gentleman is in error there. My hon. friend from Saugeen and I do not pretend to speak from anything we saw, but were speaking from surveys of the engineers, and we speak—we cannot do better in the eyes of the hon. gentleman from Lambton, or the hon. the Secretary of State—in the language of the Premier. He says it "goes into a wilderness;" my hon. friend from Saugeen once called it "a howling wilderness." The Premier says it goes into a country where the foot of white man never trod until the engineers went there. It is a wilderness and will remain a wilderness, and the Government would never have proposed a lock there if it had not been intended for a part of the Pacific Railway, to take the place of the missing link on that road. It is only now, when they are driven into a corner, when the hon. Senator from Lambton comes to the rescue with his knowledge of affairs and that swinging elocution of his, and talks about Chats canals, Baby jobs, and a dozen things that the hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Pro-vines never heard of, and which everybody but my venerable friend has forgotten—the defence is put up that this is a blunder, but a small blunder; and the hon. gentleman says, if you contrast it with those of former administrations it is nothing at all; that there were millions of dollars wasted in other ways, and this is but a paltry sum: “please, mam, it is such a little one!” The hon. Secretary of State says, the Government have all along known fully the facts. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen on all sides, is this the sort of an excuse—I want to put it as gently as I can—that will pass current with us that they have all along understood the facts? Did we last year, or the year before, hear that this was a blunder? Did we last year, or the year before, hear that this lock was not part of the Pacific Railway, or that it would be a very useful work to let lumber down?

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Never.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—These are novelties, and I can say with certainty, without going beyond the knowledge of every hon. member in this House, that the Government, so far as we are able to ascertain or know, did not take in the facts; that they are only just now taking them in, that they have made a terrible blunder. These were the facts established. My hon. friend from Saugeen has clearly made out that an enquiry is necessary to ascertain why this work was persevered in after its apparent usefulness had been established to have been gone. I heard an excuse in that part of the country from a friend of the Government—he was a friend of the Government, because you meet nobody there but friends of the Government, they are all contractors, or getting supplies. He told us he believed the work had been forgotten by Mr. Mackenzie when the change of the line of railway had been made—that he had forgotten to stop the work. That really was told me by a friend of the Government, as the only thing they thought of in that part of the country as an explanation for going on with the canal. I think the Government are now finding out the blunder which has been committed, and perhaps would be willing to stop it, and I have no doubt they are willing to have a committee appointed to enquire into it. But this strikes me as odd—while they say they were going to use the Dawson Route which they condemned the late Government for building.—I am not here to defend the late Government, which has gone with its virtues and sins, and we have now before us the present Government with its sins, and its virtues if they have any—they tell us the Dawson Route is to be used as a part of this link, and yet blame the late Government for expending $1,300,000 upon it. Though they blame the late Government so heartily for having spent so much money upon it, they propose to use it, and, although they propose to use it, they allow it to go into disrepair. They stand in this way; though they are spending $6,000,000 on the Pacific Railway between Fort William and the Red River, they are leaving out a link of 180 miles and, in place of it, taking the Dawson Route and yet allowing that road to go into disrepair, and blaming the late Government for spending money to construct it. The only shadow of an excuse or reason for the course which has been pursued by them in using two links of the Pacific Railway, separated by 180 miles of wilderness, must be the existence of the Dawson Route, and that they are going to use that road. Why build a railway at the enormous expense of £10,000 per mile to stop in the wilderness at Savanne, and take up another section and build one hundred and fourteen miles from Rat Portage to Selkirk? How are you going to go from Rat Portage to Savanne? What is the use of building the railway unless you carry it through? Most of the structure is of wood, the bridges and culverts are of wood, everything is of wood, and the life of the wood is only seven years. The bridges, trestle work, culverts and ties will all be rotten and in shreds before the road can be used, in the way they are going on. Is there any good judgment or anything which will commend the wisdom of the Public Works Department to the confidence of the public—is there anything which should prevent us speaking with loud voice about the conduct of public works in such a course as that? Why spend $6,000,000 for landing passengers in the woods? Why spend all this money when it cannot possibly fructify—when nothing can come of it? Where is Port Savanne? My hon. friend from Saugeen said justly and truly, it is in the midst of a howling wilderness. Who wants to go there? Nobody. And after you get there you cannot go further; and even by using the Dawson Route, we shall be expending millions on a railway and, getting to the end of it, we shall be obliged to take what may called an Indian path, to get 180 miles to another section of the railway. The only excuse the Government have is the existence of this Dawson Route.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is all that was contended—that part of the Dawson Route would be used. There is only six and a half miles of land carriage in all that distance.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The hon. gentleman is very smooth about six and a half miles of land carriage, but there is 400 feet of a descent, and how can you use a steamer there?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I never contended that a steamer would be placed there.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—But the Premier does.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a mistake; it must be a misprint.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I know nothing about that. I know that is what is stated. But, taking the view expressed by the hon. gentleman just now, does it warrant this expenditure? We are going to use a route with several portages, amounting in all to six and a half miles, and the freight must be carried over those portages, put into batteaux, and tugged by steamers. You have a railway costing £10,000 per mile for one hundred miles, and then batteaux.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Eight fleets of batteaux.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I admire the hon. gentleman from Lambton, and sometimes I am touched by his wonderful imagination, and I cannot help characterizing this route as going over a railway to take an Indian path. Is that the sort of thing to make the Public Works Department respected in this country, or to hinder us speaking freely of such shortcomings as I refer to? The hon. gentleman condemned the Dawson Route, because, he said, nobody ever went over it—that they stopped the expenditure, and put it under contract, which was given to Mr. Carpenter. That contract gave the

Hon. Mr. Campbell.

Carpenters so much per year—$75,000,—for keeping the road open. They need not take a passenger over it, and in fact they did not take any—only some twenty or thirty in all, but for the purpose of argument they took none. They did not deny it was their interest not to take passengers over it. Their contract was to get $75,000 a year—they took it and they kept their steamboats tied up, and there they lay while they earned their money by doing nothing. Their steamers lay at the wharves, the teams were in the stables, and the contractors smoked their pipes while they drew $75,000, and the hon. gentleman thinks that it wisdom, and that we must speak with halting breath of the Department of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—That is better than half a million spent the year before.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS.—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, it is not half a million. The amount spent in 1873-4 was $243,844.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—The hon. gentleman has not the correct figures. The Public Works Department have furnished me with a statement of the amount, and it is $414,000. They also gave me a statement showing that $50,000 was paid in 1875, that amount being due before the Dawson Route was handed over to Carpenter & Co.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS.—An extraordinary fact is, so far as the sum total is concerned, they agree.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL.—My hon. friend from Lambton was a little disposed to forget the immediate subject on hand, and devote himself to the pamphlet of the hon. Senator from Saugeen—a pamphlet which he characterized as presenting an unduly exaggerated view of public affairs, but it seems to have hit. The hon. gentleman himself seems to have been hit by the pamphlet; he evidently has it as a pocket companion. And the Government and their friends seem to feel it too. I have heard of great meetings held by members of the Government, and addressed by them, and that sometimes a hard-headed Scotchman would take up this pamphlet and say, "Ye have not answered the pamphlet at page 13." It has been a useful pamphlet. My hon. friend has written with care and great ability, and grouped his facts with such skill, that it must be admitted, whether hon. gentlemen concur in his views or not, that they are presented in the most convenient shape, and I believe give an accurate statement of public affairs. But because the hon. gentleman from Saugeen has written a pamphlet, it is contended that he is not in a state of mind to go on the committee. My hon. friend from Lambton has never written anything. O, no! He and his friends are in an impartial frame of mind! They are calm! They are free from bias! They present that attitude which should characterize members of the Senate, which the hon. Senator from Lambton tells us would become us, and which he illustrates by his example! He showed us to-day that he was in this calm frame of mind, and presented a contrast with the pamphlet of my hon. friend from Saugeen, whose statements were violent and rabid, and such as to unfit him to approach this subject in that dispassionate spirit which the hon. gentleman from Lambton displays. We appreciate that argument thoroughly, from the manner in which the hon. gentleman has illustrated it. My hon. friend from Lambton also says, because the Government say that only $170,000 has been spent on this work, they are to be believed. Of course, when the hon. Secretary of State says so, I am quite ready to believe it, but when the hon. gentleman says he is of the opinion, or the Government are of the opinion, or the Premier is inclined to think that only so much will be required to complete it, then I pause and ask myself: Did they know anything about it when they began? I doubt it. Did they begin it with any authority of Parliament? None whatever. They seem to have begun it, according to the official letter read by the hon. gentleman from Saugeen, in 1875. That is the date of the letter to Sutherland.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—There was a vote taken in the Session of 1875.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—They had no authority from Parliament, and when that matter was first mentioned in this House—I do not remember by whom—it was not pretended they had any authority from Parliament for beginning it. It was begun as part of the Pacific Railway, and the Secretary of State justified it under the general Act of Parliament which enabled them to build the Pacific Railway. There was no other excuse thought of but that. They began it without any information, without any engineering knowledge, or any authority from Parliament, and I am not prepared to believe, when I am told it is only going to cost fifty or a hundred thousand dollars, that it can be completed for any such sum. I may be so prejudiced as to sympathize with my hon. friend from Saugeen, but I am inclined to believe his estimate is more likely to be correct than that of the hon. Secretary of State. I should like to know whether the predictions uttered by the head of the Government with reference to other questions have proved correct. I remember the Premier last April, in asking a vote for the Intercolonial Railway, said it would pay itself within $13,000. Now, at the end of the year, there is half a million dollars of a deficit. I think that shows how closely or remotely the anticipations of the Government are realized with reference to public works. It seems to me the case is not as the hon. Senator from Lambton tries to make out, one of no importance, one with which we should not occupy our minds, and one which it would be prejudicial to the weal of the country for us to condemn the Minister of Public Works about, or bring the fair name of the Government into discussion about. I say it is a work which eminently demands investigation, because it was begun without any authority from Parliament or an engineer's report; because it has been excused to us on different and inconsistent grounds; because for some Sessions we were told it was part of the Pacific Railway, and now it is admitted to be a blunder, although a little one, and therefore not to be inquired into. I say it is just one of those cases where public money has been expended without the authority of an Act of Parliament, so far as the commencement is concerned; where work was persevered in without reason and after its use was shown to be done away with by the change of the railway route, and where, according to all appearances, the information the Government possessed in 1875 enabled them to decide that point. I think if they had considered the question when the route was changed, they must have concluded to stop the work. I do not know what amount was expended up to November, 1875, but the committee will find it out. It would seem as if the Government have got committed to it, and, from a sort of false pride, are insisting upon completing this lock which leads nowhere. It is all very well to talk about this 160 miles of navigation, but if it is through an uninhabited and uninhabitable country, what is the use of it? More particularly since you cannot now get at the site of the lock by the steamer on Rainy Lake. Two or three miles above it, there is an obstruction which prevents the steamer from reaching it, and fifty miles below the lock there is an obstruction which prevents the steamer on Lake of the Woods from getting up to it. Really, the only part of that country which is likely to be inhabited, is the section below the lock. It is a fair country, but not equal to what we have here. The fertile land extends back from the river about five miles—I believe that is the distance I was told—but all Canadians will understand the sort of country it is when I tell them it is covered with birch and poplar. That is the only part of the country that is fit for settlement, so far as can be seen as you pass through it, and it is below the lock. When the Government go on with such a work after they know it has ceased to be useful, and after giving two or three excuses for it, I say it is eminently a case for enquiry, and I must say my hon. friend from Saugeen has established a strong case. I hope the committee will be granted. I thought it necessary to uphold my hon. friend in the course he has pursued, and which will redound to his credit with the country, as the course he has pursued during the past three years has. He has submitted facts which have brought the Government, at last (if I may use the expression) to their knees, confessing that they have committed a blunder. Let us see whether the expenditure cannot be stopped, and prevent them from persevering in their errors.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I object to a word which the hon. gentleman says I made use of—blunder. I took that word from the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Macpherson). I said,—“Well, he puts it as a blunder; let us look at it as a blunder.” I defended it as it stands, without admitting it to be a blunder.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I stated, in speaking of the authority which the Government had, that in 1875 an item was placed in the estimates of $150,000 for Fort Francis Lock. The Government had that authority.
Hon. Mr. Campbell,

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—What time of the year was it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is in the estimates of 1875—the Session of 1875. In my observations on it I called it an incident of the Pacific Railway, but that in consequence of the deflection of the railway northward it would not be permanently a part of the line. I do not think my hon. friend is quite fair in running away with the idea that I desired to lead the House to believe that there were no great difficulties to be overcome between Rainy Lake and Lac des Mille Lacs. I justified the expenditure simply on the ground that there should be communication between the eastern end of Rainy Lake and the western end of Lake of the Woods. I was fully aware of the eight portages and the difficulty at Fort Francis Lock. Mr. Fleming in his report last year went specifically over the number of portages, and the eight, together, are less than seven miles. I have no doubt it will be necessary to keep up boats on these stretches until the railway is completed—they will be required as essential in the construction of that road. The hon. gentleman has rather unfairly taunted the Government with running the road into a wilderness.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—With stopping it in a wilderness.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We do not propose to stop it in the wilderness, but we will construct a through line as rapidly as the resources of the country will admit. The hon. gentleman in past years taunted the Government with not going on with this road. We were told day after day there was no sincerity in the statements of the Government; that they did not intend to build the road. My own observations, made in an election speech when I first became a minister of the Crown, were quoted against me, that I had stated it would take forty years to build the Pacific Railway. The British Government were appealed to by the weaker party to that bargain; charges of insincerity were rung through this Chamber and in the other House, and the Government were pressed to go on with the road at all events before the surveys were completed. If the Government had done what they desired to do they would not have spent a dollar on the road until the survey had been thoroughly made. But what would hon. gentlemen opposite have done? They would have charged us with attempting to break faith with British Columbia; with destroying the autonomy of the Dominion, and that we were not acting in good faith, or maintaining the integrity of the Dominion. That is what we would have been charged with. If the Government had waited until the surveys were completed they would have acted wisely, but they felt it to be their duty, in order to show their good faith, wherever they could go on and usefully construct portions of that line, to do so. I can appeal to any body of gentlemen who are earnestly desirous of arriving at the facts, if the portions of the line already undertaken cannot be utilized. It is intended to utilize the portion of the line to Port Savanne in connection with the water stretches and the Dawson Road to Keewatin, where the western section of the railway will continue the communication to Red River. My hon. friend has attempted to bewilder the House. He has made it appear that we intend to climb up, by some means or other, the 400 feet elevation between Rainy Lake and Lac des Mille Lacs. This subject has been gone over so often in this House that I did not think it was necessary all those details should have been explained again, and I did not think the House would suppose that the Government intend that navigation should be kept open all the way from Lac des Mille Lacs to the North-West Angle. The Minister of Public Works knew it in 1875; he knew it better in 1876, and he could not have made the mistake that is charged against him. Therefore, I say, it is unfair to make the charge against the Premier that he was ignorant of the true position of affairs at that time. The hon. gentleman who made this charge alleged that it was not until over $100,000 was expended that the Government knew that their Chief Engineer—

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What I stated was, when that work was suspended in 1875, the expenditure must have been very small.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it is right to assume, because I did not so state it in my observations, that the Government were advised in the fall of 1875 that the route by Sturgeon Falls should be abandoned. On the contrary, I think it was very much later. We know very well that Mr. Fleming, who had the matter in charge, spoke in the committee last year of having spent nearly two years in searching for a line through to Keewatin. I presume that a portion of 1876 was spent in finding a line by Sturgeon Falls to Keewatin. It was not, probably, for a year after, that the Government were fully made aware that the railway would have to be deflected north by Port Savanne and English River.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — The change was announced on the 31st March, 1876, that the northern location had been adopted.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—And they did not resume the work on the Fort Francis Canal until the middle of June.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These details will all come out in committee. My hon. friend from Saugeen did not at all take the ground that the Government would not have been perfectly justified in the construction of this work at Fort Francis, if the railway had been located by way of Sturgeon Falls, but he says when the road was deflected, we should have abandoned the canal. We took the other view, because we did not feel that the expenditure would be anything like the figure my hon. friend has announced. I would be very much disappointed, indeed, if it reached the sum of $300,000. At present, there is no parliamentary authority for an expenditure even to that extent. This year, I think the sum asked for is only $10,000. If that is so, it will keep the whole expenditure less than $300,000.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL - I am not at all satisfied with the explanations that have been made by the Government on this matter. It appears to me that the Secretary of State, although he avowedly confined himself to the water stretches of Rainy Lake and River and the Lake of the Woods, did so in an unfair way, as conveying the impression that he was dealing with the whole question of connecting the eastern and western sections of Railway, now under construction.

What can be the object of removing the obstructions between Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods, if all the other obstructions between Port Savanne and Rainy Lake are allowed to remain? If the western extremity of the Lake Superior section of the railway is to be connected with the eastern extremity of the Red River section, the difficulties along the whole of the line of water communication between them must be taken into account. I have now heard for the first time that the works at Fort Francis were being constructed for the purpose of opening up that new country for settlement and to facilitate the transportation of lumber. These are only incidental and subsidiary advantages, that may possibly accrue and be enjoyed by some few persons who prosecute certain branches of trade in that locality, but they did not constitute the principal or even a prominent reason assigned by the Government in this House for the construction of that work. It has always been spoken of as being a connecting link between those two disjointed sections of the Pacific Railway, and the arguments now used by the hon. Secretary of State in favor of the construction of the locks are sufficient to justify the wisdom of the course adopted by the hon. gentleman from Saugeen in calling the attention of the House to this expenditure, and asking for a committee to enquire into it. I concur with the hon. gentleman from Lambton beside me (Mr. Brown) in the general tenor of his remarks upon the wording of the motion that has been made; in my judgment, as well as in his, the first four clauses could have been dispensed with, and the fifth clause would have been sufficient to ask investigation by a committee. My hon. friend (Mr. Brown) in speaking on this subject wandered a great distance away from the question, and introduced matters wholly irrelevant, that I certainly had almost forgotten; but I do remember reading some years ago, with the greatest interest and delight, an article in the Toronto Globe, which was generally supposed to have come from the forcible pen of the hon. gentleman himself, in which it was asserted most distinctly and emphatically that a Canadian trans-continental railway was a national necessity; that without it the Confederation of the Provinces would exist only on paper—an unsubstantial shadow—and that the Government that ignored that question, and would not put forth every effort to undertake and complete the Pacific railway, was recreant to its duties and unworthy of controlling the destinies of this country. The hon. gentleman tells us now that the Pacific railway project was a very great mistake, but those were the hon. gentleman's sentiments a few years ago, and they had the sympathy and approval of the large majority of intelligent and influential men of all the Provinces of the Dominion. Yet, here we are told to-day, in direct contradiction to this, that the inception of this road was a very great mistake, and that we were entering into engagements that we never can fulfil. I believe if its construction depended on the present Government, it never would be carried through, and if ever it is to be a success, it must be prosecuted on some scheme analogous to that proposed by the Ministry who first obtained the sanction of Parliament to its construction. Suppose for a moment that the present scheme of connection by water is carried out, and that the two locks at Fort Francis are completed so that there will be uninterrupted communication by steamboats from Rainy Lake to Rat Portage, what will be gained by it? Hon. gentlemen must remember the fact that after that route is completed, there will be still eight portages to be overcome between Port Savanne and Rainy Lake. The hon. Secretary of State speaks of those portages as though they were a matter of no moment, being less than seven miles in aggregate length. I should like to know what difference it makes, whether it is seven miles or twenty miles, if every article of freight that passes over the route will have to bear sixteen transshipments from barge to waggon and waggon to barge, before it reaches the level of Rainy Lake? Does any hon. gentleman suppose there will be any traffic over such a line? Is it possible to imagine that any passengers or freight will leave the steamers at Fort William and submit to the inconvenience of those sixteen transshipments between there and Rat Portage, when they can go on comfortably by steamer to Duluth, and from there to Winnipeg by rail, after next August, when, we are told, the railway via Pembina will be available? If the scheme of the Government were completed according to their plan, I contend that no passengers and no freight for Manitoba and the West would go over that broken line while the route by Duluth affords the opportunity of avoiding the trouble and delay of the numerous transshipments, and of accomplishing the journey to Winnipeg in comfort, and in less than half the time. Could steel rails or heavy freight be taken over those portages? Is it within the range of possibility that rails for the construction of the deferred section of the railway should be loaded and unloaded sixteen times before they reached the level of Rainy Lake? If this 400 feet of difference of level is to be left as it is, and only to be overcome by portages, it appears to me to be of very small consequence to make another portage when arriving at Fort Francis. After having surmounted eight such obstacles, surely a ninth could not materially bar progress. It is not worth incurring all this expenditure to overcome this one difficulty, and still to leave the remaining eight existing between the two sections of railway. When, in addition to this it, is remembered that the water route is only practicable for less than six months of the year, and that, consequently, the sections of railway connected by it would be quite useless for the rest of it, the folly of the scheme becomes more apparent: Nothing but an all-rail line from Lake Superior to the Red River can possibly prove a successful rival to the route through Minnesota; until this is made the millions spent upon the separated sections will be practically wasted. And as soon as it is constructed, the route by Rainy Lake will be perfectly useless as a link of communication with the great West. I therefore think it desirable that these matters should be submitted to a committee for investigation. They are questions which the whole country wants to see answered, and answered satisfactorily. This House is as good a place to discuss them, fairly and impartially, as any tribunal in the Dominion. It is very seldom we have so much party feeling manifested on any question as there has been here to-day. Generally speaking, the decisions of this House have been accepted by the country with satisfaction, particularly on those few occasions where it has taken a stand against proposed legislation, and has interposed (as far as it could interpose) its authority with respect to preventing unwise expenditure on public works that had been in contemplation, and the country has pronounced as its verdict that the Senate was right. I believe the country will pronounce the same verdict now.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I think the country should feel thankful that there are hon. gentlemen here, who take the trouble to enquire into and expose the enormous blundering expenditures that have been made on this Pacific Railway. It is quite evident, from the random way in which the Government have gone on with the work, that millions of dollars have been wastefully and uselessly expended, in consequence of a want of a fixed policy. We find the Government, in the first instance, opposed to the building of the railway by a company, believing that the country might save all the profits that would be derived by a company and contractors from it. But we find them again, after long delay and spending a further considerable amount of money, deciding that the road should be built by a company. We then find the Premier reconstructing the Government and taking into his Cabinet gentlemen well known to be, and who had publicly avowed that they were opposed to the building of the Pacific Railway. It is clear after all this that the Government were determined not to build a through line from Lake Superior to Red River, but to utilize the water stretches from Lac des Mille Lacs to Rat Portage. We find that after considering this as a portion of the Pacific Railway, they suddenly change their policy and deflect the line some 100 miles away north of these very water stretches, so much talked about and generally condemned, that they contemplated using in connection with the railway. It seems to me that the Government did not, in the first place, take into consideration the nature of the country, and had not sufficient knowledge of the country, data or estimates of work at Fort Francis Lock on which to commence this canal. They have embarked in the undertaking without asking for tenders or having the slightest idea of what the cost would be, or its practical utility to the country, and continued wasting money on the lock after changing the course of the railway.

It has been made plain to us by my friend, the hon. member from Londonderry, that after having two sections of the road under contract, the Government have expended, or are legally liable to pay out, six millions of dollars of the public money on a work that will be for many years of no practical use to the country. The interest on the money, to say nothing of the deterioration and decay of the work, will in itself be a large amount—$300,000; the Fort Francis Lock, estimated by the hon., the mover of the resolution before us, at $500,000 more, (the hon. Secretary of State admits there has been expended in and about the work, some $237,000) which makes an annual charge of $325,000 on the country for a work of no practical utility. The water stretches cannot be available for heavy freight until we can get over the break in this level, of 400 feet, while, after expending this large amount of money, we have only been able to overcome twenty feet of it. Then, as for the country opened up by this work, it is sterile. It offers no inducements to people to settle in it, while the policy of the Government affords no encouragement to those who want employment to come to this country, so that it is of the last importance that that work should have been undertaken. Then, the railway sections are shown to have been pushed into a sterile wilderness, where the foot of white men have never trod, except those of the engineers, and stopped there with a missing link of one hundred and eighty miles—an unpardonable blunder. It does not follow that because we are pledged to British Columbia to build a Pacific railway that we are to allow this Government to throw away money—millions of money—on steel rails, Kamisistiquia lands, (a waste of seventy thousand dollars) with Goderich Harbor and other jobs. The country will be pleased to find that there are hon. gentlemen in this House who, from personal knowledge and observation, have made themselves so thoroughly conversant with these matters that they can bring them to the notice of the House and the public. We are pledged, and the public faith of the country demands of us, to build the railway to British Columbia as quickly as the public interest and the revenue of the country will justify it, but when we find these vast sums of money wastefully, illegally and improperly expended in useless and impracticable works; when we have such a marvellous exhibition of waste of public money; when we find the Government so incapable of administering the public affairs of the country, it is well we have hon. gentlemen amongst us who can bring these matters so forcibly before the notice of the people.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It seems to me that the Secretary of State has explained the policy of the Government when he says that all the Government considered it necessary to do was to spend money, nominally in the construction of the Pacific Railway, whether it happened to be so or not. The state of feeling in the country, he says, demanded that the money should be spent, and spent it was accordingly. Unfortunately, while they were expending it under the name of the Pacific Railway, they spent it on the Fort Francis Lock, while, so far as the purposes of the Pacific Railway are concerned, they might as well have spent the money on the Gatineau. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman intended the House to understand that the Government still expect to use the water stretch from Port Savanne to Rainy Lake or not, for the general purposes of the railway. In his first speech I understood him to say the Government had abandoned that idea.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, only to a limited extent.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—In the hon. gentleman's second speech he rather seemed to revert to that and say that the Government did intend to use it. But the hon. gentleman must know it is altogether impossible to do so. I was under the impression that the Government had something to go upon before they commenced that work—some information, or some estimate of the probable expense. The first communication from the Minister of Public Works in this return, from which I have quoted, is that an estimate of the cost of the works, prepared by Mr. Hazlewood, had been mislaid, and that he had been written to for another copy. I have learned this evening that the missing paper has been laid on the table of the other House, and that it contains no estimate of the cost of the work. There is an approximate estimate of the quantities, but no estimate whatever of the probable cost. There is one fact connected with this work which is entirely new. I think its construction is the first subject of complaint that has been made from this side of the House to which the hon. Secretary of State has not replied that it had been inherited from the former Government, or had been suggested by some one in the employ of their predecessors. This work is certainly no legacy. It belongs to the present Government, and to them alone, and the mistake is altogether unaccountable if not unpardonable. I regret that the hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Brown) is not at present in his seat. If my motion had anything to do with bringing him back to the House, even for one day, I am glad. I am sure the House is glad he has returned. He has described himself as a sort of political Rip-Van-Winkle awakening to activity in the sphere in which he formerly played a very prominent part—and he still occupies a very prominent place in Canada. He almost complained of the moderation of my introductory remarks. I was not moving a vote of want of confidence in the Government. If the hon. gentleman had been here a week ago he would have heard me speak in very condemnatory terms of some acts of the Government, and the very incidents of this work at Fort Francis were among those I charged against the Administration. There are the rails, which the Government, after having them transported to Manitoba three years ago at an enormous expense for the Pembina Branch, have handed over to the contractor for the extension of that branch to the main line, so that new rails will have to be transported by the Red River for the Pembina Branch, south of Winnipeg, and also for the main line. Then, there is the Welland Canal, and other matters, which I will not go into now. The hon. gentleman suggested that if we disapproved of the policy of the Government, and the expenditure of the Government, we should have voted "nay" when the Supply Bill was before this House. That certainly would be an extraordinary course to pursue. Certainly, it is an extraordinary advice to come from one who counsels moderation in this House. That would be an extreme step to take. The hon. gentleman spoke of the many offences committed by the late Government, and gave that as a reason why the present Government should be mercifully dealt with. But he should remember that the late Government were punished. They were ejected from power, and it will be well for the representatives of the people to judge the present Government in the same way, and not to deal too lightly with their mistakes and blunders. On every occasion in which this Fort Francis Lock has been spoken of, in either House of Parliament, it has been described as part of the Pacific Railway, and the votes that were obtained for it, unless it can be used as part of the through communication, were obtained under false pretences. If the money had been asked for to build a canal for the Minnesota lumber trade, Parliament would not have voted it, and if it was not for the Pacific Railway, the Government certainly did very wrong in misrepresenting the facts to Parliament.

The motion was agreed to, and the House adjourned at 9.18 p.m.

ADMINISTRATION OF DOMINION LANDS.

MOTION FOR RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD moved

“with the Administration of Dominion Lands, as well as of all documents and evidence forming part thereof, under the Act 38 Victoria, chapter 53, by any Commissioner or Commissioners appointed under the said Act:—also copies of all lists of lands prepared from time to time by the Surveyor General of Dominion Lands, in accordance with the provisions of the eighth section of the said Act.

He said this was a question of great importance. His object in making this motion was to ascertain whether the law passed in 1875 had been put into execution or not. That Act had been passed to obviate difficulties in reference to the titles of lands in Manitoba. A similar law had been passed in 1872 or 1873 which provided for the settlement of these matters by a commission, and the amended act of 1875 provided that a commission should be issued for the same purpose. The people of Manitoba had waited a long time for the action of that Commission. They were pleased when, last year, they saw Lieut.-Governor Morris appointed as a Commissioner under that Act. They knew his ability and had every confidence in him, on account of his integrity and high social position, and they were sure he would do his best to render justice to the Province. However, it was stated that, owing to some defect in the law, it was found in certain cases that it was impossible to act under it. As he saw by the 10th section of that law, 38 Vic. chap. 53, that the Commissioner is bound to report his decisions to the Minister charged with the administration of Dominion Lands, he had based his motion on that section of the Act, by which it is provided, that the “Commissioners shall report their decision to the Minister in charge of the Dominion's Lands, who may, if he thinks fit, thereupon cause Her Majesty's Letter Patent under the Great Seal to issue, for granting the lands in question to the party who has been reported as entitled to the same. 38 Vict. ch. 53, sec. 10.”

He did not know how far that provision of the law had been complied with, but he hoped the Government would not have any objection to give what information the public required, for it was important that those difficulties should be settled. Many of the people of Manitoba had been living up to the present time on lands for which they had no title. Previous to Confederation, the only title to the property there was that which was registered in the land books of the Hudson's Bay Company. At the present time there was such uneasiness on the part of those whose titles had not been confirmed by the Dominion Government that they had no encouragement to go on and improve their properties, for fear they would ultimately be lost to them. Eight years had passed since the Government had undertaken the settlement of this matter, but it appeared very little progress had been made. If there were obstacles in the way they should be removed at once, as people would get tired of living on lands to which they had no title, and would emigrate to the Western States, where they could get lands they could call their own. It was a very serious question for the Government; they gave liberally from the public chest to promote the colonization of that country, but by want of a wise administration of the lands, all the money they expended would profit the United States and not the Dominion? He would be in a position to cite facts to prove what he had stated, and if these difficulties were not removed, the Government would see the best settlers leaving the Province, and crossing the line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the Act of 1875, the Governor in Council was authorized to appoint a Commissioner to investigate those claims to which my hon. friend has reference, and Mr. Morris, the late Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, was the gentleman who was named Commissioner. I am advised that he has had a certain number of cases—not more than twelve—under his consideration, and about forty others have been settled without his interference—settled in his presence, on particular days which he announced he would adjudicate on such cases. He has, I understand, made his report; that report would only involve the twelve cases referred to—possibly, the others may be included, but as they were settled without his interference, I do not know that any judicial report will appear. In the Act, there is a clause authorizing the Minister of the Interior to revise that report, and to allow parties to appeal against it during a period of three months. That three months has not expired, and pending any possibility of the parties appealing against the Commissioner's decision, it would not be proper to bring the papers down. With reference to the lists, there is no objection to the copies being brought down. I have been informed that they have been published in Manitoba—in the papers there. I have been so informed by Mr. Dennis, the Surveyor General. At the expiration of the three months' term, I shall be very glad to furnish the reports, but until then, I do not think it would be proper to bring them down.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—I will make the motion, and the papers can be transmitted to me after the term expires.

Motion agreed to.

PARLIAMENTARY PRINTING.

CONSIDERATION OF THE SECOND REPORT OF THE PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. SIMPSON moved the adoption of the second report of the Joint Committee of the Senate and House of Commons on the Printing of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said he thought it was quite proper that he should say a word or two on a matter which should engage the attention of the Committee on Printing. The hon. gentleman who was chairman of that committee had done a great deal towards economizing the expenditures for that service, for which he deserved well of the country. Still, there was room for a great deal more retrenchment and economy. Members of this House and of the other House were furnished with a large number of useless copies of blue books which, he presumed, in nine cases out of ten were used for fuel or for similar purposes, and not for the public advantage. He did not see the necessity for furnishing each member of the House with five copies of the various documents, blue books and sessional papers that were printed. He had heard several gentlemen say that a large quantity they received were merely lumber and of no service whatever. The public did not care for them. Gentlemen in this House who formerly had constituents, and who could in that way get rid of the useless printed matter furnished by Parliament, found that their late constituents did not care anything about them. Therefore, he did not see why the country should be put to the expense of printing those books in such large quantities. He thought it was a subject for the committee; they might recommend that fewer of those reports, blue-books and papers—which cost a great deal of money—be printed, and thereby a large annual expenditure could be saved to the country. He threw out those few remarks because he had recently conferred with members of the House and all that he had spoken to seemed to be of one opinion. At any rate, he thought it his duty to bring this subject before the House, and if there were other members who entertained a different opinion he would be very glad to hear them ventilate it.

Hon. Mr. SIMPSON said when the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada were united, the expenses connected with parliamentary printing were about $173,000 a year. He had devoted himself for some months to seeing if he could bring about a change for the better. In this he had been very well supported by some hon. gentlemen in this House and by some gentlemen in the other House, especially by the late Chancellor Van-koughnet. They managed to bring the expenditure down from $173,000 to $30,000 a year, and they had more efficiency and certainly more work. He was sorry to say that in consequence of the great number of returns asked for the printing during the past two or three years had materially increased. The schedule for the distribution of blue books to each member of both houses had been gone over three or four times, but his own opinion was that they got too many of those books. He had a large room at his home in Bowmanville, with fully three tons of them. He told people who asked for them to go to his room and take away as many as they could carry, but they still accumulated. He could not say that he was an exception in this way. What he received now he had made arrangements to have them distributed for him. The principal expense of printing was the enormous number of returns asked for. Last year they had double the number that they had three years ago, although the committee had refused to print a great many of them. When the type for the blue books was set the expense for printing off extra copies was not large, as it only involved the paper, press work and binding. Last year they had brought the printing expenses down to $63,000, and they were trying this year to keep it under $60,000, though they were asking for $70,000 from the Government. The suggestions of his hon. friend were valuable, and his impression was there were a number of gentlemen on the Committee who were anxious to overhaul the whole printing service. Mr. Hartney, the very efficient clerk of the committee was anxious to have a revision of the whole system, and had some suggestions to make that he thought would effect a great saving to the country if they were adopted.

The report was adopted, and the House adjourned at 4 p.m.

THE JOHNSTON DIVORCE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. PENNY presented to the House a certificate from the Clerk of the Senate that due notice had been given in re Johnston, for a Bill of Divorce.

Andrew Cullen, of the City of Montreal, detective, was called to the Bar of the House, and testified to having served a duplicate of the Bill before the House and the order of the House, on Charlotte Elsie McArthur, wife of the petitioner. The witness having withdrawn,

Hon. Mr. PENNY moved :—

“ That the examination of the petitioner at the Bar of the Senate, as well generally as in regard to any collusion or connivance between the parties, be for the present dispensed with, but that it be an instruction to the Committee, to whom the Bill may be referred, to make such examination.”

The motion was agreed to on a division.

Hon. Mr. PENNY moved that Bill (A.) for the relief of George Frothingham Johnston, be read the second time.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL said he did not intend to raise any discussion on the matter, but he thought it proper that the names should be taken down.

DOMINION COMPANY'S INCORPORATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL moved the second reading of Bill (E.) to incorporate the Dominion Company. He said the object of the Bill was to incorporate some gentlemen who desired to lease and run railways. It was suggested, no doubt, by the position of certain railways owned by the Dominion and by some of the Provinces, which either were, or were likely to be, leased to private companies.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU thought that the object of the Bill should be more fully explained, as it was a most important matter. He had not read the measure, but he wished to know if it was intended to over ride the General Railway Act, and to organize a number of gentlemen as a company, with power to lease and buy and sell railroads without any control of Parliament, notwithstanding the interest which the public generally, and certain municipalites, might have in such roads? He was always afraid of those amalgamations. In fact they were always dangerous, and for his part, he would be very careful how he allowed such a measure as this to pass. He thought it was but fair, when such extraordinary powers were asked for, that the House should be informed what this company proposed to do. Where were those railways they intended to run? A great deal of money had been spent in this Dominion to establish railroad communication to all parts of it, and what had been the result in many instances? One company opposed another until either was reduced to poverty and was obliged to succumb, to the disadvantage of the public interested in such roads. He believed the Government ought to have some policy on such matters, so that when measures like this were introduced it should be announced. This Government which he sustained—he thought it the best Government the country could have at present—ought to tell the House what their policy was for the future. Large amounts of money had been borrowed in England and invested in many ways in bona fide enterprises in this country. What would the result be? In a few years many of those railways would be in a bankrupt condition. Parliament gave acts of incorporation right and left, and to organizations which applied for such acts without declaring what their intentions were. He did not wish to make a long speech, but he desired at the outset to state his reasons for warning the House to be careful in dealing with such bills as this. The legislation in the last session of every parliament was usually of a most dangerous character. The House of Commons seemed afraid to oppose any scheme in which the friends of some hon. gentlemen were interested. The Senate, however, should have only the public welfare to promote, and he had no doubt his hon. friend (Mr. Campbell) would be careful that the public interests would be served before private interests.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL said he was afraid he had been remiss in not stating more fully the objects of the Bill, but, in truth, it was not printed before he left town, and he had not had an opportunity to read it. The powers asked for were fully stated in the second clause, which was as follows:—

- “ 2. The said Company shall have full power “ and authority from time to time to do “ any and all of the following things, that is to “ say :
- “ (a). To enter into arrangements with any “ railway company to construct, complete and “ work, or either, the railway or undertaking “ of such company ; and to hold real estate and “ land in connection therewith, or with any of “ the purposes of the Company ;
- “ (b). To purchase or lease any railway, and “ work the same for such time and on such “ terms and conditions as the Company owning
 “ the line and the Company incorporated by “ this Act may agree upon ;
- “ (c). To build and lease elevators, stations, “ locomotive sheds, machine shops, and such “ like structures to railway companies or,
 “ where necessary in working a leased line, to “ lease elevators and any and all other such “ like appliances from others, when convenient “ and necessary for the full equipment and “ proper working of any railway ;
- “ (d). To build, purchase or lease rolling “ stock of all kinds, or to manufacture, sell or “ lease such property to any railway company ;
- “ (e). To take and hold or sell any shares in “ the capital stock of any railway company, or “ any of the securities thereof ;
- “ (f). To purchase, lease or rent any col“ liery ;
- “ and generally full power and authority to do “ any and all acts necessary to the full, benefi“ cial and proper execution of any and all of “ said powers.

He really did not know whether there was any objection to giving them the powers asked for, but he was quite as disposed as his hon. friend opposite (Mr. Bureau), to be careful in such legislation. He had been induced to take charge of this Bill from the names mentioned in it. The promoters were gentlemen entitled to every confidence. They were Sir A. T.

Galt, Geo. Stephen, John Rankin, Gilbert Scott, Samuel Waddell, and other wealthy gentlemen in Montreal. So far as one could see, the character of those who applied for the Bill entitled them to every consideration, and they did not seem to ask for anything very startling. He had no doubt the suggestion he had mentioned before was what had given rise to this measure. There were railways in Quebec which were advertised to be leased. The Dominion Government also owned railways such as the Intercolonial, the smaller railways in the Lower Provinces, the Prince Edward Island Railway, and other roads of a similar character, which this Bill would enable the gentlemen who sought to be incorporated to lease and operate, and it was not improbable that they were actuated by that desire. There was no reason, in the public interest, why gentlemen of standing, such as these gentlemen were, should not be incorporated for the purpose of leasing and operating such railways. If there was any objection to the details of the Bill—if the powers sought for were excessive—no doubt the committee, to which it would be referred, would give it ample consideration, and if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bureau) had any objections to make, they would, no doubt, be entertained with the greatest deference.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU said he was opposed to the principle of such bills, because they did not protect the public interest. When any amalgamation of railways was to take place, there was something more than the interests of the companies to be consulted. Take for instance, some of the roads in Quebec, where not a cent was subscribed by the shareholders; would the House give them power to sell such railways, which had been built by public money? He thought in all such cases application should be made to Parliament, and the proper time to grant such powers would be when the applicants specified the road which they wanted to purchase or lease. Then all parties could come before the Legislature and have their interests protected; but this was all in the dark. They wished to put aside the General Railway Act of 1868. He thought his hon. friend, himself, would be the very first to oppose such a principle. He (Mr. Bureau) wished to draw the attention of the Senate to the fact that this was the first time that such extraordinary powers had been asked for, either in this House or in any legislative body.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I think it is quite consistent with the General Railway Act of 1868.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU—The General Railway Act of 1868 provides in a very wise manner for exchanges of traffic and running powers, and this, I should think, ought to be quite sufficient for all purposes, without enacting such exceptional legislation as this.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—This Bill does not alter that clause. If the company incorporated by this Act were to take possession of one of those railways having running powers in connection with another road, they would have to continue to run it under that arrangement.

The Bill was read the second time.

The House adjourned at 9 p.m.

IMPORTS OF WOODS FROM THE UNITED STATES.

MOTION FOR A RETURN.

Hon. Mr. PRICE moved:—

“That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to lay before this House, the following Return:—

“1st. The total quantities and their value of the Square White Pine, Pine Board Timber, Pine Masts and Spars, Square Timber of Oak, Elm, Ash, Whitewood, Walnut, Hickory, Red Pine or any other Hewn Timber.

“2nd. The total quantities, description and the value of the Red and White Oak Staves.

“3rd. The total quantities and their value of Sawed Lumber, in White and Red Pine, Walnut, Whitewood, Oak, Elm, Ash or any other sawed lumber, imported into Canada by water or by rail between the 1st April, 1877, and 1st January, 1878, from the United States of America, and at what Port or Station they were delivered, for landing or for shipment from Canada.”

He said—I have been looking over the Trade and Navigation reports, and I find that there is no statement which can be brought up here as a correct return of what has been imported into the Dominion during the past year. All those woods pay no duty, and perhaps the Government have not taken any notice of them in their report, but they should be in the Customs returns either as imports by rail or canal. I hope the return I ask for will be brought down as soon as possible, as there is an impression in Quebec that a very large portion of these woods that are exported at that city are from the United States. I think it is desirable that we should have a statement before the House on which we can rely, so as to see if a change cannot be made whereby we can meet our friends on the other side with a reciprocal duty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend seems to be under the impression that a quantity considerably in excess of that mentioned in the Trade and Navigation returns has been imported. As far as I have been able to gather from the returns, the amount is small. Omitting altogether the finer kinds of wood, such as mahogany, rosewood, etc.

Hon. Mr. PRICE—I do not refer to such woods.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, I suppose my hon. friend has reference altogether to pine. The quantity of pine imported in 1876 was $330,000, in value; and for the last six months, $281,000. It is possible that a good deal of timber goes to Quebec and is immediately shipped to England. It possibly comes through in bond and would not be noted in a return of this kind. Shipments that go by rail from Michigan to Portland, in bond through Canada, would not be taken into account in our returns, but any timber absolutely purchased in Quebec or at any point in Canada, would necessarily be included in these returns, so there must be some misconception as to the quantity imported. In Manitoba, a very considerable amount is imported, taking into account the large quantity purchased in Quebec for shipment.

Hon. Mr. PRICE—The hon. Secretary of State is wrong there, for no matter whether goods come in bond or not, the value should be given to the Customs authorities. There are over 2,000,000 feet of oak alone shipped from Quebec, coming from the United States, and that has been worth as much as 48 cents per foot. I expect as much as 3,000,000 feet of timber was shipped to Quebec alone, yet I cannot find any mention of the fact in the returns. I hope a statement will be brought down on which we can rely.

The motion was agreed to.

TITLES OF LANDS IN MANITOBA.

MOTION FOR RETURNS.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD moved:—

He said—Perhaps I should ask the indulgence of the House for bringing up Manitoba and its interests, so often before this House.

Hon. gentlemen—Quite right.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—The question which I now submit for the consideration of this honorable House, is a most important one. I may say it is one of life or death to our Province, because, if settlement is facilitated, it means prosperity, but if retarded, it means a stop to our progress. Obstructions have existed for some time to the settlement of our lands. Many families have come to our Province, but, finding no lands suitable or convenient for settlement, have gone to Minnesota. Have the Government done all in their power to prevent that? I have grave doubts of it. I know in some cases they have acted with liberality, but in others unnecessary difficulties have been thrown in the way. Much money has been spent to send settlers to Manitoba. That is all right, but when they arrive in the Province, facilities should be afforded them to remain there. The difficulties to which I would now call attention are of a very serious character. The old settlers are now established at a place called Rat River. That is not a new settlement. They have been there for years—if my information is correct, for over ten years prior to the transfer of the country to Canada. Some of them went there to choose for themselves what they call a winter settlement. They were going there in winter time, because they found facilities for getting water, hay and wood, which were not easily found in other parts of the Province. They chose their lots, they have been acknowledged as the owners of those lots and have been taxed for church and school purposes. They find now that their titles are contested, and they are no longer the owners of their lands. I see in a Manitoba paper the following Order-in-Council:—

Copy of the Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 20th April, 1876.

“On a memorandum dated the 29th January, 1876, from the Honourable the Minister of the Interior reporting the existence of certain claims to land in Manitoba, which, he states, do not come clearly within those provided for under the law as it now stands.

“The Minister states that these claims may be described and classified as follows, that is to say:—

“1. The lands taken up antecedent to a date six months previous to the transfer of the North-West Territories to the Dominion, in accordance with the usage of the country as recognized by the Council of Assiniboia, such proceeding being to employ one of the two surveyors in the colony to survey and lay out the land.

“In some cases, the Minister observes, the persons so taking up lands went into, and have remained in, constant occupation thereof; in others little or no improvement was made; but the ownership of the lands has always been recognized in the community.

“2. Lands alleged to have been taken up, but which were not surveyed as above or occupied, but merely marked out by the claimants by stakes, prior to 15th July, 1870.

“As regards the first of the two classes described above, the Minister, in view of the fact that such was the usage in the Red River settlement in acquiring land previous to the transfer, recommends that such claims be allowed, and suggests with that view that a return of all such be made by the Agent of the Dominion Lands, upon which the necessary authority may be obtained by law for granting patents for the same.

Hon. Mr. Girard.

“The second class the Minister submits are not entitled to consideration.

“He remarks, that the mode proposed of dealing with, the above two classes is consistent with the opinion of the Honourable the Minister of Justice in respect of such claims.”

(Signed)

W. A. HIMSWORTH,

C. P. C.

I respectfully take the liberty to differ in opinion from that, because in the fourth sub-section of the 32nd section of 33 Vic., Cap. 3, it is stated that all persons in peaceful possession of tracts of land at the time of the transfer to Canada, in those parts of the Province in which the Indian title has not been extinguished, shall have the right of pre-emption of the same, on such terms as may be provided by the Governor in Council. These provisions were subsequently amended by a law passed in 1874, Chap. 20. We see in the third section of that Act:—

“Be it enacted, that persons satisfactorily establishing undisturbed occupancy of any lands within the Province, prior to, and being by themselves or their servants, tenants or agents, or those through whom they claim, in actual and peaceable possession thereof on the eighth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, shall be entitled to receive Letters Patent therefor, granting the same absolutely to them respectively in fee simple.”

The cause of the whole difficulty has been the limiting of the time to the eighth of March, when it should have been the date of the transfer of the Province to the Dominion, the 15th of July 1870. That is acknowledged in the Act 38 Vic., Cap. 52, where it is enacted that persons in actual peaceable possession of lands, on the fifteen day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, shall be entitled to receive Letters Patent therefor, granting the same absolutely to them respectively in fee simple. I have never been able to understand why such importance has been attached to the eighth of March 1869. The opinion of people in Manitoba is, that parties who were in possession of lands at the time of the transfer of the country should receive Letters Patent. I hope the Government will see their way clear to amending the Order-in-Council in such a way as to protect the interests of the people of Manitoba, because there is great uneasiness in the Province on this subject. We cannot understand why so many improvements are requisite when the law merely requires peaceable possession at the time of the transfer. Peaceable possession does not involve the cultivation of the land or any portion of it. Under the law of Manitoba, all those in possession of lands at the time of the transfer were entitled to Letters Patent. They had the right of pre-emption, and what that right is has been explained from time to time—that those who were in possession should be treated the same as those who held lands by title from the Hudson's Bay Company. Everyone must admit it is time to give peace and quietness to Manitoba in reference to that question of lands. Just at the time when we expected to have a solution of the difficulty, it appears to be more complicated than ever. We expected liberal treatment, but now we hear of confiscation everywhere. The people are told they cannot remain any longer on the lands on which they have been settled for years and which they have been working for the benefit of themselves and their families. This is a sad state of affairs. I regret to see that so little has been done to settle conflicting claims under the law enacted for that purpose. I cannot understand how the Government can remain passive when its intervention is so greatly needed. I do not know of a single case which has been settled under that Act. The Commission which was organized for a while has ceased to exist. If the Government do not think proper to revive it, I would advise some member of the Cabinet to come to our Province and settle there, and give us the justice to which we are entitled, instead of deciding questions here and telling us if we have not done such and such a thing we may go into exile, because we no longer have a right to hold our lands. Give our people a chance to be heard and to explain our case, and then we are willing to submit to the judgment, whatever it may be. If it can be proved that they are not entitled to their lands, they will accept a legal decision to that effect, but it is unfair to impose conditions here without giving the parties who are interested a chance to be heard. I think upon that point the Government have not done justice to our Province, and I hope they will see that the question is one which deserves their most careful consideration. There are some of our people who are in a less favorable position than those to whom I specially refer—we call them "squatters." After having waited six or seven years, I think, in view of the fact that they are actual settlers, they are fairly entitled to land for themselves and their families. The Government promised to decide the questions in reference to lands on the Red River and the Assinaboine River. There were parts of those lands which were to be settled; they were the best suited for settlement, because there was plenty of wood and water there. After having awaited the action of the Government for some years and seeing that they were not fulfilling their promise—because it was told us, and there was even correspondence to that effect—that the Government would sell these lands soon, and offer every facility to settlers to procure property on the best terms—they went and settled expecting the Government to act with the greatest liberality to them. Now, the Government are asking five dollars per acre for those lands. That may not seem an extraordinary price, but it looks excessive compared with what the Government ask for land in other parts of the Province,—one dollar per acre. It seems to me if the Government were to render justice to the people they would not have asked anything for their lands, seeing that they granted the right of homestead everywhere else. These people settled there in good faith, put up houses and other buildings, fenced in their lands, and proceeded to cultivate the soil, and it seems too hard that the Government should refuse to give them titles to their properties. Then there are other obstructions—there are too many reserves. There are half-breed reserves, but I hope that question will be settled before long. There is the school reserve, the Mennonite reserve, the Icelandic reserve, and the railway reserve. In every way it is discouraging to settlers coming into that country, to find that the most available places for settlement are not open to them. It is the duty of the Government, when they are appropriating the people's money to send settlers into the North-West, to find places for them to settle on when they get there. More than one in every ten settlers who go there become discouraged by the difficulties in the way of procuring land, and take their families to Minnesota or Dakota, and settle there. This is certainly a painful fact, and if I call the attention of the Government to it, it is not only in the interest of my own Province, but of the whole Dominion. When Manitoba is settled it will be a source of great profit to the Dominion; but unless something is done to remove the obstacles which now exist in the way of settlement, it will be a long time before much is accomplished. I cannot understand how the Government can refuse Letters Patent to those people whose cause I am advocating, because, according to the laws of Manitoba, they have a right to them. By an Order-in-Council you cannot override the law of the land. In 1870, after the passage of the Manitoba Act, and the appropriation of 1,400,000 acres of land to the half-breeds, the Government thought proper to give a share of those lands to the parents of half-breed children; but they were forced subsequently to pass a law declaring that the Order-in-Council had no effect whatever, and that the 1,400,000 acres of land would go exclusively to half-breed children. At the same time, as the door was once opened, we were obliged to grant to the parents of the children a certain amount of lands too, for rights which they, very likely, would not have claimed. It was the same in 1869, when a law was passed fixing the time of possession at the 8th of March, 1869, as if the transfer had taken place at that date, when it was known that it was some months subsequently—the 15th July—that it did occur. That law was passed, but it took no effect, and two years afterwards we had to pass another law by which we acknowledged that the date of transfer was the 16th July 1870, and all those who were in peaceable possession of lands at that time were entitled to Letters Patent. Every one understands what the term “peaceable possession” means. It does not mean actual occupancy but ownership, and I say nothing more is necessary than to bring witnesses to prove the ownership of the lands; no survey should be requisite. I think the Government rely too much upon their employees, and if they knew what an immense amount of money has been wasted in that way, I think they would not rely so much upon the reports from their employees in reference to these lands. They may be very good people; but we know the zeal of those employees. They wish to do something to prove their good services, and too often by that they place their masters in a false position. I would advise most respectfully that some member or members of the Government go out to Manitoba and judge these matters for themselves, and not repose such confidence in their employees. When these papers are produced, the people who are interested can more easily ask from the Government what they believe they are entitled to. I am sure when the question is better understood—because it has not been understood as it should have been—that the Government will not refuse to the people of Manitoba the protection they now require.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND—I know it is somewhat disagreeable that we members from Manitoba are forced to stand up year after year on this question, but I think it will be shown to this honorable House that there must necessarily be something wrong somewhere, because I do not believe that either the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, or myself have unduly pressed matters pertaining to Manitoba upon your attention. I think, on the other hand, we have been rather remiss in pressing forward those questions. I certainly endorse the greater part of what my hon. colleague has stated in regard to these disputed land claims. It is most unfortunate for all parties concerned, that they were not settled long before this. It is now seven years since those first enactments were passed with regard to the lands in our Province, and there are, no doubt, complications that would delay a speedy settlement of some of those questions, but we really cannot help believing that they might have been settled long before this. I believe, myself, that there have been many misrepresentations made to the Government, and that, no doubt, is one reason that some others of those matters were not more speedily dealt with. There is no question that one of the great causes of this delay is the distance of the Capital from Manitoba, and the time necessarily required to transmit despatches from Winnipeg to Ottawa and receive an answer from headquarters. Many parties, as my hon. colleague has stated, are entirely dependent upon those claims. They have nothing else in the world to make a living, and I certainly think the Government should not deal harshly with them, especially when they allow a grant of 160 acres to every actual settler who goes into the country. I think if the matter is looked into, and the parties who are entitled to hold those lands have no more than the Government usually grant to settlers under the Homestead Act, they will not fail to give them titles for that amount of land. I am aware, personally, that there are claims—some of them very old, yes, of sixty years standing—to which I may be compelled to call the attention of this hon. House shortly. It is very unfortunate and exceedingly disagreeable to have to stand here and find fault with the land administration. Whilst I am ready to give the Government due credit for liberality in some directions, I hope they will look more closely into this matter, and that the grievances which my hon. colleague has so fully represented to this House, will be remedied as far as it can be, at an early date.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think my hon. friends from Manitoba are justified in alleging that the policy of the Administration has been other than of the most generous and favorable character towards the actual settlers of Manitoba, and any gentleman investigating either the legislation or the regulations of the Department in reference to the settlement of that country, could come to no other conclusion. In 1870 an Act having reference to this particular subject was passed, providing that:—

“All persons in peaceable possession of tracts of land at the time of the transfer to Canada, in those parts of the Province in which the Indian title has not been extinguished, shall have the right of pre-emption of the same on such terms and conditions as may be determined by the Governor in Council.”

Now that covers all parties which were in peaceable possession of that part of Manitoba in which the Indian title had not been extinguished. Subsequent legislation was had in 1875, extending that to lands on which the Indian title had, in the interim, been extinguished. The law is as follows:—

“Be it enacted that persons satisfactorily establishing undisturbed occupancy of any lands within the Province prior to, and being by themselves or their servants, tenants or agents, or those through whom they claim,

Hon. Mr. Sutherland.

“in actual peaceable possession thereof, on the fifteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, shall be entitled to receive Letters Patent therefor, granting the same absolutely to them respectively in fee simple.”

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—That is the law; but you should read the preamble in connection with it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In every case where those claims have come before the Government, the policy has been, as I have stated, most liberal and generous in dealing with any possible claim; but there are claims in that country (as there are in every country) of speculators who take up lands, knowing that they will have in the future a considerably increased value, by simply staking them out and claiming them. I cannot understand that there can possibly be any equity about a claim of that kind. It is not one, certainly, contemplated by the Manitoba Act, or any Statutes widening or enlarging that Act. As hon. gentlemen are aware, during the last forty-five years a considerable amount of land has been given, not only to half-breeds and other residents of the country, but to every settler who might have the most remote claim. Some three years ago, when some hon. gentlemen from Manitoba brought the subject before the House, a Bill was then in transit, and we took a step which might not be within our purview, but it was so generally expected, that we inserted a clause which was accepted in the other Chamber, giving large grants asked for by the representatives of the Province. I mention this to show, that on every occasion, there has been a most liberal disposition manifested, not only by the Government, but by the Parliament of Canada, in dealing with all fair claims. But the Department is bound by the Statute with regard to those claims of occupancy, and in the opinion of the Minister of Justice, the word “occupancy” means real possession. Would anyone say that a claim simply staked out, which had never been ploughed or cultivated, on which not even a hut has been constructed, could be considered as occupied in the meaning of the Statute? Consequently, such claims have not been recognized. Applicants may come in as the children of the half-breeds, or as homesteaders, if they wish to take up the ordinary grant of land allotted to such settlers, so there is no ground for complaint. Those whose claims are now advocated by the hon. gentlemen opposite, are simply those of men who have staked out lands in valuable sections; who have made no improvements on them; who have not occupied them, and who now claim titles. Some of those lands, it appears, were allotted to children of half-breeds, and thus the Commission arose. But, in order that even a wider interpretation might be given than was justified by the Act of Parliament, an Order-in-Council was passed in 1876, which provided that where lands were taken up under the usages of the country, even though not occupied, so long as they were taken up six months anterior to the 15th of July, 1870, should have a pre-emptive right. I understand that usage to mean the surveying and laying off of lands. It would involve a survey.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND—The usage of the country did not go as far as that; the usage was that a man would go and locate land, and possibly, build on it and cultivate it, and not have a survey for some years afterwards.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He came in as an occupant, in that case. In any case of that kind, if the land was taken up six months anterior to the 15th day of July 1870, the occupant had the right to claim under that Statute.

Hon. Mr. SUTHERLAND—That was the usage of the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I accept that explanation, and it is the very ground I took. But to remove all possible ground of complaint, it was provided, in 1876, in any of those cases where there had been "staked" lands, if they had complied with the usages of the country before the cession to Canada, then the claim should prevail and therefore the only class of claims which are cut off is that particular one to which I have already referred. The hon. gentleman went into a discussion into which I do not pretend to follow him, condemning the Government because there were so many reserves. He says, in the first place, there was the Mennonite reserve. The hon. gentleman must be aware that the Mennonite settlement is considered a very important element in that country, and one which is considered a great success. The Mennonites would never have gone into that country unless lands had been reserved for them, and if there is any hope of acquiring more Mennonites, it is because there are lands set aside for them. Then, as to the Icelandic settlement, surely he does not mean to say it is an embarrassment to the settlers in Manitoba, because it is not in that Province at all but on the lake shore, away beyond Manitoba. Then he speaks of the railway reserves, but the hon. gentleman tried to prove last Session that there were no good lands along the railway; that it was all swamps and quagmires. I am glad to find that there are now good lands along that road. There are certain conditions under which even railway reserves can be taken up, but it would be preposterous to suppose that if the railway is ever to be built those lands could be taken up by settlers at one dollar per acre, because they will soon have greatly enhanced value over lands less favourably situated, and therefore it is not desirable that they should be given away or sold at a low price. On the contrary, I think it is only the duty of the Government to reserve those lands to recoup us for the large outlay on the Pacific Railway. The Orders-in-Council will be brought down, but inasmuch as the claims referred to are only cases which have cropped up every now and then, and which have been referred to the Department, they do not represent the class of cases he wishes to have. If he specifies any, they will be brought down. In the administration of those lands, the desire is always to lean to the occupant if there is the smallest justification for presuming that the occupation is of that character that either the law of the country or the regulations passed from time to time warrant it. But this is a class of cases arising not only in Manitoba but in older Provinces of Canada. I have, probably, as much familiarity with that subject as most hon. gentlemen, for I know what the squatter's claim is. Even at this late day I am informed that the practice is wherever a claim is of a substantial character, the land shall be reserved for the occupant. It is only in the case where there has been no expenditure of muscle, so to speak—where a man has done nothing on the land; where he has gone out, probably, with his gun on his shoulder and put down four stakes on a nice piece of ground—that his claim is not recognized. It is preposterous to say that we should give a title for lands in such a case. Under the interpretation the hon. gentleman would desire to place upon the occupancy of land, he would be entitled to take up as many tracts of lands as he wished to stake out. I do not think that would be a fair contention. I have no doubt this affects a considerable number of people; not the settler, not the occupant, but the party who has purchased for a small consideration those titles. That is the speculator that the crown is not bound to recognize. It is idle to state that there is no room for settlers going into Manitoba. The reserves have been referred to. We know the Pacific Railway is entirely in one corner of Manitoba. It is in the north-easterly part. The objection of my hon. friend is that it does not go through the centre of Manitoba, and it is scarcely possible that there is any foundation in the statement that it interferes with the settlement of the country.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—There is a reserve of twenty miles on each side of the railway, and that would bring it as far down as a short distance north of Winnipeg. It takes off all that portion of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is east of the lake.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Nearly all the settlements in Manitoba are east and south of the lake, consequently, the Pacific Railway reserve would affect settlement.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—Because justice is done in one case, that is no reason why injustice should be permitted in another. I do not know whether I have been able to follow the hon. the Secretary of State correctly or not, but it seems to me, from the explanations the hon. gentleman gave, he makes some difference between the provision of the 32nd section of the Manitoba Act, and the 4th sub-section, which provides that those who were in peaceable possession at the time of the transfer would be looked upon as being in possession under a right of pre-emption. If the hon. gentleman would read the preamble of the Act of 1875, he would see the following:—

“Whereas, it is expedient to afford facilities to parties claiming land under the third and fourth sub-sections of the thirty-second section of the Act thirty-third Victoria, chapter “three, to obtain Letters Patent for the same, &c.”

Hon. Mr. Scott.

It is perfectly clear, it is for those people who were claimants under the title of pre-emption which that law declares are absolutely proprietors of their lots, and those people are certainly entitled to the same consideration as those who were in possession of lands by title from the Hudson Bay Company. It is true, I referred to the reserves in the Province, but it was rather to prove that there were difficulties in the way of settlement than to make a complaint. I know that some of those reserves may exist for the benefit of certain classes of people, but it would have been better in the beginning if such reserves had not been made. I do not complain of their existence, in any way, but I want to prove that the settlers in the country require some protection, because they arrive there tired by the long journey and feel discouraged when they find they cannot get land as easily as they had been led to believe they could on their arrival there. What I complain of is that by the interpretation of the present law the Government assume the right of deciding these matters for themselves. If they give the people the right to appear before a legal tribunal—either a commission or some one specially appointed to hear them—it would be but fair and right. The Government have no more right to take the law into their own hands than an individual has. What I contend is this, that all parties in possession of land on the 15th July, 1870, have a right to keep their lands, having taken possession of them according to the usage of the country. It is not for the Government to say what the usage has been there. It is a matter to be decided on evidence taken on the spot, and in this way alone should it be ascertained. It seems to me that those who have been in possession since 1870, who have paid taxes for schools and churches, cannot be deprived of their property. You must give them a chance to prove their titles, and if there is not sufficient evidence to prove their right to hold their lands, then it will be time enough to dispossess them. I think, under the circumstances, they are justified in asking the Government to give them Letters Patent, and it is unfair for the Government to refuse them that justice which is usually granted by one individual to another. It is my duty to call the attention of the Government to these facts, and I think when the question is understood better, more satisfactory results will be arrived at.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I ask my hon. friend if the usages of the country do not involve either a survey or occupation.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—My opinion is that a survey is not required.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not if there is occupation; but it is, when there is no occupation.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—The law says “peaceable possession,” that does not mean actual occupation. As soon as I have my lot assigned to me somewhere, and it is known by the people in the neighborhood that it is my lot, that I am taxed for the support of churches or schools and other purposes, you must acknowledge me as the owner of that lot, and you have no right from the Capital here to say I have no claim to that lot. I think the conduct of the Government is unjust and arbitrary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Orders-in-Council will come down, but I hope my hon. friend will not press for all the individual cases that have arisen. If there are particular cases he wishes me to bring down, I shall produce them, but it is idle to ask for the whole of them.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It might be understood that after the hon. gentleman has seen the Orders-in-Council he can move for any special cases he wishes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—That will suit me.

The motion was accordingly amended as proposed, and agreed to.

THE HUNTER DIVORCE BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS presented to the House the certificate of the Clerk of the Senate, that notice of the second reading of the Bill to dissolve the marriage of Hugh Hunter with his wife, had been posted at the doors of the Senate, as required by the order of the House.

Hon. Mr. Girard.

Mr. Wilkins Brownlow Butler, of the city of Toronto, land agent, was then called to the Bar of the Senate and testified to having served a copy of the Bill and of the Order of the House on Catherine Hunter, wife of the petitioner. The witness then withdrew.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS moved :—

“That the examination of the Petitioner in this matter, at the Bar of the Senate, as well generally as in regard to any collusion or connivance between the parties be for the present dispensed with, but that it be an instruction to any Committee to whom the Bill upon the subject may be referred to make such examination.”

The motion was agreed to on a division.

The Bill was then read the second time, on a division.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS moved :—

“That the said Bill be referred to a Select Committee composed of the Honorable Messieurs Dickey, Benson, Botsford, Cornwall, Kaulbach, Seymour, Macfarlane, Haviland and the mover, to report thereon with all convenient speed, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and that all persons summoned to appear before the Senate in this matter appear before the said Committee, and that the said Committee have leave to sit on Saturdays, and other non-sitting days.”

The motion was agreed to, on a division.

Hon. Mr. MILLER called attention to the fact that the words “and that the said Committee have leave to sit on Saturdays and other non-sitting days,” in the foregoing motion, were unnecessary, as Committees of the House of Lords (from which the Senate drew its precedents) had the right to meet on non-sitting days.

After some discussion,

The SPEAKER ruled that this view was quite correct, May laying down the rule that Select Committees of the House of Lords may sit, notwithstanding any adjournment of the House, without any express leave. As the Senate had no special rule on this point, the usage of the House of Lords would be followed.

The House adjourned at 4.45 p.m.

RIVER IMPROVEMENTS AT OROMOCTO SHOALS.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT moved :—

He said—Many hon. gentlemen in this House have been up the St. John River, and I believe they will agree with me that it is the second in importance, so far as its trade and commerce are concerned, in the Dominion. I think there are between 2,500 and 3,000 miles of navigation on that river and its tributaries. Some few sessions ago, prior to the change of Government, I moved a resolution for the purpose of having a survey of the Oromocto Shoals and of having the navigation over them improved. When I tell you that hundreds of vessels are stopped by that obstruction every year, and obliged to discharge part of their cargoes in order to pass over them, hon. members may imagine the importance of the subject to the people of New Brunswick. A survey was made by an officer of the Public Works Department and his report was handed in to the Minister. In company with several New Brunswick members of both Houses, I went to examine the plans that had been prepared, and each and all of us, without exception, condemned the plans recommended. I will try, as well as I can, to explain the nature of the obstructions and the improvements required. I happen to reside in the immediate vicinity of the Oromocto Shoal, and the plan that is now being carried out starts from my property on the west bank of the River St. John, and passes to the bar extending from the head of an island belonging to me called Thatch Island.

Hon. Mr. Wilmot.

Therefore, you must take with a certain amount of allowance, the statements I make, because I am interested, to a certain extent, in the work that is being done. The plan recommended by the Civil Engineer was to put a dam a few rods below the head of the island belonging to me, and extend it to the interval on the western shore. The breadth of the River St. John opposite where I live is a little over a mile, and the Oromocto River, which is some forty feet deep, (the meaning of the Indian name Oromocto is “deep”) has formed those islands by its confluence with the St. John.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is the mouth of the Oromocto below the islands?

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Yes. The Oromocto Island is about three miles long, and my own is about a mile in length, from the lower end of the Island to the upper end of the Bar. When you consider that the rise of the St. John in freshet time is 14 to 16 feet, with blocks of ice carried down with the flood, you can imagine what the effect of such a mighty power would be on a dam built on quicksands with each end on alluvial soil. Every man who has had any practical experience of the building of dams—and I have had some myself, as a mill-owner—knows that the spring freshet of the St. John would inevitably wash away such a barrier. Last summer, the same engineer came there with the Member for the county, Mr. C. Burpee, and fixed upon the plan, without consulting either Mr. Glasier, who has lived in that neighborhood all his life, or myself, both members of Parliament. I think it would have been but courteous to have sent for us to see how the improvement should be made. But, fortunately for me, there were other proprietors of land in that vicinity, who protested against it, and that project of putting a dam across there was abandoned. The plan now adopted is to run a wing dam from the west side of the river to strike about two-thirds down the bar of Thatch Island, on the inner side, and it seems to me so preposterous, I can hardly imagine a man possessed of common sense putting a dam inside a bar to deepen the water on the outside of it where the channel is. The water in the channel during the low water in the summer is about seven feet deep, and this dam, constructed in that way, would sweep the sand from the island bar into the present channel. How any man could imagine such a work would deepen the channel, I am at a loss to conceive. After it was fixed, I wrote to the Minister of Public Works, and I came up to see him on the subject. I brought with me a letter from Mr. Beckwith, one of our oldest surveyors and engineers in New Brunswick. He had been engaged for years in the improvements on the Upper St. John. I brought with me a letter from this experienced engineer, pointing out what should, in his judgment, be done. After the first plan was abandoned, and I had gone with Mr. Burpee, the Member for that County, to look at what they proposed to adopt in its stead, I thought we had come to the conclusion that the dam should be placed in such a way—and it could have been done if the plan Mr. Beckwith recommended had been adopted—as to carry the channel between the two islands. That is the common-sense way it should be done. It is quicksand, and with some dredging the channel could be kept clear, but unfortunately they have determined to construct it otherwise, and they are going on with the work at present. My hon. friend, the Secretary of State, in referring to something brought up by my hon. friend from Manitoba, said that the Government had pursued a certain course because it was recommended by the engineers. Now, I have arrived at this conclusion:—it seems very strange if the public money is to be wasted and thrown away simply because the engineers say so, and the Government have no responsibility. I do not subscribe to any such doctrine. Look at the purchase of the steel rails! Any man of common sense with any knowledge of the state of commercial affairs, would have said it was an egregious blunder. At a time when values were falling in the markets, would it be said, because an engineer recommended the purchase of those rails, the Government should exercise no judgment? Are they so entirely ignorant of the state of trade as to find it necessary to shelter themselves under the recommendation of an engineer? I have the very highest opinion of Mr. Fleming's capabilities as an engineer, but I know he made a most egregious mistake in New Brunswick when he said it was impossible to carry a railway across the Tobique. One of the cheapest railways in the Province has been built by that very route, and will be carried up to Riviere du Loup.

Hon. Mr. WARK—It was not the Tobique; it was the Restook.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I think it was the Tobique. I do not take what the engineers state on any particular work for granted. I examine it and exercise my own common sense as well. I came up to see Mr. Mackenzie, for whom I always had a very high opinion. I thought there was no man in Parliament more competent to manage the Public Works Department than he, but he has had all those facts before him, and has come to the decision I have pointed out. I heard the Hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Brown)—he is not now in his place—talk some days ago about $180,000, spent on the Fort Francis Lock, as a mere drop in the bucket which should be thrown away without objection, but when the people of New Brunswick ask for an improvement on the second largest river in the Dominion, which could be made for a very much less amount than that, they cannot have it properly done. I say it on my own authority, and, I think my hon. friend from Sunbury, who has carried hundreds of thousands of pounds worth of property past this shoal, and been born and brought up in the very vicinity of it, will agree with me that this money is absolutely wasted, and not only that, but the work will be an absolute injury to the navigation of the river, instead of a benefit to it. I feel strongly on this question, because I took an interest in having that improvement made in the first instance, and now, to see the Government acting directly contrary to common sense, forces me to the conclusion that hundreds of thousands of pounds are thrown away on other works in just such a foolish manner as this. That is the inference I cannot help drawing. I took a great deal of trouble to bring the facts of this matter before the Minister of Public Works; I wrote, also, to have the thing kept back until Parliament met, in order that I could get a delegation to go and examine the plans and express their opinions upon them, but no, it was not to be done, and I can only draw the inference that the reason this money is thrown away is because of the coming elections.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Oh! oh!

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I can draw no other inference. I cannot be called a strong party man in any way. Since I have been a member of the Senate I have taken no part in elections. I am expressing my own practical belief and common-sense, when I say that instead of improving the navigation of the St. John, they are injuring it. Fifty years ago I travelled on the Clyde. It was then only navigable for smacks, but now ships of three to four thousand tons can go up to Glasgow. Of course, in improving the river, the engineers acted with, and not against, nature, and confined the water as near as possible to the channel. In that way the quicksands could be washed into deeper water. As it is now, if I have any experience in such matters—and I have been living on the St. John for a great many years—the dam which they are building at the Oromocto Shoals will wash away a portion of Thatch Island into the channel. Steamboat captains, engineers—every person, almost, that I have spoken to on the subject, that knows anything about it—equally condemn the work.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—I know the locality referred to. I have been acquainted all my life with rivers which flow through alluvial soil and I fully concur in everything that has been said with respect to the effect that will be produced by the work (that is now being proceeded with at the Oromocto shoals. I also concur with the hon. mover of this address in the great importance of the River St. John. Since he spoke, I have written down the names of some of the most important tributaries, and I can state from my intimate knowledge of the St. John and the Hudson Rivers—that the St. John is in extent and capacity as large as the Hudson River, but the former has five or six times the number of tributaries running into it; consequently its capacity for business and traffic is very much larger than that of the Hudson. I will just read the names of a few of the tributaries of the St. John River, to give an idea of their extent:—Kennebecasis, Nerepis, Washademoak, Jemseg and Grand Lake, Oromocto, Nashwalk, Tobique, Res-took, Grand River, Green River, Madawaska and the St. Francis. There are a dozen more that I have not mentioned, because they are not navigable to a great extent by boats, but the streams which I have mentioned are navigable, each of them from thirty to seventy-five miles. This certainly shows the importance of improving the navigation of the River St. John. It is a most difficult thing, every one knows who is acquainted with streams running through alluvial deposits, to know what effect on the navigation any obstruction will have when placed in such rivers. I happen to reside in a country where we have rivers running through alluvial soil very similar to the intervals through which the river St. John runs, only one is fresh water and the other salt water deposit, and I have seen from year to year that a very small obstruction in any part of those rivers will make changes that would astonish any hon. members who are not acquainted with such matters. I know the locality of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilmot) speaks on the river St. John, and I entirely condemn the course which has been adopted with respect to the improvement of the Oromocto shoals. I have no manner of doubt from my own knowledge of the effect of placing obstructions in a river running through such soil, that the result in this case will be to wear away the head of Thatch Island and throw it, as a matter of course, into the channel which they wish to improve. I have no doubt whatever, from my own experience, that it is a most dangerous scheme which is being carried out, and that it will have the effect which the hon. gentleman predicts. The course suggested by the hon. mover of this address is the best mode of improving that shoal. Of course it will be a little more expensive but the expense will be trifling compared with the great advantage to be derived from it. The observations and opinions expressed by the hon. mover of this address are unquestionable, and his deductions on money spent in that way are correct.

Hon. Mr. Wilmot.

Hon. Mr. SKEAD—I have been favored with a sketch of the plan which the hon. gentleman from Sunbury has explained here to day with reference to those dams, I have had some experience myself, during the past thirty-seven years, in dam building, and on three or four occasions I have seen trouble ensue from building crib work on sand banks and alluvial deposits. I have no hesitation in saying, should the Government attempt to build crib work on the sand bank referred to, it will be a failure. I have seen it tried on the Gatineau and on the Madawaska and it failed in both places, the cribs canting, and in some places upsetting. I have seen where sand has been dredged successfully in Lake St. Peter, but there they found the lowest water where the channel was, excavated the sand and threw it up on the shallow places on either side, so that the current can keep the channel clear. I have seen the locality where they propose to build this dam, and I would suggest, as the only means to retain a channel, to find the deepest water and to pile across the shallow places in the shape of a wing dam, to the height of medium low water, so that spring freshets can pass over it, the material excavated from the channel to be thrown in front of the piles. Once the channel is opened in this way, it will keep itself clear where there is a current. This is a much safer plan, in my opinion, than crib work, as it would be impossible to keep crib work from being undermined and carried away by the freshets. I do not quite endorse all the references that have been made by hon. gentlemen with respect to the waste of public money and to steel rails, as I don't see that the latter has anything to do with dam building at Oromocto Shoals.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—All I said was this: That I did not think the waste of money in such projects should be put down to the engineers. I think the Government should be held responsible as well as the engineers.

Hon. Mr. SKEAD—I do not know that the Government are altogether responsible for the waste of money in public works, for they have to follow the advice of their engineers.

Hon. Mr. GLASIER—I believe this work, as it is being carried out, is a waste of money. In the first place, I do not think we can ever have such a dam to stand, and in the next place, if it were constructed it would carry away all the interval lands in the vicinity, including the island of the hon. mover of this resolution. I think the whole thing is a foolish expenditure of money, as it has been planned by an engineer who will take no advice, but wants to carry out his own hobby.

Hon. Mr. McCLELAN—I am pretty well acquainted with the River St. John and its importance, and I take it that the hon. gentleman who has moved this address has only the intention or expectation of getting the plans and reports on this work before the House. After they are submitted to us, we can form a better opinion than most of us have at present on the subject. I have no doubt that the grant has been expended with the very best intention possible.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—No doubt of it.

Hon. Mr. McCLELAN—As to whether there has been any mistake in the matter or not, that can only be ascertained by an examination of the reports and plans, and, therefore, I think it would be better and more consistent to await the bringing down of those papers before entering into a discussion of the subject.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is not an enquiry of the Government, but a motion for papers, to which there can be no objection. My hon. friend who introduced this subject, informed the House that he was very much interested in it, living as he does in the neighbourhood, and having his own ideas as to how the matter should be carried out. That accounts, no doubt, for the amount of warmth he exhibited in speaking on the subject, and the reflections he thought proper to make on the officer of the Department of Public Works deputed to carry out the improvement. I do not think the hon. gentleman can say that the Department ignored him in this matter, because he admits that when the attention of the Public Works Department was called to the plan, it was abandoned, and Mr. Perley was instructed to devise something else. He has now devised this other proposition which seems to be condemned with equal severity by those who have a knowledge of the locality, and who probably have a practical knowledge of what they speak of; but surely it cannot be imagined for a moment that the Government would capriciously decline to receive the second plan of the engineer. He first prepares one plan; that is rejected at the instance of the hon. Senator, and then he prepares another. If the Government had declined to accept that second plan on the ground of its being defective, the proper way would have been to have dismissed him for want of capacity. It would be quite idle for the Minister to say, in his own department, "Mr. Perley, this does not meet with the approval of the people in the neighborhood, you must prepare another plan." My hon. friend, I presume, does not claim to be an engineer, or to have a knowledge of hydraulics, but simply puts his practical knowledge of the locality against the judgment of the engineer. I do not think that warrants him in attacking the Government, or drawing other matters into the discussion.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Mr. Beckwith happens to have a son living at Oromocto. He was on a visit there and saw this work staked out. I never asked him to look at it; it was his own practical knowledge of the River St. John that caused him to write the letter to me, and his opinion on these matters is worth twenty times Mr. Perley's for this reason, when I told him (Mr. Perley) that practical men condemned his plan, he said, "I am a practical man, and I never made a mistake in my life." That is the sort of man that he is.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I fear the hon. Secretary of State has rather misunderstood this question. And it appears to me that he has not exactly answered the suggestions which have been made and the objections that have been raised. This engineer, whoever he was, made a deliberate report on this question, and my hon. friend the Secretary of State, admits that that report was abandoned by the Government.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—But he still holds to it that that report was right.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—It is admitted by the hon. the Secretary of State that the plan was bad.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not at all. I said nothing of the kind; I said "it is alleged."

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Then why was it abandoned? The hon. the Secretary of State proceeded to say that the second report must necessarily be correct.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—At all events the second report was just as likely to be wrong as the first. Hon. gentlemen with local knowledge have given the Government the benefit of their experience, and the hon. the Secretary of State has spoken disparagingly of hon. members of this House, who have a practical knowledge of such subjects.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think I said anything of the sort.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The hon. gentleman taunted the hon. member with not being an engineer. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this question, because, though I have a general knowledge of the River St. John, and of the principles which should govern such improvements, yet I have not such a knowledge of the locality as would warrant me in interposing in the discussion. I rise, however, to congratulate the hon. gentleman who made this motion on his courage in venturing to attack the engineers in this House, and I must say I sympathise very strongly with him in this matter. Without going the length of saying that engineers may be found to report anything, if we look back upon the public works of this country, we will find that there has been a great deal more than the improvement at Oromocto Shoals to justify the hon. gentleman in the opinion he has given of our engineers. The difficulty with Mr. Perley in this matter—and I speak of him with the greatest respect as an engineer—is that he seems to have proceeded entirely upon his professional knowledge and wholly independent of the local practical knowledge which he could have got had he chosen to apply for it in the proper quarter. But if we go back to larger matters, we find, in the selection of the Intercolonial Railway route, that an engineer reported one year in favor of a certain route and the next year reported that route impracticable, and in favor of another, and why? Let the result speak for itself. There may have been changes of circumstances—it is not for me to judge what the reason was, but to let the facts speak for themselves before the House. I can also remind the House of the fact, that an engineer reported that a practicable railway route existed between a certain point west of Renfrew and the Georgian Bay without putting an instrument upon it, and the very next year another engineer reported that no practicable route existed there at all. Is it any wonder, therefore, that we should object to the Government sheltering themselves behind the reports of their engineers? There may be another report upon the same Georgian Bay branch presented to us before the end of the Session, claiming a practicable line by another route, if required. Let us go beyond the Georgian Bay to those disputed lines on the north and south of Lake Manitoba, in which my friend behind me (Hon. Mr. Girard) has shown so deep an interest. I think it was a great misfortune that any one should have suggested before an engineer went there, that the route south of lake Manitoba was the best. It may have been because that suggestion was made that the engineers looked for a line where nobody else would have thought of locating it. And if we go to British Columbia, we will find much more extensive lessons on this point than any I have mentioned. If Lord Milton and Dr. Cheadle had not visited British Columbia and reported that Nature had cut a route through the Rocky Mountains and the Cascade range to the sea—by the valleys of the Thompson and the Fraser Rivers—the road might have gone that way, but from that time the fate of that route was fixed. No engineer would look at it, and if you consult the early reports of the Pacific Railway you will find that this route was ignored completely, and hundreds of thousands of dollars—nay millions—and years of time have been spent to find other routes while they failed to examine this at all. What do we find now? We find the country, after this enormous expense has been incurred in making surveys, is reduced to the alternative of the Fraser and Thompson route, or one as far north as the 56 parallel of latitude; that is the position we find ourselves placed in to-day by those engineers, and no line fixed yet. I feel that I need offer no apology for rising to thank the hon. gentleman for the courage he has shown in attacking the testimony of those engineers, in cases where they do not choose to listen to the practical advice of men on the spot. I have had experience enough to know that an ounce of practical knowledge is worth a pound of scientific theory, in matters of this kind. When gentlemen, like my hon. friends Mr. Wilmot, Mr. Botsford, and Mr. Glasier, and an engineer of the ability and local knowledge of Mr. Beckwith, the Ex-Provincial Secretary—gentlemen possessing not only local knowledge but practical experience, and in one case professional knowledge of a high order—express an opinion so decidedly as they have done, after the Government had abandoned the first report of the same engineer, it was at least due to those gentlemen that they should have been consulted before any decided step was taken. Therefore, I hope the Government, after duly considering this case, will come down to the House assuring us that we shall have, not an electioneering expenditure of public money, but a practical expenditure for a useful purpose, and that it shall be applied in the best place and to the best advantage. I hope the hon. the Secretary of State, will take in good part the criticisms that have been uttered here to-day. With regard to the hon. member who introduced the question, and upon whom a slight sneer has been cast because he lived in the locality, I hope the Government will take his suggestions seriously into consideration and avail themselves of his local knowledge in such a way as to make this improvement satisfactory to the people who are most deeply interested in it.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I do not profess to know anything about this work; but of course we are all desirous that the navigation of the River St. John should be improved. I am reminded, however, by this debate, of the fact that great events spring from little causes. It seems to me the motion of my hon. friend has carried us a long way from the Oromocto Shoal—all the way to the Pacific Ocean, and then we shall by it be led to a very large and important change, at all events if we adopt the theories of some hon. gentlemen who have spoken. We seem to be about to introvert the whole of the learned and scientific professions. If the engineers are not to be trusted, we must, I suppose, take doctors and the lawyers to survey our rivers and construct our public works, and as it will not do to let the engineers starve, we shall have to take them, I suppose, as our doctors and lawyers. That is the net result of the theories we have heard. But the worst of it is, if we take doctors to do the work of engineers, we shall fall into the dilemma described by the well-known proverb that no authority is adequate to decide when doctors disagree, and then we could have no improvements at all—a thing I am sure the hon. mover does not desire.

Hon. Mr. SKEAD—I am neither a doctor nor a lawyer, but I have had thirty-seven years experience of building dams, and if what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilmot) says is true, while I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, I predict that crib work built on alluvial deposit will not stand a fortnight. I would rather help the Government than oppose them in the construction of those public works.

The motion was agreed to.

MR. SANDFORD FLEMING'S ABSENCE.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BOURINOT enquired—

“For what period of time has leave of absence been given by the Government to Mr. Sandford Fleming, Chief Engineer of Dominion Railways, and whether he receives his salary whilst so absent from his post?”

I have been waiting for some time for some explanations from the Government in regard to the absence from the Dominion of the Chief Engineer of the Pacific Railway. Several reports are current as to the cause of his absence. One report is that he is travelling for pleasure; another rumor is that he is travelling for the benefit of his health, on his own income; while others have it that he is still drawing his salary of $8,000. Another report is that he is employed by the Government to concoct some scheme with regard to the Pacific Railway. Whether the Government are privy to it or not I do not know, but I think I am only doing them a service in making this enquiry. The Chief Engineer should be in his department during the sittings of Parliament, where he can be consulted whenever it is found necessary. He has been absent, however, for several months from the country. My object is not to attack or to reflect on any one at all, but when such rumors are in circulation affecting a man of his standing, some explanation should be submitted to the country.

Hon. Mr. Penny:

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Fleming left Canada on leave of absence on the ground of ill health of himself and some members of his family. There was no arrangement as to the time of his absence, but I am informed by a note from Mr. Trudeau, that he does not draw his pay during his absence.

MONTREAL & OTTAWA JUNCTION RAILWAY.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SKEAD moved the second reading of Bill F., “An Act respecting the Montreal and City of Ottawa Junction Railway Company.” This is an Act that was obtained some eight years ago, and it is about to expire through efflux of time. The promoters of this railway are anxious to have the period for the completion of the works extended for six years from April next. They desire, also, that all bonds, debentures, and such like securities heretofore issued by the company and now forming a charge upon, or being in force against the company, shall continue in force; that the persons whose names appear on the regular stock books of the company on the 30th of April next, shall after the passing of this Act, be held and taken as the shareholders of the company and be entitled to exercise all their rights and privileges as such; and that the company may create preference shares to the extent of $400,000, such shares being entitled to dividend before any other stock or shares of the company to the extent of six per cent upon the amount paid up thereon. The company have expended in round numbers about $200,000. The total number of miles graded and ready for ties is about twenty-seven. Subsidies were granted by the Ontario Government, $4,000 per mile for the sixty miles of the road which runs through this Province. The remaining 15½ miles of the road is in the Province of Quebec. They have in all $266,000 which is not yet touched, including the city of Ottawa bonus of $100,000 and the bonus from the municipalities of Kenyon and Locheil of about $30,000. The whole length of the road is about 81½ miles. The company have had some trouble and some law suits with the old contractors, which I understand have been settled, and they want the time extended to allow them to go on and complete the work.

The Bill was read the second time.

FISHWICK'S EXPRESS & FORWARDING COMPANY.

REFERRED BACK TO COMMITTEE.

On the order of the day being called for, consideration of (Bill B.) Fishwick's Express and Forwarding Company Bill, as amended by the Select Committee on Banking, Commerce and Railways.

Hon. Mr. MILLER moved that the order of the day be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to committee.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 4.30 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Tuesday, March 12th.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

After Routine proceedings.

THE LYON DIVORCE BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH introduced a Bill for the relief of Victoria Elizabeth Lyon.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH moved—

“That the said Bill be read a second time on Wednesday, the twenty-seventh day of March, instant, and that notice thereof be fixed on the doors of this House and Senators summoned, and that the said Victoria Elizabeth Lyon may be heard by her Counsel at the second reading to make out the truth of the allegations of said Bill, and that John Lyon may have a copy of the said Bill, and that notice be given him of the second reading or sufficient proof adduced of the im-possibility of so doing, and that he be at liberty to be heard by Counsel what he may have to offer against the same Bill at the same time.

“That the said Victoria Elizabeth Lyon do attend this House on the twenty-seventh day

Hon. Mr. Skead.

“of March in order to her being examined on the second reading of the said Bill, if the House shall think fit, whether there has or has not been any collusion directly or indirectly on her part relative to any act of adultery that may have been committed by the said John Lyon, or whether there be any collusion, directly or indirectly, between her and her said husband, or any other person or persons, touching the said Bill of Divorce, and also whether at the time of the adultery of which she complains, he was, by deed or otherwise, by her consent, living separately and apart from and released by her as far as in her lay from his conjugal duty, or whether he was at the time of such adultery cohabiting with her.”

The motion was agreed to, on a division.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

NOTICE OF ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON gave notice :—

“That he will call attention to the public expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion of it which is largely within the control of the Administration, and will enquire of the Government how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure.”

He said :—I may observe that this notice is given in the precise terms of a similar motion made by me last Session. I mention this for the purpose of letting hon. gentlemen opposite understand the scope of the motion, that they may not complain, as they did last Session, that they had not sufficient notice.

THE HALIFAX FISHERIES COMMISSION.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU asked when the report of the Fisheries Commission would be brought down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I stated recently that in my opinion it was only proper the official intimation to the public should come through Imperial channels. I am inclined to adhere to that opinion, although I think I stated afterwards as the report had reached the public through other sources, it would be brought down. I trust to be able to submit it to the House at an early day.

THE SALE OF CANADIAN SHIPS IN FRANCE.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Hon. Mr. BOURINOT moved :—

He said :—The object of the motion is one with which, no doubt, hon. members of this House are familiar, not only in consequence of the debate which took place lately, elsewhere, but also owing to the matter having been revived in a late contest in the Province of Quebec. Of course I do not wish to make any remarks in reference to that election, but I think in consequence of what transpired before and then, we are entitled to the information I ask—what progress the question has made. We were informed by the Premier that for two years past he had been in communication, through the Imperial Government, with the Government of France on this important subject, and no doubt the papers, when laid on the table of this House, will show what progress has been made towards accomplishing the desired object—the admission of Canadian built ships into the French ports on the same terms as British built vessels. You are aware that the Government of France imposes a duty of forty francs per ton, on Canadian built vessels, which is equivalent to excluding them entirely, while English built ships are admitted on payment of two shillings sterling per ton. The difference is so great that it is very natural that all parties interested in the prosperity of this Dominion would like to see this country on the same favourable footing as Great Britain. I am, therefore, glad to see by the debate which occurred elsewhere lately, that there is a prospect of this question coming up again, and, no doubt, the French Government may be induced to accede to our wishes; but, it must be remembered also that it is not likely it will be accomplished unless we reciprocate with them. We must admit some of their products on more favourable terms than we do at present, and I need hardly say the principal product they would most desire to sell us is their light wines. My hon. friend from Sarnia (Mr. Vidal) knows that where French wines are in general use temperance prevails. I speak with a knowledge of this question. It is known to many hon. gentlemen present that you may travel from one end of France to the other and not meet a single case of intoxication. Intemperance does not exist in the heart of France, (but occasionally in some of its sea-ports) owing to the fact that they use a beverage which is not intoxicating when taken in moderation, and temperance societies do not exist there. I am sure, if the light wines of France could be in general use among the people of this country, temperance would make rapid progress, because there must be certain beverages used by all classes, and the wines of France, as hon. gentlemen are aware, are wholesome, and considered as accessory to bread for food. I am not arguing against temperance; far from it. I cannot help speaking in the warmest terms of the efforts made by my hon. friend opposite, (Mr. Vidal) in the cause of temperance. He has a good purpose in view, and one which every honest man and good Christian will applaud him in carrying it out, if possible. But I fear the efforts will be unsuccessful, because the change must be gradual, and in the end it will be found that the only plan which will commend itself to the judgment of our people is the introduction and general use of the light wines in this country. Now, with regard to the question of selling our vessels in France, it has been stated elsewhere that our ships should be built and navigated by ourselves, and not sold to foreign powers. The gentleman who made that statement is himself a ship owner, and he says he is a freetrader. However, if that is freetrade I cannot understand the meaning of the term, for certainly when it came to his own interest he seemed very desirous to protect it. If more vessels are built in the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick than can be navigated by ourselves, where are we to look for a market to send them to, if not to foreign countries. We know our neighbours across the line exclude our vessels from American registry, and therefore we must look for a market in Europe, and no country in Europe affords so good an opening for the sale of our ships as France. If that market could at once be opened it would give employment to thousands of our shipwrights who are now idle, besides additional supplies for sending them out to sea and to a market. Not more than two or three years ago, the French Government built two splendid schooners at Montreal. They have been admitted to the French navy and are commanded by two French naval officers. These vessels are in the summer cruising on the coast of Newfoundland with the French war steamers sent from France, forming the French naval division in those waters to protect the fisheries there. These Canadian built vessels are the admiration of every one who has seen them—they are perfect clippers, and I am sure the American clippers we have heard so much about cannot surpass them in any way. They are called La Canadienne (out of compliment to Canada) and L'Évangéline. I am sure France would take their ships from us, but they are awaiting our action to reciprocate with them. With regard to the islands of Saint Pierre and Miquelon, where the French fisheries are carried on, vessels of a small class have been admitted to register without paying duty, and these are built in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and sold there yearly. I hardly know whether I can deal further on this subject, I dare say I have not exhausted it, but others, who are no doubt more conversant with other facts on this question than I am, will follow me when I resume my seat.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I rise to congratulate the hon. gentleman who has moved this address. Representing a Province which is much interested in the business of ship-building, I would fail in my duty if I did not offer my thanks to the hon. gentleman for the course he has taken. I must say, I am surprised that Canadian interests have been neglected by Great Britain in the treaty with France—that our vessels are not admitted to French register on the same terms as British built ships. It is only right that this House should know what steps our Government have taken to secure for the Dominion the same advantages that are enjoyed by the Mother Country. We ought to know what is the feeling of the British Government towards Canada. I believe the other subject mentioned in this motion is one of great importance. Besides the commercial aspect of it, we should look at it from the temperance point of view. In my opinion, one of the most effectual means of diminishing the evils of intemperance would be to cheapen French wines, and popularize those wholesome beverages in Canada. Certainly, if light wines could be had at a low price in this country, it would diminish the consumption of strong spirituous liquors. By lowering the duties on French wines and increasing the tax on ardent spirits, we would do more to promote temperance than by adopting a system of complete prohibition.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—This subject is, no doubt, one of very considerable importance, more particularly in the Maritime Provinces, where ship-building has been carried on to a great extent for many years. I admit that while we built ships merely for the purpose of selling them (as we did years ago) we lost money, yet there is no doubt there are times when ship-builders find it convenient to sell their vessels, and at such times we should be able to enter the best market. The ships of the Maritime Provinces are now found sailing on every sea, and they compare favorably with the best specimens of naval architecture in the world. France is not a large ship-building country, and a considerable proportion of the vessels now owned in that country have been purchased from England. Both France and England have derived great advantages from the treaty existing between them. It has enabled French ship owners to purchase vessels at lower prices, and it has created a taste for light wines among the English people, which has resulted in a diminution of the consumption of whiskey, brandy and beer in all parts of the British Islands. This is proved by recent statistics, and I am sure it must be gratifying to the hon. Senator (Mr. Vidal) who takes such a deep interest in the temperance question. In every way the subject which has been brought before the House to-day is one of deep interest to our people. If we can sell our vessels in the French market, it will be a great boon to our ship-builders. If we can sail our own vessels and make money with them, we can also sell them in many cases, at a profit. I hope the papers when brought down, will show that our Government have taken steps to secure for ship-builders the privilege of selling in the French market.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I am not at all sure of the propriety of entering upon even a partial discussion of the great question of temperance, on the motion that is now before the House, but, after hearing some of the statements of hon. members, I think it would be unwise to remain silent and allow them to go unchallenged. I regret that hon. gentlemen should be unacquainted with, or forgetful of facts so well established, and so prominently brought before the public mind by those who have for many years watched the results of all measures proposed for decreasing intemperance and banishing from our land the crime, poverty and misery which invariably accompany it. It is no new theory that the introduction of light wines would so diminish the use of stronger liquors as to reduce intemperance, but unfortunately for those who base their arguments upon this theory, the logic of facts shows it to be fallacious. The experiment was tried many years ago in the Old Country by the Duke of Wellington's Administration, for even in his day the prevalence of intemperance and the increase of crime and pauperism in the country had attracted the attention of statesmen. He thought if beer could be made cheaper, it would diminish the use of alcoholic drinks. What was the result? From the very year beer houses thus became an institution of the country, drunkenness, crime and poverty increased, and there was established a permanent annual growth of the very evils it was desired to remove. Several years afterwards Mr. Gladstone, a statesman of great experience, knowledge and ability, took the very same view of this matter that has been advocated here this afternoon. With a view to checking the alarming growth of intemperance and diminishing its attendant evils, he hit upon the expedient of taking off the duties from the very wines, the introduction of which into this country it is now sought to encourage. What was the result? The fine theory built upon it proved to be baseless as the fabric of a vision, for it was found by statistics of the following years that a larger amount of liquor was consumed, and that crime and poverty had in nowise diminished, but had rather increased. I hold, then, that the teaching of experience is not such as should lead us to encourage the introduction of those milder stimulants, with a view to diminishing the excessive use of the stronger ones. We would be but opening wider the door to the evils which we desire to remove. My hon. friend who introduced this motion spoke of those beverages as being necessary to health. He even contended that we cannot do without them. Now, I have, for 37 years, refrained from using them—does any hon. gentleman see in me any marked deficiency in either mental or bodily strength? I contend that, so far from being injured by doing without those intoxicants, I am the better for not using them, and my experience is that of hundreds of thousands of abstainers in every clime, and of every class of society. It is a fallacy to suppose that the introduction of alcoholic poison into our systems, in ever so small a quantity, is beneficial to us when in ordinary health. But I am forgetting that I said, at the outset of my remarks, it was not wise to introduce a discussion on temperance on this motion. When the Government introduce their promised measure, designed for the suppression of intemperance, that will be the time for hon. gentlemen to express fully and freely their views on the subject, and suggest by what means the evil may be lessened in, or removed from, our land.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—It cannot be denied that the ship-building industry of Canada is very much depressed, and it behooves us to do all in our power to revive a trade so important to this country. The country that used to afford such a market for the sale of vessels built in New Brunswick and the Maritime Provinces does not require the same number of wooden ships now as it did formerly. It is well known that iron vessels are very largely taking the place of the wooden ships. Therefore, if we can find some other market in which we can dispose of those vessels built in our ship-yards, it will be a great boon to the Maritime Provinces. There is one point that has not been touched on as extensively as it might be in this debate. Hon. gentlemen seem to think that the only commodity of France for which we can give them a market is light wines. But I can tell those hon. gentlemen that we use in this country only a very small portion of light wines because French wines cannot be exported in bulk or in large packages, inasmuch as the shaking they get in crossing the ocean is calculated to injure them and make them sour. Wines of that class are generally bottled wines, and are known as "Burgundy" and "Claret," which are not used extensively in this country, owing to the coldness of the climate. But, on the other hand, it is well known that the French market is the market for brandy, a spirit that is known and used all over the world, and is recognized in the French market as one of its staple articles of export. This is the article on which the import duties might be lowered. The whole of our tariff—especially that portion of it which applies to liquors—should be altered, because the policy of the Government is not to encourage the importation of foreign spirit, but to encourage its manufacture in this country to the exclusion of the foreign. Their policy is having that effect too, as there is a large falling off in the importation of foreign liquors. The consequence is that the annual production of spirits in the Dominion is equal to 4,000,000 of gallons. It is well known also to experts that the native spirits are not only consumed as such, but are used to adulterate foreign liquors, so that a less quantity of foreign manufacture is consumed in this country than there would be if none but unadulterated liquors were sold. We should go to France and offer them a market for their brandies, for it does not matter to us whether we import spirit (brandy) from France or manufacture a substitute at home, as we have to import the corn from which the substitute is made, from the United States, and pay cash for it to a people who will not purchase our ships, nor trade with us. France, on the other hand, will if we offer advantages to them for their brandies and light wines. But, to do this, we would have to alter the Excise duty in this country, and cause the manufacturers of spirits in Canada to come under the ordinary protection of the 17½ per cent., and I cannot understand why it is that on the item of spirit there is a protection of from 33½ to 40 per cent. (including freight and leakage) against the foreign, whereas on all other manufactures there is only a protection of 17½ per cent. If the Government will only take the trouble to look into the question they will find there is something in it, and the argument of my hon. friend (Mr. Bourinot) will have some force, that the French liquors will find a market in this country. The strong wines such as Sherry and Port, come from Spain and not from France, hence it is no inducement to France to offer them a market for wines they do not produce. But it is not so with brandies, and, on application, you will find it out by France conceding to us a market for the sale of our ships.

Hon. Mr. BOURINOT—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has gone into questions foreign to the motion before the House. It only referred to the light wines of France. Those who are conversant with that class of wines think that the best way to import them is in bulk, and the longer they are kept, ten or fifteen years, the more they improve in quality. Formerly the impression was that the French wines were better bottled at home, but it has been tested that all wines, clarets especially, improve by being imported in bulk and bottled after they arrive in this country. When it is considered that the duty on light wines is specific, instead of ad valorem, it is no wonder the importations are so limited.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—This ship-building question is one of great importance, not only to the Province to which I belong, but to the whole Dominion, and I think every exertion should be made to encourage the exportation and sale of our vessels to France. I recollect a few years ago—in 1871, I think—we exported from Quebec to France, nineteen ships, which produced a very considerable sum of money, gave employment to 1,400 ship carpenters, and was considered a very great benefit to the trade of the city of Quebec. It is a matter of regret the change that has taken place in consequence of the arrangement made between England and France which has shut out Canada from the French market, as far as the sale of ships is concerned. I know that it has been stated whenever this question was raised, that it is no fault of the Government; that this treaty was arranged between England and France without the concurrence of Canada, and that there is no remedy for us but to wait until a better disposition is shown towards us by France. Canada has shown by her fiscal policy that we do not care much for their interests, and we have pursued a policy of our own without any regard to its effect on those countries, as though we did not desire to continue business relations with them in this respect. At the time when we exported such large numbers of ships to France, we imported a much larger quantity of goods from England than from the United States. Since that time our trade has changed, and in the year 1876 we imported from England only $8,348,778, free of duty, and $32,385,482 worth of dutiable goods, while we imported from the United States $24,730,000 worth of goods free of duty and $21,334,000 of dutiable goods. This fiscal policy has changed entirely the proportions of our importations from England and the United States, so that we now import a much larger quantity of goods from the latter country. In the presence of such facts it is not surprising that England, seeing that we are seeking our commercial advantages with the United States without regard to her interests, has thought fit to make an arrangement with France without taking the interests of Canada into consideration. The disproportion of free goods coming from France as compared with the goods paying duty, is much larger. For every dollar's worth of French goods that comes into Canada free of duty, fifty dollars if not one hundred dollars worth is dutiable. This discrimination in favor of the United States decided England and France to make arrangements to suit their own interests without taking Canada into consideration. The consequence is a duty of forty francs per ton has been imposed on Canadian vessels, while the duty on English vessels is only two francs per ton. This duty amounts to prohibition on Canadian vessels because, if we have to enter a vessel of say two thousand tons in France, it has to pay a duty of $16,000, while an English vessel of the same tonnage would only have to pay $800. That is $15,200.00 difference. Under such conditions the Canadian ship builder cannot compete with the English ship builder in the French market. I really believe that it is in the power of the Canadian Government to change this state of affairs. I have no doubt whatever if France and England were put on the same footing as the United States as to the proportion of goods admitted free of duty, there would be no difficulty in obtaining the same conditions for Canadian vessels as for ships of English build. I do not consider this matter from a temperance point of view. In one sense I am inclined to believe that the importation of light wines may have, to a certain extent, the effect of diminishing the use of strong liquors, but, on the other hand, it is possible that increasing the facilities for people to get cheap liquors might not prove the best way to promote temperance. It seems to me, in exchanging our vessels for the products of France, there are other articles than wines that we ought to import from France. For instance, in Manchester in the wholesale houses where the Canadian merchants make their purchases, there is always a department for French goods used in Canada. I do not see why our consumers should pay a commission to the English merchant, when the Canadian merchant might import those articles direct. There are French cloths which are bought in England which might better be imported direct from France, and there are other manufactures and products which might also be exchanged for our vessels. I hope the Government will see fit to amend their fiscal policy, in this sense and when France sees a disposition on our part to deal liberally with them, they will no doubt be prepared to admit our vessels on the same terms as the vessels of England.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This debate has taken a wider scope than it was first supposed it would. We have drifted away from the advantages of selling ships to France to the dangers of importing light wines. I am not going to discuss the question whether the benefits to be derived from selling our ships will be counter-balanced by the importation of foreign wines or not, but I wish to correct a statement of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. That hon. gentleman himself knows that there are no differential duties against France, and the Canadian merchant can as well import his goods direct from France as import French goods through English houses.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—I did not say there were differential duties, I said the proportion of dutiable goods is much larger from France and England than from the United States. While more than one-half the merchandise imported from the United States is free from duty, of the merchandise imported from France, the proportion of free goods is as one dollar to one hundred dollars of dutiable goods.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The articles on the free list happen to come from the United States and not from France. When the papers come down it will be seen that the Government have for the last two years given the subject great consideration. It is one in which we cannot deal directly with France, but we must conduct our negotiations through the Imperial Government. England has made several treaties with France during the past few years, and in none of those treaties have any of the colonies of Great Britain participated. In the last commercial convention it was decided, in view of English ships being allowed to be registered in France at a low rate of duty, French wines should be allowed to be imported into England at a reduced rate. The people of this country seem to be impressed with the idea that it would be an advantage to Canada to be able to sell their ships in the French market. Therefore it was that this Government have endeavored to obtain from France privileges similar to those enjoyed by England under the last treaty. The whole difficulty lies with France. It is for France to say whether we give her the quid pro quo that England gives her. Our proposition to France is practically the same proposition as was made by England some years ago, when the treaty was made between France and Great Britain and Ireland. Neither Canada nor any of her other colonies were entitled to share in the advantages that flowed from that treaty, and our proposition to France is that we are prepared to make this reduction of duties on the light wines of France, which contain less than twenty-six per cent. proof—I think that is the standard; that the rate of duty charged on those wines shall be the same in Canada as that charged on the same wines in England, provided that Canadian ships would be allowed to be registered in France on the same conditions as English built vessels. The correspondence is practically going on still and the proposition of Canada has not yet been acceded to.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Was the offer ever made to France that the spirits of that country should be allowed to come in here at a lower duty?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the light wines only. It is a similar proposition to that made by Great Britain and Ireland.

BAPTIST FOREIGN MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. McMASTER moved the adoption of the amendments made by the Select Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills to (Bill C.)—Baptist Foreign Missionary Society Incorporation Bill. He said—Grave doubts seemed to be entertained by the committee as to the jurisdiction of this Parliament with reference to the property clauses in this Bill, and, consequently, they have been abandoned, and clause "A" has been substituted for them. The new clause is as follows:—

"The said Society by the name of the Regular Baptist Foreign Missionary Society of Ontario and Quebec, may receive, acquire, and hold moneys, promissory notes, bank stocks and public securities, and invest moneys now held by the said Society, or which may here-

"after be acquired, in bank stocks and public securities, and dispose of the same for the purpose of furthering the objects of the said Society as and when it may seem expedient so to do."

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—When this Bill came before the Senate for its second reading, I stated that I thought it was unconstitutional, and that it came within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures. The hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill informs us it has been amended, but it has not been presented to the House in its present shape, and I believe it would be only right that it should be printed as amended before being read the third time. I believe even as it now stands there are doubts whether it comes within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. If the motion is pressed I will feel it my duty to move that the Bill be referred to the Supreme Court for their decision as to its constitutionality.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I really do not think any constitutional point is left now in the Bill, the objectionable clauses having been stricken out. It merely enables them, now, to hold personality. I do not think there can be any objection to that. Then, as to the incorporation of such a society, we have passed many acts of incorporation to enable associations to do business in more than one province. There really does not seem to be much left in the Bill; certainly, from my point of view, nothing objectionable remains. No new clause has been added to the Bill except the one to enable them to hold personality, and that is printed in the minutes. It seems to me the Bill should be allowed to pass.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—That such bills have passed this House, there is no doubt, but I have raised objections to some of them. I may say I take strong exception to this Bill, because a couple of years ago objections were raised to a similar measure, of which I had charge. I believe we should deal in this Parliament only with matters which are clearly within our jurisdiction. This Bill may be amended, but it gives the Society power to possess, and, therefore, it affects civil rights which come exclusively within the jurisdiction of the local legislatures. I do not see what objection there can be to submitting it to the Supreme Court. I have another reason for wishing to have a decision upon the constitutionality of this Bill. We have had before this Senate much private legislation, which, I believe, ought to have been sent back to the local legislatures. This kind of legislation is working mischief against Confederation, because, if this Parliament is to enact all the legislation, and if the local legislatures are to have nothing to do, it will be the best argument by and by in favor of a legislative union, to which I am opposed, as I believe many hon. gentlemen in both Houses of Parliament are. I believe the best way would be to send all such doubtful bills to the Supreme Court for their decision upon them. When we have the opinions of the Judges, the committees of both Houses will know how to deal with such measures in a uniform manner. Even last year there were bills before us which, I am sure, ought to have been introduced in the local legislatures. We had a Bill to incorporate a company to build a bridge over L'Assomption River. Will anyone tell me that Bill should have been submitted to this House? It is better that we should know at once how we should deal with such measures. If the hon. gentleman presses his motion, I will feel it my duty to ask the House to refer the Bill to the Supreme Court for their decision.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I hope the hon. gentleman who has just spoken will not press his objection to this Bill. The House will remember I made myself rather pertinacious in times past, in defending the rights of the local legislatures, and certainly I would be the last to desire to encroach in any way on those rights. There appears to be a slight misconception in the mind of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bellerose) on this subject. The question of civil rights, under the British North America Act, is a very difficult one, undoubtedly, but my hon. friend must recollect, while we are legislating on subjects within the purview of this House, and while we incidentally give civil rights to those parties, the power of determining those civil rights is in the provinces, and in the courts of the provinces. We only give such incidental rights as are necessary to carry out legislation here. Therefore, it comes back to the point—is this a matter within the purview of this House. If we throw a doubt on the power of this House to pass such a Bill as this, we would raise a question as to the constitutionality of many bills passed in former sessions which, though not exactly similar to this, are of a cognate character. Now, two years ago I agreed in the propriety of sending the Bill incorporating the Christian Brothers to the Supreme Court, but that was a different bill and it was referred on an entirely different ground—on the ground that the subject matter of the measure (education) was one which by the Constitution, was assigned exclusively to the local legislatures. But in all cases where powers have been sought by corporations to extend over half a dozen different provinces, and where it would be necessary otherwise to apply to half a dozen different legislatures for acts of incorporation, we have acted on the principle, during the last ten years, to give the powers asked for except when they interfere, as in the matter of local education, with subjects exclusively local. This is not exclusively local in any sense. It is for the spread of the principles of this Baptist body in foreign parts, and it is merely to enable them to do in the different provinces, what they would be empowered to do if they went to each of the legislatures in a separate form for an act of incorporation. I really think, under the circumstances, my hon. friend ought not to persist in his objections to this measure, and I do think it is not a bill which we should refer to the Judges of the Supreme Court. Upon that point I would just say to my hon. friend, before we put ourselves in the position of expressing doubts that would justify us in going to the Supreme Court for advice, we ought to be well satisfied it is a case which requires reference, or otherwise we put ourselves in a false position. I do not think, therefore, the House would be disposed to refer the Bill when there is no reasonable doubt that the subject is one which to-day, as it has always been held in times past, is within the purview of this House.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—In the second clause of this Bill, it is stated that the object is the diffusion of Christian knowledge. I ask the hon. gentleman if under this clause the Society would not have the right to establish schools? I am not a lawyer, but the hon. gentleman is, and I ask his opinion on this point.

Hon. Mr Dickey.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—My hon. friend must see that if he objects to this clause, he must object to any form of Christian instruction in this country, and surely he does not propose to do that. That is all the second clause gives them power to do. We live in a free country, and if this Society choose to propogate their peculiar views, which may not be in accord with the hon. gentleman's or my own, surely we will not say we shall not grant them an act to enable them to do so.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—That is not an answer to my question. I want to know whether under the second section they would not have the power to establish schools? I say, if they would, then they should go to the local legislatures. That is one argument, and the other is the question of civil rights.

Hon. Mr. McMASTER—There is no intention of establishing schools. The main reason for coming to this legislature for the Bill, is because the Society is carrying on its operations outside the Dominion, in India. It is receiving here, of course, means in various ways for that purpose. The clause providing for holding property has been, at the suggestion of the committee, entirely struck out, so that the Bill is now a very simple and harmless one, and I don't see how it can be objected to, especially in view of the number of bills of a similar character passed here during the past Session. For instance, the Grangers had a bill passed last year empowering them to hold property and dispose of it as they thought proper. The Commercial Travellers had a bill passed giving them similar powers. We abandoned the clauses with reference to the property altogether, and intend to go to the local legislatures for those powers. But, as we are operating outside the Dominion, we ask to have the Society entrusted with the very limited power which consists of holding bank stock and Government securities.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—When my hon. friend opposite asked me if this second clause was not objectionable, as giving power to establish schools, I thought I had made myself sufficiently clear when I stated that this clause gives no such power at all. It merely states that the object of the Bill is to diffuse Christian knowledge. Even if they had no act of incorporation there is nothing to prevent them doing that. This is a free country. But if this clause could be twisted in any way into power for giving secular education, it would be ultra vires and would go for nothing. But the clause does not do that. It merely states the objects of the Society, and one of them is the diffusion of Christian knowledge. If that were an objection it would certainly stop anybody from giving Christian instruction in this country, unless empowered to do so by act of a local legislature.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman who has just spoken states that he conceives there is no possible doubt on this question. That may depend on his own opinion, and the same thing may be said of everything which is submitted to a tribunal. There are parties who have no doubt as to their rights, but still tribunals decide against them. I would merely refer the hon. gentleman to the proceedings of the Private Bills' Committee, on this very Bill, wherein the hon. members of the committee divided equally on the preamble of the Bill, and it was only adopted by the casting vote of the chairman. The fact, that a committee, the majority of whose members belong to the legal profession, was equally divided on the preamble of this Bill, proves to my mind that this is a measure which should be referred to the Supreme Court for a decision as to whether it comes under the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE moved that the Bill be referred to the Supreme Court for their decision as to whether it came within the jurisdiction of this Parliament.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said the Bill should have been referred before its second reading, as the hon. gentleman would see by reference to the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE asked if there was a new rule on the subject since three years ago.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said there had been a revision of the rules, and if the hon. gentleman would look at Rule 55, he would find that it read as follows:—

“Before the second reading of any Private Bill, the same may, if the Senate think fit, be referred to the Supreme Court for their examination and report, as to any point or

“matter in connection with such Bill expressed in the Order of Reference.”

Hon. Mr. MACMASTER—The hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Trudel) says, that the preamble was only carried in committee by the casting vote of the chairman. That is quite correct, but I think several hon. gentlemen who voted against it would not have done so had they been aware that the three clauses referring to property would have been withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—This was perfectly understood before the voting took place, and still half the committee pronounced against the preamble.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Looking at this Bill from a strictly legal point of view, I should deeply regret that this Senate should narrow its prerogative to such a degree as not to be able to charter individuals where it was perfectly clear that it did not involve any question of civil rights. When this Bill was first introduced, I myself stated that I thought it was not clearly within the purview of the House, inasmuch as it authorized the association to hold real estate. I mentioned the objections which attached to these particular clauses, inasmuch as all those societies usually obtained a considerable amount of property through devises, and therefore it would be practically giving them powers which conflicted with the statutes of mortmain existing in the Province. Those statutes are different in the several provinces of the Dominion. The promoters of this Bill called upon me with reference to those clauses, and I stated to them that they were the only objectionable features of the Bill. They informed me that they were quite alive to that fact; they had taken legal advice on the subject, and they were aware they would have to go to the local legislatures to get power to hold real estate, and they believed it would be of some assistance to them in obtaining charters in the several provinces if their existence as a corporate body were recognised by the Federal Parliament. I replied, I thought they were really getting nothing for their money, as the Bill without those clauses was of very little value to them. The Bill when stripped of those clauses is of so little importance, that I think it would be a great mistake for us to adopt a precedent that it was not in our power to charter any body of individuals for any proper or right purpose. Therefore, I hope my hon. friend will withdraw his objection. In the Bill to which allusion has been made—with regard to the Christian Brothers—if I am not mistaken, authority was asked to hold real estate. It was for the purpose of enabling them to concentrate in one title the properties they already held in some provinces where they had charters, and in provinces where they had no charter, and to relieve them from the necessity of obtaining charters in those provinces. That, I think, was the true objection to the Bill rather than the educational clauses. As the society which now seeks incorporation will have to apply to all the local legislatures for power to acquire property in the several provinces, I think my hon. friend might withdraw his objection to this particular Bill, as it simply incorporates a society without giving them any power than to hold personal property. It avoids the necessity of holding property by trustees. That is practically all the Bill does.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I rise to speak on the question of order. It has been stated that, according to the rules of the House, I could not move at this stage to have the Bill submitted to the Supreme Court for their decision. My contention is that the rule is not binding. The Senate can, if it see fit, move before the second reading but that does not preclude the House from doing so at a subsequent stage of the Bill. In 1876, I observe by the Journals of the House, the Bill to incorporate the Christian Brothers was submitted to the Supreme Court after it had been reported back from committee to be read for the third time. Though the rules have been changed since then, I see they have not been so framed as to prevent me from now moving the reference of the Bill to the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—My hon. friend is quite correct as to the motion which was made on that occasion. I voted against it, as I shall be obliged to vote against this. Although the word "may" is used in this rule, it is equivalent to "shall," and must be considered, in this case, in that sense. My hon. friend will see the necessity of moving before the second reading. At that stage the House either affirms or disapproves the principle of the Bill; after the principle is affirmed I think we would stultify ourselves if we referred the Bill to the Supreme Court. Besides that, I think it would be in contravention of the rule of the House.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the precedent to which he refers. That motion was made previous to the House adopting standing orders. There was a revision of the rules, and this one, relating to the referring of bills to the Supreme Court, was fully discussed in the Senate, and it was plain to me that the most fitting time that any reference of a bill to the Judges of the Supreme Court should be made, was before the second reading.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—It seems strange that my hon. friend (Mr. Bellerose) should have any doubt about that. The Senate may, if they think fit, refer a bill; if they do not think fit, they need not refer it all; but in any case they cannot refer it except before the second reading, and then only if they think it a fit subject for reference. It appears to me so plain that I do not see how my hon. friend could object to it.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—It is so plain, I do not understand it. Suppose a bill passes the second reading before attention is called to the fact that it does not come under the jurisdiction of this House, will the hon. gentleman say even then that the House had no power to refer it to the Supreme Court? I think we have, and that is why the 55th rule has been framed as it is. It was not intended—and I believe it was so stated at the time—to prevent any one moving the reference of it at any other stage.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND—The intention of that rule was just the reverse of the principle laid down by the hon. Senator who has resumed his seat. I happened to have the honor of being a member of the committee of revision, and the question was debated at great length; it was then determined, in drawing up that rule, that the right time for sending the Bill for the opinion of the Judges of the Supreme Court, was before the principle was affirmed or repudiated by this House, so that we should not commit ourselves to a measure about which there was any doubt. The words "if the Senate think fit" were intended to cover a case in which there was a doubt as to the constitutionality of the Bill, but there never was an intention that it should be sent to the Judges of the Supreme Court after the second reading.

Mr. SPEAKER—My opinion is that the motion in amendment is not in order; that the construction of the rule as given by several hon. members is correct. The Senate by this rule reserved to itself the right to submit to the opinions of Judges of the Supreme Court any Bill, but it was not imperative in all cases; and that reference must be before the second reading of the Bill, because then, as has been stated, the principle of the Bill is agreed to.

The amendments were concurred in on a division.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

The House adjourned at 3.50 p.m.

ST. JOHN RIVER RAILWAY BRIDGE.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

Hon. Mr. DEVER moved.

"That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House, any correspondence that the Government may have respecting a Railway Bridge across the falls, at St. John, New Brunswick, so as to connect the Government work known as the Intercolonial Railway, with that of Western Extension at said Falls."

He said—The motion which I have the honor of placing before you to day I consider is one of some merit, inasmuch as it involves the expenditure of a considerable sum of money. It is also important because it effects very largely the Maritime Provinces in their mode of transit through those provinces and the connection with the railway system of the United States by means of the Western Railway Extension. I might state that the "European and North American Railway," now known as part of the Intercolonial, was constructed out of the private purse of New Brunswick long before that province came into the Union. New Brunswick constructed that 108 miles of road while under a tariff not exceeding 14½ per cent ad valorem, with a large free list of materials that entered into the construction of our shipping. The specific portion of our tariff was very much lower than that portion of the tariff which prevails in Canada to-day. Under that tariff prior to coming into the Union, tobacco only paid a duty of five cents per pound; to-day under the Canadian tariff it pays 25 to 27 cents per pound. Spirit in those days paid a duty of 30 cents per gallon; to-day a similar spirit pays $1.65 per gallon. Geneva in those days paid 50 cts. per gallon; at the present day it pays $1.00 per gallon proof. Brandies in those days paid eighty cents per gallon, any strength; to-day they pay one dollar, on proof; whiskey paid 50 cts. then, any strength; now it pays $1 on proof. In other words, the specific portion of our tariff under Confederation I hold to be some three hundred per cent more than it was at the time New Brunswick constructed the "European and North American Railway." Hon. gentlemen will see by this what our Province has contributed to Canada by coming into the Confederation. We are now compelled to pay an average of some 25 per cent. on everything that comes into the Province, and hence have some reason to expect that the Government of Canada shall be liberal in the construction of our public works. Before Confederation New Brunswick gave encouragement to any company that would undertake to construct a railway from the American boundary through that Province to the City of St. John to connect with the European and North American road, and under that subsidy—ten thousand dollars per mile—a company was formed and the railway was constructed from the boundary of Maine to the River St. John, adjacent to the city of St. John. The intention was to connect it with the European and North American Railway, and thereby form a through line from the United States through the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, which would invite light freight, mails and passengers to take shipping at Halifax for Liverpool and Europe, and vice versa. But Confederation has changed the condition of our affairs; we have now to look to Canada to finish these works. Under Confederation the road known as the Intercolonial Railway was built on the North Shore of New Brunswick, and finally connected with the "European and North American" near Moncton, and the whole road from St. John to Riviere du Loup, is now known as the Intercolonial Railway. It would appear that the original design of the promoters of those railways in New Brunswick has not been carried out, as a gap of a mile, or a mile and a half exists where this bridge is required, and the want of this connection is seriously felt, not only by the people of New Brunswick, but of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island as well. If this bridge were built and the connection were made, it is believed it would be the means of creating a large traffic that would add greatly to the wealth of those Provinces and furnish more work for the Intercolonial. Surveys of the work have been made and we find that the cost of it would be considerable. The span of the bridge would be about 700 feet, and it would involve the construction of a piece of railway from the present terminus in St. John to the bridge, altogether costing three quarters of a million or a million of dollars, perhaps. The people of St. John feel that Canada has a right, under the changed condition of affairs and their greatly increased taxation, to undertake the construction of this work and carry it to completion at as early a date as possible. We feel that there is too much apathy shown on the part of our representatives in this matter. The representatives from the Upper Provinces seem to think that they have performed their duty by constructing the Intercolonial, that they have acquitted themselves of their obligation. In answer to that, I would say, that until this connection be made, the Intercolonial Railway cannot possibly be a paying institution. It terminates practically at St. John. The Western Extension Company, from what I can learn, are now in somewhat difficult circumstances. There is no hope in that direction that they will undertake the construction of this bridge, and the people turn to the Dominion Government in the hope that they will take this scheme up as a public work, complete the connection, and thereby do a vast amount of good to the Maritime Provinces. I hope all the members from the Lower Provinces will co-operate with me and impress upon the Government the necessity of having this scheme carried out. The Government have expended immense sums of money on the Pacific Railway in ways and means that have not shown results we might properly look for. These matters have been debated on so often that it is painful for me to revert to them, but I cannot help thinking that a portion of this money that is said to have been squandered on speculations that have not turned out very favorably, would be sufficient to complete this much needed public work. I might, for the information of the House, point out that the length of the bridge between the piers, according to the plans given us, would be 648 feet; height of the bridge above high water level, 70 feet; width of bridge, 23 feet; cost of construction, $250,000 to $300,000. I would humbly submit to the Government that it would be received as a favor by the people of St. John, and I think I may say, of the three lower Provinces, if they would give this matter their serious attention at as early a date as possible.

Hon. Mr. Haviland.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—In seconding the motion, I do not know that I can add much to what my hon. friend from St. John has stated, excepting to mention this fact, that the River St. John presents the only break in the railway communication between Halifax and San Francisco. The suspension bridge over the St. John cost only about $80,000; what a railway bridge would cost I cannot say. There must be some correspondence with reference to such an important work, and the Government will, no doubt, furnish it to the House. I was looking at the Trade and Navigation returns for the last year, and I find that, while Ontario paid in custom duties in 1877, $2.87 per head to the revenue of the country, Quebec, $3.87, and Nova Scotia, $3.35, New Brunswick paid $3.82. Now, it is very evident that the revenue from the Province of New Brunswick has been very largely increased during the present fiscal year, in consequence of the destruction of property by the disastrous fire at St. John, to a much larger extent than the cost of this bridge. It would, therefore, be a very opportune time to construct the work. It has been estimated that the increased duties at St. John is something like $500,000; and it is certain that during the coming year, the sum collected will be very much larger, as so many private residences will have to be built and furnished. There has been an expenditure going on in the harbor of St. John, which, in my judgment, is a complete waste of money—that is, the construction of a breakwater from Negro Town Point to Partridge Island, and I have been informed it is the intention of the Government to extend it all the way and close up the western channel. Now, I have lived a large portion of my life in St. John, and have been engaged in shipping there, and I feel confident if that is done, that any vessel which cannot get to windward of Partridge Island will be driven on a rock-bound coast with a certainty of loss of life. I only refer to this fact in order to show that the money might have been applied much more advantageously in building this bridge on the great line of railway communication across the continent. The pilots condemn it, the masters of the steamboats coming into the harbor condemn it also, and the men who have been members of the Common Council and on the Harbor Committee, I was speaking to them just before coming away, and they could not understand who originated the expenditure. I suppose it was the idea of a Civil Engineer, and the engineers, it would appear, control the Government. I think every member from New Brunswick ought to press upon the Government the necessity of constructing this bridge, and now is the time to do it. It has been looked for long enough, and now when St. John is contributing so largely to the revenue of the country, after having sustained such a heavy loss, is the time that the work should be undertaken.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think not only every member from New Brunswick should press upon the Government the early undertaking of this work, but every member from Nova Scotia should join with them, because that Province has fully as large an interest in the completion of that link of international communication as the Province of New Brunswick. I am very glad this matter has been brought before the House, and I hope there will be such an expression of opinion, both from the Province of New Brunswick and the Province of Nova Scotia, as will induce the Government at an early date to give their attention to the subject. It is very well known that for years past it has been a matter of serious complaint and agitation not only in New Brunswick, but Nova Scotia, that this important link in the communication with the neighboring country, where so large a portion of our business operations are carried on, has not been completed. The amount of trade and intercourse between Nova Scotia and the United States, as hon. gentlemen here who come from that Province well know, is very large. The chief means of travel during the whole of the year—business travel especially—is by the Intercolonial and the Western Extension. This missing link at St. John is a costly and vexatious inconvenience and interruption to travel and traffic, and causes much loss of time to travellers, as well as serious injury to trade. It has now become a subject of universal complaint in those two Provinces, and why it has not been undertaken as a portion of the Intercolonial railway, and as a connecting link with the Western Extension, the people cannot understand. I am glad to hear from my hon. friend (Mr. Wilmot) that there is but one opinion among the people of New Brunswick, and I presume, from the expressions of opinion we have heard from their representatives here today, they are even more desirous than the people of Nova Scotia to see it completed. I shall not say anything in addition to the remarks of the hon. gentlemen who have already spoken, because I think the necessity of this work is so well recognized in the Lower Provinces, that it requires no argument from any one to press its importance upon the House. The duties paid by the Maritime Provinces under the existing tariff have been referred to. There is one remark which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Wilmot) made, to which I cannot give acquiescence. I admit that in consequence of the fire at St. John the revenue from New Brunswick this year, and in all probability for some succeeding years, will be larger than it otherwise would; and I am also willing to admit that New Brunswick contributes as much, in proportion to its wealth, to the revenue of the Dominion as any other of the old provinces; but when the hon. gentleman states, that for some years past it has contributed more than any other of these provinces, I wish to say that I believe Nova Scotia pays per head more than that Province. And the reason is obvious. Our industries consume very largely of dutiable goods. We have extensive shipping interests, and it is very well known that we are the largest ship owning country in the world, in proportion to our population; we have very extensive fishing and mining interests also, and all those industries consume largely of dutiable goods. The consequence is that we contribute more, in proportion to our population, to the revenue than any other of the old provinces of the Dominion. The reason why New Brunswick appears to be a larger contributor than Nova Scotia is this: since Confederation and the breaking down of the revenue tariff between the two Provinces, and since the assimilation of the currency of the Dominion, the trade between New Brunswick and the city of St. John has increased to a large degree. It always existed to a considerable extent before Confederation, but since then, these barriers having been removed, the trade has increased enormously, and a large portion of the Province of Nova Scotia—all those rich counties lying on the shores of the Bay of Fundy, which include the most fertile portion of Nova Scotia—have now their direct trade with New Brunswick and its capital, St. John. Perhaps two-thirds, or, may be three-fourths of the dutiable goods consumed in those counties are purchased in St. John, and the revenue which those goods pay is credited to the Province of New Brunswick, in the same way that a very large portion of the revenue of this country, though paid in Montreal, actually, in the end, comes out of the pockets of the consumers, the people of Ontario, while the Port of Montreal gets the credit of it, because the revenue is collected there. Therefore, except under the peculiar circumstances in which it is placed through the loss of the City of St. John, New Brunswick does not pay more per head than Nova Scotia; but it is a melancholy reflection that, in consequence of that calamity, the Government are going to get $500,000 more revenue from the unfortunate Province of New Brunswick. It has suggested, however, an idea which might not be unworthy the consideration of the Finance Minister—that by burning down half a dozen of our chief cities he might be able to turn his deficits into a surplus, as that heaven-born financier has so far proved himself unequal to any better scheme for attaining that result.

Hon. Dr. CARRALL—I rise to correct the statement that either Nova Scotia or New Brunswick pays more per head to the revenue of the country than any other province of the Dominion. I would remind the hon. gentlemen who have said so, that British Columbia pays nearly three times as much taxes per head into the Dominion Treasury, as any other province in the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. LEWIN—I think there can be but one opinion in this House, that it is a most desirable thing this connection should be made between the Intercolonial and the Western Extension railways, it being the only break in the railway communication between the United States and the Maritime Provinces. The distance, I believe, is only two miles, but it would be a very costly work, because it would involve the expenditure of a large amount in purchasing the right of way, besides the building of the bridge. I was really surprised at the observations of my hon. friend (Mr. Wilmot) with reference to the breakwater at St. John. I have heard but one opinion expressed as to that work by ship-masters and others in St. John, who are competent to speak on the subject; they all agree that it is a most necessary work, and well built, that it breaks the heavy south-west seas that roll into the harbor of St. John, and the hon. gentleman himself is the first person I ever heard speak against it. That the breakwater is a work of great advantage to St. John, I think cannot be disputed, and I am very much surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say the money expended upon it is wasted.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—My hon friend is very well aware there is what is called the "Beacon" Bar running from Sand Point to the Beacon, and that pier is a great security against the south-east gale.

I speak practically, having been for many years a ship owner at St. John, when I say that the injury to shipping in the harbor is from the south-east gale, and if that breakwater had been put on the east side down to the foul ground it would have been a very great advantage to St. John. Last year, the fishermen say the fisheries were a failure, and they attribute it to the existence of that breakwater. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Lewin) says nobody but myself condemns the expenditure on the breakwater. Sheriff Harding has had a very great deal of experience in such matters, and he condemns it; Mr. McAvity has had a great deal to do with the harbor, and he is of the same opinion; Captain Steene, who, for many years ran a steamer between Digby and St. John, informed me there was not a pilot but condemned it. The damage is not so much from the south-west gale, but, as I said before, from the south-east gale.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—All the members from the Maritime Provinces must feel greatly interested in having the Intercolonial Railway connected with the Western Extension by a bridge across St. John's harbour. It is quite certain that the want of it is a great inconvenience to the travelling public, and a great loss to Halifax as well as St. John. If that missing link were completed, connecting St. John with Carleton, the Intercolonial would have the benefit of the additional passengers, freight, mails, and travel which would go by way of Halifax. It would shorten the sea voyage distance between Halifax and New York some six hundred miles, which is a matter of very great importance to passengers between New York and Europe, as many persons are anxious to make the sea voyage as short as possible. I am very glad my hon. friend from St. John has brought this matter before the House. It does not involve such an amount of money as would be out of proportion to the great advantage it would afford to the travelling public, and to the Intercolonial Railway itself, looking upon it as a matter of public interest, as developing trade with Halifax, and increasing the revenue from the Intercolonial Railway, and not lessening the traffic with the Upper Provinces by way of Riviere du Loup. I believe it is a matter of such importance that it cannot fail to receive from the Government proper attention, and I hope they will feel that it should be undertaken at an early date. Until to-day I had supposed that the principal obstacle lay in the difficulty of deciding the location of the bridge, whether it should be at the Falls or Navy Island. I hope, now that no difficulty of that kind seems to stand in the way, the Government will give proper consideration to this matter, and will not fail to establish this connection which is in every way of such importance to the people of the Maritime Provinces.

Hon. Mr. WARK—I am glad to hear the statement made by the hon. gentlemen opposite that the people of Nova Scotia are so deeply interested in these New Brunswick railways. That was admitted at the Conference the time the delegates went Home and the debts were fixed between the two Provinces. I remember our leading delegate made a speech in St. John soon after their return, and he admitted that $7,000,000 was a larger amount in proportion to the population of New Brunswick, than the $8,000,000 allotted to Nova Scotia, but as the Nova Scotian delegate said, a certain amount was to go to the building of this connecting link, and they were so far interested in it that they consented to New Brunswick going into Confederation with a larger debt in proportion to her population than Nova Scotia. That appears to have been altogether forgotten, when a difficulty arose between the Dominion and Nova Scotia, and in order to allay the discontent in that Province and retain it in the union, the debts were then arranged according to population altogether, and the benefit, which the hon. gentleman now admits, was then thrown out of sight. When this Western Extension was built and completed, I may say, to the brink of the River St. John, there was an expensive embankment constructed to carry it out to where a bridge ought to start from. The company then applied to the Government of the day to aid in building this bridge, and were prepared to pay a considerable portion of the expense, but the Government did not see their way to rendering the assistance required. If it had been undertaken at that time, instead of the whole of the burden being thrown on the Government as it would be now, the railway company would have paid their portion of it. I remember the time when there was a celebration of the opening of the Western Extension Railway from Bangor to St. John. There were a good many leading men of the United States present, and among them the Post Master General, and he told us that as soon as they could prove that they could deliver mails twenty-four hours sooner than by steamer at New York, he would give the mails to the railway to carry. This would be an important item in the revenue of the road. If the Government of that day had rendered a moderate amount of assistance at that time the connection would have been made, because the company could then have sold their bonds at a good price; unfortunately, the railway has since passed into the hands of the bondholders, and they are now running it, and are not in a position to contribute anything to the building of the bridge, so that if it is constructed, it will have to be entirely at the expense of the Government. It is an unfortunate time now, in the depressed state of the finances of the country, to urge this matter upon the Government. At the time I speak of, when the road was completed to the bank of the river, there was an overflowing treasury, and that was the proper time to have built the bridge. When the Government refused to assist the undertaking the Company carried the road down in the rear of Carleton Heights to a point opposite the city, where all the traffic now crosses the harbor by a ferry.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Until to-day I was of the same opinion as the hon. gentleman from Richmond, that there must be some feeling of hostility in New Brunswick to this work, but I am happy to hear to-day that no such feeling exists. Any one who has travelled from the United States to St. John, or any portion of the Maritime Provinces east of the St. John River, must have experienced the inconvenience which arises from the present state of things. The crossing by ferry from the Western Extension to St. John is one of the most unpleasant parts of the journey from Boston to Halifax. The weather is very often disagreeable, and the harbor is not always smooth. Then, when one arrives at St. John at half past six in the evening if the night trains are running, as they do in summer, one has to wait four hours there before he can leave, and that is a considerable loss of time to one who has important business, and finds time valuable. If the bridge were completed and the Western Extension Railway connected with the Intercolonial, there is no doubt but that trains would be run through, without a stoppage at all, from Boston or Portland to Halifax, and there would probably be night trains throughout the year instead of during the summer months only, as at present. That is the inconvenience with regard to passengers. I think the advantage which this connection would afford, with regard to freight trains, would be still greater. As it is now, the necessity of breaking bulk at Carleton almost altogether prevents the carrying of any freight for points east of the St. John River over the Western road; but if this link were completed a great deal of freight would come to Halifax and other points east of St. John over this route. I think that St. John, Halifax, and all points east of St. John would be very much benefited indeed by having not only the Intercolonial, but this road from the United States. Possibly this road when completed might be looked upon by some persons as a competitor with the Intercolonial, but I can see no danger of that, because the trade over the Western Extension would be almost altogether from the United States, and would not interfere with the trade from the Upper Provinces. I presume, in the present state of the finances of the country, if this work is as expensive as represented by the hon. gentleman from St. John, some little time might elapse before it could be undertaken; but I think it is desirable that information should be laid before Parliament as to the probable cost of the work, and that steps should be taken to provide at an early date to have this important link in our railway communication completed. I think it is to be regretted that, when the finances of the country were in a better condition, and the Western Extension railway was being built, this link was not supplied. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just sat down on that head. I hope if the finances of the country do not admit of its construction now, they will in a year or two.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that there is any recent correspondence on this subject, or that the matter has been brought under the notice of the Government for the last three years. I understand correspondence was opened in January, 1873, and that the Western Extension Company, who would be most benefited by this work, were called upon to say what proportion they would contribute to build the bridge, but no satisfactory reply was received. If the money of this country were expended on this work, it would be practically in the interest of that company, just as the building of the bridge at Niagara is for the benefit of the New York Central. We did not contribute to that bridge. The papers will be brought down.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I freely admit the Western Extension would be benefited by this work, but the Intercolonial Railway will also be largely benefited—more perhaps than the road from Maine.

The motion was agreed to.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

HOUSES FOR ENGINEERS.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS moved :—

He said—If it were possible to obtain the information covered by this motion in the blue books, I certainly would not have troubled the House, as I now propose to do, for a few minutes. It appears from the report of the Minister of Public Works for last year, that certain houses for the engineers along the Canadian Pacific Railway, were to be constructed. I find in the appendix of that year that reference is made to two, one the house erected for the engineer at Fort William, and the other, I suppose, somewhere up the line, but where, I do not know. I presume we ought to have in the departmental blue book copies of these contracts. I find by referring to page 58 of the report of the Minister of Public Works, that by the Act 37 Vic. Cap. 14, it was enacted that,

Hon. Mr. Scott.

“Within one month of the opening of each Session, a report of the progress of the works and of the sums expended, together with copies of all contracts entered into since the last report, shall be presented to Parliament.”

My view is fully borne out, I think, from the fact that in two cases in the blue book of last year, these contracts have been referred to. I find on page 90 of the report of the Minister of Public Works, brought down this Session, that

“At Fort William a good house has been built for the District Engineer, and between that point and Selkirk, 18 smaller houses have been erected for the use of the Assistants on the line during construction, which, after the line is opened for traffic, will come into use in connection with the stations.”

Looking at the appendixes, I do not find any reference whatever to any of these contracts. I am inclined to think that contracts have been entered into by the Government for the construction of these houses, as it is not to be supposed they were erected by the Government by days' work. Now, in reference to the engineer's house at Fort William, I have this complaint to make against the Government—that tenders were invited for its erection shortly before the close of navigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Was that when tenders for the eight houses were called for?

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I am speaking now of the engineer's house at Fort William, and which is said to be “a good house.”

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Who was the builder?

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—The hon. gentleman can hardly expect me to answer that. I can tell him who the contractor was. As I have said, tenders were invited for the erection of this house about the close of navigation, and the contract was entered into prior, I believe, to the sailing of the last boat of the season on Lake Superior, on its downward trip. It is well known to hon. gentlemen who have visited that country, that, so far as stocks of lumber are concerned, there are none, and that the lumber required for improvements must be obtained from Oliver, Davidson & Co., who have a mill on the Kaministiquia, or got from the south shore of Lake Superior. The lateness of the season when tenders were called for, precluded anyone from tendering successfully, except those who had stocks of lumber, and hence it is most reasonable to suppose that the tender of Oliver, Davidson & Co. would be the accepted one, and that they would be the contractors for building this house, which was the case. There are two important requisites in the construction of "a good house," as the Minister says this one is—that the foundation be good, and the lumber inside well seasoned. Last summer I had an opportunity of seeing this house, and was surprised to see the cracked ceilings and the split walls, and the joiner work at joints in many places gaping. I came to the conclusion there must certainly be something wrong with this building.

Hon. Mr. PRICE—Perhaps there was an earthquake there!

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—No, not an upheaval, but a sinking. In looking over a copy of the specification, I find there is no reference to the foundation any more than posts are to be sunk in the ground to a certain depth, but nothing is said as to whether the foundation should be good or bad. The result has been that after the building was erected and completed, it sank, and the contractor had to jack it up in order to straighten the structure. This explains the cracked plaster on the walls and ceiling, and the openings in the joiner work showed that the lumber used was not dry, which the builder stated to me was the case. The question naturally arises, what necessity was there for erecting this building at all? The Government had already a costly building there. They had a structure there, large in its proportions and in the price paid for it.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The Neebing Hotel?

Hon. M. AIKINS—Yes, the Government possessed this, and if they had wished to complete it, they have contended that they had the materials there for doing so. Why then did they construct another building at a cost of something like $4,000?

Hon. Mr. Aikins.

Two buildings were not required there. What is true as to the time of inviting tenders for this engineer's house at Fort William, is also true of the other houses on the line, which are to be used hereafter in connection with stations. It might reasonably be supposed that in erecting such buildings in a wooden country, where timber is abundant, log houses would be most suitable since they were only intended in the first instance for the use of the assistant engineers, during the construction of the section. So soon as the line is open, if a different class of houses should be required, the material could be obtained without difficulty. But what do we find? In place of putting up log houses, they gave contracts for the erection of frame buildings. When the papers come down we will know how many there are, and what their cost has been. One of them, at Sunshine Creek, I saw, which is 32½ miles distant from Fort William by rail—how many miles by the Dawson Route I do not know. I am told that some of the lumber, by the time it was delivered to where some of those buildings have been erected or were contracted for, cost sixty or seventy dollars per thousand. It had to be teamed in, some of it as far as English River, a distance of twenty miles, through the wilderness. If that were all I had to charge against the Government, it might be said by them and their friends, "it is only a blunder," but there is something further: I am informed that tenders were not called for until after the close of navigation, and the contracts were not given out until after January, so that any one can understand where the lumber had to be obtained. There was none there except what was held by Oliver, Davidson & Co., and from whom it must be and was obtained. These gentlemen seem to have a general contract to furnish anything to the Government, no matter whether it be town lots, Neebing hotels, station houses or telegraph lines that they require. It may be said by the Government, it is a matter of little moment whether the contracts were let before or after the close of navigation, as the difference in cost would not amount to much. We had the statement made here the other evening, with regard to $180,000 expended on Fort Francis Lock, that it did not amount to much, the expenditure was only $180,000—a mere bagatelle—it was “only a blunder.” My experience is this ; those who are negligent in small matters cannot be trusted in larger transactions. Take these specifications for the house at Fort William, for instance, in which there is no provision made that there shall be a good foundation ; the result in that case is that the building is damaged. From the first handling of this Pacific railway by the present Government, there has been a series of blunders throughout. For instance, take the steel rails transaction. I have never before opened my lips on this subject in the House, but I have had my own opinions about it. Can any one imagine that the Premier was justified, under the circumstances, in expending the large amount he did, in a speculative investment like that? They were not then needed. Had they been, whether the market was falling or not, it might, and would be said, he was justified in purchasing them. But they were purchased in a falling market, when they were not required, and they are not needed yet, and I believe, will not be all used for years to come. If there had been a large surplus in the treasury, the Government might attempt to justify the purchase on that ground, but was there a surplus? you find one of the first acts of the Finance Minister was to inform the House he had to impose fresh taxes, and they were imposed, to cover what? Why, to cover an actual or an expected deficit in the Treasury. If the expenditure on steel rails, amounting to between two and three millions, had not been made, there would have been no necessity for imposing those fresh taxes. The purchase was a most egregious blunder. Take the surveys in British Columbia. That matter was very properly criticized by the hon. member from Amherst the other day, and the only excuse that can be offered in any way for the enormous expenditure there, is that it is desirable exhaustive surveys should be made rather than have the road improperly located.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the best answer.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I am glad to have the hon. gentleman's approval of the necessity of exhaustive surveys where large interests are involved. We will apply this principle to the location of an-

Hon. Mr. Aikins.

other portion of the railway—that part from Selkirk westward. The hon. gentleman says exhaustive surveys were necessary in British Columbia, but we find the road located from Selkirk westward, through a country unfit for settlement. Where are the exhaustive surveys south of Lake Manitoba? The southern line was never surveyed at all, never examined, or if examined, it was done in a most perfunctory manner. It consisted in this:—the chief engineer and staff, when on their way to British Columbia, went along the Cart Trail, and when they came to the Little Saskatchewan, they looked up and down the river and said, “it is a very bad crossing,” and that was the beginning and end of the examination. The purchase of the steel rails is admitted to be a blunder, but a greater blunder has been committed in the location of the line westward from Selkirk. I contend it is a blunder, not only against the interests of Manitoba, but against the interests of the whole Dominion. That railway ought to be built for the purpose of developing Manitoba and the North-West. That certainly was one of the objects of the road, but does it accomplish this? From Selkirk westward, for one hundred miles or more, you find the best land in the North-West. That is where all the settlements are, and those who go there from the older Provinces examine the land, and settle in the fertile belt, but the railway scarcely touches that fine tract of country, and to-day you will not find an hon. member of either House who has visited Manitoba, who does not condemn the location of the line. More than that, every resident of Manitoba protests strongly against the course the Government has taken in ignoring that Province, and running the railway away north of it, where it will be of no service to them. This must be admitted as a blunder of no small magnitude. Those who go to Manitoba to settle will resent the incapacity the Government have shown in the locating of this railway. Then, let us look at another blunder, one which, to my mind, is not of a very small character. Let us come eastward from Selkirk. There you find a piece of railroad being completed to Keewatin, 114 miles long. Then you find the lock at Fort Francis and those water stretches to English River. Then there is another piece of railway 114 miles long. You have those two sections of road, with the water stretches, the portages, and the Fort Francis Lock sandwiched in between them. The ablest defender the Government has in this House, or outside of it, admitted here the other day, that it was a blunder—that $180,000 of the peoples' money was thrown away in attempting to use these water stretches as a substitute for an all-rail route—yet the Government go on perpetuating the blunder. Then, let us come down a little further, and I appeal to the common sense of the House to bear witness as to the truth of what I am about to state. The statement was made in this House last year that the purchase of land on the Kaministiquia showed upon its face a job. I have no hesitation in repeating—though, inasmuch as a committee is investigating it, I will not dwell on the subject and what I stated last year I stand by—that a location as good as the one purchased, and better suited for the terminus of the railway, could have been obtained for one-fifth of the money. If hon. gentlemen are not satisfied of the truth of this statement, I have no doubt whatever that in a very short time they will be satisfied that it is correct. When you sum up all those matters in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway—and you may fairly judge of the whole by a part—you will agree with me that there has been a series of blunders from the very first day this Government had any connection with it. Taking into consideration all the facts I have mentioned with reference to these houses for the engineers, and keeping in view, also, the fact that the men who had the only stock of lumber which was available to erect them, were connected with the Fort William transaction, I think it will be admitted that it has a suspicious look—I will not say a job, that might be unparliamentary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—O, say it! you have said it before.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I have no hesitation in saying the Neebing Hotel and Kaministiquia land purchase is a job, and one of the grossest, for a small matter, ever perpetrated in Canada.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—That is saying a great deal.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I will hazard this statement, that the series of blunders in connection with this Pacific Railway is not rivalled by those perpetrated in connection with any enterprise of similar magnitude on this continent. I have not the least doubt, if we could get those papers for which I ask in time to examine them this Session, all that I have stated with reference to the time of inviting tenders would be found correct. We labor under this difficulty, we cannot get papers down for weeks and sometimes months after we move for them. Two sessions ago, I asked for papers which have never been submitted to the House. Last Session I asked for papers and I have not got them yet. It is true, we have not been long sitting this year, but one of the first motions made this Session was for papers, which I think a clerk could furnish in a few hours, and they are not brought down yet.

Hon. Mr. Aikins.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is that with respect to the telegraph.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Yes. I would much rather not make these remarks in moving for the papers, but the chances are the return will not come down until it is too late to look at it this Session.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will give the hon. gentleman my assurance that there will be no delay in bringing down these papers, that is, all the papers in the possession of the Department. There may be some which would involve the necessity of communicating with Fort William, and possibly Selkirk.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—The houses are completed, and consequently, the papers must be here.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite sure when my hon. friend sees the papers, he will be prepared to withdraw the insinuation that this is a job. The original papers, which I hold in my hand, and which he can see if he so desires, are all papers connected with the subject in the Department. They do not cover some of the buildings which the hon. gentleman has mentioned. The first instructions given for the erection of the houses were contained in a letter from Sandford Fleming to Samuel Hazlewood dated May 6th, 1875. That was before Mr. Hazlewood went to Fort William to take charge, and, I believe, before we were the proprietors of Neebing Hotel. The two buildings, one costing $1,600, and the other $4,000, were erected that year. When the attention of the Department was called to the expenditure going on, instructions were issued that no further expenditures should be entered upon without being authorized from the head office. It arose from a letter from Mr. Braun to Mr. Fleming, asking by what authority buildings were erected there. Upon receipt of that letter, Mr. Fleming communicated with Mr. Hazlewood, calling his attention to the instructions of the Department, and directing him on no account to receive tenders for buildings unless submitted here. Unfortunately, before that letter reached Mr. Hazlewood, he had issued notices calling for tenders for the erection of eight houses.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—In what year was that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This was in 1876. A copy of this notice was sent to the Department. Mr. Fleming was again addressed on the subject, and peremptory orders were issued that the buildings should not be gone on with unless the authority of the Department was given for them. This notice is signed by Mr. Hazlewood, and on that the tenders of nine persons were received. The contract was given for those eight houses to the lowest, Lemay and Blair.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—With no authority from the Department here?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have read the authority. Mr. Hazlewood assumed he had the authority, but the letter from Mr. Fleming showed he had exceeded the authority given to him. Unfortunately it is rather unpleasant to speak of Mr. Hazlewood, inasmuch as he is now dead, and therefore, I should make any statement bringing his name in question, with great caution. In the spring of the year, when Mr. Hazlewood was informed of the peremptory orders of the Department, it appears only four of the buildings had been really undertaken, consequently the contracts for the remaining four were cancelled. There were four buildings erected, one of which, I believe, was burned.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Two, I believe, were burned through neglect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Orders were given if the contractors in good faith had procured materials, that they should be paid for them.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Did the Government continue Mr. Hazlewood in their employ after it was discovered he had thus exceeded his orders?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; I think he was continued in Government employ.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Can the hon. gentleman inform me if the buildings were frame ones?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were to be built of the most suitable wood to be found in the vicinity. I suppose that was on the ground of economy. To have built them of masonry in such a remote place would have involved a large sum. The lowest tender for the building of the eight houses was $23,409, so that the average cost of each building would be between two and three thousand dollars. Considering the very remote point at which the buildings were erected, the price would not be an excessive one. My hon. friend must know that the cost of building here is no standard to the cost of building there, because the price of everything is enhanced by the remoteness of the place and the cost of getting materials there. When he sees the correspondence, he will be prepared to acquit the Department of any connection with a job in this matter. On the line of argument adopted by my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works would require not only to duplicate himself, but to triplicate or quadruplicate himself, if he were to go over all the details of every work under that Department, embracing an area of works of 4,000 miles from the Atlantic to the Pacific. If he cannot trust the officers employed he is entirely powerless. It is quite impossible that works can be carried on in remote places unless some discretionary power is given to the head of that particular branch. The Government had no idea Mr. Fleming would be influenced by any desire but to get the largest amount of work done for the smallest value. Mr. Fleming has a reputation in this country, and it would be quite improper for the Government to suspect that he had any wrong motive for his action in connection with the construction of those houses. My hon. friend has imported into this debate a number of subjects that have been discussed in this House before. He commenced with the Pacific Railway, and found fault with the Government because the surveys in British Columbia were exhaustive; then coming east he found fault with the Government because he considered the surveys were not exhaustive.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I said the only excuse for the delay in locating the line in British Columbia was because the surveys must be exhaustive, and I said apply that principle to the other.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend charged the Government with having failed to make exhaustive surveys in Manitoba. I assure my hon. friend and this House, and the country, that it would have been much more satisfactory to this Government had we been enabled to cross the Red River with the railway line at the capital of Manitoba, and to carry it south of Lake Manitoba. I have myself felt it would be much better if we could do so, because we had evidence before us that we had some population there, and that it was likely to increase and furnish traffic for the railway. Looking at the map and taking all the circumstances into account, one would naturally say the line should be carried that way if the country were suitable for its construction. But in this, as in other public works, the Government must act on the reports of the engineers. If the Government were to examine the routes personally, and arrive at their own conclusions, irrespective of the opinions of the engineers, would the House be satisfied to accept such a decision? It would rather expose the Government to the charge of having been actuated by motives which might be called in question. Therefore, it is the natural policy in all those cases to be guided by gentlemen whose reputation is such that their advice is accepted by the country as that of an impartial judge. It is on such advice the Government have decided to construct the line north of the lake. The hon. gentleman knows when this subject was brought before the committee last year, the attention of the Government was called to the advisability of seeking for a route south of Lake Manitoba. I concurred in that view, because I always felt it would be infinitely more satisfactory if we could find a line there. My hon. friend knows the engineers were called upon to look for a line south of the lake, and again they reported it was impossible to find one. It is quite obvious from the evidence given by Mr. Fleming before the committee last Session, that he was concluded in the opinion, and it was shared by those who were associated with him, that in consequence of the very wide banks of the streams west of Manitoba, it was quite impossible to find a line south of the lake. He, himself, said his natural inclination was to find a line there, because it was through a settled country, and through very fertile land for at least a hundred miles west of Red River, and he looked for a line in that direction first. Now, in the face of that evidence, neither this, nor any other Government would be justified in accepting the judgment of unskilled gentlemen in this House, or of others outside of it, that the line should be south of the lake. If they did, they would have to dismiss their engineers, get a new staff and instruct them to find a line in that particular direction, that such was the policy of the Government. The object in building the railway, in the first place, was to get connection with British Columbia by the shortest and best line.

Hon. Dr. CARRALL—Did not the hon. gentleman express the opinion on the hustings that the railway would not be completed for forty years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite aware that I made use of that expression. We commenced to build that road eight years ago, and one-fifth of that period has now elapsed. I made use of that expression in rather a figurative manner, and I don't think I should be bound down to it.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Perhaps you were right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It requires no prophetic eye to see it will be a considerable time yet before the line can be completed. I hope my prophecy will not be fulfilled, and that it will be built at a much earlier date. I made that statement to show my belief that the agreement of the late Government to build this road in ten years was a very idle one; that they promised what it was absolutely impossible to accomplish. My statement was, no doubt, made in a very exaggerated form. I explained this on a former occasion, and I trust I have satisfied my hon. friend. Coming eastward, the hon. Senator from Toronto takes exception to the location of the line between Lake Superior and the Red River. There again I concur with him, it would have been better if we could have followed the general direction of the Dawson Route. We know that the people who travelled over this country 200 years ago, had a pretty good knowledge of the lie of the land. The trails followed by the Jesuits are now the favorite lines of travel. The Indians knew more about the country than we do, and therefore it would have been advisable to have found a line by the Dawson Route, if possible. We asked Mr. Fleming whether it would not have been better to build the road by Sturgeon Falls. He said "yes." I think he stated that he spent one season and part of another looking for a line there. He got as far as Sturgeon Falls, but could not get a line that we would be justified in adopting, to Lake of the Woods. He was obliged, therefore, to carry his line north to reach Rat Portage. Mr. Fleming, after giving the subject all the attention it deserved, and with his prejudice in favor of the Sturgeon Falls route, had to abandon it. At the time he was trying to find this line, the Fort Francis Lock was conceived. It was gone on with, and it was hoped the line by Sturgeon Falls would be found suitable. Considering the saving it would have effected in carrying rails through, inasmuch as it would save 150 or perhaps 200 miles of transportation by railroad, the Government were justified in undertaking the work. As I said before, the Government must be guided by the reports of the engineers, and when their decisions were so decidedly adverse to this route, no Government would be justified in following the route via Sturgeon Falls contrary to the advice of the chief engineer, in whom they have every reason to place confidence. If they had not done so it would have been their duty to dismiss Mr. Fleming and those of his staff who support that view, and endeavor to find a staff that would carry out views on this matter in harmony with those of the Administration. I do not think this House would justify the Government in any such arbitrary act. I do not think it would have been the proper thing for the Government to do, unless we were satisfied that Mr. Fleming and his officers were incompetent, that they had some corrupt motive, or were privy to some job. Certainly, the Government had an honest desire in both of those instances, to locate the line in accordance with popular opinion—to satisfy the people, certainly not to make the line longer, nor to make our own works inoperative and useless. It would have been considered a very extraordinary thing, had the Government refused to accede to the request to deflect the road north by Port Savanna and English River, when we believed that was more in the line of the Pacific Railway. The engineer, after mature judgment, condemned the line which we believed was going to be constructed by Sturgeon Falls, and were we to abandon this work commenced at Fort Francis where it can be made of material advantage to the country, now that so much money has been expended on it? Is it not better to go on and build it? It is perfectly certain that had it not been supposed that the railway was to be constructed to Sturgeon Falls, the Fort Francis Lock would never have been commenced.

Hon. Mr. Scott,

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Nobody ever dreamed, for a year after that work was commenced, that the line would be deflected away to the north.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Why was the work on the lock continued then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because the Government believed that it would be of considerable local advantage. After the line was deflected, the lock was narrowed down to its smallest dimensions, in order that less public money should be expended upon it. The locks were originally intended to be seven feet on the sill; now they are somewhere about 4 feet or 4½ feet. In every way the expenditure was being cut down, in order that the least possible amount of money should be expended upon it, as a local work. I believe we will have evidence, before the committee is through with the enquiry, that perhaps it is well that the Government did go on and complete the work, and make the best of it. As I said before, it never would have been undertaken by the Government if the original line had been located where it is to-day.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—But it was stated by the Premier last Session, and by the hon. Secretary of State himself, that it could be used, and would be used, in connection with the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No doubt it will be used, for there is that 180 miles of a gap between Rat Portage and Port Savaune, that will not be constructed for a considerable time. I do not think it will be constructed for four years, and it will, no doubt, in the interval be considerably used. My hon. friend knows that considerably over a million of dollars was expended on the Dawson Route, and what is there to show for it to-day? We can show from the Public Accounts, that the year before this Government came into power, a million of dollars had been spent on that road and there was nothing to show for it. We can at least show a pile of stones and a lock that will give navigation from Rainy Lake to Lake of the Woods.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Where is the million dollars expended on the Dawson Route? We felt it was desirable that we should have a route through our own territory to communicate with the North-West independent of the United States. Everyone knows how expensive it is to carry on work of any kind in that region. Capt. Dick, while before the committee yesterday, said the freight alone for bringing material in there to build the steamers that were placed on the lakes was $140 per ton. I asked Capt. Dick what the cost of constructing the boats was, but he was afraid to answer the question. He described the size, the length, the breadth and the depth of them, and said they were only intended to draw three feet of water, but he would not say what they cost. I said "Did they cost $250,000," but he was afraid to say how much, but that they had cost a very large amount. It is evident that the boats cost nearly as much as the lock will cost.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is in the range of possibility that embargoes and difficulties might be thrown on our traffic with the North-West by a foreign power, and we might be compelled under stress of circumstances to use this route for some time before the railway is completed.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will be remembered at the time of the difficulties in the North-West when General Wolsley had to take troops there, it was found necessary to take them by the Dawson Route. In sending up troops and munitions of war, it is a very delicate thing to propose to a neighboring nation to allow them to pass through their territory, and although this is a very expensive route, and might be classed as extravagant, keeping it open, still it is a public necessity as long as we have that North-West Territory, which I hope will always be a part and parcel of this Dominion. It is imperative on this Government to have a right of way through our own territory—a route of communication—and the only way we can accomplish this is by keeping this route open. I do not argue that this lock is going to be available for commerce. I am not going to stultify myself by saying anything that is not reasonable, and would not recommend itself to any unprejudiced mind that desires to look at this question from a disinterested stand-point. It is very unfair that hon. gentlemen should charge the Government with blunders, mistakes and jobbery. I do not think it is becoming—in this Chamber particularly—to denounce this Government as being guilty of "jobs." They are answerable for the conduct of their engineers and officers, just as I am answerable to a certain extent for the acts of my own servant. We know that our clerks sometimes exceed their authority and sometimes compromise their employers. So it is with the public service, and just so far as the public servants over this Dominion necessarily have larger and more discretionary power, so this Government or any Administration are liable to be led into traps and suspicious positions by their employees. This correspondence shows that the Government could not, if they had foreseen what was going to happen, take any other course than they had adopted. Mr. Braun writes to Mr. Fleming, calling his attention to this matter, and wants to know why expenditures connected with the Pacific Railway are not submitted to the Department before they are undertaken. I suppose Mr.

Fleming, with the experience of former years, has had to give his officers wide discretion.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Government cannot, in their own departments, supervise the details of this whole country. They must trust to their servants; they must trust to some one, and so long as they act with reasonable caution; so long as they have no just cause to suspect either the honesty, integrity, or capacity of their servants, just so long must they stand, in some degree, by their official acts. Until they suspect their officers have been actuated by corrupt motives, or are open to some corrupt charge; up to that point it is the duty of the Government to stand by them. I must apologize to the House for having been led into this debate, but I feel it to be somewhat necessary to give my explanation on some points to which the hon. gentleman from Toronto has alluded.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. Secretary of State has, with a good deal of ingenuity, availed himself of this motion to recede from the ground which the Government formerly held upon the Fort Francis Lock question. The hon. gentleman has admitted to-day that that lock is useless for purposes of commerce, and as a means of connecting the two ends of the railway now being constructed east of Port Savanne and west of Rat Portage. He has admitted that distinctly to-day. The hon. gentleman has heard evidence given before the committee to whom the question was referred, which cannot leave any doubt upon his mind that that is the fact. It was only last Session—one year ago—that the Minister of Public Works in another place, and the hon. gentleman himself in this House, stated that this lock would afford a means of communication to carry on the trade of the country between the two ends of the railway, and that there were only two or three small portages to be overcome in addition to the Fort Francis portage, which was the most formidable on the whole route. Now, the hon. gentleman has discovered, instead of its being the most formidable, it is really the least so.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It affords the longest water stretch by means of the lock.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It does not give the longest water stretch, because there are three obstacles to be overcome before boats which can be considered useful for the purpose of commerce, can avail themselves of it. The fall at Fort Francis is one of the lowest, and the portage is one of the easiest of the portages between Rainy Lake and Lac des Mille Lacs. The hon. gentleman, however, gives up the lock as being useful for the purpose of commerce, but he says it may be useful for some other purpose. I think his mind must be satisfied that this is not the case, but that the work will be thoroughly useless.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—If the railway had been constructed from Lake Superior to Sturgeon Falls, then this lock would have been of use, and I have no doubt when the construction of the lock was determined upon it was the intention to build the railway to Sturgeon Falls—in fact it was under contract for part of the way. But when that route was abandoned and the northern location was selected for the railway, why was the expenditure on the lock continued? Why was the country deluded and deceived by the members of the Government stating that the lock would afford means of communication between the two ends of the railway and serve the purposes of commerce? The ignorance of the Government was inexcusable for the facts were to be found in the reports of their engineers. But the expenditure was continued, and it was only last summer, in a quiet sort of way—so quiet that even the chief engineer of the Pacific Railway in whose charge the work is could not tell the committee who ordered it—that the depth of the water in the lock was reduced from seven feet to four feet and a half, and that also was done in such a quiet way that the chief engineer did not know it was done at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He was in British Columbia at the time.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—He knew nothing whatever about it. Now the hon. gentleman, having given up the lock as being of no use for purposes of commerce, falls back on its use for warlike purposes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said "local purposes."

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—And for the purpose of sending troops and munition of war through. If we should have the misfortune to be engaged in war—of which there is no chance—there is but one people with whom we can have such a difficulty, as we have but one neighbor and this lock is on the boundary line between Canada and the United States on the frontier which our neighbor can command very much better than we can.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The same reply might be made respecting the Cornwall Canal.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The difference is this, that the Cornwall and Beauharnois Canals were built for the purposes of commerce and are useful for commerce. We had a canal which was built expressly for military purposes—the Rideau Canal—but it was not sufficient for the trade of the country, and the St. Lawrence Canals were constructed. The hon. Secretary of State spoke of the location of the railway west of Red River: I don't know whether the House is to understand that it is irrevocably located on the northern route. I hope it is not, because I believe that a greater blunder cannot be committed in connection with this railway. I visited that country last summer and obtained some knowledge of it. Any one looking at the map, would say that there is only one line for a railway to follow from the river westward. I believe the country between Red River and the Narrows of Lake Manitoba is especially unfit for a railway. I was informed that the waters of Lake Manitoba are higher than a great part of the country near the lake, and in high water the lake overflows into the land, so that it will be impossible to drain that country; that, to a very great extent, it is a marsh or muskeg, the water of which comes from Lake Manitoba. Any one will see that to carry the railway through that country would be a very great mistake. I met but one man who said he had gone over the located line of railway from Selkirk to the Narrows of Lake Manitoba in summer. It is an extraordinary fact, but I was assured it is a fact, that the railway engineers, telegraph engineers, telegraph contractors and telegraph inspectors, generally managed to find it convenient to traverse that country in the winter. The contractors for the telegraph erect their poles in the snow and frozen moss; they stand there during the winter, but the moment the spring thaw comes down they fall. I only met one man, as I have already stated, who said he had gone through on the line of the railway in summer. He had done so for the purpose of tendering for a contract for some part of it, and he had to travel a considerable portion of the way on snow-shoes to support him on the reeds and prevent his being lost in the marsh. He carried a twenty-foot pole with him to test the depth of the marshes and often could not get bottom with it; yet this is the country through which this section of the railway is located. I hope the Government will not be in a hurry to commit themselves irrevocably to that location, and that the error which they have made in the Fort Francis Lock will not be repeated on the west side of Red River, to a more serious and costly extent, by the construction of the railway where the location may have to be abandoned after a large sum of money has been expended upon it. The hon. Secretary of State said he believed it would be a long time before the central section of the railway between Lake Superior and Red River would be completed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said four years. It is impossible to tell the exact time.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman spoke most indefinitely, and I believe he spoke correctly, for the Chief Engineer told the committee that he has not received instructions to proceed with it. I cannot be contradicted when I say that the whole expenditure between Lake Superior and Red River will be utterly useless until the railway is completed throughout, and if the Government delay the construction of that central section for any length of time, the two end sections already being built will be so far advanced in decay as to be nearly useless before the connection between them is made, and there can be no traffic on either of the sections being constructed, until the whole line is completed.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do not desire to prolong this discussion, but there are one or two points in the remarks that have fallen from the Secretary of State that I wish to direct attention to. I do not think it is desirable to have discussions on questions like this when the papers are not before the House. While this is the case, I do not consider it is fair for the hon. Secretary of State, with the papers in his hand, and with the knowledge which is not in the possession of other members, to come before the House and so widely diffuse the discussion and attempt a defence of the general policy of the Government on the Pacific Railway question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was simply answering the mover.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am aware that the hon. gentleman who moved for those papers, did not confine himself strictly to the terms of his motion, but he certainly did not wander over all the ground which the hon. gentleman who followed him chose to occupy.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think I touched on half the topics that he did.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The hon. gentleman certainly did widen the discussion further than he was justified in doing. However, I wish to call the attention of this House to a point that the hon. Secretary of State has raised here not only to-day but on other occasions as well, as to the responsibility of the Ministers of the Crown with respect to the public works of the country.

Hon. gentlemen—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. MILLER—This question is one of very grave importance, and if it is to be laid down as a principle, under our constitutional system, that ministers in this House are to be released from responsibility for the acts of their subordinates, and can shield themselves behind their officers, then we are no longer to have any responsibility in connection with the public works of this country. The principle on which the hon. Secretary of State has attempted to shelter himself and the Government to-night, is one that is subversive of all that ministerial accountability which is at the foundation of our system of constitutional Government. The doctrine of ministerial responsibility is so far reaching that, for every official act of a public officer, there must be some one responsible until at last the aggregate responsibility is centred in the head of the department. The minor official is responsible to an official of a higher class, who in return is responsible to the higher class of subordinates, who in turn are responsible to the minister and the minister is responsible to Parliament for all acts connected with his department; therefore, to lay down the monstrous proposition that a ministry can come in here and shelter themselves under the cloaks of their subordinates when gross blunders have been committed, is a principle so dangerous to everything like constitutional government, that we cannot denounce it too strongly every time we hear it in this House, especially when the Government retain such faulty subordinates in their offices. But in the present case there is something much worse than that. Let us come to the terms of the resolution of my hon. friend relating to the contracts for the building of engineers' houses, and in connection with that question the whole responsibility is attempted to be devolved upon a subordinate of Mr. Fleming's—not the chief—and that subordinate is dead. Now, if the subordinate had been guilty of acting so largely in excess of his authority as to give out tenders for those eight buildings, as the Secretary of State alleges, how is it that that officer was retained in the service of the Government afterwards?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Instructions went from here to him about the matter, but before he got the instructions he had issued this notice for tenders.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—But is that all the Government should have done? A suspicious circumstance connected with this defence of the Government, as every man must see, is that now the whole thing is devolved upon a dead man.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But it is not pretended that there is anything wrong.

An hon. gentleman—Dead men tell no tales.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not pretended that the buildings cost more than they should have cost.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That and much more is contended with too much force and truth. What is the fact with regard to the buildings? We are not, it seems, to call any of those suspicious acts "jobs," but "blunders," and if it is more agreeable to the Government, I will call those acts blunders, if it please the hon gentleman. But what answer has the Secretary of State, even with all the papers in his hands, attempted to give to this House, when it is charged that those tenders were called for at a season of the year when it was impossible to have communication with the outside world, and when only certain individuals or a certain company, the notorious firm of Oliver, Davidson & Co., that has been receiving such enormous sums of money in connection with the Kaministiquia terminus and the Neebing Hotel, from this Government, are the only people in a position to supply lumber and take this contract? These are extraordinary coincidences which point in the direction to even any unsophisticated mind, that the whole thing is a scheme to put more money into the pockets of those people. It looks like it, and it is as well to say so. Why was there any necessity for building a house for the engineers at Kaministiquia at all? The country had already been mulcted to the tune of $5,900 for Neebing Hotel. If that building was worth $5,900 surely it was good enough for the residence of the engineers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hotel had not been erected when the other house was built.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—That building was erected before the engineers' house, and the plan of the requirements of the Government for the railway terminus was registered five months before the engineers' house was constructed.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I cannot express the astonishment and suspicion that pervades the country from one end to the other, to find that it is impossible to touch any portion of this gigantic undertaking—the Pacific Railway question—without unearthing something that will not bear the light of day. One day we have the Kaministiquia job, by which the Dominion is made to pay an enormous sum of money for a comparatively valueless property, and the money goes into the pockets of the friends of the Government. Then we have the gigantic blunder in connection with the steel rails, by which the country has lost hundreds of thousands of dollars; then we have again the Georgian Bay branch blunder as you so call it, by which a large amount of money is again lost to the country.

Hon. Mr. Miller.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is no blunder.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That money, too, has been lost under circumstances that it is not necessary to allude to, because they are fresh in the mind of every hon gentleman in this House, and the money lost to the country again gets into the pockets of a friend of the Government. Everything, to the purchase of the steel rails through friends who had the confidence of the Government, the Kaministiquia terminus, the Georgian Bay contract, which was given to a friend of the Government, the late Mr. Foster, are blunders, which in all cases have cost the country enormous sums of money, and without exception, that money has gone into the pockets of men who are friends of the Government, or who have rendered essential services to the party in power. Then, with regard to the Fort Francis Lock, what different phases, what chameleon arguments have we not had in this House on that question during the past two or three years. At first we were told it was an indispensable portion of the Pacific Railway under the water stretches scheme; next we were told it was indispensable for purposes of local commerce, and we have heard to-day for the first time, that it may be possible before the Pacific Railway is completed that it will be useful for purposes of war, and in that view alone the expenditures of the Government on it are perfectly justifiable.

Hon. gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The House and the country have been treated to arguments and representations on that question which should not be addressed to the intelligence of children even, showing from year to year in the management of the public business of the Dominion, not only incapacity and vacillation, but an imbecility of administration in connection with our greatest public works, which alone ought to be the means of driving this ministry from power as soon as the people have the opportunity of speaking. It is hard to say how many of those blunders might be referred to if we had the means of obtaining information in regard to the whole line such as we have obtained in reference to a small portion of it, through the active and indefatigable exertions of my hon friend from Toronto (Mr. Macpherson) and the mover of this motion, who have given this House and the country the benefit of their personal experience and investigations. It is unfortunate that they have not had the opportunity of gaining personal knowledge of other portions of this great work, which no doubt would have revealed similar extravagance and blundering, in connection with their whole railway operations. Of all the blunders, however, the greatest in my opinion, is the leaving unfinished of the 180 miles between Port Savanne and Keewatin.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It has been shown that the two ends now being constructed, will be useless through decay in a few years, and from the way in which the hon. Secretary of State speaks today, and the policy which the Government intend to pursue with regard to that link, it is evident that for ten years we will not see any continuous line of railway from Lake Superior to Red River. In the meantime the millions of dollars which are being expended in the construction of the two ends of the line will not only be perfectly useless, but if in six or eight years hence, when the missing link is completed, the greater part of the work on the ends will have to be renewed, and the money now being expended will be almost entirely thrown away. It is most extraordinary, I repeat, looking at this whole question of the Pacific Railway that, so far as we have had the means of obtaining information, every thing the Government have done from the first foolish scheme of the water stretches down to the present hour, in connection with this enormous work, has been a blunder, or something worse.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If it is through incapacity it is bad enough, but if it is through unfriendliness to the undertaking, or something worse, it is more serious still. Looking at the Government we find that it is composed of members, many of whom have been distinguished in the past for their hostility to Confederation, and the binding together of the provinces of the Dominion with an iron link that will secure their autonomy and connection with the British Empire. Looking at the fact that men known to be hostile to the construction of this great national work, to such an extent that one gentleman who is now a minister of the Crown, shortly before he took office, stated what he blamed the Premier for when he came into office was that he had not repudiated the whole thing; it affords fair ground for reflection on the part of the people to say whether those blunders are not something more than blunders, and whether there may not be at the bottom of it a want of good faith towards the people of Canada in dealing with a subject of the first importance to our national character and aspirations. It is because, as I fear, the policy of the Government on this subject is not an honest policy, that it has been marked by such blundering that no man can seriously defend it, as the arguments of the Secretary of State clearly prove.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—I have listened, since I have had the honor of a seat in this House, for the announcement by the leaders of the Government of a national policy with regard to the Pacific Railway. I have listened attentively in the other House also, and I must say from my experience of responsible government, if the hon. gentleman who holds the opinion that the expenditure for the selection of a route for this railway is a waste of public money, he is bound, as a public spirited man, to come out of this Government, for they are not certainly carrying out his views on this question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Who does the hon. gentleman refer to.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—To you.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not made such a statement.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—When the hon. gentleman has stated that in his opinion every single dollar that has been expended for the construction of the Pacific Railway has been wasted, and continues to sit at the Council Board that devotes three millions of dollars for that purpose, I say he should resign his portfolio. Everyone in this House has heard the hon. gentleman say, if he had his way he would not have spent a single dollar on the Pacific Railway. In season and out of season, in public and in private, on the floor of this House and upon the public platform outside of the House, the hon. gentleman has distinctly and repeatedly said, if he had his way, not one dollar would be spent in the construction of this great national work.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is entirely in error.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—I can only say that if I am in error, two-thirds of the hon. members of this House must be in error, and the public press must have been in error. When the Prime Minister was taunted with the fact that the Government were not in earnest in carrying on this great work, what was his reply. I will quote from the Hansard for 1877, page 691 :—

“ With regard to the statement that the Government had not used sufficient diligence in prosecuting the surveys, he had merely to note the fact that during the first half year hon. gentlemen opposite spent $489,000; in the second year up to the time the present Government succeeded to office, $561,000. There were expended during 1873-74, $310,000; in 1874-75 $474,000; in 1875-76, $791,000; from June 1876 to December, 1876, $509,000, or a total expenditure during the five years of $3,136,615, on those surveys. He asserted without fear of contradiction, that it would have been impossible for the Government to have shown greater diligence than had been shown up to this moment.”

Now, what must be thought by the people of this country and the hon. gentlemen of this House, of a Government who believe that it is not in the interests of this Dominion, that this railway should be built, yet they go on and expend money for surveys to locate the line! It is the most extraordinary statement I have ever heard in the whole course of my experience of politics. We were told the other day that the Fort Francis Lock was a blunder, and when the Government were charged with it, an hon. gentleman who is not now in his seat, defended the Government by referring to contracts made by the late Government thirty years ago. I can only compare this defence of the Government to that of the man who coming home from church knocked down a Jew for the sins of his forefathers. What had we to do with the affairs of thirty years ago? As for my part, I refuse to hear anything of the politics of the country previous to 1867. In the altered state of affairs, it is not necessary I should, as my time should only be occupied by the matters of the living present. There is no justification for the policy of the Government with regard to the Pacific Railway, and they are forced to acknowledge their Fort Francis Lock was a blunder, and the man who committed the blunder was dead.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I made no such statement. Mr. Hazlewood's name simply came up in connection with the contracts for the engineers' houses.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—Does the hon. gentleman believe that it was not a blunder, the building of the Fort Francis Lock? Does the hon. gentleman say so now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I say when the lock was commenced it was on the line of the Pacific Railway, and when Mr. Fleming came to the conclusion that the line would have to be deflected northward, the Government, having made some expenditure on the lock, thought it better to go on and complete it, because there was good land along Rainy River, and it would have certain local advantages, but if the railway had not been at first located by Sturgeon Falls, the lock would not have been commenced.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—It is the most extraordinary statement that the Government have yet made, that they have to depend entirely on the reports of their engineers. If such a statement was made in the British House of Commons, the Government would soon have to resign their office. In the first place, they laid down a certain line of railway, in which, according to the hon. gentleman's doctrine, they must have been guided by the advice of their engineers. But, after expending $180,000 on the lock at Fort Francis, this line is abandoned, and, on the advice of their engineers, they take another line, this money is wasted and the Government throw the whole responsibility on their officers. Other complaints of a similar character come from an hon. gentleman from New Brunswick, respecting the improvement at Oromocto Shoals; another hon. gentleman shows where money has been wasted in locating the railway north of Manitoba, and it is the same with every public work they have undertaken throughout the Dominion. Not only that, but the country has been led to believe that the wisdom exhibited by the Government in selecting and buying at that particular time sufficient steel rails for building the railway, was an act of great commercial policy, and now we are told, in the very next breath, that road is almost the ruination of the country, while we have those steel rails lying in piles and rusting away. I think the thanks of this House and of the country are due to the hon. gentleman from Toronto, who has so completely sifted this case as to put it out of the power of any member of the Government to defend it at all. But the most extraordinary thing of all is the building of the Fort Francis Lock for carrying munitions of war. The man who would carry munitions of war by such a route would be part and parcel with the Government. Of all the extraordinary statements which I have ever heard, this beats them all, and hon. gentlemen of this House are called upon by the hon. Secretary of State, in his usual bland manner to accept the statement that in the profundity of wisdom, that far reaching, statesmanship, that vigilant exercise of watchfulness for the future safety of this country—the Government caused this great Fort Francis Lock to be built in the heart of the country. The statement is so absurd, that I am satisfied the hon. gentleman must be imposing on himself the fancies of some child's dream, for I venture to assert that the staunchest supporter of the Government must laugh at the idea of munitions of war being transported through the Fort Francis Lock. This lock contains some four feet of water, and then, after traversing it, where would your munitions of war be? The joke is so good that I would recommend it to Grip for the next cartoon, and would suggest the following sketch—The lock with the Northern Light carrying munition of war, with the members of Government poleing her through the canal, with the minister of war watching for the Yankees some sixty miles or more distant. In my own Province what do I find? I find blundering there also, and I suppose the engineer, whoever he is, is responsible for this too. I find in the House of Commons information is asked for with regard to Cascumpec Harbor, in Prince Edward Island. Certainly the Premier must have been misled by his engineers, when he made the following reply, which I quote from the Commons Hansard for 1877, page 1069.

“in the estimates to improve the harbor of
Hon. Mr. Howland.

“Malpec, which was situated further east, and “when the contemplated improvements were “made on St. Peter's Bay, which was still fur“ther east, the North Shore would be furnished “with far harbour accommodations, and vessels “drawing from 10 to 14 feet would obtain
“access to Cascumpec.”

Now, if you can conceive that improving the harbor of Quebec, would rise the water at Montreal, you have some idea of the information that is here furnished by the head of the Public Works Department. Fancy an engineer improving a harbor sixty miles away from another along a coast line, for the purpose of increasing the depth of water at Cascumpec! It is one of the most extraordinary things I ever heard of in my life. But, if the engineers are alone responsible, it is the easiest thing in the world to be a member of the Government. The engineers are running this whole country. They are selecting the railway route, building railways, canals and locks, purchasing town plots and steel rails—doing everything, in fact. In portions of the neighboring country, when a man has a case in court he never thinks of getting good counsel; the first thing he does is to buy the judge. I think when I want any improvements in my part of the country, I will have to get on the right side of the engineers. It is a most humiliating position for the Government to occupy, to say they have no control in any way over the public works of the country, but act under instructions from the engineers. I had an impression that the Government sent engineers to report on public works, and received information from them, but exercised their own judgment, and that must have been on the mind of the hon. Secretary of State when he said at the close of his speech it was the intention of the Government to build the road through Manitoba in such a place and in such a way as would be acceptable to the people. That was statesmanlike; but in the commencement it was to be built in such a place as would be suitable to the chief engineer. We can understand how the engineer, if he was the most competent man in America, must receive his reports from his subordinates, so that, so far from having the Chief Engineer to fall back upon, in a great many cases it must be the assistant engineers. I find, so far as my experience in this House is concerned, it is almost useless to ask for papers. The Government delay them, and in many cases they are not brought down until the following session. I venture to say we have heard more of the policy of the Government with respect to the Pacific Railway in the speech of the leader of the Government in this House to-day, than has been heard in the other Chamber for four years.

The motion was agreed to.

The House adjourned at six o'clock.

PETITIONS FOR PRIVATE BILLS.

TIME FOR RECEIVING EXTENDED.

Hon. Mr. MILLER in presenting the ninth report of the Committee on Private Bills, called attention to the fact that the time for receiving petitions had expired, and it would be for the House to say whether it should be further extended. He could not say he was in favor of extending the time himself, but he would submit the motion to the House. He therefore moved:—

“That the time for receiving Petitions for Private Bills be extended to Wednesday, the twentieth day of March, instant, and the time for presenting Private Bills be extended to Tuesday, the twenty-sixth day of March, instant.”

The motion was agreed to.

L'ARDOISE BREAKWATER.

RETURNS BROUGHT DOWN.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT presented to the House a return to an address, dated the 14th February, 1878, for a statement shewing the amount of money expended during the past year on the L'Ardoise Breakwater, in the Island of Cape Breton, and the mode of such expenditure, with the authority therefor.

Hon. Mr. Howlan.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—With reference to this report, I would now call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State (as I may not have another opportunity to do so) to the fact that he stated, when I moved for this return, there was a balance carried forward.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understood that was the case.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The public accounts show that there is no balance.

LOAN COMPANIES' BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. REESOR introduced a Bill intituled “An Act relating to incorporated Companies authorized to lend money.”

The Bill was read the first time.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC REGULATION BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT introduced a Bill intituled “An Act respecting the Traffic in Intoxicating Liquors.”

Hon. Mr. MILLER asked for information as to the nature of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said the Bill would be printed and distributed to-morrow, when hon. gentlemen could read it for themselves. However, if the House desired it, he would explain the provisions of the measure.

After a brief discussion as to whether the explanation should be deferred until the second reading,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said:—I do not propose to go into a discussion of the objects of the Bill, or the reasons for its introduction, on the present occasion, as I think it would not be an opportune time to do so. It is an enlargement, so to speak, of the Dunkin Act of 1864. It supplies a law which may be made applicable to all parts of the Dominion, the Dunkin Act being one which is peculiar to the two provinces of old Canada. In that Act, the machinery for ascertaining the opinions of the people on the question of prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors, was controlled by the municipal authorities, and I was at first inclined to adopt it in this Bill, but, finding that the municipal machinery was the creature of the legislative bodies of the several provinces, and could at any time be changed, I thought it was inadvisable and injudicious that a principle of this kind, to which there might possibly be considerable objection in trying to bring the Act into force, should be adopted. I have, therefore, made provision in this Bill, whereby a plebiscite might be obtained without any interference on the part of the municipal organizations. In carrying out that idea, one of the plans of action is indicated in this Bill—that is, by presenting a petition signed by twenty-five per cent. of the electors qualified to vote in the county or city, as the case may be, to His Excellency in Council, asking that the subject be referred to a vote of the people in that particular city or county. It will then be competent for the Governor-in-Council, on proof being furnished that the signature of at least twenty-five per cent of the electors qualified to vote for a member for the Dominion Parliament is attached to this petition, and that those signatures are genuine, by a proclamation in the ordinary official Gazette, to name a day on which the voice of the people will be taken at the polls by ballot. That proclamation will also be published in the official Gazette of the particular Province from which the petition emanates. The proclamation, I may add, will convey to the people of the county or city as full particulars as it is possible to place in a document of that kind, in order that the people may be apprized at the earliest possible moment of the action of the twenty-five per cent of the electoral vote, and in order, also, that the expense may be saved of any further proclamations and notices to the people. It provides that it shall be competent to name a returning officer. The Sheriff and Registrar are named but need not necessarily be appointed. It will be the duty of the person so appointed, on receiving intimation of this fact in the usual way, to mark the day and date of the reception of the notice, and it is his duty at the time fixed, which is provided to be upwards of a month at least, to name the deputy returning officers of the several polling districts of the county or city, those districts to be the polling districts that have been defined under the Parliamentary Election Law; and where no such division has been defined, it will be his duty to do so in the ordinary way, limiting it to 200 voters. It will also be his duty to provide ballot-boxes and voters' lists, which are provided in the ordinary way.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Will you leave it possible to have this ballot taken at a general election.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, that would apply to the whole Dominion, which is not contemplated at all. It is provided it shall only be a permissive law, where the people ask for it, and it will only apply to that section.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Would it be possible, on the petition of twenty-five per cent. of the ratepayers of a county, before a general election, to combine the two elections?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I see no objection to it if so thought advisable.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I see great objection to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would not necessarily be the case, but it is for the people to say whether it should be so or not. I need not describe the details of the machinery of voting. It is a vote by ballot, and the one day principle. The Bill provides that at the expiration of sixty days from the day of voting, if the vote has been carried, and the Governor-in-Council is so advised by certificate of the returning officer that the majority of votes cast in the election has been in favor of the petition, it is then the duty of the Governor-in-Council to issue a proclamation putting in force the prohibitory law in that particular county or city. The interval of sixty days is allowed in order that the parties either promoting the petition or opposing it may, if they think fit, appeal to the proper judicial channel, which is the judges of the inferior courts in most of the provinces—the county court in Ontario, and the district court in Quebec—to have a scrutiny of the ballots. If the vote, as I said before, has been in the affirmative, the law is put in force on the day which has been originally named in the proclamation, that being a day that is made to correspond with the date on which the licenses issued by the provincial authorities expires, in order that there may be no clashing with the jurisdiction of those authorities. I believe in most of the provinces that date is uniform. It may be in some of the provinces that licenses are issued for parts of the year or broken periods, but in Ontario all licenses terminate at a particular day. The machinery for bringing in force the Act, is sufficiently elastic to enable the Act to come in force only at the expiration of the existing licenses. Now I come to the important prohibition clauses. I am not now discussing the points of the Dunkin Act other than to say they were thought not equal to the necessities of those who urged the value and advantage of prohibition. Very great objection was urged against what was known as the five gallon clause. I may say shortly, without going further into detail, the prohibition clause is for the absolute prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in the particular county or city, subject to those conditions or qualifications—that is, when sold for a medicine or for sacramental purposes, in those cases it being incumbent on the party, who is defined as a druggist or licensed vendor, who has authority to sell for those special purposes on receiving a certificate, if from a doctor, that the liquor is specially required for the person named in the certificate, if for sacramental purposes, on the certificate of a clergyman, affirming it is required for such purposes. If the liquor is required for any scientific or manufacturing purposes, then it must be on the certificate of the applicant with an affirmation, and corroborated by the testimony of two justices of the peace. I thought in those particular cases it was only proper and right that if sold under those special circumstances, there should be no evasion on the part of those who might claim to come within the provisions of the Bill. In reference to the manufacturer and the wholesale dealer, there is this provision, that they may sell in quantities of not less than ten gallons, provided it is sold for purposes of consumption outside the municipality where the law exists. In other words, it will be their duty to see it is bonded outside the locality in which the law is in force. In that way there is no real violation of the principles of trade beyond the district which has carried the prohibitory law. Those are the main features. Of course there is a good deal more. The Bill is necessarily a long one, as I desired to make it as perfect as possible. There are provisions for the punishment of parties who commit any infraction of the law. I may say, with the view of having more uniformity on that subject, I have applied what is known as the Criminal Procedure, as administered by justices all over the Dominion, to this Bill. There are some two or three clauses in addition to that which are perhaps more germane to a subject of this kind than any clauses making provision for the punishment of offences in the Criminal Law. I am quite prepared to answer any questions that hon. gentlemen may ask in reference to any parts of the Bill wherein I have failed to give the proper explanations, but I hope the measure will be in the hands of hon. gentlemen to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the twenty-five per cent. was to be that percentage of the electoral vote of the division.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; twenty-five per cent. of the electors qualified to vote for a member of the House of Commons. It is not on a municipal basis. The petition must be signed by at least that proportion of the electors in the county or city. The law cannot be repealed for a period of three years, unless at the expiration of one year a majority of the whole electors in the particular county petition for its repeal. It can then be submitted again to the people, but unless a majority is secured, the law remains in force for the three years. If the petition fails in any particular county, the parties in support of it are precluded from bringing up the question for a period of three years again, unless at the expiration of one year a majority of the whole electors ask that the petition be again submitted.

Hon. Mr. READ—Who is to be at the expense of submitting the petition to a vote of the people?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a question that will come up at a future stage. I do not propose in this Bill that either the parties opposing or supporting, so far as the mere machinery goes, will be obliged to contribute. I have made a calculation what the bare expense will be, and it will not entail a serious charge on the revenue. It is with that view I have provided, as much as possible, for mentioning the returning officer and deputies in the first proclamation which is required to be published in the official Gazette. The parties who are promoting and opposing are sufficiently interested to contribute anything required to supplement this expense. They will have to provide their own agents, scrutineers and the various details, so that the bare charge on the revenue will simply be the expense of the machinery itself.

Hon. Dr. CARRALL—Is the machinery which the Government propose to put in motion by this Bill, limited by electoral divisions?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not electoral divisions, but counties and cities. Sometimes there are three constituencies in one county. I thought the electoral district was too small.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—The principle of the Bill is simply that the majority govern.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When it is submitted to the popular vote, it does not require a majority of the whole vote, but a majority of those who desire to cast their votes.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The hon. Secretary of State has been exceedingly courteous in his explanations, but if he can state the difference between his Bill and the Dunkin Act, it will be exceedingly interesting to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Dunkin Act was put in force entirely through municipal machinery. A municipal council, of a very much smaller municipality than I provide for in this Bill, might submit a by-law, if they so thought fit. If they did not think fit, it was competent for a petition, signed by thirty persons, to be sent in, and it was then their duty to submit a by-law. Then, voting was on the old system, and was open. One inconvenience was, voting might be protracted, as it was in the City of Toronto, where it lasted thirteen or fourteen days, keeping the city in a state of ferment during all that period. The Act was defective in many particulars. If the municipal officials who had charge of the machinery for the moment, wished to throw any obstacles, they could do so, as we know from the cases that have been before the courts. The prohibitory clauses are also different. Under the Dunkin Act it was allowable for any dealer to sell five gallons or more, for consumption in the locality. This Bill provides that no person shall sell less than ten gallons, and only then for consumption outside of the locality.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Do license acts, as in Nova Scotia, remain in force after this passes?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a permissive Bill. It is only brought into existence on proclamation of the Governor-in-Council, and that is predicated on its being carried in the particular locality, and where it goes into existence it goes only in that particular locality and no other. It in no way conflicts with the license law, because it cannot go into force until the licenses in the locality expire.

Hon. Mr. READ—Does this repeal the Dunkin Act where it is in force now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; it makes provision wherever the Dunkin Act is in existence now, it shall continue in existence, and can only be repealed by the machinery provided for in the Dunkin Act. The Dunkin Act only remains in force where it is now in operation. When this Bill becomes law it would not be competent for a city or municipality to apply the Dunkin Act. It is repealed except as far as the particular county or municipality in which it is now the law is concerned.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I fear that will cause conflict. In Provinces where there are stringent regulations respecting licenses, they are allowed to run, pari passu, with this Bill, and I am afraid, there will be a conflict of jurisdiction in carrying out the law. I merely mention this now to call the hon. gentleman's attention to it before the second reading.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have endeavored to explain that the law could not be put in operation while the licenses were in force; therefore there could be no conflict. If the Act were carried, say in January, and the licenses did not expire till the 30th of April, it would not go into operation until the first of May. It would then be no longer competent for the provincial authorities to issue licenses, inasmuch as it would be a direct violation of the principles of this law.

Hon. Mr. READ—How would that affect manufacturers' licenses, which may not end the same time as the others, their licenses being derived from the Dominion Government?

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—It does not affect them at all.

Hon. Mr. READ—It affects them because they are not allowed to sell within the municipality where this Act goes into operation.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—These details can be arranged when the Bill comes before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill cannot be called a novelty in any sense, inasmuch as hon. gentlemen who have read the discussions in the papers on this question, will find that the various temperance organizations in the country have been applying for legislation in this direction.

The Bill was read the first time.

QUALIFICATION OF SENATE EMPLOYES.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU asked leave to withdraw the following motion:—

“That it be an instruction to the Committee on the Contingent Accounts of this House, to prepare and report rules and regulations respecting the qualification of candidates for permanent or temporary employment in the Senate Offices (with the exception of such offices as are in the gift of the Crown), so as to insure that all the officers, clerks and servants, may be fully competent to perform their respective duties, and that when committee or office clerks are wanted, shorthand writers, competent in other respects, be preferred.”

He said: I have had several interviews with the chairman of the committee, and I have no doubt the matter will be taken into consideration by the committee itself. I see no necessity, therefore to discuss those questions. I have no doubt this notice of motion has been taken into consideration by every hon. gentleman in this House, and that they agree with me, that we should manage public business with the same care that we exercise in our own private affairs. It is obvious if we can get a skilful man on the same terms as an inferior one, we should employ the one who can serve us best.

The motion was withdrawn.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

MONTREAL BUILDING ASSOCIATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. PENNY moved that Bill (G) intituled “An Act to confer certain powers on the Montreal Building Association,” be read the second time. He said: the only object of this measure is to meet the difficulty that the local legislatures of the provinces have in the way of regulating the rate of interest. This Building Association has hitherto carried on the business of building houses and selling them, not the ordinary building society's business of loaning money. That kind of business has ceased to be profitable, owing to circumstances, and they decided to seek from the Province of Quebec a charter to enable them to become a loan society, but they were advised by their counsel—and I believe rightly advised—that the Local Legislature had no power to give them any authority to take higher interest than the ordinary rate. What they seek is not power to charge an exorbitant rate of interest, but the rate allowed in the acts incorporating similar societies. I suppose there will be no objection to this.

The Bill was read the second time.

The House adjourned at 4. p.m.

THE SENATE.

Monday, March 18th.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock p. m.

After Routine proceedings.

FISHWICK'S EXPRESS COMPANY.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. HAMILTON presented the report of the Committee on Banking, Commerce, and Railways, on the Bill to incorporate Fishwick's Express and Merchants' Forwarding Company.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said the first amendment was simply increasing the capital stock of the company from $50,- 000 to $100,000, as the committee thought the amount in the Bill was rather small. The other alteration was a non-user clause declaring that the company should forfeit the rights and privileges conferred by this Act if they should not commence operations within three years from its passage.

The amendments were concurred in, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

BIBLE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY BILL.

FIRST READING.

Hon. Mr. SIMPSON introduced a Bill intituled "An Act to incorporate the Missionary Society of the Bible Christian Church in Canada."

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SIMPSON moved that the Bill be read the second time on Wednesday, the 20th inst.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE—I am sorry to have to object to this Bill on constitutional grounds. Exception was taken to a motion of mine the other day, because I moved to refer a bill of this kind to the Supreme Court after the second reading. I believe that rule is not what it should be. I believe this House should have power to refer a bill to the Supreme Court at any stage. The measure now before the House interferes with civil rights, and I am of opinion that it should go to the local legislatures. In order, therefore, that my motion may be before the House at the proper time, I now give notice that when the Bill is before the House for the second reading I will move, in amendment, that it be referred to the Supreme Court for their decision.

Hon. Mr. SIMPSON—The Bill that is before us will be similar to the measure that has already passed this Chamber, and I think it is quite within the scope of the constitution. We do not desire any measure that would be unconstitutional in any respect.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Miller.

CIRCULATION OF DEPRECIATED SILVER.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU enquired:—

"Whether in view of the remonetization of silver in the United States, measures will be taken by the Government during the present Session to prevent the recurrence of the abuses and losses which were formerly occasioned by the circulation, as a medium of exchange, of silver coins whose conventional and fictitious value were not in accordance with their real or market value?"

He said:—This is no new question in this House. It has been discussed over and over again, and committees have investigated and reported upon it. After much trouble and great expense we succeeded in relieving ourselves of the "silver nuisance" some years ago. The Bland Silver Bill which has lately been passed by Congress in the United States has now become law, and it is evident that very soon an immense quantity of silver coin will be issued from the United States mint. We must endeavor to prevent this depreciated coin from affecting us injuriously in Canada, and avoid the annoyance and loss which we suffered in 1868. In that year a Bill was introduced in the House of Commons in view of the action of the Conference at Paris, but this measure was never put in force in this country. It is Cap. 45 in the Statutes of 1868, and refers to the money of the United States, because it was expected then that our neighbors would accept the decision of the Paris Conference. They did not accept it, however, and that Act was never put into force. It was one of those measures that have no effect until put into operation by proclamation of the Governor-General. The only law we have had since that time on the subject is the Act of 1871, and this has been unchanged except to extend it to the Provinces which subsequently entered the Confederation. The difference between the two Acts is this: the Act of 1868 provided that a certain amount of American silver of a certain standard would be a legal tender in this country, but the money to which it referred never became current in the United States, and consequently the Act did not go into operation. In the law of 1871 the only reference to silver is in the eighth clause, and that simply declares no silver but that of Canada shall be a legal tender to a certain amount, which is fixed at ten dollars. Sir Francis Hinks, in his speech on that question, stated that in 1871 there was about $10,000,000 of foreign silver in circulation in Canada, and he made some calculations respecting the loss which that money caused to the public. He thought six millions of that amount changed hands every month, giving it a circulation of $72,000,000 in twelve months. Then he goes on to say if you pay a quarter per cent commission, you arrive at a loss of $180,000 annually. That is to say, in five years there is a loss of $900,000. But that was not all. There was a loss of four per cent in addition, which in five years would amount to the enormous sum of between fourteen and fifteen millions of dollars. Some members objected at the time that it was a very extraordinary loss, but those who have any knowledge of the business of the country at that time, will not be surprised at the amount. In the district where I live, people who would go to some of the banking institutions to discount notes would receive large quantities of those depreciated half-dollar and twenty-five cent pieces at par, and thus a large quantity of this coin was put in circulation. But, when those who had received this money from the bank had to meet their liabilities, the bank refused American silver, and they were obliged to purchase Canadian money from the brokers and pay a discount of four or five per cent., according to circumstances. That was a matter of every-day occurrence, and I am satisfied that the losses were as large as stated by Sir Francis Hincks.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—In Canada?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU—Yes. In New Brunswick you had no loss. An hon. gentleman from that Province has informed me that as soon as this difficulty arose, the bankers of New Brunswick held a meeting and decided they would not take the depreciated coin at less than twenty per cent discount. That was sufficient to check the circulation of such silver in the Province. The only remedy which we have now is in the customs laws, but does that furnish all the protection that we need? I doubt it very much. It provides that all silver from the United

Hon. Mr. Bureau.

States shall shall pay a duty of 17½ per cent., and the fine for evading the payment of that duty is between $200 and $400, with imprisonment. In a country like this, with such a long frontier, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, I do not think that provision furnishes a check sufficient to prevent the importation of silver. Probably if our bankers would follow the example set them by our friends in New Brunswick, there would be no necessity for any further legislation. Then arises the question, have we a right under the laws of nations and the principles of the laws of nature, to legislate for the protection of our people against the loss which they would sustain by a repetition of the silver nuisance? After consulting a great number of authorities on that subject, I find they all agree in saying—

1st. That no power is bound to admit them (foreign coins) into its country.

2nd. That each state may forbid their being current within its limits.

3rd. Or reduce them to their true standard of value, after having ascertained what this is.

This last was the course pursued by Sir Francis Hincks in dealing with the silver nuisance. The success of that policy was surprising, because no penalty was attached to the circulation of the depreciated money. A grave difficulty was to have that money sent to England to purchase new coin for Canada, or to sell it in New York. The operation was a very successful, but, at the same time, a very costly one. It cost over six per cent, I think, or possibly more. The matter is thus referred to in the journals of the other House, May 29th 1869 :—

“ Mr. Oliver, from the select committee appointed to take into consideration the correspondence with the Government relative to the purchase and exportation of American silver coin now in circulation in this country, presented to the House the report of the said committee, which was read as follows :—

“ Your committee find that the large amount of American silver in circulation, at a depreciated rate, is productive of serious inconvenience to business men.

“ The removal of this circulation, to such an extent as may be necessary to secure a currency that pass freely at its nominal value, is necessary to remove this incubus from the business of the country, to a healthy condition.

“ Every effort to effect this has been made by the public, with but little result; and all “ further attempt's have, therefore, been abandoned.

 “ Under these circumstances, the silver has become such a drug upon the business of the country that the inter ention of the Government has become necessary to remove it from circulation.”

These paragraphs were adopted by the House of Commons with the exception of the last one, because it recommended the expenditure of money, which could only be done on a message from His Excellency. The last paragraph in the report was as follows :—

“ The committee therefore recommend that the plan adopted by the Government in 1868, by which silver, to the amount of $1,000,000, was purchased and exported to England and the United States, or any other plan which the Government may deem proper for the removal of the following amount, be again put in operation and carried on until an amount equal to $5,000,000, shall have been withdrawn from the circulation of the country.”

As I said at the outset this is a question which has been fully discussed in the House of Commons, the boards of trade, and by business men throughout the country. To fully understand the importance of the matter, I will read part of a return to an Address of the House of Commons, dated 23rd April. 1869 ; for copies of all communications to and from the Government relative to the exportation of American silver, or to the reduction of its value. The correspondence is between Sir John Rose, who was then Finance Minister and Messrs. Glyn, Mills, Currie & Co., Baring Brothers and others. The first letter is as follows :

(Copy.)
 “ OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE,
 “ OTTAWA, Canada, December 31st, 1867.

“ GENTLEMEN,—The Government of Canada have it in contemplation to become possessed of a portion of the United States silver coin now in circulation here, but before doing so they wish to be informed of the price at which it can be disposed of either in London or elsewhere. It consists chiefly of half-dollars and twenty-five cent pieces, with a few pieces of smaller denomination, and has almost all been coined since 1852.

“ By reference to the Report of the Director of the United States Mint, you will perceive that the fineness of these coins is represented to be 900 thousandth, and that they weigh in grains :—

	Grains.
“ The Half-dollar. . . . .	192
“ Quarter-dollar (25 cents) . . . . .	96
“ Dime (10 cents) . . . . .	38 4
“ Half-dime (5 cents) . . . . .	19 2

Hon. Mr. Bureau.

“ The half-dollar and quarter-dollar pieces have probably lost about half a grain each by attrition. I should be greatly obliged if you will, at your early convenience, furnish me with such information touching the rate at which, say one million of dollars could be disposed of in London, and the charges which would attend the operation of converting it into cash, to be available for the general purposes of the Government in England.

“ I have, &c.,

The answer to this was as follows :—
 “ Per ‘ Russia.’

“ LONDON, January 18, 1868.
 “ To the Hon. John Rose,
 “ Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

“ SIR,—We have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 31st ultimo, enquiring as to the rate at which one million of dollars of United States silver currency could be disposed of in this market, and we now beg to enclose a pro forma account, showing the result of such an operation. The charge for freight has not been included as we suppose you would have no difficulty in ascertaining that on your side. We are informed that it would be more advantageous to make the shipment to Southampton than to any other British port.

“ Hoping that this information may be satisfactory to you,
 “ We have the honor to remain, Sir,
 “ Your most obedient servants,

The following is the pro forma account sale of American silver coin received from Canada on account of the concerned :—

“ E. E. LONDON, January, 1868.
 “ The weights of the dollars are as they are taken from the mint.
 “ The actual out-turn in London, would be from 1 to 3 per cent less, according to the time they have been in circulation. The price also might vary slightly according to the state of the silver market.”

We have here an idea of the extraordinary expense we had to incur to get rid of that silver coin.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Does it state what the loss would be on the shipment ?

Hon. Mr. BUREAU—It does not give any account of insurance or freight ; that was additional. There is another statement at the end of the correspondence in which you will find the figures. I think the lowest was 5½ per cent. On the 5th of February, 1868 Sir John Rose writes to the same parties :—

“GENTLEMEN,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 16th January, handing me pro forma account sales of the United States silver coin, and I thank you for your kind attention in obtaining me the information conveyed by the enclosure.”

Then follows this document :—

(Copy.)

“The Minister of Finance has the honor to report that on the present state of exchanges, a portion of the American silver now in Canada, might be bought up for remittance on favorable terms to England.

“He submits herewith a statement received from the Financial Agents in England, of the probable return which a shipment of that silver would yield ; but he conceives it would be unadvisable owing to the want of proper facilities, for the Government itself to attempt the purchase and remittance.

“He therefore recommends that he be authorized to make arrangements with the Financial Agents in Canada, to purchase American silver to an amount not exceeding $600,000 by the issue of 6 per cent. bonds, in such sums, payable at 20 or 25 years' date, as may be thought advisable, which the Government shall have the option of converting into Dominion Stock within seven years' date, upon the understanding that the rates shall be such as that the interest to the Government shall not exceed 6½ per cent. per annum, over a period of 25 years.

The next paper is a copy of a report of a committee of the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council, on the 4th of February, 1868. It is as follows :—

“On a memorandum dated 3rd instant, from the Honorable the Minister of Finance, reporting that on the present state of Exchange, a portion of the American silver now in Canada, might be bought up for remittance on favorable terms to England ; and he submits a statement received from the Financial Agents in England, of the probable return which a shipment of that silver would yield ; but states that he conceives it would be inadvisable, owing to the want of proper facilities, for the Government itself to attempt the purchase and remittance ; he therefore recommends that he be authorized to make arrangements with the Financial Agents

When we take into consideration all the difficulties that we had to face to relieve the country of the silver nuisance, it is important that we should thoroughly understand every step which was taken by the Government at that period. I will, therefore, continue to quote from the correspondence. The next letter was to the manager of the Bank of Montreal. I will read that letter and the reply, which are as follows :—

(Copy) “MONTREAL, 10th February, 1868.”

“DEAR SIR,—The Government is desirous of exporting a quantity of American silver, if it can be done on sufficiently favorable terms.

“I send you herewith copies of a letter from the Financial Agents in London, containing pro forma account sales, shewing how much in sterling a million of dollars of different coins would realize in London.

“My object in now addressing you is to ask whether the Bank will undertake the management of the transaction, and at what rate of Commission.

“I propose to issue 6 per cent Dominion Bonds in currency, at 25 years' date, and to give them in payment for the silver, but not at rates which will cost the Government more than 6½ per cent per annum for the money.

“The holder will have the option of converting the Bonds into Dominion Stock.

“I should be glad to have your opinion whether the operation can be effected on the terms I speak of, and also of the wisdom of attempting the direct public conversion of the bonds for coin at a fixed rate, or whether success would be more likely to follow the private purchase of the silver, when and as it might be done on the most favorable terms, keeping in mind however the disposal of the bonds as an essential element of the transaction.

“I should not wish to go beyond $500,000, in the meantime, until the actual result could with certainty be ascertained.

“Your early reply will oblige,

“Yours very truly,

“Bank of Montreal, Montreal.

"BANK OF MONTREAL,

"Montreal, 10th February, 1868.

"DEAR SIR,—I have to acknowledge your letter of this date, upon the subject of exporting a quantity of American silver, if it can be done on sufficiently favourable terms.

"I have examined the pro forma account sales of $1,000,000 in American silver obtained by the Government from the Financial Agents in London.

"As they remark on the postscript an allowance of from one to three per cent for depreciation would have to be made for the time the coin had been in circulation, and the Agents have also been unable to take into their calculations the ocean freight and express charges from Canada to the seaboard. I observe that the intention of the Government is to combine the export of silver with the sale of six per cent Currency Debentures, redeemable in 25 years, provided the interest upon the loan [which it would be practically] did not exceed 6½ per cent per annum.

"In reply to your enquiry, I have to say that the Bank will undertake the management of the operation for account of the Government, for a commission of one per cent upon the amount of silver obtained.

"I am of opinion that the operation is more likely to be successful within the limit assigned, if the silver is purchased, and the Debentures sold quietly in the market for account of the Government, without any public announcement on the subject.

"I fear that if it was known that the Government was in the market buying silver for exportation that the price would immediately be enhanced, and holders would not part with it except at such rates as would render the operation impossible.

"If the Government think it would be more judicious to make a public announcement, I would suggest that the Debentures be offered at par in exchange for the silver. In this case the Bank will undertake to manage the operation upon the same commission; but I am doubtful whether the holders of silver would not very soon find that it was better to sell the silver at the reduced rate of discount which it would reach, than take the risk of loss in converting the Debentures and in this way the primary object you have in view in exporting the silver might be frustrated. Upon the whole, I think, it will be better to try the experiment in the first instance of buying up the silver to the extent of $500,000. Whether the Debentures and the silver can be disposed of simultaneously at rates that will keep the operation within the limits assigned by the Government, can only be ascertained upon trial. The Bank is desirous of acting simply as agents for the Government in this matter, and I would suggest that it be an understanding that the Bank will discontinue the operation before the limit of $500,000 is reached, if it is found that the average cost to the Government would much

Hon. Mr. Bureau.

"exceed the 6½ per cent per annum, to which you are desirous of limiting it.

"I am, Dear Sir,

"Yours truly,

"(Signed,) E. H. KING.

"Hon. John Rose,

"Minister of Finance, Ottawa.

"Upon looking again at the pro forma account sales of silver, I observe that the insurance is taken at summer instead of winter rates from New York."

That gives about the history of the exportation of American coin from this country, under the financial administration of Sir John Rose and Sir Francis Hincks. The cost was a great burden to us. I think it is the duty of a wise and prudent Government to have the necessary currency for the country. The result would be there would be no depreciated coin in circulation. There are different estimates of the amount of money in circulation throughout the world. In France, from 1795 to 1858, it was estimated that the money in the country was about 8,563,713,882 francs, and by an estimate made in 1848, the amount of money in the world was 31,500,000,000 francs, in gold and silver. Since 1858 it is calculated that up to 1863 there must have been 8,226,769,120 francs produced in addition to the amount I have mentioned, of which 6,056,173,000 were gold, and 2,170,596,120, silver. In 1867 commissioners were appointed by the British Government to attend a congress held in Paris that year, to see whether it would not be possible to devise a currency that would suit every country and facilitate trade, commerce, and agriculture. The international conference was presided over by Napoleon III, and England was represented as well as many other countries. Afterwards a Royal Commission was appointed to investigate the matter to see if England could agree with the conclusions of the congress. One of those conclusions, arrived at unanimously in the congress, was that the proportion of fine gold should be nine-tenths in gold coin. That Royal Commission in their report state, amongst other things:—

"Great value seems to be attached to the co-operation of England in any measure of this description. England has been forward in urging the policy of free trade upon continental nations; and, while her joining in any movement that originated abroad, for promoting and facilitating commercial inter“course would be most favorably received, and “would increase her influence among them, “her declining altogether to enter upon it, “might appear to be inconsistent with her “general conduct upon such questions.”

The Royal Commission had four points to take into consideration. First, the adoption of a single gold standard ; second, the adoption of nine-tenths as the proportion of fine gold in the coins ; third, that all gold coins hereafter struck in any of the countries which are parties to the convention, should be either of the value of five francs or multiples of that sum ; and fourth, that a gold coin of the value of twenty-five francs should be struck by such countries as prefer it, and be admitted as an international coin. The Commission report :—

“In other countries steps have been taken “with a view to promote a general international coinage.

“In the early part of last year, before the “assembling of the Paris Conference, laws were “passed both in the Papal States and in the “Kingdom of Greece, with the intention of “assimilating the currencies of those two countries to that of the Convention of 1865 ; and “on the 31st July, 1867, immediately after the “termination of the Paris Conference, a preliminary treaty was signed between France “and Austria, by which the latter country “undertakes to re-mould her coinage upon the “system of that Convention.

“A similar measure has been adopted in “Roumania, and came into operation on 1st “January last.

“A Bill has been introduced into the Congress of the United States for altering the “value of the American coinage, so as to assimilate it to that of the Convention of 1865 : “and we have received the report of the “Finance Committee of the Senate of the “United States, recommending the adoption of “the measure, with certain amendments ; together with a report, also presented to the “Senate, adverse to the passing of the Bill.”

The Royal Commission then proceed to refer to the Bill passed in this Parliament in 1868, as follows :—

“A Bill has been introduced into the Canadian Parliament for the regulation of the “currency of that country, in which provision is “made for the adoption by Canada of the “system of the Convention, in the event of the “measure above referred to becoming law in “the United States.

“Another Bill has been introduced into the “Congress of the United States, in order to “assimilate the coinage to that of this country, “making the half eagle equal to our sovereign.”

As I have stated, they thought proper to adopt another system that would suit them better, and our Act of 1868 never went into operation. Perhaps the Government may see fit to adopt one of the three courses I have already referred to as being open to them under the laws of nations. When we see the success which attended the action of the New Brunswick bankers, I think we should look to the moral influence of the bankers of this country, more than to coercive legislation, to aid in preventing a repetition of the silver nuisance. If we think that course would not succeed, there is only one other remedy. We can have a law by which we can say that the banks will not be authorized to take any of that depreciated money and put it into circulation directly or indirectly. Our banking institutions have such a high character in this country, that I am sure it is only necessary to call their attention to the course they should pursue in the public interest, to have them follow it and save the necessity of further legislation. I see no advantage that could result from having a depreciated currency. It would burden our commercial, agricultural, and manufacturing interests, and involve an immense loss every year. It would be a tax, the amount of which we could not calculate, and I do hope our leading men will unite to prevent such a loss. But in the meantime it is the duty of the Government to give the people such a currency as may be necessary for the requirements of trade. If I am well informed, in the Province of Manitoba, they have not money in circulation sufficient, even, for the ordinary business of the country, and the consequence is, ten cents is worth twelve and a half. I beg, therefore, to enquire what the Government intend to do under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I quite agree with my hon. friend that this is a matter of great importance. The hon. gentleman has made a study of this question, and I am sure the House will be greatly benefited by his observations. It is certainly the intention of the Government to take measures to prevent the abuses and the loss of money referred to by the hon. member, but what those measures are I am not yet prepared to say. It is a subject which attracted the attention of the Government even before the hon. gentleman placed his notice on the paper, and since he has made his able speech, the Government will avail themselves of the information which he has furnished.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—I do not think that we require any further legislation with regard to this matter. What the Government should do is to see that there is sufficient silver coin of our own to meet the wants of the country. If they will do that and enforce the laws we have, I don't think we will be troubled as we were during the American war. The people of this country were unacquainted with the real difficulty that beset us at that time. They were under the impression that the American silver which was in circulation during the rebellion, was the same coin that was current in the United States from the foundation of the Republic. In 1853, however, the United States Government assimilated the law with regard to silver, to the law adopted by Great Britain in 1816, by reducing the value of silver coinage about six per cent. The American people had the double standard, and whenever silver became dearer than gold, which it did prior to 1853 from the demand for it in the East Indies and China, the silver was swept out of the country to supply the demand for it in the East, and the Americans could not understand what had become of their silver coin. It was because it was dearer than gold that it was exported. By reducing its value six per cent, they kept it in the country. When the rebellion broke out in the United States, and people in this country wanted to exchange their greenbacks into coin or specie, they were offered up to, say 105, if they would take silver instead of gold. The Canadians thought they were making a good bargain and took the silver, but it became understood afterwards it was only silver tokens they were getting and not silver of the same value as the coin in circulation prior to 1853. We had all the loss and inconvenience from this depreciated silver being thrown upon Canada. Sir Francis Hincks was the first finance minister who really understood the question, and the measures he took to put an end to it by creating and giving to the people a sufficient supply of our own coin, and placing a nominal value on American silver, were most effectual. If the Government will persevere in that course, they will save our people from any loss which might result from the remonetization of silver in the United States. We should recognize no silver coin but the coinage of our own country. I am glad the attention of the Government has been called to this important question, and I hope they will see to it that we do not sustain any loss or inconvenience from the absurd legislation on the other side of the lines.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I think the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House, has not fully understood the legislation with regard to the silver nuisance. If I recollect correctly when Sir John Rose was Finance Minister, he employed an agent at Montreal to buy up the depreciated silver and ship it from the country. It cost this Dominion a large amount to send it away, and the system adopted reminded me of a man trying to dip up a river with a sieve. As fast as it was taken out it came in again, and the only plan which succeeded in keeping it out was that of Sir Francis Hincks, by issuing shipplasters, so called.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—O, no!

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He issued small notes and they became the change for carrying on the retail business of the country. It is a matter of history, and there is no doubt about it at all. Those shipplasters, as they were called, actually cured the silver nuisance, and nothing else. When the present Government came into power, their very first act was to introduce a measure to tie up their hands so that they could issue no more Dominion notes beyond twelve millions, except they held gold, dollar for dollar. I fought against the Bill in this House, and I think it is a great pity it passed. The notes are just as useful for the purpose of exchanging commodities in our own home trade as gold or silver, but, unfortunately, the Government seemed to be under the dictation of the bankers, and they restricted the circulation. It is now nearly up to $12,000,000, and beyond that there must be a dollar in gold for every dollar in notes that is issued. If this silver nuisance should come into the Dominion from the United States, they will have to repeal that law in order to issue notes. There is so much uncertainty, doubt and ignorance with regard to this whole question, that it was loudly proclaimed if the silver bill was passed in the United States, gold would run up and bonds would go down.

The facts prove the very reverse. United States bonds have gone up in the London market, and gold has gone down in the United States since the two Houses passed the bill over the veto of the President. The facts are directly against the predictions of political economists and bankers.

Hon. Mr. WARK—But silver is not in circulation yet.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—It was called an act of repudiation, because the United States determined their bonds should be paid according to contract. The contract was that the five-twenties first issued should be paid in legal money. The next enactment was that they should be paid in coin, and it is only in the latter issues, and of no great amount, that they stipulated to pay in gold coin. The great bulk of the debt was to be paid in coin, and at the time the bonds were issued the silver dollar was as much a legal tender as the gold eagle. I know individuals myself that paid greenbacks to get those debentures when they were at forty-one cents in comparison with the dollar in gold. There is an agitation going on in the United States at the present time, called the Labor Greenback agitation, and the question of money and currency is being more intelligently discussed now than ever it was before. The fact is, this currency question is one of those things that Sidney Smith said was the end of all argument—the great mass do not comprehend it. At all events volume after volume has been written on the subject and there is as little known about it now as there was a century ago. I have here the statement of Sir John Lubbock, that of £19,000,000 sterling paid into his bank in five days, only one-half per cent was gold, so that the great bulk of trade is carried on upon the fiction that there is gold to meet all liabilities. The question in the United States was whether there should be a single standard or a double standard. We see that France is the most prosperous country in Europe, taking all things into consideration, and her standard is the double standard. I have a statement of the Bank of France which shows they now hold £80,000,000 sterling, in silver and gold, while the amount of its circulation is £100,000,000 sterling. Germany after the close of the war, demonetized silver, which brought about a commercial panic that she is still suffering under. She previously had the double standard. The United States had always the double standard until a few years ago, when a section was smuggled into a bill and not generally known, which demonetized silver, and now by more than a two-thirds vote over the President's veto, Congress has decided to go back to the double standard. I only rose to correct the hon. the Senator from Hamilton with regard to what cured the silver nuisance. It was cured by the issue of small notes, called fractional currency, under the Bill of Sir Francis Hincks.

Hon. Mr. Wilmot.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—No, no.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I say yes, yes; Sir Francis Hincks issued the small notes.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—We had plenty of one dollar notes before.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I speak of the fractional currency—twenty-five cent notes.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—We had them for a short time, but they were all called in.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—There are some in circulation yet. There was no necessity for calling them in. They cost only the paper and printing and the numbers lost and destroyed more than paid the cost. What was the necessity to issue bonds and tax the people to pay 6½ per cent interest upon them, when the Government could have supplied fractional currency without cost to the people.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—As far as I can remember, the Bank of France has not been paying specie for a long time. They hold a large amount of specie but as a matter of fact, it is merely held to give public confidence and not to redeem their notes.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—The Economist say they resumed specie payment last January, but, at all events, the people of France have carried on their business with the notes of the Bank of France which are legal tender, and in the darkest period of the war the discount never exceeded two per cent. The argument of the hon. Senator from Hamilton, if carried to its logical sequence, would be to abolish the fixed value of silver or gold. He speaks of silver going out to India and China; we know perfectly well silver is the only legal tender in those countries. They treat gold as an article of commerce and so it ought to be treated in every country.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—This is a question in which we are all interested, and I suppose there is no difference of opinion that the Government should do what is necessary to prevent a repetition of the silver nuisance in this country, but I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Wilmot) does not understand the manner in which the silver nuisance was got rid of. Sir John Rose did not, as he thinks, begin to export the silver; Mr. Weir, a broker, began it in Montreal, as a private speculation, with the assistance of merchants there. Sir Francis Hincks subsequently met the difficulty in a manner that I thought at the time would never succeed, because it seemed to me very like the operation described by my hon. friend, dipping water out of a river with a sieve. He bought up the depreciated silver and exported it.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—He did not buy the silver, he issued notes.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—The silver bought by the Government was all bought during Sir Francis Hincks' time. Mr. Weir commenced it as a private speculation.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Sir Francis Hincks issued shimplasters to supply its place.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Exactly. That was because he had not the silver coinage to replace what he was driving out. But the moment he got Canadian silver he recalled the shimplasters, as he had intended to do from the first. The shimplasters were a temporary expedient. Sir Francis Hincks would be the last, I am sure, to entertain the currency doctrines of my hon. friend, however valuable they may appear to be. The people might, from the first, have refused to take these quarter-dollars. If they had known their true interest they would have always repudiated them. Sir Francis Hincks by a minatory sort of process, forced them to do so, then he issued the fractional currency to take their place till he could get Canadian coin; at the same time buying up the American silver and exporting it. That got rid of the nuisance; but it must be remembered a duty of 17½ per cent was put on the importation of this silver, and this prevented it from coming back again after it was exported. My own impression is (I speak with a great deal of diffidence on the subject) that the 17½ per cent duty is likely to keep it out under any circumstances.

Hon. Mr. LEWIN—This question comes simply and practically down to the effect the remonetization of silver in the United States and the recoinage of silver currency is likely to have on our trade and commerce. No doubt during the late rebellion in the United States, Canada suffered great inconvenience from the influx of silver into this country. In New Brunswick we avoided that difficulty by our own caution: the bankers met together and decided that they would only receive American silver at such a rate of discount that it would pay for all the expenses of exportation and leave a small margin over. The consequence was, brokers who had ordered large quantities of American silver countermanded their orders, and this prompt action saved the province a great deal of trouble. If the representatives of the monetary institutions of this country would meet together, and fix a rate at which they would receive this silver, they would very soon check the silver nuisance. American silver would then come in here as bullion, and it would be taken and treated as bullion. If the Government should fix a value for American coins by proclamation they would really be monetizing that silver in this country, a policy which should be avoided as much as possible. I believe in the rule adopted by Great Britain of the single standard of gold as a measure of value, and the same principles apply to us as well as to all other countries. I think, myself, instead of calling upon the Government to help us on every occasion we ought to help ourselves. If the monetary institutions of the country would set their faces against taking American silver except as bullion, the difficulty that is anticipated will be avoided.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—In the Province of Ontario the people themselves, in the different localities, settled the difficulty most effectually by resolving at public meetings and declaring that they would not take American silver except at certain fixed rates, considerably below the bank value. For half-dollars they agreed to give only 40 cents; and for quarter-dollars something less than 20 cents. It was amazing how rapidly the American silver disappeared. The annoyance caused by the vast quantity of it thrown into the country was very great. Every merchant had large quantities of it in his vaults and knew not what to do with it. It was not bankable; you could not use it in trade; it was a perfect nuisance. I apprehend that there is no way of keeping it out effectually except by the people of each locality refusing to take it except at rates that will afford a profit to export it across the lines. But the true plan is, for the banks to buy it up at rates that will give a profit in sending it back.

Hon. Mr. READ— I beg to differ from the hon. gentleman when he says the true way is for the banks to take it in at a reduced price. My opinion is that the banks should not take it in at all. One thing I would direct attention to, is the great scarcity of one and two dollar bills. I know I am speaking within the hearing of bankers who do not like to hear this question brought up, but you may travel half a mile at a time in some of the towns and cities before you can get change for a ten dollar bill. We all know that the reason is the banks get no profit on the issue of the small Dominion notes and when they get them in they keep them. Some persons can get them, but it seems to be a matter of favour, and it is a great matter of complaint that the people cannot get small notes to make change. I brought this question before the notice of Parliament before, when I was a member of the Lower House, when this difficulty existed before previous to the issue of the "shinplasters." I think the Government have made a profit out of the shinplasters because there are only $112,000 of them in circulation to-day. I suppose they are held by the banks the same as specie, or else they are lost, because it is quite certain they are not in the hands of the general public. I hope the Government will take steps to see that there is a better circulation of small bills, in order to meet the requirements of the trading community.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—This silver and gold question—the great exchanges of the world's commerce—is one that puzzles me, and at the present time must affect Canada; but I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, that there is a great lack of small bills for change throughout the country, and I believe the issue was reduced last year. I think the silver nuisance would be avoided to a great extent, and this Dominion largely profited, if the Government had power to issue more shinplasters and small bills. The scarcity of such currency necessitates somewhat the circulation of American silver. My impression was that many of the banks were making money out of the silver nuisance; that they were issuing American silver at par, and taking it back at ninety cents. While making such a profit out of it, it is questionable whether the banks would voluntarily deprive themselves of such a source of gain. It is in the interest of the country that we should have a full-weighted and full standard coin, as it protects and equalizes the value of products of labor in exchange, and all may invest in it with perfect security. My hon. friend from Belleville has stated that there are over $112,000 in shinplasters still afloat. But I doubt whether they are in existence; many are lost and destroyed. They are not in circulation; the banks may have some, and the Government must profit, not only by the saving of interest, but by the destruction and loss of a large number of those small notes. I hope some means will be devised by the Government to prevent a recurrence of the silver nuisance in this country, and at the same time put in circulation more of the one and two dollar bills.

MERCHANTS' BANK STOCK CAPITAL REDUCTION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. PENNY moved the second reading of Bill (11) "An Act to reduce the Capital Stock of the Merchants' Bank of Canada." He said the necessity for this Bill has arisen from the circumstance that the times, having pressed very heavily upon some of our financial institutions, and, amongst the rest, on the Merchants' Bank of Montreal. It had intended on this account, to reduce the capital stock 25 per cent.; and the shareholders of the Bank, having agreed that that was to be done, the Legislature was petitioned in order to obtain power for that purpose. It was thought, however, by the Banking Committee of the other House better to reduce it instead of 25 per cent, by 33½ per cent. I presume no one will object to giving this power to the Bank to enable it to go on with business on the capital that it still has intact.

The Bill was read the second time.

The House adjourned at 5 p. m.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON, pursuant to notice, rose to call attention to the public expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion of it which is largely within the control of the Administration, and inquire of the Government how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure. He said: It is with a great deal of reluctance that I bring the subject of the finances of the country before the House, because I am aware that it is not an attractive one to many hon. gentlemen; but as I last Session and the Session before felt called upon to refer to what I considered the extravagance and wasteful expenditure of the Government, especially the more controllable portion of the expenditure, I feel it now my duty to submit to the House what I believe has been done by the Government since last Session, whether in the way of retrenchment or otherwise. It was my opinion (and is still,) that very great extravagance prevailed throughout the Administration; that it had its centre at Ottawa, in the Departments here, that the extravagance here has been most reckless and wasteful, and that the example set here has been followed in the administration of the affairs of the country to its remotest bounds. I complained last Session that it was stated, in the Speech from the Throne, that there had been such retrenchment effected as would aid in bringing about an equilibrium between revenue and expenditure. I stated, at the time, I was afraid that that was not the case. I think I was able to show, and will be able to show to-day, that such was not the case, but that, on the contrary, the expenditure was increased, and the revenue and expenditure are as far from meeting to-day as they were this day last year. I intend to-day to make my remarks as brief as I can. I do not propose to extend my comparison of expenditures generally beyond those for the year 1877 with 1876, though I may occasionally extend them further. I established last Session that the present Government is responsible for the increase in controllable expenditures between 1873 1876, to the extent of $1,800,000. That, as I always admitted, is necessarily an estimate,—nothing more than an estimate can be made as to the expenditure for which each Government is responsible; but I believe that in forming that estimate I was liberal and generous to the present Government, liberal beyond what the strict facts demand, and in proof of that view there is the fact that the expenditure of 1876 over 1875—two complete years of the present Administration—was $717,060. One million eight hundred thousand dollars for three years would give an annual increase of $600,000. And, as I have stated, the ascertained increase in one year was $717,060.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Between what years?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The expenditure of 1876-77 over that of 1875-76. I think this is very strong circumstantial proof of the liberality of my estimate. It is quite true the amount charged in 1872 against the consolidated revenue fund is less than the amount charged in the preceding year, and it would be very remarkable if it were not so. I shall proceed almost immediately to show wherein the difference arises. I fear it will not be found there has been what may fairly be considered retrenchment, and I fear it will not be found that there has been an earnest attempt to economise the expenditure, although it has been decreased, necessarily decreased.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

The decreased expenditure on Harbors &c. in 1877, compared with 1876, amounted to $207,700. I take it, those harbors on which there was no expenditure in 1877, like the buildings, were finished and required no more expenditure on them. So I do not find an opportunity here to give credit to the Government for retrenchment. The name of some of the piers in the St. Lawrence, might recall to the mind of the hon. Senator from Lambton the Baby jobs, but that the Fort Francis Lock should have done so is somewhat surprising. I may remark that I made enquiries about those Baby jobs and found that every succeeding Government had found it necessary to keep the piers that were described as Baby jobs in repair to serve the purposes of commerce, and most of them have been added to by the Government. At Rimouski, for instance, the mails for the whole country west of that point are landed, and a very large expenditure has been made there to enlarge and improve the wharf. On some harbors there has no doubt been a good deal of unnecessary expenditure by the present Government. Take the Goderich Harbor upon which $213,375, was expended in 1876 and 1877, there is no question it cost $30,000 more than it need have done, through the Government giving it to a bidder higher than the lowest. They perpetrated a piece of most unjustifiable favoritism. I do not like to apply the term "jobs" to an act of the very highest ministers in the country, and yet I do not know any other word in the English language which will describe what was done by the Government in respect to that contract. Then there are Antigonish, Cow Bay, and other harbors in the Maritime Provinces. Cow Bay may recall another picture which the hon. Senator for Lambton once drew—that is, the Maritime calves milking the Ontario cow.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—If the cow had no calves, she might have had no milk.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—If the present Government remain long in power, I do not think she will continue to have any. The decrease in buildings amounts to $330,415; the decrease in harbors, piers and breakwaters $207,700, the decrease under the head of improvements of rivers, $148,003; making a total difference upon buildings, piers, harbors, breakwaters and river improvements between the expenditure of 1877 and 1876 of $207,700. The saving in ocean and river service was chiefly in repairs, maintenance and buildings. I think there was one vessel built in 1876. Of course if a steamer had to be built in 1876, and others had to be repaired, the Government can hardly claim credit for retrenchment for not repeating the expenditure when unnecessary, in 1877. In police and penitentiaries there is a small saving. Harbor police at Montreal and Quebec show a saving. There has been no expenditure under those two heads since 1875. In Dominion Police there is a small saving. I hope it is judicious economy. I do not consider parsimony by any means to be economy, and the very first duty of a Government, is to do what may be necessary for the security of life and property in the country, and they should be slow to disband a disciplined police force without being certain that it can be safely dispensed with. I think there has been evidence this winter that perhaps such a force as the Montreal Police would have been serviceable. There is a very considerable reduction in lighthouses and coast service, amounting to $74,570. There is some reduction in construction, but it is chiefly in salaries and maintenance, and it is very difficult to see how it has been brought about. There must either have been great extravagance in 1876, or the service must have been injured in 1877.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I think there was extravagance in 1876 as the figures will show. I hope the Government will explain the reason for increasing the salaries and maintenance from $394,904 in 1875 to $427,661 in the following year, and then again in 1877 reducing them to $391,673. I repeat, that the increase in 1876 cannot have been required, or the service has been injured by the reduction in 1877; but in 1876 the Government had not been much influenced by the exposure that had been made of their extravagance. Where would we have been if the reckless extravagance of the Government had not been checked by the attention of the public having been called to it. The next item is the Dominion Force in Manitoba and the North-West Mounted Police. On the Dominion Force there was a reduction in 1876 and also in 1877, and I suppose the item will disappear altogether from the Public Accounts in 1878. Whether that is wise economy, or not, remains to be seen. I myself am exceedingly doubtful of it. I think it is scarcely safe or wise to leave that remote province without a small force for its protection. The Mounted Police shows a slight increase. The next item I come to is the Weights and Measures. I believe that Act is being carried out in a way that is exceedingly burdensome and obnoxious to the people. Whether there is a return to the public in more honest weights, &c., or not, is a question which I will leave for the Government to answer. I only call their attention to it. It is a most vexatious measure, and is particularly complained of throughout the country. This measure was put in force by the present Government. The hon. the Secretary of State generally tries to lay the entire odium or responsibility of measures that have been put in force recently, upon the late Government, and has done so in this House repeatedly with respect to this measure.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Did not Mr. Tilley take a vote for it?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Neither Mr. Tilley nor any other member of the late Government put this act in force. It was passed while the late Government were in power but it contained a suspensory clause, which declared that it should not go into force until a proclamation should be issued by the Governor-General putting it into operation. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that that proclamation was issued by the late Government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Tilley took a vote to purchase standards.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Did Mr. Tilley buy standards? He took the vote, but the hon. gentleman found the vote, and wanted the patronage, and put the act into force.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—As the late Government would have done.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I do not know whether they would or not, but I know the present Government did. I think it is an unworthy thing for any one, whether it be an individual or a Government, to throw upon others the responsibility which they themselves incurred. Some four years have elapsed and the hon. the Secretary of State finds it difficult to attach all the blame to the late Government, and now he attaches it to the employees of the late Administration, who have been retained by the present one, as if the Government were not responsible for the acts of its own employees. This Weights and Measures Act has been a very expensive one. In 1875, to put it in force the expenditure was $69,969, and no return for it. In 1876, the expenditure was $99,784, and no return from it. In 1877, the expenditure was $111,084, and the return was only $50,423. Now, I think Sir Francis Hincks was the Finance Minister when this Bill was passed, and he estimated the cost of it at $50,000; it was not expected to exceed that. The $50,000 collected last year was so much taken out of the pockets of those whose weights and measures were tested, and to them it must have been a very serious amount. The cost of the inspection of staples and the adulteration of food is an item scarcely worth giving attention to. I do not know what has been done with respect to the checking of the adulteration of food; probably the hon. the Secretary of State would tell the House what result is being obtained from that expenditure. I come next to an outlay under the head of "Expenditures on Public Works charges on Revenue." What is meant is really the working and maintenance of Public Works. The officials connected with railways and canals—lock-tenders and their superiors, laborers and all others—and the same with respect to telegraphs. There is a reduction this year under this head, but in a very curious form. I have separated the labor from the salaries, as I did last year. In 1875, the salaries for canal and river works, and piers below Quebec, amounted to $239,859. In 1876, they were increased to $250,952. In 1877, they were reduced to $248,328.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—Is that salaries only?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Yes. I will give the labor presently. The salaries were reduced $1,600, as compared with 1876. The labor was as follows:—In 1875, $278,059; in 1876, $257,142; in 1877, $180,100.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is an improvement.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—A great reduction, indeed, a reduction of nearly $80,000. But the strange thing is, that it is altogether in labor. There is no reduction whatever in the salaries.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The salaries are low enough probably.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The present Government profess to be specially the workingman's friends, and there is a wonderful reduction in the amount paid to the workingmen, while the decrease in the salaries is merely nominal. It seems as if the labor was reduced, but the superintendence of labor was not diminished in the least. Then there are railways and telegraphs. In 1876, the amount charged under that head, was $1,536,403, and in 1877, it was $1,923,324. That shows a very large increase, but, unfortunately, it does not show the whole of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is capital account.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—No; it is a charge on Revenue. There is an extraordinary piece of book-keeping, by which an item under the head of Open Accounts, appears, namely—“Intercolonial Railway Suspense Account, $343,591.”

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is coal cars, I think.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—No. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Public Accounts he will find that the whole amount expended on renewals last year was $543,591. Of that amount, of money paid out, there is charged to the Suspense Account, $343,591, and to the Revenue, $200,000. Now, why should a suspense account be opened for an amount that has actually been paid? It would, no doubt, be very convenient for the Government—especially in the financial condition of the country—to charge items of expenditure to suspense account instead of against revenue as they ought to be charged. But can anything be more unreasonable, or unsound, or absurd than to charge to suspense money that has been paid? What does a suspense account mean? You place in suspense accounts items that are in doubt, items that have not been paid; items that are disputed or doubtful, but when an amount is paid there can be no question whatever as to what will be done with it. On all the canals, for instance, there are spare lock gates. You may as well put the cost of those into a suspense account. You may with equal propriety put steel rails into a suspense account and say you will not charge them against capital until they are used. You might have done the same with the Fort William lands, or the Neeling Hotel, though I fear if that building were kept in a suspense account until it became profitable, you would keep it there a long time. This item is clearly chargeable against the Consolidated Revenue Fund, that is, chargeable against income, and instead of being so charged it has been placed away in the open accounts in a manner which is altogether unjustifiable. Nothing could be more delusive than the manner in which those items have been entered; it is an incorrect representation in the Public Accounts of a very large amount. There is another item of $68,000 for stores, the difference between the value of stores received and issued for the use of the Intercolonial Railway. Now that ought not to have gone into open accounts. Those stores, I take it, have been paid for, and when paid for they should be charged to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, but I have left them where they were. While in my own mind, I have no doubt that they ought to be charged against revenue it may with a certain amount of plausibility be urged, that inasmuch as those stores are on hand and not used they may be an offset for the money. Nothing could be more unsound and incorrect, but not to expose myself to the charge of placing anything against the Consolidated Revenue Fund that ought not to be there, and what every one will admit ought to be there. I do not propose to put the item of $68,000 to it, but will let it remain where it is. The amount therefore which ought to be charged under the head of railways and telegraphs instead of being $1,923,324 is really $2,266,915. There is also another large item which I might raise a question about, but for the reason which I gave a moment ago I will not do so. Now I come to details of expenditure on account of Civil Government. I dare say hon. gentlemen will remember I separated contingencies from salaries last year, and I have done so again this year. In 1876 the salaries were $670,142, and the total contingencies for that year was $171,602. In 1877 the total salaries were $654,714, and total contingencies were $157,479. A satisfactory reduction is going on here, and there was undoubtedly great room for it. It is gratifying to see that there has been an impression made on contingencies, but it will be for this House and the country to judge whether the Government, or those who called attention to their extravagance, deserve the most credit for it.

Hon. gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — I hope that, under the heading of "Contingencies," payments have not been postponed until after the 30th of June.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is a very easy thing to do; purchases are made in England or at a distance, and it is a very easy thing for the Government to postpone the payments till after the close of the financial year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman can see that the item has been steadily going down year after year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — The next statement relates to the Departmental Contingencies at Ottawa, and the amounts paid to extra clerks. In 1875, the total departmental contingencies were $212,327; including extra clerks, $38,821. In 1876 the departmental contingencies amounted to $171,602; extra clerks, $31,651. In 1877, departmental contingencies, $157,479; extra clerks, $30,237. Contingencies of the House of Commons:—1875, $90,000; 1876, $130,000; 1877, $120,000. Total contingencies at Ottawa in 1876, $301,602; in 1877, $277,479. The reduction in the amount for extra clerks is very small—not sufficient to thin the corridors, which, as we were told last Session, was the case, and the saving of last Session, $1,400, would not effect that. Now I come to the Administration of Justice: there is no department of the Government in which the expenditure has increased as steadily as in this since the advent of the present Administration. The increase since 1873 has been $166,631 per annum. It is an enormous increase. The Supreme Court is down for $51,485 in 1877, as compared with $35,657 in 1876. This is an enormous increase, altogether. I have stated before in this House that I hold the Government very largely responsible for the increase in Ontario. I think it would have been very much better had the creation of the Supreme Court been deferred for a time. We had a very high Court of Appeal—without a superior in the world—and one which cost this country nothing; and one which but few suitors resorted to, because they were satisfied with the decisions in this country. Now, there is a sum of $51,485 charged against the country, and the cost to suitors, on the whole is very great. I saw that the ex-Minister of Justice in a speech which he delivered last Autumn, characterized what I said, on the subject of the Administration of Justice in this House, as "a very ignorant attack." I will not notice that now, but I shall do so before I sit down. In Ontario there are loud complaints of law costs. Men are drawn into Chancery and may win their suits and yet be ruined in the process.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—It is the same in many other countries also.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — There is really no such opening for a public man to serve his country as there is in Ontario as a law reformer. The changes in the system seem to have been designed to promote appeals, and in each higher court that you go to the costs are greater than the one immediately below. The same gentleman will deliver an argument in the court below for a moderate fee, and will repeat that argument with little addition in a higher court and charge two or three times the amount that he was satisfied with in the court below. My next statement relates to the Customs Department. That department seems to be the most extravagantly managed—if it is possible to say which is the most extravagant—of the Government. The cost of collecting the revenue is constantly increasing. It has increased every year since 1875 while the revenue has been decreasing.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—In 1875 the revenue from customs was, $15,351,011 and the cost of collecting it was, $682,673; in 1876 the revenue was $12,823,837 and the cost of collecting it was, $721,008; in 1877 the revenue was, $12,546,987—another decline—and the cost of collecting it increased to $721,604. The percentage cost for collecting the revenue in 1875 was 4.45; in 1876 it was 5.62 and in 1877 it had run up to $5.75. I call the attention of the House to the customs and cost of collection at the port of Montreal. In 1875 the revenue amounted to $5,866,711 and it cost to collect it $99,823, being 1.70 per cent. In 1876 the revenue had fallen to $4,292,057, and the cost of collection had increased to $117,275, and the percentage rate was 2.73—an increase of more than one per cent as compared with the previous year. In 1877 the revenue was $3,869,704, and the cost of collecting it had again increased to $117,989, being a percentage of 3.05. Hon. gentlemen will perceive an enormous increase in the cost of collecting a decreasing revenue in those three years. I am not going to maintain here that it will be possible, where there is such a large falling off of revenue, to reduce the cost of collecting it in the same proportion. That would be quite impossible and unjust to a great many men, but, at the same time, there is no excuse for increasing the cost of collection as has been done, and it is a matter which, I hope, the Government will undertake to explain to the House in some satisfactory manner. The receipts at the port of St. John were, in 1875, $1,070,460, and the cost of collection was $46,932, or 4.38 per cent.; in 1876, the receipts at that port were $812,832, cost of collection, $47,674, or 5.86 per cent.; in 1877, the revenue at that port was $854,126, cost of collection, $48,796, or 5.71 per cent. Now this is a matter that requires attention, and the attention of the country ought to be directed to it. It is impossible that the public service can have called for an increase of expense in this department, when the revenue in 1877 was largely below what it was in 1875. I repeat, hon. gentlemen, it is impossible that this increase in the cost of collection can have been made in the public interest. There is but one way to explain it, and that is, that the Government are lowering the Customs Department in this country to take rank with the Customs Department in the United States, and we all know that the Customs Houses in New York and Boston are the most corrupt offices

in the United States, cesspools seething with political corruption and dishonesty, and I fear it is coming to be as bad in our own country. This may have been one of the places where the great crowd of supernumeraries we have heard of has been seen. In Excise, there has been a very large falling off, and a small decrease in the cost of collecting it. In 1876 the revenue from excise was $5,563,487, and in 1877 it was $4,941,898. In 1876 the cost of collecting it was $218,359, and in 1877 it was $211,157, showing a falling off in excise revenue of $621,589, and a decrease in the cost of collecting it of $7,202. Now I come to the Post Office Department, a department that is managed very expensively. I am quite aware that there is no more valuable institution in the country than the Post Office, and that it ought to be extended as far as the convenience of our people require it. In forming new settlements, postal accommodation should be extended as rapidly as possible. While that is true, it is also true that no department in the Government affords greater scope for favoritism and partiality than the Post Office. The revenue from that Department in 1875 was $1,155,332; the cost of collection was $1,520,861, showing a loss of $365,529. In 1876, the revenue was $1,102,540, and the cost of collection was $1,622,827; a loss of $520,287. In 1877, the revenue was $1,114,945, the cost of collection was $1,705,311; a loss of $590,366, an increasing loss each year, showing that in 1875 it cost $1.31 to collect a dollar; in 1876 it cost $1.47 to collect a dollar, and in 1877 it cost $1.53 to collect a dollar. It is difficult to believe that that increase of expenditure is done in a spirit of economy, and without reasons that are not before me, I cannot believe that it is so. At the same time, I say again, it is a department that I would not by any means starve or stint; on the contrary, it is a department that ought to be made serve our own people who go out and form new settlements. I next come to the Department of Agriculture. This department is becoming more and more costly every year, for the little that it accomplishes. The number of immigrants brought to this country in 1875 was 16,038; in 1876 the number was 10,091, and in 1877 there were only 7,743. The cost per head in 1873 was $7.76 ; in 1875 the cost was $18.90 ; in 1876 it was $26.55, and in 1877 it had reached $27.04 per head. I have only taken the number of immigrants that landed at Quebec. For these we employ agents in Europe to direct them to our shores. The cost per head of the immigrants is based on the expenditure, less the amount loaned the Mennonites ; adding the cost of the transport of the Mennonites, but excluding the loan, the cost per head for 1876 was $30.10. The cost per head in 1877, on the same basis, was $29.60. Our returns show an arrival of immigrants numbering 7,743 souls, but of that number the Government know that something like 4,000 were induced to settle in this country—at least they believe that number settled in Canada. As for the others, they do not know what has become of them. No doubt they had through tickets, and went on to the United States, rendering this country no benefit whatever, except the little money they may have spent in passing through the country. I see by an English paper, that the emigrants from Canada this year are set down at 5 000 against 7,000 sent out. The 7,000 is roughly stated, but it agrees very nearly with the number, set down in the return of the Minister, who left for Canada, giving the colony a gain of just 2,000 souls. So that we paid upwards of $300,000 last year to secure those 2,000 immigrants. Now, judging by the reports, I see the agents in Europe are really deterring emigrants from coming to Canada. That seems to be their employment. I think this department should be called "The Anti-Immigration Department," for since the days of the great Agent General, down to the present, I believe the efforts of the agents are directed to prevent emigrants from coming to this country. Emigration is very small from Europe at the present time, and I do not see why an expensive staff of agents are kept on the other side at all. Here are $300,000 expended, of which a great part is actually thrown away and wasted. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will be able to tell us that it is the intention of the Government to reduce the European agencies.

I will now submit a memorandum showing the balance, as I make it out to be, between the increases and decreases of expenditure in the years 1876 and 1877.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

According to the Public Accounts, there is a decrease in the expenditure chargeable to Consolidated Revenue Fund of $1,810,840. The increases show a total of $474,802, but that amount is short stated by the amount of the "Intercolonial Railway renewals Suspense Account," making the actual increase chargeable to Consolidated Revenue Fund $818,393, leaving an apparent decrease of $992,447. I will now explain how that sum is made up, and more than made up. There is a decrease in the expenditure for Militia and Defence of $428,729—that is, the expenditure has been reduced from $978,530, in 1876 to $550,451 in 1877. Now, I ask hon. gentlemen, if it is possible that that reduction can be a wise retrenchment, unless the intention is to disband and abolish the force, and that this is really the beginning of the process of disbandment? If the Government are prepared to tell us that that is their policy, it can be understood, but it is utterly impossible that a department like the Militia Department can bear a reduction, in one year, of nearly one half of the usual annual expenditure. It is quite possible, from what the hon. Secretary of State said the other day about Fort Francis Lock as a military work, that the expense on that work may be charged in future to the Militia Department. It certainly has quite as much to do with the Militia Department as it has to do with the Pacific Railway, and that is nothing whatever. The decreased expenditure upon public works in 1877, compared with 1876, was $686,118, and is caused by the cessation of payments on works which have been completed. Then there is the Dominion Lands Survey in Manitoba, a decrease of $122,330. The surveys were discontinued because more lands were surveyed than were necessary. I do not think the Government can claim that as retrenchment. The Government cannot take credit for discontinuing the payments upon new buildings or other works when once they are finished, or for stopping surveys when more land is surveyed than is likely to be wanted for years. Then there is a decrease of $51,947 for Dominion Forces in Manitoba. They have been disbanded, I believe, so that they could not be paid. Then there is the Boundary Survey, a decrease of $134,105. That survey was completed, and, of course, the officials and men were not likely to be continued under pay after their work was done, so I cannot award the Government great credit for retrenchment there. Settlers' Relief Fund in Manitoba, $83,405. That is an item that, happily, was not required in 1877, and it cannot be spoken of as retrenchment. This makes an actual increase in the controllable expenditure of the Government in 1877 of $513,527 as follows:—

Decreases in Expenditure charged to Consolidated Revenue Fund, in 1877.	$1,810,840

Add short-charged against " Public Works charges on Revenue " being for Intercolonial Railway Renewal Suspense acc., 343,591	818,393

Making the actual increase of strictly controllable expenditure in 1877.....	$513,527

I do not assert that these figures are exact. It is impossible to arrive at an exact balance, but I believe it to be an approximate estimate, and fair and liberal to the Government. It shows that, so far from the controllable expenditure being decreased, it has actually been increased, in 1877 over 1876, by about half a million of dollars. I think the House will agree with me that the Government do not deserve credit for economy; that they have given us none of the retrenchment and economy which they promised and which we had a right to expect from the professions and previous character of the hon. gentlemen. The next statement which I will submit is a comparative statement of revenue and expenditure for each financial year, since Confederation. It is as follows:—

Comparative Statement of the Revenue and Expenditure of each Financial Year since Confederation.

It will thus be seen there was a surplus every year down to and including 1875, amounting, in the aggregate, to $12,010,708. In 1876 there was a deficit of $1,900,785, and in 1877 there was another deficit of $1,460,027, to which has to be added the "Intercolonial Railway Renewal Suspense Account," $343,591, making the deficit of that year $1,803;

618. The item of $68,388 for Intercolonial Railway stores should also be added, but, for reasons which I have already given, I shall not add it. It gives me no pleasure to have to show that the deficit is larger than stated by the Minister of Finance. The next statement shows the Capital Expenditure since Confederation. It is as follows:—

The Pacific Railway, the total expenditure from Capital has been $7,975,578. There is a very strange entry in that account. There is an item under the head of "Pacific Railway Construction," of $572,144.19, value of rails and material transferred to the Intercolonial Railway. I cannot find that item in the account of the Intercolonial Railway. It is taken bodily out of the Pacific Railway account, but I have not been able to find it in the other account.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—Does it not appear in the Public Accounts somewhere else?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I have not been able to find it in the Intercolonial Railway account. If it is there, it must be in some other account, forming a larger sum, but my impression is, it is not there, so that that item should be added either to the Pacific Railway expenditure or to the Intercolonial Railway expenditure. I now come to a comparative statement of the public debt and interest:—

Comparative Statement Public Debt and Interest.

It shows the public debt now stands at $174,675,834, a very formidable sum, hon. gentlemen will admit, and nearly four millions of it—$3,862,068—is a sum that we have not received, but our debt has been increased by that amount which was sunk by the Minister of Finance in England, in payment of interest in advance, for the period of the loan for the sake of getting a nominally lower rate of interest. When I last alluded to this, I had not the Public Accounts before me, and I did not see the whole amount that had been sunk in this way, but it is as I have stated it, that the amount so sunk by the present Finance Minister is $3,862,068. Our debt has been increased by that amount, and we are paying interest upon it while we did not get the principal.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD--And we must repay the principal?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON--Certainly we must repay the principal, although

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

we did not receive it. A good deal may be said on both sides of the question as to which is more expedient, negotiating a loan at par, or at a discount. I maintain, that in a country like this, which is constantly borrowing, we should pay the rate of interest that will give us as nearly as possible par loans. It is exceedingly important for us to maintain our credit, but the increasing number and amount of our loans, and alarmingly increasing debt, is calculated to injure our credit. The very first question that would be asked the Minister of Finance, if he went to negotiate another loan, would be the amount of our debt. He would state the amount of debt and say that it was at such and such a rate of interest; that we had a certain amount of assets, &c. But that is a very undesirable mode of applying for a loan. Whenever it becomes necessary for a borrower to enter into explanations of that kind, it is prejudicial to his chances, and he has to pay more for his money. A very unfortunate system has been adopted, and

I think it must be apparent to the country now when they see that our debt has been increased by the amount of nearly four millions, which we have not got, but on which we have to pay interest and repay the nominal principal in full, and borrow again, they will see that a most unwise and wasteful system has prevailed. Now, hon. gentlemen, we have had a deficit each of the last two years of, in round figures, a couple of millions, and it is not proposed to do anything this year to supply it. Is it possible that that will not affect most prejudicially the credit of the Dominion? Does not the Government know, as well as every thinking man in the country knows, that it will be impossible, from the present sources of revenue, to overtake those deficits. I believe the Government are perfectly well aware of it, and they must have some scheme of taxation which they ought to communicate to Parliament and to the people, but which they studiously withhold. There can be no question about that. There is some scheme which will probably be a very unpopular one, a very odious one, which they know if they communicate to the people now, would be very unpopular. They have no right to retain a scheme in reserve which they are afraid to communicate to the country.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—There is an income tax, perhaps?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—An income tax and a land tax, no doubt. There will be some odious and inquisitorial tax that will be found to be as unpopular and obnoxious as it is possible for taxes to be.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Oh! oh!

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Yes, and no doubt the hon. gentleman is in the secret and knows all about it. Look at the decline in values; our tariff is mainly an ad valorem one, and as the values of staples decline, so must our revenue. Why, even if the depression in the country was succeeded by prosperity, the general values of goods cannot be expected to advance in the sudden way they declined, and unless they do, no matter what the prosperity of the country may be, the necessary revenue will not be obtained from the sources which we have heretofore depended upon, and which have sufficed. The hon. gentlemen know that,

Hon. Mr. Macpherson

and it is dishonest in them to pass through this last Session of this Parliament, and not tell the country what they intend to propose, if they should have an opportunity of doing so. The percentage of deficit for each of the two years was, in 1876, on the total revenue, nearly  $8\frac{1}{2}$  per cent.; and on taxation,  $10\frac{1}{2}$  per cent. In 1877 it was about  $8\frac{1}{2}$  on revenue, and  $10\frac{1}{2}$  on taxation. I do not attach very great importance to the difference between revenue and taxation, because all has to come out of the people, but as a matter of fact, the statement is as I have placed it before the House. Is it not unpardonable that those hon. gentlemen should keep the country in ignorance of what they intend to do in the matter, when every hon. gentleman must see that some new scheme of increased taxation is absolutely necessary? In England, the revenue is something like £80,000,000. Supposing the Chancellor of the Exchequer came down with a deficit of more than 10 per cent., what would the country say to him? Would the country allow Parliament to rise without increasing the taxation? They might eject the Chancellor of the Exchequer and his colleagues from office, but Parliament would impose taxation or reduce expenditure, and the credit of the country would be maintained. The credit of the Dominion is being destroyed by the system pursued by the Government. Here they are going on accumulating these deficits. Why, the deficit is nearly one-third of the interest of our public debt. Will hon. gentlemen consider what that means?

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—It is compound interest.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Fancy the case of a farmer who has a mortgage on his farm. The first thing he must do is to support his family. That done, suppose he then finds the balance of his income one-third less than the interest he has to pay on the mortgage. What is his position? Unless he can raise three blades of grass where he raised two before, or retrench, ruin is before him; and it is just the same with countries as it is with individuals. No doubt this country will recover itself, but it will be at a very great cost. The customs revenue, for the year up to the tenth of February, shows a small increase, but I am not at all sure that it will not show a decrease on the year, because the importations on the year are falling off. The mild season we have had, while favorable for the poor, has interfered very seriously with the consumption of winter goods of all kinds. People in poor circumstances have done without their winter clothes that they intended to purchase, and will wait for another winter. To say that we are to let another year pass this way, increasing our debt by deficits, is the most unwise administration that it is possible to conceive. I stated, in the early part of my remarks, that the late Minister of Justice, in the speech which he delivered before his constituents in South Bruce, addressed the following very rude remarks to me:—"A very ignorant attack was made on the Administration of Justice, not in the House of Commons but in another place." We all know, hon. gentlemen, what that means, and he might just as well have named me, because I was the only person in this House who spoke on that subject. I am not disposed to pass without comment an observations of that kind coming from the ex-Minister of Justice. His remark was very unjust. I made no ignorant attack. I think I can appeal to hon. gentlemen to say whether I am in the habit of making ignorant statements in this Chamber. My statements have been questioned sometimes, but they have never been refuted or disproved.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Hon. gentlemen on the other side had said they only wanted a little time to answer my statements, my charges of extravagance against the Government, but the time has never come—perhaps it will come to-day—but neither here nor elsewhere, with all the ingenuity that has been possible to bear from the Department, has one of my statements been refuted. I made no ignorant statements in this House with respect to the Administration of Justice. I merely stated that the amount of the increased expenditure chargeable upon the public was, and where it was, but I also stated, and I repeat it again now, that so far as Ontario was concerned the changes there could not have been made if the ex-Minister of Justice had been opposed to them, and I repeat here, that the changes that have been made in the laws and procedure of Ontario are all in the interests of the lawyers. But, hon. gentlemen, I should rather fall into an ignorant statement than make a disingenuous statement, and I believe I can show that the Minister of Justice did so at Teeswater, in the county of Bruce, before his constituents. If a gentleman makes an incorrect statement ignorantly, it is, at all events, done without evil intent, but when a man makes a disingenuous statement it is quite another thing. I shall quote from the "authorized edition" of those speeches—precious production it is. On page 136, under the head of "economies effected" Mr. Blake said:—

"Now I will give you the results of that re-organization. The staff had been increased in 1873, and in November of that year, at the resignation of the late Government, the annual rate of charge for salaries, including bonuses and an officer charged on contingencies, was over $13,500. Changes subsequently took place, and the rate of charge when I took office in May, 1875, was over $15,750. I was, as I have said, unable to make a reduction in salaries during the first year; but the re-organization which, with the assistance of my colleagues, I was enabled to effect was such, that in June last, when I left office, the rate of charge for salaries was only $10,750, (loud cheers) a reduction of over $5,000, or about one-third of the rate when I took office, and of $2,800, or about one-fifth of the rate when the late Government resigned. (Renewed cheers.) This great reduction in the annual charge upon you for salaries has been effected, you will bear in mind, notwithstanding the enormous increase in the work, to which I have already called your attention. Combining the charges for salaries and contingencies, the total charge for the contingencies of 1873, and the rate of salaries for November of that year, would be over $23,000. When I took office they would be over $26,600; and for 1876 they were reduced to less than $21,000; when I left office they had fallen to $13,537, about one-half, or a saving of $13,000 on the rate when I came in, and five-twelfths, or a saving of $9,500 on the rate when the late Government resigned; and this, mark you, once again, in the face of an enormously increased volume of work. (Loud cheers.) Now, sir, I do not propose at this moment to enter into an enquiry as to how the large sums I have named came to be expended by our adversaries in 1873, in the execution of the comparatively small work of that time. Our opponents, at any rate, will not contend that their expenditures were wrongful or wasteful; they will argue for their propriety and necessity; they will tell you that they could not conduct the business of the State more economically than they did. Assuming for the moment, without at all admitting the accuracy of this view, I leave you to contrast the figures I have given, and to determine whether they furnish any ground for charging us with extravagance or incapacity in the management of these departmental matters, which, it has been rightly said, are peculiarly under our own eye and control, and in respect of which, therefore, we have a special responsibility. Nay, sir, I go further—I re-tort the charge upon our adversaries; I say these figures put them, and not us, on the defensive; that they lead to inferences the very opposite of those which have been urged against us; and that we may fairly ask you to decide that we have been able to walk in a more excellent way than followed by our loud-mouthed accusers. (Hear, hear, and cheers.) In 1873, the telegraph account was $4,371.88; in 1876, $1,164.69; and in 1877, $530."

It will be seen from this extract from his speech that the Minister of Justice combined salaries and contingencies for one financial year, and the rate of salaries for one month, in another financial year so that it is exceedingly difficult—in fact impossible—to compare that particular statement with the Public Accounts; but Mr. Blake said combining salaries and contingencies when he took office they would be over $26,600, and for 1876 they were reduced to less than $21,000. When he left office they had fallen to $13,537. Now hon. gentlemen the Public Accounts show that the salaries and contingencies of the Department of Justice amounted to in

1876.....	27,979
1877.....	21,484

This makes a difference between the Public Accounts and Mr. Blake of

$6,096.....	in 1875
6,979.....	in 1876
7,947.....	in 1877

Now hon. gentlemen I presume that the then Minister of Justice excluded his own salary from the expenses of his office. Why he should have done so is to me incomprehensible. I at first thought it possible from an expression which he had used in another part of his address—that he had not drawn his salary, but on looking at the Public Accounts I find his salary drawn like that of other Ministers, properly drawn. The statement was unquestionably delusive to his hearers. He stated that the expenses of his department were seven thousand dollars less than they really were during each of the years 1875, 1876 and 1877.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will look at the estimates he will find that departmental expenditures do not include the Ministers' salaries.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman says they are not in the estimates, but they are in the expenditure. The Public Accounts are the place to find the expenditures, and not the estimates. The Public Accounts are my authority, and the Minister of Justice was speaking of expenditure, he was not speaking of estimates, and his hearers, the honest men of Bruce, would suppose he was making a full disclosure of the expenses of his office while he did not do so. In 1877, Mr. Blake took credit for reducing the expenses of his office, but he has divided the department, separating the Penitentiaries branch, but this subdivision did not reduce the gross expenditure. The salaries of the Penitentiaries branch in 1877, were $2,577; and contingencies, $1,683; making together, $4,260. I am inclined to think that the expenses of the office were very little increased by that sub-division, and that the item of $4,260, ought to be added to the $21,784, making the expenditure, $26,044 for that year. In 1872-3, the expenses of the Department of Justice—the salaries and contingencies, including the salary of the Minister—were $26,837, and in that year the Mounted Police Force was mainly organized, and organized through that department, without any additional charge to the public, so that even if the whole of this sum of $4,260, connected with the Penitentiaries branch, which I think ought to be added to the expenses of the Department of Justice, should not be strictly so charged, the organization of the Mounted Police in 1872-73 is a fair set off against it. When the hon. gentleman was making those comparisons, comparing the expenses of his department with the expenses of the same department during the time it was under the administration of Sir John A. Macdonald, and glorifying himself at the expense of his predecessor, I think he might have gone a little further and compared their own salaries. He should have told the people while he was drawing $7,000 a year—I think he had then taken the office of President of the Council, which he had himself declared to be a sinecure—Sir John Macdonald had discharged the duties of Minister of Justice and of Prime Minister, for $5,000 a year down to the last year of his Administration.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Who made the change.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That is not the question. Mr. Blake benefited by the change. I see by the Public Accounts of 1877-78, that the contingencies of that department were only $2,760, an enormous reduction, and if they can be kept at that Mr. Blake deserves great credit for it. But, strange to say, I see in the estimates for 1878-79, the contingencies are put down at $5,500, and that in the Penitentiaries branch they are put down at $1,750. If those items are added together the reduction will not be as great as promised. I think, however, hon. gentlemen, that those who called attention to the enormous and wasteful expenditure of the Government deserve more credit than the Ministers for whatever retrenchment has been effected. In the year 1872-73, Sir John Macdonald's last complete year, the expenses of the Department of Justice amounted to $26,779; in 1875, the first complete year of the administration of this Government, they increased to $32,696; in 1876 they were $27,979, and in 1877 they were $21,601. I ask hon. gentlemen if the duties of this office can now be performed for $21,601, how were they to justify the increase by the present Government of the expenditure to $32,696 in 1876? But that is not all. The Minister of Justice called attention particularly to the Telegraph Account. He says "in 1873 the telegraphic account was $4,371,88 for that department; in 1876 it was $1,164.69 and in 1877 it was $330." That is an enormous reduction, but I will ask hon. gentlemen if they would not suppose from the passage I have read, that the amount charged for telegraphing in the Department of Justice in 1872-73, was the largest that was ever known in that department; it was held up as something altogether scandalous, and we are told of Mr. Blake's reduction. Now will it not surprise hon. gentlemen when I tell them that in 1874-75, the first complete year of the present Government, when the Department of Justice was administered for a part of the year by Mr. Fournier, and a part of it by Mr. Blake, that the telegraphing cost $5,399.44, being upwards of one thousand dollars more than it was in 1872-73.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—What months was the increase in? There was a great deal of telegraphing in a certain month.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—There are no details given in the Public Accounts, just the amounts for the year, but there is this to be borne in mind, that the Minister of Justice in Sir John Macdonald's Administration was also Prime Minister, but he was not so in Mr. Mackenzie's Administration. It is well known that there is much more telegraphing in the Premier's department than in any other in the Ministry. I have, therefore, added together the expenses for telegraphing for the Departments of Justice and Public Works, for 1872-3, when Sir John A. Macdonald was Premier and Minister of Justice, and Mr. Langevin was Minister of Public Works, and they amount to $6,851.54, while in 1874-5 the telegraphing in the same departments, Mr. Mackenzie being Premier and Minister of Public Works, was $9,551.44. Now, I ask, hon. gentlemen, in the face of such facts as these, was it a proper thing for Mr. Blake to address the honest men of Bruce as he did, with respect to the telegraphing of the public departments of the country? Was it not calculated to mislead his hearers? I have calculated the number of messages per day, that must have been received in the Department of Justice in 1874-5. The amount paid was $5,399, being, at a quarter of a dollar per message, about 21,600, messages.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A large portion of that was in consequence of the Mounted Police, the management of which was in the Department of Justice.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Were they telegraphing to the Mounted Police on the prairies?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and there were long distances which special messengers had to take them, and it is one of the expensive items in connection with that department.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Just think of a minister sitting at the receipt of 70 messages per day, every day of the week, and every week of the year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Are you calculating at 25 cents per message?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Yes, there are some of them run, no doubt, more, but I take that average.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — Messages to British Columbia sometimes cost $15 to $20 each.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — I suppose the great majority of them were at 25 cents each.

Hon. Mr. BROWN — You cannot make 25cts. a message an average because that is the lowest price.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — A man receiving twenty or even fifty messages a day is to be pitied. It is sufficient of itself to impair a man's health. Imagine 70 telegraph messengers rushing into a man's office every day? It is enough not only to impair his health but to distract his mind and to unfit him for business. Then there was $6,277.24 for the telegraphing of the Customs Department.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS — Twenty dollars a day for every working day of the year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Exactly, and at the same rate as I calculated the others, it is 80 messages a day. Fancy poor Mr. Burpee the victim of 80 messages a day?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — What year was that?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — In 1874-5, the first complete year of this Administration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — There was a change of tariff in that year, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS — Not in telegraph messages.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — Yes, the minister takes possession of the telegraph offices during the delivery of his budget speech.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — It only covers one day, and the hon. gentleman would not be receiving any replies during that time; he would simply be despatching them. It is a fearful thing to contemplate, a poor man receiving and despatching seventy to eighty messages a day. I fear hon. gentlemen, the torture of "sitting at receipt of custom" is greater than people in general imagined. The whole amount of telegraphing for the departments in the last year of S.r John Macdonald's Administration was $24,875, but what do you think of the total amount during the first complete year of economy and retrenchment being $38,507.62?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — That was in 1874-75?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Yes; the increase is considerably more than fifty per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — Give us the years subsequent to that?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — They show a very great reduction. The economists had called the attention of the country and of the Government themselves to their extravagance, and they then began to retrench. It is quite impossible that all this money could have been properly expended in telegraphing. Just see what it amounts to. It is within a fraction of two per cent on the capital of the Montreal Telegraph Company, which is $2,000,000, so that the Government in 1874-5 paid to that company a sum equal to two per cent upon its whole capital. It was monstrous, and was after the elections when the hon. gentlemen came back with an enormous majority at their backs, a majority which should have enabled them—and would have enabled them—to carry on the Government of the country prudently, economically, and honestly. It was when they came back with that majority, they considered themselves safe in the saddle, and expecting that the revenue would be increased by the legislation proposed by the Finance Minister, by three millions of dollars, they thought they could do what they liked, they ran riot with the public money. The hon. Secretary of State has asked me what the amount for telegraphing was the following years. It was $19,429.78 for 1875-6; $15,149.41 for 1876-7; and between $13,000 and $14,000 for 1877-8.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT — It was coming down.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Yes, coming down enormously, showing how culpable the expenditure of 1874-75 had been. I think hon. gentlemen, it would have been a proper thing for the Minister of Justice to have told all the facts to his constituents. Saying what he did was calculated to mislead them. Then with respect to the management of his department he cut down the contingencies considerably. Whether they can be kept at the figure he put them at remains to be seen. The estimates however point clearly to their advancing again, certainly to the amount of $5,000. The salaries are also reduced: whether they have been reduced over much to permit the efficient discharge of the duties of the office remains to be seen. But one of the committees of this House—a committee of which I am a member—has had evidence before it that the business of the department has not been conducted with the care and circumspection we have a right to expect. The accounts of the Neebing Hotel were passed through that department without proper audit.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension; it has only the accounts of Mr. Brown to deal with.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Which ever department it came through, must have conducted its business with great looseness, because the accounts were never examined, and the land on which the hotel stands was paid for twice to the amount of $500. Parsimony is not required by the country, and the people do not ask that the expenditure be reduced to a point that will not admit of efficient administration. On the contrary they desire to have efficient administration, and are willing to pay proper salaries to efficient men, but they do not want to see the departments and corridors crowded with supernumeraries and inefficient men.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Before making any lengthy observations, I will simply express my regret that the practice has arisen in his Chamber, under the auspices of my hon. friend who has just sat down, of commenting on the utterances of ministers in another place. I think if we are to preserve the amenities of life in this Chamber, it would be much more in keeping with the harmony that we ought to desire to see established, that utterances outside of this House should be met outside, and that discussions of senators and members of the House of Commons should not be conducted both inside and outside of this Chamber. The result of that sort of controversy would be this, that hon. senators would make attacks upon members of the House of Commons without their having an opportunity of hearing them, and members of the House of Commons would attack hon. senators in a similar manner. It may be in accordance with the etiquette prevailing in this Chamber, but my short acquaintance with it has not enabled me to observe that such a custom has prevailed here in the past. On the contrary, the expressions of opinion I have heard in this Chamber in referring to members of the other House, led me to a different conclusion, that it was neither desirable, nor had it been the practice of this Chamber, that utterances of members of the House of Commons should be descanted on here as such.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Are they very cautious in referring to us?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I entirely agree with what has fallen from the hon. gentleman, and I have always carefully avoided referring in this House to anything that has fallen from any hon. gentleman in his place in the other House. I do not know an instance where I have done so, and where members of the other House have attacked me out of doors, I have answered them there. But the Minister of Justice did not confine himself to what I said outside of doors. He reflected rudely on what I said here. If he had only referred to any statements made by me outside of this Chamber, I would not have alluded to it here, but would have answered him in another way. The breach of etiquette was on his part and not on mine.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think Mr. Blake will have something to say on the point of misrepresenting facts. We know there is no gentleman more cautious in his utterances, and no one speaks with more care than Mr. Blake.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL — Telegraph bills to wit.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not now all the figures sufficiently before me to analyze my hon. friend's comments with respect to that expenditure, but I am quite sure there is a misunderstanding somewhere, and Mr. Blake will be able to substantiate anything he has said with reference to his department.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What I complain of is, not what he stated with reference to the telegraph account, but what he omitted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend said Mr. Blake had deceived the good men of Bruce by omitting a most important item of expenditure, his own salary. That would depend entirely upon the statement he was making. If he was contrasting his expenditure with that of a preceding minister whose salary was not included in the statement, then it would be fair enough; if, on the contrary, he included the salary of a preceding minister and omitted his own, that would be misleading.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I charged Mr. Blake with having understated the amount of salaries of the department. The amount is to be found in the Public Accounts, and Mr. Blake understated that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Probably Mr. Blake will answer that for himself. I will take the opportunity myself of going into the details of my hon. friend's references. He has adverted to so many points—points of a very various character—that I have been unable directly to follow him. I have made notes, but not sufficiently consecutive to probably reply in the exact order in which he brought forward this bill of indictment. The hon. gentleman has, in many instances, found the expenditure in 1877 less than in the preceding year, and in several cases he rather questioned the wisdom of making the reduction. As for instance, the reduction in some expenditure in connection with the management of the canals.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not question that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He complained that we had reduced the cost of labor, while there was no reduction in the salaries of the officers. The sum total of the ordinary expenditure of the Government for the particular years to which he drew attention—1875-6 and 1876-7—under the head of ordinary expenditure, which my hon. friend says is specially controllable by any administration, was $8,569,000 in 1875-6 and $6,835,000 in 1876-7.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That is what I said.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It presents, with the exception of 1874-5, as compared with 1873-4, the only instance of any magnitude where any great reduction has been made since Confederation.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Hear, hear!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman in the course of his observations had reference to the speech that he delivered on a former occasion in connection with the general expenditure, and he maintains now, as he has maintained on other occasions, that they had not been answered, that he had established the fact, that the large expenditures in 1874-5 and 1875-6 were chiefly due to the present Administration, and ought to have been controlled by us, that it ought to have been brought within an amount which would be equal to the reduced revenue. He has also challenged, in the course of his observations, the statement that I myself made, that the expenditure of 1873-4 was entirely due to the late Administration. In the elaborate papers that he has published on the subject, and his utterances in this Chamber, (and I must do the hon. Senator the credit to say that he has worked indefatigably to get up those tables and statements,) he has gone back to the year 1872-3 as establishing the natural, and proper basis on which to form comparisons with subsequent years. In order that I may satisfy the House, if not the hon. Senator, that I was correct on a former occasion when I made the statement that the year 1873-4 was a year in which the expenditure of subsequent years was not only initiated by the late Government but was, by the legislation and actions of the Parliament of 1873 controlled by them, I have taken the trouble to prepare a table showing the estimates as brought down by the Finance Minister in 1873, and the amount voted by Parliament in that year, increasing the expenditure, and that will show that in 1873-74 the expenditure contemplated was in excess of the actual amount expended. The hon. gentleman said a few moments ago, that he gave us credit for $1,800,000—that he was prepared to divide the responsibility of the year 1873-74. He thought that was a most liberal allowance to make, for this Administration. I hold in my hands a copy of the budget speech of the Finance Minister which was delivered on the first of April, 1873. In that speech, after going over the ground and mentioning what increases he proposed, stating in the first the place the debt and its position and taking credit to the Government of the day for the manner in which that debt had been kept under, he comes to those portions of it in which he has reference to the proposed expenditure of the then coming year. He says "on the whole, "if our estimates be based on correct principles, we will have a revenue of $21,740,000, against an estimated expenditure of $20,826,849, or a surplus of $913,151." Now, instead of estimating $20,826,000 for the expenditure of that year as the country was led to believe he should, the actual estimate that ought to have been introduced was $23,540,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That includes the statutory increases.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—And the readjustment of the debt of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No; Prince Edward Island had not then come into the Union. There was nearly $4,000,000 to be added afterwards for that. My hon. friend when discussing this question last year said he believed there was a supplementary estimate. There was not only a supplementary estimate, but there were three of them, and a fourth for the current year, all submitted between the first of April, and the rising of Parliament on the third of May. There were several Acts of Parliament, one particularly increasing nearly every official's salary, which added some $500,000 to the cost of the country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—To go into operation in 1874.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was passed in 1873.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Will the hon. gentleman deal with the expenditure?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will come to that presently. When the previous Parliament had crystallized by an Act of Parliament the expenditure, my hon. friend would have been the very first to condemn this Administration if we had attempted to undo it, particularly when the rights of others were affected by it.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Didn't the hon. gentleman's Government rescind an appropriation of $75,000 made by the late Government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was no appropriation at all. Under an Order-in-Council, without authority from Parliament or any vote for the purpose, the Government added a very considerable sum—I think it was in excess of $60,000. That Order-in-Council was rescinded. The Minister of Customs had taken authority in his own department to increase the salaries $60,000 for that year, but, subsequently, he made that amount something like $120,000. We declined to carry out one-half of that for which Parliamentary authority had not been obtained. I hold in my hands the following table, showing the Supply Bill for 1873-4, with the amounts authorized by statute, and the amounts brought forward from 1872-3:—

This shows that for Civil Government the estimate was $570,192, and there was an addition to that authorized by statute, (not all in that year, but part of it was) of $281,880, making the whole appropriation for that year $852,073. For the Administration of Justice, the vote in the Estimates was $17,000; the amount appropriated by statute was $467,954, being a total of $484,954. Now, of that there was expended only $459,000. The Government expended less than the amount estimated. For Police, there was a sum in the Estimates of $58,595; the sum actually expended was $56,387, being $2,207 less than the estimated expenditure. For Penitentiaries, the sum in the Estimates was $357,525, and the sum of $37,782 was brought forward from a former year, making the amount appropriated $395,308, which was about the amount expended. There was only a difference of $243. Legislation, the amount, of course, was small. The Finance Minister of that day was not responsible for it, inasmuch as there was a second Session of Parliament, and, therefore, it is an item fairly open to explanation. The Geological Survey estimate was $64,700, to which we must add the amount authorized by statute, $45,000, and a balance of $1,400 from the preceding year, making a total $111,000; of this, only $97,000 was expended. Arts, Agriculture, and Statistics, the Supply Bill was $143,980, and a small sum of $700 was authorized by statute, and a sum of $125,000 was carried forward from a former year; the amount expended was only $58,000, being $211,000 less than the appropriation. Immigration and Quarantine, amount estimated, $327,210, with $40,423 carried over from the former year, making a total of $367,633; the sum actually expended was $318,572, being $49,060 less than the amount appropriated. Marine Hospitals, amount estimated, $62,000; amount expended, $66,462, or $4,462 in excess of the estimate. Pensions, estimate, $16,314, authorized by statute, $36,906; the excess of expenditure that year was $3,232.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What is the hon. gentleman reading from?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From the Estimates of Mr. Tilley, in 1873, and the Acts of

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Parliament, creating expenditure, passed that year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Is that a printed return?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is simply the Supply Bill with the moneys authorized by statute added to it.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The Public Accounts are the only returns I look to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman challenged the correctness of the statement I made, that the present Administration were not responsible to any great degree for the expenditure of that particular year, which ought to be, in my estimation, the basis on which the expenditures of subsequent years should be examined.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Surely the hon. gentleman does not mean to say this affects the matter at all. It is begging the question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman alleges we spent a large sum in excess of what there would have been expended if there had been no change of Government.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not go that far.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman stated in the course of the debate that he was willing to give us credit for part of the expenditure of that year. I want to show in answer to my hon. friend's statements now and on former occasions, that the expenditure of 1873-74 and also the expenditure of subsequent years, was controlled by the policy of the Administration as disclosed in the Acts of Parliament passed in 1873, and in the Supply Bill of that Session. That is my point, and it is perfectly plain. I propose to show that a large amount of the expenditure referred to by my hon. friend in reference to harbors, piers and other improvements dates back to that year. A paper has been placed on our desks within the past 24 hours showing the expenditures of 1874-75 and subsequent years, which were part of the expenditures authorized by the Parliament of 1873. The expenditures were necessarily continued. Many of the items the hon. gentleman read have been going on for the last four years, that were authorized by the Parliament of 1873, and for which votes were taken. It was not proper to stop those works after that particular vote was exhausted. If you commence a particular pier or building, you propose to go on and finish it. You make an appropriation for the coming twelve months, an amount equal to what will probably be expended in that time, but you do not propose to leave the building unroofed, or your pier in such a state that the gales may blow it over. The proposition is when the country commences an expenditure of that kind, it proposes to complete it. That is why my observations now are pertinent, inasmuch as I propose to show—and it is a necessary part of my argument—that a large amount of the expenditure, even in 1876-7 was guided and controlled by the action of the Parliament of 1873. I suppose the Government might have violently interfered and stopped the expenditure while the works were yet uncompleted, but it was not wise, or prudent, or proper to do so. After a contract is once given out, it is not usual to stop it. After money is voted by Parliament, it is the duty of the Government to go on and expend it and, if necessary, to obtain from Parliament further money to complete the work. It is for that reason I desire to show that in 1873 it was proposed to spend no less a sum than $23,540,543. We have spent considerably over $20,000,000 on public works since that time, yet our expenditure last year was only $23,519,000. We have spent a large amount on the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Capital account.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but interest must be paid on capital. With all those allowances, if I can show we have made those large expenditures and carried out the promises made years ago to the people of this country, in reference to the improving of our canals and the construction of the Pacific Railway as far as it has gone, and that the amount taken to carry on the last year's expenditure is considerably less than the amount proposed to be expended in 1873-74, then I will have made good my point. As it is now six o'clock, and there is nothing on the paper for to-morrow, I move the adjournment of the debate.

MONTREAL HARBOR COMMISSION.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

Hon. Mr. GUÉVREMONT moved:—

He said when he had made a similar motion last Session, and the matter was investigated by a committee of the House, he had hoped that the Harbor Commissioners at Montreal would have redressed the grievances of which he had complained, but, on the contrary, they had treated the matter lightly. At the first meeting of the Harbor Commissioners, after the nomination of the committee, he saw by a report in the Herald that they had sneered at the Senate for permitting the investigation to take place. Alderman Donovan, one of the Commissioners, was reported in the Herald of May 4th, 1877, to have said:—

“He could not conceive how legislators could allow of their time being occupied by such trifling matters.”

Having witnessed himself what was going on at Sorel, he was convinced that there was good reason to complain of the conduct of certain officials of the Harbor Commissioners. It had been proved by witnesses and documents produced before the committee last Session, that to accomplish the ruin of certain employees of the Commissioners, they had not stopped at perjury. It was a well known fact that at the last criminal term at Sorel, the Grand Jury found a true bill against Colbert Polet for perjury, and a true bill against John McCarthy for subornation of perjury. The Montreal Harbor Commissioners, with certain exceptions, had treated the remonstrances of the Government with contempt, and the Government had persisted in saying they had no control over the Commission. Nevertheless, he considered it his duty to return to the charge, and place before the Senate and the Government the fact that the Harbor Commissioners had not redressed the grievances of which he had complained with such good reason. When this matter was before the committee last Session, it became evident that it was exceedingly difficult to procure important documentary evidence from the Commissioners. They refused to produce one paper, a complaint which covered eight pages of writing, of which he had a copy. It could hardly be said that the Government had no control over the Harbor Commissioners, since they nominated a majority of them. He hoped the House would agree to his motion.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER said the hon. gentleman had brought up a motion almost the same as this last Session, and complained of the conduct of the Montreal Harbor Commissioners. The Government stated then they were very desirous these grievances should be redressed, and the matter was referred to a committee. Since then the Government had heard no further complaint until the notice of the hon. gentleman's motion appeared on the order paper. He (Mr. Pelletier) was not prepared to admit that the Government had as much control over the Harbor Commissioners as the hon. gentleman supposed. Though the Government nominated some of its members, they had no right to interfere with the appointment of the employés of the Commission. Nevertheless, he would assure his hon. friend that the Government would try all they could to approach the Harbor Commissioners and see if there was a possibility of stopping those abuses. Since the notice had been put on the paper he had met one of the Commissioners who informed him they were endeavoring to redress the grievances complained of. The Government did not know whether they had a right to give orders to the Harbor Commissioners, but they would do what they could to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman. He (Mr. Pelletier) was not aware whether any correspondence had passed since last year. The motion asked for all correspondence letters, documents, petitions and generally all complaints and remonstrances made to the Montreal Harbor Commissioners at Montreal. As for those papers, if any existed, they were never in the possession of the Government, but if there were any other correspondence the return would certainly be brought down.

Hon. Mr. PENNY said that having been on the committee last year, he was bound to say that he did not think the least cause of complaint was established against the Commission. He believed the three men in whom the hon. gentleman was interested were good workmen, and he would be glad to see them employed; but they were not discharged in any proper sense of the word, though they had ceased to be employed in consequence of new arrangements, such as all employers of labor had to make from time to time. The principal change was the placing at the head of the works at Sorel, of Mr. McCarthy, a gentleman proved to be admirably qualified for the position. It had been occupied a short time by Mr. Coté before him in a sort of interim way. Mr. Coté was a very good workman, but it was judged that Mr. McCarthy, who had been a very large ship-builder there for years, was better fitted for an administrative position than Mr. Coté, who had not been engaged in that way, and he was accordingly appointed. Mr. Coté was not discharged. His engagement expired. He thought, however, it was desirable that those men, who were good workmen, should be employed again, if possible. As to the case of perjury referred to by the hon. gentleman, anyone who would read the report, would see that although the man gave evidence on one occasion inconsistent with his deposition at another time, that nothing was established which connected the fact with the subject of the enquiry. He had not been able at the moment to put his hand on the passage; but if he remembered rightly the person was before the committee, and excused his conduct on one of the two occasions, by saying that he was drunk. It had been assumed that Mr. McCarthy was interested in employing a man who would swear against him at one time and for him at another; but that was one of those things which had not been shown to be connected with the subject of the investigation, and seemed to be enveloped in great mystery.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said he had the honor to sit on the committee last Session, and heard all the evidence, and he was bound to say, although the committee had not time to complete the investigation before the prorogation of Parliament, the fact was clearly established that the complainants had been treated with injustice. He had nothing to say against Mr. McCarthy, who was, no doubt, a first-rate man for the position he held. The question was whether a wrong had been done to the man who was Mr. McCarthy's predecessor in the office. It must be admitted by every impartial man who would read the evidence that an act of injustice had been perpetrated by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal. This was not the only despotic act of which they were guilty. It was only 24 months since that they refused to allow locomotives for the North Shore Railroad to pass over the wharves of Montreal, though it was clear that no damage would have resulted from it. It would be dangerous to give such a body powers which would place them beyond the control of the Government or of Parliament, and enable them to commit such high-handed acts with impunity. One thing was certain, the Government had not only the power, but it was their duty to appoint a majority of the Harbor Commissioners, and even in this way they could control that body. He was glad to hear from the hon. Minister of Agriculture that the Government had some doubt as to whether the Commissioners were entirely above their control. Last year they had no doubt whatever that the Commissioners were entirely beyond their control. It was evident the near approach of the elections had worked a change in the opinions of the Government, and if the hon. Minister of Agriculture could succeed in meeting the Commissioners again, it was altogether probable that justice would be done the complainants.

The motion was agreed to.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT resumed the debate on Mr. Macpherson's motion:—

“That he will call attention to the public expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion of it which is largely within the control of the Administration, and will inquire of the the Government how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure.”

He said:—When the House rose yesterday, I was discussing the proposed expenditure contemplated by the Government in 1873-4. My object in doing so, as I briefly explained, was that my hon. friend who has brought this motion before the House, stated on a former occasion that the figures produced in answer to the proposition submitted by him to the House last year, did not meet the case. In his observations yesterday he stated that he established last Session that the present Government is responsible for the increase in the controllable expenditure between 1873 and 1876, to the extent of $1,800,000, and he added:—

“That, as I always admit, was necessarily an estimate, as the expenditure for which each Government is responsible, but, I believe, in forming that estimate, I was liberal and generous to the present Government liberal beyond what the said strict admitted.”

My hon. friend stated that he did not consider his argument had been met by the evidence adduced in support of the position I took last year, and which I propose to take now, that the expenditure was shaped by the preceding Administration whose policy had committed their successors to it. In confirmation of that line of argument, I propose to establish these premises, that the Supply Bill brought down in the Spring of 1873, and in the legislation adopted that Session, the country was committed to a larger expenditure than actually took place, and the force of that argument, in my judgment, is this—that while the late Administration proposed spending $23,540,543, the actual expenditure was less than that amount. It is the almost invariable rule that the actual expenditure exceeds the estimates, because supplemental votes are required to meet expenditures not contemplated when the estimates are brought down.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think the contrary was the rule prior to 1873.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As far as my experience of governments goes, the practice has been—there may have been exceptions—the estimates have been spent; some items may not, but others have been over-spent.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Prior to 1873 it was often a matter of complaint by members who wanted improvements made, that while items were placed in the estimates, when the year was out the money remained unexpended.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Will my hon. friend allow me to call his attention to the following extract from Sir John Rose's Budget Speech in the Session of 1869:—

“ It will be found by reference to that statement, that in every one of the items which were voted to us last year, there is a saving in the actual expenditure, as compared with the estimate, except only the interest on the public debt, which is augmented by reason of our having borrowed half of the Intercolonial loan. * * * * The result is, that by the exercise of economy—by forbearing to undertake new works, by cutting down the expenditure wherever we could cut it down—there is a balance in favor of the year's operations of $274,031.

These results were obtained by not expending the amount of the estimates voted by Parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is correct in that particular instance; I merely speak of the general rule.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You mean the rule of your Government?

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. READ—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that Mr. Tilley's estimates amounted to over $23,000,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I propose to show that authority was taken in that Session to spend $23,540,543. There were the regular estimates and three supplemental estimates.

Hon. Mr. READ—I find Mr. Cartwright says Mr. Tilley's estimates amounted to $22,586,727, and that included everything.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not consulted Mr. Cartwright in the preparation of my statement. I have relied entirely on the blue books, and on the statutes passed in 1873. I propose to show that, while authority was taken to spend $23,540,543, we expended only $23,316,316, leaving a balance of $224,000 unexpended. I then propose to show that in the three succeeding years, while carrying on all the great public works of the country, necessarily increasing the public debt, paying the interest upon it, opening the North-West, completing the treaties with the Indians, the Intercolonial Railway, and meeting other expenditures connected with the enlargement of the Dominion, the expenditure was only $202,995 in excess of the amount spent in 1873-4, and less than the amount that the late Administration had taken authority to expend in that year. I have now in my hand the table before referred to, compiled from the Supply Bill, statutory authority, and amounts brought forward from 1872-3, which I read to the House yesterday.

There was no appropriation for Mounted Police that year, although the Act for raising the force was passed that Session. The amount spent was $199,000. Now, the total amount expended in 1873-74 on Consolidated Fund account, which would be, of course, the interest, premium and charges of management of loan, was $10,255,798. The ordinary expenditure authorized was $8,979,563.02, the charges on revenue authorized $4,305,182, making a total estimate of $23,540,543. In that year the old Province of Canada (Ontario and Quebec) were credited with $10,506,000, and in consequence of that the capital of the other provinces had to be levelled up, the total being $13,859,079. That amount thenceforward became a charge against the Dominion—in other words, increased the subsidies to the provinces by five per cent on that amount, which explains the item in that portion of the table known as the Consolidated Fund, which shows an increase from $2,921,000 to $3 752,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Can my hon. friend tell me the amount placed in the estimates in 1873 for the Baie Verte Canal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is capital account.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is in the Estimates and amounts to $500,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not part of the sum I have mentioned. It is in the estimates chargeable to capital, and does not appear in my statement. Capital account is considerably over $10,000,000, and it would not be quite fair if I included it, since the hon. Senator from Toronto did not refer to items under that head in his speech. My statement has reference solely to what is called the annual expenditure, the only part of which affecting capital is the interest, which appears in the Consolidated Fund for 1873-4, to the amount of $5,724,000, having been increased from the preceding year by about $500,000 to cover Mr. Tilley's loan. If capital account were added to the estimates it would increase them to some ten or twelve millions above the sum I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Then there is no connection between the two tables the hon. gentleman has read.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will endeavor to show the hon. gentleman that there is. I am endeavoring to explain that the expenditure of 1873-4, should be taken as the basis of comparison for the expenditure in subsequent years, because the increases since then in what is known as controllable expenditure have been due to the policy of the late Administration in 1873, which the present Government would not be justified in disturbing. Mr. Tilley, in his Budget Speech, in 1873, estimated the revenue at $21,740,000, in round numbers, and the expenditure at $20,826,849, which would give a surplus of $913,151. He continued: "Of course, there will be supplementary estimates and other positions which may cover a large portion of the estimated surplus, but the Government do not feel that they are required to ask additional taxation."

Hon. Mr. Scott.

After that, the adjustment of the debts of the provinces added, for all time to come, nearly eight hundred thousand dollars to the annual expenditure, as is shown in the Public Accounts. In addition to that, was passed the Act known as Cap. 31, 1873, which provided for an increase of the salaries of Ministers, which made a difference of $27,000. Then there was an increase in the salaries of the Lieut.-Governors and all the judges, the sessional allowances to Senators and Members of the House of Commons, and $75,000 was voted for the re-arrangement of civil service salaries. It was a very generous and very large Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You appropriated it afterwards.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We found it in operation.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Didn't you set aside the distribution of the late Government and re-distribute it yourselves?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We only disturbed a sum of $60,000. The following year we put in a vote for a smaller sum, and finally it dropped out altogether. Mr. Tilley contemplated an expenditure of $10,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, and $10,000,000 on canals, and remarked, with regard to the Pacific Railway, which, he proposed, should be gone on with, "I would like to take you with me in imagination ten years hence, when the great Pacific Railway would have been completed." I am sorry that this vision was not true prophesy. At the time the Budget Speech was introduced, he alluded to the debt then existing as $82,000,000—a comparatively modest sum. Before the end of that year but a couple of months after Mr. Tilley had spoken, the net debt represented $99,840,000, and before the following year, when the amount had not in any way been added to by the incoming Government, the net debt as it stood, on the 30th of June, 1874, was $108,324,000, having sprung from $82,000,000 to that amount within fourteen months. If hon. gentlemen will take the table in the Public Accounts of 1873-4, they will find the expenditure for which appropriations were made by Acts of Parliament in 1873-4 and antecedent years, and in following out the Supply Bill brought in by Mr. Tilley, the item under Consolidated Fund

—I don't think my hon. friend questions the correctness of that—he will find that it was an expenditure entirely due to the late Administration. It was simply the result of the loan, and I do not call it in question at all, and the payments to the Provinces which had been increased from the preceding year by the large sum I have mentioned. The first item under ordinary expenditure is Civil Government. The expenditure was $883,000. This is the item which my hon. friend very correctly observed, is one more particularly under the control of the administration. If he will take the Statutes of 1873, he will find in the Supply Bill the amount under Civil Government, $570,192. From this should be deducted the items for the Marine and Fisheries agencies, the Dominion Lands Office, Manitoba, the Public Works Department in British Columbia, and Departmental Contingency and Stationery, total $189,000, leaving for Departmental salaries, $381,192. The salaries actually paid for that year were $375,609, so that there was a less sum paid than was actually voted. Hon. gentlemen know that so far as salaries are concerned, the amounts are placed in the Estimates, and are a true representation of the sums that are to be paid to the officers in the several departments. In addition to that, there was voted for the re-adjustment of salaries $75,000, which would have made the whole amount payable for departmental salaries $456,192; the actual payments were Salaries, $375,609, and Bonus $55,641, total $431,250—being an amount less than was contemplated by the late Government of $24,942. In order to show that that estimate is a correct one I hold in my hand a certificate signed by Mr. Langton of the salaries for July, August, September and October. For those months the salaries amounted to $127,467 which, if multiplied by three, would give a total for the year of $382,401. That, with the $75,000 for bonus added, would be $457,401 which tallies with my figures, so that whatever way you take it, estimating it on the four months which I have mentioned as a basis for the rest of the year or on the amount voted, the total of departmental salaries paid was considerably within the amount authorized during the Session of 1873. The other portions of that $883,685 under the head of Civil

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Government are made up of $202,342 salaries of His Excellency the Governor General, the Lieutenant-Governors of the provinces, Cabinet Ministers, and the Governor General's Secretary. The salaries of the Lieutenant-Governors of the Provinces were increased by the legislation of 1873 to the extent of $10,000, and the salary of the Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island was added to the Civil List in that year. The salaries of Cabinet Ministers were also increased by the total sum of $27,000 by the Re-adjustment Act of 1873. I do not suppose that my hon. friend would expect that the members of this Government would take less salary than their predecessors had taken. No doubt, if they had reduced it, the hon. gentlemen opposite, would have been disappointed in view of their early anticipations.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Nobody apprehended damage at that time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The item of $222,803 for contingencies and stationery is, no doubt, larger that year than it was in preceding years. The balance is made up of the ordinary small items, the total amounting to $883,685. I think I have clearly established that so far as Civil Government is concerned the legislation of the Session of 1873 controlled the expenditure inasmuch as it was an Act of Parliament that authorized the payment of Ministers' salaries and the salaries of the employees. The Government did not expend the full amount voted by Parliament, by $24,942. The increase in contingencies over the former year was due to a certain extent to the extra clerks in the Post Office Department, and in the Department of the Interior. Before leaving the question of Civil Government, I may as well draw attention to the fact, that the expenditure on last year was $312,193 as compared with $883,685 in 1873—a considerable reduction.

Hon. Mr. READ—The statement does not present it in that manner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The next item is Administration of Justice. My hon. friend yesterday dwelt some length on that, inasmuch as he thought that the sympathy, or some such feeling, which he believed to exist between the Government of Ontario and the Dominion Government, ought to have been sufficient to have prevented them from adding the Court of Appeal. The Province of Ontario, however, in regard to the Administration of Justice, is quite as independent as the Province of Nova Scotia, or any other Province, and when they find they require new courts or new judges, it is the duty of the Dominion Government to pay judges and to appoint them. I have not heard any of the profession urge that the Court of Appeal in Ontario was an uncalled for court. The demand for new judges was very great, otherwise Mr. Mowat would not have been induced to increase the number. They are not strictly judges in Appeal, but take their turn on circuit and courts of Nisi Prius. They were named for the double purpose of invigorating and strengthening the Court of Appeal, and also for relieving the other judges from the press of work thrown upon them. The Court of Appeal is responsible for only a part of the increased expenditure; the Supreme Court had added a considerable sum to it. The other items are made up of $13,633 paid to Judges of the County Courts of Nova Scotia, under an Act passed either last Session or the Session before. But hon. gentlemen will remember we kept that Act in suspense for one year thinking the country did not require it.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—This House kept it in suspense—not the Government,—as we defeated it here.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It was defeated on my motion I think. The Government were defeated on it, and it is a pity they did not stay defeated on it too.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Possibly, but the people of Nova Scotia are the best judges in that particular, whether they require a new court or not, and if they thought so it was our duty to appoint the judges, and pay them. I maintain it is not an expenditure that can be controlled by the Government. The item of Police is the third in that list. In 1873-4 it was $56,387, which was reduced last year to $11,355. The next item is Penitentiaries $395,551, in 1873-4. The amount that Mr. Tilley was authorized to spend that year was $395,308, so that it cannot be alleged that there was an over expenditure on the part of the Government, inasmuch as provision was made for within $250 of the expenditure, and the increase was due to the taking over of the St. Vincent de Paul institution, which added $135,000. Hon. gentlemen will see there has been from that time a considerable steady reduction. In 1873-4 it was $395,000, the amount estimated by Mr. Tilley; in 1874-5 it was $337,000; in 1875-6 it was $312,000, and in 1876-7 it was $303,000, a steady diminution.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—And there has been a steady diminution in the number of convicts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry to say that is not the case; on the contrary, that crime is on the increase. In 1872-3, the number of convicts was 1,038; in 1873-4, it was 1,085; and in 1876-7, it was 1,561. The expenditure has gone down, and the number of convicts has largely increased.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There was a continuous yearly expenditure in connection with the building, also, after it was taken over by the Government that is not now required.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That expenditure has been going down ever since.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The first two or three years you had large expenditures in connection with the building, preparing it for the large number of convicts you intended to send to it, and that outlay, of course, is no longer required.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Since that Penitentiary was taken over, there has been a new one established in Manitoba, but the expenditure has been steadily going down, and I think it is largely due to the reforms introduced by the ex-Minister of Justice, Mr. Blake, who took a great deal of interest in the working and management of the Penitentiaries, which, at that time, was a branch of his department. When the question was up for discussion before, an hon. Senator behind me bore testimony to the interest which Mr. Blake had taken in this question—especially the St. Vincent de Paul institution, and the improvements he had made there. Legislation cannot be much discussed, as the expense largely depends upon members themselves what length of time is spent in a Session.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What was the difference in the amount for legislation in 1872-3 and 1873-4?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The difference was $169,561, the expenditure of 1872-3 being less than that of 1873-4 by that amount.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Was not that the year in which the indemnity was increased from $600 to $1,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, the indemnity was increased, and I suppose that was one of the causes of it. I did not quote that Act of Parliament, because I supposed every hon. gentleman was familiar with it.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—With respect to the Geological Survey, the authority taken was for an amount larger than was actually spent. The amount in the Supply Bill was $64,700; the amount by Statute was $45,000, and the amount brought forward from 1872-3 was $1,407; total, $111,107; whereas the amount actually expended was $97,814, so that there is no foundation for the allegation that the amount spent by this department is controlled by the Administration. In Arts, Agriculture and Statistics there was a decrease in the year 1874-5, compared with 1875-76, of a small amount, and there has been an increase in the two subsequent years, which is due partly to the Vienna Exhibition and a larger part of it to the Philadelphia Exhibition. The Census is a small amount, and does not require any discussion. The item for Immigration and Quarantine is an important one, and the Minister being present himself, I will leave to him the discussion of the points raised by my hon. friend in his criticisms on the subject.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The hon. gentleman takes credit for reducing the expenditure on Penitentiaries from what it was in 1873-4, but if he will take the two preceding years, he will find that the expenditure that year was exceptional. I have looked at the preceding two years, and find that in 1871-72 it was $205,000, and in 1872-73 $270,000, when the late Government seemed to have anticipated an expenditure of $395,000. In 1873-4, it was very exceptional.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not finding fault with that at all, but I am stating that it was an expenditure contemplated by the late Government. I am not endeavoring to make a point on it, any more than it was an expenditure very fairly chargeable to the action of the former Administration, and establishes my basis that 1873-4 is really the year which ought to be the standard for comparison with the expenditures of subsequent years. Pensions is the next item. There was a slight increase in 1873-4, and there have been increases since, the principal item being $50,000 appropriated for the veterans of 1812. I do not suppose my hon. friend will say it was not a proper recognition of the services of the few old men living who took part in that war.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. READ—I see in 1875-76 the item for pensions was $110,000 against $56,000 in 1873-74?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The ordinary pensions paid in 1873-74 were $56,453. In the following year there was an increase in consequence of the superannuation of some judges in the Province of Quebec. Then the following year came the annual expenditure of $50,000 to the veterans; making the total for 1875-76 to $110,000. In 1876-77 it had increased to $112,000 in consequence of another judge having been allowed to retire. Judges of the County Courts and of the higher courts are superannuated and it is not an expenditure which is controllable by any Administration as long as the law gives judges the right to retire on an allowance under certain conditions. I have a table here showing the number of Civil Servants who have been superannuated during the past seven years: and in the four months of the late Administration in 1873-74 the number was 28. Of the number superannuated by this Government from abolition of office—to which my hon. friend will not object—there were:

In 1870-71.....	52
“ 1871-72.....	70
“ 1872-73.....	39

In 1874-75.....	3
“ 1875-76.....	7
“ 1876-77.....	1

Above the age of 65 there were superannuated by this Government:

In 1873-74.....	12
“ 1874-75.....	27
“ 1875-76.....	20
“ 1876-77.....	12

Superannuations under the age of 65 :

In 1873-74.....	7
“ 1874-75.....	17
“ 1876-77.....	11

Those superannuations were from some special cause, such as ill health. In the following years there were retired under that age during the late Administration:—

In 1870-71.....	10
“ 1871-72.....	9
“ 1872-73.....	11

And in the four months of 1873-4 that the late Government were in office, there were 6, so that there is not much difference in the tables, but there is in the fund. Hon. gentlemen will suppose there is a fund to meet this expenditure. The Civil Service are obliged to contribute, I think, the sum of 2 per cent. of their salaries towards this fund, and officers below a certain grade and messengers, 1½ per cent. But, during this particular Session (1873) the Government reduced their payments one-half—the payments before that being 4 per cent.—so that the original fund, which was intended, and which, no doubt, would have largely met the demands on it from year to year, was reduced by Parliament to 50 per cent., less than had been originally contemplated. I suppose, in time, this fund will cure itself, inasmuch as the payments are coming up, and, if only persons of a certain age were appointed, the fund would very soon be sufficient to sustain the demand upon it. Militia and Defence shows a diminution in 1876-7 as compared with 1873-4. The amount has been steadily reducing since then every year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is not worth saying anything about, unless you also say something about the inefficiency of the Militia and the intentions of the Government with respect to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The force seem to be quite as efficient as in former years, and the establishment of the Military College at Kingston, and the education of officers, it is considered, will more than compensate for the few days' drilling of large bodies of men during the summer season, which, practically, amounts to nothing, as in ten days' drill, they learn very little of modern warfare.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—How many officers are there now?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not remember the number—fifty or sixty, I think.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Forty or fifty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I stated with regard to Public Works, that Mr. Tilley took authority to spend, under the head of Ordinary Expenditure, $2,450,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is $1,180,000

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the amount spent, but the amount for which authority was taken, was $2,450,000, and he had yet unspent from the former vote, under that particular head, an item of $27,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Why not take the actual expenditure?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I want to prove that the present Administration did not spend more than Parliament authorized. If we had spent more than that amount, the hon. Senator from Toronto would have had good reason to complain; but I have the proof before me that we spent over $651,000 less than was contemplated by Mr. Tilley. When $2,450,000 was voted for the construction of harbors, piers, &c., it was our duty to go on and spend it in accordance with the wishes of the people's representatives. In some instances, in these particular appropriations, contracts had been given out by the late Administration, and it would have been manifestly improper for us to disturb that expenditure. Therefore when we spent so much less than Parliament authorized, it cannot be urged that the incoming Administration have been guilty of extravagance, or had exceeded its legitimate functions in fulfilling what had been promised to the people. In the Supply Bill of 1873-4, the gross amount of Mr. Tilley's original estimate for buildings chargeable to income, was $2,097,500, and that amount was increased by supplementary estimates also presented by Mr. Tilley, to $2,450,000. I will show that the works for which these appropriations were voted were carried on in subsequent years, that having been commenced they had to be continued. The total expenditure in 1874-5, was $1,757,075, and of this amount there was $1,116,643 expended on works for which appropriations were made in 1873, leaving only $640,432 for which the present Administration is responsible. In 1875-6, the total expenditure was $1,948,941, and of this sum $1,106,688 was expended on works commenced by the previous Administration, leaving only $842,253 for which the present Administration was responsible that year. In 1876-7, the amount expended under this head, was $1,262,823, and there was expended on works commenced by the late Administration, works for which votes had been taken in 1873, $538,525 ; leaving $724,298 for which the present Government is responsible. The details of this expenditure are shown in a return to an order of the House of Commons for a statement showing the sums expended on Public Works chargeable to Income, during the fiscal years 1874-5, 1875-6 and 1876-7, for which votes had been obtained in the estimates of 1873-4, which I will read :

Hon. Mr. Scott.

So the hon. gentleman will see that for the first and second years after the incoming Administration had control of public affairs, they were, practically, merely stewards of the preceding Administration in spending money, which the policy of the Parliament in 1873 and previous years had committed them to. I am not finding fault with the propriety of doing so, but I am simply showing the amount for which this Government ought to be held responsible.

Hon. Mr. READ—Were those handsome buildings that are being erected on this hill estimated for by Mr. Tilley?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.—No. They are constructed out of capital account. The buildings to which these figures refer are Post Offices, Custom Houses, and other buildings in the various cities, amounting in the aggregate to $2,400,000. Hon. gentlemen will see that while we expended very considerable sums in the improvements of harbors, docks and all those kindred works, the Government is steadily diminishing the expenditure in that direction. It amounted to $1,262,823 last year which is really less than the amount spent in 1872-73, it being $1,597,000 that year. The next item I come to is Ocean and River Service, the expenditure on which has been nearly equal each year.

In 1871-72, it was...	$424,000
" 1872-73 " " ...	456,000
" 1873-74 " " ....	407,000
" 1874-75 " " ....	453,000
" 1875-76 " " ...	546,000

That was due, as the hon. Senator from Toronto correctly observes, to the purchase of two steamers for lighthouse and fisheries service—the cost being $84,997. Last year it again dropped to $462,000 being only $6,000 more than the expenditure of 1872-73. I think that expenditure may be accepted as a very reasonable one. The next item is Light-houses and Coast Service.

In 1872-73 it was...	$480,000 and the next year (1876-77) it fell to $471,000. The increases in some years were entirely due to additional lights and fog-whistles. Our great pride is to make the navigation along our coasts a safe one and to give confidence to mariners coming in.
" 1873-74 " " ...	537,000
" 1874-75 " " ...	490,000
" 1875-76 " " ...	545,000

Hon. Mr. Scott.

It is an expenditure never grudged by Parliament, and a very proper one. The next item is Fisheries.

In 1870-71 it was	$ 97,000.
" 1871-72 " " ..	93,000.
" 1872-73 " " ..	97,000.
" 1873-74 " " ..	76,000.
" 1874-75 " " ...	66,000.
" 1875-76 " " ..	108,000.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—How is that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was owing to fish breeding establishments. The hon. gentleman at the head of that department is a great enthusiast, and believes with some justice that our rivers could be made to yield very largely by the system of breeding now established. In 1876-7 the expenditure was $96,000. Steamboat Inspection is a small item and there is nothing very special about Miscellaneous Indian Grants, the expenditure was considerably in excess of the estimate. The explanation is that it was an under-estimate. The money was paid, I think, to the Indians at the North West Angle. I assume that at the time the vote was taken it was impossible to arrive at the number of Indians entitled to compensation. This item has been steadily going up, and this year I fancy, it will be larger than ever before, but as we have completed treaties with all the Indians east of the Rocky Mountains, the item will not vary so much in future years.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Have treaties been made with all the Indians in the North-West?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand so, all the way to the Rocky Mountains. At all events, the great body of the Indians have been settled with. Dominion Lands, there has been a steady decrease since 1873-4. Last year it was only $90,000, being less than in any year since 1871. The surveys have been practically stopped, and it is not intended that more lands shall be surveyed except where settlement seems to gravitate. Dominion Forces in Manitoba, the expenditure in 1873-4 was $209,000, and was somewhat in excess of the estimate of that year. The items that caused that excess were payment of troops going over the Dawson Road, barracks at Winnipeg, which were built that year, and the settlement with the Hudson's Bay Company, for the buildings occupied by the troops there. Mounted Police in the North-West, the expenditure was $199,599. No estimate whatever was taken for that, although the Act authorizing the organization of the Force, was passed that Session. Whether the Government contemplated taking it out of the Militia vote or not, I cannot say. The preservation of peace in the North-West Territories, and our ability to settle with the Indians and make the country habitable are entirely due to the exclusion of liquor dealers who infested that region before the organization of our Mounted Police. Hon. gentlemen will remember that a body of American traders came in there, fortified themselves in various places and committed murders wholesale. Over thirty Indians were murdered in one night at the Cypress Hills. In consequence of no government being established there, all prisoners had to be taken to Winnipeg for trial. The result was an increased cost for criminal justice by $13,000. Boundary Surveys is an item which requires no comment. It disappeared last year. The item Military Stores was an unusual one and was provided for in Mr. Tilley's Estimates to take over military stores at Quebec. It is not a charge which can be fairly attributable to this Administration. That makes the Ordinary Expenditure of that year $8,324,076.17. Now, I have shown that Mr. Tilley took authority to spend under Ordinary Expenditure $8,979,563.02 between his Supply Bill, the items of which I have read, the statutory authorities which I have mentioned, and the amounts which he brought forward from 1872-73. For that reason I say 1873-74 is a year that properly forms a standard year in discussing the expenditure, inasmuch as we did not over-expend the amounts Parliament authorized the Government to expend for the particular purposes to which I have adverted. The next class of items to which we come is Charges on Revenue. The first and most important is the Customs. The expenditures were :

In 1872-3 .....	$567,765
In 1873-4 .....	658,299
In 1874-5 .....	682,673
In 1875-6 .....	721,008
In 1876-7 .....	721,604

The increase in 1873-4 was due to the addition of about $120,000 to the salaries of the officers of the Customs Department.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

The new Government declined to recognize the Order-in-Council, but, subsequently, a portion was allowed to be paid. I think there was a reduction, however, of about $30,000. I may say in subsequent months or years, a part of that was allowed to go, but not all. The largest portion of the increase in 1874-5 and the following year is due to reforms that were introduced by the present Minister of Customs, and, more particularly, in that branch of the collection of the public revenue which is incidental to bonded warehouses. The system in force antecedent to that, was, that any supernumerary in the office, take, for instance, the port of Montreal, could open the warehouse from time to time, as goods were required from it. The consequence was, a large amount of goods was purloined, and, in many instances, a substitution of other goods was made, by which the revenue was very largely defrauded. Mr. Dunscombe, the collector at Quebec, called the attention of the Government to particular cases in which the revenue had actually suffered, and I will now read a portion of a letter written by him to the Commissioner of Customs at Ottawa, on the 16th November, 1875 :—

“ In the summer of 1868, the Minister of Finance, Mr. Rose, came down to Quebec to see me on the subject of Revenue Collections, and at the request of the Government I visited the ports of Halifax and St. John, and reported to the hon. Mr. Tilley the Minister of Customs, that I found everything disorganized, and an ab-neg-ance of all system,—that the public revenue was not safe—and that the state of things reflected discredit on the Government, particularly on the department which he was the chief, and urgently recommended that an experienced officer should be sent to both ports, to introduce method and to instruct the officers in the performance of their duties.”

“ The Government considering that the collections of Revenue still continued in an unsatisfactory state, in February 1870, in consequence of grave irregularities and heavy losses having occurred at the port of Montreal, I was appointed a Commissioner to enquire into the manner in which the Bonded Warehouses in that port were managed. I reported that there were frequent irregularities, and some to a large extent in permitting goods to go out of warehouse without the payment of duty, and recommended that the several officers charged with the superintendence of the Bonded Warehouses at the Port of Montreal should be immediately instructed in the performance of their duties, in the landing, examination, warehousing, and “custody of goods, and—that they should be required to do their duty. Unfortunately, no action was taken by the department, at that time, in carrying out the recommendation to remedy matters, which were allowed to remain in status quo.”

“Last year the Minister of Customs caused the Inspectors of Ports to assemble at Ottawa, and I was requested to meet them. There were many subjects, particularly the custody of goods in warehouse brought under the consideration of the meeting, by the Commissioner of Customs; and after a full discussion of matters a report was submitted to the hon. Mr. Burpee, who then went through all the several points with the Inspectors of Ports. The Minister also instructed me to visit all the chief warehousing ports and to afford such advice and suggestions as he thought my long experience might enable me to give to the officers, and this summer instructions for officers of Her Majesty's Customs of the Dominion of Canada, approved by the Governor-General in Council, have been issued which if faithfully carried out will secure the Revenue against a recurrence of such losses, and protect the merchants in honest and fair dealings—thus finally, a moral obligation and most important duty has been fulfilled by the Department to the Service.”

Attached to Mr. Dunscombe's letter was a statement detailing a number of instances in which frauds had been committed, and a loose system had prevailed, causing loss to the Public Exchequer.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That letter could not have affected the increase in 1875-76.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The increase came in 1873-74 over 1872-73.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—How could Mr. Dunscombe's statements affect the increased expenditure of 1875-76?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The increases have been going on.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It might account for the next year but not for that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have in my hand the details of the increased expenditure of 1873-74 over 1872-73. It amounts in round numbers to $60,000. Of this, $7,300, was due to the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Confederation; $3,400, to the arranging of salaries of custom house officers in British Columbia; $1,000, for a similar purpose in Manitoba. There was a considerable sum required for the change of cartage system. Before that the merchants had to pay 25 cents per package for cartage; the change of system involved a charge on the Revenue.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I see no reason why the merchants should not pay their own cartage.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Under the new system lockers are given charge of particular bonded warehouses. Before that, the supernumeraries were not responsible, and there were large leakages. The change of system involved $10,000, and the change in cartage, for which there was some good reason, involved a sum of $3,400 more.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Why was not the same system introduced in other ports as well as in Montreal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware whether it exists in other ports or not. The system of lockage exists, I think, at all other ports now. Montreal is specially mentioned because the expenditure there is very much in excess of any other port, and it is referred to by way of illustration. As hon. gentlemen know, there are other regulations of a very much more stringent character as to the entry of goods, owing to the representations of manufacturers, that goods were coming into this country at rates named in invoices below their real value. They contended it was not fair, and experts were employed, which increased the expenditure. By this means goods were entered at a fair value, and the slaughtering, as it was called, of American goods in our markets was checked. Of course the more guards you surround the revenue with, the more expensive it will be. It is perfectly clear that, as the country grows, and as more ports are formed for the convenience of the people, there is a continual demand for the establishment of bonded warehouses at various points, so that it is exceedingly difficult to keep down that particular expenditure.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—You do not get any more revenue by it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, unfortunately.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—If you have greater restrictions against smuggling there ought to be increased revenue.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—As a matter of fact have there been any more ports opened within the last two years?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, there have been.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Very few.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think there has been one at Pembroke within the last two years. The next item is Excise. It has not changed much. It was more in 1873-4 than it was the preceding year. It did not exceed, however, the appropriation. In the Supply Bill in that year, the item for Excise was $228,300. The amount actually spent was $206,000, so that the money voted by Parliament was not all spent. The salaries that it was contemplated to increase that year the Government did not carry out. Some of them have since been increased as the officers had shown themselves to be worthy of it. Culling timber is not an item that needs any particular mention. An item respecting the Adulteration of Food appears for the first time in the Estimates for 1875-76 and 1876-77, I think the law has only been put in force in two places. There has been a gentleman named in Montreal and one in Toronto to analyse adulterated food. As far as I can learn the result has been very satisfactory. The report brought down by the Minister of Inland Revenue shows there has been considerable adulteration of food in the larger cities, but I do not believe myself that adulteration extends very much throughout the country, at all events not to the extent that prevails in Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—What is the name of the officer at Toronto?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not remember, I think Mr. Edwards is the name of the one in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—I am afraid Edwards is not the one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He is the one who has been appointed, and you will see by the report that he has been acting, and in his report he shows the principal articles which he found adulterated in Montreal are spices, coffee, sugar and milk. The next item is the Post Office. There the amount expended in 1873-4 was $1,387,000, and that has been increased to $1,520,000 in 1874-5; and each subsequent year an increase is shown. As the hon. gentleman has observed, it is an expenditure somewhat difficult to control, in consequence of the applications from new railways for mails over new routes, and new offices. No doubt the carrying of mails by rail is much more speedy and more convenient than by any other means. New arrangements were also made in the offices in cities and towns, by which the postmasters are paid a fixed salary instead of a percentage, as previously. Another change that involved a considerable expenditure was the system introduced by the former Postmaster-General, Mr. D. A. Macdonald, by which publishers were allowed to send newspapers by gross weight—a system that, no doubt, has been attended with loss of revenue. Another item of increase was caused by the free delivery of mails in towns and cities, which is a great benefit to the public, but it entails great expense on the department.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — That will not account for the increase of 1877 over 1876.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is about $80,000. One of the items in that amount is $22,000 payment to the Intercolonial Railway, which is, of course, a mere credit and debtor account. The Intercolonial gets credit for the work it does in that way for the Government, and no doubt it is a department that will continue to increase. I think the proportion for expenditure in that department in Canada and the United States is about the same as compared with population and receipts, and it is conceded that the facilities granted by the Post Office Department are in excess of those of most countries. I see in the press of the United States that they admit there is a more satisfactory system in Canada, particularly in the arrangement for carrying seeds and small parcels, which has been found a great convenience. I will now, before proceeding further, give my hon. friend the information he asked for yesterday in reference to the item of Suspense Account. The item to which he called attention was $343,591. He will find by referring to the charges against the Pacific Railway it was paid for out of the Pacific Railway fund at first. There are two items but they are practically the same item, because my hon. friend at two different times called attention to the Suspense Account of $343,591, and another of $572,144, Pacific Railway. The explanation is this: At page 58, part III, of the Public Accounts he will find under the heading of "Renewals" an entry $543,591 for part of the rails which were transferred from the Pacific Railway to the Intercolonial Railway, and in order that the charge might not appear against one particular year and thus increase unduly the expense of that particular year, it was proposed to divide it so as to spread it over three years. He will find that the sum of $200,000 is charged out of that item in a particular year, leaving a balance in Suspense Account of $343,591. The item appears in the Pacific Railway Account and it also appears in that form in the Intercolonial Railway Account.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—But the two amounts do not correspond.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The subject was up before the Committee on Public Accounts, and an explanation was made which, no doubt was considered satisfactory. I will read a letter from Mr. Tims of the Finance Department, with regard to this subject:—

“OTTAWA, 20 March, 1878.”

“The Intercolonial Railway Rails Accounts,”

“The value of the Rails, &c. transferred from the Pacific Stock, shewn as a deduction from expenditure on that amount in Public Accounts of last fiscal year. Page 239, part II, amounted to $572,144.19.

“The Intercolonial Suspense Account includes the whole of that amount, as well as the value of other rails handed over by the construction Department upon the completion of the Intercolonial.

“The Suspense Account has further been charged with the labor and expenses incurred in relaying the line, and credited with the value of old material taken out of the track from month to month.

“The net outlay for renewals last fiscal year therefore amounted to $543,591.68, as shewn by Public Accounts. Part III, page 58

“A statement of the rails transferred from the Pacific Stock, was submitted to the Public Accounts Committee on Saturday last. The details of the Suspense Account are very voluminous, and can only be obtained from the Railway Department at Moncton.

“(Signed,) THOMAS D. TIMS, “Finance Inspector.”

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Why was not the whole of the amount charged against revenue?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because as I have already stated, it was thought better that it should not be all charged against one year. It is not an uncommon occurrence. It seems to have been done by the officers in the ordinary course of business as the usual way, in this particular case. I do not know how it is in regard to kindred works, or whether it is peculiar to this or whether it existed before. I am merely giving my hon. friend the explanation, as it would seem from the suspicious way in which he adverted to it that there was some misrepresentation.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—So there is. It is still an improper entry. It ought not to be in Suspense Account.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a matter of opinion as to how the accounts ought to be kept.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—It is merely a book entry.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There would be some force in my hon. friend's criticism if Suspense Account was kept out altogether.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Suspense Account ought to be out altogether.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The whole amount was entered. The hon. gentleman had no difficulty in finding it.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It ought to have been charged against Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It makes the Government appear to be that much more wealthy than they are.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That, of course, is a mere matter of opinion.

Hon. Mr. READ—Are we to understand that those rails are not laid, and will not be laid for two or three years?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The labor upon them is charged. I have no doubt the item has been thoroughly analyzed in the Public Accounts Committee, but there is this on the face of it, that the Public Accounts show the facts as they existed at the time. It may be an unwise or improper way of keeping the account, and the hon. gentleman may have his own particular views on that, but there has been no concealment. It cannot be urged that there is any attempt to deceive the public. Anyone turning up the account will find $200,000 charged in that particular account, and will find above it the item of $343,591.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—If a private person kept his accounts in that manner he would seem to be two or three hundred thousand dollars more wealthy than he really was.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not state yesterday there was any concealment, or that it was withheld from the Public Accounts; what I complained of was that the item was put in Suspense Account instead of being charged against the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and thereby the deficit of the country was understated by that amount.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not in a position to state whether the rails are laid or whether they are still to be laid. If they are laid there will be some force in what the hon. gentleman has stated. The rails were a part of the 10,000 tons purchased for the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Does not the hon. gentleman know that if they were bought for the Pacific Railway they are charged to the Capital Account of the Pacific Railway, and if they were sold to the Intercolonial they would be charged against Intercolonial Railway Revenue, and the Capital Account of the Pacific Railway would be credited with so much.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It makes Revenue Account appear better by that amount.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—The difficulty about this is, we could not understand it without the explanations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not now discussing whether it is not the usual course adopted in such cases, but there is no deception about it.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—There is deception about it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the adjournment of the debate until to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

THE DEBATE CONTINUED.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen, when by the practice of the House I was allowed to adjourn the debate yesterday afternoon, I had come to that item which we had been discussing under the head of Public Works, Charges on Revenue, and I propose to be as brief as possible in the concluding observations I have to address to this House, as I can quite appreciate that to many hon. Senators it must be very dull and dry work discussing a question involving so many figures. The item of Public Works in the year 1873-74, under the head of Charges on Revenue, was $2,589,678. Last year I went into a careful analysis of how it was made up.

Intercolonial Railway....	$1,847,000
Canals, Booms, and Salaries of Canal Officers.....	511,759
Telegraphs B. Columbia..	29,000
"    P. E. Island...	973
P. E. Island Railway....	750
	$2,389,482

It is true the item of $511,759 was somewhat higher than it had been the previous year. I went into an elaborate explanation to show that that was due to new appointments that had been made on the canals from July to November, increase of salaries of others, repairs on the Welland Canal &c. The chief item is the management of the Government Railways and the cost of the renewals amounting,

In 1873-4	to	$1,847,175
" 1874-5	"	1,581,934
" 1875-6	"	1,497,128
" 1876-7	"	1,890,268

The increase in 1876-7 was entirely attributable to the Intercolonial Railway, but it was partially represented by the item which we discussed yesterday.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—No, that item is not in it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Two hundred thousand dollars of it is.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Not $200,000 of the item I called attention to, which was over $343,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was charged to Suspense Account, the balance only being charged against the Intercolonial Railway, as the whole amount would have unduly swelled that account for that year instead of spreading it over a period of two or three years as was contemplated.

Hon. Mr. READ—I think there is a good reason for charging only a portion of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That, at all events, explains the abnormal rise in the item for railways from 1874-5 to 1875-6. In salaries and contingencies there was no increase. In 1874-5 the amount under that head was $426,000 in round numbers. Before I proceed further, I should like to correct a statement which I made yesterday. In going over the Supply Bill of 1873-4, I quoted as I read the items the amounts carried over from the previous year, and they were added in to my general statement. In adding up those figures, I did not give the added up figures in the column under the head "Balance carried forward." The Supply Bill was $6,933,998; the amount authorized by statute, was $1,341,220, and the balance carried forward was $704,344, which make up the totals that I gave. The total of ordinary expenditure would be those three added together, $8,979,563. The principal item in the amount brought forward was Militia Department, $335,000, and I assumed that that would cover the cost of the Mounted Police, as there was no appropriation taken for the Mounted Police that year, and I assumed that it would be taken out of the Militia vote, as it was somewhat germane to it. Otherwise the vote for Militia would have been much larger than it was for that year. What I endeavored to prove yesterday was, that Parliament had voted during that Session an amount considerably in excess of what was really expended, the whole amount being $23,540,543, and we expended $23,316,316; that the largest item under the head of "Ordinary Expenditure" was Public Works chargeable to Income, properly made up of railways, harbors, piers, docks, public buildings, and therefore it cannot be argued that there was no intention of carrying out that particular vote of Parliament, inasmuch as it is unusual to ask for votes for works of that kind in which the people outside are so interested, if it is not contemplated to go on and spend the money. As I showed yesterday, a very considerable amount of the works had been in progress the year of the resignation of the late Government; tenders had been called for, contracts had been given out, and the work had actually been commenced, and in some cases considerably advanced. I shall now enter on that branch of the subject to which my hon. friend has particularly called attention. That is where he pointed out that in the two whole years for which this Government would be properly responsible, there was an increased expenditure over that of 1873-4. My answer was that the public works inaugurated in 1873-4, had largely controlled the expenditure of 1874-5 and 1875-6. The amount of money expended in those two years was on works for which votes were obtained in 1873, and hon. gentlemen will see that the amount of works initiated by the present Administration, in 1874-5 and 1875-6, was less than what had been inaugurated during the preceding year. Those works were, no doubt, very proper in themselves, and very useful to the public. I am not criticising that expenditure, only to establish 1873-4 as the basis on which the expenditure of subsequent years should be calculated, that being the last year which the late Administration controlled the finances of the country. Now, coming down to 1875-6, where the expenses of that year exceeded those of 1874-5, it was in particular items which it would not have been wise or proper for the Government to reduce. First, is the Administration of Justice. I fully explained yesterday, that that item was not controllable. There is just the single exception that it would have been possible for us not to have established the Supreme Court. That court, as hon. gentlemen are aware, had been promised at Confederation; it had been mentioned in two successive speeches from the Throne, and the people had a right to expect that the time would be no longer postponed when that court would be brought into existence. I am not going to discuss the question as to whether it has been of great value to the country or not; it has been discussed in another place by a gentleman who takes a great interest in it, and it was admitted that our Supreme Court had been a great saving to the people of this country. Many parties were entirely debarred from appeals from our own courts—more particularly in the Province of Quebec—in consequence of the enormous expense entailed in carrying cases across to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—But those who have no interest in those suits now have to bear the expense.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The same rule would apply to all our courts. There have been instances in which parties had to abandon their cases because they were unable to meet the costs of carrying their suits before the Judicial Committee. The next item is Legislation. I do not think the Government are entirely responsible for that increase. The sessions of Parliament were very prolific in reports and papers that had been called for by members, and the expense is not one for which the Government can be directly held accountable. In Arts, Agriculture, and Statistics the increase was $55,000, which is entirely explained by the Philadelphia Exhibition, and I think no hon. gentleman is prepared to condemn that expenditure—at least I did not hear a voice raised against it when the vote was taken for it. The next item in excess of that of 1873-4 was Immigration and Quarantine, $83,000. The increased expenditure that year is due to the Mennonite Loan, $57,670, which will be returned to us, and for which we have security. Then there is $38,761, the amount for transport of Mennonites, which cannot appear again, but for which no asset can be claimed other than the value of the people as settlers in the country. In Pensions, the increase was $46,500. That was paid to the veterans of the war of 1812, and I have not heard the propriety of that expenditure questioned. Superannuations show an increase of $24,329. That is an item, I am quite aware, which is open to criticism, but if there is an analysis made of the cases, it will be found that the instances of superannuation were in all cases those by which the public service was specially benefited; where there were officers who were not equal to the discharge of their duty, and they were practically a tax upon the people to maintain them. This item is represented by a credit side by the amount of the Civil Service Superannuation Fund maintained by annual contributions from the salaries of the members of the service. The increase in Public Works, 1875-6, chargeable to income, amounted to $191,000. That is an item representing the expenditure on harbours, piers, docks, &c. The increase in Ocean and River Service, $93,000, is due to the two steamers which were purchased at a total cost of $84,997. The increase in Light Houses and Coast Service, was $55,000. This was expended for additional lights and fog whistles, and I do not think it calls for any particular comment, as I think our energies should be taxed to an extreme point in order to make our coast safe for the shipping trade that our country boasts of. The next increase is in the item for Fisheries, the increase being $41,000. This is entirely attributable to the extension of our fish breeding establishments for the re-stocking of our rivers with salmon. Up to the present time the scheme has been attended with very great success. The Indian Grants in 1875-6 exceeded those of the previous year by $80,000. That is an item also which will remain unchallenged. It is a necessity with any Administration that the Indian title over the broad extent of the North-West should be extinguished, and, as I explained yesterday, it is now practically all extinguished on the east side of the Rocky Mountains with the exception of a few wandering tribes. A commission had been appointed two years ago to endeavor to remove the Indian grievance in British Columbia, but up to the present time it has not been attended with very marked success, otherwise than the Indians have withheld from any open violence, although it has been threatened on several occasions.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Is there any truth in the report in to-day's papers with regard to Indians troubles in the North-West?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Government have been informed from Battleford, the centre of the North-West, that the half breeds are discontented in consequence of the instructions given to the officers in charge of the Mounted Police at Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod, to enforce the law for the preservation of the buffalo. There is a small detachment stationed a short distance from Sitting Bull's camp with instructions to communicate the movements of the band to the Government. The nearest telegraph station from Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod is Helena, in Montana Territory, and it requires about a week to communicate with those places. My own impression is, there is no foundation for the alarm, as the Mounted Police are on the best of terms with the Blackfeet and the Sioux. I do not think Sitting Bull could have formed any alliance with the Blackfeet or the other Indians, for the Mounted Police would have at once become aware of it, and would have communicated it to the Government. So far as the Blackfeet are concerned, I think it is highly improbable, as they have been for the last three years, pressing upon the Government the necessity for having a treaty. They had given notice of their intention to refuse any further progress with the construction of telegraphs or railways unless they were treated with. As hon. gentlemen are aware, a treaty was concluded last year with the Blackfeet, by Lieut.-Governor Laird, and the tribes are satisfied, as the terms with them are equally liberal with those made with other tribes during the last four years. We were practically in their country two or three years before any treaty was made with them, but we were allowed to establish our forts at the Bow River and Cyprus Hills, without any treaty further than a promise that a treaty would be made. It was made last year; the Blackfeet expressed themselves satisfied, and therefore I do not think it at all probable that an alliance can have been made between them and the Sioux. When the Sioux crossed the border, it is a matter of notoriety that the Blackfeet asked permission to attack them, and if it had been allowed they would have kept them off Canadian territory, as they owed the Sioux an old grudge. The Blackfeet are a very numerous tribe, and although the Sioux have been re-inforced by wandering bands from the United States and by the Nez Percés, still there can be no alliance between our friendly Indians and the Sioux, and I am not disposed on the whole to credit the report in the newspapers.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have sent messages to Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod to ascertain whether there is any foundation for the rumor, but as the officers have been charged to notify the Government at once of any movement on the part of the Indians, and no despatch has been received from them, it is highly improbable that there is any truth in the rumors published. When the few white settlers are informed by half-breeds that the Indians are likely to move down on them, you can quite understand the alarm that would prevail. Coming back to the subject which we were discussing a few moments ago, I find the next item which appears in the increases of the year 1875-6, is under the head of Dominion Lands. That is entirely due to the surveys in laying out townships in the North-West. That item, as hon. gentlemen will see, is considerably diminished during the last year. It has dropped down from

1872-3 .....	$237,000
1873-4 .....	283,000
1874-5 .....	185,000
1875-6 .....	212,000
1876-7 .....	90,000

We have now land enough surveyed for an incoming population to do for the next few years at all events. The next item of increase is the Mounted Police, $35,000. That is entirely due to arrears of payments for former years. When the Mounted Police were sent up there first, there was very great difficulty in furnishing supplies, and it was only within the last year that the accounts from the Hudson Bay Company, and other parties who furnished supplies to the force during their hasty march across the prairies to the Rocky Mountains, came in. It was a very expensive expedition, but the results have been very good. They took no stores of provisions beyond their immediate requirements with them, and they had to depend very largely on the traders and other sources for supplies. The force are now on a better footing, and, under the present system, unless some untoward circumstances arise, they can be maintained for one thousand dollars a year per man. From this out, the force will cost about $300,000 a year. At the present time it consists of 320 men rank and file. The contracts for the provisioning of the force for the last year have been made on a very moderate basis. I may mention as an illustration that a contract was signed the other day for the supply of beef for the force for the present year, delivered butchered, at 4 cents per pound, which is cheaper than it could be obtained in any other part of the Dominion. It is an illustration of the superior character of the country for grazing purposes when beef can be delivered butchered, at Fort McLeod and Fort Walsh for 4cts per pound, every day in the year. Beef cattle are never housed there, and they are quite as good in the month of March after feeding out all winter, as they are at any other time of the year.

Hon. Mr. READ—I know a gentleman who fed 500 head there last year and he said he never gave them anything to eat all winter, and they were in good condition in the spring.
Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What was the price paid for beef last year?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it was six or seven cents last year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I think it was more than that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Two of the leading firms of the west, Baker & Co. and Power & Co., tendered for the supplies, and as there was only a difference of $1,200 between them the Government awarded the contract to Baker & Co., who were the contractors the previous year, and whose tender was the lowest for 1878-9.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I have been informed that the Government could have had the supply delivered at 4 or 5cts a pound less than they paid.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I had the administration of the force and I did not feel myself justified in departing from the terms that had been made with Baker & Co., the year before. At that time there was only one other firm that could have supplied all that was required, and there was a danger of a ring being formed to put up the prices.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The man who made the lowest tender of all last year did not get the contract, although he was informed that his tender was the lowest, and he brought his cattle down.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He did not tender until after the contract had been given out.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The facts were these. A man named Demers tendered in Ottawa last winter for supplying the beef required by the force. He received an assurance from the Minister that his tender would be accepted. It was not formally accepted by an Order-in-Council, but he went away with the assurance that it would be accepted. Having been told that the Purveyor in Manitoba would be communicated with and informed that his tender had been accepted, he brought down his cattle to Winnipeg when he was informed by the Purveyor that another tender 5 or 6 cents per pound higher had been accepted instead of his.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So far as the Mounted Police supplies are concerned, Demers had no assurance from me, nor any inducement held out to him that his tender would be accepted. He made no proposition for supplying the Mounted Police at Fort Walsh and Fort McLeod, but he made a proposition for supplying beef in other places.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—He made a tender for supplying beef in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But the Mounted Police are not for Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—For some supplies you were willing to give 4 or 5 cents per pound more than other parties were willing to give them for.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fancy you could not get supplies of beef in Manitoba for any such price as 4 cents per pound. The prices of beef are very much cheaper in the part of the country we are now discussing than in any other part of the North-West, including Kansas. I have been told by a gentleman who has had much experience in Kansas that the Cypress Hills country is a much better country for cattle than Kansas.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The Government might have had supplies of 600 or 700 cattle at 5 or 6 cents per pound less than they paid for them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman must have been misinformed.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I had it from Demers himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Government took the lowest price they could consistently accept without risk. It was necessary that we should make our contract with parties who were able to fulfil it, as there is no possibility of reaching a contractor for damages in that country.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I saw Mr. Demers myself in Winnipeg last fall, and he admitted that the facts were these: He had made a tender to the Indian Department. In answer to the tender he was asked if he could furnish such an amount of meat at a certain season. The Indian Department received no answer to that telegram, and, seeing that it was getting late in the season, the Department, not being assured that the amount could be furnished, were obliged to accept a higher tender. Demers explained it to me, and complained that he had lost a good deal by it.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—What was the difference between the prices paid and the prices he asked?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I could not say, but when he brought down his cattle the contract had been given out before the Government got his answer.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—But the Government not only set his contract aside for what they required early in the season, but set aside his tender for what was required throughout the entire season down to the month of October. They didn't wait to hear from him.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—They did not consider it wise to divide the contract.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Demers' tender was for supplies for the Indians in Manitoba, and not for the Mounted Police Force. I know I endeavored to get these supplies at the lowest possible price.

Hon. Mr. BROWN called attention to the exceeding inconvenience of these constant interruptions from members on the opposite side of the House, and the interjection of questions of this kind, on which the hon. gentlemen of the Treasury Benches could not be expected to have the information asked for at the moment without previous notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I take no exception to any interruptions of this kind. I am quite prepared to answer any questions on which I have the required information. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) was calling attention to supplies for Indians. I was talking about supplies for the Mounted Police in another part of the country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Surely what the hon. gentleman said about the supplies justified me in mentioning the information I was in possession of to the House. I did not spring it on the House and had no intention of alluding to it. I had forgotten the man's name for the moment, but what was said by the hon. Secretary of State recalled it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—On this side of the House, I am sure there is a great deal of appreciation felt for the hon. Secretary of State allowing questions to be interjected in order to elicit information. In such a discussion as this when the hon. gentleman is dealing with a statement containing such a vast amount of figures.

it is the easiest way of getting at the facts, because it is impossible to remember the whole ground he goes over and it is important that some misunderstandings be corrected at particular parts of the discussion. If the hon. Secretary of State had himself complained I am sure no hon. gentleman on this side of the House would have undertaken to press them upon him but, as he has stated that he has no objection to the interjection of these questions, there was no necessity for the emphatic protest of the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Brown.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think the prices that prevailed at Manitoba for beef are material to prices at Fort McLeod—at the former place they are very much higher. My impression is that at Carleton last year cattle cost, live weight, 9cts per pound.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—Do you refer to buffalo meat or domestic meat?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We do not buy buffalo meat.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—Buffalo meat is not the worst meat by any means.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am told there are plenty of buffalo out where the Police are. I do not know whether it is an exaggeration or not. The next item I come to where there has been an excess of expenditure in 1875-76 over 1874-75 is the Boundary Survey, $12,000; this was not an expenditure controllable by this Government. It was entirely under Imperial control and the cost of defining the International boundary is borne equally between Canada and the United States. The next item where there has been an increase is the Settler's Relief Loan Manitoba, $83,000. This was a grant for seed grain, and hon. gentlemen opposite who come from that province know whether it was a profitable investment or not. I think if we are willing to take it back bushel for bushel in grain we are likely to have it returned, from the excellent reports we have heard of the wheat crops last season. No doubt it will be repaid, if not in value, at least in bulk.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Do they intend to take bushel for bushel?

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—It was a loan, and I wish to ask the hon. Secretary of State if that loan is to be treated as an ordinary loan, or if we will be permitted to render bushel for bushel? I know it is the expectation of the people there, and I will take advantage of this opportunity to elicit an answer from the Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend is quite aware that when the loan was given to the people who were in such abject circumstances at the time, the understanding was that it was to be repaid in money. Subsequently a proposition was made to have it repaid in grain. That proposition was not acceded to and I am not in a position to answer off-handed what the intention of the Government is in relation to it. As the yield has been so very large in that country I think it should be paid in cash, or at least two bushels for one. The price of wheat at the time the seed was advanced was $1.50 to $2.00 per bushel, and now it can be obtained for 60 cents. There was also, in addition to the cost of the wheat, the cost of distribution, and I am not in a position to say whether the repayment will be taken in kind or not. The next item where there has been an increase is in Customs, which is represented by the sum of $38,000. The House will not ask me to go into any further explanation on this item than that given yesterday, that the charges on Customs are largely due to the increased supervision, more particularly in the Port of Montreal. and changes in the system of cartage, the bonded warehouse system, and similar additional guarantees for the protection of the Revenue. The next item is Excise; $19,000 of an increase, which is due to the increased necessity for revision. The next item of increase is under the head of Weights and Measures, $29,816 over that of 1874-5. The whole expenditure was $99,785. The receipts will not be equal to the fees charged, more particularly as the fees charged in some instances are excessive and a reduction will be necessary. The next item of increase in this comparative statement, is the sum of $101,966 for the Post Office Department. That is due also to the causes which I explained yesterday to the House. The last item, Public Works, there was a diminution in, and it calls for no particular comment. My hon. friend's contention was that the Government had expended $770,000 in 1875-6 over 1874-5. Now the total amount of the items I have gone over together would amount to considerably over a million of dollars, and I think it may fairly challenge criticism, and the House will agree with me, that it would not have been possible, in view of carrying on the public service efficiently, to have saved the amount that he alleges to have been expended in excess in 1875-6, over 1874-5. I have given the House all the items, and it will be for hon. gentlemen to say what particular one the Government would have been justified in striking out, rather than they should not exceed the expenditure of former years. The hon. Senator in the course of his observations called attention to the expenditure in the North-West Territories, and, amongst other things, referred to the expenditure at Battleford. My explanation in answer to that is that if we are to populate that country; if we are to introduce law and order into that territory, we must have some primitive form of Government, and we have made the expenditure connected with it the smallest possible consistent with the dignity of this country, and producing just the necessary machinery that was called for in so primitive a condition of things that the North-West presents to-day. It was impossible for the Government at Winnipeg to administer the affairs of a country so distant. Battleford is nearly 800 miles from Winnipeg without any facilities of communication and weeks, sometimes months elapse before communication can be had between those two points. In view of the construction of the railway, and in view of the settlements going in there now.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — What population is there about Battleford?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the immediate vicinity of Battleford there is not much population, but it is a point convenient to other lines that converge there. Some point had to be selected, and it was thought better to select that than Carleton which was out of the way of the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—There is no person at Battleford except Hon. Mr. Laird and his family and some hunters and trappers. There is no fixed population.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very hard to tell where settlement will gravitate in that country and no man can foresee where the most attractive points in the North-West really are. I quite admit that it is impossible to foreshadow the particular section of the North-West that is going to be most densely populated in the next ten years.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Why was Fort Pelly abandoned after expending a large amount of money for public buildings there and establishing the seat of Government at that point?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because it was found not to be adapted for the purpose. It was badly selected in the first place and it was considered injudicious to expend any more money there.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Is there not the same danger with respect to Battleford?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we hope not.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Who selected Fort Pelly?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The Government I suppose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Ministers have not had the opportunity of migratory travel through that country, and are obliged to take information second-hand. I now come to the contingencies. I have run over the contingencies for some years, and I think I shall be able to show the House that for the last two years there has been a manifest improvement. I will give the figures since 1869:

1869-70 .....	$165,931
1870-71 .....	153,293
1871-72 .....	153,238
1872-73 .....	179,611
1873-74 .....	222,808
1874-75 .....	208,707
1875-76 .....	172,548
1876-77 .....	157,479

So that they are practically lower now than they have been in any year since 1871-72, at which time they were $153,000. My hon. friend will at least concede that this is a very decided and marked improvement. He also went into an analysis of the telegraph account.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—They were more in 1875 than in 1873.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend singled out the Customs Department, and spoke about its large expenditure. Now, I think the hon. gentleman who is at the head of that Department is as careful, economical, and prudent in the expenditures under his control as any gentleman I know of, and, if it is looked into, it will be conceded that he must have given the subject his personal attention. The hon. Senator seems to have been very much startled at the telegraphic account of the Customs Department in 1874-5. Now, it appears to have been $6,277 that year, which is a larger amount than was expended in the preceding year. The cause is this: It was the quarter immediately following that on which the tariff was changed, and the cost of telegraphing the tariff over the country, and holding the wires during the budget speech was $3,500 for the two days. It is quite probable that the large item in 1868 was attributable to a similar cause. As hon. gentleman will readily understand, the service over the Dominion is much larger now than it was in 1868, and the contingencies of all the departments have necessarily increased yearly, yet the Minister of Customs absolutely kept the contingencies of his department lower than they were in 1868.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Will the hon. gentleman give us the tariff of charges for telegraphic messages during the two periods.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know it.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I think you will find they were nearly double in 1868 what they are at present.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I think it was 25 cents a message before 1868.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It was not down to 25 cents until after the Dominion Telegraph Company was established.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Dominion Telegraph Company appears in these accounts—it was then the People's Line, I think—for the first time in 1871 or 1872. By the accounts the Montreal Telegraph Company appears to have done all the business before that. In any way you look at the item there has been a very considerable reduction in telegraphing expenses of the Customs Department. I now come to the telegraphing generally of all the Departments. I find the amount charged in

Hon. Mr. Scott.

1872-3 .....	$24,521
1873-4 .....	20,491
1874-5 .....	38,506
1875-6 .....	18,994
1876-7 .....	15,256

In 1874-5 the Mounted Police were under the Administration of Justice, and the telegraphing expenses amounted to $2,954.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—All the Departments increased that year. The Finance Department increased fifty per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In 1875-6 the telegraph account was only one-half of the previous year. It fell to $18,994. No doubt the explanation is this, that the attention of the Government must have been called to the item being large, and all round there were reductions made the following year. Last year it fell to $15,000, an amount which is less than it has been for very many years. Here I may explain that the cost of telegraphing, as the years go on, has not been reduced, because since the introduction of British Columbia into the Dominion the rate for telegraphing to that Province has been very large. The cost of telegraphing to Manitoba and the North-West Territories has also been very large, especially in communicating with the Mounted Police. The rate is seventeen cents a word to Fort Benton; besides the cost of sending a special messenger from there to the Police posts. The rate to Fort Garry is thirteen cents a word, and the cost to Battleford is in excess of that, as the contractors have the use of the line and charge very high rates for messages.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Do the contractors charge the Government for messages also?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; the rate to British Columbia is $2.50 for ten words, and seventeen cents for each word in addition. So that, since 1873-74, the cost of communicating with all those points has been a very serious additional charge above the ordinary telegraphing that existed previously in the narrower limits of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—As the hon. Minister has given us permission to put questions, I will enquire, in reference to telegraphing, if the Government has taken any measures to have an arrangement made with the American Company that has control of the telegraph line in the Province of Manitoba, in order to get lower rates? At the present time it is quite a charge on Manitoba to be obliged to pay twenty-five cents a word for telegraphic messages. I think it is in the power of the Government to have the matter arranged with the Government of the United States in the same way as the postal service was arranged, in order to secure for the people of Manitoba as cheap telegraphy as other parts of the Dominion. At the present time, in consequence of the high rates, it is impossible for the people in general to use the telegraph, and it can only be availed of by the Government and by merchants.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I should be very much gratified if I could give my hon. friend the assurance that any such thing were possible, but he must know that the telegraph system west of Lake Superior is not under the control of the Government of the United States; it is the Western Union Telegraph Company that has control of the line. They look at it from an entirely commercial point of view, and they assure us that they give the Government lower rates than their usual tariff. My impression was that it was thirteen cents a word—we pay thirteen cents. So long as the line is unfinished on Canadian territory, I have very little hope of the American Company coming down in their rates. They may offer to telegraph for one particular house, or for the Government, in the possibility of getting a larger number of messages by giving a reduced rate, but it would be perfectly absurd for us to appeal to a private company to make a reduction in their rates for messages going to and from Manitoba. The postal arrangements of the United States are under the control of the United States Government, and in making postal arrangements with them a few years ago, by which they allowed our mails to go through their territory, and we allowed their mails to go through ours, we were enabled also to make an arrangement for an uniform postal rate. But it would be quite impossible to expect a private company like the Western Union Telegraph Company to concede any privilege of the kind. No doubt as long as they can enjoy the monopoly they will avail themselves of any advantage that flows from it. The hon. Senator took occasion to make some observations in reference to Hon. Mr. Blake's speech at Teeswater, and he drew the conclusion from the speech that the ex-Minister of Justice had misled "the good men of Bruce." Now, I have read the speech, and I think it is perfectly plain that the only interpretation that can be put upon the comparison that Mr. Blake was so drawing, is that he was gauging the salaries of the regular staff of the Department, and excluding his own and that of the preceding Minister of Justice (Sir John Macdonald.) Had he taken the other course it would still have made a difference of $1,000, inasmuch as the previous Minister of Justice had $1,000 more than Mr. Blake as Premier. Mr. Blake was drawing a comparison as between the regular pay of the staff, apart from the Minister, and the figures that he quotes there prove that, as the Minister's salary alone would have absorbed two-thirds of the whole amount.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Mr. Blake spoke of the salaries, and could be only understood as speaking of all the salaries.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Minister is not spoken of as part of the staff; he is only the temporary head. The staff are those who belong to the Civil Service.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The true question, I think, is what meaning he conveyed to the people to whom he spoke. They would naturally suppose that he spoke of the whole expenses of the department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will quote his words, and let hon. gentlemen judge for themselves. "The staff had been increased in 1873, and, in November of that year, at the resignation of the late Government, the annual rate of charge for salaries, including bonuses and a charge on contingencies, was $13,500." Now, surely he would not convey such a poor compliment to the men of Bruce, as to suppose that they did not know that did not include his own salary.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—How were they to know the difference?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He was not part of the staff; he was the head of the department, and no ordinary mind could interpret his words to convey the idea his own salary was included.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I maintain any public audience in this Dominion would have drawn the conclusion that when the Minister spoke of the expenses of his department he included his own salary.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. senators can put their own construction on the language used, and it will be for fair men to say whether it conveys any misrepresentation. Mr. Blake continued, "Several changes subsequently took place, and the rate of charge when I took office in May, 1875, was $15,750. I was, as I have said, unable to make a reduction in salaries during the first year." He would not have been making a reduction in his own salary.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—He did not do so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—What was the salary of the previous Ministers of Justice, prior to 1873-4?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If Mr. Blake had chosen to include the salary of Sir John Macdonald, it would have shown a greater disproportion, inasmuch as it would have been $1,000 more, the Minister of Justice being then Premier. It is evidence to me that Mr. Blake was extremely cautious in his utterances to confine his observations only to the staff. It would not have been fair to have charged the Department of Justice, as such, with the $1,000 which the Minister of Justice drew as Premier, any more than it would be now to charge it to the Department of Public Works, as such. It belongs to the office of Premier.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—We are told we should take exactly what is in the Public Accounts: that is in the Public Accounts.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—But when the hon. gentleman was contrasting his own management of the Department of Justice with that of Sir John Macdonald, it would have been but candid to have stated that Sir John had the same salary as himself for only a few months, and up to that time had received only $5,000 per annum. That would have been but fair.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am now taking up the unfair criticism which I think my hon. friend made in reference to the speech of Mr. Blake, in which he charged the late Minister of Justice with deceiving the good people of Bruce.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That is the effect of it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Mr. Blake used the word "staff" in his remarks. He said, "In June last, when I left the office, the rate charged for salaries was 'only $10,750.' It would be preposterous to suppose that the people who were listening to him would think his salary was included in that.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—How were they to know the difference? The Public Accounts are not distributed throughout the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have more faith in the intelligence of the men of Bruce. They read the newspapers and they were not in any way deceived. It was only my hon. friend who drew that particular conclusion from it which I was extremely sorry to hear. I think the men of Bruce quite understood the subject; they were equal to the effort. The hon. Senator adverted to the deficit, which, no doubt, is not a very attractive subject, and which I do not propose to discuss on the present occasion further than to show that the reversion which has fallen on the prosperity of Canada was in no sense due to the Administration of the day, that whatever Government happened at the moment to control the destinies of the country was not master of the commercial crisis which prevailed all over the world, a crisis which affected the oldest countries in Europe, and injured us less than, probably, any other country. Our distress was not owing in any way to any inherent lack of resources on our part, but to the inability of foreigners to buy our products. I require no further illustration than to point out that the lumber trade, one of the greatest industries in our country, dropped down in the way it did, bringing ruin and disaster on those engaged in it and losses on our commercial institutions. That trade fell off simply because the Americans were unable to buy; and so one might go on and illustrate in some other industries. Something was due, perhaps, to the comparative failure of crops in this country, but the causes which produced the depression were causes which I say, advisedly, no Administration could have prevented. It is, of course, a long subject, and it would not be proper to introduce it in this debate, but my hon. friend alluded to it. The Government did not feel it was a time to shut down and stop the public works of this country. They did not think it was proper to cease to employ labor all over this country, and advertise to the world that Canada was not able to rise in a prosperous manner from the momentary depression which fell upon the country. On the contrary, our public credit never for one hour went down, and we were able to carry on the important public works of this country. We were enabled to go on with the Pacific Railway, the canals, the opening up of the North-West; to make treaties with the Indians, and to expend on important public works nearly $30,000,000. We were enabled to do that and still maintain the credit of the country, notwithstanding the unfortunate depression which existed. It is true the Government might have refused to go on with expenditures on public works chargeable to income, but I think that would have been unwise. Depression visited Canada in former years, as it has other countries, and deficits have occurred in Canada as they have elsewhere. Our deficits, I hope, are only temporary, and I believe the time is not far distant when we will be able to show a better balance sheet. But in order that hon. gentlemen may see that deficits are not new in this country, let us go back to 1858.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Oh, oh!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was before Canada was burdened with the outside provinces.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—You were bankrupt before you got them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend must have seen from the smile on my face I was speaking derisively, as he will understand when he hears me out. Many people supposed that Ontario and Quebec would be richer if left to themselves. I never shared that belief or gave expression to one sentiment that would lead to it. I always had great faith in bringing in all the British North American Colonies from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and I was speaking derisively of those who urged that Canada would be richer if left alone. In 1858 the revenue was $5,276,000; expenditure, $8,645,000, a deficit of $3,375,000 in one year. We are not now constrained, as we were then, to pay eight per cent. for our money. We are getting our money for less than half of what we were paying then, and our deficit is a bagatelle compared with that. The deficit in 1858 was nearly one-half of the whole expenditure.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What was the rate of duty then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no doubt the very best efforts were made to correct this, as the hon. gentleman who leads the party who have got the national policy on their banner, was at that time at the head of affairs, and, therefore, it was for him to inaugurate a policy to relieve the country from the depression.

Hon. Mr. READ—He was then a freetrader.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The following year the Revenue was $6,597,000, and the expenditure still kept on. They had better faith in the destiny of Canada then than they seem to have now. The expenditure was $8,091,000, leaving a deficit of over $1,500,000 that year. In the following year the revenue showed signs of improvement, just as the third year of the present depression is also showing signs of improvement, and ours, I hope, will be greater than theirs. The revenue in 1860 was $7,436,585, while the expenditure, strange to say, still went on, like a snowball, enlarging as it rolled, and amounted to $9,410,000. The hon. senator's friends were then in power.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Was the hon. gentleman a Senator then?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I was not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In 1861 the expenditure was $9,542,934. It still kept up. The people had faith in the future of this great country, and did not believe that when a wave of depression was rolling over the Dominion was the proper time to practice the small economies. In 1862 the revenue was $7,377,000, but still the expenditure went on, reaching $9,441,000, leaving a deficit of over $2,000,000, that year.

Hon. Mr. READ—Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us who was in power then?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Sir John Macdonald.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It was Sandfield Macdonald.

Hon. Mr. READ—I was elected in 1862, and Sandfield Macdonald was then in power.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend is right. Sandfield Macdonald came into power in March, 1862, and then there was a general election in 1863. In 1863 the deficit went down to $870,000, and immediately afterwards it disappeared only to re-appear in the last two years. It is for hon. gentlemen who have drawn attention to it to apply the legitimate conclusion—when Sandfield Macdonald came in the deficit immediately disappeared.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—No, it was when he went out.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—It disappeared after the Maritime Provinces came in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It disappeared at Confederation. I think I have successfully proved that 1873-74 was a year that may fairly be taken as a basis for the expenditure of subsequent years, which was controlled by the legislation of the Session of 1873. I challenge the hon. Senator, or any other hon. gentleman to show one instance in which it would have been wise or prudent in the interests of this country to have checked that expenditure and in that way to have prevented a deficit. I have shown that during that period, notwithstanding the great depression in trade which, no doubt, is a very embarrassing element for the Administration to deal with, this Government has been enabled to expend a sum of $30,000,000, on capital account, to pay its annually recurring liabilities, exchanging six per cent bonds for four per cent bonds, to spend $2,761,857, on works chargeable to income and still, in the last year the annual expenditure has been only $202,985 in excess of the expenditure of 1873-74. Now, I think that one fact ought to establish all the premises on which I started; and on which I was basing my argument. If we had applied the pruning knife in the manner suggested by my hon. friend, we would not have been able to effect loans on the favorable terms we did.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What was the rate?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend knows that the debentures are four per cent.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman surely does not say that the country only pays four per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—How much would it be?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—About 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ .

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Nearer 4 $\frac{6}{10}$ .

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is somewhere over four per cent.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is nearer five.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At all events, it is a considerable reduction on the rate of interest of former years. I think the conclusions prove my case. There are, of course, many other points of detail, to which I could have called attention, but I think I owe the House an apology for addressing them at such length.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was glad to have the monotony of figures relieved by the questions put to me. I think the deductions I have drawn are substantially correct, and fully borne out by the facts I have given.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. Secretary of State has forgotten to answer my question—how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—By the hope of better days.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—No policy?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Government do not recognize the deficit as so serious that it should involve any change. At present it is not contemplated to make any changes in our fiscal policy.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. Secretary of State promised that the hon.

Minister of Agriculture would explain the expenditures for Immigration.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—In the course of his remarks the hon. Senator from Toronto who made this motion, kindly invited me to explain to the House the extraordinary expenditure of the Immigration Department. He passed in review all the Departments of the Government, and alleged that in all of them there was mismanagement, extraordinary expenditure and in some cases absolute waste of money. The Department of Immigration specially attracted his attention. I am rather inclined to think the most extraordinary part of it is, not the expenditure of the department but the statement of the hon. gentleman. I am not surprised that he came to such a conclusion when I see the basis of his calculations. To show that the hon. Senator in this, as in many other instances, miscalculated the figures, I beg to refer hon. gentlemen to the Public Accounts since 1873-74, and I shall be obliged to quote the statement in his pamphlet. He states that while the immigration has been decreasing the expenditure for the service has been increasing. I think I will be able to show that this statement was to say the least entirely erroneous. The hon. gentleman says in the year 1875 the expenditure was $302,770, and that all immigrants cost the country $18.90 per capita. Now, this is entirely inaccurate. The $302,770 comprises quarantine expenses, which the hon. gentleman puts down at $13,768. In the first place, this last amount is not correct, it representing only the amount expended on quarantine at Grosse Isie, while the whole expenditure on quarantine for that year was $24,998, the items being all published in the Public Accounts. The hon. gentleman represents the amount he erroneously gives for quarantine, as if it was in addition to the sum of $302,770, when it is already comprised in that sum. While he has undertaken to separate the quarantine items, he has not deducted them from those for immigration, but has taken the combined service on which to calculate the per capita cost of immigrants. The figures, as given in his pamphlet, leave the impression that quarantine items are additional to immigration. But it may be stated that quarantine is deducted from immigration, although the two services are mixed together in the Public Accounts. Quarantine is incidental to trade and travel, and would be necessary even if there were no immigration. Besides this item for quarantine, we must deduct refunds from the provinces, published in the Public Accounts under the head of Receipts, as Casual Revenue, being repayments for advances made by the Department of Agriculture, for transport and share of expenses of the London office, by the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. In 1875, the amount so refunded to the Dominion was $30,094. This amount, and the quarantine item deducted from the expenses of the department, would leave $247,680, and this was the net expenditure for the fiscal year as represented by the Public Accounts, which makes instead of $18.90 per capita, only $9.04 on the immigrants who came to Canada in 1875.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—In 1876, the whole amount stated by the hon. gentleman as the expenditure for Immigration for the fiscal year, was $385,847, and besides $12,233 for quarantine. This also is incorrect, the amount expended for quarantine having been $23,975 for that year, these items being published in the Public Accounts. There are, however, further deductions to be made to arrive at the net ordinary immigration expenditure. There was a specially heavy expenditure on account of the Mennonites in that year, amounting to $97,731, partly in loan, and partly for transport, which should be deducted fairly to appreciate the ordinary immigration expenditure of that year, and, still further, a deduction for refunds amounting to $16,417 by the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, for advances made to them for transport and their share of the expenses of the London Office. These several deductions would leave a net expenditure of $247,724, and this on immigrants who arrived in Canada during the year, would give a per capita expense of $9.65 instead of $26.65, as calculated by my hon. friend.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—But even from this amount we should fairly deduct $25,514, expended in purchasing the Dufferin building at Pembina. This is not an ordinary expenditure for Immigration, and should be placed to Capital Account.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—To the Suspense Account.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I mention this to show how erroneous the hon. gentleman's calculations are. The hon. gentleman is mistaken when he says the number of immigrants have decreased, while the expenditure has increased. It is quite the reverse. In 1877, the total number of immigrants who arrived in Canada was 27,082, at a gross expense of $284,065 for the calendar year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I was particular in stating I only referred to the number entering by the St. Lawrence, and that number was 7,743.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The hon. gentleman is not even there correct. The number of immigrants to Canada by the St. Lawrence was less than 7,743. Those figures represent the total number of immigrants and also passengers for the Western States, many of whom had through tickets to points outside of Canada, and did not stop in Canada at all. The hon. gentleman will find in the Report of the Department of Agriculture, that the number of immigrants who came by the St. Lawrence was 4,201.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—So much the worse. That represents the number for whom this expenditure was made.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The hon. Senator is quite mistaken. That is the number of those who came by the St. Lawrence, but 930 came by way of Halifax, 141 by St. John, N. B., besides, 1,513 via Portland, and the arrivals by the Suspension Bridge, and other routes. At page 18 of the Report of the Department of Agriculture, the hon. gentleman will see that the total arrivals of immigrants at all ports was 27,082.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That includes those from the United States.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—That is the number that came to settle in Canada that year. The total amount of the expenditure by the Department of Agriculture for the calendar year 1877, was $284,065. From this should be deducted $42,285, refunded by the provinces, that is, $21,239 under the head of Receipts, in the

Hon. Mr. Pelletier

Public Accounts, and $21,046 as refunds for immigration, not deducted in the Report of the Department—and the loan to the Icelanders, $30,717, for which, as in the case of the loan to the Mennonites, we hold ample security.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I have deducted that loan.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—No; and deducting those two items we have $110,670, as the net expenditure in that year, which would make the per capita only $4.08.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The hon. Senator's statement of the number of immigrants arriving each year is, as I have said, incorrect. The immigrants and net expenditure for the calendar years were :

In 1875—	27,382,	costing net	$241,600
1877—	27,082	“	110,670

I should here call the attention of the House to the fact that the Report of the Department and the figures given in them are for the calendar years, that being found most convenient in dealing with immigration, it being difficult to divide one season's immigration, putting half in one calendar year and half in another. This should be borne in mind in considering the last figures, as I, in the first, answered the hon. gentleman on his own ground, namely, the figures of expenditure for the fiscal year as they appear in the Public Accounts; or to recapitulate, and take the Public Accounts figures with the deductions I have explained, the statement of immigration and expenditure would stand thus :—

In 1875—	27,382	costing net	$248,334
1876—	25,633	“	247,680

Taking a number of years in the aggregate, the two modes of accounting will coincide, while there may happen to be considerable differences between any two halves. Now, the House will perceive that, instead of a decreasing immigration and increasing expenditure, the facts prove the very reverse. The arrivals have increased in 1877 over the year 1876, and the expenses have steadily diminished from year to year since 1873. The hon. gentleman charged the agents of the department with having discouraged immigration. I had often heard the charge that there was extravagance in the department, but this is the first time I have heard the agents accused of being anti-immigration agents.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I have no doubt the agents are acting in accordance with their instructions.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—It is the first time I have heard that they are not doing their duty in the interest of immigration. The hon. gentleman seems to think that immigration to Canada is decreasing more than in any other country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not say that. All that I said was it was decreasing absolutely to Canada. I made no comparison with any other country.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The hon. gentleman will see that it is due to decreased immigration from European countries. It has decreased from the United Kingdom since 1873, as shown by the following statement :—

In 1873.....	310,612
1874.....	241,040
1875.....	173,809
1876.....	138,222

To show that this decrease in arrivals here, is not due to neglect of duty on the part of the agents we employ, I will read a statement showing the number of immigrants into the United States since 1873. It is as follows :—

In 1873.....	459,804
1874.....	313,339
1875.....	228,498
1876.....	169,886
1877.....	141,857

That shows clearly that the decrease is due to the general diminished emigration from Europe. I think I have shown conclusively that the hon. gentleman's calculations are made on a wrong basis, and that they are entirely erroneous. I may state that last year the gross expenditure of the calendar year was diminished to the extent of $100,393 as compared with the year 1876, while there was an increase of 1,449 in the number of immigrants; and from these gross figures a further deduction should be made, as I have shown, of $42,285, for refunds, besides the advances of $30,717 to the Icelanders, to be repaid. If we compare the net expenditure, after deductions are made, we have for

Hon. Mr. Pelletier.

1876, $228,077, and for 1877, $110,677, being a net decrease of $117,407, on the immigration expenditure proper for those calendar years. I leave to the House now, to judge if is fair to make such statements as those made by hon. gentlemen.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman is correct in saying the quarantine items should be deducted, and I am under the impression I did so.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—We made particular calculations in the department, and in the gross amounts are comprised the quarantine items.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I shall carefully examine my figures, and if I have made any error I shall be very glad to correct it.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I am sure the error was unintentional.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman surprises me very much by saying that the number of immigrants did not decrease last year. I fancied it was a matter of notoriety throughout the country that immigration was declining, and declining very seriously. I am quite aware that emigration from the United Kingdom to the United States has fallen off. The hon. gentleman's own report shows that the arrivals by way of the St. Lawrence have fallen off from 44,475 in 1871 to 7,743 in 1877.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—That is by the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—My comparisons, remember, were confined to immigrants by the St. Lawrence, because, I take it, the money expended by the department is to induce emigrants to come to this country by the St. Lawrence; unless they come by that route we will not have the means of knowing that they come to settle in Canada. Of course, in winter they come to the port the Canadian steamers call at, but there are very few arrivals in winter. I deducted the amount advanced to the Mennonites last year, and it was not included in the amount which I divided per capita. I showed the amount with and without the transport of the Mennonites, but I excluded the loan altogether. This year I did the same. I shall go carefully over my figures again.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I do not understand public matters well enough to answer my hon. friend's criticisms with respect to other departments. I have limited my reply to my own department.

At 6 o'clock the House rose for recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH resumed the debate. He said:—After the exhaustive remarks of the hon. Secretary of State, I feel it is almost presumption for me to rise on a question of this importance when the hon. Senator from Toronto, who has moved in this matter and has made it a specialty for some time past, has established his points so clearly, and incontrovertibly. I fail to see, and hon. gentleman have failed to see, that the hon. Secretary of State with the made up statements of figures in his hands, with all the information at his command that the ingenuity of the departments could afford him, has answered the main questions, how the equilibrium between income and expenditure is to be restored, the question of deficits and the grave charges that have been made by my hon. friend on my right, (Mr. Macpherson). It seems to me that the hon. Minister of State, has lost sight entirely of the question of revenue and expenditure of the present desperate time, and unfairly, as is seen, based his defence of the extravagant expenditures of the present Government, not on the expenditures but on the estimates of a Ministry which had surpluses of twelve millions of dollars and applied them to public works, thereby lessening indebtedness at the end of each financial year. The Government took $2,000,000 of taxes off the people, the duty on tea and molasses, whilst they controlled the affairs of the country. In this way I consider (when revenue increased and taxation was decreased) no comparison between the estimates or expenditures of the governments can be fairly made, and the arguments of the hon. gentleman, independent of that, have been grossly deceptive and fallacious. My hon. friend from Saugeen, the mover in this matter, has made several points clear to this House that cannot be gained—that even the Secretary of State cannot now question or dispute. Under the administration of the present Government we have less money, smaller revenue, heavier taxation and larger debt; and our credit in consequence of that must be very much depreciated. Admitting that, all those positions have been established. They are true, and the country knows and sadly feels it, and has already, in unmistakable manner, and in various ways, expressed dissatisfaction. I ask the hon. Secretary of State how he intends to meet the deficits that have been caused and piled up by the extravagance of the Government in the public expenditures of this country? Why does he not reply? Taking the hon. gentleman's own argument, he has proved that the last year (1873-4) the late Government were in office they had provided amply for the requirements of the country, and after the present Government were in power eight months—the remainder of that year—with all their lavishness and all their recklessness and extravagance, there was left to them by their predecessors a clear surplus of revenue over expenditure of about $300,000. This the Secretary of State has proved, and he has proved also that the late Government, after having been charged with extravagance and corruption in public affairs, of filling the public offices with place seekers and political partizans, had expended no more than the circumstances of the country had justified them in doing. He justifies present expenditure on the basis of that of the late Government. During that period of prosperity—the Macdonald Government having reduced taxation and yet having large surpluses of revenue, and millions of dollars to the credit of the Government in the banks—there was no necessity to further economise where public improvements were required, any more than a private individual who finds himself prospering should be as careful in his expenditures as when he is in straitened circumstances and running rapidly into debt. Ever since 1873, with the trade of the country falling off, the revenue becoming less year by year, the Government borrowing money to meet ordinary expenditure, and the public debt increasing, we find the expenses of government increasing by hundreds of thousands of dollars each year in excess of what it was when the country was prospering, and wherever the Government have attempted to practice economy it was not economy in the public interest. The hon. Secretary of State has tried (but signally failed) to justify the enormous expenditure by this Government for telegraphing, by comparing it with the expenditures of their predecessors for the same service. The hon. member for Saugeen shows that in 1872-3 the departmental telegraphing was only $24,000, while the present Government expended in 1874-5 for the same service, $38,000. I fail to see how the hon. Secretary of State got over that fact. He certainly has not shown there has been any increase in the rates for telegraphing since this Government came into power; the truth is, the rates have been cut down, yet the telegraphic expenses since they came into office are nearly twice as large as they were under the late Government. Nothing has been shown to justify it; there has been no disturbance in the country, Sitting Bull had not crossed the line and there has been nothing abnormal in the condition of public affairs to justify so large an increase in this expenditure. The hon. Secretary of State was forced to go back for a precedent to 1868, and tried to show that the late Government expended as much, and that is the only justification attempted by the Government for wastefully expending the public moneys. No wonder that the principles of their party became a byword and reproach when the best interests of the country have been sacrificed, and incompetency and mismanagement are shown to prevail in every department of the public service. The figures of my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) have not been questioned in this debate, and the hon. Secretary of State has failed to meet any of his charges although he carefully watched and scrutinised every figure and statement. The hon. Senator has shown that the total expenditure of this Government in 1875-76 was $3,677,398 in excess of the expenditure of the late Government in 1872-73. He then (with his usual candour and fairness) gave them credit for having extraordinary expenditures to the amount of $1,877,398, leaving a balance of $1,800,000 which in those three years was expended by this Government in excess of their predecessors, on matters entirely and unquestionably within their control, and in which they could have easily economised if they had acted in the public interest and not in the interest of friends and party.

Hon. Mr. Pelletier.

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—The Government endeavored to show that they had been very economical last year, but before I am done I think I shall prove that their economy is only a "cheese paring" economy with a view to deceiving the country, and not the retrenchment which the public interests and the country expect and demand from them. They claim a saving of $969,070 in this year over that of last year. If this is true, we cannot but consider that the expenditures of the previous year must have been grossly extravagant, when they can effect this saving now without any more pressing necessity for it than existed before. But how has this economy been effected? They have economized by expending $600,000 less on public works when labour was cheap, and by destroying the efficiency of our militia, and cutting down their appropriation one-half—a most unjustifiable proceeding. I do not consider this to be economy, as I believe it will have the effect of rendering the large expenditures that have already been made in organizing our militia forces utterly useless, and destroying so vital an element in the defences of our country.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Then another instance of this false economy can be seen in Prince Edward Island, where a breakwater at Souris, which had cost, I believe, some $30,000, has been destroyed through the neglect of the Government. They had been warned that that work was incomplete, and required a further outlay to make it secure. They refused to make any further expenditure on it, however, important as the work was to the safety of the property and lives of our fishermen, who are exposed on an unsheltered coast (where many fishermen have sunk with their crafts) and the result has been that the whole structure has gone to ruin at a loss of about $30,000 to the country. Then, their reduction in expenditure is further caused by the following items being no longer required—exceptional charges in 1875-6 not in 1876-7—the Settler's Relief, Manitoba, and the United States Boundary Survey, in all, $217,511. By taking these extraordinary items out of their expenditure of the previous year, you will find that the boasted economy of the present year, instead of being nearly a million of dollars, is no economy at all, but, on the contrary, a destruction, and worse than waste of money. When the Provinces went into the Confederation in 1867, the gross debt of the Dominion, (including liabilities assumed) was $93,046,051; in 1873 it was $129,743,432. Thus it will be seen the late Government, after being six years in power, only added, during that time, to the public debt, $36,697,381. I am not taking the assets into account. During that time there were extraordinary expenditures, such as the purchasing the North-West Territories, the bringing in of British Columbia and Prince Edward Island into the Confederation, and the building of the greater part of the Intercolonial Railway. Yet the Public Debt was only increased $36,000,000 in those six years. But what do we now find; the gross debt of the Dominion has run up to $174,675,834, or an increase of $44,932,402 since the present Government assumed office—four years—as compared with $36,000,000 of an increase under the late Administration in six years, with all the extraordinary expenses they had to provide for.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—The Government have boasted here and elsewhere that they have reduced the expenditure in 1876-7 nearly one million and a half of dollars as compared with the expenditures of 1873-4. That has been their argument in making a very unfair comparison with the expenditures of a Government that had reduced taxation, had a prosperous country, plenty of money to provide for all the requirements of the public service, and surpluses year after year. But from this million and a half of boasted saving must be taken the following items of extraordinary expenditure of nearly one and a half millions of dollars: The cost of the census, $32,000; also militia and defence, military stores, public works, boundary surveys, the North-west Territory organization, Dominion lands survey, and the customs refund to the Great Western Railway, of $69,000. These items, when comparing 1873-4 with 1876-7, showed the sum of $8,324,000, against $6,835,000, a difference of $1,489,000. Therefore, taking the ordinary expenditures on both sides that could not be obviated, and they would show that this Government have expended in excess of the late Ministry, $1,489,000 in 1876-7, as compared with the expenditures of 1873-4 although there was included in 1873-4, which is not included in the above, the cost of the extra session of Parliament, $191,000, which cannot be placed to ordinary expenditure. All this shows clearly that my premises are correct, that the present Government have not reduced the ordinary expenses of the country in 1876-7 as compared with 1873-4. In order to show how recreant the Government have been to their own professions, I shall read the resolutions adopted by the Reform Convention in 1873. They were as follow: "They were to apply themselves to a thorough overhauling of the departmental system; the contraction of the lavish annual expenditure and the enforcement of strict economy in every branch of the public service."

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach,

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Yet hon. gentlemen must see that year by year the expenditure has increased under the present Government, and it was about $600,000 more in 1875-6 than in 1873-4. I ask hon. gentlemen if their conduct since then has not been a libel on the principles which they professed while in Opposition, ever since they came into office? They made a "big push" to get into office, but they left their principles as laid down in their resolutions—which no doubt my hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Brown) had some hand in drawing up—behind them, and year after year we find those Reformers rolling up deficit after deficit, and expending $500,000 more in ordinary expenses in a year of depression, than their predecessors did when the country was prosperous. Then when we ask them what they propose to do in order to meet those deficits, they tell us to trust in Providence and wait and hope, and hope and watch. "Hope," as my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Miller) remarked sarcastically the other day, "that some more large cities may be destroyed;" or trust to some fortuitous circumstance that will swallow up the revenue so as to enable us to meet our obligations. They have destroyed the industries of the country, they have ruined our sugar refining, the tea trade, the coal interests, and our trade with the West Indies with their "do nothing policy," and the question now arises, how is this country going to be brought back to prosperity and to what it was in the good days of the late Administration? Nobody can for a moment suppose this can be accomplished under the present policy, and my hon. friend on my right very properly asks the question how it is "proposed to restore the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure?" We find that the hon. Secretary of State, after three days' debating on this subject, has failed to answer this question.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Perhaps my hon. friend who says "Hear, hear," can tell us. He is considered to be the real leader of the Reform party.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—It is said he has now the entire responsibility of the party on his shoulders, and when my hon. friend for Saugeen, on this side of the House, said yesterday he believed that the policy of the Government was direct taxation—a land tax or an income tax, or both—the Government dared not deny it, and my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brown) said never a word, although it was insinuated that he knew it. It would be a great relief to our friends in the country, and especially to the people in Nova Scotia, if the hon. member for Lambton would not deny us the information, how this deficit is to be met, and if the result is as my hon. friend boldly stated yesterday, direct taxation, the knowledge of that fact will be a great benefit to the country. For my part, I cannot see what other way the Government are going to meet it, as they have done nothing to revive our drooping industries. It is impossible that they can revive under the present policy, while the expenses of the country are piling up and the public debt is increasing. I ask, in all honesty, with a desire to be informed, how this question of drifting from one year to another is to be stayed, or is the ship to be allowed to go on the breakers? It is impossible that we can exist much longer under the present state of things. Take the Military College at Kingston, for instance, on which has been expended, with the estimates for expenditure and costs of education and management, about $300,000, to educate and perfect in military tactics, about forty cadets, while the militia appropriation has been cut down $500,000, so that there is no provision made for instructing company officers, and scarcely anything left for drilling the men. Is that a wise policy? I should say it was not. Then we have the Civil Government of the country, which, we were told in 1872, was most extravagant, that the departments were crowded with useless clerks, and they even filled the corridors and had nothing to do. The cost in 1872-3 was $750,800, for which the late Government were denounced in unmeasured terms by the then Opposition. But now what do we find? In 1876-7, the cost of Civil Government has been increased to $312,200, or $62,000 more for attendance on the Government than the amount expended by the Macdonald Government, which they denounced for extravagance. I am sure this is a matter which the Administration had largely in their own hands. The retrenchment principle might easily have been applied here with some appearance of sincerity. Who will say that it could not have been done? They might have economized if they had any desire to do so. Before the Reformers came into power they denounced the superannuation policy—the pensioning off of efficient men. In 1872-3 it cost $53,000, but in 1876-7 it had increased to $104,800, or $50,000 more than the expenditure of their predecessors in superannuations, and it was done, no doubt, to accommodate the Government and make places for their political friends.

Hon. Gentlemen—hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I believe in many cases—I know one or two myself—men who were infinitely better adapted for the positions which they held than the men who were put in their places, were superannuated without cause to make room for office seekers. A dozen instances could be named if necessary.

An hon. Gentleman—Name them.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—The Postmaster at Halifax is one, and there are other cases I will name if the Secretary of State wishes me, when men in the full vigor of life, and thoroughly conversant from their ability and long experience with the whole details of their departments, men against whom the Government could assign no fault, but on the contrary men who had proved themselves invaluable have been driven from the service, and incompetent men have been appointed in their place. In 1872-73 the total Customs collected was $13,053,000, and the cost of collecting it was $568,000. In 1876-77 there were customs collected $12,556,000, and the cost of collecting that amount was $721,600. In other words it cost $150,000 more in 1876-77 to collect $500,000 less revenue, than it did in 1872-73, and the Government have signally failed to give a satisfactory explanation as to why this $150,000 of increased expenses should have occurred whilst there is a decrease in revenue and less to be done. In 1872-73 the cost of collecting each $100 of excise was $3.80; in 1876-77 the cost of collecting $100 excise was $4.25. Now, I cannot account for it, why in all these matters and in all those years of Reform rule a saving had not been effected, as the Reform motto was "there shall be economy and retrenchment in every branch of the public service." They say they economise now in Public Works, but there was never a time in the history of the Dominion when they could less afford to cut down expenditures in this direction than when men are out of employment, and are demanding work or bread. But instead of promoting the public works to which the country is pledged, when labor is cheap, and when a vast amount of work can be accomplished for a small sum of money, the Government lavishly expend the public money on useless objects, providing salaries and places for their friends and supporters, and starve the public works and labouring classes of the country, driving thousands of workmen into the United States to seek employment, against the interests of the Dominion and the dictates of humanity.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—In Montreal, in 1873-4, the duties collected amounted to $5,639,008, and the cost of collecting them was $95,765. Last year the amount collected at that port was but $3,

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

878,570, while the cost of collecting had increased to $117,989—or it cost $22,224 more to collect two millions less revenue in 1876-7 than it did in 1873-4. The hon. Secretary of State has not accounted for this in a satisfactory way. He told us to-day that the increased expense was due to certain reforms which had been adopted on the advice of some subordinate at Quebec. The trouble appears to be, and has exhibited itself in many ways during this Session, that the Government are not the governing power, but a set of incapables with no policy, and are subordinate to their subordinates, and have no administrative ability of their own to conduct the public affairs of this Dominion. It has only to be made known to them that some servant of the Government, some gentleman engineer, has got some hobby which he wants to ventilate and put in operation, the Government submit, and commit themselves without due consideration, thought, or enquiry to the expenditure, and the public money is consequently wasted in costly experiments to the tune of hundreds of thousands of dollars. This experiment at Montreal is one of them, (although, I confess, a very small one compared to others) by which the cost of collecting the revenue with a larger number of officials and with additional surveillance has increased, whilst the revenue has proportionately decreased. The Government have not attempted to deny this. The Secretary of State has failed to give any reasonable excuse for it—although as I believe I have clearly shown, that the charges on revenue alone, the expenses in collecting revenue, have increased, from the extravagance in this branch of the public service, to about one half a million of dollars. Time will not permit me to go further into showing up the extravagance and blundering of the Government. They are to be found everywhere.

Hon. Gentlemen—Go on.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I could name the $67,000 spent for a few acres of land in the wilderness which cost us about $500 an acre, which was worth only a dollar an acre—The Fort Francis Lock, and the Goderich harbour jobs, the Neebing Hotel, a meer frame set on blocks and boarded, for which $4,500 was paid, though it was not worth much more than $500. The whole system and management of the Pacific Railway, to say nothing of steel rails, is marked by a system of blundering from beginning to end in which hundreds of thousands of dollars have been thrown away by the present Government. The hon. Secretary of State has stated to-day that the depression was due to the inability of other countries to buy our goods. On that I join issue with him, and shall show it was not overproduction but want of production, our workshops being closed by this Government; and he went on to show that the depression here was nothing to compare with the depression which prevailed in other countries, especially the United States. I wish I was better prepared to answer him on these points than I am now, and as these are questions more of trade relations, I did not expect them to arise. But, I shall meet them as best I can. Now, I have in my hands a comparative statement made by Dun, Barlow & Co., of failures in the United States and this Dominion. They show the proportion of failures in the United States in 1876 was one to every sixty then doing business. In Canada during the same period the proportion of failures was one in every thirty-two. In 1877 the proportion of failures in the United States was one to seventy-three and in Canada it was one to twenty-nine. Yet we are told to-day by the Secretary of State that the United States feel the depression worse than we do? consider for a moment, $87,566,000, the amount of bankrupt liabilities since this Government came into power—and then compare the population and wealth of Canada with that of the United States, and our paralyzed state since 1874. My hon. friend (Mr. Scott) told us this afternoon that there were less complaints of hard times now; that we are reviving; that there are signs of improvement. I wish it were so. He cannot make the country believe it. My experience and conversation with business men make me know and feel that it is quite the reverse, that quietude may have followed despair, as the most afflicted cease from groaning when their breath has left them, and there has been no period of this depression in which men have felt themselves in a more critical and embarrassed position than at the present moment. Everywhere we see that this no policy Government has strewn our shores with commercial wrecks, failures, and debts. Consider the number of failures last year, 1,900, yet the Government have nothing to offer us, but say, "trust to Providence and better times, and wait for good luck." But my friend may rest assured that the majority which brought in this Government are anxiously waiting for the good time coming, when they will walk them out. That will be the better times, the trust in Providence and good luck. The Government, in defence of their expenditures since 1873-4, could not have given a better certificate as to the honest administration of the late Ministry than they have done when they said that they had expended no more than their predecessors had done. In this way they unwillingly gave credit to their predecessors for having been economical, wise and prudent, and acknowledged that their public acts should command the confidence of the people. But more than that, we have the evidence of the present Finance Minister, who is yet a better authority, who, when in England, in October, 1875, where he went to borrow money, in his loan prospectus showed that under the policy and administration of his predecessors, there had been an aggregate surplus of $12,800,000. He said:

"The whole debt of the Dominion had been incurred for legitimate objects of public utility."

Was not that an emphatic and deliberate endorsement of the policy of the Macdonald Government? It was the written declaration of a responsible minister that Sir John's conduct of public affairs was just, wise, and economical. The Government or its followers cannot now, with such a document staring them in the face, charge their predecessors with extravagance. It was as the Finance Minister now says "the bright side of the shield," but it had the truth emblazoned on it—a true picture of our country's financial condition, our prosperity and development under the late Administration. But how stand we now? A deficit of three and a half millions in two years, and probably another this year of equal magnitude. The expenditure is overrunning the income notwithstanding the increased taxation of $3,000,000 which the Government has imposed on the people; our debts are maturing; loan follows loan; and in the last Budget Speech of the Finance Minister he states that he favours an income tax—direct taxation. The Hon. Secretary of State has told us that the United States have felt the depression more than Canada. I think I have shown the reverse to be the case. But I have here a list of the exports of the United States for the following years, which shows the increase of home manufactures and increase of markets for their surplus goods under their national policy of protection:

These figures show that notwithstanding the depression and hard times for the last years, the export trade of the United States in manufactured goods has been constantly increasing, whilst the country has accordingly saved in specie by the increased exportation of goods nearly 100 per cent. They have been saving their gold to build up their industries, and in place of it have exported the products of their industries. This is their national policy, and with the same wise measures we would control our markets, and the country would thus be brought back to wealth and prosperity. The above table of exports must silence the Secretary of State as to the depression in the United States.

These exports are products in which the United States now compete in the English home market—even in the stores of the merchants of Birmingham, Sheffield and Manchester. It shows the markets they have secured everywhere for arms woollen and cotton goods, watches, sewing machines, cutlery, locomotives, and other machinery and textile articles. Yet we are told of the depression of the United States and how they are being protected to death! Why, even this year the United States manufactured and sent to Turkey arms and ammunition to the value of $7,000,000. These facts show an increase in mechanical skill, in wages, in labor, in cheap goods, and in the home industry of that country, and that they have found markets everywhere for this increased production, not only in Canada, but in every other country in the world. Figures and facts like these go much further to show that the United States are not in the depressed condition that the hon. gentleman would make it appear to be, than all the arguments that can be adduced to the contrary by the Government and hon. gentlemen opposite. It is no wonder that under the existing indifference of the Government to the wants of this country our people flock to the United States. The United States send into this country $57,312,660 worth of manufactured goods annually, to be com-

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This includes flour and grain.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—On the contrary, those exports have been entirely manufactures of iron, copper, cotton and such articles as England used to supply the world with, and which but for the protective policy of the United States they would have to depend on England for, at the present day. It does not show that the Republic is bankrupt when they pay in goods and keep their money to employ their labouring population, when the exports of that country have increased so largely and their imports have decreased in inverse ratio. As my friend says that the exports include flour and grain—I will give the exact figures from the trade returns in the United States showing in what articles the increase was in 1877 over that of 1875.

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

sumed here, while we send them in return only $25,000,000, so that at the end of the year this country had to pay to the United States, in cash, $25,527,424 as the balance against us and in their favor in those transactions. This money was sent out of the country to build up the manufacturing industries of the United States. We are actually driving our working men out of the country to find employment across the lines, and there we are providing them with employment by purchasing from the United States the products of the labor of the very men we have driven away from us. The whole policy of this Government seems to be to build up the United States at our expense. The hon. gentleman referred to the depression in the lumber trade and pointed to it as the result of stagnation in the United States markets. But we know the Government have allowed the direct trade in tea with China and Japan, and the sugar trade with the West Indies and South America to be destroyed. In that way they have made our lumbermen now largely dependent upon the Americans for a market for their lumber, and have subjected them to a tax of $2.00 on every 1,000 feet sent there, to be re-shipped to other countries. They come and ask Parliament to give some encouragement to establish a trade with Australia, while they allow nearer and better markets to be destroyed. A great deal of the lumber exported from the United States to the West Indies and South America is Canadian lumber, that should, together with many of our farm products, have been exported, direct from the St. Lawrence by our own merchants, if a proper fiscal policy were adopted that would encourage direct trade with the West Indies. Then there are our matchless coal and iron, immense mines of wealth in Nova Scotia, interests from which England's wealth and greatness have sprung, in each of which there are over $12,000,000 of invested capital lying comparatively useless and profitless, in consequence of the unpatriotic and destructive policy of this Government. Yet Nova Scotians are asked to support such a Government—a Government which has destroyed every industry, or else crushed them with taxation, while giving nothing in return.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH — In 1877, that wonderful year of Grit wisdom, economy, and boasted retrenchment, we imported from the West Indies only $61,824 of sugars. But from the United States we imported over $2,000,000, which should have been manufactured in this country, and through it helped the masses of our laboring population in the lumber, fish, coal, iron, shipbuilding and other industries—all this at a loss to the revenue of about $7,000, for the duties on sugars, syrups, and molasses, in our four largest provinces in 1874 were $2,360,000, and in 1877 they were only $2,353,000, whilst the consumer received an inferior article at a higher cost. This shows that we have suffered the Americans to crush out a most important industry, and entirely reverse our trade in sugar. With it has gone our wealth and prosperity. We have handed over the entire manufacture of sugar for this country to the United States. I say to the Secretary of State that our West India and South American lumber trade, which was large enough for all the surplus lumber of this part of the country was destroyed in consequence; and I say it advisedly, that the crippled condition of the lumber trade is largely due to the unpatriotic "do nothing policy" of the Government. In 1874, at the time they took off the discriminating duty on tea coming through the United States into this country, we imported direct from China and Japan $1,224,526 of tea; since then we have imported direct, only $418,606 worth. Last year we imported of tea from the United States, $1,734,658 worth, as compared with imports from China and Japan of only $519,701, showing clearly and indisputably that the result of this Government's taking off the discriminating duty has been not only to destroy our direct trade with China and Japan, but also to throw the entire tea trade into the hands of the United States, thus helping their shipping and ship-building interests, and sacrificing the same industries here. I ask what would be the position of the Finance Minister to-day, if he should go home to England and ask for another loan, which he cannot avoid much longer unless he initiates his favorite policy of direct taxation, as shown in his last Budget speech? Would he be able to go back, as I have already shown he did in October, 1875, with that "brazen shield" and again present the truthful side, to England? Would he be able to tell the capitalists there that we have plenty of money; that he had done what his predecessor had done, rolled up surpluses of over $12,000,000, whilst at the same time he had decreased taxation, that our revenue was large and increasing that our debt had not increased, and that we were meeting our ordinary expenditure out of revenue? Would he be able to tell them that this country was prosperous; that he came there to borrow because money could be got cheaper there than here; that the money of this country was profitably invested in the industries of this country; that he did not come to get money to meet ordinary expenses, but that he came for money to build the Pacific Railway and other public works of this country? No, he would have to go there saying, that we had become, through his mismanagement, a commercial dependency of the United States—that we merely retained our allegiance to Great Britain—that we have less money; that our revenue is less, our taxes are heavier, and that we have deficits piled upon deficits, instead of surpluses. He could not again go home and boast truthfully, as he could in 1875, of the flush and prosperous condition of this country, yet we find the Government creating offices for themselves, their friends and relations, and constructing public works of no utility, which can only remain as monuments of their folly and extravagant expenditure of the money drawn by taxation from the people. They make "big pushes" through the country and falsely accuse and condemn the late Government as having been guilty of gross extravagance in every department of the public service. But the loan prospectus of our Finance Minister in 1875, proves that Mr. Cartwright showed a true picture of the prosperous condition in which he and his colleagues found the country when they came into office and how wisely and how well the public affairs had been administered by their predecessors. If the Finance Minister went home now, he would, if called upon, have to admit that his Government found it better to serve their friends and party, than to serve the country, that it was true as the American Consul had reported to the United States Government "they had nearly all of the Ontario market—and that they could get it all" by crushing out our industries; that in every branch of the public service large sums of money have been improperly expended; that the public funds have been lavishly wasted for power and patronage; that the public works of the country were neglected whilst we were sending our men and money the United States; that he had taxed the people by over $3,000,000 extra duties; that we were piling up deficits every year, and that the deficit on this present year in February was already over $600,000. I have, hon. gentlemen, shown that we have less money, smaller revenue, heavier taxation and larger debt; and this cannot be denied by my friend the Secretary of State, that not only has the public debt been increased by this Government to the sum of $175,000,000, but, with the increased taxation of $3,000,000 a year, we have a deficit in two years of nearly $4,000,000. We have these enormous deficits, and I would like to know—I earnestly desire to know what the Government intend to do under such a condition of affairs. We talk of immigration and we are paying large sums of money to agents in Great Britain and the old countries of Europe, to direct emigrants to this country. Let us look for a moment at what they are costing us now, and in 1872-3. Then, the late Government secured 36,900 European emigrants at the cost of only $287,300. Last year this Government only brought in 6,700 immigrants and the cost, after all reasonable deductions are allowed, has been about $200,000. At the present rate for each immigrant, the 36,900 brought in the last year of the late Government would have cost one million of dollars. The Government would like to count those who crossed the lines from the United States. It would be right enough to do so if the Government would deduct from it the number leaving here for the United States. We have no agent in the United States and spend no money there for immigration purposes. The $300,000 now allotted to immigration, should be dispensed with at present. We find men in our streets out of employment, finding none, clamouring for work or bread and there is nothing for them to do. Yet we keep up these costly agencies in Great Britain to delude emigrants into coming to Canada to beg or starve. When I made a statement to that effect in this House last Session I was told that it was indiscreet, but the hon. gentlemen who condemned me for it then have since come to think as I do, that when there is not sufficient work for our own people, there is no chance for immigrants. We are on the verge of bankruptcy. We have assets, but nothing to correspond with the amount of our debt. Our trade has fallen off $15,000,000 a year since this present Government came into power, and the balance of trade has gone against us in favor of the United States to the extent of $25,000,000 a year. These figures are sufficient to show that there is no room now for immigrants here. If we were able to calculate, or the Government would afford us the information, as to the number of Canadians, the hundreds of thousands that have left here and those who leave here daily to go to the United States, we would find, I think, that the proportion is greater than the number of immigrants who come into this country. I feel that the hon. Secretary of State has not been able to meet the exposition of the affairs of the country which my hon. friend from Toronto has placed before the House, nor has he answered the question which my hon. friend has asked of the Government, how they propose to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure. The hon. Secretary of State having failed to do so, I would again appeal to the hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Brown) to give us some light on this subject. I am sure that he could propound some sound policy of economy. It is well known that this Government dare not adopt any policy without first conferring with him. He has always been an advocate of economy in the country—how much better would it have been if this Government had put that principle into practice. I began to think that the proprietor of the Globe could not be in accord with the policy of the present Government. I hope the hon. Senator will at once tell us what he would propose, instead of leaving the people in ignorance of the policy of the Government, until after the elections are tided over. I do not think the people will be satisfied, or that this House will be satisfied, until they hear what that policy is, and that it is one which will relieve the suffering industries of this country. It is not for the

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

Opposition to propound a policy, though I am sure they have a policy, one which the country will approve of, not a policy of increased taxation, but of readjustment of the tariff, so as to protect and foster our home industries, and to cause the major part of the $50,000,000 of goods we import yearly from the United States, to be manufactured here, keep the gold in the country, and thus furnish labor for our people and the immigrants that will flock into it—such a policy as will ultimately make goods cheaper to the consumer, give a home market to our farmers, and keep the balance of trade in our favor. All this has been done by our neighbors across the lines, the result being cheap goods, light taxation, good wages, and abundant employment. The one-sided freetrade theory of this Government has made things dear, depopulated this country and made it bankrupt, whilst the protective policy on the other side of the line has made every article of general use cheap, and has populated the country and made it wealthy. To show that the United States is a cheaper country than this, it is only necessary to state that we buy mostly from them, pay the duty of 17½ per cent—with expenses of shipment, &c., equal to 20 per cent—and yet the Government would like the people to believe that the United States, a protective country, is a dear country and Canada is a cheap country. Look at Prescott on our side and Ogdensburg on the other side of the St. Lawrence. In the former, trade is depressed and the workshops are quiet. On the other side everything is in full blast, and smuggling is carried on briskly from there—in which the ladies are said to be the worst offenders by far—into Canada. Such facts as these daily before our eyes, make it no wonder that our country is going strongly for protection, not only to and for sugars, coal and iron, and our shipping interests, but for everything that with reasonable cost can be manufactured and produced in this country.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Macpherson) as well as many others on this side, can carry out our policy, and we believe it will soon be their pleasure as well as their duty to do so—a policy that would be acceptable to the people of all the provinces; but we now rightly look to the leader, to the hon. Senator from Lambton, to inform us what he would propose in order to meet the present sad condition of affairs. Is it direct taxation? If he or the Government do not speak, the country will condemn them.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not rise to speak on the question now before the House, but to ask why it is that I, the only member in this House coming from Lambton, should be so frequently alluded to as holding sentiments of which I disapprove? I know the hon. gentleman who has just spoken refers to Mr. Brown as the member for Lambton, but the country generally looks upon me as the only Senator from Lambton, and it is not right that Mr. Brown's brilliant oratory, flashing eloquence and often poetry should be attributed to me.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—It should be Bothwell.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—The subject before the House is one of very considerable importance, and it appears to me to be divided into two heads. First, the hon. Senator from Toronto proposes to call attention to the public expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion which is largely within the control of the Administration; and second, to ask the Government how they propose to restore the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure. I think it a very easy matter to arrive at a conclusion with regard to some of those subjects by reference to the Public Accounts. We had a great deal of discussion on matters of detail, and reference has been made to all sorts of things, so that it is almost impossible to know what hon. gentlemen are trying to get at in their speeches. I find by the blue book that the ordinary expenditure, which is what the hon. Senator from Toronto calls attention to, in 1868-9 amounted to $3,459,485.42. In 1873-4, the last year of the late Government's administration, (I think they are fairly responsible for it), the amount of expenditure was $8,324,076, or more than double the amount expended in 1868-9. I would say that it was a very rapid increase in the ordinary expenditure of the Government that was immediately under their control, and would indicate there was a degree of extravagance and recklessness in the management of the financial affairs of the country that required to be strictly overhauled. In 1876-7, I find by the Public Accounts, the ordinary expenditure amounted to $6,835,078, or $1,488,998 less than the expenditure in 1873-74 when the late Government was in power. If the hon. Senator from Toronto would only consider those figures he would see that the present Government are on the right road. They have exercised economy and retrenchment in the management of public affairs. Besides the expenditures in 1873-74 that I have alluded to, the late Government had votes passed for $2,761,857.68 which I find, by the return which has been published by order of the House of Commons, was spread over a series of years, and in 1876-77 the sum of $538,525.74 was expended by the present Administration for engagements made by their predecessors. The present Government in 1876-77 had to meet the outlay incident to our Indian Treaties; the opening up of the North-West Territories and establishing the Supreme Court, &c., and yet the expenditure was less by $1,488,998, than the expenditure of the late Government during the last year they were in office. When we look at what the hon. Senator from Toronto has called attention to, we have every reason to be satisfied with the present Administration for discharging their duty to the country and acquitting themselves in all respects as an economical and careful administration should do. Coming to the next point—how the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure is to be restored—I would call attention to the expenditure of 1875-76. It amounted to $24,488,372.11, while the income was $22,587,587.05, showing a nominal deficit of $1,900,785.06. That, however, included the amount set aside for the sinking fund, which deducted would leave $1,077,831.64 as the actual deficit of that year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That is putting the Sinking Fund into a Suspense Account.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—That was the first deficit this Government had.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Why deduct it?

Hon. Mr. HOPE—The money is there and it belongs to the country. In 1876-7 the expenditure was $23,519,301.77, and the income $22,059,074.11, leaving a nominal deficit of $1,460,227.66. From this deduct the amount paid into the Sinking Fund, and it leaves an actual deficit of only $631,654.07, making the total deficit for the two years, $1,709,485.71. That was the actual deficit on the 30th of June last. It occurred during two years of unexampled depression of trade; I may say unexampled in the history of Canada, and yet, with all this, and looking at the heritage of pecuniary engagements this Government got from their predecessors, the expenditure of even 1872-3 exceeded that of 1876-7 by $227,017, and that, too, in the expenditure largely within the control of the Administration. The estimated expenditure for 1877-8, is $23,378,228.56, and the estimated revenue for the same period I take as $22,059,274.11, the same as the preceding year. But in the seven months ending the tenth of February last, the revenue shows an increase over last year, according to the statement of the Finance Minister in his able and excellent Budget speech of this Session, of about $1,000,000. I would add to that, for the remaining five months, say even one-half of the same ratio of increase, which would amount to $357,142, making $1,357,142 to be added to the estimated income, based on the receipts of the preceding year, and making in all $23,416,416.11. This would give an actual surplus of $38,187.55, and that too after providing for the Sinking Fund.

Hon. Mr. READ—That is, if you get it.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Of course it is an estimate, but so far as the question of the hon. Senator from Toronto is concerned, I think I have answered it satisfactorily. I take my figures from the Blue Book; you have it there just as I give it. The estimated revenue for 1878-9 is $23,850,000; the estimated expenditure, $23,440,051; leaving a surplus of $409,949. Here is a complete answer to those who are anxious to know how the equilibrium between income and expenditure is to be restored. I have no difficulty in pointing out, not only how the equilibrium can be restored, but how it can be kept and maintained.

Hon. Mr. Hope.

These are the figures, and if the country and the Parliament sustain the present Administration for the next five years, I venture to say there will be no deficit to complain of.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Which they will not do.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Which they will do.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The hon. Secretary of State is right—he said he would rely upon hope to restore the equilibrium.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Seven months of it is fruition.

Hon. Mr. HOPE.—When the present Government came into power there were works in progress, or authority taken to construct them, to the amount of $28,447,18.90. Just look at the legacy the present Government were left by the legislation and acts of the late Government. I think without travelling over the whole record of details in the Blue Book, but just looking at the figures admirably arranged in tabular form in the Blue Book of Public Accounts, I think the hon. Senator from Toronto must be convinced that a satisfactory answer has been made to the question he has put to the House.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—If the hon. gentleman had a seat on the treasury benches it would be different.

Hon. Mr. READ—The hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House referred to the heritage left by the late Government. When we look back upon that heritage, I say we should be proud of it. The present Government inherited a large surplus which they found in the banks to their credit. What has become of that heritage? They found the nice little sum of $9,146,500, in the banks when they came into power, and how does it stand to-day, according to the last returns. The amount is now only $5,210,749.76, a difference of nearly four millions that has been spent in addition to the debt they have rolled up. They found the public debt of this country $130,778,698, and to-day it stands at $174,675,000 or a difference of $43,897,000; besides the $4,000,000 they have spent out of the surplus left them. What has the country got for that expenditure and the increased taxation? Twice the taxes have been increased: once to increase the revenue by $3,000,000 and another time to raise $500,000 more. I do not think that result has been obtained. Where has that money gone? We know where $10,000,000 went, and we are aware that money has been spent, many of us think not well spent. The hon. Secretary of State has attempted to show that the estimates are what the late Government should be judged by. Now, we know that the estimates are generally more liberal than the expenditure. It has been the case with the estimates of the present Government. I find this year over one million of dollars charged to capital account of the Intercolonial Railway. That is a very large sum in view of the policy of the Government as enunciated by Mr. Cartwright in his Budget Speech in 1875. He said: "I may as well state that the Government have carried out, as they declared they would have last Session, the policy of charging to income account everything that properly belongs to the maintenance of these railways." What is this million of dollars charged for? I will read the items, and hon. gentlemen can judge for themselves how many of them should be charged to capital account:

Although the Government that preceded this did estimate liberally they had good reason to do so. This Government on the contrary starves a'l the public works of the country. Mr. Cartwright admitted in 1874 over his own name in London, that there was a surplus left him of $10,000,000. Taking all things into consideration I think this Government have been reckless in the extreme, but the worst form of that recklessness has been in starving the public works of the country and feeding their friends.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—The debate has thus far been on the expenditures of the Dominion. I wish to call the attention of the House to expenditures which have not been made, but which, I contend, should have been made. I find the following in the Toronto Mail of to-day:

"WINNIPEG, Man., March 20.—A Free Press special says Battleford is greatly excited over a report brought in from Red Deer River by the Mounted Police, to the effect that Sitting Bull had formed a confederation of Sioux and Blackfeet, and had made overtures to the Crees; and when the leaves came out there was to be a great gathering of Indians at the confluence of the Red Deer and Bow rivers, whence Sitting Bull proposed to raid the settlements. This information was obtained from a friendly Cree, who overheard the council which had been called to consider Sitting Bull's proposition. Yesterday afternoon the Crees held a meeting in the Registry office, which was attended by Lieutenant-Governor Laird, Colonel Richardson Scott, and Mr. Forget. Speeches were made, and the Indians declared unswerving loyalty to the Queen. This morning a man arrived from Cypress Hills, six days out. He reports that a camp of seven hundred lodges of Sioux is pitched at the Sandy Hills, 65 miles from Fort Walsh, which is daily augmented by new arrivals. Four wagon-loads of cartridges arrived at the camp the day he passed. The half-breeds are all leaving Cypress Hills, and moving toward Carleton. He says it is reported that Nez Perces, Little Blanket, Little Dog, and the Blackfeet Indians have all formed a treaty with Sitting Bull, and that the Blackfeet are on Belly River in force. It is not known what these movements portend, but it is expected an attack is to be made on Cypress Hills and Fort MacLeod. Big Bear, a Cree chief, says it is useless for the Government to try to govern the Indians as long as they put the Indians in gaol for killing buffalo."

" [By Telegraph from our own Correspondent.]

" WINNIPEG, March 20.—There is great excitement here at the news from the West. The trouble, it is believed, has arisen from the Government sending out carpet-baggers. Many Indians and half-breeds regard their legislation with suspicion. Owing to the parsimony of the Government the volunteers of Manitoba are not able to drill in winter for want of drill sheds, they are consequently unprepared for service in case of urgency. It is feared that owing to nothing being done to satisfy justice in this superintendency, notwithstanding the abundant evidence of the way the Indians, as well as the Government have been defrauded, the Indians of Manitoba may, in case of trouble, be tempted to avenge the wrongs practised on them during the last four years "

If there is a place in the Dominion where a military force is more necessary than another, it is Manitoba, because we are without protection. We had the Dawson Road, by which troops could be sent to aid us in case of danger, but at present the only means of reaching the North-West is through the United States. If the necessity should arise to send troops to Manitoba, it is possible we would be refused permission to send them through the territory of our neighbors, and it seems to me it would be most humiliating to us to have to admit that we could not pass from one part of the Dominion to another through our own country. We should not have to beg permission from our neighbors to get from one part of Canada to another. A certain amount of money has been saved by closing the Dawson Road, but I do not think it wise economy. The time has not arrived when the military post should have disappeared from Manitoba. Perhaps, it was thought some money should be expended in the North-West. I find by consulting the Blue Book that there is a Government at Battleford, with a Lieut.-Governor and high-priced officials, who have nothing to do, and write some correspondence merely to keep their consciences easy. I do not know what they are there for, unless it is to look after the grasshoppers. It is a long way from Winnipeg to Battleford, yet you will not find a settlement between those two places, except at St. Laurent and Lac La Biche, which are not settlements for the cultivation of the soil, but for hunting the buffalo. I think the organization of that Government in the North-West was premature. Fort Garry was more central than Battleford. It is the starting point for any part of the North-West. For many years to come Winnipeg will be the actual capital of the North-West, rather than any other point the Government may choose. I would call the attention of the Government to a fact which I mentioned last year, when the bill to complete the organization of the North-West Government was before the House. I told them they should not neglect the native population as they had done. I pointed out that one, at least, of the five members of the North-West Government should be a half-breed. It was my opinion at that time, and is still, that a native of the country could render the very best services to the country as a stipendiary magistrate. I know the excuse is offered that there are not educated men among them to fill the position, but I contend that men of upright character, who are well qualified to perform any such services can be found among the Hudson Bay Company's employees. I do not want to be considered an alarmist; indeed, I am not afraid of the rumored trouble with the Indians. I would not like to have a cry go abroad which would interfere with the rapidly-increasing emigration to Manitoba. I believe the Government have done their best to satisfy the Indians, but they should do something to give satisfaction to those who exercise an influence over them. The course pursued by the Government has been such that we cannot expect the half-breeds and other natives of the country to exert themselves to aid the Government in a time of emergency. They will let matters take their course, and the sufferers will not be the Government but the people of the Dominion. I think it would have been but right to have appointed a native of the country to the North-West Council, and a similar course should have been pursued in appointing stipendiary magistrates. It is absolutely necessary that something should be done to prove to the native population they are not to be treated as mere "hewers of wood and drawers of water." They are as intelligent as any people in the Dominion, and I do not see why it is that up to the present time not a position has been found for any of them. Not even a messenger has been taken from among them in any of the public offices in the North-West. I thought it my duty to call the attention of the Government to the condition of affairs in the North-West. Everyone will understand the importance of quieting the uneasiness which prevails in that country. Indeed, the consequences may be dreadful, unless the Government give their serious attention to this important matter.

Hon. Mr. BROWN moved the adjournment of the debate.

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY ROUTE.

MOTION TO PRINT EVIDENCE.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD moved,

“That the evidence taken from time to time before the Select Committee appointed to continue the investigation and to inquire into all the questions relating to the purchase of the property at Fort William for a terminus to the Canadian Pacific Railway, be printed for the use of the members of this House, but that no copies thereof be delivered, except to the members of the committee until further order.”

The motion was agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:20 p. m.

THE CAUGHNAWAGA RAILWAY.

MOTION WITHDRAWN.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU asked leave to withdraw the following motion:—

“That the following petitions, namely, of the Rev. James Fulton, Master of Arts, and Rural Dean, and others, of Franklin, in the County of Huntington; of the Rev. J. Dequoy, Priest, Curé of the Parish of Saint Michel Archange; and of the Rev. J. E. Perreault, Priest, and others, of the Parish of Saint Remi, in the County of Napierville; of Jean Baptiste Jodoin, and others, of the
Hon. Mr. Girard.

“Parish of Saint Urbain; of the Reverend J. C. G. Godin, Priest, Curé of the Parish of Saint Philoméne; of J. Dupuis, of the Parish of Chateauguay, in the County of Chateauguay; and of the Rev. O. Blanchard, Priest, Curé, and others, of the Parish of Saint Isidore, in the County of Laprairie, be referred to a Select Committee, to consist of the Honorable Messrs. Pelletier, Ferrier, McLellan (Londerry), Wark, Leonard, Dickson, Hope, Alexander, Bell-rose, Trudel and the mover, who are to enquire into the subject of which the Petitioners complain, with power to send for persons, papers, and records, to report from time to time to the House, and to examine witnesses on oath, seeing that it is desirable to have recourse to that proceeding.”

Hon. Mr. GIRARD asked for explanations.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU said his reason for asking leave to withdraw the motion was that the difficulty had been settled to the satisfaction of all parties interested. Mr. Hickson, the Manager of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, had done all that could at present be accomplished to redress the grievances complained of, and had given his promise that the demands of the petitioners should be complied with. Under the circumstances, the petitioners having obtained what they desired, there was no necessity to press the motion.

The motion was withdrawn.

PURCHASE OF AMERICAN SILVER COIN.

MOTION FOR A RETURN.

Hon Mr. WILMOT moved,

“That an humble address be presented to His Excellency, the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House a detailed statement of all expenses, commissions and disbursements made by Government for the purchase of American Silver coin since the 1st day of July, 1867, and to whom paid; the amount of Debentures issued for such purpose, and at what rate of interest, and under what statute or authority they were issued, what amount was paid out of current revenue, what amount of Debentures have been paid, and what amount are still outstanding, also, the amount of fractional currency issued, and the amount still outstanding.”

The motion was agreed to.

CONTAGIOUS DISEASES OF CATTLE.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE inquired,

“With reference to the Cattle Diseases Bill, now or lately under consideration in the Imperial Parliament, whether any, and if any, what action has been taken to guard the interests of the Dominion; also, whether the Order in Council prohibiting the importation of European Cattle has been suspended?”

He said:—I have become aware, through the English mail, of the fact, that a Bill to prevent the spread of contagious diseases among cattle, has been introduced in the House of Lords and has made some progress before them. One of its clauses renders it imperative that all foreign cattle—our healthy Canadian cattle as well as those from the parts of Europe where contagious diseases prevail—shall be slaughtered at the port of landing in the United Kingdom. This Act, if applied to Canadian stock, would almost annihilate the promising trade which has sprung up between the Dominion and the ports of Great Britain in live cattle. I felt it incumbent upon me, as one interested in this trade, to ascertain as far as possible whether any steps have been taken to guard the interests of Canada from injury by this measure. By reference to the columns of English papers, I have reason to believe that up to the 20th of February last, and I see by a writer in the Montreal Herald of the 19th instant, up to the 21st of February, no change had been made in the clause to which I have referred. The writer states that up to that date the Bill contained no exemption for Canadian cattle from the operation of that stringent clause alluded to. Under these circumstances I make the enquiry of which I have given notice.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I am sure that every hon. member in this House will be as grateful as myself to the hon. Senator for having brought up this important matter. Since the early part of this month, great uneasiness has prevailed through the whole Dominion, on account of the measure presented by His Grace the Duke of Richmond, in the Imperial

Hon. Mr. Haythorne.

Parliament—a Bill intituled: “An Act for making better provision respecting contagious and infectious diseases of cattle and other animals.” This Bill, inasmuch as it concerns Canada, is of the greatest importance for our cattle trade with England, and if passed would nearly amount to prohibition. The principal clause of the Bill which effects Canadian interests, provides that foreign animals are to be landed only at a part of a port defined for that purpose by Order-in-Council, to be called a Foreign Animals’ Wharf. They are to be landed in such a manner, at such times and subject to such supervision and control as the Minister of Customs may from time to time direct, and they are not to be removed alive from the wharf. These are very strict regulations indeed. The quarantine regulations to be applied to animals for dairy or breeding purposes, or for exhibition, are also of such a strict nature, that they can hardly be complied with. The Government have fully understood the importance of the matter, as one which concerns more directly our export trade, and have lost no time in making most urgent representations to the Imperial Government, to modify the Bill so far as it concerns Canada. We know that several large companies are extensively engaged in exporting cattle and horses to the United Kingdom. We know they have incurred heavy expense to meet the requirements of a rapidly increasing trade in the exportation of live cattle, and meat. It has now reached such proportions that last year the Dominion Line of Steamers carried 3,513 oxen, 8,000 sheep, 1,215 swine, and 213 horses to Great Britain. We have good reason to believe that this year that trade will be double what it was in 1877. As early as December last, complaints were made to the Government that the exportation of live stock from Canada to the United Kingdom was subject to very severe regulations. The complaint was made that, upon landing the cattle in England from the steamers, and after their confinement in the vessels during their passage across the ocean, they were kept too long at the wharf before they could be examined by a veterinary surgeon. We made representations to the Imperial Government by an Order-in-Council, which was as follows:—

“ Copy of a Report of a Committee of the “ Honorable the Privy Council, approved
“ by His Excellency the Governor-General
“ in Council, on the 24th December, “ 1877 :—

“ On a report dated 22nd December, 1877,
“ from the hon. the Minister of Agriculture,
“ stating that representations have been made “ to him by parties extensively engaged in the “ exportation of live stock from the Dominion
“ to the United Kingdom, to the effect that “ upon the landing of cattle from the steamers “ after their close confinement during the “ whole of the passage across the Atlantic,
“ they are penned up in the dockyards for 12
“ or 15 hours, and thus kept standing on slip“ pery, hard flag-stones, pending an examina“ tion by a veterinary surgeon and Government “ inspector, and he represents that from this “ cause a very great hardship is imposed upon
“ the owners of cattle, and that the commercial “ value of the animals is seriously deteriorated.
“ That there would seem to be no reason “ why cattle from Canada, where no disease “ exists, should not be placed in as favorable “ circumstances as cattle landed from ports of “ the United Kingdom, or, if this cannot be “ allowed, that at least suitable quarantine “ fields should be provided, in order to prevent “ the infliction of unnecessary cruelty to the “ animals.
“ The Minister recommends that a copy of “ this minute be transmitted to the Imperial “ Authorities with a request that action be “ taken in the sense herein recommended.
“ The Committee concur in the foregoing “ recommendation, and submit the same for “ Your Excellency's approval.
“ Certified,

“ W. A. HIMSWORTH,
“ C. P. C.”

A copy of that order in Council was promptly sent to the Imperial authorities. Lately, when the alarm was created in Canada by the introduction of the Duke of Richmond's Cattle Bill, due representations were again made to the Imperial Government, setting forth how disastrously that measure would affect Canada, unless modified. The first information we received was the following telegram from Sir John Rose :—

“ LONDON, March 5th, 1878.

“ New Bill requires slaughter all live stock
“ port arrival. Important. Cable any objections “ Colonial Office immediately. Discussion Lords
“ to-night. Telegraph views privately.

(Signed) JOHN ROSE.”

Immediately on receipt of this cable, the Premier sent the following reply to Sir John Rose :—

“ OTTAWA, 5th March, '78.

“ Make every effort to procure exemption of “ Canadian cattle. No disease of any kind
“ Hon. Mr. Pelletier.

“ here. Let provision be made, if necessary for “ act to apply when disease appears.

(Signed) A. MACKENZIE.”

The same day His Excellency the Governor-General, at our request, kindly telegraphed to the Colonial Office :—

“ My Government represent that slaughter “ of cattle on arrival at port, as required by “ Bill under consideration, will be fatal to Can“ adian trade, and urge that Canadian cattle “ should, in the absence of all disease in Cana“ da, be admitted as at present.”

On the 11th instant, thinking it was advisable to make more pressing representations on the matter, the following Order-in-Council was passed, and a copy promptly forwarded to the Imperial Government with our best recommendations :—

“ Copy of a Report of a Committee of the “ Honorable the Privy Council, approved
“ by His Excellency the Governor-General
“ on the 11th March, 1878 :—

“ The Committee of Council have had before “ them a memorandum dated 8th March, 1878,
“ from the Hon. the Minister of Agriculture “ representing that alarm has been created “ amongst persons interested in the cattle trade “ with England, at the announcement that the “ Bill introduced by His Grace the Duke of “ Richmond in the British Parliament, if ap“ plied to Canada, will, if it become law, inter“ fere materially with the Canadian trade as “ now carried on, inasmuch as it would neces“ sitate the slaughtering of the animals on their “ landing at the port of debarkation, thereby “ preventing their owners from seeking the “ best possible disposal of their stock.

“ That the precautions taken by Canada, the “ result of which has been to keep the cattle “ of the country in a very healthy condition, at “ no small inconvenience and expense to “ owners and importers, would seem a sufficient “ guarantee, taken together with the inspection “ of the cattle on their arrival, for securing to “ Canada the advantages heretofore enjoyed,
“ and recommending that the Imperial author“ ities should be informed that the Dominion “ Government has taken the greatest possible “ pains to prevent any contagious diseases “ reaching Canadian cattle.

“ That there has been to the present moment “ no indication of disease of any kind amongst “ cattle in the Dominion.

“ That a rigid quarantine has been maintained “ prohibiting the importation of cattle from “ Europe where disease prevails, and that Can“ ada should be exempted from the application of “ any law or regulation requiring the immediate “ slaughtering of cattle on their debarkation in “ England.

“ The Committee concur in the foregoing re“ commendation and submit the same for Your “ Excellency's approval.

“ Certified,

“ W. A. HIMSWORTH,
“ C. P. C.”

On the 13th of March, the Hon. Premier received this encouraging telegram from Sir John Rose :—

“ Government refer Bill to Select Committee to examine Canada case. Am getting necessary information (for) their consideration next week.”

On the 13th of the present month a telegram from the Colonial Office to His Excellency the Governor-General confirmed the information that the Bill had been referred to a select committee, and our objections had been pressed upon the Privy Council. On the 16th inst. the Premier telegraphed to Sir John Rose to get more information from Mr. Dyke, our agent at Liverpool, who knows all about our trade, and bring him before the Committee. On the 18th inst., the Premier received this reply :

“ All necessary witnesses summoned. Committee to-day.

“(Signed) JOHN ROSE.”

Since that we have had no further tidings, but we have every reason to believe the Committee will favorably entertain our representations. No person could be more thoroughly qualified to watch the interests of Canada than Sir John Rose. I am sure the House will admit that every possible means has been adopted by the Government to have the Bill modified, and I believe that our representations will be most effectual in securing an amendment such as we desire. As to the last part of the enquiry of the hon. gentleman, I may state that this Order-in-Council has not yet been suspended, but in view of the representations of many persons interested in that trade, and of the fact that no contagious diseases exist in England or other countries at present, we think the prohibition need no further be maintained. But, in order not to expose our cattle in Canada to disease I telegraphed as follows, on the 16th instant, to Professor Simonds, President of the Royal Veterinary College, of London :—

“ Is there danger (of) rinderpest in removing prohibition of cattle from entering Canada? Please cable opinion.”

He telegraphed the following reply :—

“ No danger of rinderpest from England. Great Britain free.”

I think with those precautions we should no longer maintain that prohibition, and I may inform the hon. gentleman it is the intention of the Government to remove it as soon as possible if we receive no news to justify us in continuing it. In the meantime we will take good care to maintain the severe quarantine hitherto enforced with respect to the importation of foreign cattle. I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me that the Government have given every attention to this subject.

Hon. Mr. Pelletier.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—I would ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture if there is any provision to prohibit the importation of diseased cattle into Manitoba and the North-West? Every year large numbers of Texas cattle are brought into that country, from some of the Western States. While it cheapens the price of beef, it is well known that those Texas cattle often carry with them contagious diseases. In Minnesota and other States of the neighboring Union, there are very stringent regulations against the importations of such cattle at certain seasons, and heavy penalties are imposed for any violations of those rules. During the late Session of the Manitoba Legislature, a Bill was passed to subject cattle brought into the Province, to quarantine. It was understood the Legislature could pass no act interfering with trade and commerce, so that the measure adopted only relates to cattle that are found to be diseased when they are inside the Province. There is a provision in the Act that the herd shall be quarantined for a while, and the owner shall not have possession of them until after it is established by a veterinary surgeon that the disease has disappeared from the herd. But we have no power to prohibit the importation of diseased cattle into the Province. We have a good breed of cattle, and it would be difficult to supply their place if they were swept away by some disease. They were introduced into that country by the Hudson Bay Co., and we know that every step they took in the interest of the Red River country was for the best. They imported their stock from Scotland, and the cattle in that part of the world, as every one knows, are of the best breeds. Stringent regulations should be adopted to protect us from the possibility of a cattle plague being brought into our province. I would ask the hon. Minister in what way we could guard our interests under existing circumstances.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—No case of contagious disease among the cattle has been known of in Manitoba up to now. The best answer to the hon. Senator is that his province is more protected than any other part of Canada. No cattle can reach it except through the United States. I do not believe anyone would venture to take cattle in by way of the Dawson Route, and under the laws of the Western States, none can pass that way from the Southern States before the 1st of November, after the frost sets in, when there is no danger to be apprehended from disease. The Western States have protected themselves by their own internal laws, and all the cattle that come from the Western States are as sound as ours, so that no disease need be feared in Manitoba. As long as there is no direct road from this part of the Dominion to Manitoba, there certainly can be no necessity for any more protection than exists now.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—These cattle I speak of come from the vicinity of the North-West Territory, and come to Manitoba by way of the North-West. They arrive generally in the month of June or July, and remain there during the summer season, which is the very time when there is danger of disease being communicated. I merely wish to draw the attention of the Government to a danger which exists, in order that they may take steps to protect the interests of Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The information given to the House by the hon. Minister of Agriculture is, I am sure, interesting to us all, and seems to come very apropos, most of it being recent, and one telegram being dated yesterday. I think I may congratulate the hon. Senator from Prince Edward Island on the curiosity which he has evinced so opportunely, and the Minister of Agriculture, on the information which he is able to furnish the House in response to his question.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—The information we have just heard from the hon. Minister of Agriculture shows the influence which the agricultural interest in England is beginning to have on the legislation of the country. It shows they are alive to the necessity of protecting home industries.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The hon. Senator from Kingston seems to insinuate that I instigated this inquiry.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I insinuated nothing.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—If that is his impression, I may say that no word of the kind passed between the hon. Senator from Prince Edward Island and myself.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It is a very happy coincidence.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It is very strange that a construction should be placed upon the remark which was not intended by the leader of the Opposition.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

The order of the day having been called for resuming the debate on Mr. Macpherson's notice,

“That he will call attention to the public expenditure of the Dominion, specially that portion of it which is largely within the control of the Administration, and will inquire of the Government how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure.”

Hon. Mr. BROWN said:—I rise to make a few observations on the subject that has been brought under our notice by the hon. Senator opposite, (Mr. Macpherson), and which was under discussion when we adjourned last night. But, before proceeding to do so, I trust the Senate will bear with me for a moment while I say a few words in regard to the form in which this matter has been presented to us by the hon. Senator, and the peculiar character of the debate which has arisen from it. The notice given by the hon. gentleman was of a definite question to be put to the Secretary of State. Now, as the rules of the Senate do not debar discussion on putting a question to the Government, of which notice has been formally given, I take no exception to discussion having been raised now. I think our rules should be amended on this point, but this is not the time to consider that. But what I do desire to call the special attention of the Senate to is the inconvenient and unjust use that has been made of this laxity of order on the present occasion. Under cover of this notice of a question that might have been put and answered in two minutes, the hon. gentleman rises to discharge a furious phillippic against the Administration; rambles over the entire field of party politics; drags in every conceivable and inconceivable matter that he supposes will serve his purpose of detraction; indulges in errors and mis-statements without end; and fulminates wild charges of waste and extravagance that have been again and again shown to be utterly groundless. Nay, the hon. gentleman ventured to go still further than this—he ventured to insinuate, without name, place, or date being given, what he must have known amounted to a charge of fraud on the part of the Administration—

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—In what instance did I do that?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman did it more than once. When referring to the deficits on the receipts and expenditures of 1877, he tried to cast abroad the insinuation that the Public Accounts were not truly made up or the deficit would have been greater. He said that he had been told by somebody or other that accounts were purposely kept back, so as to force a balance and lessen the deficit of the year. He deplored the unreliability of committees of the House of Commons, and hinted at a Royal Commission as the only mode of getting at the facts. And this outrageous insinuation he accompanied with the intimation that he could not vouch for the truth of the story he had been uttering, and would not be held responsible for it. In all my knowledge of parliamentary discussion I have never known so grave a charge preferred against the Government of the day, without fact or probability to sustain it, and with so mean a loophole of escape from responsibility coolly attached to it. And the hon. gentleman in his statement was as reckless of the interests of his country as he was unjust to the Government. I am confident I am within bounds when I say that a hundred charges of greater or less magnitude were discharged or insinuated by the hon. gentleman against the

Hon. Mr. Brown.

Administration—one or two of them probably based on acts as to which difference of opinion might honestly exist, but the great mass of them utterly baseless. For example, only think of the hon. gentleman bitterly assailing the Administration because, as he alleged, every immigrant who arrived in 1875-6 cost the country, $26.65, when in fact, it was but $8.85 that year, and $4.08 in 1876-7.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—My statement was strictly correct and I shall prove it.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman may strive to escape by a play upon words—by pleading that he only meant the immigrants arriving at Quebec—but this plea cannot be entertained. He well knew that 25,633 immigrants arrived at all points in the Dominion in 1875-6, and what excuse can he pretend for placing the whole cost of this large number on the 7,063 of them who arrived via Quebec, and representing the average cost per capita thus obtained as the average of the whole number? I heard distinctly what the hon. gentleman said—we all heard it—and I defy him to find one person who heard him, or one person who has read his pamphlet, who did not understand his charge to be that every immigrant coming into the country in 1875-6 had taken $26.65 from the public chest. Now, then, I ask the Senate, if it is reasonable, if it is just, if it is for the public benefit, that the members of the Government for the time being in this House, and indeed the whole of us—for we are all interested in repelling unjust accusations against the Government of our country—should be expected to rise at the moment and refute on the spot such a precious conglomeration as this, at the risk of piling blunder upon blunders and confusing the public mind? We have been discussing this matter for a number of days—and with so boundless a field to range over, we may go on discussing for a month without getting nearer a solution than we are to-day. I can understand how the discussion of two, or even three, points of public policy may be conducted together profitably in this Chamber—but I cannot, I confess, comprehend how a hundred points of detail that have never before been discussed here, either openly or in committee, can be usefully considered together in open debate across the floor. The British Parliamentary system wisely provides that the control of the details of money bills—that the power which makes and unmakes ministries—shall rest with the popular branch of the Legislature. It does not admit of two Chambers equally powerful and possibly discordant with each other. Two separate bodies cannot speak the well understood wishes of the people, unless they happen to be in harmony. The power of the purse-strings is, therefore, most wisely lodged with the representatives of the people. We are not elected by popular vote; we are appointed by the Crown on the nomination of the Dominion Government of the day; we are appointed for life; we cannot be removed except for cause; our numbers cannot be increased except with our consent;—practically we are directly responsible for our acts as legislators to our own consciences only. I ask the Senate, then, if this Chamber is a fitting theatre for such wholesale railing discussions as the present? The Lower House has all the appliances for rigid examination into the details of money expenditures—but we have not. Every shilling of public expenditure must be authorized before the money is paid—and for criticising the estimates closely and wisely the Commons have ample facilities that we do not possess. The Minister of Finance sits in the Lower House; he is practically conversant with every transaction of the year; he opens the Budget; he frames and proposes all changes of tariff or taxation; he discloses the financial policy of the Government; and he stands prepared to defend at any moment every feature of that policy. Then come the Committees of Ways and Means and Supply, in which the estimates of the year and all proposals of revenue changes are overhauled critically and severely for many days in succession, and questions are put and answered on the moment, on every doubtful point, with a degree of freedom and plain speech that could hardly be surpassed. And then, again, at the opening of the following Session the Public Accounts Committee is hard at work comparing the sums granted with the sums spent, narrowly criticizing every item, and gathering full information on every point for the coming debate on the Supply Bill. I ask the Senate if it is convenient that we should set up here rival

Finance Ministers and Finance Committees to control the action of the popular branch on such matters? I ask if it is not wandering beyond our province? If it will add either to the usefulness or the dignity of this House? If I am rightly informed, this reckless raid into the territory of our neighbours is the first thing of the kind that has happened for many years; and I respectfully submit for the consideration of the Senate whether it ought not to be the last. With these remarks I return to the bill of complaint of the hon. gentleman opposite. The hon. gentleman is full of complaints and lamentations. He don't like the present Ministry; he has no faith in Committees of the Commons; he has no faith in the Public Accounts; he has no faith in anybody or anything. The whole world is agee with him. Why, he actually started his speech the other evening with a wail of lamentation that his speeches and pamphlets had not been answered by any one—had not been touched. Now, though I was not fortunate enough to be present last Session when the hon. gentleman began his attack, I read the speeches of my hon. friend the Secretary of State (Mr. Scott) and those of other able members of this House in reply to the hon. gentleman, and I confess it appeared to me that nothing could be more effective or convincing than those replies. As to his pamphlets, I do think that if the brilliant and withering speeches of Mr. Cartwright and Mr. Mackenzie in the West did not satisfy him, the hon. gentleman must indeed be hard to please; but had any one vestige of him been left after passing through their hands it must certainly have disappeared under the scathing comments of the press. In my own humble way, I was prepared to say a word when the hon. gentleman made his first motion in the early part of this Session; but when it came on the hon. gentleman so modified his tone, he was so mild of speech, so careful in making charges, so laudatory of the Premier and the Finance Minister and everybody else—the whole poison of the thing had so completely oozed out of it—that there was very little left to reply to. But spite of all this, here is the hon. gentleman again with all his fallacies and his oft-repeated charges fresh as ever. True, there is a change. Last Session the hon. gentleman came to us in the garb of the righteous man grieved to the heart at the wickedness of the world around him ; now he comes to us as the avowed partizan, satisfied with nothing, distorting everything, and calling down fire to consume the men who govern the land. And I am free to confess that the hon. gentleman had special cause for this extreme indignation in 1876 that he did not possess in 1877. Not only have the retrenchments of 1875-6 been steadily continued in 1876-7, and large reductions of expenditure effected, but the revenue begins to take an upward turn and the national balance-sheet is much less unsatisfactory than under all the circumstances was fairly to have been anticipated. It is so hard to have all one's prophecies and prognostications ruthlessly knocked on the head. Who can wonder that the hon. gentleman is cross, querulous, and wild in his statements? He takes in one hand a list of the expenditures of 1875-6, and in the other a list of those of 1876-7 ; and he reads aloud the several items in each and compares them together. Does he come to an item in which the disbursements of the latter year exceed by a few dollars those of the former year, he exclaims, Oh, such wickedness ! Ruin and desolation ! Has he to confess a saving of say $50,000 on the next item, at once he becomes philosophical. " Ah ! reductions are not always sound economy." " Penny wise and pound foolish." He " don't value such a reduction at much"—but " if he did, who is entitled to the credit of it ?" Why who but the hon. senator himself—" I, said the sparrow, with my little arrow I killed Cock Robin !" Is a saving of half a million disclosed on a single item, he is horrified. What, half a million in one year ! Scandalous ! Disgraceful ! He cares not who does it or how it is done, such a reduction is utterly unjustifiable ! In short, nothing will please the hon. senator, and I shall not try to please him ; but if the Senate will give me its attention for a very brief space, I think it will not be very difficult to show the utter groundlessness of the hon. gentleman's got-up case against the present Government. One great fallacy—shall I call it a fallacy or a wicked misrepresentation ?—underlies all the financial calculations and accusations of the hon. gentleman. His entire fabric rests on the pretence that Sir John A. Macdonald's Government was responsible for the expenditure of the country only up to the 30th June, 1873, and that the present Government are responsible from that date. But what are the facts? Why that Sir John Macdonald's Government was in office until November, 1873,—that in April, 1873, his Government passed and carried the Supply Bill for the entire financial year commencing 1st July, 1873, and ending on 30th June, 1874—that the Mackenzie Government took office late in that year, and had no choice but to carry out the programme framed by their predecessors and adopted by Parliament ; and that before the elections were over and Parliament could be called again the financial year was near its close. The pretence that the present Government is responsible for the expenditure of 1873-74 is so preposterous and mendacious that it is amazing any sane person could be found to set it up for a moment. Why, then, is the hon. gentleman so daring as to do this, and to cling to it, and re-assert it, in defiance of common sense? Why, simply because the Legislative and Executive action in 1873-4 caused a complete revolution in the financial affairs of the Dominion. The Macdonald Government in that year capped the climax of its reckless administration, and the country has ever since been weighed down by the pressure of the enormous responsibilities it left as a legacy to its successors. The Macdonald Government was formed in 1867, and controlled the public finances until the 30th June, 1874 ; let us see then how the annual public expenditure increased in their hands. They were :—

In 1867-8 .....	$13,486,092
In 1868-9 .....	14,038,084
In 1869-70 .....	14,315,509
In 1870-1 .....	15,623,081
In 1871-2 .....	17,589,468
In 1872-3 .....	19,174,647
In 1873-4 .....	23,316,316

It will thus be seen, that in the four years from 1867-8 to 1870-1, the annual expenditure rose two millions of dollars ; that in the succeeding two years it rose three millions and a half more ; but that in the next succeeding year—that of 1873-4, which the hon. Senator (Mr. Macpherson) so indecently seeks to fasten on the present Government—the annual expenditure went up at one jump, the enormous additional sum of $3,768,300. And to show clearly how this vast increase arose, and how entirely the late Government were responsible for it, I have taken from the Public Accounts, comparative lists of each item of expenditure in the years 1872-3 and 1873-4 respectively, and will now read it:—

I call the attention of the Senate to three facts that are established by this comparison:—First, that out of the 39 items that constituted the entire expenditure of the year 1873-4, 33 of them were largely increased by the late Government beyond the sums paid for the same service the previous year; second, that the increases on these thirty-three items came to $4,

141,219, and the decreases on the remaining six items of expenditure to $373,369, showing the net increase of expenditure in that one year to have been $3,768,300; and, third, that the great mass of the increases were of such a character that they could not have been reduced by the incoming Administration. And, as illustrative of the style of some of these large increases, let me recall to the attention of the House the enormous creation of new offices and additions to existing salaries that were made by Sir John A. Macdonald's Government in that year—just before they were ejected from office, and while already in the throes of dissolution. I hold in my hand the official return, and I find that under these scandalous circumstances no fewer than 629 new appointments were made in the departmental offices alone, with salaries attached to them of $322,943 per annum; and that additions were made in the same manner to the salaries of 1381 employes in the same departments amounting to $152,350 per annum. The annual burden involved in these 2,010 transactions amounted to the enormous sum of $475,239 per annum, or the annual interest on more than ten millions of dollars? Here is the official return:—

Everyone of these new appointments and increases of salary were the work of the Macdonald Administration—but in order to throw the odium of these acts on their successors, the hon. gentleman audaciously represents them as responsible for all financial transactions after the 1st of July, 1873, instead of the true date, 1st July, 1874. And as with the annual public expenditures, so as to the public debt—has the hon. gentleman resorted to the same disingenuous contrivance. When the Macdonald Ministry assumed office in 1867, the public liabilities of the Dominion amounted to $93,046,051; less assets, $17,317,410— or a nett Public Debt of $75,728,641. The following figures show how the debt increased in their hands:

	Gross Debt.	Assets.	Nett Debt.
July, 1867 .....	$93,046,051	$17,317,410	$75,728,641
July, 1868 .....	96,896,666	21,139,531	75,757,135
July, 1869 .....	112,361,998	36,502,679	75,859,319
July, 1870 .....	115,993,706	37,783,964	78,209,742
July, 1871 .....	115,492,682	37,786,165	77,706,517
July, 1872 .....	122,400,179	40,213,107	82,187,072
July, 1873 .....	130,778,098	30,929,636	99,848,462
July, 1874 .....	141,163,551	32,838,586	108,324,965

It will be seen from these figures that, in the first five years of the Macdonald Ministry's existence, the net debt increased $2,000,000; but that in the sixth year it rose $4,500,000 beyond what it had ever been before; that in the seventh year it rose no less than $17,700,000 beyond the high point of the previous year; and that in 1873-4—for which the hon. gentleman pretends to hold the present Ministry responsible—it rose $8,500,000 still higher than the swollen figure of 1872-3. The House will see at once how easy it was for the hon. gentleman to construct a case against any in-coming Ministry by thus dating back their responsibility one year and charging them with the enormous expansion of his own friends in 1873-74. "Behold," exclaims the hon. gentleman, "what the public debt and the annual expenditure were in July, 1873, when the Macdonald Government resigned—and now see what the present men have brought them to in July, 1876!"—thereby placing on the shoulders of the present Ministry $8,500,000 of increased debt and $3,768,300 of annual expenditure for which they were in no manner responsible. But the hon. gentleman had a still stronger reason than even these I have named for manipulating the record, and dating a year back the responsibility of the present Government. Sir John A. Macdonald's Government pledged the credit of the country for public works to a vast amount; and left the burden of carrying them through as a legacy to their successors. Here is a list of engagements the new Ministry found awaiting them when they came into power:—

structure falls to pieces when placed on a just basis. Having thus established the true position of affairs at the time the present Ministry took office. I now proceed to show the results of their Administration in the three years of their reign for which we have returns. And first as to the Public Debt. On 1st July last:—

The net Debt was.....	$133,208,699
On 1st July, 1874, it was.....	108,324,969
Total increase.....	$24,883,735

Now, the question at once arises, how this great increase occurred? Well, I hold in my hand an official return that solves that question very distinctly. It shows that in these very three years there was expended on public works for which votes had been taken by the Macdonald Government in the estimates of 1873—the sum of $24,361,920, or within half a million of dollars of the entire amount. In addition to these enormous undertakings, the new Ministry found $35,000,000 of Public Debentures maturing immediately, for which no provision whatever had been made by their predecessors. And yet, with the perfect knowledge that these vast expenditures were forced on the new Government by his own friends; that they could not escape from executing a large portion of the works begun; and that the public debt and annual expenditure must consequently be greatly increased thereby; the hon. gentleman ventures to speak of that increase as a heinous crime on the part of the present Government and denounces them for it. I say then that the whole of the hon. gentleman's calculations and accusations rest on groundless pretensions; and that his entire

So, then, if the Public Debt was largely increased in the three years of the present regime, it was in consequence of contracts for Public Works left to them as a legacy by their predecessors; and it is not surely from the lips of the friends and eulogists of those predecessors that reproach for it should come. So much for the Public Debt; and now let us see how it has been with the Annual Expenditure during the same three years. I hold in my hand a comparative statement of the several items of expenditure in the year 1873-4 (the last of the late Ministry), and in the year 1876-7 (the latest of the present Ministry of which we have returns), and very far from finding just cause of denunciation of the men now in power in the facts it discloses, I find only ground of rejoicing that they have held the reins with so tight a hand, and were able to restrict the expenditures within so reasonable a compass. In spite of a constantly increasing population, the opening up of new territories, the extension of civilized government into many remote districts, the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Confederation, immense public works going on from the Atlantic to the Pacific, all entailing large additional annual burdens, and many heavy incidental expenses besides that were not borne by their predecessors, this Return shows that large reductions have been effected on the ordinary annual expenditures of their opponents in the year they were driven from office. Here is the statement:—

	$23,316,316	$23,519,301

Thus it appears that the entire expenditures of the Dominion were—

In the year 1876-7..... $23,519,301
 And in 1873-4..... 23,316,316

Increase in three years. . . . $202,985

But this increase was merely normal. There was in fact a large reduction on the controllable expenditure of 1876-7 in comparison with that of 1873-4. During the intervening three years money had to be borrowed to pay for the vast obligations undertaken by the late Government, and interest on the money so borrowed accrued in the year 1876-7, to the amount of $1,072,791 in excess of what had to be paid for interest in 1873-4. In 1876-7, too, the sum of $828,373 had to be paid into the sinking fund for the extinction of the public debt, while in 1873-4 the sum payable into that fund was but $573,920, creating a compulsory increase of the expenditure of 1876-7, over that of 1873-4, of $314,453. Then, again, in 1876-7, the sum of $301,596 had to be paid towards the extinction of Indian titles in the North-West, or $155,528 in excess of the charge for that service in 1873-4. These and other similar charges, which had to be paid, which could not be cut down; which were not the act of the present Ministry; created a charge of over $2,000,000 in 1876-7, that did not exist in 1873-4. The present Ministry retrenched so severely in 1876-7 on the charges within their control, that notwithstanding these great additions to the expenditures beyond their control, the total charges of the year were kept within $202,985 of what they stood at in 1873-4. I repeat then my conviction that the people of Canada have sincere cause of thankfulness that men are at the helm in these difficult times, who have courage and strength to hold it with so firm a grasp. But the hon. Senator (Mr. Macpherson) is not satisfied with this reduction of nearly two millions of dollars. He growls still—and he attempts to make some special points of objection which, with the leave of the House, I now propose to examine seriatim. The first objection he makes I have already noticed incidentally, namely, that the Public Accounts of 1876-77 were not correctly made up—that he has strong suspicion that accounts were kept back in order to force a more favourable balance than the truth would warrant. Now, I repeat that it was utterly unjustifiable on the part of the hon. gentleman to send abroad such an insinuation unless he was prepared to formulate his charge so that it could be met promptly and decisively; and I call upon the hon. gentleman to rise now and state clearly what his charge is, what are the facts, who are the criminals, and move for a Committee of Inquiry into the truth of his insinuations.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Does the hon. gentleman understand the gravity of his charge? Does he estimate the effect on the credit of the country of a public statement by a member of this Chamber that the Public Accounts have been falsified? Will it be known abroad as is well known in every corner of Canada, that the men who compose the present Government are utterly incapable of such a deed, and that the thing, come from whence it may, is a foul slander?

Hon. Mr. Brown.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I told the House what I had heard, and heard repeated so frequently that I had strong reasons to believe it. I said it was not in the power of a Committee sitting in Ottawa to get at the facts, so systematically and so persistently was the thing done.

Hon. Mr. BROWN.—Well, then, I repeat that for an hon. gentleman of the experience and position of the hon. member to make such a statement here without being prepared to prove it, is entirely unwarrantable.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is the North-West accounts I refer to.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I do not care what accounts the hon. gentleman refers to. Let him tell us whose accounts they were, and who it was that systematically kept them back, and what he is prepared to prove before a Committee. I appeal to hon. members on both sides of the House, if it was right to throw broadcast an imputation of this nature without being able to substantiate it. For myself I do not believe one word. The hon. gentleman objects to the expenditure for Mounted Police in the North-West. When he did so it was said across the floor "Your friends did it." "O yes," replied the hon. Senator, "they passed the Act, but they did not put it in force." He is mistaken; I hold in my hand a copy of the Order-in-Council signed by Sir John A. Macdonald, and it sets out every detail of the force, the number of men, salaries, and so forth, precisely as now in operation.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Was the proclamation issued by the late Government?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The Order-in-Council was passed by them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Mounted Police force was brought into existence by an Act passed in 1873.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—My statement was with regard to the weights and measures. I said the Mounted Police had been organized by the late Government.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Ah, then this objection is wholly withdrawn from the budget of complaints. Next comes the item of weights and measures, $111,085, and at this the hon. gentleman holds up his hands in indignation. He was reminded that his own friends were the authors of that measure—and he admitted that they passed the Act; but claimed that they did not put it into operation. But that is a mistake, for they not only were the authors of the measure, but the department had begun their preparations for putting it in force before they left office. The hon. gentleman says it was a bad Act, and I am free to admit that as originally framed it was harsh and unpopular; but it has been greatly improved for the better by the Amendment Act of the present Administration, and I am told that the objections to it are now greatly modified. The advantage of securing a uniform system of weights and measures over the Dominion, and of diminishing if not preventing fraud by false balances, can hardly, I think, be over-rated; and if this can be secured by the expenditure of a moderate sum it will be an inestimable advantage. The hon. gentleman complains however, that so large a sum as $111,085 should have been spent, and he says the late Government never expected it to cost over $50,000 a year. Well, it did not cost more than that in 1876-77. The hon. gentleman omitted to state that the sum named included the entire cost of gas inspection as well as of weights and measures; and that over $50,000 of fees were received last year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I stated that.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Well, that left the entire cost of the measure just what was anticipated by its authors. The hon. gentleman was a member of this House when the Bill passed. His friends were completely supreme in both Houses then. Did he object to its passage?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Why then does the hon. gentleman complain so fiercely against that which he himself and his own friends did? Is it because their successors did not at once cast it overboard without trial or attempt to amend its imperfections?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The question is, What Government put it into operation?

Hon. Mr. Brown.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I apprehend it was Mr. Brunel who put it in operation. The hon. gentleman's next objection is to the item of $4,903 for the prevention of adulteration of food. He says he cannot see the use of it; but I fancy that no one who takes the trouble of reading the report of the Commission will agree with him. The public benefit that has already arisen from it is very great. Some of the exposures made by the examinations of the Commissioners have been most salutary. The next objection the hon. Senator makes is with regard to the Public Works Department; and what does he say as to that? Why, he is obliged to admit a large reduction, but he says, "as far as he can see, after looking through it, the whole of the reduction is in manual labour. The salaries are not the least altered; the reduction is all on wages." And how else could it be? The hon. Senator knows well that in carrying on great national works a regular staff of skilled men must be always retained, that when the lack of work or lack of revenue compels reductions the effect must fall first on the supernumeraries. It is easy to fill an order for labourers, but you cannot easily get up an efficient staff of skilled overseers and foreman. Does the hon. gentleman attempt to point out any member of the staff who could or ought to have been dispensed with? Nothing of the kind. Had he done so some weight might have attached to his indignation. But when he brings a mere vague railing such as this, it looks more like an anxious desire to hunt up an electioneering cry than anything else. The hon. gentleman then passed on to the item of Contingencies—and I wondered what he would say about it: for I had analysed this item for six years past—three of them under the reign of the late Ministry and three under the present, and I found that in the old reign the amount ran rapidly up every year, and in the new reign it ran as rapidly down. Here are the figures:—

Tory	Reign.....	1871-2	$153,293
"	"	1872-3	189,174
"	"	1873-4	222,803
Reform	Reign.....	1874-5	208,767
"	"	1875-6	172,548
"	"	1876-7	157,479

Well, what said the hon. gentleman as to this item? He said that there was here a "gratifying reduction"—but "he hoped there were no postponements in “this case”—that is, that payments had not been systematically left out, and the accounts thereby cooked. And this—though the hon. gentleman cannot name a single instance in which any account, however small, was ever postponed by the present Government.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Not likely !

Hon. Mr. BROWN—“Not likely” !—why, then, do you permit yourself to make insinuations that you cannot sustain, and that you cannot believe yourself ? Then comes the Administration of Justice—and here the hon. gentleman fires up fiercely at the increase of $106,560 on that item. The increase at this moment is undoubtedly to be regretted ; but the hon. gentleman knows perfectly well it arose, first, from the establishment of a new Court of Appeal in Ontario, over which the Dominion Government had, under the Act of Confederation, no control ; and second, from the establishment of the Supreme Court of the Dominion, which was anticipated at the Union, which was urgently wanted to give uniformity to the jurisprudence of the whole Dominion and had been too long deferred. We all recollect how often the late Government promised this measure to the country, and as often postponed it from sheer want of firmness to deal with it. By every Government, by every prominent politician, and by every leading jurist, the absolute necessity for a Supreme Dominion Court has been admitted, and I am amazed that the hon. gentleman ventures to condemn it. The hon. gentleman’s next complaint is as to the increased expense of the Customs Department. It amounts to $63,305 in comparison with 1873-4, and that any increase should have been necessary is undoubtedly to be regretted. But it must be remembered that Prince Edward Island, in the three years’ interval, has joined the Union, and that her Customs establishment had to be added to the expense of the department. Great changes, too, have occurred on the Upper Lakes and throughout the North-West and the Pacific Coast, rendering needful efficient arrangements for protecting the Customs revenue. Then, too, it must be kept in mind that we have had for some time past very severe times, and that during such periods extreme vigilance is demanded from the Customs Department, smuggling shows itself at such times in its most daring attitudes. The enormous shrinkage in the value of goods, too, must have demanded constant watchfulness at every port to prevent the under-valuation of importations—and that could not be done without extra expense. Hon. gentlemen opposite have had much to say of late about Canada being made a slaughter market for foreign goods ; but what would they not have said had those “slaughter goods” been permitted to be brought into the country without the closest inspection by efficient officers ?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What of the Montreal Custom House ? Will the hon. gentleman say nothing about the decline of revenue and the increase of expenditure there ?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I am glad the hon. Senator reminds me of that. What one place loses another place gains ; and I notice that though the revenue at Montreal went down, at Toronto it went up. I cannot pretend to judge as to the exact strength of staff necessary to be maintained at Montreal—but probably the Customs authorities anticipate an early recovery from the severe commercial depression that has unhappily existed at that point—and with that a corresponding recovery of Customs revenue. It was of the Montreal Customs House, I think, that the hon. gentleman ventured to speak as a “sink of corruption.” He said that the Customs Department of the United States was rotten to the core, but it was not worse than we had here.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I spoke of the New York and Boston Custom Houses. These are the only Custom Houses in the United States I know anything about.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—But be that as it may, it was utterly unwarrantable of the hon. gentleman to apply such words as he did to the Montreal Custom House as now administered, or to any other public department of Canada. It was as totally unwarranted as the insinuation of the hon. gentleman in regard to keeping back accounts to affect the annual balance, which he must have known was a direct impeachment of the integrity of the Auditor-General.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I think it was not with respect to the keeping back of accounts by the Government; it was with reference to accounts in the North-West—certain purveyors who had spent large sums of money, and of whom the hon. Senator had heard they had kept back their accounts. It is not the accounts the Auditor had anything to do with.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman must not attempt to put that colour on the charge now. It is too late.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I stated it at the time; I did not dream of anything else.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman spoke of North-West accounts after I had repeatedly urged him to explain—but his charge was direct and unmistakable, and repeated more than once.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The charge was not with reference to cooking the public accounts; it was with reference to the transactions of certain officers in the North-West.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I perfectly understood the hon. gentleman latterly to refer to accounts in the Northwest, but his original charge, and the one he insinuated more than once, was that accounts were kept back at the end of the year to reduce the deficit which honest book-keeping would have shown.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not intend to reflect on the Auditor-General.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Whatever you meant, you certainly did reflect on all connected with making up the Public Accounts, and you are bound now to say what accounts have been kept back. The hon. gentleman has no right to make sweeping accusations against the Government and evade the distinct specification of what his charge is. But enough of this for the present. Let us pass on to the hon. gentleman's indictment of the Emigration Department. And here he has not only fallen into the most palpable errors, but the calculations and conclusions he has sent abroad in his pamphlets as well as in his speeches are utterly wrong and mischievous. For example, he selects three years as his basis—1872-3, 1874-5, and 1875-6—and he states the entire expenditure in these years to have been as follows:—

Hon. Mr. Brown.

In 1872-3 .....	$277,368
In 1874 5 .....	302,770
In 1875-6 .....	385,845

Now, why did the hon. gentleman state the cost in 1872-3 to have been $277,368, when the public returns show the actual sum to have been $287,368?—and why did he omit altogether the year 1873-4, when they were $318,572? His friends were in office these years—surely that could not afford an explanation of it? And why did the hon. gentleman omit to tell that these were but the gross disbursements of the department—that in every one of these years there were large sums received back that ought to have been deducted? Why did he omit to tell of the Quarantine deductions, the repayments by the Provinces, and the repayments on the Icelandic and Mennonite advances? And why did he ignore entirely the emigrants arriving by Suspension Bridge, Portland and Pembina, and at Halifax and St. John—and coolly assume that no emigrants came to Canada except those by Quebec?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I stated that I referred to the emigrants by the St. Lawrence.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—Yes, the hon. gentleman dropped that incidentally at the end of his argument—but why did he conceal the fact that while he assumed the immigration of 1872-3 to have been 36,901, his friends, who were then in office, returned it as 50,050, of which 25,920 came by the St. Lawrence? Why did he state that the immigrants of 1874-5 were but 16,038, when the official return of the department shows 27,882 to have arrived of which 12,043 came by the St. Lawrence? What right had he to state that the immigrants of 1875-6 were only 10,901, when the official returns show that 25,633 arrived in the Dominion of which 7,063 came by the St. Lawrence? The hon. gentleman may possibly know more about the matter than anybody else—but why did he omit to tell that his figures were in entire opposition to the official record, and that they assumed a wholesale falsification of the emigration returns by the officers of the Government? And could anything more reprehensible be imagined than for the hon. gentleman, having thus settled his figures for himself, to ignore all deductions and proceed to average the whole gross cost of immigration on his own assumed numbers, and send that abroad over the land as the cost per capita of each immigrant? The result of this manipulation by the hon. gentleman will be seen by the following contrasts of the hon. gentleman's statements and the official returns of the department. And first as to the annual nett expenditure for emigration:—

Mr. Macpherson.	Official Return.
1872-3....$277,368	..... $296,617
1874-5.... 302,770	..... 241,600
1875-6.... 385,845	..... 228,077
1876-7.... ..	..... 110,670

And now as to the cost per capita:—

Mr. Macpherson.	Official Return.
1872-3.....$ 7 76	.....$5 90
1874-5..... 18 90	..... 8 82
1875-6..... 26 65	..... 8 85
1876-7..... ..	..... 4 08

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—My statement was strictly correct. The hon. gentleman is reading from the figures handed to him by the hon. Minister of Agriculture yesterday, which are entirely opposed to the Public Accounts. My statements are in strict conformity with the Public Accounts. The hon. Minister of Agriculture said yesterday my figures were incorrect; that my figures included quarantine. That was incorrect. He said I did not deduct refunds from the Provinces; that also is incorrect. They are in the Public Accounts.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—But not in your statement.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman incurred a serious responsibility in sending such inaccurate statements abroad and making charges against the Government utterly inconsistent with the facts. The first thing we shall have coming to us across the Atlantic will be a newspaper announcement that we pay $26.55 for every emigrant we get from the Mother Country. What right has the hon. gentleman to assume such a responsibility? Had he carefully studied the report of the Minister of Agriculture he would have found the facts all as now stated. The hon. gentleman's next subject of attack is the Militia Expenditure, which shows a reduction of $426,925 from the year 1873-74. The hon. gentleman says it is quite impossible that such a reduction can be right. The change, as I understand it, is simply this: that heretofore 40,000 militia were drilled every year; but by this curtailment it is proposed, while the present financial stringency exists, that the 40,000 militiamen shall be divided into two bodies, and one-half drilled yearly in alternate order. We all, I am sure, earnestly desire that the militia force of the Dominion shall be maintained in full efficiency, but in such times as the present how can this temporary modification of the practice be made just subject of indignant complaint, especially from the mouths of such ardent economists as the hon. gentleman opposite? The next item in the hon. gentleman's bill of complaint was the reduction of $192,642 on Manitoba land surveys. "What reduction," the hon. gentleman exclaims, "is there in that? You have reduced the surveys to that amount—is that economy? You will stop them next year altogether—will that, too, be a saving? And if any one is entitled to credit, to whom should it go but to those that drove the Government to it?" Ah, it is so hard to please the hon. gentleman! If you don't retrench he abuses you, and if you do retrench he is wiser than ever. The next item is one about which the hon. gentleman raised a terrible hullabaloo—the item of Departmental Telegraphing. He read from the Public Accounts the statement that the cost of this service in 1873-4 (the last of the Macdonald Government) was but $20,925, while in the first year of the present Government it was $38,507. And how excited the hon. gentleman did become about it, to be sure! Well, this did appear to me a very large sum, and so I dropped into the Finance Department and asked an explanation of it from one of the officers of the department. He went at once and looked into the matter, and I am sure the hon. gentleman will be relieved and delighted when he hears the explanation. Of course he has no desire to prefer unfounded charges against the Administration, and he will be rejoiced to find that he can conscientiously withdraw that frightful castigation he gave them for that $38,000 of telegraphing. It turns out that in 1873.4 there were only three-fourths of the year's telegraphing included, and that in 1874-5 there were five quarters charged.

Hon. Mr. Brown,

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—It so happened that the quarterly bill of the Telegraph Company was delayed so long that the Government accounts for the year were closed before it could be certified, and it had, of course to go to the next year's account. The effect of this correction of the hon gentleman's figures entirely changes the aspect of the telegraphic complaint, and I call the hon. gentleman's attention to the great economy effected by the present Ministry on the lavish disbursements of his own friends. The contrast now stands as follows :

1873-4 .....	$32,107
1874-5 .....	19,326
1875-6 .....	19,421
1876-7 .....	15,255

There is another charge that the hon. gentleman preferred against the Administration, and it is the last left for consideration. I refer to the transaction known as the Intercolonial Suspense Account—and a very simple matter it seems to be when clearly explained. The 50,000 tons of steel rails bought for the Pacific Railway, as we all know, were not all wanted for that road at once, and it was put to capital account. The money was paid, and of course went at once into the Public Accounts. So far as the cash is concerned, no wrong is alleged. The statement of the hon. Senator does not effect the money in the least, or the accuracy of the Public Accounts, only, he alleges, it affects the balance of last year of revenue and expenditure. An account was opened in the ledger for this iron, and it was stored at certain places. As fast as a portion of it was applied to any service, the value was deducted from the capital account and charged to the special service to which the iron went. In regard to the Intercolonial Railway it was determined—and I fancy we will all admit wisely determined—as soon as possible to take up the iron rails and put steel rails down. We all know the saving effected by substituting steel rails for iron ones, and it was determined by the present Administration from the very moment they came in, that the Intercolonial Railway should be re-steeled, not all at once, but that in places most worn, the track should be renewed to the extent of $200,000 every year. That went on. In the year ending 30th June, 1873, the re-laying was carried out to the value of $80,522—and this amount was duly credited to the Pacific Railway iron account and charged to the service of the Intercolonial Railway. In 1874, $216,538 of steel rails were thus obtained and re-laid on the Intercolonial track ; in 1875, $292,382 ; and in 1876, $215,289. In 1877, as I understand it, it was supposed desirable that there should be a larger quantity used than had been done before. It was thought very desirable that some parts of the road should be laid at once ; and the question came up, should they adhere to the system of charging the Intercolonial at the rate of $200,000 a year, or charge the whole $550,000 of iron that was wanted in one year, against the road. The former course was decided upon. Now, this decision of the department may have been right, or it may have been wrong ; that is entirely a matter of opinion ; for my own part I think it was the reasonable course to take. When the Intercolonial Railway accounts are published abroad it is not desirable that the cost of maintaining it should appear any more unfavorable than the facts justly demand. It is well known that the Great Western Railway charge three guineas per ton to capital account for every steel rail they put upon the track. We know, too, the Grand Trunk Railway charge the whole of the steel re-laying to capital account ; and there is an Act of this Legislature declaring that this shall be so. That Act was passed by the House of Commons and by this House—and the hon. gentleman voted for it himself.

Hon. Mr. Brown.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Does that Act apply to the Intercolonial Railway ?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—No, of course not ; but I am showing that what was done as to the Intercolonial was a reasonable thing to do. This side of the House, in discussions that have taken place on this question, differed from the late Government, who agreed with the Grand Trunk Railway, and held that there-laying of steel rails on Government roads should be charged to capital account.

This side of the House did not hold that ; and what has been done on the Intercolonial was a mere compromise between the two plans. Had the system been carried out on the Intercolonial as contended for by the hon. gentleman opposite, then the Government would not have found it necessary to charge this at all ; it would have gone to capital account. But what they did was this : they took $550,000 worth of rails from capital account, charged $200,000 of it—a reasonable proportion of which they had been in the habit of charging—direct to the Intercolonial Railway, and put the balance honestly and squarely in the Public Accounts as an Intercolonial Railway suspense account—to be wiped out this year and next year.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Did they not use the whole quantity last year ?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—I did not ask that question. I do not know.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Is it done in accordance with the resolution of the Government to charge everything as expenditure on revenue ?

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman is fighting a shadow. What difference does that make ?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is evident that $543,000 worth of rails have been used in renewals, which, according to the resolution of the Government, really should have been charged to revenue. Instead of that only $200,000 is charged, and the balance is put as a blind in a suspense account.

Hon. Mr. BROWN—The hon. gentleman should not use that word "blind." It was perfectly straightforward, and was fully explained in the Public Accounts Committee. I admit the hon. gentleman may hold the opinion that, the rails having been handed over to the Intercolonial officers, the full amount should have been entered against that company. But the Intercolonial Railway belongs to the people of Canada, the rails are there—the transfer does not affect the security—the rails are as much at capital account as they ever were—and there is not one shilling less to-day to meet the public debt than there was before the rails were transferred from one locality to another. Will anyone say that it makes the slightest difference to the country whether those rails lie in a heap at capital account or lie in the track of a Government railway at an Intercolonial Suspense Account? I have now gone through the entire charges and objections of the hon. gentleman ; and I put it to every hon. member of this House whether there is one single item in the whole of the hon. gentleman's indictment for which the slightest moral reproach can be cast upon the gentlemen on the Treasury benches. Will any hon. gentleman say that one instance has been shown of culpable neglect on the part of the Government? Can any hon. gentleman say that the slightest proof has been given of even thoughtless waste on the part of the Government? Nothing of the kind has been shown. Hon. gentlemen, the men who govern this Confederation—be of what politics they may—have no light burden on their shoulders. We are eight separate colonies, brought suddenly together ; we have a vast extent of country, stretching from ocean to ocean ; we are of different races, we speak different languages, and we have different forms of religious faith ; we are all in the early stages of material and social development. Our representatives in Parliament come up from all sections of our wide domain eager to do well for their special constituencies, and apt to forget the interests of the whole. The urgent solicitations for concessions—reasonable concessions if the public chest were exhausted—that are constantly coming up from all directions to the Ministry of the day, are without end ; and the men who have the firmness and the ability and the tact to promote right, resist wrong, and seek to mould the discordant elements into a harmonious whole, deserve and ought to receive the cordial sympathy and support of every member of this Chamber. It is utterly impossible that the wit of man could avoid errors in the administration of affairs so vast and multifarious, but I confess I have risen from an earnest and thorough examination of the public affairs and accounts of the Dominion with high gratification at the ability, the uprightness, the economy, and the marked success with which my hon. friend and his colleagues now governing the country have fulfilled their difficult task since they assumed office.

"HENRY STARNES,

"Speaker, Legislative Council.

"LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL,

"Friday, 8th March, 1878."

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL moved, that the Address be received and that it be printed in the Minutes and Proceedings of the House. He proposed at the proper time to move a resolution on the subject.

Hon. Mr. BROWN said the presentation of this memorial and the course that this House should take upon it were matters of some importance, and he would suggest that no steps should be taken before they had time to consider what course should be followed. Their action on this question would set an example for future occurrences of this nature, and he would suggest to his hon. friend that he should give notice that he would move for the reception and printing of the Address at a future day.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL said he did not apprehend there was any doubt or difficulty as to the contents of the Address being communicated to every member of the House, but the most convenient way to get at it was to have it printed in the Minutes and Proceedings. In fact it was already a part of the Minutes and Proceedings, inasmuch as it had been received and read. He had stated in general terms that hereafter he proposed to submit some resolution to the House on the subject. When he had settled in his own mind what proceeding he intended to take, then he should give notice of it, and every hon. gentleman would have due time to consider it.

Hon. Mr. BROWN said on the face of it it seemed right enough, but it was a question whether it was desirable that this matter, having occurred in a Legislature of a Province, could properly be brought here, discussed here, a motion made on it, and political questions raised affecting the Province. He thought they should not take any step hastily.

Hon. Mr. MILLER contended that the House could not refuse to receive an address sent down to it by the Governor-General under his sign manual.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN did not think any motion was necessary to have it put on the Minutes of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER—My opinion is that no motion is necessary. It appears on the Minutes as a matter of course.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

FIRST READINGS.

The following bills from the Commons were introduced, and read the first time:

Bill—"An Act to provide that persons charged with common assault shall be competent as witnesses."

Bill—"An Act respecting the Bank of Liverpool."

Bill—"An Act to incorporate the Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Company."

Bill—"An Act to authorize the Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance Company to reduce its capital stock, and for other purposes."

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN resumed the adjourned debate on the Hon. Mr. Macpherson's inquiry,

"That he will call attention to the Public Expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion of it which is largely within the control of the Administration, and will inquire of the Government how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure."

He said:—The hon. Senator who has just addressed the House, but who, I regret to see, is not now in his place, in a long, earnest, and able, yet not convincing speech, closed by advising us to keep our discussions within our own province. With a patronizing air, and in piteous tones, he cautioned us to keep within our own sphere. It may be that the customs of legislation and the forms and usages of Parliament have, to a certain extent, limited our direct action on some points, but no man can deny us the right thoroughly to discuss a question so deeply affecting the interests and the prosperity of this Dominion as that which is now before us.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN — The hon. gentleman spoke of this body in terms which almost called a blush to the faces of the modest gentlemen about me. He spoke of us as being the most aristocratic body in the world. How far we may follow him in that, or how much of it we may regard as mere compliment I will not say, but I do say there is no other body of men, equal in numbers to this, in the Dominion, who have a deeper interest in the prosperity of this country, or who are more closely identified with its progress than the gentlemen whom I see about me. And, when the Public Accounts of this Dominion exhibit a succession of deficits, I do not think we are stepping beyond our Province when we inquire of the Government what means they propose to meet that deficit, to make the income and expenditure harmonize. But the hon. gentleman complains that it is inconvenient for the Government to answer the question. It may be so, but however inconvenient it may be to them, I claim that this House has a right to ask that question, and it is the duty of the Government to give us an answer. The hon. Secretary of State told us that he had no proposition to make—that he was waiting in patience and hope. The hon. Senator from Toronto says the clouds are breaking, and he is looking for the sunrise, and that is all the Government and the Senator who is said to lead and control the Government are doing to meet the deplorable state of affairs that prevails in this Dominion.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN — The hon. gentleman complained that my hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Macpherson) had made a great many charges against the Government. "Why," he says, "I have never heard a speech in which there were so many charges brought against a Government." The hon. gentleman surely forgets that we are writing a new page in the history of this country. He forgets that we have now in power a Government composed of men who were never in office, who never governed this country before—he forgets that we never had a Government so open, so amenable to charges, or about which it is impossible to make a speech without it being filled with charges of dereliction of duty, of maladministration and corruption.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Therefore, the hon. gentleman should not have been surprised at the number of charges brought against his Government. He says, if the hon. Senator (Mr. Macpherson) had any charges, he should call for a committee and have them investigated, and he blamed the hon. gentleman for having said that it is impossible to get a fair verdict from a committee in the other House. In this he only followed the example set him by the Premier elsewhere, in stating that it was impossible to get a fair verdict from a committee of the Senate. He followed the example set elsewhere in saying that, and I do not see any great harm in it. Two committees are now investigating the course pursued by the Government in certain Public Works connected with the North-West. When they have reported there may be time and opportunity as there is necessity for further inquiry. The hon. Senator from Toronto professes surprise at the action of my hon. friend beside me. He says "Nothing in the administration of public affairs pleases him." Is it a matter of wonder that my hon. friend is displeased? Is it not true that the great mass of the people are in the same frame of mind and that those who are entirely satisfied form the exception? The hon. Senator (Mr. Brown,) has told us that he justified everything that is done by the Government, and therefore, I assume that he is entirely pleased and satisfied, and I also assume that the thirteen gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches, themselves, now that Mr. Blake is out of the Government, are all in perfect harmony and satisfied with their administration of public affairs, but outside of those gentlemen, you can almost count upon your fingers the men who share their satisfaction.

Hon. Gentleman—Oh, Oh !

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—You can count Oliver, Brown and Davidson, at Kaministiquia, as satisfied with the manner in which public affairs are administered; you can count Mary Brown, Mrs. Davidson and Alice Leys, all the shareholders of the Neebing Hotel Co., and perhaps you can add a few others as satisfied and delighted. The hon. gentleman himself, knowing that he has access to the public documents of the country and Orders-in-Council, being behind the scenes, could probably add the names of a few more contented favorites, but outside of those, the great mass of the people of this country are dissatisfied, and are making that dissatisfaction known. Why, we have the whole industries of this country prostrated, the energies of the people paralyzed, and we have here this repeated deficit of nearly $2,000,000, and yet have no sign of word or deed by the gentlemen who are administering the public affairs of this country, other than to say they are "hoping for better times"—"watching for the breaking of the clouds." Is it any wonder my hon. friend expresses his dissatisfaction, or that the great mass of the people of this country join in that dissatisfaction, and are waiting for the time when they can give it form and force at the polls? The hon. Senator looking across at my hon. friend and shaking his finger, says, "You should have been satisfied with the explanations given by the Finance Minister! You should be satisfied with his answers to your pamphlet." It will be borne in mind that the hon. Senator condemned, in the strongest possible language, the delivery of an argument or the statement of a fact without, at the same time, giving all the attendant and explanatory circumstances, and it will be seen how severely he censures the course taken by the Finance Minister in his summer campaign, and also the course taken by the Senator from Hamilton, in this debate. When the hon. Senator (Mr. Brown) was denouncing this mode of debate, I felt that he was crushing out the member for Hamilton, but when I subsequently heard him commending the picnic speeches of Mr. Cartwright, I felt that the hon. gentleman was in the position of the man who found his friend drunk and in the gutter, and, unable to lift him out of it, endorsed his action by lying down beside him. The hon. Senator, with all his great powers, unable to raise his friend, lies down beside him, endorses his action, and commends his speeches to my hon. friend. The hon. Senator from Hamilton was good enough to amuse the House last evening with a specimen taken from those speeches. Referring to the charge made and sustained against this Government of having largely increased the public expenditure, he says, "See what the late Government did in seven years. They positively increased the public expenditure from thirteen millions in '67, when they took office, up to twenty-three millions when they went out in '73." This is one of many equally dishonest statements made by the Minister of Finance, and repeated with such unction in this debate. The hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Brown) was right in condemning, in scathing terms, a mode of argument and discussion unworthy of the position held by the men who indulge in it. The evident intention is to misrepresent and mislead the public mind by withholding the explanatory circumstances which caused and justified the increase. When we started in 1867, we had but four provinces, or, as the hon. Secretary of State puts it, you were burdened with only two of the smaller provinces.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I explained the other day that I was speaking sarcastically when I used the word "burdened," because I have always favoured the confederation of these provinces. I think it is not quite fair after my explanations, made at the time, to put a wrong construction on my words.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The Dominion at that time consisted of but four Provinces but in 1873, when the late Government went out of office it contained seven provinces, and a territory larger than the whole of the United States. and, therefor, this addition of province after province naturally increased the public expenditure. In 1873, just before the change of Government, last of all Prince Edward Island came in, and the expenditure of that Province was added to that of the Dominion. Here is the simple and natural explanation for much of the increase, which it would have been easy, honest and just for them to have given. But there are other circumstances connected with that. The hon. Senator from Hamilton and the Finance Minister, should have told their audiences that although there was this increase in the public expenditure, the revenue during that period more than kept pace with it.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear ?

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—They should have stated that while the expenses had gone up $9,830,008, the annual receipts had increased $10,500,000, leaving a surplus from year to year, amounting in the aggregate to $12,000,000. They should have accompanied their statement with this explanation, which would have shown a justification for the increase. The hon. Senator who addressed the House this afternoon, admits that there was a deficit against us last year, of nearly $2,000,000; and this year it amounts to nearly as much, but says no reasonable man should complain of this deficit, under all the circumstances, because there is now, as he claims, a reduction in the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—He made no such admission as that.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—He said no reasonable man could take exception to the deficit when there has been a reduction in the expenditure. Hon. members will remember that all through his speech, especially the latter part of it, he treated the deficit as a mere bagatelle, in comparison with our resources and the undertakings we have on hand. Now, what we claim in connection with this, is that although there may be an apparent reduction in some expenditures of the past year over the previous year, it is not on those services which are the true test of economy, and which would indicate a sincere desire to meet the changed circumstances. Any gentleman will at once see that the expenditure made by the late Government was justifiable, when year after year the revenue was increasing, when taxation was diminished from 12 to 10 per cent, and when a surplus of over $12,000,000 was rolled up during the period they were in office, but with the change of Government comes a change of circumstances, that makes their expenditures wholly unjustifiable; a failing revenue, diminished trade, increased taxation, and an annual deficit of nearly $2,000,000. The hon. gentleman claims credit because the present Government have only increased the debt of the Dominion, as he gives it, $24,000,000 during the three years they have been in power, and expended nearly $21,000,000 of that upon public works. Take his own statement, and it shows over three millions of borrowed money used to meet deficits in the working expenses of Government. Contrast this with the result under the late Government. Not only was every dollar of borrowed capital expended on the great public works of the country; the Intercolonial and Canals; but from yearly revenue large sums were expended on public buildings and improvements that might properly have been charged to capital, and after all this, a handsome surplus was left every year which went to reduce the public indebtedness. After the change of Government, when Mr. Cartwright went to London to borrow money, he gathered up these surplus sums and presented them with pardonable pride to the British public in his celebrated prospectus, as the evidence of our prosperous condition. In the one case, you had money left from ordinary revenue to expend on public works, thus preventing the necessity of borrowing and increasing the public debt to that extent; in the other, you have this Administration taking money, borrowed and charged to capital account for public works, and using it to meet their ordinary expenses to the extent of $3,000,000 to $4,000,000, as admitted by the hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Brown) The hon. Senator charged my hon. friend Mr. Macpherson, with having in his pamphlets made grave misstatements of facts, "such as he had never heard or read before." The hon. Senator should prove the misstatement before he makes the assertion—"misstatement of facts." The hon. gentleman's course of reading must be very limited indeed, so limited as not even to reach that celebrated paper published in his own office, and under his own direction. The hon. Senator told my hon. friend, that he had done wrong in not taking the expenditure of 1873-4 as the basis of his comparisons and calculations. He asks, "Will any reasonable man object to doing that?" I tell him, whether I am reasonable or otherwise, I do object. The hon. gentlemen will see, when they look at the months previous to the change of Government and the months succeeding, that the present Administration were in office two-thirds of the time, and controlled the expenditure during the eight months of the year. Any gentleman who is familiar with the administration of public affairs in this country knows, that the Government can increase, diminish, or withhold expenditure just as they may direct; but it is not that which is my strongest objection to taking the expenditure of 1873-4 as the basis of comparison. It is that the present Government prepared the Public Accounts of that year, and it is their statement we have to deal with, not the Accounts as they should have been prepared, to do justice to the late Administration.

Hon. Mr. McLellan,

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—If the accounts had been prepared or overlooked by the late Government and made just to them and their successors, then I do not know any objection there would be to taking them as the basis of comparison.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would ask the hon. gentleman if the Public Accounts are prepared by the Government or by the officers of the Department under them? I was not aware that the Government prepared the Public Accounts.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—We do not find that this Government burden themselves with much beyond mere account keeping. At all events, they are responsible for the accounts, and they direct their officers as to what manner they shall be prepared. It is true the officers attend to the mechanical part of the work, but no account is submitted to Parliament that has not been made to meet the approval of the members of Government, and it is therefore, as I stated, that the accounts for 1873-4 are the work of the present Administration, and their great anxiety to take them as the basis of comparison only too plainly shows that they have been specially prepared for this end. Hon. gentlemen understand how easily the Government, having in hand the preparation of the year's accounts, can transfer a charge from one heading to another, or charge against revenue an expenditure belonging to capital. Not only has this been done in the accounts of 1873-4, but there are in them large exceptional charges which must be deducted before anything approaching a just comparison can be made. Now, the accounts for 1873-4 show an expenditure, charged against ordinary revenue, of $23,316,316, and to make up this sum they include an item voted from capital account, and in years previous, and in the years since, charged against capital, being for new rolling stock and snow sheds on the Intercolonial, amounting to $545,625. Add to this the cost of the elections ordered by the present Government in the winter of 1874, $106,178. Then there is the sum which they returned their good friends of the Great Western Railway, $69,330. There was also an exceptional expenditure in that year, for military stores, of $144,906, and the work on the Dawson Route was also completed that year, the expenditure being $407,868. There are other exceptional charges in that year, but which, to make the comparison just, may be left to balance exceptional charges in the following years. Deducting these sums I have named, the accounts of 1874 for comparison will stand thus:

Gross amount.....		$23,316,316
Deduct Intercolonial Rolling Stock.....	$545,625
Cost of Elections.....	106,178
Duties returned Great Western.....	69,330
Military Stores.....	144,906
Dawson Route.....	407,868
		$1,273,907
Leaving for comparison.....		$22,042,409

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

This is somewhat nearer the true basis for a comparison between the expenditure of that and succeeding years. Starting on this, you find the actual increase in 1874-5 over 1873-4 was $1,670,662; and in 1875-6 another increase of $2,450,963; so that when you have reduced the expenditure of 1873-4 to something near what is the proper basis for comparison, you find there has been an alarming increase in the expenditure of succeeding years. It was rather amusing to see the pains which the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Mr. Brown took to justify the expenditure of 1873-4, and to make the gross sum the proper basis for comparison, and they seemed perfectly delighted when they had, according to their own minds, succeeded. Proceeding on that basis, the hon. gentleman went on to make comparisons in detail, and to tell the House whenever there happened to be an increase in any item, that it was perfectly reasonable and just, and called for by the necessities of the country. When the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Brown) take this ground, they seem to forget the position in which it lands them. They seem to forget that ever since the hour when these Provinces were united under Confederation, they declared on the floors of Parliament, and on public platforms, and in their press, that the men who were then administering the affairs of the country, were day by day practicing the grossest extravagance, extravagance amounting to corruption, and that it was their object and would be their duty when obtaining power, not to go on the same scale of extravagance; that their policy was to largely curtail the expenditures of this country within, as they said, reasonable limits. The hon. Senator from Lunenburg read to the House last night, the platform that they laid down: they were "to reduce the annual lavish expenditure, and enforce strict economy in every branch of the public service." Those gentlemen came into power with an overwhelming majority, pledged to the teeth to reduce the expenditures of this country, not to continue them on the same basis. Yet, here to-day, we have the hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Brown,) and the hon. Secretary of State yesterday, hour after hour defending, in fact, that expenditure, justifying it, and taking it as the basis—as the justification—of their own increased expenditure. We claim that that expenditure in the main was justified by an overflowing treasury, while the expenditure of this Government, not only in view of the pledges they had given to the country, but in the changed condition of the revenue, were entirely unwarrantable. In seeking to justify their own expenditure, these gentlemen entirely overlook the position in which they stood before the country by their charges of extravagance against the late Government, and their past pledges and promises to reduce the amount. The hon. Secretary of State, as well as the hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Brown), claimed our sympathy for the present Government, because, as they held, they were loaded down with obligations that were placed upon them by the late Administration. In one breath, you had the hon. Senator from Toronto deploring this, and in the next breath you had him forgetting all, and striking down the position which he and his Secretary of State had taken; telling us that our duty is to build up the Dominion and make of it a great and prosperous empire; that the great public works, railways, and canals, must be carried on to completion, that our resources may be developed and the object in view attained, and therefore that the expenditures cannot be curtailed. The hon. Senator in this, justifies the late Government for all those undertakings which the Secretary of State, and he himself earlier in his speech, had censured so severely. It is admitted on all hands, that there are certain undertakings that are essential to the wants of the people; certain undertakings that are necessary under the terms of Confederation itself, to the union of our people and the development of our vast resources. There is the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, and the enlargement of our canals on which there has been large expenditures, and on which large expenditures are yet required, and should be made as soon as the circumstances of the country warrant. No man will claim that the late Government are any more responsible for expenditures upon such works as those than the gentlemen opposite. Now apart from those, let us see what obligations were laid upon the present Government by their predecessors, and how far those obligations hampered their policy. It is true that the old Government had constructed a large number of public works, post offices, customs houses, piers, and various other works all over the Dominion, and had inaugurated others, but they were constructed not out of capital account, as they might very justly have been, but out of revenue and still leaving surpluses every year; some of those works were in an unfinished state when the new Government came into office. In 1874 the Finance Minister brought down an estimate to continue those works, and having made out that year's appropriation, he gave an estimate of what would be required to complete all those unfinished works. I ask the hon. Senator from Hamilton, and the Secretary of State to turn up that estimate submitted by their own Finance Minister, for the sums that would be required to complete those works after the vote of that year, and what will they find? Hon. gentlemen will be surprised to see how very small it is. I am speaking outside of the Intercolonial Railway, the canals and other great works, entered upon under the terms of Confederation inseparable from Union, and assented to by both parties. There were required the following sums:—

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Customs House, Toronto.....	$ 40,000
Examining warehouse.....	115,000
St. John Post Office.....	43,000
Ottawa Post Office.....	30,000
Manitoba Penitentiary.....	121,000
British Columbia Penitentiary.....	129,000
Harbors and Piers.....	161,000
	$639,000

Making a total of $639,000 to complete all those buildings that the late Government had undertaken to construct out of revenue, and which were in an unfinished state in 1875. The Finance Minister, in his Budget Speech of 1875, set the matter at rest when he said (see page 168, Hansard of 1875.)

"I think we may fairly congratulate ourselves that our financial condition has materially improved since last year. All immediate demands met. No pressing claims except those for public works, for at least a year or two. Have completed the Intercolonial and P. E. Island Railways. We have a reasonable surplus, and are, therefore, free to turn our attention and energies to enlarging and improving canals and the Pacific Railway."

Now, hon. gentlemen will see that even the Finance Minister himself contradicts the position taken by these hon. gentlemen (Mr. Scott and Mr. Brown) when they say that this Government were loaded down by the obligations left to them by their predecessors. The figures I have shown prove that those obligations were comparatively light, and the hon. Finance Minister himself said that every thing was paid, and that we were free from embarrassment. The hon. Secretary of State, I fancy, rather surprised the House when he attempted to account for the enormous increase in the Customs expenses, by stating that it was owing to reforms introduced into that service. The country will be slow to appreciate reforms that lead to such an alarming increase of cost and diminution of revenue, and think the fewer we have of them the better. The hon. gentleman claims that the cost of penitentiaries had not kept pace with the increase of inmates. This is only an inevitable result under any management, as all the main expenses of the institutions are stationary, no matter what the number of prisoners. It is true that since 1874 the number has gone up from 1,000 to 1,500, and without an increase of cost in proportion. But when we turn to the other side of the account, we see that the receipts have not been increased, and therefore we are led to the conclusion that a part of the receipts is taken to meet the daily expenditures, and in this manner the apparent cost has been kept down. I am strengthened in this conclusion by the evident attempt that is apparent in the Public Accounts to mislead and mystify in regard to the cost of many of the services. In the matter of telegrams, which has been so much dwelt upon by both hon. gentlemen, and a saving claimed, we have the greatest difficulty in making a comparison. The expenditure of each department, instead of appearing as usual in one sum in the contingencies of that department, has been reduced by charges scattered all through the various services. The hon. Senator, (Mr. Brown) was to-day unsparing in his praise of the Finance Minister, and I doubt not but whilst his words were ringing in our ears, many hon. gentlemen around me were recalling in strange contrast the sweeping denunciations hurled at Mr. Cartwright, a few years ago by the hon. Senator in his newspaper. Then, he was characterized as "a mere mixer and muddler of figures." If hon. gentlemen will take the Public Accounts to day as they stand they will find that charges are strangely mixed—mixed with the intention of muddling, or, if not with that intention, certainly with that effect. It will be remembered that when the hon. Secretary of State claimed that the cost of telegraphing had been reduced, and cited as proof the sums under the head of contingencies to each department, he was told that the reduction was in part due to the increased facilities for rapid communication, and to a reduction in the rates for messages; but the hon. gentleman would not admit such an explanation. He told us that the telegraphing in connection with the North-West, was enormously high—17 cents per word—besides the cost of special messengers to the various stations. The language and manner of the hon. gentleman, evidently conveyed to the House, that all the cost of this was included in the sum which he was comparing with the cost under the late Government, and creating the impression that in telegrams this Government is more economical than its predecessor. But how does the matter stand? If hon. gentlemen will take up the accounts connected with the service of which the hon. gentleman was speaking, the North-West, they will find under that head enormous sums for telegrams scattered all through the branches of the service. I have not had time to go through more than two or three years, but I find in one account, "paid the Secretary of State for telegrams, $548.00," and again, "paid the Department of Justice for telegrams, $1,040," in another account, $1,589, and so on, all through. In the accounts laid before us this year, there are over $3,000 charged amongst the various services of the North-West, and which the language of the Secretary of State would lead us to think he included in the sums he compares with his predecessors. And it is only by taking part of the cost of telegraphing from the accounts of the Department of Justice and the Secretary of State, and scattering it through different headings, that the hon. Mr. Blake, at Teeswater, can boast of the small comparative amount that appears under the proper head of contingencies of his own office, and the hon. Secretary of State can re-echo the boast here. It matters little to the country where the charges are placed, the result is the same, the expenditure was made, the money is gone, and the people foot the bills. And that is what my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) complains of, not because a particular service is increased, and another apparently reduced, which can easily be done by transposing a charge from one head to another, but that the aggregate is increased; that the result of the year's operations is largely to increase the controllable expenditures. This attempt to hide away expenditures, and to mix accounts, is by no means confined to telegrams. Take another case, the steel rails, and perhaps the House will expect me to apologize for naming again "steel rails" but we have the rails, to our misfortune, and we have annually charges connected with them. Turning to the accounts of the past two years, we find under the head of "Pacific Survey" $6,700, for storage of rails in British Columbia. By what right is the rent of a small patch of ground on which the rails are piled charged to surveying? Have they an engineer marching about the piles measuring and calculating how much and how rapidly they are diminishing by corrosion? Then, again you have another charge connected with the steel rails, an amount of $1,000, paid for insurance average to one of the ships that carried the rails, charged to survey account, whilst the money received from the insurance company to meet this charge is credited to steel rails, as if the Government felt the rails were such a burthen to them, that every cent by which they could possibly reduce the apparent expenditure should be resorted to, in order to deceive the country, no matter where the items were charged. But the hon. Secretary of State grows very indignant when it is even hinted that any member of his Government ever attempts to mislead the public mind. My hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) had occasion in his address, to point out to the House that the Member for Bruce when Minister of Justice, and addressing his constituents, in a comparison he made of the cost of the department under his predecessor with it under himself, had omitted his own salary. The hon. Secretary of State professes amazement at the imputation that the intelligent men of Bruce can be misled, or that the late member of his Government could stoop to mislead an audience. Why, hon. gentlemen, had the speech delivered by the Senator from Hamilton last night been delivered before the men of Bruce, intelligent as they are, they would for a time at least have been misled. Had the bold fact been given in the manner it was given to us, that the late Government from 1867 to 1873 increased the public expenditure nine millions, the impression would have been created that they were guilty of great extravagance. Let me name another case in point during the past season. We had, in Nova Scotia, a visit from the Premier, and I had the pleasure, and a great pleasure it was, of listening to him addressing a few of the electors of my own county. The hon. Premier, in his efforts to show how very economical the present Government are, how much better they administer the affairs of the country than their predecessors, made a comparison between the Intercolonial Railway and the Pacific. He told the electors of that county that he was building 228 miles of the Pacific Railway—had it under contract—and he would have it completed for a cost per mile of less than half what the Intercolonial Railway had cost the country. The words used, the tone and manner of delivery were such as to leave the impression upon every man present, who did not know the difference in the construction of the two roads, that they were equally good, equally well built—should be of an equal cost—and that the late Government and the commissioners acting under them had been guilty of the grossest extravagance in the construction of the Intercolonial. Being called upon by that audience, I felt it a duty to myself and those with whom I had acted in the construction of the Intercolonial, to correct the Premier. I felt it my duty to point out the great difference in the character, and necessarily in the cost, of the two roads. That the Intercolonial is the best road on the continent of America, as was confirmed by an eminent engineer a few days ago, when giving evidence under oath in another room, whilst the road, he (Mr. Mackenzie) was constructing was a mere log and timber affair—timber trestles in place of solid embankment, and log piers, abutments and culverts, in place of solid masonry; in fact, as the same engineer to whom I have referred says, only a preliminary construction for a railway.

Hon. Mr. McLellan.

With this case under my own observation and knowing how completely for a time, until the explanation was made, the men of Colchester had been misled by the hon. Premier, I can readily believe that the utterance of the member for South Bruce left on the mind of his audience a false impression. The hon. Senator (Mr. Macpherson) calls our attention to the Suspense Account of $343,591, for railway renewals on the Intercolonial. The position taken by my hon. friend was that this sum which we are told has been expended in renewals upon the railway and paid, should have been charged in this year's accounts, and would thereby show the true deficit to be nearly two millions of dollars. The hon. Senator who has just addressed us contends that this sum, although expended, and although the service was paid for, should not be charged against renewals in the year's accounts. The hon. gentleman is perhaps not aware of the position taken by the members of his own Government in respect to all renewals on railways. The hon. the Premier and the Finance Minister have both, in the clearest and most emphatic terms, affirmed that the relaying of the track with steel rails is a proper charge against revenue, and is so to be made. So late as the 25th of last April the Premier used these words, as reported on page 1831 of Hansard:—

“The renewals on the road (Intercolonial) were paid out of its revenue and charged to income. The relaying of steel rails was charged to income and taken out of the annual vote.”

This, it will be seen, was in conformity to the principle avowed by the Finance Minister in his Budget Speech of 1876, as reported on page 243:—

“With respect to the operation going on of substituting steel for iron rails, it is an item I think which is properly chargeable to income, and is intended to be. I am somewhat particular in making this statement, because, as the House knows, we feel it incumbent upon us; we are compelled to keep both capital and ordinary account, that we should be very scrupulous as to what we allowed to go to that capital account.”

Hon. gentlemen will see by these extracts that the principle and practice contended for by my hon. friend has been admitted by the leader of the Government and his Finance Minister, but has not been carried out; and we are justified by their own words in adding this suspense amount to the year's expenditure and to the amount of deficit. The hon. member from Toronto (Mr. Brown) contends that it would be unfair to the road to make the whole charge in one year. If he had said it was unjust to the officer in charge of that road, I could understand him, because it is undeniable that Mr. Brydges has been compelled to make an expenditure upon the road which his own judgment had pronounced uncalled for.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The House will remember in 1874, Mr. Brydges was sent down to examine the condition of that road and report upon it—that was before the Government had purchased this 50,000 tons of steel rails for which they had no use—and what did he report? I will quote from it:—

“ Having carefully gone over the whole system, and discussed the matter thoroughly with the engineer and roadmasters, I am of opinion that it will require not less than twenty miles of steel rails per annum, to be used for re-laying the tracks, which will take the entire quantity of iron rails out, in rather more than eight years. Twenty miles, I am sure, will do for the next three or four years, but if the old rails should wear badly, or the traffic be heavier than I at present anticipate, it may be possible that after three or four years the quantity may require to be somewhat increased.”

Here we have Mr. Brydges, after careful examination with the officers of the road, reporting that the work should be gradually done, as required, in a period of eight years; but the Government step in and compel him to hide away a part of their dead stock, by doing in one or two years, what was declared only necessary to be done in eight. Hon. gentlemen will therefore see, that although the position taken by my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) that the rails having been laid, the expense incurred, and the money paid, the amount should be charged in the year's accounts, is entirely correct, and that the true deficit for the year is increased by this sum of $343,591, making it nearly two millions, yet, it does place the officer who has that road in charge, and who is no doubt anxious that the road should be worked as cheaply as possible, in an unfair position. The Government have interfered with him in his duty, and have forced him to expend an amount that, in the opinion of himself and his engineer, was wholly uncalled for. The hon. Senator comes to this conclusion himself when he says, that “if they had not had the rails on hand—if they had not been called on to pay cash for them—they would not have put so many into the Intercolonial.” The hon. Senator with admirable frankness exposes the transaction. The Government had rushed thoughtlessly—madly into the purchase of 50,000 tons of steel rails for which they had no use—they had paid millions of the people's cash away for piles of rails that were being eaten out by interest and corrosion, and they must at any sacrifice get them hidden away—“Anywhere, anywhere, let them be hurled,” if not out of the world, at least off the record—and so Mr. Brydges is made the scape-goat and forced to bear away a quantity of them, which his own long experience and great ability, sustained by the deliberate opinion, after careful examination, of his engineer, declared unnecessary. But, hon. gentlemen judging by the result in the working of that road, it is not alone in the matter of rails that the Government have interfered and made it a political machine. It will be remembered that Mr. Brydges in his report on the condition of that road in June, 1874, before taking charge of it, said that “taking the average of five years previous that the roads had about paid working expenses,” and that with certain reforms, reductions of salaries and severance from politics it could be run free of expense to the country.

Hon. Mr. POWER—How much of the road was open then?

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—He took into account the opening of the road as far as Newcastle, and we have seen, it is stated in this year's report that the opening of the whole has given a larger amount of through traffic than was anticipated. But never before, in the history of the railway, has there been a worse exhibit than in this year's report, due, as must be admitted, to Government interference. The manager proposed a gradual renewal of rails as the wants of the road required, extending over at least eight years, but the Government interfere, break up his system, and compel him to hide away 11,000 tons of their mad purchase. The manager proposed a reduction of salaries and the number of officials, to the extent of about $17,000 a year, and as soon as he was placed in charge, proceeded to carry this out. But here again there must have been coercion on the part of the Government, to give places to favorites, for the number of officials apart from the new stations, have been largely increased, swelling the salaries, exclusive of stations, over $40,000 above what they were in 1874, to say nothing of the reduction which the manager in his report proposed. There has therefore been a great injustice done to him, and the country has suffered a large loss by this interference. The hon. Senator (Mr. Brown) I fancy, startled the House by the announcement, with the audacious challenge that he threw out, that "not a single instance of culpable neglect or of thoughtless waste of public money could be brought to the charge of the present Government." Notwithstanding all the utterances from pic-nic platforms, all that has been written in the press, or that we have heard elsewhere, I am sure hon. members were hardly prepared for so rash a challenge—"not a single instance of thoughtless waste of public money, or culpable neglect!" While the words were yet on the hon. member's lips, I heard on all sides of me "steel rails." Need I ask if there was sufficient care and thought in this expenditure? An expenditure which their own officer—the ablest man in their employ—had pronounced in advance, such as "no prudent man would make." An expenditure which, in interest and charges, has rolled up to over four millions of the people's money, helping to swell taxes and deficits. An expenditure marvellous in its absurdity and folly, when we consider that a single mile of road was not then located, nor did the Government scheme, as now declared by the Secretary of State and other members of the Government, contemplate the construction, by Government, of as much road as the 50,000 tons would lay—sufficient for 550 miles, whilst the policy of the Government is to stop with 228 miles now under contract, and the Pembina branch 80 miles, and to seek a company to build the rest. Is there no charge of "thoughtless waste of public money" in rushing blindly into a purchase which was unnecessary and uncalled for, and which, under their policy, never can be used? Does the hon. gentleman want other instances of culpable neglect or thoughtless waste of money? When the Government were about to select a terminus for the Pacific Railway away in the wilderness where there were millions of acres of land, the best of which had never cost higher to private individuals than four dollars a lot, was it not culpable neglect on their part not to secure that land when it could be bought for a mere trifle? What was the result of that neglect? In 1874, after they had selected the terminus, their engineer, Mr. Fleming, makes a plan of the land required and of a wharf to be constructed. In 1874 they selected the terminus and made their plans for the wharf required. They built that wharf and proceeded with the construction of the road; all the while looking on at rings of speculators and jobbers working up the price of the very land marked off by their engineer. They stood idly by whilst these speculators planted a huge shanty, named the Neebing Hotel, directly in front of that wharf, to be bought out at fabulous prices. For years they looked on and then paid $67,000 for the terminus of the road running, as Mr. Mackenzie described it, "through a wilderness never before trod by the foot of white man," even now we do not know that we have the full cost given. The hon. gentleman from Toronto, Mr. Brown, makes it a serious charge against my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson,) that he should have even hinted that there was any withholding of the public accounts. Last Session this House asked for all the expenditures on this purchase, and the papers brought down showed an amount of $51,000. The House was led, to believe, that it was not possible that there would be any further expenditure there, and hon. gentlemen thought we knew the worst of it. But we find an expenditure of $16,000 had been kept back, and in this Session the sum has been rolled up to $67,000 for this piece of wilderness. The Government felt that the country could not stand $67,000; it was too large a dose to give at once, and was "divided" but I hope we have now reached the full measure of the infliction.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—We have not. They will have to get more land.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—If this land, by two years neglect went up from two dollars to a thousand an acre, what will the addition be in another year? But the hon. Senator can see no culpable neglect or thoughtless waste. The hon. Secretary of State should have checked him, and should have told him that last night he (Mr. Scott) had confessed, on the floor of this House, to a thoughtless waste of the public money in the construction of the Fort Pelly Buildings.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I did not.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—I know the hon. gentleman did not use just these words, but you should have told the hon. Senator (Mr. Brown) that it was a thoughtless waste, because the buildings on which the Government have expended $63,000, he tells us, were in the wrong place, and others have been erected.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Fort Francis Lock?

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—My hon. friend from Toronto (Mr. Brown) has a wonderfully short memory. He forgets the Georgian Bay Branch. Was there any evidence of careful thought in the giving of the contract for the construction of a railway that would cost millions of dollars through an unexplored country, a road that the Government did not know they really wanted, and which resulted in a thoughtless, wasteful expenditure of over $100,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Only $40,000. You are counting the advance on the rails.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Yes, taking the whole, it runs over $109,000. In connection with these worthless rails was there not another “neglect of public duty?” A gentleman constructing a railway in that vicinity brings in a quantity of rails in the fall, dumps them down at a certain point, tells the Government that they are intended for their road, and that he wants the money on them. The Government pay him over the cash. In the spring, when he wants rails to lay on his own road, he goes to the Government and borrows a hundred tons of those same rails, and when the matter comes to be looked into they find that 227 tons have been taken. Is there no “neglect of public duty” in this? The hon. Senator knows also that a Committee of this House is now investigating into the construction of the Fort Francis Lock, in which there is the plainest possible evidence—in which there is an admission from the hon. gentleman himself—that it was a blunder; “a thoughtless waste of public money.” The Government adopted their famous “water-stretch” policy, and determined to run a link to Sturgeon Falls. To make the water-stretch from Sturgeon Falls, they decided that a lock was necessary at Fort Francis, and before ascertaining that a road was possible to the Falls, they rushed into the construction of a lock involving the expenditure of nearly half a million dollars.

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—With the river improvements adjoining, it will reach nearly that. But what has been the result; nearly two years were spent in trying to reach Sturgeon Falls, and the attempt was finally abandoned, and the road carried away north of them, rendering the expenditure at St. Francis an absolute waste of money. I shall not further weary the House with the long and painful record which the gentlemen who so misgovern this country have in a few short years made, but I ask the House if, in the cases which I have named, it is not plain and patent upon the face of them that there has been, as the hon. member put it, “a culpable neglect of public duty and a thoughtless waste of the public funds of this country?” But the hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Brown) tells us of the great pressure that has been brought to bear upon the members of this Government—of the pressing claims coming from the north, east, and west; from all points of the Dominion; and he, being familiar with the offices, knows something of the force of this pressure. I wonder if the hon. gentleman was in the office of the Premier when the returns for the Kaminitiquia job, and the figures that it was proposed to pay for this land in the wilderness, were under discussion. I should like that the hon. gentleman could give us his description of the manner in which that report was received by the Minister of Public Works, and of the pressure which made him assent to it. I can fancy it, but I know the hon. gentleman could do better justice to so interesting a scene. But the hon. member paid a poor compliment to the members of Parliament who support the Government, when he represents them as men pressing determinedly, no matter whether their claims are just or otherwise, to have public grants made to them.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman did not say that. He did not say they were pressing claims or otherwise. He said "good claims."

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Well, if good claims, if just claims, where the merit of resisting then? It was anything but complimentary to the supporters of the Government the way in which he put it, giving us the impression that it was only by the iron firmness of the Government themselves that they were able to fight all these demands and keep the treasury from being depleted by their clamorous supporters.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Such as Ferris—"More rails."

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The hon. gentleman from Toronto (Mr. Brown) referred to the deficit, and following the example of the hon. the Secretary of State, he went back to 1858. The House must have been amused. What have we to do with matters connected with 1858? What has this Senate or this country now to do with the action of old governments long before the Provinces were confederated? When the hon. gentleman spoke of this deficit and attempted to justify it by going back to that period when there were deficits, it must have crossed the mind of every hon. member here that he, of all men, was not justified in taking such a course. We have merely to look at the present, certainly not go back beyond the date of Confederation; but these hon. gentlemen have no right to go back even to that date. The hon. gentlemen opposite are, surely, not the men to attempt to justify themselves by quoting the action of the late Government. Why, their whole course when in Opposition was laying down pledges and promises that they would not act as the gentlemen who were then governing the country were doing, but they would reform, they would reduce the public expenditure and be more economical. But what do we now find? We find that whenever they are charged with any misconduct, they, on all occasions go back to see what mistakes they can find of the late Government. But the Secretary of State and the hon. Senator exceeded anything we have ever had from them before. They went back to 1858 and 1860 and compared the deficits of that period with the present. I tell the hon. gentlemen neither they nor any member of their Government or party should attempt to justify their action by a comparison with their predecessors before or since Confederation. We all remember the cry with which they sought power. It was not "we will do equally well with you" but "we will do better than you." It was "stand aside I am holier than thou." To-day when four years of their record are examined their tone is changed; their cry is "don't push us aside, we are no worse than others." Of this, let the intelligence of the country answer at the polls. The hon. Secretary of State in speaking of the past uses the expression "before we were burdened by the smaller Provinces"

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, No.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—It may have been with him an accidental utterance, slip of the tongue.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman was present, I believe, when I made that statement. I said I was speaking sarcastically of some gentleman who made that statement, and that I never shared in that sentiment myself; I said I was speaking sarcastically.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—I was proceeding to say, that I supposed the hon. gentleman had made a mistake, or in some way the expression had fallen from him unintentionally as we have had no marked evidence of his hostility to the smaller provinces. But we know, hon. gentlemen, the position taken by almost every man who is now in the Government, and who previous to coming into power was hostile to these smaller provinces; we know that when the terms of admission of every province were added to this Confederation were under discussion, the hon. gentleman's Government opposed those terms. What did we find in 1869, when the modification of the terms to Nova Scotia was under discussion? We found every member of this Government—every one who was then in Parliament, and who is now a member of it, Mr. Cartwright excepted, in deadly hostility to that modification. It was carried in spite of all their attempts to defeat it, carried too by the help of Mr. Cartwright, who now under other influences and a member of another Government, is most outspoken in condemning the terms granted to the smaller Provinces. How do we find him last summer speaking of the admission of Prince Edward Island, the gem of the whole Confederation ?

Prince Edward Island Members—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—We find him claiming credit for the opposition which he and his colleagues gave to the terms, characterizing the liberality of the late Government as gross folly, from which we are now suffering in our deficits. On the 2nd of July, last at Newmarket, he used this language, "And had our words been listened to when pressed on Parliament in 1873, at the time of the assumption of the Provincial debt, and of the admission of Prince Edward Island, one costing $850,000 and the other $500,000 per year, there would have been no fear of a deficit to-day. The time for interference was in 1873, when the debt was assumed and Prince Edward Island admitted. But, the Government of that day refused to listen to our advice, and we must bear the consequences of their folly." Here we have a plain and unmistakeable expression of the sentiments the Government entertain towards the smaller Provinces. The admission of Prince Edward Island on such terms as these enable that Province to meet its local wants is characterized, as "an act of folly from which we are suffering." But the Secretary of State said, and the member for Toronto (Mr. Brown), repeated it, that we are in a flourishing condition, that all our calls have been met, and that the public credit has never suffered for an hour. The hon. member from Toronto says, every penny has been met. It is true, hon. gentlemen, but from his own admission to-day over three and a half millions of dollars, nearly four millions, have been met out of capital. That is, they are using borrowed money for which our bonds were given in the London market to the extent of four millions of dollars in paying the ordinary working expenses of the country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—I ask the House seriously if this is a matter for the hon. gentleman's congratulation. Our necessities have, it is true, all been met, but a large amount has been taken from money borrowed for the construction of important public works. And then they tell us our credit was never better, and cite as evidence the loans placed on the London market by Mr. Cartwright. The hon. gentlemen both seem to overlook the fact that Mr. Cartwright, for his first loan, rested his case wholly on the admirable position in which the late Government left the finances. In the prospectus which he issued he showed the annual increase of revenue, the expenditure from revenue on public works, and the magnificent surplus each year.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman, I think, has misapprehended what the hon. gentleman who sat in front of me, said. I think he stated $21,000,000 expended by the present Government, was on works undertaken, or provided for by the former Government, in 1874. I don't think he said the remaining three millions were spent in the way the hon. gentleman says.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The hon. gentleman will find this to be the fact, that of the money borrowed, and by which the public debt has been increased, nearly four millions have been used in paying ordinary expenses.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The report which came down to the House of Commons shows the total amount expended on public works to be, $28,447,188. If the hon. gentleman says that there is three millions expended in the way he says he must show his authority.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The hon. gentleman ought to know that last year we had a deficit of nearly two millions of dollars, and that this year we have what they admit to be a million and a half dollars, and of course borrowed money was used to pay it.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Last year it was $600,000.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—I refer the hon. gentleman to Mr. Cartwright for better information. But I was speaking of the assertion of the hon. gentlemen who have spoken of the credit of the country on the London market, and I have said that the hon. Finance Minister, on his first visit, rested the case entirely on the prosperous exhibit left by the late Government. He went back in 1876, after he had been three years manager, and he evidently mistrusted and undervalued our position. At all events, for some reason he did not test our credit by open competition in the market. The hon. gentleman named his own price, and one so low that there could be no question of the bonds being taken. He said to the capitalists of London, here are the bonds of the Dominion of Canada, for each of which we pledge the people of Canada to pay one hundred pounds when due, with four per cent. interest half-yearly, for which bonds I want ninety-one pounds each, less a half-year's interest, leaving less than ninety pounds received for every one hundred pound bond. The money was at once furnished; the bonds were immediately taken, and, as we are informed, mainly by the people who, he informed us, advised him to make this offer. Let me for a moment turn the attention of the House to what took place shortly after this. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brown) commended the Finance Minister not only for what he did, but also for the time at which he did it, "that he borrowed the money before it was really needed, but he was fortunate, inasmuch as the cash value of four per cent. bonds declined in the London market." But this only places his Finance Minister in a worse position when we look at what other colonies sold their bonds at, even with the decline in price to which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Brown) refers. The little colony of South Australia wanted to borrow £500,000, or, in round numbers, two and a half million dollars. Her Finance Minister placed the rate of interest on her bonds the same as ours, four per cent., and then asked the money lenders to name, by tender, the price they would give for each bond of one hundred pounds, and the quantity they would take. And I ask the House for a moment to contrast the result in the two cases. South Australia is a young colony, only forty-two years old. In 1871 the census gave the population at 185,626. In 1876 the estimated number was 218,060. The result of their loan is given in the London press of February, 17th, 1877, as follows:

"The tenders for the South Australian Government four per cent loan for £500,000 sterling were opened at the National Bank of Australia, London, on the 13th. There were 209 tenders, amounting to £2,967,300, at prices ranging from £96 10s to £100. The average price for the £500,000 allotted is £97 10s. to £100. Tenders at £97 9s. and above, amounting to £483,500 are allotted in full, while those at £97 8s. 6d. will receive about 53 per cent of the amount applied for."

Here we find this young South Australian colony testing their credit and asking the money lenders "how many pounds will you give us for our bonds at four per cent?" and they were offered very nearly six times the amount required at £97 8s 6d, and to £100. But the Finance Minister of Canada, representing not a small colony, but a country more than one-half of the continent of North America, with a population of 4,000,000 of people and with a revenue that from the Confederation down to the time he assumed the management of it, had been increasing and giving annual surpluses, went into the London market, and instead of asking "How much will you give for our bonds at 4 per cent?" he fixed the price, at a loss of from eight to nine pounds on every hundred pounds, below the tender sale of the Australian loan, and asked the capitalists if they would take our bonds on those terms. As a matter of course they were readily taken, but we received nearly a million dollars less than if he had sold in the same manner and at the same rate as South Australia. Our liability or indebtedness for this loan, and on which we pay interest, is $12,166,666, whilst the actual cash received for it was:

Less half year's interest.....	243,333
1½ Commission and charges on $12,166,666.....	191,430	434,763

Leaving net cash paid over, say..$10,563,100

The Finance Minister, in last year's Budget speech, told us that one per cent commission was paid, but we find it to be one and a quarter, and that not on the cash realized but on the gross sum, or in other words, we paid nearly $20,000 commission and charges on cash that was never received. The discounts on the several loans effected by this Government amount to a total sum of $3,862,069. The hon. Secretary of State boasts of the reduction in the average rate of the interest on our whole indebtedness, but he should bear in mind always, that we are paying interest on larger debt than the money received; as shown by the above discount on the last loans—so that the actual rate of interest on money received is greater than he quotes from the blue books. The hon. gentleman however should know that the reduction in the rate is not due to any superior management on the part of his Government. We all know that the old debts with which each Province went into Confederation in greater part bore six per cent interest. Shortly after Confederation, when the condition of the Dominion was shown to be so prosperous, the bonds constituting these debts commanded a premium in the money markets, and until they matured they could not be exchanged for others at a less rate of interest. All additional sums required by the late Government were procured at reduced rates, and such of the old notes as matured were replaced by others at the same reduced interest. The Auditor reported "as the result of three years following Confederation, that of $4,759,335, expended on capital works, $2,278,234 were paid out of income, and, although there had been an increase of the public debt for large works of two and a half millions, the credit of the country had so improved that the interest payable on the whole had only increased $2,325." The loans for the Intercolonial and North-West guaranteed by the British Government, also helped to make a lower average, and, in addition to all, during the last four years a large amount of the old notes or bonds bearing five, six and seven per cent fell due and were redeemed by the money raised from the bonds sold at four per cent; although sold at a discount as I have previously shown.

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Thus, by taking out nearly fourteen millions bearing mostly six per cent.—the House will bear in mind that they could not be taken out until they matured—and by adding fifty-three millions at four per cent the average over the whole indebtedness is reduced, but not so much for the actual cash received, as would appear by the statements, for the reason that the Minister of Finance sold our notes at a discount, and we are paying interest on that four millions, that was not cash—never received. So much, hon. gentlemen, for the boast of the Secretary of State, and the member for Toronto (Mr. Brown), that they have improved the public credit, as shown in a reduction of the rate of interest. Yet, after all the boasting and special pleading of the hon. gentlemen, the hard fact remains, that last year we had a deficit of nearly two millions.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, No.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Well, $1,900,000. And there is this year another deficit amounting to nearly the same, and my hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) puts the very proper question—what measures they propose to meet these successive deficits? The hon. gentlemen claim that the gross expenditure of last year being less than that of the previous year, there is sufficient evidence of their determination to retrench and reduce the public expenditures. We deny this, as it has been fully shown that the reduction of the gross expenditure is mainly due, either to the completion of certain services, or the temporary withholding of necessary aid to others, and not to any real attempt to economize and reduce the controllable expenditure. We know this, that when these gentlemen came fresh from the people, solemnly pledged to the strictest economy, they rushed into extravagance of expenditure unprecedented in the history of this country, and have only been stopped in their career by the efforts of my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Macpherson) and the efforts that have been made elsewhere. Instead of taking credit to themselves for this pause, they ought, in justice to my hon. friend, and those who have labored with him, to have awarded the credit to those who deserved it. It may be questioned how far these efforts have influenced them. The hon. Secretary of State himself admits in his own letters, that the public discussions on the expenses incurred by the Government have led them to retrench. I refer to the correspondence between the Agent-General and the hon. Secretary of State, in regard to the London office in which he (Mr. Scott) confesses, that "the great and growing expense of the London office has formed the subject for much newspaper criticism in Canada, and the Government regret being obliged to adopt the course now proposed as the only feasible means of restricting the expenditure within reasonable limits."

I give this as one of the many evidences existing, that the strong protest in Parliament and through the press by the Opposition against the reckless extravagance which has marked the career of this Government, has alone checked them. To day they stand face to face with a second enormous deficit and yet make no worthy effort to retrieve their position. The Prodigal Son has never largely commanded our esteem, but we can at least say this of him, that when he had spent his patrimony and was bought face to face with the husks, he voluntarily arose and retraced his steps, but this Government that poured out the public money with a prodigality unheard of, and that has been for two years facing the husks of deficit, take no steps backwards to retrieve their position unless driven, as it were, at the point of the bayonet. When my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Macpherson) concluded his able argument, and asked the leader of the Government in this House what reduction he proposed in the controllable expenditure, or how he expected to meet the deficits and make income and expenditure harmonize, what was the answer? Will the country believe it that to so vital a question as this, a member of the Government, the hon. Secretary of State, coolly replied "by waiting in the hopes of better times"? Does the hon. member of the Government fail to appreciate the gravity of our position, or does he offer this as an insult to this Senate? Such an answer insults not only the intelligence of this House, but the country that is viewing with the deepest alarm trade embarrassed, industry paralyzed, the public treasury unable to meet expenditure, and a Government folding their hands in utter indifference "waiting in the hope of better times." Dickens, the great master of fiction, sketches for our amusement, Wilkins Micawber waiting for years "in the hope of better times," always waiting, always hoping, and always selling or trying to sell his bond, his I. O. U. at any discount in the London market. We have all been more or less amused at Micawber's eccentricities, and whilst sympathizing with his family have laughed at his oft repeated declaration that "something was sure to turn up." But here, to-night, we have something beyond even the fruitful imagination of a Dickens. We have men pretending to govern this country—men holding the interests of four millions of people in their hands, who, when appealed to on behalf of those interests, coolly tell us "wait in the hope of better times," to wait, for "something better is sure to turn up." We must put aside fiction, close the volume, and let it rest as does its dead author, for truth is stranger far. To-night we stand amazed in the living presence of the Dominion Micawber.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The hon. member from Toronto (Mr. Brown) follows in nearly the same vein. He is, however, more ardent in his hopes—more confident that the good time is just at hand. He assumes a new character, and plays the role of Colonel Sellars in Mark Twain's "Gilded Age." No matter how dark the outlook, how discouraging the circumstances or delusive the scheme, the Colonel smiled in bland confidence, and assured everyone that "there were millions in it." So does the hon. Senator come beaming on us with the assurance that "we are not embarrassed! We have plenty of money! Every penny has been met. We have had two bad harvests and some bad weather, but the clouds are breaking, and I see the sun rise," and to his vision, at least, "there are millions in it" to meet these annual deficits. Do these hon. gentlemen expect to satisfy the country by such language? Do they hope to maintain the public credit by this course? It is impossible to overrate the importance of preserving our credit, and unquestionably it must suffer if we permit annual deficits of millions. It is, therefore, the plain and imperative duty of the Government—a duty owing alike to the country and to our present bondholders,—to take such action as will prevent their recurrence, and preserve our credit at home and abroad.

LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

MOTION FOR RETURN.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN moved:—

"That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before this House, a copy of all contracts, telegrams and agreements made in and about, and relating to the Service of the Marine and Fishery Department at Prince Edward Island, since the entry of said Island into the Dominion, in July, 1873."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT asked the hon. Senator to mention the papers he specially required, and they would be brought down. This motion covered everything that had transpired, since Prince Edward Island entered the Confederation, between that Province and the Marine and Fisheries Department.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN said he only wanted copies of contracts.

Hon. Mr. McLelan.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said that would involve a cost of six or eight hundred dollars for copying, and he would not promise the return this Session.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN said he specially wanted contracts connected with the lighthouse service.

Hon. Mr. MILLER suggested that the motion might be allowed to pass and the hon. Senator could afterwards hand in a list of what he wanted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—With that understanding I will let it pass.

The motion was agreed to.

ALBERTON POST OFFICE, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN enquired:—

"Whether it is the intention of the Government to raise the salary of the Postmaster, and procure a suitable Post Office in the Town of Alberton, Prince Edward Island?"

He said the rising town of Alberton, since Confederation, had not been given the postal accommodation necessary for such a place. He merely called the attention of the Government to the fact that the Post Office in Alberton was self-sustaining—the receipts being from $700 to $1,000 per year—while the Postmaster received only $160 salary a year. At present, the office was kept in the postmaster's store. The object of his enquiry was to point out the necessity of giving the postmaster a salary similar to that of the postmaster at Georgetown, and also to furnish him with a suitable office.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said Messrs. Yeo and Perry, members of the House of Commons, had brought this matter under the notice of the Postmaster-General, and he understood it was not yet decided what course would be taken. The Government were considering the matter.

CASCUMPEC HARBOR.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN enquired:—

"Whether it is the intention of the Government to place a sum in the estimates for the improvement of Cascumpec Harbor, Prince Edward Island?"

He said he had brought up this matter last year and the year before, and he observed in another place, the Premier had stated that it was not the intention of the Government to place a sum in the estimates for the purpose of making this improvement. He desired to call the attention of the hon. the Secretary of State to the fact, that Casumpec Harbor was the only one on the north side of Prince Edward Island which afforded a place of resort to fishing vessels. There used to be eighteen or twenty feet of water in the harbor, and it not only furnished accommodations for the vessels owned in the Island, engaged in the fishing trade, but also for vessels from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. He had seen three hundred vessels in the harbor at one time, when the water was deep enough to accommodate them. Any one at all conversant with the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and knowing the size of vessels from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and the United States, engaged in fishing, must be aware that Casumpec was the only harbor on the north side of the Island where a vessel could take refuge during a gale in the fishing season. In consequence of the condition in which the harbor now was, there was frequently considerable loss of life, when a north-east wind prevailed. In two great gales some hundred had been wrecked, and there had been very great loss of life. During the present season two vessels had been wrecked, with the complete loss of their crews, in consequence of the absence of a harbor of refuge on the north coast of the Island. The late Government thought this matter of such importance, that they sent an engineer to examine this harbor. His report was in the archives, and the representatives of the Island had been led to believe that as soon as the Government saw their way clear, they would make the necessary improvements. It was exceedingly important that there should be a harbor of refuge on the north side of the Island, in the immediate vicinity of the fishing ground, and he was sure if the Government would look into the matter, they would see the absolute necessity, of furnishing some such protection to the fishermen of the Gulf. A sum was placed in the estimates last year for the building of a breakwater at the mouth of Malpec Harbor, and he was inclined to believe that the Government was led to suppose that this improvement was in the interest of the fishermen, but so far as the improvement of that harbor was concerned, the money was completely wasted. Instead of a breakwater it was more of a wharf which should be built by the Local Government. He would urge upon the Government not only to direct their attention to this matter, but to take steps to improve St. Peter's Harbor, which was further down the coast. He might say, with regard to another harbor in Prince Edward Island—he referred to Souris, on the other side of the Island—there was a breakwater building there which no doubt was necessary. He visited the breakwater last Fall, and was satisfied that as soon as the gales came it would break away. He understood that such had been the case, and that a sum of money had been placed in the estimates to rebuild it. Now, if the same plan were followed again, he predicted that the same item would appear in the estimates next year. He considered the improvement of that harbor most necessary, but the plan on which the breakwater had been built, as any gentleman acquainted with maritime matters would know, was such that in the first gale of wind the work would topple over.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said the Government were considering what plan of improvement they would adopt for the purpose of adapting the harbor for the entrance of large vessels. According to the survey made, he understood the expense would be considerable.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—$50,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That estimate would probably be exceeded, as it was a matter of some doubt how the gaps could be closed. As they were narrowed the sea would break in on either side, and the expense would be considerably in excess of the amount estimated. At the present time it was not contemplated to do anything beyond what he had said. If any plan could be discovered by which the effect sought for by the hon. gentleman could be brought about, the Government would be glad to consider it.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN said, if the Government would have a re-survey of the harbor made they would find the improvement could be made for half the money. He believed it could be done better and cheaper by sub-marine blasting. The bar of the harbor, for a distance of a cable's length, could be blasted and removed for about $20,000. While attending the Fisheries Commission in Halifax, last year, this matter was brought to the notice of the Commission by the representatives of the United States. They reported that there was no harbor of refuge on the north coast of Prince Edward Island, where vessels could take shelter during a gale of wind. This was no mere local matter, but one of importance to every one interested in the Gulf fisheries.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand vessels drawing from twelve to fifteen feet of water can enter.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN said, twelve feet was the highest water now. He had known it to be sixteen feet, but, at the present time, no vessel drawing twelve feet of water could enter, and in a gale of wind no vessel drawing anything like that could approach it. The consequence was, vessels were frequently blown ashore, and there was great loss of life. He himself had a vessel with which he was connected, lost with all hands.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH said his attention had been called to this matter by the fishermen of his own county of Lunenburg. He believed that more of the fishermen in his county resorted to that shore than probably there were in all Prince Edward Island altogether. They had frequently spoken to him of the perils of that coast in consequence of no harbor of refuge being there. He was not aware of the nature of the improvements which the Government proposed to make, but he earnestly hoped the Government would find some means of appropriating a sufficient sum of money, to secure a proper harbor of refuge there for the protection of fishermen. He knew there had been large loss of life and property to the fishermen of the county from which he came.

THE SALMON FISHERIES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

MOTION FOR PAPERS.

Hon. Dr. CARRALL moved :—

He said :—I understand that only one application has been made from British Columbia for this right; therefore for any information I am likely to get, I already possess it. I believe this is growing to be a most important business which has not been well considered throughout the Dominion at large, and especially on the Pacific coast. A history of the salmon fisheries would be the subject of quite a speech, but I may briefly say the industry of salmon fishing on the Pacific coast is of a recent date, especially that relating to exportation. Formerly for home consumption, the Sacramento River afforded sufficient food, but since exportation has commenced the Sacramento has been altogether fished out. The Columbia River has also been overfished, and to such an extent that during the past fishing season, out of some ten or twelve canneries, five at least were obliged to shut down, in consequence of the shortness of the run of fish. The result has been that gentlemen interested in that industry, and whose canned salmon have obtained quite a reputation in European, Australian, and other markets, have associated themselves with some of our own people in British Columbia, and commenced the industry of canning salmon there. They made an uncommonly successful fishing season last year, but, having in view the experience of other large fishing grounds on the Pacific coast, these gentlemen have become apprehensive that the result of the terrible slaughter that has been going on in many instances, will be to create a dearth of salmon in the Fraser River. That is a result which is most undesirable, and as the gentlemen engaged in the industry are men of more than average intelligence—men infinitely too wise to kill the goose that laid the golden eggs—they are desirous that a conservative course should be pursued to prevent the fisheries from being totally destroyed. The men interested in canning are willing to meet the Government half-way or three-quarters of the way, or any distance the Government may, in their wisdom, see fit, by self-imposed taxation, to protect the fisheries. The object of my motion is to call the attention of the Government to this important subject, in order that they may adopt some policy which will enable them to accomplish the end which those interested in this industry desire. There is a diversity of opinion as to what that course should be. I hold in my hands a memorandum sent by some members of our delegation to the Marine and Fisheries Department. It is as follows :—

“ THE SENATE.

“ February, 20th. 1878.

“ Sir,—

“ With reference to the question of necessary protection to be given by law to the salmon of British Columbia, on which subject we have already had the honor of a conference with yourself, we, in accordance with your expressed wish, beg to make the following suggestions:

“ In the first place, we might premise that, as the habits of the salmon frequenting the rivers entering into the Pacific Ocean, appear, from the most reliable information to be obtained, to be different to those of the same species on the Atlantic seaboard, any regulations which it might seem well now to put in force should only be of a temporary character, while during the coming season some officer thoroughly conversant with the subject should be sent by the Department to British Columbia, to investigate the matter and report upon it.

“ In the second place, we would propose to prohibit for the coming season, commencing April 1st., the taking of salmon by seine, gill, or other nets, or any fixed or moveable traps, &c., for canning and exportation, above the tidal waters in the rivers of British Columbia. In the Fraser River, which is the principal river fished in this way at present, this regulation would leave available for netting some sixty miles in length of water, extending from the mouth of the river to a place known as Sumass.

“ Thirdly, that the size of the mesh of the nets used should not be less than five inches in extension; that no net should be longer than one-third the width of the river, and no two nets, traps, &c., be fixed or allowed to drift nearer to each other than a distance of 250 yards.

“ Fourthly, as to close time. It would appear that there are three or four distinct

Hon. Dr. Carrall.

“ species of salmon which ascend the rivers of British Columbia at different times of the year, and have different breeding seasons. To protect them all by an annual close time suitable to each, would be practically to close the fisheries all the year round. Under these circumstances, it must be for your Department to consider what duration of weekly close time would be sufficient. We would suggest from 8 a.m., on Saturday till 12 m'dnight on each Sunday, thus allowing the fish two whole days and a night and a half in each week to ascend the rivers free from interference.

“ In the fifth place, the canneries and fish-curing establishments should be compelled to bury their fish offal, or else to utilize it on shore for manure or otherwise. We would not allow the use of the perforated boxes mentioned in the Fisheries Act, 1868. We are of opinion that the above regulations will be sufficient for the present, if duly enforced. We are sure they will be in no way offensive to those already engaged in the fisheries, or detrimental to their interests, while, at the same time, they will afford the salmon a fair chance of reaching the spawning beds in the higher reaches of the rivers in sufficient quantities. But it is essential that active, efficient, and well-paid overseers or bailiffs should be appointed to enforce the carrying out of the regulations in their entirety, and this especially on the Fraser River.

“ We will take this opportunity of calling your attention to the question of the advisability of at once organizing a fish-breeding establishment in British Columbia. It has, doubtless, come to your knowledge that during the past fishing season, the proprietors of the different canning establishments on the Fraser River, being called together by Mr. Anderson, the Inspector of Fisheries for British Columbia, voluntarily invited the imposition of certain taxes on themselves and the establishments in order to raise a certain sum to supplement any grant which might be made by the Government of the Dominion for such a purpose. Their prudence, and foresight, and willing liberality, cannot be too highly commended, and it would seem that the Government could hardly do less than meet them half way. The experience so dearly gained in all rivers of the extraordinary way in which the numbers of salmon annually decrease unless some such means are taken for their preservation and artificial increase, would clearly point to the advisability of establishing such an inexpensive, and, at the same time, useful and remunerative concern, at an early date. Besides the security which would be given by such an undertaking with regard to the regular annual supply of the fish frequenting the rivers of British Columbia, it is considered of great importance to introduce in them the very large and valuable species of salmon found in the Columbia River, in the neighboring United States, but unknown in our Province. We would ask to call your attention to the fact, that it was solely with the above object "in view that the offer above alluded to, with reference to taxation on fishermen and fishing implements on the part of the fishermen, was made, and not with a view of meeting the expense attendant on the employment of Fishery Overseers or Water Bailiffs. An industry which, in almost the first year of its establishment, exports fish approaching in value to half a million of dollars, is clearly of such direct and indirect value to the Dominion as large as to warrant the Government in going to a certain expense to secure its continuance; and it would hardly seem just that, while Indians and others can, without taxation and unfettered, secure fish for home consumption, that some should be taxed severely because the fish they take may have a different destination.

"We have the honor to be,

"Sir,

"Your obedient humble servants,

"(Signed.) CLEMENT CORNWALL,

"F. J. ROSCOE,

"EDGAR DEWDNEY."

"The Hon.

"The Minister of

"Marine and Fisheries."

I endorse fully the suggestion in this memorial, that a competent officer should be sent out by the department, to examine into and report on the habits of the salmon on the Pacific coast. I think the close season, suggested in the memorial, would be rather limited, and the salmon might not take advantage of the particular hours set apart on Sunday, to allow them to run up the river. I know very little myself about the eccentricities of this fish, but I have read some interesting articles from Frank Buckland, on the instinct of salmon, and their cunning in evading their enemies, while running up the river to their spawning beds. I am given to understand that the exportation of canned salmon from British Columbia during the past year, amounted to half a million of dollars. That, of course, with the number of hands it employs, the wages paid, the importation of tin and solder for canning purposes, constitutes an important item in the industries of our new country. Last season was the first in which this business has been successfully tested, and it has given an assurance of a great future for this industry in British Columbia. Of course we quote the result with some pride, as the business is only in its infancy, though it has made a most wonderful start, and has met with extraordinary favor in the European markets. A gentleman arrived from England to-day, who has charge of a canning establishment out in British Columbia. He represents a good deal of British capital, which has been invested in this enterprise on the Skeena River, where there is a cannery in successful operation. He tells me that he has seen the greatest lights on this subject, in Europe, and they had informed him that unless some action of a legislative character be taken at once, our great salmon fisheries, which should be an inexhaustible source of wealth and employment for our population, will be destroyed in a very few years. He illustrated the value of good salmon fisheries, by saying he knew of a stream in Ireland, at Ballanarinch, which had been bought for £1,800, and which was sold eight years subsequently for £48,000. I stood aghast at this. I considered Munchausen's story, and realized for the first time that I really knew nothing about the value of our salmon fisheries in British Columbia, when prices were liable to go up as rapidly as that. I think the Government should take some action on this matter as soon as they can intelligently do so. To us in British Columbia, it is really a question of bread and butter, and I therefore invite the attention of the Government seriously to the matter. I hold in my hand two reports of considerable importance to those who take an interest in the subject, but they are not of sufficient general interest to warrant me in reading them to the House. One is from Mr. Anderson, Inspector of Fisheries out there, a very intelligent gentleman who has given the subject a great deal of attention. He recommends in addition to the prudent legislation which I have suggested to the Government, based upon reliable information to be obtained by an officer of the department, the establishment of "hatcheries" at different localities which he has named. There is no doubt that this industry, if properly managed, is bound to be one of the most important on the Pacific coast—to be one co-equal with the lumber interest, which is very large, and the gold quartz, which at present is the chief source of the wealth of our province. It is to be regretted that our geographical position has placed us in contiguity with a powerful nation—a nation which embodies in its rank and file many noble men, but unfortunately, from their system—their unhappy system, or their want of system—they are a people with whom it is impossible to deal honestly as a nation—a nation who always deal dishonestly and go back on their promises and plighted faith; a nation with whom the hon. Senator from Toronto (Mr. Brown), with all his journalistic experience and natural ability could not deal without being “euchered” in his proposed reciprocity treaty. This nation now refuses to pay the award of the Halifax Commissioners. I mention this fact merely to show, that the Yankees attach some importance to this fish question. From what little knowledge I have of the Minister who presides over the Fisheries Department, I believe attention will be given to this matter, although I have not the pleasure of knowing what administrative powers he has brought to bear in managing the Marine and Fisheries.

Hon. Dr. Carrall.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—I did not understand from the remarks of my hon. friend whether it was his intention to ask the Government to lease those salmon fisheries or not. If that is his object, it is a very important one, which is entirely at variance with all the laws of the Dominion. I am not aware that the Government have the power to lease this stream, unless under certain restrictions. I am not aware, as he says, that the habits of the salmon are different on the Pacific coast from what they are on the Atlantic. I refer my hon. friend to the report of Spencer F. Baird to the United States Congress, on this subject. A very large amount of ova was taken from the Maritime Provinces a few years ago and placed in the rivers of the United States. The question came up in Congress, as to whether the habits of the salmon on the Pacific coast were not different from those of the salmon on the Atlantic coast, and Mr. Baird settled the controversy by proving that the habits of the fish were the same in both localities. Therefore, I say it would be out of the power of the Government to lease the fisheries of Frazer River without applying the laws of the Dominion to them. There are localities in the rivers in which the salmon are in the habit of spawning, but though they have certain runs they may change them in consequence of offal being thrown into the river, or from over-fishing. I think it would be the duty of the Government to send an accomplished officer out to examine the river, and report on the condition of it. He will find, however, that the habits of the salmon on the Pacific coast are the same as those on the Atlantic coast, although the fish on the Pacific are somewhat larger. There is a clause in the Fisheries Act, which empowers the Government to treat this matter on its merits. I merely ask for information whether the fishery laws of the Dominion have been applied to British Columbia or not?

Hon. Dr. CARRALL—I am not aware that the Government have adopted any policy with respect to them, but I am aware that they are most anxious to have proper information laid before them, and until they have it they are not justified in applying any act. I venture to say that there should be a close season, if there has been sufficient knowledge of the habits of the fish obtained on which to establish a close season. The Indians are allowed to catch fish and shoot deer out of season for food, and if any attempt were made to stop them they would not understand it, and there would be another Sitting Bull difficulty. If the Government only give the salmon Sunday afternoons to run, they will have to predict more closely than Vennor in order to say on what Sunday afternoon they will take their piscatorial excursions.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Victoria)—The hon. gentleman who brought this question before the House said that he would express no opinion as to leasing part of the road; but I have no hesitation in saying that the fisheries should not be let. It will be attended with a great deal of inconvenience and injustice to other people, if any one man or company, is allowed a monopoly of any part of the river. Then there are the Indian rights which must be taken into account. They have fished from time immemorial over every part of that river, and they could not understand being excluded from it now. I know that leases have been applied for, and I venture to think that the Government would never give such a special privilege to any person over that river. The time has now arrived when such an important industry should be protected, and it ought to be attended to at once. We therefore recommend that the Government should send a gentleman of experience to look into it and report. Although we know little of the habits of the salmon frequenting our rivers, yet we can recommend the Government to make certain regulations relating to the fisheries, such as licensing boats, a certain size of mesh, nets of a certain length and depth, a close season, if necessary, and the removal of weirs and obstructions. This is bound to be a great industry, and the sooner it is fostered and protected the better. It deserves earnest consideration at the hands of the Government.

Hon. Mr. CORNWALL—I had not intended to speak upon this question, but as I think the matter has been left in rather an involved state at present, and as I take a great interest in the subject, I will shortly allude to it. The memorandum mentioned by the hon. gentleman which the members from British Columbia had the honor to address to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, on this subject, just touches four or five different provisions which they thought should be put in force during the coming season. We commenced by saying that this regulation should only be temporary, as so little is known of the habits of the salmon on the Pacific coast, and the further suggestion was made, that the Department should send out some person, competent to deal with the subject, to report, so that the Government could, hereafter, act definitely upon it. In the meantime we proposed several things that should go into force this year, as soon as possible, because the run of salmon begins immediately, and one of the principal runs sometimes commences in April. We touched, first of all on two or three subjects, such as width of nets, size of mesh, &c., which would not be of interest to the House; and then we came to a point of considerable importance to the salmon fisheries of British Columbia. We suggested that in the Fraser River no fishing by nets, for canning purposes should be allowed above tidal water. That would give sixty miles of fishing with gill nets up the river, as the tide runs up that distance—sufficient fishing ground for all the canneries likely to be employed in that business. After having passed those tidal waters, the salmon have to pay a very heavy toll at almost every few yards of passage up the stream, because the river shores are lined with bands of

Hon. Mr. MacDonald.

Indians, who catch the fish in extraordinary numbers, so that, even if we confine the catch with nets to a certain distance, the fish are killed in great quantities by other means. We next come to the important consideration of the necessary close time. There is no doubt whatever that there are four different species of salmon in the rivers on the Pacific coast, and they ascend them at different seasons, and, in this case, to protect them all by the annual close season—the usual way of protecting them in other rivers—would be practically to close the salmon fisheries all the year round. It is the duty of the Department to ascertain what the close season should be. We suggest two days and a night and a half in each week, from 8 o'clock on Saturday morning till 12 midnight on Sunday, as a close season to allow the salmon to ascend the rivers free from interference. My hon. friend from Victoria seems to have an idea that the granting of leases would be prejudicial to the rights of the people generally. I cannot see it in that light at all. I consider that, in a river the size of the Fraser, if certain reaches along that sixty miles, from the mouth to the head of the tide water, were given to certain individuals, the fish would be more easily protected than when the fish are common to all. It is just the same with the case of a common where everybody can turn out his cow or his jackass to feed. There never is any grass on such places, but let the land get into the hands of private individuals, and they will fence it round, and so protect it that the grass will soon become good upon it. There are many other streams in British Columbia which will probably support one cannery, but two such establishments would fish the stream out and neither could make a profit. In such cases, it would be wise to lease a stream to one party or company who would see that it was to their advantage to protect it as much as possible. This is an interesting subject, and I could easily dilate at length upon it, but at present I shall content myself with seconding the efforts of my hon. friends from British Columbia, in trying to impress upon the members of the Government in this House the necessity of early attention to this matter, and putting in force some such regulations as we have suggested.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sure we are all glad to hear that the salmon fisheries of British Columbia are likely to become an established and important branch of industry, and it is certainly desirable that the fisheries should be protected as much as possible. I shall have great pleasure in bringing this matter under the notice of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, as well as the suggestions of the hon. gentlemen who have brought this subject before this House. There has been but one application to the Government for a lease of the river as yet.

The subject was then allowed to drop, and the order was discharged.

THE CAMPBELL DIVORCE CASE.

PETITION OF MRS. CAMPBELL.

On the following order being called :

“ That the Petition of Eliza Maria Campbell, praying for leave to prosecute her cause of divorce in forma pauperis, &c., &c., brought up and laid on the table on the twenty-seventh day of February last, and read on the eighth day of March, instant, be referred to a Select Committee, to consist of the Hon. Messieurs Aikins, Leonard, Dickey, Haythorne, Dickson, Cornwall, Seymour, Kaulbach, and the mover, to report thereon with all convenient speed.”

Hon. Mr. REESOR asked to have the matter stand over until Thursday.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said the motion was out of order as the Private Bills Committee had reported against the petition.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD suggested that the hon. gentleman should withdraw his motion as it was out of order.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The following is the report of the Private Bills Committee on this petition :

“ be, with the bill of last Session,’ and find that no notice has been given, and do not recommend the suspension of the 51st Rule.”

Without the recommendation of the Private Bills Committee, no such motion as the hon. gentleman proposes can be made in this House.

Hon. Mr. REESOR said the motion could be made if the House chose to suspend the rule.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said the motion could only be allowed to stand by the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER—The 18th rule of this House provides that “ no motion to suspend, modify, or amend any rule or part thereof, shall be in order except on one day’s notice, in writing, specifying precisely, the rule, or part of rule, proposed to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof.” And the concluding paragraph of the rule provides that “ no motion for the suspension of the rules upon any petition for a private bill shall be in order, unless the same shall have been recommended by the Committee on Standing Orders.” The hon. gentleman, if he moves his motion, will not be in order.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—If this is the ruling of the Speaker of course I must withdraw the motion, although I may state in doing so, that it is a very great hardship to the petitioner to be deprived of redress here, when there is no other place where she can seek for it. Of course she will only have to renew her application next year.

The motion was withdrawn, and the order was discharged.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

FIRST READINGS.

The following bills from the Commons were introduced, and read the first time :—

Bill (6.) “ An Act to authorize and confirm the scheme of arrangement of the Canada Southern Railway Company.”

Bill (8.) “ An Act to authorize the National Insurance Company to reduce its Capital Stock and for other purposes.”

Bill (27.) “ An Act respecting the Northern Railway Company of Canada.”

Bill (26.) An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada."

BIBLE CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY SOCIETY'S BILL

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SIMPSON moved the second reading of Bill (K) to incorporate the Bible Christian Missionary Society. He said although the society were desirous of having the Bill passed without amendment, he was willing to have it amended in the same manner as the Baptist Missionary Society's Bill which had passed the House this Session, and he supposed there would be no objections to it. Four years ago Parliament had passed a Bill incorporating the Wesleyan Methodist body, and had actually gave them more powers than they asked for, and this, he believed, was nothing but what was just and right. In the Bill before the House the Bible Christians did not ask for powers to establish schools or hold property. As a body they were exceedingly simple, worthy and industrious. They furnished fewer inmates for the jails, penitentiaries, asylums, police courts and bankrupt courts than any other body in Canada. He simply asked that the Bill be allowed to go to Committee, and that it receive the same treatment as similar measures which had passed Parliament. An attempt had been made to introduce this Bill in the Ontario Legislature, but Mr. Mowat said, "you cannot get the legislation you desire. The Bill you would get from us would confine you exclusively to Ontario." This being the case, they applied here for an Act of Incorporation, which he hoped would not be denied them.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said he regretted that he would be obliged to move an amendment to this motion, but, in view of the decision of Mr. Speaker the other day (a decision which he felt obliged to say he considered a wrong interpretation of the rules of the House), he must either move the reference of the Bill to the Supreme Court now, or not at all. In Committee the Bill might be so amended as to retain none of its objectionable features, but if it should not, it would then be too late to have a decision as to its constitutionality. He therefore moved :

Hon. Mr. Simpson.

"That the question be not now put but the Bill be referred to the Judges of the Supreme Court for their opinion; whether it is not a measure which falls within the class of subjects exclusively allotted to the Provincial Legislatures, under Section 92, sub-Section 11, of the British North America Act, 1867, relating to 'The Incorporation of Companies with Provincial objects,' and sub-Section 13 of the same Section, relating to 'Property and Civil Rights in the Province,' and Section 93 relating to Education?"

Hon. Mr. MILLER said, while Mr. Speaker's ruling on the occasion referred to was perfectly consistent with the rule of the House, he admitted that doubts had arisen in his mind, since the discussion upon this point had been started by the hon. Senator (Mr. Bellerose) as to whether the rule was a wise or a correct one. He presumed the reason why the rule had been so framed was that the principle of a bill was affirmed or disapproved of at the second reading, and, at the first blush, it seemed proper that if any doubt existed as to the jurisdiction of the House, that would be the proper stage at which to move its reference to the Supreme Court. That was very good so far as it referred to the principle of a bill, but suppose a measure should not be ultra vires at the second reading, but should be so amended in committee as to contain something which might raise a question as to jurisdiction, under the rule, the House could not refer it to the Supreme Court. He thought it was worthy of consideration whether that rule should not be changed. It seemed to him inconvenient that the House should be confined, in referring a bill to the Supreme Court, to one reading.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD said, as Chairman of the Committee which had revised the standing orders, he could say that this rule did not limit the House as the hon. Senator (Mr. Miller) supposed. A Bill could be referred to the Supreme Court at any stage before the second reading. This was a new rule, framed in consequence of the establishment of the Supreme Court, and it had taken up a good deal of the attention of the Committee. After full consideration it was considered, for the reasons which had just been given by the hon. Senator (Mr. Miller), proper to limit the reference to any stage before the second reading. It might be thought desirable, upon further consideration, to enlarge the rule and permit the reference at any stage of a Bill. He thought this would be very desirable, for the reasons which had just been stated. At the same time he considered that the decision of the Speaker was quite correct. The amendment was quite in order, but any hon. gentleman might give notice to change the rule, so that a Bill might be referred to the Supreme Court at any stage.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY entirely agreed in the correctness of the ruling on the occasion referred to. At the same time he concurred in the suggestion that the rule might be modified, because it was manifest that a strict application of it might occasion great inconvenience. One case had been mentioned by the hon. Senator from Richmond. Another was this, a Bill might be introduced containing clauses contrary to the British North America Act, which would be struck out in committee. Under this rule no opportunity would be given to amend it, and the Bill must go to the Supreme Court, while its objectionable features might be removed in committee. If this Bill, which was now before the House, were allowed to go to committee, he had no doubt it would come back in such a form that it would be allowed to pass. He hoped the amendment would be allowed to stand, since the hon. Senator from Bowmanville had assured the House he was willing that the Bill should be amended in the same way as the Bill to incorporate the Baptist Missionary Society. He trusted that the chairman of the committee on Standing Orders would take steps to have the rule modified in the meantime, and the Bill could stand until the modifications were made to enable the House, if thought necessary, to refer the Bill to the Supreme Court at any stage before its final passage.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE regretted that he had not been met a few days ago in the same spirit that was manifested on this occasion. He believed it was right that a Bill should be referred before the second reading, before the principle was admitted, but he did not approve of limiting this course to that stage. Suppose one or two clauses were added to a Bill in committee, which would make it doubtful as to its constitutionality, should the House be denied the right of asking the Judges of the Supreme Court for their decision upon it? He had in his hand a copy of the rule suggested by the Speaker last year, which he considered preferable to the one adopted by the committee. It would only need some slight change to make it suitable.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said the only fault with the existing rule, was that it limited the House to a particular stage of a Bill. It gave every other power that the House required. It was so general that it included everything without specifying anything.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said the rule should not be allowed to stand as it was. As to the Bill before the House, he had no objection to the second reading being postponed, until the rule could be amended.

Hon. Mr. MILLER suggested that the hon. Senator might allow the Bill to be read the second time.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said the Bill as it stood was unconstitutional, and the principle ought not to be admitted by the House.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said he understood the rule was to be so amended, that the Bill could be referred to the Supreme Court, if not amended in committee in such a manner as to remove its objectionable features.

Hon. Mr. BELLEROSE said if such were the case, he had no objection to the Bill being read the second time, but he gave notice that he opposed it, not only on the ground that it affected civil rights, but also because it affected education, and unless the Bill was amended, he would move that the measure be referred to the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said the House seemed to be of opinion that the rule was altogether too stringent. He quite concurred in that opinion, and thought it was a mistake in the House to tie itself up in such a manner. The hon. Senator from Bowmanville having declared that he proposed to make certain modifications, he saw no objection to letting the Bill pass the second reading. Having made such a declaration, the hon. Senator was bound by it.

Hon. Mr. SIMPSON said he had sent a copy of the Baptist Bill, passed this Session, to the parties interested in the Bill before the House, showing the important changes that had been made in it, and asked whether such a measure would be of any use to them. The reply was that they would rather have the Bill as it stood, but they were willing to accept whatever the Senate chose to give them. His intention was to have the Bill amended in committee, in such a manner as to bring it in harmony with the Baptist Bill to which he had referred.

The amendment was withdrawn.

The Bill was then read the second time.

RAILWAY ACT EXTENSION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER moved the second reading of Bill (38) to extend to the Province of Prince Edward Island, the Railway Act, 1868, and certain acts amending the same. He explained that the object of the measure was simply to extend the Act of 1868, and all subsequent amendments, to Prince Edward Island.

The Bill was read the second time.

QUEBEC FIRE ASSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER moved the second reading of Bill (21) to amend, and to consolidate as amended the several acts relating to the Quebec Fire Assurance Company. He said when this Bill was presented in the Commons its principal object was to enable the company to dispose of the shares of stockholders, on which nothing had been paid, but the committee to which it was referred, thought proper to consolidate this and several other acts relating to the Quebec Fire Assurance Company. The Bill, therefore, contained very little new legislation. The eighth clause empowered the directors to dispose of the shares of shareholders who had omitted or refused to pay instalments due thereon. Notice must be given once a week for two months in the Canada Gazette, and in two newspapers, one English and one French, in the city of Quebec, declaring the shares to be forfeited, and that they must be sold. The proceeds of the sale are to be applied to paying instalments due and costs of sale, and, in case there be a surplus, it is to be handed over to the proprietor. The eighteenth clause gives the company power to establish agencies in other provinces besides Quebec.

The Bill was read the second time,

BANK OF LIVERPOOL BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH moved the second reading of Bill (22) "An Act respecting the Bank of Liverpool." He said this Bill contained no new or exceptional legislation. The bank having sustained heavy losses in the course of its business, asked to have its shares reduced and to be authorized to issue preferential stock.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said the banking institutions of the town of Liverpool had not achieved a very desirable reputation. It was the only community that had brought discredit on the banking institutions of Nova Scotia, and the House and the Committee on Banking and Commerce should understand that this was a subject that should arrest their vigilant attention. It was well that they should know the history of those banks in Liverpool. He felt it his duty as a representative of Nova Scotia, to bring this subject before the House.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH said there was no desire to relieve the bank of any of its liabilities. The only object they had in view was to reduce the value of the stock.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND thought the House should have more information before passing this Bill. He had good reason to know that the banks of Liverpool that had sprung up like mushrooms from time to time had injured those who had anything to do with them. Consequently the House should have more information before consenting to the second reading of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY said, while it was perfectly proper to call attention to this Bill, yet, upon looking over its provisions, they did not seem to be open to very severe criticism. At the same time he thought it was but right they should be narrowly scanned by the Committee. If it contained any provision to relieve the shareholders from any of their liabilities, he would be very reluctant to let it pass. There had been other bills before the House this Session which deserved to be closely scanned, and it would be the duty of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, to see that this measure, when returned to the House, contained nothing objectionable. Under the circumstances he thought his hon. friends should be satisfied with calling attention to the nature of the Bill, and allow it to pass the second reading.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH said, the Bill as introduced in the House of Commons, contained objectionable clauses, but these had been amended. He could not understand the objections of the hon. Senator from Prince Edward Island (Mr. HAVILAND) who, without pointing out any provisions of the Bill to which he could take exception, had cavilled at it.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND said, it was the duty of a member when introducing a bill to explain its object, particularly when it was proposed to reduce the stock of a banking institution.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH said, he had already explained the object of the measure.

The Bill was read the second time.

ONTARIO MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE ASSOCIATION'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. REESOR moved the second reading of Bill (16) to incorporate the Ontario Mutual Life Assurance Association. He said, the object of the measure was to extend to the Dominion the powers which this company had been exercising under an Act of the Ontario Legislature.

The Bill was read the second time.

STADACONA INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the second reading of Bill 10, "An Act to authorize the Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance
Hon. Mr. Dickey.

"Company to reduce its capital stock, and for other purposes." He said he had taken the liberty the other day to give notice that he would move the second reading of this Bill, not because he had any particular interest in it, but because no other member had risen to do so. The Bill had been made necessary by the great fire in St. John, which had almost ruined the Company. They had at first intended to abandon the insurance business altogether, but since then changed their minds and decided to reduce the capital stock and the number of directors, and discontinue the business of life insurance. They proposed, in the first clause, to reduce the shares from $100 to $30, and that each shareholder should be liable to pay up $25 on each share held by him, in addition to the $35 already paid. The Bill provided that no liability already incurred by the Company should be affected by it. He understood there was no objections to the principle of the Bill, and any amendments which might be considered necessary could be made in committee.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL said he did not object to the principle of the Bill, but it certainly required some amendment. The Company had decided, in consequence of heavy losses, to give up business altogether, but subsequently they changed their minds, and it seemed hardly fair to compel stockholders to go on with the business, whether they would or not, and to pay $25 on each share. There should be a clause allowing shareholders to retire from the Company if they so desired.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY said no explanation had been given as to how those who held life insurance policies were to be protected.

Hon. Mr. RYAN said the last clause of the Bill, which empowered the Company to withdraw the amount deposited with the Government on re-insuring life policy-holders in other companies, was a most important one and should be closely watched. He called attention to the fact that, though the Bill was called "The Stadacona Fire and Life Insurance Company," there was no provision for altering the name, although there was a clause to give up life insurance. This was another example of bills coming from another place where they boasted their measures were carefully investigated. Of course it would receive attention in the Senate, and he merely mentioned it to show the fallacy of saying that, because a bill passed the other House, it should pass the Senate without consideration.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said the experience of years had proved that half the work of the Senate towards the latter part of each Session was amending bills which came from the House of Commons in an imperfect state.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS said this was practically a Bill to incorporate a new company. After the large fire at St. John the company found itself so embarrassed that it had to call up the payments on shares, and, he believed, the liabilities had, at that time, been fully met. It was quite understood then the Company were not going to continue in operation, and, in consequence, their business passed away from them to other companies. Now, it was proposed to form a new company, and he thought it unfair to compel stockholders in the old company to be stockholders in the new one. He thought that was a principle which should not be sanctioned by the Senate. No doubt the Bill would be amended in committee.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL said he had the good fortune to be one of the shareholders of this company, and knew something of its affairs. He thought the position of the company was quite as good as that of many other insurance companies, and was not in such a precarious situation as would be inferred from what had been stated by some hon. gentlemen. He did not think the intention of the company had ever been to discontinue the business. Before the St. John fire, several fires had occurred by which the company was involved in severe losses—there having been seven large fires, within fifteen months. The directors of the company were so much disheartened by the St. John fire, that a majority of them decided to discontinue the business temporarily, and they gave notice that for some time they would not take new policies. To put their customers perfectly at ease, they offered to the policyholders, if they chose, to re-insure in some other companies, if they did not feel satisfied with the solvency of the Stadacona. This course did not meet with the approval of the stock-holders. A meeting of the share-holders of the district was held in Montreal, where it was unanimously resolved to continue the business of the company, and a delegation was appointed to proceed to Quebec, to express that decision. A general meeting was held at Quebec, at which, as far as his information went, an overwhelming majority of the shareholders decided that the company should continue. It was considered at the time, that the first resolution taken by the majority of the directors was to be regretted, but still the company found that since the operations were stopped, it was a prudent measure not to take new risks before the company had settled all the claims due. Since then the position of the company had been better than had been supposed. Several calls had been made on the shareholders to the amount of 20 per cent., forming thirty-five cents on the dollar with the calls already paid, which was considered sufficient to pay all claims against the company, and to leave the necessary deposit required by law in the hands of the Government, and the necessary means to continue business. Since then it had been decided to reduce the business of the company. In fact, the company had been organized on such a footing that in a few months it had done an immense business; but it was thought better, owing to the commercial crisis, and the severe losses suffered, to reduce operations, in order to have it more under the control of the directors in Quebec. It had been said that the business of the company had not been properly managed, but he thought it had been no worse in that respect than any other insurance companies, as the loss had been no greater. It would be remembered that another company came before Parliament a short time ago, asking for the very same legislation this company now sought—a reduction of stock. They would still remain with a large capital, so he could not see how the interests of the public could possibly be injured by this legislation, as a reduction of capital would take place at the same time with a reduction of business.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS said many shareholders had taken stock in this company on the understanding that it was a Life Company as well as a Fire Company, and now, when it ceased to be a Life Company, he would ask the hon. gentleman if he would have the same desire to take stock in it. He believed Parliament had no right to legislate shareholders into any arrangement of the kind without their consent.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL said he thought the modifications asked for were the same as those allowed to other companies. For instance, not very long ago, permission had been granted to another company to strike from its charter Marine Insurance. The liabilities of the present shareholders would remain the same in favor of the policy-holders for the past, and the interested parties would be amply secured.

The Bill was read the second time.

The House adjourned at 10:50 p. m.

THE SENATE.

Wednesday, March 27th.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

After Routine proceedings.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL resumed the adjourned debate on the hon. Mr. Macpherson's inquiry, viz:—

He said:—I am unwilling to resume the debate upon this question without offering to my hon. friend from Saugeen my congratulations upon the effect which his speech of last Session has produced, alike upon friends and opponents, throughout the country. That speech has attracted the attention of both Ministers of the Crown, and the public. Replies have been attempted by the Premier and the Finance Minister in addresses to the country, and by the hon. Secretary of State in this House. His (Mr. Scott's) speech of last Session has been characterized by the Prime Minister, as having been a complete answer to my hon. friend, yet he himself evidently thought otherwise, or he would not have occupied the House with the somewhat weary details which engaged his and our attention some two or three days, a week ago. A reply has also been attempted by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and finally we had the attempt by the hon. gentleman whom we know to be almost the parent of the Ministry, the hon. Senator from Lambton.

Hon. Mr. Aikins.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Not Lambton.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I hope the hon. gentleman will allow me to speak of Mr. Brown as the Senator from Lambton, because he desires to be so designated, and we know, and admire, and speak of my hon. friend (Mr. Vidal) as the Senator from Sarnia. I think my hon. friend from Saugeen is entitled to this congratulation, because on friend and foe the effect of his speech is acknowledged. We see evidence of it in the pains which Ministers take to reply to it, and by the demand which has sprung up for the perusal of the speech itself. I was a witness, with my hon. friend, of the demand for copies in the North-West last summer. The first thing we heard in Winnipeg was a demand for numbers of that speech. The very first thing I heard in this House, after having had opportunities of speaking with hon. gentlemen from all parts of the Dominion—and hon. gentlemen around me heard it as well—were congratulations upon the usefulness of the speech; upon the admirable manner in which the tables were collated, and the effect it was producing throughout the country. The Ministry profess to be surprised at the course pursued by my hon. friend from Saugeen. They profess to find in it something contrary to the course which he has usually pursued, and to find in him a partizan of the late Government, and on party grounds, an opponent of theirs. As to his having been a partizan of the late Administration, all I can say is, when we were in office, I always found him one of your too candid friends, altogether too much so to be comfortable, and he was as often opposing as supporting the Government. I think the course he pursued towards the late Administration he has pursued towards this. He has weighed measures upon their merits and endeavored to deal with them without any reference to partizan feeling. Of course, as the hon. Senator for Lambton said, every member of this House is influenced by party feeling more or less, but I think the tables my hon. friend from Saugeen has collated and used, and the care he has taken, show almost conclusively that he endeavored to be fair. I think I can say he has been fair, and that, if he erred at all, it has been in leaning too much to the side he opposed. The hon. gentleman's motives are plain on the face of the facts he has detailed to the House. He is identified with the prosperity of the Dominion. He has a large stake in the country, as many of us have, he, happily for himself, larger than most of us, and it was but natural that he should have enquired what should be done in the serious state of public affairs in 1876. The hon. gentleman then found the surplus of eight years amounting to $12,000,000, which had grown up under the late Government, and which indicated the immense prosperity that the country had enjoyed, had been converted into the alarming deficit of $1,900,000. Surely that was enough to alarm any one having a large stake in the country. It alarmed all of us, and why should the hon. Senator be accused of being led too far by party feeling, because he saw in that deficit evidence of the disastrous course which was being pursued by the Government, and that he should deem it his duty to draw attention to it? Nothing could be more natural, or could more completely warrant the motto which I see he has put on the publication of his speech: "The situation of this country is alarming enough to arouse the attention of every man who pretends to concern for the country's welfare." It is true the situation was alarming enough to arouse every thinking man's attention. My hon. friend not only saw that deficit but was afraid, unless the attention of the country were called to it, another deficit would follow it, and his apprehensions were unhappily too well founded. The deficit last year amounted, as acknowledged by the Finance Minister, to $1,500,000, and this is short-stated, because there should have been added to that, the amount placed to the debit of the Suspense Account, $343,000. It was attempted to misguide the House upon that point, or at all events to lead the House to understand there was nothing in the entry which ought to be rectified or which did not accurately represent the state of affairs. Now the object of all such entries is to represent to the public mind the true position of public affairs. The entry in question had not that effect. The $343,000 figured as an asset, when in truth it had been expended on the Intercolonial Railway, and should have been charged for the maintenance of that work to Revenue. It makes the country appear as $343,000 more wealthy than it really is. If it had been entered as it should have been it would have increased the deficit by that amount. He who runs may read that a sum of that kind should have been charged to the service for which it was expended, and should not figure in a Suspense Account. You may as well put anything else in the Suspense Account—the supplies purchased for these buildings, or for the canals, for instance. There is no reason why those items should not just as fairly, honestly, and correctly, figure in the Suspense Account as this $343,000, which represents certain rails used in renewals on the Intercolonial Railway, and, therefore, stands just as oil, nuts, locomotives, wear and tear, or any other expense connected with the running of that railway. When that item appears to the debit of the Suspense Account, and figures as an asset, it is quite clear the Public Accounts do not tell the truth with reference to it. No merchant would make such an entry in his accounts, otherwise they would be totally misleading. Happily my hon. friend from Saugeen discovered and pointed it out, and the country will not be so misled again. Undoubtedly, if that $343,000 had been entered, as it ought to have been, the deficit would have been increased by that amount. There is another item, Sales of Public Works, $110,000, which should also be added to the deficit. It is impossible to trace out whether those public works originally figured in Capital Account or not, but I do not think anyone familiar with accounts would say that the item ought to appear as Revenue. Evidently it is an exceptional item, and should not figure as Revenue, and therefore it ought to be added with the item in the Suspense Account, to the $1,500,000, which would make the deficit $1,900,000, or nearly the same deficit as in the preceding year. No wonder my hon. friend's apprehensions were again aroused (and it is fortunate for the country that they were aroused) and he was led to direct public attention again to these facts. The circumstances under which my hon. friend made his speech last year, and his speech this year, and to which these replies have been attempted on behalf of the Government and the hon. Senator from Lambton, will now be understood. The statements which he made last Session were of a very serious character. He said there was an increase of the annual controllable expenditure of 1876 over 1873 of $3,677,000, and in 1876 over 1875 of $717,000. I draw attention particularly to the excess of expenditure of 1876 over 1875, because as to the expenditure of 1875, I think there can be no pretence there was any responsibility by the late Government. They had been out of power for nearly two years, and they cannot be held responsible for the expenditure of 1875. The fact that there was such an excess in the controllable expenditure of 1876 over that of 1873 cannot be denied. The figures are given by my hon. friend in detail, as can be seen by reference to my hon. friend's speech in the official report of the debates of the Senate, and the fact that the increase amounted to $3,677,000, has not been denied by the hon. Secretary of State, or the hon. Senator from Lambton, or by anyone outside of the House. But what is said by the hon. Secretary of State is that a comparison between the expenditures of 1873 and 1875-6 is not fair, because the present Government were so tied down by the Estimates and Bill of Supply of 1873-4, and the legislation of that year, that they had not the opportunity of exercising that economy which they otherwise would have exhibited. These hon. gentlemen say the legislation of 1873-4 fastened on them certain charges which they were obliged to pay, and certain works were commenced which must of necessity be finished, and they were driven to spend for these two reasons money which they otherwise would not have expended. I think it is into the merits of this defence we must enquire if we want to come to an accurate judgment as to the allegations of my hon. friend from Saugeen. The hon. Secretary of State in the first place lays great weight upon the estimates of Mr.

Hon. Mr. Campbell.

Tilley of 1873-4. He says these were the estimates of the late Government, that they showed what public works were contemplated; they were the estimates which the present Government found, and that they were unable to restrict the expenditure because they found these estimates, and the supply based upon them, passed. He says "Look at our expenditures! They did not reach those estimates by more than $300,000, and so the late Government were more extravagant than we have been." That is the position of the hon. Secretary of State. As to the comparison, it seems to me you cannot compare estimates with expenditure. The estimates represent the calculations of the Finance Minister of the day. Whether he makes full or close estimates depends not only on his political leanings, but also on his mental temperament, whether it be of a sanguine or a cautious cast. For instance, we know a gentleman who would be almost sure to think there would be money for every purpose, and who would be disposed to make a very liberal estimate—I speak of him with the greatest respect—Sir A. T. Galt. On the other hand, a gentleman who would be likely, from the nature of his mind, to make a very close estimate, was Sir John Rose. The estimates are only the impression on the mind of the Finance Minister at the time as to what the revenue and expenditure are likely to be, and they do not find the Ministry to the expenditure of the sums they are found to contain. Nobody knows that better than the hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces, but the representatives of all the Provinces know that it does not follow because an item appears in the estimates that it is to be expended. How many times did the item of $500,000 appear in the estimates for the Baie Verte Canal?

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is Capital Account.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—How frequently did items appear for the St. Peter's Canal and a variety of works which were not going to be constructed? There was no absolute pledge they were to be constructed, but the Minister of Finance thought they were to be proceeded with if the revenue continued to increase. If, on the other hand, the revenue showed a falling off they would not go on. It depended entirely on the state of the revenue as it came in whether a large portion of the expenditure would take place or not. So with other works. Items were placed in the Estimates from time to time, but it did not follow that the works were to be proceeded with. It has been the same with this Government, and I will read the result, even this last year, of a comparison between the estimates and expenditure. The hon. gentlemen would be very loath indeed to be charged with their estimates instead of their expenditures.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I made no reference to items charged to Capital Account.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL — I will not make any reference to Capital Account.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman referred to the Baie Verte Canal.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I did so for the purpose of showing that the fact of an item appearing in the Estimates did not necessarily imply that it would be expended. Now, let us look at the Estimates of last Session. There is a large balance brought forward from 1875-6, which had figured in their Estimates and in their Supply Bill, but they would consider it the most unfair thing in the world to be charged with spending money which remained unexpended. Last year the unexpended balance was $773,000. So, neither in the experience of the late Administration, nor in their own practice, have the Estimates indicated, in that accurate manner which the hon. gentleman would have us believe, the actual expenditure, for which the Government must ultimately be responsible. I take it that if any Government were framing Estimates, if they found the revenue buoyant and redundant for a series of years, that would be a satisfactory explanation to Parliament why the Estimates were liberal; and if, on the other hand, the revenue were falling off, that would be ample explanation to the House of Commons why certain works, not commenced, should not be undertaken. Up to the very year in which those Estimates of Mr. Tilley's were framed, the country had happily been in the receipt of a large income, constantly swelling year by year since Confederation. It was no wonder the estimates were full and ample. But does it follow, when these hon. gentlemen found the revenue was not going to keep to the full volume, Mr. Tilley expected that they were to be tied down like children to Mr. Tilley's Bill of Supply? I quite admit the principle laid down by the Minister of Finance in his first Budget speech. It is one to which I, at all events, take no exception. That was, in the first place, that certain legislation had been passed, which increased the burden upon the country, and they could not be charged with extravagance because they spent the money which the Legislature made it necessary they should expend. Mr. Cartwright said, in his first Budget speech:

“The Legislation of last Session added over $1,500,000 to the fixed charges of this country, in full view of the fact we were pledged to one of the most gigantic schemes this country ever undertook.”

That is, the Pacific Railway. It will be seen that the Finance Minister, who is a higher authority (I say it without any disrespect) than the hon. Secretary of State or the hon. Senator for Lambton, gauged the increased expenditure attributable to the legislation of 1873 at $1,500,000. Now, with reference to the works commenced before the change of Government, I think the present Administration should not be charged with extravagance because they finished them. Mr. Cartwright continued:—

“I must again repeat that it would be in the last degree unjust to my hon. friend, the Minister of Public Works, to hold him responsible for this state of things, or to ask him to stop works already commenced, and to put a reduced sum in the Estimates; but when the works now engaged in are completed, which I expect will be the case in eighteen months, a considerable saving will be effected in the annual expenditure, though for this a considerable period of time is necessarily required.”

I think the Government are entitled to ask at the hands of this House, in considering this question, that they shall not be held responsible for what was forced on them by the legislation of 1873, or charged with extravagance for completing the works commenced by their predecessors. The Finance Minister had every facility for making an estimate of the charge which that legislation imposed on the country, and he placed it at $1,500,000. We have now to ascertain how far the Government were fastened down by the works commenced by their predecessors. This is a more difficult estimate to make, and I think we can only arrive at it approximately. But we can get at certain works which the present Government commenced and expended large amounts upon, which were not begun in 1873. In the speech of my hon. friend from Saugeen last Session, will be found a list of these works. They are various in their localities and somewhat different in their circumstances. The amount in 1874 was $327,552; in 1875, $203,546, and in 1876, $556,596—total amount expended in those three years on works charged to Consolidated Fund, which were not commenced in 1873, $1,087,694; so that the excuse that they were tied down by their predecessors is clearly to this extent not borne out by the facts. Can anyone say they were obliged to begin these works and go on with them? Is there any reason why they should not have practiced the economy they thought desirable in these works? They were entirely in their own hands, and they might or might not have begun and gone on with them as they chose. Yet, in the face of a falling revenue, in the face of the deficit of the preceding year and the alarming decrease in the revenue of the succeeding year, they commenced many of these works, and when charged with it they excuse themselves by saying, "We could not practice the economy we desired, because of the manner in which we were hampered by works commenced by our predecessors, and by the legislation of 1873." As I have said, the excuse is just so far as the works commenced by their predecessors, and the expenditure resulting from the legislation of 1873 are concerned, but it does not apply to the expenditure on works to which I have referred, amounting in the aggregate, since the change of Government up to the end of 1876, to $1,087,000. Upon these works and all departmental and other controllable expenditure, they could have practiced the economy which the diminishing resources of the country so eminently demanded. Now, I have kept entirely away from expenditures on Capital Account, except when led into it by a reference to the Baie Verte Canal to show the Estimates were not of that building, obligatory character they were represented to be. The expenditures on capital have apparently all been on railways, canals, and public buildings in Ottawa. I judge so from a return put into our hands the other day, in which the items chargeable to capital are those I have stated—canals, railways and public buildings at Ottawa. I have kept clear of those and confined myself wholly to controllable expenditure, and I think it has been established beyond the powers which have been brought by the Government to assail it, that the Government expended in the neighbourhood of $3,677,000 more in 1876 than in 1873; that of this sum $1,500,000 was fairly chargeable to the legislation of 1873, and that another but comparatively a small sum estimated by my hon. friend from Saugeen, at $377,000, should be deducted as representing any other expenditure to which they may have been committed chargeable against revenue by their predecessors, that they therefore had the opportunity of economising to nearly half the whole amount if they had seen fit; that the Estimates of 1873, like all other Estimates, were not of the obligatory character that hon. gentlemen opposite have contended, and that beyond all doubt, they had undertaken and spent large sums on a number of works not commenced in 1873, which there was nothing in the world to make it compulsory on them to begin. The premises and deduction of my hon. friend from Saugeen, seem to me to have been thoroughly sustained, and after allowing full credit for the charges imposed by the legislation of 1873, and for the necessity of completing works which had then been undertaken, an excessive and controllable expenditure, to the amount of something like $1,800,000, had been made by these gentlemen in 1876 over 1873. The speech which my hon. friend from Saugeen made, this Session, was not one calling for the warmth of feeling shown by the hon. Senator for Lambton, or the wonderfully long returns which seem to have been prepared for the purpose, and which the hon. Secretary of State kept us occupied with for a couple of days. His (Mr. Macpherson's) speech was a fair review of the claims which the Government had established for economy, in the matters which he had the year before brought under our notice. He very fairly took the gross amount of their alleged saving, as asserted by themselves, of $1,810,000, and asked how far is this really an economy? He applied himself, I think, in a spirit of perfect fairness, to ascertain whether what he urged on the Government last year, had had any effect, and whether he could find fair reason to congratulate them on their course. The amount of decreases he admitted to be $1,810,000, and the amount of increases $474,000. Then he finds the item of $343,000 in the Suspense Account, which is really short-charged. Instead of being an asset it should be charged to the Intercolonial Railway. The increases and this item make $818,000, and this, deducted from the apparent decreased expenditure, leaves an apparent decrease of $992,000. It is with reference to this amount that my hon. friend enquires what are the savings?—is it real economy, or does it represent works completed? It is in the answer to these questions we find whether there is economy or not, or whether these gentlemen have considered the position in which the country is placed, with a deficit two years in succession. Militia and Defence shows a decrease of $428,000. You look through the items and find the decrease resulting from diminishing usefulness of the force from the abandonment of camps and training. The staff remains very much as it was, and the decrease is upon what was previously paid to the men. Apparently, also, there was a decrease in not keeping up the supply of military stores. Either the supply purchase the year before was enough for two years, or the Government have dispensed with stores for this year. Then, in Public Works there is a decrease of $686,000. Are they entitled to credit for this? You find the savings result from the fact that a number of works have been completed. The following is a list of these works:—

Hon. Mr. Campbell.

This is not the retrenchment which they promised when they went into office. Who does not remember the loud promises made with reference to retrenchment and economy?

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—These were chiefly works which were completed and on which they could not spend money if they tried. The following is a list of the public buildings completed:—

These are the items which go to make up the $686,118, which they say they have saved on public works. I ask is there any economy there for which the Government is entitled to credit? Then the Dominion Lands surveys in the preceding year were so extensive as to render it unnecessary that any should be made this year. That can hardly be claimed as a saving; this item amounts to $122,320. Then, there is a decrease in the item of “Military forces in Manitoba.” If that is partly caused by withdrawing the troops from Fort Osborne, Winnipeg, I think it is a very dangerous saving. We have between Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains, 25,000 Indians of our own, besides the band of Sitting Bull and the Sioux. It is true no trouble with them has yet arisen, but we know how easily they are excited, and we never can tell the time when a military force may be required in the North-West. The Government have assumed a responsibility which I, for one, would not like to have taken. This item amounts to $51,947. Then, there is a decrease in the item for Boundary Surveys, $134,105. We know that is due to the fact that the survey of the line between the Dominion and the United States is completed. Then, the item Settlers' Relief Fund, $83,405, shows a decrease. Happily there is no necessity for such an item this year. These items amount in the aggregate to $1,505,974 or $513,000 more than the sum which they claim credit for economizing. Where is the retrenchment, where the economy? They led the public to believe they had saved $1,810,000. That is the representation which has gone abroad, and which the Public Accounts are intended to convey, but when you come to dissect it you find all these sums I have mentioned, and which they pretend to have saved, must be deducted from it, and the result shows an increased expenditure on possible items of retrenchment, to the amount of more than half a million. The deficit this year amounts to nearly one-third of the interest on the public debt. Fancy such a deficit occurring in England! It amounts to one-eighth of the whole taxation of the country and one-tenth of our entire revenue. The revenue of Great Britain is about £80,000,000 a year. If there were a deficit of seven or eight millions of pounds, what an alarm it would create! Would people there wonder if attention was called to it by a member of Parliament? Would they expect instead of it being carefully looked into and the prospect gravely considered, and an answer given such as would satisfy the anxiety of Parliament and give confidence to the country—an answer that would go to the common sense of the community and showing there was reason to believe the deficit would be checked—that the reply would be such as was given by the hon. Secretary of State the other day, that he depends upon the hope of the future.

Hon. Mr. Campbell.

“ Hope tells a flattering tale,
Delusive vain and hollow
Ah! let not hopes prevail
Lest disappointment follow.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I propose now to address myself for a few moments to the answer given by the Minister of Agriculture to the remarks of the hon. Senator from Saugeen with respect to the expense of immigration. In the first place the House will bear in mind that my hon. friend's object was to show how far that expenditure bore fruit and was useful. My hon. friend said the expenditures for procuring immigrants in 1877, was $209,000, and that the number of immigrants who came by way of the St. Lawrence was 7,000, and that they cost the country nearly $27 each. This seemed a very startling statement and in very great discrepancy with the reply of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and there must be something astounding in the Public Accounts if both statements can be established out of them. My hon. friend from Saugeen said the number of immigrants was 7,000; the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that they were 27,000. My hon. friend from Saugeen said the expenditure to procure immigrants was $209,000; the hon. Minister of Agriculture that it was only $110,000. My hon. friend from Saugeen said the cost per capita was nearly $27; the hon. Minister of Agriculture that it was $4.08. Now, I again draw the attention of the House to the fact that the enquiry of my hon. friend from Saugeen was for the purpose of showing how far this expenditure bore fruit, and it is with reference to that point we must look at his statement. He does not include the arrivals from the United States. Is there a dollar expended there for bringing in immigrants?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Certainly. We have agents there.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I will read over the items composing the $209,000 in the Public Accounts, and the House will see where the money has been expended, because, if you want to test the results of the expenditure, you must see where it has been made and the number of immigrants we get for it. (The hon. gentleman has read over every item in the Public Accounts included in the $209,000, which Mr. Macpherson had divided by the number of immigrants coming in at Quebec, Halifax, St. John, and Portland, Maine.) I submit the immigrants from the United States, except possibly a comparatively small number of French Canadians, come to this country of their own accord, and not as the result of the expenditures of the Immigration Department. Now, let any hon. gentleman read over the items and see if any one of them is connected with the United States.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Yes, Dr. Whiteford was traveling all the year in the United States.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Is there another?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Yes, Mr. Lalime.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I knew a Mr. Whiteford, a Canadian, residing in England, and I supposed it had been his name which appeared in the accounts. I see his expenditure was $2,763, and Mr. Lalime's, $3,897. Mr. Lalime, I suppose, would be traveling to get French Canadians to return to Canada.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Not exclusively.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Well, chiefly for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—No, he was a regular agent.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Will the hon. gentleman mention any more, if he can, who were working in the United States?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—This is quite a new ground, and I am not prepared to answer now.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I contend it is perfectly true, and everyone knows it, that the exertions of the Immigration Department are not directed to procuring immigrants from the United States, save as regards expatriated French Canadians, but from Europe, and my hon. friend from Saugeen stated distinctly it was the immigrants who arrived at Quebec he referred to in his statement, because they are the only fruit the Government can take credit for from the expenditure on immigration. My hon. friend from Saugeen included the arrivals at Halifax, St. John, and Portland, as well as the arrivals at Quebec, in his statement. The arrivals from the United States into Manitoba, numbering over 2,084, he has excluded, and why not? What possible connection can they have with this expenditure?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I will show you presently.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Then, the next item is most extraordinary of all—“reported with settler's goods by custom “houses, 11,759.” These people come of their own free will into this country, yet the Government take credit for bringing them here as immigrants produced by the labours of the Department of Agriculture. I acquit the hon. Minister of Agriculture of intentional misrepresentation, but could anything be more misleading than to point to these arrivals as the result of the expenditure of his department? The hon. gentleman also stated that the refunds from the provinces had not been credited by the hon. Senator from Saugeen. He has credited them. They are in the Public Accounts, and my hon. friend deducted them, and the result is the net expenditure of the department for procuring immigrants was $209,000. The hon. gentleman also charged him with not having credited the Icelandic immigrants' refund. That also was deducted, and is not included in the $209,000.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—What year do you speak of?

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I speak of 1877. I refer only to the speech of this Session and the replies to it, and I say it was answered in a way that was misleading by the Minister of Agriculture. The $209,000 represents the expenditure after making these deductions, and the result of it has been to bring some 7,000 immigrants into this country, making the per capita cost $26.50 per head. I carelessly stated it a few moments ago as $27.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I will prove that to be incorrect when you have done.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I now turn for a few moments to the hon. Senator from Lambton, who found fault with my hon. friend from Saugeen for introducing financial matters into this Chamber, where he said we have no machinery for inquiring into the Public Accounts. He went so far as to say it diminished the efficiency or usefulness of this House, and said my hon. friend had “railed” at or brought “railing accusations” against the Government. With reference to the charge that it was an error to introduce financial matters in this House, and that its usefulness has been prejudiced thereby, I ask hon. gentlemen who heard the speech of my hon. friend from Saugeen last Session, whether they found, when they visited their homes and other parts of the country, that the reputation or usefulness of this House was not, in the eyes of the people, increased by that speech, and the debate upon it?

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I daresay these debates and investigations have been inconvenient to the Government and disliked by the hon. Senator for Lambton, but that they have diminished the usefulness of this House, I utterly deny, and I am surrounded by hon. gentlemen who know that the House has not been injuriously affected, but quite the reverse.

by the debates of last Session and this Session, connected with this class of subjects. With regard to the accusation of "railing at the Government," what could be more unfair? Does my hon. friend from Saugeen ever make a statement that he does not follow up by figures and statistics carefully prepared? Who of us has gone into those figures as he has done? Which of us exposes himself so little to charges of that kind? I am amazed at the industry of my hon. friend who, removed as he is, I believe, thoroughly from political aspirations, and with no motives but the good of the country and the advancement of his own fair fame at heart, has spent week after week, again and again, preparing those statements which have borne the brunt of every enquiry. So far from being open to the accusation of railing, I think the House will say he is entitled to, and will receive at the hands of the majority of the people of this country, every credit for his exertions, and the result he has achieved. The hon. gentlemen opposite charge my hon. friend with having based his statements on a fallacy—the expenditure of 1873-4. I have already answered that in my remarks on the speech of the hon. Secretary of State, and I will not again refer to it. The hon. Senator from Lambton said the Government were committed, when they entered office, to an expenditure of $96,300,000 on public works. I do not know what works he alluded to. If he took in the Pacific Railway and meant that this Government was committed to that amount, they certainly have not gone on with it, save as they themselves thought expedient. Outside of that I do not know what public works there are to cause such an expenditure. Then he said there were $35,000,000 of the public debt to be provided for. They ought to be exceedingly grateful they had an opportunity to provide for it. They simply reduced the rate of interest, and have all the credit of doing so. Whether they could have reduced it still more, I will not discuss now. The hon. Senator (Mr. Brown) shouted this statement at us with great vehemence, as though he were mentioning some appalling fact. Where is the room for this violent mode of attack adopted by the hon. gentleman? He not only referred to all those facts, but charged my hon. friend from Saugeen, in addition, with having stated things which were not correct, with having reviled the Government, and having charged them with not presenting the accounts truly. The fact is, my hon. friend from Saugeen made no such charge. What he did say was, that some servants of the Government in the far West, he suspected, had not sent in honest accounts. I don't think anybody in the House understood it as the hon. Senator from Lambton did. The hon. Secretary of State, for a few moments, seemed to be under that impression, but it passed away. The only charge made against the present Government with respect to the mode of keeping the Public Accounts was with reference to the Suspense Account, and he said that presented an untrue view. There can be no doubt it did. The hon. Senator from Lambton also said my hon. friend from Saugeen had held the Government responsible for the increased interest. He did no such thing. He excluded that in his speech of last year. Every item of the public debt and interest was carefully excluded, and it was so stated over and over again, as any one who will refer to the speech can see. The hon. Senator from Lambton asserted that the entire public expenditure of 1876-7 exceeded that of 1873-4 by only $300,000, and that, he said, was a complete answer to the allegations against the Government. Let us test the accuracy of that. In the first place, the expenditure of 1873-4 is put down by the hon. gentleman at $23,316,000. In order to bring it up to that amount the Government charged to revenue a sum of $545,000, for rolling stock, and snow sheds for the Intercolonial Railway, which sum was voted as capital and should have gone to Capital Account. Having improperly charged that amount to revenue, they ask to have the expenditure of that year made the basis of comparison. Then, there was in that year the exceptional charge of $106,000 for elections. It was not a normal expenditure in any way, and it should have been excluded from a comparative statement. Then there was $69,330 customs, erroneously, I suppose, collected from the Great Western Railway Co., which was refunded to the Company in that year, and $407,000 expended on the Dawson Road, which completed it. These were exceptional items. So was the $404,000 expended for military stores, which were not required or at any rate supplied again. These items, amounting in the aggregate to $1,273,907, should be deducted from the expenditure of 1873-4 in order to make it a fair basis of comparison with the expenditures of subsequent years. If it is said in reply that there may be items of that kind in the expenditure of succeeding years, I say, in answer to that, there was a good deal of exceptional expenditure in 1873-4 which I have not mentioned which could fairly be put against exceptional items in subsequent years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Snow sheds are similar to rails, which are charged against revenue.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—No; the rails are for the purpose of repairing the road, but the rolling stock and snow sheds are part of the original equipments of the road, and should go as capital. The money expended, too, was voted as capital.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are not as permanent as rails.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I venture to say they are more permanent.

Hon. Mr. READ—Last year they were charged as capital.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Last year, as my hon. friend near me says, similar items were charged to capital. Here is an item voted as capital which they charged to revenue to swell the expenditure of 1873-4.

Hon. Mr. FERRIER—Snow sheds are just the same as stations.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—There can be no doubt the item was put to revenue for the purpose of blackening the expenditure of 1873-4, and the other items were used for the same purpose, and having increased it unfairly as much as they could, they say, "We want that taken as the basis of comparison with the expenditure of succeeding years." The effect of making the reductions to which I have referred, is to place the expenditure of 1873-4 at $22,000,000, and this would show an increased expenditure in 1874-5 of $2,445,963. These figures are made up in a different way from the statement of my hon. friend from Saugeen, and go to prove the accuracy of his conclusions. I wish my hon. friend from Lambton was here, because one could speak more freely, and I daresay with more interest to the House, if one had the advantage of seeing him present. He wound up with eulogizing the Government. He had never known such a Government.

Hon. Mr. Campbell.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—That is true.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The Ministry are the creatures of his breath, and it must be satisfactory to them to be praised by him, but being so closely connected with them, he looks with natural fondness and affection on all they do. I do not think the public will share in the admiration of my hon. friend from Lambton. He closed with a bold and striking challenge, defying any one to produce evidence of even any "culpable neglect or thoughtless waste" on the part of the Government. I accept that challenge, and I ask was there no "culpable neglect or thoughtless waste" in the expenditure connected with the Georgian Bay Branch of the Pacific Railway, in which a gentleman, now no more, who was supposed to have peculiar claims on their gratitude, was given a contract where there had never been a survey, and where it was found impossible to go on with the work? Finding this to be the case, they gave him $109,000, $40,000 for expenses he had been put to, and $69,000 called an advance upon rails.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The rails are there yet.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The greater part of the rails which they got, they actually loaned to him again, and they were used by him in another railway in which he was interested, where they now are. They took as security bonds of the South-Eastern Railway Company, which nobody would give a farthing for. Instead of insisting upon the performance of the contract, they gave back the securities, advanced $69,000 on the contractor's rails and then lent him a large portion of them and took as security South-Eastern Railway Company's bonds, worth nothing. Was there no evidence of culpable negligence or thoughtless waste in all that? Then again, they purchased steel rails in 1874 without authority from Parliament, enough to lay 555 miles of track of the Pacific Railway before a mile was located. The hon. Secretary of State told us two or three years ago, where those rails were going to be laid, and led us to believe they would be in situ one or two years ago, yet the bulk of them are piled up at Kingston and Esquimaux, and other places, corroding, monuments of the folly and incapacity of the Government. Was there no evidence of culpable negligence and thoughtless waste in a transaction which involves the loss of two millions of money, absolutely thrown away in those rails, over and above what they might have since been purchased for, which money might have been in the Public Treasury? Then they gave $235,000 worth of steel rails to the Truro and Pictou Railway, which they had presented to a local company. An arrangement had been made by which the Truro and Pictou road was to be handed over as a subsidy to a company who had undertaken to build a road from New Glasgow to the Gut of Canso, and after having made the bargain, the Government unnecessarily and voluntarily expended $235,000 on the road they were giving away. Was there no culpable negligence and thoughtless waste there? Was there not thoughtless waste at Fort Francis in building a lock at a cost of, at all events, $300,000, which is of no use, and which the hon. Secretary of State is driven, in sheer despair, to excuse, by saying it will be useful in a military point of view, "and for lumber purposes?" We know that a slide might be constructed for a few thousand dollars to take down all the lumber that will ever pass down Rainy River. We know millions of feet of lumber have been taken down the Ottawa for tens that will ever be taken down Rainy River, and that nothing more costly than slides has been used for the purpose. Was there no "thoughtless waste, or culpable neglect" in constructing public buildings, at an expense of $60,000, at Fort Pelly, which they were afterwards obliged to abandon, and construct other buildings at Battleford? Was there no "thoughtless waste" in spending $67,000 at the Kaministiquia for an inconvenient site for the railway terminus, when they could have got one twice as good for half that amount? Is there no "culpable neglect" in the way they have gone on with the Welland Canal works, spending millions on the lower end, where the improvements can be of no use whatever until the water is let in from Lake Erie, by locks yet to be constructed at the head of the canal? The interest on the amount which they have thus expended, before the other works upon which these depend can be constructed, will be in the neighborhood of $750,000. The items which I have mentioned amount to something like $3,500,000. I will recapitulate:—

Amount paid for Surveys as alleged on relieving Mr Foster of his Georgian Bay Branch, contract	40,000
Advance to him on rails, a large portion of which rails were loaned to him again on security of Eastern Counties Railway bonds	69,000
Loss on purchase of Steel rails including interest &c. estimated at	2,000,000
Expended unnecessarily on Pictou and Truro Railway, after it had been agreed to be given away	235,120
Fort Francis Lock at least	300,000
Fort Pelly buildings abandoned	60,000
Kaministiquia terminus	50,000
Loss of interest on Welland Canal improvident expenditure	750,000

And, I will ask hon. gentlemen, is there not abundant evidence of "culpable neglect and thoughtless waste," in many, if not all, of the items to which I have referred? And let us bear in mind also, that, had it not been for the action of this House two sessions ago, they would have gone on with the Georgian Bay Branch, and the Esquimaux & Nanaimo Railway.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—They would have built a railway on Vancouver Island along an arm of the sea navigable all the year round, over a line of country where there does not live a single being.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Victoria)—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; that is not correct.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—How many are there?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—I cannot say.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—There may be some close to Victoria, and in the vicinity of Nanaimo, but the intervening territory is a wilderness.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the terminus your Government fixed.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The Government are not bound in the least by that. The terminus might or might not have been at Victoria, and certainly would not have been there until the main line had been built; but the question now is whether the present Government were justified in the course they contemplated pursuing, and which, but for the action of this House, they would have taken in building this road when, and for the reasons they gave, on Vancouver's Island, the very place of all others one might fairly contend where the construction of a railway could have been postponed to the very last. I think, then, I have established the correctness of the course pursued by my hon. friend from Saugeen. His figures have borne the test of the closest scrutiny and have not been successfully assailed. I do not believe they can be controverted, and I trust that the debates upon them will go to swell the stream of conviction, which, is I am satisfied, settling down on the minds of the people of this country, from one end of it to the other, of the hollowness of the professions which the members of the Administration made to obtain office, and every one of which they have broken to retain it, and of that want of capacity which has led them to tell us they rely upon "hope" to redress recurrent and alarming deficits, and to confess that they are unable to use the power with which they have been entrusted even to alleviate the depression which under their auspices has overtaken so many of the commercial and manufacturing interests of this once flourishing country.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I have been charged by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, with having made a statement to this House with the intention of misleading the public. I admit that the hon. gentleman acquitted me of doing so personally, by saying, no doubt it was through the overzeal of some members of my Department. I made a statement the other day that may have surprised the hon. gentleman from Saugeen, but I am willing to repeat it to-day, and I think I can prove that that statement is correct. It is true it is quite a different statement to that made by the hon. member, and one of us must be wrong; but I contend that I am not the one who is in error. The hon. gentleman has made the erroneous statement that only 7,743 immigrants came to this country last year (1877) as the result of the operations of our agents.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Is the hon. gentleman speaking of my speech of this Session, or the one of last Session?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I am just referring to the speech of this Session, in which the number stated by the hon. member, as entered into Canada by the St. Lawrence, is 7,743, of which number there are only in reality 4,201 of actual immigrants for Canada, the remainder being passengers, immigrants having through tickets to the Western States. But will the hon. gentleman contend these were all the immigrants that came into Canada in 1877? He must be aware that all the immigrants who come into this country do not come by Quebec only, but that many of them come by Halifax, St. John, N. B., Portland and the Suspension Bridge. The number that came by Quebec last year was 4,201; by Halifax, 930; by St. John, 141; and by Suspension Bridge, 6,453. In addition to those others came by other ports; and will the hon. gentleman pretend to say that it has not been due to the exertions of the Department that they were brought into Canada? Will he pretend to say that all who came in by the Suspension Bridge at Niagara, were not foreign immigrants coming to settle in this country, and that they are not here in consequence of the diligence exercised by the agents of the Department, and the distribution of pamphlets and circulars in different countries, and which cost a great deal of money? The hon. gentleman finds fault that we have made a distinction in those who have emigrated to Manitoba. The 2,084 immigrants that came in there, as mentioned, went in from the United States and not from Canada. It is against our policy to encourage emigration from one province to another in the Dominion. This is the first time I have heard the statement that the reports of the Department are not to be depended upon. The accounts are open to the public and any one who takes the trouble of enquiring at the Department, will find that the number of true immigrants in 1877 was 27,082, and I maintain that the strictest scrutiny will prove that they are immigrants who come directly to this country as settlers. The hon. member for Saugeen, maintained the other day, that his statement was perfectly correct, and, of course, that mine was wrong; but if hon. gentlemen will follow me they will see my statement was not incorrect. Take, for instance, the year 1876, which is the last year mentioned in the hon. gentleman's pamphlet at page 58, they will find the statement of the hon. gentleman that the number of immigrants was 10,901 and the gross expenditure was $385,845. This sum is perfectly correct according to the Public Accounts, but there is an item of $12,333 erroneously represented as Quarantine expenses to be deducted from that.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Is not all the expenditure for quarantine properly chargeable against Immigration?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—No. The whole amount of Quarantine for 1876 was $23,975, and I see no reason for putting that sum to Immigration expenses; and it should be deducted from the $385,845 which the hon. gentleman states as the total expenditure for 1876. The hon. gentleman bases his calculations on this, that the cost of immigrants is $26.55 per head. I say it is entirely a wrong calculation; $385,845 is the total expenditure for 1876 for Immigration and Quarantine, but in calculating the cost per capita of our immigrants, the expenses of Quarantine must be deducted, as it has only incidentally to do with immigration, and we would be obliged to maintain Quarantine even though not a single immigrant came to our shores.

Hon. Mr. READ—Then it should not be chargeable to immigration.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Quarantine is maintained for cattle as well as for human beings. We have three stations, one for Quebec, one in Nova Scotia, and one in New Brunswick, but I contend that they should not be included in the cost of immigration. The hon. gentleman has deducted for the Mennonite loan, $96,341. I admit that, but that is not all. If he will look in the Public Accounts of last year, he will find another item there that he did not calculate, the amount of $1,301.67 paid to Mr. Shantz for the transport of Mennonites, and for which sum we have ample security. If the hon. gentleman looks at the Public Accounts he will find that the refunds paid by the Provinces for immigration in 1876-7, besides the amount already deducted, were $16,417, which should also be deducted from the $385,845, which he claims was the cost of immigration for that year. His per capita cost of $26.55 has been calculated without deducting all those items from the gross amount. But more than that, the number of immigrants should have been taken as 25,633 instead of 10,901 as the hon. gentleman has calculated on. If the hon. gentleman would, from the gross expenditure of $385,845, deduct the following item: $23,975 for quarantine; $97,731 instead of $96,431 for loan to the Mennonites, and $16,417 for refunds by the Provinces, besides the two sums deducted at page 115 (part II) of Public Accounts, he would find that the net expenditure for immigration in 1876 was $247,722, and by dividing that net sum by 25,633, the real number of immigrants, instead of dividing by 10,901, the per capita cost, is $9.65 instead of $26.55 for that year, 1876.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—Was not the comparison between the accounts of 1873-4 and 1876-7 based on the same items and charges in both cases?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Of course, the same mode and the same error was followed in making up the calculation for each year. I do not pretend that the hon. gentleman made a false calculation, but I do say that the basis of his calculation is not correct. Though it is denied by the hon. leader of the Opposition, I contend we have ample proof in our Department that all arrivals entered as immigrants in this country have come and settled here through the exertions of our agents in the United States and in Europe. It is well known that we have travelling agents who distribute pamphlets and deliver lectures on the advantages which Canada affords to immigrants, and we can prove that 25,633 was the bona fide number that came to Canada in 1876. And even though there is a decrease in the arrivals last year, there has also been a decrease in expenditure, as compared with that of the previous year 1876, of $100,393.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him the amount of his refund to Mr. Shantz?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—It is $1,301.-

67, not refund, but advance for Menno-nites.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I see a refund here to Mr. Shantz of $5,018, which I concluded was in the net amount. I think I shall be able to show to the House that all my statements with respect to the cost of immigrants are correct.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Besides that sum of $5,018 the hon. gentleman has forgotten to deduct the other sum of $1,301.67.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—If the reasoning of the hon. Minister of Agriculture is correct, he would lead me to believe that all the immigrants who come in here from the United States first go to that country through the efforts of our agents in Europe, instead of coming direct to Canada. If the hon. gentleman calculates the number of immigrants from the United States, he should also give us the number that emigrate annually from this country to the United States.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The greater number of the immigrants who arrive by the Suspension Bridge at Niagara are not Americans, but immigrants from Europe, who come via the United States in the winter season when the St. Lawrence is closed, and enter Canada by the Niagara route, but I could not at this moment give the number of those who came directly from the United States to Canada.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (Victoria)—The hon. gentleman from Kingston has made a powerful speech, but he made one statement that I cannot allow to pass without correcting it, though I believe the error was not intentional on his part. He stated that the country between Victoria and Nanaimo is a perfect wilderness. That is not the case. There are a great many beautiful farms in that district, whose owners are very wealthy—in fact it is the garden of the whole island. There is besides, a good deal of excellent land to be taken up yet. There is a fine country at Comax, which is well settled, and the railway would have been a great convenience to the people, besides forming a portion of the main line, as was intended under the first scheme for building the road.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hon. gentlemen: I am not very familiar with figures, and
Hon. Mr. Pelletier.

I should not undertake to say anything on the question now before the House, if I saw that any hon. gentleman on the Government side was disposed to rise. However, this is not the case just now; although three hon. gentlemen have spoken on the opposite side since the hon. Mr. Brown addressed the House from this side a few evenings ago.

Before going further, I should like to put before the House, as briefly as I can, my own opinion on the manner in which this question should be regarded. In the first place, I think it is very important to decide where we should start from. I presume that one of the principal objects of the hon. gentleman who has brought up this question (Mr. Macpherson) was to show that the present Government have been extravagant, that they continue to be extravagant, and probably will continue to be extravagant, if retained in office; and that they have been more extravagant than their predecessors would have been, had they remained in power. In order to arrive at a correct conclusion on the matter, it is very important to ascertain who are responsible for the various large expenditures which have taken place, and what our basis of comparison should be. The hon. Senator who brought this matter before the House, in the speech which he made this year, and in the one which he delivered last Session also, insisted that we should take as the basis of our comparison, the expenditures of the year 1872-3; and the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the Government side have contended that we should take the year 1873-4 as the basis. I shall endeavor to show that the position taken by the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House is the correct one. In the first place, in order to know what the Government formerly in power would have done, we should take them as they were immediately before they left office. In 1873, the Government of that day had just come back from the country with a very considerable majority. They had ceased to have as Minister of Finance, the Hon. Sir Francis Hincks, who, as is generally admitted, was a very skilful and prudent financier; and Mr. Tilley occupied that position. Now, if we wish to judge what the former Government would have done had they remained in power, we must judge them by their actions immediately anterior to their resignation. Most hon. gentlemen have read Mr. Tilley's Budget speech for 1873, and I think it was a speech that was likely to produce a great deal of confidence in the financial condition of the country; it was of a most roseate hue all through. But when Mr. Tilley brought down his Estimates and Supplementary Estimates, they, together with the legislation of that year, involved the necessity of much larger taxation than he proposed to put on. He did not propose to meet that expenditure, as he should have done under the circumstances, by additional taxation. He talked in the most jaunty and confident way of the good time that was before the country, and the great future of the Dominion, and this, although his attention was called by members of the Opposition to the fact that there were grave doubts as to whether his revenue would meet his estimated expenditure. The total amount which Mr. Tilley took power to expend, was $23,685,000. I may say here, that there has been some misapprehension as to the statement of the present Finance Minister, relative to the addition of $1,500,000 to the fixed expenditure of the country during the Session of 1873; and I think that the hon. Senator who brought this matter before the Chamber, in the first instance, misunderstood the expression of the Finance Minister. He did not mean the addition of $1,500,000 for that year, but that the legislation of the year 1873 had added for all time the sum of $1,500,000 to our annual expenditure.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Certainly.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think that there is any doubt on the mind of the hon. gentleman from Kingston on this subject; but there have been doubts in the minds of other gentlemen on it, and the matter has been misrepresented elsewhere. Chapters 30 and 41 of the Acts of 1873, increased the annual expenditure by $819,349; then Chapter 31 of the Acts of the same year, referred to by the hon. Secretary of State, as the Bill which was to increase everyone's salary, increased the salaries of Judges, Ministers and Lieutenant-Governors, and the indemnity to members of Parliament, and added $300,555 permanently to the annual expenditure of the country. The Act, Chap. 40, which provided for the Admission of Prince Edward Island into the Confederation, added about $400,000; and Chapter 35, providing for the organization of the Mounted Police, $200,000. Those items which I have just read are to be added to the estimates of that year; and in addition to that, certain balances were carried forward, which make the total estimate of Mr. Tilley up to $23,685,000. It is perfectly true, as stated by the hon. gentleman from Kingston, that although the Finance Minister puts a sum in the estimates, it does not bind the Ministry to expend it; still, I think it will be found, as a general rule, that there is a pretty close correspondence between the estimates and the sums actually expended in any year. If the Finance Minister of one Government takes authority to expend certain sums for certain objects, and the expenditure is begun under that Government, it can hardly be said that the Government who succeed, and who continue those expenditures within the estimates, are responsible for them. The estimates have to be taken as an intimation by the Government of the day as to what they propose to expend; and the late Government were clearly responsible for all the sums which were expended in 1873-4, and contained in the Supply Bill of 1873. They had declared that they intended to expend the whole amount; and although it was not all expended by the succeeding Government, and possibly would not have been expended if the late Government had remained in power, still they took authority for the whole expenditure, and are therefore responsible for what actually took place. Then there is the question as to the sums that were not provided for in the estimates of 1873, and which will be found in Schedule "A" of the Appropriation Act of 1874. In order to see who is responsible for that expenditure, it will be necessary to refer to the Act itself. The first item is Charges of Management, $12,550, which, when we read the items, we find to have all accrued previous to the change of Government. Under the head of Civil Government there is a charge of $30,000 for contingencies of the departments, for which the former Government are responsible, as also the sum of $5,000 for circuit allowances to Judges in British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. Power.

Then there is the sum of $6,000 additional for the Quebec River Police. This is a small amount, and would have been expended, I presume, whoever was in power. Under the head of Legislation there is the sum of $39,605.50 chiefly for the Session held in the month of October 1873; and there is, I presume, no doubt, but that the late Government were responsible for that. Then there is $7,000 for Marine Hospitals. Then under the head of Militia there is $60,000 for Maintenance of Dominion Forces in Manitoba. There was no increase in that item by the present Government, and the late Government would have expended the money. Rent of Barracks in Manitoba, from 1870 to November 1st 1873, $20,000, is an item for which the former Government were clearly responsible. Mounted Police, $200,000: this expenditure was made under the Act passed by the late Government; and the force was organized by them. Intercolonial Railway construction, $427,000; that was expended by the previous Government or in pursuance of their policy. Public Works Chargeable to Income, $425,215.91. For every item under this head, the late Government were solely responsible, as will be seen by any hon. gentleman who will take the trouble to read over the list as given in the Schedule. For $32,267.85 under the head of Ocean and River Service; $43,825 under that of Light House and Coast Service: of Fisheries, $12,000; and Indians $57,455, there is no responsibility to be attached to the present Government. I do not say that the money was not all properly spent; I only say that for its expenditure the late Administration was responsible. Under the head of Miscellaneous there are items amounting to $65,562.35, for every one of which, as will be seen on reference to the list, the late Government were answerable. For almost all the items under the head "Collection of Revenue" amounting in the whole to $298,689.75 the same Government were responsible. With the "Unprovided Items" amounting to $177,832.37 they alone are chargeable. Finally, there are a number of items under the heading of "Balances carried Forward." Almost all these sums were chargeable to the former Government, and they amount in the whole to $480,282. Any one comparing the Supply Bill of 1874 with the Public Accounts, will find that at least $2,000,000, of an expenditure of $2,400,286.42 was directly due to the action of the late Government; and that the total was not increased by their successors. It appears, then, that practically that Administration was responsible for the whole of the expenditure of 1873-4, or rather that if they had remained in power up to the close of the financial year they would not have expended less than was expended by the present Government, and that possibly they would have expended more.

Hon. Mr. Power.

I shall now take up the comparative statement of the public debt. According to this statement in the Public Accounts, which Accounts have been made up by the same officer for many years, we find that on the 1st of July, 1867, the gross debt of the Dominion was $93,046,051.17, and next year it was almost $97,000,000. The following year it was $112,000,000; and in 1870 it was $116,000,000. There was no increase in 1871; but in 1872 it was $122,400,179.36; in 1873, $129,743,432.19; and in 1874, $141,163,551.33. Now, Mr. Cartwright did not effect any loan until after the 1st of July, 1874; so that, so far as regards the amount of debt up to that date, there can be no dispute as to the responsibility. Up to 1875, as it happened, there were surpluses every year; but in 1875 there was a deficit, and there was also a smaller deficit last year. But for the change of tariff made by Mr. Cartwright in 1874, there would have been a deficit in that year. Mr. Tilley's estimate of the receipts for that year, was $21,740,000, which, including the receipts from Prince Edward Island, would make a total of $22,000,000; and as the expenditure was $23,316,316, there would have been a deficit that year but for the fact that Mr. Cartwright anticipated it by increased taxation. Mr. Tilley's estimate was a close one, because the tariff was the same that year as the year before, and the importations were almost exactly the same. Thus, Mr. Tilley's estimate would have been short about $1,300,000. I may call attention to the fact that if the debt has increased, the interest on that debt is now at a lower rate than it was in 1874. In that year the average rate of interest on the debt was $5.12 per hundred dollars, whilst at the present time it is only $4.86 per hundred dollars, a difference of twenty-six cents, which means one-twentieth of the whole interest. The whole amount of interest we pay is over $7,000,000: one-twentieth of that is a very respectable sum; and I think the Government deserve some credit for the reduction. I am very glad to see that the hon. gentleman from Kingston did give them credit for it.

I shall next say something on the question of expenditure chargeable to income, and take up the comparative statement which is in the Public Accounts. I find that the total charges on the Consolidated Fund in 1867-8, amounted to $13,486,092. That represents, as every hon. gentleman knows, Charges for Debt and Subsidies, Ordinary Expenditure, and Charges on Revenue. Next year the amount was over $14,000,000; the following year it was $14,345,000; in 1870-1, $15,623,000; in 1871-2, $17,589,000; in 1872-3, $19,174,000; and finally in 1873-4, the annual charge on the Consolidated Fund had risen to $23,316,316. At the present time the total charges on the Consolidated Fund amount to $23,519,301.77, or $200,000 more than in the last year of the former Government. Now, it must be remembered that the population of the Dominion has increased about 400,000 since the change in the Administration; and the fact is that the taxation on the people of this country, instead of being greater, is somewhat less per head, than it was in 1873-4. If we examine the particular items in this statement, the result of our examination will certainly not be disadvantageous to the country. I find that in 1873-4, the charges for the management of the Public Debt were $238,003; and that in 1876-7, the same charges were $183,544. At the same time that the Finance Minister and the Government deserve a good deal of credit for having reduced the charge of management to that extent, they have also increased the amount paid into the sinking fund. Under the head of Civil Government, which is a matter supposed to be peculiarly under the control of the Administration, the amount was $883,685, in 1873-4. Last year it was reduced to $812,193. While the population to be governed has increased considerably during the intervening time; the cost of governing them has fallen off. The cost of the Administration of Justice has increased, but the reason for that has been given at some length by the hon. the Secretary of State, and I shall not further refer to it. The charge for Police, has fallen from $56,387, in 1873-4, to $11,355. Legislation cost in 1873-4, $784,000; last year it had been reduced to $596,000. The present Government, however, do not perhaps deserve very much credit for that, as a portion of the expenditure in 1873-4 was caused by the extra Session of that year; and the present Government cannot be expected to provide a Pacific Scandal for investigation, as did their predecessors. Under the head of Militia and Defence, there has been a very great saving indeed this year—a saving of nearly half a million of dollars. There has been a saving, also, in the Ocean and Steam Service. The Light-House and Coast Service has been about the same as last year, but there has been a slight increase. I think there has been a considerable saving under the head of Contingencies, an account which is peculiarly under the control of the Government, and against which money that has been improperly spent is more likely to be charged than any other. There has been a very considerable amount of money expended on Public Works, but I think that it will be seen from the statement which has been submitted in a return to an order of the House of Commons, of the 4th March, of this year, that the present Government have not originated very much of that expenditure. I shall not weary the House with the details, but I shall say, that the total expenditure since the first of January, 1874, on works chargeable to capital which were in progress on that date, was $28,447,188; and the whole amount expended on such works begun subsequent to that time, to the 8th February, of this year, was only $88,616. So that the Government cannot be charged with having commenced a great deal of work chargeable to capital. Then with reference to works chargeable to income, it will be found that authority had been taken in 1873 to expend the greater portion of what has been expended on those works since, amounting to $2,761,857. The hon. gentleman from Kingston stated that the present Government had spent $1,082,000 on works originated since they came into power. It is hardly to be expected that the present Government, during the four years they have been in office, would not have undertaken some new works, especially since such large sums of money had been expended by the late Government in some sections of the Dominion, while other sections had been neglected. Then, again, Prince Edward Island was not a portion of the Dominion in 1873-4, and a considerable amount had to be expended in that Province on public works. There is this to be said, with reference to the deficits of the past two years, that they are owing altogether to the expenditure on the Pacific Railway; if there had been no Pacific Railway there would have been no deficit.

Hon. Dr. CARRALL—And no steel rails.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As the Finance Minister said in his Budget Speech of 1874, Canada would have been quite able to manage its business and to have dealt liberally with all the ordinary services of the country, if it had not been committed to this unfortunate expenditure in connection with the Pacific Railway. As to the course that has been adopted by the Government in building that road, I do not think I am bound to express any opinion.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But I mean to say, so far as my private individual opinion is concerned, that, while I am opposed to the undertaking altogether, if it had to be gone on with, I think it would have been sufficient if the road had been built from Pembina to Winnipeg, to connect with American railways hereafter to be constructed, and to have done without the road from Red River to Lake Superior for some years to come. On the other hand, while there is no question, in my own mind, that that could have the most desirable course, there was a very strong pressure brought to bear upon the Government, not by their friends, but by the gentlemen who were opposed to them, to push on the construction of the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Gentlemen who opposed the Government persistently declared that the Government were not going to complete that railway, that they were not going to carry out the pledges made by Canada to British Columbia. The influence of the Imperial Government was invoked by parties who were interested in having the road constructed at an early day; and between that influence and the others which I have mentioned, the Government were induced to make an expenditure on that road, and to begin the work sooner and with less preliminary surveying and enquiry than they otherwise could. I think the works at Fort Francis Lock are not absolutely necessary.

Hon. Dr. CARRALL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The probability is that if the work had to be done over again, it would not be begun at once; but that is a comparatively trifling error of judgment.

Some very prominent members of the Opposition—some leaders of the Opposition in the other branch of the Legislature—are very fond of telling Parliament sometimes, but more frequently out-of-door audiences, that the advent of the present Government was marked by a change in the circumstances of the country; that there was a very strongly marked line of division between the good times that prevailed under the former Government, and the evil times that have prevailed since.

Hon. Dr. CARRALL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Now, as those evil times, which have, to a certain extent, prevailed, though not to a very great extent in Canada, have been felt in the United States, in England, and in almost all parts of the world, that argument is not worth a great deal; but it suggests to my mind an argument of a very different character. There were seven good years previous to 1874: the crops were abundant as a rule; business flourished, and times were prosperous: the revenue nearly always exceeded the estimates, and everything was just as a lover of his country would desire, so far as the various industries of the Dominion were concerned. Now, how did the former Government which had all those advantages act? They had, in the first place, a much more limited territory than the present Government to look after; they had no Pacific Railway, and therefore had not to pay for its construction. They did not spend a great deal upon canals:

yet, with the comparatively compact territory which they had, the prosperity which prevailed, and an increasing revenue, they had, as I have shown, increased the gross debt from $93,046,000 in 1867, to $141,000,000 in 1873-4, during this period of unexampled prosperity. This increase was at the annual rate of $6,873,928, or almost seven million dollars; which is not a very creditable record for the Government of that day. Then turning from the debt to the increase of the annual expenditure, we find that the yearly expenses increased in those seven years—that is the controllable expenditure—from $13,486,000 to $23,316,000; or, more accurately, an increase of $9,830,223, or an annual increase in the expenditure chargeable to income of $1,404,000. Now, supposing the present Government, which has administered the affairs of the country in very hard times, when instead of unexpected surpluses, there have been unexpected deficits, and have had to deal with so many more sources of expenditure than the former Government, had gone on and increased the expenditure at the same rate as their predecessors, the expenditure last year would have amounted to $27,529,269.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Just $3,000,000 more than what it actually was. Now, it seems to me that this is not at all a discreditable exhibit for the present Government, particularly as the public debt has not increased in an undue proportion. This question occurred to me, looking at the fact that during the years of plenty, the late Government had succeeded in increasing both debt and yearly expenditure to such an extent, "What would it have been, if that Government had continued in power during the hard times that have followed?"

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My own impression is, that the hon. gentleman who has brought this matter before the House, would have had much more reason to be horrified and appalled, than he has at present.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the course that the former Government should have adopted, during the seven years of plenty, was the course suggested by Joseph to the Egyptian king, that they should make some provision for the seven evil years, or years of want that were coming. But Mr. Tilley went out leaving behind him a largely increased debt and yearly expenditure, leaving the materials for a deficit of over a million of dollars, besides an enormous legacy of expenditures, that had been undertaken.

Hon. Mr. Power.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In answer to the question, as to what should have been done by the present Ministry, I suppose the hon. gentleman from Saugeen would have dropped all those public works at once. I presume, from the tone which he has adopted, that that would have been his policy; but there were a great many objections to such a course. In the first place, a number of those works were public buildings which had to be completed; there were a number of piers, breakwaters, and other works of public utility, in an unfinished state, and if the expenditure on them had been discontinued, exposure to storms and weather would have destroyed them in a few years, so that the expenditure previously made on them would have been lost. There would have been no economy in leaving any work unfinished. The present Government have commenced very few works chargeable to capital, except the St. Peter's Canal; and the amount of works chargeable to income that they have begun, is only a trifle over a million of dollars. Then there is this objection to the course which has been suggested by the hon. gentleman, who has made this inquiry of the Government, that is, that at a time when labor is abundant, employment scarce, and wages comparatively low, works can be constructed more cheaply than during times of prosperity; and I think it would have been a very unwise policy if the Government, instead of continuing to give employment to the poorer classes of the community, and help them in their distress, had shut down on those works; as at some future day they would have had to pay a much larger sum for the completion of those same undertakings. These are the objections that present themselves, to my mind, to the course suggested by the hon. gentleman from Saugeen (Mr. Macpherson.) Then the hon. gentleman from Londonderry gave a different opinion. His opinion was, not that the Government should have discontinued public works, but that they should have imposed larger taxation. In 1874, the Finance Minister, in his Budget speech, showed, I think, pretty clearly—and I think it is the opinion of the best authorities on the subject—that the tariff which we now have probably realized as much revenue as if it were raised, as importation would have been greatly reduced if the duties were largely increased. I think, independently of that, that a time when money is scarce in the country, trade dull, and the people poor, is the very worst time to increase their burdens. I think an additional debt of $3,000,000 is much more easily borne and less objectionable from every reasonable point of view, than the additional taxation that would have been necessarily imposed upon our people in a time of distress, to prevent the two deficits which go to make up that debt. There is just one statement that I remember the hon. gentleman who has brought this question before the House made last year, and insisted upon with a good deal of force, and which, I presume, had much to do with the effect that the hon. member from Kingston says his (Mr. Macpherson's) admirable pamphlet produced—that is, that the present Government had increased the public debt per capita from $22.50 to $37.93. The hon. gentleman committed himself to the statement which also appears in the Public Accounts, that on the 1st July, 1876, the public debt of this country was $161,204,000, and that the present Government had increased the indebtedness of the Dominion by $15.43 per capita. Now, it appears from the Public Accounts that on the 1st July, 1874, the debt was $141,163,000; so that the whole increase of the debt was only $20,000,000; and, as the population is about 4,000,000, according to that statement the increase per capita can only have been $5.00 instead of $15.43. I am surprised that a gentleman who has pursued the study of figures to such an extent as the hon. gentleman from Saugeen professes to have done, could, with this statement before him, have been capable of so gross a blunder as that. I notice that the hon. gentleman did not repeat that statement this year; and I do not think that any hon. gentleman can endorse his statement, as to such a vast increase per capita of the public indebtedness. Then, the hon. gentleman said that the taxation had increased from $3.50 under the late Government, to $6.00 under the present Administration. It is perfectly clear that the total expenditure chargeable to the Consolidated Fund this year is only $200,000 more than it was in 1873, and instead of there being an increase per capita, there has been a reduction, as the population has probably increased not less than 400,000; so that instead of the taxation having increased by $2.50 per head, it has, actually, not increased at all.

It being six o'clock the House rose for recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. POWER, resuming, said:—The first thing that struck me particularly in the address of the hon. gentleman from Kingston was his reference to the Suspense Account, and the charge for Intercolonial Railway track renewals. That entry had been referred to several times. I hardly thought that the hon. gentleman, who generally likes to give us something fresh and pleasant, would have spent any time in dealing with that. It is clear that there was not, and I do not think that it is pretended by the hon. gentleman from Kingston, or the hon. gentleman beside him (Mr. Macpherson) that there was any intention on the part of the Government or the party who prepared the Public Accounts to mislead the country on this item; because, if there had been, the entry would have been different. If only the sum of $200,000 appeared in the Public Accounts, there might have been some show of reason for saying that there was an attempt to mislead. The whole amount appears there, and it is perfectly clear that there was no such desire on the part of the Government, and the only result of the system of book-keeping adopted in the Public Accounts was, to lessen the apparent deficit by the sum of $343,000. I understand that, under the former Administration, expenditures of that kind would have been charged to Capital. Rolling stock was charged to Capital; and snow-sheds, which are as temporary as snow-rails, were also charged to that Account, under that Government. I do not think there would have been anything out of the way in charging this whole amount to Capital, in which case it would not have appeared in the Account at all. I am informed that on some railways owned by companies, the renewal of rails is charged to Capital, and in others the amount is divided and put into a Suspense Account, in the way it has been done by the present Government. As the expenditure is one the results of which extend over a number of years, it would not show the average business of a road to charge such items all to one year. The hon. gentleman from Kingston, in speaking of this Suspense entry, wanted to know why they had not charged supplies for the buildings and other things that are consumed at once, to the Suspense Account; but I think I have given the reason why they should not be charged in the same way as rail renewals. Then he says that the Government should not credit themselves with $100,000, derived from the sale of public works. I know no particular reason why they should not, and the hon. gentleman has given none. It has been also stated that the expenditure of the Government could not be compared with the estimates. I have compared the estimates and expenditures for some years back, and find that, although they did not agree exactly there was a general correspondence between them, and that there was the same general increase in the estimates previous to 1874 which there was in the expenditure. Then the hon. gentleman mentioned that there were certain items in the estimates of Mr. Tilley that were not expended. He mentioned among them the St. Peter's Canal. The St. Peter's Canal never appeared in the estimates at all until 1874; and on looking into the Debates of the Senate for 1871, I find that the hon. gentleman from Richmond, asked a question in reference to this matter, and the hon member for Kingston, who was then the leader of the Government in this House, stated in reply that the Government did not propose to spend any money in enlarging the St. Peter's Canal.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The Government had not made up their mind to spend anything in 1871; it was in 1873 that the Government made up their mind to enlarge that canal.

Hon. Mr. Power.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Their mind does not appear anywhere apparently. We could never find an Order-in-Council, or a scrap of paper binding them.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It appears in this way: An engineer was sent down by the Hon. Mr. Langevin, the then Minister of Public Works, to make a survey and report upon the expediency of enlarging that canal, and it was upon that report that the Government acted since they came into power in 1874.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Kingston stated that there had been something like over $1,000,000 worth of public works begun after 1873. The only sum charged to capital was some $70,000 spent on the Saint Peter's Canal; and I think it was only reasonable that this Government being in power four years should have spent something on Public Works chargeable to income, that had not been begun by their predecessors. It was not to be supposed, after all the unnecessary works undertaken by the late Government, that the present Government should not undertake necessary works. With respect to the saving made by the Government last year, I was sorry to find that the fairness of tone that generally characterizes the hon. member for Kingston had disappeared, and that he had undertaken to tell us that the saving of a million of dollars did not call for our approval. He took up the half million dollars decrease in the Militia Estimates and told us that the Government did not deserve any credit for it. He told us that the expenditure had been discontinued on certain works, because they were finished. But if we are to deal with the administration of affairs in that way, it can be shown that no Government can deserve credit for anything; that they cannot deserve credit for lessening any expenditure, or for refraining from doing any work. If they diminish the expenditure it is said to be unwise, and in that way the Government are deprived of any incentive to economy. New works might have been undertaken upon the completion of the others. The hon. gentleman knows how hard it is to resist the appeals of one's supporters.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—No doubt the hon. gentleman has felt it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman knows well from his own experience, as a member of Government, how very great pressure is brought to bear upon an administration by their supporters, for expenditures in their different counties; and when we see that the present Government have expended only $1,000,000 since 1873, on works that had not been begun by their predecessors, I think it must be admitted that they have shown a great deal of fortitude. It is to be regretted that their predecessors did not display the same fortitude in 1873. I was not so very much surprised when the hon. gentleman from Saugeen manifested his horror of a deficit; but I was a little surprised when the hon. gentleman from Kingston did so. That hon. gentleman has had sufficient experience of the politics of this country, to know that deficits are not such an entirely new thing in Canada. In order to show that the country may have a deficit, and that after it the Government may survive and hold up their heads, I shall call the attention of the House to an historical matter, which has already been referred to by the hon. the Secretary of State. I have here a statement, over the signature of Mr. Langton, which shows, that for the year ending the 31st December, 1858, the receipts were $5,270,627, the expenditure $8,645,944, and the deficit $3,375,317.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—When was that?

Hon. Mr. POWER—That was in 1858.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This calculation goes further and shows what the deficit of 1875-6 would have been, if it had been at the same rate per cent as that of 1858, and the following years. I shall give the table including all the years up to the union of the Provinces.

	Receipts.	Expenditure.	Deficit.	Percentage of Variation	Comparison with 1875-6.

In 1862, shortly before the termination of the financial year, the friends of the hon. gentleman, led by the hon. gentleman who now leads the same party, went out of power, and the Reform party led by Mr. Sandfield Macdonald came in, and in the next year the deficit fell to $870,000. Even that decreased difference between receipts and expenditure would have given a deficit of $2,250,000 for the year 1875-6. Owing to the prudent management of the Liberal Government, there was a respectable surplus for the six months ending June, 1864, about which time Mr. Sandfield Macdonald went out of office. Next year the friends of the hon. gentleman came back again, and there was another deficit of $380,000, which, calculated for 1875-6, would have been $935,260. Now, it appears that notwithstanding those overwhelming deficits, the country succeeded in recovering itself. It has been said by the Finance Minister that, if the remainder of this year does as well as the first seven months have done as compared with the same months of last year, there will be no deficit in 1877-8. My impression is, that if there is any increase of trade within the next few months, next year there will be a surplus instead of a deficit. The hon. gentleman spoke of certain investigations that were taking place in connection with the Pacific Railway, and which he says, are inconvenient and uncomfortable for the Government. I dare say there may be some inconvenience. I suppose it is inconvenient, for instance, for the hon. the Secretary of State to have to neglect more important duties in order to attend to the Committees, but otherwise, I do not think that there is anything inconvenient or uncomfortable for the Government in them. So far as I can learn, although the land on the Kaministiquia has cost rather more than it would have under ordinary circumstances, it has not been shown that there has been anything very extravagant about the prices; and there has been no evidence at all to show that there has been any corruption on the part of the Government in connection with it. I do not think a Government, controlling a country reaching from British Columbia to Cape Breton, can be expected to be on the spot to see that every particular acre that is acquired for public purposes has been purchased at the lowest possible figure. Such was certainly not the practice of the former Government. Then there is the Fort Francis Lock Committee. I may say, with all deference to the House, that I look upon the appointment of that Committee as uncalled for; inasmuch as I understood the Secretary of State to have admitted quite clearly that the policy of building that Lock was very doubtful; and an admission of that kind is tantamount to saying that a slight mistake had been made.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not see that there was any particular object in appointing a Committee for the purpose of proving what was not denied; and probably the Committee will cost more than the famous Neebing Hotel did. The hon. gentleman was fair enough to admit that the Government had done one good thing, that they had reduced the charges of managing the public debt. I was very glad to hear that; because it was an instance showing one of the differences between the gentleman who is the recognized leader of the Opposition in this House, and the hon. gentleman beside him (Mr. Macpherson) who claims to be independent. There are certain hon. gentlemen who profess to be independent; and I do not think that I have ever heard one of those gentlemen admit that the Government had done anything for which they deserved credit. I am very glad to think that the leader of the regular Opposition thinks somewhat differently. The refund to the Great Western Railway was referred to. I do not think the justice of that refund was seriously questioned at the time it was made; and, I presume, if the Company were entitled to the money, the Government to which the hon. gentleman belonged would have refunded it in the same manner that this Government has done. The Government had been charged with giving away five thousand tons of steel rails to a private company, which had acquired the railroad from Truro to Pictou. On that particular matter there has been either some misapprehension or misrepresentation. That matter was discussed in this House last Session, and I stated, without being contradicted—and I believe I was endorsed by other hon. gentlemen from the Province from which I come—that the fact was, that when these rails were laid down on the Pictou Railway, which was then Government property, there was no prospect of its being anything else than a Government railway. Previous to 1874, a company had been formed to undertake to build the road to the Strait of Canso, on condition of receiving the Truro and Pictou branch as a bonus, besides a subsidy from the Local Government; but the arrangement fell through. In 1875, when those rails were laid on the Pictou road, there was no expectation that it would cease to be the property of the Government. The legislation of Nova Scotia, under which the eastern extension is being made, did not take place, and the company which now has the road was not in existence until 1876; and it is perfectly clear that the Government could not have given away those steel rails to a private company which did not exist at the time the rails were laid. The hon. gentleman from Saugueen criticised the financial condition of the country, and the conduct of the Ministry, without giving them credit for anything at all. He said there was a decrease of $200,000 expenditure on public buildings, but that the Government did not deserve any credit for it, and, as a set off, there might be unknown enormous expenditures in the North-West yet to be taken into account. That was an uncharitable statement; and there should have been some evidence of the fact before it was made. The line of argument adopted by the hon. gentleman was, where there was no reduction in the expenditure the Government were very much to be blamed, and where there was a reduction, it was unwise for the Government to make it; and, as I said before, it is impossible to please gentlemen who take that view of public affairs. Here I should like to say a word or two with reference to the comparison made by the late Minister of Justice (Mr. Blake) between the expenditure in his office in 1876-7, and that of former years. The hon. gentleman from Saugeen found great fault with the Minister of Justice for not having included his salary in the statement. Now, the Minister was dealing simply with the staff of the office, and probably did not regard himself as being a member of the staff. The salary of the Minister of Justice had been fixed in 1873 at $7,000, and it was the same salary as was drawn by Sir John A. Macdonald, as Minister of Justice, during the last year of his Administration; so there could be no object gained by introducing the salaries of the Ministers into the discussion. But while the hon. gentleman manifested a great deal of indignation over Mr. Blake's imaginary duplicity and disingenuousness in keeping back mention of his own salary, he manifested considerable disingenuousness himself in dealing with the amount in Schedule "A" of the Supply Bill of 1874, when he said there were $2,400,000 estimated on that schedule, of which at least $2,000,000 should be debited to the present Government. That statement was very much calculated to mislead the country, and it was a very much more important matter than the question as to the salary of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. Power.

I have tried to show that under the late Government the amounts of the estimates and the expenditures increased at a very rapid ratio from 1867 to 1874. I have shown that the expenditure, chargeable to income, increased at the rate of $1,404,000 a year, that, if the expenditure had continued to increase under the present Administration at the same rate, instead of there being an expenditure of less than $24,000,000 in the past year, the Government would have expended almost $28,000,000. I think that the Ministry deserve a great deal of credit for having stopped this onward course of expenditure. I have also tried to show that, previous to the change of Government, when the field for expenditure was smaller, when the country was very prosperous, when business was flourishing, and importations were large, and notwithstanding all these favorable circumstances, the Government of that time succeeded in increasing the debt of the country at the rate of almost $7,000,000 a year, and that, notwithstanding the unexampled prosperity of the country, and with surpluses every year, which from the time of Confederation had amounted to about $12,000,000—when the late Government went out of office they had incurred an expenditure which was not provided for in their estimates, and that there would have been a deficit of over $1,000,000 in the year 1873-4, but for the additional taxation imposed by the present Government. In 1873 the Government seemed perfectly reckless. In addition to involving the country in enormous obligations, they increased salaries in all directions, appointed officers whose services were afterwards found to be unnecessary, raised the salaries of Judges, increased the Members' indemnity, and all their own salaries; and so added to the expenses of the country for succeeding years, that they largely reduced the power of the succeeding Administration to economise. I think it was a very fortunate thing for the country that the change of Government took place at the time it did; because the Government that had so injured the financial standing of the country in a time of prosperity, would have placed it in a very much worse position in a time of adversity, and instead of there being the small deficit we now have, there would have been enormous deficits, proportionate to those that occurred under the Administration of former days. I also think it a matter for congratulation that the Government have decided to allow the equilibrium between income and expenditure to be restored by a reduction of expenditure such as took place last year, and by the return of national prosperity, rather than by further increasing in a time of adversity the burdens which the people of this Dominion are called upon to bear.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—The question before the House, as I understand it, is the enquiry by the hon. Senator from Saugeen:—

“That he will call attention to the public expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion of it which is largely within the control of the Administration, and will enquire of the Government how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure.”

This is a very proper enquiry, and this is the proper place to make it; and it comes at a very opportune time, when it is admitted there have been deficits, and when the question how to make income and expenditure meet, is occupying the minds of public men, especially those who are called upon to govern the country. The enquiry has been made in a proper and legitimate manner, respectable alike to the Government, to this House, to the country, and to the hon. gentleman who made it. If there had been no deficit, there would be some reason for the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, to try and show there was none; but the House will recall the remarks of the Finance Minister in his former budget speeches. In 1874, he spoke of the probability that the revenue would be equal to the expenditure, but in view of the large public works undertaken and the depression which was then about commencing, it was advisable to increase taxation. No gentleman could have better opportunities of judging the financial position of the country than the Finance Minister, and when he asked Parliament to impose this increased taxation, he said: “We may be able not only to meet the requirements of the current year and have a small margin over, but to dispense with increased taxation for a considerable period.” These were his words when asking for $3,000,000 additional taxation. That was granted, and the expenditure of the year was met in a way creditable to the Dominion, and it was thought further taxation would be unnecessary, as the Finance Minister had led Parliament and the country to believe. But in 1875 he came down and said:—

“All immediate demands, which were considerable, have been carefully met. There are no pressing claims upon us with the exception of those for public works for a year or two. We have a reasonable surplus for the current year.”

This necessarily excited the attention of members of this House, not excepting the Government, and the hon. gentleman who makes this enquiry paid very considerable attention to the finances, and published his views in a pamphlet to the world. That provoked very considerable discussion, and he replied to it in another pamphlet. Then it came out that the Finance Minister had deceived himself or the public in his Budget Speech. In 1876, when he addressed Parliament again, he was forced to admit that his predictions had not been verified, and that his prophetic vision of an increased revenue had not been realised. Again, in 1876-7 the same thing takes place, and he states in his budget speech, referring to the close of that year:—

“I hope, with some degree of confidence, on the next occasion on which I may be called upon to address this House, I may be able to congratulate it upon seeing the deficit which now exists entirely extinguished, and our Treasury once more restored to the state in which some years ago it was happily maintained.”

There are three budget speeches in three consecutive years predicting the revenue would exceed the expenditure, and again he has to announce a deficit of nearly $2,000,000. Surely, then, it is time attention was called to the state of the finances of the country. Surely gentlemen should look the matter in the face and acknowledge there is a deficit, and take steps to re-arrange the finances of the country in such a way as to restore the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure. I say therefore, this is a proper inquiry. The hon. Senator from Saugeen was told by an hon. gentleman who preceded me that if he had any charges against the Government he could call for a committee to investigate them. I believe there is no better committee for the purpose than the Senate.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—It is a very able committee; one to which the people look in time of peril, like this, to give the affairs of the country the due and impartial attention they may not receive elsewhere. This is the proper place for the enquiry to be made. What is the answer made on behalf of the Government to this pertinent question? In the first place, there is no denial there is a deficit, and in answer to the enquiry how the equilibrium between revenue and expenditure is to be restored, the Government have no policy to announce. They tell us there was a deficit in 1858. I confess I am unable to see any connection between the deficit of 1858 and the deficit of 1878. But we are told there would have been no deficit if the Government had been at liberty to alter the public works of the Dominion. Surely the hon. Secretary of State knows the Government never dies. It may change, but it never ceases to exist, and it is well understood the gentlemen taking office are responsible for the expenditures commenced by their predecessors. We are told because the expenditure of this Government is no larger than that of the late Administration, it is, therefore a good Government. We were told that these gentlemen had been for years in opposition, and that they would exercise economy when they came into power; that they had been well educated in the policy of retrenchment, and in long years of opposition had become thoroughly acquainted with the public affairs of the Dominion. Therefore, they cannot, on the plea of innocence or ignorance, ask the people of Canada to believe they took office under a state of affairs with which they were not acquainted. They were perfectly well aware that certain public works must go on and certain services must be maintained: that the annual revenues of the country were about equal to a certain amount and knew what the average controllable expenditure was. Therefore, they had every information a Government could wish to possess on taking office. More than that, it was their boast that retrenchment and reform were the principal planks of their platform. They had economy inscribed on their banners, and the country believed in their professions and suspected there was some truth in their charges of extravagance made against their predecessors. It was believed by a majority of the people that there should be a change in the administration of public affairs, and that these gentlemen should be given an opportunity to carry out their policy of retrenchment. They have been nearly five years on trial before the country, and what is their answer when charged with having failed to economize? "The late Government spent so much, and therefore we are

Hon. Mr. Howlan.

"justified in doing the same?" That is their answer. So far as the Maritime Provinces are concerned, they looked upon this Administration as a Liberal Government, and to the people of that portion of the Dominion the word "Liberal" has a charm.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." I repeat it, the word "Liberal" has a charm for the people of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island; but the Liberals of those Provinces were of a very different stamp from those who are in power here. They could find no resting place in this Parliament unless they find it in the ranks of the Liberal Conservative party. My hon. friend remembers, Joseph Howe; he was a Liberal, and he found a resting place among the Liberal Conservatives of this Dominion when Nova Scotia came into the union. This present Administration had a good send off, they had a large majority, perhaps too large; but it has been gradually growing less. They started as no Government in Canada is likely to for a long time to come. They had every opportunity a Government could desire to possess for keeping the expenditure within the revenue, and it is begging the question to go back to 1858 for a parallel case to that which exists to-day. We know there are veterans who like to fight their battles over again, and so it seems to be with these hon. gentlemen who deal with the events that occurred prior to Confederation. There is no good reason why this Government should spend more than their predecessors. There is no reason why if there were large expenditures in the past, the expenditures for the present should not be curtailed. The very best proof that they could have been reduced is the improvement that has resulted from the discussions that have taken place upon the subject introduced last session by my hon. friend from Saugeen. We find the Government for this year curtailed the expenditure, and this shows, clearly, that they had it in their power in the preceding year to make such a reduction as would have brought the expenditure within the revenue. Therefore, the hon. gentleman is entitled to the thanks of the Government and not their censure for bringing under their notice the services in which retrenchment could be effected. But whether the Government will give him credit for it or not, the country will admit that it has been mainly through his instrumentality a saving of over one million dollars has been effected this year. An attempt has been made to show that had this country remained as it was before Confederation there would have been no deficit; but if Confederation had not taken place we would not have seen representatives from all the British Colonies in North America, with one exception, assembled in this Parliament, and we would not have had the grand country we now possess. Since Confederation our coasts have been so well lighted, that vessels coming to Canada are insured on as favorable terms as any other country in the world; and as a consequence, there is reduced cost of freight and insurance, and the industries of the country have received an impetus from these improvements, which they otherwise would not. Necessarily we must give credit to the Government that did all this. Then there is the Intercolonial Railway, that has done more to cement the union than possibly could have been done by any other course that could have been suggested. Surely my hon. friend from Halifax will not find fault with the late Government for having increased the public debt, to build that railroad; nor will he say that the large expenditures on the canals, and other public works of the Dominion have been unnecessary; because for this debt we have ample returns. Notwithstanding the great outlay which occurred while the late Government was in power, the revenue kept pace with it and warranted the expenditure. Instead of deficits they had surpluses. Almost every dollar of the indebtedness they incurred was for building railways, lighthouses, and other public works, necessary to the proper working out of this grand scheme of Confederation. To say that the debt of Canada is greater now than it was in 1867, is begging the question. In 1873 Prince Edward Island entered the Union, and it was necessary at that time, to appoint officers for that Province. My hon. friend from Halifax has not carefully considered the question, when he made the statement that even in the death throes of the late Government, they had increased the expenditures of the country by making unnecessary appointments. Not an officer was dismissed by the present Administration, but was replaced. We are told, and we have been led to believe by statements made by a certain hon. gentleman here, that there is no deficit—that it is folly to talk about it; and the fact is, the House has been mystified by an array of figures to show there was no deficit at all. Now there is, or there is not a deficit. If the Public Accounts of the country are correct, there must be a deficit, and I think we shall see how this deficit has taken place. I find if you take the total salaries paid under both Governments, there were in 1875, $518,000; in 1876, $508,000; while in 1873 there were only $422,000. Take the Administration of Justice in 1873, it was $399,000; in 1875, $459,000; in 1876, $544,000. I am not saying but all this expenditure was necessary but there must be something extraordinary, that, in the Administration of Justice there should be such a large and steady increase. The hon. Secretary of State says the Supreme Court is the cause, but the expenditure under that head is not sufficient to explain the increase. Then we have the cost of collection of customs, which increased steadily from 1873 onward; and the same may be said with regard to the Immigration Department. So it is in several departments, there has been a continual increase since 1873. Or to state more definitely the increases in expenditures charged to Consolidated Revenue Fund for 1875 and 1876 over 1873, and for 1876 over 1875 under the following heads being items largely within the control of the Government (Public Debt charges not included) I may be allowed to read the following table:—

It seems to me an extraordinary fact that such a large sum has been wasted to bring immigrants to this country. I find in 1861 the population of Canada, was 3,432,000, and the annual average increase during the ten years preceeding 1861 (during which time occurred a year of great depression) was as follows :

Ontario.....	4.37
Quebec.....	2.50
Nova Scotia.....	1.82
New-Brunswick.....	2.60
P. E. Island.....	2.07

Now according to these figures the population of Canada in 1871 if it had the same ratio of increase, ought have been 4,700,000, while the last census showed, it was a little under 4,000,000 or an increase of one per cent annually. Now this is an extraordinary fact. The most stagnant nation under the sun has a better record to show than that. It is rather strange that having the millions of acres of land we possess, and a large immigration into the country, the increase of our population has been so slow. Look again at the decrease that took place during that period; you will find about 80,000 native Canadians left this country. It is a favorite expression in the United States with regard to the State of New Hampshire that it is a fine State to emigrate from, and if we are to judge anything from these figures, this must be an equally fine country to emigrate from. It has been estimated that the cost to the British nation of training a soldier is two hundred pounds sterling. A Canadian twenty-five years old ought to represent as much as a soldier of the line does, and the hon. gentleman can calculate from this what a loss we have sustained by the emigration of 80,000 of our people to the United States. It is therefore for the people of Canada, and especially of the Government and this Parliament, to ascertain what are the reasons for this loss of population. It is impossible for any country to stand still, and particularly a new country like this. It is said one cause of our lack of progress for the last three years, has been the depression. I am not going to deny that it has had a great deal to do with it. But one interest in Canada has not been depressed; I refer to agriculture. It is a well-known fact that the farming population of this country have not felt the depression that has prevailed in our cities. One would naturally conclude that this great depression in trade would necessarily lead to a reduction of the cost, of collecting the taxes of this country, but which has not been the case, for the cost has gone on steadily during the last three years. Judging from the cost of collecting the revenue, there has been no depression. What is the outlook at the present time? The clouds are breaking way; the sun is beginning to shine—to use a common expression, matters have touched bottom, and a more prosperous era is beginning to dawn; that is the time when the Government should exercise wisdom in assisting the country to regain prosperity. On that point we have, at all events, got the opinions of gentlemen, who are leaders of the two great parties in Parliament. Any thoughtful man must come to the conclusion when a depression has taken place in the trade and manufactures of a country that some remedy must be found to restore, at all events, the equilibrium between the expenditure and revenue. But what is the policy of the Government. They say the country is like a sick man; all you have to do is to let him alone and he will get well in time. I say that it is an extraordinary policy, and I contend that some step must be taken to save the country from the effects of such treatment. We find one body of gentlemen those who hold office, are free traders, while those opposed to them are protectionists. I am one of those who believe you cannot have either free trade or protection in a young country like this. I believe free trade and protection, as understood in Great Britain, cannot be applied to a young country like Canada. It is out of the question to suppose that a policy produced in one country must necessarily be good for another. I don't think I shall be going far out of my way to give my hon. friend from Halifax an authority for which he must have great respect. I quote from the speech of the hon. the Premier, delivered at Sarnia last year. He said:—

“When people accuse me of being a free trader, they accuse me of something that does not properly belong to the discussion of this question. We do not discuss free trade or protection at all, because free trade is impossible in this country. We have to discuss a

Hon. Mr. Howlan.

“Customs system which puts free trade out of the question altogether, and, in the abstract, Sir John Macdonald is as much a free trader as I am. It is true the great party I lead contains a larger number of free traders than our opponents, though of course every rule has its exception. There are two principles of action in relation to trade which are to be considered. The one, absolute free trade; the other, absolute protection. I have always assumed that, in this country, neither of these principles is applicable to our circumstances, and, as I stated in 1874, the question is removed from the sphere of political discussion, because not even the most extreme protectionist has adopted the idea that we are to lose all our revenue for the purpose of preventing anyone coming here to sell his wares.”

That is about my opinion with regard to free trade and protection in this country. It has been used as a bugbear to frighten people. I will now quote an authority who is considered a very big one on questions of political economy. I read from Lang's Political Economy:—

“Political economy is not a universal science of which the principles are applicable to all men under all circumstances and equally good and true for all nations, but every country has a political economy of its own, suitable to its own physical circumstances of position on the globe, climate, soil and products, and to the habits, character and idiosyncrasy of its inhabitants, formed or modified by such political circumstances.”

So I say with regard to this Dominion, it is necessary that the flagging industries of this country should be protected in times of depression like this by the Government, which all look upon as paternal. One interest, at all events—the mining interest—is prostrate. The $12,000,000 invested in the mines of Nova Scotia are almost completely idle. We saw a few years ago the mining industries of the United States were in a prostrate condition, but they were protected and they revived. What do we find in Canada? The very coal used on the Intercolonial to heat the cars is brought from the United States.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is because we have no anthracite.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—For years we used none in the Maritime Provinces. In the time of Joseph Howe we used our own coal. The United States, so far as manufactures are concerned, is a new country, and you find them protected there. Go back to England, and you will find it was one of the strongest protectionist countries in the world for a long period of years. After a time she became a free trade country. Why? Because she had brought her manufactures to such perfection they could compete with all the world, and besides, she had very large commerce. The neighboring country was free trade in the early history of the colonies, but from the time it became independent, it has protected its manufactures. I was surprised to find recently that silk is now very largely manufactured in the United States. Last year 108 firms were engaged in the industry, the capital invested in it was $14,000,000, and the value of the silks produced was very great. We have in this country, if I may be allowed to use the expression, a good milking cow, if we only milk her. Here, in the neighborhood of Ottawa, there are inexhaustible mines of the very best iron ore, yet our iron is manufactured in the United States and other countries, instead of in the Dominion. Without being either a protectionist or a freetrader, I think the industries of this country could be aided by adjusting the tariff to foster them. After all, that is what is required of the Government. What we want is, not free-trade or protection, but a policy that will bring about the best results in developing our industries without interfering with the revenue. Our coal interest possesses more importance than the mere intrinsic value of the coal produced. In the Legislature of Massachusetts there is a picture of a codfish over the Speaker's chair, to show what was the foundation of the early prosperity of that colony. Amsterdam is built on herring bones. So it is with our coal interest—it is a school of industry. Like the fisheries of the Gulf, it is a training school for men. It is the strongest arm which assists the body politic in working out the destinies of the country through its own resources. In 1876 there were 275,748 tons of coal mined in Nova Scotia, and distributed as follows:—

Ontario and Quebec . . . . .	84,778
New Brunswick . . . . .	6,800
Prince Edward Island . . . . .	40,000
Nova Scotia . . . . .	119,000
Newfoundland . . . . .	1,868
United States . . . . .	18,987

Now, it will be seen that the little Province of Prince Edward Island consumed more of the product of the mines of the Maritime Provinces than did the United States. Those who have been acquainted with that trade will remember the time when 200 sail of vessels were continually engaged in carrying coal between the colonies and the United States. That is entirely done away with now, and while the Government think nothing of spending $280,000 on the Fort Francis Lock, which they acknowledge to be a blunder, they refuse to foster this important industry. If the money they have thrown away on that work had been used to promote the coal trade of Nova Scotia, the country would have received some substantial return for it. I know it will be said "you cannot put a duty of 50 cents per ton on coal, because the people of Ontario will demand a similar duty on flour." Let us see how the account stands: In 1855-6 Nova Scotia imported from the old Province of Canada, $504,000 worth; in 1876 Nova Scotia consumed $1,305,000 worth of the products of Ontario and Quebec. In return, Ontario and Quebec consumed only 84,000 tons of Nova Scotia coal. I would like to call attention to a statement of the trade between this country and Great Britain, to show where the channels of trade are. In 1872-3 the imports from Great Britain were $62,000,000; in 1876-7 they had fallen to $40,000,000, showing a decrease of $22,000,000. Now, let us look at the trade between this country and the United States. In 1872-3 we imported from the United States $35,000,000; in 1876-7, $51,000,000, showing an increase of $16,000,000. And while our imports from that country have been increasing, our exports to them have been diminishing, showing clearly there is something materially wrong so far as the mercantile and internal national interests of this country are concerned. If we are going to build up a nation here, we must take a national way of doing it. It is no use finding fault with the arrangements made with British Columbia. We must carry them into effect, and do more than send a handful of troops to the North-West to keep the Indians in check, and generally pursue a progressive policy. If other Provinces are treated as British Columbia has been, how long will the Confederation last? I say it is necessary in the interests of this country that the Pacific Railway should be built. We owe it to ourselves to construct it. We condemn the United States for delaying the payment of the fisheries award, though I believe, and I have always contended, when the smoke passes away they will pay over the money, and I take this opportunity to compliment the Government on its conduct of that case. It would be disgraceful if they did not, but equally disgraceful would it be to Canada if we did not carry out the contract with British Columbia to build the Pacific Railway. It is thought that the Province of Newfoundland will bye-and-bye come into Confederation, but I can tell hon. gentlemen, from a conversation I had with a leading man in that colony, I know that they are watching to see whether Canada will keep faith with British Columbia, and the disposition that has been shown to repudiate that agreement, has weakened the hands of the Union party in Newfoundland. So I say with regard to the millions of acres of fertile land lying to the west of us; we should fill them with settlers, and to do so we must establish manufactories and develop the resources of our country. I am strongly convinced no plan has yet been suggested for the building of the Pacific Railway better than that of Sir John A. Macdonald and his associates, unless the Imperial Government do, as in the case of the Intercolonial Railway, guarantee our bonds. A young nation is like a young man. It must be assisted until it reaches maturity. I say it is our interest to see the Pacific Railway built and the North-West opened up. By that means we can convert our deficits into surpluses and look forward to prosperity. That is better than waiting till the incidents and accidents of trade change the revenue so as to cover the expenditure. I was amused by the extraordinary statement of my hon. friend from Halifax about the purchase of steel rails—that they were purchased for the purpose of supplying the public railways of the Dominion. There are some things hard to believe, but which one would rather believe than dispute. Of all the extraordinary things ever heard in Parliament, it is that the Government should be congratulated on their foresight and forethought for buying rails and laying them on the railways two or three years before their time. How any man can so far impose upon himself as to suppose that any man of intelligence would credit such a statement is incomprehensible to me. In making such a statement and going back to 1858 to look for a parallel for the present condition of affairs, the hon. gentleman seemed to forget that the country is older and should be wiser now than twenty years ago. I remember when D'Arcy McGee was taunted with having been a rebel at the age of 25, he replied "I was a rebel at 25, but I am a loyal man at 40, and the man who is not is simply a fool." Every man and every nation should gain wisdom by experience. With regard to the item of Weight and Measures, it will be remembered in the struggle which took place in Halifax a few months ago, when the Minister of Militia was elected, he himself on the platform, admitted the Weights and Measures Act was a blunder and not only did he condemn it there, but if hon. gentlemen will take up the Hansard of last year they will find a remarkably clear exposition of the whole matter by him. If that is not sufficient, let the hon. Secretary of State take up the Montreal and Toronto papers, and they will find that the wine measures of one city are being sent to the other, and why? Because the Act is so elastic that what may be good for one portion of the Dominion is not suitable for another. I say this law is one of the most intolerable humbugs ever placed on the statute books of any country. I said so last year and I say so now, and I believe it is the opinion of seven-eighths of the merchants of this country. The Government defend themselves by saying they did not pass the Act. Are we always to be told that whenever they do anything deserving of censure, that their predecessors did something similar, and, therefore, they are not to be held responsible? If that is the case, they had better stay at home and let somebody hunt up the antecedents of those who preceded them. I am one of those who believe that every Government necessarily makes mistakes, and I believe further, that the Government that has the best opposition is always the best for the country. I would say in conclusion, that the thanks of the House and of the country are due to the hon. gentleman who has so ably opened up this question of the finances of the country, who has so intelligently put it before the country, and who has not been afraid, from his place, in Parliament, to express his views and sustain them by facts and figures which have not been controverted.

Hon. Mr. Howland.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE—In my opinion the high praises that were bestowed by the hon. leader of the Opposition upon the mover of this motion, ought to be largely shared by my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Howlan), who has just sat down; because although I cannot concur in all the views he has expressed, I must say candidly that his speech, in my opinion, was not only interesting, but characterized by much originality. The terms of the motion of the hon. gentleman from Saugeen I, for one, can see no great reason to find fault with. I think the motion is discreetly and cautiously worded, and the hon. gentleman took a very proper step, thinking as he does, in bringing this question before the House. He has stated that it is his intention to call the attention of this House to the public expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion of it (amounting to some seven or eight millions) which is largely within the control of the Administration, and also that he should ask the Secretary of State how it was intended to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure. That, I think, was a very prudent and practical programme to bring before this House, and if that programme had been adhered to, there would have been no cause to complain. But it has not been adhered to by hon. gentlemen opposite, who, although they say they have such an admirable cause, nevertheless, rambled through the whole affairs of the country. The hon. gentleman himself set the example by wandering into matters that had not occurred in this House or the other branch of Parliament, but referred to a speech delivered at some picnic meeting in the country by a late Minister of the Crown. I strongly object to the discussion of affairs of that sort on the floor of this House, as I think it is attended with the greatest inconvenience. I, for one, am not familiar with what occurred on that occasion to which the hon. gentleman referred, and I believe there are other hon. gentlemen in this House who are as unfamiliar with it as I am. Consequently, hon. gentleman who are not acquainted with the subject matter of a speech so referred to, cannot say whether the arguments used in referring to it apply or not. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Brown,) when he said here a few evenings ago, that such a course,—the introduction into the debates of this House of matters that occurred outside and to expect Ministers of the Crown to answer or refute them, without any notice and on the spur of the moment—is attended with much inconvenience. As the debate proceeded in reply to the remarks of the hon. mover of this motion, we had some of the strangest interruptions from hon. gentlemen opposite that I have ever heard in this House. I have heard questions put by hon. gentlemen while the hon. Secretary of State was speaking, which, no doubt, might be put with the greatest propriety. But we have also heard the most irrelevant interruptions during the discussion. For instance, while the hon. Secretary of State was speaking of the expenses connected with the Indian troubles in the North-West Territories, we heard the hon. gentleman from Arichat interjecting a question with regard to a news paragraph that had appeared in the newspapers of that day, to the effect, that trouble was anticipated towards Spring in the far west, and that Sitting Bull was forming an alliance with other Indian tribes there. That was a proper subject, no doubt, to have made an enquiry on if the hon. gentleman had only given due notice, and in that way he would have done the public a service. It is no doubt a matter of some importance that some means of defence should be provided in the West, and that the public should know what those means of defence are; but the interjection of a question of that kind when the hon. Secretary of State was making a reply to the speech of the hon. gentleman from Saugeen, leads me to the belief that a cause which needs such tactics as that cannot be quite as good as the hon. gentleman pretends it is. Then again, while the Secretary of State was explaining something with regard to the low rate at which beef was being supplied somewhere in the North-West, for the use, I believe, of the Mounted Police, the hon. gentleman from Saugeen chose that moment to interject a remark about a contract for beef in another place, a thousand miles, or more, away. Then there was another interruption from another gentleman, whose conduct in this House, I must say, has certainly been irreproachable, but while the hon. Secretary of State was speaking as to the cost of telegraphing, that hon. gentleman (Mr. Girard), chose to ask the Government if they would not make an effort to reduce the rates of telegraphing in Manitoba. It was no doubt an appropriate thing to do at the proper time, but not when the hon. Secretary of State was replying to the speech of the hon. gentleman from Saugeen. Notwithstanding all those interruptions and hindrances which beset the course of the hon. the Secretary of State, I could not but admire the coolness and self-possession with which he bore it all, and answered the ill-timed questions that were put to him. It convinced me of the excellence of the cause which the hon. gentleman was defending, and showed what a perfect mastery he had of the subject which he was discussing. His equanimity was not disturbed for a moment, and when he sat down, I considered he had made a good and sufficient answer to all the charges put forward by the hon. member from Saugeen. I have listened to the greatest discrepancies of statement between hon. gentlemen during this debate. An hon. gentleman got up on the Opposition side, and made statements with regard to immigration, which have been met with direct denials from this side of the House. It follows that hon. gentlemen who have dispassionate minds—and I claim to be one of those who have dispassionate minds, have great difficulty in forming an opinion on these subjects. It makes one feel that those questions are to be decided almost on other grounds than figures, and it became a question of confidence or non-confidence in the Government. Several gentlemen who have spoken on this side of the House, have given a very good and sufficient reply to the various charges which have been brought against the Government. We have had considerable discussion with regard to deficits, and it strikes me as one of the most remarkable features of this debate, that very little reference has been made, until my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Howlan) spoke just now, to the speeches of the Minister, who is specially charged with the finances of the country. The attention of the House may, I think, very properly be called to a few short passages from the Finance Minister's Budget Speech of the present year, which, perhaps, I may be allowed to read.

“It may not unnaturally be asked by some members of the House, whether it would not be advisable, in view of the fact that we have now had for two years considerable deficits, to adopt such precautions as would render the existence of another deficit practically impossible. Well, Sir, I would say, at once, that if we possessed, in Canada, any tax equivalent to the income tax now in use in England, I would not hesitate to advise the House to have recourse to that means of increasing the revenue—that being a tax which can be raised or lowered with a minimum of disturbance to the commercial interests of the country. But as the matter stands, I feel it is important to call the attention of the House and the country to the fact, that although we have, unfortunately, had two successive deficits in the last two years, still, it is equally true that a very large proportion of these deficits has been composed of the sums annually devoted to the Sinking Fund, which, I think, the House will agree, makes an important difference in considering the situation. In these two years our total deficits have amounted to $3,361,000, but of that sum, no less than $1,650,000 has been invested in the reduction of our debt, and the consequence is, that the net increase of our indebtedness in those two years is not $3,361,000, but barely $1,700,000 all told. Apart from this, I think that the combination of adverse circumstances which sunk our revenue to the extremely low figure of $22,000,000 is one not likely to recur, and, further, that there are reasons for expecting a moderate and steady increase.”

That, I think, rather puts a different feature on the cause of the deficits from what has been represented by some hon. gentlemen. The hon. gentleman from Kingston for instance, by some clever manipulation of figures, managed to swell up the deficits to four millions of dollars, and told us if such a deficit was to occur in Great Britain, it would stir up the people from east, west, north and south, to demand increased taxation. But I cannot see that anything like a deficit of four millions exists in this country. Great Britain has had her deficits too, but her financial position has been generally so good for years that I believe we have to go back nearly to the times of the administration of Lord John Russell, to find a deficit. I remember that he, (Earl Russell), stated in a recent work of his that he acknowledged he had left a deficit, and confessed he had made an error in not providing for the anticipated deficit. I think, on that occasion, he introduced the penny postage system, and regretted having done so. But he had then no income tax to fall back upon. Then I go back to a period still more remote, when another Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Charles Wood, had to deal with a deficit, and he did so by imposing five per cent. additional upon the assessed taxes. We had in England at that time, assessed taxes; a tax which Canadians are in happy ignorance of, a fact which I congratulate them on, and I sincerely hope they will never experience it, as I have experienced it in my early days. Assessed taxes comprise almost everything imaginable in and about a man's house—even the windows, and I have seen some beautiful houses of the Elizabethian and Tudor styles of architecture completely marred by the fact of a number of the windows being walled up in order to avoid paying taxes on them. Having neither income tax nor assessed taxes in this country ready to our hands, it becomes the duty of the Finance Minister to consider whether it is worth while, in face of the fact that he has been enabled to set aside a sum of $1,650,000 in two years towards reducing the public debt; in view of the indications of improvement in trade, and the belief that the income of the country during the current year will be greater than in the past,—to burthen a country notoriously suffering from depression with a further charge on the Customs, or any other form of taxation, in order to secure a sum which may not ultimately be required. I think, in taking the step he has done, the Finance Minister has exercised a wise discretion, and he has shown a confidence in the stability of our institutions and the future of our country, while no sort of blame can be attached to him for the course he has taken with regard to the deficits. There is one other most reliable criterion which, I think, can be applied with reference to deficits; that is the position of our Canadian securities in the British markets. If we found that our securities were declining; that they were in very small demand, and at large discounts, then we might come to the conclusion, that the financial world of Great Britain and Europe were dissatisfied with the financial condition of Canada. But is that the case? Is it the case that the values of our securities are declining in the English and European markets? I find in one of the morning newspapers published in Montreal yesterday that the prices current for the securities of Canada and some of her Provinces is most reassuring, and I will take the liberty to read the statement to the House:—

Now, hon. gentlemen, if I perceived any signs of decadence in the value of those securities, I should be apt to regard the conduct of our Canadian financiers with some suspicion, but seeing, with all the information which is possessed by the London stock-brokers, that they do not show any anxiety with regard to the future of this Dominion, I think I may safely continue to place my confidence in the capacity and policy of the present Finance Minister in this matter, rather than on the untried gentleman who favors us with the results of his labors on the other side of the House.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE—I remember that something was said with regard to men having large stakes in the country. I do not see, myself, that there is much virtue in that argument, because, as far as I can see, the man with a small stake in the country—if all he has is there—has a stake just as important to him, as the man of large property. I say if I stake all I possess in this country—all my means of livelihood—my interests are just as important to me, as the hundreds of thousands of the wealthy man are to him. I must certainly give the Government credit for the economical manner in which they have managed our public works. I know it is my own experience, that in the Province from which I come, there is great necessity for more public works, and many of the interests of that Island are languishing for want of greater expenditure in that direction. I differ from my hon. friend beside me on some points in his speech, although I did admire the manner in which he, yesterday, advocated the necessity for further improvements in the harbor of his own town, and I quite concur in the necessity for them, yet I would only support an application of the hon. gentleman for them, with this proviso, that they should be made as soon as the finances of the country would permit. I am aware that the fisheries on our shores require large expenditures, but it would not be wise under the present state of our affairs, to plunge into works requiring a heavy outlay of money. The hon. gentleman from Kingston spoke at some length of works having been completed, and the expenditures as a matter of course having ceased upon them. I do not think the hon. gentleman was quite candid in that respect. In a general way, I must admit, I have often admired his candor and the way in which he conducts the Opposition in this House; but on this question I think he has been a little less candid than usual. He spoke of the Suspense Account with regard to Intercolonial Railway renewals. There was another course which the Government could have adopted in that matter. They could have refrained from laying those rails altogether for some years and left them where they were, but would that be consistent with the public interest? I take it that those rails were necessary to preserve the continuity of a long line of steel track, and it was not necessary that the charge for them should be disputed because it appeared in the Public Accounts as having been expended in three years instead of the rails all having been laid in one year. There was not the slightest attempt at concealment; if there had, the Government might have been fairly charged with duplicity in this matter, but the entry was plainly set forth in the Public Accounts. The hon. gentleman, in referring to the expenditures for the survey of Dominion Lands, said expenditure had ceased, because as much land had been surveyed during the previous years as would suffice for some years to come. If the hon. gentleman had been as candid as usual, he would have applied the same rule to those surveys as he applied to the Suspense Account. He would say they have spent more money on surveys last year than was absolutely necessary, but we will have the benefit in the future, and will not require to expend more money for the same work at present. He might have applied the same rule to the steel rails. I was very much pleased to hear the hon. gentleman on my right, refer to the many valuable improvements that have been carried out in this Dominion, many of them works of which Canadians may well be proud. Amongst other things he mentioned the lights, harbors, the Intercolonial Railway, and other public works. I am not aware that the whole of the lights of this country have been erected by the late Government. I believe a constant improvement has been going on, and that many of those lights are attributable to the officers of the present Government. Then with regard to the Intercolonial Railway, the completion of that work, and its great durability and excellence, which have been alluded to by several hon. gentlemen in this House, are not altogether attributable to the late Government. I do not think that it was any part of their plan to use steel rails on that line, and yet the rapidity of travel upon it and its security, have been increased to a great extent by that means. Then again the iron bridges formed no part of the original plan of the road. We find by reference to a work called "The Intercolonial, a History," that the Engineer-in-Chief had the greatest difficulty in inducing the Commissioners of that day to adopt iron bridges. They were wedded to the system of wooden bridges. Application after application was made by the Engineer-in-Chief, to induce those gentlemen to adopt iron instead of wood, and had not a strong feeling been manifested in Parliament against it, I believe we would have had no iron bridges on the Intercolonial Railway to-day. Yet, when any credit is claimed for the excellence of this road, the hon. gentlemen opposite claim it all for themselves, not altogether justly. I heard my hon. friend on my right speak of the coal trade. I may mention an incident which I noticed a few days ago in the English press, illustrating the inconvenience which sometimes arises from protecting coal. The article referred to a large business which had existed between American ports and the north of England, in corn. Vessels engaged in the trade found great difficulty in securing return freight. Gas coal had been unusually dear in the American ports, and vessels left freighted with corn, yet, in consequence of the high protective duty against English coal, the vessels had to return in ballast, and the American seaport towns had to continue to burn dear gas. My hon. friend spoke of the slow increase of population in Canada during the past decade—one per cent, I think he said. It seems to me that that is rather a surprising thing, unless some national explanation can be given for it. The explanation is easy. It must be recollected that during the last decade, the great American war took place, and a great stimulus was given to all kinds of business in the United States on the return of peace. It was quite natural, and we know it is a fact, that numbers of Canadians served in the American army, and with that spirit of enterprise for which the race is remarkable, they went over in large numbers from Canada to where the highest wages were to be obtained. No doubt large numbers of them emigrated only temporarily, and have returned to Canada again. Hon. gentlemen will recollect an incident in the career of the late hon. Joseph Howe, which was highly creditable to the hon. gentleman himself, and also creditable to the courage and energy of the Canadian race. I allude to the great meeting of the National and Dominion Boards of Trade at Detroit, where Mr. Howe took that meeting by storm by detailing the manner in which his own son had served in the American Army, and the pride with which that young man's mother had welcomed him home on his return, bearing on his breast the medals that were the certificates of his good conduct and bravery. This was the case also with the sons of many men less distinguished and less known than the late hon. Joseph Howe. My hon. friend also alluded to a subject on which I could sympathize with him most sincerely, although I could not see with the apparent clearness that he does, a way to its completion. I allude to the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. Haythorne.

I must say that it has always been a matter of some pride to me to think of the vast extent of this Dominion, and the prospect of uniting its two extremes between the two great oceans by an iron road. But now, having arrived at that period of life when men desire to see with the eye the completion of such works rather than their inauguration, I would, therefore, be well pleased to witness the completion of some portion at least of that great enterprise. I regret that it is necessary, in consequence of the state of our finances, to defer for a time the portion known as the missing link, midway between Manitoba and Lake Superior. It is most desirable that that work should be accomplished, but it is no less the duty of the Government to consider before all other things the necessity of keeping the finances of the country in such a condition that the public credit of the Dominion will be fully maintained in the European markets, so that we can continue to go there when necessary, and borrow on as good terms as on former occasions. I must say the conviction is strong in my mind, that a vast number of the difficulties which have beset the present Government in the administration of the public affairs, have been thrown in their path by the policy of their predecessors. If you look at the history of the period during which they held the reins of power, we will find that their influence had declined towards the latter end of their term of office. In the Session of 1873, I happened to be present in the House of Commons during the first division which occurred in that Parliament, which was summoned to meet for the first time in the spring of that year. I recollect very well the majority of the Government on that occasion was seventeen only, in a new Parliament elected under the auspices of the hon. gentleman who now leads the Opposition, and his friends. I would not further allude to those auspices, as I wish to heaven I could forget them altogether, and that they could be obliterated entirely from the annals of this country. When a Government feel themselves in that position it is necessary to look out for the future, and it is, unhappily, the case, that many politicians—I hardly think it is just to style them statesmen—think more of how their successors' course can be embarrassed than how the affairs of the country can be best administered. The course of the hon. gentlemen was staped, so that if they should be sustained they could say to the country, "We were able to produce measures of a glorious description;" and if they were defeated they could go out in a blaze of glory, as it were, and with a halo around their heads such as my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has to-day placed about the head of his hon. friend from Saugeen. But that sort of policy has the effect of embarrassing, to a great extent, the course of their successors. We have had here all sorts of committees of enquiry; and statements have been made with regard to steel rails, the Kaminitiquia terminus and the unfinished lock at Fort Francis; all of which hon. gentlemen are content to stigmatize as gross blunders. I am not aware that I have heard any hon. gentleman in this House charge corruption against the Minister of Public Works in the matter of the steel rails, but although hon. gentlemen here do not allow themselves that freedom of speech which goes beyond charging the Government with blunders, their followers out of doors are not guided by the same nicety of feeling, and what is in this House styled blundering, is out of doors by the followers of hon. gentlemen called corruption. I have seen myself, and others have seen, that steel rails transaction stigmatized as a gross job; that the Premier's brother was implicated in it, and a considerable portion of the people will never be brought to disbelieve the statement that the Premier's brother was in some mysterious manner to make a fortune out of that transaction. Then there is the practice of referring to matters which are being enquired into by committees. I ask if it is a fair and reasonable course to pursue? One would think, hon. gentlemen would be content at least to wait for the result of a committee, and to hear the evidence without coming to a foregone conclusion. Yet, we have heard hon. gentlemen in this House deliberately referring to charges which are being inquired into before committees, as if those enquiries had been fais accompli. I am not disposed to occupy the time of this House at greater length. I know very well it is not a subject with which I am particularly familiar, and I will conclude the remarks I have made, by expressing the strong confidence I feel myself in the future of this Dominion, provided only, that its Government should be conducted upon something like statesmanlike principles. I deprecate most sincerely the course that has been adopted in and out of Parliament, and the extremes, something beyond party feeling—more like partizan feeling—that have been exhibited. I believe if this sort of thing is to continue and become a fixed principle in our Parliamentary proceedings, that the future of this Dominion, brilliant as I believe it may be, will be materially affected by such conduct. What we need to secure the best management of the public affairs of this country and the most speedy development of its great sources, is that our public men in and out of Parliament should display less partizanship and more statesmanship, and I would now urge on our own friends as well as hon. gentlemen opposite; the necessity in the interests of the state to drop partizanship altogether, and to govern their conduct in and out of Parliament on principles of the purest patriotism.

THE LYON DIVORCE BILL.

SECOND READING.

The Order of the Day being read for the second reading of the Bill intituled: "An Act for the relief of Victoria Elizabeth Lyon."

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH presented to the House the certificate of the Clerk of the Senate, that due notice of the second reading of the Bill had been given. Frank Burton, of the City of Ottawa, law clerk, was called to the Bar of the House and testified to having served upon the husband of the petitioner a duplicate of the Bill before the House, together with the Order of the House. The witness then withdrew.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH moved:—

"That the Petitioner present at the Bar of the Senate, for the purpose of being examined as well generally as in regard to any collusion or connivance between the parties, be not now examined, but that it be an instruction to any Select Committee to whom the Bill on the subject may be referred to make such examinations."

Motion agreed to on a division.

The Bill was then read the second time on a division.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH moved:—

“That the said Bill intituled: ‘An Act for the relief of Victoria Elizabeth Lyon,’ be referred to a Select Committee, composed of the Honorable Messieurs Skead, Cornwall, Macdonald (Victoria), McLelan, Macfarlane, Odell, Botsford, Dickson, and the mover, with power to send for persons, papers and records, and that all persons summoned to appear before the Senate in this matter, appear before the said Committee, and that the said Committee have leave to sit on Saturdays and other non sitting days.”

The motion was agreed to on a division.

CANADA SOUTHERN RAILWAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. DICKSON moved the second reading of Bill (6) intituled: “An Act to authorize and confirm the scheme of arrangement of the Canada Southern Railway Company.” He said this Bill had received more attention in the other House than almost any other measure. It had been opposed at every stage, and he thought, therefore, it was unnecessary to discuss its provisions in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL said he would not oppose the second reading of the Bill, but, in assenting to the second reading, he by no means wished it to be supposed that he assented to all its provisions. There were other matters, irrespective of the provisions contained in the Bill, which might deserve particular attention: he referred to the effect which this measure might possibly have on other railway companies. He desired to keep himself free to take such a course, at future stages of the Bill, as might seem advisable or necessary.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said he did not desire to raise a discussion on the Bill at this late hour of the evening, but he also wished to guard himself against being committed to it, either in its principle or details. The measure was a very important one and presented aspects to the House and country which he thought were deserving of the greatest consideration. He was satisfied, however, to let it go to the Committee on Banking, Commerce and Railways, and if it should be found necessary to move against it, that course could be taken when the Bill came up for the third reading.

Hon. Mr. HOPE said the Bill contained a great many objectionable features, which he hoped would be amended in committee, but if not, he would be prepared at a future stage to offer such amendments as he thought the nature of the Bill called for. He made these remarks in order that it might not be supposed he approved of the legislation proposed.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH said he would merely state that he wished to place himself in the same position as the hon. gentleman who had preceded him.

Hon. Mr. McMASTER thought the proper course was the one suggested—to send the Bill to committee.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS was somewhat surprised to hear so many hon. members giving warning that they reserved the right to oppose the Bill at a future stage. He believed it was the rule to read such Bills as this the second time pro forma and send them to committee. If any portion of a Bill should be found objectionable, and that portion could not be amended in committee, then it was open to any member to oppose it at the third reading.

Hon. Mr. DICKSON said he had always been under the the same impression—that hon. gentlemen had a right to object to a Bill at any stage.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said it was always understood that the principle of a Bill was considered at the second reading, and that was why he had declared that he reserved the right of opposing this measure at a future stage. He had not examined it, but he had heard a great deal about it—that it contained very objectionable features. Having heard that, he did not think it right that he should give a silent assent to the second reading.

The Bill was read the second time.

NATIONAL INSURANCE COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL moved, the second reading of Bill (8) intituled “An Act to authorize the National Insurance Company to reduce its Capital Stock, and for other purposes." He explained, this Bill had been necessitated by the depressed state of the business of the company.

The Bill was read the second time.

THE NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN moved, the second reading of Bill (27) intituled "An Act respecting the Northern Railway Company of Canada." He explained that the Bill was of a very simple character, merely to confirm the agreement entered into between the North Simcoe Railway Company and the Northern Railway Company of Canada.

The Bill was read the second time.

THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. FERRIER moved the second reading of Bill (26) intituled "An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company." He explained that the object of the Bill was, to provide for keeping a duplicate seal for Canada; also to provide for a provident fund for the benefit of employes in case of accident, and also to enable the company to enter into working arrangements with other roads.

The Bill was read the second time.

THE RAILWAY ACT EXTENSION BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House went into Committee on Bill (38) intituled "An Act to extend to the Province of Prince Edward Island the Railway Act, 1868, and certain Acts amending the same."

Hon. Mr. DICKSON in the chair.

The Bill was reported without amendment, read the third time and passed.

The House adjourned at 11 o'clock.

Hon. Mr. Miller.

THE SENATE.

Thursday, March 28th.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

After Routine proceedings.

REFERENCE OF BILLS TO THE SUPREME COURT.

THE 55TH RULE CHANGED.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD moved: That the 55th Rule of this House be rescinded and the following substituted in lieu thereof:—

"At any time before the final passing of any Private Bill, the same may, if the Senate think fit, be referred to the Supreme Court for their examination, and report as to any point or matter in connection with such Bill, expressed in the Order of Reference."

He said the general opinion of the House seemed to be that this rule should be changed. It had been added when the rules of the House were revised a year ago, but it was apparent that the Senate should not limit the exercise of its privilege to referring a Bill at any stage to the Supreme Court. He believed the amendment now proposed would meet with the approval of the House.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL said he had not been a member of the Committee which framed the rule it was now proposed to change. He agreed in the opinion that it had worked somewhat inconveniently, and experience had shown it should be altered. He had a vague recollection there was a reason for confining the reference to the second reading, which had not been mentioned. However, in practice the rule had not been found to work conveniently, and he was ready to join his hon. friend who proposed to make the change, and see whether it would prove to be a wise one. If it should not, then the House could at any time go back to the old rule.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said it was quite evident that experience had proved the rule should be relaxed. He was not aware that there was any other reason for limiting the reference to the second reading than the one which had been stated—that the principle of the Bill was established at that stage. However, it had been clearly shown that objectionable features might be introduced in a Bill after the second reading, or it might be freed from objectionable features, and in either case the rule ought to be as elastic as the circumstances might warrant.

Hon. Mr. HAVILAND said he happened to be a member of the committee which had framed the rule and the reason just given—that the principle of a Bill was established at the second reading—was the one which influenced the committee. However, the reasons given for the proposed change were so strong that he would support the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

SOCIÉTÉ DE PRÊTS ET PLACEMENTS DE QUÉBEC BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. Hamilton (Kingston), from the Committee on Banking, Commerce, and Railways, reported the Bill intituled: "An Act to incorporate the 'Société de Construction Mutuelle,' under the name of the 'Société de Prêts et Placements de Québec,'" with two amendments.

The report was received, and the amendments were concurred in.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC REGULATION BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill "J" intituled, "An Act respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquor." He said:—In bringing this matter before the notice of hon. Senators a few days ago, I went very fully into the details of the Bill, and therefore, I assume the House would not desire I should repeat what I then gave utterance to, and more particularly as my observations seemed to be generally understood, as I notice by articles in the press throughout the country, and as I have had evidence in the shape of voluminous correspondence from parties criticising the measure. Although the issue of the Bill was, in the first place, so limited, it has been copied in extenso in several newspapers, and from the communications I have already received, I am led to believe the provisions are fully understood in the country, with some few exceptions; and therefore it is unnecessary that I should discuss the details to which I adverted when introducing the measure for the first time in this Chamber. I shall, however, give the House the reasons for this legislation. It will be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen, that in the sessions of 1874 and 1875, more particularly the latter, petitions from all parts of the Dominion were addressed to both Houses of Parliament, asking for a prohibitory liquor law. Those petitions were referred to a Committee of this Chamber, whose report I will read to the House. The report of the Committee of 1874 was as follows:—

Hon. Mr. Scott.

"The Select Committee, to whom were referred the several petitions presented to the Senate, praying for the enactment of a law to prohibit the traffic in intoxicating liquors in the Dominion,—beg leave to submit the following as their report thereon.

The Petitions which have been referred to your Committee number 993, and have attached to them 349,294 signatures, being ten times the number of those of last year; 147 of the petitions are from Municipal Councils, and 9 from other representative bodies, each acting for a considerable number of persons; it is therefore obvious that the aggregate number of signatures mentioned would have to be largely increased, probably to 500,000, in order to convey an approximate idea of the vast number of individuals who plead for a prohibitory law. Among the representative petitions there is one from the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick, signed by 33 members, and one from the General Assembly of the Canada Presbyterian Church, which claims a constituency of 226,000 church members, and it must not be forgotten that the Legislative Assembly of Ontario joined last year in the prayer of these petitions.

That the desire for legislative prohibition is not merely of a local or even Provincial character, is shown by the petitions coming from all the Provinces of the Dominion: there are from Ontario, 633 petitions, with 302,090 signatures; from Quebec, 103 petitions, with 14,038 signatures; from New Brunswick, 92 petitions, with 16,335 signatures; from Nova Scotia, 119 petitions, with 13,622 signatures; from Prince Edward Island, 43 petitions, with 3,174 signatures; from British Columbia, 2 petitions, (municipal) with 34 signatures; and from Manitoba, 1 petition (Presbyterian Church), with 1 signature.

Your Committee regard the vast and annually increasing number of petitioners, and their unanimity in the statements and prayer of their several petitions, as indicating the immense and pressing importance of the subject to which they call the attention of the Senate, and the profound and wide spread feeling of the need of such legislation as shall at once check, and eventually extirpate from our land, the vice of intemperance which has so long been, and still is, a prolific source of crime and misery, disease and death, and a blight upon the fair prospects of our young Dominion.

The whole of the petitioners join in asserting that the vice of intemperance is fearfully prevalent and increasing, and that it results mainly from the facilities afforded by law to the traffic in intoxicating liquors. Your Committee have no means of testing the accuracy of the statement, but their own personal observation, and the facts brought to view in the official Returns of Customs and Excise, shewing an enormous quantity consumed in the Dominion, lead them to place full reliance on the assertion.

These Returns shew that for the year ending 30th June, 1873, the quantity of Intoxicating Liquors imported into Canada and entered for home consumption was 2,910,304 gallons, valued at $2,075,089, and the quantity manufactured in addition thereto, after deducting exports, was 16,308,625 gallons, valued at $9,785,154. They also shew that 121,762,347 lbs. of valuable grain, principally Indian corn, wheat, barley, and rye, were used in this manufacture: these quantities and values are in excess of those of the preceding year.

The petitioners further assert that the traffic in intoxicating liquors is shewn, by the most careful enquiries, to be the cause of probably not less than three-fourths of the pauperism, immorality and crime found in this country; the evidence gathered by the Committee of the House of Commons and reported last year, is strongly corroborative of this assertion; but your Committee are of opinion that more full and extended official information on this very important branch of the subject than can possibly be procured by Parliamentary Committees during the time the House are in Session, should be obtained by the Government and laid before Parliament.

A third assertion is made by the petitioners, viz., that the history of legislation upon the liquor traffic shows conclusively that the evils resulting from intemperance cannot be suppressed so long as the traffic is licensed and protected by law; this statement is proved by reference to the Statutes, both Imperial and Provincial, and the unquestionable increase of intemperance while license laws have been in force; these laws have indeed signally failed in their professed object of so curtailing and regulating the traffic as to repress that vice.

The petitioners, with one accord, pray for a law to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, evidently believing that such entire prohibition, and nothing short of it, will prove effective in removing, or in materially lessening the evils of which they complain; they do not assign their reasons for this belief, but they are doubtless based upon the failure of the licensing system, and on the experience of other countries where prohibitory laws have been enacted, as shown by the testimony to the beneficial effects which have resulted from such legislation, which was obtained and appended to their report last year, by the Committee of the House of Commons.

As it has already been officially announced in Parliament that the prayer of these petitions cannot be granted at this present Session, your Committee refrain from submitting any opinion or recommendation as to immediate legislative action; but they consider that the time has arrived when the earnest attention of the Government and of the Legislature should be given to this important subject, with the view of discovering and applying the best remedy for the gigantic evil, that affects so seriously the peace and prosperity of the Dominion.

Your Committee, therefore, recommend that steps should be taken, without delay, to test by official investigation, the several statements of the petitions, and also to ascertain, authoritatively, how far the attempts to remove the evils of intemperance by legislative prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors in other countries or states, have resulted either in success or failure, in order that Parliament at its next Session may be in possession of all the information necessary for its guidance in determining whether the legislation prayed for should be granted or withheld; and as this cannot, at this Session, be done by your Committee, they recommend that an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, respectfully requesting him to procure the required information without unnecessary delay, and to cause the same to be printed, and, if practicable, copies thereof furnished to each member of the Senate and of the House of Commons, not later than one month before the next annual Session of Parliament."

"All of which is respectfully submitted.

In the following year the subject was again brought under the notice of the Senate, and a very large number of petitions were presented praying that legislation should take place which would give the people a right to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, and asking for power, considerably wider than those in the Bill now presented to the House. The report of the Committee of this House to whom those petitions were referred, was as follows:—

"First Report of the Committee to whom were referred the several petitions for a law to prohibit the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and the Report of the Commissioners sent by the Government to enquire into the working of a prohibitory law in the United States, respectfully report,—

That the number and character of the petition for prohibition of the traffic in intoxicating liquors already presented to the Senate, clearly indicate that there is no diminution of the desire for a prohibitory law expressed by the petitions to Parliament in the session of 1873 and 1874; but on the contrary, a growing conviction of its necessity, as the only effective remedy for intemperance, and the crime and misery resulting from it.

That the simple fact, that so very large a number of petitioners, estimated in the aggregate to be not less than 500,000, allege that vice and pauperism are largely caused by the liquor traffic, and that the system of regulating it by license laws has proved ineffectual to check intemperance,—and unite in praying for the enactment of a prohibitory law,—is sufficient to prove the vast importance of the subject, and to entitle the prayer to the earliest consideration of the Senate. On no other political or social question, ever submitted to Parliament in this country or in Great Britain, has there been so large a number of petitioners, in proportion to the population affording so marked an expression of public opinion in its favor.

That the report of the Government Commissioners shews clearly that the Prohibitory Law of the States of Maine and Vermont, has been well enforced, and has largely diminished crime and pauperism, and that its beneficial effects upon the community have been so fully proved by the experience of over twenty years, that there is now no attempt made to repeal it; while in the other States visited—although the law was not so generally enforced—whenever it was brought into full operation, the same result of diminution of crime invariably followed. In the cases where the prohibitory law was for a short time repealed, intemperance and crime immediately increased in so marked a degree that prohibition was soon re-enacted.

That the enforcement of a prohibitory law in Canada would be less difficult than in any of the States to which referred has been made, on account of our having the power to forbid the importation of liquors from abroad, from which power they are, by their Federal constitution, debarred.

That the constitutionality of such a law, and its necessity for the protection of life and property, and preservation of the peace, has not only been recognized by the legislation of former years, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors at certain times and places, but has been fully affirmed by this Parliament at its last Session, in the enactment of the stringent Prohibitory law now in force over our vast North-west Territory, and by the Act of the present Session, "to consolidate the laws respecting the North-west Territories."

That in view of all these facts and considerations, it appears just and expedient that the prayer of the petitioners should be granted and that the time has now arrived when the attention of the Government should be given on this important question, with a view to the introduction of a Bill to prohibit the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquors, except for mechanical and medicinal purposes, throughout the Dominion, at the earliest date compatible with the public interests

That should the Government not feel satisfied that the indication of public opinion afforded by the numerous petitions presented to Parliament, is sufficient to justify the early introduction of such a law, it would be desirable to submit the question to the decision of the people, by taking a vote of the electors thereon, as soon as practicable.

All which is respectfully submitted.

ALEXANDER VIDAL,
Chairman.

Senate Committee Room,
March 27th, 1875.

In obedience to the expressed wish of the House as evidenced by the report of the gentlemen to whom the consideration of this subject was delegated, a commission was issued to the Rev. J. W. Manning and Mr. F. Davis to enquire into the working of the prohibitory laws of the United States. They visited those States where such laws were in force and collected a mass of information which was in the following Session brought down and distributed to Parliament and the country. In reading the information afforded by their report, one is led to the conclusion that the gentlemen who gave information and their opinions to the Commissioners in the various States where prohibitory laws were in force, believed that the effect of prohibition was to put down vice and crime. I do not propose to weary the House by quoting the statistics there given. The report is in the hands of members and no doubt they have read it for themselves. The opinion seems to be, that a large amount of crime and immorality is due to the drinking customs of society, and that the restriction of the liquor traffic is conducive to morality; this report asks for a more stringent law than the Bill before the House. It recommends the absolute prohibition of the sale or importation or manufacture of intoxicating liquors. My own opinion is, and I believe it is the opinion of a large number of the people of Canada, that the country is not in such a position as to render it possible to prohibit arbitrarily the sale, manufacture or importation of intoxicating liquors. The views of the temperance people can be more readily met by a permissive law, applicable to the several areas of the Dominion, either smaller or larger, in which there may be a divided opinion. The right to impose restriction on the liquor traffic is one that has been recognized in this country, in the United States and in England. It has been made more frequently the subject of legislation than any other article of trade and commerce. We know the traffic has been frequently the subject of restrictive laws in the Imperial Parliament from time to time, all more or less severe, limiting the hours within which liquor may be sold; limiting the sale to particular days of the week, and preventing the sale on certain occasions, manifestly on Sundays. Therefore, it is not peculiar legislation, inasmuch as it has formed the subject of legislation in other legislatures akin to our own. In the several provinces of the Dominion they also have laws that are in a great measure restrictive. In Ontario and Quebec, it is very well known, the Temperance Act of 1864, known as the Dunkin Act, was in force at the time of Confederation, and in the Province of Ontario it has continued to be in force with a very slight change. In the Province of Quebec the greater part of the Act was repealed, but re-enacted in another shape in the Civil Code of Lower Canada. Practically, it is in force in a very considerable part of Quebec under the Civil Code. In New Brunswick there are very strong restrictions on the granting of licenses. In Nova Scotia they are still stronger; in that Province it requires the consent of two-thirds or three-fourths of the people, a majority of the Grand Jury and of the Court of Quarter Sessions in any district, before even a license can be issued. How far those laws are legal or otherwise, it is not for me to discuss. In view of the conclusions arrived at by the Judges of the Supreme Court lately, I am inclined to think some of the restrictive laws of the provinces are ultra vires. The tendency of the several decisions in the courts of law, of the Supreme Court especially, is to show that the control of the trade in intoxicating liquors rests with the Federal Parliament.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—Will the hon. gentleman give us his experience as to the working of the Dunkin Act?

Hon. Mr. Scott,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman refer to the mechanical working of the Dunkin Act?

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—I mean its advantages.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman asks me to tread on very delicate ground. Of course the conclusions reached are entirely dependent on one's views, whether prohibition will keep men sober or not. My own impression is, you cannot entirely control the drinking usages of society by prohibitory laws. I think that is impossible. People must be educated to correct views on the subject before they can be kept sober.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But you can remove temptation from a considerable number of people who will not yield to vice unless tempted. If those premises are sound, then the law would be extremely useful where a considerable portion of the people were favorable to prohibition, for the removal of temptation would of itself save many from the vice of drinking, whose moral tone had been injured by the great facilities now existing for indulging in the vice. That is my own individual view. There are hon. gentlemen in this Chamber who are much more competent to give an opinion than I am, inasmuch as I have never lived in a county where it has been in force. It has been adopted in several counties in Ontario, and has been very generally observed in some of those municipalities. In others it has not proved so satisfactory, and has been repealed. It all depends upon the people in the locality, and whether they are educated up to an appreciation of the benefits to flow from total abstinence. Drunkenness is one of those evils that cannot be prevented by legislation, any more than you can prevent the use of opium among the Chinese. They will get it some way; but a great many can be saved from the degrading taste by being deprived of the facilities for obtaining opium. My own views on that subject are rather peculiar, and it is not necessary I should give them to the House other than what I have said, that I think with regard to intoxicating liquors, where so large a proportion of the people, not only of this country, but of others also, have come to the conclusion that the human family would be very much better morally and physically without its use, their representations are entitled to some consideration, and under our system of the minority yielding to the majority, to have their views carried out wherever it can be made reasonably to appear we can enforce the law. I should consider it a farce to pass a prohibitory law in Canada at present, or to prohibit the importation of liquor, because it could not be enforced. The people would not be impressed with the moral sense that the law ought to be observed, and, therefore, it would be violated; but there are considerable sections of the country where a large majority of the people are impressed with the belief that society would be very much better without the use of intoxicating liquors; that if it were banished from their precincts, crime would decrease, and they and their neighbours would enjoy better health, and morally and physically would be superior if deprived of the use of that stimulant. In such sections I believe the people are entitled to have prohibition if the majority desire it, because the traffic in intoxicating liquors is not like trade in any other article. We all know that a very considerable number—I think I am safe in saying a large proportion—of our people have come to the conclusion, that the human family would be very much better without stimulants of any kind. I, myself, believe we would be very much better without many stimulants I could name—opium and tobacco are very little less injurious than intoxicating liquors—but unless that view is shared by the majority, it would be idle to attempt to enforce laws against the palate and taste, until people are educated up to a standard, to appreciate their value and importance. But the opinions with regard to intoxicating liquors are most decided, and we have the judgment of men whose opinions are entitled to very great respect, that their use is injurious to the human family. I do not hesitate to say I concur entirely in that view—that there is no condition of the human body in which alcoholic drinks have any but injurious effects. That is the conclusion I have arrived at, and I have given the subject some considerable attention and study. Medicinally, I think it is absurd to prescribe it. My views on that point, probably, are strong, and therefore I do not desire to discuss what might be considered a hobby of mine. Happily it is a hobby shared in by many very distinguished men. My conclusion is that the use of stimulants is bad; that under no possible condition of the human body can they be of the slightest use, otherwise than to weaken the vital tissue and lower vitality. However, this is scarcely germane to the subject; but my hon. friend rather invited an expression of my views, and they can go for what they are worth.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—They are very interesting.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—With regard to the right of the Federal Parliament to legislate on this subject, I do not know that it is necessary I should say very much. The decisions in the courts, and the publicity given to them are entirely of too recent date to warrant my enlarging on that subject, other than to express my own conviction that the general result of all the cases that have been before the courts, high and low, especially in the Queen vs. Taylor and the Queen vs. Severn, lately decided in the Supreme Court, is to prove that, although there is a licensing power under the Confederation Act, in the Provincial Legislature, yet, as a branch of trade and commerce, the Federal Parliament has absolute control over the liquor question—that is, it may prohibit its importation or manufacture. The greater includes the less. If it can do that it can restrict or prohibit it in localities, if thought wise and proper. The licensing power is entirely subservient and subordinate to the powers of the Federal Parliament to exclude either its manufacture or importation as an article of trade and commerce. Even the judges who held that the local legislatures had the right to insist upon license from manufacturers and brewers, yet, as an element of trade and commerce, the licensing power was subordinate to the larger one which was exclusively possessed by the Dominion. In the case of the Queen vs. Taylor, the Appeal Court of Ontario held that it was not ultra vires to insist upon a license from the brewer or wholesale dealer (the brewer particularly in this case) under the licensing power of the local legislatures. In giving judgment, the late Chief Justice Draper reversed the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, that the local authorities had not the power to impose a license upon brewers. When the case was appealed to the Supreme Court, Judge Strong sustained the view of the late Chief Justice Draper, that it was competent for the Local Legislature to exact a license from a brewer, but if the license was in excess of what was reasonable and legitimate, then it was infringing on trade and commerce, in which case it would be void. That was making a very nice distinction. That distinction would lead to the conclusion the local authorities had jurisdiction up to a certain point, and if the license were exorbitant, then it would be ultra vires. I will quote his remarks on that point:—

“Strong, J.—I entirely concur in the judgment just pronounced by His Lordship, the Chief Justice. I only desire to add that I am of opinion that a license which would amount to prohibition would be an undue interference with the exclusive powers of the Dominion Parliament as to trade and commerce, as has been, in effect, lately decided by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, in the case of Regina vs. the Justices of the Peace of the County of Kings, ex parte McManus, 11 c. L. J. 249, 2 Ringley 525. Burton, J., and Patterson, J., concurred. Appeal allowed.”

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Have you the opinions of the Judges of the Supreme Court on the Bill before the House?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not consulted them. In conversation I may have spoken of it in a general way, but I have taken no regular opinion on it from anyone.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Was not the case you have cited that of a brewer's license, not a license to sell under the ordinary sense of the term?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—That is a very different thing.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the case of the Queen vs. Severn the decision was the same way.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Was that a brewer's license?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. I will quote from the decision of the Chief Justice, who was supported by three of the other Judges. He said:—

“I feel bound, therefore, on principle and as the result of all the cases to construe the words in question, as controlled by the other portions of the Act, and therefore not to include licenses to brewers or distillers to sell by wholesale. I am of opinion, for the reasons that the Act of Ontario in question was ultra vires. I will not, however, say that where the terms used are exhaustive of the particular class or subject named, that we are bound to apply the principle of construction just stated, and it may possibly be argued that such is here the case in respect of the words, ‘and other licenses.’ In such a case, where there are no controlling conditions, the words might be sufficient to give the right claimed for the local Legislature; but when considering the object and premises of the whole Act and the mode adopted for providing for effecting them, I can come to no other conclusion than one founded on the duty I feel incumbent upon me to read the whole Act together, and therein and thereby, and not from the technical reading of a few words in a sub-section, however otherwise important, seek for the intention and meaning of the Legislature. By this mode the Act is made to harmonize in all its parts, and the feasibility of working it out is established. By the other construction, and not, in my view, the proper one, the evident intention of the Legislature is frustrated and the legislation itself made absurd and inconsistent; and the working out of the details made most difficult, and it may be found totally impossible, and that the appeal should be allowed with costs and judgment entered for the appellant.”

Hon. Mr. Scott.

The conclusion reached in those several decisions is, I think, that the power to deal with this subject rests with the Federal Parliament.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Who gave that judgment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Chief Justice Ritchie.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The same Judge who was in a minority in the other case before the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, he differing, I believe, on the question of licenses. I now come down more particularly to the Bill itself, and, as I said before, I do not think it would be proper for me to go seriatim over the details, as I explained them so fully on the introduction. I propose rather to listen to the observations made on it and give explanations to hon. gentlemen who may desire them with reference to the contents of the Bill. I may say here there is some misconception in the country as to the provision respecting the area in which the measure could be adopted—that a county was not supposed to include a town where the town was a distinct municipality. The Bill was drawn to include minor municipalities, and to apply solely to cities and counties. Then, in reference to the number of the signatures required to put in force the machinery for taking a vote of the people, that has been fixed at 25 per cent of the electors. I have received strong appeals from different parties on that point, many contending that unless the sentiment of the municipality can be more strongly evidenced than by the signatures of 25 per cent of the electors, the Act should not be submitted to the popular vote; others maintaining that the proportion is too large—that a much smaller proportion ought to be sufficient to allow of a plebiscite being taken. My own impression is 25 per cent is a fair proportion, and as it is equally vigorously opposed on both sides, I may fairly regard it as a reasonable proportion. The Bill itself provides that it shall not be in force wherever the Dunkin Act now prevails, but that it shall be competent for parties to repeal that Act, and afterwards if they please, adopt this measure in that county or city. I propose suggesting an amendment, that it might be competent for them to invite the opinion of the county on the adoption of this law, without repealing the Dunkin Act, but if the law putting in force the Act of 1878 carry, then, ipso facto, the Dunkin Act shall cease. Many advocates of the Temperance Act of 1864 have expressed the opinion, that when this law comes in force it should supplant that Act in those localities where it prevails. I do not think that is a fair proposition, because this measure is so entirely different from the Dunkin Act, and such an enlargement of that law, it would be ex-post facto legislation. It has been again pressed upon my attention that the machinery for repealing the Dunkin Act is defective. They ask that machinery may be introduced in this Act, that will enable them to test whether the people think the Dunkin Act should be repealed or not. I do not, myself, see that the proposition is an unreasonable one, although I have not prepared any suggestion with a view to introducing that in the Bill. There are many minor details in the Bill that I propose to submit to the House when we go into committee, that it might not be proper to discuss now. I can explain them at a future stage of the Bill. One clause, to which I did not draw attention at the first reading, was that which provides for the confiscation and destruction of liquor, which forms the subject of a breach of the law. The suggestion has been made that where counties are united for municipal purposes the vote should be taken in the united counties. My own opinion is it would be better to have the vote taken in the individual counties. Northumberland and Durham were the counties to which my attention was specially directed. I believe they have the Dunkin Act in force there, not including the towns of Cobourg and Port Hope. It could in such a case be asked for in both counties simultaneously, and the vote taken on the one day. This law being of a peculiar character, it ought not to be enforced in localities where the people are not prepared to accept it. I shall now move the second reading, and, at a future stage I will make some further observations relating to the details of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. CORNWALL—I rise for the purpose of opposing the second reading of the Bill which is now before the House, and which was so elaborately explained when introduced by the hon. the Secretary of State. I must commence by expressing my surprise that the Government has taken up this measure at length and brought down a Bill which seems unreasonable and impracticable to an extreme degree. From what I had been able to observe of the policy of the Government during the past five years as to this question, I had certainly come to the conclusion that they were altogether opposed to any legislation upon the subject. And yet, here we find, at the last moment in which they are likely to have an opportunity of introducing any Bill on this subject in this or any other Parliament, they come before us with a Bill of such a character as this is. There must be some reason for this extraordinary change of policy on their part, and I do not think we need go very far to find what that reason most probably is. It must be that they remember that a general election is drawing near. They must remember that individual drops of water eventually fill the bucket; and they feel that they must, by any and every means in their power, strive to obtain that ultimate majority of votes which may replace them in this House in the same position they occupy at they present time. I intend to oppose this Bill on the two special grounds: that it is neither a wise nor a practical measure. I do not consider it a wise Bill, because it tends to prevent us, who have been surrounded by Providence with certain articles for our use and advantage, of the use of those things. In ancient times, a country, which was considered as one in which it was desirable to live, was spoken of as a land abounding in corn and wine and oil, but this Bill, ignoring the experience of ages, proposes to deprive us of two of these gifts of God. If it is urged that such gifts are of a hurtful and injurious nature, exactly the same may be said of all chemicals, medicines, gunpowder, and other articles which enter into the daily use of man, and are of infinite value to him, but which, nevertheless, are restricted in being sold and in being used by certain laws, in the same way that the sale and use of intoxicating liquors are restricted by regulations upon the subject. If a man is in the habit of so using intoxicating liquors as to become drunk and injure or annoy his neighbors, the law wisely steps in, and restrains and punishes that man; but that is a very different thing to allowing the majority of the electors of any particular district to lay down the law on such a subject as this to the rest of the inhabitants of that district, who probably outnumber them ten to one. If, in any particular district, one man, or twenty men, are in the habit of making an intemperate use of liquor, is that any reason why you or I, or any other inhabitant of the district, who never exceed the moderate use of it, and from such use derive not only pleasure but benefit, the deprivation of which we should much feel—is it in reason, under such circumstances, that a majority of the inhabitants of that district should lay down the law to the rest of us as to what we should drink, or rather what we should not drink? I contend that such a law as this would be an interference with the private rights of the people which would be unjustifiable in the highest degree, and would be of no practical value, because it could never be practically carried out. Then, again, think of the continual disturbance to which it would give rise, if such a law as this were enforced—the continual strife and agitation which it would occasion! Think of having one-half of the population spying out the private life of the other half, to see whether they complied with or evaded the terms of this law! I really think, if such regulations were to come into force in any particular part of the country, there would be such continual strife and disturbance in that district, that it would be shown at once that this was not a wise law in any particular. I consider, in addition, the law is not a practical law, because if it were enforced in one district, the result would simply be this: in surrounding districts the number of public houses and other places where liquor would be sold, would be doubled in number, and those who were in the habit of intemperately or temperately using liquors would go to those places and supply themselves with all they needed. This Bill would throw difficulties in their way, it is true, but there would be, nevertheless, as great a consumption of liquor in the prescribed district, as before the enforcement of the law. And if you were to go further and say, if that is the case we will extend the provisions of this law over the whole country, why, I say, it would simply give rise to a revolt and rebellion, which would speedily upset the law, and restore matters to the basis on which they now stand. I must say, I regret the introduction of such a bill as this in the Senate, because I am quite sure it places many hon. gentlemen in the same position in which I find myself, of having to stand up and oppose a bill which has—presumably—for its object the mitigation of the evils which are attendant on the intemperate consumption of alcoholic liquors. We must, all of us, recognize the evils of intemperance. There can be no difference of opinion on that point. We all know that the intemperate use of alcoholic stimulants is prejudicial, not only to the health of the person who so uses them, but also to his family, and frequently leads to the commission of crime. I think there are no statistics in Canada on those points; and even in England where statistics are so elaborate and copious on all matters it is difficult to arrive at a definite conclusion. Nevertheless, there is evidence to be got at, and I have been intersted during the past few days in looking over a report of a committee of the House of Lords on intemperance, which sat during the last year. It was pleasant to notice the assiduity with which the members of that committee attended to their labors, and the intelligence and knowledge they manifested in the examination of the witnesses brought before them. But after all the result was more or less unsatisfactory, because as many diverse opinions were given on every branch of the subject they were investigating as there were witnesses examined. One witness would say he did not consider intemperance on the increase. Another, who had equally good opportunities of coming to a proper conclusion on the subject, would say intemperance was rapidly on the increase. And so it was throughout the examination, and the result of the matter was, that there were so many diverse opinions as to how the evils of intemperance should be met, that no one can come to any definite opinion upon the subject. One thing, however, was clear—that the consumption of alcoholic liquors in England during the last decade had increased to a very large extent. But that is explained, and very reasonably explained, by the fact that during that time there were many years of unexampled prosperity, and the people were more in the position to spend money on the luxuries of life than they were before. That is proved by the fact that during those same years the consumption of tea, sugar, of even beef, and other necessaries, was increased in like proportion; and, to put it in the words of a witness, “the consumption of the temperate had increased during that time in proportion to the general prosperity of the people.” Then there was another interesting point brought out, which was, that four-fifths of the consumption of alcoholic liquor was the consumption of the temperate, and that less than one-fifth of the whole amount was the consumption of the intemperate. The word “intemperate” in this case, does not mean only those who habitually drink to the extent of drunkenness, but includes that very large class who, as a matter of course, in daily life, make use of more spirits than is good, either for their health or their pockets. Then there was another point which was well established, and that was, that in England intemperance was a local and not a national evil. It was in certain localities only that intemperance prevailed to any extent. In those certain localities the people seem to have got into a habit of intemperance, which did not exist in other places. Of the total number of committals for drunkenness during the year 1876, seventy-five per cent. took place in seven counties only of England, and those counties were situated in the North. They were counties where the inhabitants were engaged in mining, and in the large towns. But, after all, I do not know that these considerations are necessary. We must all recognize the evils of intemperance, and must all regret that the Government, when they took this matter in hand, did not bring down some sensible and practical bill which might be of practical value, and be carried out in a manner beneficial to the country. I believe they might have framed such a measure, though I have no intention of pointing out to the House what course, in my opinion, should be adopted; yet, I will say, there is no point to which the Government might well pay greater attention than to the moral education of the people. There is no doubt that one of the most potent causes of intemperance is the want of self control, arising from lack of early training and from generally imperfect education. There can be no doubt about that, and the energies and means of the Government might well be employed to bring about some change in these particulars. Every step they might take in that direction would be repaid ten-fold. But it is not only for them to see to this matter, it is also incumbent upon every member of this House, and every citizen of the country, to show, by his example, how he values and exercises self-control; not by depriving himself altogether of the use of the gifts with which a bountiful Providence has surrounded him, but by simply using those gifts in a temperate and a moderate manner.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I do not propose to reply, at the present stage, to the statements made by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, with but one exception. He has certainly clearly intimated to us that he has in his mind some scheme by which the frightful vice of intemperance and its dreadful results in our country can be lessened or removed. I hold that if he has any ideas on this subject worthy to be submitted to this House, it is his bounden duty, while occupying the position he does, to let us know what they are. For a long term of years the greatest philanthropists of the time, anxious to promote the best interests of humanity, have been giving their earnest attention to any and every scheme which has been suggested as likely to stay the ravages of intemperance; and I unhesitatingly say, that if any member of this House can devise a scheme by which this result may be more readily attained, or which he considers more in harmony with the dictates of reason than the one now submitted to the House, he is bound, by his unquestionable duty to the country, to make known what the measure is, and should not leave us in our ignorance to go on with a bill which he declares to be unwise and impractical, while he holds the key by which the great problem can be solved. I consider that we are indebted to the Government and especially to the hon. Secretary of State, for the measure which is now brought before Parliament. I recognize with the greatest satisfaction and delight to bear my testimony to, the readiness to meet the wishes of temperance men, which the hon. Secretary of State has shown in adopting their suggestions, and the trouble he has taken in drawing up the Bill which he has now submitted for our consideration. What may have led the Government to take up this subject I do not stay now to inquire into; I think it would be unworthy on my part were I, occupying the position I do in relation to this subject, to suggest that any unworthy or improper motive has influenced them in submitting this measure to Parliament.

Hon Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I must confess, while I think, upon the whole, it is a good Bill, and while I would take it as it is rather than lose it, I have objections to some sections, which I will, at the proper time, propose to amend. I rejoice in the fact that this Bill is so generally recognized as a measure which is above all party feeling; that we find members who usually oppose the Government willing to unite with those who support them in endeavoring to perfect the measure. That is undoubtedly the right course to pursue, for the interests of the whole country are affected by it. No political party has any special claim to call this their Bill: no party can, as such, be particularly affected by its passage or its rejection, but the whole country will be benefitted by its becoming law, and we are bound to give our best efforts to aid the Government in perfecting it. The hon. Secretary of State has told us very correctly that it is no

Hon. Mr. Vidal.

new legislation. There is certainly nothing novel in legislating with a view to limiting and restricting the liquor traffic. If we look at the Statute Book of England, what do we find? On its pages I believe there have been over three hundred different enactments on this particular subject. Does any hon. gentleman venture to assert that those enactments have been placed there in the interests of commerce, for the purpose of developing any branch of industry? No, every one of those statutes has for its object the restriction of the sale and the lessening of its resulting evils, and is a continually repeated testimony to the fact to which I have frequently called the attention of this House, that the traffic in intoxicating liquors is productive only of evil, and requires to be suppressed or curtailed in every direction. We have been for three centuries lopping off the twigs and branches of the upas tree which is growing in our midst. Why do we not cut it down at once? destroy it root and branch; then we should not find it necessary, year after year, to enact statutes for diminishing its baneful effects. The hon. Secretary of State has spoken of the legal or constitutional aspect of the question. I must confess in this I am still in the dark. I have perused with the greatest attention the judgments given by the Supreme Court of the Dominion, and of the other courts referred to by him, and at this hour I contend that we have little more light upon this question as to the ultra vires of our action upon it, than we had when I directed the attention of this House to the matter in 1875, when petitions for a prohibitory law were pouring in upon us from all parts of the country. We were not then met with the objection that it was beyond our jurisdiction, but with doubts as to the usefulness or efficiency of a prohibitory law, such as was petitioned for. It has been already related to us what took place—that a commission, at the instigation of Parliament, was appointed to go to those states where prohibition was in force, and report upon the effect of it in those states. Two were appointed; one of them, when they set out from this country, was an anti-prohibitionist. He had no sympathy with the prohibitory movement. What was the result of that Commission? A report which was certainly enough to satisfy every candid man that wherever prohibitory laws had been enacted and in any degree enforced, the greatest benefit had resulted. The report was printed and circulated very largely. Almost every hon. gentleman in this House must have had an opportunity of seeing it, and of weighing and judging of its contents. Their testimony is corroborated in every direction. The hon. gentleman who preceded me remarked that prohibition is not likely to produce good results.

Hon. Mr. CORNWALL—Not if attempted to be brought about in this way.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that no matter in what way it is brought about, where a prohibitory law exists, and is enforced, it is invariably accompanied by good results. In the ecclesiastical Province of Canterbury, England, prohibition has been fairly tested on a somewhat extensive scale, and with what result? Let me answer by reading a brief extract from the published report of its committee to the House of Convocation :

“ There are, at this time, within the Province of Canterbury, upwards of one thousand parishes, in which there is neither public house nor beer shop, and where, in consequence of the absence of these inducements to crime and pauperism, according to the evidence now before the committee, the intelligence, morality, and comfort of the people, are such as the friends of temperance would have anticipated.”

With permission of this House, I will read two or three short extracts from other papers corroborating this view. A writer in the Edinburgh Review says :—

“ We have seen a list of eighty-nine estates in England and Scotland where the drink traffic has been altogether suppressed with the happiest results.”

In Ireland the experiment has been tried in the county of Tyrone, which contains sixty-one square miles, and has a population of ten thousand people, and in which no public house is allowed. Of this county, the Right Honorable Lord Claude Hamilton, M. P., said :—

“ At present there is not a single policeman in that district. The poor rates are half what they were before, and the magistrates testify to the great absence of crime.”

In Saltaire, in the county of Yorkshire, England, there is not a single beer shop, and prohibition has prevailed for many years. Of this place, in an article on this subject, the Daily Telegraph says :
Hon. Mr. Vidal.

“ The stage of experiment has long been passed; the scheme has survived open hostility, envy, and detraction, and is now a brilliant success.”

The report of our commissioners, to which I have already referred, contains many such certificates, from Governors of States, Judges, Sheriffs, and other public authorities, showing the effect of prohibition to have been the same in the United States. I will give one more extract, showing what good effects have accompanied the partial prohibition of the liquor traffic in our own country, where the Temperance Act of 1864 has been in force. The Mayor of the town of Napanee writes :—

“ The Dunkin Bill is a success in this town and county. We have no prisoners in our gaol except one, a lunatic. We have no fights, no quarrels, no arrests, no paupers. All is peace and harmony and good will. The trade of the town has not suffered in the least. We have no municipal law better kept than this.”

I might go on and multiply to an inconvenient length, the testimony I could bring to this House to show that wherever the traffic in liquor has been prohibited, it has invariably been followed by those satisfactory results—absence of crime and pauperism, and general prosperity. Reverting again to this question of jurisdiction, I repeat that in my opinion, it remains in the same position as when our attention was first called to the difficulty. I may remind the House that the following year, after receiving the report of the Commission, and having, as we thought, our way clear for legislation, we ventured to broach the subject of a bill, and then we were met with the statement that it was doubtful if this Parliament had jurisdiction over the traffic. Finding it was too late in the Session of 1876 to do anything that year, I ventured to draw up and submit for the approval of the House, four questions, and moved for an address to the Governor-General in Council, requesting that they should be submitted to the Judges of the Supreme Court for their opinion thereon, so that when this House met the following year, it should be in a position to deal with this subject intelligently, and with a clear understanding of the extent of our jurisdiction. I daresay the House will remember that when requested by hon. gentlemen on both sides to withdraw the motion, I refused to do so, until I received from the hon. Mr. Letellier,—then leading the Government in this House,—the assurance that if I would withdraw the motion, which was rather inconvenient, the question should be settled and information given to the House when we met the next session. I hardly need remind hon. gentlemen that this promise was not fulfilled, and that when we next met, the hon. Minister who had made the promise for the Government was not amenable to our interrogation, and the difficulty remained in the same position as before. The question of jurisdiction, so far as it affects the measure now before the House, was not settled by the case recently decided by the Supreme Court. The decision was confined simply and solely to the question of the right of the Province of Ontario to impose a license fee on a brewer already holding a license from the Dominion Government for making beer. That is the sole point which has been settled. The decision does not touch the constitutional question, and there is no further light thrown on this subject to-day than there was two years ago. What rather surprises me is that the hon. Secretary of State has now come to the conclusion that the Dominion Government has the power which two or three years ago he claimed there were grave doubts about, when there has been no authoritative settlement of the question. So far from its being settled, in my opinion the question is now more complicated and in a far worse position than ever before. As a loyal subject of her Majesty, and as a loyal citizen of the Province of Ontario, I am bound to receive as law that which a Royal Proclamation, duly attested by the Lieutenant Governor of the Province declares to be such. Such a proclamation was issued last year, announcing that a code of laws called "The revised Statutes of Ontario" came into full force and effect on the first of January of this year in that Province. Among these Statutes is one in which is embodied the greater part of the "Canada Temperance Act of 1864" commonly known as "the Dunkin Act;" clearly showing that the law officers of the Crown in Ontario, and its Legislature, claimed and exercised control of the matters which are dealt with in the Bill now before the House, and the power to amend and repeal the Dunkin Act.

By turning to page 2270 of the Revised Statutes, I find, in the regular table annexed to them for our guidance, a schedule of Acts which are wholly or partly to be repealed, and among them the Temperance Act of 1864. I observe in the margin that the whole of it is repealed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the only change is the word "parish" left out.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I am not speaking of the dissimilarity or the resemblance of the Acts. I speak of this fact, that to me it appears the Temperance Act of 1864 has been repealed by the Ontario Legislature as to that Province; and yet I find in section 3 of this Bill provision made for the repeal of the same Act, which the high authority to which I have referred informs me does not exist. This indicates to me that the question of jurisdiction in this matter has not been really decided. Again, I find, on page 2317, a list of the Statutes of 1864 which are affected by these revised Statutes, and among them, chapter 18, "Respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors and the issue of licenses," consolidated into the Statutes of Ontario. Again, in Appendix "B," the same Act is inserted in a carefully prepared table, where every section is dealt with separately. Among others, it tells us that a few sections belong to the Province of Quebec,—one is marked "Effeté," and another "Dominion."

Now I call attention to this to show how thoroughly the Act was considered, and how carefully the framers of the new law, in the Legislature of Ontario, eliminated from the Temperance Act of 1864 anything which in their judgment belonged to the jurisdiction of the Dominion, and by this to prove my assertion that so far from the question of jurisdiction being satisfactorily settled, we have no guarantee and no certainty that this measure can be enforced by authority of this Legislature. The first thing we may expect after it goes into operation is, that cases arising under it will be brought into the courts with a probability that the Act will be declared ultra vires. I am so anxious that such a serious difficulty should be avoided, and that a measure passed by this House shall not be placed in such a position, that I have been continually urging the necessity of getting a decision or an opinion from the Supreme Court, in order to avoid this trouble. But the hon. Secretary of State says this has not been done. I contend that even at the eleventh hour, and after the Bill is passed, it should be submitted to the Judges of the Supreme Court, before the Governor General's signature is attached to it, for their opinion as to its constitutionality. I might remark, in addition to what I have said has been done in Ontario, that the decisions which have been given on this question in other courts, are worth considering. In Nova Scotia the Supreme Court, seven judges concurring—gave a very elaborate and able judgment on a case which came before them. I will read a paragraph or two from it:—

“The sole object of the Legislature was unquestionably the promotion of temperance, and the protection of the health and morals of the people, and the preservation of the peace and of good order of the community, matters of police. The Provincial Parliament is in my opinion entitled to legislate with a view to regulate, within the Province, the sale of whatever may injuriously affect the lives, health, morals or well-being of the community, whether it be intoxicating liquors, poisons, or unwholesome provisions, if such legislation is made bona fide with that object alone, even though to a certain limited extent it should affect trade and commerce.”

Such is the opinion of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and no other court, superior in power, has given us any decision opposed to that; so I consider that, in that province at all events, this Act will not be considered binding. With regard to the Bill itself, there are many things which, in my judgment, require explanation and amendment. In the 3rd section there is provision made that the Temperance Act of 1864

“Shall continue in force as to each and every municipality in which a by-law passed and approved, or adopted and passed under its authority and for its enforcement is in force at the time of the passing of this Act, until such by-law has been repealed under and in pursuance of of the said Act, when the said Act itself shall ipso facto become and be repealed as to such municipality; and as to every municipality within the limits of the said late Province of Canada in which no such by-law is in force at the time of the passing of this Act, the said Act is hereby repealed.”

That is, a repeal of the Temperance Act of 1864, which has already been repealed by the Province of Ontario. However, I must presume that the Secretary of State, himself a lawyer, and having had the opportunity of conversing with the Minister of Justice, and perhaps with the Judges of the Supreme Court, ought to know whether this Bill is constitutional or not, and I therefore accept it, for the present, as coming within our jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Vidal,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not state I had consulted any of the Judges on the subject.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I did not say that it had been done, I only say that, having had the opportunity of conversing with them, such an opportunity might have been embraced. However, I do not insist upon that supposition. The Government introducing this Bill knows or ought to know what it is doing, and, therefore, we should not reject the measure because some doubts may, not unreasonably, be entertained as to some of its provisions being an encroachment upon provincial jurisdiction. I have placed my views on record, and will now accept and deal with the Bill as one within our jurisdiction.

Hon. Mr. Scott—Is my hon. friend prepared to suggest any other Bill which would be preferable to this?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I am not; I believe it is a question of such importance that the Government alone should undertake to manage it. I am not by any means opposing the Bill, I am only mentioning my doubt as to our jurisdiction, and explaining why I suggest that it should be sent to the Supreme Court for their opinion before it is finally passed into law. I would like to ask the hon. Secretary of State something about this third clause. He says Cap. 18, of 27 and 28 Vic., shall ipso facto be repealed. Has his attention been directed to the fact that there are certain provisions of that law which have no connection at all with local prohibition, and are clearly within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislatures?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am aware of that.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Does the hon. gentleman intend to repeal them?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not think it necessary to go into detail in print. I think there are 12 or 15 clauses which this Bill does not repeal.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It appears to me that should be clearly stated. I have already said that the Bill in general meets my approval, but there is one point, in my opinion a very essential point, in which I consider it defective, and with reference to which it is my intention to submit the following amendment when the Order of the Day is read for the House to go into Committee of the Whole, and before the Speaker leaves the Chair:—

“On page 1, after line 34, insert: ‘The Legislature of any province of the Dominion may, by Address to the Governor-General in Council, duly certified and transmitted by the Lieutenant-Governor, ask that the second part of this Act may be brought into force in that Province, and the Governor-General in Council, on receiving such Address, shall, by Order in Council, published in the Canada Gazette, and in the Official Gazette of the Province, declare that the second part of the Act shall come into force and take effect in such Province, at such date as may be consistent with the provisions of the 93rd Section of this Act, in the case of a City or County with respect to existing annual licenses for the sale of spirituous liquors.’”

I shall also offer the following amendments at the same time:—

“On page 20, after line 7, insert: “No Order in Council, issued under the provisions of this Act, to bring its second part into force in any Province, shall be revoked until after the expiration of two years from the day of its coming into force; nor unless, and until the Legislature of such Province shall, by Address to the Governor-General in Council, duly certified and transmitted by the Lieutenant-Governor, have asked for such revocation.”

On page 20, after the word “Act,” in the ninth line, insert, “to bring its second part into force and effect in any County or City.”

On page 24, between Clauses 105 and 106, to insert a clause authorizing the arrest and detention of any person found in a state of intoxication, and compelling such person, on conviction, to disclose where the liquor was obtained.

On page 19, to strike out all that part of Section 92, after the word “years” in line 37.

On page 20, to strike out that part of Section 94 from the word “Council” in the 22nd line to the word “and” in the 38th line.

I propose to move these amendments when the Speaker is in the chair, in order that they may be discussed on their own merits, and, if approved by the House, that the Committee may be instructed to carry out the views. The first amendment is to extend to the provinces the privilege given by the Bill to cities and counties. I do not see why it should be limited to those smaller areas.

Hon. Mr. Vidal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman puts that on a different basis. He does not invoke the voice of the people, but of the Legislature. I could understand the parallel if the Bill were submitted to a vote of the whole Province.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I am quite under the impression that, by the process which I propose to follow with respect to provinces, I am acting more in harmony with true British principles of giving expression to the will of the people, than if I proposed a popular vote on the question. In cities and counties the latter system is unavoidable, as there is no other way of getting at the views of the people, but for a province you have the British system of the people speaking and acting by elected representatives. Is it likely that the Legislatures will move in advance of public opinion? The greater probability is that, so far from taking the lead and educating public sentiment up to this point by legislation, they will not run the risk of adopting such an address unless they are compelled to do so by their constituents. Although my proposed amendment may appear to be at variance with the principle of the Bill, which bases its adoption on the popular vote, it is not so in reality, the difference being only in the mode of ascertaining the will of the electors, in counties and cities by the mode prescribed in the Bill, and in a Province by the vote of its representatives in the Legislature. I think this plan more suitable for provinces as to take the vote of the electors of a province would entail a large and unnecessary expense equal to that of a general election. But this matter can be better discussed when the amendment comes up on the motion to go into Committee on the Bill, and it can then be either adopted or rejected without interfering with the general provisions of the Bill, or jeopardizing its passage.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—What is the proposed alteration of the 92nd section?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—That section, as it stands, provides that when the period of one year has elapsed, after the second part of this Act coming into force, a majority of the electors may petition for the question again to be submitted to the people, with a view to its repeal. Now, I hold that is a most unwise provision. It would keep the country in a state of constant agitation. No sooner would the Act go into operation than there would be an agitation to repeal it. I contend that by making the law unrepealable for three years, the people would be more cautious in adopting it, and would not bring the law into force unless they were prepared to keep it. I think that the Bill, as it stands, offers an inducement to people to vote without full consideration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman give notice that he will move an amendment that where the law is defeated there shall be no attempt to test the views of the people again for three years?

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Certainly. I have made provision for both. I desire to act with perfect fairness, and if I take a privilege away from those opposed to me, I am willing to surrender the same privilege myself; consequently, I have proposed this amendment to both sections, 92 and 94, and I believe it will meet the wishes of the temperance people, and I trust will commend itself to the approval of the House. There are several other amendments which I think should be made to the Bill, and which I presume can be submitted with propriety in Committee. I think, for instance, in Sections 6 and 7 there should be some definition of the kind of evidence that should be considered "satisfactory."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was based on the law under which boards of trade are established. It requires that a certain number of electors shall petition for it in any locality, and the Secretary of State must be satisfied of the genuineness of the signatures.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—The voter's lists often contain the name of one person six, eight, or ten times; a man who owned property in every ward of a town, besides land in the townships around it, would have his name appear five or six times on the voters' lists of the county, and it should be provided that 25 per cent of the voters and not of names on the voters' lists should be taken. In the 93rd Section which provides for the issuing of the Order-in-Council, I think the word "may" should be struck out, and "shall" substituted.

Hon. Mr. Vidal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—"May" is always used where anything is to be done by the Governor-in-Council. It is used by courtesy.

Hon. Mr. Vidal—Then it is understood to mean "shall."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—Would it not be necessary to insert the word "third" in the 8th line of section 93, where it provides that the second part of the Act shall be in force and take effect?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, that may be added.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I think the clause which provides that vendors of liquor shall be licensed by the municipal council of the county or city, should be amended by substituting "The Lieut.-Governor," for the council, as there are some places in the Dominion where there are no municipal councils. It appears to me that the provisions in the 5th sub-section of section 95, respecting registration, should have a penalty attached for neglect, so as to secure compliance with the Act. I have already noticed what I consider the conflicting jurisdiction in the third part of the Act. The Province of Ontario, for instance, may grant a license to a man to keep a saloon or tavern, and this Act may be brought into operation in that municipality while that license is in force.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act cannot go into operation while any licenses are running. Of course, if a license were issued after the law were put in force, there would be a conflict of authority, and there would be litigation at once. We having legislated to restrict that particular article of trade and commerce, our law would prevail over the local law.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I have endeavored to present the principal features in which I wish to see the Bill amended, and I feel confident in approaching the discussion of the subject, hon. gentlemen will do so with an earnest desire to advance that great and good cause, the efforts of whose advocates have already been recognized; and to meet, whose wishes and second whose efforts, the Government have introduced this measure. I do trust that no personal or party political considerations will influence us in a matter of such momentous consequences. I regret exceedingly, I am unable to present to the House the facts and arguments, based upon statistics of crime in the Dominion, which I feel I ought to have in my possession, but which, unfortunately, I have not. Two years ago it was announced in the Speech from the Throne,—and I took occasion to express my very great pleasure at the announcement that a law was to be passed for taking the criminal statistics of the country. I have been watching for those criminal statistics from that time to this, because it is upon the criminal statistics of the country, the advocates for the restriction of the liquor traffic, build their strongest and most convincing arguments. I find in the report of the Minister of Agriculture, for 1876, in a paragraph on this subject, the following words:—

“As these statistics are to begin each year on the first of October, and as a part of the year 1876 had lapsed when the Act was sanctioned, the first collection and publication of the said statistics will of necessity appear for the first time in the next departmental report.”

I hold in my hand the next departmental report, and I will be very much obliged to the Minister of Agriculture to show me where to find those statistics. I cannot discover them. I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture if they are here.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—They are not, because I could not get them in a satisfactory way from the different quarters we expected them from. We have taken steps to enforce the measure.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I am very glad to hear the explanation, but how much better it would have been to have found it in this report. Upon these statistics I rest my whole case, because it may be said the statistics of other countries do not apply to ours. From what prevails in England and the United States, whose inhabitants have tastes and habits like our own, I am persuaded the statistics of crime in our country, would be found to harmonize with theirs. I hope we are getting in advance of them on this subject, and it is with no little satisfaction I see a diminution of revenue from the Excise. I hope we shall go on increasing that deficiency, until the time comes when strong drink shall no longer be looked upon as a source of revenue. It is to my mind an ingruous thing, that we should derive a revenue from the crime, wretchedness, and pauperism of our country, or, rather, from that which produces it. It is, to me, an anomaly which ought not to exist in a Christian land, and it is our duty to do what we can to remove every obstacle to the peace, happiness and prosperity of our country, and there is none so great as intemperance. In giving my cordial support to this measure, let it be understood that I do not recede in the slightest degree from what I have always advocated, and shall continue to strive for—complete and effective prohibition of the liquor traffic throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The introduction of this measure is a fitting tribute to the earnest exertions of the hon. member from Sarnia, and those who have acted with him. However much we may differ from him and them in one opinion, of the measures they have from time to time proposed, I think we cannot fail to recognise their earnest desire to alleviate the great evils which we all acknowledge to flow from intemperance. On the general question I desire to say very little, but I may say a word upon it after what the hon. gentleman has stated in his concluding remarks. My hon. friend remarked with his usual frankness, that he rests his whole case upon the effect of prohibition and drunkenness, upon the increase or diminution of crime. That is a very fair issue. The hon. gentleman regrets he has not the statistics promised him last year. He has not given us statistics of the case to which he alludes, but I will endeavour to assist him in that enquiry, and I am quite sure, while the hon. gentleman has stated truly that the consumption of liquors has been on the increase in the Mother Country, it will be a great comfort to him to learn that crime and pauperism have decreased with the increased consumption of those liquors. My hon. friend will allow me to give him proof of that assertion. I have it under my hand. It is an official abstract return from the year 1862 to 1877. And what do I find, taking the first question, of paupers? I find that the total number of paupers, including all able-bodied or otherwise, not exactly vagrants, in door and out door, amounted in 1862 in the United Kingdom to 946,166, and that number slightly increased for a term of years, but it happily began to decrease, and it has been steadily decreasing for the last seven years, and now it is reduced from 946,166, in the year 1862, to 728,350 in the year 1877.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—That is a decrease of some thing like 200,000 in number. But my hon. friend will say, "what about crime?" I will give him the statistics on that point also. I will give him the number of convictions for crime in the same period to which I have just referred, namely, from 1862 to 1877, only dropping the latter year because the return comes up only to the end of 1876. I find that the total number of convictions in England and Wales in the year 1862 was 20,000. The numbers, as above, began to recede, and continued receding during the last seven years, until in 1876 they were reduced to 16,078; a decrease of something like 4,000 in that short period of fourteen or fifteen years, with an increasing population.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I mention those statistics because they will afford comfort to my hon. friend. He will find it does not necessarily follow that crime and pauperism should increase with the increase of the consumption of ardent spirits.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Do those figures refer to England only?

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The return includes England and Wales, and is official. The Secretary of State has assumed in his usual way that in the United States, wherever prohibition has been the rule, not only crime, but drinking has decreased.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I stated that was the conclusion reached from reading the report of the Commissioners. I spoke subject to that.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—My hon. friend did make that qualification, it is true, but the hon. gentleman well knows that, in a recent publication, with respect to the State of Massachusetts, the official returns from the mayors and other official bodies of the State, show conclusively that drunkenness and crime had increased during the operations of the prohibitory law. This might have been only a coincidence, but the same result is observable in England, where drinking has increased, and yet crime and poverty have diminished. It is singular that this should be the case in view of the report to which the hon. gentleman refers. The Bill before us is extraordinary in character in many particulars. I will allude to the question of expense, and endeavor to show in what way it might be obviated. The Bill imposes all its cumbrous machinery upon the various counties and cities of this wide Dominion; and must result in very heavy expense to the country. In one of its clauses there is a provision that, if at any time within a certain period, one half the electors of a county or district sign a requisition stating that they require this measure to be again submitted to the people, with a view to its repeal, the Governor-in-Council may, upon being satisfied that these constitute a majority of the electors, order that reference to the people. I mention this with the view of showing what appears to me the absurdity of the provision, and the unnecessary character of it. You have got first the fact certified to by the Governor-in-Council that more than one-half of the electors desire the repeal of the Act. And what do you do then? Instead of passing an order repealing the Act, you put the country to the expense of a vote upon it. Look at the absurdity of the thing! You offer a premium to a few individuals who may, in the honesty of their hearts, believe that total abstinence is above temperance, and that temperance is above all the other Christian virtues, to set the machinery of this Act in motion, and put the country to the expense of it. That is practically the effect of it. The Dunkin Act required that the expense of those elections shall be borne in the municipalities in which they take place. That is a check upon calling into action the enormously expensive machinery of the Act. But in this Act the Dominion Treasury is put to the expense of an election contest, merely upon the suggestion of, it may be, a few enthusiastic individuals who have thus an opportunity afforded them of testing the popularity of their views at the expense of the country. It does not become me to suggest the machinery by which this should be provided against. I have found out that the Bill, in its repealing clauses, is based upon the principle that, if the majority wish to have the Act repealed, they must satisfy the Governor-in-Council that the majority do wish it, and then the country is put to the expense of having a contest to decide what has already been proved. I am not one of those who advocate that sort of bureaucratic Government which would give the Administration of the day power to repeal an act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That provision is intended to meet the possibility of a catch vote where a majority were satisfied the vote had not been a fair one.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The 94th section proceeds upon the assumption that a majority of the electors are desirous to repeal the existing prohibition. Whether it should be done in that way, or whether it should be a sort of adjunct to a general election, or a particular election, is another question. Whether it should be done in the simple form I have pointed out, that is to say, by application in writing, signed by a majority of the electors, and the fact of their being electors verified, it is not for me to suggest; but I can understand there are various ways of doing it without resorting to the enormous expenses provided for in this Bill. This Act is proposed as a substitute for the Dunkin Act in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and extending it throughout the Dominion. However stringent the provisions of that Act may be, I must tell my hon. friend opposite, the provisions of the law of Nova Scotia have been, and were before 1864, much more stringent than even those of the Dunkin Act; because, before a person could get a license in Nova Scotia, as far back as 1864, it was necessary, not merely to get the sanction of a majority of the Municipal Council, or the body that represented it, the Grand Jury, (for we have no analogous body exactly in Nova Scotia), but also to get the consent of the Court of Sessions. We have now a much stricter law than any existing in the Dominion. Since then the law I have referred to has been very considerably changed. We have, at the present moment, an Act, the very statement of which, although it has been adverted to by the hon. the Secretary of State, may astonish some gentlemen here. One of the principles of this Bill is—and the hon. the Secretary of State has alluded to it very properly—that the majority shall rule. My hon. friend assents to that. That is an intelligible principle, and one which I am not, at the present time, prepared to controvert. But what do we find in Nova Scotia? No man can get a license to sell liquors without first having the written consent of two-thirds of the ratepayers in the district where he applies to get that license. But he must do more than that. By the late law, after running the gauntlet of getting this two-thirds majority of the ratepayers, he has to get a majority of the Grand Jury and a majority of the Court of Quarter Sessions. But, by a late law, he is still further restricted, because he must get two-thirds of the Grand Jury as well. The principle of this Bill is, as I have already stated, the majority shall rule; but, in Nova Scotia, the minority rule—the temperance minority. But my hon. friend says, on the face of this Bill, in the preamble:—"Whereas it is very desirable "that there should be uniform legislation "in all the Provinces, respecting the "traffic in intoxicating liquors." That is embodied in the Speech of His Excellency the Governor-General, delivered at the opening of the Session. We were told we were going to have a uniform law applicable to all the Provinces. And what do we find now? The hon. the Secretary of State tells us he is not going to repeal the law in Nova Scotia. I will show he has no power to do so, though on the face of this Bill, he undertakes to repeal that law in Ontario and Quebec, with all its provisions affecting civil rights. We have very much the same provisions in the laws of Nova Scotia—those provisions which afford a civil remedy to the widow or child, or a person who is assaulted in any case in connection with a person who has been drinking, against the party who has given him liquor. Those provisions are swept away in Ontario and Quebec, and left in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we have no control over the municipal clauses of the Dunkin Act, it is immaterial whether we mention them or not. We only repeal such parts of the Dunkin Act as we have jurisdiction over. So far as the Nova Scotia License Act is concerned, it stands the same as the Ontario and Quebec License Act, because after this law goes in force in any district, no license can be issued in that district.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The hon. gentleman cannot put me off the track in that way. The first section expressly repeals the Dunkin Act, including the very provisions which the hon. gentleman says he has no power to repeal in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We cannot repeal what we have no power over.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—But the hon. gentleman's bill does repeal it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I spoke very plainly in my observation, and especially on that very point.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I am speaking of the Bill as I find it. It is somewhat extraordinary in a great many of its provisions, apart from the utter absence of uniformity. My hon. friend from Sarnia has adverted to some of them, but there is a curious provision in the measure, and there are some very harsh clauses. Going back to the question of this general election all over the Dominion, on this measure, whether there shall be traffic or no traffic in liquors, this Bill makes a man liable to a penalty of $500, or six months' imprisonment, for supplying ballot papers without authority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It becomes fraud when a man supplies ballot papers without authority.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—It does not say supplying with a view to fraud. I will call the attention of my hon. friend from Sarnia to the very alarming clause in this measure, which imposes a very heavy fine or imprisonment at hard labor upon anyone who shall wear a badge or furnish a badge to any person to wear within eight days before an election. I come from a county where, I am happy to say, I meet with the greatest pleasure gentlemen who are not ashamed to sport the blue ribbon on their breasts, and yet we find the Bill here making it penal for a man to show his colors within eight days before an election. I have heard of people who were deprived of their liquor looking blue, but I never heard of a temperance man who was ashamed of his badge, and I never expected to see the time when the Government would impose a penalty upon a man for showing his colors. The whole system of this Act is founded apparently upon a desire to make it as odious and as difficult to carry into execution as possible. There are several other features of the Bill to which I would like to advert. I do not propose to go into the question of how it differs from the Dunkin Act, because that is a very wide subject. I come now to a very important matter—the power of this House to deal with this question. My hon. friend the Secretary of State undertook to say, after quoting his authorities, (of which I shall speak presently) that in the provinces they had no power to impose restrictions upon the sale of liquors—that these restrictions would be ultra vires. I have the misfortune of differing from him on that point, and have grave doubts indeed as to the power of this House to deal with the question in the manner in which it is dealt with in this Bill. The 9th subsection of the 92nd Section of the British North America Act is as follows :

“In each province the Provincial Legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to (amongst other subjects) Shop, Saloon, Tavern, Auctioneer and other licenses in order to the raising of a revenue for Provincial, local or municipal purposes.”

Before I go a step further, I wish to show the case just now quoted—the Queen vs. Severn—is entirely inapplicable. That was a question as to the right of the provincial authorities to impose a license on brewers. These brewers deriving their authority from the Dominion and manufacturing an article subject to an Excise duty, it was on that ground that the Supreme Court decided the Provincial Government could not step in where the Dominion Government authorized those parties to manufacture beer, &c., by payment of duty. They had no power to step in and impose a duty also for the benefit of the Local Government. The power of the Local Legislature is restricted to the raising of revenue for local and provincial purposes, and these are the purposes for which those licenses are given in almost all the Provinces, except brewers' licenses, which have nothing to do with those matters at all, because they refer to manufactured articles which are excepted from the operation of this Bill itself. This measure proposes, when the Act is passed in a district, at the expiration of the licenses then existing, ipso facto all licenses become void, and no more shall be issued. The effect of this Bill is to interfere with the right of the local legislatures to issue licenses.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—In that way it does interfere with the Local Legislatures, and I stand here to defend the right of the Local Legislatures to reserve to themselves the jurisdiction given them by the British North America Act, of granting licenses; and I contend, if they have power to grant licenses and the Dominion Government has power to take them away by this Bill, it is a perfect mockery, and the conflict of jurisdiction is complete. My hon. friend had better keep to the decision of the Supreme Court, which is in all cases where revenue is raised for Dominion purposes, the Provincial authorities had no power to impose a duty on them when they had to pay Excise duty to the Dominion. The hon. gentleman has cited a case which was decided in New Brunswick. I took the opportunity of asking the hon. Secretary of State whether that decision was not given by the very Judge who dissented from the views of the majority of the Supreme Court here the other day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but it was not on that point.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I deem it my duty, as these constitutional questions come up, to submit them in all candor and fairness to the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend heard my explanation of that. I stated that was subordinate to the power to regulate trade and commerce, and I stated that the Federal Parliament could prohibit the importation of liquors, as it could of opium, or any other article or manufacture. I do not think any one can challenge that statement.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—That has no effect whatever on my argument. I say until the manufacture and importation are prohibited, the Provincial Legislatures have power to grant licenses. I would ask my hon. friend if he can contradict that. He says licenses can only be given for the sale of those things which can legally be sold. I say while my hon. friend will not yield to the demands of the temperance body to give them prohibition, and while he allows liquors to be brought into the country and manufactured in the Dominion, how can he turn around and say that the local authorities shall not issue licenses to sell them? When he prohibits the importation and manufacture they can have no power in the matter at all. That is my contention, and I may say, from information I have received, I have very good reason to believe this measure has excited the greatest consternation in the Lower Provinces, because it takes away from the Local Legislatures the power to deal with this question. If my hon. friend has the power he claims in this Bill, and if he has the power to repeal the whole of the Dunkin Act, he has power also to repeal the existing license law in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly; wherever this law is adopted.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—My hon. friend repeals the Dunkin Act; why has he not power to repeal the license acts in the other provinces?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Then the apprehensions of those people are well founded. The feeling in Nova Scotia (I speak of that province because I know it better than the others) is that this measure is an interference with the temperance legislation of that Province, and they desire to be free and uncontrolled.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Nova Scotia, either in its cities or counties, need not adopt it. Unless a majority choose to supplant the present very excellent law of that province, it cannot go in force.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—But it is not to be adopted by the Province as a whole; any county may adopt it. What is the effect? You have a conflict of jurisdiction. You have on the one side this Act, saying you shall not have licenses, and on the other, the Province, saying for the purpose of revenue, we must issue licenses. In so grave a matter as this, my hon. friend should proceed cautiously and step by step. His attention has been called to-day to the fact, that two years ago the House was promised a reference to the Supreme Court on this very question, and my hon. friend knows but for the fact that this is not a private bill, and this Senate has no power to make that reference, we should have a motion to obtain the opinion of the Judges on this measure; because it is admitted there is a doubt as to its constitutionality. The very fact of my hon. friend and myself discussing this question across the floor of the House, is quite sufficient to show there is a conflict of opinion upon this point, and is it desirable this country should be torn from end to end, and this costly machinery set in motion, if it is to go for naught? Is it not desirable that we should know whether we have the power to pass this Bill or not? My hon. friend must know that there is a section of the Supreme Court Act which specially provides for such a case as this. It is as follows:—

“ S. 52.— It shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to refer to the Supreme Court, for hearing or consideration, any matter whatsoever, as he may think fit, and the Court shall thereupon hear and consider the same, and certify their opinion thereon to the Governor in Council.”

I can only say, whatever that opinion should be, I am quite satisfied a majority of this House would yield to it. All we want is to see our way clear. If it is shown that we have the power to pass this Act, why, let it go. Personally, I have no disposition to oppose the passage of this measure, but I do feel myself justified in rising to protest against the course that has been taken, in order to protect the rights of the different Provinces, and to point out to my hon. friend and the House, the discrepancies which occur in this Act, and the very singular provisions in it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is not a discrepancy. It was deliberately done. I did that on the assumption we had the power.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Yet the hon. gentleman has not cited a single case which justifies him in that assumption, except the one case in New Brunswick, in which the Judge who rendered the decision is now in a minority in the Supreme Court.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quoted Judge Strong. Although the point did not come up, the inference was, as a branch of trade and commerce the Federal Parliament had the prerogative.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—We are not talking about the propriety or impropriety of prohibiting the importation and manufacture. The question is when the manufacture is sanctioned and the entry of these articles into the country is admitted and duty paid upon them, whether the Provincial Legislature has not the power to make regulations for giving licenses for the sale of those articles. We believe and contend that according to the British North America Act they have that power and we say if you pass an act declaring that after a certain date their licenses shall have no effect in the province or county where it is in force, it is practically a repeal of the License Act and an interference with the powers of the Local Legislature. I do not desire in any way to offer any factious opposition to the Bill. My desire is that the House should be put in possession of the deliberate opinion of the Supreme Court as to our jurisdiction. I have not given a very decided opinion—not a dogmatic opinion—on that point, but I have given a very frank and open expression of my doubts upon it. At the same time I may be wrong and the hon. Secretary of State may be right, but it is a case where there should be a reference to the highest tribunal in the land.

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does my hon. friend, as a lawyer having large experience, suppose, without a living case to refer to the Supreme Court, he would like to be bound by the dictum of the Judges, on the bare naked question whether this law was ultra vires?

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I do not think it requires any actual pending case at all. The words of the Supreme Court Act are sufficiently comprehensive to provide for a decision on a constitutional question like this coming up.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—When I brought the matter up two years ago, I stated a fact which should be borne in mind, touching upon this point—that is, that the decisions of the courts, as recorded in the books, are so full that they themselves constitute the very best argument to submit to the Judges. Moreover, I suggested that such was the importance of the question, it would be well for the Government to employ two of the most eminent counsel in the Dominion to argue the two sides of the question before the Judges.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When this last case of the Queen vs. Severn was brought up, we thought it would raise the very point we wished to have decided, but, as those who have taken the trouble to read the dictum of the Judges know, they avoided all but the naked question. They have not given us very much light, I confess.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY — That is the reason why I think this Bill should be submitted to the Supreme Court, and the Bill itself contains all the facts necessary for adjudication.

At six o'clock the House rose for recess.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. MILLER resumed the debate. He said :—I do not purpose engaging the attention of the House in discussing the principle or policy of the measure now under consideration. I am satisfied to leave the management of this question on its merits, in the very able hands of its friends, so many of whom I see around me. The policy of the measure, I may, however say, has my entire approval and I shall be happy to give the Government my humble assistance in either placing this or some other measure within the scope and jurisdiction of this Parliament, on our statute books, if the friends of the temperance cause in this House consider it advisable to do so. My object in rising is to call the attention of the House to this very unfortunate position in which this question is placed, and the wisdom of hesitating before proceeding further in the course we are now called upon to pursue. Without any desire to censure the Government I cannot help on the present occasion expressing my sincere regret that the Administration has not seen proper, before submitting this Bill to Parliament, to exercise the right and power which they possess of having the opinion of the Judges of the Supreme Court as to the constitutionality of the measure.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I think if the Government were really desirous to promote the cause of temperance and meet the views of the very large, influential and respectable body in this country who have demanded legislation in this direction, long before the meeting of Parliament they should have matured a measure which they could submit to the House

Hon. Mr. Scott.

as one within its scope and authority—under the sanction of the Judges of the Supreme Court. Instead of that, not until the Parliament had met; not until the representatives of the people who expect shortly to go before their constituents, had assembled in caucus at Otawa, and urged on the Government how much assistance this Bill was expected to be to supporters of the Ministry, did they set about the preparation of this measure. I believe—indeed, it is a matter of notoriety—that it was since the opening of the Session that the Bill has been framed. If ever there was a case of unjustifiable neglect on the part of a Government in such a matter, that case is the present one. We all know that an organized agitation has been going on for years past, in favor of prohibition in this country, which has made itself felt in Parliament, and especially in this House. A Committee of this Senate sat on two occasions to consider the representations made to us by the friends of temperance. We all know the persistent perseverance of the hon. gentleman from Sarina on this question (Mr. Vidal). His advocacy of the temperance cause has done more to popularize it in this House than anything else, and I have no hesitation in saying if we are in a position to give it a fairer consideration than perhaps it will get elsewhere, it is due to the able, honest, and earnest efforts of that hon. gentleman, on all occasions, to promote his views and the views of those with whom he is associated, in this branch of the Legislature. On both occasions to which I have alluded, when Committees of this House were appointed to consider this question, they recommended legislation in this direction, but the Government allowed the subject to drop out of sight. More than that, this question has been vexed before the law courts, It has been a vexed question, involving constitutional points. It has been a question how far the authority of the Local Legislature extended on this subject, and how far the jurisdiction of this Parliament extended; and therefore, in view of the large and important interests affected in the controversy, and especially with regard to the constitutional issues which were to be decided, it was the imperative duty of the Government to have submitted to the Supreme Court any such legislation as this which they now ask Parliament to endorse. If the Government had been sincere from the beginning in their treatment of this question, one would suppose their first desire in placing a law upon the Statute books would be to make it one which, beyond doubt, was within our jurisdiction, and not one to give rise to all the vexation, litigation and injury to the temperance cause, which would flow from putting on the Statute books a law which we had no right—or only a doubtful right—to place there. They would, before the meeting of Parliament, have carefully matured a measure, and submitted it to the Supreme Court, as they have the power to do, under the following section of the Supreme Court Act, already quoted in this debate :—

“ It shall be lawful for the Governor-in-Council to refer to the Supreme Court for hearing or consideration any matters whatsoever, as he may think fit, and the Court shall thereupon hear, and consider the same, and certify their opinion thereon to the Governor-in-Council; provided that any Judge or Judges of the said Court, who may differ from the opinion of the majority, may, in like manner, certify his, or their opinion or opinions to the Governor-in-Council. (38 Vic., cap. 11, sec. 52.)”

Why, I ask, was not such a reference of this Bill ordered during the recess, or, at any rate, before it was submitted to Parliament? It will be difficult for the Government to give a satisfactory answer to this question either to the friends or to the enemies of the measure. This is just such a case as was contemplated by Parliament and the framers of that law, the hon. gentlemen now on the Treasury benches. Why was not this wise course taken during the recess? I believe this measure and the wishes of the temperance people of this country received very little attention from the Government until after Parliament met. I believe I am correct in stating not a line of the Bill was prepared until after the opening of the Session, and then it was drawn up with the assistance of an officer of this House. That is not a course which the Government should have pursued, and they are highly censurable for their neglect in this respect. The hon. Secretary of State, in reply to some remarks which fell from my hon. friend (Mr. Dickey), asked him if he considered it would be a desirable thing, without a given case, to submit to the Judges the Bill as it stood for their opinion. I cannot understand what objection there could be to such a course, because that is very different from submitting a case for the consideration of the Court. In any case that might be supposed half a dozen different questions might arise outside of the constitutionality of the law, that it would not be desirable to discuss, but a reference of the Bill itself would cover all the cases that might arise under that law, and it would be much more convenient and easy for the Court to pass generally upon the constitutionality of the measure, than by a number of special references. A hundred cases might arise under that law, and the reference of the whole of those cases together might not decide every constitutional point that might arise under the provisions of the measure; whereas, if you submit the law itself, every part of it would undergo revision, and receive the stamp of the best authority. Therefore, it would have been wise, as well as imperatively obligatory on the part of the Government, to have submitted this Bill to the Supreme Court for their opinion before bringing it down to the House. Let us suppose this Bill to be passed and become law, and it is found unconstitutional in any of its provisions. We know the temperance organizations are powerful and wealthy, but their opponents are perhaps equally so. With the means to test every inch of ground, there would be a certainty—in the event of the passage of a law in any respect of doubtful constitutionality—that endless controversy and litigation would arise. Would that be beneficial to the country, or to any one outside of the legal profession? Is it desirable in the interests of the temperance cause, that we should put on the Statute books a law of the constitutionality of which any portion of the people might not be certain? On the contrary, is it not the greatest injury you could inflict upon that cause?

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER — I think this must appear so self-evident to the House, that even yet there could be but one course open to the Government, and that is, to yet ask the opinion of the Supreme Court on the Bill before it leaves the Senate. If it were a private Bill on any other subject involved in similar doubt and difficulty, I would support a motion to refer it to the Judges for their decision; but, as this is a measure which cannot be referred by Parliament, and which must be referred by the Governor-in-Council, if referred at all, I hope, therefore, the Government will see their way clear to obtaining the opinion of the Supreme Court as to its constitutionality, even now. It may be said this will delay the measure and prevent it becoming law this Session. I do not think it should have that result—I am certain it cannot have that result. It should not cause a greater delay than three or four days, or a week at the outside, and, with the friendly disposition which prevails in this House towards the measure, I do not see that there would be the slightest difficulty in getting it through the Senate in time to go to the other Chamber, and, if it should receive the sanction of that House, it could pass there and become law. In the interest of the temperance people, this is the most desirable course to pursue.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—With regard to the constitutionality of the law, I have some hesitation in expressing an opinion, in view of all the controversy that has arisen on the subject. Although I do not go the length of my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Dickey) as to the unconstitutional character of this legislation, still, I do think to some extent, the Bill, in its provisions, is ultra vires. I refer now especially to the clause repealing the Dunkin Act. I think it is exceedingly doubtful, in fact it is almost certain that, we have not the power to repeal some provisions of the Dunkin Act, which create civil rights, and which are beyond the authority of this Parliament. When I first perused the Bill, not being acquainted with the provisions of the Dunkin Act, it did not strike me, until subsequent consideration turned my thoughts in that direction, that the Bill was ultra vires in regard to its repealing provisions. With regard to the enacting provisions, I can see nothing wrong. It is perfectly competent for this Legislature to pass a law to prohibit the manufacture or importation of intoxicating liquors, or any other article of trade and commerce in this country, and if it is competent for this Legislature to do so, it is certainly competent for it to interfere with the alleged rights of the local legislatures, to give licenses for the sale of those articles, because, though the power of granting licenses rests with them, it cannot be construed into a right to license the sale of anything which the proper authority declares to be illicit and contraband.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There can be little doubt, if the Dominion Parliament declare the importation or manufacture of intoxicating liquors to be illegal, then it is impossible for the Local Legislatures to grant licenses for the sale of that which a competent authority, in matters of trade, declares to be contraband of law. If, then, the Dominion Parliament has power to absolutely and directly prohibit the manufacture or importation of alcoholic liquors, it certainly has power also to prohibit the trade, through a popular vote. It can delegate its powers to a municipality to do that which it has the power to do itself, and the moment this law is accepted by any municipality, it amounts, within that municipality, to a limited prohibition, within the terms of the Statute. Therefore, I conceive that in its enacting clauses, we have power to pass this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—But, with regard to our power to repeal the Dunkin Act, I must repeat I find that it gives civil rights which the Local Legislature alone has power to deal with, and therefore it is ultra vires for us to attempt to repeal those provisions of that Act. This is my opinion of the Bill. Seeing however that gentlemen belonging to the legal profession on both sides of the House, have different opinions on the question, it must be obvious there is but one course out of this difficulty, and that course it is not too late to take. I say it is no unfriendly spirit to this legislation, though I believe, so far as the temperance people are concerned, this Bill should not be nearly so acceptable to them as the license law of Nova Scotia, which is the very best temperance law in the Dominion.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I do hope in view of all I and others have said, the Government will now submit this Bill to the Supreme Court for their opinion. If they do that and place this measure on the Statute book with judicial approval as to its legality, I say they will be doing a service to the country, but not otherwise. If they wait for a decision to be obtained on a case growing out of the legislation itself, which must be a year or two at the earliest, the country will in the meantime be kept in a state of doubt and uncertainty about it.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—There is only one reason I have heard hinted why the Government should not pursue this course, and it is one which I do not feel disposed to entertain. I have heard it said that the Government know and have been forcibly assured by their supporters of the value of a piece of legislation of this kind on the eve of a general election. If they succeed in carrying this Bill, it is thought by their party they may go to the country with the merit of having attempted legislation—whether sound or unsound—desired by a large portion of the electorate, and get the benefit of it at the polls. If the law prove unsound, the elections must take place before any decision of the Supreme Court can open the eyes of the temperance people as to the delusion they have been labouring under, respecting the constitutionality of the measure. They will thus reap the reward in a political sense of their services to the temperance cause, although that service may be of a very injurious character.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I have been told that members of the Government informed their temperance friends at the commencement of this Session, when they proposed drafting a measure at the last moment, and after promising such legislation in the Speech from the Throne, they had discovered they had not power to enact such a law as was desired from them, but that it was imperatively considered a matter of policy, looking forward to the elections, to bring down some measure, put it upon the Statute book whether it was within the scope of our authority or not, and get the credit of it before the elections, no matter whether the friends of temperance had their eyes opened afterwards, not only as to its inutility, but as to the mischievousness of such legislation. I do not, myself, endorse that view of the case, or charge the

Hon. Mr. Miller.

Government with such duplicity in the absence of better evidence.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I am now willing to do the Government the justice of believing that they were not influenced by such unworthy motives in bringing this measure before the House, but if they are desirous of placing on the Statute books a law which will be of any value to the temperance cause; which will not be a source of endless turmoil and trouble in the country, there is but one course open to them, —to submit this measure to the Supreme Court for their opinion as to its constitutionality, before proceeding any further with it. If they will not do this, there will be good reason to doubt their motives and their sincerity. I do not propose to go into the details of the Bill, many of which are objectionable, and which, I presume, will not go through the House in their present shape, but as those can be disposed of in committee, I shall reserve any observations I have to make on them until the proper time arrives. I again appeal to the Government to consider well the wisdom of pushing this measure further before obtaining the opinion of the Judges of the Supreme Court as to its constitutionality. A few days delay cannot endanger the passage of the Bill during the present Session, but it would be better to wait till next year than place a law on this great subject, of doubtful validity on the Statute book. We may be only taking a new departure in a course of expensive litigation and vexatious turmoil by passing the Bill in its present shape; producing bitter irritation and controversy all over this wide Dominion, and ending, perhaps, in results disastrous to a cause that has so many sincere advocates. I therefore, contend, in justice to all parties, in justice to the opponents as well as the friends of this measure, before proceeding further with it, the Government should obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of this Bill.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I think it is a great mistake to suppose this Bill must be unconstitutional because it interferes with the power of the local legislatures to grant licenses. It seems to me, that the power given to the local legislatures is not the power, properly, to permit; but the power to prohibit, except on certain conditions, the sale of liquors, the chief condition being the payment of a tax. There is a natural right in all men to sell anything without license, except where the sale of any article is prohibited, and the object of giving the local Legislatures power to issue licenses is to enable them not to grant, but to prohibit—in other words, to impose taxation in that form. I do not agree with what has been said as to the propriety of referring this Bill to the Supreme Court. I believe courts are only intended for settling contentious questions. I know there is a clause in the Supreme Court Act which provides for the submission of bills to the Supreme Court, but I have always thought that was a blot on the Act. I believe it is impossible for a court to do justice to any question submitted to them in that manner. There must be a case for them to consider. I think it was unwise to put that clause in the Bill, and that it would now be equally unwise to use it. Courts of justice are not constituted for giving opinions of that sort and can only give opinions properly on matters of fact, and matters argued before them by counsel for persons interested in the facts. I believe an attempt has been made to use the Supreme Court of the United States for a similar purpose—to obtain an opinion from them on the constitutionality of measures in advance—and I think that they held that they could not do so, and declined to give the decision desired. I do not mean to say they are bound by their constitution, as our Supreme Court perhaps is by our Act, to give opinions on bills referred to them, but they have taken what I believe to be the proper ground upon the question of the propriety of such references. My hon. friend who spoke last, appeared to think if we obtained an opinion from the Supreme Court on this measure it would settle the whole difficulty. I am afraid he would be very much mistaken in that.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I think not.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Well, I will give my reasons for saying so. We may properly imagine that if the Supreme Court declared this Bill constitutional, the inferior courts would give their decisions in that sense. Suppose a brewer, for instance, comes into court to try the constitutionality of the Act. He will, it is probable, have the case decided against him. Then he seeks to set this law aside because it is unconstitutional. But where will he carry his appeal? Certainly not to the Supreme Court, for that will have decided in advance, but to England. By one of the clauses of our Supreme Court Act, which I also think was a mistake, we have the possibility of litigation still, notwithstanding the decision in advance of the Supreme Court. I mention this, not because I do not desire to see everything settled as far as possible before the Bill shall become law, but because I think too much importance is attached to the decision in advance, of the Supreme Court. My hon. friend opposite spoke about the elections. I think in a dignified body like this, we hear rather more about elections than is consistent with the dignity we affect; but in any case, I can see nothing to warrant the insinuation in which he indulged. My hon. friend from Sarnia, who has interested himself so much, and worked so energetically and so wisely (from his point of view) to promote the cause of temperance, is quite capable of judging whether it is desirable to have this Bill or not, and I believe he and his friends wish it to become law. He has expressed some desire that in certain particulars it may be altered, and, as he thinks, improved, and he would have been glad to have the opinion of the Supreme Court on it before it became law. I do not say that he is right or wrong; but, at all events, I imagine if he thought the Bill was going to throw all the temperance people in the country into confusion and involve them in expense and litigation, he would be the last to support it.

Hon. Mr. Penny.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—He wants a reference.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I thought I made my position perfectly clear, when I explained that as far as I was concerned, I was not disposed to offer any opposition to this Bill; all I wanted was to be satisfied of its constitutionality, and I understood that was the position taken by my hon. friend from Sarnia.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I have always been consistent on this matter. I am willing to assist in remedying any abuse, but yet I do not believe you can make people sober by Act of Parliament, and, even if we could, I look upon this measure as a delusion—a weak, puny, and inefficient effort of the Government to legislate in that direction. It is not such legislation as is asked for by the temperance people, and I doubt the sincerity of this Government, which has heretofore evaded every attempt at legislation on this matter. As far as Nova Scotia is concerned, this hasty and crude effort of legislation is a blow at the temperance organizations of that Province, and will keep the country in a continued scene of turmoil and hot water, with no good results to the friends or cause of temperance. In Nova Scotia, I am pleased to be able to say, there is everywhere, among all classes, not only a growing feeling in favor of temperance, but it exists, not by coercive legislation, but by reasoning and moral suasion. They had previously asked for legislation, but not such an absurd measure as this Bill. The petitions presented here in such numbers in former Sessions, some of which I had the honor to present, asked for the total prohibition of the manufacture and importation of liquors. It is impossible, whilst we look for revenue from this source, and whilst the manufacture and importation of liquors is legalized in the country and by this Government, to attempt by such a puny effort as this to prevent its sale and consumption, and to strike down the merchants engaged in the manufacture and sale, as well as the importers, without proper notice. It is rather an incentive to the use of liquor. The moment you attempt in an imperfect way like this, without the consent of the majority of the electoral vote; by force of law, without the moral support of the people at the back of it, not to regulate and restrain against the excess and abuse, but forcibly to suppress the liquor traffic, you not only increase intemperance, but demoralize the people. My hon. friend from Sarnia, whose sincerity of purpose no man questions, said they had been long lopping off the twigs and branches of the upas tree of intemperance, and he now wants it cut down. Such a measure everybody could understand, but surely, this Bill is not what he has so long been looking for and advocating with such zeal and force that he has almost convinced people against their will. His own expressions to-day made me feel that it was not such a measure as he, at the head of the large temperance organization of this country, had a right to expect, or, without important amendments, believed should be passed. I am very much of the same opinion as the hon. Senator from Amherst, as regards the constitutionality of this Bill. Under the British North America Act, the Local Legislature may exclusively make laws on certain subjects, including licenses for municipal, local and provincial purposes, and this comes within the scope of that power. I contend, while the Federal Government legalizes the importation and manufacture of liquors, it rests with the Local Legislature to say whether, and in what manner, they shall regulate and restrain and the sale shall be legalized, and it is questionable whether we can take away that power. This question of jurisdiction on which the Secretary of State has not even offered a decided opinion, should have been settled by the Supreme Court before the introduction of the Bill in this House, unless the Government is bent on provoking litigation, and giving employment to the lawyers. Those of them who have given an opinion, here have expressed grave doubts as to the extent of our powers. It will not be denied that we find a conflict of opinion among able lawyers in this House, and that conflict, I fear, will continue in the country. No government should propose a measure of doubtful authority. When the Supreme Court was established, we were told that one of its most important duties would be to settle matters of this kind, in which conflict of authority might arise. It was one of the strongest arguments used for the creation of that Court, that bills of doubtful constitutionality, or bills raising a question as to Local or Federal powers to legislate, before becoming law could be referred to the Judges for their opinion. Session after Session, my hon. friend from Sarnia urged that the Government get the decision of the Judges of the Supreme Court. Yet, it has not been done; but we are asked hurriedly to legislate, just on the eve of a general election, and if improper motives are inferred the Government have themselves to blame. As far as this imperfect Bill is concerned, it appears to me to be one which, as I have said, will throw the whole country into turmoil and hot water, unless many of its provisions are amended. Fancy prohibition in a county surrounded by other counties where there is no prohibition? Liquor will be used, and to greater excess, and in a manner more discreditable, in that county than in the others; and if not so, the excess would certainly be in the surrounding counties which this Bill does not provide against. The man of means, by travelling a few miles, just by crossing the county lines, can get as much as he wishes, and possibly more than he ought to have, while the poor man whose time is his money, is deprived of what may be a benefit to him, for I believe the temperate and proper use of liquor is beneficial, for which I have the authority of many eminent physicians. When we find people so very extreme, if even sincere, in their temperance notions, we also generally find them frail enough in other respects. I do not believe this Bill deserves the proper respect of the temperance body or of this Senate. It strikes at the vigorous law we have in Nova Scotia; a law which cannot with impunity be evaded, and which is thoroughly carried out, and substitutes despotic power, without public approval to back it up. We all know how petitions can be got up, and how easily thereby public opinion may be misrepresented; how easy it might be to get the signature of 25 per cent of the electors in many counties. Some might easily sign any paper without reading, or having it read, and the only enquiry made, whether signing it will cost them anything. In that way a whole county can be set in an uproar, and year after year, if this Bill becomes law, this trouble, cost and turmoil may be continued. It seems to me the Government anticipate this, because they make provisions in the Bill against the carrying of firearms and the wearing of badges and party colors. In Lunenburg every total abstinence is proud constantly to wear the little blue ribbon, but under this law they must, not only for eight days take off their colors and tear this little blue ribbon from their breasts, but dare not give even a temperance friend and elector, a glass of cold water. I believe this sort of legislation is a mistake. It seems absurd in the face of it. Go down to the State of Maine and see how it works. In Bangor it is a farce, and has only a demoralizing tendency. The moment you pass a law which cannot be carried out, and which has not the moral backing of the people, you are only inflicting an injury on the country. My hon. friend from Amherst showed us to-day, from unquestionable authority by the statistics of the United Kingdom, that during the last 20 years pauperism and crime have decreased in England and Wales, and I shall show that, during the same time and in the same places, the consumption of liquor has increased. I have read the report of the Select Committee of the House of Lords on Temperance, that the increased use does not necessarily cause abuse. Among the witnesses examined before the committee was the well-known Professor Leone Levi, F.S.S., who, last year, gave the following evidence as to the general condition of the people as affected by intemperance, and respecting the possible working of a permissive bill. I shall not weary this House with long extracts, but hon. gentlemen can read the report, which is very long and full of interesting information on this subject. Among other things, he says:—

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

“ I have made some calculation of the relation of intemperance to consumption. Comparing 1856 with 1875, and taking the quantities of British, foreign, and colonial spirits, and malt and wine respectively, I find that, in England and Wales, there was an increase in the consumption per head of 37 per cent. upon the consumption of spirits, taking British, foreign and colonial together; of 15 per cent. in the consumption of malt, and of 88 per cent. in the consumption of wine.”

My hon. friend from Amherst showed conclusively, from the report of the British Board of Trade statistics for 1877, that there was an increase of about 50 per cent. in England and Wales in the use of liquor. If he did not show that, the above quotation does show it. But this he did show; that paupers in England and Wales in 1862 numbered 946,166, whilst in 1877 there were only 728,350—being a reduction of about 220,000; and further, that in 1862, there were 20,000 convictions for crimes, whilst in 1876 there were only 16,078—showing a reduction of about 4,000. Thus, the facts show that, whilst there was the large increase of consumption of liquors, pauperism and crime decreased; and that, notwithstanding the large increase of population. My hon. friends may draw what deductions they please from these facts, but this is clearly shown that, whilst pauperism and crime are largely on the decrease, the consumption of liquor has increased. I will now read from the report of the British Consul in Maine, an extract which will give an idea of how the prohibitory liquor law works in that State. The report is dated 1877, and contains the following opinion of that Consul, in 1873. He says the law is evaded, and is utterly fallacious and powerless:—

“That a long residence of nearly fourteen years in this State, has given me unusual opportunity for studying this question, and I have no hesitation in reaffirming that, with the exception of some isolated villages, the Maine prohibition law has been a failure in the larger towns and cities; that the actual good it may have produced has been more than counterbalanced by the hypocrisy and consequent demoralization of a very large class, who, though nominally and politically prohibitionists, are not consistent in their own conduct, and of which I have daily proofs.”

I have shown some of the absurdities of this Bill—there are many others. A sick man, or any man before he can get liquor for medicine, must employ a doctor, and then he cannot be ordered less than a pint at a time. The doctor cannot furnish that medicine from his shelf, and if there is no drug shop within reach, the poor fellow must suffer and possibly die for want of the medicine, which is well-known in many cases of sickness or accident, requires quickly to be used. I make these objections, so that, if possible, my friend from Sarnia, who will likely take charge of the Bill, may advise the amendments, and if properly amended, I have no doubt many hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, will yield up their own opinions, and allow this experiment, in which I have little faith, to be made. The Government must already see that it largely rests with the Opposition, whether this Bill shall carry. It is a measure which, I think, will be divested of all party feeling, in its discussion. I have endeavored to show the great difference between temperance and total abstinence, and that abstinence by compulsion was not reasonable, but injurious to the cause of temperance. I have shown that drunkenness in England had not increased with the increase of population, or the increased use of liquors as a beverage, but, on the contrary, that with the increased use, crime and pauperism had decreased. Of course I do not say that the increased consumption had the effect of keeping men sober; but I place the facts plainly before my hon friend from Sarnia, who will see that the figures and authority I have given, do not accord with his premises. I have shown that moral suasion, through the active work of the temperance body in Nova Scotia, did more for temperance in six months, than the work of legislation for many years; and I yet believe only in moral suasion doing the work, and that legislation when it attempts to go farther than regulate and restrain against excess, does infinitely more harm than good. It is very strange that this Bill should come before us now for discussion in such a crude condition at the last stage of the Session, and with the pretence that it is a measure in the direction which the temperance bodies of this country ask for. If I stood in the same position as my hon friend from Sarnia, with the same promptings, advocating prohibition, and nothing but prohibition, it is the last bill I should take from the Government. Time will tell whether my views are right, and they are honestly intended in the interest of the cause of temperance.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I do not propose to help the Government in the elections, but I do propose to assist them with this Bill, though I hope when it leaves this House it will be in better shape than it is at present. When I say I will support this Bill I do so from a different standpoint from my hon. friend from Sarnia. I am not a teetotaler myself, nor do I believe in total abstinence, or in endeavoring to enforce it as a positive moral and religious duty on others. Indeed, I venture to say the cause of true temperance has suffered not a little from the intolerance of its advocates on that point. I think the assertion they make, that entire abstinence from intoxicating liquors is the positive duty of a Christian, has done great harm. Many of our temperance friends too, have, I think, injured the cause very often, by standing aloof, and not heartily assisting to carry out practical measures such as the laws respecting licenses, and the regulation of taverns, saloons, and other places where liquor is sold, on the principle that it would be merely temporizing with the evil, and therefore they could not conscientiously countenance what they considered half measures. I do intend to give my humble support to any measure which may, by any possibility, decrease the terrible evils, the crime and misery which intemperance and strong drink have brought on so very many of the population of this country.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—Though I do not consider the Bill, in its present shape, a perfect one, and though I consider the results of the measure, if carried, as likely to be very doubtful in some parts of the country, especially in large cities, still I should be very unwilling to throw obstacles in the way of the passage of the Bill, and, if it is properly amended, I am willing it should have a fair trial.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. ALLAN—I think the hon. Secretary of State has pointed out one of the strongest grounds for supporting a bill of this kind, when he says one of the great advantages which the adoption of this measure would confer, would be the removal of temptation from a very large number who, but for temptation being placed in their way, would remain to the end of their days perfectly sober, temperate persons. There is no doubt, the multiplication, in all our cities and towns and villages, of places where strong drink can be obtained, is the cause of many evils. There are many men who would be temperate but for the temptations by which they are everywhere beset, and from which they can hardly escape; presenting themselves, as they probably do, at almost every turn in the place in which they reside. If this Bill will do away with some of these evils, and will, more particularly in rural municipalities, prevent the multiplication of places where strong drink can be sold, something will be achieved by its passage. At the same time, I quite agree with what has been said by several gentlemen who have spoken before me, with reference to the doubt as to the power of this Legislature to pass a Bill of this kind. Therefore I should be glad to see some such reference made before it passes its final stage, as has been suggested, not only on the ground that it would be very desirable so far as the temperance cause is concerned, to avoid all uncertainty as to the legality of the measure, but also that we should carefully avoid placing this Parliament in the position of enacting laws, which, after all, may be decided to be ultra vires, and not within the scope of the Dominion Parliament. It would be unfortunate if we should deliberately pass an Act like this, which would afterwards be found beyond our powers. I think it would be far better in every way that we should endeavor to ascertain whether that is the case or not before the Bill passes its third reading, or is assented to by the Governor-General. It seems to me the reference can be made very conveniently, and without imperilling its passage in this House, or in the other branch of the Legislature during this Session.

Hon. Mr. Aikins.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I am very much pleased, as a temperance man, to find the Government have introduced a measure of this kind, and if there is anything to be regretted at all, it is that it was not introduced two Sessions ago. It will be in the remembrance of hon. gentlemen that petitions were presented to this House and the other Chamber, very largely signed, three Sessions ago, and that a Committee was appointed, to which these petitions were referred; that we had a report, and a very strong report, which this House at that time endorsed and adopted, and I think the temperance people have something to complain of in action not having been sooner taken in the direction of this Bill. In the Province of Nova Scotia, where they have such an excellent license law, I can understand they have not the same strong feeling for a temperance measure the people of Ontario have. When the temperance body asked for an option law, a practical one which could be carried out, the answer was that we had the Dunkin Act, and until the temperance people showed by its adoption that the sentiment of the country was favorable to it, no legislation might be expected at the hands of the Government. The temperance people were forced to pronounce upon that Act, which is but a miserable excuse for an option law. In counties where a majority are in its favor, it is, in a measure, inoperative. I say, therefore, that the temperance people have a good cause of complaint against the Government for not having introduced a measure of this kind sooner. It has been very well said here, to-night, that the temperance people will have very grave cause to complain if hereafter it should be discovered that this Act is unconstitutional in any particular. I was very much surprised to find that the Government were not prepared to announce to the House that they had consulted the Supreme Court, and that the measure was pronounced by that august body constitutional in all its parts. If this Act should be adopted in some counties, and hereafter be found to be ultra vires, all the difficulties that have sprung up under the Dankin Act would be more than doubled, and the temperance cause would be manifestly damaged. I quite agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this subject, with regard to the desirability of getting the opinion of the Supreme Court upon the Bill, even at this stage of the Session. I desire to see this measure passed, yet, strongly as I feel in favor of a temperance act, I would rather wait until next Session than have unconstitutional legislation now. I was very much astonished to hear the hon. Senator from Lunenburg announcing a new theory in this House—that just in proportion as the consumption of liquor increases crime and pauperism diminish. Certainly, if that theory is a correct one, and if the facts sustain it, then the Government have made a great mistake in the introduction of this Bill, and the House would make a great mistake in passing it, for the only way to put a stop to crime and poverty would be to make drinking universal.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I gave my authority for what I said.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I suppose the hon. gentleman, in giving the authority, meant to endorse it. At first, I thought the hon. gentleman was strongly favorable to prohibition, because he condemned the Government for not giving prohibition when petitions were presented in favor of it. I supposed he was in favor of that principle, and I was very much surprised to find he was not a temperance man.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I did not mean to say I was not a temperance man. I consider I am the quintessence of temperance, though not a total abstainer.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—The hon. gentleman likes to take just as much as he wants, and tells us with any amount of gravity that in the State of Maine the law is inoperative. He says he made that discovery at Bangor. How did he make that discovery? I would be surprised if any hon. gentleman in this House would admit that he went to the State of Maine and violated the law there.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I mentioned that the information was furnished by the British Consul at Maine. I was referring to his statement.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Then, I withdraw what I have said on that point. With reference to the Bill, it contains some most ill-digested provisions, and it shows it has been drawn with a very great amount of haste. It makes provision that a clergyman can only get wine for sacramental purposes, when he furnishes a certificate to a druggist, which is an affirmation that the wine is to be used in that way. That may be all right, so when the doctor makes out a prescription for his patient, if liquor is required there has to be a certificate and an affirmation, but any person may go to a distillery and buy ten gallons of whiskey and no affirmation is required from him. The only condition imposed is, that the person who sells has good reason to believe it is going to be taken out of the limits of the prohibited district. We can imagine how easily the distiller could be satisfied the liquor was to be taken beyond the municipality. Then two districts contiguous to each other may adopt this law. Any one can purchase in either of them and take it in to the other for consumption. For instance, if the law were in force in Ottawa City and Carleton County, liquor could be purchased in the city, not for use within the limits, but it could be used in the county, and in the county it could be purchased for use in the city. These are some of the defects which I have noticed in the measure, and I hope it will be scrutinized very closely. It would be a cruel thing to pass an act of the importance of this, in such a shape that it could not be worked out successfully. It is not considered a party measure in any sense.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—I believe when the vote comes to be taken upon it, there will be as many, perhaps more, opponents as friends of the Government found voting for it. Before it passes this House it will have to be amended in very many particulars, to make it a complete measure.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—I have listened with considerable attention to the remarks of hon. gentlemen, but as I have learned the value of legal opinion when it is given for nothing, I have not the same respect for the opinions that have been given as if they had been paid for. This Bill is not a prohibitory measure but a permissive law, the principles of which we have in operation in almost every district of Prince Edward Island where the majority in every school district can prohibit the issuing of licenses for any year, so that I cannot see that it interferes with the existing law on that point. There is no denying the fact that a very large and influential class of the community has petitioned this Parliament, and have advocated through the public press and on the public platform a measure of this kind, and I for one am glad to see that the Government have thought fit to bring in this Bill which has been demanded by such a large portion of the community. I can perfectly understand the difficulties in bringing in legislation of this kind, but when it goes to committee we can make whatever amendments may be deemed necessary to perfect it before it comes before the House for the third reading. I was surprised to hear an hon. gentleman say that the moral suasion of the country is not in favor of this Bill, but if the hon. gentleman will only reflect a little, he will find that even down in Lunenburg this moral suasion exists. There is scarcely a village or town in the Maritime Provinces in which this question has not been advocated by some of the leading minds in every community, and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should state that the moral suasion of the country is not in favor of it.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—They are in favor of moral suasion, but not of a legal enactment bill.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—We are merely attempting here to give effect to that moral suasion, by giving to the majority the power to regulate, as far as they are concerned, the sale of intoxicating liquors. I think it will be in the recollection of the hon. gentleman himself, that there has been a community in his own Province who recently took the law into their own hands and spilled every barrel of liquor in the town, and closed every saloon in it. I speak of the town of Yarmouth. Surely, the people who did that, did not engage in such work for the mere fun of it; there must have been a strong feeling of moral suasion prevailing.

Hon. Mr. Howlan.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—No, but coercion.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—This Bill is not coercive, but permissive. I will point the hon. gentleman to another town in Nova Scotia, Amherst, where the people took the law into their own hands, and informed all the tavern and saloon keepers of the place, that if they did not close up their establishments at the expiration of their licenses, they would be closed up for them.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—My hon. friend would make temperance men outlaws instead of law-abiding citizens.

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—Another hon. gentleman says it is necessary for man to use intoxicating liquors. The hon. gentleman will find in the report of the Committee of the House of Lords, the evidence of Sir William Gull, Physician to Her Majesty the Queen, who says, so far from intoxicating liquor being necessary to man, it is the contrary. I will quote from his remarks:—

“ I have had ample opportunities of judging for 35 years past; I should say from my experience that alcohol is the most destructive agent that we are aware of in this country. I think there is a great deal of injury being done by the use of alcohol in what is supposed by the consumer to be a most moderate quantity to people who are not in the least intemperate, to people supposed to be fairly well; it spoils the health and spoils the intellect.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I would ask my hon. friend if he had read that quotation from Sir William Gull before he put on the blue ribbon?

Hon. Mr. HOWLAN—I do not think that a gentleman of the high standing of Sir William Gull would have given an opinion of this kind before the House of Lords' Committee, without he had considered it very carefully. But I could give the opinion of another eminent man, nearer home, Dr. William Parker, a well-known professor, in the State of Massachusetts, who, in the State Conference, made remarks of a similar nature. But I will go further, and I will give him the experience of Dr. Blanchard, of his own Province. As to the “causes of insanity,” Dr. Blanchard remarks as follows:—

"From the reports of different hospitals in America and Great Britain, which reach us annually, intemperance would seem to play a leading part; intemperance, not only as regards spirituous liquors, but also as to the mode of living, excess in the indulgence of the various appetites and passions, etc., etc., and this excess is due in many cases to an ignorance of the laws which should govern our lives. The consequences of intemperance, as respects alcoholic liquors, are not, unfortunately, confined to the first sufferers alone. They are entailed upon the children and grandchildren. It is especially true of those who indulge in this vice, that the sins of the fathers are visited upon the children, for it is an established fact that the children of habitual drinkers—I do not say drunkards—are far more liable to fall victims to the various neurotic diseases, such as insanity, epilepsy, chorea, neuralgia, etc., than are the children of total abstainers. As has been observed by some writer, 'The brain cannot be kept for years in a constant, though it may be slight, abnormal condition, without altering its organic character, and rendering it liable to at least functional disturbance, which constitutes insanity. Many of the cases of the softening of the brain and epilepsy result directly from the use of intoxicating drinks. The habitual use of alcohol is felt through more than one generation, and though the father may not become insane, his children will have an additional tendency to insanity, especially if they pursue the same course, as they are likely to, for the habit itself is almost transmissible.'

"A large part of the idiot and imbecile children are born of intemperate parents. If we would have a hardy, intelligent race, alcohol, as a beverage, must be abandoned."

I think that will dispose of the question raised by my hon. friend that it is necessary for man to have some stimulant. I was very much struck, indeed, by the very ingenious manner in which he worked up his argument, to prove from statistics that crime had materially increased in England under a prohibitory system. It is a most extraordinary thing that the British House of Lords should have taken up their time in discussing this question of temperance if they considered its tendency was to increase crime. The same question has also occupied the attention of the statesmen of the neighboring Republic. I contend that it is a farce to attempt to prove before this House, by statistics, that the State of Maine has suffered from the working of the Maine Liquor Law. I am somewhat acquainted with the State of Maine for the last ten years, and I say, of my own knowledge, that crime has materially decreased in that State since that law came into operation. At one time there was a great deal of excitement in England over what was called the bread law, and it was proved at that time that while the consumption of liquor decreased, crime decreased in the same ratio. I happened, not long ago, to visit the Kingston Penitentiary, and during the time I stood there watchings on seven hundred convicts fyle past me, I thought to myself I would just like to have the record of the life of each of those men, showing the temptations and inducements that had been thrown in their way, until they had finally been brought to that place. The history of one, at all events, I did learn, through the kindness of the Warden. I can say to my hon. friend opposite that, at one time of his life, that convict occupied as high and distinguished a position as any hon. gentlemen in this House do now, but, maddened with drink one night, he committed an act that placed him in the penitentiary for ten years, and brought his wife and family to disgrace. But, to show the hon. gentleman that a community can do without intoxicating liquors, and that, by its abolition, crime decreases, I will refer him to Garden Island, only a short distance from the Capital, where there has been no liquor sold for many years. A large portion of that community, at certain seasons of the year, are employed at loading vessels, and there has not been a case of conviction for crime amongst that population for twenty years, and there is not a constable on the Island. If the hon. gentleman is right in his conclusions, the great majority of the people of this Dominion must be wrong, as the great question of temperance has been brought home to every village, town and settlement in the country, and there has been a favorable response from every one of them. I am glad that political necessity has given us this Bill. I, for one, shall be pleased to give the Government every assistance in my power to pass it, and put it before the country, and then we shall have an opportunity, at all events, of finding out what is unconstitutional in it. I am somewhat strengthened in my convictions on that particular point, from the fact that the hon. gentleman from Sarnia, who stands at the head of the Temperance Alliance in this Dominion, has agreed with me that it is better to have the Bill passed, and let it go before the country, than have none at all. I consider that the hon. Secretary of State is entitled to the thanks of the people of this country. He has not only brought forward this Bill, but he has shown, as a practical temperance man himself, that he has faith in the workings of temperance in Canada. The Bill, I think, will be welcomed by a large majority of the temperance men of the country, and its workings, I have no doubt, will prove so beneficial that I would not be at all surprised, when I come back here next Session, to find that the hon. gentleman from Lunenburg has been enrolled, as I am enrolled myself, amongst the temperance men of Canada, and will be standing up here advocating, as I am now doing, the great and noble cause of temperance.

Hon. Mr. Howlan,

Hon. Mr. McCLELAN—After the able speeches that have been delivered, indicating very distinctly and in a better way than I can, to a very large extent, my own opinions on this question, both as to the necessity and propriety of the introduction of this measure, I can only express my supreme pleasure that the Government have taken this matter in hand, and have brought in so good a Bill. I believe that the temperance men of the country will give them their support on this measure, whatever shade of political opinion they may hold. I am very glad also to hear from the expressions of hon. gentlemen around me, that the discussion of this question is not to be made a political one, and that no obstruction will be given towards the working out of this law. It is well known, as has been very properly remarked by the last speaker, that petitions have been flooding this Parliament for a number of years in favor of a more advanced system of prohibition. That has been followed up by some twenty-five or thirty petitions to this Chamber, very recently, asking that this Bill be allowed to pass. My opinion is, speaking of my own Province, New Brunswick, that the temperance men of all shades of political opinion will concur in the propriety, advisability, and, almost necessity for this very measure. My letters indicate as well as those received by other hon. gentlemen from my Province, that the people of New Brunswick are very much pleased that this step has been taken. We may occupy, perhaps, a somewhat anomalous position with regard to it, because in many of the counties the temperance feeling has been so established by force of public opinion, that it is impossible to grant any license for the sale of liquor. In my own county there have been no licences granted for very many years, but recently—within the last three years—when an attempt was made to fine people who sold without license, the opinion of the Judges was that the law was unconstitutional. Since then we have had an indiscriminate sale of intoxicating liquors without any legal restriction. Therefore, the people have felt the necessity of some steps being taken, as we all know the difficulty of getting a decision from the Supreme Court. Not being a lawyer, I cannot discuss intelligently, the question of jurisdiction, but my opinion is, we should accept this measure as it is, and leave the question of its constitutionality to be decided afterwards, if such question arise, for the necessity for a law of this kind is very great, and the people who advocate temperance—not from any patriotic feeling if the argument of my hon. friend from Lunenburg is of any force—demand it. I scarcely take it that it is necessary to controvert such an argument as that of my hon. friend, that temperance increases crime and pauperism, as the sentiment is not worthy of an hon. gentleman who occupies the position he does. Public opinion throughout the country will favor the introduction of this Bill, and I trust that every hon. gentleman will give it his support.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I must rise to an explanation, as my name has been so often mentioned in this debate, and in consequence of the manner in which hon. gentlemen, not being able to refute my facts and authorities, have endeavored to pervert what I have said. I merely gave those figures in the first place, as quoting the Committee of the House of Lords, showing the large increase in the use of intoxicating liquors. I have shown, from statistics submitted to the same Parliament at the same time, that crime and pauperism had decreased during the same period. These are facts, and no hon. gentleman has attempted squarely to meet them, much less has any of my honorable friends, the prohibitionists, attempted to dispute them. They deal in generalities and not in facts and figures. In the community from which I come, I believe I have been as good a friend to the temperance organizations there as anyone not belonging to them, but I do not want to deprive those philanthropic gentlemen who are engaged in the temperance cause, of their vocation. I believe the moment they attempt to coerce men by force of law into being temperate, instead of by example, and using moral and religious suasion, they will frustrate their own object. I believe that liquor, like other things created for the use and benefit of man, is a gift of God, and its use violates no law, social or Divine. I regard any man who can look upon evil and avoid it, as being a better man than he who has to be restrained from evil by legislative enactments. I am ready to assist in restraining excess and abuse in this and everything else. I believe there are more men ruined through intemperance in other respects—intemperance in other things, loathsome in their nature, that is more destructive both to the soul and body, than ardent spirits—vices that daily show themselves stamped in posterity. No position is more absurd, no argument more fallacious, than because some few men abuse God's gifts, therefore those gifts should be prohibited from general use. The use would run in the very teeth of it, and as I have already contended, the attempted prohibition would be an incentive to its abuse.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—To discuss the constitutional points of this Bill, would be presumption on my part, when so many professional men have taken part in it. But it did strike me when an hon. gentleman said that a hundred legal questions might arise out of this measure, to be submitted to the Supreme Court for their decision, if it became law, that if such is the case, is it at all likely that all those questions could be anticipated by the judges, if the measure were submitted to them now?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Of course.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—Without any particular points being raised?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—I venture to say that no such thing could be reasonably expected.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That is your opinion.

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—I will take the hon. gentleman's own opinion with regard to the constitutionality of the Bill, when he says he thinks only one portion of the Bill would be ultra vires, that is the portion repealing the Dunkin Act.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—It does not follow that I am right. There may be a very different opinion as to the whole enacting clause of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—Nor does it follow that the hon. gentleman is right that it ought to be referred to the Supreme Court now.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The hon. gentleman is the only one who is necessarily right.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—For my part I always place a great deal of weight on the hon. gentleman's opinion in matters of law. I have great respect for his opinions on this Bill, and I was very glad when he said there was only one part of the measure ultra vires. We have all we want in this Bill even if the Dunkin Act should not be repealed, and if this Act is put in force people need not use the Dunkin Act if this one is preferable. Although the Dunkin Act would still remain on the Statute book, as a law it would be a dead letter, as it has been, and is yet, in nearly all portions of Ontario and Quebec except in a very few counties. Then, as to the desirability of having a measure of this kind made permissive, and to apply only to such municipalities as the people themselves think advisable, it is a most excellent feature of it, and one that is likely to give general satisfaction in all the Provinces. I know that in Ontario there is a very good law, known as the Crook's Act, which the people think has had an excellent effect in this Province, so that it is only in a few parts of Ontario this Act will be put into operation for some years to come. My own view is that it should not be enforced except when the great majority of the people are in favor of it, because when you pass a law taking away a man's liberty to eat and drink anything unless it has the approval of a large majority in the community, the law becomes inoperative.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—I consider, if it be wise that this Act should go into operation, it would also be wise that the course suggested by my hon. friend should be followed, and it would then come before us in a shape that there would be no chance of its provisions being disputed. I am entirely in favor of anything that will promote temperance. Any measures we can take that will benefit our people and suppress intemperance, it is our duty to initiate; but at the same time this is a very serious responsibility, as we must bear in mind that we are interfering with the revenue of the country, and, I take it, it is a question which the Government, in introducing this measure, have seriously considered. If the two questions are brought into juxtaposition, shall crime be suppressed, or must the revenue fail, I believe the decision should be, crime must be suppressed at all hazards. I am happy to say that in this metropolis of our Dominion, after some weeks that I have been in it, I have not seen a man reeling on the streets, or showing any signs of drunkenness. I am pleased to note this. Possibly it is the result of moral suasion, as there is a surprisingly marked difference between the state of affairs that exists here now, and what prevailed here a few years ago. A person can now traverse the streets any hour of the day or night without meeting drunkenness. There may be haunts of vice in this city, as there are in other places, but wherever you go throughout the Dominion the cause of temperance is increasing, the people are becoming more temperate, and intemperance is being considered as a vice to be avoided. Still, there are a large, influential, and intelligent class of people who will never be satisfied until there is a fair test given to a prohibitory liquor law. I have always been of the opinion that prohibition pure and simple, in this country, is an impossibility. I allude more particularly to the Maritime Provinces, where, it is well known, we are almost surrounded by the sea, with no part of a province more distant from a seaport than eighteen or twenty miles. I believe in such a place, if a prohibitory law were enforced, the inducements that would be offered to import liquor into the Provinces by the great gains that were to be made by it, would encourage a large illicit traffic, and the revenue would lose. If this Bill goes to committee, the provisions of it ought to be very carefully examined. We must bear in mind—and I think it is the duty of this Legislature not to forget—that outside of the temperance people there is a very large, influential, moral, and religious class, who have the whole of their means invested in the liquor traffic. We have legalized the business, and for purposes of revenue it is looked upon as one of the legitimate sources of traffic in which people are empowered to invest their money and make their living by. Would it be fair to step in of a sudden on this class of the community, after inducing them to go into the business by legalizing it, and crush it out of existence without warning? Something ought to be done, and probably something will be proposed in the direction of indemnifying those people from whom we propose to take away their means of subsistence. The British people, when they desired to abolish slavery within the limits of the British Empire, did not do so by suddenly destroying the property of the people who made a living by slaves. No, they put their hands in their pockets, and paid a legitimate recompense to the people whose property they were taking away; and had our neighbors across the line done the same thing, they could have put down slavery without the horrors of a fearful war that almost ruined the country. In this proposed legislation we should either extend the time so that liquor dealers would be enabled to dispose of their stock on hand, or they should be recompensed in some other way. Even the temperance men, while they do not wish to do anything that would encourage the liquor traffic, would hardly be willing to crush it out unless it were done in such a way that it would not bring ruin on a large portion of the community.

Hon. Mr. WARK—I think the arguments of the Hon. gentleman who last addressed the House refer more to prohibition than to a permissive bill of this kind. Reference has been made to the working of the Maine Liquor Law. I have been passing through that State for ten or twelve years, and very frequently I have had to stop at various hotels in it. During all that time I never saw a glass of liquor sold there, nor did I see a drunken man. It may be that there are places where liquor can be obtained, but respectable men will not go through back lanes and into low hovels to look for it. It is that class to which my hon. friend from Toronto referred, when he spoke of the great importance of removing temptations out of the way of the lower classes; but the young men of the country who frequent the bars of the fashionable hotels will be equally benefitted by this Bill. With regard to the effect of this Bill upon elections, I regret that such a question has been introduced, but we must bear in mind that the liquor interests work harder in elections than the temperance men generally do. We have only to look at the last election in England, where the liquor interests were actually said to have controlled the elections.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WARK—If the Government expect support for this Bill, they will find that they will have a vigorous opposition as well, and perhaps the opposition will be stronger in the end than the support. I will only say a few words with regard to the amendment which the hon. gentleman from Sarnia proposes. I have made it a rule under the old Administration, as well as under the present one, when the Government have carefully prepared a measure and have devised all the machinery for carrying it out, that the safest way is to leave the entire responsibility with the Government, and interfere with the Bill as little as possible in the way of amendments. I received letters to-day from two very respectable temperance men in New Brunswick, one filling a very high position in that Province, and the other a judge of one of our courts, both expressing themselves as satisfied with the Bill. So am I. With regard to the constitutionality of the measure, as far as the Local Legislatures are concerned, I believe if there is any difficulty in the way, the Local Legislatures will step in at once and remove it, if it is anything that depends upon their legislation. I have no doubt about New Brunswick, because we had a petition from the Legislature there some years ago, asking for a prohibitory liquor law. I am sure the power rests between the Dominion and Provincial Legislatures to remedy this evil, and if there is any defect in this Bill, it will be supplied by local enactments.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—I cannot let this occasion pass without expressing my opinion on the Bill which is now before this hon. House. I am glad that such a measure has been submitted by the Government for our consideration. Last year I applied to have the Dunkin Act extended to Manitoba, but I see that this Bill provides uniform legislation for all the Provinces in the regulation of the sale of intoxicating liquors. The Bill may not be perfect and it is for the Government to see that every precaution is taken to make the measure as perfect as possible as it would be a greater damage to the cause it was intended to promote to enact doubtful legislation, than to have no permissive law at all. I am sure when the bill goes to committee, the Government will be ready to tell us plainly whether any portion of it is unconstitutional or not. I think this measure is a step in the right direction and after it is in operation, and its defects are discovered, it can be improved where improvement is deemed advisable. The introduction of this Bill is a concession on the part of the Government and it shows what progress the cause of temperance has made when they have been able to bring sufficient influence to bear on the Government as to procure this legislation. We have been told that wine is a gift of God and it was given for man's use. There are many other things also which are the gifts of God, but against which we are obliged to legislate in the interests of society. Poisons are gifts of God, but every one will admit that the law to prevent the indiscriminate sale of strychnine is a very wise enactment. I do not say there is the same danger from wine, but it is the duty of the Government to protect the weak, and if there is a strong temptation in the way, it is well to give those who are exposed to it all the protection possible. The law punishes the drunkard for crime, but, in many cases, it punishes an innocent man. To be a crime, the act must be committed with intent. Sometimes unfortunate drunkards are guilty of very grave offences, and expiate their crimes on the scaffold. In many such cases the man is not guilty, as the crime was committed without intent while the poor wretch was under the influence of drink. The parties who should be held responsible in such cases are those who issue licenses for the sale of such dangerous poisons amongst men.

Hon. Mr. Wark.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—I think many of the provisions of this Bill are complicated, and could be made more plain and practical. I think, for instance, we could have done with the system now in force for ascertaining the majority for or against any municipal by-law, without introducing the ballot and a new system of voting. There are many questions of detail which can, no doubt, be improved on a closer examination of the Bill, but the principle of it is sound, and I desire to thank the hon. Secretary of State who has had the courage to submit such a Bill for our consideration as will, I have no doubt, be of very great benefit to the country.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I fancy there can be no doubt that a majority of this House will be quite willing to join with the Government in enacting any measure likely to result in diminishing intemperance, though there may be differences of opinion as to the best course to be adopted in repressing that evil. But the House will be left in an unfortunate position if the view which the Government take of the power of the Legislature is erroneous. The views which the Government now hold in bringing in this bill are not the views which they held last Session, or the Session before last. I think we may infer from the answers given in this House and elsewhere, with reference to the difficulty of legislating on this subject, that even when this Session began, the view now held by the hon. Secretary of State and the Government, and which the law now before us is predicated upon, was not held by them at that time. Therefore, I think it is putting this House, if there are really doubts as to our power, and will be putting the Legislature, if the Bill becomes law, in a position which Parliament ought not to be placed, and if there is any way of ascertaining safely and surely whether we are right in legislating in the manner in which the Bill contemplates, we ought to resort to it, and have our position established. I desire to speak with every respect of the Government, and of the legal gentlemen in the Government, but I do not think that the Ministry have grown any stronger in legal talent since last Session or the Session before last. On the contrary, we know that the Government was very much stronger in legal ability a Session ago than they are at this moment, and we have reason to believe that the views then held by the Government with reference to the powers of the Legislature on this subject are not the views that are held now, and I think the hon. Secretary of State should listen with very considerable attention to the opinions expressed by the hon. gentleman from Arichat, and the hon. gentleman from Amherst as to the powers of Parliament under the British North America Act. I think the opinions they have given on this question are the highest opinions that could be found in this House on the legislation which it is in our power to enact. The gentlemen who are advocating the temperance cause in this House tell us that if it should result in the legislation of this Session being found afterwards to be beyond the power of this Legislature, it will be an injury to the cause of temperance instead of being advantageous to it. That is not the position in which we should be left by the Government, and if there are any means of settling the point satisfactorily, those means should be resorted to at once. I believe the Government have the power to submit this Bill to the Supreme Court, and to have the opinion of the members of that Court upon the right which we have to enact this law. It is an inconvenient plan, I admit, and cannot deny that there are serious objections to it, but, on the whole, I think that opinion should be asked for, not only because of the previous views which were held by this Government last Session, but because of the doubts that have been expressed in other Legislatures—Ontario for instance—by men who stand exceedingly high in the legal profession, and who doubt which Legislature has the power to deal with this subject. I do not think that asking the opinion of the Supreme Court would delay this measure very long. We had the opinion of the Supreme Court with reference to a Bill, two Sessions ago—the Christian Brothers' Bill. The resolution under which that opinion was asked, was sent to the Supreme Court one day, and, I think, the answer came back the next, or, at any rate, within two or three days. Therefore, the House has no reason to believe that immediate attention will not be given to this Bill, and that any delay, likely to be prejudicial to the passing of the Bill this Session, would ensue. I am of opinion, in view of the previous opinion of the Government, and of the doubts in the minds of professional men in the Dominion; doubts that have been expressed in the Legislatures of the Provinces, and in this House by eminent men in the profession; that the Government would do well to consider the expediency of acting on the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from Amherst, in securing the opinion of the Supreme Court on a measure which may, after all, turn out to be beyond our powers, and which, if enacted, might initiate a series of law suits that would be against the interests of the temperance cause. I have also a great many objections to the provisions of the Bill, which press with unnecessary hardship on those who manufacture and sell intoxicating drinks. Some persons have allowed themselves to think of the men who are engaged in the liquor traffic as vile people who ought not to be allowed to live, although we have men engaged in that business who are as respectable, and, I will add, as much respected, and entitled to as much consideration as the most strict and righteous temperance advocate in the country. We must also remember that there are large sums of money embarked in the manufacture and sale of those drinks. There are merchants in the towns and cities who have all their means invested in this business which this Bill seeks to abolish. The property of those people must inevitably be sacrificed unless some change is made; and, I think, at least some months before this Bill is carried into operation in any district, notice of the fact should be given.

Hon. Mr. Girard.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A provision is made to that effect.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It is not clearly put in a direct enacting clause, nor is the time long enough.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—It gives three months from the date of the proclamation announcing that it has been passed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not be brought into operation under three months after it is adopted.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Three months' notice is not enough, when we consider the large amounts of money that are embarked in this pursuit. You say to those engaged in the traffic, that in the course of three months all the property they have got on hand will be, to a certain extent, unsaleable. I think it is unfair, unjust, and an arbitrary proceeding which there is no necessity of resorting to, and ought not to be resorted to. There should be the least possible interference with the liberties of the people. If we take from a man his liberty to sell what he pleases in this way, it is because we believe that other and larger interests make it a necessity that he should be deprived of this liberty, in the interests of the rest of the community; but we ought to deal with it cautiously and carefully, and without unnecessarily injuring him. In taking that course, which, I admit, is expedient under certain circumstances, to deprive a person of his natural liberty, so that he shall not be allowed to do or sell this or that, in the interest of the rest of the community, it should be done with every care, so as to avoid unnecessarily doing harm to him. I do not think that this Bill takes those precautions. There are other features of it which I also object to. I think, if the law is once in operation, the machinery can be started at the suggestion of twenty-five per cent. of the electors. That may or may not be a sufficient number; but that a bare majority of the community should decide the question, on the subsequent submission to these electors, strikes me as unreasonable. Ought there not to be a considerable majority in favor of the law? Shall we say to two thousand people that because one thousand and one wish such a law, it will be obligatory on all, that the liberties of the other thousand, or nine hundred and ninety-nine, shall be interfered with? I doubt very much if it is wise to do so. I think the case should be made out more strongly than that. I think it is very well worthy the consideration of the Government and of this House, whether the majority should not be two-thirds, or some larger number than one half plus one, in order to bring the prohibitory clauses into operation.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—The Permissive Bill in England was never less than two-thirds majority.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—It is in the Dun-kin Act.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL.—I believe it is a question whether there should not be a larger majority than this Bill provides, when it is proposed to deprive a portion of Her Majesty's subjects of their liberty. I think the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill would act wisely if he were to take the suggestion of my hon. friend from Amherst, and seek the opinion of the Supreme Court, before this Bill should be enacted by the House. If the hon. gentleman does not take that course, then it will be for us on this side of the House, to consider if we cannot in some way shape the Bill so as to make it necessary that it shall be done before it goes into operation.

Hon. Mr. MACMASTER.—Being a total abstainer, and having been a witness of the evils resulting from the use of intoxicating liquors, it cannot but be a matter of congratulation for me to see this Bill introduced. I cannot apprehend any of the difficulties which some hon. gentlemen predict with reference to the provisions of the Bill being ultra vires. We have passed bills which legal gentlemen connected with the Senate seemed to think were not within the jurisdiction of this House, but we passed them, and they are in operation to-day, and the passing of this Bill would be the most ready way to decide its constitutionality. If finally carried, no doubt a case would be made out against it by parties who are aggrieved at this legislation, and the matter would then be placed in the position to be thoroughly tested. I think we ought not to object to the Bill going through on that account. There are some clauses in the Bill which I have no doubt can be improved in committee, and I hope it will be allowed to pass the second reading.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE.—I wish to offer a few remarks on this Bill. I think it is a subject of congratulation to see the warm interest taken in it by members of this House, as has been proved by the number of gentlemen who have spoken this evening in favor of it. A good deal has been said as to the conduct of the Government in getting the opinion of the Supreme Court on the Bill. I, for one, was in hopes that this question would have been discussed with a total absence of party feeling. It was with some regret that I heard inferences drawn as to the motives of the Government; inferences which I thought might as well be left alone. I can quite understand that gentlemen of the legal profession, whose business it is to take exceptions, may have taken exceptions to the course being pursued with this Bill, but they might also have taken exceptions had another course been pursued. The Bill might have been brought in with the approval of the Supreme Court, and the argument might then have been used, that this House was called on simply to endorse the opinions of the Judges of the Supreme Court, without the right of independent action. I am of opinion that if the advice of the Supreme Court has to be taken, it should be after the opinion of this House is expressed. No doubt it would be well to obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court before the Bill becomes law. I remember two or three Sessions ago, when the hon. member for Sarnia moved a resolution on this temperance question, I happened to follow him in the debate, and I then expressed the extreme reluctance I should feel to give any opposition to a practical statesmanlike measure on the liquor question. I find myself in a position, since this Bill has been introduced, to fulfil my pledge I then gave to the hon. gentleman. I must say that this Bill comes up to my idea as to what is a practical and statesmanlike measure. Its principle I can approve of—it is the permissive principle, and I can give it my support. There are, however, some objections to its details, which occur to me. For example, I regret that the machinery which is to be employed to put this Bill into operation is the same as is used for our elections, and I would rather some other machinery were found. I say this because I consider the frequent recourse to the polls in the rural districts is not attended with good effects to the country. I think the more rarely, within reasonable limits, the electors are called upon to exercise their privileges at the polls, perhaps the better it is for them. In every five years we are aware, that the members of the House of Commons must be elected, and in every four years an election of local members must occur: besides which, we have numerous incidental elections rising out of the vicissitudes of political life, and it sometimes happens that electors become weary of exercising their franchise, and will not go to the polls except on important occasions. There has been another objection alluded to by some gentlemen who preceded me, to which I think a great deal of weight should be attached. The hon. gentleman from Sarnia spoke of himself as a just man, and I believe he is essentially a just man, and, as a just man, he is bound to give full attention to the objection taken, with regard to the injuries which the introduction of this measure may cause to those who are engaged in the manufacture of malt and spirituous liquors. In the town near which I reside, for instance, there are several prosperous breweries. They are not large in comparison with others in older countries, but a very considerable capital has been invested in them, and they manufacture a good, sound, wholesome article, although there may be a difference of opinion on that point.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE — These breweries are carried on in large buildings erected specially for the purpose, and the machinery employed in the business was made especially for it. If this Bill should come into operation in Charlottetown, and in Queen's County, the principal market for those brewers would be seriously interfered with, because a clause of this Bill stipulates that although spirits and malt liquors may be manufactured in a district, they cannot be sold there, if the people adopt this law. The consequence is, that the market which those brewers find in the immediate neighborhood would be destroyed, and a very material injury would be done to those persons who, in good faith, and under the protection of the laws, erected those breweries and carried on their business under license. These are objections which, I hope, before this Bill leaves the Committee of the Whole, will be looked into. I may say, incidentally to this question, I am very glad to see that the temperance cause has made such very great progress. The Blue Ribbon movement has been very successful in the Province from which I come. If this Bill becomes law, it will likely be adopted in one or two counties in Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—I see with pleasure that the hon. Secretary of State has seen fit to bring in a measure which is calculated to promote the cause of temperance, though, as far as I can judge, it is far from being perfect. Still, it is a step in the right direction, a step that should be encouraged, and if the Bill were defeated at its second reading, it is clear that the cause of temperance would suffer a serious injury. Of course, we cannot expect that this measure will be perfect in its operation at first, but experience will show what amendments are necessary next Session of Parliament. I would have been pleased if the hon. Secretary of State had seen fit to assent to the proposal made to submit the Bill to the Supreme Court for the opinion of the Judges on it. However, if he does not choose to do so before the second reading, I will vote for the second reading as it is, though it seems to be the general desire that the constitutionality of the measure should be tested.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no reason to complain of the treatment which this Bill has met from the Senate. Hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this subject are agreed that some legislation was necessary, and although some objections have been taken to the Bill, still its general principle has been conceded. Only one or two gentlemen met the Bill at its threshold with opposition and expressed an intention to vote against it, but I believe they represent a small minority in this Senate. The most formidable opposition has come from the gentlemen who believe it is proper to refer this measure to the Supreme Court. I am one of those, however, who would regret that this Senate should abnegate its powers in such a manner that it could not legislate without reference to the Supreme Court, and I do not think provision was made in the Act under which the Court was constituted for referring Bills of a public character for their decision, or it would be mentioned in the 53 section referring to Bills from the Senate and the House of Commons. I do not think we ever contemplated the reference of questions involving the right or prerogative of the Federal Parliament, nor do I believe it is fair to the Supreme Court Judges that questions of this kind should be sent before them without coming up from the lower courts in the ordinary manner, after having been adjudicated upon by the judges below after arguments of council. I am rather confirmed in that view by the observations of the learned Chief Justice when concurring in the opinion expressed by Justices Strong and Fournier on the Christian Brothers' Bill. He said :

"I doubt if the Legislature by the 53 Section of the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act intended that the judges should, on the reference of a private Bill to them express their opinion on the constitutional right of the Parliament of Canada to pass the Bill, and for that reason I have not joined in the accompanying opinion."

I think that it is very clear that it was not the opinion of the learned Chief Justice that constitutional questions should be referred. I think it was an opinion that was not very difficult to express ; it was an opinion that was expressed by nearly every professional man in this Chamber, who had given the subject any attention. I know the opinion of the late Minister of Justice was very strong indeed, that it was not proper to refer cases of that kind that did not arise in the lower courts in the ordinary course. Now, with reference to this Bill, and the opinions of the Government when the House first met, if hon. gentlemen will refer to the Speech from the Throne, they will find that it was announced there that a Bill of this kind would be introduced. A few days before the House met, the Supreme Court gave judgment in the case of the Queen vs. Severn. While that judgment was not generally satisfactory, the current of public opinion seemed to be that the Local Legislature had not the power to pass a prohibitory liquor law, and it is quite clear, from that decision, that the powers of the Local Legislatures are less than we had previously anticipated. The decision of the Supreme Court, that the Local Legislature could not enact any law that would be a restriction on trade, afforded the clue to the whole subject. My hon. friend put the case very practically when he concurred in the opinion I myself expressed, that the greater necessarily included the less ; that the power to legislate in reference to trade and commerce necessarily gave power over the local traffic ; that so long as that traffic was not declared illicit or illegal, just so long had the Local Legislatures the right to issue licenses ; but the moment a higher power declared it was an illicit traffic, that moment their powers ceased. I do not think my hon. friend who expressed the opinion that the Government were not in possession of any more information now than they had last Session, is correct in his premises, because the discussion of this case of the Queen vs. Severn had taken place, the opinions of the Judges had been given, and although they had not decided the important point that is involved here, still they gave us a sufficient intimation of what their view was to, at all events, satisfy my mind that the opinion of that Court is that the power to restrict rests entirely with the Federal Parliament. It is for these reasons that I think the Bill, in that particular, at all events, will not be found to be ultra vires. In drafting this Bill I was not familiar with the operation of the Dunkin Act, and I invoked the assistance of gentlemen who had experience of its workings. I had the pleasure of communications from the Alliance, through their Secretary, and from other prominent temperance men who were kind enough to write and suggest the provisions that would be most applicable. I do not pretend that the details of this Bill are in any sense perfect. It could not be expected that they would be. The whole system adopted here is a new one ; the machinery is entirely different from the Dunkin Act, and it could not be hoped that one would be successful in meeting all the wishes of gentlemen who have devoted much more attention to the subject than I have. I shall only be too happy to receive the suggestions of hon. gentlemen who are anxious to make it as perfect as possible. With reference to the suggestions that this Bill will work, injuriously on those engaged in trade, I need only say that when it goes into operation in any particular district, it simply restricts the sale in that district, but does not prevent the manufacturer or liquor dealer from selling to parties outside the district in which the sale is prohibited. There was no other possible way of meeting the difficulty. It would be too arbitrary to say that the manufacture or sale would be absolutely prohibited, and that large premises should be shut up for years entailing great loss on the owners. Take Windsor for instance, where there is a large distillery that pays to the Government a revenue of nearly a million dollars per annum ; it would be preposterous to say, that that brewery should not have a right to sell in other parts of the Dominion and over the world. It is the same with Gooderham and Worts of Toronto. If the law went into operation there, it would be manifestly unjust to say that they should not manufacture and sell to outside people, because if they did not do so other people would, and the temperance men would not gain anything by restricting them from selling. The whole spirit of the Bill is that when the majority of the people are against the sale of liquor in any municipality there the sale should be prohibited. Beyond that I do not think it is wise to pretend to go.

Hon. Mr. REESOR—Is the manufacture interfered with at all?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not as long as the manufacturer takes the precaution not to sell in the prohibited district. If hon. gentlemen ask more than that, it could not be given in any other way than by closing up the distilleries altogether.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I think the hon. Secretary of State says a more stringent law than this was in force in New Brunswick. At one time in that province a prohibitory law had been passed. It was enforced only nine months, when the Lieutenant-Governor, finding petitions and protests were flowing in from all quarters against the law, called the Legislature together, dissolved the House, and appealed to the country on the question. The result was, that every man who had a hand in passing that Bill, with the exception, of one, was defeated in his constituency.

The bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL gave notice that he would move his amendment on the motion to go into Committee, and before the Speaker left the chair.

MONEY LENDING COMPANIES' BILL.

BILL DEFEATED.

Hon. Mr. REESOR moved the second reading of Bill (J) "An Act relating to incorporated companies authorized to lend money." He said it was a short bill involving a principle that had been adopted in this House, already in the general Act passed last Session, and also in the amendment made last year to the National Investment Company's Act. As the Bill was only a short one he would read it:—

Hon. Mr. Scott.

"Whereas, it is expedient that the following provision of The Canada Joint Stock Companies Act, 1877, should have a more general application; Therefore, Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enact as follows:—

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in any Act of the Parliament of Canada, no incorporated company, society, or association, authorized to lend money by the Parliament of Canada shall stipulate for, take, reserve, or exact from any borrower of money from such Company, society, or association, any fine or penalty, in respect of arrears of principal or interest, which shall have the effect of increasing the charge in respect of arrears beyond the rate of interest or discount on the loan."

The effect of this provision being introduced so as to bear upon all loan societies would be simply to make them uniform in that particular. A number of building societies were formed some years ago, and their regulations were found to be so oppressive that money lent at eight or nine per cent. was sometimes brought up to twenty per cent. by the fines and penalties that were imposed where borrowers failed to pay up promptly. In private contracts between individuals no such conditions could be imposed, that in the event of a party failing to make a payment on a day agreed upon, the person holding the note or bond could impose a penalty or exact a higher rate of interest yet; there were institutions that enforced this principle to such an extent that in times of depression, when money was scarce, it was a great hardship to those who were subjected to it. When building societies were first introduced into Ontario it was at a time when the rate of interest allowed by law was only six per cent, and it was thought desirable that some inducement should be held out for money to be brought into this country for investment by increasing the profits of the societies by the imposition of fines and penalties on borrowers who were not punctual in their payments. In this way the societies became so unpopular that they applied to Parliament in some cases to get their names changed, as parties would not borrow from them. The names were changed, but in some instances they did not give up their powers as building societies to impose fines and penalties, but, like other loaning societies, they got increased powers to charge rates of from eight to nine per cent, or any rates on which the parties might agree. He believed that those companies should not be allowed to retain powers that Parliament refused to allow in the General Act of last Session. Parliament had reserved the right, if found necessary for the private good, to take from incorporated companies powers that were once given to them. The Act declares:—

“Every Act shall be so construed as to reserve to Parliament the power of repealing or amending it, and of revoking, restricting or modifying any power, privilege or advantage thereby vested in or granted to any person or party whenever such repeal, amendment, revocation, restriction or modification is deemed by Parliament to be required for the public good.”

Hon. Mr. HOPE—What about societies incorporated before the passage of that Act?

Hon. Mr. REESOR said this applied to all Acts. Parliament had always retained those powers, and had never given up its right to legislate for the best interests of the country. Hon. gentlemen might or might not be interested in those corporations, as they had a right to be. All he asked was that they would consider fairly and justly what was due to the borrower, as well as the advantages they might retain for themselves. He was satisfied, and, if necessary, could prove before a committee, that very large and oppressive rates had been imposed on people who were so unfortunate as not to be in a position to pay the money when it came due, although the security might be ample—twice or three times the value of the money borrowed. He thought when they imposed twenty per cent. it was time some measure like like this should be adopted.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Name a society that charges 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. REESOR said he could name one, but did not feel disposed to do so. He did not assert that all those societies imposed such heavy penalties. He hoped the House would allow the Bill to pass the second reading and go to committee.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL hoped the House would not consent to the second reading. The legislation to which the hon. gentleman had pointed referred to companies to be incorporated hereafter, and it would be quite fair for the House to impose any conditions they pleased upon companies seeking incorporation in the future, but some of the companies which would be affected by this measure, had been in existence for 25 years. They existed in almost every town in Ontario, and their shareholders were among the most respectable portion of the community. Did any one ever hear of such legislation as this, upon a matter of private property, without any previous examination of facts, to repeal clauses in charters which had been in existence for twenty-five years? He was surprised that any hon. gentleman would propose such a Bill. Look at the course pursued with respect to the banks! When the Government introduced their Banking Act they did not propose to repeal existing bank charters, but enacted, that when they expired, such and such provisions should be enforced. But to say that those companies in which millions had been invested should be deprived of their rights without any inquiry into the matter at all, at the mere suggestion of a private member who could hardly get a seconder, was a proposition which the House could not entertain for a moment.

Hon. Mr. McMASTER entirely concurred in the observations of the hon. gentleman who had just spoken. The hon. Senator who had charge of the Bill had fallen into a very grave error in supposing that those companies charged 20 per cent. Nothing of the kind had occurred. The way the hon. gentleman calculated was this—he added to the eight per cent., charged, the penalty of one per cent. per month, but the fact was, the one per cent. per month included the eight per cent., and was therefore only four per cent. in excess of the ordinary rate, which frequently saved law expenses, and had the effect of making it an object to pay promptly. Those companies had borrowed money on debentures to a very large extent in England, and some in Canada. To attempt to deprive them of what might be regarded as vested rights, and lower the value of the security that the debenture holders had, would be an unjustifiable course of procedure. He would, therefore, oppose the second reading of the Bill.

The motion was lost on a division.

The House adjourned at 11.30 p.m.

THE SENATE.

Friday, March 29th.

The SPEAKER took the chair at three o'clock.

After Routine proceedings.

THE PUBLIC EXPENDITURE OF THE DOMINION.

THE DEBATE CONCLUDED.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT resumed the adjourned debate on the hon. Mr. Macpherson's inquiry :—

“ That he will call attention to the public expenditure of the Dominion, especially that portion of it which is largely within the control of the Administration, and will enquire of the Government how it is proposed to restore the equilibrium between income and expenditure.”

He said :—This matter has received a very considerable amount of discussion already, and the ground is pretty well covered. I fear I cannot add much that is new to the subject, which I consider one of great importance. I will say a few words, in the first instance, in regard to the desirability of discussing a subject of this importance, in this House, as remarks have been made, particularly by my hon. friend from Lambton, who is not in his seat, that it was not the place to discuss a financial question like this. We are here not only as the Senate of Canada, similar in certain respects to the House of Lords, but we are here also as territorial representatives.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—We represent particular Provinces and matters connected with those Provinces, we have a right to discuss, and beyond that, if I read the Act of Parliament correctly, defining the powers of the Senate, it gives the Senate the peculiar rights of the House of Commons, except the initiation of money grants, and while I am a member of this House, I shall adhere to them until it is made clear and distinct, we do not possess them. We certainly represent the people to a certain extent, and I think it is a matter of importance to this body that it should so act as to maintain the confidence of the country. We were described by a gentleman who was afterwards a Minister of the crown, though not a Minister now, as “ an effete body,” and described by another gentleman who is now a Minister of the crown in language which I will not repeat here. I feel that the country and this House are indebted to the mover of this resolution for the great amount of care, time and trouble he has taken in collating the Public Accounts. I do not look upon it as a political movement in any sense, but as bringing before the public in a clear and distinct tabulated form, taken from the accounts rendered by the Government, a comparative statement as to the state of the expenditure in each year from 1872-3 to 1877. If these things tell against the Government of the day my hon. friend is not to blame for that. I cannot be put down as taking any particular part one way or the other. I have endeavored to exercise my judgment on all matters brought before the House, whether by this Government or their predecessors and come to a just conclusion upon them. When matters connected with the financial and fiscal affairs of the Dominion were introduced by the late Government, I think I invariably gave them my support. They were measures that commended themselves to my judgment as in the interest of the country. The first financial measure brought in by this Government was, in my opinion, a retrograde movement. It restricted the right of giving to the people their own legal tender notes. I may say, so far as the fiscal management of the present Government is concerned, I differ in toto from the opinions expressed by the Finance Minister in his financial statement made in another place. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, thought we had travelled out of the record in referring to matters that had occurred elsewhere when he himself referred to the speech delivered by the Finance Minister. I do not know that what is done in the House of Commons is a precedent for us, but I will just refer him to the same speech. In his remarks on moving that the House go into Committee of Supply, he refers to the picnic speeches made by Sir John Macdonald, in these words :—

“ Now, without desiring to stir up unnecessary controversy, I think it is as well the House should understand clearly and distinctly what that issue is, and how violently our policy and that of the hon. gentlemen opposite is contrasted in this matter. I find Sir that the hon. leader of the opposition a few months ago in discanting upon this question made use of the following words, 'Gentlemen you know that Canada from East to West lies within the same degree of latitude and does not produce a great variety of crops. From the Atlantic to the Pacific the country is subject to the same climatic influences, but the United States extending from the Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico possesses a variety of climate. In Canada however, if by an unfavourable season the crops are scanty, we are without such resources, and the farmers of the United States pour in their produce upon us, and we are defenceless.' We allow you to send the products of your country into our markets, let us have the same privilege, and send ours to your own. The Finance Minister says 'that is the policy of the opposition' which has been endorsed by at least any rate by the Ontario representatives of that party. Their programme reads as follows: 1st. We are satisfied that the welfare of Canada requires the adoption of a National Policy, which by a judicious readjustment of the tariff will benefit and foster the agricultural, the mining and the manufacturing interests of the Dominion. 2nd. But no such readjustment will be satisfactory to the interests affected or to the country if adopted as a provisional measure only, to meet a temporary exigency, or to supply a temporary deficit, nor unless it is carried out as a National Policy and not until reciprocal trade is carried out by our neighbors. 3rd. Canada should move in the direction of a reciprocity of tariffs so far as her various interests may demand."

The Finance Minister proceeds:

"Now my object at present is neither to comment on this remarkable speech, nor on these remarkable resolutions but to draw your attention to the fact, that they involve an absolute contradiction of the policy laid down by this Government."

If the Finance Minister can refer to picnic speeches, made in travelling through the country, I think we may be pardoned if we refer also to matters of that sort in the Senate. I am prepared to stand by the opinions expressed in that picnic speech and in those resolutions; and I believe, and always have expressed the opinion since I first took a seat in this House, that such a policy will give the people of this country the best means of rising from their present depression, and developing the vast resources of this Dominion, and bring about the equilibrium between income and expenditure. The hon. Secretary of State asked, "What can the Government do?" He said the legislation of this Dominion cannot interfere with foreign countries, that is entirely beyond our reach. Admitting that—though I do not admit it to the full extent—if the previous or present Government had carried out the recommendation of the Commission sent to the West Indies, Brazil, and other countries, to open up a reciprocal trade between them and Canada, anyone can see, by reading that report, that we could readily export a large quantity of the products and manufactures of this Dominion to those countries quite as cheaply and well as the United States do. We could have had those markets if we were prepared to legislate in such a way as to give them similar advantages in Canada. But what is the state of our tariff now? Upon the products of those countries is imposed duties ranging from 40 to 50 per cent. That may be looked upon as a startling statement, and they are imposed upon the products of tropical countries, which we cannot produce at home, but for which we might exchange many of our own products under a wise fiscal policy. Those duties are as much direct taxes as if the tax-gatherer called from door to door. I would rather impose a larger duty on cloths, silks and cotton goods, than upon tea, sugar, and molasses. I shall not go into figures generally; they have been discussed sufficiently already, but I will just refer to my own Province and give you the returns since Confederation, of the revenue, and the cost of collecting it in New Brunswick. I find in the Journals of the House of Assembly for 1867 the amount of goods imported into New Brunswick in 1866, paying customs duties amounting to $10,704,000; and I have made up a statement of the imports of 1872 and subsequent years:—

Year.	Imports.	Revenue Collected.	Cost of Collection.
1866.....	$10,033,609	$1,033,609	$28,006
1872.....		1,222,838	64,109
1873.....		1,246,238	73,353
1874.....		1,400,007	86,908
1875.....		1,371,045	94,716
1876.....		1,043,915	93,457
1877.....	6,926,896	1,091,018	96,171

Last year the imports had fallen to $6,926,826, being almost $3,000,000 less than they were in 1866, the year prior to Confederation, and the revenue was little more than it was in that year, although the duties were largely increased, and the cost of collecting it had run up from $28,000 to $96,000. Prior to Confederation we had no Excise Department. The Excise duties were collected by the Customs officers. Last year the revenue from Excise in New Brunswick was $251,428, and the cost of collection was $8,927, so that in reality the cost of collecting the revenue in New Brunswick has run up from $28,000 to more than $106,000.

There has been a steady increase in expenditure since Confederation, and more particularly so since the present Government came into power. I must say it is possible that the same increase will apply to other Departments as well as to the Customs, but I have not looked into them. I do not wish to be the apologist of the previous Government, but it makes a wonderful difference when year after there is a surplus revenue, as it then was, or an annual deficit, as it now is. We know in 1867 there was a strong disposition on the part of the Senate to reduce expenses. I must say I opposed the mode adopted as I thought it was inconsiderate that the old officers who had been a long time connected with the Public Service should have their salaries cut down, but that the reduction ought to take place as the positions became vacant through death, or otherwise. In the meantime, the days of prosperity came; the cost of living was increased; there was a surplus revenue coming in, and there was a disposition to put the officials back to where they were before the reduction took place. While opposed to extravagance and waste,

Hon. Mr. Wilmot.

I do not believe in parsimony, or cheese-paring, or candle-end savings. I want to give people what they are fairly entitled to for their services, but I am opposed to the extravagance of creating offices, simply for the purpose of giving patronage. With regard to the Weights and Measures Act, it appeared to me it was put in force more because the Government wanted to bestow patronage than from any desire the country expressed to have it.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—The Excise Department might be done away with altogether.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I don't think so. We have no distilleries in New Brunswick, and no very great number of breweries, but in Ontario and Quebec, liquors are manufactured to a large extent.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—In New Brunswick we collected the same duties, before Confederation, without excise.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I stated that. With regard to the increase of our debt, I have expressed my opinion upon that subject repeatedly. While this country has great resources which are capable of great development, under wise statesmanship, I do not like this large increase of debt, being principally for money borrowed from abroad, the interest for which goes out of the country. Under the present fiscal management we must come to a standstill, for we cannot keep on borrowing money for unproductive works without causing embarrassment. A great portion of our debt, as a matter of course, is caused by the construction of the Pacific Railway. I should like to use the gold of the Pacific Province to sustain our circulation, and give in exchange for it our Dominion notes. I have heard complaints from British Columbia representatives of the scarcity of Dominion notes in that province. I assert that the realized and invested capital of this country is sufficient of itself to maintain four times as many Dominion legal tender notes as are now in circulation. They are of equal value from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia, and they answer all the purposes necessary to exchange the values produced by the productive labor of the country. With regard to the construction of the Pacific Railway, I perfectly recollect what the opinions of the hon. Senator from Saugeen were when the matter first came before the Senate. He said :

“ If the railways of the United States are built up to the boundaries of the North-West Territories, as they will be very soon, why not avail ourselves of the facilities they will afford, proceed westward, and open up the North-West, and leave the costly portions of the line to be built in the future when our circumstances will permit.”

I had the honor of seconding, two sessions afterwards (in 1873 I think it was) the resolutions brought forward by the hon. Senator from Saugeen relative to the Pacific Railway, and he expressed those opinions throughout, and has always recommended prudence in regard to the mode of constructing it. We were told when the present Government came into power, that the work was to be carried on in the most economical way, that the water-stretches were to be utilized. Where are they now? They seem to have gone off in mist. We know a very large amount of money has been expended in that very country where my hon. friend suggested the construction of the road should not be undertaken (viz., on the north side of Lake Superior) until the finances of the country were in such a state as to warrant the expenditure. There was no pressing necessity for it, but the work was pushed on, and we have added very largely to our debt in consequence without any possible practical result. My hon. friend the Secretary of State has announced that the Government cannot interfere with foreign trade—that they cannot legislate for foreign countries and that they must wait Micawber-like for something to turn up. He declares they cannot do anything to encourage the domestic manufactures of the Dominion, but that we must allow the Americans to supply us with $51,000,000 worth of goods, three-fourths of which, I believe, we could produce and manufacture for ourselves, and that we must either find some other means of employing our people or send them away. The returns show that immigration is falling off, while a very large number of our productive laborers are going to the United States to produce articles for us that we should manufacture for ourselves. Yet the Government say they can do nothing. Under such circumstances I cannot be a supporter of a Government that actually acknowledge before the whole country they have got to drift along until something turns up.

Hon. Mr. Wilmot.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—It is time something did turn up and turn over.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—And turn out.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I am very much inclined to think that hundreds and thousands who thought as I did five years ago, will think as I do now, when the elections take place. I shall just read from an article in the Contemporary Review by J. H. Farrar, in which he makes the following pertinent remark, with regard to the state of agriculture in Great Britain, under a policy of free imports :

“ From the best procurable statistics it would appear that the production of meat and dairy produce at home have been stationary for twenty-five years, but the foreign supply has increased four-fold in quantity, and fifty per cent in value. Last year it reached £35,000,000, sterling. The consumption of wheat, per head of the population, is now 341 lbs ; of this 183 lbs. is foreign. In 1872, the supply from Canada and the United States fell off by one half, but France and Russia filled the void.”

I will now read from an article in Fraser's Magazine, by Jeffries, something as to French agriculture. He says :—

“ It has been estimated that the annual value of French agricultural products has increased in value, in the last twenty-five years £100,000,000, or $500,000,000.”

What a contrast in the two countries ! France has had the advantage of a full circulation of legal tender notes, issued solely by the Bank of France, the Governor and the Deputy Governor of which are appointed by the Government, and it is under its surveillance and control. France has never adopted the free import system. The treaty with England is about to expire, and is not to be renewed. A free import system is not one which a young county like Canada should adopt. I can only hope that something may turn up in some way by which the people of this country will understand their interests far better, than to support the financial and fiscal policy of the present Government.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I had no intention of speaking in this debate, because it seemed to be a matter of figures which the hon. gentleman who made the enquiry, and the hon. Secretary of State had tolerably exhausted, apart from other speakers who have given us a good deal of light on the subject; but the hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House has thrown what may be called side-lights on the question, and introduced matters of a different nature from those brought up by the subject of the enquiry. Among other things, he has diverged into the question of trade, and told us that he entirely approved of the policy of the late Government, and entirely disapproved of the policy of the present Administration as announced by the Finance Minister in the other House. I believe the hon. gentleman was in Parliament in 1868, and I should like him to tell us how he can reconcile the principles he has announced this afternoon with the expressions of satisfaction he has given us with the policy of the late Government in that particular, in that year. What he evidently aims at now is protection, amongst others, for the farmers. I have got in my hands a report of something that was said by the hon. leader of the Opposition in the other House, who was at that time leader of the Government, on the subject of duties on agricultural produce, and it may throw some light on past, if not on future history. There were duties on agricultural products at that time, and the Government took them off. Sir John Macdonald remarked "That the flour tax had been imposed as an assertion of the independence of the country against American exclusive legislation." It was, therefore, never thought that it could do anybody any pecuniary good. It was at most a demonstration. Perhaps that was a good thing in its way; but it turned out there were countervailing disadvantages which induced the Ministry to take off these duties. They were thus stated:—

"It had been found to work oppressively on certain sections of the country, and was now repealed as a step in the right direction."

This, then, was the agricultural policy of the late Government, of which my hon. friend approved then, and he will see that it was precisely the reverse of what he advocates now. To show that this was the view not only of Sir John Macdonald, but of other gentlemen of his party, I will quote the remarks of Hon. Mr. Pope, a gentleman who supported Sir John then, and was lately the seconder of the hon. gentleman's motion, intended to set out the virtues of protection. Mr. Gibbs had contended for the retention of the duties. Mr. Pope said, "His hon. friend, while avowing broad principles, had spoken like a sectional representative." His view was that which precisely suited the local interests of Western Canada, while the people of the Eastern Townships, whom he (Mr. Pope) represented, felt that, on this question, their interests were the same as those of Nova Scotia. He continued maintaining the inadvisability of attempting to subserve particular and local interests on protective principles, prejudicial to the general welfare. My hon. friend has alluded again to what he calls the West India trade, and has spoken of the admirable policy of the late Government.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—They did nothing.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I will show the hon. gentleman that they did something. I am rather pleased to have an opportunity of paying my tribute of praise to the late Government in this matter, because my hon. friend from Lunenburg has frequently alluded to this subject, and it is quite obvious to my mind that he, like others, sometimes forgets the past history of the country. This is what the late Government did about the sugar duties, while Sir John Rose was Minister of Finance. I quote from his speech, and it will be seen that he did not do nothing, as my hon. friend behind me asserts, but he reduced the protection previously existing. This is what he said:—

"They had taken into consideration the depression of the Nova Scotia coal trade and other branches of industry: but they had also looked upon the probable effect of any "special protection to those interests as calculated to defeat the prospect of the renewal of a reciprocity treaty."

I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that there was a depression in the coal trade at that time, as now, and to the manner in which the Government dealt with it. Now let us see about sugar. "The revision of the sugar duties was made with the special view of stimulating the West India trade." Hon. gentlemen now say it killed that trade; but if so, it was Sir John Macdonald's Government that did it. "The two great motives that had influenced the Government had been the interests of the revenue and the interests of the consumer." I want hon. gentlemen to notice that he cared nothing for the refiner. "Between these two was the intermediate interests of the refiners and the importers which had given all the trouble; but he was bound to consider them as secondary to that of the revenue and the consumer, keeping in view the great though subordinate interest for the encouragement of direct trade with the West Indies."

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Since that time the policy of the United States with regard to sugar has been changed.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Sir John Rose thought the reduction of the duties was a good thing for the people. He states distinctly that he does not care for the manufacturer at all, but for the revenue and the consumer. Now, no alteration in the sugar duties has taken place since that.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—I am very glad to see the hon. gentleman has respect for the opinions of statesmen who have ceased to take part in the politics of the country.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I always had respect for them when they advocated these views, and I am only sorry to see that some of them have changed their principles because they are out of office. With respect to the Weights and Measures Act, to which my hon. friend from Sunbury has alluded, I cannot say I am very much in love with it, and I dare say it has given some dissatisfaction. On the other hand, people who regard this matter from a scientific point of view believe it is necessary that such a law should be enforced for the sake of uniformity, and to prevent traders from cheating their customers by fraudulent measures. At all events, the late Government passed the Bill. But it is said, they did not put it in operation. Is anyone, however, to tell us, that the late Government were willing to stultify Parliament by asking them to pass an act which it was not intended they should put in operation? I cannot believe they seriously thought of passing an act unless they supposed it was necessary.

Hon. Mr. Penny.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—To be put in operation at the proper time.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I suppose such measures are not passed until circumstances required them.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—If we found a falling revenue we would not have put the Act in force.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—The revenue did not fall until the year afterwards. With regard to the Excise Department, I suppose my hon. friend from Sunbury admits that it was in existence long before this Government came into existence.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I admit that. I was only comparing the cost of collecting the revenue in New Brunswick since Confederation with the cost in 1866.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I quite understand; he admits the expense was increased by the late Government, and he comes to the conclusion, therefore, that he cannot support the present Administration. Amongst other things my hon. friend thinks it would be a very brilliant policy of this Government to find employment for everybody. Now, there was a Government which once attempted to carry out such a policy—the Communist Government that succeeded Louis Philippe. They established the Ateliers Nationaux, and we all know what became of that.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—The hon. gentleman should not draw the inference from what I said that I am in favor of Communism. I contend that the Government should adopt such a policy as will encourage industries that will give employment to our people.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—We will not quarrel about names. As soon as he begins to undertake to find employment for the people, he comes very near, indeed, to Communism.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Nobody suggested anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I think when it is urged that the Government should find employment for the people, it is Communism. That is the leading idea of the Communists, and it was on that idea that the ateliers nationaux were logically set up.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Will the hon. gentleman say when the Government hold out inducements for immigrants to come here, they should not see there is employment for them?

Hon. Mr. PENNY—The Government simply seeks to get people to do the work; that is quite a different thing from pledging itself to find work for the people.

Hon. Mr. READ—Does the hon. gentleman think it is not the duty of the Government to furnish employment for its people by wise legislation?

Hon. Mr. PENNY—No. I think it is the duty of the Government to protect every man from fraud and violence in the free exercise of the faculties God has given him; and let him get his own living in his own way. "Root hog, or die" is my policy.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—You would provide him the pasture to root in?

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I would provide nothing. If he does not like the country he can go somewhere else. There are but two principles to choose between—either to let the people find their own work, or adopt a policy which at last leads to the establishment of the ateliers nationaux.

Hon. Mr. READ—I think you are a good exponent of the Government.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—The hon. gentleman does me much honor, but I may say I am just now also an exponent of the Government that preceded this. The hon. Senator from Sunbury read extracts from two articles, which he seemed to think supported his view that things were going to the bad in England as fast as they could, while in France, his favorite country, everything was prosperous. I believe that in France, affairs are very promising, its people are very thrifty. They make money, and they save their money; but when the hon. gentleman tells us what an enormous quantity of provisions England imported in consequence of her free trade policy, I would like to ask him what the people would have done if they had not been able to procure those provisions?

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I have not the slightest hesitation in saying, they would not have got them but for the free trade policy of England. What strikes me as an apparent paradox, and altogether inexplicable, is the great importance the hon. gentleman attaches to agriculture in France and England, and the very little he attaches to it here. He says England imports agricultural products, therefore she is not prosperous; France exports agricultural products, therefore she is prosperous; and then he turns round and wants to divert the people from raising agricultural products in Canada in order to produce cotton goods and other manufactures. He seems to think what is very good in other countries is very bad here. My own impression is not that there is any special merit in any one branch of industry, but that they depend for their success, first on the natural resources of the country, and then on the peculiar genius of the people. We know that an agricultural population is healthy and sound; whereas a manufacturing population is a sickly one, which in the many crises that occur in the course of public affairs, often becomes a starving population. I wish I had an extract I found in Mrs. Senior's account of a conversation between her late husband and Mr. Guizot. I would like to quote the words of Mr. Guizot, but I shall give their sense as well as I can. He remarked that between the place where he lived and another town, there were two communes, one a manufacturing, the other an agricultural commune. The same number of conscripts were drawn from each. In the agricultural commune, only 14 out of every 100 were rejected for want of physical force; in the other 48 out of every 100 were rejected. I do not think it is the duty of the Government to direct people to be agriculturists, manufacturers, or anything else. That depends, as I have said, upon the resources of the country and the idiosyncrasies of the people, but if we were to make a choice, give me an agricultural people.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I explained that France under one policy, increased her agricultural productions £100,000,000 in twenty-five years, while Great Britain under a different policy, had stood still.

Hon. Mr. WARK—I think my hon. friend from New Brunswick scarcely studies the interests of that Province when he advocates a protective policy.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I have done it before, down there.

Hon. Mr. WARK—I am aware of that. I would like to know what interest in New Brunswick is going to gain by a protectionist policy? What are our farmers to gain by it?

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I am a farmer myself.

Hon. Mr. WARK—What have our shipbuilders to gain by it? One ship yard is of more value as a market to the farmers around it than any factory that could be introduced into the country. I can tell the hon. gentleman that one of our large saw mills gives more employment to the people, and a larger market for the agricultural products raised in the neighborhood than any of our factories. I can tell him more; our manufacturers have been more prosperous than perhaps any other class of people we have engaged in business in the Province. There have been less failures among them; there has been more profit in their business; their employes are better paid, and have constant employment; whereas our poor lumbermen, with all the fatigue they are exposed to, with all the hardships of wading through snow in winter, and plunging into the stream in spring, to bring down their logs—men who toil like slaves, and are very often thrown out of employment, while the employes of the manufacturers are comfortably housed in summer and winter. Are these the men whose wages the hon. gentlemen wants to raise?

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—No.

Hon. Mr. WARK—Then he only wants to put the money into the pockets of the manufacturers themselves.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—The hon. gentleman knows very well I fought those battles in New Brunswick thirty years ago, and in every instance where we protected the manufacturers the products were cheaper to the consumer.

Hon. Mr. Penny.

Hon. Mr. WARK—The object of these manufacturers in coming here for increased duties is either to enrich themselves, or to enable them to give higher wages to their employes, and I observe they have more profits in their business now than any other class of our business people. Certainly any protection that is given them must lay additional burdens on the hard working classes whom I have referred to—our ship-carpenters, our lumbermen, our fishermen, and all those classes who cannot be protected and who must bear the burden if additional taxes are laid on the products they consume. I had no intention of referring to this subject at all if the hon. gentleman had not introduced it, but I thought he was not representing the feeling of the people of New Brunswick, and I must enter my protest against his utterances on the question. His peculiar views on currency we have often heard. I do not intend to refer to them at all. He approves of the railway policy recommended by the hon. gentleman from Saugeen, which is to utilize the American railways from Ontario to Pembina, and then to commence to construct a railway across our prairies, in the first interest; I then recommended the same course? But there is one remarkable fact that after that year the hon. gentleman (Mr. Macpherson) was silent on the subject. He became the President of the Inter-oceanic Railway Company, and he did not say one word about his policy of utilizing the American roads. His policy then was to build a railway from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean. But to come to the subject under discussion, there is something novel in the course which is now adopted in this House. I do not think there can be a precedent found for it in our old Legislative Council, and it is only lately it has been introduced. If the public expenditures are to be investigated in this House, as they are before the Committee of Public Accounts in the House of Commons, then the best and fairest, and the only proper way will be to appoint a committee here to examine all those matters, item by item, to call upon the heads or deputy heads of Departments, or whoever may be best qualified to give explanations on these subjects, to appear before the Committee and give evidence. They can then weigh these matters, and if they find anything wrong in the expenditure or in the appropriation of public money, or in the way these appropriations are expended, let them report it, but let the Government have an opportunity to explain every charge made against them and to refute it. With regard to the pamphlet of the hon. Senator from Sauguen, that was sent throughout the country, if this course that I am speaking of were adopted that pamphlet would never have gone abroad as it did. The hon. the Secretary of State gave to that subject as satisfactory a reply as I ever listened to.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WARK—The hon. member said his figures were correct. So they were, but the deductions drawn from them were incorrect. He said that the public expenditure was much higher in 1874-5 than it was in 1872-3. That was admitted, but does the fault lie at the door of the present Government, or the last? If new appointments were made in 1873, the salaries were not paid in that year; perhaps only half the year's salary was paid in 1874, and a whole year's would be paid in 1875. If such an expenditure as that were incurred in 1873, before the late Government went out, they were chargeable with that increase, although the next Government had to pay it. If in consequence of the legislation of the Provinces, establishing new Courts, it became necessary to appoint new Judges and pay their salaries, it cannot be said that this Government is responsible for that. If they found new appointments had been made before they came into office, would the hon. gentleman suggest to them to cancel those appointments and to turn the officials out of office? If the salaries were increased by the late Government, does the hon. gentleman suggest they should have been reduced? If he does not, then he has no right to charge the expenditure under those heads to the present Government. There was another class of salaries which increased—those which came under the law requiring that certain salaries shall be increased after certain periods of service. He would not have the law repealed, and yet this is added to the expenditure of the Government. Then there is another expenditure which the hon. the Secretary of State explained very satisfactorily. A loan was contracted just before the late Government went out of office. Surely, the hon. gentleman would not repudiate the interest on that. Works were undertaken, for the prosecution of which money had to be borrowed, and interest had to be paid on these loans; yet, the hon. gentleman went on and charged the Government with the whole of this increase. There is one subject which has been before this House so frequently, that it is a wonder it is not dropped. I refer to the subject of steel rails.

Hon. Mr. Wark.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WARK—Now, I never have opened my lips on the subject, but I have taken some pains to inquire into it. The contracts for those rails were made in 1875, extending over two years, yet hon. gentlemen have spoken on these steel rails as if they were articles that a merchant could cross to England, charter a ship and be able to purchase a cargo of as easily as he could procure a cargo of common sizes of iron bars. Steel rails are not manufactured at all until there is a contract for them. How long did the contract for the rails for the Intercolonial Railway run? Nobody ever found fault with the late Government when they made the contract for rails for that road. The delivery of those rails commenced in 1871, and the whole of them were not delivered until 1875, so that the delivery extended over four years. There was generally a considerable quantity of those rails on hand, yet nobody ever charged the Government with anything improper, in having those rails ready on this side of the water, to be used when required. There were bridges, too. There was a bridge at the Miramichi River, which weighed 327 tons, and that bridge lay there two and a half years before it was used. There was one thing connected with that bridge which I think some of my hon. friends might call "a job." There was a piece of ground appropriated for the storage of the Miramichi bridge, for which the Government paid $2,000. It appears they made no arrangements, because they could have rented a piece of ground for $100, but they left it on some man's land; and when they came to take it away they had to pay no less than $2,000 for the use of the property. There was another bridge at Restigouche, which lay two and a quarter years before it was used; it weighed 322 tons, and there were expenses connected with it that were somewhat extraordinary. I am showing now that the contracts the late Government entered into for their rails were for 44,000 tons. Nobody ever found fault with them, although they had rails lying, sometimes a year ahead of the time they were required, and nobody ever made calculations to show how much the country was losing by it. There were no less than thirty-five iron bridges stored in England, contracted for, paid for, and ready for delivery. If the present Government were to do such things as these they would be censured very severely for them. Was it unreasonable that the present Government should enter into a contract for about the same quantity of rails for this great Pacific Railway, when we take into account the length of time it takes to manufacture such a quantity? It is no light work to turn out one hundred tons a week, and that would be only a little more than five thousand tons a year. The contracts were as follow:

Guest & Co. . . . .	10,000 Tons at $54 and $55.24
Ebbw Vale Co . . . . .	5,000 " 53 53
Mersey Co. . . . .	25,000 " 54 26
West Cumberland Co. . . . .	5,000 " 53 53
West Cumberland Co. . . . .	5,000 " 48 67 F.O.B.
Naylor, Benson & Co. . . . .	5,000 " 51 10 F.O.B.

The first four contracts, amounting to 40,000 tons, were delivered in Montreal without cost of any kind. The freight and insurance were paid, and the rails were delivered on the wharf in Montreal. Let us see what the late Government were paying for rails just before that. Hawes & Company, of Liverpool, were employed to send out rails: 2,200 tons in 1873, and 3,600 in 1874; the prices were £16 12s. Od., and £17 10s. Od. in England—an average of £17 a ton. The freight and other charges amounted to £1 12s. Od., making the cost £18 12s. Od., or $90 per ton.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WARK—This was the price the late Government were paying for rails just before the present Government came into office. When we take into account that it was intended to commence the construction of the Pacific Railway at both ends simultaneously, and that part of those rails had to go round by way of Cape Horn to British Columbia, a dangerous voyage, we can understand the necessity of forwarding a cargo in good time. Those rails had to be shipped at the season of the year when the voyage would be safe. Would it have been prudent to have waited even until the grading of the road was commenced, before those rails were shipped? They required to be on the ground so that they could be laid as the work on the road advanced, in order to carry in the necessary materials and supplies. That is, if the work was given out prudently. I am not speaking now of the Esquimalt & Nanaimo road, but of what was originally intended to be commenced on the mainland and at Lake Superior. The nearest point at which the rails could be delivered for the Lake Superior section, after they were landed at Montreal, was at Thunder Bay. If the Government had succeeded in their original intention of running the road by Sturgeon Falls, commencing at Rat Portage, at the other end, and building westward, the rails could have been sent along the line as fast as constructed, to Sturgeon Falls, and then, for the western contract, taken by water to Rat Portage, and laid from that point westward, as the road was graded. That would have been the cheapest way to go about the work. Otherwise they would have had to land the rails at Duluth, and carry them by rail to Red River, thence to the west end of the section between Selkirk and Rat Portage, now under construction. A portion of the rails was taken to construct the Pembina Branch, as recommended by the hon. Senator from Saugeen, and, considering the distance they had to be carried, the Government were fully justified in making the contract at the time they did. I think they would have acted quite imprudently if they had done otherwise. It is true they have met with great disappointments. No one could have expected, when the country was pledged to the building of the line in ten years, that it would have taken so long to make the surveys. Large surveying parties had been employed, before the present Government came into office, seeking for a road, and they have been kept employed ever since, yet no line has been determined upon through British Columbia. I have shown that the late Government was paying ninety dollars per ton for rails at the time the present Government came into power. I have shown that the present Government made this contract when it was the opinion of those engaged in the trade at that time, that the price of rails had touched bottom. They were lower than they had ever been before, or could have been expected to go. They were getting them for thirty-six dollars a ton less than the late Government had been paying. The subject of the Fort Francis Lock has also been before the House. It appears to me that when the survey was commenced at Red River westward to Rat Portage, and a favorable line was found there, and when another line was surveyed from Thunder Bay to Sturgeon Falls, it was found practicable, there was not any doubt on the engineer's mind that those two lines could be connected. That was a natural expectation, and, if it could have been realized, no more judicious expenditure could have been incurred than to have endeavored to connect those two points by water—the only obstruction in the water connection being at St. Francis Falls. I admit it was most unfortunate that the original plan could not be carried out, but still I cannot see that the Government should be blamed for it. Then, as for going on with the expenditure after they found the two sections could not be connected by water, we must remember that there is a considerable quantity of good land and a large amount of lumber in that country. The lumber cannot be taken out without giving an impetus to agriculture. I think there is no want which will be more felt in the prairie country by and by than the supply of lumber, and I think the Government were justified in making this improvement with a view to furnishing a means of taking out the supply of lumber from Rainy Lake. There will be mills on all the streams falling into that lake, and barges will be employed to carry the lumber to Rat Portage, where it can be put on the cars and shipped to Manitoba. I think they would have been very foolish to have abandoned this work after having expended so much upon it. If there is to be a large lumbering population there, they must be supplied with hay, oats, and other agricultural products; and the best place to raise such supplies is near where they are required. There have been very severe remarks made about a small affair—the Suspense Account. Mr. Brydges had agreed, when he undertook the superintendence of the Intercolonial Railway, that twenty miles or so of track should be replaced with steel rails every year. There is no doubt he expected there would be something left from the earnings of that road at that time, and that he intended to expend it renewing the track in order to fit it for the traffic that was expected. If the country had been paying for those rails out of the earnings of the road, Mr. Brydges, no doubt, would have imported the rails just as they were wanted, but, finding a quantity of rails on hand that were not to be immediately used, he laid down more than was at first intended—$534,000 worth. In pursuance of the course which he considered as common with railway companies, he charged a certain amount to the Suspense Account. Instead of charging the road at once with $534,000, and showing a large expenditure over its earnings, he charges $200,000 for the present, and the balance to the Suspense Account, with the intention of charging half of it the next year and half the following year. There is nothing of dishonesty about it and nothing deserving of censure. There is also a mistaken impression about the Pictou Branch. My hon. friend who brought forward this matter says there was an existing bargain by which the road was given away. There is a misapprehension there. There was an arrangement formerly between the Nova Scotia Government and a private company to build a road to the Straits of Canso, and they were most anxious to let the contract on the consideration that the Pictou Road be given to the company. My hon. friend opposite from Cape Breton learned there was a person in England who said he was going to build to Louisbourg, and he protested against giving the road to the company, who were willing to build only to the Gut of Canso and the matter dropped. The Pictou Branch was still in the possession of the Government, and I dare say when the Superintendent undertook to lay the steel rails upon it, he never supposed that it would be parted with. But in order to get the road to the Straits, opposition was withdrawn to transferring the Pictou Branch. Negotiations were renewed, and in the meantime steel rails had been laid on the road and could not be taken up. That was the history of the Pictou Branch transfer. It was not done until the whole of the first arrangement had fallen through, and perhaps it was never expected to be revived again. I was surprised at the hon. gentleman from Kingston complaining of commencing that little branch for which the late Mr. Foster was contractor without any survey, for he himself or the Government to which he belonged, gave a contract for a line from Lake Nipissing to the Pacific Ocean without any survey. I think this is a very trifling thing compared with the bargains the late Government made on that occasion, without ever knowing what route was to be taken. The hon. gentleman complained the other day of building one hundred and fourteen miles of road to end nowhere, but I would like to know what he thinks about the scheme of the late Government, which was to start at Nipissing and build hundreds of miles before they would come to any place. After having built seven or eight hundred miles they still would have been nowhere. Although the great undertaking was contracted for without any survey yet the hon. gentleman complains because this Government made a contract for the Georgian Bay Branch without a survey. But the most unkind cut of all was the reference by the leader of the Opposition to the Esquimaux and Nanaimo Railway, after the generous way in which the hon. Senators from British Columbia have always stood by the hon. Senator from Kingston. That road was to favor the people of British Columbia, when it was found that the original contract of the late Government could not be undertaken at the time promised. It was intended when the road was built through to connect sections with the road on the main line, and the hon. gentlemen from British Columbia no doubt considered it was only a small instalment of what they were entitled to. There was a good deal said about not throwing the responsibility on the engineer and about the Government shirking the responsibility. I will take an opportunity at another time of showing the effect of not taking the advice of the engineer.

Hon. Mr. Wark.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I did not intend to say one word on this subject, because it was well debated by gentlemen who preceded me, but I could not refrain, after hearing the hon. gentleman who has resumed his seat, attempting to fasten on the hon. Senator from Sunbury the charge of advocating something which I do not think he did advocate, that is, absolute protection. As that hon. gentleman said, and as I understood it, his object is not mere protection, but is as the hon. Sir John Macdonald has fairly placed it before the country, in the following resolution,—fair play for our native industries:—

“That it be resolved that this House is of opinion that the welfare of Canada requires a national policy, which by a judicial readjustment of the Tariff will benefit and foster the agricultural, the mining, the manufacturing, and other interests of the Dominion. That such a policy will retain in Canada thousands of our fellow countrymen, now obliged to expatriate themselves in search of the employment denied them at home; will restore prosperity to our struggling industries, now so sadly depressed; will prevent Canada from being made a sacrifice market; will encourage and develop an active inter-provincial trade—and moving (as it ought to do) in the direction of reciprocity of tariffs with our neighbors—so far as the varied interests of Canada may demand—will greatly tend to procure for this country, eventually a reciprocity of trade.”

What we want is that certain duties may be altered, which will relieve our trade and commerce from unfair competition: which will admit articles entering largely into the construction of ships more cheaply than they are now admitted, and which will not require us to pay, as we are now paying, two hundred per cent. more duty on some articles than we ever paid before entering into the Confederation. Protection is not our object. I think any gentleman who makes it his business to look into the matter will be satisfied that the present tariff compels the people of New Brunswick to pay uniform duty of thirty per cent. New Brunswick requires no more protection, but she does require, and I hold Sir John Macdonald will accomplish it if he should.

be restored to power, a revision of the tariff, which will be satisfactory to us. I have always contended, since first I came into this House, that the tariff was wrong, so far as New Brunswick was concerned, and the party which proposes reformation in it will be triumphantly returned by the people of that Province. We have pointed repeatedly to the fact that great injustice is being done us under the present tariff, yet the Government will give us no redress. Is it any wonder that the people of New Brunswick, who simply desire fair legislation, and who have demanded this reformation of the tariff, are disappointed when justice is not done them. I have read Sir John Macdonald's resolution, and while I wish it to be plainly understood that the people of New Brunswick are not protectionists, they can fairly support the policy announced in this resolution. And that is the only protection I understood my hon. friend from Sunbury to argue in favor of. It certainly is the sort of protection I intend to support.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has felt the necessity of protesting against the assertions of an hon. gentleman from his Province. I think it is the duty of some member of this House, belonging to the Province of Quebec, to do the same concerning the extraordinary assertions which fell from the hon. Senator from Montreal, (Mr. Penny.) He said that the obligation of the Government to find employment for the people, was a Communist doctrine.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Yes, in principle.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—That seems to me very strange. Of course we are accustomed to hear very extraordinary things from the hon. gentleman. But I could not believe he would go so far as this. According to this doctrine, the old king of France, who pretended to govern his kingdom so well that he would reach a point where every inhabitant of the land would have chicken on his table every day (la poule au pot) had Communist views, for looking after the wants of his people. I contend it is the duty of the Government to adopt such a policy, in a time of depression, as will protect the industries of the country and promote their prosperity. Is it not the duty of the Government, when an industry is depressed, to give it protection?

Hon. Mr. Dever.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I would reply in the words of the merchants who had been asked by Colbert what he could do for them. Their reply was, "Laissez nous faire," (let us alone.)

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—That would do if we were on a fair and equal footing with our neighbors. I contend the Government which does not understand that it is its duty to protect the various industries of the country does not know its duty to the people. The hon. gentleman has sought to prove inconsistency between the policy advocated now by the leaders of the Opposition, and their declarations in 1868. In matters of fiscal policy there is no absolute principle; a proposition that may be right to-day may be wrong to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—When you are out of power I know it is different.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—Not at all. I will furnish an illustration to show it is the case. Canada does not produce sugar at present, so there is no necessity for us to have a fiscal policy to protect the production of raw sugar. It is hoped in a few years the beet-root sugar industry will be so established in this country as to become of considerable importance. Say ten years hence it reaches that point, I contend it might then require some protection, because it would be a product of the country. Will the hon. gentleman contend that to ask for protective duties on foreign sugar then will be in contradiction to our present demand to admit sugar free of duty? Will it not be the same policy? The hon. gentleman will hardly attempt to contradict that; and the reason of this is that the conditions will have changed. The hon. Senator quoted from the remarks of members of the Government who were in power in 1868, but he forgets that during the whole period from 1868 to 1873, this country was enjoying great prosperity. The manufacturers, at that time, required no more protection, and it is a fact which cannot be disputed, that with a lower tariff than we have now, they were in reality better protected. Therefore, I repeat, there is no absolute principle in matters of fiscal policy. And the policy which was right in 1868 may not be right in 1878. The hon. gentleman's reply is no answer at all to the position the leaders of the Conservative party take upon this question to-day.

Hon. Mr. McCLELAN—I rise to make a few observations on the anomalous position of the hon. gentlemen from New Brunswick, who have spoken on the question of trade and commerce. My hon. friend from Sunbury advocates the policy announced by the leader of the Opposition in the other House, because he is a Protectionist. My hon. friend from St. John advocates and supports the same policy, because he is a Free-trader. This is a rather curious state of things. It does appear to me, from the expressions of these hon. gentlemen, that the resolution of the leader of the Opposition is intended to be applied in different ways,—in fact any way to bring about the one great object they have in view, and that is, to create the stream of public opinion, which some hon. gentleman on the other side of the House said was calculated, when taken at the flood, to restore their party to power. My own opinion is, so far as protection is concerned, and so far as imposing more taxes on the people is concerned, they will not be inclined to join with this stream of public opinion. I do not believe such a stream of public opinion exists, and I do not think this resolution will influence public opinion anywhere throughout the Dominion. The proper trade policy is that which can be adhered to consistently with raising enough revenue—that is, to keep the taxation upon the people as low as possible. A great deal of figures have been quoted, and, I think, we must conclude they can be made to mean very different things, according to the way they are used. The hon. gentleman who introduced this discussion has established, in his own estimation, one particular result, by drawing comparisons between particular years. The hon. Secretary of State, I think, very successfully drew another conclusion from figures perhaps more correct, and a comparison much more applicable. I have come to the conclusion that the great pyramid of figures which my hon. friend from Saugeen has erected stands in an inverted position, and that they will not influence the stream of public opinion very much in the way of bringing about a change of Government. There seems to be drawn into the discussion something calculated to bring about that result throughout. I have been very much surprised to find subjects introduced foreign to the question at issue and in no way pertinent to this enquiry. Some of these subjects are being investigated by committees of this House. And since they have been referred to, I must express my opinion that, so far as those investigations have gone, the charges made here last year against the Government have not been sustained. It has been so with respect to the Fort Francis Lock, the Georgian Bay Branch contract, and the Kaministiquia Harbor. I believe it has been proved that the selection of a Pacific Railway terminus has been one, the propriety of which cannot be gainsaid. And I have a right to assume, when I find certain statements put forward by prominent members of this House have been proved erroneous, that every statement put forward in the same way will be found to have equally bad foundation, when subjected to a careful investigation. Therefore, I am very careful about placing much dependence upon such statements until the evidence is submitted with them. I am satisfied the people of this country are not to be deceived by any prima facie statements until they have an opportunity of thoroughly examining them. I am satisfied when all these charges come to be thoroughly sifted, the country will not feel itself justified in depriving the present Administration of power, and restoring to office those who have certainly been found chargeable with very serious blunders, and I might, perhaps, very properly use a much harsher expression.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—I would like to point out that the duties on spirits and tobacco have been largely increased by the present Administration; that the sugar duties are not so arranged as to promote our own industries. Surely, in these, and other respects, the tariff could be changed in a manner to make it more satisfactory to the people of New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I take it for granted, that all the hon. gentlemen who desire to speak on this notice have done so, and that I may now proceed to close the debate. It is almost unnecessary for me to say anything in the way of reply, because the hon. Senators from Kingston and Londonderry have answered so completely the hon. Secretary of State, and the hon. Senator from Lambton (Mr Brown) who came specially from Toronto to support the Government. The hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Senator from Lambton did not shake any of the statements which I presented to this House, either last Session or this, and my hon. friends showed this very conclusively. However, it is usual for the mover to close the debate, and I shall proceed to do so. I shall first say a few words in reply to the speech of the hon. Senator from Prince Edward Island, who spoke last night. He scarcely addressed himself to the subject before the House. His speech was more a lecture on the proprieties of the debate. He evidently intended to censure me for having occasionally interrupted the hon. the Secretary of State, while he was speaking. I should be sorry to be open to the charge of interrupting him for any object, except to obtain information, which, I am sure, the hon. Secretary of State was willing to communicate, and could better furnish than than at any other time. He did not complain of it; on the contrary, when the hon. Senator from Lambton called attention to it, he said he was glad to have had the questions asked. There are occasions when unless information is got at the moment it is not obtained at all. The hon. Senator from Prince Edward Island, as I have remarked, did not address himself to the question before the House, but said the smoothness with which the hon. Secretary of State discoursed upon the subject, and the length of his speech, convinced him that the Government were right, and the charges of extravagance and incapacity which I had brought against them were not well founded, not because the hon. Secretary of State had disproved any one of them, but because he had discoursed at great length and with great smoothness. The hon. Senator from Prince Edward Island stated what I think I should not omit to call attention to, because it had a semi-official ring. He said he understood that what was called the "missing link" in the Lake Superior section of the Pacific Railway was not to be proceeded with at present, owing to the state of the finances of the country. I have stated before, and I now repeat, that until that section is built all that is now being done on the two end sections will be useless. I think the House and the country have a right to expect that the Government will state expressly what their policy is in respect to that section of the Railway. If they do not intend to build that centre section, why proceed with the two ends? The more perishable portions of them will decay in the course of seven or eight years and unless the central section is completed they will not have been made use of. Before referring to the speech of the hon. Secretary of State, I shall make some remarks upon the subject of expenditure on immigration and correct the allegation of the hon. Minister of Agriculture. As I understood the Minister of Agriculture he denied the correctness of the statements which I submitted to the House this Session and last Session in respect to immigration, and the expenditure of the Immigration Department. Now, it would have been open to the hon. gentleman, if he had seen fit, to have questioned the basis on which I made my calculation, but when he went further and said that according to the basis chosen by myself, my calculations were inaccurate, he should have been very certain that he was borne out by the facts.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I never said the hon. gentleman's calculations were wrong. I stated he had a wrong basis for his calculations.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I understood the hon. gentleman to say the calculations were wrong and that the errors relating to his Department were indicative of errors in others of the statements which I submitted.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I said the statement of the hon. gentleman about immigration was entirely wrong and that it was due to the wrong basis on which he calculated.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Am I correct in saying that the hon. gentleman went further and stated the errors, which he alleged were in my statement, respecting immigration, were indicative of further errors in my statements?

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—If the hon. gentleman understood that, I am quite ready to say I had no intention of imputing anything else to the hon. gentleman than the fact that his basis of calculation was wrong.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—If the hon. gentleman thought my basis was wrong, he was perfectly justified in presenting his own view of it to the House. I shall now explain to the House what my basis was, and I think I shall be able to show that it was a fair and correct one. The hon. gentleman referred to my speech of last Session, and I don't think he acted with the strictest fairness. He referred partially to the statement in my speech of this Session, and then referred to my pamphlet, and alleged there were errors in the Immigration tables contained in it. My pamphlet contained nothing that I did not state in this House last Session, and that did not appear in the official report of the debates of the Senate. I contend, if there was anything wrong in my speech of last Session, it was the duty of the Minister of Agriculture to have pointed it out then. He heard me in the House, and he had an opportunity of reading what I said in the newspapers and in the Hansard. If it escaped his notice then, he should have given me notice that he would question it this Session. All my statements are strictly correct. For the years 1872-3, 1874-5, and 1875-6, I took the total expenditure of the Immigration Department, and showed on the face of my statement the amount charged on quarantine. I did not deduct it, but showed it that gentlemen might dispose of it as they saw fit. They might either deduct it or not. Any person who could apply the first three rules of arithmetic could tell what sum I divided per capita. My hon. friend opposite (Mr. Trudel) asked the hon. Minister of Agriculture whether I applied the same rule in comparing the expenditures of those three years—1872-3, 1874-5, and 1875-6. The hon. gentleman did not seem to understand what was quite plain, that he (Mr. Trudel) wanted to know whether I applied one rule to 1873 and another rule to 1875 and 1876. The hon. Minister of Agriculture would not give him an answer. I now tell him that I applied the same rule to all those years.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I said that.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I appeal to the hon. Senator from Montreal to say whether he understood that.

Hon. Mr. Pelletier.

Hon. Mr. TRUDEL—When the hon. Minister of Agriculture stated the expenditure was only $9 per head, while the hon. Senator from Saugeen made it $26 per head, I asked the hon. Minister whether the hon. Senator took the same basis of calculation. He did not answer. Perhaps I did not put my question in a proper way.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I applied the same rule to each of the three years. I included the charges for quarantine, because I considered them part of the ordinary immigration expenditure, and the amounts were very similar for each of those three years. They scarcely affect the comparison. But, when I came to 1877, and found an item of $44,598 for quarantine, and that nearly one-half of this sum was for small-pox quarantine in Keewatin, what did I do? Did I include this amount in the immigration expenditure, which I divided per capita, or did I include a part of it, as I might fairly have done? No. I struck out the whole amount.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I also struck out the loans to and cost of transporting Mennonites; I deducted from the gross expenditure of $354,000 for immigration and quarantine the sum of $144,000 including refunds, and it was the balance of $209,416 that I divided by the number of immigrants. It is stated on the face of the Public Accounts, that the amount chargeable to Immigration for 1877, was $229,653, but from that I deducted more than $20,000 before dividing the expenditure per capita.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—By what number of immigrants did you divide it?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I will come to that presently. I did not take even a part of the quarantine expenditure, as I might properly have done, and if I had adhered to the rule I followed, I would have done so, but I gave the Government the benefit of the whole of that expenditure. I state here that, in preparing statements which were necessarily in any respect estimates—there were very few such, two or three only—whenever I was in any doubt, I gave the present Government the benefit of that doubt. With respect to the number of immigrants, I stated last Session that I confined my comparison to those arriving by the St. Lawrence. I considered that the expenditure by this Department in Europe was made for the purpose of inducing immigrants to come to this country by our own route—the St. Lawrence—and by no other. If they came by any other route, we could not tell whether they came through the labors of our agents in Europe, and that directing them by the St. Lawrence was only secondary to directing them to Canada. I, therefore, took from the returns the whole number of immigrants who came by the St. Lawrence, and there again I was unduly liberal to the Government, because I not only included those who declared themselves to be intending settlers, but all those who came by the St. Lawrence, intending to go to the United States. I shall confine the rest of my remarks, as far as possible, to the immigration of 1877, which was what I submitted to the House this Session. I took as the number of immigrants who came by the St. Lawrence, 7,743. This includes those who intended to pass through as well as those who intended to settle in Canada. To have made an exact calculation of those who came to this country directed, I will assume, by the emigration agents in Europe, the number, instead of being 7,743, should have been 6,785, arrived at in this way:—

At Quebec.....	4,201
“ Halifax.....	930
“ St. John.....	141
“ Portland (Maine).....	1,513
	6,785

Now, instead of dividing the immigration expenditure by this number of 6,785, which would have been the strictly correct way of doing it, I gave the Government the benefit of the doubt, because I could not tell how many of those who came, intending to pass through, changed their minds and settled in the country, or of those who came with the intention of settling changed their minds and passed through, so I took the whole of the arrivals by the St. Lawrence, another instance of my giving the Government the benefit of the doubt. I think I must have made it perfectly clear to the House, and to the Minister of Agriculture, that there was not only no desire on my part to make the expenditure of this Department appear to yield a smaller return than it really did, but that on the contrary, wherever I could, I favoured the Government. Now, the hon. gentleman stated that I had improperly charged against the European agencies, the salaries of two agents who were employed in the United States. Now, I may state that there is nothing in the Public Accounts to show where those gentlemen were employed. I see it is stated in the report of the Minister of Agriculture that two men are employed in the United States. There is Mr. Lalime who received $3,897 last year, and Mr. Whiteford who received $2,763. I must say in passing, that Mr. Lalime's salary and travelling expenses seem very high indeed. There is no county judge in Ontario who has such a salary; some of the judges of the Superior Court in Quebec have smaller salaries, and the judges in the other Provinces receive smaller salaries than this emigration agent. The hon. Minister of Agriculture said, in reply to my hon. friend from Kingston, that these agents were not chiefly employed in inducing French Canadians to return to the country—that they were not employed chiefly in promoting the work of what is called repatriation. I shall read an extract from the report of the hon. Minister himself. This is what he says:—

“ There was in 1877 a considerable accession to the colonies of repatriated Canadians in Manitoba; 563 immigrants of this class came from the New England States during the year, against 361 the previous year, under the direction of Mr. Charles Lalime, Special Agent. Mr. Tetu, the agent at Dufferin, also reports the accession of considerable numbers from the Western States. The total number of immigrants of this class during the year, was 836. The Manitoba Colonization Society rendered valuable service in promoting the comfort and settlement of the immigrants after their arrival. These settlements appear to be successful, and there is prospect of their continued increase to the manifest advantage of the Province. * * * * * The agent reports the immigrants of Canadian origin from the Eastern United States, to be 398, and from the Western States, 273.”

You see, Mr. Lalime is here referred to as a “special agent.”

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—Special agent for what?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—To repatriate French Canadians.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—It does not state that in the report. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say the only Canadians in the United States are those of French origin?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The reference is evidently to French Canadians. See what Mr. Lalime says. He rather patronizes the Minister of Agriculture. His report is dated "Worcester, Mass., 31st December, 1877," and he says:—

"Sir,—I am happy, not only in my capacity of Immigration Agent, but also as a Canadian and a British subject, to see the favorable results of the policy of your Government on the subject of the migration of Canadians from the United States to Manitoba.

"My last year's report promised for this year an increase in the number of these immigrants.

"Thanks to the liberality of your department and to my repeated efforts, the number of 361 immigrants in 1876 has increased to that of 563 in 1877.

"I had to refuse a number of persons, who were desirous of emigrating, but had not the means of establishing themselves.

"One of the reasons, or one of the advantages, which decided a large number of persons to settle in Manitoba was the facility they had for starting early in spring, and making a rapid journey by rail to Fisher's Landing, in the State of Minnesota.

"The happy results we have hitherto obtained have not been gained without meeting with obstacles, many persons having great influence with Canadians who resided in the States. The whole of the Canadian press in New England, with the exception of the Travailleur of Worcester, and some discontented adventurers, who took advantage of my confidence on the occasion of my first journey to Manitoba, made occult and hidden efforts in opposition to the movement.

"I even encountered at a public meeting at Fall River a braggart whom I considered to have been hired to cast discredit on the Province.

"In my contest with him, and on five other occasions, I had the advantage of being able to refer to the distinguished testimony of the Reverend Fathers Lacombe and Fillion, of Manitoba.

"Among the difficulties which I had to overcome, were those caused by the unhappy and shameful efforts of some Canadians, one of whom was editor and proprietor of an unscrupulous and worthless newspaper. These people, for the sake of a small commission from certain railway companies in the south-west, sought to establish a current of emigration to Kansas. They related many stupid, unfavorable assertions, and in some places I had to devote several days to the counteracting of the effects of their false diatribes."

Don't the names in this report prove the object of the special agent?

Hon. Mr. Pelletier.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Does the hon. gentleman object to French Canadians?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—The instructions were not particularly to bring back French Canadians.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The reports indicate that that was their mission.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—When the name of Mr. Lalime was mentioned the other day, I said, "Oh, to bring back French Canadians?" and the hon. gentleman said "No." It now appears that was his mission.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—It does not appear to be by the report.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It does by the names mentioned in it.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—He was sent to bring back Canadians, and if he could get French Canadians there was no reason why he should reject them.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—That is quite right.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Mr. Whiteford, the other agent in the United States, says in his report from Detroit:—

"Being permitted to do so, I opened an office in Chicago, where I find more facilities for my work, being the centre of a greater number of railroads, still making Detroit my headquarters. I have since my nomination worked chiefly in Chicago and other cities in Illinois, Kankakee, Menteno, Bourbonnais, Gilman, Clinton, Assumption, generally on the lines of the Illinois Central, on both branches from Chicago to St. Louis, in the usual manner previously described.

In conclusion, Honourable Sir, I sincerely believe that I shall obtain satisfactory results from my journeys of this winter. I am not a stranger in the Western States; having during your predecessor's term of office acted as Agent to promote the return of the Canadians to Canada from States of the Union, I have become acquainted with the people and with the country, and know how and where to work to obtain the greatest results. I am pleased to notice that my mission under your predecessor has not been without results, as I have ascertained that the number of Canadians in the West has considerably decreased by this repatriation to Canada, which is still continuing."

There is not the slightest doubt as to what is meant there. I am quite as glad to see French Canadians as any other Canadians coming back. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell me that those agents can be of any use in the United States in inducing either Americans or immigrants from the United Kingdom who have settled in the United States, to come to this country? The thing is simply absurd. This House will agree with me that the services which they can render in that way must be altogether infinitesimal. It is perfectly well known that native Americans and others to whom I have referred know as much about Canada as any agents who can be sent to them. If they have gone to the United States from Europe it is with the intention of remaining there. Let us see what the two agents in the United States have accomplished in the way of repatriating Canadians, of French and English origin. Mr. Lalime says he induced 563 to emigrate from the Eastern States, and there entered from the Western States 361, altogether 924. There is a slight discrepancy between this and the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, who puts it at 826. I presume he has given the correct number. The salaries of those two agents together come to $6,661, and the number of immigrants which they induced to come to Canada was 836 during the year, being within a fraction of $8 per head.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—That is very cheap.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The sum which I divided over the 7,743 immigrants who came by the St. Lawrence was $209,416. I deduct from that $6,661 for the salaries of Mr. Lalime and Dr. Whiteford, leaving $202,665, to be divided over the other immigrants. According to my view the number over whom it should be divided is 6,785, being those I have already enumerated, and making their cost per head within a fraction of $30., or more than I originally stated.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, Hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman claims that the other immigrants who came from the United States, numbering together, 20,296, should be included with the 6,785, making together 27,081, and that it is over this number that I should divide the amount of $202,665. Let us see how these immigrants came to the country, and what record there is of them in the Immigration Department. By the Suspension Bridge there came 6,453. Now, there is not a gentleman from the Province of Ontario here who will assert that those 6,453 persons were influenced by our agents in the United States. The only emigration agent who was within reach of them was Lalime, at Worcester, Massachusetts. Now, is it to be supposed, when all his efforts only resulted in persuading 563 persons to emigrate to Manitoba, that he could have induced 6,453 to come to Ontario, by the Suspension Bridge? The thing is simply preposterous.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. AIKENS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—They were chiefly people passing backward and forward, seeking employment. They were attracted by our public works, and they declared themselves to be intending settlers in order to get their furniture and effects admitted free of duty. They were not moved by emigration agents, but by motives of their own. To say that the expenditure of the Immigration Department had moved them is altogether unreasonable. But they were not the only ones. There entered Manitoba from the United States, 2,087. These were not re-patriated Canadians. Can an emigration agent have had anything to do with inducing them to come? Nothing in the world. But there is still another class, those reported with settlers goods by Custom Houses 11,759; and who do you think these were? The hon. gentlemen says these should be included in the number over whom the expenditure should be divided per capita.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—So they should.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman has only one agent in the Western States, at Detroit. The other is at Worcester, Mass., and are we to be told that 20,296 people were induced by two agents to emigrate from the United States and to settle in Canada. The pretension of the hon. gentleman is perfectly amazing, and all I can say is that if the hon. gentleman believes so impossible a statement, as he has made, he cannot understand the working of the Immigration Department.

Hon. Mr. PELLETIER—I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon.

gentleman led the House, to understand, that immigration was increasing. His own returns show that it is decreasing by the St. Lawrence which, is after all the only true test, as will be seen by the following figures :—

In 1870, there arrived by the St. Lawrence.....	44,475
1871.....	37,020
1872.....	34,743
1873.....	36,907
1874.....	23,894
1875.....	16,038
1876.....	10,901
1877.....	7,743

The returns by Halifax and St. John are only given for three years, therefore they do not afford any great scope for comparison. I think I have made this immigration matter perfectly clear. I have not only shown what the hon. gentleman does not deny, that my calculations are correct, but also that the bases on which I made them were also correct.

At 6 o'clock the House rose.

AFTER RECESS.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON resumed his speech. He said :—I have a few more words to say on immigration. The expenditure which I have taken from the Public Accounts and which, divided per capita, after deducting the salaries of Lalime and Whiteford, was $202,755. Now, it is ascertained that all that has been done by the Immigration Department, except what was done by Lalime and Whiteford, was to bring 6,785 immigrants to the country for an expenditure of $202,785. This leaves to Messrs. Lalime and Whiteford the credit of bringing the other immigrants which the hon. Minister of Agriculture claims as having been brought through the agency of the Department and numbering 21,000. It amounts to this, that Lalime and Whiteford, for their $3,661, induced 21,000 immigrants to come to Canada, while all the other agents only succeeded in persuading 6,785 to come. This, alone, shows the absurdity of the ground taken by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. I think hon. gentlemen understand clearly that what I meant by urging the fact that

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Messrs. Lalime and Whiteford were agents for the repatriation of French Canadians, was to show that their labors were confined to that class. I take it that every hon. gentleman in this House understands that I urged that simply as a matter of fact. No one will suppose for a moment that I would rather see Canadians of any other nationality come back to this country in preference to Canadians of French origin. No man in this House is freer from any feeling of that sort than I am. What I urged is proved by the report of the Minister of Agriculture. The Department is a very costly one, and I did not go beyond the strict bounds of fact when I said that as the expense increased the immigration diminished. The truth is, we have got in the Immigration Department a very large skeleton, an establishment intended for a much larger business than it has had to transact. That is what I find fault with. I should be sorry to say anything bearing with undue severity upon the Department or the Minister; at the same time I feel that great injustice was done to me by the hon. gentleman in the way he spoke of the calculations I submitted to the Senate, and he was not content with impugning them himself, but he handed over the papers prepared in his Department to the hon. Senator from Lambton, that he might attack me also. I called Mr. Brown's attention to the fact that his allegations were not correct, and he dropped the subject. I leave it to the House to say whether the statements which I submitted have not been proved to have been correct from official sources of authority.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Perfectly correct.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I shall now proceed to reply briefly to the hon. Secretary of State. The speech of that hon. gentleman was really an attempt to answer my speech of last Session. What he submitted to the House seemed to have been prepared during the recess in the Finance and Audit Departments. There were certificates from the Auditor-General and others, showing that it had been prepared in the Departments, but it altogether failed as an answer to what I had said last Session, and there was no attempt to reply to my speech of this Session. The hon. gentleman devoted a great deal of attention to the Estimates for 1873-74. Any one familiar with such matters must know that the Estimates have nothing to do with the question. By the expenditure and not by the Estimates, we must judge of the economy or extravagance of the Government.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is in the last degree unjust to say that the late Government was exclusively responsible for the expenditure of 1873-4. It is unreasonable to say that the Government which was in power for eight months of that year had no responsibility, yet that is what is contended by the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Senator from Lambton. I admit—every hon. gentleman knows and admits—that the expenditure was increased by Statute in the Session of 1873, and that for such expenditure the late Government was responsible. The whole question of responsibility turns upon the sufficiency of the allowance made by me for the statutory increases made in the Session of 1873. I allowed not only $1,500,000 which the Finance Ministers of both Governments stated would about cover the annual increase incurred that year, but to guard against the possibility of doing injustice to the present Government, I allowed the sum of $1,877,000. Now, I think the best evidence that I did no injustice to them is to be found in the fact that there has been no serious attempt, either here or in another place, or in the press, to refute or deny the sufficiency of that allowance. I hold it has been found altogether impossible to controvert the correctness of my estimate of the amount of that increase. I did in respect to this case as I did with the quarantine item for 1877. I allowed more than I believed to be necessary, in order that I might not by any possibility, do injustice to the present Government. The general statement that I submitted, showed that the present Government were responsible for $1,800,000, of increased annual controllable expenditure in 1876 over 1873, being at the rate of $600,000 a year, and furthermore, that in 1876, as compared with 1875, the ascertained increase was $716,

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

062. These statements have scarcely been questioned; they cannot be refuted, and must now be accepted as absolutely correct. In 1877, as compared with 1876, I maintain that there was an increase in controllable expenditure, of at least $500,000. Great pains have been taken to attach responsibility to the late Government—very unfairly—for the increase of expenditure since 1873. If the present Government considered it necessary to increase the expenditure, as they have done, they should have the courage to assume the responsibility, and to say “we did what we believed to be necessary in the interests of the country, and are prepared to defend it.”

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Instead of that, they say it was incurred by their predecessors, it was a heritage, and that they were obliged to carry out what had been undertaken by their predecessors. I maintain that this is incorrect, and that its incorrectness can be demonstrated. My hon. friend from Kingston, and my hon. friend from Londonderry, both showed that the facts were not only as I had stated, but that they were much more unfavorable for the present Government than I had stated. They have shown that $1,283,000 had been charged against the Consolidated Revenue Fund in 1874, which, according to previous usage, ought to have been charged against capital. One item of upwards of half a million dollars, part of this expenditure, was on account of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. Similar expenditure on that railway, previous to 1874, had been properly charged to capital, but in 1874 the new Government charged the item I have named to Consolidated Revenue Fund, and which Fund was accordingly improperly swollen by that amount. There were other items, increasing the amount to $1,283,000, which was improperly charged in 1873-74 to Consolidated Revenue Fund. Such “cooking” of the accounts was misrepresenting their predecessors, defrauding the public, and unworthy of the Government. The Public Accounts for 1873-4 were prepared so as to show a large increased expenditure, charged to revenue, and this Government then said disingenuously that their predecessors were responsible for that increase. They say that the expenditure of that year should be taken to be the expenditure of the last year of the late Government, and would conceal that they themselves had increased it. They say they were bound by estimates. Now, hon. gentlemen must know that estimates are not binding on any Government. Not only are they not binding, but the amount of the estimates is never exactly expended. There is always a balance, either over or under. In the Public Accounts for 1877 there is a statement of balances of appropriations which lapsed on the 30th June, 1877. There is an item in this statement for almost every department of the Government. What I have said of estimates applies both to capital account and revenue account, and last year the lapsed balances amounted, in all, to $3,117,647.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is capital account. Votes are taken for very large sums not intended to be spent. You will find some for five or six millions of dollars.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is partly chargeable to capital and partly to revenue. You will find the sums in the Estimates of the year—such as for Governor's Secretary office, Privy Council, Justice, Interior—all the Departments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A vote taken on capital account is rarely spent.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—This is not capital account. What I say is, that the precise amount of the estimates is not expended. Probably not one item in the Estimates is exactly expended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some are over and some under; there is no doubt of that.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—That is what I say. A great deal was said of Mr. Tilley's Estimates the other day, and it was protested that they established prodigality against the late Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a pretty good test of what was meant to be done.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—They were merely estimates. The Government of the day, judging by the revenue and by the necessities of the public service, ask for such amounts as they think ought to be expended at the time they ask for them. If anything occurs afterwards to make it necessary or prudent not to expend those amounts, they ought not to be expended, and if anything occurs to make it advisable or necessary to increase the expenditure, the Government should be willing to take the responsibility of doing so. Last year the total amount which lapsed was $3,117,647, and of this $2,343,356 was chargeable to capital, the difference between these two amounts is composed of items chargeable to income. There is another statement, one of unexpended balances, which were carried forward to the present year, 1877-8, to the credit of the Departments of Arts, Agriculture and Statistics, Penitentiaries, Militia, Public Works chargeable to capital, Public Works and Buildings chargeable to income, amounting to $557,320. What I want to show is that the Estimates do not govern the expenditure or in any way whatever fasten responsibility upon the Government obtaining them. The Government which makes the expenditure is the Government which is responsible for it. Now, there is another item in the expenditure of 1874, which hon. gentlemen opposite charge, and which I maintain is improperly charged to the late Government, that is, the amount voted to the Civil Service under an Order-in-Council passed by the late Government. That Order-in-Council was rescinded by the present Government, and another Order-in-Council was passed re-apportioning the amount.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Only a part of it.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The amount re-apportioned was about $15,000 short of the entire amount first appropriated.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was not the general appropriation that was rescinded. The distribution to the Civil Service was by Act of Parliament, and not by Order-in-Council.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Seventy-five thousand dollars was voted by Parliament to the Government to apportion, as they might see fit, among the Civil servants.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but there was another Order-in-Council to distribute $60,000 among the outside service. That was rescinded because there was no authority for it.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Didn't you pass another Order-in-Council appointing that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Part of that amount was allowed to go, and at another time another portion of it, as it was found that it created great dissatisfaction and made it very embarrassing in dealing with the public servants.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I mean to say that the responsibility of it rests with this Government, while an attempt is made to fasten the responsibility on the late Administration. My study in this whole matter has been to assign to each Government its fair share of responsibility. Wherever it belongs let it rest, and so far as I could, I endeavored to place it fairly. I do not admire the practice of the present Government of representing their predecessors as responsible for what they themselves are responsible for, and this has been the constant practice of this Government. The item in the Public Accounts for Superannuation is I think excessive, and I fear it is employed sometimes for the patronage rather than to do justice to officials who from age or ill health are entitled to superannuation. I fear officers are superannuated who might for years to come discharge their duties efficiently. With respect to the Public Works chargeable to Revenue, the hon. Secretary of State and the hon. Senator from Lambton dwelt very long and loudly—especially the latter—upon the extent to which the present Government was committed by its predecessors. In this they were unjust. The Minister of Finance stated in his first budget speech, that the Government would not commence new works chargeable to income but would only complete those undertaken by their predecessors. So far from fulfilling that pledge, the present Government commenced at once new works chargeable to Revenue and expended upon them upwards of $1,000,000, and that in the face of a falling Revenue.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the three years.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. Secretary of State and the hon. gentleman from Lambton called attention to the increased expenditure by the late Government from 1868. They proceeded to compare the annual expenditure from 1868 down to 1874, but they did not say a word about the increasing revenue which the late Government received to meet that expenditure. Will the hon. gentlemen pretend to say that with a full revenue, and with an annually recurring and large surplus, notwithstanding a reduction of the tariff, the late Government was not justified in going on with such public works as the public interest required? But why do hon. gentlemen speak of the increased expenditure, and not mention the increased revenue between 1868 and 1874? Why will they persist in misrepresenting their predecessors, and in concealing the truth from the people. The surplusses from 1868 to 1874-5 amounted to $12,010,000. Now, did not that late state of the revenue justify the Government in going on with public improvements chargeable to revenue? The Government of that day spent $11,280,000 out of revenue in the construction of works, which according to usage and precedent, were properly chargeable to capital. Was that time of wealth to be compared with the era of deficits which came in with the hon. gentlemen who now govern the country? I am not going to attach the whole blame for those deficits to them, some portion is due to the depression but the fact remains that in the one case there was a flowing revenue, reduced taxation, enormous surpluses, indicating prudence in expenditure, and, in the other case, increased taxation, falling revenue, deficits, and also increased expenditure. I shall now say a few words with reference to the North-West Mounted Police Force. I have no doubt it is a very useful force, but, like everything else, it should be managed as economically as possible. The hon. Secretary of State said in his speech that the meat supply for this year will be obtained for this force at four cents per pound.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I was told, when in the North-West, that an American firm has had a monopoly of the furnishing of supplies for the Mounted Police since its first establishment. I would just call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the necessity of managing as economically as possible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have had the administration of that Department for the last two years, and I do not see, if I had to go over it again, where I could have done better than has been done.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I stated the other evening a fact in connection with the supply of meat?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was the Indian Department.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I had no intention of mentioning it to the House then or this Session, but it came up accidentally, and I stated the facts with some little uncertainty, but I find I stated them correctly. I have here a statement from Mr. Demers, who tendered for the supply of meat, which, with the permission of the House, I will read. It is as follows:—

EXTRACT.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA,
21st August, 1877.

The facts are briefly these: I went to Ottawa in October last, and while there wrote the Minister of the Interior, offering to furnish beef at such prices and such quantity in the North-West Territory as the Government would require during the summer of 1877, at the price of eight cents per pound. I received no answer at that time to this letter, but the Hon. Letellier de St. Just, in speaking of it to me, informed me that he would strongly recommend the acceptance of my tender, on account of the very low price, and was sure that I would get it.

In the Winnipeg papers tenders were afterwards asked for the supply of beef and other articles in the North-West, by Thomas Nixon, Esq., to be put in by the 10th May, 1877. I am given to understand that my tender of eight cents per pound was sent by the Department to J. A. N. Provencher, Esq., Indian Commissioner, who gave it to Mr. Nixon about ten days before the opening of the tenders called for by the advertisement. On the day of the opening of the tenders Mr. Nixon, not knowing my address, asked Mr. Gouin, of this place, to telegraph me that my tender, being the lowest, was accepted. This Mr. Gouin did in the accompanying telegram. I received Mr. Gouin's telegram on the 21st of May, and at once sent to the telegraph office, distant one hundred and twenty-five miles, the telegraphic answer herewith. On receipt of my telegram on the 26th May, Mr. Gouin saw Mr. Nixon and informed him that I had accepted the contract, and had made provisions for so doing. Mr. Nixon informed Mr. Gouin that he was two days too late, and that the contract was given to other parties. Mr. Gouin telegraphed this statement of Mr. Nixon's to me, but, as I live one hundred and twenty-five miles from the boundary line, I did not receive any notice till my cattle had already started and were across the boundary line. I am also informed by Mr. Gouin that the day before the contract was awarded by Mr. Nixon to Mr. McKay, that he called upon Mr. Gouin and informed him that he could wait no longer and would award the contract elsewhere, where upon Mr. Gouin showed Mr. Nixon a letter written by me sometime before, stating that, as I felt sure of my tender being the lowest, I had already made every arrangement and that some of my cattle had started. Mr. Nixon refused to wait and Mr. McKay got the contract at fifty-five per cent over my tender, making a difference in cost to the Government of nearly six thousand dollars. The consequences to me of the above facts have been that I have suffered serious loss. It seems to me so inexplicable that the Government should pay 12½ cents when they could get beef at eight cents per pound, and that Mr. Nixon's conduct has been so peculiar in the matter throughout. I may also state that upon my arrival here I waited upon Mr. Nixon, and reproaching him for his action, he assured me that if I would hold my tongue, there were other contracts to be given, and that he would see that my cattle were still taken."

Hon. Mr. Scott.

To W. F. GOUIN,

Will fill contract. Write C. Allard at Cassil Lake, to leave cattle required there at the proper place himself. Will soon start.

T. J. DEMERS, via Helena.

The hon. Secretary of State will see that the tender was not confined to the Indian Department. Mr. Demers' offer was to supply the Government.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Have you Mr. Nixon's reply to that. One story is good until another is told.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I believe it is admitted that Mr. Demers offered to supply the beef at eight cents per pound, that the other circumstances are as stated in this memorandum, and that Mr. McKay got the contract from Mr. Nixon at 12½ cents per pound. I heard that Mr. Nixon said he could not run the risk of waiting any longer than he did for an answer from Demers. There might be force in that reason for the supply of beef, in the early part of the season, but it could scarcely apply to that for the whole season. When I last spoke on the subject, I complained of the waste of money in the North-West. Fort Pelly was first selected as the seat of Government of the North-West. A very large sum of money was spent there upon buildings. The place was then abandoned, and Battleford was selected. Large expenditure has been incurred there, and I am afraid Battleford will also have to be abandoned. Information which I have since received strengthens that opinion. I am told Battleford is on sandy, arid soil. Perhaps just about the proposed site of the town itself there may be a few inches of soil, but for an extensive area round the country is sterile—there is no wood and no population.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is not much population anywhere in that country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—There is nothing at Battleford to attract population, and it will most likely have to be abandoned as Fort Pelly was. The people of the North West look upon Winnipeg as the capital of that country. They have done so from time immemorial. The Hudson Bay traders, half-breeds and Indians, all have been in the habit of looking upon it as the metropolis of the North-West, and the less instructed portion of the inhabitants look upon the authorities at Fort Garry with much greater respect than upon the Government at Battleford. With regard to the expenditure on public works, a gentleman said, the other night, that this was no time to stop outlay. Expenditure judiciously made is generally real economy, and I do not object to a reasonable expenditure out of capital for great national works, provided it is judiciously made, but the outlay on the Pacific Railway is in the last degree injudicious, and the same may be said of a large proportion of other expenditure, which I shall not now describe particularly. I shall only further say to the Secretary of State that he has not controverted any of the financial statements I placed before the House either last Session or this, and that they convicted the Government of extravagance and mismanagement. I shall now address a few words to my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Hope), who takes an exceedingly bright and sanguine view of the financial situation. I think if the hon. gentleman visits the Finance Department, his opinions must be comforting to the Minister of Finance.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—I have not had the pleasure of seeing the Finance Minister this Session. I took my statement from the blue book.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman made one statement which he did not find in the blue books. He did not find the sinking fund deducted from the deficit. He did that himself. The sinking fund is an engagement just as much as any other liability of the Government, and there is no engagement more sacred than the investment of the sinking fund. If that were omitted for one month beyond the proper time, the credit of the country would be imperilled. I heard the hon. gentleman say that he deducted the sinking fund from the deficit, and he added, "now the equilibrium is restored, and the whole thing is done."

Hon. Mr. HOPE—The question of the hon. gentleman is answered, as I think, satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I am surprised that a business man should have spoken in the way the hon. gentleman spoke of the sinking fund, knowing, as he must know, that the Government has no more sacred engagement to deal with. If the hon. gentleman can tell us how one dollar can be made to do service for two he will render great service to the country.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—When money is invested in the Sinking Fund, the Government cannot employ the same money, to pay other obligations, for instance, freight on steel rails by the Merchants' Lake and River line of steamers, in which the hon. gentleman is a shareholder. The hon. Senator laughs, and no wonder, for his company received last year, for carrying rails, $89,360.

Hon. Mr. TRÜDEL—Did you find that in the Blue Book?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Yes. It is quite obvious why the hon. Senator from Hamilton should be so anxious to have the present Government remain in power five years longer. He says the way to preserve the equilibrium between income and expenditure is to keep in the present Government, which has been the Government of deficits, but which paid to his company last year no less than $89,360; and the hon. gentleman may have visions of great contracts in the future for transporting military stores and munitions of war through the Fort Francis Canal. The name of that hon. gentleman's company, and that of Cooper, Fairman & Co., appear very often in the Public Accounts.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—When was this money paid to the Lake and River Company?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I will give the hon. gentleman the page of the Public Accounts; the date is not stated. It may have been on the first day of the financial year.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—I think the hon. gentleman will find I had not a seat in the Senate at the time the contract was made.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—When the hon. gentleman was here last Session, we found an item for similar service in the Accounts for the year before. There are items in the Accounts for 1875-76 and 1877.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—The payment in 1875-6 was before I was a member of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—He admits having received the money.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—At the same time I would just remark there is no more impropriety in a shareholder of any steamboat company carrying rails for the Government, being a member of the Senate, than there is in a shareholder of a bank holding large deposits of money and making a large profit out of them, occupying a seat in this Chamber.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I did not accuse the hon. gentleman of having done anything illegal. I merely mentioned the fact that the company in which he is a large shareholder, received for transporting rails last year, $89,000. I shall now pass on to the speech of the hon. Senator from Lambton (Mr. Brown) who, I very much regret, is not in his place. We were threatened with a visit from him for a long time and we were told, he would disprove all my statements, showing the increased expenditure of the Government, and would crush all Ministerial opponents. The hon. gentleman came twice to deliver his speech in defence of the Government. On the first occasion, I think those who heard his speech must have sympathized with the hon. gentleman, because it was a laughable miscarriage, and on the last occasion, after much intellectual labor the result was a very small mouse indeed. The hon. gentleman did not attempt to answer any of the charges of financial extravagance and administrative incapacity, which I and others had brought against the Government. He could not do this, for the facts were against him, but he did engage the House for some time with very entertaining declamation. I say this in the very best spirit. The hon. gentleman travelled twice from Toronto to Ottawa—1,100 miles—to deliver that speech, and I really could not discover that it was worth the travail. I thought at first the fault must have been my own for not discovering point and argument in it; that there must have been a great deal of argument and a great deal of strength in his speech, and that the fault was with me for not discovering these and their bearing on the question before the House. I thereupon asked hon. gentlemen who are in the habit of taking part in the debates of the House, and of making notes of what is said by hon. gentlemen with a view to replying to them, what points the hon. gentleman had made. They one and all gave me the same answer, that they had not been able to discover anything in the speech answering or disturbing any of the facts which I had submitted. One hon. gentleman said he thought the hon. Senator from Lambton fancied he had made a point about the expenditure for telegraphing in 1874-5, and for immigration, but my friend knew that the error, if error there was, in respect to the expenditure for telegraphing, was not with me, but in the Public Accounts; that the Government had, through some error, placed the payments for five quarters' telegraphy in one year and three quarters' in another. I took my facts from the Public Accounts. I am inclined to think however if we could get behind the scenes we would find that there are not a few who get five quarters pay for not more than three quarters' work. I submit that I have proved conclusively to the country, to-day, all that I ever said of the expenditure in the Immigration Department. I fancied also that there must have been great merit in the Hon. Senator's speech, because of the enthusiasm with which he was greeted by his friends. I never can forget the scene on the floor of this House, on the conclusion of his speech. Hon. Senators on the other side, some of them venerable and grey-haired gentlemen, crowded round him, congratulating him, and thanking him fervently, apparently, for the great service he had rendered to them. They had no doubt telegraphed and written to him, entreating him to come, and he came and delighted them, if not with argument, with declamation, and they, in return, expressed their gratitude to him, almost worshipping him. I suppose they called to him much in the way that we are told the worshippers of Jupiter called to him to come down and assist them, and the hon. Senator enjoyed a privilege that Jupiter never enjoyed. He (Mr. Brown) was present, and received in person the homage and adulation of his worshippers. It was a touching picture, and, like all fine pictures, it was not all sunshine, there was shadow in it—a picture would not be a fine picture if it was all bright, all sunshine, and the picture I refer to did not lack shadow. The hon. Ministers were in dark shadow, they were in the background. The hon. Secretary of State had discoursed smoothly for six or eight hours; had labored most indefatigably, and quite as effectively as the hon. gentleman from Lambton. While the Secretary of State did not refute any of my statements, he deserved well of his friends for his long and smooth discourse. But he and his colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, were left in the background. When they finished their speeches no one went up to congratulate them or take them by the hand; they were left in the very darkest shadow, but, altogether, the scene upon the floor of the Senate was a sublime tableau. I think it is not fair of the hon. gentleman from Lambton to rush away the moment he delivers one of his orations. The hon. gentleman comes down and makes what he considers, no doubt, a very effective speech. He discharges a broadside, and he should wait to see the effect it produces, even when, as in the late instances, his guns were only loaded with blank cartridge. I hope the hon. gentleman will attend in his place in this House more regularly in future than he has done in the past. It was quite evident, when the hon. gentleman appeared here, armed with Orders-in-Council, and with information of every description, obtained from the public departments, that he enjoyed advantages over every ordinary member of this House. It was apparent to everyone that the hon. gentleman's seat was not in the humble place he chose to occupy, but at the head of the Treasury Bench. That is the place where he should take his seat. It is very well known that the hon. Senator—Mr. Brown—is the real head of the Government. There may have been some little division in the headship for a time, but we know from a change which has recently taken place that it is no longer so, and the hon. gentleman should take his proper place as head of the Government, and assume a measure of responsibility commensurate with his great influence with his party. The hon. gentleman from Lambton complained of my having brought financial questions before this House. I think there is no ground whatever for that complaint. This House has a right to enquire into all the affairs of the country. If we may judge of the wisdom of our course by the effect of our proceedings on the public mind, I have no hesitation in saying—and I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me—that the influence of the Senate has not been impaired, nor the respect in which it is held in the country diminished by the course which we have seen fit to pursue. On the contrary, it has been universally recognized that the course pursued by this Senate has been beneficial to the country.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—There may be times when from circumstances the majority supporting the Government in another place may be so overwhelming that a successful enquiry into ministerial misdoings would be impossible. When there are ministerial misdoings they not only affect the Ministers themselves, but they affect the whole ministerial party, and every member of that party is interested in concealing those misdoings. Whoever knows the process by which enquiries are pursued by large committees representing the majority in the popular House, must be aware that it is impossible to get at facts that will tell against the Government of the day, or the party of the Government of the day. It is just at such times that a House, constituted as this is, is peculiarly adapted to render the country great and valuable service. Other hon. gentlemen have told how this House has been sneered at and jeered at by certain gentlemen in another place, who have since become members of the Government. There allusions to this House were exceedingly improper, and were discreditable to them, speaking as they did of one of the Houses of Parliament. The course which this House has pursued in rejecting public measures which they considered prejudicial to the interests of the Dominion, and their examination into the finances of the country, have kept it in full accord with public sentiment, and its position was never higher in the estimation of the people of Canada than it is to-day.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—If this House had been an elected body, would there be any doubt as to its right and duty to enquire into the management of the finances of the country, and is not an enquiry instituted by it constituted as it is as useful as though it were an elective body? The hon. gentleman from Lambton referred to the Committees of this House which are sitting. He expressed surprise that I should sit upon the Kaminstiquia Committee to enquire into "The Neebing Hotel" and "Fort William land jobs!" It is very necessary to sit upon such committees and enquire into such matters. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island said we should not refer to questions that are before committees. If the evidence which has been before those committees had been withheld from the public, I agree with the hon. gentleman that it would not be proper to allude to it here, but when the evidence is published every morning in the press of the country, would it not be affectation not to refer to it in this House when occasion requires.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Mr. HAYTHORNE—What I said my objection to be was allusions to enquiries pending before committees, and unfinished.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—There is not a member of this House, and scarcely any person in the country, who does not know, from what has already transpired, that in the Kaminstiquia land matter and the Neebing Hotel purchase, gross frauds have been perpetrated upon the public.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—On the contrary, I do not think it is anything of the kind.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—A most nefarious job has been perpetrated on the country.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Is that what the Committee have decided on?

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The Committee has not reported yet, but the fact that a fraud has been perpetrated is patent; I do not say by whom; that will be for the Committee and the House to say. The hon. gentleman from Lambton spoke of the Government having inherited obligations from their predecessors amounting to $96,300,000. Without explanation this statement is grossly misleading; $35,000,000 of that sum were for debentures maturing, which had simply to be renewed, and at a reduced rate of interest. Then with respect to the largest obligation, which they say they inherited—the Pacific Railway,—it is a matter of history that when they succeeded to the Government of this country they were perfectly free to do whatever they thought best with respect to that work. What are the facts? A short time before the present Government came into office, the contract with Sir Hugh Allan and his partners was declared to be at an end, and was cancelled. The only engagement to which they were then committed was the original treaty with British Columbia, and that treaty, we all know, the present Government utterly disregarded and tore in pieces, so that they were perfectly free to do with the Pacific Railway, what they believed to be for the interests of the country, and we see what they have done. It would not have been possible for men to have exhibited greater want of wisdom than this Government has shown in dealing with that work. First, the Georgian Bay Branch was placed under contract, and they lost confidence in their own judgment and stopped that work. The Pembina Branch was also put under contract, steel rails were sent up, and the company of which the hon. gentleman from Hamilton is a member, was paid an enormous sum for their freight. Then, suddenly, the Government lost confidence again in their own judgment, and that work was suspended. They next placed the section from Thunder Bay to Shebandowan, on the route to Sturgeon Falls, under contract, with a view to utilizing "the magnificent water stretches." After proceeding for some time with that line, they lost confidence in their own judgment again, and changed the location, adopting one so far north, as to render it impossible to use the water stretches in connection with the railway, and although this change must have been made more than two years ago, yet the Premier in another place, and the hon. Secretary of State in this Chamber, only one year ago declared that the water stretches were to be utilized from Port Savanne, through Lac des Mille Lacs, down the 400 feet of Portages to Rainy Lake, through Fort Francis Lock, and down Rainy River and the Lake of the Woods, to Rat Portage, to form the connecting link between the two ends of the railway.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Only a small portage or two, he said.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON — Yes, "only two or three short portages to be overcome." Before these speeches were delivered, the location of the railway had been changed and carried nearly 100 miles north of the "Magnificent water stretches." We have received no explanation of these delusive statements. The Government placed under contract 114 miles of the railway at one end of the Lake Superior section and 114 miles at the other end, and for the West end it will be necessary to send 15,000 tons of rails—in addition to the quantity required for the Pembina branch—round by Duluth and Red River at enormous rates of freight, which may benefit my hon. friend from Hamilton, (Mr. Hope) and when all this is done we are told semi-officially apparently by the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island that the Government have abandoned for a time the central link—he calls it "The missing link."—although we know that neither end can be of any use until the centre section is completed. If there is not money to go on with the construction of the central link, surely the Government ought to stop the construction of the two ends now under contract. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Brown) speaking of the public debt said that I had over stated the amount of it. I said the amount of our debt is $174,000,000 whereas the hon. gentleman said I ought to have spoken of the net debt which he called only $133,000,000. Now, hon. gentleman when we speak of our debt, I think it should be understood that we speak of what we owe. The country owes $174,000,000. We have assets which it is true are nominally $40,000,000, but what are those assets! Upwards of $22,000,000 of them bear no interest. The interest that this country has annually to pay is $7,132,000, and the interest we receive upon all the assets is only $648,680. I think hon. gentlemen will agree with me that when we speak of our debt we should speak of what we really owe and not of what some hon. gentlemen may assume it may be diminished to, by assets, the value of which is not easily ascertained. The deficits should have been foreseen. An hon. gentleman said that I am favorable to the increase of taxation. That does not follow by any means, but when the revenue is falling, one of two things must be done; either the revenue must be increased, new sources of revenue must be opened, or there must be retrenchment—one or the other is indispensable if deficits would be avoided. The present Government did neither the one nor the other; they saw the revenue falling off, but instead of decreasing they increased the expenditure, and the deficits of course followed, amounting to within a fraction of four millions of dollars in two years. I said that the Government in preparing the Public Accounts, should be careful to see that they are correctly made up. The Public Accounts are prepared under the direction of the Government, and the Government is directly responsible for their accuracy. Ministers direct what shall be charged to capital, what to Consolidated Revenue Fund, and what placed in Suspense. It, therefore, behooves the Government not to expose themselves to the charge or suspicion of "cooking" the Public Accounts. If they place items under any but the correct heads they will leave themselves open to that charge and do the credit of the country incalculable harm.

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Now with respect to the rails in the Intercolonial Renewals Suspense Account, the hon. gentleman from Lambton admitted that if the Rails had not been on hand they would not have been purchased. I do not know whether it struck the hon. gentleman that that was evidence of very great and unpardonable extravagance. A steel rail has only a certain number of years of wear in it like everything else that is used in railways, and if it is laid and used one year or more before it is wanted, it is worn out a year or more sooner than it should be and the country is put to the expense of renewing it at the cost of further expenditure. The hon. gentleman from Lambton complained because I suggested that he must know what the Government scheme of additional taxation is, and said that I should not have stated such a thing unless I could prove it. I am not in the confidence of the Government, but I venture to say that they dare not adopt a policy of taxation without the knowledge and sanction of the hon. gentleman from Lambton. The hon. Senator (Mr. Brown) and the Secretary of State made light of our deficits and compared them to deficits of twenty years ago, ten years before Confederation when the condition of Canada was as different from what it is now as it is possible to conceive. But if hon. gentlemen want to read of a Government denounced and condemned for permitting deficits to recur and for not covering them either by increased taxation or stopping them by retrenchment, I will refer them to files of the Toronto Globe of that period. They will there find the Government condemned in very much more severe terms than I applied to the present Government. I remember in those days that appeals were made to the proprietors of that journal in the interests of the credit of the country not to be exposing the financial condition of the country as they were do-

Hon. Mr. Macpherson.

ing. But they said it was their duty to proclaim the deficits. I think it was, and that they were not to be blamed for doing as they did. The hon. gentleman said that this House ought to send out a right key note. I think, hon. gentlemen, we are doing so. The right note for this House to send out is the truth, and I do not know that we can do better than adopt as nearly as we can the language which was used by the leading men in the present Administration and by the gentleman who has recently retired from it, before they went into the Government.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The language which they held then was really right, true and patriotic, and no better key note can be sounded to-day. But, unfortunately, when these gentlemen went into office they forgot that note; they forgot their pledges; they were guilty of recreancy and tergiversation that was discreditable to them as public men. They disregarded and violated all their pledges and debased the public life of this country. It gives me no pleasure to speak as I have just done of the Government. On the contrary, it gives me great pain. No matter who compose the Government of this country, I should like to be able to hold them in respect, and I should like the country to hold them in respect. But the country cannot hold the present Government in respect. Ministers have deceived the people, and their maladministration of the affairs of this country is almost indescribable, and will be disastrous if continued much longer. When they succeeded to office, I welcomed them. I thought the change would do good at the time, and I gave them an independent support in this House upon all their measures, until I had cause to lose all faith and confidence in them.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—And, hon. gentlemen, no personal interest of mine, except as one of the public, would be advanced by a change of Government. I desire a change, because, in my opinion, the good of the country demands it. When my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Campbell) crosses the floor of this House—and I hope, in the interests of the country, that he will soon cross it—I shall not go over with him. My only motive is to help to place men in the Government who are worthy of the respect and confidence of the country; men who will administer the public affairs honestly, wisely, economically, and purely; the present Ministers, in my opinion, do not so administer them; on the contrary, they have, by their conduct, shocked the moral sense of the people.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I say so unhesitatingly. Will any hon. gentleman say that the prevailing feeling from the Atlantic to the Pacific is not one of disappointment with the present Government. I am sometimes told that I am always attacking the Government. If I suggest economy and retrenchment in the fulfilment of pledges given in past years, or the avoiding of useless expenditure, or improved Administration generally, it is all characterized as attacks upon the Government. The truth is, it is impossible to refer to the Administration, or to the individual members of it, except in terms of condemnation. I would much rather support the Government as I did in the early sessions of this Parliament, and feel that they deserved support, than to be exposing their deficiencies as I feel it my duty to do now.

HALIFAX PENITENTIARY.

ENQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I would like to ask the hon. Secretary of State whether the Government is aware that during the last year it has been the habit of the Coroner attending the Penitentiary at Halifax to hold inquests in that institution, with the approval of the Warden, without a jury?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have never heard of the circumstance before. I will make enquiries of the Minister of Justice.

The House adjourned at 9.35 p.m.

RECORDING DIVISIONS IN SELECT COMMITTEES.

A POINT OF ORDER.

Hon. Mr. HAMILTON (Kingston), from the Committee on Banking, Commerce and Railways, to whom was referred the Bill intituled: "An Act to authorize and confirm the scheme of arrangement of the Canada Southern Railway Company," reported that they had gone through the said Bill, and had directed him to report the same with several amendments.

Hon. Mr. HOPE rose to a point of order. He said in Committee on this Bill he had asked that the yeas and nays be recorded in a division which took place on an amendment which he had moved, and he was told it was not usual to allow it. He merely wished to have a decision from the Speaker on that point, so as to define the rights of members.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It seems to me that is a question for the committee. The committee having decided the point, the matter must rest there.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—It is not usual to take the yeas and nays in committee. I never saw them recorded in committee.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That would not be done in a committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The rule applicable to the case is 65, which is as follows:—

"All questions before committees on private bills are decided before a majority of voices, including the voice of the chairman, and, whenever the voices are equal, the chairman has a second or casting vote."

Hon. Mr. HAMILTON (Kingston)—There has never been a vote recorded in any committee I have been on.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The hon. gentleman suggested that the yeas and nays should be taken, and I and others said it was unusual.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I submit the House and the Speaker have no power to take cognizance of the hon. gentleman's complaint in the way he brings it up.

After some further discussion

Mr. SPEAKER said the question of order cannot be decided by a select committee, nor by a committee of the whole, but only by the Speaker in the Chair. The rule in this case provides that all questions in committees on private bills are decided by a majority of the voices, including the voice of the chairman, and, whenever the voices are equal, the chairman has a second or casting vote. This is the only rule practically applicable to this case. But the 112th rule provides :

“ In all unprovided cases, the rules, usages, and forms of proceeding of the House of Lords are to be followed.”

So that, where there is no express rule of the Senate to regulate that matter, the rules, usages, forms, and proceedings of the House of Lords become the rule.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That has special reference to the Committee on Private Bills, the chairman alone of which has two votes. It does not refer to the Banking Committee.

Mr. SPEAKER—Private bills sometimes go to the Committee on Railways, Banking and Commerce, and I think the construction of the rule fairly applies to any committee to which a private bill may be sent. On referring to May, p. 398, I find on the 7th of December, 1852, the House of Lords agreed to a resolution to the effect, that in the event of a division taking place in any select committee, the votes on each side shall be entered on the minutes, and be reported to the House, in the report of the said committee. The same rule obtained in the House of Commons, and in precisely the same words.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL said the hon. Senator from Hamilton had evidently been in consultation with the Speaker on the subject, but he did not think that the 112th rule applied in this case. It merely referred to unprovided cases, where there was no usage of this House. Now, the usage of the Senate ever since Confederation, had been, not to take the yeas and nays in committees; and, in fact, the yeas and nays were not taken in committee of the whole House, and only in the House itself, when asked for by the members. In this case, only one member called for the yeas and nays, and if, on the demand of one member, this course could be taken, it would place the House in a most anomalous position.

Hon. Mr. MILLER contended this was not an unprovided case, because there was a rule of the House bearing directly on the taking of yeas and nays, and that rule declared that it must be in the House on the demand of two members. Anything opposed to that express rule was opposed to the practice of the House.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU contended it had been the practice ever since Confederation to take the yeas and nays in committees, as would be seen by reference to the reports of the Joint Committee on Printing. He admitted that in committees of the Senate there had been no case where the yeas and nays had been taken, but they could not arrive at the conclusion that in consequence of this it should not be done. It was also the rule in committees to have no seconder to a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER—The rule cited by the hon. Senator from Arichat—No. 31—has reference solely to proceedings when the House is in Session. It does not refer to the proceedings of committees, but solely to the proceedings of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MILLER said, when the House laid down a rule with respect to taking the yeas and nays, it certainly regulated the whole subject by its positive enactments, as well as by its silence. What he complained of was, that it was very unfair and discourteous to the chairman of the committee that a question of this kind should be brought here evidently after previous consultation with the speaker, and it was unfair that he was to give an elaborate opinion without any notice to the chairman of the committee that his ruling was to be attacked. It was very discourteous to the chairman of the committee and to all concerned.

Hon. Mr. BUREAU contended that the Speaker was obliged to study the rules, and it was therefore right and proper to consult him beforehand. It had always been the custom, and it was the duty of the Speaker to look up authorities when requested to do so.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD thought the point raised did not come under the 112th rule as an unprovided case. Since Confederation no division had been recorded in any select committee, and the only rule with respect to voting was in cases where the Senate thought it was desirable the names should be taken down. He suggested if it was thought desirable to adopt the usage of the House of Lords to give notice of a motion to that effect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT said his knowledge of the practice elsewhere had been that at the request of a member of the committee the votes were recorded. He did not think the mere absence of any case in point in past years could be construed into a usage, and therefore the practice in the House of Lords must necessarily prevail.

After further discussion.

Hon. Mr. DIXON moved that the amendments be taken into consideration by the House to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY'S BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. HAMILTON (Kingston) from the Committee on Standing Orders and Private Bills to whom was referred the Bill intitled: "An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada," reported the said Bill without any amendment. The Bill was read the third time and passed.

SHIPMENT OF GRAIN BY THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

MOTION FOR A RETURN.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP moved:—

"That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House all correspondence relating to shipment of grain by way of the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax, for Europe."

He said the question referred to in the notice which I now bring before the House is one that has been occupying the attention of the people of Halifax for the last two years. I have considered it a matter of importance to them, and not only to them, but to the whole Dominion. I may say that the question of the shipment of grain has been very fully discussed in Halifax; and at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce a few days ago, members of that body expressed themselves very strongly against the action of the Government—members who usually measure their remarks in speaking on any subject, in a very careful way. A joint committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the City Council had a meeting at Halifax last year, at which Mr. Brydges was asked to attend, and at which he did make an appearance. The matter was fully discussed, and Mr. Brydges expressed himself very favorably impressed with the proposition then made. He said he would do all he could. A delegation to the Government was suggested, but Mr. Brydges said it was quite unnecessary, as he had full powers to act. Another meeting was held, at which it was understood that the Government would carry grain from Riviere du Loup to Halifax at 1s. 3d. per quarter. Subsequent to that, Sir Hugh Allan arrived at Halifax, and a meeting was called, at which he was present. He was told of the negotiations that had been going on up to that time, and he thought very favorably of the proposition, and was under the impression that the grain trade could be carried on from Halifax, and he promised he would do all he could to forward it. Subsequent to this the Committee sent a delegate—Mr. Black—up to complete preparations. He came up, saw Mr. Brydges, and Mr. Brydges repudiated the agreement altogether. Then Mr. Black went to the Government, and the Government would give him no satisfaction at all. He returned to Halifax and prepared his report, which he handed to the Committee. That was on the 11th of December. Some members of the Committee asked that it might be delayed for further communication with the Government. This time we were on the eve of an election in Halifax, and the present Minister of Militia, was about to go to the polls. After communication with the Government, they agreed to carry 2 cargoes as an experiment, from Riviere du Loup to Halifax. I leave it to this House to say what influence the election of the Minister of Militia had upon that conclusion. During these negotiations a difficulty arose about the expense of bagging the grain. The Grand Trunk Railway Company offered to pay half of the expense, but the Government refused to pay any. Now, I think that, under the circumstances, in an operation of that kind, it was a very small and cheese-paring policy, and unworthy of the Government, to refuse to bear their half of the expense. The people of Halifax then agreed to pay that half, although we thought that, while the Government were spending millions on canals, it was rather small to refuse to spend a few dollars in trying an experiment of such importance. Mr. Black was sent on a second mission to carry out the arrangement. He went on to Montreal and found it was then too late. I will read a portion of his report, dated March 12th. It is as follows:—

“Messrs. Allan say that they had selected three steamers on which to carry these cargoes, but as the time had passed when they expected them to have been so employed, and as they could not learn from the managers of either railway that any cargoes were on the way, they were obliged to use them for other purposes, and now the only one of the three that might be available, the “Hibernian,” was broken down, and they could not say how soon she could be got ready, but they would let me know when I returned from Chicago, at which time they would also give me a letter containing their views on the winter port business.”

I will now read an extract from Sir Hugh Allan's letter, dated Montreal, 6th March, 1878:—

“A great difficulty exists in having to deal with so many railroad companies on the route, and it would be absolutely necessary that the managers of the different railroad companies should meet together and decide upon a division of the rate. That has not yet been done, but I think the result would be greatly facilitated if the Government were to acquire the line of the Grand Trunk Railway from Riviere du Loup to Quebec. If the Railroad Company would then undertake to carry produce to Quebec, and deliver it to the Intercolonial at the same rates that is done at New York, Baltimore and Philadelphia, an agreement could be more easily arrived at. The attempts which have been hitherto made in that direction have entirely failed.

“It is now too late to do anything this winter, but I hope before another winter comes round, matters will be in such a state as to enable us, at any rate, to make a commencement of the business; and I can only again assure you of my anxiety and strong desire to attain this object successfully.”

I hope the Government will unite in this strong desire which Sir Hugh Allan expresses, to make this experiment a success. I have never said one word about the “steel rails” in this House, and I never will, provided the Government will buy that Riviere du Loup branch of the Grand Trunk Railway, and will use those steel rails that are rusting in heaps over the country, and on which we are paying storage. I am sure no better use could be made of them. The Government may do what they like with the old rails, and give them to any branch that will be a feeder to the Intercolonial. I remember seeing, some time ago, a notice of the meeting of the Grand Trunk shareholders, where it was stated that negotiations had been opened by the Dominion Government for the purchase (or some satisfactory arrangement) of the Riviere du Loup Branch. Perhaps the Government will inform us whether we are likely to get that piece of road, because unless we get it, there will always be a difficulty in working the Intercolonial successfully. Hon. gentlemen must understand that the great men who originated that railroad, with a view to national purposes—some of them have passed away—did not intend it for mercantile purposes mainly, but to unite these Provinces and create inter-provincial trade. There is no use in trying to make it a paying road on commercial principles for some time yet. Perhaps if we were to call it a winter canal, our Ontario friends would be more inclined to help it along. We hear about wheat that is locked up in Manitoba, and we hear also that railroads are being built to carry that wheat into the United States. I hope the Government will cease building in that direction, and construct roads to bring it down to Halifax, the finest harbor in the world; yet, though we are the largest ship-owners in the world, according to our population, there are few of the ships that are built in Nova Scotia that ever enter Nova Scotia ports again. They are employed abroad. Every ship of a thousand tons burden, which loads at a port like New York or Boston, spends for disbursements about three thousand dollars. Hon. gentlemen can imagine the importance of such an expenditure as this when they consider that a large number of our vessels are employed abroad, because we have no trade for them at home. We want to build up this inter-provincial trade, and to unite the Provinces together by means of the Intercolonial Railway. I heard a good deal about what this Intercolonial Railway cost last year. I have reason to believe, for I have it from very good authority, that after charging to the road all that ought fairly to be put against it, it is only $50,000 short. I will endeavor to show hon. gentlemen from Ontario before I sit down what benefit they have derived from it, and I hope my hon. friend from Woodstock will be satisfied the railway is not going to be such a ruinous thing to the Dominion as he supposes. We feel very sorely about the West India trade. The Finance Minister said in his Budget Speech that there was to be no change in the tariff, and that the Government were unanimous on that point. Now, I thought we had one or two friends in the Government, but it seems we have none. Then there is the coal trade; that is gone altogether also. As the hon. member from Lunenburg said the other day, we have twelve millions of dollars invested in the coal trade, and that investment is deteriorating every day, and if something is not done very soon, it will be utterly lost. We asked only 50 cents a ton protection for that trade, but the Government say that would be no use—we would require at least two dollars a ton. I should think the men who have the money invested in the coal trade ought to know better than the Government what they require to serve their own interests. I regret to say that my hearing is bad, and the acoustics of this Chamber are very imperfect, so that it is almost impossible for me to follow the debates. But I did hear the hon. gentleman from Montreal (Mr. Penny) the other day make some remarks. He quoted a speech of Sir John Macdonald delivered ten years ago to endeavour to prove that he was inconsistent. Ten years is quite a period in a young country like ours with a neighbouring nation of forty millions of people sharp, energetic, and ready for anything. Their public men are as sharp as needles, to wit; the duty on lobster cans and on cod fish oil when prepared in a certain way and the refusal of the use of their canals. But we have Brother Jonathan hooked by the gills at last, and he weighs over a million pounds. He is rushing about endeavouring to free himself by taking a great deal of line off the reel, but I think John Bull will land him safely and surely if he has not other fish to fry. It may be inevitable that he will have a hug with the Russian Bear, and I have no doubt if he should he will come out all right. The hon. gentleman from Montreal speaks about the state of affairs which existed ten years ago. Is there a gentleman in this Dominion who knows more about what occurs in a decade than an hon. gentleman of his intelligence, who has an opportunity of learning day by day of the changes taking place in the world and heralding them forth? No man knows better than he that change is written on the face of everything. What was our condition in Nova Scotia ten years ago? Our West India trade was flourishing. Where is it now? Some of our oldest houses engaged in that trade have gone down, and there is no telling where the depression will end. Ten years ago our coal trade was in a flourishing condition. Where is it now? Gone to ruin; and why? Because, while the United States were passing measures to protect their own people and to kill our industries, the Government of this country stood silently by and would do nothing to help us. It was their duty to have enacted laws to counteract the measures adopted in the United States, and no statesmen or men having heads on their shoulders, would have stood quietly by while our industries were being stricken down, without making a move to prevent it. I speak strongly on this point, because I don't know what day we in Halifax may find our oldest houses going down. I attribute it to the inaction of the present Government. Ever since lines of steamers have been established on the Atlantic we have had regular mails from Halifax to Europe. The hon. Secretary of State told us the other day that the subsidy to this line would be withdrawn. The people of Nova Scotia have always relied on the fortnightly mail for getting their goods, and it has been so regular that they could almost count to a day when the vessels would arrive, but that line may be withdrawn. That is a very serious matter for Halifax, and it appears to me it is going forward crab fashion. Between thirty and forty years we have had those boats running. I will not enlarge upon this subject, because my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) stated the thing fully and clearly last year, and it is unnecessary for me to say anything more about it. I have been in business about forty-two years. This is the fourth crisis that has occurred during that period. I think that this is far worse than all the others put together, and, as I said before, I attribute it in a great measure to the want of action on the part of this Government. We have nothing to rely upon now but our fisheries and shipping, and it is well we have those interests to depend on. I believe last year our fisheries realized between five and six millions of dollars, and our farmers have done pretty well. Our ships are not working profitably on account of the low rate of freights. I thought the winter port question was settled, but it does not seem to be. I thought Halifax was pretty well established as the winter port of the Dominion. All must see how well things work on that line and its great advantages. Passengers who left Montreal on Friday night at 10 o'clock, arrived in Halifax at 1.30 on Sunday, and were landed in Ireland the following Sunday. My hon. friend Mr. Muirhead, who I am glad to see in his place, reached here on Thursday last, just from England, in seven days and nine hours from Derry to Halifax, and eight hours from thence to Miramichi. Surely with all the safety and comfort this route gives it ought to be satisfactory, but I find a scheme of Mr. Sewell for running a line of steamers from Quebec all the year round has been discussed in the House of Commons and the Premier is reported to have said:—

“The Government were now considering the idea of a winter port down the St. Lawrence, but had not much money to put into a trial venture. The question was one for further enquiry, and the Government would be lax in their duties did they not prosecute the enquiry to some result. He was anxious that it should result in the solution contended for by the member for Levis. He hoped the member for Levis would feel satisfied with the discussion so far, and would not prosecute it further.”

I cannot account for this except for the fact that the elections are soon to take place. I cannot understand why such an impracticable undertaking should be thought of or discussed. A man who would go out of Quebec in the winter time to navigate the Gulf of St. Lawrence would be taking his life in his hands. Some members spoke about shipping lumber, but don't we know that during the open season more lumber is shipped than the English market requires. In confirmation of this, I would refer the hon. gentleman to Mr. Wark and Mr. Muirhead, who from personal knowledge, are well able to give information on the subject. I think they would state it as a perfectly mad scheme. The Government have lately had a trial of Mr. Sewell's boats, and the people of Prince Edward Island know pretty well what the result of that trial has been. To make it at all successful, a very large sum would have to be expended in building breakwaters. I am of the opinion that any money prudently spent would be well invested, because Prince Edward Island is a most valuable Province, calculated to produce an enormous amount of wealth. Any scheme that would overcome the difficulty of communicating with that Province in winter, I would most heartily support. I would advise the Government the next time they think of adopting any scheme, not to try one proposed by a man who has a bee in his bonnet. I want to say something with regard to the trade of the Maritime Provinces over the Intercolonial. There passed from Riviere du Loup into the Maritime Provinces in 1877, 8214 carloads of goods, 27 carloads every working day in the year, valued at $17,000,000 independent of through traffic for transshipment. This is what the Halifax delegates, Mr. Brynner and Mr. Dwyer, showed at the meeting of the Board of Trade, held in this city in January last. The statement was made up from data furnished by the Superintendent, and any gentleman who has not read their speeches, reported in the proceedings, I would respectfully ask them, in the interests of the Dominion, to do so. They say in their report that it was an easy task to dwell upon the importance of the Intercolonial Railway to the Upper Provinces, as the statistics kindly furnished enabled them to give an approximate valuation of the produce and manufactures of Ontario and Quebec distributed by the road during the year 1877; the estimated value being $17,000,000, nearly three-fourths of which would be for manufactured goods. In this connection it is believed that if a proper system were established to furnish statistics of the Inter-provincial trade, it could be shown that the amount named is a low valuation, but, as it is, it affords ample testimony of the impulse which the road has given to this branch of commerce, and especially so, when we reflect that the estimated value of the whole trade of old Canada with the Maritime Provinces, Newfoundland included, was for the year previous to the opening of the Intercolonial between 10 and 11 millions, and for the year previous to Confederation only $1,517,116. There was also the Portland route working with Halifax during the past summer—and it is still in operation with St. John, N. B., and four steamers running during the whole season between Montreal, Quebec and the Gulf ports; the amount of property thus carried must be very large. Besides this, there were many other opportunities for shipment by steam and sail from Montreal to Halifax, St. John, and Prince Edward Island, the value of which there are no means at the present time of ascertaining. However, the comparison of the figures given will afford some idea of the great change which has taken place in our trade relations within the past eleven years. If the trade is valuable to any country that trade must be to Ontario. We have heard a good deal about “milking the Ontario cow”, and I presume she would be milked much harder if the Government are disposed to give fair play. Now, let us look at the other side of the shield. We find in a statement made by Mr. Dwyer at the annual meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, a few days ago, that the trade upward had not increased. The evidence on the subject showed that there was comparatively little trade to the Upper Provinces; that it had not increased. Why is this? Because we are supplying no coal to the Upper Provinces. We are sending up no sugar to be refined. If that is not jug-handle trade I don't know what is. All this money is taken out of the Maritime Provinces. We have had no return traffic. We don't grudge it to the Upper Provinces, but we ask them to do something for us in return. The Government have very kindly built us a new depot, but we find it is entirely too small, and facilities should be extended as promised. I went up there last summer, and found it crowded with goods, and I was told that there were eighteen car loads of goods from Ontario, and the consignees wanted them, but there was no room to land them. It is just as much for the interest of Ontario to have that depot enlarged as it is for the people of Halifax. What is worse, after all this large sum of money has been spent, all this western traffic has to go from the old depot. A man sends up a load of goods and what is he to do? He goes to the Intercolonial Railway, and there he has to unload, first in that depot, and then proceed to the other. It is a most unfortunate thing that the depot was not made large enough while they were about it. When this Government came into power, they made a change in the tariff on the Intercolonial Railway, by which a large number of industries between Halifax, and fifty or sixty miles up the road, were stricken down. The tariff was such that they could not be continued. What is more, we have been in the habit of building ships at Halifax, but there has not been a keel laid there for some time. My hon. friend, Mr. McLelan, clearly showed on the floor of this House, that they have not only stricken down the industries along the line of railway, but they have reduced the earnings of the road. Their policy struck both ways. What is more, the farmers who live alongside that railway, and who had paid the right of way of that road, were all driven off. In Nova Scotia, I may explain, the main roads of the country were kept up by Government grants. When the railway was completed, main roads of the country going in the direction of the track, it was supposed, would not be used again, and were let go out of repair. The consequence was that they were left to depend upon the railroad, and very bad usage they received. The firm with which I am connected have been interested in building ships for the last twenty-five years at Maitland, where 12,000 tons of shipping have been put off in one year, and as fine ships turned off as there are in the Province. The trade has been stricken down, and I will give an instance of it. Last year a ship in which I was interested was launched. Almost everything put into that vessel was obtained from St. John and the States, and the chains, anchors and wire rigging only, from England. I felt the force of Hon. Mr. Miller's remarks the other day, when speaking of the duty per capita. That hon. gentleman ably defends our interests at all times, and I may say in confirmation of his statement that one or two schooners are kept constantly running, during the open season, between St. John and Maitland, and only water casks for this vessel were sent from Halifax, and would not have been, but a chance offered of sending them by water. We are now building a vessel of about 1,600 tons at Maitland, and we get from the United States our iron, canvas, spikes, flour and meal. In that one instance $10,000 has been paid to the United States for materials we should have got at home. This may explain why we took $5,000,000 more from them last year, and they took $4,000,000 less from us. From the present outlook the time is not far distant when everything entering into the building and outfit of vessels will be got cheaper in the United States than in England. I was strongly struck with the following paragraph in one of our papers:—

Hon. Mr. Northrup.

“The imports and exports of the United States furnish a singular commentary on the statement that the country is being ‘ruined by Protection.’ We fancy it would be a good thing for the Dominion if it was being ‘ruined’ in the same way. During the month of January the exports exceeded the imports by $3,445,907; and during the seven months ending 31st January, the excess of exports over imports amounted to the enormous sum of $135,699,137. The Dominion, as we have already stated, showed a balance of $20,000,000 the other way in 1877.”

It appears to me there is nothing this Government touches.—I don’t say it is intentionally—that does not hurt Halifax. They transferred the Windsor Branch to the Western Counties Railroad, and the interruption of trade is a very serious thing for Halifax. A quarrel arose between the two companies; goods had to be changed at Windsor, and everything was knocked about, so much so, that the people would not order, and the tariff was put up from 25 to 50 per cent. The result was, Halifax lost the sale of the goods, that trade went to New Brunswick and the United States, and a large quantity which should have come to Halifax did not come. Fancy such a tariff as this—a barrel of flour, from Halifax to Bridgetown, a distance of 80 miles, 50 cents—while from Portland to Bridgetown it is only 36 cents. This matter, I notice, has been brought up by one of the members of the Local Legislature, who made a charge against the Provincial Secretary. He stated:—“I remonstrated, but could do nothing.” I take it he remonstrated with the Government there, because, if I understand it, no tariff is legal unless approved of by the Dominion Government.

Hon. Mr. Northup.

Therefore, I think it fairly comes home to them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—I felt this to be a matter affecting Halifax so materially that I would have done wrong if I had not spoken of it. I have such profound respect for this honorable body that the ship I am building I am going to call the “Senator,” and you may rely upon it that wherever she goes she will do you no discredit. She will be as fine a craft as ever was launched in Nova Scotia. I hope she will have your good wishes for her success, and whenever you see it announced that the good ship “Senator,” Captain Fulton, has arrived anywhere, you will know she is representing this body. Capt. Fulton is a sharp fellow, and fit to command a ship. When he sees a gale coming, he reefs his sails, snugs things up, and gets his tackle ready. He has a good man on the lookout, and a good man at the helm, and he takes his position on the quarter deck and watches everything until the gale is over. Then, when the fine weather comes, he unreefs his sails, throws his canvas to the breeze and sails away. There is another good ship—the ship of State,—a good ship she was, and had a good captain. For twenty years she braved the seas and rode triumphantly on the waves, but in an evil day for this country, because a cry was raised that she was to be swamped in the Pacific, the people discharged their old captain and put Captain Mackenzie in charge. And where is that ship now? Drifting helplessly in the gale with her sails flying in tatters, and ropes flying in every direction. And where is the crew? Paralyzed and useless. If Capt. Macdonald is not very soon reinstated in command she will drift hopelessly on the rock falsely called free trade, and there will be an end of her.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I felt somewhat disposed to quarrel with the hon. gentleman who has introduced this resolution, because he went a very long way indeed outside the notice he put on the paper, which was simply with reference to the transporting of grain to Halifax. The hon. gentleman in his speech travelled over the whole of the commercial policy of the Government, and attacked it on all points. No member of the House could be expected, I presume, to be in a position to answer a speech of that kind without notice. Not even the members of the Government, though they are the most competent to do so, are prepared to reply on such very short notice. I must say, however, that when the hon. gentleman told us that he was going to call his ship after us individually and collectively, any feeling of indignation that might have stirred my bosom disappeared. I was a little amused at an hon. gentleman coming from a free trade province, telling us that the most terrific calamity that Nova Scotia could meet with was to strike on the rock of free trade.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—I said a false free trade.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman thought duties should be put on or increased on certain articles. I do not think that what he meant by protection is what is meant by gentlemen in the other end of the building when they say that protection consists in reducing duties. The hon. gentleman, when he spoke of protection meant increased duties. I was very much surprised that the hon. gentleman should proclaim such a doctrine on the floor of this House, or anywhere else. He spoke about the tariff on the Windsor and Annapolis Branch Railway being raised. That road is now controlled by the Dominion Government, but by a private company. The raising of that tariff is hardly a matter which the Government had much to do with. Then the hon. gentleman told us in speaking of the good ship "Senator," which is building at Maitland, and which is to be a credit to this body, and to the builder, and to the Province of Nova Scotia, nearly all of his supplies for that vessel were purchased in the United States, and he seemed to think that it was a great calamity that he was getting those supplies cheaper in the United States than he could get them at home.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—I did not say it was a calamity.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman spoke in that way. I want to know whether he thinks the Government ought to make those articles a great deal dearer by increasing the duties!

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Power.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—All I have to say is this, that what we call protection in the neighboring country has brought about this state of things, that we can buy everything far cheaper than in Great Britain.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has not answered my question at all. We are not now discussing the policy of the United States, but the policy of this country. And I want to know whether the hon. gentleman thinks that the Government of Canada should impose a duty on these articles used in shipbuilding, so as to shut them out?

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—One of my complaints was, the Government had put such a high tariff on the railroad that we cannot send anything by it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—You can send them as well by water, direct from England, or you can get them from St. John, if necessary.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—He can get them from the United States.

Hon. Mr. POWER—He told us he did get them from the United States. He told us about the change of tariff on the Intercolonial Railway in 1874. He left out of sight completely the fact that the tariff had been changed again since that time, and so adjusted that it gives very general satisfaction. The hon. gentleman told us that, at the terminus in Halifax, there was not sufficient accommodation for freight that came down by the Western branch of the railway; and that it had to go to the old depot. Until the present Government took up this question of the terminus in Halifax, all the freight had to go to the old depot. I think the Government are perfectly right in providing accommodation for goods coming by the Intercolonial Railway first, and giving such goods a preference over freight by private roads. The hon. gentleman spoke at considerable length of the amount of freight over the Intercolonial. I would like to call attention to that fact, because it shows this—and I think the experience of every hon. gentleman here who has gone over that road, or had anything to do with it, must agree with me—that the Intercolonial Railway is not only one of the best on the continent, but is one of the best managed. The management reflects infinite credit on the Department of Public Works who manage it so well. The hon. gentleman stated that in another place the Finance Minister had said that the Government were unanimous on the question of the Sugar tariff. Now, I listened to the speech of the Finance Minister with a good deal of attention, and I don't remember that he said that the Government were unanimous. He said that they had come to the conclusion that they would not disturb the tariff this year; and it was not said that they were unanimous on the sugar question. I know they are not.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—The Government are always unanimous?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Of course they are in one sense because when the private opinion of any member of the Government is over-ruled by a majority he has to give way, unless the matter is of very vital importance. The hon. gentleman told us that the coal trade was ruined and that this was due to the inaction of the Government. From what one sees in the papers it is apparent the United States coal trade is ruined as well as our own. Surely the conduct of the Dominion Government has not ruined the American coal trade. I am not now expressing any opinion on the advisability of putting a duty on American coal. Possibly, if that question were before the House, I should be disposed to vote in the same way as the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. But I do not think that the question has been brought before the House in the proper way. Then, with reference to the matter which has been regularly brought before the House, I may say that I read Mr. Black's first report after he came back from the Upper Provinces to Halifax, after his interview with the Premier. He did not say then that the Government had repudiated the agreement to carry two cargoes at the stipulated rate. He did not complain of the conduct of the Government at all at that time. The first complaint against the Government appeared in Mr. Black's letter, which was published in the papers the day before the election in the county of Halifax, and as the hon. Senator has said something about influencing the election, I may say that it was generally understood that that letter was written with a view to influencing voters. I have before me what the hon. gentleman has alluded to—Mr. Black's second report. He says that he was sent the second time by the Chamber of Commerce to Montreal and the west, to see about the matter. I think any gentleman who will read the report will see that, so far as this grain trade via Halifax is concerned, there is no blame justly to be attached to the Government. Mr. Black says in the beginning of his report:—

Hon. Mr. Power.

“Finding that new difficulties, which had not been previously anticipated, had lately arisen, of such a nature that Government aid would not avail, I concluded it was not necessary for me to again interview the Government unless said difficulties could be overcome.”

“At Montreal I found that both the Grand Trunk Railway and Messrs. Allan were, as previously, most anxious to have the route opened, but that, as the latter thought they ought to get from Riviere du Loup the same rate that transient steamers could now get at Portland, where they were in demand on account of the excess of freight at that port, and as the Grand Trunk Railway could not give from Riviere du Loup a greater proportion than they were paying the Dominion and Beaver lines of steamers without breaking their contracts with those lines, it had, so far, been impossible for them to agree upon a rate. The Grand Trunk Railway say that if Messrs. Allan will agree to the same terms from Riviere du Loup that their Dominion and Beaver contracts call for, they will immediately try their best to get one or two cargoes in Ontario, but they do not wish to carry more than is necessary for these two cargoes, as the surplus would be left at Halifax to go at higher rates; therefore they wish Messrs. Allan to mention name of steamer, so that they may know how much to engage, or else to agree to carry what surplus may remain on their regular steamers at same rates.”

It will be seen then that the Government were not standing in the way. The difficulty, it appears, was with the Railway and Steamship Companies. Mr. Black then went from Montreal to Chicago, and he says:—

“At Chicago, I met on 'Change a number of the largest shippers, from whom I learned that at present there was not the slightest probability of any business being done via Halifax, for the following reasons: The length of time on the road, the uncertainty as to what vessel the goods would go on, and the rate of inland freights. The rate of freight on grain and other heavy goods is now 10 cents per 100 lbs. from Chicago and St. Louis to the seaboard; this, if brought by the Grand Trunk Railway to either Riviere du Loup or Portland, would give that road comparatively nothing. And as to the other reasons, freight now is engaged for a certain named vessel, it leaves Chicago on Tuesday, and on the following Saturday it is on board the vessel named, and proceeding to sea; this despatch cannot possibly be approximated by Canadian routes; nor can any freight from Chicago be certain to meet any desired steamer at Portland. Despatch is of vital importance to Chicago shippers, and until that is established, and any elevator built at Halifax, traffic cannot be expected to change from old tried routes. Grain goes in bulk on steamers from New York, except sufficient in bags to trim the vessel, and there is no reason why it should not do so from Halifax.

"The Grand Trunk Railway is not getting any traffic from Chicago at present, except for local points, as owing to the low rates, so long an inland route cannot possibly compete with shorter lines running to the seaboard. The Chicago merchants say that if the route is expected to succeed, even if rates were equalized, the Messrs. Allan will be compelled to have an agent resident there with whom shippers can deal directly, and who will be empowered to bind that Company by contract."

There is not a word about anything that the Government could do in the matter. The only reference to the Government in the whole report is in Sir Hugh Allan's letter, in which he says an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway might be greatly facilitated if the Government would acquire the Riviere du Loup branch. That is a very important question of policy; and I believe it has been in a certain way before the Government, but not for any length of time. It is just barely possible that, if the Government should acquire the control of the Riviere du Loup branch, the Grand Trunk Railway might then, having a longer mileage on the Portland branch of their road, be tempted to discriminate against the Riviere du Loup branch and Halifax. Of course, that is a thing which the Government would have to guard against. There is another matter in which I am perfectly in accord with the hon. gentleman, and that is the fortnightly mail service between Halifax and Europe. The members from the Lower Provinces were very much disappointed indeed when the hon. Secretary of State gave the reply which he did to the question asked on that subject by the hon. member from Cumberland. The reply perhaps was not as decided in tone as it might have been, and I hope that the Government may have since that time reconsidered the matter, and that we may have a different answer before the end of the Session.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—It appears to me the hon. Senator from Halifax (Mr. Power) has again endeavoured, if possible, to help the Government in defeating the great interests of Nova Scotia, and especially of the Port of Halifax, just in the same way as he did the fortnightly mail service. My hon. friend must well have known, and does know, that the great pervading question on which the Minister of Militia was elected at Halifax at the last election, was the promise of the Government aided by the return of the Government candidate, to make if possible that place the grain port of the Dominion. The leader of the Government actually promised immediately to send two cargoes. The electors very reasonably believed that it was their interest to return a member of the Government, and place him in the position at that time, and then, backed, as he would be, by the people of Halifax, something would be done towards bringing about that result making Halifax the winter grain port. At least they decided to give the Government and Mr. Jones a trial; yet we find the hon. Senator from Halifax (Mr. Power) after helping at this election in making it one of the most prominent planks in the Ministerial platform, and well knowing the electors were deceived, endeavouring, by every means possible, to assist the Government with some excuse to slip out of their engagement, and to shift the responsibility from their shoulders. I do not consider that is fair of my hon. friend, coming from Halifax as he does, and knowing how deeply the people of that city are interested in having the grain trade established there. The election turned on that question. The leader of the Government said "we will make the experiment and send down two loads." Mark you, this was just before the election, but since the election we have heard nothing about it, and the Government has not made one step to do anything but, on the contrary, has thrown every obstacle in the way.

Hon. Mr. Power.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Do you mean to say that the two loads never went down!

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Never. Mr. Brydges, before the election, stated that he had the whole matter in his hands, and he told the Chamber of Commerce at Halifax, in effect, that it would be done; but after the election, when the "Austrian" was there, ready for a cargo, Mr. Brydges said he knew nothing at all about it, and threw cold water on the whole affair. The fact is, the subordinates of the Government run the Government, and the Ministry are subordinate to them. It is well known that the Minister of Militia is agent for a line of steamers hostile to the port of Halifax, and it is believed that Mr. Brydges holds stock in it. I fear there is yet something more behind the scenes—some influences brought to bear on the Government, by parties who ought not to have influenced them, to the detriment of the country, particularly to the “Intercolonial” and the port of Halifax. I am sorry that the hearing of my hon. friend (Mr. Northup) is such that he cannot come oftener before the House, and propound his views on trade and finance, because his long experience in such matters would have a beneficial effect, not only on Nova Scotia, but the whole Dominion. To-day he has favored us with a large amount of information which must be of great value. My hon. friend from Halifax talked about the sugar duties. He knows it is a vital question to Nova Scotia—I believe one of the most important that could engage the attention of the people of that country. It involves not only our large shipping interests, but our coal and iron industries as well. The hon. gentleman, the Minister of Militia, comes up here avowedly standing in a hostile attitude to the policy of the Government on that important subject, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Scott) calls it a question of trifling importance. I say the Government are not in accord on the subject, and the Minister of Militia stands in a false position in the Government. Our fishing and shipping interests depend on that, and, I may say, the flour interests of Ontario also, to a certain extent. The re-adjustment of the sugar duties would not raise the price of sugar to the consumer, or affect the revenue; but, as matters are at present, we are obliged to get what we consume from the United States, and the consequence is, we have to take our return cargoes of sugars to the United States, and purchase flour and other products of that country in return, which we could get as readily, or more readily, from Ontario, without increasing the price to the consumers, if the trade were running in the right channel. I say not only

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

Nova Scotia, but the whole Dominion, and especially Ontario, should feel interested in this sugar question, because it involves so many other interests. I cannot see how any hon. gentlemen from Nova Scotia can sustain the Government, or a member of the Government, who oppose not only the interests of that Province, but of the whole country. There has been a good deal said about the Maritime calves milking the Ontario cow. If the policy of the Government lasts much longer, and they continue in power, Ontario will have very little milk to give. As the British Consul at Toronto said recently, the Americans have nearly the whole Ontario market. I consider that the Government are not dealing fairly with this question. And when the hon. Senator from Halifax says the people of Nova Scotia are satisfied with the manner in which the local traffic on the Intercolonial Railway is managed, and the policy pursued in the general management of the local roads, which are to a large extent, under the control of the Government, he states what is very different from my information and experience. The through traffic is so inconsistent with local traffic as to prove seriously detrimental to the trade of Halifax and the Province at large. As far as winter navigation from Quebec is concerned, of which the Government seem to approve, I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Northup) it would be a most dangerous experiment, even if the Government had money to waste in a matter of this kind. It must prove detrimental to life and property if attempted. As regards the shipping interests of Nova Scotia, what has enabled the United States to build ships that sail on every sea?

Hon. Mr. PENNY—They have no ships.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—They have ships, and nearly as many as they had before the war, and they have got them, and the carrying trade besides, by the policy of protecting their native industries and commerce. We are obliged to pay more for our ships in consequence of the unpatriotic policy of the Government—a Government which, but for the strenuous exertions of its opponents, would have forced taxation upon our shipping mate rials, whilst the Government preceding them took off the duties. It does not well become the hon. Senator from Halifax to sustain this Government, which has endeavored to tax that industry, as well as every other that benefits Halifax. I should be proud to see this Dominion furnishing, as it could and ought to furnish, three-fourths of the material which went into the making up of the ship "Senator," of which we have heard to-day, and which had to be purchased from the United States. I believe that it could be done under a proper readjustment of the tariff, which would take off the taxation to a large extent, from materials which we cannot produce ourselves, and put it on others which we do, or could, produce. Instead of increasing the expense of such materials to Nova Scotia, I believe it would be a lightening of the taxation and it does not become the hon. Senator from Halifax to say that such a policy would be destructive to the people of Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. POWER — Is the hon. gentleman a free-trader in shipping material?

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH — I cannot be what does not exist. We have no free trade as far as the interests of Nova Scotia are concerned, we are only free to buy but not to sell. I say we have no free-trade of any kind, though I believe there are many things upon which taxation can be lowered. A national policy in the interests of the shipping of Nova Scotia, as well as in the interest of every other industry natural to the country generally, would decrease taxation on some articles, and increase it on others; but, in the main, would decrease the cost of the common necessities of life, and with it the cost and expenses to the ship-builder; not only that, but build up such a profitable and extended trade for our vessels that they would (more than commensurate with the cost) have a large profit, even should the cost of construction be greater. Therefore, in more ways than one, in fact in every way, by adopting a policy upon the principle such as the United States has enforced and prospered under, we can encourage the varied industries of the Dominion, and make our country prosperous without increasing the burdens upon the people.

Hon. Mr. Kaulbach.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—It appears to me that the Government does not occupy the proper position in respect to this matter of a winter port at Halifax, for the shipment of grain and other produce of this Dominion to foreign markets. The people of Canada have about $36,000,000 invested in railroads—that is, taking all the Government roads. And it is the duty of the Government to take the initiative in all matters which would increase the traffic upon the lines of railway under their control, and make the deficiencies, that appear in the account of those lines, a surplus if possible. But although they have this large interest in the railroad, the people of Halifax have found it impossible to get from the Government any answer as to what they would do in this question. The report of Mr. Black, at first, said nothing could be done, but when certain things were occurring in Halifax, and it was important to the Government that the people should be influenced in a certain way, they were told that two cargoes would be carried at a given rate over the Intercolonial Railway. Any hon. gentleman will see that no company in Halifax would have been justified, on that promise, in building elevators, and making arrangements for the trade when the Government had not estimated the sum for which they would do a regular business. No man will make arrangement for anything connected with that trade unless he is apprised of the rate at which the Government will carry, and continue to carry. No answer has been given to the people of Halifax yet as to what that rate will be; nor has any intimation been given as to what they are disposed to do. Now, I think the Government should, in justice to the people of Halifax, give them the figures at which they will do a regular business, and enable the merchants there to establish this trade. My hon. friend (Mr. Macpherson) seems surprised that the two cargoes were not carried over the road.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—Has nothing at all gone?

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Not a kernel of wheat, only chaff, and that we are tired of. If the Government will do their part the people of Halifax will do all that is necessary to start the trade and continue it. Let the Government name the figure at which they will carry grain, and if that figure will warrant the merchants in establishing the trade, they will do the rest. My hon. friend (Mr. Northup) says the Government should not run the road upon commercial principles. The Government have not only to look to the road itself, but to the whole country, and if the people do not receive the benefit on one side, the Government have to consider whether in another aspect of the question a more than counterbalancing benefit may not be derived. I believe there are about 50,000 tons of freight shipped at American ports, the produce of Ontario and Quebec, during the winter season. My hon. friend from Halifax has told the House the amount of disbursements that every vessel carrying 5,000 quarters of grain would make while loading—something like $3,000. You can understand what an advantage such an expenditure as that would be to Halifax if it were made there, instead of at Portland, New York or Boston. Therefore, the Government should look not only to what the results would be to the road alone, but also to the people of the Dominion at large. Reference has been made to the trade of Halifax, and I think the hon. gentleman has not over-stated the position of that city at present—that almost every interest which was formerly prosperous there has been depressed, and the trade drawn away from it. The Government have given facilities to the merchants of Ontario and Quebec to send their goods all over the country by the Intercolonial, in a manner that is lessening the sales of the merchants of Halifax. The West India trade, which was the life of that city for a long period—as long as we can remember, almost—has, through the change in the sugar duties, to a large extent, been destroyed. The hon. the Minister of Militia, last year, in his place in Parliament, stated that the trade of the Maritime Provinces was worth $3,000,000 annually, and the policy the Government were pursuing was surely destroying that trade and giving it to the United States. I only mention this as one point on which the city of Halifax has suffered, and I say it was the duty of the Government, if it were possible, to have entered into an arrangement to give Halifax some compensation for the many losses their trade has suffered. It is, therefore, the duty of the Government not to wait to see what the Halifax merchants may do, but to take the initiative, state their terms, and, if possible, make them such as will tend to build up a trade there in the shipment of produce. It is too late to talk about this winter, but they should enter into communication with the Chamber of Commerce of Halifax, and let them know at what rate they will carry grain over the Intercolonial. And in the end, I am sure it would be better to do it even at a small direct loss, if necessary, to secure a great indirect gain, and let the arrangements be carried out in time for next year. I think the blame rested with the Government for delaying the matter. Let them state their terms at once, and the people of Halifax will know on what to depend.

Hon. Mr. McLellan.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I would like to ask, what the Government were to do in this matter? Were they to bring those cargoes down? Is it to be expected they would go to Chicago and buy the grain to make this experiment?

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—They could name a rate.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—They did name a rate at which they would carry the cargoes, and that was, according to Mr. Black, perfectly satisfactory so far. The hon. member from Halifax, read from the report of Mr. Black, and stated, that after this arrangement was made, the grain did not come down. Did they suppose the Government were to buy it and afterwards bring it down?

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—As soon as the Government gave that answer Mr. Black was sent up, but the connections were broken on the road in consequence of the delay of the Government. When we sent our delegate the first time, Mr. Brydges denied he had agreed to any rate, and said that the Government had declined to have anything to do with it.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—What I understand is that the Government had arranged to take down two cargoes, and then when they did not come down, because no one sent them, the Government were blamed for it.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—When Mr. Black went up the second time, the connections were broken, and it was too late.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—The hon. gentleman from Halifax read the reasons why the experiment was not tried, and none of them had anything to do with the Government. If we are to judge by Mr. Northup's remarks it would seem that every one likes to have a little free-trade for himself. My hon. friend (Mr. Northup) goes to the United States to buy materials for his ships, though he could buy them at home just as well as he could there, only that he would pay a little more for them. He could practise the protective theory if he pleased, but it is just like the Musselmen in the poem, "Who among them eat the pig up," though pork is forbidden by Mahomet. Each thought the others eat the wrong bits, but, notwithstanding, all the pig was consumed at last. In the same way everybody wants the Government to do everything for them. One hon. gentleman wants grain carried at a loss, and somebody else will want something else done at a loss, until at last my hon. friend from Saugeen, who is so anxious about the finances of the country, if this is to go on long, will have a much worse tale to tell than he has now. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northup) stated things were getting worse and worse all the time in the coal and other industries, in consequence of the tariff. Yet he and every hon. gentleman in the House who has spoken in that sense, was in the Senate when the bill was passed to place the tariff on coal, sugar &c, where it is now. That was the time to have spoken, but there was nothing said about it then, because their friends were in office, and it was only when the present Government came in that they found the country was ruined, and wanted to have those duties placed on coal once more. If we were going into the sugar question at large, I could show that it was the change in the duties, made in them by the late Government, according to Mr. Drummond's statement, which had killed the loaf sugar manufacture, that that branch of the manufacture had been stopped long before the late Government had gone out of power. He was told there was a change of circumstances, but what did that amount to practically in the Dominion? It amounts to this, not that more sugar comes from the United States, because what came from there was the white sugar, which came before the present

Hon. Mr. Penny.

Government took office; but the Scotch yellows, which, of course, came from Scotland.

Hon. Gentleman—No, no.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—The yellow sugar now comes from Scotland, as hon. gentlemen will see if they look into the question.

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—There is no doubt, as stated by the hon. gentleman from Londonderry, there has been $36,000,000 expended in these government railroads, and for what has that money been expended if not to increase an inter-provincial trade? I suppose the expenditure on the canals is also for increasing the trade between the different Provinces, and it is not expected they will pay large dividends, on commercial principles. Unfortunately narrow, selfish, local interests are often opposed to the patriotic policy that ought to embrace the interests of the Dominion as a whole. We were told before the Intercolonial was built that we could not adopt a policy favorable to our own interests which might be considered retaliatory to the policy of the United States, because they could stop the Western Provinces from getting to the sea in the winter season. Now that we have communication through our own territory, the Government should look to it, and try to encourage home trade, and not allow such an anomalous condition of affairs to continue as at present exists between this country and the United States. Look at the Treaty of Washington!

Hon. Mr. WARK—Who made the Treaty?

Hon. Mr. WILMOT—I care not who made it, but when the people of the United States were getting the use of our canals, they prevented our people using theirs on principles of reciprocity. You may call it retaliation, or what you please, but I am disposed to treat them as liberally as they treat us, and that, I believe, is the true patriotic policy for the people of Canada to adopt. If we are ever to become a nation we must have a due regard to the interests of our own country. That is the point, and when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northup) says that these supplies come from the United States, where he can get them cheaper than anywhere else, I say it is the best proof that protection has not increased the cost of producing them, and the tariff regulating trade does not necessarily increase the price to the consumer. The people of the United States give encouragement to their own labor, and that has brought down prices and enabled them not only to supply themselves, but to supply us and to take our West India trade from us. Instead of the people of this country paying forty to fifty per cent. taxes on molasses, sugar, coffee, and other articles that we cannot raise, the Government might as well send the taxgatherer round and collect from every person by direct taxation. If we want to increase our West India trade, let us establish a reciprocal trade with them. I referred the other day to the report of the commissioners who went to the West Indies and the Brazils some years ago. The people of those countries were willing to enter into a reciprocal trade with us, which would have been mutually beneficial, because they could supply us with articles we do not produce, and we could supply them with such articles they do not produce or manufacture. That is something the Government should look after. We should employ our own labor, and give the benefit to our own people. This one-sided free trade that we adopt,—buying in the cheapest market without any regard of how we are to pay, is a policy which can work nothing but injury to the country.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—What I understand from the mover of this motion is, that the Government would not name the rates at which they would carry grain to Halifax, and the merchants of Halifax were prevented, therefore, from making such arrangements as are necessary to be made in advance in such cases. I think that is a good ground of complaint, and it seems strange to me that the Government should act in such a manner, after having expended a large sum in extending the Intercolonial Railway half a mile through Halifax for the purpose of getting to the water, to enable this foreign trade to be carried on. I think, from what I have seen, the Government have expended about three-quarters of a million dollars in extending the Intercolonial Railway into Halifax, towards the water.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The complaint is, they have not taken it to the water. They have expended $640,000 in running it three-fourths of a mile into the city of Halifax, and the very first objection raised by Sir Hugh Allan was, it did not reach the water.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—The complaint is the same. After the expenditure has taken place, the facilities are not afforded. He, furthermore, complains that the people were to a certain extent deceived last winter. They were promised that a quantity of wheat would be carried experimentally, and that, by means of this experiment, the Government could learn at what rate they could carry the grain. In consequence of that experiment not having been made, the people are still ignorant of what the rate will be, and, therefore, their trade is paralyzed.

Hon. Mr. WARK—I think the complaint seems to be that the Dominion will not carry goods at a less rate than the expense of working the railway in order to assist the city of Halifax. Under the best management which that railway can be brought, there have been deficiencies so far. If the Government offer to carry grain for one shilling and three-pence per quarter from Rivière du Loup to Halifax, it is a great deal less than Major Robertson calculated it could be carried for. His calculations were that it would be one shilling and eight pence sterling per barrel of flour from Quebec to Halifax, and a quarter amounts to eight bushels—nearly three barrels. It is evident that would be carrying goods at a loss. Is the rest of the Dominion to be taxed to make up this loss, in order that the wheat of Ontario should be shipped at Halifax instead of some other port? I am surprised at the complaint of the hon. gentleman who introduced this motion, that the people went to St. John to buy material for their ships. Surely that should be no cause of complaint. If the St. John people are able to import materials and sell them cheaper than the Halifax merchants, they deserve to get the trade. Halifax has the name of possessing a great deal of wealth, and it must not expect the Government to shoulder this experiment, and run the railway at a loss for the benefit of Halifax. The Halifax merchants must put their hands into their pockets, and go into the business in earnest. They must bring the wheat from the producer, and erect their elevators at Halifax when it comes there, so as not to entail expense on the forwarders in the West. The views of the merchants of Halifax would seem to be that the Government should carry down the grain at half price, and tax the whole Dominion for it.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WARK—One of the mover's complaints against the Government, was the selling of the Windsor Branch. If I remember right, there was an Order-in-Council, passed by the late Government, to transfer that branch to the Windsor & Annapolis Railway, before this Government came into power at all. But there is nothing the late Government have done wrong, but is charged to the present Administration. The sugar duties, were put on by the late Government, but the present one comes in for the blame.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—The Windsor & Annapolis Railway was given to the Western Counties Railway, beyond them.

Hon. Mr. WARK—It was done by the late Government.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—No; it was all one connection through, under the late Government.

Hon. Mr. WARK—But did the late Government fix the rate of toll when they agreed to transfer it? If not, why complain that the present Government has not done so?

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—There is no doubt that what the hon. gentleman brought before the House is of material importance not only to the city of Halifax, but of great importance to the entire Dominion. I was surprised to hear from him the traffic there has been over that road during the past year from the Upper Provinces. I find there passed 4,072 car loads of flour, amounting to over 470,000 barrels, and some 28,600 barrels of oil, I suppose from Petrolia, for which we are taxed so heavily. There have gone down 3,000 or 4,000 barrels of meal, and the traffic generally has been very large, but the capacity of that road for taking business is comparatively unlimited, and really the additional cost to the Government of adding cars enough to carry grain is so trifling compared with the vast importance of the trade which it is hoped can be es-established, that it is astonishing to every one down in the Lower Provinces that the experiment was not fairly tried. There can be little doubt the Government did not act in good faith with the people of Halifax. It is true the railroad is now doing the business of the carriage of mails and passengers, and Halifax is the final port of arrival and departure from this Dominion during the winter season. That was only decided after extreme exertions were made by the Nova Scotian representatives, and after it was predicted over and over again that the experiment would result in utter failure. I believe no one rejoices more at its success than the people of the Upper Provinces. I observe by the press that every steamer which arrives at Halifax brings out some 700 or 1000 tons of goods to be carried over our own road to the upper Provinces. It is known that the great trouble in profitably working the Intercolonial has been the lack of return freight. They have to take up the cars empty, and yet it is stated that the road is doing a better and more prosperous business during the winter season than during the summer. Whatever aids in giving freight to that road is a material interest to the whole Dominion. As I stated before it has abundant capacity, and it is now universally acknowledged to be probably the finest road for its length upon the continent, a road over which any person, who travels it once, is willing to make a second trip. I have not found a single individual who has once ventured over the road, and having experienced the safety, comfort, convenience and rapidity with which he was carried over it, that has hesitated in adopting that road again. It is then the duty of the Government to develop the trade by that line in every way they can; and it was as important to the western people as to the people of the Maritime Provinces that they should have tried this experiment fairly and fully, and given the Halifax people, an opportunity of endeavoring to secure that grain trade. My hon. friend from Montreal appears to have a very small idea of the sugar trade, and thinks it is a matter of trifling importance.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—He said it was killed by the late Government.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Yes; I said that.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—I say it was crushed out by this Government, who refused to properly meet the bounty given to refiners in the United States. It was denied by the Government, only last year, that there was any bounty given in the United States to the refiners, and it was only after the matter was ferreted out by Mr. Dunstan—and the whole Dominion is indebted to him for the ability he has shown in this matter—it was only after the investigation of the facts, the American Government themselves seemed to become aware of what they were doing. They said if any bounty was given, it was not sufficient to crush out our sugar trade, and it was only after Mr. Dunstan's efforts had exposed the extent of the bounty that the American Government took a step backwards. I say that our Government should have met that bounty with countervailing duties. The old Government could not have understood it, none of us understood it then, as the fact was concealed. It is of deep interest to the whole Dominion that our shipping should be kept employed, and in destroying the sugar trade great damage was done to the whole country. If there is anything we are proud of, it is our commercial marine, standing as we do the third or fourth maritime power in the world. It is a source of pride to every Canadian that we can point to such shipping as the hon. Senator who introduced this motion has mentioned, and the addition of another sixteen hundred ton ship to our splendid merchant fleet is a matter of no small importance. From the same yard in Maitland there was launched the "William P. Lawrence," one of the biggest ships owned on the continent. Two years ago I saw her at St. John, loading, and it appeared as if she would carry away almost all the lumber of that city. She left three years ago, and has never returned since; her owners hear from her regularly, when the bills of exchange come in, bringing returns to them for their outlay. There is no enterprise more deserving of being protected and encouraged than the shipping interest of the country. I was sorry to hear the hon. Senator from Montreal asserting it was not a matter of such importance that we had lost our trade with the West Indies.

Hon. Mr. Macfarlane.

I believe we have an opportunity, if the Government will do their duty, to bring back a large volume of the trade that has been taken from us by the ingenuity of the people over the way.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—My hon. friend mistakes me if he supposes I think the sugar trade a very petty affair; but he is quite right in supposing I said that it was crushed out by the late Government. On another occasion I will, perhaps, have an opportunity of showing him that Mr. Drummond was compelled to shut up his factory by the late Government.

Hon. Mr. McCLELAN—I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken as to the importance of the shipping interests of the Dominion, and it is a living evidence of the liberality of the Government in dealing with the country, in continuing to admit material for the construction of our ships at a low rate of duty. I cannot understand how gentlemen from the Lower Provinces, in discussing questions of trade, can speak so volubly of our local interests and requirements, and in the same breath advocate a protective policy. Protection simply means the taxation of the million for the benefit of the few. To increase the burdens of the people who do the work, for the purpose of aggrandizing a few monopolists, many of whom are already in very prosperous circumstances, seems a very singular way to improve the condition of our maritime interests. Yet hon. gentlemen have chosen to advert to this question in connection with the motion of the hon. member from Halifax. Well, the occasion is not so improper after all, as the arguments have a somewhat similar application. In the one case, a special class only are the gainers, and not the most important one either. In the other case, a particular place is to be benefitted, even if every other locality has to lend a helping hand. Every sort and description of grievance is made to do service by hon. gentlemen, in order, apparently, to influence public opinion adversely to the present Administration. It is almost a wonder this Government is not charged, too, with having located the Intercolonial Railway by so crooked and circuitous a route, that the distance has been very greatly increased, and the cost of transit thereby greatly enhanced.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon Mr. McCLELAN—The people all over this Dominion have already been compelled to submit to a perfect waste of millions of money in building this road on this extraordinary location. It is likely to fall short of working expenses by half a million of dollars, and yet, hon. gentlemen who favored all this, find themselves willing to charge the Government of the day with neglecting the interests of the Eastern Terminus, by not taking the initiative and forcing grain shipments at Halifax. I presume the Government has done everything possible, to assist in developing this necessary trade, and if the grain of Ontario and the West has to be shipped at foreign ports—and the Maritime Provinces thereby deprived of this legitimate trade—the misfortune is due, very largely indeed, to the miserable location of the railway by the late Government. A shorter and cheaper route would have met the difficulty, under which the hon. member (Mr. Northup) and the people of Nova Scotia now labor. I can only say, that by the negotiations which have taken place, the Government have done everything to make successful this experiment, which a reasonable people could expect, and with proper facilities and enterprise at Halifax, I still hope this trade may be secured for that place.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—Although this discussion has already occupied the attention of the House the whole of the afternoon, I do not think anyone can say it has been time thrown away. I congratulate the hon. gentleman (Mr. Northup) who introduced this question, on the full and lucid statement which he furnished to the House, and which has placed them in possession of valuable information on this subject. There are one or two points in regard to which, I may, perhaps, be permitted to make a few observations before the hon. Secretary of State rises to reply on behalf of the Government. One or two remarks fell from the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power), who rose first after the introduction of the motion, which should not be allowed to go unanswered. That hon. gentleman said that the Intercolonial Railroad was not only one of the best railways on the continent but, was also one of the best managed. If it is one of the best roads on the con-continent, it is due to the wisdom of the Government who went out of office a few years ago, and the gentlemen who acted under them as Commissioners in charge of the work, and the country has reason to be deeply grateful to those gentlemen for having made our national highway, one of which we have so much reason to be proud. The management of the road under the late Government was also wise and satisfactory to the country. Under a judicious tariff, until 1874, the railway was gradually increasing its business and its revenue, while helping very largely to develop and foster the industries of the country. But we all know that the change of Government in 1873 was followed by a complete change in the management of the Intercolonial Railway, which produced great dissatisfaction and serious loss in the Maritime Provinces. If the management of the road is better to-day than it was the first year after this Government came into power, and had introduced what they called commercial principles on that line, it was due, not to the Government, but to the persistent efforts of those opposed to them in Parliament, and in the press. We all know that shortly after the change of Ministry, Mr. Brydges was placed in charge of the whole Government railway system of this country; that he took the Intercolonial Railway in hand immediately afterwards, and altered the tariff in such a way as to produce irritation, and inflict shameful injustice among a large section of the people who had invested money in industries along the line, under the policy of the previous Government. We all know that, in consequence of the policy adopted and carried out on that road by the former Government, important manufacturing industries had sprung up, and which had been fostered by the wise course pursued in the management of the road. So soon as Mr. Brydges got control of the line, he changed the tariff, and struck down all those manufacturing industries almost with one blow. With regard to the local conveniences which the people had a right to expect from a road built by the public money, Mr. Brydges, under this Government, ruthlessly interfered with the wise arrangement which had been adopted and carried out by the late Administration for years. It is a matter of notoriety in the Maritime Provinces, that until the persistent efforts of the Opposition press and Opposition members of Parliament aroused public opinion as to the unwisdom and injustice of that policy, the change did not take place. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wark) who has just sat down said that it would be an act of injustice to ask the Government to carry freight over the road at a figure that would not be profitable, because it would be taxing the rest of the country in order to make up the deficiency in the returns from that railway. I cannot understand how any one having the success of that great highway as a national enterprise in view, and the prosperity of the whole country at heart; and desiring to see these Provinces built up into a great Dominion, independent from seaboard to seaboard, of any foreign powers, could take so small a view of a great question like this. It is unworthy of any member of this Senate to look on this subject as one simply affecting Halifax. That city does not ask this Government to adopt a policy which would inflict any degree of taxation on the people to build up Halifax, but it asks the Government to go as far as it possibly can to develop a through trade with the great West, which, while it may be doing Halifax good, will, at the same time, be furnishing traffic to the railway, while contributing to the trade and prosperity of the country from Sarnia to Halifax. Unless by a wise and liberal policy you succeed in developing that traffic, you will not get it at all, and the country will, therefore, be minus money which would go into the Treasury if we secured—even at low rates—a large traffic from the West over our national highway. But my hon. friend says one reason why we cannot now compete for the carrying trade of the West with other railways is because the late Government adopted a circuitous route for the railway by which Halifax was made the Atlantic terminus, and the distance is thereby increased to such an extent as to make competition with other lines impossible. This is not the first time I have heard the late Government blamed for the location of the Intercolonial Railway. Gentlemen who have been in this Parliament for the last ten years, and who have heard the whole question with respect to the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, ought to know the circumstances under which the line was built, the means by which the money was procured, and the conditions under which it was granted. It was borrowed under the Imperial guarantee, and the Imperial Government claimed and exercised the right to have a voice in the selection of the route of the railway; and they gave their opinion in favor of the North Shore line, and the decision was a sound one. It ceased, therefore, to be a matter of unrestrained discretion with the late Government. I have heard gentlemen in this House, and not very long ago, bring this same charge against the late Government, when they knew, or ought to have known, that the selection of the route did not rest exclusively with the late Administration. The Opposition press of that day, while the question of the location of the Intercolonial Railway was before Parliament, had not one word to say with regard to the selection of the North Shore route until the policy of the Government of the day was announced. Instead of giving a fair discussion to the question, they were determined, as soon as any policy was adopted, no matter what the circumstances were, to use it for party purposes, notwithstanding it was a question intimately bound up with the development and consolidation of this great country. I trust that gentlemen who ought to be in a position to know the history of the selection of that route, will not make such assertions in this House again with the view of misleading the country—assertions contrary to facts which are well known. With regard to the question before the House, what I blame the Government for is this: that on the eve of an election, the exponents of the policy of the Government in the Maritime Provinces, deluded the people with promises the Government would not afterwards redeem. The circumstances were too recent to be forgotten. There had been an election in which a Minister of the Crown had been defeated, and another Minister to supply Mr. Vail's place was about to run for the County of Halifax under circumstances to which I need not revert. The fate of the Government depended, perhaps, upon Mr. Jones' return. It was questionable whether, if the Minister had been defeated in Halifax, there could have been found a single constituency in Nova Scotia in which the Government would dare to venture upon a Ministerial election. It was well understood during last autumn, that Mr. Jones' seat would be vacant, before the meeting of Parliament, and this winter port question was therefore kept by the Government and its friends prominently before the people of Halifax in order to affect the contemplated election. The local press supporting the Government held out to the people there that by returning a friend of the Government, and especially a member of the Cabinet, they would be in a better position to secure that great object which they were seeking, that of making Halifax the winter port for the trade of the great west. They said to the Opposition, if you return a member opposed to our Government, what influence will he have in securing this great boon for Halifax? The opportunity of making Halifax the Liverpool of the Dominion would be lost forever, the electors were told, if a member of a friendly Cabinet were rejected by the constituency. When I heard this at the time, I said, "It is useless to give the Government any opposition in Halifax," so favourable and delusive was the policy they announced. The result of the cry raised showed, that just where the change would be expected to take place, in consequence of the inducement held out with regard to a winter port, it did take place. The Conservative party had always carried Halifax city by a majority of from four to six hundred votes, and that was reduced in such a way as to give the Government the seat by a moderate majority. During the whole of the contest this question was put forward prominently and it had been worked up shrewdly by the friends of the Government for months beforehand. Mr. Brydges had been down there during the summer and autumn pulling the wires, he had promised everything while it was necessary to secure this election for the Government, but he easily forgot his promises afterwards. The scheme was worked up in order to get public opinion riveted upon it, and public hopes excited in regard to it, and it was a question which deeply agitated the people of Halifax in regard to Dominion politics until after the election; but it is now said the Government are powerless to carry out the scheme. This is what I complain of - if the Government have no power, or if it would not be right, as some of their supporters now say, for them to do anything to carry out this policy of making Halifax a winter port for the grain trade - it was wrong for them, either by themselves or their partisans, to allow the people of Halifax to be duped out of the independent exercise of their franchise by a system of public deception and corruption, for it was nothing else. If the Government had stated then, as I believe they must now do, that they did, or do not, see their way clear to do anything that would enable Halifax to secure this great western trade, without injustice to the rest of the Dominion, there would have been no blame of insincerity attached to them, at least it would have been an honest policy. But what we have a right to complain of is, that this question, and the sugar question, were used dishonestly during that election, and false hopes encouraged in regard to them. The merchants of Halifax were told, "You will have no chance whatever of getting any alteration in the sugar duties, no chance of getting any legislation you require from the Government to save the perishing West India trade of Nova Scotia, if you return an opponent of the Government; he will have no influence with the men in power, and you will strike a killing blow at your hopes in this direction if you defeat Mr. Jones; but if you return a Minister of the Crown who is sound in the sugar question, you are sure that the influence which he will exercise will accomplish what you desire." It must be remembered that Mr. Jones' views on the sugar question were directly adverse to those of the Government, and were in accord with those of his own Province, but the policy of the Government remained unchanged, and the country witnessed the demoralizing spectacle of a man entering a Cabinet to which he was opposed on a great question, intimately affecting the welfare of the Province he represented. The Minister must have sacrificed his convictions, and those convictions related to the most material interest of his constituency. It was demoralizing in the extreme to witness the Minister of Militia, who had declared in his place in Parliament that the policy of the present Government on this question was suicidal, becoming a member of that Government, and taking the emoluments of office, while carrying out what he believed to be a policy highly injurious to his country. But it was necessary that the Halifax election should be carried by any means, and such was the position in which the Government would have been placed by the loss of that election, that they were ready to resort to anything to win it. My hon. friend from New Brunswick (Mr. McClelan) talked of the policy of this Government in regard to our ship-building interest. One would imagine from his remarks, that their policy had been one of friendly protection to that industry, as contra-distinguished to that of the late Government. We all know what the policy of the late Government was, and how unjust any such comparison would be. So soon as the finances of the country permitted it, after we came into Confederation, the late Government immediately struck off the taxes on ship-building material. Not only that, but they expended large amounts in lighting our coasts, and at the same time, swept away the light dues, as they swept away everything that prevented the fostering of that important industry. The consequence was, we were fast becoming one of the most flourishing ship-owning countries in the world. Then the gentlemen on the Treasury seats came into power, and, unfortunately, in relation to this, as in every other industry, the succeeding depression was very severely felt. Ships became much worse investments than they had been, and at that very moment, the Government added the tax which the hon. gentleman points to as an illustration of the fostering care of this Administration. And so it is with all the remarks made by these gentlemen, if one had time, and could trespass on the patience of the House to review them. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Northup) has conferred a very great service on the House and the country by bringing up this motion, and I am very sure few better occasions will offer to expose the duplicity to which the Government are willing in difficult cases to resort, when a constituency has to be deluded into voting for the Government on deceptive issues knowingly put before the people.

Hon. Mr. McCLELAN—My reference to the fostering care of the ship-building industry was not to any Government. I spoke of the policy of the past, and I spoke of the opinions, which I hope will not be carried out, enunciated by some hon. gentleman opposite. Before sitting down I would ask my hon. friend the authority which justifies the remark that the route of the Intercolonial was selected by the Imperial Government?

Hon. Mr. MILLER—I was not aware that my hon. friend himself was not acquainted with the whole of the negotiations at that period. If my memory does not mislead me, and I am sure it does not, the British Government sent out a dispatch to this country indicating the line they wished to have adopted, and that was what turned the scales in favor of the North Shore route. I am not going to say they made it a sine qua non of the guarantee, but they reminded Canada that in view of the Imperial guarantee for the money required to build the road, they expected Imperial interests would be subserved.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—It was intimated to this Government that the northern route must be taken.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—May I ask whether certain members of the Government were not prepared to protest, and send a deputation to England? That was Mr. Macdougall's statement, which has not been contradicted.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—In the Government of which I was a member no hon. gentleman was in the habit of stating what the opinions of his colleagues were!

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend will not deny that Mr. Macdougall published a pamphlet in which he stated that they might just as well throw eight millions of dollars into the sea as build by the northern route.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—The way Mr. Macdougall puts it is this: There were no gentlemen in the Government except himself and Mr. Tilley who cared about the North-West, but Sir George Cartier was determined to carry the Intercolonial Railway by the north-shore route. According to his account, then the North-West question was swapped against the Intercolonial Railway question. He and Mr. Tilley sacrificed the interests of the Dominion in the matter of the Intercolonial Railway in order to obtain what they wanted in the North-West. It is no secret that Mr. Macdougall came down to Montreal about that time, and declared that Sir George Cartier was insisting, but that he himself would rather dig potatoes than sit in the Government if the north-shore route were adopted for the Intercolonial Road. He afterwards explained that they yielded in order to have the North-West question settled. This is what he says:—

“Except Mr. Tilley and myself, every member of the Government was indifferent or hostile to the acquisition of the North-West territory. When they discovered that a Ministerial crisis respecting the route of the Intercolonial Railroad could only be avoided by an immediate agreement and immediate action, to secure the transfer of the Territories to the Dominion they were ready to act. On the same day that Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Campbell surrendered the interests of Ontario to Quebec and Mr. Mitchell, and threw $8,000,000 into the sea, I carried a proposition to send a deputation to England with full powers to close negotiations for the purchase of one-third of the North American continent as a set off.”

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—I repeat, it was intimated to the Government of this country by the British Government that for Imperial interests, in reference to the defence of the country, the line to be chosen must be by the North Shore. Of course that intimation was conveyed to us in the most courteous terms, but it was an intimation it was necessary to give force to in order to get the Imperial guarantee.

Hon. Mr. McCLELAN—Was that intimation from the British Government given by a despatch.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Yes. So far as I can remember it was by a despatch.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

MOTION TO PRINT EVIDENCE.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON moved

“That the evidence taken from time to time before the Select Committee appointed to enquire into all the questions relating to the construction of the Fort Francis Lock, be printed for the use of the members of the House, but that no copies thereof be delivered, except to the members of the Committee, until further order.”

Hon. Mr. PENNY had no objection to the motion; but took the opportunity to say that he hoped hon. gentlemen would conform in future to the rules of the

Hon. Mr. Penny.

House respecting evidence before committees. The hon. Senator from Saugeen (Mr. Macpherson), who was Chairman of this Committee, would not, he hoped, refer to the evidence which was being taken before it, in debates in the House, until it was in possession of all the members. The hon. member did not often violate the rules of the House; but he (Mr. Penny) was shocked the other night to hear him make a very broad statement on the strength of evidence before a committee. This motion was a very proper one; but as members generally were not to have the evidence, it should not be used at all. To do so, by one sitting as a judge, before all the evidence had been taken, was opposed to all justice and fair play.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT thought the hon. Senator from Saugeen had been clearly wrong in making references in the House to things which came out in Committee. The hon. gentleman was reported as saying the evidence disclosed this Fort Francis Lock to be a “most nefarious job.” The hon. gentleman, being a member of that Committee, and holding in his hands the character and integrity of gentlemen socially and every other way equal with any gentleman in the country that could be named, should not have let drop such an expression. He was sure it must have been accidental, but he hoped in future there would be no comment in this House on evidence only in possession of members of the Committee.

“Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON was quite aware that the proposition laid down was correct, and he should be very sorry to violate that rule of the House; but he did not think he had done so on the occasion referred to. A report had been made to the House last Session on the subject of the Fort Francis Lock, which the House was in possession of, and which contained quite enough to justify what he had said. He had been careful to state he did not blame anybody. His remark was that the evidence taken last Session disclosed the fact that a fraud had been perpetrated on the country. He hoped the hon. the Secretary of State would acquit him of violating the rules of the House on any occasion.

The motion was agreed to.

THE SHIPMENT OF GRAIN BY THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

THE DEBATE CONCLUDED.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT resumed the adjourned debate on the Hon. Mr. Northup's motion :—

“ That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House all correspondence relating to shipment of grain by way of the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax, for Europe.”

He said :—When the House rose last night, I was on the point of making a few observations on the motion of my hon. friend opposite, on the subject of the Halifax winter port. I think in bringing that subject under the notice of this House the hon. gentleman has scarcely been fair to the Government. I wish, as shortly as possible, to run over the points in the case. They are not very numerous, and it will be for the House to say whether the action of the Government was candid, frank, and in the interest of the people of Canada. Mr. Black was delegated on the 5th of December last by the merchants of Halifax, to proceed to Ottawa, and confer with the Government on the propriety of testing the capacity of Halifax as a winter port for the shipment of grain—in other words, to ascertain whether grain could be shipped over our lines of railway and put into vessels at Halifax. He was detained, as he states, a few days on the road, and came to Ottawa somewhere about the tenth of the month, as appears by his report. In his conversation with Mr. Mackenzie, with whom he conferred on the subject, he learned that the Premier did not consider the trade could be profitably carried on—in other words, that the grain transported over the Intercolonial Railway would not pay running expenses. However, Mr. Mackenzie expressed to him a willingness that the experiment should be tested, and accordingly, on the 13th of December, eight days after Mr. Black left Halifax, he wrote the following letter :—

OTTAWA, Dec. 13, 1877.

DEAR SIR,—Referring to your conversation with me respecting the possibility of carrying grain over the Intercolonial Railway from Riviere du Loup to Halifax, I desire to inform you that the Government have considered the representations made by you on behalf of the Halifax merchants, and will give instructions to the General Superintendent of Government Railways on the subject. I need hardly say that the Government are extremely anxious to do everything to encourage any legitimate business that can be done by the railway. I think it quite clear from the data at present available that the prices you suggested, viz., 1s. 3d. stg. per quarter, or about 3½ cents per bushel, over 561 miles of railway, cannot possibly pay running expenses, but directions will be given to afford the necessary facilities for taking say two cargoes at that rate, after which both the Halifax merchants and ourselves will be in a position to discuss the matter with realized facts before us.]

Yours faithfully,

A. MACKENZIE.

Can anything be more fair, frank or straightforward than this letter? An attempt has been made to draw into this question the political influences that the Government might, through this channel, have brought to bear on the Halifax election. At that time the seat for Halifax had not become vacant. I think the writ did not issue until the end of December. I suppose my hon. friend would scarcely credit the fact that at the time that letter was written it had not entered into our consideration the possibility of an election in Halifax. I am not going to discuss that, but I throw it out, and hon. gentlemen opposite can take it for what it is worth. At all events, the Premier frankly stated to Mr. Black, the delegate of the Halifax merchants, that he was quite willing the experiment should be tested by carrying grain enough over the Intercolonial Railway to furnish two cargoes. The difficulties which interposed at a subsequent period are shown in Mr. Black's report to the merchants of Halifax. Those were principally the rates charged by the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the difficulty of getting the Allan Line to make the necessary connection. Later on, when Mr. Black made a final report, it would appear those difficulties were more than had been anticipated. In the month of March, Mr.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Black's report declares he had visited Chicago and ascertained what the prospect was for sending grain by rail to Halifax. He says :—

“At Chicago I met on 'Change a number of the largest shippers, from whom I learned that at present there was not the slightest probability of any business being done via Halifax, for the following reasons: the length of time on the road, the uncertainty as to what vessel the goods would go on, and the rate of inland freights;—the rate of freight on grain and other heavy goods is now ten cents per hundred lbs. from Chicago and St. Louis to the seaboard; this, if brought by the Grand Trunk Railway to either Riviere du Loup or Portland, would give that road comparatively nothing. And, as to the other reasons, freight now is engaged for a certain named vessel, it leaves Chicago on Tuesday, and on the Saturday following it is on board the vessel named and proceeding to sea; this dispatch cannot possibly be approximated by Canadian routes; nor can any freight from Chicago be certain to meet any desired steamer at Portland; dispatch is of vital importance to Chicago shippers, and until that is established and an elevator built at Halifax, traffic cannot be expected to change from old tried routes.”

Leaving out altogether the freight on the Intercolonial, he says the Grand Trunk Railway would get comparatively nothing at existing rates. So, to have made it a success, the Grand Trunk Railway would have had to carry this grain at a purely nominal figure. Mr. Black, in his report, admits the difficulties did not lie altogether with the Intercolonial Railway, but that there were other difficulties; mainly the long line of railway from Chicago to Halifax. Hon. gentlemen are quite aware, though the hon. Senator who moved this motion has arrived at a different conclusion, that the amount charged against the Intercolonial Railway, for working expenses, is in the neighborhood of half a million of dollars in excess of the revenue from it. What would be the effect of increasing the freight over that road at a cost considerably below running expenses? It would simply be a subsidy either to the vessels trading with the City of Halifax or to the merchants of that city. So far as the Intercolonial Railroad is concerned, I think it is but fair and proper we should endeavor to keep down freights even though there should be a certain charge on the revenue, but surely it would not be said that in transporting grain which benefits principally the ocean steamers, it would be justifiable to tax the people of this country that this trade might be developed, unless it could be shown that it would be an extraordinary advantage to the Dominion which, I think, would be extremely difficult to prove. The delegate of the Halifax merchants very fairly shows that the Government were willing, as far as they were concerned, to carry two cargoes of grain over the Intercolonial Railway as an experiment, to meet the wishes of the people of Halifax. The Government are just as deeply interested in the prosperity of Halifax as hon. gentlemen opposite are. We are all proud of our winter port, and the Government of this country, when the Intercolonial Railway was finished in 1876, at once made an arrangement for the carriage of mails by that route during the winter months.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—That was one of the stipulations made in the contract with the Allan Line by the late Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Allans were quite unwilling to make the change and did not wish to have the contract enforced. The Government were not moved by outside pressure to do it.

Hon. Mr. MILLER—The late Government had provided in their contract with the Allans, that when the Intercolonial was completed, the winter port for mails should be Halifax.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It rested with the Government to name the point where the mails should be landed in winter. Any Government who would have omitted such a clause in making the contract, would have been recreant to their trust. The Government had absolute control of the delivery of winter mails, and could order them to be landed at any winter port they pleased. What I say is, that just as soon as the railway was opened in the fall of 1876, the Government at once gave notice the mails should be landed at Halifax. I know there were many objections raised. There were croakers that dreaded the country would be seriously damaged by the change. They predicted that snow drifts would block the trains, and many other obstacles would delay the carriage of mails and passengers. I am happy to say those evil prophecies have not been fulfilled, and we feel a natural pride in having our own winter port for the Dominion. But it is another thing to say whether it would be wise or prudent to force a traffic into channels where the cost would exceed the advantages to be gained from it. At all events, the Government could do no more than make the offer they did, to test whether that trade could be made a success or not. The hon. gentleman was not content with bringing this matter to the notice of the House, but he framed a bill of indictment against the Government for various political sins, manifestly for their policy with reference to the West India trade, and the sugar interest. I am not sure whether he introduced the tea trade; it has generally gone with the sugar trade. At all events, he discussed a number of questions which were not germane to the subject before the House. He thought great credit was due to Mr. Dunstan, because he had, by his writings, brought the American Government to a sense of the great injustice they were doing by giving a bounty, in excess of the duty on the raw material, on sugars exported to Canada. The people of this country might possibly draw a different conclusion, that if they were getting, through the system pursued in the United States, sugars at a considerably lower rate than they could be got in the United States—in other words, if the American Government was ready to pay such a subsidy to the sugar refiners as to give Canada the benefit of it—Mr. Dunstan had conferred no special obligation upon them by increasing the cost of their sugar.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The sugar question is a very intricate one, but there are the broad facts—the price of the higher grades of sugar has been lower during the past two years than it was at any period during the time the refining was kept up in Montreal. It is very well known at the time of the change of Government that the refining industry in Montreal was in very great difficulty. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the evidence of Mr. Drummond before the Depression Committee, he will see a considerable part of the investment of that company in 1870 was lost in consequence of the fiscal policy of Sir John Rose. The hon. Senator from Montreal read the opinion expressed by Sir John Rose, when introducing his tariff, that he considered it his duty to look to the interests of the consumer and the revenue rather than of the manufacturer. In the appeal made to this Government, in 1874, by Mr. Drummond, he represented it was a very hard case: they had imported a large amount of sugar and the tariff prevented them working it off. A reduction in the tariff was made in the lower grades entering into the manufacture of sugar. That was the only change made by this Government in the sugar duties, and if hon. gentlemen will remember, the Government were attacked at the time for seeking to protect an industry which was not one of those that might fairly be fostered. As hon. gentlemen know, it is not an industry that gives employment to any considerable number of persons. Speaking in an off-hand way, I have no hesitation in saying that three refineries, such as the one in full blast in Montreal in 1869, would probably refine all the sugar used in the Dominion, and that would give employment to comparatively few people, while it would tax the consumers in this country two or three cents per pound, or, at all events, would compel them to pay more than they do now.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Does the hon. gentleman take into consideration the shipping it would employ, the coal it would consume, and the other interests that would be affected by it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The gross quantity of sugar consumed in this country is about 50,000 tons. The hon. gentleman may easily calculate how many ships that would employ. Ten vessels exclusively devoted to that trade would carry all the sugar used in the Dominion. We know the great rivalry there is between the refiners in France, Germany, England, and the United States. England presents probably larger opportunities for refining than any other country, because every article entering into its manufacture is entirely free of duty, and yet we know within the last two years, the United States have repeatedly sent cargoes of sugar to England and Scotland, and sold them there in sight of the refineries. And why was this? Because in the United States, through some deception practised on Mr. Bristow and his successors, the refiners were enabled to get a larger sum as a refund on exported sugars than was an equivalent to what was paid on the raw material. That has been greatly reduced, as the American Government have discovered the deception practised upon them. They do not propose continuing that. In France there was a considerable premium paid on sugars exported. So it was in Germany. The largest sugar house in England went into bankruptcy about two years ago, in consequence of the reduction in the price of sugars consequent on the great rivalry in Germany, France and the United States. Now, our tariff does not discriminate against any of those countries. We are enabled to buy in the cheapest market. Whenever a crash comes, as it has come in the United States, we are enabled to get sugar below the cost of production and refining. In the United States there have been more losses in that industry than in any other country. Since 1873 the number of sugar refineries that collapsed in Brooklyn and New York was thirteen, and several large establishments in Baltimore went into insolvency. I forget the number, but one or two of the largest refineries were in Baltimore.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Does the hon. gentleman reflect that it would foster our lumber and shipping interests?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Legitimate trade will find its own channels, if you give it ordinary facilities. Immediately after Confederation it was thought we could stimulate trade with the West Indies, and the late Government appointed a Commission to proceed to the British West Indies and to the foreign West India Islands, Brazil and Mexico, for the purpose of enquiring as to the trade of these countries, and ascertaining how far it was practicable to extend the commerce between those countries and Canada. That Commission consisted of Hon. Mr. Macdougall, a member of the Administration, an hon. Senator (Mr. Ryan), A. M. Delisle and J. W. Dunscombe of Ontario and Quebec; James Macdonald and J. Levisconte, of Nova Scotia; Wm. Smith, now Deputy Minister of Marine, of New Brunswick; and W. H. Pope, of Prince Edward Island. They visited those countries and made an elaborate report, and what has come of it? Nothing whatever. We, under pressure, in 1876 did not do exactly the same thing, but we called for tenders for parties who were willing to put vessels in the West India trade. A few firms responded to the call, and what was the result? It would cost $200,000 a year to get a line of vessels to make trips twice a month, and, for once a month, I think it was $150,000.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—That would be for the transmission of mails.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was supposed if we would pay this subsidy for vessels leaving Montreal in summer, and Halifax and St. John in winter, it would enable them to take freight at reasonable rates, but the results were so insignificant the Government could do nothing. The conclusions reached by the Commissioners were not very numerous, still nothing came of them. The last and most important of all was:—

“To promote by prudent legislation, and a sound fiscal policy, the rapid development of the great natural resources of the British North American Provinces, and to preserve, as far as lies in their power, the advantage which they now possess of being able to produce at a cheaper cost than any other country, most of the great staples which the inhabitants of the Tropics must procure from Northern ports.”

I am entirely in accord with that policy. The Government of that day showed a most anxious desire to stimulate and create a trade, but they found themselves powerless to do it. If that were the only trade open to us, possibly greater exertions might be made to secure it, but anyone who looks at the swelling trade of this country and observes how it is increasing year by year, will admit that the West India trade is not absolutely essential to us. I have no doubt a considerable part of our lumber and products goes to the West Indies, through Portland, Boston, and other parts of the United States. It must be remembered the sugar trade gives this country a revenue of about $2,000,000 a year, and it would be a very grave and serious matter to disturb the fiscal arrangement which gives us so large a revenue, and one so easily reached. To raise anything like an equal amount on the raw material would practically put the price up to a very much higher figure than the consumer in Canada pays at present. We can now buy our sugar cheaper than the people of any protected country.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—Does the hon. gentleman know that the revenue has decreased under the present arrangement

Hon. Mr. Scott.

—that before the drawback was given in the United States a larger revenue was raised from sugars in this country than at the present time?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that influenced it in the slightest degree. We have not been getting all our sugars from the United States. We buy a large amount in Glasgow, and wherever we can get them cheapest. The advantage to us of the drawback was this—sugars could be bought in the United States for consumption in Canada at much less than the cost of manufacture. I should be glad, indeed, had the sugar interest been sustained in Canada, but if the tax were only going to benefit, directly, two or three thousand people out of 4,000,000, then we would feel that we were paying too much for Canadian refined sugar.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—There is where we join issue. I say there is an incomparably larger number interested in the sugar industry than my hon. friend mentions. We know that the West India trade built up Halifax and our shipping, coal and fishing interests as well.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am glad to inform my hon. friend our shipping industry is steadily going forward, and to-day is one in which we may all take a just pride. When my hon. friend so eloquently apostrophized the gallant ship that went out so well, I felt that the Government that could produce such results by their fiscal policy deserved the thanks of the country. I felt proud to think that we could build in Canada a vessel capable of competing with any ships in the world, and that our shipping interests have become so great that our vessels are bound to go abroad for employment. I was glad to hear the hon. Senator opposite (Mr. Macfarlane) speak of a ship which has been three years away, and has been so successfully employed that regular remittances are sent to her stockholders.

Hon. Mr. HOPE—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was the best possible evidence of the wisdom of the policy adopted in this country, that a vessel could leave our ports, engage in the commerce of the world and never be heard of except by regular remittances every year, giving the stockholders a handsome profit on their investment.

Hon. Mr. MACFARLANE—I am afraid the picture of the bills of exchange is a highly colored one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman spoke “from the book,” as it was his own ship. How does the shipping interest of Canada compare with that of other countries? In 1876 we had 1,205,000 tons; France, of which we hear so much, had 1,080,000 tons; Belgium, an enterprising and prosperous country with 5,000,000 of people, only 30,000 tons; Germany (all the German States), 1,033,000 tons, considerably less than Canada; the United States, with a population of 40,000,000 and a larger coast than any other four countries in the world, and its noble rivers, 4,200,000 tons. The President, in his message to Congress the other day, deplored the condition of American shipping, and said it was a national disgrace, that the international trade of the country should be carried on in foreign bottoms. I think the proportion carried in foreign vessels was 70 per cent. although before a protective policy was introduced in that country in 1860, more than 80 per cent. of the international traffic of the United States was carried in American bottoms.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say, there is a duty on ships in the United States?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a very large one. The tariff is :—

Cables and cordage...	28	p. c.	ad valorem
Canvas for sails.....	30	“	“
Anchors.....	46	“	“
Iron wire and rope.....	60	“	“
Manufactures of iron..	35	“	“
Varnish.....	57	“	“
Timber hewn, square or sided.....	20	“	“

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—I would like the hon. gentleman to explain, that in June 1873 the United States enacted whenever it was proved that these articles were used in the construction of a ship, every cent of the duty should be refunded to the builder.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have stated to my hon. friend what he will not deny, that seventy per cent of the international traffic of the United States, is now carried on in foreign bottoms.

Hon. Mr. Macfarlane.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—That is not in consequence of the duty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In one part of his message, the President states that 18,000 foreign vessels entered American ports against 10,000 American vessels.

Hon. Mr. KAULBACH—The late civil war drove the mercantile marine from the seas, and since then it has been increasing until it will soon be in the position it occupied before the war.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Americans, as a rule, if an industry is a profitable one, do not take 16 or 17 years to establish it. They are as quick as any people in securing results. It does not require that long period to revive a dormant trade of that kind, if there were no fiscal regulations that oppressed that country.

Hon. Mr. McLELAN—It is not the fiscal arrangements. There is no tariff on anything going into the construction of a ship there.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What are our duties on shipping? The duties are five per cent ad valorem on all articles except ships' cables, iron chain over half an inch, ships' iron masts, ships' wire rigging, anchors, sheeting, copper, and yellow metal, which are free. I am told—of course there are gentlemen in this chamber who have had more experience in such matters than I have—that an estimate has been formed of the duty per ton, and it amounts to 31 cents. On a vessel of say 800 tons, costing $40,000, the duty on the materials entering into the construction of that ship, amount to less than $250, so it cannot be said that the shipping industry is in any way oppressed. The hon. Senator made some reference to “light dues.” I was informed, on enquiring into the matter, that there are no light dues charged either on foreign or Canadian ships.

Hon. Mr. MACPHERSON—I think the hon. Senator (who is not present) said that the light dues were abolished by the late Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were abolished in 1868. I will now leave the subject, having, I trust, given the hon. gentleman the explanations he sought in reference to Mr. Black's mission, and having digressed necessarily to other matters to which he had drawn the attention of the House. The papers will no doubt come down. Of course the hon. Senator is in possession, practically, of all the facts, and no doubt he made the motion for the purpose of giving expression to his own views. All I can say is, it would have gratified the Government extremely if it were possible to aid and stimulate the winter trade in grain via Halifax. It may be after the experimental trips are made, if the Halifax merchants themselves see fit to make the necessary exertions to test the question, that it will be found the estimate is not a correct one, but, so far as the Government are concerned, they are quite desirous the test should be made, and if, even at the lowest rate at which grain could possibly be carried, the trade could be established, the Government will do what they can.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—What we blame the Government for is, they gave us to understand they would take grain at 1s. 1d. per quarter. We made arrangements, and our delegate (Mr. Black) was sent to complete them, and when he came to Mr. Brydges, that gentleman repudiated the whole matter, and Mr. Mackenzie would have nothing to do with him. Mr. Black returned to Halifax, and before he made his report to the Chamber of Commerce, some members of the Government desired to have it delayed until they could communicate with their colleagues. The report was delayed four days, and then our delegate was enabled to say the Government would take two cargoes as an experiment. We sent our delegates to make that arrangement, but it was too late. The connections of the railway had ceased, and it never was done. The Government did not care to take these cargoes until it was on the eve of Mr. Jones' election. I leave the House to judge what was the prime cause of bringing that about.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have quoted from Mr. Black's report, and I have read Mr. Mackenzie's letter. The first difficulty that arose was a small matter between the Grand Trunk Railway and Sir Hugh Allan as to who would fill the bags.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—Have you the last report?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have the first and the last. The difficulties in reference to the bags were subsequent to this.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—The question of bags was settled. The Grand Trunk Railway agreed to pay one-half and the people of Halifax the other. I subscribed myself to that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was all subsequent to the 13th December.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP—It was too late. The Government kept us humbugging until it was too late. What I blame the Government for was, they would do nothing until they were driven to it.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—It is a pity the hon. Secretary of State was not a little more ingenious in quoting Mr. Black's second report, and withheld his statement that the difficulty at Chicago was, it was too late in March to make the experiment. The arrangements should have been made in November or December. If the hon. gentleman will look at Sir Hugh Allan's letter he will find there were three steamers ready, and he was only awaiting the answer of the Government to ship the two experimental cargoes at the 25 cent rate. In consequence of the delay and the refusal of Mr. Brydges to act in accordance with the wish of the people of Halifax, two steamers were withdrawn, and the third met with an accident. It was entirely too late to try the experiment, and that fact appears on the face of the report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has nothing to do with the arrangements of the Government at all.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—We shall see. The hon. gentleman says Mr. Mackenzie's letter was dated December 13th, and in the innocence of his heart he tells us the Government had no knowledge of the vacancies about to be made by the late Minister of Militia and his colleague, the present Minister of Militia. He asks the House to believe that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not ask the House to believe it.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—He stated the Government had no idea, when Mr. Mackenzie wrote that letter, there was to be an election in Halifax.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said that, and I repeat it.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—He asks us to believe it, although one of their own colleagues was a partner in that concern, which caused the resignation of Mr. Vail and Mr. Jones. It was perfectly well known that Mr. Jones was preparing for that election all summer, and it was delayed to the last moment to put it out of the power of the people of Halifax to object to his election before the Court. It was held so late there could be no enquiry into the circumstances attending his return. But to return to the letter of December 13th, my hon. friend must know after that letter was received, Sir Hugh Allan expressed his willingness to agree to the suggestion of taking the grain, if the Government would carry it from Riviere du Loup to Halifax at 1s. 3d. per quarter, and what was the difficulty? It was made by the Superintendent of Railways, Mr. Brydges. It was quite convenient to write a letter on the 13th of December, on the eve of an impending election, to say that the Government were perfectly willing to make those arrangements, but care was taken that they should not take place, because Mr. Brydges stepped in to say they would not be done. We will see further about Mr. Brydges and his connection with this matter. It is unfortunate, perhaps, for the people of Halifax that the Minister of Militia was the agent of the Dominion Line that gets its cargoes in the port of Portland, and it has been asserted, and, so far as I know, not yet denied, that Mr. Brydges was a shareholder in that Company. I leave it to the House to judge the reasons that influenced him to have nothing to do with this matter, and interpose all the difficulties he did after he went down to Halifax, and gave the people there to understand this rate of 1s. 3d. would be acceptable. After the election it was quite convenient to say it could not be done. That is the real state of the case, as understood by almost every citizen of Halifax. If the hon. gentleman has any doubt about that, I will give him the opinion of the leading merchants of Halifax.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would rather have Mr. Black's report than anything else.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—The hon. gentleman has the fact that Mr. Black's report was made in the month of December, 1877, and was withheld three or four days at the request of certain members of the Committee until a change could be made. It was conveyed in a telegram from the Minister of Public Works, to hoodwink the people of Halifax.

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was no telegram.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—There was when the first report was made. Mr. Black was taunted with playing into the hands of the Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh! Oh!

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I speak of facts that are patent. What was Mr. Black obliged to do! He was obliged to come out in a public letter, and say he did everything he could, but that he could hold out no hope of doing anything with the Government at all. I will call attention to a report of a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, with reference to the second report that was brought before them for their consideration. That meeting was presided over by Mr. Harnes, one of the most respectable merchants in Halifax, and here is a statement of Mr. James F. Macdonald, one of the principal merchants of that city:—

“The recent promise of assistance from the Government was a delusion, and had been used by the Government to serve a political turn, as influencing the recent election. Was it not patent to every member of this Chamber that the Government had endeavored to use the trial cargoes for political ends?”

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was not true.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I am giving the opinion of a leading merchant. There was not a man present in that meeting who would stand up and deny the imputation. I will give the opinion of another gentleman, Mr. John I. McLean, whose connection with the Young Men's Christian Association and the temperance movement, has made his name familiar to all. He is reported to have said:—

“The main trouble was with Mr. Brydges and the Government. Mr. Brydges when asked about a loan for the ‘Austrian’ said he knew nothing about it, and instead of fulfilling his promise had done worse than nothing. He appealed to other Members to say if he was not stating the facts, when he said Mr. Brydges had approached the Chamber with flattering assurances as to what might be expected he would do, and much to the disappointment of the public he had done nothing.”

There was a challenge thrown out before the whole meeting, composed of gentlemen on both sides of politics, and it was not taken up; and the statement may therefore be taken as the mature and deliberate opinion of the merchants of Halifax. It was only last month this took place, and I will leave it to the hon. Secretary of State, after the ingenious statement he has made to-day, to remove the impression if he can. The hon. gentleman has spoken of the contract with the Allan Line which enabled the Government to change the winter port. When two years ago I brought this question before the House, how was I met? I was met with all sorts of objections on the part of the Government. It was said people were alarmed that this long land route would interfere with the prompt delivery of mails and delay passengers. I was assisted by almost every member from Nova Scotia, and several from New Brunswick, in pressing this matter on the notice of the Government, and the result of that pressure was to force the Government to do what they have done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—My hon. friend says "hear, hear," but that was what made them carry out the arrangement for which the late Government had made provision, and my hon. friend desires, by a side-wind, to take all the credit to the Government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I took no credit.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—He says they made arrangements in the fall of 1876 for the change.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—They only did it some eight or nine months after it was pressed upon them by the representatives of Nova Scotia, and after all sorts of difficulties and obstacles had been placed in our way; and when they did it, they only carried out the arrangement which by the wise forethought of their predecessors had been provided for in the contract.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not be done earlier.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Why was it not done at once?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was done the moment the road was in order for it.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—Why didn't the Government say, "We admit Halifax is the legitimate winter port of this country," and we will not be indebted to any foreign country for the means of carrying our passengers and mails, and the very first opportunity we have, we will make Halifax our winter port?" The very difficulties which the hon. gentleman says were raised by croakers, were mentioned, though in a less degree, by the Government, when we urged them to make the experiment, and urged that in the first place it would benefit Halifax, but in the end would prove equally beneficial to the whole Dominion, from Sarnia to Cape Breton, as the result has proved. That is the position of that matter. The hon. gentleman talks about the cost of running the Intercolonial Railroad. I think that is rather an unfortunate subject for him to bring up. When the hon. gentleman informs us, that under the present astute manager of the Intercolonial, he comes here with a deficiency of about $500,000, I will show him how that deficiency arises. I am not going into the question at large, because I do not wish to repeat others, or to bring into this question a subject that is not germane to it. My hon. friend speaks of this sugar question. I do not want to go into that matter, but I am tempted to offer an observation or two upon a very singular proposition we heard from the hon. gentleman on that question. He belittles this interest. He says it is a small matter, and would give employment to comparatively few people. He has taken but a limited and narrow view of the question.

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We at present get $2,000,000 from it, and it would be difficult to get that revenue somewhere else.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—My hon. friend will not get out of the difficulty in that way. The whole question with regard to the sugar interest is this; it is an industry which gives employment to hundreds of families in various ways. My hon. friend says three large refineries would supply the Dominion with sugar. I will take that as a basis of calculation. That would give employment to our shipping, and lead to an enormous consumption of the coal of this country, which is to be found in the Maritime Provinces. My hon. friend talked about our shipping and gloated over and gloried in the fact that our ships are driven to the Indian Ocean and the Pacific to find employment. He says 50,000 tons of sugar would only employ some three ships the whole year round, taking his own estimate of the trade. He glories in a policy which compels our vessels and our mariners to seek profitable employment abroad, instead of carrying fish and lumber to the West Indies, and sugar from the West Indies to Canada. We cannot carry on this trade now, because our vessels can get no return cargo while our refineries are closed. It is hardly worth while to go into a lengthy argument on the matter, because the facts are so patent. The hon. gentleman says our lumber trade with the West Indies is of no consequence because the principal part of it goes by way of Portland and Boston.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not say that; I said some of our lumber finds its way through United States ports.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—My hon. friend must know that the principal part of the lumber to the West Indies does go through the United States. We cannot carry that lumber from our own ports under the present fiscal arrangements, and so the Americans carry it, and bring back raw sugars for their refineries. The hon. gentleman seems to think we are gaining something in the way of cheaper sugars by the loss of this West India trade. There never was a greater delusion. We have been paying the very highest prices for our sugar to the people of the United States.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—We have been paying the highest price because we cannot manufacture for ourselves. He tells us we can send to Germany and England for our sugar. Our trade lies with the United States, and we have to pay a portion of this bounty given by the United States, in the shape of increased prices, for the sugar we get from them. We have no competition now, we are utterly helpless and powerless since the two large refineries in this country have been crushed out. We are not allowed to have any competing industry, because the policy of the Government forbids it. If the hon. gentleman has any doubt about that I will ask him to read the opinion of the present Minister of Militia when he was supposed to be an independent member. He pressed with all his energies upon the Government the policy of encouraging the manufacture of sugar, and yet he was powerless to alter the strange financial dreams of the present Minister of Finance on that question. Where we witness the spectacle of that gentleman joining a Government which tells us it can do nothing to revive the great industry, I can only say, verily, Halifax has had its reward for electing the Minister of Militia, not only in the destruction of this sugar interest, and in the failure to try the experiment of shipping grain from our winter port, but also in the withdrawal of the forty year's subsidy to the fortnightly mail service to Halifax. But that is not all. I am about to make a statement to the House which is entirely in conformity with the facts as we know them in Halifax, but which may surprise the hon. Secretary of State, because, if he had known the facts he would have taken a different course in this matter. I am authorized to state, not only has Mr. Brydges acted in the way I have described with regard to the shipment of grain at Halifax, but that a gentleman having control of a large line of steamships, a Mr. J. M. Vernon, (I have the authority of his letter, addressed to a member of Parliament), addressed a letter to Mr. Brydges last November, asking that he would give him every facility for the shipping of grain and other products at Halifax, and, in fact, making it the terminus of a large trade with a fleet of steamers which he controlled. The result of the correspondence was that Mr. Brydges poo-hooed the matter, and told him that he could do nothing, consequently Mr. Vernon was obliged to send his steamers to Baltimore and New York to get cargoes. He has even now control of some three or four steamers that could at the proper time be utilized for the purpose of trying this experiment, and not a mere experiment, but on a large scale.

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—Is that Mr. Vernon, of Montreal, who offers all those fine things?

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—It is Mr. Vernon, of Boston. I give the authority because I think it is due to the House this correspondence should come down, and the notice appears too general to include this. I think, after the statement I have made, it should embrace all correspondence between persons or companies, and the Government, and also between any such persons and the Superintendent of the railway. The Government will not, of course, object to it, because they should be glad to give us all the information they can. When the correspondence comes down, showing this gentleman wished to initiate the trade with Halifax, it will be seen whether the statement I have made, as given to me, is justified by the facts. I do not wish to anticipate it by making any comments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I never heard of it before.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I do not believe any member of the Government has known anything about it. This is only another instance in which people are bluffed off in their attempts to raise up a great trade in Halifax, for the benefit of this Dominion generally.

Hon. Mr. DEVER—Hon. gentlemen, as I have taken considerable interest in the sugar question, perhaps you will permit me to make a few remarks on the subject. It would appear from the conflict of opinion, as expressed by some hon. Senators, that the parties representing the sugar interests were wanting some legislation in their behalf, some special privileges that other manufacturers have not received, and do not require. I am authorized to state that such is not the case; they simply want to be placed in the same position as other manufacturers; that the raw or crude material should be admitted free, and that a fair duty should be placed on the refined sugars coming in here from other countries. As I have been favored with a copy of a letter from a gentleman in Halifax, who has made himself thoroughly master of this question, I may be permitted to read it to the House in order to make the question more thoroughly understood. It reads as follows:—

“I am aware that in Great Britain, as well as in every British colony, there is a strong feeling in favor of free trade, and I must confess to be one of its votaries also, therefore I would never make the unfair suggestion that the Dominion should even entertain a proposal to charge a less duty upon our products—the products of the West Indies—than upon the products of any other part of the globe, but what I would suggest, and believe with good reason, is, that the Dominion should not afford protection to a manufactured article, and thus exclude the raw material from coming into competition with it. The sugar duties are now abolished in Great Britain, but, while they were exacted there, there was a low scale for the low quality muscovado; there was a higher scale for the grocery description, and still a higher scale for the refined article. And such a system was considered fair and just, not at all encroaching upon free-trade principles, for it was allowed that there is a foreign matter in muscovado sugar, and there is also a large percentage of molasses, and, when manufactured into refined sugar, there is a large percentage of waste, and it was, therefore, deemed unfair to charge as high a rate of duty upon impure sugars as upon the pure article. You might as well charge as high a duty upon a weak spirit as upon a strong spirit, that will admit of adulteration; but, in this respect, there is a fair allowance made, and the same principle should be adopted—and is all we ask—in regard to the weaker sugars.”

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

This is simply what the people of Halifax, and of the Maritime Provinces generally, ask from the Government of this country, and we cannot understand why it is that they should be so persistently opposed to it. If we asked for more than other manufacturers, it would only be reasonable to be met with the argument, that Parliament has no right to give one interest a special privilege that would not apply to the whole Dominion. But the Maritime Provinces think they have a right to the trade by the sea. They have large shipping interests and they consider that those shipping interests should be encouraged by every means that will promote their prosperity. The people of Halifax do not look so much to the sugar interest in this matter, as they do to the opening up of a profitable trade for their smaller class of vessels, between there and the West Indies, by enabling them to get return cargoes. They would be satisfied to bring sugar and molasses at a low rate of profit, if they could get a return cargo, as it would also promote a trade in spirits, and other goods with those Islands, and thereby keep up their old name of being a West India depot for their goods.

Hon. Mr. DICKEY—I will call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the effect of this system of trade. In 1872 the importation of sugar into Nova Scotia amounted to 31,960,000 pounds, and it had fallen off last year 1876-77 to 7,517,036, or to less than one-fourth of what it was in 1872—that is from the West Indies. In the year ending the 30th of June 1876, there were duties paid in the Dominion on 104,445,778 pounds of sugar, of which only about one-fifth was from the West Indies.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite aware of that.

Hon. Mr. READ—There is another important feature of this question which we have not discussed, and it is this: whether freight can be transported by rail as cheaply as it can be carried by water. I know that in England railway managers tell us that railways run alongside navigation and beat it. Whether it can be done on this continent or not I am not prepared to say. Perhaps our railways are not constructed with sufficiently easy grades to enable them to do the business as well. I know that the small engines sent out for the Grand Trunk Railway were capable of drawing 300 tons in England, whereas they only draw from 150 to 180 tons on our roads, and when they draw 200 tons they are considered extraordinarily good engines. The question resolves itself into this: if a railway can compete mile for mile with sailing vessels or steamers in carrying freight, we can calculate to a certainty that the Intercolonial will at some future date be brought into great requisition as a through route for western produce. A gentleman who has been all his life in the forwarding trade, and has sent ships to all parts of the world, has recently told me that there was no doubt the shortest and quickest route from Chicago to Liverpool would take the traffic. I have compared the distances, taking Chicago and Liverpool as objective points, and I find that by the Intercolonial Railway and Halifax, there are 600 miles more rail and 600 miles less water than by the route via New York to Liverpool from Chicago—the distances each way being about the same, about 4,000 miles—so that if freight can be carried as cheaply by rail as by water, we may expect yet to see our railways doing a flourishing trade. Every one knows it is a difficult matter to change the current of trade once it has settled down in anyone direction. There must be a commencement, however, and I think we should do all in our power to encourage trade over our own railways and from our own parts. There appears to be some little misconception about the building of the Intercolonial, as an hon. gentleman stated that there were ten millions thrown away in the location of that route.

Hon. Mr. Dickey.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Seven millions.

Hon. Mr. READ—I cannot see that there has been seven millions thrown away on it. I will take as proof that the money has not been wasted, the report of Mr. Sandford Fleming addressed to the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, Minister of Public Works. Mr. Fleming surveyed fifteen different routes to find out the best line. Of the three main lines the shortest amount of road to be built was on the frontier route 401 miles already built 184, making in all 585 miles. The central route, the shortest distance between Riviere du Loup and Halifax, the amount of road to be constructed was 422 miles, eighty miles already built, and on the Baie de Chaleur route the amount of road to be constructed was 486 miles, sixty-one being already built, so that the latter was shorter than the frontier route that we have heard so much about, by 38 miles. By the frontier route we would have 38 miles further to travel for all time to come, but we would not have had quite so much road to build in order to connect with the then existing railways. Had we taken the longest route we would have had only to build 401 miles of road; by the next shortest route we would have had to build 422 miles, and by the shortest route we had 486 miles to build. On the frontier route there was at that time 184 miles built; on the central route there were 80 miles built and on the Baie de Chaleur route—the one adopted for the Intercolonial—there were only 61 miles built. It is quite evident to my mind, that from a national as well as from a commercial point of view, we could not have selected a better route. It is reasonable to expect that Newfoundland will yet come into the Confederation, and it will be an inducement to that Province, as it was to Prince Edward Island, to have the railway come so near them. Had the frontier route been adopted, this would not be the case, and no doubt the extra cost of building so much more new road would have been required to renew the old road, with which it would have had to connect, had the frontier route been selected. Then as regards the Imperial guarantee, the Imperial Government appointed Mr. Fleming, because they had confidence in him, and they had agreed to guarantee our debentures for £3,000,000, sterling, at 3½ per cent, extending over a period of forty years. Was that not a great boon to Canada, considering the state of her finances at the time, and the prices at which our bonds were selling? I looked at the Montreal Herald of that period—a good authority—to see how our stock stood in the English market in those days, and ascertained what profit we were deriving from the Imperial guarantee. I found on the 26th of April, 1866, Canada 5 per cents stood at 82; Montreal Harbor 8 per cents, 102. June 20th, 1866, Canada 6 per cents were 97 to 98; Canada 5 per cents, 81 to 82; Montreal City Corporation 6 per cents, 88½ to 89. Was it not a great boon to this country to be able to borrow money at a low rate of interest, for forty years, when our bonds were selling at such a low rate, the only stipulation by the British Government being that we were to be satisfied with the route? I find in the correspondence, the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos says, that the Baie de Chaleur line is the only one that provides for the national objects of the undertaking, and consequently would be the only line that the Imperial guarantee would be given to, which saved us many millions of money in interest, thereby cheapening the road to us immensely. I have shown that the Intercolonial Railway—a work which we are all proud of—was constructed in the cheapest and best possible manner, in the interests of this country, and I fail to see, that there has ever cropped out, what there has already cropped out, and will, I fear, crop out again, the blundering and jobbery that has been exhibited in the construction of the Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—As allusion was made by the hon. Secretary of State, in the course of this debate, to the West India Commission, of which I was a member, I think it is only right that I should say a few words in reply to the remark that no result had come from the labors of that Commission.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—With regard to the West India trade only.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—Allusion was made to the Commission generally, but I intend to confine my observations chiefly to the trade of the West Indies, although it was a Commission not only to the West Indies, but to South America and the

Hon. Mr. Read.

Brazils; and while I contend that large and important results arose from the labors of that Commission, if these results were not better, it was not the fault of the Commissioners, and I wish to defend the members of that Commission from the inferences that would be drawn from the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State, that it was owing to them that the results were not more important.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman misapprehends what I said.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—I am very glad that the hon. Secretary avows now that he did not intend such an imputation or insinuation. But, taking his words as they were uttered, and as I have no doubt they were taken down by the reporters, they amounted to a taunt or slur on that Commission.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said that we, ourselves, had been stimulated under a pressure in 1874 to endeavor to establish that trade under a bonus, but we found it would cost $200,000 a year to make two trips in the month, and $150,000 to make a trip once a month.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—I think the hon. members of this House are not aware of all the circumstances attending that Commission, and the very natural conclusion to which they would likely come, from the remarks of the hon. gentleman, was that the members of that Commission had been deficient in their duties.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—I am delighted to find that the hon. gentleman did not consider us deficient in that respect, but I desire to explain the causes which led to that Commission not producing the results which it might otherwise have done, and as those results would have been closely connected with the subject that has occupied the attention of the House this evening, I think I may properly now refer to them. I will not detain the House by noticing all the circumstances under which the Commission was appointed, but we returned from our labors and reported to His Excellency Lord Monck in 1866, after a four months' voyage in the West Indies and the Brazils. In quoting that report, which is a very short one, I think my hon. friend the Secretary of State merely touched upon the sixth or last recommendation, which is one of a very general character, and really of no special bearing on the subject of this report.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I quoted the fifth, sixth and seventh.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—The fifth, sixth and seventh are to this effect:—

“5th. To obtain if possible, from the Spanish and Brazilian authorities a remission of the heavy dues now chargeable on the transfer of vessels from the British to the Spanish and Brazilian flags.

6th. To procure, by negotiation with the proper authorities, an assimilation of the tariffs of the British West India Colonies in respect to flour, lumber, fish, and the other staples of British North America, a measure which would greatly facilitate commercial operations, and may well be urged in view of the assimilation about to be made in the tariffs of Canada and the Maritime Provinces.

7th and lastly.—To promote by prudent legislation, and a sound fiscal policy, the rapid development of the great natural sources of the British North American Provinces, and to preserve as far as lies in their power, the advantage which they now possess of being able to produce at a cheaper cost than any other country, most of the great staples which the inhabitants of the Tropics must procure from northern ports.

These, it will be observed, are of a comparatively ordinary character, and seem to have been selected by the hon. gentleman rather invidiously as the complete recommendations of the Commission, leaving out the 1st, 2nd, 3rd and 4th items, which, the House will perceive, contains the pith and substance of the report. They are as follows:—

“1st. To establish promptly a line of steamers suitable for the carriage of mails, passengers and freight, between Halifax, Nova Scotia, and St. Thomas, in the West Indies, touching (until the completion of the Intercolonial Railway) at Portland, in the United States, so as to secure regular semi monthly communication between the ports mentioned.

2nd To make a convention or agreement with the Postal authorities of the United States for the prompt transmission of letters, &c., from Canada and the Maritime Provinces, by every United States mail which leaves the ports of Boston or New York for the West Indies, Brazil, Mexico, &c., and also for the transmission, through United States mails, of correspondence originating in those countries.

3rd. To establish a weekly line of steamers between Montreal and Halifax, and to complete as soon as possible the Intercolonial Railway.

4th. To procure, by reciprocal treaties or otherwise, a reduction of the duties now levied on flour, fish, lumber, pork, butter, and other staple productions of British North America, in the West Indies, and especially in Brazil and the colonies of Spain.”

Hon. Mr. Ryan.

Now, hon. gentlemen, the 4th was really no less than a recommendation for reciprocal free trade with the British and Foreign West Indies in which our sister colonists seemed well disposed to meet us half way.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—This should have been gone on with, but I am sorry to say that the Government of the day did not act, and no Government that has come into power since this report was made has ever acted upon the recommendations of of the Commission.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—I dare say the argument will be used. “Oh! it was another Government that was in power at that time,”—Hon. gentlemen, it is a misfortune with us in this country that such is the style of argument that is used often to the detriment of wholesome measures, and we are too prone to baiting each other from one side to the other, saying that this party did one thing, and that party did not do another, but in this case I must include in a general censure each and every Government who have neglected to move, until too late, in this matter so important to Canada. The Commissioners made this recommendation without reference to local or party interests, solely in the interests of the Dominion, and I am sorry to say it has never been acted upon.

Hon. Mr. PENNY—By those who appointed you.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—Nor by those who did not appoint us. I am sorry to say there were a great many cutting remarks in the press about the Commission at that time. Where they came from I can well understand, and they were of such a character as to tend to mar our exertions and belittle services which were entirely gratuitous.

Hon. Gentlemen.—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—Again our report recommends:—

1st. To establish promptly a line of steamers suitable for the carriage of mails, passengers and freight between Halifax, Nova Scotia, and St. Thomas, in the West Indies, touching (until the completion of the Intercolonial Railway) at Portland, in the United States, so as to secure regular semi-monthly communication between the ports mentioned.

This was another important item which the hon. Secretary of State has overlooked altogether in his quotations. We not only recommended that a line of steamers should be promptly established, but did so on assurances from all the West Indian Governments that they would join in the scheme and pay a large portion of the expense; that, in fact, so far as we could calculate, they would have contributed probably one-half of the subsidy for such a line of steamers, which I think the hon. Secretary of State mentioned as probably $200,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was in 1874 or 1875.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—Demarara offered to pay $25,000; Barbadoes offered to pay $25,000, and other colonies and foreign islands would have probably brought the amount up to $100,000.

Hon. Mr. CAMPBELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—If that and other recommendations were neglected by the Government, the members of the Commission cannot be blamed for their labors producing few results; still important results have been produced by the diffusion of information regarding Canada, producing a large increase, amongst others, in the trade in lumber with Brazil. At the time the Commission was appointed Brazil and the West Indies did not know much about these Provinces in the way of direct trade, with the exception of Newfoundland, Halifax and St. John; even from these ports they had not taken much of their lumber, and scarcely any of their flour. If, on the return of the Commission, the Government had acted promptly on their recommendations—and as still might be done—formed a convention for the reception of their sugars free—or nearly free—of duty, and they had in return received our produce free of duty, we would have created a large direct trade, which was then done and has since been continued by the United States.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. RYAN—The Commission were met everywhere with complaints in the West Indies and the Brazils, of the difficulty and uncertainty of postal communication with Canada; that, when they sent a letter, it was so long before they received a reply that they did not know but the markets might have changed altogether, so that they could not transact business with any degree of safety or satisfaction. "But," they said, "give us regular postal facilities; we will contribute towards it, and when we can be sure that our letters will be transmitted in a certain time, we can transact business with you." But unfortunately we gave them no postal facilities. Baltimore and New York were so much nearer that they preferred to trade there, but at the same time they were disposed to trade with us if we would meet them in a fair spirit. The Commission came home and made this report. Following their return, there is no doubt whatever that the trade with the West Indies and Brazil increased. The demand for Canadian products was good. But when they found that instead of reducing the duties on their sugars, we enhanced them, they, of course, began to doubt the stories that the Commission had told them of what the Canadian Government were disposed to do. When they found also that the idea of regular postal communication—a subject which they were very warm on—seemed to be given up altogether, they made their connections with other places. Steamers were put on from Baltimore and other ports, while the Canadians lost caste and character by not keeping the promises which the Commission had made under authority, so that if the results of that Commission have not been such as might have been expected from their labors, the fault did not justly lie with them.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Gentlemen—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. NORTHUP amended his motion so as to read as follows:—

"That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor-General, praying that His Excellency will be pleased to cause to be laid before this House all correspondence between any person or company and the Government, or the Superintendent of Railways, relating to shipment of grain or other articles, by way of the Intercolonial Railway at Halifax for Europe."

The motion as so amended was agreed to.

THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC REGULATION BILL.

HOUSE IN COMMITTEE.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the House go into Committee of the whole on Bill (J) "An Act respecting the traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Hon. Mr. VIDAL, in amendment, seconded by Hon. Mr. Girard, moved, that before the Speaker leaves the chair, it be an instruction to the Committee to amend the Bill in the manner following:—

"1st. On page 1, after line 34, insert: "The Legislature of any Province of the Dominion may, by Address to the Governor General in Council, duly certified and transmitted by the Lieutenant Governor, ask that the second part of this Act may be brought into force in that Province, and the Governor General in Council, on receiving such Address, shall, by Order in Council, published in the Canada Gazette, and in the Official Gazette of the Province, declare that the second part of the Act shall come into force and take effect in such Province, at such date as may be consistent with the provisions of the 93rd section of this Act, in the case of a city or county with respect "to existing annual licenses for the sale of spirituous liquors."

2nd. On page 20, after line 7, insert: "No Order-in-Council issued under the provisions of this Act to bring its second part in force in any Province, shall be revoked until after the expiration of two years from the day of its coming into force; nor unless, and until the Legislature of such Province, shall, by Address to the Governor-General-in-Council, duly certified and transmitted by the Lieutenant Governor, have asked for such revocation."

3rd. On page 20, after the word "Act" in the ninth line, insert "to bring its second part into force and effect in any county or city."

4th. On page 24, between clauses 105 and 106 to insert a clause authorizing the arrest and detention of any person found in a state of intoxication, and compelling such person on conviction to disclose where the liquor was obtained.

5th. On page 19, to strike out all that part of section 92, after the word "years" in line 37.

He said: My object in taking this course I intimated briefly when addressing the House at the second reading of the Bill. I may repeat so far as to say that my reason for doing so is, the amendment is a very important one in its character, and though, in my own judgment, it is really a natural consequence of the provisions we find in the Bill, and may be considered with propriety as an amendment that might be offered in Committee, I am well aware of the fact that in the opinion of many hon. gentlemen, and of many friends of the temperance cause outside this House, that it is considered a very essential amendment, affecting the principle of the Bill; consequently, I feared if this view should prevail, it might be ruled out of order if it should be offered when the House is in Committee. I desired also, on account of the important character of these amendments, that they should be in the hands of hon. members some days before the Bill was discussed, in order that they should have an opportunity to carefully consider the provisions, and so be prepared to act more intelligently upon them than they could if they were sprung upon the House without previous notice. I do not propose to occupy the time of the House with any lengthy remarks on those amendments, as I am exceedingly anxious that the Bill should go to Committee in order that some progress may be made with it. I may explain, however, that my first three amendments relate, as will be observed, to extending the provisions of the Bill so as to embrace provinces. As it now stands, its provisions only extend to cities and counties. It has been objected that the adoption of the mode by which I propose to bring the second part of the Act into operation in a whole province by an address of its Legislature to the Governor in Council, there would be a departure from that principle of the Bill, which requires that it shall be a direct expression of the will of the electors of the different counties or cities, arrived at by a vote taken upon the question itself, unmixed with any other. I do not consider that when I propose, as I do in this amendment, that the Legislature of any Province may, by an address to the Governor in Council, ask that the second part of this Act be brought into force, that I am, in the least degree, either going beyond, or acting contrary to, the idea of a popular vote upon the question. My intention is simply to extend to the groups of counties known as provinces, the privileges and powers that are in this Bill given to a single county or city. My reason for suggesting the mode by which this may be arrived

Hon. Mr. Scott:

It is based chiefly upon economy. It must be obvious to hon. gentlemen that to take the vote of a whole province, such as the Province of Ontario, would be a very costly affair. It would involve the same expense as a general parliamentary election. This is no trifling matter; it is one worthy of very great consideration. It also appears to me that very great, if not insuperable, difficulty would arise in getting, and especially in verifying, the requisite petition to the Governor-in-Council, signed by 25 per cent of the electors of the whole province; it would be such a cumbrous affair that it would be impossible to get it satisfactorily accomplished, and it would, in my judgment, be idle and delusive to put such a provision into the Bill. I think, also, it would scarcely be so fair to the people of the Province as the system I propose. We can easily imagine a group of counties in one end of the Province being diligently canvassed and the names of one-fourth of the number of electors of the Province being procured for the petition in that way, when perhaps a very large number of counties at the other end have had no say in the matter, and might be wholly opposed to the measure. It would thus give to a cluster of counties, if they acted with unanimity, an opportunity of involving the country in the great expense of an election which might have been avoided by a more general canvass, if showing a majority against the petition. These difficulties have suggested themselves to my mind as making a Provincial popular vote undesirable, not that I am afraid to submit this question to the people, for I am perfectly satisfied that unless the measure receives the support of a large majority of them, it must be inoperative.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. VIDAL—I contend, however, that the mode by which I wish to arrive at the will of the people in a Province is in harmony with our constitution, and with British usage—in fact the most legitimate and constitutional way is through the Legislature, where every county is represented by its majority in the person of its member, who has been instructed as to the wishes of his constituents, and will vote on the question as the majority of his constituents may desire. My amendment would not give the Legislature of a Province any power to legislate on this question, but simply provides that it shall have the same privilege, by an address to the Governor-General, to bring into force the second part of this Act in a Province, that cities and counties have, by petition of the electors to bring it into force in those smaller sections of the Province. If the principle of this amendment does not meet the approval of the Senate the first three sections of the motion must drop, but if the first is adopted, the second and third follow as a matter of course. In the fourth amendment I propose to introduce a new feature. I propose to insert a clause similar to one which I find in the Act for the protection of Indians, which I think is important, and may with advantage be introduced into this Bill. I have never been able to see on what principle the Indians are entitled to protection by law in this matter more than white men or the children of white men. What is beneficial to them is beneficial for others, and in inserting the clause I propose merely to substitute the word "person" for "Indian," so that it shall read as follows:

"It shall be lawful for any constable, without process at law, to arrest any person whom he may find in a state of intoxication in any county or city in which the second part of this Act is in force, and to convey him to any common gaol, house of correction, lock-up, or other place of confinement, there to be kept until he shall have become sober; and such person shall, when sober, be brought before any Judge, Stipendiary Magistrate or Justice of the Peace, and if convicted of being so found in a state of intoxication, shall be liable to imprisonment in any common gaol, house of correction, lock-up, or other place of confinement, for any period not exceeding one month. And if any person having been so convicted as aforesaid should refuse upon examination to state or give information of the person, place and time from whom, where and when he procured intoxicating liquor he shall be liable to imprisonment as aforesaid for a further period not exceeding fourteen days."

I think that the introduction of that clause into the Bill will be followed with very good results, and it would meet with the approbation of the friends of temperance throughout the country. The next amendment which I wish to make, is that of taking away the privilege which the present Bill proposes to confer upon persons who may be dissatisfied with the Act when it shall come in force, and which provides that after it has been in force one year, a majority of the electors may, by petition, have the question re-opened, and a vote taken with a view to its repeal. In my opinion, that is a very objectionable feature of the Bill. I believe it will keep the country in a state of constant agitation. No sooner would the second part of the Act be brought into force in any county, than there would be interested persons who would begin a process of agitation to try and get it revoked, before the law could be fairly tried or its effects appreciated. I think it would be wise to strike out the parts of the two sections which confer this privilege, and not to allow the decision to be reversed in either case, until three years have elapsed. My amendment works both ways, not only against repeal where the petition was adopted, but against renewal of petition where the vote was against it, and I am satisfied that it would be attended with this good result: that there would not be such hasty action, as if the Bill were left in its present shape. When the electors know that adopting the petition will bring the Act irrevocably into force for three years, it will make them more cautious in voting, and check any hasty and ill-considered expression of the people's will. I trust it will be understood by every hon. member that I do not offer these amendments, or any others which I may propose in committee, with the view of obstructing, or in any way jeopardizing the progress of the Bill through this House. It is my earnest desire that the Bill should pass, and that only such amendments may be made to it as will commend themselves to the friends of temperance as improving the Bill, and tend to make it acceptable to the people of all the Provinces of the Dominion. This motion stands or falls upon its own merits, and if the House rejects the views I have advanced, the Bill then comes in untrammelled for the action of the committee.

Hon. Mr. GIRARD—I have great pleasure in seconding the motion of my hon. friend. At the same time I do not think the Government will have any serious objections to the amendments. It would certainly be a great advantage if the Provinces were allowed to deal with this question in the manner proposed by my hon. friend from Sarnia. I believe that the Province which I represent would have no difficulty in adopting it, and it seems to me we can have as strong an expression of the will of the people in that way as by a plebiscite. I concur fully in the remarks of my hon. colleague on this subject. My intention is not to imperil the Bill, or throw any obstruction in the way of its becoming law, but I think the amendment proposed will greatly improve it.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—Some of the amendments proposed by the hon. gentleman from Sarnia I concur in, but others of them do not commend themselves to my judgment very strongly. I refer to the first three amendments which he proposes; for the reasons that the temperance people have not asked for them, and I think it would be most unfortunate if public sentiment was not educated up to that state where a decided majority of the people were in favor of the law, that it should be applied to any Province.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. AIKINS—And I do not think there would be the same opportunity to determine that by an address to the Legislature that there would be under this Act by having a plebiscite of the counties or cities. I trust that the hon. gentleman will not insist on the first three amendments; if he does, I shall have to vote against them. With regard to the fourth amendment, it has been found almost impossible under the Dunkin Act, when a man is arrested for drunkenness, to get evidence as to where he got the liquor, and unless a clause of the kind suggested is introduced, the Bill will be inoperative to a certain extent. The other amendments proposed ought to be adopted. That is, in a county where the principle of this Bill has been accepted by a majority of the people, there should be no provision to repeal it until it has had a three years' trial. In the same way I do not think, after the principle of the Bill has been negatived by a county, that any petition for its adoption should again be entertained until after the expiration of three years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. mover of this motion has furnished the best argument against the adoption of his first three amendments when he said, in the course of his observations, he was quite aware that unless the great majority of the people were really in favor of this particular measure it would be idle to enforce it—that in any section of the Province where public sentiment was hostile to it, it would be impossible to put the law in force. It is simply impossible to expect that in all parts of a province the people can be educated up to this question to the same extent. We can all of us name counties where the law can be carried out, and we can all name counties where it is impossible to enforce such a law; the people would conspire to bring it into ridicule if it were forced upon them. There are provinces, I have no doubt, where popular sentiment is in favor of this law, and county after county will adopt it, but it will be by the direct vote of the people. The very principle of this Bill is that it depends on the voice of the people solely. It is a peculiar subject, affecting, as it does, the rights which a great many people think it is not proper to deprive them of; therefore it is different from ordinary legislation, and is the main reason why the popular sentiment should go with the law wherever there is an attempt made to enforce it. With regard to the second proposition, I should not like to be bound yea or nay to it until I come to consider it. I am favorable to it on principle, but whether it is a subject matter that should be embodied in this Bill I am not prepared to say. With regard to the proposition that if the law is once adopted in a county it should remain undisturbed for three years, I see no objection to it personally. The clause was introduced, as it is to meet the case of a catch vote being taken where it was not really in harmony with the sentiment of the people, and to provide that the question should be reopened a year afterwards if the people were dissatisfied. I have not the slightest objection to this amendment, and if the House is desirous to adopt it I will accept it.

Hon. Mr. BOTSFORD—Before this vote is taken I wish to say that I am decidedly in favor of the principle of the Bill, and I consider it is a much safer one than the proposition made by the mover of this resolution. I am very loth to transfer to any Local Legislature the power to adopt this law without an appeal to the people beforehand.

Hon. Mr. Scott.

Hon. Mr. WARK—Hear, hear.
