Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It must have arisen from the permission given to the refiner to place refined sugars in a wholesale warehouse; but, as I understand, it would be then placed under the custody of the local officer, and stock would have to be taken of that when the change of duties was made, and whatever sugars had been taken out of that lot would be subject to duty, but what remained in bond and was so certified to by the local officer would be free from duty.

Mr. BOWELL. I think the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) is correct. The misunderstanding may have arisen in the way he suggests. As I pointed out a moment ago, thelaw and the principle that governs the bonding of sugar is altogether different from that which governs the bonding and control of any other goods. If a merchant imports sugar, it is put, into bond, placed under lock and key, and he is not allowed to take a pound of it out until entry is made and the duty paid, and then a warrant is given to the officer who is called a locker, who upon receiving such warrant delivers the goods upon which the duty had been paid. Under the clause which has just been repealed, which has been in force for twenty, years, a sugar refiner refined in bond under no surveillance whatever, except that he had to make a full statement of the amount of sugars that went into his refinery or the warehouses surrounding it, and at the end of the week or month, as the case might be, entries would be made of the sugar that had been sold, first ascertaining the amount he had on hand, so that he would pay the duty on the balance. The case referred to by the member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) must have arisen in the way suggested by the member for he had before.

Mr. McMullen.

Brant (Mr. Paterson). The refiners had bonded warehouses in Hamilton, London and nearly all the cities in Ontario, Quebec and the Maritime Provinces, and I found that we had no power to prevent that. I looked at the law and found that, while they held a sufficient quantity of sugar in their bonds to cover the amount of duty due by them, they had a right to send the sugar where they pleased. The only difficulty we could have thrown in their way would be to demand a settlement every day or every night. Instead of that the practice has been that the officer would go in when they least expected him, once a week or once a fortnight, or once a month, and take stock, and, if they had not the quantity in the warehouse or the refinery, say, in Montreal, they must show that they had it in Toronto, Hamilton, Brantford or some other place, and they would not be asked to pay the duty on that until it was sold. I have asked for the repeal of this clause, so that, if the Parliament of Canada should see fit to place a duty on sugar in future and to grant the permission to manufacture in bond, the refiners should be placed in the same position as my hon. friend opposite would be if he imported 1,000 barrels from a foreign country and placed them in bond, and pay the duty whenever it was taken from bond, whether he has sold it or not.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would ask if manufacturers are permitted to sell sugars in bond to the wholesale men and transport them in bond?

Mr. BOWELL. No; that has never been done. One of the refiners, after the introduction of the resolution, made the same enquiry of me. He said he had sold sugars for delivery after the anticipated change in the tariff. Then, I said, you will have to pay the duty, and he paid the duty though he had not delivered the goods.

Resolution agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 155) founded on resolutions 1, 2 and 6, to amend the Acts respecting the duties of Customs.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

AUDIT ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 137) to amend the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. This Bill is intended to put the Auditor General in the same position in which he was placed by the original Act, in regard to the matters which are here dealt with. In 1886 at the time of the revision of the Statutes, it has since appeared that an important change was made, which took away from him the power to promote and remove in his own office. As it seems to have been agreed upon at the time of the passage of the original Act, on both sides of the House, that that officer was to have certain independent powers, and as this power was taken away in the consolidation, I think inadvertently, and certainly without the notice of the House, it is proposed to put him back in the same place, with the same powers he had before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a very proper modification, and I am very glad to see that the hon. gentleman has proposed it.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to add another clause to the Bill:

This Act shall be construed as if it had been passed at the date of the coming into force of the Revised Statutes.

That leaves the matter exactly as it would have been.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. TUPPER moved the third reading of Bill (No. 122) further to amend the Fisheries Act, chapter 95 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I objected very strongly to some of the provisions of this Bill last evening, and I object to them still. The question raised by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) was not as to whether such a Bill was necessary, but it was whether the penalties by which this measure was to be enforced were proper penalties to adopt. Sir, the hon. Minister last evening said that the Crown had the power to pardon, and that because the Crown had the power of pardoning in certain cases, therefore the Minister, the head of a department, ought to be entrusted with the attributes which are in certain cases entrusted to Her Majesty or Her Majesty's representative. Anyone who will take the trouble of looking at this Bill will see that it is not the exercise of the prerogative of mercy that is conferred upon the Crown by this Bill—nothing of the sort. Under what circumstances does the Crown exercise this power of pardon? We know very well that every law is imperfect, and when, in the administration of the law, there are mitigating circumstances for which the law does not make adequate provision, there is a reference of the matter to the Crown for the purpose of pardoning the offender, or of commuting the sentence, or of mitigating the severity of the punishment. But, Sir, that question, when so referred, is considered by a law officer of the Crown. He applies well settled rules and principles to the consideration of the subject, and he advises the Crown with regard to it. I believe that it has always been the practice in this country to refer the subject to the whole Council, it is considered in Council, and the advice or the opinion which has been prepared by the Minister of Justice is discussed in Council, and a recommendation is made to His Excellency upon the subject. In England, I believe this power is exercised by the Secretary of State for the Home Department. But, Sir, it is nothing of that sort that is done under this Bill. This is not an exercise of the pardoning power, it is not a question where the Crown is asked to interfere in mitigating the sentence of a court. There is no provision made by the kon. gentleman for the proceedings before an ordinary You do not entrust to the judges of the County Courts in our province—I do not know to what extent the rule is applied elsewhere—trial of a case where there are more than $400 involved, and yet the hon, gentleman proposes to entrust to a fishery officer, a man without any legal training, a man without even the legal standing of an ordinary magistrate, the trial of a party investigate the evidence, to consider the case, to under this Bill for an offence charged against him, and with power to confiscate property that may be worth ten, or fifteen, or twenty thousand dollars; and there is no redress provided in the case except by an appeal to the Minister, and the Minister, in his capacity as head of a department, will exercise power in this matter of mitigating the punishment that has been awarded. Now, last evening I called the attention of the House in Committee to the fact that no matter how trifling the offence is, the Minister provides by this Bill, and the House is asked to sanction it, that there shall be confisca-tion of the ship and its outfit in every possible case. It may be that the offence is of a very trifling character, it may be that there is some doubt as to whether there has been really an offence against the law at all, and yet the hon. gentleman provides that in that case there shall be a confiscation of the vessel, and he provided, as the Bill originally stood, that one moiety of the pecuniary penalty imposed, and the ship and its outfit should go to the party who made the complaint. Then, Sir, the hon, gentleman instituted a comparison between the powers of the Crown to pardon offences or to mitigate the punishment, and the provisions of this Bill in another particular. Why, Sir, the Crown has no power to pardon an offence so as to take away the right or interest of the informant. The Crown cannot mitigate the punishment in that respect; the right of the party is absolute from the moment that conviction is had by an ordinary judicial tribunal. But the hon, gentleman provides by this Bill that although a complaint may be made, and even though there may be a just cause for conviction, yet the Minister may have power, as head of the department, to remit the penalties and to deprive the party who has made the complaint or taken the trouble to enforce the law, of any right to compensation what-Now, that is the provision of the Bill as the hon. gentleman has presented it to the House. As it is now amended, except in so far as property in the ship is concerned, the informant is entitled to the moiety of the pecuniary penalty if the conviction is allowed to stand, but if the Minister chooses to interfere and to remit the penalties, then the party is deprived of the moiety to which he would otherwise be entitled. I say that it is an improper thing, it is wholly contrary to the spirit and principle of our constitutional system, that any Minister should be vested with the extraordinary powers which the hon, gentleman, by this Bill, undertakes to arrogate to himself. It is, in my opinion, a most improper piece of legislation in this particular. There ought to be something like an apportionment of the punishment to the offence that is committed. The hon, gentleman does not admit anything of that kind. He provides that although the pecuniary penalty may be as low as $50, and the pecuniary penalty is made small because the offence may be trifling, nevertheless it must be accompanied by the confiscation of the ship and its outfit. I think that is a most improper provision. I hold we ought to leave the interpretation of the law, and the judicial enforcement of the law, to the ordinary judicial The hon. Minister said tribunals of the country. at a former stage of the proceedings of the House on this Bill that the courts were not to be trusted. I have no hesitation in saying that the Minister calumniated the courts. The court is competent to pronounce judgment upon it, and I have no doubt whatever that there is no judicial tribunal in the country which would not be trusted with more implicit confidence than the arbitrary interference of the Minister and the exercise of the power which he undertakes to retain to himself by the provisions of this Bill. We ought to be under the government of I said, last evening, and I repeat, that it is an old principle recognized in Magna Charta, that there ought not to be undue penalties provided by the law. There should be some relation between the offence and the penalty the law undertakes to impose, and there is no such relation in the Bill submitted. The hon, gentleman knows right well that whether there is any injury at all committed in consequence of purse-seining is still a disputed question. There is no certainty that any injury follows in consequence of the use of seines of this sort. It is, however, in the opinion of a great many that injury is inflicted. The hon. gentleman has proceeded to legislate on that assumption. He has taken sides on a question not yet settled. He asks the House to take sides upon it, and it seems to me the hon. gentleman will have gone quite far enough if he provides penalties in proportion to the offence committed and leaves the enforcement of the law to the ordinary tribunals, instead of undertaking to take charge of the matter by this arbitrary proceeding, and placing very extraordinary power, as he does by this Bill, in the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the time being, whoever he may be. I object to legislation of this sort. I object to it because it makes a large class of the population dependent on the Minister. It places them in the power of the Minister; he may be vindictive against parties who are politically opposed to him. It may be such a party is an offender, but he will apply to him an amount of punishment that he will not mete out to a person who is a powerful political friend. There is serious danger of abuses of this sort, and our whole constitutional system proceeds on a principle utterly at variance with the principles which are set out in this Bill. I enter my protest against legislation of this sort, as being at variance with the principles of our system of government, inconsistent with the rights of freemen, inconsistent with that protection which the law is intended to give, and that equality which the law is intended to maintain between all portions of our people in regard to the protection of property under the law-I say in all these respects the Bill is objectionable and ought not to receive the sanction of this House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I confess that last night when I took objection to the details of this Bill, admitting the principle to be a good one, I was much surprised that the Minister was so persistent in his determination to refuse to amend it. There are three objections which I made to the Bill. The first was the penalty, which I think altogether excessive and cruel; the second was to the court where the penalties are recoverable, which is in no sense an efficient court; and the third was to the granting of a moiety of the penalties to the informer. As regards the penalty, we are creating a new offence by this statute. We are declaring that to be illegal hereafter which heretofore has been legal, and every vessel continuing to fish with purse-seines, which could pursue that fishing heretofore outside of the three-mile limit and inside the three-mile limit, is him civil jurisdiction you are careful to limit it to Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

now compelled to forego the right to fish with purseseines inside the three-mile limit. There was no objection taken to that proposal on this side of the House. Hon, gentlemen held it to be a debatable question, but we were willing to consent to the Minister, if after thoroughly studying the subject, he came to the conclusion, on the contradictory evidence before him, that a law should be passed prohibiting it, passing the proposed law and we were willing to lend him our assistance. The Minister said: I will not only impose a penalty varying from $50 to $500 in the discretion of the justice, but in every case I will confiscate the vessel, tackle and appliances; I will not leave any discretion in the hands of the court to determine whether there is any palliative feature of the case, whether it has been a wilful breach of the law, or a breach of the law by chance—I will leave no discretion in the hands of the court, but I will in every case confiscate the vessel, tackle and appliances. It is a cruel, unjust and arbitrary penalty; and this was not denied last night, and cannot be denied now. I venture to assert that there are not a dozen hon. members. I care not whether they sit on the opposite side of the House, or what their political proclivities may be, who would defend such a monstrous proposition as this, that an offender, charged for the first time with a violation of this law, shall be punished, not only with a pecuniary penalty of even $500, but with the further penalty, in the execution of which the court has no discretion, of the confiscation in every case of the vessel, tackle and appliances. One would suppose, in a case of this kind, where these extraordinary penalties are imposed, the greatest care would have been exercised in selecting the tribunal before which prosecution could be instituted. One would suppose that where these enormous powers are vested in the judiciary, some court would be selected, known for the experience of its judges, and their knowledge of the law, so that by no possibility a mistake could be made. What is the fact? The hon, gentleman entrusts the carrying out of this Act not even to a court of record. other day we reconstituted the Court of Admiralty. and we provided large salaries to the gentlemen who fill the positions of admiralty judges. Why? Because it was declared that a special court was necessary to deal with marine cases, and because, in cases of collision between vessels, and in all marine matters, it was thought better to have them heard before judges specially trained in these matters, and even their decisions are made subject to appeal to the Supreme Court. Why did not the Minister take advantage of the constitution of the court, and provide that these penalties should be recovered there? I take it, that it will surprise every hon, gentleman that so far from going to any Admiralty Court, or any court of record, the hon, gentleman declares that the confiscation of vessels must take place before a single justice of the peace, or a fishery overseer, who is not a justice of the peace, and who may be a man who has never been in a court of law. have established my proposition that a more un-paralleled piece of legislation has never been attempted to be carried in this House. Who would deny it? We know the qualification of a justice of peace, and he is satisfactory, he is capable of administering the oath to school trustees in his district. If you give $25 or $30, and if you go beyond that, you send the party to the County Court; but here, you are placing cases which will amount in value to $15,000 or $20, 000 in the hands of a justice of the peace, an untrained lawyer, not even constituting a court of record. Where is the record that the vessel is condemned and confiscated? Where is the record of the condemnation to be, when a single justice condemns her? Sir, one would suppose that if a valuable property like a ship is to be confiscated to the Crown, that the proceedings, at least, would be instituted in some court of record, where there would be a record to show the condemnation; but there is nothing of the kind here. I say, Sir, that not only the legislation of this country but the legislation of the mother country, affords no parallel to such legislation as we have here. in the mother country, when they legislate on matters corresponding to the subject we are now legislating on here, they refer the matter to the Admiralty Court, and to an admiralty judge, a trained judicial officer in evidence of this kind, and thoroughly competent to decide in such cases. Here you thrust this authority upon a single justice of the peace, and how is the action to be commenced and concluded? Why, Sir, it may be carried out on the oath of a single witness, for that is enough. A sailor who has fallen out with his master, and who has a grudge against the captain or owner of a ship, can go before a single justice, and on the evidence of that sailor it is competent for the justice, if he can be found, to confiscate the whole vessel. But, the hon. gentleman says, you have your appeal to such mercies as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the time being may choose to exercise. Sir, I say that is not an efficient or proper tribunal to which to refer people whose property is confiscated in this way. Surely when the courts of the land are established to try cases in this country, and when the Crown steps in and seeks to confiscate the property of the subject: the least the Crown could do-or if the Crown does not do it, the Legislature should take the responsibility upon themselves—the least they could do, is to give the subject the power to have the case tried before a proper tribunal. But even that is not a bad enough principle in this Bill. The hon. gentleman offers an inducement, by giving one-half the pecuniary penalty, to a man to lay information against the owner of the vessel. Ithink, with all due deference to the Minister, that this inducement is in the nature of a bribe. I think that it will work very harshly and cruelly, and I think that in all probability the Minister will find, on reflection, and in the working out of the Act, that he has to a large extent defeated his own object. We discussed this question thoroughly last night, and I will not take up the time of the House further than to say that the proposition that exceessive penalties defeat their own object, is an axiom that will be admitted and is known to every person who This penhas a knowledge and practice of the law. alty is unjustifiable; nobody can defend it. It is monstrous and unjust that a vessel can be sacrificed for, it may be, an unwitting offence against the law, which the captain may commit against the wishes and even the orders of the owner. Your penalty is excessive, your court is improper, and nothing can justify this provision in the Act. Why are not such cases brought to the Admiralty Court, where the owners could have some security that the laws to the department and approved of.

of the land can be administered and listened to, and why do you give power to the informer to go before, perhaps, an ignorant justice of the peace, to condemn a man in a penalty and confiscate his property? This legislation is unjust, and I would say to the hon. Minister—if I would not use too harsh an expression—that he is acting with a stubbornness in this matter which will not reflect any great credit upon him. He should have acceded to the reasonable amendments we asked to be inserted in the Bill. We offered to pass this Bill, and there would not be a word said about it, if he had struck out the penalty of confiscation and allowed the offenders to be prosecuted before the Admiralty Courts as established. The penalty is excessive, the court is improper, and the payment of a moiety of the pecuniary penalty is a wrong one.

Bill read the third time, on division, and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 116) to further amend the Inland Revenue

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved:

That resolution 5, reported from Committee of Ways and Means, 23rd June last, and agreed to this day, be incompared in the Pill incorporated in the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1, sub-section 2,

Mr. LAURIER. What is the object of this?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The object is that when an application is made for a distillery, or a brewery, or a manufactory of that kind, certain portions of the premises are designated as a bonding warehouse and disputes may arise as to what part of the premises may constitute a bonding warehouse. It is simply to decide what portion shall constitute a bonding warehouse. By this clause we constitute that portion signified by the plan sent into the department with the application.

On section 2, sub-section 3,

Mr. COSTIGAN. The object of this section is to avoid a difficulty which has already occurred in some cases of prosecution. For instance, there was a case in Montreal in which the information was laid before one justice of the peace and tried before another in that city, and on that ground we failed to obtain a verdict. This is a clause drafted by the Peputy Minister of Justice to get over that difficulty.

On section 3,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the change?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Only a slight change. seemed to be in the old Act an authority, implied at any rate, for any person bottling spirits to use the name of the manufacturer on the label, and thus perhaps give a character to an article not fit to be placed upon the market. By this we provide that before any label can be used, it must be submitted On section 4.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the change here?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The amendment to the schedule is a far-reaching one. The whiskeys made by Canadian licensed distillers are made under the direct supervision of the department. They are known to be pure and wholesome, so far as alcohol can be wholesome, and Parliament has from time to time given the Government power, not only to see that no deleterious matters are introduced therein, but to offer the best of inducements to the distillers to eliminate all those elements natural to the grain from which the alcohol is distilled: firstly, a refund is authorized to be made of $1.30 per gallon in respect of all the fusil oil and other noxious ethers separated from the alcohol by the process of rectification; and, secondly, a remission of duty is allowed within specific limits in respect of the loss by evaporation during a term of two or more years of enforced maturing. The public health is thus safeguarded as far as it is possible by legislation to do it, that is, in respect of spirits produced in our licensed The high duty, however, added distilleries. to the increased cost of withholding spirits so long after manufacture from the market adds perceptibly to the cost; hence the price to the consumer is enhanced. The tendency is, of course, to restrict drinking, but the greed of unprincipled men demands the production of an article which they can sell cheaply, and this demand is met by reducing duty-paid highwines by water and adding to its apparent strength and piquancy by adding all manner of poisonous ingredients. The department desires to reach these people, and the schedule has been enlarged so as to include all spirituous liquors put up by compounders and others. reach them further, the words "by wholesale" have been struck out, so that the Act is not confined to wholesale or retail dealers. The penalties are also increased, imprisonment is added, and confiscation is make more general and sweeping.

Committee rose and reported.

COMPOUNDERS' LICENSE'FEES.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to amend the Inland Revenue Act, and to provide that the person in whose name a license is granted to act as a compounder shall, upon receiving such license, pay to the Collector of Inland Revenue the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the object of increasing this license fee so much?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is true that the increase is very large, from $50 to $150, but this is a very profitable business and the license is still lower than it is in many other businesses.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Would it not be more equitable to have some regard for the business that is done? A license fee of $150 might be very heavy for one doing a small business while it would not be for one doing a large business. Would it not be better to adopt a sliding scale?

Mr. Costigan.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It might be well to consider the whole question, but it is not on the volume of business that fees are imposed but on the investment of capital. Here is a business which does not require the investment of any capital or any plant of an expensive character. We have not yet heard of any complaint as to the increased license fee.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You have not made the increase yet.

Resolution reported.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 141) to amend the Copyright Act (Sir John Thompson) was read the second time, considdered in Committee and reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved third reading of the Bill. He said: The Act we passed last year gives power to the Exchequer Court to decide as to the validity of a copyright if the suit is brought by the Attorney General of Canada on the relation of the party affected, but this allows the suit to be brought by the party, though the Attorney General may not be a party to the suit.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 142) to amend the Patent Act (Sir John Thompson) was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 146) further to amend the Dominion Elections Act (Sir John Thompson) was read the second time and House resolved itself into Committee.

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to state to the Minister the objection I have to this provision, which I would be very glad if he would consider. I think the provision is liable to abuse which gives power to the returning officer to give a certificate to two electors to represent the candidate in any other poll than the one in which the electors are supposed to be registered. Now, the elector who applies to the returning officer for this certificate is not obliged to make any affidavit at any time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. You mean the candidate applies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, or the elector either, who goes to the returning officer with an appointment from the candidate. He simply asks for a certificate from the returning officer that he may act as agent at another poll. Well, he gets that without any affidavit of any kind, and the consequence is that very often great frauds are perpetrated. I know very well that in the last election I ran, twenty or thirty men were brought in and scattered around with these certificates in eighteen different polling districts in the city. They got these certificates alleging that their names were so and so; they came into the polls, they did not stay two minutes—it was only a mere form—they did not stay one minute; they said:

I am here to represent so and so, and they polled their votes and walked out. Now, the object of the section was to appoint a bona fide agent who was to be a bond ride representative of the candidate, and to remain. Now, a dispute came up as to the meaning of "during the day." Well, we did not mean during the whole day, we meant during any part of the day, and so the consequence is that if you want to get in a lot of voters, they will be sure to be questioned if they vote where they are registered, and so to avoid the difficulty of giving them certificates, let them go to another poll, nobody knows them there. I was going to suggest to the Minister that he limit the number to one. I mean if John Smith comes there you do not swear him that he is John Smith on a certain poll, he is not bound to say where that is. There may be 65 different polling districts in the electoral division, and he presents his certificate to the deputy returning officer and says: I claim to vote, I will simply swear I am entitled to vote. I want to amend that oath by adding to the foot of it "I am duly registered as a voter for polling division No. — for this electoral division." I want the means to identify that man.

Mr. SPEAKER. As I understand the law now, when the returning officer grants a certificate to a voter to vote at any other polling sub-division than the one in which he is recorded as a voter, he is bound in that certificate to mention the polling sub-division where he is entitled to vote.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He ought to.

Mr. SPEAKER. He does as a matter of fact, and that is made part of the voters' list at the polling sub-division were he goes to record his vote, and he can be sworn just as any other elector upon the list in that polling sub-division.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If a man, appointed by a candidate as his agent at District No. 20, goes to the sheriff he is not bound to take an oath. says, my name is John Smith, and you will find it on that list, and the sheriff grants the certificate without knowing that man. I want to provide in the oath that when he goes to vote he is to swear that his name is on a particular list. Nobody can object to that.

Mr. SPEAKER. He has got to take the same oath that any other person has to take, that he is the person named on the voters' list.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No; the deputy returning officer at the poll where this man claims to vote has not got a list for any other district than that

Mr. SPEAKER. Certainly, but this forms part of the list. My hon. friend will find this to be the case, that the certificate that is granted to the agent forms part of the voters' list for that polling sub-division. It is added in point of fact to the list for that polling sub-division.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) My opinion is that he ought to be sworn before the returning officer gives him a certificate at all; he ought to swear that he is a voter on a certain list.

Mr. DICKEY. That would be very inconvenient.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I do not see any inconvenience in the returning officer exacting an affi- order to get in the ballot boxes. This provides davit from the man, and let that affidavit accompany the certificate.

Mr. SPEAKER. A difficulty will arise in this way: Suppose the candidate wanted to appoint an agent whom he would have to bring 20 or 30 miles to the returning officer to make that affidavit.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E. I.) Then it could be made by an agent. Let the man who is to be appointed, or somebody in his behalf, swear that he is a voter on a certain list. At any rate, if we do not do that, then I would press upon the Committee to provide that when he votes he shall swear that he is duly registered on some list.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think there can be no objection to the Minister of Justice including that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was going to suggest, also, that I think one would be quite sufficient for each polling place. If you send out a lawyer or a lawyer's clerk to represent you at a certain poll, you can send as many as you like from another place, but you cannot send two voters.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is very desirable there should be two.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon, gentleman had 50 or 60 votes polled against him as I had, he would not want more than one.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My hon. friend is confusing two things. It may be very proper to provide that there shall not be more than one nonresident.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is what I said.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No; the hon. gentleman said one legal man who is your representative.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say that there shall only be one person holding this certificate from the sheriff. I know it is absolutely essential to have two representatives at the poll; but this provides that the returning officer shall not grant certificates for more than two agents for each candidate at each polling district. I suggest that he shall not grant a certificate for more than one agent.

On section 3,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why two weeks?

The idea of the Committee Mr. MONTAGUE. was to overcome a difficulty that seemed to have arisen from the fact that adjournments were made to extend over too long a time, and it was desirable to establish some limit. Two weeks was considered a fair one, especially in the large constituencies.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If this is to be added to clause 62 will not a conflict arise?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is to provide for cases of ballot boxes being returned, but ballot papers not being enclosed in them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the time is altogether too long.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the Minister of Justice intends that, immediately on the close of the poll, the deputy returning officer shall at once hand over to the returning officer the ballot boxes with their contents, I do not see why more than one week should be allowed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is, first, a provision that there shall be a delay of 'one week, in two weeks in case the ballot boxes do not contain the necessary information.

Mr. WATSON. One week should be sufficient. I have, probably, as large a county as any hon. member, and one week would be sufficient. In the case of Algoma, and one or two other constituencies, the elections are held at different times and longer notice is given, and they could be made exceptions in this particular. At my last election there were three delays. The first was because a ballot box was not returned, which was due to carelessness on the part of the returning officer, as it might have been received at Portage the day after the election. At the end of one week, when the declaration was to be made, it had to be post-poned because a ballot box was missing. When the box came in, it was found, on being opened, that two deputy returning officers had not made the fleclaration as to the contents of the box. Another week's delay occurred. I do not think the candidate should be kept in suspense longer than is necessary; and no time longer than necessary should be allowed, as it increases the danger of the boxes being tampered with. The shorter the time after the election in which the declaration is made the better.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should not like to change the Bill in any important particular in such a thin House, and in the absence of so many members of the Committee.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It would be better to repeal section 62, and let this section stand, as there might be conflict between them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is very desirable that every precaution should be taken against the possibility of mistakes which would render it necessary to delay and postpone from time to time the declaration. There should be a greater degree of responsibility on the part of the returning officer for the conduct of his deputy. He selects the deputy, and he may select a man on account of his political proclivities and political activity, and at the same time one who is altogether incompetent, without the necessary literary knowledge, without being properly qualified to discharge the duties. The law should be amended so as to hold the returning officer strictly responsible for his deputy. It is also very important that the returning officer should be a man of some standing, and who is possessed of a certain amount of property, so as to make him responsible for the proper discharge of his duties. To take a man without property or position and appoint him returning officer, and at the same time enact penalties which will not affect him, except that of imprisonment, is a most unwise and improper proceeding. We require to have purity of elections, and the men appointed to conduct them should be men who would minimize mistakes and wrong-doing. That is not, I am certain, the case under the present law. It is most desirable that there should be greater responsibility on the returning officer, and he should be a person having some status or qualification which would make him amenable to the law which imposes penalties on returning officers. I think the Bill requires further consideration in these parti-

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it would greatly facilitate a prompt declaration being made, if the provide for the neglect of the agents or the candi-Sir John Thompson.

hon. Minister would provide that the deputy returning officers shall immediately at the close of the poll, return the ballot boxes to the returning officer, and if they neglect to do it they should be subject to a penalty.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not know there was any other practice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) Oh, yes, there is. I mentioned it before.

Mr. McMULLEN. The returning officer in my riding went around to pick up the ballot boxes in each place, and it took him a week. In one case the person went away from home to the mill or to the town, and left the ballot box in the house, not knowing what day the returning officer would come for it; and the returning officer had to break open the door or the window to get the box. It should be provided that the deputy returning officers should, immediately at the close of the poll, send the ballot box to the returning officer.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the practice.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is the almost universal practice, but it is not done in some cases.

I know that the practice the Mr. BARRON. hon, member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) complains of, prevails in some counties in Ontario, and it is in consequence of the wording of the section which says:

"The ballot box shall then be locked and sealed and delivered to the returning officer or election clerk." I had occasion once to advise a returning officer during an election, and I know whereof I speak. The returning officer, with a view to get the mileage expeases, sometimes interprets that clause to be that he himself should go to the deputy and take the delivery in person. The result is, that a great delay is occasioned by the returning officer travelling a great distance to get the mileage and depriving his deputy of it. It might be well if the hon, gentleman who has raised the point should add a clause to the effect which he has stated, when the Bill comes up for further discussion. Mr. McMULLEN. I will do so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that this clause requires further consideration and amendment. It should be provided that it shall be the duty of the deputy returning officer, in each polling division, to grant a certificate to the scrutineers or the agents of the different candidates.

Some hon. MEMBERS. That is the law now. Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The law now is that they may do so if it is asked for. It ought to be his duty to make such certificates, and if there is no representative of the candidate there to receive the certificate, he should enclose it to the candidate so that these certificates will be forthcoming in case the ballot box is lost. The law now says that the returning officer may summon the deputy returning officer, his poll clerk, or any other person, and I suggest that it should be made to read so as to include the agents or scrutineers who represent the different candidates. We ought to take every possible precaution against every possibility of fraud, and the best evidence is the certificate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The giving of a certificate is a most important thing, but I always found that this was all right. The law cannot be made to

The candidate should be there himself or his agents, and the deputy returning officer must give a certificate to any elector who is representing a candidate, if it is asked for.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose the ballot box is not forthcoming, and no person has demanded such certificate, where is such information to be had? The candidate may not be in the country at all, but may have been nominated by persons who have obtained his assent. I say that no matter whether the candidate or his agent asks for his certificate or not, it should be the duty of the returning officer to prepare and forward such certificate, so that there can be no person returned except the person who has obtained the majority of the votes.

Mr. DENISON. I cannot see the object of that, because that is his duty at present.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, it is not.

Mr. DENISON. It is his duty to make the return, and if there is no one present to whom to hand the certificate, he will send it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Let him mail it in a registered envelope to each candidate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, member for Bothwell wants that made compulsory which is now permissive.

Mr. WATSON. In my election there were some polling sub-divisions where there was not an agent of a candidate at all, and if the ballots were lost there would be no way of tracing the vote. What the hon, member for Bothwell asks is that the deputy returning officer shall make a statement of the poll, and that if there is no agent of the candidates there, he will send a statement of the poll in a registered envelope to each candidate.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no objection to that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If that is approved, and if it is to be carried out, you must put in a provision allowing the deputy returning officer something for it, or it will not be done.

That will be part of the ex-Mr. WATSON. It certainly will not cost very much. see that this section speaks of "the deputy returning officers whose ballot boxes are missing, or any other person having the same." I claim that the I claim that the ballot boxes should not be allowed to go out of the possession of the deputy returning officer, until they are placed in the hands of the returning officer; I do not think anybody else should have I think also that a provision should be made that the returning officer shall deposit the ballot boxes in some place of safe-keeping after he receives them until he makes his declaration. know that in my own case the ballot boxes were kept until the date of the declaration in a place where almost anyone could get at them-in a room in the post office, with nothing between them and the public but a common pine door. When those boxes arrived at Portage la Prairie some of them were unsealed and a great many had the locks knocked off, and they were practically open to the public; and we were very much alarmed, because there were persons there who had trifled with ballot boxes previously. I think the returning officer officer seemed to have difficulty in getting through ought to be required to store the ballot boxes in what he has to do as it is. There are sufficient vaults or similar places of safety.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When we get everything so perfect as the hon gentleman wishes, we shall have everything so tight that there cannot possibly be an election. My hon, friend will see that his suggestion does not refer to this clause at I think there is no objection to the clause.

Mr. McMULLEN. Sub-section 2 of section 58 provides that the ballot boxes shall be locked up and sealed, and then delivered by the deputy returning officer. I would propose that that be amended by inserting after the word "delivered" the word "forthwith."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think we will put in something like that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to make a suggestion before passing on to another clause which the hon. Minister of Justice will perhaps consider before the Bill again comes up. Several hon, members have spoken about the difficulty that exists with respect to the ballot boxes from the time they come in, sealed up by the deputy returning officers. until the returning officer gets them. But there is a greater difficulty. After the returning officer gets them and before he opens them, it is not provided that they shall be kept in any place of safety; and all the frauds that have been committed have been committed during that period of time. It is very difficult to know how to get over this difficulty; but I would suggest this amend-

Sub-section 1 of section 60 of the said Act is hereby amended by inserting after the words "returning officer" in the first line thereof the following words: "between the times of the receipt by him or his election clerk of each of the ballot boxes and the opening of the same at the place, day and hour appointed by his proclamation, shall take every precaution for the security of such ballot boxes, and for preventing any other person than himself and his election clerk having access thereto, and shall immediately upon the receipt of each such ballot box seal the same under his own seal in such a way that the box cannot be opened without such seal being broken, and this he shall do without effacing or covering the seal of the deputy returning officer thereon, and such returning officer." ing officer.

I think it desirable that the returning officer, when he receives these ballot boxes, should put his own seal upon them, so that when the day of declaration comes they shall be found having both the seal of the deputy returning officer and that of the returning officer.

Mr. BARRON. I propose to ask the Committee to amend section 56, sub-section 3 of the Dominion Elections Act. That section provides that all the ballot papers indicating the votes given for each candidate respectively, shall be put into separate envelopes or parcels, and those rejected, those spoiled, and those unused shall be put respectively into separate envelopes or parcels, and such envelopes and parcels, being endorsed, shall be put back into the ballot box. I propose to provide that such envelopes or parcels shall also be sealed with wax by the deputy returning officer and be initialled by the agent, if present, across the flap thereof, and be then put into the ballot box. Committee will see that there is nothing to prevent the envelopes being tampered with under the law as it is, as they are not sealed.

Mr. DENISON. I attended one of the ballot booths during the last election, and the returning forms and ceremonies to be gone through to puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer. As far as I could see, the thing seemed to be well hedged in as it is, that the fewer complications we make the better.

Mr. McMULLEN. My experience at one of the polls is that the ballots were put into a box without the envelopes being sealed, while a little screen which had been used was actually put into an envelope and sealed up.

On section 6.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Disputes arose as to whether the affidavit should be entitled, and lawyers find that technical disputes in these matters are those which operate to set aside the object of the Legislature. I would suggest that the following words be inserted after the word "affidavit" in the first line of sub-section a:—"which need not be entitled in any manner or cause."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to call the Minister's attention to a serious objection to the original clause which we are now amending. recount has become a rather important business, and you must get an order from a judge appointing the time and place for the recount within four days after the declaration. I do not object to the time, because it is right that these things should be done promptly, but you must serve the order upon the candidate or his agent within four days, and, if they are not in the district, you have lost your chance of a recount. There is no power given to I suggest to the make a substituted service. Minister that sub-section 1 of section 64 should be amended by inserting after the word "be," in the 45th line thereof, the following words:-

Which said notice may be served upon the said candidates or agents either personally or by such substituted service as such judge may when appointing the time or afterwards direct.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The last five lines of subsection α of this Bill deals with that matter.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No; that is only in case you are driven to apply to the court for what is equivalent to a mandamus. That is when the County Court judge refuses to go on with his count, and you apply for a mandamus to compel him to do so. But the main section does not provide for substituted service, and if the candidate or his agent is not in the country, you cannot go on at all.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I know the intention of the Committee was to provide for that case.

Mr. BARRON. No doubt the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) thought that was done which was intended to be done by the Committee, because the proposal was one which I made to the Committee, and the Deputy Minister of Justice took it with the view of incorporating it in the measure. As the hon. member for Haldimand has said, it was intended by this section to provide for that very thing which the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) proposes.

On section 7,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I dare say this clause will render unnecessary in the vast majority of cases any further steps, but the law was intended to make provision for what is contained in this clause, and yet we have had candidates representing the minority of the voters returned to this House, and a contested election trial has been generally Mr. Denison.

found necessary to seat the candidate having the majority of votes. In the old Parliament, it was the practice to amend the return where the minority candidate had been returned, and to throw upon the candidate having the minority vote the responsibility of contesting the election. the instance of my hon. from Queen's, N. B. (Mr. King). He received a majority of the votes. returning officer seemed to think he had admitted the hon, gentleman to be a candidate improperly, and he refused to treat him as a candidate at all and returned his opponent as if he had been elected by acclamation. It seems to me that, in a case of that sort, it is a simple question of arithmetic as was stated by Lord Esher in the Bangor case; it is simply the duty of the returning officer to add up the numbers, to allow the candidate having the majority of votes to take the seat, leaving it to the other party to contest the election if he sees fit. This clause will no doubt prevent a large number of abuses of this kind, but there have been many disputes in regard to the law of Parliament in that particular, and I think we should remove any doubt by declaring that it shall be the right of the House of Commons to summon the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to the Bar of the House and to amend the return in accordance with the number of votes polled.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think in the case the hon. gentleman has in his recollection, the power of Parliament to do that is not disputed, but the wisdom of doing it is denied.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of Justice, I think, will find this to have been the case: that it was maintained that that was one of the powers that Parliament had relegated to the courts by the Controverted Elections Act, and that is what I think Parliament has not done, because it is simply a question of calculation. There is no question of law at all.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It has relegated that question to the courts so far as to give the courts apparent jurisdiction. All we contended was that it was not sound policy to resume the exercise of any functions with regard to a matter in which petitions would apply.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I want to say that our contention was that it was never the intention of Parliament to part with power in that respect, that is, to relegate to the court a question that involves nothing more than an arithmetical calculation, and it is not in the interest of the candidates or of Parliament that parties shall be put to the expense of a controverted election, when there is no point involved beyond the question of simply adding up the votes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I quite agree with what my hon. friend says, but I do not think the English language can make the law plainer than it is now. You will always find men like the returning officer in the case I mentioned, who will violate the plainest provision that you can put upon the statute. The law is perfectly plain, that he is simply to add up the numbers; and the power of this Parliament, in the case to which my hon. friend refers, to make that right which he made wrong, never was disputed by any constitutional authority in this House worth listening to.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My hon. friend will remember that the seat was not given to my hon. friend from Queen's, N.B. (Mr. King). There is no doubt as to what the duty of the returning officer was. It is not a question as to the duty of the returning officer; but the returning officer has neg-lected his duty, he has violated the law, and the question is, how is my hon. friend to get his seat? I wish it simply to be declared that Parliament shall, in that class of cases, order the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to amend the return. Now, my hon, friend knows that that is not done. It was argued by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), it was argued by every hon. gentleman on that side of the House when that matter was in controversy, that the question ought to go to the courts, that it was the intention to embrace cases of that sort within the Controverted Elections Act. Now, I say it was not the intention to embrace cases of that sort in the Controverted Elections Act, and I wish to remove any doubt in this matter by declaring that, where it is simply a question of arithmetic, where the returning officer has failed to return the candidate having a majority of votes, this House shall order the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to appear at the Bar of the House and to amend the returns in accordance with the facts.

On section 10,

Mr. BARRON. I would like to ask the Minister to consider an amendment to clause 58 in the original Act. After reciting the important duties that are imposed upon the returning officer and his clerk, I would suggest that there should be some such clause as this added:

Whensoever it shall be proved before a court of competent jurisdiction that the ballot box or its contents has or have been tampered with during the time when such ballot box or contents was or were in the legal possession of the returning officer, election clerk or deputy returning officer, then such returning officer, election clerk or deputy shall be liable to the fines or penalties, or both, provided by law for such an offence, unless such returning officer, election clerk or deputy returning officer, as the case may be, proves to the satisfaction of such court that such offence was committed without his knowledge and connivance, or not through his own act.

The wording of it has been somewhat altered by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) with whom I had a conversation with regard to it. We know that in an ordinary civil case if any property is left to any other person in charge, the person with whom it is left is obliged to return that property in the same condition in which he received it. Now, I propose that if a ballot box is proved to come into the possession of the returning officer perfectly sound and all satisfactory, then the onus is upon him of showing that while it has been in his possession nothing has been tampered with. If it is proved that it has been tampered with, then the onus is thrown upon him of proving that he is not the guilty party.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E.I.) I will suggest to the hon. member that it would be proper for him to give notice of his amendment, and have it printed in the proceedings.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am afraid you would not get anybody to act as returning officer at all.

Mr. BARRON. It is very simple. You place view of the fact that no operations were carried on the ballot box in the hands of a returning officer in a perfectly safe and sound condition. He is re- for current year, and Mr. Duguay will be retired.

sponsible for it; he must deliver it up in an equally sound and proper condition. If he does not do that, surely the onus ought to be upon him to show why he does not do that which the law says he shall do.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When this Bill gets through the Committee, containing all the amendments that have been proposed, there will be one more unhappy being in the constituency after an election, than the defeated candidate:

Mr. BOWELL. Take the large number of deputy returning officers in the hon. gentleman's own district which runs away back into the free grant region some hundreds of miles. The deputy finds but one or two rooms in the house, he has to stop there all night, and during the night someone breaks in and tampers with the box, and the deputy knows nothing at all about it. Then the hon. gentleman proposes to compel him to prove who it was that did the mischief.

Mr. BARRON. There are no such people in my riding; it is only in your riding that they are to be found.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). All the different amendments that have been proposed to-night are in the custody of the Minister of Justice, and he will be held responsible.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.30 p. m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 3rd August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 156) founded on Resolution 3 reported from Committee of Ways and Means, and agreed to by the House on Friday last, further to amend the Customs Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

JOSEPH DUGUAY, EXCISEMAN.

Mr. RINFRET (for Mr. MIGNAULT) asked, What were the duties discharged by Joseph Duguay, exciseman, since the suspension of work at the manufactory of cigars, &c., at Baie du Fèvbre, where he resides, in virtue of which duties he was enabled to draw a salary of $500 a year, up to 30th June, 1889?

Mr. COSTIGAN. During the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1889, cigars were packed and excised. During the last fiscal year no manufacturing operations were carried on although license was taken out and stock of raw material is still on hand. In view of the fact that no operations were carried on last year, the department will not grant a license for current year, and Mr. Duguay will be retired.

BARRIE POST OFFICE.

Mr. BARRON asked, What is the name and address of the contractor who built the Barrie Post Office? What was the sum inserted in the contract for the erection of said post office? What was the amount of such person's tender? What was the amount paid such person for extras on said post office? What was the total cost of the work? When was the work completed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The name of the contractor is William Toms, of Ottawa. The sum inserted in the contract for the erection of the said post office was $25,000. The amount of this tender was $25,000. The amount paid for extras on that post office amounted to $2,586, additional work for post office fittings, $2,750, finishing rooms on south side of attic, $670; the total cost of the work being $30,988. The work was completed on the 17th May, 1887.

FRASERVILLE POST OFFICE.

Mr. RINFRERT (for Mr. Choquette) (translation) asked, 1. To whom was the contract awarded for the building of the post office at Fraserville? 2. What is the amount granted for that undertaking? 3. When should the building be completed under the terms of the contract? 4. Are the Government aware that the work has been stopped repeatedly and that, in fact, the building has not yet been roofed in? 5. Will the Government take steps to compel the buildier to fulfil the terms of his contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member I may state: 1. That the contractor is Alfred Lortie. 2. The amounts voted are as follows:-Estimates for 1889-90, $2,000; for 1890-91, $8,000. 3. The 23rd June, 1891. 4. Yes. 5. Last week an officer was sent to inspect the works and report; the report is now under consideration.

MAILS FROM CALGARY TO EDMONTON.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, Who was the contractor for carrying the mails from Calgary to Edmonton in the years 1887, 1888, 1889 and 1890? How many trips a week does the contract provide for? What is the distance from Calgary to Edmonton? How much was paid each year for carrying such mail? Were tenders called for, for the performance of this service? Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer? If not, why not?

Mr. HAGGART. The contractors for carrying the mails in the years named were Messrs. Leeson & Scott. The contract provided for one trip per week each way. The distance is 198 miles. Each year between the 15th of August, 1885, and the 11th of November last, the exchange of mails between these points was carried on under the contract for the service between Calgary and Fort Saskatchewan (weekly), Battleford and Fort Pitt (fortnightly), Battleford and Swift Current (weekly), for which the sum of $20,061.86 per annum was paid. Since the 11th of November last the exchange has been made under the contract for the weekly service between Calgary and Fort Saskatchewan, for which $8,537.37 is paid. Tenders were not invited for the performance of this service.

Mr. Costigan.

The mail service in the North-West Territories was begun in 1877, an arrangement having been made with Mr. J. McKay for a trip every three weeks between Winnipeg and Edmonton at the rate of $10,000 per annum. This service remained in operation until the Canadian Pacific Railway teached Portage la Prairie in December, 1880, when the exchange with Edmonton was started from that point, the frequency remaining the same. Mr. J. W. McLane was the contractor, and the rate of payment was $23,134.82 per annum. the railway extended westward, the distributing point for this service was successively Brandon on the 16th of October, 1881; Oak Lake on the 1st of July, 1882; and Troy (now Qu'Appelle Station) on the 17th of September, 1882, the rate of payment for the service from the last point being $15,765. On the 1st of June, 1883, an arrangement was made with Mr. McLane for a service between Edmonton, Stobart, Prince Albert and Troy, the frequency of which was weekly as far as Prince Albert, and once in three weeks between Stobart and Edmonton. The rate of payment was $24,152 per annum. On the 1st of November, 1883, this service was divided into two, namely, between Prince Albert and Troy, weekly, for $7,900 per annum, and Edmonton and Stobart, fortnightly, at the rate of $10,500 per annum. The contractor the rate of $10,500 per annum. for both these services was Mr. R. Elliott. On the 1st of January, 1884, both contracts were transferred to Messrs. Leeson, Scott & Stewart. The service between Prince Albert and Troy remained in operation at the same rate until it was suspended on the opening of the Prince Albert branch railway last year. The service between branch railway last year. The service between Edmonton and Stobart was replaced in May, 1884, by fortnightly services between Calgary and Fort Saskatchewan and Fort Pitt and Stobart, Messrs. Leeson & Scott undertaking these two services for $11,000 per annum. In June, 1885, Battleford was brought into connection with the railway at Swift Current, and the service now stood fortnightly between Calgary and Fort Saskatchewan, Battleford and Fort Pitt, Battleford and Swift Current, and the rate of payment was $13,061.85 per annum. In November, 1887, the services to Fort Saskatchewan and Battleford from the railway were made weekly and the rate of payment increased to $20,071.86. In November, 1890, the utilizing of the Prince Albert Railway for mail purposes made it necessary to enter into a fresh arrangement with Messrs. Leeson & Scott for the weekly service between Calgary and Fort Saskatchewan, and the rate of payment was fixed at $8,537.37 for this service.

Mr. CHARLTON. The last portion of the sixth question has not been answered—why were tenders not asked for?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It has been a continuous arrangement since 1877, made by the Postmaster General.

MAILS FROM CALGARY TO FORT MACLEOD.

Since the 11th of November last the exchange has been made under the contract for the weekly service between Calgary and Fort Saskatchewan, for which $8,537.37 is paid. Tenders were not invited for the performance of this service.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. Cameron, Huron) asked, 1. Who has the contract for carrying the mails from Calgary to Fort Macleod? 2. Who had such contract in the years 1887, 1888 1889 and 1890? 3. Were tenders called for, for the performance of such service? 4. Was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer? If not, why not? 5. How many trips a week does the contract provide for? 6. How much was paid each year for the carrying of such mails? 7. What is the distance from Calgary to Fort Maeleod?

1. Mr. W. H. Ford. Mr. HAGGART. There was no such mail service during the years mentioned until the 1st of July, 1889. In 1887 and 1888 there were two services covering part of this route, viz., between Calgary and Musquito Creek, and Fort Macleod and Pincher Creek. These services were both performed by the Stewart Ranche Company. On the 1st of July, 1889, a contract was made with Mr. W. H. Ford for the service between Calgary and Fort Macleod. This contract is still in operation. 3. Tenders were called on the 23rd of November, 1888, for services between Calgary and Musquito Creek, and between Fort Macleod and Pincher Creek, and at this time two tenders were made in the regular way for the service beween Calgary and Fort Macleod. As these were lower in amount than the tenders for the existing service which covered only part of the route, one of them was accepted. 4. The two tenders received therefor, were equal. 5. One trip per week each 6. $1,200 per annum ever since this service came into existence. 7. 102 miles.

CLAIMS OF ADDISON McPHERSON.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, 1. Has a man named Addison McPherson, or anyone for or through him, preferred any claim on the Government for alleged losses sustained during the rebellion in the North-West Territories? 2. If so, who preferred such claims? 3. When were such claims preferred? 4. For what amount, and what is the nature of the claims preferred? 5. Have such claims been assigned? If so, to whom and when? 6. Has the assignee made any claim on the Government? If so, when, and for how much?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 1. A man named Addison McPherson made a claim on the department for alleged losses sustained during the rebellion in the North-West Territories. 2. The claim was made by Addison McPherson. The claims were made in 1885. 4. The amount of the claim is $1,592 for carting powder and shot, horse hire and loss of waggon. 5. These claims were assigned to William George Conrad and Charles E. Conrad, trading as I. G. Baker & Co., on the 14th February, 1891. 6. The assignee made the claim on the Government by petition of right received in the Department of Militia and Defence, on 17th June, 1891, for $1,592.

THE BRANDON MAIL IN THE PUBLIC DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. WATSON asked, 1. How many copies of the Brandon Mail are taken by the public departments, Ottawa, and how many copies elsewhere for which the Government have to pay? 2. How much was paid by the Government or the department by the chicagor, owing to there in the public departments, Ottawa, and how much per copy received elsewhere? 3. How much was paid the proprietor of the Brandon Mail last year for other services? 4. What was the amount of to remain is not fixed.

the account rendered for the Brandon Mail received at the public departments, Ottawa? 5. What was the amount of account rendered for such other services?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That question was on the Order Paper last week for several days but it was dropped in the presence of my hon. friend, and consequently I dropped the answer also. But so far as my memory serves me, the Brandon Mail received from all the departments last year, $21.10 for subscriptions; and from all the departments for advertisements, $382.81. The paper at Selkirk published the voters' list for $181.84. This is my recollection, and I believe I am right, of the facts which were furnished to me the other day by the Printing Bureau.

MR. H. H. PELLETIER.

Mr. AMYOT asked, In what years has Mr. H. H. Pelletier been employed in the Department of Militia since 1880, and in what capacity and at what salary each year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Henry Pelletier has been given employment in the military stores of Quebec, under Paymaster Lt.-Colonel Forrest, from the 28th November, 1888, at $1.50 per day; and from 22nd December, 1890, at $2 per day, until the 23rd July, 1891, upon which later date he was discharged.

CIVIL SERVANTS.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Has any order been issued requiring civil servants to remain in the building in which they are engaged, from the hour of their arrival in the forenoon to the time of leaving in the afternoon, without any recess for lunch? If that order or any order in the same direction has been issued, what has been the cause of the order? Is it made to apply to the lady civil servants as well as male servants? Is the order a permanent or temporary one?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has been no new order issued. The order referred to is the standing order, and it applies to all the clerks. In regard to the time for lunch, it is well understood that if a medical certificate is submitted by a clerk to the head of the department, and it is found satisfactory, some time is given for lunch.

DREDGING SUMMERSIDE HARBOUR.

Mr. PERRY asked, At whose recommendation was the dredge Prince Edward sent to dredge Summerside harbour, at Prince Edward Island? How long is she ordered to remain there? Is she ordered to finish all the dredging required before leaving?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The necessity for dredging alongside the railway wharf at Summerside harbour was brought to the notice of this department by the chief engineer and general manager, owing to there not being sufficient depth of water to allow the new steamer just put on the Prince Edward Island route to lie at the wharf to load and unload, and the dredge is now at work making the required berth. The time for the dredge to remain is not fixed.

HARBOUR MASTER AT TIGNISH.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is Benjamin Gaudet still acting as harbour master at Tignish, P.E.I.? If so, has he made a return of the money he collected for the year 1890? Is said Benjamin Gaudet to be continued in that position any longer?

Mr. Gaudet is still harbour Mr. TUPPER. master at Tignish, but the sub-collector of Customs is holding an investigation into the affairs of his office as wharfinger, under oath, by Order in Council. Mr. Gaudet was appointed on 22nd April, 1890, and has made no return of any collections. His remuneration is $100 of fees collected. Mr. Gaudet is also wharfinger at Tignish, to which office he was appointed 5th September, 1888. He has made no return of wharfage collections to the present time.

POSTMASTER AT BRAMPTON.

Mr. BAIN (for Mr. Featherston) asked, Has any person been appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Wm. Elliott, late postmaster at Brampton, Ont.? If so, who has the appointment? Is it permanent, and what is the salary? Who is caretaker of said post office, and what is the salary of such caretaker?

Mr. HAGGART. No appointment has yet been made to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Wm. Elliott. Mr. W. C. McCulla is in charge of the Brampton Post Office. The salary attached to the Brampton Post Office is $1,300, with $20 extra for forward duty. The name of the caretaker of the Brampton Post Office building is not known to the Post Office Department, nor his salary.

GRAVING DOCKS.

Mr. ALLAN asked, Was a promise made prior to the 5th March last that a dry dock would be constructed at the town of Amherstburgh by the Government? If so, is it the intention of the Government to carry out such promise?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We are not aware that any promise was made, either before or after 5th March last, that a dry dock would be constructed at Amherstburgh by the Government. The hon, gentleman will remember there is a statute under which dry docks may be built and receive certain aid from the Government under certain circumstances.

TAY CANAL.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, 1. How many vessels passed through the Tay Canal last year; the names of the vessels and tonnage? 2. How much has been received by the Government last year for fees or lockage on said canal, and how much from all sources? 3. Does the Government still keep a dredge employed in cleaning out and deepening the canal, or has such dredge been so employed, and if so, when and how long? 4. Was such dredge purchased by the Government? If so, where, from whom, at what price, and who negotiated the purchase of such dredge? 5. Has the Government employed a diver and gang of men at any time in cleaning out the channel of said canal? If so, when and how long were such diver and gang employed and at what cost? 6. Have complaints been made to the drawing that code, as will be seen on page 1638 of Government or to the department that the said Hansard. That was the only payment made. Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

channel or canal is too shallow to permit of the small class of vessels passing through the same to pass with safety; or is the Government aware that such is the case? 7. Have complaints been made to the Government or the department that such small-vessels have frequently grounded in said canal and been thereby damaged, or is the Government aware that such is the fact?

Mr. BOWELL. 1. The total number of vessels passing through the Tay Canalfrom 1st October, 1890, to 30th June, 1891, was 75; the total tonnage, 5,831 tons. The particulars are as follows:—Steamer Jno. Haggart, 59 tons, 24 trips, total tonnage 1,416. Steamer Jno. Haggart, rebuilt, 117 tons, 21 trips, total tonnage 2,457. Steamer Harry Bate, 144 tons, 12 trips, total tomage 1,728. Steamer Geraldine and skiff, 15 tons, 7 trips, total tomage 104. Steamer Firefly, 8 tons, 4 trips, total tomage 32. Steamer Ranger, 8 tons, 4 trips, total tonnage 32. Scow (no name), 30 tons, 2 trips, total tonnage 60. Skiff (no name), 1 ton, 1 trip, tonnage 1. 2. The amount of tolls on vessels and freight collected from 1st October to 30th June, 1891, was $58.81; receipts from other sources nil. Total receipts $58.81. 3. The dredge is not now employed on the Tay Canal. It was so employed for the season 1890 and part of 1891. 4. At Perth, Messrs. Wm. Davis and Son, $6,000. The late Chief Engineer, Mr. Page. 5. Yes. About 2 months, at a cost of about $200 per month. 6. Complaints were made to Mr. Wise, the superintending engineer, that detached boulders and stones were left in the rock cuts by the dredge. The same class of vessels can pass with safety through the Tay Canal as navigate the Rideau. 7. No complaints have been made that vessels are frequently grounded. When a strong wind has been blowing, vessels have drifted on the sides of the canal and have sustained slight damages.

KINGSTON PENITENTIARY—COAL SUPPLY.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, 1. Have tenders been called for within the last six months for the supply of coal for the Kingston Penitentiary? 2. When were such tenders called for? 3. How many tenders were received by the department, or the lowest? 4. The amount per ton for such coal, soft and hard, specified in each tender? 5. Who were such tenderers? 6. Was the lowest tender accepted? If not, why? 7. How many tons of each kind of coal did the advertisements for tenders call for ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. 1. Yes. 2. June 30th, 1891. 3 Three tenders were received, as follows:—John Gaskin, egg $4.60, soft $4.65, chestnut $4.60, smiths $4.75. J. R. Crawford, egg $5.19, soft $5.24, chestnut $5.10, smiths $5.29. Jas. Swift, egg $4.58, soft $4.70, chestnut, $4.72, smiths $4.78. The lowest tender reported to me was accepted. No quantity was specified in the advertisements.

CRIMINAL LAW BILL.

Mr. FREMONT asked. Have any moneys been paid for the drafting of the Criminal Law Bill, and, if so, how much and to whom?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The House voted the suin of $250 to C. A. Masters for assistance in RATES FOR CLERGYMEN ON THE I.C.R.

Mr. BARRON asked, 1. Is it the regulation that ministers of the Gospel and clergymen travel upon the Intercolonial and Government Railways at a reduced rate? 2. If so, what is the reduction? 3. Is the reduction confined to the Province of Quebec, or is it available to all such persons residing elsewhere than in the Province of Quebec? 4. What official has authority to grant a certificate for reduced rates to clergymen, if such are granted? 5. Is Mr. Stocking the agent of the Intercolonial at the city office in Quebec? If so, is the Government aware that he has declared that the privilege of reduced rates is confined to the clergy of Quebec?

Mr. BOWELL. 1. Yes. Tickets are issued at reduced rates to travel on the Intercolonial railway to ministers of the Gospel and clergymen. 2. Half a regular first class fare. 3. No. The reduction is not confined to the Province of Quebec. It is available to all clergymen in Canada who applied for, and hold a clergymen's certificate, signed by the chief superintendent and general passenger agent of the Intercolonial Railway. 4. The chief superintendent and general passenger agent of the Intercolonial are the only officials authorized to issue such tickets at reduced rates. 5. Mr. Stocking is not the agent of the Intercolonial at Quebec. The Government is not aware of, nor responsible for, anything that gentleman may have said.

EXTENSION OF THE TAY CANAL.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, 1. Has the Government entered into any contract with any person or persons for the extension of the Tay Canal to or near Haggart's Mill, Perth? 2. If so, who are the contractors, and where do they reside? 3. Was the contract let by tender? If so, when was the contract entered What is the contract price? When is the contract to be completed? 4. What is the estimated quantity of excavation? 5. How much clay? How much rock, and if crib work is required, how much? 6. In the construction of the said extension is it necessary to remove the stone bridge across the River Tay? If so, is it to be replaced by an iron bridge, at what cost? 7. In the con-struction of said iron bridge has it been found necessary to purchase some land to make room for the new bridge? If so, at what cost? S. Are the works now in course of construction? 9. Was there any petition or request by any person or persons or body corporate for the construction of said extension and bridge? If so, who were such person or persons or body corporate, and when was the same preferred? 10. Were engineers instructed to make surveys, &c., of such extension? If so, who were they? When were they instructed and when did they report? 11. Has the construction of said works diverted the main branch of the River Tay from the old channel? 12. Has the construction of said works made it necessary that the mill known as "Haggart's Mill" should be closed? 13. Pending the construction of said works and during the period that the said mill be closed, is it the intention of the Government to make compensation to the owner of said mill? 14. Have any sum or sums per month or otherwise been agreed on as such compensation? If so what is the sum per month or otherwise?

Mr. BOWELL. 1. Yes. 2. Mr. John O'Toole and resides at Ottawa. 3. Yes, let by tender. Contract entered into 26th January, 1891. Price, $18,466. To be completed 1st November, 1891. 4. 14,100 cubic yards excavation. 5. 13,100 cubic yards clay, 1,000 cubic yards rock, about 50 lineal feet crib work. 6. Yes, it is necessary to remove the stone bridge. It is to be replaced by an iron bridge. The Government builds the masonry, at a cost of about $6,000. The corporation pays for the iron superstructure at a cost of $4,000. 7. Yes, at a cost of $1,500. 8. Yes. 9. Yes, by a deputation of the mayor and members of the corporation of the town of Perth, who waited upon the late Minister of Railways and Canals for that purpose. 10. Mr. Wise, the superintending engineer of the Rideau Canal. structed 22nd July, 1890. Reported 15th September, 1890. 11. No. 12. Yes. 13. No. 14. No sums have been agreed upon for such compensation.

MAIL SERVICE via GODERICH.

Mr. CHARLTON (for Mr. CAMERON, Huron) asked, 1. Did the Department of the Postmaster General receive from the inhabitants of St. Helen's and vicinity a petition praying that the mail to that place be conveyed vid Lucknow, instead of rid Goderich? 2. At what sum was it stated in said petition such mail would be carried by the former route, per year? 3. What sum is now paid for carrying such mail to Goderich? 4. What is the distance from Goderich to St. Helen's? What is the distance from Lucknow to St. Helen's? Why is the mail not carried to St. Helen's rid the shortest route? 6. Has the contract to carry the said mail rid Goderich been renewed since the receipt at the department of said petition? If so, for how long, and why? 7. Has an offer been made to the department to carry the mail from Lucknow to St. Helen's, for $125 a year? If so, why was it not accepted?

Mr. HAGGART. 1. A petition for the service of St. Helen's from Lucknow was received at this department. 2. No sum of money was mentioned in the petition. 3. $150 per annum. 4. From Goderich to St. Helen's, 21½ miles; from Lucknow to St. Helen's, 6 miles. 5. The mail to St. Helen's is carried by the shortest route. St. Helen's is served from Belfast, only 24 miles distant, while Lucknow is 6 miles away. 6. A new contract was made for the mail service between Belfast and St. Helen's (not between Goderich and St. Helen's) on the 1st April last, and will continue until 31st March, 1895. This arrangement was made because it was believed to be the best possible for that post office. 7. Yes, an offer was received at $125 per annum. It was not accepted because having in view the present cost of the service which was fixed by public competition in January last, it was believed to be too low, and that eventually the cost would be considerably higher.

STRATHROY POST OFFICE.

Mr. HYMAN asked, 1. What is the name of the contractor who built the Strathroy Post Office?

2. What was the amount of the original contract?

3. What was the amount paid for extras upon said building?

4. What was the total cost of the work?

5. Was the lowest tender accepted, and, if not, why not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1. Lewis & Cluff. 2. $14,475. 3. The amount allowed for extras was $594, and for additional work, Post Office, Customs and Inland Revenue fittings, &c., $2,875. This amount includes cost of site, heat-$25,028. ing Post Office, Customs and Inland Revenue, fittings, furniture, &c. 5. Yes.

SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I., RAILWAY STATION.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is the railway station at Summerside, P.E.I., to be changed? If so, where to and when?

Mr. BOWELL. It is in contemplation to move the railway station at Summerside, P.E.I., but it is not finally decided where it will be moved to, or when it will be moved.

THE TITLE OF QUEEN'S COUNSEL.

Mr. DELISLE asked, Whether the title of Queen's Counsel is conferred on advocates in the district of Quebec, in view of their merits or professional success, or in consideration of political services rendered to their party? How does it happen that on the last occasion of conferring the title of Queen's Counsel in the districts of Quebec, Beauce, Three Rivers, Montmagny, Kamouraska and Rimouski, no advocate belonging to the Liberal party was selected? Is it the intention of the Government hereafter to carry out the awarding of these titles in a manner more equitable and better calculated to promote the interests of the profession? Is it their intention to grant the said title to advocates who are appointed by the Attorney General to represent the Crown in courts of criminal jurisdiction?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The title of Queen's Counsel is conferred on advocates in all the Provinces in view of professional merit. As to the second part of the question: How it happens that on the last occasion of conferring the title of Queen's Counsel in certain parts of the Province of Quebec, no advocate belonging to the Liberal party was selected? I have only to say that I am not informed as to the political views of the gentlemen referred to; but I am aware that the last list included a number of eminent gentlemen belonging to the Liberal party. I am not informed of the political views of the particular gentlemen referral to in this question. It is the intention of the Government to carry out the awarding of these titles in the most equitable manner possible, and in the manner test calculated to promote the interests of the profession. As regards it being our intention to grant the title to advocates who are appointed by the Attorney General to represent the Crown in courts of criminal jurisdiction, that appointment no doubt is a circumstance that should. be taken into consideration, but it would not, of itself, justify their appointment without other qualifications.

J. B. BRIGHT, C.E.

Mr. DEVLIN asked, Whether J. B. Bright, C.E., is employed in the outside service of the Department of Public Works? If so, where, and what is the nature of the services rendered by him; also, salary paid? Are his duties of such a nature as to require his whole time and services, or is he permitted to do professional work outside of that given him by the department?

Mr. HYMAN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; Mr. Bright is employed in the outside service of the Department of Public Works. He is employed at Macleod, N. W. T. He is superintending the construction of a highway bridge over Old Man's River, at Macleod. He is paid at the rate of $4 per day for every day except Sundays. Mr. Bright's duties require his whole time and services, and he is not permitted to do professional work outside of that given him by the department.

7TH MILITARY CAMP.

Mr. AMYOT asked, What special reasons induced the Minister of Militia to select Rimouski as the camping ground of the 7th Military District? 2. Are the Government aware that Rimouski is some two hundred miles distant from the recruiting centre of the battalions selected for their yearly drill, the Rimouski Battalion not being so selected? 3. Have the Government, at Rimouski, a site better suited and less expensive than the Government property at Lévis, where the camp is usually located? Has Mr. L. P. Asselin, of Rimouski, been authorized to ask the citizens of Rimouski to contribute towards the expenses of the said camp?

ADOLPHE CARON. The selection of Rimouski is dependent upon the usual conditions being complied with by the municipality. regard to the selection of localities for camps, the department has at different times selected different localities for the purpose of allowing them to share in the advantages of having the camps. Thus the camps of the 7th Military District took place at Montmagny in 1888, subsequently at Lévis in 1890, and this year it will be held at Rimouski if the conditions are complied with. We have no report yet as to the special cost of transport to Rimouski, which is 180 miles below Lévis. The difference in cost in transport may not be very large. not yet in possession of any reports upon the subject mentioned in the third part of the question. Mr. Asselin has been notified that in the event of a camp being established at Rimouski, the municipality of that locality would be expected, as is done elsewhere, to furnish free of cost, camping and drill ground and water supply necessary for the camp; and if these conditions are not complied with, the camp will not be held at Rimouski. Our officers must also report upon the site being a good one.

THE CHIPPEWA INDIANS.

Mr. LANDERKIN asked, Has the following letter been received by the Government, and if so, has any action been taken upon it?

To the Right Honourable "The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

"The Superintendent General of Indian Affairs.

"Sir,—At a quarterly payment of the Chippewas of Saugeen, held on Friday and Saturday last, the 24th and 25th inst., Agent Allen called on Henry Ritchie, a memof the Band, and handed him an account of $493 to collect for Mr. Gordon, a miller and storekeeper, who supplies the Indians with goods, &c.; John George also sat at pay table to collect for D. Robertson, a merchant who supplies the Indians with goods; and after the payment had ceased, Ritchie handed the money he collected for Mr. Gordon to Agent Allen. I would like to know how long this state of affairs is going to continue.

"In reference to the charges recently sent by me to your Honour, I would like to know when they are to be investigated.

"I understand that in reference to the charges contained in the letter of Solomon and Johnston, that Mr. Agent Allen has been cleared by the Inspector of those charges. "Some of the witnesses say that it was a one-sided affair, and if there were anyone to put questions to them they could have satisfied the investigators that Agent Allen did give orders and that Solomon and Johnston were entitled to half of the fine.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant.
(Sd.) "JOHN CREIGHTON.
"SOUTHAMPTON, 28th July, 1891."

Mr. DEWDNEY. A letter of which the above purports to be a copy was received, and the letter has been acknowledged, and a copy of the same has been forwarded to Mr. Agent Allen, with instructions to report on the statements made therein relative to alleged recent collections from Indians for merchants at the quarterly payments to the Saugeen Band, of the 24th and 25th July. As respects the charges previously made against Agent Allen by Mr. Creighton, the inspector was written to for a report, but none has as yet been received.

PASPASCKASE INDIAN RESERVE.

Mr. WATSON asked, Was the Paspasckase Reserve sold on the 2nd of July last, according to the notice lately issued under authority of the Department of the Interior? If so, who are the purchasers, the quantity of land purchased by each, giving location by sections, and the amount paid for the same?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Part of the reserve was sold on the 2nd ultimo in accordance with the notice to that effect. The names of the purchasers, the quantity of the land purchased by each, the locations by sections, and the amount paid for the same, are included in the following list:—

SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Mr. FRASER asked. Does the Government intend bringing the Short Line into New Glasgow by a route other than the present roundabout and heavy graded way $ri\hat{a}$ Westville and Stellarton? If so, when? Have surveys of any other route than the present been made by the Government, and with what results?

Mr. BOWELL. No decision has yet been reached to change the location of the Short Line into New Glasgow. A survey was made for a loop line from near Westville to a point on the Intercolonial Railway near the East River bridge, shortening the line somewhat. The line, however, from Westville rid Stellarton to the bridge is only four miles.

SUB-COLLECTOR AT WALKERTON.

Mr. TRUAX asked, Did Mr. McNamara, subcollector of Customs at Walkerton, resign his position prior to or during the election in February and March last? If so, when was he re-appointed? Does he now hold the position? Is it the intention of the Government to keep in office public officials who take an active part in the elections, or do they consider it improper for officials who are paid out of the revenues of the people to so conduct themselves?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. McNamara has not at any time resigned his position, and consequently holds the office of sub-collector at Walkerton. With reference to the last portion of the question, I have to say that each case will be dealt with upon its merits, when brought to the notice of the Government.

CUSTOMS SEIZURES AT WALKERTON.

Mr. TRUAX asked, Was any seizure, and of what article, made by the Customs Department at Walkerton in 1889? If so, who was the informer, and what share of the seizure did the informer receive?

Mr. BOWELL. A seizure of certain cast iron bridge piles was made at Walkerton in 1889. The department never seeks to know the name of the informer, and when the name is given to the department we decline to disclose it to anyone who may seek to know. The informer did not receive any portion of the proceeds, for the simple reason that there was nothing collected further than the duties, which were considered sufficient, after an investigation had been made.

LABOURERS ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. HAZEN asked, Has any order been issued by the acting Minister of Railways, or any officer acting under his instructions, to reduce the pay of labourers on the Intercolonial Railway from $1.25 to $1.05 per day? And if such order has been issued, when does it go into effect and why was it issued?

Mr. BOWELL. No such order has been issued by the acting Minister of Railways, nor, so far as I can learn, by any official of the Railway Department. Upon enquiry I find that the wages have not been reduced, as currently reported.

TAY CANAL.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for:

Return showing: 1. The amount of money spent by the Government up to the 30th June, 1891, on the Tay Canal; 2. The amount of tonnage passing through the said canal in each year since work commenced on the same; 3. The amount of tolls collected on the said canal up to 30th June, 1891.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objection to the motion being carried, but I think the hon. gentleman will find the information in the answer given to the question put by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron).

Mr. CHARLTON. That was for only one year.

Mr. BOWELL. The canal has been only opened since last September, and consequently the answer I gave covers all information. The only information the hon, gentleman has not received is the total cost, and that amounts to $440,613.21.

Motion withdrawn.

NEWFOUNDLAND BAIT ACT.

On the Order being called for:

Copies of correspondence and all documents whatever to induce the Government of Newfoundland to suspend the operation of the Newfoundland Bait Act against our Canadian fishermen during the present fishing season, pending the answer of the Colonial Office through the delegation now in London; and also the correspondence and all other documents whatever respecting the measures taken by the Government of Canada towards exacting from the Government of Newfoundland the fulfilment of the assurances to the Imperial and Canadian Governments that if the Act known as The Newfoundland Act, passed in 1887, received the Royal Assent, its provisions would not be enforced against British or Canadian fishermen.—(Mr. Kaulbach.)

Mr. KAULBACH. Stand.

Mr. CASEY. It can only stand by request of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not require any information in regard to that. Does the Government ask that this motion shall stand.?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman wants his motion to pass, he might go on with it now.

Mr. TUPPER. I stated, when this was first brought up, that the information could not then be brought down, but as soon as it was in a proper position to be brought down I would bring it down. The hon, gentleman first brought this up as a question, and unless the hon. gentleman desires to discuss it he might allow it to pass, and if it passes now the return will be completed, and when the papers are ready they will be brought down. If, however, the hon gentleman desires to discuss the question, it had better be discussed

Mr. KAULBACH. I am placed rather awk-wardly in this matter, because the papers I have now are not complete, and I am waiting for some telegrams from Newfoundland and from England, which I understand have not yet been received. would ask that the matter should stand over for the present.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, gentleman had better move it now, or he may not have such a favourable opportunity.

Mr. KAULBACH. Then I will move the motion

ing my remarks before this House regarding the Newfoundland Bait Act has been in consequence of my not having received any satisfactory informa-tion through the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that the proper information had been received by him from the Government of Newfoundland or from the Colonial Secretary in Great Britain. crimination in bait is a matter which affects very seriously all the fishermen of the Maritime Provinces and also fishermen of Quebec. When the Bait Act was submitted in 1887 for the approval of the Government at home, or the Royal Assent, it only received that approval on the condition that it was not to discriminate against Canadian fishermen, but, contrary to that expressed understanding, Newfoundland has been excluding Canadian fishermen from the privileges, or the rights, rather, to which they were entitled. They have been discriminating against our fishermen as respects bait last year and this, and in favour of the fishermen of the United States, which has greatly inconvenienced the Canadian fishermen, and caused them serious loss, so much so, in many instances, that the vessels engaged in deep-sea fisheries, not being able to prosecute the industry successfully when the bait from Newfoundland was refused to them, have been compelled to remain in many cases in port for the want of bait, instead of going out to their fishing grounds. I have been informed that in one instance some fourteen vessels had been in the port of Lunenburg, N. S., at one time, waiting for an answer through the Colonial Secretary from Newfoundland in regard to this matter. My reason now for urging this so strongly on the Government is, that if some action is not taken now we will have those vessels lying over for another year, and the deep-sea fishermen will have to encounter the same difficulty again. Therefore, I would say, that if the Newfoundland fishermen persist in shutting the Canadian fishermen out from the enjoyment of that right I think the British Government, in the interest of Canada, should take such active measures as would compel them to concede to us those If the Newfoundland Government are not in a position to legislate for themselves, then the Imperial Government should legislate for them, and make it a Crown colony. I do not know that I can say any more, except to urge upon the Government very strongly that some action be taken to obtain such a satisfactory answer as will be in the interest of our fishermen, and that they will not suffer this great inconvenience and loss any longer.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). In connection with this discussion, we may consider some of the reasons why our fishermen have to go to Newfoundland for their bait. What I am about to say now would perhaps have been more properly said when the discussion came up here some weeks ago, but I was absent at that time, and I do not see why this should not be brought before the House at this A large number of our deep-sea fishermen. stage. go to Newfoundland for their bait, and I have an idea that if some of the reasons why our bait is scarce in Nova Scotia were more thoroughly looked into than they are—though I am aware that the Minister of Marine has been looking well into these matters—we might have more bait in Nova Scotia than we have now. I refer principally to the of which I have given notice. The delay in plac- great scarcity we now have in the herring fishery, which constitute the bait of our deep-sea fishermen. In the Bay of Fundy there has been a great depletion of the herring fisheries. When this matter was up before in this House hon, gentlemen pointed out quite a number of Some stated it was the sardine factory; others said it was because the farmers had used herrings for manure; some gave one cause and But there was one cause that I some another. noticed in particular, of which the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Bowers) said nothing, and that was the lobster fishing. Now, a petition has been presented to the Department of Marine and Fisheries with reference to this lobster fishing on the coasts of the Bay of Fundy, and in the Anna-polis basin. The way the lobster fishermen set their traps forms a sort of barrier to the herring coming into the shores to spawn, or coming to the shores so that they can be caught by the herring fishermen. We have quite a number of these herring fishermen all along the coast from Cape Blomidon down to Digby Gut, and from Digby Gut down to Digby Neck, and also inside Digby Basin, where a large number of men fish for these herring, or Digby chickens as they are sometimes called. Now, these lobster fishermen set their traps in rows all along these shores, with the ex-In some of the coves ception of the points. the traps are in rows of ten deep, and these fishermen assert, the herring fishermen assert, that the offal that comes from the bait on these traps makes the water and the shores so offensive that the herring, which is a delicate fish, will not come near the shore. Now, if this is so, if the traps are baited in such a manner, and if the bait becomes rotten and drops from the trap, as these herring fishermen allege, then it is this offal which, according to the reports that are given into the Department of Fisheries, operates to keep away the herring from the coast. I will read from a report of Mr. William Gunn and Mr. M. G. McLeod, delegates appointed to inquire more particularly into the herring fishery. On page 62 of that report they refer to the matter of the offal as regards the destruction of herring:

"Throwing offal or refuse of herring into the sea in the neighbourhood of the fishing grounds is another repre-hensible practice, certain to drive the herring away, as they appear to be very sensitive of offensive sights and smells. It appears that in Sweden this had something to do in scaring away the fish as above referred to."

Mr. Mitchell says:

"Those vessels which, after gutting the herring on board, "Those vessels which, after gutting the herring on board, throw the refuse into the sea, ought not to be permitted to fish where there are herring shoals; and this law ought to be enforced by the Dutch Government (whose tishing vessels cure on board), which might order that the portions taken out of the herrings at gutting be barrelled up for use, for the purpose of making oil, or for manure, or for both purposes. The quantity of herrings fished in Sweden, prior to 1809, was about as great as that fished in Scotland; yet, by allowing the refuse of the herring which had been boiled at places on the coast, for the purpose of obtaining the oil, to reach and taint the sea, the shoals left, and, as we have seen, did not return for sixtyshoals left, and, as we have seen, did not return for sixty-nine years."

Mr. Mitchell further says:

"We are of opinion that any operation which tends to disturb or scare the herring may drive away or diminish the shoals, such as leaving the nets loaded with herrings in the water, when they are unable to be taken out in consequence of their weight, throwing the refuse into the sea of the gutting of the herring, as is done by the Dutch busses, or allowing the refuse of the oil of the herring to go into the sea, as was done on the Swedish coast."

Now, this corresponds exactly with the experience 1031 of a number of men who have been engaged in this herring business in Nova Scotia for forty or fifty years, whose testimony I have taken the trouble to obtain, and which I will read to the House, in order to bring it more particularly to the attention of the Department of Fisheries. On page 82 of the same report we have also this with reference to the herring offal:

We have already shown from unquestionable authority the evil effects upon the herring shoals of throwing offal or fish refuse into the sea; resulting, in the case of Sweden, in combination with daylight net fishing, in banishing the herring from the shores of that country for a period of nerring from the shores of that country for a period of sixty-nine years.

"All experience shows that the practice of throwing offal into the sea near the grounds frequented by the herring shoals invariably results in scaring the fish away for a time, or driving them away permanently, and we consider the practice should be prohibited under heavy penalties; and that, as in the case of trawling, the prevention of the practice on the high seas should be brought about by international arrangement."

That refers, in the cases to which I will call the attention of the House, to the practice of line fishermen throwing over the offal from their vessels close to the shores where this herring fishery is carried on, and in the mouth of Digby Gut in particular, and in Digby Basin, where the herring fishing is carried on extensively. The practice of throwing offal in the mouth of Digby Gut prevents the herring from coming into the basin. Now, in 1890—and I may say before there was a thought that a new election would take place—I took the trouble to go around among the fishermen for the express purpose of getting their ideas in reference to this matter, and I took the trouble of taking their testimony, which I considered would have more weight than their petition with reference to this matter, and I thought that their petition and their direct testimony also would show that they had some cause for the complaint to which I referred. I may say that these herring fisheries extend along the shores of the Digby Basin at Digby Gut up eastward on the north coast of Nova Scotia and up the Bay of Fundy shore, and also to the west down Digby Neck. I will read some of the testimonies:

"MR. JAMES CLARK:—I am 77 years old. Have lived in Lower Granville 30 years. Have been interested in herring fishing during all that time, owning weirs and tending them. Have always had plenty of herring till about three or four years ago, and this year (1890) particularly we have had none whatever, not even a mess for our own use. The fishing of Lower Granville has always been very valuable and the people feel the loss much. I can hardly tell for certain the cause of the falling off in this fishing. Some say it is the lobster traps and some say it is the steamboats. But it cannot be the boats, as we have caught plenty of herring when the boats were running, and besides, there are say it is the lobster traps and some say it is the steamboats. But it cannot be the boats, as we have caught plenty of herring when the boats were running, and besides, there are no herring caught on the bay shore, where there are no steamboats. I am decidedly inclined to think it is the lobster traps. After the traps are taken up a few herrings are sometimes caught."

"JAMES D. WINCHESTER:—I am 62 years old. Have lived in Lower Granville all my life and have been a fisherman all my life, owning weirs, fishing them, curing the fish and selling them. Have always had a fair average run of fish, sometimes very extra, even wearing us all out in taking care of them, ever since I can remember, till within three or four years, or since the lobster traps have been placed along our coasts. The first year the lobster traps were used there was a decided falling off in the catch of herring; last year I only got $10 for my season's fishing; this year not one single cent—not a fish is hanging in any of the fish houses. I think most decidedly the lobster traps are responsible for this. Before the lobster traps came I would take from $200 to $600 for my fish per year; now I do not take one cent. And this is the experience of all the fishermen here."

"JAMES H. THORNE, ex-Warden of the County:—I am the owner of weirs and interested in fishing. There has been no herring for 3 years; never occurred before in my remem—brance. Line fishing plenty; never better before nor finer fish—but great searcity of bait—or herrings. What is the cause of this scarcity? The winter fishing and the sardine factories on the north shore of the Bay of Fundy has something to do with it. The destroying of small fish for manure and the driving for bait has also something to do with it. The sawdust also gets on the spawning beds, spoiling them, and herring will not come into the basin to something to do with it. spawn—that has also something to do with it. But the gurry thrown off of the fishing vessels, line fishermen, I mean, along the coast, and the gurry from the lobster traps, is the main cause of the present great scarcity of borning."

herring."

"Townshend Thorne:—I am 75 years old. I have lived here all my life. Have been interested in herring fishing all my life. Have owned weirs, and now own them; fished, cured and marketed the fish. My average catch, during the time I have so fished, was 600 or 700 large boxes, sometimes over 1,000, but never dwindled down to nothing till now, and only once, a long time ago, average catch, during the time I have so usued, was bod or 700 large boxes, sometimes over 1,000, but never dwindled down to nothing till now, and only once, a long time ago, do I remember when we had what would be called a very poor catch. I think it is the fault of the lobster traps."

"Stephen Thorne:—I am 30 years old. I fish with my father, Townshend Thorne. I know that before the lobster traps came we had plenty of herring, more, even, sometimes, than we would want to take care of. We would get tired out in taking care of them. Five years ago we had a great quantity. I have no doubt in my own mind but that the lobster traps are responsible for the scarcity of herring. It is not the steamboats, for they have been running up and down the river and basin for years, and we caught fish: besides, they catch no herring on the bay shore and they have no steamboats there. It is the bait that is allowed to rot in the traps till it becomes gurry that drives the fish away."

"Geo. E. Winchester, a Municipal Councillor:—I am 40 years old. Have been in Lower Granville all my life interested in fishing. My father was one of the prominent fishermen here and made money at it. During the last five years there has been a decided falling off in fishermen here and made money at it. During the last five years there has been a decided falling off in the catch of herring. The last two years I have not caught a scale. I believe it to be in consequence of the lobster traps. The fish cannot get into the shore on account of the gurry around the traps, from the bait on the traps. This leaves a streak of oil around them which herring will not approach; these traps are set in double rows 100 feet apart east and west along the shore from Blomidon to Digby Gut, and around inside the Gut and Annapolis Basin to Lobster Ledge, and also from Digby Gut west down the Digby Neck shore. These traps prevent fish from coming into the basin to our weirs. I am sure it is not the steamboats that scare the fish away, for when we had the extra boat on the route to Bar Harbour, besides the steamers we have now, we had plenty of herring. I have never before now, we had plenty of herring. I have never before known the herring fishing to dwindle down to nothing as it has the last two years, and it commenced four years known the herring fishing to dwindle down to nothing as it has the last two years, and it commenced four years ago."

"David Foster:—I am from Hampton, on the Bay of Fundy shore, in Annapolis County, but now live in Lower Granville. I have been constantly employed in fishing for eighteen years, except this year (1890). I have lobsterfished also ever since that industry commenced here four or five years ago. One Green, from Eastport, Maine, came to Hampton for lobsters. We were warned that there would be no fish if he came. He did come. We fished lobsters for him, and we had no herrings. I lobster-fished where twenty fishermen herring fished. I did well: they did nothing. The bait on these traps is very offensive. If these lobster traps are not prohibited or regulated in some manner the herring fishery must go, and that means the depopulation of the Bay shore, for where there is one lobster fishermen who cannot get a living. About the 10th of September closes the herring fishery. Lobster traps are taken up before this, but the gurry drips from the traps and makes the whole shore offensive to fish for weeks afterwards."

"WILLIAM MUSSELS:—I am 47 years old. Have been a fisherman here all my life. I think the scarcity of herring is due to several causes, the main cause being the throwing overboard of the gurry, which the fishermen do persist in doing. They have no gurryskids on board now as formerly. I think it is also due to the lobster traps, but I do not think they stop them coming in the basin. We have caught some herring at the Logpins since the traps were up, but even they have left."

"Joseph Hannes:—Am a fisherman. It is the steamboats that keep the herring away. They rush off at the approach of thunder, and the noise of the steamer's paddles drives them off also. They catch herring on the north shore where there are lobster traps. The gurry may have something to do with it, however."

Mr. Mills (Annapolis).

I found he was a lobster fisher.—

"James E. Rice:—Have lived in Lower Granville nine years; own part of two weirs. I recognize the deplction of the herring eatch: I think this is owing to the lobster traps and the gurry. On the north shore of the Bay of Fundy I think the herring are eaught outside of the lobster traps.

I have got testimony to the same effect from Alfred Winchester, James Van Blancom, James De Lap, Gilbert Shaffner, B. W. Shaffner, Smith Bohaker, Daniel Croscup, Joshua Croscup. Then I went over to the shore of the Bay of Fundy; I saw the fishermen there with respect to the subject. I saw and took testimony from the following persons:

inshermen there with respect to the subject. I saw and took testimony from the following persons:—

"RICHARD McCaul, Delay's Cove, Bay of Fundy shore:— I have lived here all my life. I know the herring fishery has been a failure for at least three or four years along this shore. About five years ago the lobster traps were first set. One man in lobster fishing has charge of a ground in which 20 to 40 men could and have herring-fished. If the line fishermen threw off their gurry near the shore it would keep the herring off, but they, as a rule, throw gurry overboard when they are quite a distance from the shore. I consider the gurry with which lobster traps are baited is a hurt to the herring fishery. Gurry will keep off berring wherever it is found. The sardine factories are also a hurt to the herring fishing, destroying, as they do, the young fish."

"JOEL EDGEIT, Parker's Cove:—I am 75 years old. Have lived here 50 years and have always fished. I think lobster traps are responsible for the depletion of the herring fishery. More traps this year than ever before, and no herring whatever. At Leitche's settlement a year before last, when there were no traps there, they caught herring, while here where the traps were we caught no herring. Fishermen from Grand Manan say that the same thing happened with them: after the lobster traps came they caught no herring. Caught some herring here in the spring before traps were down and the same thing occurred in Leitche's Cove. When they strike the shore they strike off at once on coming in contact with the offensive gurry, the bait of the traps."

"JOHN MAGRANAHAN, Margaretville:—Am a master mariner and a fisherman, born here, and am 47 years old. We have always had plenty of herring along this coast until the last three or four years. Herring fishing has tapered off and this year we have none. I am of the opinion the lobster traps are the cause of this. There will be fifty traps on one string; these traps are 8 fathoms appart and are strung all along the shore from Digby Gu were placed: this was the only place where no traps were placed: this was the only place where any herring were caught. The lobster fishermen come from other places and employ one man here. There are about fifteen men here who have usually employed themselves in the herring fishing. It is my opinion if the lobster traps are not stopped the herring fishery will be completely destroyed."

HARDING W. RAFFR. place there was a space of about two miles where no traps troyed."

"HARDING W. BAKER:—Am a fisherman; always fished here (confirms Capt. McGranahan's statement). I know it is the lobster trap that keeps the herring away and nothing else. On a calm day I can follow all the lobster traps by the streak of oil on the water above the line of the traps. This oil comes from the gurre with which the traps are baited, and nothing will drive herring off quicker."

quicker."
"Severings Graves:-I am a fisherman, and lobsterrished with traps one year, and know that the lobster-traps are depleting the herring fishery. It is impossible to keep the bait on these traps clean, and when you pull them up the rotten bait drops off, and thus a string of gurry settles all along where the traps are. It is this gurry that keeps the herring away. The gurry thrown overboard by the line fishermen is also an injury to the herring fishery. These are the facts all along this shore." Now, this herring fishery being so depleted, this question becomes an extremely important matter to the people along that shore, and it is on account of the importance of it that I see fit to occupy the time of the House for a few moments, in calling the attention of hon. gentlemen to the matter. do not desire by any means to wage war upon the lobster manufactories, or upon the lobster fishing; I say it is a grand industry in this country, and I believe it is a proper thing to encourage them in every way possible; but, at the same time, the lobster fishermen must not be nourished in preference to the herring fishermen, more particularly where there are a great many more herring fishermen than there are lobster fishermen. lobster manufactories are located in one place; and, for instance, as is the case more particularly under discussion-in the town of Digby, where we have quite a large lobster factory, they employ one man who lobster-fishes a district where twenty or forty herring fishermen usually fish, and if by the prosecution of this lobster fishing in the manner in which it is done these twenty or forty men are kept from earning a livelihood, then some regulation ought to be made and something ought to be done in order that this lobster fisherman should not control the entire district where he sets his traps. If I am not very much mistaken, there is a law with reference to the bait to be used by the lobster fishermen, and if there is such a law it should be carried out to the fullest extent, and all the bait upon these traps should be kept clean. I have read statements here from lobster fishermen, who say that because of the manner in which they now set their traps, and on account of the way they bait their traps, it is impossible to keep the traps clean. When it is impossible to keep the bait clean, then the gurry will be scattered along the shore during the period for lobster fishing, and that will render the ground entirely obnoxious to the herring, and the herring will be kept off this coast, as they were kept off the coast of Sweden, perhaps for a long number of years.

Mr. GILLMOR. What sort of bait does the hon, gentleman say they use in lobster traps?

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). As I understand it, they put in whatever kind of bait they can get-old fish or gurry, or anything of that kind; but they , should be compelled to use good, clean bait. am informed by the herring fishermen, if such bait is used and the lobster traps' kept clean there will be no necessity for this gurry to be dripping along the shore. I am quite sure that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will look thoroughly into this matter. The hon, gentleman has already caused his officers to interview these herring fishermen, and I have quoted to-day from the testimony given by He has caused his inspector to make a special call upon them, in order to obtain information as to the proper way of remedying the difficulties experienced by both the lobster and the herring fishermen: I repeat that I do not wage war against the lobster fishing by any manner of means. sire, if possible, to see that industry nurtured to its fullest extent; but, at the same time, I protest strongly against the lobster fishing being allowed to interfere unnecessarily with the herring fishing.

Mr. WHITE (Shelburne). The herring fishery is, no doubt, a very important matter. It is important in itself, and it is also important as affording bait for the deep-sea fisheries; but I cannot agree with my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) that the lobster fishery is the cause of the failure and destruction of the herring fishery. We must all admit, for it is generally known to be the fact, that the throwing of gurry, or fish-offal, from off indeed, and injures the herring fishery very materially. This offal, when put into the water, goes to the bottom, decays there and becomes rotten, and of course prevents the herring, which, as my hon, friend has said, is a very delicate fish, from approaching the shore or going there to spawn. But when the hon, gentleman comes to speak of lobster fishing injuring the herring fishery so materially. I cannot agree with him. In the first place, no gurry is put into lobster traps. Gurry is, in other words, the liver of the cod-fish from which the oil is made; it is a very valuable thing, and is invariably saved by the fishermen in order to make the The bait that is used for the lobster fishing is, generally speaking, the heads of the cod-fish or haddock, or some other portion of the fish, and from that bait very little oil would be found floating upon the surface of the water. The lobster fishery is a very important industry indeed; it is, perhaps, scarcely second to that of the herring fishery. The lobsters that are packed in the various establishments are but a very small proportion of the lobsters caught, because vast quantities of fresh lobsters are now being shipped to the United States, and that is becoming a very large and a very increasing business. If I were able on the spur of the moment, I think I could give the hon, gentleman statistics to show the immense quantities of lobsters that are being exported to the United States, and I believe that these statisties would astonish him by their magnitude. It is sometimes a difficult matter to discover why the herrings do not come along the shore. One season may be a very fortunate one indeed, and our bays and harbours may be filled with the finny tribe, whereas the very next season and in the very same places there may be none at all, and the fishermen around these shores are very apt to attribute the lack of herring to all sorts of causes. We find, even from the testimony that has been carefully selected by the hon, gentleman himself, that some of the fishermen attribute it to the steamers, and others to the sawdust, and to other causes than the lobster fishery. I think, before any regulations are made upon this matter, or before anything is done to affect the lobster fishery, there should be a very careful enquiry.

Mr. TUPPER. The papers called for by the motion under discussion have been under consideration for some time. I regret exceedingly that I am not yet able to make the announcement to the House, which I had hoped ere this to be in a position to do, that the prohibition now outstanding against the entry of Canadian fishing vessels into the ports of Newfoundland for the purpose of obtaining bait had been withdrawn. Up to this time it has been impossible to make that announcement; but the subject has been, and is still being discussed and pressed upon the attention of the authorities in Newfoundland. The hon. gentleman who moved this motion has been most earnest in his efforts to obtain the removal of this prohibition, and I have been in the receipt of telegrams almost weekly from fishermen on our own coasts, who have felt very severely the action taken by the Government of Newfoundland in this regard. Touching the subject which has been more fully discussed and dwelt upon by the hon, member for Annapolis a vessel, or from off a wharf, or from the fishing sta-tions, into the harbours and bays, is very disastrous at the instance of the fishermen he, some time ago, placed himself in communication with the Fisheries Department, and urged with great force certain grievances in connection with the herring fishery, claiming that it was injured by the lobster traps, and the use in these traps oftentimes of foul fish and offal for bait. The subject, however, is one that would require a considerable amount of investigation before so radical a step should be taken as has been suggested by the fishermen; but, at the desire of the fishermen and at the request of the hon. member for Annapolis I have given instructions that the inspector for that district, together with the inspector for another district, shall go upon the spot, and not only ascertain all the fishermen can say in reference to the subject, but make a careful examination into the subject. It would be going a great distance, so far as my knowledge of the subject is concerned, to say that the lobster fishery is an injury to the herring or to any other fish. The hon, gentleman himself has given us testimony from the fishermen to show that the law itself, in reference to gurry and offal being thrown overboard, has been violated in that district by others than the lobster fishermen, namely, by the herring fishermen themselves; and, were it not for the lobsters which are attracted to that fishing bait by these traps those waters would be a good deal fouler, and more distasteful to the herring, in my humble judgment, than they would be if we took the advice of these fishermen, and prohibited the lobster traps altogether—for that is the measure they advocate. I merely throw that out, by the way, as a reason for the department proceeding very slowly, and investigating very deliberately the advice and arguments of those who desire such a step being taken. I observe, however, that in other districts-for instance, in Cape Breton, where the lobster fishing is prosecuted with great vigour, —the herrings have not fallen off; and the hon. gentleman is aware of the migratory habits of these fish. The hon, member for Annapolis, in his very interesting presentation of the case on behalf of the fishermen of his district, has mentioned various causes—not merely the bait used for lobster traps, but the weirs, nets, gurry or offal. In fact, each particular fisherman seems to consider no other system of fishing than that pursued by him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Steamboats.

Mr. TUPPER. Steamboats were mentioned as another cause. In fact, the only system which meets the approval of those engaged in that business is the system adopted by each particular fisherman, and it is the duty of the department, of course, to hear from each. On another occasion we had some interesting statements in reference to weirs and the sardine fisheries, and I promised that we would use all the facilities we had in prosecuting that enquiry further, and certainly the statement I made will be adhered to. Instructions have been given to those officers to proceed and ascertain on the spot whether their contention be right with regard to the present system of baiting these lobster traps, and whether there is any necessity of interference with it.

Motion agreed to.

To whom was paid the sum $5,930.20 for cartage at the Custom-house at Montreal, as recorded in the said report of the Auditor General at page C—254." the said report of the Auditor General at page C-254. He said: Mr. Speaker, after the reading of this motion there is no need of my saying that it refers to Civil Service, particularly to officers of the Custom-house at Montreal. I have not to complain of the efficiency of these gentlemen, but of the unjust distribution of public offices in that Customhouse respecting nationalities. If one takes the trouble to look over the list of civil servants in the Province of Quebec it will be found that the French Canadians have not the half of the offices that they are entitled to, and what I say here applies particularly to the Custom-house at Mon-It requires extraordinary circumstances to treal. secure the appointment of a French Canadian in that service. So much is this the case that for the last ten years only six French Canadians were appointed, while the number of the English employés was increased by twenty-seven. I must add that this refers only to permanent employés. There are besides a large number of extra employés, working from six to seven months a year during the season of navigation, to whom last year the country paid the sum of $12,176.25 in salaries. have reason to believe that very few French Canadians are to be found among these extra employes. It is in order to get information on this subject and others, Mr. Speaker, that I ask for the documents mentioned in my motion. I consider it my duty to claim for the French Canadians the share of patronage to which they are entitled, by their number, their intelligence and their education. do not blame the English for doing all in their power to obtain positions in the Civil Service. They are fortunate office seekers, and they would be wrong not to profit by their good fortune. But I blame those who have the power to give public employment for acting with such partiality—not to use a stronger, and perhaps more appropriate, expression. I do not believe that there would be one member in this House who would find it strange that I protest in the name of the French Canadians as I do at this moment. If the tenth part of what is done to the Quebec people was done to the people of Ontario protest would be made with one voice. The hon. Minister of Customs himself would probably be the first one to object, and he would be right. That is why I hope that my words will be given no other interpretation than justice and equity dictate. I will say no more, as it is always a delicate matter to bring questions relating to nationalities before the House. I will not speak of the preferences which are shown for certain employés, nor of the indifferences manifested for others in the Montreal Custom-house. I will not say, either, that many thousands of dollars in extra salaries per year are paid to Customs em-ployés who are all Englishmen, while there are a number of French Canadians with smaller salaries who do not receive the same favours. I trust, ation in the appointments to office, and I may add Mr. Speaker, that the documents which will be that similar complaints are just as frequent, just in raising this question.

Mr. BOWELL. The two latter portions of the first paragraph will be somewhat difficult to answer. However, the hon, gentleman will receive the information, so far as it can be obtained. As to his question, upon whose recommendation the different appointments have been made, I am not aware that any record is kept in the department upon that point. The appointments are very often made upon the recommendations of members verbally. a vacancy occurs they often say to me that they would like so-and-so put in the place; and in some cases that recommendation is complied with, and in others it is not. With regard to the second paragraph, there will be no difficulty in obtaining the names of those who have passed the Civil Service examinations, but there are a great many who have been placed on the permanent list in the Customs Department at Montreal who never passed the Civil Service examination, though the appointments were made since that law was placed on the Under the section which provides Statute-book. that any person who had been continuously in the employ of the department or the Government on the 1st July, 1882, could, upon a certificate from the chief officer at the port or the chief officer in whose department the person was employed that he was qualified, be placed on the permanent list at the salary he was then receiving, without passing the examination and obtaining the certificate provided in the Act, a number have been placed on the permanent list under that clause.

Mr. LAURIER. Any one since 1882?

Mr. BOWELL. I said there had been a number placed on the permanent list since 1882, under the provision of the law. These also could be given, if the hon, gentleman desires that information. The names of extra labourers can also be supplied, and also the party who received the $5,000 as a carter. I understand that the hon. gentleman complains that the French Canadian population have not received proper recognition in the appointments, particularly at the Customs Department in Montreal. Full investigation into that charge will show that my hon. friend's complaint is not borne out by the facts, in so far as regards the appointments since I have had the honour of administering the department. Scarcely an important officer, if one, has been appointed since that time without the consent of the members who have represented that city in Parliament; and if it is an office of any importance, I have, as far as possible, obtained the recommendation of the three members jointly, conditional always that the person to be appointed shall be qualified for the position. With regard to promotions, where, in many cases, a French Canadian has, by superannuation, or death, or other causes, been removed, and the next officer happened to be of the Anglo-Saxon race, I have, as far as possible, promoted that person to the place; and precisely the same when the next officer was a French Canadian. could give a number of instances of that kind. I tionalities that they do not receive proper consider- the City of Ottawa and in the adjoining County produced will show the House that I was justified as vehement, just as persistent, from our friends of other nationalities. The Government have, as far as possible, in all these appointments, endeavoured to do justice to all classes of Her Majesty's subjects, and in the offices which are of any importance the greatest care has been taken to select men who are fitted more particularly for the positions they hold. I will not say as much in reference to the supernumeraries, for the House will readily understand that no Minister can have that full control of the appointment of supernumeraries that he has in the appointment of permanent employes. A vessel may arrive at port, perhaps in the evening, and it may be necessary, in order to assist in watching the goods during the discharge of the cargo during the whole night, the next day and the following day, for the chief officer to use his discretion in placing responsible men upon the wharves who will see that none of the goods which are landed are improperly removed from the wharf, and to follow them until they are placed in the sufferance or bonded warehouse. In such cases the employment of the men must be left, to a great extent, to the port surveyor and chief tide-waiter. The surveyorship was, as most of you know, filled by the late Mr. Lewis, whose position has not yet been filled, while the chief tidewaiter is a gentleman named Mr. Boyer; so in this particular branch of the service, where the superintendence is more particularly over the temporary men who are employed for the immediate service required at the particular time I have indicated, on the arrival of vessels, they have, I should suppose, done justice to all classes in the city. If not, it would be very much to be regretted. However, I reaffirm that the question of nationality in the promotion and in the appointment of officials has never swayed or influenced the department or the Government in any particular. It has been urged in many cases that where an English-speaking man vacated his office, by death or superannuation, one of the same nationality should replace him, and it has been equally urged with much persistence by our French Canadian friends that where a vacancy occurs by the death or superannuation of a gentleman of French origin the vacancy should be filled by one of that nationality. During the twelve years I have had charge of the department I have steadily refused to accede, in any case, to demands of that kind. Where I know, from experience and the reports of the officers, that the next officer in that particular branch was fitted to discharge the duties, he has been promoted, regardless of his nationality. There may be an exception or two; but I have laid it down as a principle, and carried it out, as far as practicable, that the next officer should be promoted to the position vacated. I need scarcely say, with regard to the existing personnel, that I do not think it is in the interests of the service or good government that these questions of nationality should arise, and I am equally convinced that no Minister is worthy of his position rule has been followed in the case of positions of if he would allow a feeling of that kind to interfere importance vacated by English-speaking people in such appointments, and do injustice to any man on account of his nationality. My hon, friend says that a thing of this kind would not be toleneed not say that complaints are constantly made rated in Ontario. of Prescott; but I can tell my hon. friend that, until I took charge of the Customs Department there was not one of the French nationality employed in the outside Customs Department in the City of Ottawa. Such is not the case now, so that the complaint on that score I have tried to meet as far as circumstances would permit. I am further of opinion that when the return, which will be made, and which will be brought down as soon as possible, though I fear we will not get it this session, as the hon. gentlemen opposite intend keeping us much longer than any of us would care to remain.

Mr LAURIER. As long as the public good requires.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon, gentleman will allow me to be the judge of what will be for the public good I will soon decide when he shall go. It is true that, after hearing what the hon, gentleman said, I had the presumption to intimate that hon, gentlemen opposite could keep us here as long as they thought proper. However, I may say that the report will be as full and complete as they desire to have it, and that, when it is brought down, it will be found not to be of the character that my hon, friend anticipates.

LAURIER. In regard to the question raised by the hon, member for Montreal East (Mr. Lépine) I have no remarks at all to offer. He is more competent to speak on this subject than any one here, unless it be his colleague, the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). Those hon. gentlemen probably know better than anyone else whether any undue favour has been shown to one or the other, and I can leave it to them to settle that with the Minister. But I remark to the hon. Minister of Customs that it will not be so difficult as he imagines to complete the return which is asked I understand from the hon. Minister that he thinks there would be a difficulty in completing this return because it asks upon whose recommendation the different appointments were The hon, gentleman said that there was no record made of the recommendations, but later on he stated that no appointment had been made except with the concurrence and upon the advice of the members representing the city of Montreal, and especially when the appointment was an important one. If, as he states, no appointment has been made except on the recommendation of some one of the three members representing the city of Montreal, if there is no trace in his office as to whom especially the recommendation is due, we may assume that in all cases some hon, gentleman representing Montreal is responsible for the appointment.

Mr. BOWELL. I stated that I often held consultations with these gentlemen, and met them and talked these matters over.

Mr. LAURIER. Then the appointments were made on their recommendation?

Mr. BOWELL. Probably-yes; but not on any formal recommendation.

Mr. CURRAN. The hon member moved this resolution evidently with every desire on his part to avoid raising any question of race further than the motion itself calls for. The hon gentleman I am sure is mistaken as to the number of persons who are employed in Montreal and as to their if it has not, it is well that we should know it, and particular classification. In the city of Montreal that justice should be done to all. I am very glad the public departments are all very efficiently managed, and under the arrangement which exists there I think my hon. friend has no reason to complain that his fellow-countrymen have been unfairly dealt with. I, for one, would be the last to wish to do them any injustice, and I think, when the records are turned up, not only in regard to the Department of Customs, but in regard to all the other departments, they will show that, as far as recommendations go, not only have they received justice at my hands, but that a large majority of those whom I have recommended belong to the French Canadian people. Take the whole Civil Service in the City of Montreal. There are four or five departments there, and I think it is well, lest any false impression should go abroad that any class of the people is unfairly dealt with, that the truth should be known. Take the post office, for instance. For years Mr. Lamothe was the postmaster, and he was a French Canadian, and Mr. Emery, who was his assistant, was also a French Canadian. Mr. Dansereau, a very efficient officer and a very able gentleman, has succeeded Mr. Lamothe, so that a French Canadian has been appointed in his place. Then in regard to the department of Inland Revenue, the collector and his deputy, Mr. Vincent and Mr. Bellemare, are both French Canadians, and I have never heard any one complain that both those offices were held by French Canadians, both of them being able and good officers. In the same department Mr. Chaput, another French Canadian, is inspector of weights and measures. Then, the engineer-in-chief of the canals is a French Canadian, Mr. Parent, and the secretary is Mr. Lesage, who is also a French Canadian. The only important office held by an old countryman is that of superintendent of the Lachine Canal, but the wharfinger is a French Canadian, Mr. Corbeil. I think the Ministers in the Cabinet who represents the French Canadian race have been sufficiently careful that their countrymen should not be overlooked either in important matters or in matters of small import-In the Customs-house we find that the ance. chief appraiser of dry goods is Mr. Brosseau, whom I recommended, and who was entitled to the appointment by his ability, although in that case the gentleman who had disappeared from the service was an English-speaking Protestant: and recently another French Canadian was appointed to an important position in that department. In regard to the temporary officers, the collector who has charge of that branch of the patronage has always been exceedingly careful that no cause of complaint should exist, and a fair distribution of the patronage has taken place in regard to this incidental work. In regard to extra work, I may say that the gentleman who has the selection of those who are to do it, such as tide-waiters and others, and who controls those who have charge of the bonds, is a French Canadian, Mr. Boyer, and if he does not do justice to his fellow-countrymen I am sorry to hear it, but I think he does. Under the circumstances, I think my hon. friend who has made this motion should have this matter cleared up, and that we shall see that no section of the people have been unfairly dealt with. I believe that the return will show that fair-play has been dealt out to all parties, and, that the motion has been made. I only wish my hon, friend had extended it to the other branches of the Civil Service in the City of Montreal, so that all parties might be thoroughly convinced that the Government has been anxious and solicitous that its patronage should be distributed in such a way as to leave no reason for complaint in any branch of our community.

Mr. LÉPINE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, as a brief answer to what has been stated by my hon. friend (Mr. Curran), I will say that I am perfectly convinced that the French Canadians, who are threefourths of the population, do not hold one-third of the positions in the whole Federal service in the Province of Quebec. The hon, member for Montreal Centre declares himself satisfied with the present state of things. He would be hard to please if he It is not because two or three French were not. Canadians hold superior employment in the offices of Inland Revenue, the Customs-house or the Lachine Canal office that we should recognize ourselves as treated on an equal footing with the other nationalities, if all the other offices are filled by Englishmen. In the Customs-house not even one-third of the employés are French Canadians, and in the Department of Inland Revenue not one-half. I am perfectly justified in asking for the documents mentioned in my motion. This is not the first time that the injustice which I have pointed out has been spoken of. The citizens of Montreal have already raised their voice to obtain justice in the distribution of this patronage. And you are not without having seen, Mr. Speaker, the principal papers of the Province of Quebec, and among others La Presse and L'Evénement, severely criticise the unjust manner in which the French Canadians are treated in the administration of public affairs. Whatever may be said, Mr. Speaker, I remain convinced that my countrymen have not the share of patronage to which they are entitled, and the documents which I ask for will show it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would ask the Minister of Customs if any superannuation has taken place in the Montreal Custom-house since January? How many have been superannuated, and have had their places filled?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in a position to give the names, but I can give a general answer to the question. A number of superannuations have taken place of clerks who have held important positions with salaries averaging from $1,400 to $2,000. They have been superannuated on account of age or infirmity, and for the very reason that their services were no longer required not one of in the vacancies thus made has been filled, nor is it the intention of the Government to add any additional members to the staff. As the House will readily understand, when an officer has been in the employment of the department for a number of years, until he attains old age, he is very apt to become enfeebled, and the younger members of the staff do the principal portion of the work. The officers who have been superannuated can be very profitably dispensed with, without filling their places. The work will be done by those who have been assisting in the different branches. So far as my recollection serves me now, the salaries which have been saved by the Government in almost every election for a great superannuation of those who were on the Civil number of years. Looking at the Auditor General's Service list, in the Montreal Custom-house, will Report for the last fiscal year, I am surprised at the amount to $10,000 per annum. I am in hopes that I shall be able to increase that sum by 100 per cent. when I receive the report of the officers whom I have detailed to make a thorough investigation of the port. I hope to be able to reduce the expenditure next year in that port, by the course I am pursuing, by $15,000 to $20,000. Possibly there may be some other ports where a saving can be effected; and as the officers have proved themselves well fitted for the duties they are now performing, in making an investigation into the port of Montreal, they will be detailed for the same work in other ports, and if officers are found who have become, through age and infirmity, unfitted for their work, they will be removed from the service and a saving will thus be effected. Of course, hon, gentleman will understand that the superannuation must be paid as long as those men live, and the amount of saving would be reduced, so far as the revenue is concerned, to the difference between their former salaries and the sum which they will receive from the superannuation fund.

Mr. LAURIER. Tardy, but worthy of atten-

Mr. BOWELL. I am not prepared to admit

Mr. MULOCK. The intentions are not worthy. Mr. BOWELL. I do not say that. He says the intentions are good, but that I have been tardy in fulfilling them. It is a very difficult thing to do. I do not know any hon. gentleman in this House who would be more reluctant than he to go to work and apply the pruning knife to old and valuable servants who have been a long time in the department. I think the hon, gentleman himself, if he thought an injustice was being done, would be one of the very first to protest, and his better nature would suggest an attack upon the Minister who was making the removals. The reduction has not been done hastily, but it has been made as soon as it could be, without doing injustice to the civil

Mr. LANGELIER. I am somewhat surprised at the complaint made by the hon, member for Montreal East (Mr. Lépine) concerning the appointments made in the Montreal Custom-house. In Quebec we have had the same state of affairs revealed during the present Administration. In almost every case where a French Canadian has died he has been replaced by an old countryman.

Mr. BOWELL. Do you say in all cases?

Mr. LANGELIER. Not in all cases; but It is of general notoriety most cases. Quebec, and cannot be disputed. course, we had no reason to complain, or to expect that the hon, gentleman opposite would do otherwise; we did not expect that people on our own side of politics would be appointed to Government positions in the City of Quebec, where the great bulk of the population of French Canadian origin is opposed to the present Administration. But I am surprised to hear that the same state of things prevails in Montreal, where the same excuse cannot be offered. The present Government cannot complain of the attitude of the French Canadian population of Montreal, who have supported this facts it reveals concerning appointments in the Customs Department. I find some thirty or forty officers in the Customs Department—I have not counted them, but their names fill almost one whole page—and among all these names I find only one French Canadian employé, who gets the small salary of $850 a year. That is the only one I find in the Customs Department here at Ottawa. suppose that in the Customs offices at Quebec, Montreal and elsewhere, the Government follow the rule which has been laid down in the department at Ottawa, which rule is that they have no place for French Canadians.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is in error in the statement he has made. I do not know There is the same where he gets his information. number of French Canadians in the inside service of the Customs Department as there was when I entered it. So far as the outside service is concerned, there was not one French Canadian when I entered, and there are now one or two, I am not sure which.

FISHING LICENSES--RESTIGOUCHE RIVER.

Mr. FAUVEL moved for:

Return of the names of proprietors to whom licenses have been granted for salmon net fishing on the Restigouche River, in the County of Bonaventure, for 1890 and 1891.

He said: Many complaints have been made with reference to the unfairness of the distribution of fishing licenses in the County of Bonaventure. Salmon licenses are given to fishermen every year, but the Government is generous enough to allow these licenses to be continued yearly until the death of the licensee. Unfortunately, when that occurs it is a cause of a great deal of trouble and misery to the household. The members of the family not only lose their bread-winner, but their nets are allowed to rot in the sheds, and these people are deprived of their livelihood. A great number of licenses are granted on this river; about double the number is granted in the County of Restigouche that is granted in the County of Bonaventure. Some people have two licenses, others cannot obtain one, and a great deal of injustice is done in this maner. Are the pioneers of the County of Bonaventure to be deprived of their livelihood in this manner, while the American anglers are allowed to fish in those waters, and thus take away the bread from the pioneers of the County of Bonaventure? On the 13th of July last I asked this question in the House:

"1st. What is the amount of fee levied on each salmon net fishery license in the County of Bonaventure for 1890? 2nd. What is the amount of fee levied on each salmon net fishery license for the County of Restigouche in 1890? 3rd. Is it the intention of the Government to levy a uniform fee on each salmon net fishery license in the Counties of Bonaventure and Restigouche for the year 1891?"

The answer of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was as follows:

"On the salmon net licenses in the County of Bonaventure a fee of 40 cents per barrel of fish caught was levied in some districts, and in others 3 cents per fathom on nets. In Restigouche County the fee levied on each salmon net was 3 cents per fathom. The Government has instructed its officers to levy a uniform rate or fee (3 cents per fathom) on each salmon net fishery license in the Counties of Bonaventure and Restigouche in 1891. The reason of the difference in Bonaventure and in Restigouche, and in that of the districts in Bonaventure itself, Mr. Langelier.

was due to the fact that instructions changing the old rate from 40 cents per barrel did not reach the officers of cer-tain districts until the licenses under the old system had been granted to the fishermen and the fee exacted.'

On the following day I received from one of my constituents, Mr. Charles Brown, a letter addressed to him by Mr. Verge, fishery overseer for the counties both of Bonaventure and Restigouche. Mr. Verge writes:

"In reply to yours of the 2nd instant, I beg leave to inform you that my instructions, dated the 8th of May last, with salmon fishery licenses, from W. Wakeham, Esq., our inspector of fisheries, say: 'You will add the numbers of fathoms of wings to each license and make up the total number of fathoms on which the fees have to be paid.' My instructions from the Department of Fisheries, Ottawa, dated 30th May last, sending me the salmon fishery licenses for the New Brunswick side of the Restigouche estuary, say: 'Fees are payable on delivery of the licenses, and are for this year to be collected on bar-nets only.'

In the County of Restigouche salmon fishermen pay exactly one-half of what is levied on fishermen in the County of Bonaventure. I ask the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is there any fairness in this? Why should there be discrimination against the fisherman in the County of Bonaventure in favour of those of Restigouche? They have the same chance of earning their livelihood on both sides of the river. It is very unfair, and there is great dissatisfaction existing on this score.

Mr. TUPPER. The papers will, of course, be brought down. I regret to learn from the hon. gentleman that dissatisfaction exists in his county. It is the first time that I have heard that there was even a pretended discrimination in the administration of the license system in the Counties of Bonaventure and Restigouche. Of course, if the state of affairs the hon. gentleman has described, exists there, it will be rectified at once. I will first take up the point the hon gentleman has mentioned about the great hardship and troubles that follow where the licensee dies and the license is not renewed. The hon, gentleman went on to make the statement that this was in the interest of the American anglers, and to the detriment of our own fishermen. I am sure, if time permitted, I could very easily establish to the satisfaction of the hon. gentleman, who lives in a fishing district, that the reason which induced that policy, long before the time when I came into the department or had any connection with the administration of the fisheries, was the interest of the Canadian net fishermen, wholly regardless of the anglers, whether they happened to be citizens of the United States or of this Dominion. The hon. gentleman knows that the anglers on the rivers of New Brunswick and Quebec are not altogether citizens of the United States; and while it is quite true that many Americans have leases on the rivers of Quebec, the department proceeded in reference to the protection of the salmon with the view of preventing the extermination of that fish, and there were very many great difficulties met with. For years the opinion of the officers of the department and all who have studied the question thoroughly has been, and many fishermen have agreed in this opinion, that one of the great causes of the diminution of the fish supply in the district to which the hon. gentleman has referred, as elsewhere, is that too many nets were set. As the hon. gentleman knows, better than I can tell him, the salmon follows almost a steady course or run up the river. They come along the shores and keep the same track year after year in going up to the spawning grounds. These nets or stands, each with so many wings, intercept the salmon at every point. If the hon. gentleman will look at a chart, as these charts appear in the report, he will see the number of these stands the fish have to pass in order to reach the spawning grounds, and it is marvellous they reach there at all. Direct interference with the fishermen, who for so many years have been permitted to do as they pleased in regard to fishing, and have been permitted by the Government to pursue that policy for years, was considered a too drastic measure—that is to say, to summarily interfere with the operations of the fishermen and abolish all those stands that are injurious to the salmon frequenting those waters. But while this should not be done, there was a general feeling that whenever the death or removal of a licensee occurred it would be the least injurious to the fishermen if the department would declare that that stand would not be renewed. The only occasion on which a departure has been made from that principle was where the stand was not considered half as injurious as stands above or below that particular stand, and the removal of that particular stand would not to any great extent improve the run of the salmon on that stream. The angler of course gets the benefit of this. cannot conserve the salmon interest in that respect without benefiting the angler, and, of course, the river is more valuable when the salmon are allowed to ascend in larger numbers. But the hon. gentleman knows that anglers fish with the fly altogether, and are confined to it; they are on the river a comparatively short time each year, and often have against them special conditions of the water, high So the catch taken by anglers has never been considered so great as to seriously interfere with the fishermen below. Speaking not only for myself, but for my predecessors in office, I can assure the hon, gentleman that never for one moment have the interests of the anglers been considered, or has any attempt been made to assist them at the expense of the fishermen in the estuaries or of the fishermen in any part of the country. It is a very plausible argument, Ladmit, to use before the fishermen, that the fishing has been destroyed by the anglers, and the fishermen are ready to quickly wreak their vengeance on the Government having the responsibility of protecting the fisheries. Nevertheless, if we desire to protect the fisheries in the interest of the fishermen themselves it is absolutely necessary that we should regulate in some way the number of stands or traps in the locality in question, and that we should do so in their own interests. This is not a new policy, but it is one that has prevailed for a long time. With respect to the charges for licenses to which he has referred, I think he is under a misapprehension. I will look into the matter again, but I apprehend that we have not made new regulations to the detriment of fishermen of the hon. gentleman's county, but simply adopted an uniform regulation, which will be greatly to the advantage of the fishermen of the County of Bonaventure. I understand that up to this year the rate was so much a barrel on the Quebce side, or, rather, 40 cents for every 200 lbs. of fish caught, while on the New Brunswick side it was 3 cents per fathom of the net. There was that want of uniformity, which operated to the advantage of the fishermen of New Brunswick. When the subject was brought before me in a very elaborate report by Mr. Wilmot on the salmon fishery of the Baie des Chaleurs, which is printed, I found that want of uniformity to prevail, and I adopted Mr. Wilmot's suggestion in part, and directed that the rate should be made uniform, and adopted the lower rate, which was the rate on the New Brunswick side. That is in the interest of the fishermen whom the hon. gentleman represents, as he will find on looking into the question. The calculation is given in that report. There was an objection to the rate prevailing on the Quebec side of the river, namely, that the imposition was in the nature of a tax. We tax the fisherman on the quantity of fish he caught, and even if it could be shown that that was proper, and within the law, it was contrary to the spirit which induced the department to charge a license fee. The principle was not to give the fishermen a license and then wait to the end of the season and impose a tax on the catch; but the reason which induced the Government to adopt the license system and charge a fee was to prevent applications being made unless they were really necessary—in fact, to prevent too many applications being made, and practically, therefore, to restrict the number of applications for licenses. Unless that were done at the commencement of each season, and cash payments required, the object could not be attained, and speculative fishermen would apply for licenses by the end of the season to obtain a sufficient sum to pay the fees. There is more in the question as to whether this license payment is a burden in any From a list of the licenses it appears that many of the fees are for amounts of from $2 to $7, one of $7 and one of $12, while the others ranged from $5 to $1. The amounts are not large, nor are there any great complaints in regard to them. The hon. gentleman's other statement, that there has been a regulation in Restigouche by which fishermen were charged, not only on the bar-net, but on the wings, is one which I shall certainly look into and have rectified, and wherever an improper charge has been made regulations will be made with respect to the settlement of the fees, so that there shall be nothing unfair, that we will not collect on the wings of the net in one county if we do not in the other. I yet believe that the hon. gentleman in that respect must be misinformed; but if his information has been correct there has been a misunderstanding of the instructions given either by myself or by the officers at the head office in Ottawa. If the hon gentleman examines the report of Mr. Wilmot he will see that I acted in that respect, only I adopted an easier system, a system that would not bear so hardly on the fishermen as that which was recommended to me by that officer. He suggested that instead of making the fees on the Quebec side at 40 cents per 200 lbs. there should be a uniform fee on the Quebec and New Brunswick sides of Baie des Chaleurs of 50 cents on every 200 lbs. That was an increase, and I think it would have met with great complaint. I did not adopt that, but I adopted the suggestion of the conference of all the fishery officers which met at Ottawa, and that was to make a uniform rate on both sides of the Baie of 3 cents per fathom of the net.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE.

On the Order being called that the House again resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 2) to secure the better observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I presumed that this Bill would not come up again on the Order Paper after the decision of the other night. I would suggest to the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that it might be as well not to proceed with the Bill now, in view of the decision already arrived at.

Mr. CHARLTON. Of course, I suppose I may as well bow to the request of the Minister of Justice. The Order has been called, and perhaps he might permit the House to signify pleasure on the Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Let it stand.

VETERANS OF 1837-38.

House resumed further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Kirkpatrick:

That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that the Government should bestow some mark of recognition upon the veterans of 1837-38 for their services to the country at that time.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understood that several members of the House wanted to speak on this motion. In fact, I think two or three hon, gentlemen had the floor when the matter was under discussion the other night, but I presume members were under the impression that some of the prior orders would take up some time of the House this evening, and they are, in consequence, not present. I do not intend to say anything on the question to-night as to the phases on which the discussion proceeded when it was before us on the last occasion; but I simply wish to express my opinion as to the desirability of this House and of this Government dealing with the question. Whatever the merits, in public estimation, may be, as to those who were concerned in the conflict of that period on either side, I submit that in this Dominion Parliament, formed as we are, not merely of the two provinces in which that struggle raged for a time, but formed of new provinces, having nothing to do with the events of 1837-38, having nothing indeed in common with the feelings which were then excited, and which aroused animosity in this part of the country it is not proper that this Parliament should be called upon to deal with this question, or that the bounty of the Dominion Government should be claimed in that regard. We have had in the other provinces of Canada prior to Confederation — fortunately not the same Mr. TUPPER.

character of contest which is referred to in this resolution, not a contest in which blood was shed or civil war resorted to — but we have had contests of great bitterness, in which public questions were fought out, and in which the constitutions of the provinces were established. We had, while these contests raged, men of the highest eminence in both parties. To one party, the Conservative party, is due, to a great extent, the establishment of the institutions of the country, the conduct of affairs at critical and during trying times in the history of the provinces; and to the other set of men is undoubtedly due the freedom of institutions which is now enjoyed, and which we now hold as our birthright, as a portion of the British Empire. But when we came into Confederation we laid aside even the recollection of these conflicts, except in so far as they might excite our affection or our admiration for the ability and patriotism of the men who were engaged on either side of them. It would seem to me as appropriate that distinctions should be attached to the memory of those who were engaged in those contests, that their public services should be recognized in some way—by the resolutions, or by the votes, or by the Statutes of this Parliamentthat the surviving individuals should be recognized and honoured, as that those engaged in the civil contests in Canada prior to Confederation should claim a bounty from this Dominion. I think, in respect of all such unhappy conflicts, much as I have said we must admire the heroism that was displayed, and much as we must appreciate what was done for the country by those who are referred to in this resolution, we ought, as regards all conflicts of that character, to consider the history of this country as dating from the period when the Dominion was formed, and when all the provinces joined hands in forming this new nationality. In that view the Government have declined, down to the present time, to recognize the proposed bounty as one which they should recommend to the favour of Parliament, and that for a long period, covering nearly thirty years, the provinces themselves, to whom a claim of this kind might with much more force have been presented, have resolved to let history do justice to those who were engaged in those conflicts as far as praise was concerned, and to refrain from re-cognizing the event referred to as one that would have been treated as a conflict with a foreign power should be treated. That is the view which I propose to present to the House this evening, and in order to avoid the closing of the discussion, as I understand other members wish to take part in it, I make the motion now that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FLINT moved second reading of Bill (No. 34) to amend the Canada Temperance Amendment Act, 1888. He said: In moving the second reading of the Bill which I had the honour to present as long ago as the 14th of May, I desire to make a very few observations in explanation of the character of the amendment which I propose. Previous, however, to entering upon these, I might say, for the information of the House, that the Canada Temperance Act is of course not in force in the whole of the Dominion of Canada. There was a time when it was in force in a large number of the cities and counties of the Dominion; but owing to circumstances which it is not necessary at present to go into at any length, in very many of these cases the Act has been repealed; so that practically at the present day it is in force only in the following counties and districts of the Dominion: In the Province of New Brunswick, in the City of Fredericton and the Counties of York, Charlotte, Carleton, Albert, King's, Queen's. Northumberland, Sunbury and Westmoreland; in the Province of Nova Scotia, in the Counties of Digby, Queen's, Shelburne, King's, Annapolis, Cape Breton, Hants, Inverness, Pictou, Cumberland, Yarmouth and Guysborough; in the Province of Prince Edward Island, in the Counties of King's, Prince and Queen's; in the Province of Manitoba, in the Counties of Marquette and Lisgar; in the Province of Quebec, in the Counties of Brome, Drummond and Chicoutimi-in all, thirty districts in the Dominion; and to the people of these districts any proposed amendment to the Canada Temperance Act is, of course, of interest and importance. The Bill is much longer than the amendment itself would necessarily imply, because, in order to make it complete, in case it should pass the Legislature, I have rewritten all the amendments in the Act of 1888. It will be remembered that in 1888 an important amendment to the Canada Temperance Act was carried through Par-The only clause of that amendment to liament. which this Bill refers is clause 11, containing five The Bill does not interfere or six sub-sections. with any of these sub-sections, except sub-section b, and deals only with spirituous liquors and alcohol. The object of the amendment is to remove spirituous liquors and alcohol from the general operation of the exception mentioned in clause 11, and to bring them under the operation of the clause which I will now read, and which I may say is almost verbatim a copy of the clause in the original Canada Temperance Act. which affects the sale of spirituous liquors for medicinal, mechanical and other purposes mentioned in that clause, and which prescribes regulations for the sale of those articles by the licensed vendors named in the Canada Temperance Act. I think it was generally felt by the temperance advocates in the country, at any rate in those districts where the Act was in force, that the amendment of 1888, in the terms in which it was passed, as regards spirituous liquors and alcohol, did, to a large degree, emasculate the Canada Temperance Act. The object of the people in any particular district in adopting the Canada Temperance Act was to exclude the sale of spirituous liquors and alcohol entirely from the community. It was to prohibit it, except in certain particular cases, which have been recognized largely, and I think properly, to be proper exceptions to the general and unrestricted sale of intoxicating liquor. Those cases were where intoxicating liquors were required for medicinal purposes or for manufacturing or other purposes, which did not necessarily lead to their use as a beverage. In order, then, to make the amendment clear, it is necessary to add that under the original Canada Temperance Act intoxicating liquors, to be sold for medicinal purposes or for certain mechanical purposes, were required to be sold by certain licensed vendors in each of those districts; and each of those vendors under the same restrictions as those under which was placed under certain very reasonable restrictions. The Act provided that none of the licensed vendors could sell intoxicating liquors excepting according to the following proviso, which I will read, because the amendment I have to propose to this Act is a copy of it :-

Provided also, that the sale of intoxicating liquor for exclusively medicinal purposes or for bona tide use in some art, trade or manufacture, may be made by such licensed druggist and vendor; but such sale, when for medicinal purposes, shall be in quantities of not less than one point, to be removed from the premises, and shall be made only on the certificate of a medical man having no interest in the sale, affirming that such liquor has been prescribed for the person named therein; and when such sale is for its use in some art. its use in some art, trade or manufacture, the same shall be made only on a certificate signed by two justices of the peace of the good faith of the application, accompanied by the affirmation of the applicant that the liquor panied by the amrmation of the applicant that the liquor is to be used only for the particular purposes set forth in the affirmation; and such druggist or vendor shall fyle the certificates and keep a register of all such sales, indicating the name of the purchaser and the quantity sold, and shall make an annual return of all such sales on the 31st day of December in every year to the collector of Inland Revenue within whose revenue division the county or city is situated."

This provision is believed to be fairly satisfactory by those who have promoted the adoption of the Canada Temperance Act in the cities and counties I have mentioned; but in 1888 there passed through this House an amendment based upon the idea that the sale of a large number of preparations sold by druggists was either actually restricted or might be held to be restricted by the terms of the Canada Temperance Act, and, consequently, this amendment was passed, which provided, among other things, that physicians' prescriptions containing spirituous liquors, if sold in quantities of not more than ten ounces at any one time, should not be interfered This clause is entirely removed by my amendment. In that amendment of 1888, clause c reads as follows :-

"Any patent medicine, unless such patent medicine is known to the vendor to be capable of being used as a beverage, the sale of which is a violation of the Canada Temperance Act."

This clause is not affected by the amendment I propose. Clause d in the same Act is as follows:-

"Eau de cologne, bay rum, or other articles of perfumery, lotions, extracts, varnishes, tinctures, or other pharmaceutical preparations containing alcohol, but not intended for use as beverages."

This clause is also not affected by the Bill I introduce. Clause e reads:

"Alcohol or methylated spirits for pharmaceutical, chemical or mechanical uses."

This clause is amended by leaving out the words "alcohol or;" and then section 2 of the Act of 1888 is entirely repealed, and the following substituted:

"(e.) Spirituous liquors or alcohol for exclusively medicinal purposes, or for bond fide use in some art, trade or manufacture; provided that such spirituous liquor or alcohol. when sold for medicinal purposes, shall not exceed in quantity ten ounces at any one time."

And so on, in precisely the terms of the original clause in the Canada Temperance Act, which I have already read. The effect of this amendment is that druggists and chemists, in the prosecution of their business, are left untouched in every particular, and remain as they were placed by the amendment of 1888, except as regards the sale or purchase of alcohol and spirituous liquors; and with regard to the purchase and sale of those, they are placed licensed druggists and vendors are placed in the Canada Temperance Act. And they are so placed for this reason: that, if the sale of spirituous liquors and alcohol, which may be used as a beverage, is of the character the promoters of the Canada Temperance Act believe it to be, it is advisable they should be placed under some reasonable restrictions, and such restrictions I believe to be contained in the original clause of the Canada Temperance Act. As the law stands at present, druggists and chemists, in the sale of spirituous liquors and alcohol for medicinal and mechanical purposes, are practically not restricted at all, because they are under no obligations, which they are made to appear to be under by the sub-section 2 of section 11, which is repealed by the operation of my amendment:

"The name and address of the purchaser, quantity and name of liquor, medical man prescribing the same, and the purpose for which it is required; and the said book shall be kept open for inspection by the proper county inspector at all times."

Now, the difficulty with this section is that it entirely exempts the druggist or vendor from any penalty whatsoever if he fails to keep the record provided in it. The wording of the clause itself exempts all of the sales included in the clauses and paragraphs I have mentioned from the operation of the Canada Temperance Act. If the second clause of the Act of 1878 is violated by any druggist, there are no means whatever in the law of punishing him for that effence; while under the opera-tion of the amendment I propose they come, if they violate these restrictions, under the operation of the Canada Temperance Act. I think I have covered the whole ground of the explanations required, and I believe that the passage of this amendment will restore to the Canada Temperance Act, in those communities in which it is enforced, the force and power it was originally intended it should have, and the Act will be replaced in something like the position it should occupy. I need not spend any time what-ever in arguing before this House that if we have a law on the Statute-book it is necessary that law should be effectual for the purposes for which it was designed. I think I will have the support of all those who have studied the matter when I say that the law, as it now stands, is not effectual for the purpose of preventing the sale of alcohol and spirituous liquors for improper purposes. reasons, however, which apply to spirituous liquors may be said not to apply so closely to alcohol, but those who have studied the matter state that the sale of alcohol, where it can be purchased, to be subsequently doctored or made use of for improper purposes as a beverage, is quite extensive among a certain class of people: If it is possible by any reasonable restrictions or regulations to prevent this, and at the same time permit the sale to those who wish to use it for mechanical or medicinal purposes, we ought to legislate in that view. If it is objected that the legislation I propose, in the case of those who use liquor for medicinal purposes, goes too far, it will be shown that no person who wishes to purchase alcohol for purposes we recognize as reasonable will be at all interfered with by the operation of this amendment, because it provides that the same restrictions precisely shall apply to druggists and chemists as now apply in the original Act to licensed vendors. The vendor then fyles these certificates or prescriptions, as the case may be, matter. Mr. FLINT and keeps a record in a book, giving a statement of all the parties and the transactions, and on the 31st December each year a proper return is made to the collector of Inland Revenue within whose division the vendor is situated. matter in the hands of the House, trusting I will have its assistance in perfecting the Act, in so far as it is capable of being made perfect in this direction. There may be a great deal said with regard to the failure of the Act, and, in some respects, I presume it has been a failure; but I think it will be generally admitted that this failure has arisen from causes which do not reflect discredit upon the Act or the temperance people, but which are causes it is very difficult to prevent operating in any community. In the first place, the Canada Temperance Act has failed in consequence of the difficulty of passing technical amendments, or amendments of a technical nature, through the Legislature. Parliament is a difficult body to move in matters of this kind, and I think that in a large proportion of the cases in which failures to convict-probably 90 per cent. - after the ultimate hearing in the final court of appeal, have occurred, have almost invariably been on technical points. If the House could on some future occasion take the matter in hand in regard to that I believe it would have useful results. A number of trials have taken place, and the law is pretty well established, and convictions have been secured which will stand, and which are producing good effects. I believe the adoption of this amendment will strengthen the hands of those who are endeavouring to restrict the sale of alcoholic beverages within reasonable grounds. I hope the House will take the same view.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 17,

Mr. JAMIESON. I have not had time to give this matter as much thought or consideration as I would like before it came before the House to be considered, but it strikes me, in looking at the Bill, that in some respects the hon. gentleman is weakening the restrictions which were thrown around the sale of liquor for the purposes specified in the Act I do not know why the hon, gentleman should apply the restriction, so far as recording the sale is concerned, to two of the purposes only, and should leave the other puposes for which sales may be made by licensed druggists and physicians without any restriction so far has the sale is concerned. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that sub-section 2 of section 11 in the Act of 1888 requires that all the sales which may be made under the authority of the statute must be recorded. I recollect at the time this Act was introduced by the hon. member for North Simcoe we had a good deal of difficulty in inserting this clause requiring that all the sales which might be made under the permission which was given to druggists and physicians should be recorded. Now, my hon, friend proposes by his Bill to allow sales for the purposes indicated in sub-sections a, b, c, d and e, without any record whatever, and I am afraid, if this becomes law in its present shape, it will lead to a very serious abuse. I would like to hear what the hon. gentleman has to say on this

The objection of the hon. gentle-Mr. FLINT. man is technically correct, but I think anyone who looks carefully over the clause will see that practically his objection is not an overwhelming one against the amendment. In the first place, I think it cannot be doubted that in any county which is under the Canada Temperance Act no druggist has ever kept or tried to keep any record of the sale of the articles described in clauses a, b, c, d and e, and I think that when the Legislature requires that these articles should be recorded it must have intended spirituous liquors. at all of the opinion that druggists should be compelled to record the sale of eau de cologne, bay rum, articles of perfumery, lotions, varnishes, or other pharmaceutical preparations not intended for use as beverages. I do not think that provision is at all important, and I do not think the temperance community think it is important that chemists and druggists should keep a record of the sales of these articles, which are innocuous, and are not regarded by the temperance community as being injurious. But when it comes to spirituous liquors and alcohol, then the matter takes on a new aspect, because these are articles the sale of which it is desirable to restrict and guard by all reasonable rules that Now, the difficulty with this can be adopted. clause is, if I am correct in my interpretation of the law, that there is no penalty, and it is impossible to punish, under the amendment of 1888, any druggist if he keeps no record whatsoever of the sale of any of these articles—for this reason, that the Act itself makes no penalty.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Have you considered the section in the Act providing penalties—section 107 of the Canada Temperance Act?

Mr. FLINT. Yes; but clause 11 is an exception in favour of chemists and druggists. "Nothing in the Canada Temperance Act shall be held to interfere with the purchase or sale," and so on, of any of these articles. Then the clause provides that each such sale shall be reported in a book, but there is no penalty for not so reporting.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Would that be an offence against the Act?

Mr. FLINT. Possibly not; but even if there were a penalty I contend that the restrictions of clause 2 are so few, so inadequate, so far from being as perfect as the clause which I have adopted, that it practically becomes valueless for all purposes to restrict the sale of these articles. Of course, I would not object to any amendment to provide that these other preparations, apart from alcohol and spirituous liquors, should be placed under similar restrictions; but in my view, and in the view of a great many, it is not at all important. I believe that public opinion would not sustain any united action or prosecution against druggists or chemists for the sale of such articles as eau de cologne, bay rum, lotions, perfumery and articles of this kind, if they did not keep the record prescribed in this Act.

In some places they Mr. COATSWORTH. might. I have known them to sell these articles to Indians as a beverage.

Mr. FLINT. That may be, but the sale of these articles is generally admitted to be as harmless and innocuous as the sale of any other articles in the fumery I cannot see any reason, in morals or practical economics, why perfumery, lotions and articles of that kind, for sale in a drug store, should be placed under any restrictions; but when we come to alcoholic liquors and alcohol itself, then the whole force of the temperance feeling and the whole force of public opinion is largely directed to placing them under reasonable restrictions. However, if my hon, friend deems it at all important, of course I would not object to having the clause amended so as to provide for that; but, in my view, it is not at all important. I think that is substantially the answer I would make to my hon friend.

Mr. JAMIESON. I am decidedly opposed to the amendment proposed by the hon, gentleman as contained in this Bill. At the time this Act of 1888 was passed it will be recollected by those who were members of the House at that time that there were two Bills introduced at that session for the purpose of amending the Canada Temperance Act. I had charge of one Bill, which was promoted by the friends of temperance in the House, and the Act which the hon. gentleman now seeks to amend was in charge of the hon, member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and was passed though the House in opposition to the wishes of the temperance sentiment of the House-that is, in opposition to the wishes of those who represented what was known as the prohibition sentiment of the House. For my part, I fought very strongly against it, because I thought it was a very serious innovation, and emasculated and destroyed, to a very large extent, the efficiency of the Canada Temperance Act. Of course, the Act having been almost entirely repealed, I think entirely repealed, in the Province of Ontario shortly afterwards, we were not in a position, in our province, to ascertain to any extent what the effect of the amendment would be upon the operations of the Act itself. Those residing in the country sections, however, where the Act was in force, would be in a much better position than we to judge in that respect. However, I recollect that we had a very lengthy and somewhat heated discussion upon that Bill when it was introduced into the House by the hon. member for North Simcoe. The change proposed by the Bill had been, if my recollection is correct, urged upon us by the druggists and chemists of the Dominion. We refused to accede to their request, because we believed that it was going to be a very dangerous innovation. We knew that the Act was being evaded as it was, and, after examining the matter, we came to the conclusion that if the amendment which was proposed was adopted it was, in effect, going to impair seriously the usefulness of the measure. Now, when we saw that we could not prevent the passage of that Act we endeavoured to have this section 2 tacked on to it for the purpose of preventing, as far as possible, what we considered would be otherwise the bad effects of the law; and if the hon, gentleman's Bill, as it appears before us at the present time, is passed, I am satisfied that it will have a very serious effect in localities where the Temperance Act is in force. I trust that the hon. gentleman, if he is acting in the interest of temperance—and from his action in this House in the past I have no reason to suppose that he is acting otherwise—I do trust that he will not endeavour to force this Bill through the House chemist's shop. For instance, in the case of per- | in its present shape. In my judgment, the Act of 1888 is much preferable, and I am quite satisfied that the friends of temperance will prefer to have the law remain as it is now, rather than have it changed in the way the hon, gentleman proposes by his Bill. The reason why we opposed the change, as contained in this Bill, was that we knew there were doors enough open at that time for the purpose of avoiding the law, without opening any more. I am fully satisfied now that if the hon. gentleman's Bill becomes law it would very seriously affect the operation of the Act, and I am quite satisfied that if the people of the localities in which this Bill strong representations would be made against it in this House.

Mr. DICKEY. The hon, gentleman has not exactly stated in what respect he objects to this Bill. It is not now a question of considering whether it is right or not to allow the sale of liquor by druggists, because that is settled by the Act of 1888. It is now merely a question of regulation, and I must say, with regard to alcohol and spirituous liquors, that I cannot see how my hon. friend can contend that the regulation proposed in the Bill before the House is less effective than the one in the Act of It deals very much more fully with all the difficulties that would naturally occur in such mat-The only defect I see in this Bill is that it allows the sale of medicinal preparations, and of perfumery, such as eau de cologne, without restriction. So far as I am personally concerned, I think it is right. I do not think a record should be kept of every sale of eau de cologne. That would be unreasonable, and therefore it seems to me that with respect to alcohol and spirituous liquors this Bill is certainly an improvement on sub-section 2, section 11, of the Act of 1888.

Mr. JAMIESON. My objection is to clause ϵ . The serious objection at the time the Act of 1888 was before the House was with respect to the sale of alcohol and methylated spirits for pharmaceutical, medicinal or chemical manufacturing pur-At that time it was thought those sales should be permitted without any record whatever, or any restriction whatever. We opposed that view, because we believed that under the sale of alcohol or methylated spirits for the purpose indicated there would be a very wide door opened. Those who were consulted, and who were quite competent to pass judgment on the matter at the time, were fully aware that very great abuses would arise if alcohol and methylated spirits were allowed to be sold unconditionally for such purposes and used without any record being kept, because the sale would simply be a cover for other A man, for instance, might go into a drug store and simply say he wanted alcohol for pharmaceutical and chemical purposes, and that would be the end of it. The druggist was, under the law, obliged to make the sale without any certificate or record being kept. The hon. gentleman now proposes to do the same thing. We very strongly opposed the change at the time, and I feel as strongly now in regard to it as I did on that occa-I have been informed that even methylated spirits have been used, by those who have fallen to a very low stage in drinking, for beverage purposes; I believe they can be used diluted for beverage purposes. It would be a very serious mistake to nal Act, because there was no difficulty about allow such sales to be used without registration. procuring the licenses.

Mr. Jamieson.

There may be something perhaps in what has been said as to records being unnecessary in regard to sales of eau de cologne and other articles, but we should carefuly examine the whole of the provisions before passing the Bill and allowing it to become I would much rather retain the law as at present, and, at all events, keep the present clauses, so far as alcohol and methylated spirits are concerned. It will be remembered that in the Canada Temperance Act, as originally passed, it was provided that sales of intoxicating liquors could be made exclusively for medicinal purposes or for bond the Act is in force were aware of the nature of fide use in some art, trade or manufacture, when made by a licensed druggist or vendor. But such sales, when, for medicinal purposes, were to be certified by a medical man; and in the second case, when used for manufacturing purposes, they were to be certified by two justices of the peace. Those were the only cases in which certificates were required, and they covered the whole ground. druggists came to Parliament in 1888—in fact, they came several sessions before that—and said that the Act hampered them, because they were not allowed, in counties in which the Canada Temperance Act was in force, to sell more freely than the original provisions of the Act allowed. They fur ther stated that, in regard to those sales, they were put to a great deal of trouble in securing certificates from medical men and justices of the peace.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have not been able to understand the objection of my hon. friend opposite. As I read it, section 11 is amended by this Bill, the first clauses, a, b, c and d, standing as they do in the Act now.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Except in regard to the certificates.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Clause e is taken out, and the Act is as originally reported.

Mr. COATSWORTH. Not the restriction. Sub-section 4 of section 99 still stands; it is not repealed by the Act of 1888. So one of the principal objections of this Bill is, that it is merely re-enacting what is already law, with the exception of some changes in the certificates; because subsection 4 of section 99 of the original Act provides that where the sale is for medicinal purposes there should be a prescription by a physician.

Mr. FLINT. It must be remembered that under the original Act these sales are made by certain licensed vendors, who must procure a license from the Lieutenant Governor of each province, while under this Bill every druggist can sell. I apply the same rule to every druggist while the original Act applies to every authorized vendor.

Mr. COATSWORTH. All druggists have sold under the Act.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Some hon. MEMBERS. They violated the Act.

Mr. FLINT. As a rule, they were not druggists, but merchants or laymen. My Bill places all druggists under the same restriction as regards the sale of alcoholic and spirituous liquors as are licensed vendors under the original Bill.

Mr. COATSWORTH. I see that point; but, of course, no practical difficulty arose under the origiMr. FLINT. Oh, yes, there was.

Mr. COATSWORTH. They all had licenses, so far as I know.

Mr. FLINT. It was a difficult thing to get the licenses.

COATSWORTH. Under sub-section 4 they could sell for medicinal purposes on the certificate of a physician, and on the certificate of a justice of the peace they could sell for mechanical purposes. In regard to sub-section 11, and to the first four proposed sub-sections, I do not know whether my friend has found it in his part of the country, but I have been informed by those who are living among the Indians, and I am also informed that it exists to a certain extent in the North-West Territories; that very many of these preparations are actually sold and used as beverages. I remember on one occasion a surveyor who had a large number of Indians working for him complained to me very bitterly, that when he sent his Indians down for supplies they could buy these preparations from the druggists and bring them up to the camp and use them for liquors. One of the things he spoke of is Pain-Killer. I see that is not referred to in the Act; but preparations of this kind that have liquor in them are bought by the Indians and used for beverages.

Mr. JAMIESON. If the hon. gentleman would allow clause d to be expunged the Bill will not be so seriously defective as I think it is at present. If the hon, gentleman will look into it, I do not think he will come to the conclusion that the clause is superfluous, because if methylated spirits are used for mechanical purposes, and I believe they are, that would come under clause e. I think to allow methylated spirits to be sold without a certificate would be a serious impairment to the law.

Mr. DAVIN. If you have a Temperance Act it may as well be effective, and I think my hon. friend who is responsible for this Bill (Mr. Flint) will really emasculate the Temperance Act already on the Statute-book. My friend who last spoke has referred to the North-West Territories, where you have theoretically a prohibition country; and we know that these preparations have been largely bought. My friend the hon, member for Varmouth (Mr. Flint) says that Pain-Killer is a patent medicine. Well, Pain-Killer, I have heard, has been used extensively in the North-West for drinking purposes, and there is no doubt whatever that clauses a, b, c and d will open a wide door, and make a wide breach in your Act. If you have a Temperance Act it may as well be what it professes to be. I consider that clause e also will open a wide door in the law as it at present stands, and I will tell you why: every druggist, or everybody who professes to be a druggist, and you will have many professing to be druggists-can sell spirituous liquors as described here, though guarded by a certificate, you will find they will take advantage of it, and you will practically have a place of resort where men can go and get any amount of liquor they want. We know that without any license whatever, there is a town in Alberta where a druggist has made an immense fortune by selling all kinds of liquors; stout, whiskey, brandy and champagne, and probably that would suggest the difficulty of carrying out an Act of this kind. But if you have an Act lable. They are not merely original suggestions of on the Statute-book you may as well have it as complete as you can, and I can assure my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) that this clause of his, instead of making the Act more effective will make a breach in the Act on the Statute-book'

Mr. COATSWORTH. Would my hon. friend add sub-section 2 of section 11 of the Act of 1888 under sub-section 8? Sub-section 2 says:

"Each such sale shall be recorded in a book kept for the purpose, giving the name and address of the purchaser, quantity and name of liquor, of medical man prescribing the same, and the purpose for which it is required, and the said book shall be kept open for inspection by the proper county inspector at all times."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It seems to me that one of the hon, gentlemen opposite has not quite understood the meaning of my hon, friend in introducing this Bill. When that amendment was made to the Canada Temperance Act some years ago it was made on the alleged ground that the Canada Temperance Act was so wide in its terms that an innocent article, if sold by a druggist, rendered him liable to a penalty, and the amendment was carried through the House on the argument that it was not desirable that such articles as are mentioned in sub-sections a, b, should come within the purview of the Act at all. On that ground they smuggled a clause through the Act embracing the articles mentioned in a, b, c and d, and when the House got in a yielding mood they included in the amendment alcohol when sold under a physician's prescription. As the Act at present stands, which my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) is seeking to amend, if the physician chooses to do so, liquor can be obtained from an ordinary druggist on a mere prescription. The hon, gentleman shakes his head, but if he reads the Act he will see that. There is one limitation, to the effect that it must not be over ten ounces. So that any physician can write a prescription, and any man who has got a pain takes that prescription to the druggist and gets ten ounces of alcohol. This Bill is intended to throw a guard around the sale of that alcohol and to provide that it shall not be sold, unless under home conditions and subject to the restrictions ment med in sub-section e. If the hon, gentleman opposite is, as he professes to be, and as I would be sorry to doubt, a real believer in the Canada Temperance Act—he opposed the introduction of that amendment into the Act some years ago, and I voted with him, because he said it would throw open the door, and I agreed with him, to the obtaining of liquor right and left for anybody who wanted to All they had to do was to tell the physician get it. they were not well and they could get liquor. My hon, friend does not want to prevent them getting liquor if they really require it, but he places certain restrictions on the obtaining of it which seem to me to be a guarantee of the bond fides of the applicant, and the only question is: Whether those restrictions are just or unjust, reasonable or unreasonable. I have listened to the hon. gentleman, but I have not heard him assert that there is a lacking in that clause, in the conditions which are inserted in it, anything that should be there, or that there is in it any condition which is oppressive or wrong. conditions which my hon. friend (Mr. Flint) put in his clause seem, by universal consent, to be reasonhis own; they are the conditions which are already in the Act, under which a bond fide licensed vendor can sell. That being so, it appears to me that this amendment is in the proper direction, in the direction of temperance, and in order to make the Canada Temperance Act a workable Act, by closing an opening in the hedge which was made a few years ago, and out of which as much liquor went as anyone wanted to get. Those of us who live in districts which are under the Canada Temperance Act know that a man can get all the liquor he wants; there are no effective restrictions. If he goes to a physician, and complains of not feeling very well, he can get a prescription, by means of which he can obtain all the liquor he wants.

Mr. JAMIESON. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that, as the law stands at the present time, liquor can be procured without a prescription

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say that any physician may have an agreement with a druggist, as we know many have, to get a percentage on the prescriptions, and whether he is interested or not the physician can give a prescription under which a man can get all the liquor he wants.

Mr. JAMIESON. Of course, the medical man must give a prescription before the liquor can be sold. But what I object to—and the hon. member for Queen's 'sustained me in the position I took on this subject in 1888—is that the Bill which the hon. gentleman has introduced removes that restriction. He is confining the certificate to two specific purposes, medicinal and mechanical, whereas, as the law stands at present, if a person went into a drug store for alcohol or methylated spirits for pharmaceutical, chemical or mechanical purposes, the sale would have to be recorded, and the record kept open to the public.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says he opposed these amendments in 1888. I have no doubt he did, and so did I. But the hon, gentleman will see that sub-section 4 of section 99 is word for word the same as the provision of subsection e of this Bill; and the hon, gentleman in 1888 opposed the repeal of that section as he now. opposes the restoration of the section by the Bill of my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman says he was opposed to the amendment of the Act because, in a great measure, it broke down the restriction of the sale by a druggist; and now my hon. friend proposes to restore that very section in almost the same words that were in the previous Act, the repeal of which the hon, gentleman deprecated, and the hon. gentleman opposes its restoration. does the hon. gentleman complain of? He complains that no record is kept of the sale of patent medicines, eau de cologne, bay rum, and articles of perfumery. These are not beverages which people drink, but are used for other purposes. is of no consequence and what ought not to be included in the restriction my hon. friend proposes to take out of the restriction; and what ought to be included, spirituous liquors and alcohol, whether used for mechanical or for medicinal purposes he proposes to restore to the restriction. This is important, and the hon. gentleman comes forward and opposes the very thing he supported when the Bill amending the Act of 1878 was proposed to the House three years ago.

Mr. JAMIESON. The hon. gentleman, I am bound to say, has misapprehended the case altogether. I think my course has been quite consistent; but the hon. gentleman will see that the law as it stands now is quite different from the law as it stood in 1888. According to the text of the Canada Temperance Act, as it was originally framed, a sale of methylated spirits for mechanical purposes, for example, could not be made except on the certificate of two justices of the peace. At the present time a sale can be made by a chemist or druggist, but there must be a record of it kept. The hon. gentleman who has charge of this Bill proposes that methylated spirits may be sold without any certificate or record being kept whatever.

Mr. FLINT. I am not at all wedded to that feature of the Bill. If my hon, friend desires to have methylated spirits included, I am quite willing that that should be done. But my own feeling is against it, because I never heard of methylated spirits being used as a beverage. There never, as I understand it, was any very serious contention in reference to the authority of druggists to sell the preparations mentioned in a, b and c.

Mr. JAMIESON. The great controversy in this House was with reference to alcohol and methylated spirits. That was the bone of contention between the two parties when the Bill was under consideration. Now, if the hon, gentleman will simply consent to strike out methylated spirits and let any party who has occasion to purchase them for mechanical purposes, or any of these purposes to which no objection is taken, get a certificate and have a record kept, I think the hon, gentleman's Bill will not be open to very serious objection.

Mr. FLINT. I will accept that suggestion.

Mr. ROOME. I think the clause that the sale may be made on the certificate or prescription of a legally qualified physician, having no interest in the sale, would work a great injustice to the medical men of Canada. Throughout the whole Dominion, especially in the Province of Ontario, in our villages and towns, medical men have often interest in drug stores, and in many places there would be no drug store if it were not established by the doctor; and under this clause any medical man, no matter how good may be his standing, and even if there be no other drug store in the vicinity, is not allowed to prescribe, if the prescription be filled in his own drug store, without being amenable to the law. I know of one medical man of good standing, one of the best physicians in the west, who owned a drug store, and because he gave prescriptions which were filled at his own store, he was fined under the Temperance Act. particular clause ought to be removed. It is a reflection on the medical men of Canada.

Mr. FLINT. I move to amend the Bill by striking out the letter e and making that clause a part of clause d.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I would draw attention to the point raised by the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Roome). There are many doctors in the country who are carrying on their business in connection with drug stores. There are no less than two in the town I come from, and if this clause passes as it is, neither of them would have any power to prescribe from his own drug store. I think that would be a hardship.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) You would have to amend the original Act, as the amendment in this clause does not touch the clause in the original Act, which has been in operation since 1878. And I doubt the propriety of our making such an amendment. It is easy to cite instances where the clause works apparently with harshness, but we must not look at particular cases here and there, but at the ques-Without desiring to cast any tion as a whole. reflection upon the medical profession, there are some men in that as well as in other professions, who would not refuse to lend themselves to underhand tricks of the kind this clause is intended to guard against. I know of cases where a doctor sold printed prescriptions, so that a man carried round his book of prescriptions, and got a drink whenever he wanted one.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That happens only in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not say it was in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). The hon. gentleman cannot produce an instance of that kind in Ontario.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The doctor who gave the prescription qualified in Ontario. Of course he was not tolerated in the profession; he was an outcast and the profession would not recognize him, but he had a diploma.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I will guarantee he had not graduated at the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps not.

Mr. ROOME. I agree with the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) that these words should be taken out of the Bill. It is a great hardship in several parts of the Province of Ontario if a doctor cannot make up his own prescription.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This Act is not in force in Ontario.

Mr. ROOME. We do not know how soon it may be in force again. I second the motion of the hon, gentlemen to strike out those words.

Mr. JAMIESON. I hope the member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) will not consent to any such aniendment, and I am surprised at the member for Huron (Mr. Macdonald) taking such ground. If he looks up the: Hansard at the time of the debate on this Bill in 1888, he will find that he was one of those who took the same stand which I take to-night in regard to this amendment. The same The same effort was made then, and was made before, and it is made again to-night, and I hope the members of this Committee will vote it down, and I am satisfied they will. I agree with the hon, member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), that, while members of the medical profession, as a rule, are above reproach, there are black sheep in every profession, and there is not a profession in which you will not find some men who are ready to make merchandise out of their profession. We have heard of men in the medical profession in the Province of Ontario selling their prescriptions, and this is not intended to meet the case of honourable practitioners, but of dishonourable practitioners, who are not only to be found in the ranks of the medical profession, but in all other professions. I hope hon, gentlemen who represent counties where the Canada Temperance Act is in force, will state their views strongly against the amendment. I hope my hon, friend from Huron (Mr. Macdonald) will look up his record on this question, and, if he does, he will find that he is breaking his record if he concurs in this amendment. I think these words ought to be retained. They were not inserted for the purpose of reflecting upon the medical profession, but to guard the Canada Temperance Act against the action of dishonourable men in that profession.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). As far as my record on the temperance question is concerned, I think it as good or better than that of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I am always in favour of temperance, but I am in favour of what is for the interest of the people generally. These words are a reflection upon the medical profession, and are an insinuation that a medical man would be willing to sell whiskey to make five or ten cents on his own prescription. A large number of the medical men in the west have their own drug stores, and it is insulting to say that anyone belonging to the profession to which I have the honour to belong, would sacrifice his position in society to give any man who wanted a certain quantity of liquor a prescription in order to make a cent or two out of it. Besides, this is no protection at all, because, if a man wants to give a prescription for that purpose, the man who gets it may go to the next store and get it, or, if there is none in the village, he may go to the next village and have that prescription filled. I think this is a hardship and that it is not in the interests of temperance to keep these words in. I have not gone back on my record; I stick to it; but without doing injury to the rights and privileges which I think the medical profession should possess.

SECOND HOMESTEADS.

Order being called for resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Davin:

That, whereas in 1883 an Act was passed granting second homesteads to those settlers who had completed the conditions of the first homestead entry; and whereas in 1886 an Act was passed abolishing the policy of second homesteads; and whereas in 1887 an Act was passed which acknowledged the principle and right of those second homesteads, it should now be enacted that all those settlers who came in between 1st June, 1883, and 2nd June, 1886, should, on completing their improvements, be granted a second homestead.

Mr. DAVIN. I may explain that the principle of this motion is embodied in my Bill (No. 108) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act, and I think that the Government are likely to place that Bill on the Government Orders, so that I need not proceed with the discussion of this motion. I, therefore, move that the Order be discharged.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that the prospective Minister of the Interior has a Bill which practically includes this resolution.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not understand the jokes of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman blushes.

Order discharged, and motion withdrawn.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BARRON, moved second reading of Bill (No. 103) further to amend the Railway Act. He said: I am in doubt whether this Bill will commend itself to the minds of hen, gentlemen in this House, because I understand that it meets with a good deal of opposition from railway men. is a Bill which certainly ought to be considered. The object is, as appears by the clauses of the Bill, to compel passengers to leave a car by one door, and passengers entering a car to enter it by another door. It may, perhaps, more properly come within the regulations of a railway, but the trouble is that you can never get a railway to carry out such regulations; whereas if some such provision as this Bill was made law, then, of course, it would be compulsory upon railways to carry it out. Now, the reason why I introduce this Bill is because I saw, myself, on one occasion quite recently, a child nearly killed by reason of people leaving a coach and others endeavouring to enter it by the same There was a jam of passengers on the platform, and a little child was knocked from the arms of the lady on the platform who was carrying it, and if the child had not been rescued, it would have fallen from the platform on to the track. I think that, apart from the danger resulting from the practice which now exists, there is a question of convenience to be considered. While it may, perhaps, be rather risky to urge this legislation at the present time, I think the Minister of Justice ought to consider the point suggested by the Bill to see if some remedy cannot be found for the existing evil. I am perfectly well aware of the difficulties surrounding a Bill of this nature. the coaches of a train do not have sufficiently long platforms, and difficulty arises from that circumstance; then again the stations on different railroads are not the same. But, so far as country places are concerned, there is no difficulty about it, this law would be a very great utility and would prevent great risk and danger to life.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What are the provisions for its enforcement?

Mr. BARRON. I have added it as a further clause to the clauses in the Railway Act regarding the management of the road.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This refers to the passengers, not to the road.

ment of the road. Hon, gentlemen with Hon. gentlemen will see, of course, that it would be utterly impossible to control the passengers, but it will be seen by this Bill that the conductor or the brakesman is obliged, when a train approaches a station, as he calls out the name of the station, to say to the passengers that they must leave the car at a certain door. I think the passengers will very quickly get into the way of doing that, if they are told to do it. Then, in order to meet the case of people getting on, there is a provision by which notice must be put up in a conspicuous place, somewhere about the station, and the constable at the station would be required to direct the passengers to get on at the rear end of the coach. Now, of course, I am not familiar with the practice in the old country, but I have been told there is some such provision as this to prevent the danger and the risk of life which I have just described.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. COATSWORTH. There is no such provision as that.

Mr. BARRON. Well, I may be misinformed regarding that.

Mr. MONTAGUE. They do not enter as we enter.

Mr. BARRON. At all events that does not alter the need of such a provision in this country. For instance, take the stations in small towns such as Lindsay, Peterborough, Port Hope, Cobourg, and I am quite satisfied that if some such law as I now propose were in force, it would greatly promote the convenience of the travelling public, and would remove one of the great dangers now attending railway travel.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he desired to call attention to the Bill, but would not press the second reading The Bill was before the House I think a to-night. session or two ago, and was referred to a select com-That committee were unanimously of the mittee. opinion that the Bill should not become law. There are various objections to it. I am not prepared to say that some regulation might not with propriety be adopted, and I think the Railway Department would be disposed to consider the propriety of having notices containing regulations of this kind required to be posted up by railway companies at their stations and in their cars, although one would hardly suppose that in the rush and crush and hurry of an outgoing train this would be very effective. Generally speaking, when excitement and hurry occur, it is impossible to prevent persons endangering their lives by crowding and jostling. This Bill purports to be an amendment to the Railway Act, chapter 29 of 53rd Victoria; it should be chapter 29 of 51st Victoria, as consolidated in 1888. It has, however, no practical relation to that part of the Act in which it is proposed to be inserted. Section 262, to which this Bill will be a sub-section, refers to packing of frogs, wing and guard rails and oil cups. But, coming down to the provisions of the Bill itself, the hon. gentleman will see it is a Bill which contains penalties against passengers, but it should be a Bill to inflict penalties on the companies. first section provides:

"Passengers leaving a train at a railway station shall do so by way of the car-door and platform nearest to the locomotive engine attached to such train."

I call attention to the fact that the platforms, especially at small stations, may not be sufficient to accommodate the whole train, and a passenger may be obliged to go out of the door of the car where there is no platform. The second section reads:

"Every person entering upon a passenger train shall enter a passenger car by the platform and door of such car furthest from the locomotive engine attached to such train."

That would require more than an ordinary platform. If, under ordinary circumstances, a passenger desired to leave the train by the door which happened to open out on the platform or enter it, it would be very hard to prohibit him from doing so. Section 3 provides:

"The conductor and brakesmen on every passenger train shall, as the train approaches a railway station, announce to the passengers how they must leave the train, in accordance with this section."

I think it would be well to have regulations and station, and after they pass that station the card is notices to that effect, with a view to inducing or compelling, as far as possible, the officers of railway trains to direct their passengers which way to go, and that must always depend to a great extent on the convenience afforded by the platforms. must leave a good deal to the discretion of the true that in many instances accidents have occurred officers of the train themselves, because when there by passengers crowding in entering and leaving the is no crowd and no confusion and the station is a small one, very little risk or difficulty occurs from getting out of the far end of the car instead of the fore end. Section 5 says:

"From the first day of November in each year to the first day of April next following, storm or double windows shall be kept upon all cars for the carriage of passengers."

That would apply to poorly equipped railways, which are running trains for accommodation rather than for ordinary business. However, I think the subject might well be considered as regards the posting up of notices including regulations; but it would hardly be wise for the hon. gentleman to press the second reading of the Bill.

The Bill of my hon. MILLS (Bothwell). friend is intended as a police regulation applying to railway trains. I do not understand, by the provisions of the Bill, that my hon. friend intends that passengers should enter at the rear end of the train and leave at the end of the train next the locomotive, but the Bill says the passengers shall leave by way of the car-door and platform nearest at the front end of the car and enter by the rear. think in many cases it would be found to be very It would be more satisfactory if inconvenient. some arrangement were made that would prevent passengers who wished to enter a train from doing so until the passengers for that station have left the It might be found very inconvenient to carry out such a regulation as provided by the Bill. Suppose a passenger entered by the rear of the car in accordance with the provisions of the Bill, and found every seat in the car occupied. The conductor then informed him that there were seats in the next car in the rear. Would the passenger be obliged to leave by the front door and walk the length of the two cars and enter the rear door of the second car? In the meantime the train might have left the station. While it was very desirable to make regulations if they were such as could be enforced, it would be a much more workable regulation to enforce a rule by which passengers should leave cars before others entered them.

I do not think any such legis Mr. MONTAGUE. lation, with all due deference to my hon. friend, is at all necessary. The railway companies, in their own interest, and out of consideration for the welfare of the public, provide every regulation that can possibly be carried into effect for the purpose of saving the lives as well as the property of They make any regulation that is passengers. workable on days when there are not large crowds, and on days when humanity is en masse for the purpose of getting upon railway trains, no regulation is workable, no matter how many Acts of Parliament are behind it to attempt its enforcement.

Mr. INGRAM. If railway companies posted notices in each car and in each station requiring passengers to leave the cars by certain doors and enter by certain doors that would be sufficient. I notice that in some cars they have a card in one changed to one bearing the name of the succeeding station, and so on. If this notice were placed on a card of that kind, people would know the station they were arriving at, and they would know the end of the car they should leave by. It is quite cars, and if this notice were given it would have a good effect.

Mr. BARRON. Mr. Speaker-

Mr. SPEAKER. My hon, friend has exhausted his right to speak. I might as well now draw the attention of the House to the Rule on this subject, which says:

"No member may speak twice to a question, except in explanation of a material part of his speech, in which he may have been misconceived, but then he is not to introduce new matter. A reply is allowed to a member who has made a substantive motion to the House, but not to any member who has moved an Order of the Day, an amendment, the previous question, or an instruction to a Committee." Committee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It has generally been the custom to allow the mover of a Bill to speak again at the end of a debate.

If my ruling is called in ques Mr. SPEAKER. tion, of course the House will decide upon it. Rule cannot be clearer than it is. It is one of the Rules which have been laid down for the guidance of Parliament,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Our practice has been different.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Barron) was rising to withdraw his

Mr. BOWELL. Does the hon, gentleman accept the proposal of the Minister of Justice to withdraw the Bill?

Mr. BARRON. If I had been allowed to speak I was just going to say what I intended to do.

Mr. BOWELL. I ask you now.

Mr. BARRON. Yes, I withdraw the Bill.

Mr. ROOME moved that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. BARRON. I can speak on the motion for the adjourment of the debate, and I just wish to say a few words. I think my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has given this Bill a rather unfair construction. He says if that any person enters a car by the rear door, and finds the car crowded, he could not then go into the other car, because he would not be entering by the rear door. The wording of the section does not bear that construction. When the person enters the car he will have complied with this section, because it does not say that a person on a train cannot go through from one car to another. That is a very different thing.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is a distinction without a difference.

Mr. BARRON. It is not a distinction without a difference. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) has taken a rather unfair objection to the Bill. quite appreciated that there would be opposition, and I was satisfied that there would be great difficulty in passing such a Bill as this. Had I been aware, which I was not, that two or three sessions end of the car which gives the name of the next ago a Bill similar to this was introduced, I should have looked at the discussion and probably guided my course accordingly. As has been suggested by hon, gentlemen, there is great danger arising from the present custom of entering and leaving cars, and perhaps if no other good has been done the introduction of this Bill will draw the attention of railways to the difficulty that does exist, and suggest to them to introduce some regulation upon I quite understand the difficulty this subject. suggested by the Minister, that if the train is long it might not be able to get up to the platform; but still if this Bill was made law that difficulty might be easily overcome. There is one clause in this Bill which provides that from the 1st of November in each year, double windows shall be placed on the cars. I had forgotten this clause for the moment. I have seen a great deal of discomfort arising from the want of these double windows. That, perhaps, may be a matter of regulation also, but unfortunately sometimes, we can only carry out the regulations by making them the statute law of the land. I would suggest to the Minister that it might be advisable to consider this proposition. However, the object of introducing the Bill has been attained and I shall now be quite prepared to vote for the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

On the Order being read for second reading of Bill (No. 108) to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

Mr. DAVIN. I will not move the second reading of this Bill, because, as I understand, the Government intends to move it on to the Government Orders.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. DAVIN moved second reading of Bill (No. 110) to amend the Railway Act. He said: The principal clause in the Bill deals with protection in the North-West Territories from fires caused by railway engines. Sparks fly from the funnels of these engines and set fire to the prairie grass, causing great devastation. Last year the Government accepted substantially this clause, the Bill went to the Senate. and in the Senate Railway Committee one of the senators, I was greatly surprised to learn, moved that this clause be struck out of the Bill; and it was struck out accordingly. There is another provision that on each side of every railway running through settled districts the company shall erect and maintain a fence high enough to prevent cattle straying on to the track. In the North-West we have large settled districts where there are as yet no municipalities. If were, under the Railway Act, the there companies would be compelled erect But with us, as they cannot compelled to do so, cattle stray on to the tracks and are killed, and the owners of the cattle have no remedy unless the cattle happen to be killed upon a portion of the line running through their property. There is also a provision for automatic brakes on freight as well as on passenger cars. That is very necessary, because the accidents that occur on freight trains are very numerous, and this provision will prevent a great number of them.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time. Mr. BARRON.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 10.35 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 4th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS-PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. WALLACE moved:

That all accounts for paper purchased to be used in the Government Printing Office for the years 1886-87, 1887-88, 1888-89, and all tenders, contracts and vouchers respecting the same, be forthwith brought before the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts for investigaton, in accordance with the recommendation made in the Ninth Report of said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS--PRINTING EVI-DENCE.

Mr. WALLACE moved:

That the evidence now being taken by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts respecting certain items affecting John R. Arnoldi, and charged in the Report of the Auditor General on Appropriation Accounts, for the year ending 30th June, 1890, under the heading "Dredging—Details of Expenditure," be printed for the use of the members of that Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Teuth Report with the recommendation contained in the Tenth Report of the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVATE BILLS—RECEPTION OF REPORTS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That the time for the reception of reports from Committees on Private Bills be extended until Friday, the 14th instant.

Motion agreed to.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON (for Mr. DEWDNEY) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following resolutions:

1. Resolved. That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies of land hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

To the Manitoba South-Western Colonization Railway

To the Manitoba South-Western Colonization Railway Company, in addition to the subsidy for one hundred and fifty miles of railway authorized by the Act passed in the session held in the forty-eighth and forty-minth years of Her Majesty's reign, chapter sixty, Dominion lands to the extent of six thousand four hundred acres per mile for the balance of the two hundred and twelve miles of railway which have been constructed and are in operation, that is to say, for a distance of sixty-two miles;

Also, to the Manitoba South-Western Colonization Railway Company, Dominion lands to the extent of six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's branch line of railway from Carman to Barnsley, a distance of about six and one-quarter miles;

To the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in addition to the subsidy authorized by the Act fifty-third Victoria, chapter four, for the company's branch line running in a south-westerly and westerly direction, from a point at or near Brandon, for a distance of one hundred miles, Dominion lands to the extent of six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the extention westward of the said branch line, from the western limit of the said one hundred miles to a point at or near La Roche Percé, situated in Township one, Range six, west of the Second Meridian, a distance of about sixty miles.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient that the said grants and each of them be made in aid of the construction of the said railways respectively, in the proportions and upon the conditions fixed by the Orders in Council made in respect thereof, and that, except as to such conditions, the said grants shall be free grants, subject only to the payment by the grantees respectively of the cost of survey of the lands and incidental expenses, at the rate of ten cents per acre cash, on the issue of the patents therefor.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY-TRADE POLICY OF THE GOVERNMENT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DESJARDINS (L'Islet). Before you leave the Chair, I ask leave to move the motion which a few days ago I submitted to the House, but which I agreed to withdraw in order to facilitate the harmonious proceedings of this House. I then declared that I would take the earliest opportunity of again moving that amendment, and I now do so:

Resolved, That this House desires to express its approval (1) of the fiscal policy of the Liberal-Conservative Government, which, by permitting the free importation of raw materials, and by a judicious protection of our natural and manufactured products, has resulted in the marked development of Canadian industries; (2) of the liberal aid which has been granted to important and necessary public works, notably railways, canals and steamship lines, which have proved such important factors in developing our resources and facilitating our commerce; (3) of the wise and prudent management of the finances, which, while adequately providing for the public service, has maintained and advanced the credit of the country, and while producing substantial surpluses for capital expenditure, has made no appreciable addition to the public debt ture, has made no appreciable addition to the public debt during the last two years; (4) of the policy of relieving from duty articles of universal use, such as tea, coffee and sugar (in respect of the latter the consumer being freed from taxation to the extent of $3,500,000 during the present session), and of the mode of meeting the larger part of the loss of revenue thereby caused by the exercise of economy in expenditure

That this House, while approving of the special efforts made by the Government to increase Canadian trade with the far East, with the West Indies, with Great Britain and the United States, desires to express its confidence that any negotiations for the extension of commercial relations with the United States will be so conducted that their result will be consistent with that proper control of our own tariff and revenues which every self-respecting people must maintain, and with a continuance of those profitable business and political relations with the mother country which are earnestly desired by all intelligent country which are earnestly desired by all intelligent and loyal Canadians.

That this House desires to express its special disap-proval of any plan of commercial union between Canada and the United States which would involve a common tariff against the rest of the world and a pro rata division of the joint revenues of the two countries.

I have only a few words to add to what I have already said on the question. Without referring to a previous debate I may say, however, that all the questions involved in this amendment have been thoroughly discussed for about five weeks time and the debate is almost exhausted. amendment, Mr. Speaker, as you will have observed, is the same as the one I submitted a few days ago, with the addition of a clause which I thought advisable under the circumstances, especially after the debate which has taken place in this House on the trade question and on the financial question before the country. Hon. gentle-not had fair-play. I know that some days ago I had a right to press my amendment to a vote, but if the House will allow me to make this short allusion to a previous debate, I will say that it was pretended at that time that, according to the agreement that was made between the Government and the leaders of the Opposition, the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford, which was made on the motion for the second reading of the tariff resolutions, and almost at once withdrawn, was to remain in just the same position as if the House had then been divided upon it. Consequently, in order to have a square vote of the House on the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford, after the angry passions had passed away, I was only too glad to agree to the withdrawal of my amendment. So we have given hon, gentlemen opposite the opportunity of having a square vote on their amendment. That amendment was an exposition of their policy on the trade question. I was the more inclined to withdraw my amendment, because I saw that the submission of a sub-amendment of that kind at that time might be interpreted by hon, gentlemen opposite, and some of their friends, as evidence that we were somewhat afraid to face the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and, of course, hon members on this side of the House would not allow hon. gentlemen opposite to make that statement. We were ready to record our votes against the amendment of the hon, member for South Oxford, as we did. Now, I think hon, members on this side of the House have the right to submit a motion embodying a complete exposition of the policy best suited to the interests of the country, as we understand them. I have set out in this amendment the principles which a majority in this House, and a large majority of the people, want to see put in practice in this country. The first portion of the amendment is in these

It be resolved that this House desires to express its approval, (1) of the fiscal policy of the Liberal-Conservative Government, which by permitting the free importation of raw material and by a judicious protection of our natural and manufactured products, has resulted in the marked development of Canadian industries.

The principle of protection to our native industries, the principle of the National Policy, is embodied in my amendment, and I have a right to claim that this principle at the four last general elections, in 1878, 1882, 1887 and 1891, has been affirmed by a large majority of the people. affirming by resolution this principle. the House will only be doing what the people expect the House to My motion in the second place states:

(2) of the liberal aid which has been granted to important and necessary public works, notably railways, canals and steamship lines, which have proved such important factors in developing our resources and facilitating our commerce.

With respect to the second principle, I may claim that it dates further back than the other one, because ever since Confederation, in 1867, and even previous to that year, the people of Canada have at all the general elections affirmed the principle that it was good policy for the Government. to aid the different undertakings and public enterprises which I have mentioned. The people have declared that they wish Government aid to be given for the promotion of the building of railways, for the enlargement and deepening of the canals, men opposite cannot surely pretend that they have a work which was undertaken several years ago, and which is still being prosecuted, and which we hope will be successfully completed shortly. The people have declared that it was good policy to subsidize lines of steamers. What the Government have done for the building of railways is considerable, and I may claim this, that the Government have acted loyally and with justice to the different sections of the country. I was looking a few minutes ago at the list of railways subsidized by the Dominion Government, and I ascertained that all the different sections of the country have had their fair share of aid for the development of railways. A few years ago the Dominion Government specially took into consideration the important subject of subsidizing colonization railways. policy of subsidizing railways is not completed, and, as I mentioned some days ago, numerous undertakings are yet claiming the support of the Government. There are some of such railway enterprises in the different provinces, and in the different districts of the provinces, and speaking more particularly for the Province of Quebec, I may say that we have heard very often hon, gentlemen, even hon, members opposed to the present Government, asking subsidies for railways in which their constituents are interested and which they are anxious to see built. I know that one of the most important railway undertakings now discussed in the Province of Quebec is the line from Montreal, or Longueuil opposite Montreal, to Lévis opposite Quebec. This railway will traverse the different counties along the south shore of the St. Lawrence from Montreal to Quebec, the Counties of Chambly, Richelieu, Yamaska, Nicolet, Lot-binière and Lévis. There is a large population in those constituencies, who have been deprived of railway communication so far. I know very well, and hon, gentlemen representing those constituencies are also fully aware, that it will be very difficult to carry this undertaking to successful completion without some aid being given by the Dominion Government. I have always been in favour of this undertaking. If we look around the Province of Quebec we will find several other important railway enterprises. We have heard a great deal about a railway bridge at Quebec, and hon. gentlemen opposite have implored the Government to come to the assistance of that scheme. The system of railways of which the Lake St. John Railway is a large part is not yet complete. There is a large section to be built from Lake St. John down to Chicoutimi, and this being a newly settled country where there is much to be done, of course Government aid will be required. mention again the railway which will run between the Intercolonial and the Canadian Pacific Railway from Quebec through to the lower provinces, and I take particular interest in this railway because it will traverse my own county. If I were to occupy the time of this House at greater length, I might mention several undertakings all over the Dominion, but I will refrain from doing so in order to shorten my remarks. I think I am justified in moving that the House express its approval of the Government's railway policy of the past, which will mean, of course, that this policy, always within the financial resources of the country, will be continued and aid given to the utmost extent to these national enterprises. We have been informed that, under the circumstances, the Government has thought proper to defer to a future session the consideration | These two principles I think it is the duty of the Mr. Desjardins (L'Islet).

of the question of granting railway subsidies. The Government having this session come to the very excellent conclusion of abolishing the duties on sugar, it is of course only proper that some time should be given to see what will be the financial result of this policy. But, Mr. Speaker. I think the House by affirming this principle will be only doing what the people of Canada wish this Parliament to The third clause is as follows:

That the House approves of the wise and prudent management of the finances which, adequately providing for the public service, has maintained and advanced the credit of the country, and while producing substantial surpluses for capital expenditure, has made no appreciable addition to the public debt during the last two years. It is a very satisfactory fact that for the two years 1809-90 and 1890-91, the country has been able to make almost all the capital been able to make almost expenditure out of the surpluses, and when I affirm in this amendment that it is a good principle of financial policy that the finances should be so administered as to give a surplus at the end of the year, I think I should meet with the approval of The fourth clause of the amendment is as follows:

That the House approves of the policy of relieving from duty articles of universal use, such as tea, coffee and sugar (in respect of the latter the consumer being freed from taxation to the extent of three and one-half millions dollars during the present session) and of the mode of meeting the larger part of the loss of revenue thereby caused by the exercise of economy in expenditure.

There are certainly contained in this clause two principles which anybody ought to be able to endorse: that is, the necessity of diminishing taxation when the financial situation of the country warrants it, and the relieving of articles of universal use from That was the principle embodied in the amendment moved by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) some days ago, and if the Government and this House is not in a position to do all that was asked in that motion. I think the House can express its satisfaction that so much has been done, and that we have no taxation whatever on such articles of universal use as tea, coffee and sugar. Then with regard to economy, there is no person who can find fault with the policy adopted by the Government in trying to have both ends meet at the end of the year. That will be done by practicing a very wise economy in public expenditure, always, of course, subject to the efficiency of a good public service. Now, Mr. Speaker, the last clause of the amendment, as I moved it some days ago, was this:

That this House, while approving of the special efforts made by the Government to increase Canadian trade with the far East, with the West Indies, with Great Britain and with the United States, desires to express its confidence that any negotiations for the extension of commercial relations with the United States will be so conducted that their result will be consistent with that their result will be consistent with that that their result will be consistent with that proper control of our own tariffand revenues which every self-respecting people must maintain, and with the continuance of those profitable business and political relations with the mother country which are earnestly desired by all intelligent and loyal Canadians.

In this clause we affirm the principle that it is the duty of the Government to extend as much as possible the commercial relations of Canada with other countries and with the United States as well as with other countries; but in all cases subject to the proper control of our own tariff and revenues, and also to the continuance of our profitable business and political relations with the mother country. House unanimously to affirm. I have added another clause to the amendment I read the other day, which is as follows:—

That this House desires to express its special disapproval of any plan of commercial union between Canada and the United States which would involve a common tariff against the rest of the world and a pro rata division of the joint revenues of the two countries.

I think it is, under all the circumstances and after all that has been said, the duty of this House to affirm the principle that this Parliament and the people of Canada do not want any kind of commercial union which would involve a common tariff against the rest of the world, and a pro rata division of the joint revenues of the two countries. Of course, I quite understand that there may be differences of opinion on questions of public policy; but I think that, on the principles which I here affirm, there should not be any two opinions in this House. The House should be unanimous in declaring that we do not want any kind of commercial union by which our tariff would be made in Washington, or by which we shall have a common tariff for Canada and the United States against Great Britain, our mother country, and the other countries of the world, and a division of the revenues of the two countries according to population. For my part, Mr. Speaker, I am decidedly opposed to such a scheme, and I repeat once more that I think it is the duty of this House to unanimously affirm these principles. After the long discussion that has taken place on all these questions of trade policy, I do not see the necessity of adding any more to what I have just said. I will place this amendment in your hands, Mr. Speaker, with the hope that it will meet with the approval of a large majority in this House.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, when some few weeks ago the hon, gentleman introduced the motion which he has now again placed in your hands, and which he was afterwards compelled to withdraw, for the reasons he has alluded to, he launched upon us as a Parthian arrow the threat that we should still hear his motion. One would have hoped, one might have expected, that in the meantime reflection and better advices would have given him a wiser decision; but it is evident that the hon. gentleman has for this offspring of his brain, the blind fondness which sometimes makes people mistake deformity for beauty; he dotes upon this motion of his. Not satisfied with presenting it to us, in the form in which he presented it to us the first time, he has embellished it, and given it a new toilet for the present occasion. Still, it seems to me that it remains what it was at first, an olla podrida which it would be difficult even for the rude stomachs of National Policy men to digest. There are some things in this motion which under ordinary circumstances I should not object to; but the hon. gentleman has not been quite fair. He gives us something to swallow which in itself might be acceptable, in order to cram down our throats a good For instance, deal that is altogether unpalatable. the hon, gentleman wants us to approve of the policy of the Government in their efforts to extend our trade with the far East, with the West Indies, with Great Britain, and with the United States. What have the Government done to extend our trade with the far East? They have subsidized some steamers. Certainly that is not a stroke of genius nor anything unheard of. what have the Government done to extend our trade with the West Indies? They have again subsidized steamers, and not only that, they have sent my hon. friend the Minister of Finance to negotiate reciprocity treaties with our sister colonies in the West Indies and with the Spanish colonies as well. My hon. friend, however, has never boasted of his success in that line. He has not been very prompt in laying before the House the result of his efforts. It is only within eight days that he has thought fit to acquaint the House of the result of his endeavours; and certainly he will agree with me that he has not much to boast of in that direction. He made an offer, but his offer was not accepted. He offered to the colonies of the West Indies that Canada would accept their sugar free of duty if they would accept Canadian products equally free of duty. I so read the statement, and I think I shall show before I conclude that I am correct. At all events, I think the hon, gentleman made an offer to reduce the duties on sugar, if the West Indies would accept our products in exchange. The offer was re-jected; but the hon, gentleman has not only reduced the duty on sugar, he has altogether abolished the duty, and this after he had made the offer of a treaty and failed. Then we are asked by the mover of this resolution to approve of the efforts of this Government to foster our trade with Great Britain. What in the name of common sense have this Government done to foster our trade with Great Britain? They have done everything which it has been possible for them to do to kill our trade with Great Britain. Why, the very policy which has been enacted and supported by this Government, has had for its very purpose to destroy the trade we have to-day with Great Britain. Their policy has been to manufacture everything we could manufacture here, and which we have been in the habit of buying from Great Britain. hon, gentleman says we should also approve of the efforts of the Government to establish a trade with the great nation to the south of us. Well, if anyone can show me what those efforts are, I will be prepared to vote for this resolution; but so far they are not visible to the naked eye, nor do I believe them to be visible under a microscope. Why, the policy of the Government has not been to develop trade between this country and the United States. On the contrary, their policy has been in every instance to do what they could to injure trade between this country and the United States. Then the hon. gentleman asks us to rejoice over the policy which has created surpluses and great public works. Sir, it takes a man of some courage to make this assertion at the present time. We have had hitherto surpluses, it is true; we have had high taxation, large revenues, and great public works; but it is now apparent and only too manifest that these public works have cost the country double the amount they should We have this further evidence, that every cent of the surpluses that should have been expended on these public works has been applied in peculation, in malversation, incorruption, which to-day are a lasting shame and an eternal disgrace to the name of Canada. And, Sir, the hon. gentleman says that this policy has developed industries, and has in consequence made this country prosperous. Well, this is a question of fact upon which I am sure we might all agree; yet, in the long debate which closed a few days ago, we have not been able to agree upon this one fact, whether the country was prosperous or was not prosperous. We on this side of the House have asserted that the condition of the country was not satisfactory, and especially that the condition of the agricultural industry was most precarious. True, we have been met by negation on the other side of the House. I will not discuss the question with them, because their powers of negation are too strong for Whenever a thing is asserted on this side of the House, no matter what it is, denied it will be, and the negation will be persisted in, until perchance it is possible to unearth some declaration that hon, gentlemen may have made in what I would call an unguarded moment, but in perhaps what they would call a moment of weakness, and With regard to thus confront and silence them. this question, as to whether or not the country is in a dissatisfied condition, as to whether or not the agricultural interests are in a flourishing condition, I will not give to the House any argument of mine, but will content myself with reading from the report of perhaps the most important financial institution in Lower Canada: The Crédit Foncier Franco-Canadien. That institution, in its report of May, 1891, not yet three months old, says:

"With regard to rural real estate, we called your attention in the report of last year to the crisis which it was then undergoing. This situation has only become worse in the course of the year 1890, and a very bad harvest has been added to the two preceding ones. Add to this the deplorable effect which the McKinley Bill has produced upon the industry of our Canadian farmers by abruptly closing the American market to their products, almost without any notification, and without giving them time to modify their system of farming. Under these circumstances we thought it wise to use double precautions, and to accept demands for rural loans only in most favourably situated localities."

I will be asked this question: Who is it that has drawn this woeful picture? Who is this preacher of blue ruin? Who is the Yankee sycophant that dares assert the McKinley Bill is not a blessing in disguise? Who is this veiled traitor that dares say anything in disparagement of the great National Policy? I will give you his name, Sir, but I am almost sorry to have to give it, for he is not one of He belongs to the other side of the House, and I almost fear for him the fate of Orpheus, who was torn to pieces by the Thracians because he would not give them the music they expected. Well, Sir, the name is that of the Secretary of State for Canada, and the report is that of the Crédit Foncier Franco-Canadien, appended to which is the name I have just mentioned. There are in my friend evidently two different characters. I will not do him, the honour to say that one is Dr. Jeykll, nor will I do him the injury of saying that the other is Mr. Hyde; but I will say that the one is the politician, the member of the Conservative Administration, whose object it is to show everything under rosy colours, and to drug the people with some hashish or some potion the effect of which would be to create in them illusive sensations; and the other is the man of business, the capitalist, the investor, the director of a financial company, whose object is to show things as they are, so as to make proper investments and not lose any money. And whom are we to prefer to believe? The Secretary of State, the politician, or the capitalist? For my part, my choice is made. I rather prefer to believe the man who looks after his business, Mr. LAURIER.

than the man who simply speaks as a politician. That is not all. I also find the name on these pages of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet), who is also a supporter of the great National Policy. I also find the name here of the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins), who spoke on this question some time ago and quoted this He quoted it to establish what? establish that real estate in the Province of Quebec had not decreased in value, but he did not cite the part I have just quoted, but something else. What did he quote? He quoted to prove that the debtors of the company are not in arrears in their payments. That may be, but he cited something more. He stated that the company had been forced to bring to sale a certain number of properties, fiftyfour in all, which they had been forced to buy themselves, and of these they had sold fourteen, and had realized from the sales the amounts they had lent on those fourteen properties, less a few hundred dollars. But at the same time he stated that they only effected loans on real estate valued at double the amount lent, so that, by their own showing, property in the Province of Quebec has just decreased in value 50 per cent. However, we will not quarrel with this. Let us see things just as they are represented by the Secretary of State, when he speaks, not to the shareholders of the Crédit Foncier, but to the people of Canada. We will see that there is one point upon which we are all agreed, on both sides of the House. Out of the debate which took place a short time ago this fact towers, conspicuous above all others, affirmed by all on this side, and admitted by all on the other side—admitted, not always in so many words, but when not admitted in words, admitted by their criticisms and by their equivocations, still more eloquent and significant. That fact is that the power of consumption to-day of the Canadian people is not equal to their power of production, and we must have new channels of consumption. There are many varieties of opinion as to the methods to be applied, as to the channels that ought to be opened; but as to the fact itself I believe there is not a dissenting voice. Nor is this new. same want was felt as far back as 1877, and the very same divergencies of opinion then existed as to the methods to be applied. Hon, gentlemen opposite professed to supply a remedy by means of a policy of restriction; we advocated a policy of expansion. They believed that the National Policy would not only build up the power of production, but create an equal power of consumptionthat not only would we produce more liberally, but that the National Policy would give a greater market for everything we produced. That this was a delusion cannot any longer be denied. The problem then, as to-day, was not only to increase the powers of production, but to get a market for whatever we could produce. Is it possible to find a remedy within the policy now in force? Hon. gentlemen opposite say it is. They have been profuse and lavish in their encomiums of the National Policy, yet they support a Government which is pledged to go to Washington next October in order to find a market for our natural pro-This is a strange inconsistency, but a greater inconsistency is that, although the Government are pledged to go to Washington to find a market for our natural products, yet hon. gentlemen opposite have heaped up mountains of statistics to show that reciprocity in natural products would be destructive to our best interests. This is so far as natural products are concerned; but we put the question: Can we under our present fiscal system find a market for our manufactured products? An attempt, indeed, has been made to solve the problem in some manner. An attempt has been made to solve it by equalizing production and consumption, -not, however, by increasing production or by increasing consumption, but by reducing production to the level of local demands. This has been the policy resorted to by the very industries the National Policy was intended to foster and develop: millions of dollars had been taken away from the capital of the country and invested in mills--cotton mills and woollen mills for instance. Thousands of men were withdrawn from their usual occupations and brought to these mills to spin and to weave; but the day soon came when it was found that if these mills were worked to their full capacity, they would weave and spin in a year more than could be consumed by our small population in the same time. Then we know what took place. The masters combined and agreed to control production; they agreed to close up some of the mills and to work others at half time; and they forced men to be idle, one week or two in the month, and one month or two in the year. These periods of enforced idleness sometimes amounted to three or four months in the year. Now, I hold in my hand a circular which was issued last year by one of the knitting manufacturers of shirts and drawers, and after speaking of the hard times in which the industry was then labouring this is what he proposed:

"If under such circumstances we should continue to run our mills to their full espacity, the result would probably be such an over-production of goods as would affect the market for the next two years, not only destroying all chances of profit, but probably bringing disaster in its train.

"I submit, therefore, whether it would not be wise for the mills to at once stop all machinery except such as is in use on bona fide orders, that is orders that pay a fair profit.

"I have already stopped one-third of my machinery and given imperative instructions to stop the balance as fast as orders are exhausted.

"If all the mills will co-operate in this conservative policy, keeping the supply of goods fully within the limits of demand, I have no hesitation in predicting, not only an avoidance of disaster for the future, but a fair prospect of remuneration instead of loss."

Sir, you propose legislation to prevent combines. Remove the causes and you remove the combines. Increase the markets and the mills will be working at their full capacity, but as long as the manufacturers have to operate in a restricted market it is impossible that the mills should be working all the If all the mills in cottons and woollens were to work to their full capacity for one year, and if at the end of the year all the goods remaining unsold in the warehouses were to be piled up in a public square, the sight would be appalling, but it would be a fitting monument of the folly of those who once believed in a restrictive market. Those who believe in a false system of protection, when any industry is injured, say that the only remedy they have is to apply a little more restriction, which is just like the system followed by the old practitioners: If a patient was ill, they bled him, and if that was not enough they took more blood from him, and if he was not well then again more blood, and finally the ailment was cured, for the patient was killed. In this case, however, there is a slight difference, for the principle, advantageous as it may be to the capitalist, while it is ruinous to the workingman, cannot be enforced all around. The farmers cannot combine, but they are the victims of combines—combines in woollens, combines in cottons, combines in salt, and in almost everything they buy. What is the remedy for this? The remedy is expansion of the market; and what we propose on this side of the House is that, as our population cannot consume everything it produces, it should find a market elsewhere, and if possible should find it in the great nation of 65,000,000 to the south of us. Hon. gentlemen opposite profess not to believe in unrestricted reciprocity with our neighbours to the South, but there was a time when they believed in reciprocity, at all events in natural products. Time and again we have proposed to send commissioners to Washington to endeavour to obtain that limited reciprocity, but every time we were met by a stern refusal. 1884 my hon, friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), taking advantage—not taking advantage, but looking to the fact that the fishery clauses of the treaty of 1871 were about to terminate, urged upon the Government the necessity of sending commissioners to Washington to negotiate a new treaty. This is what he moved:

"In view of the notice of the termination of the fisheries articles of the Treaty of Washington, given by the United States to the British Government, and the consequent expiration, on the 1st July, 1885, of the reciprocal privileges and exemptions of that treaty, this House is of opinion that steps should be taken at an early day by the Government of Canada with the object of bringing about proportions for a part treaty, providing for the citizens. of Canada and the United States the reciprocal privileges of fishing and freedom from duties now enjoyed, together with additional reciprocal freedom in the trade relations of the two countries."

This motion was met by Sir John Macdonald, who was then Prime Minister, in these words. He said it was of no use to go to Washington, that the people there would not agree to any unrestricted reciprocity. He thus continued:

"That feeling, I believe, still exists, and unless the United States will come at some time or other to a conclusion that they would be willing to enter upon a reciproclusion that they would be willing to enter upon a reciprocity treaty, not only for our natural productions, but for our manufactures as well as our natural products, we will never have a treaty. I am quite satisfied the United States will not agree, the country will not agree, the voice of the country will be against a repetition of the Treaty of 1854. Then, Sir, the only question is this: Can we have a treaty on a larger basis? If there is no indication that the United States people, that their representatives, their Congress, will accept the recommendation of the president and appoint a commission, or go into the question and see whether there cannot be an arrangement, and if we know and the hon, gentleman admits—and it is evident he is correct—that by no possibility will there be a Bill to allow reciprocity in these articles, what indication, what sign is there that there would be any use in our going again, for the fifth or sixth or tenth time, on our knees to Washington, and asking them again, for Heaven's sake, to enter into a treaty with us?"

This was the key-note of the language which has been held ever since. Hon gentlemen opposite, whenever we have asked them to go and negotiate even a treaty in regard to natural products alone, have told us invariably that it was against the dignity of Canada to propose anything of that kind; but all of a sudden, last winter, we heard that the Canadian Government had, not at the eleventh hour nor the twelfth hour, but at the fourteenth hour, determined to send commissioners to Washington to endeavour to negotiate such a treaty. What? Those proud men, who never would lower their dignity by endeavouring to negotiate a treaty, those who never would consent to enter into any negotiations with the Yankees, to send commissioners to Washington to negotiate with them! was, but those hon, gentlemen told the people of Canada that this negotiation had not originated with them, but that the Government at Washington had come down on their knees to them, and asked them to send commissioners. I say here that in making this statement to the people of Canada they went to the people with falsehood and deceit in their mouth. We know now that the facts are the very reverse. We know that it was not the American Government who invited them, but that it was themselves who acted in this matter. A stranger who came into this House would think this was a matter of very little moment, whether the invitation came from Canada or from Washington; but, small as the question may appear to be, I charge upon them that they did not dare to state the fact, and that they went to the country with falsehood and deceit in their mouth. And why? Because up to that moment they had refused to do what the circumstances then forced them to do. Up to that moment they had instructed their party that it was against the dignity of Canada to send commissioners to Washington; and now if they had avowed that they had taken the steps which they were pressed to take during many years, they would have stood in antagonism to their own record, in contradiction with their own notions of national dignity; they would have stood before the people of Canada selfconfessing that for many years they had neglected a duty which it was their business to perform. But, Sir, even though we had the assurance of hon. gentlemen that it was the Government at Washington who had first sought reciprocity from them—an assurance the accuracy of which some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House had dared to doubt-after the letter of Mr. Blaine to Congressman Baker, it was impossible not to come to the conclusion that these hon. gentlemen had not told the whole truth to the Canadian people. When my hon, friend beside me (Sir Richard Cartwright) took occasion to recall to the hon, gentlemen that they had lacked in frankness toward the people of Canada, he was met on the other side of the House with the usual answer—disloyalty. Of course only a disloyal man like my hon. friend could doubt the word of a Canadian Minister; but it was natural to him, disloyal as he is, to take in preference the words of an American Minister. Now, to show to the House that I am doing no injustice to the hon, gentlemen on that side, let me quote from the language made use of on that occasion by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance:

"I think my hon. friend from South Oxford will allow me to tell him that it would be well for him to trust the Canadian people a little more, and even to trust the Cana-dian Ministers when they make grave statements on their responsibility as Ministers of the Crown."

They had made a grave statement on their responsibility as Ministers of the Crown. What was it? We find it in the report of Council adopted on the 12th of December last:

jesty's Minister his great desire to conclude a reciprocity treaty, they desire to take the opportunity afforded by these intimations from Mr. Blaine of suggesting the expediency of taking early steps to adjust the various matters that have arisen and now exist, affecting the relations of Canada with the United States."

This was the key note of the language held by hon. gentlemen all through the elections. Now, what are the facts? Let me quote from the official cor-respondence laid on the Table of the House a few days ago. I will quote the language of Mr. Blaine in April last, in a letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote:

"In view of the fact that you had come to the State Department with the proposals, and that the subject was then for the first time mentioned between us, and in view of the further fact that I agreed to a private conference as explained in my Minute, I confess that it was a surprise to me when several weeks later during the Canadian canvass, Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper both stated before public assemblages that an informal discussion of a reciprocity treaty would take place at Washington after the 4th March, by the initiation of the Secretary of State."

Mr. Blaine here directly denies the statement of this Minute of Council adopted by the Canadian Privy Council. But I may be told that after all this is only the statement of one man against the statement of another man; it is only the statement of the American Minister against the statement of the Canadian Government. Sir, we can view this question in the light of the testimony of no less a man than Sir Charles Tupper. Sir Charles Tupper, as we know, had an interview with Mr. Blaine, and he thought it good policy to advert to this fact; in a letter which he wrote to Sir John A. Macdonald, relating the interview which he had with Mr. Blaine, occurs this very significant passage:

"I told Mr. Blaine that I wished, in the outset, to recognize the accuracy of the statement contained in his letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote, which I had seen, in reference to the initiation of negotiations regarding reciprocal trade arrangements between the two countries." Here we see Sir Charles Tupper forced to admit to Mr. Blaine that the language which he, Sir Charles Tupper, and the Canadian Ministers had used to the people of Canada during the elections, was untrue. Sir, we see here to what depth of baseness our opponents will go whenever they want to find a cry with which to go to the country. Not satisfied with the unfair advantages which the Gerrymander Act gave them, not satisfied with the unfair advantages of the Franchise Act, not satisfied with the advantages which they have enjoyed from the appointment of partisan returning officers, they have stooped to the low level of misrepresenting the American Secretary of State, and when they were taken to task by the American Secretary of State, like Ancient Pistol, they had to eat the leek, but nauseous as was the operation the leek had served the desired purpose of doing duty in the elections. Now we are told that the Government, at the fourteenth hour, have decided to send commissioners to Washington. What are the circumstances which have at last induced the Government to reverse their policy and to do that which they have refused to do during so many years? Sir, the reason is not far to seek; it is now a matter of history. It was the policy of our sister colony of Newfoundland, which, not so fasti-"The Committee of the Privy Council having learned that the Honourable the Secretary of State for the United States had expressed to Her Majesty's Ministers at Washington his readiness to negotiate for a reciprocity premier of Newfoundland, and Mr. Bond, a memtion of the mackerel fisheries, and for the fisheries on inland waters, and had subsequently stated to Her Ma-Mr. Laurier.

to Sir Julian Pauncefote, the English ambassador at Washington, who then introduced Mr. Bond to Mr. Blaine; and inside of eight days a treaty of reciprocity was negotiated between Mr. Bond and Mr. Blaine, whereby Newfoundland secured the admission of her fish free of duty into the United States, and gave in return to the United States free bait on the coast of Newfoundland. During all that time our Government were standing, or rather sleeping, on their dignity. Sir Julian Pauncefote, however, thought that it was time to arouse them from their dignified slumber and to tell them what was going on; then they became very lively. action took the form of a protest. Protests by telegrams and protests by letters, urging Sir Charles Tupper to prevent the Colonial Secretary from allowing that treaty to go into force. not now discuss the question of the policy of this Government, whether it was fair or not, toward the sister colony of Newfoundland, in preventing her from managing her own affairs according to her own views-I leave that for another occasion; but I am now discussing the point in so far only as it relates to the previous policy of the Government, who at last were forced, by the action of Newfoundland, to take steps to prevent them from gaining an advantage which we could not have ourselves without negotiating a treaty. They remonstrated at the Colonial Office. But the Colonial Secretary of State told them the only thing they could do was to follow the example of the people of Newfoundlandand negotiate a treaty for themselves, or to become a party to the negotiations then going on; and that is the way in which our Government have been brought to this position, that on the 12th of October next they are going to send commissioners to Washington to negotiate a treaty. Now, what is the basis upon which they will negotiate that treaty? Sir, I venture to say, after the long debate that we have had, that they do not know yet upon what basis they will negotiate. There are not two men on that side of the They are all House who can agree upon a basis. opposed to complete reciprocity; on this they agree; on everything else they disagree. Some are opposed to reciprocity in coal. For instance, my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will never agree to reciprocity in coal. He told his electors, and he told the country generally, that he had taken Sir John A. Macdonald in hand, and had forced him to abandon his reciprocity notions concerning coal. The hon, member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives) will not have reciprocity in natural Yes, I beg his pardon, he will agree to products. reciprocity in some products. And what are they? Horses, lambs, hay, barley and eggs.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Also potatoes from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. LAURIER. That was an afterthought, because the articles I mentioned are those he first included. If the hon, gentleman spoke for his party, they want reciprocity in those articles which we always sell to the Americans, but which the Americans do not sell us; they expect that the Americans will agree to give us their mar-kets for our horses, lambs, hay, barley and eggs, and even potatoes from Prince Edward Island, and at the same time, that we will keep our market If that is the reciprocity, let them call it by some other name, and I advise the Government to stay here. hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has given them the basis on which they should negotiate, and that basis is unrestricted reciprocity in natural products and in manufactured products as well. But hon, gentlemen opposite would not agree to that. They have voted down my hon. friend's resolution; and I may ask them now, for what purpose are you going to Washington? Mr. Blaine has told Congressman Baker in this letter, that it was of no use, that no reciprocity would be adopted except upon a basis of unrestricted terms. Still, if the commissioners to Washington secure the settlement of the Behring Sea difficulty and of the Atlantic fisheries question they will have the hearty support of this side of the House. But this will not settle nor even advance the great problem of finding a market for our productions, and this is the question to be settled. I affirm again on the part of the Liberal party that the true policy to be followed on this question is unrestricted recipro-This brings us face to face with our policy. I know very well that this policy from its sweeping character will be likely to excite alarm among the timid and timorous; but I never heard it seriously questioned that unrestricted reciprocity would not favour Canada at large. The only ob-The only objection I have heard against unrestricted reciprocity is perhaps it would injure some special classes of manufactures. If unrestricted reciprocity were to injure manufacturers and were to benefit everybody else and every other interest, what would you do? Would you abandon it? I do not hesitate to say that I would still be in favour of unrestricted reciprocity. If it is proved that unrestricted reciprocity, although it might injure the manufacturer, would at the same time favour the farmer, the lumberman, the miner, the fisherman, and the whole body of consumers, would any man stand up in this House and say it would not be sound policy to have unrestricted reciprocity? But I go further than I have no hesitation in saying, though my testimony is not worth much in such a matter, that unrestricted reciprocity would favour the manufacturers as well as every other class of the Canadian people. What is the reason? Because unrestricted reciprocity would give to the manufacturers markets, consumers. And what is it the manufacturers want in this country? Why, it is the very thing I have named—markets, consumers. But at the same time I admit that unrestricted reciprocity would create competitors to our manufacturers; this is the very thing to which our manufacturers object. They will not have It is said that competition is the competition. life of trade. So it is. But there is nothing at the same time which the trader dreads so much as competition, because with competition the trader must limit his profits and extend his operations to secure the same results at the end of the year, and thus trade is enlarged and the community is benefited; while without competition the trader will not extend his operations, but will extert the largest possible profits from his consumers in his limited market. If unrestricted reciprocity would bring competition, I admit, and I have no hesitation in doing so, that to some extent it would disturb some existing interests. closed against all their goods. If that is the From this fact alone I can well understand the idea entertained by hon. gentlemen opposite of hostility this policy has excited in some quarters.

But this is the history of all reforms; the history of all reforms has been a struggle to free the community from the incubus of some existing interests, and the history of all reforms has been that those who were interested always combined in order to make the people believe that they were to suffer and not those who were making the objection. Let me call back to your mind, Sir, a well-known instance. When Paul was in the city of Ephesus preaching against the superstition of his day, struggling against the absurdity, against the folly, against the wickedness of worshipping idols made by the hands of man, all the manufacturers of idols saw at once that if the doctrines of Paul were to prevail, if the people were to be set free from those superstitions, their They assembled in the Red trade was gone. Parlour of that day, and the leader of the crowd opened the conference with these very suggestive words: "Sir, ye know by this craft we have our wealth." And the object of the policy adopted was to try to convince the people that their interests, not the interests of the manufacturers, but the interests of the people at large, were endangered, and they appealed at once to the passions and prejudices of the people. They sallied forth, saying: 'Great is Diana of the Ephesians." And now in our own country, in our own day, while the Liberal party, like Paul, are struggling against the superstitions prevailing in this age, against the folly, against the absurdity and the wickedness of restricting trade, all those who profit by these superstitions, the Government who therein find the source of their power, the monopolists who therein find the source of their wealth, assemble in the Red Parlour, and there, as in the days of Paul, the policy adopted is to prevent the people being imbued by those doctrines preached by the Liberal Like the men of Ephesus, they appeal to the prejudices and passions of the people. The cr they raise is not "Great is Diana of the Ephesians, but "Great is the loyalty of the Canadians." motion which you, Mr. Speaker, have in your hands, is the last appeal made to the passions and the prejudices of the people. What does it assert? I will not quote its rather verbose language, but in its last sentence there is an appeal to the fact that unrestricted reciprocity might discriminate against England, and there is a further appeal against assimilation of tariffs with the Americans. This is what the resolution means when the hon: gentleman uses these words:

"That this House, while approving of the special efforts made by the Government to increase Canadian trade with the far East, with the West Indies, with Great Britain and the United States, desires to express its confidence that any negotiations for the extension of commercial relations with the United States will be so conducted that their result will be consistent with that proper control of our own tariff and revenues which every self-respecting people must maintain and with a continuance of these people must maintain, and with a continuance of those profitable business and political relations with the mother country which are earnestly desired by all intelligent and loyal Canadians."

This is an appeal to the passions of the people. This is an appeal to the loyalty of the people. claim that we on this side of the House are just as loyal as are hon. gentlemen on the other side of House, but we object to men trying to make loyalty the cloak for their selfish policy. What is the ergument which we hear in reference to this appeal Mr. LAUBIER.

grant to another nation trade facilities which are cenied to the mother land. This is the burden of the objection which is generally made on that score. Let us see what is in it. In the first place, I assert that this policy is not conceived in hostility to England. This policy is conceived in the light of what we believe to be for the best interests of Canada. I state again, and I have admitted without hesitation, that this policy might disturb some existing Canadian interests. But I do not admit that English interests are to be more favoured than Canadian interests. It may be our duty when we have this policy enacted, as it is our duty now, to raise our revenue out of duties on British goods as well as the goods of other nations. I put the case in this way. I assume that this policy would realize what we expect from it. I say that I assume it, but I should not say so, because I believe it rather than assume it. ever, I assume it just for the sake of argument. assume, for the sake of argument with hon. gentlemen opposite, that unrestricted reciprocity would do what we expect from it: That it would foster agriculture, develop trade, stimulate industries, build up cities and settle our North-West. Sir, if unrestricted reciprocity were to produce all these results, what, I ask, would be the attitude of England towards us? If we could show to England that unrestricted reciprocity would open for us an area of wealth and prosperity, would England dare to bring down her arm upon us in order to kill that possible prosperity? There was a time when England would have come down with a strong hand upon any such arrangement; that was the time when the notion was prevalent in England that colonies existed simply for the benefit of the parent state; that was the time when colonies were not allowed any trade except what was graciously conceded by the parent state; that was the time when, if the trade of the parent state came in collision with the trade of the colony, the trade of the colony must give way, But, Sir, that selfish policy pursued for generations by the parent state towards her American colonies, cost to England, during the last century, the loss of her American For years and years—no, at all times colonies. the American colonies had been prohibited from exporting sugar, cotton, furs, to any country but to a country acknowledging the British flag. At all times, the colonies had been prohibited from exporting manufactured goods, such as wool, to any country, not even from colony to colony. At all times they had been prohibited from erecting iron furnaces; and all these prohibitions were made to benefit the trade of England. They benefited indeed the trade of England, but they alienated the heart of the American colonists, and when a struggle arose, British domination had to reel back before the universal discontent created by this selfishness. Now, Sir, even in the days of that conflict, there were men in England with hearts broad enough, and minds broad enough, to protest against that selfish policy. Charles James Fox in those very days declared in England, that the only manner in which the parent state could keep distant colonies was to allow them absolute freedom in matters respecting their own Government. In our own day, and in this country, that doctrine was applied to its fullest extent. Canada has the honour of having reagainst discrimination against England? It is volutionized the doctrines which formerly bound tated that it would be unmanly and ungenerous to colonies to the parent state. We have been granted freedom of Government in this country, and we have been allowed to settle our own interests in the light of our best judgment. And now, Sir, I ask, and this is a question which I want to have answered by hon. gentlemen opposite: Is there any restriction in this right that has been granted to us? To what length is the right to extend? Would it extend even to the point where Canadian interests would come in conflict with British interests, and even invade British interests? Sir, I say that the only limit to Canada's right is Canada's interests. far as goes Canada's interest, so far goes Canada's right; and the doctrine which I assert now has been asserted by all colonial governments, except the Government in front of us. This doctrine has been granted by the Imperial Government, not once, or not twice, but it is now the settled common law The concession was not made of the colonies. spontaneously, but it was wrung from the mother land by the very force of circumstances and events. Since Canada has been granted freedom of Government the fact always apparent became manifest, that the colonies and the parent state had conflicting interests and that these conflicting interests could Why, Sir, in not be controlled by the same tariff. 1843, two years after we had been conceded responsible government, England which at that time had the corn laws, made an exception in favour of colonial cereals. Colonial cereals were admitted at a nominal duty, while foreign cereals were subjected to the heavy duties of the corn laws. But three years afterwards, in 1846, freedom of trade was adopted in England. The colonies protested; the privilege in which the colonies had rejoiced for three years disappeared, and complaints were loud and hot, but the parent state did not listen to those complaints. Nay more, not only would not England consent to listen to the complaints of the colonies, but England went to the extent of attemptingnot by force, of course, but by every constitutional means in her power—to force the colonies into adopting free trade. The British Government went so far as to instruct colonial governors to refuse assent to any laws passed by colonial legislatures which might be in conflict with the system of trade adopted by England, Well, Mr. Speaker, I need not tell you that this policy of England was bitterly resented by the colonies. No colony in British North America would adopt the system of freedom of trade which had been adopted by the mother land, and among others the colony of New Brunswick protested very vehemently. I will quote to the House a very suggestive despatch which was sent by the Colonial Secretary of State, Sir George Grey, in 1850; to Sir Edmund Head, at that time Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick. despatch proceeds to say:

"It is with much regret that I have learnt from your despatch, No. 59, of the 7th ultimo, that dissatisfaction has been occasioned among the inhabitants of New Brunswick by the instructions given you to withhold your assent from any Acts which may be passed by the Provincial Legislature in contravention of that system of commercial policy which the Imperial Parliament and Her Majesty's Government have judged it advisable to adopt, with a view to the interests of the Empire at large."

Now, Sir, I ask the good men and true who are ever so prone to put forward their loyalty: Are they ready here to give assent to this doctrine, that freedom of trade was established in England not only for the good of England but for the good of the Empire at large? Not one of them, Sir, would admit that doctrine. This despatch goes on to say:

"II. While it is the desire of Her Majesty's Government to advise the Crown to use its authority in such a manner as to interfere as little as possible with the management of their own affairs, by the Legislatures of the several colonies there are certain subjects on which measures cannot be adopted by an individual colony, without affecting the interests of others, and perhaps of the whole Empire."

Now, Sir, I ask again: Has it been the concern of the Conservative party, who pretend to be loyal, when adopting their policy, to look to the interests of the Empire at large? Has it not been to look to the interests of Canada, as they conceive the interests of Canada to be? Has not their policy always been Canada for the Canadianc, and not Canada for the whole Empire? And so, the whole doctrine as applied in practice by the Conservative party, is in direct antagonism to the policy of the British Colonial Secretary of State. The despatch continues to say further:

"III. Measures for the regulation of trade are of this description, and from the very foundation of our colonial Empire, the Imperial Parliament and Government have always claimed and exercised the right of deciding on the commercial policy which should be adopted by al! British colonies."

Sir, is there a man in the ranks of these loyal men and true who would to-day agree that the policy of Canada should be decided by the British Parliament? Not only was the doctrine set down by the Colonial Secretary of State, Sir George Grey, not adopted, but so far back as thirty years ago the Canadian Legislature protested that they and they alone were the best judges of what were the interests of the Canadian people. Nay, the day came when in 1879 the Conservative party which had just gained the elections adopted a policy in direct antagonism to the policy of free trade; they adopted policy of high protection. I remember very well, Sir, that upon that occasion they cheered as lustily as they cheered some few days ago, but I remember also that they did not sing "God save the Queen," over it. They did not sing "God save the Queen," for very good reasons—because the objection had been taken then that their policy, which was calculated to injure British trade, might endanger British connection, and the answer was. Then so much the worse for British connection. The answer then given by their press, solidly maintained by every one of them, was that if protection was for the best interests of Canada, then protection was to be had, even if protection was to destroy British connection. Sir, for this language, which if it had been used by us, would have brought upon our heads storms of denunciation and abuse, we never upbraided the party of hon, gentlemen opposite. If they believed that protection was for the best interests of Canada, it was not only their right but their duty to act in the line of their belief. But I protest against the shouts of disloyalty being raised against us, because the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite having been tested and found wanting, we propose a policy which we know to be no more inimical to our connection with Great Britain than the policy which they adopted fifteen years ago. Sir, there is more. The British Government, finding that they could not make Canada or their other colo-

in the interests of the British people, leaving the colonies to judge for themselves what they would do. Some few weeks ago my hon, friend from Stanstead (Mr. Rider) put a question to the Government—whether or not there was a treaty of commerce between France and England? The Government have not yet been able to give an answer, though it is quite easy to give one. The Coblen Treaty was negotiated in 1860; and I am bound to say that the class of English goods which were admitted into France at a special rate of duty under that treaty were not those in which Canada could have competed with England, with one single exception, ships. British ships were admitted into France under the Coblen Treaty at the rate of 25 francs a ton, while the general tariff of France at that time, if I am rightly informed, was 50 francs That treaty was negotiated in the interests of British ships, and without regard to Canadian ships, though Canada could have competed with Great Britain in that article, because Canada was at that time a ship-building country. But that treaty has come to an end, and there is now no special commercial treaty with France. But there is a convention to-day between France and England, signed in February, 1882, whereby English goods are admitted into France on terms reserved to the most favoured nation. Now, my hon. friend What is the from Stanstead asked this question: difference of duty on fresh butter, salt butter, cheese, salt meat and lard, as between the Canadian product and the English product when admitted in France? The answer is this: Under this convention, which is to last until February, 1892, when it will have been ten years in operation, fresh butter coming from Canada is subjected to the general tariff of France, which is 13 francs per 100 kilos, whereas English butter is admitted free; that is to say, there is a discrimination against the Canadian article in favour of the British of 13 francs per 100 kilos. On salt butter the general tariff of France which is applied to Canada, is 15 francs per 100 kilos, and the tariff upon English salt butter 2 francs, a difference of 13 francs per 100 kilos. On soft cheese the general tariff is 6 francs and the special tariff 3 francs. On hard cheese the general tariff is 8 francs and the special tariff 4 francs. salt meats the general tariff is 8.50 francs and the special tariff 4.50 francs. Lard is free. So that, Mr. Speaker, the English Government have negotiated that treaty without looking to the interests of Canada, but looking simply to the interests of the English people. But, Sir, there is more. England has negotiated treaties with Germany which directly affect Canada; and if the hon. Minister of Customs were here, I should have his testimony that in the treaties negotiated in 1862 and 1865, if I remember rightly, between England and Germany, German goods imported into Canada carnot be charged a higher rate of duty than British goods; and in the face of that treaty the hon. Minister of Customs is not at liberty to so appraise German goods coming from Germany to the full cost of transit between Hamburg or Bremen to Canadian ports, but simply as if they were shipped from Liverpool or any English ports. Therefore, England has negotiated treaties in a manner directly contrary to the interests of Canada. But there is more. In 1870 the late Prime Minister, Sir John Macdonald, tested the American pulse in also mentioned in this motion of the hon. member Mr. LAURIER.

order to ascertain whether or not he could obtain a treaty extending not only to natural products, but even to manufactured goods. Sir John Macdonald was charged with that in the House in 1870 by Mr. Huntington, and he did not deny it. Moreover, we would have the proof of it in the blue-books, if they could be had; and we have the The Times, the great proof in the English press. organ of public opinion in England, which had been kept au courant with what was going on, used this very suggestive language in reference to that matter:

"It is at this very moment a matter of discussion in Canada, whether a treaty of reciprocity should not be concluded with the United States; and the result of the deliberations may very possibly be an admission of the manufactures of New England into the Dominion under lighter duties than the manufactures of Great Britain. If the Canadian Ministry come to the conclusion that such an arrangement is for the benefit of that country, will the Colonial Office advise the Crown to disallow the negotiations? Assuredly not."

This is the sentiment of public opinion in England; and I say it is the merest flunkeyism on the part of any one in this country to try to be more English than the English. It is the merest flunkeyism to prevent us from doing what the English people are prepared to concede to us; and if there is any man in this Parliament to-day, forgetting that he is a Canadian, wants to do what men would not do in England, all I have to say is that his place is not in the Canadian Parliament, but he should go to the other side of the water and try to find a seat in the British Parliament. But, Sir, there is still more than that. There is the very recent action of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, who last year, with the view of promoting trade with the West Indies, induced the Government of which he is a member to pass the following Order in Council for the establishment of better trade relations between certain colonies in the West Indies, not only British but foreign, and Canada; and this is what was proposed on the part of Canada:

"A reduction in Canadian duties on raw sugar imported from the Spanish Antilles into Canada for refining pur-poses, such reduction, however, not exceeding the maxi-mum of 30 per cent. of the present duties."

This was the offer made by my hon friend the Minister of Finance to the West Indies. Now, what was he to get in exchange for this?

"In return for this the Spanish Government to admit at equivalently reduced duties into their islands, grain, flour, fish, coal, lumber of all kinds, vegetables including potatoes, and such manufactured goods as may be agreed

Sir, is it to be conceived—can it be possible—that these loyal men and true were ready to ask the Spanish Government to discriminate against Great Britain in favour of Canada? It is an act of disloyalty when we, in order to obtain the American market, are prepared, as we are, to discriminate to some extent against England. This is an act of disloyalty; but these gentlemen, saturated as they are with loyalty, can try and induce the Spanish Government to admit Canadian manufactured products at a special rate to the exclusion of British products of the same kind. That is what they call loyalty. Sir, loyalty is but a sham in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite. They would be loyal just so far as it suited them, just so far as their loyalty would keep them in office, but if ousted from office they would resort to their old attitude of 1849. There is another pet objection, which is for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins). It is said—and it is a pet objection—that unrestricted reciprocity is not to be thought of because that would involve the assimilation of the Canadian and American tariffs. This I deny. Unrestricted reciprocity can be had with or without assimilation of tariffs, but I will go further, I will assume that unrestricted reciprocity cannot be had except by assimilating the two tariffs. Is there anything in that to break the heart of a good solid Conservative who has voted every item of the Canadian tariff and cheered over it? Is there anything in that to break the heart of the Finance Minister who has brought our tariff to the height it has now reached? Is the distance which separates the tariff of my hon, friend from the tariff of the Americans so great that it is beyond the capacity of his legs? If my hon, friend believes he cannot cover the distance, I tell him he does not do himself justice. Judging of the nimbleness of his limbs by some of his former acrobatic feats, I can tell him that he can turn still another somersault and sing "God save the Queen" over it. But my hon, friend points to his heart, and says he wishes to keep control of the Canadian tariff in the Canadian Parliament.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. And I hear, "hear, hear" from some gentleman on the other side. What use, I ask, has the Canadian Parliament made of its control of our tariff under the guidance of a Conservative Government, if not to copy, servilely to copy, the American tariff? There is a magic in words. We all know that the very term "assimilation of tariffs" sends hon, gentlemen opposite into a frenzy whenever it is pronounced. I tell them, and I challenge contradiction, that their policy for the last fifteen years has been to assimilate the Canadian to the American tariff. That has been done under another name, but not the less has it been done. Hon, gentlemen opposite remind me of Monsieur Jourdain in Molière's comedy, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme. M. Jourdain, the hero, is a merchant who has made money but whose early education had been somewhat neglected. At the age of forty and over, he sends for a professor of philosophy in order to be instructed. professor finds that the philosophy of his pupil is not of a very high order, though perhaps practical. Our hero wishes the professor to aid him in inditing an amorous epistle. "Very well," says the professor, "shall it be in verse." "No," said the other. "Then it will be in prose." "No," again said our hero. "Well," said the professor, "it must be either in prose or in verse because everything that is said "What, or written is either in prose or verse." "What," said M. Jourdain, "do you mean to tell me that whenever I have said to my handmaid. Nicole. bring me my slippers, and give me my night-cap, this is prose." "Yes," said the professor. "Well, upon my word," said M. Jourdain. "I have been making prose for over forty years and never so much as suspected it. I am much obliged to you for the information." In like manner I want to inform hon, gentlemen opposite that for fifteen years they have been assimilating our tariff to the American tariff, and if they are not as grateful to me for giving them the information, as M. Jourdain was to his professor, it is because they are not so honest. In 1877 we had two courses open to us: one was to continue the revenue tariff we had What was that if not assimilating our tariff to the then, and the other was to copy the American tariff. If we had kept on as we began, with a revenue tariff, undoubtedly we would not have the large public works which we can boast of now; but we would be able to boast to-day of a purer name than we now enjoy. Undoubtedly our revenue would not have been so large, but corruption would not be as rampant as it has been proved to be. Undoubtedly we would not have so many millionaires, but we would have a more general and even distribution of wealth. But hon, gentlemen opposite, good, loyal men, were dazzled by the career of the United States. at that time there was a settled conviction that the natural market for Canada is the great republic to the south of us. What was it that prompted the Tories of 1849 to adopt the policy of annexation? It was not hostility to England. I will not do them the injury of ascribing such a sentiment to It was because they were convinced the American market could not be had otherwise. 1877 there was, as there has been at all times, and as there is to-day, the conviction in the minds of the people that the natural market for Canada was the American market. Then, what was the policy adopted? It was reciprocity of trade or reciprocity of tariffs. Sir, these were by-words in those days. Reciprocity of trade, with whom? With England? No; reciprocity of trade with the United States. Reciprocity of tariff, with whom? With England? No; reciprocity of tariff with the United States. In the name of common sense, I ask, what was that, if not assimilation of our tariffs with that of the Americans? The motto which was displayed on every public occasion at that time was: "Reciprocity of tariff or reciprocity of trade:" and the language used was this: We are ready and willing to trade with the Americans. If they will lower their barrier, we will lower ours. If they will not, we will build up a barrier as high as theirs. What was that, Sir, if not assimilating our tariff to the American tariff? I remember the catch phrase in vogue at that time among hon, gentlemen opposite. They did not want a single-handled-jug policy, they wanted two handles: the Americans had one handle of the jug, and they wanted to hold the other. What was that, again, if not assimilating the American tariff to ours? But for fear it might be supposed by the younger men of this generation that I am not representing things as they are, let me quote the speech of Sir John Macdonald, which was the gospel of that day, delivered at Compton on the 7th of July, 1877:

"Although Messrs. Alexander Mackenzie, George Brown and others of that free trade stripe tell us, 'Do not irritate the United States; do not annoy them; by-and-bye they will come to their senses and let us go into their markets.' The people of the United States know better. They say: 'Why should we open our markets to you? You have already opened yours to us.' The way to meet them is to say: 'What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gainder.' (Cheers and laughter.) The only way is to tell them: 'If you can stand it, we can; if you keep us out of your markets, we can keep you out of ours.' (Cheers.) Until we have the pluck and manliness to adopt that policy; until we give up that cringing attitude (for which I am afraid I am somewhat blameable, because I was in power when the reciprocity treaty ended, and I am afraid I went too far to have it renewed) the present state of affairs will continue. Long, long ago, I gave up that attitude, and I said: To get reciprocity, we must give them a touch of equality; we must give them a touch of equality; we must give them a taste of what we get ourselves."

"I believe they were quite willing to return to the old reciprocity treaty of 1854, but no, the farmers on the whole line, from Maine to Wisconsin, rose in their might and told the Congress of the United States, that it was as much as their positions were worth to renew that treaty, and we were told that no matter what the desire of the American Government might be, the farmers of the whole porthern belt, from east to west, had resolved the American Government might be, the farmers of the whole northern belt, from east to west, had resolved there should be no renewal of the reciprocity treaty. I gave it up from that moment. Why, there are 40,000,000 of people. If these 40,000,000 are afraid of the competition that our 4,000,000 in Canada would produce in their markets, what should we say? If our products can affect the markets of 40,000,000, how much more will the products of 40,000,000 affect ours? It is not a matter of doubt, but of certainty—we are to have this country developed, if we are going to make this great country what the United States can make theirs, we must take a leaf from their book. (Cheers.) I told them in the House and I tell you now, it cannot be called a retaliatory or vindictive policy now, it cannot be called a retaliatory or vindictive policy to adopt their tariff. It is said the truest and most sincere flattery you can bestow on a man is to imitate what he does. We will say to the United States: 'We were free traders; we took our cue from the mother country. We did not recognize the difference between the circumstanges of an old country and a page on like ours but we see ces of an old country and a new one like ours, but we see you are wiser than we were. We will pay you the compliment of saying we were wrong and you were right, and we will do to you as you do to us."

I ask again what, in the name of common sense, was that if not assimilating our tariff to the American tariff; and to do the hon. gentlemen opposite the full justice to which they are entitled, I must say that they were as good as their word. They won the election on this policy of the assimilation of our tariff to the American tariff. The average of the American tariff at that time being 40 per cent., they raised our tariff to an average of 35 per cent.—not a bad commencement and from year to year since that day the Finance Minister has been adding bar after bar to the barrier which we have raised against the United States in order to make our tariff as close as possible to the American model which has been chosen by hon. gentlemen opposite. And now these gentlemen who have adopted this policy in the past pretend to be shocked because unrestricted reciprocity, they say, would involve an assimilation of tariffs between the two countries. There is one thing which would be most objectionable. I do not wish to give the control of our trade policy to the Americans. I am in favour of unrestricted reciprocity as much as anyone, but if unrestricted reciprocity is only to be had at the cost of anything derogatory to the honour of Canada, I am against it. But what difference would it be whether the Canadian Parliament raised the tariff to the height of the American tariff from the position in which we find ourselves to-day? It is almost done already, and, if this would involve an assimilation of tariffs, the Parliament of Canada would not have a very hard work before it, and, judging from the experience of the past, judging from the last stroke of policy of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, by which, because the McKinley tariff reduced the duty on sugar, he has done the same, I do not think it would be hard for him to bring about an assimilation in tariffs. Let me say this definitely: There is no intention in the breast of any Canadian on this side of the House to surrender to the American Government one iota of our rights. the Americans will give us reciprocity on the lines which we advocate, that is, that each nation shall preserve its independence commercially as well as politically, I am in favour of it, but if unre-Mr. LAURIER.

gested by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), by a commission on which the Americans would be represented by thirteen and the Canadians by one, I am as much opposed to it as All I have to say to my hon, friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) on this subject is that, when the day comes, which is not far distant, when the Liberal party will send commissioners to Washington to negotiate a treaty, we cannot choose my hon, friend as one of the diplomats. I have every confidence in him as a business man, but as a diplomat, judging from the specimen of his diplomacy which he has given us here, I have no faith in him at all. We will send men who are prepared to stand by the rights of Canada, and not only do I not fear that the Americans would try to trample over us, but I believe they would meet us in a manly way as we are prepared to meet them. other objection is raised, which is the pet objection of the Minister of Finance, and that is the question of revenue. His heart is harrowed as to what would become of poor Canada under unrestricted reciprocity. If hon, gentlemen opposite are prepared to tell us that that is their only objection, that were that objection removed they would have no other one to raise, I would not hesitate to tell them where we would get our revenue. But they are inveterate sinners. If that difficulty is removed, they will fall back on another, and when the other is removed they will discover one They will not be convinced. for ever remain blind. What would we lose in the way of revenue? We would lose first of all the revenue we now get from our importations from the United States, which amount to a little over $7,000,000.

Mr. FOSTER. $8,100,000.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, say $8,000,000. we would remove from the shoulders of the people of this country $8,000,000 of taxation. Hon, gentlemen have taken some credit because they have recently removed as they say $3,500,000 of taxation. Let us say we will remove $8,000,000 from the shoulders of the people. Would it be a very extraordinary feat in finance to fill up the gap thus caused in the treasury? I do not pretend to be a financial man myself, but from plain common sense and judging from the experience we have had during this session, I ask if it is a very extraordinary and impossible feat to remove taxation with one hand and reimpose it with another hand? My hon, friend could remove three millions and a-half of taxation from sugar and impose them on whiskey and tobacco and beer. It seems to me I It seems to me I could do that myself. But my hon, friend will tell me that this is not all we would lose. He will tell me: You will buy more from the United States than you are now buying; you will buy from the United States goods which you are now buying from other nations which now pay duty and which would not pay duty under those circumstances. How much would that be? My hon. friend cannot tell, and I cannot tell. But the basis of unrestricted reciprocity is this—and if the basis is not true we are all wrong—that it would make Canada as prosperous as a people as the Americans are, and if it will have that effect—and I believe we are situated economically in the same position as the Americans are—then there would be no stricted reciprocity is to be determined, as sug- more difficulty in our levying our necessary revenue from Customs and Excise than there is for the American people to levy their revenue on Customs The difficulties would not be greater and Excise. and the same results would apply on one side of the line as now apply on the other side of the line. These objections will not stand when they are ventilated. The only objection, perhaps, which can be urged against us is one which I have heard sometimes from business men. We are told that unrestricted reciprocity would create a great disturbance of trade. Sir, if unrestricted reciprocity were to be adopted to-morrow, in twenty-four honrs, without further notice, I admit that it would create a great disturbance of trade; but we propose, when we negotiate such a treaty, to do it like sensible men, to give ample notice beforehand, to make a treaty that will come into operation at definite periods gradually, by a sliding scale, so as not unduly to affect existing interests, and under those circumstances we have no fear whatever of the result. Sir, some few days ago the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), whom I regret not to see in his seat, told us that this policy of unrestricted reciprocity was the only plank in our platform; he almost regretted this was the only plank in our platform, and he said to us: "If you fail in your endeavours, what will you do?" Sir, I do not believe we can fail, because justice and truth must prevail in the end, and this policy is founded on justice and truth, and we shall not But after all, supposing for an instant that the United States were not disposed to meet us like men, supposing they were disposed to be overbearing and to exact sacrifices from us which we could not make, what would we do in that case? Sir, we would then turn over a new leaf in our book, and I say this to the hon, member for Muskoka, and to those who believe with him, that I would be prepared then, speaking for myself alone, to look into the very scheme which he has proposed, the United Empire Trade League. I do not believe in the principles of the United Empire Trade League, for the reason that that scheme limits trade to allegiance, it proposes to make allegiance the basis of trade; whereas we desire to make trade interests alone the basis of trade. This latter principle seems to me to be the most Now, those are the objections which sensible one. are urged against us. We are daily denounced, we are daily assailed, but neither assault nor denunciation will make us deviate one iota from the path which we believe to be the path of truth. Canada has rights and Canada has duties. adoption of our policy we forgot neither the rights nor the duties. From England we exact every right which is due to our manhood; to the United States we will concede nothing which might be derogatory to our national dignity. This double consideration is our inspiration, it is for us the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night which will guide our course throughout this whole struggle until we have reached the goal.

Mr. TUPPER. In following the hon, leader of the Opposition I feel my task considerably lightened by the fact that the course he has adopted and the line of argument he has taken in his speech are, in my humble judgment, as I believe they are in the judgment of others, a great compliment to the results and experience of this country under the National Policy since 1878. The hon. member for gentlemen opposite, the New York Tribune, came L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) threw down the gauntlet on the floor of the House, if not defiantly, at any rate squarely and above board. This House having heard for weeks and weeks all that could be said on one side or the other in reference to unrestricted reciprocity, the hon. member for L'Islet has asked this House to express an opinion upon the results of the National Policy. He gave the head notes of that policy and he claimed that it had achieved a wonderful success; and how has he been met? The hon. leader of the Opposition, with all his eloquence, with a carefully-prepared speech, has failed to deal with any single point in that resolution with one exception, that is, the question of discrimination. The able men who preceded him in the debate during the last few weeks have not been able to do justice to their side of the question as regards our foreign trade policy. The hon, gentleman has failed thus far to discuss the vital question which underlies the policy of the Government, and he has left the field in the possession of the hon, gentleman who moved this amendment. Now, the hon, leader of the Opposition began his speech with a certain amount of good-natured banter in reference to the motion of the hon, member for L'Islet, and he told him that having changed his clothes somewhat, having embellished the amendment as he first presented it to the House some days ago, it now appeared as a new policy. Well, upon this subject of dressing up questions, and producing new policies, and changing resolutions, the hon. leader of the Opposition has had considerable experience in the last few years. After that hon, gentleman and his party refused to follow the leadership of the Hon. Edward Blake, after they had refused to adopt the policy of his Malvern speech, they have been, in season and out of season, during sessions and during recesses, arranging new toilets, and endeavouring to present a policy more attractive to the country than the policy which they, from time to time, have thrown away. Why, the hon, gentleman was ashamed to refer to this resolution, for the House will bear in mind that the hon, gentleman, as I have already said, dealt very sparingly with the amendment of the hon, member for L'Islet; but though he discussed generally the question of unrestricted reciprocity which came more particularly under the resolution of the hon, member for South Oxford, which has been rejected by the House, he did not allude to this extraordinary feature, to this extraordinary change which has been introduced into the socalled programme of the Liberal party of Canada, that is to say, that instead of, as formerly, pronouncing again here in solemn tones in favour of unrestricted reciprocity, they, to use his own language, are convinced that some sweet had to be introduced in order to enable their policy to go down, and so the policy as a whole was abandoned. The language of the first part of the amendment of the hon, member for South Oxford reads:

"The circumstances of the country require that the Government should forthwith reduce all duties on articles of prime necessity, and more particularly on those most generally consumed by artizans, miners, fishermen and formers." farmers.

Why, that resolution was so contradictory in terms, it was so absurd, if I may use the expression, that an organ of public opinion in the United States that is continually doing service for hon.

out and expressed its contempt for the manner in which the Opposition were dealing with this question of unrestricted reciprocity. That policy has been denounced all over this country by their best friends, by men who are not rabid partisans, by men who are Liberals, and here is the end of that The recalcitrants of that party have been policy. approached and arguments have been used, not openly perhaps, but to the effect that the Opposition have not the courage of their convictions, that they did not mean what they constantly say in their resolutions in this House, but they merely wanted to find a cry upon which to carry the elections. The New York Tribune at first took their argument as serious and made love, as it were, to this policy, and encouraged these hon, gentlemen in the direction they were going. But during the contest that policy which has been announced and defended by the hon. member for South Oxford as the policy of the Liberal party, was shown to be so ridiculous that there was not a man in the whole of the United States who would have anything to do with it. But the fight has passed away, and now these hon, gentlemen come out of the smoke, after their terrible defeat on that question at the hands of the people of this country, and they dare not put in terms their resolution of last year. Take the hon, member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), he must have a hole out of which to crawl. That hon, gentleman's whole speech on nomination day was on the line denounced to-day in the most vehement terms by the leader of the Opposition, and in running his last election he pledged himself that he would not vote for any policy that would discriminate Yet the hon, leader of the Op-Great Britain. position has occupied considerable time to show that it was within our right, that it was not treacherous to the Empire, that it was within the interests of the Empire to do what the hon, member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) pledged himself not to do at the late election. There are other hon. gentlemen sitting behind the leader of the Opposition who would not dare, and certainly did not dare, to argue so openly in favour of discrimina-Why, it was a question on which every hon. gentleman on this side when discussing the question with the people, was challenged to produce proof to show that the leaders of the Opposition did intend to adopt a policy that involved discrimination against the mother country. The utterances of the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) were brought out in support of that position; but to-day the hon. member for Quebec East, for what reason I know not, has courage enough, if not to argue the whole question that he first put before the people, at least to argue that phase of it, to endeavour to convince this House and afterwards the country that our connection with Great Britain was of small importance and that it was of small interest whether our trade was carried on within the British Empire, but that we should work for our own interests wholly regardless and irrespective of how the British Empire would be affected. The hon, gentleman has changed the clothes of his party, as he We have had has done on very many occasions. all kinds of trade propositions from the Opposition benches since 1888, but to-day it will be remarked that while the hon, member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) took several cardinal points in regard them before the House, he elicited very little on those different heads from the leader of the Opposition. Taking the motion generally, the hon. member for L'Islet called attention to the success that has attended the policy of this country in respect to the encouragement of the free importa-tion of raw material. The statistics on this subject the hon, leader of the Opposition wisely left alone. The success in this direction, I venture to say, will not be controverted to any great extent by hon, gentlemen who may follow him in this debate. The hon, member for L'Islet drew attention to the great benefit of judicious protection for natural and manufactured products. When the leader of the Opposition said that some of the things in this motion were unobjectionable, I am led to consider whether he is about to take another departure and whether he does object altogether to a protective policy, but is free to admit that, it being a necessity, there are some features which he rather appreciates. Did he not apologize to-day in his most eloquent manner for the tariff of the United States? That is not such a terrible thing; it is not a system of legalized robbery, it is not so beastly as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) in his choice language was in the habit of declaring it, when he was Minister of Finance; but, take it all round, it is not so very much above the tariff in Canada. That is the argument of the leader of the Opposition. The hon, member for L'Islet drew attention to the policy of granting aid to railway, canal and steamboat lines. He drew attention to the splendid management of the finances of this country.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, member for Queen's P.E.I., says "hear, hear." I am glad he appreciates the advancement we have made. Certainly the money lenders of the world have given us the best testimonies as to the results of the financial operations during the last few years. Those figures and statistics have not been dealt with, and yet they seem more pertinent and germane than the very eloquent remarks with which the leader of the Opposition favoured us this afternoon. The hon. member for L'Islet expressed gratification that the day had come when, notwithstanding the vast expenditures on necessary public works, on public works of general utility, on enterprises for the extension of our railway system and for the improvement of trade in every respect, it had been found possible to make income balance expenditure, and the Government had seized the earliest opportunity to relieve the consumers of taxes. The tea, coffee and sugar duties are especially referred to. subjects the hon, leader of the Opposition treated with silent contempt. The hon, member for L'Islet next expressed the hope that in the coming negotiations with the United States, British interests would be regarded as well as Canadian interests; and it was to that question the leader of the Opposition found it necessary to devote most of his speech. I am right, therefore, I submit, in considering and in judging from the argument of the leader of the Opposition, that the main position of the hon. member for L'Islet is at present not seriously affected. While the hon. member for L'Islet asks this House to consider our to the success of the National Policy and brought internal policy or fiscal policy with regard to our Mr. Tupper.

connection with Great Britain, the leader of the Opposition refused to discuss that issue, but he wishes to discuss the possibility, the vague possibility, of trade arrangements between this country ber for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), -not in this debate and other countries, and particularly with the on the Budget, but resorted to by him in connection United States. The hon, gentleman alluded to the mission of the Minister of Finance to the West time—is singularly appropriate in the present Indies, and he devoted a very small portion of his instance. The hon, the leader of the Opposition time to what I thought was a rather jubilant expression on what he considered the failure up to this date of this mission. No doubt the Minister of Finance will yet be able to show that the mission ous or not. Does the hon, gentleman deny that he undertook has been beneficial to this country, and will be of greater benefit to this country. Rome was not built in a day. During the four or deny, in fact, that there is any prosperity in the five years during which the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) occupied the position of Minister of Finance, although he talked great countries, that, in fact, in the most prosperous greatly about fighting, and boasted on certain countries in the world, the condition of the farmers occasions what he would do if the United States is certainly worse than it is in Canada? The hon. did not come to terms with him, and talked about carrying on various foreign wars, it is remarkable that the hon. gentleman's missions, if there were any, certainly his efforts in the direction of trade, were singularly unhappy. The hon. gentleman, however, in that respect has been more than answered by members from the Maritime Provinces, who spoke with a business knowledge on this subject. I am fully aware of the temper of the Maritime Provinces, and indeed of western Ontario, in regard to the importance of maintaining steamship connections with those islands, whether we have treaty relations with them or not, and statistics will show that great progress has followed the efforts of the Minister of Finance in that direction. So also as regards trade with Great Britain. hon, gentleman is evidently preparing his party for another turn, and for some reason to-day, instead of denouncing trade with Great Britain, the hon, gentleman wound up his speech by dwelling on the importance of that trade in connection with an Imperial trade league. He has appreciated that much of the recent debate, so that he is of the opinion that there is an almost unlimited market for us, where we can achieve greater success than even the very gratifying success that has been reached up to the present time. The hou, gentleman, however, again came back to the old statement which seems to be necessarily made by all members of his party when discussing Canadian affairs, and that is the condition, of this country. The hon, member for L'Islet gave certain definite reasons why the condition of the country is satisfactory, and he was met by a flat contradiction, and an allusion, which I could not follow at the time, in respect to some statement made in a book published in Quebec as to the condition of trade But in respect to the condition of the country, time and again the Trade Returns have been produced in this House to prove that it is satisfactory, that this view has been sustained by the utterances of public men not only in this Parliament, but in the Liberal party generally, and only the other day the Premier of Nova Scotia gave a flat contradiction to the statement made by his leader here to-day. He told the people in England that the condition of his own province, which is a fair index of the condition of the rest of the country, is satisfactory, and I believe that the

The hon, gentleman alludes to farm lands, but I cannot avoid mentioning that argument sometimes resorted to by the hon, memhas stated that the settlement of the condition of the farmer and the value of the land will settle the question as to whether this country is prosper-England to-day is prosperous; does he deny that the United States is a prosperous country; does he world? For I ask him the question seriously, with this to follow: If he does not find that in those is certainly worse than it is in Canada? The hon. gentleman has had proof after proof given to him on that point. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) can explain to him the reason for the decrease in farm lands when a railway proposition is before the House, or some other proposition that for a moment makes the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) forget the line of argument of his party on the trade question. He explains the various causes, known to all who look on this subject without political bias, that have brought about a decrease in farm lands all the world over. Without wearying the House with my arguments, I will give in better terms than the hon, member for Bothwell is accustomed to, the argument on this condition of affairs from a free trade paper. In the London Times only a short while ago there was an explanation given for the decrease in the value of farm lands during two decades. There is no question that there has been a decrease, but it seems to me to be trifling with the intelligence of the farmers to pretend that that decrease is confined to Canada alone, or to countries enjoying a protective policy; or that it is in any way connected with the fiscal policies of any of these countries. The London Times gives the reason for this decrease in the following words:-

"The two decades which began with the seventies, and of which we have seen the last as we enter upon the nineties, have had seasons of bounteous plenty, and seasons also of sad disaster. Had these matters alone been their characteristics there would have been little to say with regard to them. But mightier forces than the seasons have arisen, and it is to the effect of these on our agriculture, and its social and economical position, that many persons are looking with more or less anxiety. The more persons are looking with more or less anxiety. The more general application of steam to a large number of agricultural operations, and still more for the rapid conveyance of the produce of the acres of other lands; the bringing into cultivation of acres that were as unknown 20 years ago as is the interior of the 'Dark Continent' now: the use of the telegraph wire to regulate and regularize the market supplies and prices of produce—these matters, combined with the giant strides in mechanical, scientific, practical and educational matters connected with agriculture, have made the 20 years just ended of scientific, practical and educational matters connected with agriculture, have made the 20 years just ended of great and paramount importance. The question now is: What have been the results? Some are so plain as to need no explanation, as, for instance, that wheat which in 1869 was 518, 9d. per quarter was in 1889 only 29s, 9d., and with but little chance of it rising. A decrease of a pound sterling per quarter in the value of the leading cereal is a fact which is too well known. The important question at the present moment is rather the effect of these multitudinous changes on the actual farming of the country." the country.

statement of the Premier of the province The statements made by that writer seem to me to from which I come was certainly correct. support in a very satisfactory manner the arguments made by the hon, gentleman who preceded me on this side of the House (Mr. Desjardins), and it is for that reason that I apologize for again referring to a subject that has been so thoroughly sifted. Now then, with regard to the reference made by the leader of the Opposition to the Secretary of State, I will leave the answer to the Secretary of State himself. I did not follow that portion of the hon. gentleman's argument, although I believe it was connected with the condition of farm lands in the Province of Quebec. The hon, gentleman admitted that new channels are required for trade. We do not deny that. We say that the very success of the National Policy has brought about such a condition of plenty in this land, that if there is suffering among the farmers or among the manufacturers, it is largely on account of over-production, and that is true of more countries than one. new channels of trade that we want are channels of trade generally with all the world. We do not want to be locked up with the United States, nor to be fastened down to our most powerful and most gigantic rival in all questions of trade. no desire for that; but the policy of the hon. gentlemen opposite looks towards that one channel only, and the closing up of all other channels of trade in order that we may obtain that. What is the condition of the United States to which they ask us to look for our sole trade? He knows that they are suffering therefrom an over-production unparalleled almost in any country in the history of the world, and that country is using its greatest efforts to obtain new markets. It is even going into the country of the "blacks" as the West Indies are often sneeringly referred to by hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House; it is going to the South American Republics; whether the population be large or great, the people of the United States are straining every nerve and making tremendous efforts for new markets to get rid of their surplus products. That is the country to whose chariot wheels hon, gentlemen opposite wish to bind Canada. So much for the passing references which he made to some of those questions of trade. The hon, the leader of the Opposition in conclusion of that part of his argument, states that they advocate expansion of trade while we advo-cate restriction. We do nothing of the sort. That statement is playing with the two policies. expansion of trade could not certainly be explained by a policy having for its object trade restricted with the United States, and trade prevented with the rest of the world. That is the hon. gentleman's policy which he defined to-day at great length. His whole argument on the trade question, in bringing about our absolute dependence upon the United States, is an argument fraught with great danger to our interests in this country. The argument that we cannot exist as a commercial people without the United States is an argument of great danger to this country. I remember being struck very forcibly with a statement made by a former colleague of the hon. gentleman; a colleague who has gone down in the fight owing to his having followed so loyally the hon. the leader of the Opposition on the trade question; I recollect that hon. gentleman who was then the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), in 1887, using words of great importance in a debate; using words which I submit have been almost verified by subsequent events. He stated: Mr. TUPPER

"I thought that, while it was so well known thoughout this country that our people were anxious for the renewal of the reciprocity treaty on equal terms, it was not wise or judicious that we should publish to the world, from every commercial standpoint, the opinions we entertained on that subject. I am aware that that expression of mine was quoted on a recent political occasion in my own province: but I expressed it there in the same sense in which I would express ithere, because I believe the Government, recognizing their responsibility in dealing with a matter of so much importance, would be freer to act on behalf of our country, if there was not brought to bear, from the other side, expressions of opinion from our own people that we could not live or prosper without trade relations with that country " In regard to the treaty, I think it is very undesirable that here or elsewhere any expressions of opinions should be given as to the great desirability or necessity of a treaty with the United States."

Now, I ask the attention of the House to enquire, whether the arguments we have heard in the recent debate, or the arguments from the leader of the Opposition to-day, are calculated to aid the negotiators of a trade treaty at Washington in October? I firmly believe, if it is within parliamentary rules to say it—and what I say can go for what it is worth in this House and in the country—that the tactics of the Opposition inside and outside of this chamber for weeks has been to draw from this side of the House answers to their arguments, and to make arguments themselves that can have and will have but one effect, that is, to impede this Government in the negotiations which are to take place in October, and to prevent any trade arrangements being made.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. TUPPER. Hon. gentlemen opposite are bound to laugh; they are bound to express doubts as to that; but I can point them to the course of the Toronto Globe. After both parties had for years been advocating limited reciprocity, up to 1887 or 1888, there having been no practical difference of opinion between the parties on the subject up to that time, the Globe, when it saw that this Government was about to bring about enlarged trade relations with the United States, which would be likely to strengthen the Government in the eyes of the people, came out and denounced partial reciprocity openly and strongly. The Opposition has denounced every step taken by the Government in that direction, and endeavoured to cover the efforts of the representatives of this Government at Washington with ignominy. It has attempted to brand them as not representing the views of Canadians, as being hostile in their feelings towards the United States, as desirous of bringing about an arrangement which would be injurious to the United States, and as having conducted the Government of this country with that sole object in view. The logical result of such tactics is foreshadowed in the words which I have quoted from the late senior member for Halifax, but I believe they will fall flat. correspondence to which the hon, gentleman gave a passing reference will show that the United States Secretary of State has risen above all that petty feeling displayed from time to time in politics both in this country and in the United States, and that the United States Administration are prepared to discuss with the representatives of this country the questions put before the country at the time of the last general election. Now, the hon, gentleman referred to the combinations, and in general terms used an argument which has been very ably handled on both sides of the House. In answer to the hon.

gentleman, I do not feel it necessary to say anything except this, that if there is such an opportunity in Canada for combinations of the manufacturing interests, does he think that his policy will grant us relief? When he adds the United States markets to our own, and places our manufactures on equal terms with the manufactures of that country, does he think that we shall be running away from all possibilities of combinations? It would have been very pertinent, so far as the interests of the people of this country are concerned, if the hon, gentleman had shown that those combinations to which he referred had unduly enhanced the prices of goods. But it is known that the very article to which he referred, cotton, contrary to the predictions of hon. gentlemen who opposed the National Policy, has decreased in price in a remarkable degree since 1878 and since the introduction of the cotton factories. the hon. gentleman expressed great sympathy for the poor farmer. The farmer is a most curious individual in Canada. You can insult the manufacturer as much as you like; you can talk about his interests being a mere bagatelle; you can accuse him of combining to make his business profitable; but when you come to the farmer, you must speak of him with bated breath, and allude to him as the poor farmer. The hon. leader of the Opposition, in talking of this poor farmer, became unduly excited about the grasping The hon. gentleman manufacturers of Canada. will have no pity or mercy for them when he gets the chance to exercise the one quality or the other. But does he think that the farmers of Canada can be excited against the manufacturing interests, as one would suppose he does, by listening to the arguments he used? Is the farmer antagonistic to the manufacturer? I remember a pertinent question being put by a protectionist in the United States in reference to the same argument used in that country. He said he would go into any state of the Union where that argument was used, and test it by picking out from his audiences any farmer, and asking him this question: "Which would you prefer for a neighbour—a man owning as rich and valuable a farm as your own, or a man carrying on a manufacturing industry of some kind?" And he said the reply of every man would be that there could not be too many manufacturers in his district; that they were his best customers and his best friends, and the nearer they get to his farm the better for him. And that is the answer that has enabled this Government, notwithstanding the specious arguments based on the want of prosperity among the farmers, to have at their back to-day, in support of the vigorous policy which has been outlined by the hon. member for L'Islet, a large body of the intelligent farmers of this country. The hon. gentleman then came to the year 1885, and referred to the motion made by the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) in that year in reference to a renewal of negotiations; and he brought forward the old assertion that although we had stated that we would never bend the knee to the powers at Washington, we had been forced to come off the high horse, and had been compelled to sue for terms at Washington. The hon. gentleman bases his statement upon a point which is somewhat trifling in one sense, and upon which he prefers a serious, grave and most unfounded charge against the Conservative party and against the late Government, which I will refer is of great importance in view of namely, that they went to the country on a falsehood. He used that expression; and he endeavoured to show that he had made good his position, by reading the statement of the Secretary of State of the United States, and the statement made by the High Commissioner when at Washington. He was so anxious to make a case against the Government, that he did not attempt to examine into the means of information at the command of the High Commissioner at that time, or the material on which he had formed a conclusion or the documents he got from the blue-books showed to be the case. I say that any hon, gentleman who is at all inclined to be fair and to look at this correspondence in order to ascertain the real position of affairs, will find in reference to that subject that no misrepresentation occurred, certainly no wilful misrepresentation; but that the position taken by the late Government at the last election was correct, notwithstanding the inference drawn by the High Commissioner or the statement made by the Secretary of State of the United States. Remember that on that subject the Secretary of State was dealing with the British ambassador and the British Government, and dealing with them direct. Remember that their conversations were not recorded. Remember, moreover, that it was upon the documents that were in possession of the Dominion of Canada that the Government of Canada made the announcement that they had not sought or sued for a meeting at Washington to discuss trade affairs. But that the initiation of the proceedings, that the initiation of the invitation proceeded from the United States, and that document makes good the statement, which these public documents will establish, to the satisfaction of any impartial mind, that the position taken by the Government before the people was correct. The main point was not the miserable little quibble upon which the hon. leader of the Opposition ventures to establish a charge of falsehood, as to who asked the The position taken by this Government was that we had not done what the Opposition desired us to do. We did not go and knock at the doors from which our country had been so often driven away, as it were, and call again for the consideration of trade relations. But these papers show that, in the fall, when we discovered that an arrangement was proposed between a British colony, which, whether it was to the benefit of that colony or not—and that is now a matter of discussion in that colony—which was fraught with the greatest possible detriment or injury to the Dominion—when we discovered that negotiations had been carried on without our knowledge or consent, directly affecting our interests, what we did was to interfere and interpose—not to beg to be drawn into the agreement, not to sue to have a meeting appointed and a commission formed, not to ask any favour or to press our own position with the mother country—but to insist that the mother country should consent to no arrangement between the United States and Newfoundland which would be detrimental to the interests of so large a portion of the Empire as the We not only interfered, but the Dominion. despatches show that we demanded that the rights and interests of the people of this country should be so far considered; and the correspondence to the serious charge which has been so rashly preferred to-day. I will refer at some length to portions of the correspondence to which the hon. gentleman has referred, and which he could not have considered before making that charge. In the first place, at page 7 of the blue-book, on the 9th December, 1890, in a report to the Council, after reciting the facts with reference to the fisheries in Newfoundland, the Minister of Justice and myself say:

"Your Excellency was, on the same day, moved to request from Lord Knutsford, communication of the authority possessed by Mr. Bond, and likewise to urge that no arrangement be concluded until your Government should be informed of the nature thereof, and unless Canada should be given an opportunity to be included therein, if she should so desire.

That was the position taken by this Government. that in the absence of definite information as to the instructions given, it was most important to put the British Government on its guard concerning the wide range the negotiations might take, and the great extent to which this country might be affected thereby. On page 13 will be found the minute of Council which was published during the election, and which contains the answer to one part of the hon. gentleman's arguments, namely, regarding the basis on which we propose to negotiate in October next: and the answer given at the last election is the answer now, and that answer was approved then, and there has been no expression of disapproval since. In that minute of the 13th December, 1890, it is said:

"The Committee of the Privy Council having learned that the hon, the Secretary of State for the United States had expressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, his readiness to negotiate for a reciprocity treaty on a wide basis, and particularly for the protection of the mackerel fisheries, and for the fisheries on inland waters, and had subsequently stated to Her Majesty's Minister his great desire to conclude a reciprocity treaty."—

The minute goes on to make a proposal on the lines on which that subject would be discussed, so far as this Government is concerned. On page 15 will be found a report of the Committee of the Privy Council, dated 29th January, 1891, in which these words appear:

"Her Majesty's Government will doubtless remember that when the protest of Your Excellency's Government against the draft convention, which was considered in December last, was made known to the principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, His Lordship intimated that if Canada were willing to commence negotiations at once, the Newfoundland convention would not be concluded immediately, but that negotiations on behalf of Canada could go on pari wassu with those regarding Canada could go on pari passu with those regarding Newfoundland."

That will give hon, gentlemen a cue to the position that, whatever may have taken place between the British Government and the United States Administration in order to expedite the arrangement with Mr. Bond, whatever requisitions were preferred, all that this Government is responsible for or is aware of are the communications and the documents passing between it and the Home Government, or between it and the Government at Washington through the Imperial Government. In this report on page 16 it is said:

"Your Excellency's Government at once assented to the propriety of this course, and announced their willingness to commence negotiations at once, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, only expressing a preference for a formal and official conference under commission rather than a private and unofficial discussion.

The hon, gentleman can infer, from the language used in that report, that from some source had come | Canadian Government appreciates the consideration Mr. TUPPER.

an invitation for an unofficial and private discussion, and had the hon. gentleman a little charity, he would not have been so ready to bandy foul charges across the floor of this House until he had discovered what preceding proposition had been made. I call attention again to that report, to show that the Government of Canada had expressed to the Imperial Government on being approached, that we were ready and willing to arrange for a conference, but preferred a formal and official conference under commission to a private and unofficial discussion.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. TUPPER. When the House rose for recess, I was dealing with a subject of great importance, and I regret extremely that I shall have to ask the indulgence of the House while I give at greater length some important extracts from the blue-book on which the charge, if upon anything, The charge was that the Government was based. had been guilty of going to the country with falsehood in its mouth, in the statement that it had been invited by the United States Government to consider and deliberate upon the trade question, and the hon, the leader of the Opposition stated that we were not invited, and went on further to deal with that subject. I have already given the House as much of the correspondence as in my judgment bears upon that phase of the question. I would call your attention, however, to a note dated the 20th March, 1891, from Sir Julian Pauncefote to Mr. Blaine, on page 65, in which he

"I had the pleasure to inform you confidentially, that the Canadian Government, in deference to your preference for an unofficial conference on the question of reci-procity, were disposed to meet your wishes in that re-spect. It was understood that you would be ready after the 4th March to discuss the subject unofficially with me and one or more agents from Canada."

And on page 67, for I take the references in their order, there is an extract from the High Commissioner's report which was quoted and referred to by the leader of the Opposition, together with the despatch or note of Mr. Blaine of 1st April. I again call the attention of the House to the statement of the High Commissioner in that respect, prefacing it, for the better understanding of my argument, with the remark I have already made that it did not appear how many of the previous despatches I have read were accessible to the High Commissioner or to the Secretary of State. The High The High Commissioner expresses his belief in regard to this subject, and says:

"I believe it arose from the negotiations which had recently taken place between the United States and Newfoundland, and the desire expressed by Canada to be included in any arrangement such as had been understood cluded in any arrangement such as had been understood to have been contemplated by the United States and Newfoundland; and that, upon that being communicated to him by Sir Julian Pauncefote, he had expressed his willingness to open negotiations for reciprocal trade arrangements between Canada and the United States, assisted by delegates from the Dominion Government; the negotiations to be informal, and to a certain extent of a confidential nature until they could assume a more formal character, if any result were arrived at."

Further on, at page 76, there appears an extract from a telegram from Lord Stanley of Preston to Lord Knutsford, dated the 26th November, 1890:

"With reference to your telegram of the 25th instant, evinced by Her Majesty's Government in delaying the Newfoundland convention.

"Canadian Ministers are prepared to open negotiations immediately on lines indicated in my telegram of the 19th, provided their representatives at Washington could be complicated with British Minister and open negotiated with British Minister and open negotiations. commissioners associated with British Minister and empowered to negotiate directly, instead of being merely delegates.

As the Newfoundland arrangement is inapplicable in some details and incomplete in others desired by Canada, they think that a separate convention will be necessary, rather than an inclusion in the Newfoundland one."

On the 28th November, 1890, Lord Stanley of Preston telegraphs Sir Julian Pauncefote:

"The text of the draft convention between Newfoundland and the United States was telegraphed me on the 15th instant by Her Majesty's Government. I was informed of Blaine's views, as well as of your suggestion that we should send delegates to Washington unofficially simply to discuss matters, and the inclusion of transit in bond in the negotiations was suggested."

Later on appears this passage:

"We are prepared to arrange for commercial relations with United States being liberally extended, and wish that United States may be so informed. This Government objects to sending delegates to Washington unofficially, as liable to give rise to misunderstanding, but is ready at once to open formal negotiations with sanction of Her Majesty's Government."

And again, on page 78, Lord Knutsford telegraphs to Lord Stanley of Preston, under date of the 2nd January, 1891, and referring to Mr. Blaine, says:

"He added that he would be prepared to enter into private negotiations at any time after 4th March."

On page 81, Lord Stanley of Preston, in a despatch to Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 16th March, 1891, says:

"I understand from previous communications that it is the wish of Mr. Blaine, without prejudice to the future appointment of a commission or otherwise, to discuss with yourself and with one or more persons delegated by this Government, the various questions which might become the subjects of reference to a joint commission: that such a conference should be of an unofficial character; and that it should afford an opportunity for considering on what points it would be likely that the two Governments could come to an agreement. It was also understood that any date prior to the 4th inst. would not be convenient to Mr. Blaine for such a meeting. The Government of the Dominion would have preferred the appointment of a joint commission, but they desire to defer as far as may be to the wish of the Secretary of State, and I should be glad, therefore, if you will be good enough to ascertain from him at what date it will be convenient that the representatives appointed by the Canadian Government should proceed to Washington to confer with yourself and Mr. Blaine."

Then, coming to the last material portion of this correspondence, we find a statement of the Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, upon which the leader of the Opposition has dwelt. In a letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote of the 1st of April, 1891, he says:

"In view of the fact that you had come to the State Department with the proposals, and that the subject was then for the first time mentioned between us, and in view of the further fact that I agreed to a private conference, as explained in my minute, I confess that it was a surprise to me, when several weeks later, during the Canadian canvass, Sir John Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper both stated before public assemblies that an informal discussion of a reciprocity treaty would take place at Washington after the 4th of March, by the initiation of the Secretary of State."

Now, I will call the attention of the House to the word "initiation." I do not think it will be found in any speech made in Canada that an attempt was made to induce the people of this country, or that it was worth the while of anyone to show that these proceedings had been initiated by Mr. Blaine; and much in reference to the gravity of the charge which has been preferred one is aware that a powerful party in the United turns on the word "initiation," which I think was "invitation," and the statement made by these gentlemen, and all the members of the Government, was not the abrupt statement to which the Secretary of State alludes, but a statement as to the manner in which an invitation arose for them to go to Washington. It was not in reference to the initiation of the matter, but it was a statement that Newfoundland was apparently endeavouring to make an arrangement with the United States at our cost, and to take advantage of the peculiar condition of certain subjects in dispute, notably the fisheries, then pending between the United States and this country, and it appearing that out of that an attempt was being made, whether wilfully or by accident, by a neighbouring colony of the kind I have mentioned, this Government insisted in its communications to the British Government that we should be represented before any arrangement was consummated with Newfoundland. The extracts I have given show that all the members of the Government were abundantly justified, and I do not believe that Mr. Blaine himself would have anything more to say had he before him the communications I have read and the state of affairs as they existed between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government. There is only a portion of that correspondence, as hon. gentlemen who are versed in diplomatic correspondence know, which could be open to Mr. Blaine or this Government. His main point was that we had not done, as previous Governments had done without success, that is, knock at the doors of the American Government and beg again to have another trade arrangement brought about. take an entirely different attitude, and standing on our rights, acting with the home Government, we have got affairs to such a point that an invitation was sent to this Government—and it did come from Mr. Blaine; Mr. Blaine does not deny it; the day was fixed, and it was intimated that the 4th of March would suit Mr. Blaine's convenience, which we had consulted and recognized from that time to this. The chief point now is, without any quib-bling or cavilling, that this Government has arranged for a conference with the United States Government in October next, without any confession such as hon, gentlemen opposite insinuate, that we are in any sense more dependent upon the satisfactory arrangements than are the people of the United States themselves. We go there, relatively, in as strong a position as they meet us; we go there anxious to see whether an arrangement, consistent with the interest of both countries, can be brought about. In reference to this much talked of McKinley Bill, in reference to that question which hon, gentlemen understand is a subject connected with the negotiations, surely the position we take is not only reasonable, but it is the position that was taken by the hon, gentlemen themselves, by the hon, gentlemen's leaders in the Mackenzic Administration, when they sent their commissioners to Washington, who took the ground we take as regards the commercial independence of Canada, and we are just as independent of the United States to-day, indeed a great deal more so, than was Canada in 1874. We go there, not to sue for terms, not to beg for favours; we go there claiming that we are able to do without their trade just as well as they are able to do without ours. Every

States is saying to-day that, injurious as the McKinley Bill is to Canada, according to the claim of hon. gentlemen opposite, its injury is far greater to the larger country; they are still more affected by the McKinley Bill than we are, and I know the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) will agree with me in that opinion.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds and Grenville). Yes, ten to one.

Mr. TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman is quite within the mark. But if hon, gentlemen doubt that, they have only to take up that interesting state document of the Hon. George Brown, in which he not only makes these statements in regard to the operation of a fiscal law of that kind between the two countries, but he goes on to show that when a re-arrangement of our fiscal relations was sought with the United States, however advantageous that re-arrangement would be to this country, it was infinitely more advantageous to the United States. So much, then, for the remarks of the leader of the Opposition and his charges in reference to negotiations with the United States at the time of the general election. Now, we must remember, in reference to these charges, that the hon, gentlemen are just now exhibiting considerable temper. It is not to be expected the are just now in an angelic frame of mind. It is not to be expected that they gentlemen have suffered a serious defeat, and naturally they are now smarting from its con-The result of their defeat is discourag-We have heard to-day, from the leader of the Opposition, that they have sounded a retreat all along the line on their trade policy, and it is a most difficult thing to reform under the fire of the enemy, and so the hon, gentleman has descended doing a thing so un-Canadian and tish that no leader, I believe, of British Opposition in this House ever did before, and that is, to take it for granted that these serious charges now being investigated by men supposed to approach the investigation with judicial minds, he being one of that Committee—taking it for granted that the charges are proved before the accused has been heard, before the whole case has been considered. We heard him to-day upon the supposition, if not the hope, that all these serious charges would be proved, make a most serious accusation in reference to the administration of one of the departments of this Government. shows the temper the hon, gentleman is in, and, therefore, we must not be surprised if he ran off to make so extraordinary a charge as he did in reference to the negotiations, based upon such very slim material. He spoke of Newfoundland having no pride, that they were ready to go to Washington to make a trade arrangement without talking, as we had talked, about bending the knee, and so But he must recollect that while we were not disposed to forget our dignity, the Conservative party has maintained all along a straightforward business-like attitude. As I have already stated, Newfoundland desired to go to Washington to accomplish a treaty at our cost and to our detriment, and when the opportunity arose that colony took advantage of it. The two positions are not at all analogous, and I fancy that part of his subject by assuring us that we would solutely inconsistent with unrestricted reciprocity; Mr. TUPPER.

have the hearty support of the Opposition in the settlement of the Atlantic fisheries and the Behring Sea question. Well, I hope the hon. gentleman will, in the future, give us some better evidence of that support than we have had in the past. tell him that the great trouble to-day that we find in arranging these questions with the United States is the fact that the Opposition endeavour in every way to turn the minds of the United States Government against us, almost by whispering into the ears of our neighbours, and by stating in this House and on the hustings that we are doing all we can to annoy our neighbours and to irritate them in reference to the Atlantic fishery question and the trade question-I say that this course of the Opposition renders the task of this Government much more So far has their influence gone in this difficult. direction that you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that in their state dispatches the United States Administration have taken it for granted that in standing by our rights in the Atlantic fishery question and in the Behring Sea difficulty, and the prosecution of seal hunting, we are influenced entirely by a desire to annoy and harass our neighbours, and the only tittle of evidence upon which the United States Government base their argument are the charges and statements made by hon, gentlemen opposite from one session to another. Therefore, I opposite from one session to another. hope that the assurance of support in the settlement of this question means that the Opposition are to take a different course, not only upon the fishery question but also upon the trade question. Now, then, the amusing part, if I may venture to say so, of the hon, gentleman's speech—and it was important as well as amusing—is that which indicates a new turn in the trade policy of the Opposition. I alluded to the many phases through which that trade question has gone in the hands of the hon. gentleman and of his predecessor, the late leader of the Opposition. But, as I understand him now, they do not mean to allow all the terrible consequences that we ascribe to unrestricted reciprocity ; in a word, that policy has become so unpopular, it has driven so many prominent men out of the ranks of their party, that he now promises not to allow unrestricted reciprocity to do all at once all these terrible things that we fear; he is not going to interfere with great and important interests in this country at one fell swoop; and, as his predecessor once said at Malvern, or somewhere else, when he was afraid that his policy had carried fear into the hearts of the business men of this country, he was not going to be a bull in a china shop. And so the present leader of the Opposition says he is not going to knock the dishes all down at once, but apparently he is going to take them shelf by shelf. says they are going to proceed by easy stages. In this way the country is going to enjoy this tremendous boon that will be procured for us by unrestricted reciprocity, or continental free trade, or commercial union, or whatever you like to call it. We have great and directistress because of the absence After the smoke of the last battle has blown away, and the hon. gentleman has had time to look over the field and count his losses, we can scarcely expect him to come to this Parliament and admit that he and his party have abandoned this their last policy. But it was gradually hinted at by the was a little banter on the part of the hon. gentle-man, and I shall pass it by. He wound up that was tacked on an enunciation of a principle aband the hon. gentleman tells us now that he intends to treat this as all reforms are treated—that while all reforms threaten great interests, and those interests are greatly alarmed, he endeavours to appease that alarm by telling—and I suppose it is the manufacturing interests princihe pally addresses—that he will destroy them by easy stages. As St. Paul was a terror to the manufacturers of idols, so the hon. gentleman, I understand, is a terror to the manufacturing interests. I can tell him that if they believe the speech he made to-day and can trust him, his wishes will be attained, and they will not have very great reason to fear. They will understand that the hon. gentle-man is not in earnest. The Minister of Justice who sits beside me says he is not an enemy of idols, and we have abundant evidence of it. hon, gentleman is only too willing to worship at the shrine of any idol so long as it will give him power. The hon gentleman in his onslaught on manufacturing interests reminded me of a very good story, though not so good as that of his about St. Paul, but it is indicative of that extraordinarily worked-up feeling against manufacturers, not only in Canada but by the so-called free traders in the United States. Old John Randolph, the Sage of Roanoke, was a free trader. He said he always kicked a sheep when he saw it. He despised anything that was suggestive of industry, and it was he who said in Congress, speaking of England, that there was no country in the world and no climate where men could stand the smoke and dust of manufacturing except in old England. Why, he said, you introduce manufacturing into this country and you will have small-pox, and cholera, and yellow fever. The hon, gentleman seems to make war upon the manufacturing interests to-day in a somewhat similar spirit; but the manufacturers have been able to stand it and they have been able to summon a considerable number of followers to their side, because the interests of both have been shown to be identical. The most interesting part of the hon. gentleman's speech, however, was the most dangerous from his own standpoint. He knows as well as I that this feature of unrestricted reciprocity, or what is left of it after the hon. gentleman's speech, will prove most unpopular to the members of his party and the yeomen of the country—that feature connected with discrimination. I am not doing him an injustice to say that the object of the longest part of his speech was to show that discrimination against the products of the mother country would be neither injurious to the mother country nor injurious to the interests of Canada, but if it were injurious to the interests of the mother country, so much the worse for the mother country, and the hon. gentleman borrowed an old phrase in connection with tariff equalities for all The hon, gentleman then went in for countries. discrimination strongly. Before I deal with this point I must show the hon, gentleman that it was only candid that he should do this and have no beating about the bush in the next fight, but it should be understood that whatever else hon, gentlemen opposite may do, this much is clear, that when they control the fiscal policy they will arrange it in the interests of this country, whether it discriminates against the interests of the mother country and in favour of the interests of a foreign country or not; discrimination will be brought about, cost what it may, connection with Great "I have no hesitation in saying that the people of the United States will never consent to a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and that all the time spent in talking about reciprocity is wasted. What is a reciprocity it is a treaty under which the Custom-houses are kept up as before to their entire extent. Why will the United States Britain or no connection. That was a subject which in the late election was one of general debate and difference of opinion. I am not aware that I ever met any hon, gentlemen on the platform fighting for the political views of the leader of the Opposition who was bold enough to confess that he entertained the views which the leader of the Opposition enunciated to-day. I do not mean to say there were none, but I did not meet them; and in Nova Scotia such would find very little support for utterances of that character. An hon. gentleman who went the greatest distance during that discussion was the hon, member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden), and he got out of it by saying this, and he said it seriously, for it was the only argument he brought to bear: we might be sure it would not prejudice our relations with Great Britain, for it could be done without the consent of Great Britain.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. TUPPER. It is not safe in the Maritime Provinces for the party to go the length which the leader of the Opposition went to-day. member for King's said, however, that it was necessary that the Queen should ratify and authorize the completion of any treaty which the leader of the Opposition might make. We were, therefore, left to assume that all this dangerous talk on the part of the Liberals would be brought to naught, because Her Majesty the Queen would protect the interests of the British Empire, and the Liberals would have to come back to the old tariff, with all its hideous features, as proclaimed by the late leader of the Opposition at Malvern, when he said they would have to swallow the whole thing with a few changes. Let us have on record once again, in connection with the leader of the Opposition, some of the utterances of hon. gentlemen of his party speaking with almost equal authority. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), speaking on 10th October, 1887, at Ingersoll, said:

"There is no doubt whatever that before we can obtain such a measure of unrestricted reciprocity as the advo-cates of this system desire it will be necessary for us to-discriminate against the manufactories of other countries, against those even of Great Britain? against those even of Great Britain.

In the late contest the hon. gentleman, at Oshawa, on 10th February, was asked by C. W. Scott:

"Does the Liberal party favour discrimination against Great Britain by admitting American manufactures free and taxing the manufactures of Great Britain?" and taxing the manufactures of Great Britain?

Sir Richard replied:

"Certainly we do. I will tell you why. We have a perfect right to manage our own tariff to suit us, the people of Canada. The interests of Canada demand that we should have unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. We can only get it by taxing the goods of every country on the face of the earth except those of the United States. That is undoubtedly part of our policy."

A gentleman who was permitted to take a prominent part in the late campaign, under the wing of the hon, member for South Oxford, the Attorney General of Nova Scotia, is on record with his definition of what this trade policy means. He is reported in 1887 to have stated as follows:-

not give us such a treaty as that? Simply because they are not fools, and because they respect their own interests.

But let no person be deceived: this will mean that we will have to adopt the American tariff against Great Britain. In regard to the Customs tariff, the leader of the Opposition said at Montreal:

"We must continue for many years to raise our revenues by a Customs tariff, and by a very high tariff at that."

And he expressed the opinion that England would not object to be discriminated against. The views expressed by the hon, gentleman to-day go to the extent of justifying that policy. Let me refer to the policy of the Government of which the leader of the Opposition was a member. I will give only a short reference from the state papers in connection with previous negotiations under a former régime with the United States of America. heard about it being in the interest of the people of this country that we should discriminate against the mother country. We heard arguments at great length earnestly addressed by the leader of the Opposition to the effect that it was the duty of a statesman in this country to take that course in the interest of Canadians, and believing it to be in our interest he took his present course. I will quote to the House a Minute in Council passed on the 26th of March, 1874, before Mr. Brown proceeded to Washington, and which was of the following character :-

"That any measure which will tend to promote and maintain friendly intercourse and harmony between our maintain friendy intercourse and narmony between our neighbours and ourselves through the free interchange of commodities, so that it be not seriously prejudicial to our industrial interests, will receive the support of the Dominion Government.

"Mr. Brown will communicate this view to Sir Edward Thornton, accompanied with the representation that the Government of Canada do not propose any modification in matters of trade and commerce which would in any way injuriously affect Imperial interests." any way injuriously affect Imperial interests.

In the debate in the Senate later on, when explaining what he had done in Washington, Mr. Brown said that such an idea as discriminating against the mother country was not thought of for a moment; and we know the views of the leader of the Reform Government, the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, on that I do not know that he has ever qualified them, but they were views expressly made. connection with that matter I will give some reference to another point on which the hon, gentleman The hon. dwelt—that is, as to a common tariff. gentleman made an argument upon the word "assimilation" which seemed to be a little ambiguous, but we know exactly what a common tariff It does not mean assimilation in the sense in which the hon, gentleman discussed it, namely, that it is a tariff managed and framed in the interests of this country, and by this Parliament, separate and apart from that of the United States: but it means a tariff which surrounds and encircles both of these countries from the rest of the world, and that was construed by Mr. Blake as an essential part of the present policy of the Liberal party. Mr. Blake has said, and I quote his words:

"I have said that any feasible plan involves differential duties; but it does more: it involves—as to the bulk by agreement, and as to much from the necessity of the case—the substantial assimilation, in their leading features, of the tariffs of the two countries.

"The absence of agreement would give to each country power to disturb at will the industrial system of the other; and unrestricted reciprocity without an agreed assimilation of duties is an unsubstantial dream."

Mr. Tupper.

Mr. TUPPER.

The hon, gentleman apparently has come to the opinion that Mr. Blake was right and that his party was wrong in the late contest, because he began--as hon, gentlemen opposite always begin when they come to the subject of direct taxation— by saying: "We don't mean to resort to direct taxation," and then they go on for about an hour to show what a splendid thing direct taxation is, and how beneficial it would be to the country at The hon, gentleman in the same manner introduced this subject by saying: I do not propose the assimilation of tariffs, but the assimilation of tariffs would not be such a bad thing; and he went on to show that there was a very slight difference between our present tariff and the tariff of the United States. Mr. Blake points out the weakness of the policy of the Liberal party in this regard. He says:

"Without needless, lengthy recapitulation, you will see, by contrasting my views by those of the present advocates of free trade with the United States, several serious questions of difficulty and difference—for example, uniformity of tariff and its control, deficiency of revenue and its supply—on which I am unable to adopt their opinions."

And he finally says:

"The tendency, in Canada, of unrestricted free trade with the United States, high duties being maintained against the United Kingdom, would be towards political union.

We heard to-day a most extraordinary doctrine for the first time laid down by the leader of any party in this House, so far as I am aware, and that was, not only as to our right to discriminate against the mother country, but that it was proper we should do so as a return for the many injustices received at her hands and the many occasions in which our interests had been overlooked by that country. The hon, the leader of the Opposition went into a very extensive argument to show that for all these reasons, and no matter what the consequences might be, we had not merely the right to discriminate against the interests of the mother country, but if necessary we were bound to do it. Now, as I said, the hon. gentleman was honest as to his intention that his policy should discriminate against the goods of the mother country, and that our feelings of loyalty were not to be referred to in this connection; but he entirely misinterpreted the argument we make as regards loyalty. We are not loyal, I take it, to a particular policy or to any particular party in Great Britain, nor to the Government of Great Britain in the sense that the hon, gentleman would imply. We are loyal just as the people of Great Britain are loyal, and as firmly resolved as they are to maintain at all costs and hazards the integrity of the British Empire. If we find that under the policy of a particular British statesman many years ago, or a few years ago, steps were taken which threatened the integrity of the British Empire, it is not for us to adopt that policy, nor to change our own on account of it. It is for us to strain every nerve, and by our advice and by our action, and in every possible way that a free people can, to take such a course as will tend to cement and keep together the bonds that now unite the British Empire. In this regard, therefore, we have to look at the logical consequence of our severing ourselves commercially from the country on which we look now with feelings of gratitude, love and veneration; and beyond that, if I may say so, for protection as well. Take the question of the Atlantic fisheries; take the question of the Behring Sea. I would like the hon, gentleman to tell me how long we would be settling these questions, or how long we could defend our interests in these waters, without the strength and support that we new receive from the mother country. The hon, gentleman is aware of this, and surely it needs no argument, it goes without saying that the British taxpayer was not at all overjoyed with the adoption of the National Policy, to which the hon. gentleman alluded; and the arguments that were then used by his own colleagues were, that we were trying the temper of the British tax-payer, and of Britain herself, a country to which we owed so much. I ask the hon. gentleman how long the British tax-payer or the British merchant would tolerate such a condition of affairs, if, while they were charged for our protection, and while they were charged with the great responsibility of maintaining an army and navy for us as well as for themselves, we should undertake to throw the whole of our trade away from them, into the arms of a foreign country. The hon, gentleman must admit on reflection that it is impossible that we could for a moment maintain our connection with the mother country if such a state of affairs were brought about, or such a policy adopted here. It is our own interests that we are to con-It is our own interests in every sense that we are consulting in opposing such a policy. take the course of both parties, and of every Government in this country hitherto, by holding that in all these trade elections we shall not merely serve the selfish interests of that part of the Empire in which we live, but that we shall endeavour to promote the interests of all parties of the Empire, and certainly in that connection to do all we can to maintain the integrity of that Empire. The hon. gentleman in this connection—I suppose to upbraid the mother country, or, at any rate, to give us an excuse to take our own course, regardless of England-alluded to the provisions of the treaty between England and France; and it is remarkable-and I think he will see the force of thisthat in order to make that point good he is practically confined to the provisions of that single treaty since Confederation in which the interests of this country were not directly consulted. The hon, gentleman knows that the practice which now obtains without exception is, that before the mother country makes a commercial treaty with any country in the world she consults Canada, and asks us whether we are desirous to be made a party to that treaty or to be left out. The hon, gentleman by that reference gives me the opportunity to point out the care taken by the mother country of our interests in connection with the negotiation of commercial treaties; and the hon. gentleman, when he dealt with that subject, was able only to cite the case which forms an exception to the rule. the point which I wish to make is this: Suppose that the mother country should act in a selfish way and should not consult our interests, the hon. gentleman argues that, therefore, Canada should do the same—that it should look to its own interests, and let the mother country take the consequences. are the consequences relatively the same? Would the mother country be affected as much as Canada if in the one case we took umbrage, cut the connection and went out of the Empire, or if, in the other and frame such a tariff in the interest of this coun-case England, said to us: "You have chosen your bed and you can lie on it; you have chosen to make a trade arrangement in which you have given all the benefit of your trade and commerce to a foreign country and denied us any share of those benefits, and you can go out of the Empire.' colonies in this enormous Empire in the same relative position as the mother country? In the one case the consequence to us would be ruinous, fatal-would be such as the hon, gentleman says he hopes would never happen: the connection would be snapped at once. But, in the other case, while we might deplore an occurrence of that kind on the part of the mother country, there would be no good logic or common sense in our taking the course which the hon, gentleman's argument implied we should. The hon, gentleman refers to the German treaty, of which we have not the benefit; but I ask the hon. gentleman, and the hon. gentlemen with him, how they get over the difficulty which the German treaty, at the first blush, puts in the way of the accomplishment of unrestricted reciprocity. Certainly the United States would not allow articles manufactured in Germany to come into their country on the same terms on which they are admitted into Canada; and since the hon, gentleman has made reference to that treaty, there is a lion in his path that should be removed in some way if he intends to proceedseriously in the direction of unrestricted reciprocity. The hon, gentleman, as I said, dwelt upon the subject of the assimilation of tariffs, and suggested that we had not to go very far in order to assimilate our tariff to that of the United States. But the great trouble and difficulty he did not face, and that is, how it is possible that in any assimilation or in any arrangement for a common tariff you can meet the objections raised so pointedly by Mr. Blake, as to the extent to which our interests will be consulted when 5,000,000 are dealing with 60,000,000 having interests antagonistic to ours, and our competitors, producing nearly everything that we produce. I would ask the hon, gentleman and those supporting him how they think it is possible that a common tariff can be made fair to all when our interests conflict with the interests of 60,000,000 people. Not only have they neglected to meet that point--which was brought out so well in the debate that I apologize for referring to it but the question how far that would be a common tariff which would be framed at Washington in the interest of the 60,000,000 people of the United States, and which it would be for the 5,000,000 people to take or leave alone. The hon. gentleman made a passing reference to the statements of the late leader of the Conservative party, but I could not see that they were so appropriate to the branch of his argument in reference to which he made the quotation. The late leader of the Conservative party was then speaking of fighting fire with fire; and, as the Hon. George Brown himself stated, not being able to make a partial reciprocity treaty, or a treaty on the old lines, he suggested that we should take a leaf from their book—not to adopt their tariff or to assimilate ours to theirs in the sense of the danger that exists of having a common tariff for both countries, but their policy of protection having been so successful, that they would not allow us to participate in the benefits of their trade, he advocated, and advocated with success, that we should take a leaf from their book, try as would bring about the same results; and we are proceeding admirably in that direction. this debate, in reference to free trade and protection, it is extraordinary how many positions hon. gentlemen opposite have to assume towards political economy. In the first place, the Democrats are fighting hard in the United States to show that all the burdens of the protective tariff fall on the people of the United States, whereas the so-called advocates of continental free trade are injuring the cause of free trade in the United States by attempting to prove that all those burdens fall on the Canadian exporters, and that the people of the United States are not punished as we are. is upon the arguments put forward in this House last session by the hon, member for North Norfolk, and those used by Mr. Goldwin Smith, that Mr. McKinley mainly based his case for the duties on farm products. His argument was almost wholly confined, with the exception of that with regard to wheat, by his quotations from speeches made by these gentlemen; and he met the free trade arguments of the Democrats by showing that instead of the American farmer suffering from the high duties he imposed it would be the Canadian farmer. We find another inconsistency in the position of hon. gentlemen opposite when we point to the extraordinary progress and development the United States have made. hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Bothwell, in particular, are wont to show that that is owing to the fact that they enjoy a large measure of free trade over an enormous extent of country and among an enormous population. In reference to that, it can be said that the United States began as we are beginning. They began that policy with a population something like ours, and with a country somewhat similar; but the curious part of the argument of hon. gentlemen opposite occurs when you show the terrible position into which the farmers in the United States have When you point to their sufferings and losses, the answer comes back quick and sharp, that it is due to the protective policy of the United States. So that they get all their benefits from partial free trade, and all their losses from the protective tariff. I leave hon, gentlemen opposite to reconcile those positions, because they instruct us so much as to the internal affairs of the United States that it is only fair, before they bring us completely into that parlour, that they should explain those different features of the policy of that country, and its working. Then the hon, gentleman passes glibly over a very important subject, upon which we would like to have a good deal more light thrown than has been thrown in this debate, and that subject is the loss of revenue which would accrue under unrestricted reciprocity. The hon, gentleman hugs very fondly the delusion that it would be only the $8,000,000 which Canada would lose under his policy. hardly fair, because he knows that our contention is, not only that we should lose that amount directly, but that the indirect loss would be fully as large, if we were to deal with the United States to the extent they intend we shall and hon. gentlemen opposite are willing we shall. If we are to overthrow our own manufactories and allow the Americans to control this market at their own sweet will, our loss, instead of being $8,000,000, would amount to $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 a year or more. The hon, gentleman then takes a most extraordinary argument, and I have not heard any reason advanced why he should treat the subject in the way he does. He talks of what surpluses we can dispense with; but he must remember that what our Government now raises in the way of duties is raised on a tariff which will bear no semblance to the tariff under unrestricted reciprocity. hon, gentleman takes the surpluses into calculation that are realized on a tariff against the whole world, and uses them in connection with a tariff which will affect only the few articles that will come into this country from other countries outside of the United States when we have unrestricted reciprocity. Reference was made by him to an English journal, I think the Times, concerning another branch of the subject. I will, before closing, give him a reference to that subject which is pregnant with very important points. It says the situation is complicated and forecasts the future, and takes precisely the same view that we do of the momentous question, which was raised, whether honestly or for mere party tactics, in the last fight by the Opposition; but before quoting that article I would like to give the hon. gentleman the views of a paper referred to often by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), the London Economist, a free trade paper, a paper holding and carrying out the views that hon, gentlemen opposite are now and then in the habit of making love to. That paper, in discussing the policy of unrestricted reciprocity, says:

"But this would not be free trade. The American manufacturers would be protected against the only effective competition they have to fear—the competition, that is of British manufacturers. They would, therefore, be under no compulsion to lower their prices, but would work up to the full limit of price which the tariff on British imports permitted. Thus the million and a-half pounds sterling or so which the revenue lost would go, not to the Canadian consumers, but to the American manufacturers, with the result that the Canadian tax-payers would be compelled to pay the amount twice over. They would have to continue to pay it in the price of the goods, and then taxes to a similar amount would have to be imposed to make good the gap in the revenue. Nor would the process end there. To whatever extent the American products were successful, with the aid of the tariff, in displacing British goods, to that extent the loss of the revenue would be increased. What the people of Canada are asked to do, therefore, is to pay to American manufacturers some millions of money which now go into their treasury, and to tax themselves to make up the loss."

That is the opinion of a paper well calculated to give an opinion from the hon. gentleman's standpoint of political economy. But why is it the leader of the Opposition made no reference to the views of his allies in the United States? There has been a reference to that subject, and I do not intend to go further into it, beyond reminding the hon. gentleman that in December, 1890, when speaking at Halifax, he was not ashamed of the views of the hon, gentlemen in the United States who, quite within their right, properly avowed and candidly told their constituents that their one object was to obtain commercial supremacy in North America and ultimately to obtain commercial union. men whom the hon. gentleman was not then afraid to call his allies in Canadian politics were Senators Sherman, Blair, Mr. Hitt, Mr. Butterworth and the Boards of Trade of New England. Those were the gentlemen with whom he was going to co-operate, and, as he said:

"Have we not the pledges of such statesmen as Senators Sherman, Blair, Mr. Hitt, Mr. Butterworth and the Boards of Trade of the New England States?"

The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) gave at length, and in a manner which no one could fail to understand, the views these gentlemen in the States entertained, and it is because we believe these men are sincere, and because we know they are the only allies hon, gentlemen opposite have in promoting their policy, that we fear the dangers I have mentioned. I fear that in this attempt to cover the different points taken by the hon. gentleman I have occupied a great deal too much of the time of the House. But I would ask, since I have taken this much time, the House to permit me to give, not at great length, a reference from the London Times. The hon. gentleman referred to this organ of public opinion in England in connection with the opinion as to the effect of discrimination, to show that we could discriminate if we pleased, so far as the mother country was concerned. For instance, there is the statement, I believe, of Mr. Chamberlain, which has been alluded to often by Mr. Wiman, that, of course, we could do it. But supposing we couldand we do not argue that point-all the consequences would be, nevertheless, we claim they will be on this side. such have the power to discriminate and may be permitted to exercise it; it may not be considered wise at this time, in the history of the mother country, to prevent a large growing colony pursuing any trade policy it, pleases. But this does not remove any of the difficulties that would follow the operation of such a policy. This does not remove the objection that under it we would not enjoy the benefits which we now derive from our connection with the mother But the opinion of the English people, so far as the organs of public opinion can give it, is in the line, I must say, that we must count the cost of the step we take, and that such a step means, if it means anything, as Mr. Blake has put it, ultimately political union with the United States; and during the contest a leader of the London Times of February 19th, treating this matter dispassionately, looking upon it, and rightly so, as affecting the interests of the Empire, was couched in these words:

"In this struggle the ultimate issue is whether Canada shall remain a portion of the British Empire or shall enter the American Union. We do not mean that this issue shall be finally decided by the general election now pending. It takes more than one election to decide issues of this magnitude, and the Liberals would find, if they secured power, that they were only at the beginning of their task. But it is nevertheless true that the issue underlying the struggle for commercial union with the States is whether Canada shall become a part of the American Union or shall remain subject to the British Crown. Opposition leaders are loud in proclaiming that they desire only unrestricted reciprocity with America, that is to say, a commercial amalgamation whereby Canada shall have free trade with the States, as the States have free trade among themselves, and shall join with the States in erecting an impassable fiscal barrier against the rest of the world, which for all practical purposes maims the British Empire."

And in support of that inference, I would refer to the speech of the hon, gentleman, delivered to-day, as to the meaning of his policy of discrimination against the mother country:

"Unrestricted reciprocity involves political union, as the only arrangement that can secure for Canada any portion of the commercial advantages reciprocity is sup-posed to offer. The Americans know this very well, and are frank enough to make it the basis of all their disser-tations. Canadians also must know it well, but those who desire annexation, pretend that it has no necessary connection with unlimited reciprocity."

Then again :

"When this point is cleared up there remains the question whether we can expect Canada to forego substantial advantages merely because they involve separation from advantages merely because they involve separation from the British Empire. For our own part, we must say that we do not expect Canada to forego permanently any really great and substantial advantage in order to gratify a sentiment. But the Canadian people ought to be fairly dealt with by their politicians, and not jockeyed into annexation on false pretences. Let the advantages be set forth, but let it be also plainly stated that in order to gain them the sentiment of loyalty to the Crown must be sacrificed, and with it some not insignificant benefits."

And, therefore, I say, whether the leader of the Opposition be serious or whether he be not, in the argument he has addressed to the people of this country to-day, when he has pointed the way to Washington almost in direct terms, regardless of the views expressed by the member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) to his constituents, regardless of the views expressed by many of his supporters that they would never agree to discriminate against the products of Great Britain, not merely because of the question of trade which it would involve, but because of the danger which it threatened to the integrity of the Empire and the almost certainty that our present happy relations with the mother country could not be continued after that, the country must weigh seriously the words which have fallen from the lips of the hon. gentleman to-day. Take them as they have been construed by me, take them as they have been construed by his own late leader, and as they have been construed by many men who wish to work in harmony with him in the Reform party, and their significance is momentous. It is such as to corroborate the worst fears the Conservative party entertained as to the issues which were involved in the late fight. I say that, after that speech, no matter how distorted unrestricted reciprocity may appear, no matter how inconsistent the hon. gentleman's platform appears compared with the platform he put before the people at the last election, this much is announced: that, whether we preserve our connection with the mother country or sever it, the Liberal party are pledged to a trade policy which must interfere with our relations with the mother land, and which will ultimately throw our trade into the hands of a foreign power.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has laboured at very great length to attempt to convince this House that there was a new departure in the speech which was delivered by my hon, leader this afternoon. listened to his speech very carefully, and I listened to a number of his speeches during the last election when he made his tour through the Maritime Provinces, and I am unable to discover the slightest deviation in principle between the speech which he has delivered to-night and those which he delivered during the last election. If the electorate had any ground of complaint in regard to the issues which were presented to them at the last election they certainly had no ground of complaint as to the issues which were tendered to them by the Opposition. The Opposition party went to the country proclaiming a clear, definite and distinct policy. It might commend itself or it might not to the people, but it had at least the benefit of clearness. The Government went to the country, having for ten years opposed every form of reciprocity and every motion which was brought forward in favour of reciprocity, partial or complete, declaring that not only would they enter into negotiations, but that they then had opened negotiations with a view to obtaining reciprocal trade with the people across the border; and I venture the assertion, that if they had not coupled that dishonest outline of their policy with the other issues upon which they went to the country they would have been returned here in a lamentable minority. My hon, friend who has resumed his seat knows that they could not have gone to the Maritime Provinces on their record of the last five years, or on the statement that the National Policy has been successful, or on the ground that their fiscal policy has been for the benefit of the country; but they were obliged to tack on to that statement that they had opened negotiations with the United States, and that, if they were returned again to power, they hoped to be able to complete those negotiations satisfactorily. hon, gentleman opened his speech by stating that the Opposition were trying by this debute to prejudice in advance the negotiations which are going to take place at Washington. We are not responsible for this debate. The Government have challenged this debate. The member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) was put forward to move this resolution, and the Opposition are not afraid now or at any other time when they are challenged on their fiscal policy to defend it either in this House or out of this House. The hon, gentleman took up more than half his speech in endeavouring to prove that the Government, when they told the people that negotiations for reciprocity nated with Mr. Blaine or with the people of the United States, told the truth. not going to wade through this blue-book in order to disprove his assertion. He has quoted page after page and paragraph after paragraph from the despatches contained in that book in his weak and lamentable attempt to prove that assertion. I will leave him to the tender mercies of the High Commissioner, and, if he should go as one of the commissioners to Washington next October, he will have to do as the High Commissioner did. When he enters the room of the Secretary of State he will have to eat his own words and he will have to eat humble pie to begin with. We have from his own pen the statement of the High Commissioner as to what he had to do when he went to open negotia-He told him tions with Mr. Blaine in April last. in so many words: It is true that Sir John Macdonald and myself made use of that argument to the people of Canada, but I take the first opportunity of withdrawing all those statements and admitting that the commencement of these negotations came from the Canadian people, notwithstanding the denials which I have made, and Sir John Macdonald has made, and every member of the Government has made. A more humiliating position Canada was never placed in. Listen to the words of the representative of Canada as he enters the room of Mr. Blaine:

and that, upon that being communicated to him by Sir Julian Pauncefote, he had expressed his willingness to open negotiations for reciprocal trade arrangements between Canada and the United States, assisted by delegates from the Dominion Government; the negotiations to be informal, and to a certain extent of a confidential nature, until they could assume a more formal character, if any result were arrived at."

Now, we have the High Commissioner, as he proceeds into the office of the Secretary of State, declaring that he withdraws all he has said on the platform, all the misleading statements he has made when he went round at the behest of the Government to mislead the people of this country, and he withdraws also the statements of Sir John Macdonald, and admits that the initiation of these proceedings came from Canada, and not from the United States. I allege that in that humiliating confession and withdrawal the High Commissioner placed Canada in a position more humiliating than she ever occupied in any negotiation in which she was previously concerned with the United States. I tell the hon, gentleman that, when he or his colleagues go to Washington in October next, they will have to repeat the words of Sir Charles Tupper. They will have to eat humble pie as he had to eat it, and if the hon, gentleman goes he will have to do more-he will have to withdraw some of the very bellicose expressions he used in that famous Minute of Council which he and the Minister of Justice signed, and which is embodied in this blue-book, in which he told the Prime Minister and Government of Great Britain that the avowed object of the McKinley Bill was to strike at Canadian industry, and to sap the loyalty of the Canadian people. Sir, the hon, gentleman made a statement there that he will have to withdraw when he goes down to Washington. That was not the avowed object of the Bill and he knows it. It has been stated time and again that the avowed object of the Bill was to encourage the domestic manufactures of the United States. The hon. gentleman, therefore, has committed himself, not only in that state document, but in other places, to statements which he will have to withdraw before he is allowed to open negotiations, as the High Commissioner had to withdraw statements which he had made when he went there a short time ago. Now, the hon, gentleman is the first Cabinet Minister who has spoken on this trade question since the Finance Minister made his Budget speech. He discussed at some length the policy of the Opposition; he dissected that policy, and showed what a terrible policy it was, and how ruinous it would be to the interests of But did he tell his followers behind him what kind of a policy for reciprocal free trade he is going to offer when he goes there? Have they given the hon, gentlemen who form the Government carte blanche to go to Washington and negotiate what treaty they please? Are the great Conservative party, a large number of whom are opposed to any reciprocity at all, willing to entrust these gentlemen with a commission to negotiate "I told Mr. Blaine that I wished, in the outset, to recognize the accuracy of the statement in his letter to Sir Julian Pauncefote, which I had seen, in reference to the initiation of the negotiations regarding reciprocal trade arrangements between the two countries; that I believe it arose from the negotiations which had recently taken place between the United States and Newfoundland, and the desire expressed by Canada to be included in any arrangements such as had been understood to have been contemplated by the United States and Newfoundland, Mr. Davies (P.E.I.) at Washington, without knowing anything of the lines on which they are going to proceed? Or are they thoroughly satisfied in their own face of the declarations made by Mr. Blaine, in face of the repeated statements made by the leaders of the Republican party, no policy of reciprocity such as they suggest is feasible, or can be carried out at all? Sir, we are asked, before we discuss the question of reciprocity, to give our adherence to a resolution which has been submitted by the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins), which asks us to approve of the fiscal policy of the present Government, because, for sooth, that policy permits the free importation of raw materials into this Well, Sir, the innocence of the hon. member for L'Islet may be pardoned, inasmuch as he is a new member, and has not sat here before; but if he had sat in this House a few years ago he would have seen the late Minister of Finance rise in his place and propose to this House and succeed in carrying through it, a policy directly the opposite of that which he has set out here. Are the raw materials which enter into this country admitted duty free? Why, did not we hear a year or two ago that in order to complete the great scheme of the National Policy, it was necessary to add to the taxes upon raw material, that the chief raw materia. which is imported into this country and enters so largely into our manufactures must be taxed, the taxes upon it must be doubled and trebled in order to promote native in-What about the article of iron? Is the hon, gentleman not aware that that is a raw pro-Both iron and coal are heavily taxed for the avowed purpose of encouraging the iron industries of this country, and the result was that so far from ! doubling those industries, those taxes have had the contrary effect. The Trade and Navigation Returns show that they have exacted from the people of this country, in increased duties upon iron alone, nearly $1,000,000 per year since these new taxes were imposed; and this House is coolly asked to assent to the proposition that the present fiscal policy of the Government involves the free importation of raw material. Why, Sir, it shows a deliberate misstatement, on a most important point, in the very start-out of the resolution. Then we are asked next to say:

"That the liberal aid given to public works and to steamship lines has resulted in the development of our resources and our commerce."

We are asked to make this declaration in face of the evidence which has been taken for the past six weeks before the Committee sitting upstairs, exposing a rottenness and corruption in the administration of the public affairs of this country that can find no parallel outside the city of New York. Sir, the hon, gentleman, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, accused my hon, friend, the leader of the Opposition, with prejudging the case pending before the Committee of Privileges and Elections. The hon, gentleman prejudged no case, he passed no judgment upon any individual, he did not say whether the head of the department was guilty or But there are certain facts which we all admit, which the country admits, which have been proven and which there is no attempt to dispute, and that is that corruption was rampant in the department, from the highest down to the lowest official in it. Whether the head of the department is guilty or not, no one has asserted, none has passed judgment either upon him in his per-there is a man standing in this House, with the responsibility of a Minister at least, who will deny in the face of the evidence given. But in face of this rottenness, in face of this corruption, and with the squandering of millions of money which it has been proved have been squandered during the past ten years, since this Government have been in power, we are very coolly asked to assert our continued confidence in the manner in which the public works of the country have been carried on. Sir, it may have advanced the credit of this country, but if so, it has advanced its credit at the expense of its honour, and I for one, under these circumstances, would be loth to record my vote in favour of that statement of the resolution. Sir, we are then asked to extol the management of the finances of this country. In the first place he states, in so many words, that there has been no increase in the public debt in the past two years at least. The resolution ignores entirely the fact that since the present Government came into power-1 speak of the Government that have been in power for the last twelve years—they have increased the public debt of this country over one hundred million dollars. We are asked to subscribe to a statement that during the past two years they have not increased the public debt at all. Sir, the statement itself is inaccurate and untrue. fact that they have increased the public debt one hundred millions during the past twelve years is left out altogether, as an unimportant fact, and the statement that they have not increased the public debt during the last two years is in The total debt in 1878 was itself inaccurate. $175,000,000 in round figures and at the present time it is $286,000,000. I find, that two years ago, the gross public debt was $284,500,000, whereas to-day it is $286,000,000. The hon, gentleman asks the House, in face of these figureswhich he could not have taken the trouble to look at-to assert as true what the figures state to be false. Sir, there has been an increase in the net public debt, from $234,500,000 in 1888 to $237,-500,000 in 1890, an increase of $3,000,000 in the public debt during that time. We have nearly every paragraph of this resolution bristling with inaccuracies and misstatements, and yet I will venture the assertion, that notwithstanding that fact, a majority, or a number at any rate, of the hon, gentlemen sitting on that side of the House, will coolly stand up and record their votes in favour of statements the inaccuracy of which they can judge by turning to the Public Accounts. that is a small matter. My hon, friends smile over there; they have swallowed the camel, they are not going to strain at the gnat. We were asked next to give our assent to the policy of reducing the duties on articles of universal use:

"(4) of the policy of relieving from duty articles of universal use, such as tea, coffee and sugar (in respect of the latter the consumer being freed from taxation to the extent of three and one-half millions during the present session), and of the mode of meeting the larger part of the loss of revenue thereby caused by the exercise of economy in expenditure."

and that is that corruption was rampant in the department, from the highest down to the lowest official in it. Whether the head of the department is guilty or not, no one has asserted, none has passed judgment either upon him in his personal capacity, or as a departmental head. But that the department is corrupt, I do not think the less said about the relief given to the tax-payers by lessening the duties on sugar the better, because the fact of the matter is simply this, that for the past three or four years we have been told in this House that we must pour out our money like water to build up a trade between this country and the West Indies. We did so, and voted $100,000 a year in the form of subsidies to build up trade between this country and the West Indies and exchange our products for theirs. What did the Minister of He makes sugar free below 14 Dutch Finance do? standard, and he knows that the very class of sugars which the Jamaica people could send here is above 14 Dutch standard and he taxes it four-tifths of a cent. The hon, gentleman knows that instead of this policy being calculated to develop the West India trade, it is calculated to destroy it. He knows it, for he heard the statement from an hon, member to my right, that one of the largest sugar growers in Jamaica, hearing that the duties were to be taken off sugar, came here for the purpose of making an arrangement to export his sugar here and purchase with the price he obtained the products of this country in exchange, and he found that the quality of his sugar was above 14 Dutch standard, being 15 and 16, and although he could get it into the United States free of duty, he found Canada placed a duty on it. He found that he could not trade with this country, because the Government had determined only to allow low grades of sugar to be imported free, and the better grades of unrefined, which were capable of being used without being refined, were excluded by this policy. There never was a policy more calculated to deter and prevent the building up of trade between this country and the West Indies than the one which it is proposed we should endorse. I for one will not We are told in the motion that the loss of do it. revenue is being met by economy in the expenditure. It is amusing. Look at the Public Accounts and see what economy there has been in the expen-When this party came into power in 1878 the expenditure was $24,455,000 per annum, and they showed their economy by bringing the fiscal expenditure last year up to $35,994,000, or an increased expenditure of about $11,500,000. hon, gentlemen will come here and ask us to affirm the general proposition that the loss of revenue is to be met by economy in the expenditure; and a Government which has gone on increasing expenditure year by year with a recklessness which marks it as the most extravagant Government Canada has ever had, induces one of its supporters to come forward and ask this House to support the Government, because, if there is nothing else to be said in its favour, it is an economical Government. we are asked, as a last proposition, to condemn a scheme known as commercial union, which I have not heard formulated or proposed to this House or this country by any political party in it. they do that? Simply to carry out the deception practised during the last year or two. I have never yet met an opponent on the platform who has not sought to make the people believe that the policy of the Liberal party is one of commercial union, is one of handing over to the United States supreme and sole control over our tariff and the assimilation They call that of the tariffs of the two countries. They criticize it, not because commercial union commercial union, in terms, has ever been proposed here, not because it is the policy which the Liberal party has heretofore formulated and now formulate again for the acceptance of the people, but because they think they can catch some votes by doing it. The day may come in this country, for ought I know, when we may have to grapple with that policy of commercial union. It has many advantages; it has great simplicity.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hon. gentlemen seem to think that the policy of commercial union has no advantages whatever. It has disadvantages I acknowledge, very great disadvantages, and one of the great reasons why it was not adopted was that it gave the neighbouring republic control over our tariff, and for that reason we refused to accept it as our policy, and accepted unrestricted reciprocity instead. Why is not that policy condemned here? Why do not hon, gentlemen join issue with us on unrestricted reciprocity, which is the only policy we present for the acceptance of the people? Why do hon, gentlemen opposite condemn a policy that is not before us? The answer is that it is for one object alone, and that is to endeavour to deceive and humbug the people. They will not discuss the question on its merits, disassociated from claptrap and other accessories which they throw around it. They try to make it hazy and misty, they endeavour to make the people afraid of it as a bogy or bugbear. Although it has difficulties, as every change of commercial policy must have difficulties connected with it, still they are not insuperable, and the advantages and benefits greatly outweigh the difficulties and disadvantages. While I shall discuss this question I propose not to do so at any great length, as the House has already had the advantage of having had the question discussed very thoroughly. We have had figures from the blue-books skilfully massed on both sides and able speeches delivered, and I do not propose to go over the ground which has been so ably traversed by my hon, friends behind me and by hon, gentlemen opposite. But I may be pardoned if I refer to a personal matter. I know it is not generally considered right to drag personal matters into a discussion. But I have heard time and again, not once but six or seven times, from those who have discussed unrestricted reciprocity a statement made that the hon, member for Queen's has proved it to be an impracticable proceeding. A speech delivered by me in Charlottetown is referred to, in which it is said I condemned the whole scheme as impracticable, and said the Americans would never be arrant fools enough to accept it. That speech is very simply explained. It was made before any proposition for unrestricted reciprocity was submitted in this House. It was made at a time when the question first came before the people, before it was thoroughly understood by the people, and when it was discussed before the board of trade there were a large number of members who were opposed to commercial union, because commercial union they said would vest the power of making and unmaking our tariff in the American common-But they said they would prefer unrestricted reciprocity, and if we had that we must knock down the Customs barriers between the two countries. I pointed out that if we had unrestricted reciprocity, we would maintain control of our own tariff and if at the same time we knocked down the Customs barriers between Canada and the United States, as against foreign goods, a state of matters would result which no Government in the United States would tolerate for one hour. I said Canada might have a 20 per cent. tariff and the United States a 45 per cent. tariff; and if you have no Customs barriers for foreign goods, all such goods would come through Montreal, and do you suppose the people in the United States are fools enough to tolerate such a thing for a moment?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That commends itself to hon, gentlemen opposite because they cheer it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Settle that with your leader.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that a condemnation of unrestricted reciprocity? The Minister of Customs sneers. Does he understand the proposition of unrestricted reciprocity?

Mr. BOWELL. No, nor anybody else.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is, if your courtesy, your well known courtesy, your distinguished courtesy, will permit me to finish my sentence before vour answer.

Mr. BOWELL. Your distinguished courtesy in saying that I was sneering.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am asking the hon. gentleman if he will kindly permit me to put the question: Has he ever known the proposition of unrestricted reciprocity as defined from this side of the House, to involve the total abolition of the Customs line ?

Mr. BOWELL. It never was defined yet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He never has. He knows that under unrestricted reciprocity the Customs line must be retained as against foreign importations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Your leader does not say so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My leader did say so.

When? Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He says so now, and he My hon, friend knows that has said so always. unless the tariffs of the two countries are alikeand it does not necessarily follow, although from indications which I see on the other side of the line I hope the time will come when their tariff will come down to ours, and I believe it will-but it does not necessarily follow that the tariffs will be alike, and if the tariffs are not alike you must have a Customs line for foreign goods imported into the But, Sir, referring to the speech that I am replying to, and in order to show hon. gentlemen that the position I took then is the same position which I take now, I will point out that at the close of that debate before the Charlottetown Board of Trade, I moved the following resolution, which I think hon, gentlemen will see is in accord with the resolution proposed by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) a few days ago :-

"That this Board warmly approves of reciprocal free trade with the United States on the broadest possible basis, including the abolition of the restriction on the coasting trade and the transfer of vessel property and embracing the concession to the Americans of the common right with our fishermen to use our fisheries."

Now, Sir, what is the history of this question, and why do the Liberal party adhere so strongly and advocate so warmly this policy of unrestricted reciprocity? A few years ago when we moved in the matter of reciprocal trade with the United States in this House, we did not advocate unrestricted reciprocity, because at that time we believed and we hoped and we were told that a more limited measure of reciprocity was possible. We moved in that direction, we asked the Government opposite to send delegates to Washington to ascertain of reciprocity could be obtained; a measure of reciprocity such as we had from 1854 to 1866. I venture to say that so far as the Liberal party of this country are concerned, a very large majority of them would be satisfied if we had the old reciprocity treaty of 1854 renewed. They would be satisfied if a treaty such as that proposed, and very nearly successfully negotiated, by the late Hon. George Brown was carried into effect. We do not desire unrestricted reciprocity because it is absolutely the essence of all that is good, but we advocate and support unrestricted reciprocity because we believe it is the only possible measure of reciprocity that is obtainable. In 1884, when a resolution was moved—I believe I had the honour to move it myself-in favour of a more limited reciprocity; in favour of a reciprocity such as the hon, gentlemen deluded the people of this country last year into the idea that they were going to get; when they stated that they were going down to Washington, not to get unrestricted reciprocity, but a more limited form of reciprocity on the basis of a treaty of 1854; when that resolution was moved, what did Sir John Macdonald say at that time speaking officially, not on the plat-form, but speaking in this House, where he knew his words would be weighed not only by the people of this country, but by the responsible minister of the adjoining country about which he was speaking. He was referring to the time when Mr. Brown went to Washington, and he said:

And I believe that the feeling which then existed still exists, and that you will never get a treaty between the United States and Canada for reciprocal trade in the natural productions of the two countries. The Americans natural productions of the two countries. The Americans said—whether truly or not I do not know—that it was a nominal reciprocity, that all the advantages were on the side of Canada. We had no market of sufficient importance to offer to them for their productions of grain and cereals and fisheries. We, on the other hand, had to gain everything by their markets being open for the articles which were specified in the treaty. That feeling, I believe, still exists, and unless the United States shall come at some time or other to a conclusion that they would be willing to enter upon a reciprocity treaty not only for our willing to enter upon a reciprocity treaty not only for our natural productions but for our manufactures as well as our natural productions, we will never have a treaty. I am quite satisfied the United States will not agree, the country will not agree, the voice of the country will be against a repetition of the treaty of 1854."

Sir, the English language is not capable of making any stronger statements than was made then. told this House and he told this country, that the obtaining of a limited form of reciprocity with the United States was an impossibility, that it was nonsense, and that it would be a farce to send delegates to Washington to try to negotiate such a treaty. He told us that to get a treaty you must include manufactured goods as well as natural products, and that meant unrestricted reciprocity. He stated that was the only possible form of reciprocity that could be got, and he stated it on his authority as the leader of the Government, from an experience of some twenty years, during which time he said he had discussed this matter formally and informally with men on the other side of the line. He knew the thing was impossible, he knew it was only wasting our time to try to get a more limited treaty, and therefore he said: You have to turn your attention to this; if you want a treaty at all, it must be one embracing manufactured articles as well as natural products. That declaration of the leader of the Government did a great deal to crystalwhether it was true or not that a smaller measure lize public opinion in this country and in the Liberal

we found we could get nothing else; when we found that unless we went in for that, we could not get a treaty at all, then we determined that although it | denied it. had difficulties in the way, difficulties which were not by any means small, still the overwhelming advantages to all parts of this country were such, that we would be recreant to our duty as representatives of the people if we failed to advocate that policy. Now, we are told to-day by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, that the two great objections to our scheme are, in the first place, that it will create a great loss of revenue which we have not shown how we can supply; and in the next place, that it involves discrimination against Great Britain. That is not news; we knew that from the time it was first proposed. I have a speech here that the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) made when he first introduced this policy in the House, and it contains statements as clear as the English language can make them, pointing out that these difficulties existed and were to be overcome. But, Sir, what is this policy of discrimination, of which so much seems to be made by the other side of the House? Is it a new policy? Why, Sir, I find away back in the year 1869 that our right to discriminate, where the interests of Canada required it, was asserted by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald in no ambiguous language. Our right to discriminate was not only asserted but successfully asserted in the treaty of 1854, and that treaty discriminated against Great Britain in some of the articles, although there were very few of them; but still the principle was there and the principle was admitted after a learned discussion between Sir John Rose and the English Secretary of State for the Colonies. Passages from this discussion were read by me in this House some years ago, and I will not repeat them now; but I say, that after embodying the principle of discri-mination in the old treaty of 1854, the Government of Sir John A. Maedonald, when that treaty expired, did not scruple to go further and to enter upon the project of a treaty having as one of its terms the assimilation of the tariff of the two countries. The statement was made by Mr. Huntington in his place in this House, and has been read by myselfsome years ago, as well as during the debate the other day, but I will take the opportunity of reading it again, as I think it is very important in this connection. Mr. Huntington said:

"I know something about the memorandum entered into by the contracting parties in regard to the preliminary negotiations, and I have my information from sources which I believe to be reliable and trustworthy. And I say that in the preliminary negotiations between Hon. Mr. Rose and Mr. Secretary Fish it was agreed that the manufactures of both countries should be admitted duty free, and hon, gentlemen cannot deny it."

Sir, there was unrestricted reciprocity. quoted that statement a few years ago, I challenged the Government to bring down the papers if the statement of Mr. Huntington was not true; but the papers have never been brought down, and no Cabinet Minister dare deny the truthfulness of that historical statement, that in the year 1869 Sir John Macdonald entrusted his Finance Minister with power to enter into a treaty which amounted to unrestricted reciprocity, because it admitted the manufactures of one country into the other duty is advantageous or disadvantageous, whether it Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

party in favour of unrestricted reciprocity. When free, and necessarily involved discrimination against Great Britain.

> Mr. FOSTER. Two Cabinet Ministers have

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I challenge the hongentleman now to bring down the papers. This is an important matter, a vital matter. Mr. Huntington said the papers were there, and he was supported in his statement by the hon, member for East York in the debate in 1870, and I think that hon, gentleman is not accustomed to make use of hap-hazard statements in serious matters connected with affairs of state. The late Hon. Sir John Macdonald was challenged in this House time and again to bring down the papers if that statement was not true; but we have not been furnished with them. But we find more than that. In 1875, when the late Hon. George Brown was sent to Washington, he was put in possession of all negotiations which had taken place between Canada and the United States previous to that time; and he has made a statement with reference to the fact to which I am now referring, in connection with the negotiations of 1869. He made that statement from the facts he gathered from the public documents put into his hands. What is his statement? Does it corroborate that of Mr. Huntington or not? He says:

"In 1869 formal negotiations were entered into with the American Government, and the project of a treaty was presented for discussion. The negotiations continued from July, 1869, to March, 1870. The project included the cession for a term of years of our fisheries to the United States, the entargement of our canals, the free enjoyment of the navigation of the St. Lawrence, the assimilation of our Customs and Excise duties, and some other propositions."

There is the statement made by the late Hon. George Brown after his return from Washington not speaking as a private member, but speaking officially as the accredited representative of the late Liberal Government. He was authorized informally by this Government, but formally he held the commission from Her Majesty's Government to negotiate; and speaking with all the authority he possessed in that character, and with the knowledge he had gathered from the official documents which had been put into his hands, he stated deliberately that the Government had entered into a project which had included the assimilation of the Customs and Excise duties of Canada and the United States; and that meant commercial, union in so many words. So that this scheme which the hon. Minister of Marine says involves the disintegration of the Empire is not a novelty. The hon. member for South Oxford must not claim the honour of originating this scheme. He is only copying a project agreed to by the late Sir John Macdonald, and the late Sir John Rose—a project the negotiations for which were commenced in July, 1869, and ended in March, 1870, and the preliminary negotiations for which involved this assimilation of the Customs and Excise duties of both countries. facts are in the records of this country at the present time; and we have the authority of such men as Mr. Huntington, the hon. member for East York and the Hon. George Brown for the statements we are making; and I do not think there are many men in this country who would repudiate the authority of those three gentlemen. So that we must understand that this scheme, whether it involves the disintegration of the Empire or not, whether it has the effect of severing our connection with the mother country or not, is not a scheme which originated with us, but one which received the imprimatur of the late Prime Minister himself, and was very nearly carried into effect by But as for discrimination, we hear hon, gentlemen opposite talk as if they never discriminated at all. I have shown that that principle was involved in the Treaty of 1854. I have shown that our right to introduce it was held by Sir John Rose: I have shown that it was acted upon by the late Sir John Macdonald to the fullest extent possible when he finished the preliminary negotiations for the assimilation of our Customs and Excise duties with those of the United States in 1869 and 1870. And I say more than that. I say that the present Government, superabundantly loyal as they claim to be, loyal beyond Englishmen, loyal beyond the Queen herself, singing "God Save the Queen "after every division in this Housethat these hon, gentlemen continue this discrimination against Great Britain to this day-not theoretical, but practical discrimination. Why, turn up the Trade and Navigation Returns. It is true they do not say that a particular article imported from the United States to this country shall bear a smaller rate of duty than a similar article imported from Great Britain; but, taking the class of articles which we import from the States, and the class which we import from England, they have deliberately placed, and for years maintained, a lower scale of duty on those which we import from the States than upon those which we import from Great Britain.

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon, gentleman deny that?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He will deny anything.

Mr. BOWELL. That is your usual courtesy.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was not speaking to the Minister of Customs.

Mr. BOWELL. Well, I was speaking to you.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I hold in my hand the Trade and Navigation Returns, and I see that last year we imported dutiable goods from Great Britain to the amount of $33,267,000, on which we paid duty to the amount of $9,576,965, which was at the rate of 29 per cent., and we imported dutiable goods from the United States to the amount of $30,575,000, on which we paid duty to the amount of $8,126,625, which was at the rate of 26 per cent. In addition, we imported free goods from Great Britain to the amount of $10,122,520, and from the United States to the amount of $21,716,000. On all the goods, both dutiable and free, we paid a duty upon those from Great Britain of 22½ per cent., and upon those from the United States of 15½ per cent. Is there any discrimination there? I am not talking about theoretical discrimination, but practical and actual discrimination. I say that, although you take very good care not to single out a specific article and say it shall pay a different duty when imported from Great Britain than when imported from the United States, yet, as a matter of fact, you pay less duty were as follows:-- on the dutiable and other goods combined imported from the United States than on the goods imported from Great Britain. You discriminate and have discriminated for years against Great Britain. But it is said that this scheme of unrestricted reciprocity necessarily involves direct discrimination.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). Direct taxation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, but direct discrimination, and I do not denythat. I admit there are evils connected with this policy. We have never shrank from denying what Mr. Blaine said, that we cannot have commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity without discriminating against Great Britain to some extent. But how far is that going to work? Is it going to be a very serious and practical matter? I do not think it is. Hon. gentlemen will find that, after we have unrestricted reciprocity, we will continue to import from Great Britain the same goods that we import now. During the late campaign I went into one of the largest wholesale dry goods houses in the Maritime Provinces, and I spoke to one of the members of the firm about this question, which was then on everybody's lips. I said to him: Supposing we had unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, would you continue to import from Great Britain the same kinds and quantities of goods you now do? Well, he said, that is a question I could not answer you off-hand, as I would have to look into the matter in my office, and could only give you an answer in a day or two. Well, I asked him to look the matter up; and in a couple of days I returned for an answer. He told me that he had examined into the question, he had seen what goods he imported, and looked over the invoices and compared the invoices with the quotations for these goods in the United States, and he had no hesitation in saying that, with the exception of printed cottons, he would continue to import from Great Britain, under unrestricted reciprocity, the same goods he was then importing. I asked him his reasons, and he replied: Because I can buy them cheaper in England. Let any man look over the United States returns to-day, and what will he He will find that, notwithstanding their tariff is very much higher than ours, the United States have to go to England and purchase very largely all the classes of goods there which they can buy cheaper than they can manufacture themselves. In 1887 the United States imported from Great Britain to the value of $165,000,000, or 24 per cent. of their whole importations. In 1888, they imported to the value of $177,897,000. Supposing we had to-morrow the United States tariff applied to Canada, would we not continue to buy from Great Britain the very classes of goods that the Americans are compelled to get there? To hear hon. gentlemen opposite talk, one would imagine that, once we had unrestricted reciprocity with our neighbours, we would cease to import at all from Great Britain. I contend that, although there will be discrimination, it will not amount to onethird of what hon, gentlemen opposite say it will On the contrary, we practically will continue; import from Great Britain a great portion of the very goods we now import, because we will be able to buy them cheaper there than in the United States. On examining the returns, I find that the importations of the United States last year

28,917,000 48,999,000 Cotton goods......Iron and steel manufactures... Linen and flax manufactures... 53,282,000

Why do the United States continue to import the larger part of those goods from Great Britain? because they can buy them cheaper in Great Britain, despite their almost prohibitive tariff, than they can manufacture them. And if we were to go into anrestricted reciprocity to-morrow to the full extent mentioned by hon, gentlemen opposite, we would continue to buy from Great Britain a great part of the very goods we buy now, because we can buy them cheaper there than we can manufacture them, and if the Americans have to buy in Great Britain we will have to do likewise. I have shown you, therefore, Sir, that this matter of discrimination is one that need not frighten us. The question we come down to is this: Is it necessary for the interests of Canada that we should adopt a policy of reciprocity even if it does involve to some extent discrimination; and I say if it is necessary in Canada's interests that we should adopt this policy, we ought not to hesitate doing so, even if it should involve discrimination to a small extent against Great Britain. There should be no shirking of the question or beating about the bush at all, and hon. gentlemen will be forced by their constituents to do what in their hearts they know is to the benefit and advantage of Canada, even if accompanied to some extent by discrimination against their mother country. But it suits the purposes of hon, gentlemen now to shout: Oh, you are going to sever the tie that binds us to the motherland. My hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) read an extract from the Times, admitting the right of Canadians to adopt such a policy if they choose, saying that if they did so the Imperial Government would not interfere with their rights. I admit that I would be satisfied to have a treaty made on the lines of 1854, but if we cannot get that, as I know we cannot, I would be prepared to go on the lines marked out by the late Hon. George Brown in 1875, and if we could not get that—as we were told by the late Sir John Macdonald, by Mr. Blaine and by leading statesmen of the United States we could not-then, if it was necessary to go as far as unrestricted reciprocity, I would go that length, taking the evils connected with it, knowing that the advantages are ten times as great as the evils, and knowing that nothing will redeem this country so quickly from its depressed condition as a free system of reciprocal trade with our neighbours to the south. We are then told that another fatal defect in our policy is the loss of revenue; and hearing the arguments that have been propounded in this House day in and day out, on that subject, I have come to the conclusion that very many hon, gentlemen on that side of the House believe that this objection is a good one. There are some gentlemen over there with whom it is no use arguing, because they are opposed to any kind or scheme of reciprocity whatever. I put these gentlemen to one They do not want reciprocity either in natural products or manufactures; but those who are anxious for a fair system of reciprocity, but who are frightened that the loss of revenue is an insuperable obstacle, I would invite to consider a fact which they seem to have overlooked, and that is Mr. Davies, (P.E.I.)

procity, if brought into effect to-morrow, should be brought into effect in one day quoad manufactured goods as well as agricultural products. Does the hon. gentleman imagine that statesmen charged with the administration of the affairs of a country, in initiating a treaty of that kind, would not have regard to the vested interests in this country? Did not the free traders in Great Britain, when they introduced free trade, have regard to the vested interests in that country at the time? Did they introduce free trade in one day? Not at all. Hon. gentlemen who have read history know well that they had regard to the vested interests in that country, and that free trade was gradually introduced so as not to destroy, at one fell blow, interests which had been nurtured by the unnatural system of protection. Sir, we are opposed to protection in the ab-We believe that, stract and in the concrete. under that system, the Government have built up a large number of manufactures in this country that it is not desirable should be protected to the extent that they have been at the expense No doubt, some of of the public generally. these manufactures will go down when they are exposed to free trade, because they are unnaturally protected, but we do not propose that those people who have invested their money in these manufactures shall lose their investment at one fell Yet hon, gentlemen opposite argue that, if our policy were introduced, in one day natural products and manufactured products would cross the The introduction of this policy must ex line free. necessitate be a gradual one, and while we are hoping and seeking to bring about unrestricted reciprocity, it must be done by a gradual process and not by a mode involving the loss of money, and disturbance of trade indicated by hon. gentle-The introduction of this policy men opposite. must necessarily be gradual, so that, if you lose the duty, you will not lose it in toto the first year, but by a gradual process running over several years. If hon, gentlemen opposite carry reciprocity in natural products, they will lese the duty on the natural products. We propose the same If they can provide for that, we can do so also. Our difficulty quoad natural products would be no greater than theirs, and the difficulty quoad manufactured goods if their introduction were provided for by a gradual scale for three, four or five years, would not be anything like what those hon, gentlemen assert, and so their objection fades away. We predict that, under unrestricted reciprocity, the people of Canada will become wealthy, much more wealthy than they are now, that they will purchase more goods than they do now, and, as the barriers gradually go down, they will purchase more from England than they do now, and that there will be no difficulties which cannot be overcome by an economical expenditure of the public I acknowledge that, if, on the 1st July, the entire Customs duties between Canada and the United States were abolished, there would be great difficulty in raising sufficient revenue next year to meet our demands, but no such policy has been proposed and no such policy is before us. Let us consider what is reasonable and fair. I do not see why hon, gentlemen opposite should persist in arguing against what is not proposed, or should tilt at windmills: I do not see why they should put in clauses against commercial union which that it never was proposed that the scheme of reci- is not proposed, and should argue against certain supposed phases of unrestricted reciprocity which will not be found to exist when the scheme is carried into operation. I do not see, therefore, either in what is alleged against the scheme or in the scheme itself any such difficulties as hon. gen-The hon. member for South Oxford tlemen find. (Sir Richard Cartwright), who will have the task of carrying it out, says these difficulties can easily be overcome. I believe he is right. I believe the majority of the people agree with him, and I believe that it is only because hon. gentlemen opposite sprung an election upon the country and raised a false issue that they have succeeded in obtaining the majority they have. The hon, gentleman said that the nearer the cities were to the farm the better for the farmer. I do not want a better argument than that in favour of unrestricted reciprocity. I want to bring the great city of Boston, with 500,000 inhabitants, near to the Maritime Provinces, and to make it a port and a market for the products of those provinces, so that the farmers there will have this great and prosperous city brought to their doors.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the hon. gentleman laughing at? Is he scouting the proposition of the Minister of Marine? I do not see what difference it makes, from a commercial standpoint, whether a city is outside of our borders or inside of them, if you can have free interchange of products with that city and the farmer can get a market for his goods. If you go westward, you find, as far as the great Province of Ontario is concerned, that, under this scheme, the great cities to the south would be the markets for the farmers of that province, as the city of Boston would be for the farmers of the Maritime Provinces. The farmers of Ontario and Quebec would have opened to them the markets of Chicago, Milwaukee, Detroit, Cleveland, Oswego, Ogdensburg and other cities with populations aggregating two or three millions. If it is true that the nearer the city is to the farmer, the better it is for the farmer, why is it not true that, if you knock down the trade barriers between us and the United States, the farmer would benefit by having access to these great cities across the line? If a man is a benefactor who builds up a city near to the farm, why is he not a benefactor to this country who brings in the cities of the adjoining country and breaks down the barriers which prevent our farmers for reaching those markets? That is true in regard to the Maritime Provinces, it is true in regard to Ontario, and it will be true in regard to the North-West. You will bring St. Paul and Minneapolis within easy communication of the North West, and so will give communication of the North-West, and so will give the North-West a new market for her products. So far from breaking away from Great Britain or adopting a policy ruinous to us, we would be introducing a policy which would build up the interests of the farmers, the interests of the artizans, the fishing interests, and the manufacturing interests of this country, in a way that nothing else can We believe that the statements which have been made in regard to the mineral wealth of this country are not exaggerated. We were told the other day that the southern part of British Columbia has such an amount of undeveloped mineral wealth that it cannot be described. Why is it not developed? Will it not be developed if we have and as if that one statement alone was not enough unrestricted trade with the United States? Why, in such case, you will have money and men and markets - money to develop that industry, men to work the mines, and markets to which to send the product of those mines. It will do the same for the fisheries and for the farm, and I believe that the thinking men on the other side of the House, although they are bound by their party allegiance to oppose our policy, really believe that it is the only true policy which can make our country great and prosperous. I take up the Montreal Gazette, which is perhaps the ablest organ of the Government, and I find that the policy it lays down is not very far different from that which we advocate. What does it say in its issue of 4th May?

"If Mr. Blaine on the other hand, offered the kind of unrestricted reciprocity championed by Mr. Scriver, of Huntingdon, and many of the Liberal candidates of New Brunswick, at the late election, namely, free trade between the two countries with the retention by Canada of the absolute control of its tariff, the matter would still be canable of a satisfactory solution." capable of a satisfactory solution.

Sir, that is the very proposition embodied in our scheme—free trade between the two countries with the retention by Canada of the absolute control of That is unrestricted reciprocity in a its tariff. very few words, and you cannot have a better definition of it. That is the kind of reciprocity that the Montreal Gazette, and the tens of thousands of Conservatives for whom it speaks, advocates today; that is the kind of reciprocity we have been contending for; that is the kind of reciprocity that a very large majority of the people of this country want, and are prepared to vote for, but have been prevented from voting for by the malignant and persistent misrepresentations of hon. gentlemen opposite, and those misrepresentations are continued in the resolution they propose to-day which is intended to lead the people to believe that we are advocating a scheme of reciprocity which does not retain control of our tariff, that we are advocating a scheme of commercial union and propose to surrender the control of our tariff. Hon. gentlemen know that is not the case, and why do they continue to deceive the people? Sir, what hope of negotiating a treaty can our people have from the Finance Minister in the light of the speech he delivered to this House only a year ago? Hon. gentlemen know that he then came forward declaring that the hope of ever obtaining reciprocity with the United States had vanished into thin air. On that occasion the hon, gentleman introduced a change in the tariff, increasing the tariff duties, not, as he said, for the purpose of increasing the revenue, but for the sole and only purpose of retaining Canada for the Cana-The great changes that he made in the tariff, the many increases he made in the duties that we had to pay, were not to add to the moneys in the exchequer, but simply to carry to its logical effect the policy of protection. I do not want to do injustice to the hon. gentleman, and I will read a line or two from his speech:

"I may say in answer to that, that the changes in this tariff were not made with any idea of increasing the amount of revenue of the country; that was not the purpose for which these rates were levied."

The hon. gentleman introduced his new policy, feeling sure that he, at least, would never be called upon to negotiate a treaty with the United States, to ensure this being thoroughly understood by the people, he repeated a little further on:

"I am free to state that, as the intention was not, by the imposition of these higher rates, to increase the revenue.

The hon, gentleman at that time had a clear and distinct intention to build up Canada for the Canadians, to compel us to buy so far as the tariff could compel us, goods manufactured in this country, and to prevent us from buying elsewhere. the hon, gentleman was reminded that the increased; duties he proposed to levy, and the policy which he introduced, would have the effect of retarding the bringing about of reciprocal trade relations; with the States he answered that there was no reason to hope that any such negotiations with the States would ever be successful. He said:

"I ask every gentleman whose memory runs over the history of forty years, whether or not, as the teaching of all this history and the legislation and counter legislation." in both these countries during that period, they would feel justified in deferring any longer the carrying out of any policy which they think best in the interest of their own people, out of deference to the idea that possibly by doing so they might be doing something which might militate against the probability of developing trade relations between us and the United States? •• If they could point that out, it might be an argument for this country and this House to stay their hand and to wait a while longer.

He says he saw no hope in the future, and, therefore, we ought not to stay our hands, but we must proceed to legislate as if we had no hope of obtaining reciprocity with the United States. And further, the hon, gentleman in the same speech said:

"I repeat that we have waited long enough, that the trend of sentiment in the United States does not justify us in waiting any longer, and that what we have to do is to sit down here as the citizens of a great and free country, and to make our own tariff square with our own interests and in a spirit of courtesy and a spirit of prudence, with the heartiest good-will towards the country to the south of us, and to every other country, to do what we consider best for our own interests. That is what we are doing now."

And so the hon, gentleman proceeded to do what he thought was for the interest of Canada, and that was to increase in every instance the duties upon foreign goods for the purpose of protecting the Canadian manufacturer. Sir, the hope helaid down then was a hope clearly understood, but a hope, I admit, directly at variance with our belief, with our teaching, and with our policy, and the line was. clear and distinct between that honest declaration of his, in favour of protection pure and simple, protection for itself and for its own benefits, as against the free trade policy which this party hope in the near future to consummate. The lines between the two parties were drawn; the forces stood divided, and they joined either the Minister of Finance in building up the tariff walls still higher. or they joined the hon, member for South Oxford in breaking down the tariff walls, and in securing between this country and the United States continental free trade, trade as free as regards the natural and manufactured products of each country as between one state and another, with this condition alone attached to it, that Canada retained the right in her own hands of determining just what her tariff shall be, whether it shall be 20, or 35, or 40 per cent. But so long as we retain that right to control our own tariff, we need not fear that any tréaty we may negotiate will be dishonourable

Holding these views, I cannot for a moment consent to record my vote for the resolution which is tendered here, but I shall support, so far as my feeble voice can do, the policy with which this party went before the country at the last election; and although we were unsuccessful then, I believe, when that policy is tendered again, and it becomes better understood by the people, as it is daily being better understood, that policy will be successful, not only in the Maritime Provinces but throughout the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FOSTER. My only apology in asking the House for a few moments of patient hearing at this late stage of the debate, is that I have not, up to this period, taken any part in what may be called exclusively the trade debate which has been going on for the last ten or twelve days. During that time I have been in my seat, I think, as patient and constant a listener to the speeches made upon both sides of the House, as any other member in it; so that while I promise the House not to trespass too long upon their attention, I do not think I am presuming too much when I ask them to listen to me while I make a few remarks in criticism of somethings which has been said to-night. I wish, first, very briefly to say something with regard to the remarkable speech of my hon. friend who has just sat down, a speech which I do not notice because of its worth, or because of its argumentative force, or because of its courtesy in regard to myself, but because it is a specimen of the arguments which are used too frequently by hon. gentlemen upon the opposite side of politics in rebuttal of the policy of the Government. I wish merely to point out the unfair method and argument, if we may call it such, which has been adopted by the hon, gentleman who has just taken The hon, member for L'Islet asks this his seat. House to endorse the policy of the Government for He asks first, that the House several reasons. express its approval of the fiscal policy of the Conservative Government for two reasons, namely, for permitting the free importation of raw materials, and secondly, for the judicious protection of our natural and manufactured products, both of which, the resolution asserts, have resulted in the marked development of Canadian industries. gentleman who has just taken his seat dismissed this proposition with a single reference to its first, and with a total disregard of its second basis: and he said we were called upon by the young and verdant member for L'Islet to vote confidence in the policy of the Government, because, for sooth. that policy had encouraged the importation of raw material. And his conclusion was that it had not encouraged such importation. Why? Because the important article of iron, which he called a raw material, paid a duty when it came into this country, and because iron paid a duty he took no note of other raw materials which to the value of $35,000,000 came last year free into this country. He took no note of the second part of the argument on which the proposition was based, and committed himself to the palpable absurdity, which even he I think might have seen, of making the assertion before this House and the country that iron was a raw material. If the hon, gentleman were asked to make a bar of pig iron and bring it to the manufacturer who proposed to make to ourselves or to the country to which we belong, it up into something else, I think he would then revise his opinion of that as raw material. he must first dig it as ore out of the mountain he smelted it, if he put it into the condition of pig iron to be used for manufactures in other and more advanced stages, I should like to know if he could call that raw material such as we generally speak of raw material in this country. And, Sir, the patent fact remained untouched by him that in last year's importations, although i $77,000,000 worth paid duty to this country, $35,000,000 of goods were brought in without paying any duty whatever. So the position of the hon, member for L'Islet is perfectly justified in asking approval of the policy of the Government on one count, namely, that it does encourage the introduction of raw materials free for use in manufacturing in this country. The hon, gentleman took up the second point on which my hon. friend challenges the approval of the House for the policy of the present Government on account of its liberal aid to important public works, railways, canals and steamship lines, and he, as the hon, leader of the Opposition did, dismissed that argument, dismissed that proposition with the remark that they thought little should be said with respect to public works in this House at the time when great scandals are being ferretted out, as is alleged, and when investigations involving the good name of hon, members sitting in this House are being carried on by a committee of this House. I want to ask whether or not it is a fair argument, allowing for the sake of argument that certain moneys have been ill-expended on certain public works, that because there has been that ill-expenditure of money, therefore the Government policy carried on from 1878 to the present time, of granting liberal aid in railway building, in canal building, in subventions to steamboat lines and to other public undertakings which have made this country a great country, which it never could have been had there not been these liberal appropriations for public works, should be condemned. It is not a substantial, or satisfactory, or fair argument to dismiss the proposition in that way. Then the hon. gentleman states that my hon. friend for L'Islet has made another mistake, being a young member and not so old and wise as the hon, member for Queen's. in fact that he had made a deliberate misstatement. What does the hon, member for L'Islet say? He approves in his motion "of the wise and prudent management of the finances which while adequately providing for the public service." Has it not adequately provided for the public service? "Has maintained and advanced the credit of the country." Has that not been done? "And while producing substantial surpluses for capital expenditure." Has not that been done? "Has made no appreciable addition to the public debt during the last two years." My hon, friend, if such I may term him, left out the word "appreciably" which the hon, member for L'Islet used when he stated that there had been no appreciable addition to the debt during the last two years, and the hon: gentleman then went on to make the assertion that there was $3,000,000 of increased debt during the last two years. both of these statements the hon. gentleman's methods are unfair and characteristically unfair. Not only is it true that there has been no appreciable addition to the public debt in the last two years, but the proposition is also true, as to that from the year 1854 to the present time, Great the adequate provision for the public service, as to Britain has never had to contemplate discriminathe credit of the country and the large surpluses. He attacked none of them, but he said that the hon, member for L'Islet was guilty of a falsehood, of making a false statement in declaring there had been no increase in the public debt. The hon, gentleman knew just as well as the youngest and most verdant member in this House knows, and no one knows it better than himself, and he would consider it an insult to his intelligence if one were to point it out to him, that when we are speaking of the debt of this country, its increase or decrease, we are speaking of the net debt which is the true measure of the debt; and I challenge the hon, gentleman to state that it is not literally true as embodied in this proposition of the hon. member for L'Islet, that in the last two years there has been no appreciable increase in the public debt. Sir, my hon, friend again says that this Government and the hon, member for L'Islet in proposing this policy should have been the last to have said anything about the removal of the duties on tea, coffee and particularly on sugar. Well, if the hon, member for L'Islet should be the last one to say anything about sugar, that criticism might apply to a great many other members and particularly to hon, gentlemen opposite, for, if there is one thing that has struck down deep into their marrow bones and rankles there to-night, it is the fact that this Government, which they have berated so much, whose policy they have so much derided, whose extravagance they have so much talked about and whose impending ruin they have declared to be certain, has been able after twelve years of exceptionally successful government in this country to take off $3,500,000 from the burdens of the people and to impose no appreciable taxation in compensation But the hon, gentleman said we should talk little about sugar because, for sooth, we have taken the duty off and so destroyed our prospects of a West India trade. I simply note this by naming it; it does not require an argument for men of intelligence and those who are acquainted with the circumstances of the case to know that the statement is not a correct one. says we talk as if discrimination was a new thing, and declared that the tariff of 1854 discriminated against Great Britain, when everyone who has read history knows that, as regards the articles admitted from the United States into Canada by that treaty, similar articles if they came from England were admitted on exactly the same terms; no discrimination was intended, no discrimination was allowed, and no discrimination was actually practised or carried out. My hon, friend says that the treaty negotiators of 1869, actually in their drafts of the negotiations, had provided for discrimination against the goods of Great Britain, and yet, Sir, we have against the unsupported testimony of Mr. Huntington, which has been read here and which has been met time and again in this House, the statement of Sir Francis Hincks, and the statement of Sir John A. Macdonald, that although they were not allowed to bring down these papers—because secret and confidential papers could not be brought down-they challenged the accuracy of Mr. Huntington's statements, and that denial stands good to-day against the statement which has been read here from Mr. Huntington, and it is assured in the light of history that from the year 1854 to the present time, Great tion in reference to reciprocity treaties which have been negotiated, or which have been actually made, between the United States and this country. hon, gentleman refers to the treaty of George Brown in 1875—the draft treaty—which he says by the way we came pretty nearly getting. Yes, we did; we were ready for it, and willing for it, and the other side of the line would have nothing to do with it. That is just how near we came to getting it. He says that draft discriminated and provided for discrimination against Great Britain, and yet he knows that the Hon. George Brown himself, in his place in Parliament. and the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie as well, repudiated any idea of discrimination, and declared that not only did it not exist, but that every article from Great Britain of like kind should come into this country upon the same conditions and on perfect equality, with those that came from the United States. I wish to notice just for a moment the climax of the argument of the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I want it to be listened to in this House; but I hope it will never get as far as Washington; I hope it will never even reach Bar Harbour, for if the quick ears of Mr. Blaine ever catch it, the hon, gentleman and his cohorts may come on this side of the House, and remain here for a legion of years, but they will have to turn their whole policy inside out, and repudiate the hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) before they get any treaty from the United States. Why is that? My hon, friend knows, for he has stated it, and so has the leader of the Opposition, and so have all gentlemen on that side, and it is open to reason that the United States will conclude no treaty with this country out of sheer kindness and good-will for us. They will not conclude a treaty with this country unless they hope to get some advantage out of it. Hon. gentlemen opposite tell us that the only advantage that the United States can get under reciprocal trade is to be found in the fact that they will obtain a market here for their manufactured goods. That is it. They dare not take any other position in their love for the poor farmers, as they call them, and they do not take any other position. Now listen to my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies). commences with a fairly mild statement, and he ends with a strong and extreme one. That is the way of the hon, gentleman. His first statement was this: We will import much the same goods from Great Britain as now, if we get unrestricted re-Then he put his foot upon the chair and ciprocity. he recalled the conversation that he had with a prominent importer in the Maritime Provinces, who actually told him: Yes, Mr. Davies, you get unrestricted reciprocity, and carry it into effect, and I will import, with the exception of a few cotton prints, much the same goods from Great Britain that I do now. And then he amplified that, and he ended with the strong statement: "Practically, we will import the very same goods from Great Britain as we do now." Then, if we shall do so, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite what quid pro quo they expect the United States will get by unrestricted re-ciprocity, if they carry it out? If the hon, gentleman has as much influence as he has assumption, he has effectually damned unrestricted reciprocity from this hour henceforth and forever. But, fortunately, the hon gentlemen is only a feather in the tail of the kite, he is only a small portion of the the discussion his small voice will lack power to reach so far as Washington, and possibly even so far as Bar Harbour.

The hon, gentleman has no faith in humanity; especially humanity on this side of the House, and he never rises but he begins by a profession of faith; his creed is that there is no honesty of purpose on the Conservative side of the House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not state anything of the kind.

Mr. FOSTER. His profession of faith is that there is no good motive, and there is no honest principle on this side of the House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I rise to a point of order. The hon, gentleman is doing now as he persists in doing whenever he replies to me; he is deliberately misrepresenting my statement. I never made such a statement. On the contrary I have always recognized that there are a very large majority of gentlemen on the other side of the House with whom I have the kindest social relations, and I know that they have just as much honesty of purpose as I have and as my hon, friends have.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman has now stated his point of order, and I will leave it even to the very young man from L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins) to pass his opinion on that point of order from so old and wise and long standing a member of this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. FOSTER. I will state what I stated before, that I never remember the hon, gentleman rising and making a speech in this House, without his attributing a lack of honesty of motive and principle to this side of the House. He did it to night; he knows he did it, and he knows he always does it. He knows that when he puts the bridle on his steed and places his foot in the stirrups, he no longer has control of the steed; and if there is any question of public policy of any kind that is proposed and carried out from this side of the House, the hon. gentleman thinks that the best way to meet it is by impeaching the honesty and good motives of its supporters and so he denies that we have any desire for reciprocity on this side of the House. He says that our statement to the contrary is a sham and delusion, and he goes upon that assumption here as in the country. Now, if my hon. friend will take a little advice from one whom he esteems so highly, he possibly will allow me to say to him that he will get along better in this House, better in the world, and at greater peace with his own conscience, what there is of it, if he will just go upon the assumption that there is some honesty, some good motive, and some good principle in other breasts than his

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the Government plan for reciprocity?

Mr. FOSTER. I really cannot attend to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and answer the philosophizing musings of the hon, member from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) all at once. One at a time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the Government plan?

he has effectually damned unrestricted reciprocity from this hour henceforth and forever. But, fortunately, the hon, gentlemen is only a feather in the tail of the kite, he is only a small portion of the party, and it may be that in the hum and hurry of Mr. Foster.

Mr. Foster. I will tell you the Government plan before I get through. The hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davis), before reading an extract from a speech which I made in this House last year, commenced by stating that I had practically Mr. Foster.

declared that there was no longer any hope of reciprocity being obtained from the United States of America. He went on to read the extract, and the extract simply bore out, what? It bore out this: That I said I saw no particular trend towards reciprocity in my reading of the sentiment of the United States; that from 1866 up to the present time we had been counselled to watch and wait; to go upon the assumption of waiting and watching to see whether or not the United States would not meet us with a reciprocity treaty; and I said that I thought the time had come, and fully come, when we should leave that position, and with the greatest courtesy and good-will possible to the United States, we should doour own fiscal legislating, in our own interest as we saw it from the standpoint of Canadians. That is all I said. That is exactly what I stated, and I think I am perfectly consistent in that respect. Since that time, Sir, a change has taken place, and on the invitation of the United States Government itself we are to send delegates on the 12th day of October to Washington to confer with Mr. Blaine and the President of the United States, and see whether or not we can have framed or formed a reciprocity treaty on the basis which we have set forth in our Order in Council, and which is as plain as it can be made. Now, Sir, having stated this much with reference to the hon, gentleman I leave him. I must, in the next place, say one word with reference to my hon, friend the leader of the Opposition. His speech was rich and in some respects rare—in its phrasing, in its fine dialectic points, if I may call them so, and in its glittering generalities; but when the hon, gentleman came down to the hard work of practical detail, I do not think I am going too far in saying that, in my opinion, his speech was not so strong as we might expect it to be, from the leader of the Opposition, and for the time being the exponent of the financial and trade policy of that side of the House. He declared that the Government were strong in assertion. He may apply some of that to his own side. I leave it to the judgment of this House, and to the judgment that class abroad in this country to-day; he is a of the country who are looking to the sayings and doings of this House, if they put the speeches which hon, gentlemen have made on the trade question on this side of the House along with the speeches which have been made on the same question on the other side of the House, whether they will pick out more bare and unfounded assertions from those made on this side than from those made on the other side. It is not for me to judge of that; it will be for this House and the country.

The hon, gentleman has said that we went to the country with falsehood and deceit on our lips. That is what my hon, friend must have had in his That is a strong statement; but did the hon, gen-mind, which called up the remembrance of the old tleman back it up? He backed it up by no proof which would be satisfactory to this House or the country. What was the statement with which we went to the country? It was embodied in the Order in Council, it was stated by Sir John Thompson and myself at our first campaign meeting in the bloated monopolists, barbarous protection, relics city of Toronto, it was stated in the public papers of the middle ages, and worse, declaring that the and at other public gatherings, and the gist of it body politic is diseased all through, and that the was this, that since 1866 negotiations had been only help which can be given is unrestricted recarried on for reciprocity treaties between this ciprocity—is it not sad and doleful to be told now country and the United States, but that from that that we must take this remedy in homocopathic time up to a few weeks ago there had been no show-doses, one little pill after another, and spread over ing by the people of the United States of one single a long series of year. Why, long before the medifavourable opening for the negotiation of such a cine has had time to take effect the patient may treaty; but that within the last few weeks, in die. We are told now that only one bar at a time negotiations which were being carried on with the Island of Newfoundland, in which Canadian interests were very nearly affected, it had come about that Canada had made a protest against certain legislation, and that in the course of these negotiations a door had been opened by the Secretary of State for the United States himself, and an invitation had been given to Canada to send commissioners to Washington for an informal talk and conference with reference to a reciprocity treaty. That in sum and substance is what was stated; that in sum and substance is true; and I am not responsible, and the Government is not responsible, for amplifications of that statement which may be made. But that is the essential truth, and that truth is borne out by the papers which have been brought down to this House. After all, what does it matter whether the negotiation commenced in one way or in another? The whole point is that up to that time there was no door opened by the United States, that at that time the Secretary of State himself invited conference, that since that time the Secretary of State and the President officially have issued a formal invitation, and that on the 12th of October we are to send to Washington a delegation to negotiate, if possible, a treaty of reciprocity upon lines which may seem fair and just—on the basis laid down by the Order in Council which I have quoted here to-night. That is the simple question, and all other is quibbling. But if you wish to go back to that, I say that the bald statement made by the Government is true in every particular, and is carried out by the papers which have been brought down to this House. My hon, friend said that there was an old physician, living long, long ago, I suppose, who for every disease had but one remedy. I think he said that was bleeding; it matters not. That remedy he would call a panacea; and we know that what cures every disease that humanity is heir to is known by that name. Well, Sir, there is a doctor of professor of unrestricted reciprocity. He sits not very far from me in this House, and about opposite to me. He has declared that the farmer is in a terribly doleful state to-day; that nothing will save him but unrestricted reciprocity. Mortgages are cropping up every year; nothing will rid us of them but unrestricted reciprocity. Taxation is heavy and high; the only hope is unrestricted This country is going to the dogs as reciprocity. fast as it can, and is now almost tumbling over the brink of ruin; save it by unrestricted reciprocity. physician of long ago who had but the one remedy, of bleeding for all diseases. But now, is it not doleful to be told, after all these professors of unrestricted reciprocity have passed through the country exciting the popular sentiment against of this Chinese wall that separates us from liberty and life must be taken down, and meanwhile what will become of the hungry and thirsty waiting ones? How absurd, after the preachings and predictions of the last ten years, to tell the mass of the people—even the majority by their own count, who are looking to them as the only saviours of this; country, who are to snatch them from this policy; of monopoly and ruin, that after all the treatment can only be applied in homocopathic form, and in very small doses at that. My hon, friend lapsed into scripture, and he made a quotation as to Paul at Ephesus preaching against the idolators and stirring up a certain political leader by the name of Demetrius, who was afraid that all the gain he got from making idols and such things would be taken away. My hon, friend went a little too far. Instead of crossing the sea to Ephesus, he should have stopped at Athens and listened to Paul preaching to the people of that great city; and finding that he could do nothing with them, because they had a temple upon which was an inscription, "to the unknown god." As was the case with Paul with the Athenians, so we here can do very little with hon, gentlemen opposite. They have that temple dedicated to the unknown god, and for the last ten years they have been trying amongst them to conjure up a name for that god so that they can place it in their temple under its proper designation. Then my hon, friend talked for a long while about the power of consumption in this country not being equal to its power of production, and he thought that was a great evil and source of weakness. I hope that the power of consumption in this country will never! become equal to its power of production. I certainly hope it will never exceed the power of production, because if it should, how would we live? I suppose it is the chronic condition of all great powers and progressive states that their powers of production exceed their powers of consumption. Now, the hon, gentleman says, as Canada has reached this stage—has it not always reached this stage - when its powers of consumption are no longer equal to its powers of production, a great want is felt, which the Opposition have discovered and that is outside markets to take away our surplus production. And then the hon. gentleman proceeds to treat the working of our policy. We have built up mills under it, and then following the mills came over-production, and then came the combines; and now there is but one way out of the difficulty. We must get rid of that lack of balance between production and consumption, and the hon, gentleman proposes that we shall do so by unrestricted reciprocity, by opening wide the doors between ourselves and the United States, because—whisper it softly—the United States are a country where such a fatal calamity as that of over-production is unknown, where the powers of production do not exceed the powers of consumpabout woollen mills and cotton mills curtailing their production in this county. But has he never read the New England papers? Does he not know that there has not been a year in the last ten or twelve years, in which there have not been production somewhere near to the consumption of the people.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Yes, we will be wonderfully Mr. FOSTER. benefited. This country which has suffered under the direcalamity of finding its production exceed its consumption, will be wonderfully helped by going in with the United States where the powers of consumption are so great compared with their powers of production, that they are sending hundreds of millions of their surplus products, which they cannot use themselves, to the rest of the world, and products of the very same kind as those of which we have an over-production now. But I want to come down now, if I possibly can, to the very marrow and bone of the policy and procedure of hon, gentlemen opposite. They have two methods of procedure in order to get at the end they have in view. The first is to raise the cry of "wolf, wolf" in this country in order to frighten the people. They try to do that more than in any other way by attacking the National Policy, and once they raise this cry of fear and scare in the country they proceed to dangle before the people that homoeopathic panacea, I am sorry to say, of unrestricted reciprocity as the only thing that can bring salvation to the woeful state of affairs which exists in their own imagination, but of which the people as a rule are blissfully ignorant. They attack the National Policy not knowing the strength and fibre of that which they attack. They imagine the National Policy affects merely a set of refiners, of woollen and cotton mill owners, and that when they attack the National Policy, this is the only class they have to deal with in this country. Sir, the National Policy in this country, is not restricted to any class. It has a triple cord of strength in The National Policy in this country, began to dawn when we got hold of the broad prairie lands of the North-West. It grew still fuller when we linked British Columbia and that great North-West country to the heart of Canada, with an iron band. It developed itself still more in 1878, when home markets and home production were helped by the introduction of a reasonable and judicious system of protection; and it saw its rounded fulfilment when the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed, and when our steam communications were provided, and our canal system perfected for internal communication. That is the triple strength of this National Policy. It is to be found in the development of the national resources of this country; it is to be found in the multiplication of means of transport for interprovincial trade, and in the creation of home industries and home production; and it is to be found in the extension of the traffic resulting from the production we have fostered at home by our National Policy, and which overflows and seeks a market in outside countries. That is the National Policy. If you would find its tion, and if once we got there, we would become monument in this country, you have simply to look rich beyond all expectation. My hon, friend talks to its results in the particular lines I have spoken of. Look to the Province of British Columbia, and you will find a country growing into new life, with its vast mineral wealth, its grazing lands and fisheries and its growing trade east and west. Look to the North-West which lay there a few years ago in its virgin periodical stoppages of the spindles and the mills uselessness, but which to-day, if crop reports speak in the New England States, in order to bring over-truly, will send out to the hungr mouths of Europe 20,000,000 or 25,000,000 bushels of wheat and grain, a fact which would have been to-day impossible, if it had not been for the National Policy of the Liberal-Conservative party. You have to look for its results in our canal and railway system, with the vast interprovincial trade which flows and interflows from one part of this country to the other. Make a calculation, if you What advantage would a few millions of foreign trade amount to alongside of this immense interprovincial and local trade? How many families are there in the country? A million. How much do they consume per year? Would it be too much to say that each family and its belongings consume That will amount to the im-$500 worth per year. mense consumption of $500,000,000, and that is home consumption; and for all that there is coming and going along these great lines of communication of ours this ceaseless intercourse from section to section, this supply calling for demand and demand calling for supply. You have to look for it, Sir, in the multiplied and varied industries of the older provinces of Canada, where busy labour finds its daily wage, and the hum of wheel and spindle and anvil accompanies the transformation of our natural resources into the rich necessaries of our daily life, and the steady accumulations of national wealth. That, Sir, is the National Policy and that is what hon, gentlemen fight against, what they beat against in vain, and what will find its constant defenders in the intelligent electors of this country. Now, let us see what this boasted panacea is: let us come down, if we can, to a close examination of unrestricted reciprocity, and I ask my hon, friends opposite in all candour and earnestness to correct me when I give a wrong definition of what unrestricted reciprocity is. I have sat for fifteen days listening more or less to this debate. I have honestly tried to get at and to frame upon this paper a fair definition of unrestricted reciprocity as it is stated by hon. gentlemen opposite. I may not have been successful, but I will essay to define what I understand to be unrestricted reciprocity, and I will take it as a favour on the part of hon, gentlemen opposite to correct me if I am wrong in my definition. Reference has been made to the change in dress. We may have asked before what unrestricted reciprocity was, and we may have considered that it was a more or less unreasonable proposition; but hon, gentlemen opposite, in the amendment which they proposed as the antidote to our policy, have made it infinitely more absurd and inconsistent than it was before. find that they have added a rider to it. did they add that rider to it? There may have There may have been some been two reasons. restive members of the herd, and this rider may have been added in order to prevent their jumping the enclosure; or they may have thought that, in the bye-elections, it would be convenient to have something put forward by them in Parliament which might mean anything or nothing as they chose to interpret it to the electorate. What is this rider? It proposes to abolish or to reduce the duties on all the necessaries of life which enter into the consumption of four great classes in Canada. Through all the utterances of the hon, gentlemen opposite, there has been a reprobation, keen and constant, of any duty on the necessaries of life. Every breath which has come from the opposite side duty, and if the hon, gentlemen had carried the resolution for which they have voted what would it have Nothing less than a total abolition of the duties on the necessaries of life which are used by these four classes of the people. To that policy hon. gentlemenare pledged, and that they can easily carry out if they get into power. They pledge themselves to unrestricted reciprocity. They do not know whether they can carry that out or not. That depends on the will of another country. But this depends simply upon themselves. If they get into power, the first thing they will have to do is to take off the duties on the necessaries of life, whether they get unrestricted reciprocity or not. What will that mean? The moment these gentlemen get into power they take off the duties on the necessaries of life. What is the result? They go to the farmer, for whom they profess so much solicitude, and they say: Wedo not like these duties on the necessaries of life, and therefore, according to our policy and according to our convictions, we immediately take away the duty on wheat, and we say to you who raise wheat in the North-West, to you who raise wheat in Ontario, to you who raise wheat in Quebec, to you who raise wheat in any part of this country, that the American can bring his surplus wheat into this country free of duty, but, when you take your wheat into the American market, you will have to pay a duty of 25 cents on every bushel you take over there. That is their policy. They desire the good-will themselves of the farmers. This is their commendation. They say, we do not believe in aduty on the necessaries of life. Then the duty must be taken off flour, that is to say, that the milling industries which are fed by the farmers will have the protection taken off their flour, and the American miller can place his flour of all grades free in our market, while our millers will have to pay $1.20 on every barrel they send into the United States. Then they would go to the coal miners of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, to the coal miners of British Columbia, to the coal miners of the North-West, men who toil down in the depths of the earth and by hard blows struck in dangerous places make their living and raise these coals to the surface for the production of heat and motive power, and they will say: Toil on and moil on, and, when you have raised your coal to the surface, we will put American coal by the side of it free of duty; but, when you take your coal into the United States you will have to pay 75 cents on every ton. That is the hon, gentlemen's solicitude for theminers of this country. They will go to the hardy fishermen of this country, and they will say: We have love for you, we have said many brave words for you in Parliament, but we believe that the food of this country should be free; you may catch your fish and send it to the United States and pay I cent or 1½ cents or ½ a cent duty on it, but the American fisherinen may place their fish free of duty in the Canadian market. They will go to the pork raisers in Prince Edward Island, from which my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) comes, and who does not remember that wonderful acrobatic feat of his but a year ago? We have heard something about acrobats in this debate, but here was a free trader who raised his voice constantly against the monstrous tariff and the barbarous system of protection inaugurated by this Government, and yet who went strongly against my hon: friend from Charlotte has been laden with denunciations of that class of (Mr. Gillmor) who is an honest free trader and would stand by free trade though every fisherman and pork-raiser in the County of Charlotte went against it; and the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island said: I am a free trader on principle, but when it touches my county, I want protection on pork, not 3 cents, but 6 cents per pound. They will go to the pork-raisers of the east and west, and give them the gratifying intelligence that while American pork can come in here free of duty, that for every pound of pork they send into the United States they will have to pay 2 cents. They will have to tell them that bacons and hams will come in here free, but that our bacons and hams going into the American market will have to pay a duty of 5 cents a pound. so on all through the list. Let me commend this to hon, gentlemen opposite. They have to go to the bye-elections this fall. They have to meet the electorate, and many of them represent agricultural counties. Let them call the farmers together in those counties and say: This is the policy of the party which I support, I am pledged to take off the duties on the necessaries of life, and the moment we get into power we will take off those duties, but at the same time while United States wheat, flour and beef and pork and bacon and hams, potatoes and butter and cheese come in to compete with you free in your own markets you shall not get a pound of all these products into the United States as tin-platemarket without paying almost prohibitive duties. This policy, Sir, is not even a jug-handled policyno. it is a policy which is all handle and no jug to it at all. I ask hon, gentlemen opposite to think how they will be able to make such a policy acceptable to the electorate.

But there is a still more absurd phase which has been already alluded to. You take the duties off the prime necessaries of life, and then you go to the United States of America and you say to President Harrison and Mr. Blaine: We want to sit down with you and make a treaty with you. Yes? We want you to let our products into your country free. Yes? And in turn we will give you advantages in our markets. Then comes the question: What are the articles which you propose to let into your country free? The answer will be, pork, wheat, beef, flour and so on. But it will be said: You let them in free now; we have all we want now, and without giving you anything therefor. If that is their policy and if that is carried out, they cut the ground from under their feet and take away the only inducement they have to offer to obtain reciprocity from the United States. That cuts the ground from under their feet in regard to natural products. My hon, friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) has already cut the ground away in regard to manufactured goods coming from Great Britain. Then there is nothing Ignominy and defeat would be nothing compared to the reception which would meet any set of men who would go to Washington to negotiate a treaty on such a basis as that.

Now, Sir, let us ask what unrestricted reciprocity is? What it was, is now no longer the question; what it is, is the burning question, and what it was and what it is, are two things very different. May I be permitted to define what it is, and will my hon. friends recall me quickly to the right path if I step out of it in impossible to say upon such a que the way of definition? When you get unrestricted what the agreement will be or will reciprocity you will have freedom of interhas to be decided by both nations.

course between the United States and Canada in all natural products of each country. I am right in that, there is no doubt about it. All the things that are grown in the United States of America will come into Canada free; everything produced in Canada as a natural product will go into the United States free. That is the first principle, we are all agreed on that. Secondly, all goods manufactured from what is grown and produced in the United States will come into this country free; all goods manufactured from what is grown and produced in this country will go into the United States free—there is no doubt about that. I will go one step further to make my definition more clear. All foreign products or manufactures will come into each country subject to the tariff of that country. Those going into the United States will pay the United States duty; those coming into Canada will pay the Canadian duty. There can be no doubt at all on those three statements. Natural products free both ways; all manufactures from natural products of the two countries, free both ways; all foreign goods, whether natural or manufactured, pay the duty each country imposes upon them. Here is where my doubt arises. Suppose that we do not grow a certain thing in this country, do not raise it, do not make it, such, for instance,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Cotton.

Mr. FOSTER. Such, for instance, as cotton, to take the nearer object to my hon, friend. not grow cotton in this country; it is therefore not a product of Canada. When that comes into Canada, not being a product of Canada, can we take it and make it up in our manufactories and take it across the border free of duty? I ask my hon, friend to set my harassing doubts at rest upon that point.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon, gentleman will only look at the different treaties negotiated between civilized nations, he will have no difficulty at all in solving that question.

Mr. FOSTER. That is just about the definiteness that I expected in the answer of the hon, gentleman. I wished, however, to give him a chance to make a clear and honest declaration upon this subject, for once in his life, and he has failed to do it. Let me take that definition of his before the honest elector of this country, whether he is in city or country; when he puts that question to me, as he will and must, if he does his duty to himself and to his country, and I shall have to answer him: Sir, I cannot tell you; but I asked the originator of the scheme, the great physician who is to administer this wonderful panacea in homeopathic drops-I asked him before the high court of Parliament, in face of the whole country, and he had no answer to give, or he would not give it if he had, except this: You will have to look, my dear farmer friend, my dear artizan friend, to the treaties which have been passed between civilized nations.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman knows that the question he puts to me is a matter of agreement. It is a matter of agreement, and it is impossible to say upon such a question of detail, what the agreement will be or will not be.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the position the hon. gentleman proposes to take on that class of materials?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How does the hon. gentleman propose to work out his own theory?

Mr. FOSTER. From whichever leader I ask the question, I cannot get an answer.

Mr. McMILLAN. If you go to Washington what position will you take?

Mr. FOSTER. The same indefiniteness which marked the campaign for unrestricted reciprocity from the time it commenced last year until it closed, still continues in the House. I thought when we came to Parliament and brought the men face to face with us, with an honest desire to make clear before the country what they proposed to have the electors vote upon, I thought we should get down to a firm, clear definition that would leave no man in doubt. But the same game is to be played on this point that was played on the point of discrimination, that was played upon my hon. friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), who is so quietly resting in his chair yonder. The hon. member for Queen's (P.E.I.) said to-night: It has always been known that unrestricted reciprocity implied discrimination. The hon, gentleman from Huntingdon did not know it-did not know it after the election was through, and I do not know whether he knows it yet. But I know he has heard the declarations from his own leaders, and if he does not know it, he ought to know it. I am looking with interest to see how he will vote on this resolution. Discrimination was held up in this uncertain way, now dangled down and now dangled up, and with what effect? That in the city of St. John the lights and leaders of the Opposition party publicly and privately declared to the people, on the hustings and in the shops, that there would be no discrimination against England. In just the same manner direct taxation is being dangled before the country, and will be, I suppose, as long as this fad is in vogue, although down in the Maritime Provinces we had men declaring everywhere that no direct tax would be put on this country. A few days ago we heard the hon, member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard) declaring, in his sturdy, honest way—and I honour him for it—that the party which makes direct taxation one of the planks in its platform, signs its political death warrant. And yet, Sir, I ask that hon, gentleman if he has found in the preachments and predictions of hon. gentlemen opposite during this whole debate, one single word of comfort to his harassed soul; have his leaders pointed out to him any possible way by which the vast amount of revenue that must be lost, can be made good without resorting to direct taxation? But, Sir, I am off my track. I knew I should not get a plain answer to my question. I must come back to the subject of cotton and wool, and as my hon, friend will not give me a direct answer, as he product of that country, and it will come into this parries that question, let me show him what it It will be the one thing or the other, I suppose. Either cotton, not being a product of Canada, can be manufactured here and go free into the United States or it cannot. In either case what will happen? I will first reason on the assumption that a product of another country, that would not only not be unrestricted reciprocity, when it comes into this country, cannot be made but it would be the most one-sided proposal that any up in our manufactories and then carried into the party or any man has ever submitted for the ap-

United States market free of duty. What will happen if it cannot? You will have the most onesided free trade and the most one-sided reciprocity that I ever heard of being put before any people.

Mr. ALLISON. Could we not get a set-off to this article? Do we not allow the Americans to get lumber from this country and manufacture it into machinery, and send that machinery back here

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, and we tax it.

Mr. ALLISON. Could we not do it just as well if there was no tax?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. So cotton could come here and be manufactured and carried back there, just as well as timber can be manufactured there and the product brought back here?

Mr. FOSTER. I see that my hon, friend must soon be promoted to a front seat. My hon, friend is at least honest in his desire to impart knowledge. He at least gives what he thinks is a true solution. The difference between timber and cotton, however. is that both countries grow timber, and only one country grows cotton. Now, I am putting this proposition. Products that are not native to this country coming in here and being made up, will not pass free into the United States of America; products not natural to the United States of America, coming into the United States, will not be made up and pass free into this country. What will happen? Again, an astonishing one sidedness. We raise no cotton, they raise cotton in the United States. Put on unrestricted reciprocity; and if this is the condition, what happens? That every cotton mill in this country will at once shut up. Why? Because the cotton is a native product of the United States; they will make it up in the United States mills, and it will come into this country free. It is not a native product here: it must be brought here and made up in our mills, and when our cottons go to the United States they will meet with duties equal to 40, 50, 60, or 75 per cent. That is what will happen. Take the article of wool. The wools raised in the United States and in Canada are not sufficient for either country, and they have to be imported here very largely. In the United States there is, however, a large wool production; in this country there is a small wool production. The producer of wool in the United States makes it into woollen cloths, which will come into this country free. We make up wool, which We import from a foreign country, as we have to import it, and when our wool manufacturers take their goods to the American boundary they will be met by a tariff running up to 150 per cent. or more. That is a beautiful kind of reciprocity. Take the tobacco trade. The United States raise a great variety of tobaccos, and of good qualities. The Americans manufacture tobacco, it being a country free. We raise some tobacco, but not nearly sufficient. It is brought in here as a foreign product; it is made up here, but it will be met on the American border by a prohibitory tariff of $2.75 per pound. I could easily go through the catalogue. That would be a fine kind of reciprocity; that would not only not be unrestricted reciprocity, proval of the intelligent electors and asked their support for it. I take now the other side of the question, that these products of other countries coming in here raw, afterwards pass as our manufactured goods free into another country, each side to hold control of its own tariff. What would happen? Take tin-plate. The United States duty, which is now in force, is 2½ cents, a prohibitive duty and meant to be so. They are endeavouring to make tinplates out of their own ores and are seeking to build up that manufacture in their own country. will happen? All we have to do is to import tin-plate free, as it is to-day on the free list, and we can manufacture the tinware for the United States in spite of any competition. Will the United States agree to that? And so you may take article after article on that side of the argument. Whichever horn of the dilemma you take, you are, on this ground of control of the tariff, led into a difficulty from which no hon. member on the other side has attempted to relieve us, and which no one has attempted to explain, and which I believe is beyond the bounds of practical statesmanship. Let me go one point further. If we had control of our own tariff, how can the United States be sure of any compensation for any treaty it may make? If it makes a treaty with us for unrestricted reciprocity, the Americans will look over the list and say: We will get entrance to the Canadian market with great advantage to our manufacturers, because they have a tariff against outside manufacturers; we will consequently gather, if we have no duties to pay, the largest part of that trade in manufactured products; we will give Canada in return certain advantages by way of compensation. The treaty is made and goes into force for 10 years. We have control of our own tariff. Immediately we take the duty off hardware. What quid pro quo does the United States obtain on manufactured hardware in this market if we, having control of our own tariff, take off or lower the duty on British hardware? The United States is robbed of the advantage they expected to derive by our allowing their manufactures of hardware to come into this country free of duty. The United States would be arrant fools if they were to make a treaty with us, the fundamental principle of which was a certain compensation for their manufactured goods, then give us control of our own tariff, as at present, so that, if we wish, we could let in British manufactures or those of other countries free or at very low duties, and take away every coign of vantage which the United States had expected to secure from this country. It would not be honest treafment, it would not be proper treatment, and the United States would never make a treaty upon lines which could leave such a course open to us.

Mr, MILLS (Bothwell). It is so good you are opposed to it.

Mr. FOSTER. I am talking simply of the proposition of hon. gentlemen opposite. Let me ask the attention of hon. members to some figures. The imports of hardware from the United States last year were of the value of $4,900,000. value of imports of similar goods from other countries was $5,600,000. What was more fair than for the United States in making a treaty of unrestricted reciprocity to say: We sent $5,000,000 of hardware to Canada last year; that country obtained $5,500,-000 worth from other countries besides; let us in | Hansard, taken down by an English reporter, and Mr. FOSTER.

free of duty and we will take the hardware market. But we have control of our tariff, and we will let other countries in on the same terms as the United States if we please, or we will lower the duty nearly to the notch of nothing, and the United States so far from getting its $5,500,000 more from hardware will get nothing or next to nothing. So you may go through a long list. With respect to raw material, I have already taken that up and dealt with it. What I want to point out is this, and I ask hon, gentlemen to gainsay it if they can, that a fixity of tariff is the essential condition of any treaty of reciprocity, unrestricted or not, and for the period that treaty exists a tariff be fixed must at the first and kept to the last, except upon mutual derstanding and agreement of both parties; and there is no possible means of obtaining a reciprocity treaty outside of that. I say more. The very moment my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition stated here, so differently from what he is reported to have said in the country, that we are, as a fundamental point in unrestricted reciprocity, to keep perfect control of our own tariff, that very moment he read his whole case out of court in the United States. Every paper hon, gentlemen opposite have quoted, every statesman they have called their ally, and every public man who has deigned to notice the proposals of hon. gentlemen opposite, has made it a fundamental condition of considering the proposition that there shall be a uniform tariff made by common consent. I go further than that. I will ask hon. gentlemen opposite, who are good at quoting, to quote one single statement, one single resolution of a board of trade, one single utterance of any newspaper which will give them warrant for saying that, with the tariff under the control of this country, they can get the slightest shred of public opinion in the United States in favour of their proposition.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What are you going

Mr. FOSTER. I am criticizing what the hon. gentlemen opposite think they are going to do. When this question came up the Halifax Chronicle, the organ of the party in Nova Scotia, and the St. John Telegraph, the organ of the party in New Brunswick, came out flat-footed against the proposition of adopting an uniform tariff and having the United States fix it in common with this country, and said "we must keep control of our own tariff." What said the New York Tribune? Taking up that point, this influential Republican paper and organ of the party said:

"It [the Halifax Morning Chronicle] argues in favour of unrestricted and absolute reciprocity between Canada and unrestricted and absolute reciprocity between Canada and the United States, with each country at liberty to adopt such tariff as it may prefer, and represents this, and no more than this, as the deliberate purposes of one party in the Canadian contest. If this is the fact, one party of Canadians closely resemble the baby which cried for the moon and got into a rage because the moon would not consent to be grasped. This nation has not the slighest notion of allowing Canada to open the back door as wide as it may please, while tariff enactments by the United States are closing the front door against sundry importations at New York and Boston. If any one is silly enough to suppose such a plan is entertained by Americans, he does not live in this country. All such representations may as well be put aside as utterly and widely at variance with anything Americans can possibly be brought to adopt."

Sir. the latest declaration by the hon, leader in this Sir, the latest declaration by the hon. leader in this House, an authoritative declaration, recorded in placed where it can be revised, stands, and cannot be contradicted, and the fundamental position is this: The control of their own tariff in their settlement of unrestricted reciprocity. To-day they have read their case out of courts in the United States of America; they have no longer the shred of a warrant for supposing that it will meet with any acceptance there. Now, Sir, what does this unrestricted reciprocity involve? I am going now to take up the arguments of my hon, friend opposite to me (Sir Richard Cartwright). It involves several things. First, it involves discrimination against England. There is no necessity for my going into that point, for it has been well gone into, but I wish to read what is the definition of this given by my hon, friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). He has spoken out plainly, he has made all his arguments in favour of discrimination, and then he declared:

"We do not propose to discriminate against Great Britain per se, but we propose to enter into a treaty of commercial relations with the United States, whereby certain privileges will be given by Canada to the United States, and by the United States to Canada, against all the world."

The hon, gentleman has been bolder; he has stated in this House in less equivocal language, he has declared the same in the county that they do intend to discriminate against Great Britain. Now he puts it in the negative way; but what child's play. What is the use of putting in per se-saying on one hand that he does not intend to discriminate against Great Britain perse, and saying in the same breath that he intends to give the United States! advantages against the rest of the world, including Great Britain. Most certainly, discrimination is to-day nailed upon the topmost fold of their flag. They intend then to discriminate against Great Britain. Now, I want to ask the hon, member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver), who devoted some attention to me a little while ago, who tried to make me out very inconsistent upon the temperance question: I want to ask him now what he proposes to do about it? My hon, friend cannot plead ignorance any more. There is his leader, and he has heard his leader's statements to-day; there is his financial leader (Sir Richard Cartwright), and he has heard his statements the other day; there is his co-worker (Mr. Davies), and he has heard his statement to-night, to the effect that they will discriminate against England; and here is the statement of my hon, friend (Mr. Scriver) read before the electors of the County of Huntingdon, after the smoke of the battle of the 5th March has passed away, and he said then:

"Leaving the electoral lists, I take up the issues upon which the election is being fought out, and find the main question to be one of trade—that of reciprocity. Persistent efforts have been made to misrepresent the position of Reformers with regard to reciprocity, it being alleged we were willing to consent to a free exchange of commodities with our neighbours on conditions none ever pledged themselves to, never declared, and do not now. We do not seek, nor will we consent, to reciprocity on the terms our opponents allege, namely, uniformity of tariff and discrimination against Great Britain. You will not find in any announcement of principles by the Reform party that it ever proposed to accept the American tariff as the price of reciprocity. And I am free to say, that had the Liberals gone into power and negotiations been opened Reformers would never have consented to accept reciprocity, if doing so entailed placing Canada under the American tariff or discrimination against the mother country. Liberals are just as loyal as their opponents, and will consent to no act of injustice to Great Britain, and any arrangement that may be made with the United States will render our markets as accessible to the mother country." Now, I have read this as the statement attributed to my hon, friend from Huntingdon (Mr. Seriver). He rises in his place, and he can say whether that represents his convictions or not.

Mr. SCRIVER. It did fairly and fully; and it represents my views now.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend is related not very far back to my hon, friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor). They come from the same kind of stock; they get up and state exactly what they mean, and in doing so they cut themselves loose from this hour forward from the policy of unrestricted reciprocity, as defined by the hon, the leader of the Opposition, as defined by the hon, gentleman from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), as defined by the leader from the Maritime Provinces—Ispeak with bated breath in the presence of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies.) Now, then, we will be anxious to see what the hon, member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) means to do about Will he be inconsistent? Will he swallow his expression and his opinions, and vote for discrimination against the mother country on the ground that we have a perfect right to, and that if it hurts the mother country, so much the worse for the mother country. Well, we will see, we will

Mr. SCRIVER. Yes; you will see.

Mr. FOSTER. Now, Sir, I wish just to note one argument of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). He says upon this question of discrimination: Your tariff discriminates against Great Britain to-day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So it does.

Mr. FOSTER. FOSTER. My hon, friend says, so it When the hon, gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies) stated that it did discriminate against Great Britain I said it did not. I said it almost with bated breath, but I managed to pluck up courage enough to say it, and he replied that I would deny anything. My hon, friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) says it does discriminate. Now, it depends entirely upon his point of view, and I know exactly what his point of view is, but I mean to say this: that we are men and not children, and that we ought to talk about facts and not quibble about words. I say to my hon. friend that the difference between the two policies is simply this: When an exporter of hardware from Great Britain brings his goods to a port in Canada, and an exporter of the same class of hardware in the United States brings his goods to the same port, under the present tariff, both are on an even scale and pay exactly the same duty. But Isay, that under this policy of unrestricted reciprocity, if a British manufacturer of hardware comes to the port of Halifax or Quebec, and enters his hardware, he will pay a duty of 20, or 30, or 40 per cent., and when an American comes over with the same class of hardware he gets it into the markets of this country without a cent of duty. That is the difference. You may quibble about discrimination as long as you like, but that is the common sense view, the view that this House will take and the view that the country will take. There is no discrimination in our present tariff per se, to borrow a word from my hon.

friend; the same classes of goods, come from where spent only $750,000 last year, and the hon, gentleman they may, pay exactly the same duty. You may just as well say that we discriminate in favour of the West India Islands, because the West Indies, geographically and economically, are situated so that they do not send to us manufactured goods, but raw materials, the most of which we let in free. But that is simply quibbling; the main, honest position is what I have exactly stated with reference to this policy. Now, then, Sir, we come to the question of loss of revenue; and if there was anything that would make one consume himself with laughter it was the way in which my genial and eloquent friend, the leader of the Opposition, treated this question of loss of revenue in his speech to-day. What did he say? Well, he says: Now come to revenue, which is the sticking point in this question, especially with the Minister of Finance; how much will we lose? $8,100,000 he says; these are the duties from the United States. Well, he says, suppose we do lose that; will there not be so much taxation saved to the country? Certainly there will, but how does that help the loss to the revenue? What we are talking about is not the saving to the people, but how you are to make up the loss of the revenue. Then, he says, a part of the English taxes we iose, and how does he make up for that? By the fact that the people will be richer than they were before. How will that help the revenue if they buy more goods which come in free and less goods which are highly taxed? But I must come to my hon, friend from South Oxford to get at the beauties of this argument. To the question as to how the loss of revenue is to be made up he answers: Use your surplus. The hon, gentleman knew, when he said that, that by my own calculations given in this House, the surplus of this year will be nil, or almost nil. He knows that we have taken off $3,500,000 of taxation and put on only $1,500,000, and I propose to make ends meet by economy; and that is all. When my hon, friend said: Use your surplus for a part of the loss, he knew at the moment that there would be no surplus to use in making up the loss of revenue. Then, he says we will not spend $1,400,000 in keeping up railways and canals. Well, we do not spend that much. I can take no meaning out of that remark but this, that if you take the expenditure on canals and railways for maintenance and running expenses and compare it with the revenue there is a deficit of $1,400,000; but such is not the case; the whole deficit is less than $900,000, and the hon. gentleman would economize by putting the figure of the actual deficit at $500,000 more than it is and saving the imaginary deficit. Then my hon, friend says, we will not spend $1,000,000 for Indians. We will not? Then, we will repudiate our treaties with our Indians and the fair and reasonable expense for them. Let me tell this House that the country will watch with great care and scrutinize keenly the policy of any gentleman or party who propose to deal in a niggardly fashion with the Indians, once the owners of all this great domain and all the enormous resources of the country, and now the wards of the nation, and will expect them to be treated in an I challenge the hon. honourable and generous way. gentleman to look after the Indian bands throughout the country and observe treaty rights, and do it on much less than $1,000,000. Then, he says, we will not spend $1,000,000 on the Mounted Police. Let the American brass manufactures come in free puts the expenditure at $250,000 above the actual figure, and by such a simple expedient he proposes to make up the loss of revenue, a very easy method, but presenting practical difficulties which even he may find it hard to meet. Again, he says: You can do what you have just done; you have put $1,500,000 of taxation upon malt liquors, tobaccos and spirits and you can make up for loss of revenue by a further increase of the Excise taxes. My hon. friend is going to have unrestricted reciprocity. Is he going to have unrestricted reciprocity in beer, in spirits and tobacco, or not? Is he going to cut off these great branches of trade, or have unrestricted reciprocity in them? One thing or the other. If he is going to have unrestricted reciprocity in them he will lose a deal of revenue instead of gaining; and if he is not going to have unrestricted reciprocity in them, I ask him how much more Excise he can put upon those articles? The Excise duty to-day is very much higher than is the similar Excise duty in the United States. We stand to lose in the Excise duties under his scheme rather than to gain. So I suppose I have taken away the resources of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, who was going to avail himself of these means of making up the loss of revenue. Then, he says we can economize in many other ways, but he does not specify in what respects. But his important argument is that we will be richer. Grant that I am worth $5,000 this year and that I will be worth $10,000 next year; when the same class of goods are placed before me, one having no duty upon it and the other having a duty, am I, just because I am a rich man, going to buy the goods on which there is a duty, instead of buying what I can get to the best advantage? That would be well, provided the hon, gentleman made a law that the rich people must purchase a certain proportion of the manufactured goods on which heavy duties were imposed: but if that were done, what would become of that old adage of his that we should buy in the cheapest market and sell in the dearest. But I want to ask one more question. The hon, gentleman stated, and I have it here in black and white, that what the country will lose will be $8,000,000; what the people will gain will be $16,000,000. My hon, friend cannot get away from that statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They will gain more.

Mr. FOSTER. I will not quarrel with the hon. gentleman as to what they will gain. The question is what we shall lose in point of revenue, and the hon. gentleman says it is $8,000,000. Now, my hon, friend is too old and experienced a financier not to know that he will lose more than $8,000,000. Let me tell him what he will lose. He will lose $8,220,000 on United States imports alone, on a parity of the imports of last year. He will lose the duties paid on all goods from other countries, which will no longer come when there is a duty against them, while the same classes of goods come from the United States without any duty at I hold in my hand a statement of all the imall. ports for the year ending 30th June, 1890, and what do I find? I find that in manufactures of brass from the United States we imported $340,000 worth, and from other countries $120,000 worth. There is another peculiarity of his finance. We and put a duty of 35 per cent. against all other countries, and how much of the dutiable articles will come in competition with the free articles of the same class? Does not my hon. friend see that he will have to lose the major part, perhaps all of that? Take the article of buttons. We imported from the United States $80,000 worth, and from other countries $198,000 worth. Let the buttons from the United States come in free and keep the duty upon buttons from other countries, and a large proportion of that import will cease. Take cotton manufactures. Last year we imported from the United States $748,000 worth, and $3,214,000 from other countries. Keep your duty of 50 per cent, or so against the manufactures of other countries, while those from the United States come in free, and I want to know how much duty-paid cotton importations will come into the country. And so you may go through the whole list, and you will find, when you come to the end of it, that from articles brought from the United States and articles brought from other countries, equal classes of manufactures in the main, we get duties equal to $8,000,000 from the United States, and equal to $15,750,000 from other countries; and I take the calculation as a reasonable one, that if we adopt unrestricted reciprocity, if we keep up our duties against other countries but abolish them as regards the United States, we will lose at least two-thirds of the duties we now collect on goods coming in from Great Britain. That is $6,000,000 we will lose on duties in connection with our trade with Great Britain. On goods from other countries, besides Great Britain, we collect duties amounting to $6,210,000. We have already dropped a third of these by striking off the sugar duties. We will drop at least $1,000,000 more, and that would leave only $3,000,000 from that source, leaving to be got from the entire duties, under this calculation, and I am prepared to trust it, a total of $18,000,000 under unrestricted reci-I invite my hon, friend to answer that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. childish to answer.

Mr. FOSTER. I invite my hon, friend to show how he proposes to put a high tariff wall against other countries and let in goods free from the United States, that great manufacturing country, and expect to get the same duties on our importations from other countries which we do now. would not get the same amount of duties, or anything like. Sir, the hon, gentleman will have then a revenue of about $18,000,000 on the present scale of duties. What has he to meet? He will have to meet interest charge and sinking fund, which are as unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians, if we do not intend to repudiate, amounting to $11,800,000. He will have to meet provincial subsidies, which are now $4,000,000, but which will be $6,000,000, after hon, gentlemen opposite get through one winter's legislation. Because. Sir, talk as you may about being tied up or owned by a chattel mortgage or anything of that kind, the hon, the leader of the Opposition has pledged himself to Mr. Mercier, and he stands or falls by his pledge in Quebec, and his party stands or falls with him on this pledge, he has pledged himself that when he obtains power in Ottawa he will add $2,000,000 to the provincial subsidies; and this is not the assertion of a become educated; but I wish to ask the hon. newspaper, but the deliberate statement of the member for Iberville what he thinks now of the leader of the Opposition, made this session from his seat on the opposite side of the House. He will have to meet for collection of revenue, which is almost entirely for the railways and canals and post offices, which. I do not suppose, he intends to skimp, $9,000,000, making a total of $27,000,-000 required to meet costs and charges which cannot be escaped; and all he will have to meet them with is $18,000,000 revenue. That leaves him with a deficit of $9,000,000. And then what has he to face? He has to face the Indian expenditure. which is about $1,000,000; the Administration of Justice, which is about $700,000; Civil Government, $1,300,000; Legislation, $932,000: Penitentiaries, $350,000; Militia, $1,300,000; Police, $750,000; Lighthouse and Coast service, $500,000; Immigration, etc., $300,000; Public Works, $1,500,000. Public works he may reduce by skimping these works, but if he attempts to do that he will have the hon, member for Brant (M. Paterson) to reckon with, because that hon, gentleman warned us that we were not going to get any quarter or credit on account of any economy we might effect in reducing the public works of the country, which must be necessarily carried on. Ocean and river service, $400,000; Fisheries $320,000, making a total of $9,500,000. Add that to the deficit and we find that makes $18,000,000 which he will have to make

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend can call "hear, until doomsday, but I ask him to set himself down to the work of practically disproving this calculation. Let him show by any process of practical calculation how anything else can take place under his plan. I ask the hon, member for Iberville (Mr. Béchard), who has given this House his convictions with reference to direct taxation, to look into that question and to ask his leaders, before he follows them any longer in this policy, how they are going to make up that deficiency of $18,000,000 without resorting to direct taxation? Direct taxation—it is in the air, and if it is not in the air, there is a practical necessity stronger than the fates of old which sat relentless above the will of men and gods, which will drive them on to direct taxation in spite of themselves if once they adopt unrestricted reciprocity. There is no other way to meet the deficit that is bound to occur. Let them put a higher tax on manufactured goods, and see how that will work. Every ten per cent. they add, say on hardware coming from Great Britain, while they allow hardware from the United States in free, will simply raise the wall of prohibition against English goods still higher, and prevent their importation to the advantage of the American manufacturer. There will be no door open out of the difficulty but direct taxation. My hon. friend from South Oxford has stated over and over again that nothing but the incomprehensible stupidity of the people of Canada prevents them from adopting direct taxation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear. Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend very smilingly and earnestly gives in his adhesion to this principle, but the people of Canada, under the training of hon, gentlemen opposite, are not going to remain incomparably stupid all these years. They will

That is what we offer against this grew duller each year; surplus faded away into shifting, indefinite thing which is christened on deficits; the public debt grew apace, and the the other side by the name of unrestricted reciwhole financial and commercial body politic was sick and diseased throughout. These hon, gentlemen could find no other resource in their brilliant and administrative genius than to simply say we will pile on the taxes and trust in Providence. That was their period of administration. They were weighed and found wanting. They have another policy, that of destructiveness. That is the policy trade, there is also the desire to widen the bounds they carried out in 1872, and under the breath of a scandal mostly created and fanned by themselves they succeeded in getting into power, through their destructive tactics, through their power of pulling down and tearing to pieces. Since that they have tried their policy of destructiveness on several occasions. They tried it in 1878, they tried it in 1882, they tried it in 1887, and they tried it in 1891, and they failed. And now, within this last four years they have attempted to adopt a constructive policy, and here you have it in this anomalous, indescribable, indefinite, misty absurdity, which they have named unrestricted reciprocity, and that is all they have to show us for four years of constructiveness on the part of a great political party.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. On the top of all this, my hon. friend who cries "hear, hear"—and I expect to receive another salvo from him—says: Instead of the Government's policy, "we offer a clear-cut, rational and distinct policy."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear. We do not offer you the power of understanding it. That is impossible.

With this National Policy, with this development of our natural resources, with this development of interprovincial of commerce on every side. With the United States? Yes, and on the principles laid down in the Order in Council, taking the basis of the treaty of 1854, and adding to it whatever may be agreed upon by the commissioners appointed on both sides as being in the interests of both countries. That is a policy as plain as can be laid down. No one should be asked to say more than that in going into a trade negotiation with another country; and, however hon. gentlemen opposite may refuse to attribute to us an honest desire to carry out this policy, as they will in their Christian charity and their distinguished probity, the Government knows that the party behind it will trust it, because it reflects the opinions of the men who support it. On our previous record and on this policy we propose to ask the House and the country to support and sustain us, and not support the policy which is propounded by hon. gentlemen opposite. There is one other allusion that may be pardoned to me. Over across the sea there is a market which some hon, gentlemen have thought it not wrong to speak slightingly of. They have spoken much of the interests of Canada, and have said that we should go where the interests of Canada lead us. So we should; but the fundamental opinion of gentlemen on this side of the House is that Canadian interests join us in an other products are finding a limitless market in Great Britain. There is no reason why that should not be further developed. There is no reason why the capital of the neighbouring republic in October next. Sir, the hon, gentleman and the Great Britain which Canadian cheese has taken. and it is taking it and will take it under the intelligent and educative methods which are being carried on now by the Department of Agriculture. So it is with other branches of our trade, and this leads up to my thought, which is, that we may well put by the side of this empty, uncertain, indefinite something with the United States of America proposed by hon, gentlemen opposite an alternative infinitely higher, infinitely more in bodily form and certain prospect, and ask the people to choose between the two. This alternative, Sir, is the prospect of wider, fuller, richer trade relations with the hon, gentleman, in the session previous to Great Britain. Why not? Here we have limit-less lands waiting for the cultivator; there are the congested districts and the overcrowded populations. Here you find the lack of capital: there you have wealth in abundance. Here we have an almost unlimited source of supply and there an almost limitless demand. Between us we have the broad and facile ocean, over which transit is becoming easier and cheaper every year; in both countries there is the same indomitable spirit and mettle; both inherit the same historic past, contemplate a common and boundless prospect for the future. I do not despair that in these times, when revolutions in trade, in thought, in economics, come about with the swiftness of electricity, that there may soon strike the flash of a common thought, the conviction of a common interest, and the sentiment of a world-wide loyalty, which will fuse all seemingly diverse interests into one and establish between Canada and the mother land, by favourable legislation, one great inflow and outflow of commerce, embracing the products and providing for the wants of the British Empire through and through, uniting heart and extremities in one great bond of trade union, which shall bid defiance to the world, and add the fresh lifeblood of health and happiness and prosperity to every portion of the Empire.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have listened with the very closest attention to the speech of the Minister of Finance, and I must say that although the hon, gentleman has often addressed extraordinary statements to the House, I think the speech he has just delivered contains a larger number of extraordinary statements than all the other speeches he has made during the period that he has had a seat in Parliament. The hon. gentleman has told the House that we did not explain or define our policy, and he negotiations which he contemplated. What are expressed a great deal of regret in regard to that to be the articles of free exchange he has matter. He presented all sorts of hypothetical not informed us. Does the hon, gentleman hon, gentlemen opposite stand up in their sturdy views as to the disasters which would be brought independence for the rights and privileges of about by the policy which my hon, friend and those Canada, I stand with them; but we believe on this associated with him have advocated in the House side that Canadian interests are best subserved by and in the country. But, Sir, the hon, gentleman our keeping in touch and unison with the interests was careful, from beginning to end of his speech, of the Empire, and not by putting ourselves in not to say what was the object of the mission to the power of another nation. The market on the Washington, or for what purpose the hon, gentleother side of the ocean has been wonderfully man and some one of his colleagues, or some other developed in late years in regard to several of the party on behalf of the Government, intended to great staples of our country. It is not long ago that visit Washington in October. Surely that hon, that trade was in its infancy, and now it has reached gentleman and his colleagues are responsible for the vast proportions, and our cattle, our cheese and administration of public affairs, and it was his duty our butter should not take the same position in late leader of his party informed the country that Parliament was dissolved for the purpose of taking the opinion of the country upon the policy of the Government with reference to the subject of reciprocity. The country could not pronounce upon the policy of hon, gentlemen upon that subject, because the country did not know what the policy of hon, gentlemen was. The hon, gentleman has very frequently declared against reciprocity with the neighbouring republic; the hon, gentleman had told the House that the country lying nearest to us was not our natural market, nor our best market; and a colleague of this, entered into an elaborate discussion for the purpose of showing the disasters which would befall the farmers of this country if we had free trade with the neighbouring republic. Now, with this declaration of a Minister of the Crown who still retained his position in the Cabinet at the time of the election, with the declaration by the Minister of Finance himself, with the views that have been elaborately put forward by hon, gentlemen who support the Government, what was the country to suppose the hon, gentlemen meant when they said they were going to Washington for the purpose of negotiating a treaty of reciprocity? Why, Sir, it was impossible that the country could form an intelligent opinion, and we supposed that the hon, gentleman, when this subject came under discussion in this House, would undertake to give the House and the country, through his speeches here in Parliament, that information which he failed to give to the country during the recent election. I have listened to the hon. gentleman to night, and I must say that I am not any more enlightened at this moment than I was when he began his Surely, it was of the first consequence to the House and to the country that the hon, gentleman, who is responsible for the administration of public affairs at this time, should have informed us as to the advantages he expected to derive from the negotiation of a treaty of reciprocity. The hon, gentleman has told us of the disaster that would befall this country if there was reciprocal free trade in certain natural products: he has told us what disasters would befall this country if there was reciprocal free trade in certain manufactured products. Well, if the hon, gentleman thinks that reciprocity would give rise to these disasters, he was in duty bound to give to the House information as to why he thought no disadvantage or no injury would flow from the contemplate these negotiations still? Sir, we have but to look at the conduct of the hon, gentleman and his colleagues to see with how much reluctancy that visit to Washington was made. The hon, gentleman and his friends met in the eastern portion of the Dominion; they found there was unrest, there was distrust, and as a result of that visit the hon, gentleman undertook to traverse the Southern Atlantic. He went to the Windward Islands, and to the Leeward Islands, and to the mainland, and he undertook negotiations with various parties; he sought to establish free trade, from such extraordinary disasters as, in his opinion, are likely to arise if such trade is adopted with the neighbouring republic. I say he sought to establish free trade with certain communities in the West India Islands. Well, Sir, his mission was not successful. The hon. gentleman promised us that correspondence some time ago, and I believe the greater portion of it is not down yet. There are a few letters and papers laid before Parliament, but those letters and papers do not give us any idea that the hon, gentleman's mission was anything else than a failure. when the hon, gentleman returned he did not speak in such glowing terms of the National Policy as he has been doing here to-night. It is true the campaign was begun on that line, but the campaign was not continued on that line. Suddenly, the hon. gentleman discovered that the National Policy required to undergo certain modifications, that certain changes in the trade relations with the United States were necessary, the people thought, as the hon, gentleman had promised them before the elections were had that the moment the victory was won on the 5th March the next day he and others associated with him would be on the march to the capital of the neighbouring republic. what purpose was that journey undertaken? If reciprocity leads to such great disasters, why did the hon, gentleman undertake this journey to Washington? If reciprocity can lead to nothing. good, why has the hon, gentleman promised to return to Washington again in October next? I think the House is entitled to know. If hon, gentlemen sitting on the other side do their duty, if they are the masters of this Administration, if we are, as we should be, masters of any Administration that may be formed in this House, we will insist upon knowing, for the Ministry are but the instruments with which Parliament discharges a part of its duties; they are the standing committee of Parliament for the purpose of carrying into effect the views that Parliament may hold on any public question. Well, Sir, I for one am not disposed to abdicate my own functions. It is not so very important to know what our views are as to any question of public policy as it is for those who sit on that side of the House, who are charged with the administration of public affairs, and with the adoption of a policy in the public interest. I again ask what object have hon, gentlemen in going to Washington? What is this reciprocity treaty they intend to negotiate? There is the hon, member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who declares we do not want free trade in agricultural products; there are other hon, gentlemen who have spoken in the same way; the vast majority of hon, gentlemen who have spoken on that side on the tariff declared that we do not want free trade in agricultural products and that it will injurious. The hon, gentleman urged that has wronged me and wronged others by stating Mr. Mills (Bothwell). be injurious.

the two countries produced very much the same articles, and that profitable trade cannot spring up between them. What, then, is the object in pro-posing to negotiate a treaty of reciprocity? The Minister of Finance has not told us, and it is his duty to enunciate his views on this question. How has he treated hon, gentlemen who support him? He has said to them: Gentlemen, this is none of your business; we possess the brains; we are the men of capacity who sit on this side of the House, and you must trust us; you have no right to know; you must have confidence in us; we are the parties who are to decide, and we will decide by and bye, whether you are to have a treaty of reciprocity or not, and what is to be the character of it—you have no right to know now. That is the line of argument which the hon, gentleman adopted towards his supporters at the very time when he was asking us to go into details with respect to our view of reciprocity, although at this moment we are not charged with the conduct of the government of this country. The hon, gentleman has told us he is in favour of standing by Great Britain. Let me say that I do not think that is a very candid statement. What is the policy of Great Britain? Does she undertake to confer special favours on the people of Canada? Does she undertake to favour any colony of the Empire, and give to that colony any advantage on account of its liberal tariff over and above any country in any part of Christendom, no matter how hostile its tariff? Does she distinguish between Belgium, with its low tariff, and France, with its higher tariff? Does she distinguish between countries that admit her goods under low duties and those who admit them under high duties? No; she has adopted free trade, and she applies it to all peoples, and as four fifths of her trade is outside of her Empire she is never likely to discriminate in favour of Canada or any dependency of the Empire. She has pursued that policy, believing it to be in her interests. We are not guardians of the interests of the United Kingdom. The people of the United Kingdom have a Parliament for themselves, and its members, in adopting free trade and extending it to all countries alike, whether their tariffs are high or low, liberal or illiberal, are pursuing that policy which they believe best in her interests. It is the business of this Parliament to adopt that policy which is best in the interests of this country. We are here as guardians of the interests of the Canadian people, not of the interests of the United Kingdom, and if it will promote the interests of our people, if it will further the settlement of our wild lands, add to our wealth, develop at an earlier period the latent resources we possess, to adopt unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, then we would be guilty of treason to the best interests of this country, we would be doing violence to the rights of the people who send us here, by adopting any other policy than that which would lead to the greatest good. position so incontestable that it must be accepted by hon, gentlemen opposite who do not hold official positions, however it may be regarded by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. Another thing the Minister of Finance has told us is that once before we got into power by a policy of slander. I slander my neighbour when I make charges against him which are not true, but I do not slander the man who the facts as they are. It is the business of the people of this country to turn their indignation, not towards the bell-man who has warned you that your house is on fire, but towards the incendiary who has put the torch to your edifice. The hon. gentleman says we have begun the policy of slander again. What policy of slander? Who is slandered? Does the hon, gentleman say that Mr. Perley was slandered when he was accused of taking a bribe in his public capacity? Does the hon, gentleman say that the men at Quebec were slandered who gave bribes to public officials in order that they might return false quantities? Has the hon, gentleman for Montmorency (Mr. Tarte) been guilty of slander because he made certain charges against parties and has undertaken to call witnesses to establish the charges he has made? If he has made false charges he is guilty of slander and worthy of censure; but if his statements are true, the conduct of the Minister who has undertaken to characterize them must be characterized in very different terms from those which he has employed here to-night. I have confidence in the moral honesty and fairness of the people of this country, whether they send representatives to that side of the House or to this, and I say that both the Minister of Finance and the hon, member tor L'Islet, in the motion moved by him, have undertaken to prejudge the case that is being examined elsewhere, and upon which committees have not reported, and every hon, gentleman who votes for this resolution votes to decide in advance of the evidence and in advance of the report of the committee what the result of that enquiry shall be. I do not misstate that fact. The Minister, I suppose, has seen this resolution before to-night, and I ask the attention of the House to its terms. First, it declares that the fiscal policy of the Liberal-Conservative Government, by permitting the free importation of raw materials and by the judicious protection of our natural and manufactured products, has resulted in the marked development of Canadian industries. That is a simple declaration of the protective policy of the Government in past years. The next declaration is one approving of the liberal aid which has been granted to "necessary public works, notably to railways." For example, to the Baie des to railways." For example, to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, to which, I believe, the proprietors never paid one dollar, which was built for them out of the public treasury and which was handed over to them, and which, according to representations made by the hon, member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) when in this House, yielded a profit of $100,000 in cash to the parties who were the fortunate beneficiaries of the Government favours on that occasion. This resolution goes on to say "that in the construction of canals and steamboat lines a wise policy has been pursued." Well, Sir, there is something about subsidies to steamship lines that requires investigation by this House; there is something known to the Minister of Finance about steamship lines that requires some attention from this House. The hon, gentleman had some dealing with a member of the House on that subject, and he may have a very great deal of interest in having this House, before the facts and disclosures on the subject are submitted for discussion, to declare that it approves of these subsidies to these steamship lines and, of course, also of the expenditure industry which were to be soon all over the counupon public works. We have a public work just try. Well, Sir, where are these towns? The city across the street here for which the contract price was, I think, a good deal less than one-half the cost of construction, and there are extraordinary revelations with regard to that public work. It is, therefore, more convenient to obtain a favourable opinion from the House on these subjects, before the facts are laid before Parliament, than it will be to obtain that opinion after they have been submitted to the House; and so, the less the House knows the more likely it is to vote right for the hon, gentleman, and the hon, gentleman, of course, will feel it most important that this particular proposition in the resolution should receive the sanction of the House I may just say to these hon, gentlein advance. men who are present in the House to night and who may hear what I say that it is important that they should look at these facts before they undertake to record their votes in favour of these pro-They look very innocent; they are positions. abstract propositions, but they are abstract propositions that are intended to lead to practical results, and what these practical results are every hon, gentleman who has followed the proceedings of committees of this House, and who has read the reports of these proceedings, has an opportunity of learning something with regard to the meaning of these propositions. Now, Sir, there is added at the end here a declaration against commercial uniona proposition that nobody has advocated here, a proposition that has never been formally supported in this House, and why did the hon, gentleman wish to have that included in the motion? Simply because it was very much easier to condemn what nobody supported than to condemn that which a very large section of the House and a vast majority of the people of this country do support. I tell the hon, gentleman that the National Policy is as dead in this country, apart from those who are especially favoured by it, as Julius Casar, and all the hon, gentlemen can do will never resurrect it. I represent a constituency largely Conservative, and yet, Sir, one-third of the Conservative party in that county were my supporters, or supporters of our policy, in the last election, and they were my supporters because they pronounced against the National Policy, and said that the National Policy was dead. The hon, gentleman has told us to-night that a country ought to produce more than it consumes, and he says that it is an unhealthy condition if you do not produce more than you consume, and that you will soon become impoverished if your expenditure exceeds your income, and so, that we must look abroad for foreign markets, because we are not able to find markets at home. Was that the declaration that was made at the initiation of this policy? Why, they said it was necessary to bring the consumer and producer together; it was necessary to bring the people who were to consume the products of the farmers from Europe and to make them settlers in Canada. It was said that every village would grow to be a town, and every town was to become a city, and within the sight of every farmer in the country the smoke-stacks were to be seen, which were to be the symbols of new industries to which this policy gave birth. Why, Sir, you were to be hardly able to see the sun after this policy came into operation, on account of the smoke from the chimneys of those various hives of

of Toronto, by its railway connections with the North-West, and the City of Montreal, have been built up; but what other places have grown up? Why, every village over the country has been killed; its population has been drawn away; the population of the rural districts has; dwindled down, and you have had elaborate theories by hon, gentlemen sitting behind the Treasury benches to account for this change in the condition of the country. We are gravely told about some mysterious law of nature now potent which is impelling the people from the rural districts into the cities. We are told that in England the population is flocking towards the cities. Why? Because that skilled labour is more profitable than unskilled labour. We are told that the same thing has happened in the United States. Why? Because by the policy of protection they have taxed the agriculturist well nigh out of existence, and they have built up the cities at his expense. You are producing the same conditions by your system, miscalled the National Policy, a system by which one class of the people are plundered for the benefit of another class, by which a vast majority are injured for the benefit of a few. You call that the National Policy! No name was ever more misapplied. The hon, gentleman says: You were in office for five years before, and the country was poor and trade diminished during the period of your administration. Well, Sir, we came into office when there was general depression in commerce all over the globe. It existed, not in Canada alone; it existed in the United States; the Americans had a high tariff, higher than ours has ever been, and there was Their cities ceased to grow in bankruptcy there. population; large classes of those who were employed in manufacturing industries were obliged to abandon the cities and to settle on lands west of the Mississippi. We ceased to have a market there for our lumber; the cottages that were crected for the artizans were no longer required. In England you had depression under a free trade system, and you had it in France and in Germany also. The very thing which you said was due to our Administration existed everywhere over the globe. Now, I think there is no proposition clearer than this: that where you find under a free trade system, under a protective system, and under a revenue tariff, the same conditions existing, it is perfectly clear that that condition can be attributed to neither of these systems of fiscal policy. I am not going to detain the House to night by a discussion of what the probable cause of that may have been. But I state that at that time, everywhere throughout the world, there was depression as well as in Canada, and there was no country in the world where the manufacturing classes weathered the storm better than they did in Canada. We had at that time upon the Statute-book an Act relating to insolvency, and we had reports made from assignees of every case of failure over the entire country. classified them according to their calling and business, and what did we find? We found that there were scarcely any failures among the manufacturers: the failures were among the mercantile classes, and yet you proposed to create a better condition of things by imposing additional burdens on commerce. You proposed to provide a remedy for those who were not sick; but upon those who were sick and suffer-

what was the effect of that policy? During the first year after you adopted it, before the revival of trade brought relief, you had a larger number of failures by millions than in any previous year. The hon, gentleman says that our trade fell off. That is true; and why? Because our purchasing power had diminished. The people of South America, the people of the United States and the people of England did not require our lumber as before, and the result was that a large number of our lumbering population were out of employment, and the products of their industry did not find a market. The purchasing power of the people was diminished by many millions, and they imported into the country, in 1877, $40,000,000 less of goods than in 1873 or 1874. The hon, gentleman has said, and his friends have said, that Canadian manufactures were injured by Canada being made a slaughtermarket. If they prospered when your imports were $128,000,000, how could they be injured when your imports fell to $89,000,000? And yet hon, gentlemen, in the face of these facts, do not hesitate to say that Canada was a slaughter market. Let me say again that if Canada was a slaughter market who was injured? If I should sell my goods to my neighbour at half price who is injured—I, who sell the goods at half price, or my neighbour, who buys them? I quite understand that the man who sold goods at half-price would be bankrupt, but I do not see how the man who bought them at half-price could be injured. But that has been the contention of hon, gentlemen opposite. It reminds me of a story told by the comedian, Charles Mathews. That gentleman told his servant "to run in and tell Mr. Young that his horse has cut its throat," and the man, without thinking of the probability of the story, ran in and made the announcement. So these gentlemen told the country that Canada was being injured by cheap goods, although the amount of goods imported was nearly $40,000,000 less than before; and that story has been repeated again and again, without these gentlemen stopping to consider for one moment the absurdity and the impossibility of the statement in face of the importation at that time. Sir, it we will take the progress of the manufacturing industries in Canada as shown by the census between 1861 and 1871, and between 1871 and 1881, we shall see that they made very much more progress in those periods than they have made during the past seven or eight years. Why, Sir, what is the confession of the hon. Minister of Finance to-night? He says that Canada has the appliances, the machinery for manufacturing very much more than she can sell, and he looks upon it as a reasonable operation that there should be combines, that establishments should be closed, and that work should be carried on on half time or little more than half time, because it would be useless to go on manufacturing when you cannot find a market for the product. But what does that show? It shows that there has been a misdirection of capital, and that you are producing your surplus at a price at which it cannot be profitably disposed of in a foreign market, because you have by the policy of protection increased the cost of production so that the surplus, if sold abroad, can be sold only at a sacrifice. Now, the hon, gentleman has spoken of the extraordinary difficulties that stand in the way of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. What are those difficulties? What ing you proposed to impose additional burdens. And difficulty is there in discussing with the American Minister the subject of goods manufactured from raw material purchased from Britain as well as goods from raw material grown at home? Is there any insuperable obstacle in the way of discussing one more than another? A treaty of reciprocity is not something that springs up like a plant. It is an artificial contrivance, the result of negotiation: it springs from intelligent and deliberate dis-cussion, resulting in mutual agreement; and you may embrace in such a treaty as much or as little as you please. There is just as much necessity for entering into an agreement with regard to goods manufactured from raw material found in the country as with regard to goods made from raw material imported from abroad. There is and can be no difference; and all that the hon. Minister; said on that subject this evening is simple puerility. I cannot use an expression that will properly characterize it any less strong than the one which I employ. Why undertake to enter seriously into a discussion of that sort? Does the hon, gentleman suppose that those who support the Government are without the capacity to think or to reason, or hon, gentleman want us to be more specific and without ordinary intelligence? Does he suppose that an argument of that sort can, in the smallest degree, influence the conclusions which hon, gentlemen reach? Why, Sir, the United States import wool from South America and from South Africa, and there is wool produced in the United States. Canada may do exactly the same thing.

Mr. BOWELL. Wool is free.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Very well; that must be a subject of discussion when the negotiation takes place. You cannot have a treaty without binding both parties. You cannot, by a treaty, declare that goods of a certain sort shall be free for twenty years, and at the same time to have the power to go on and tax them. You bind your hands by a reciprocity treaty or any treaty into which you may undertake to enter, and you bind them just to the extent to which you enter into a compact with the other side; and you bind yourself because you believe that it is to the advantage of the country to secure what you propose to obtain by the compact upon these terms. And so it is just a question of degree whether you enter into a treaty with regard to natural products or enter into a treaty including manufactured products as well. The hon, gentlemen tax a number of things at the present time. They tax small fruits; they tax other fruits; they tax trees from the nursery; they tax seeds of various sorts. These are natural products. If they undertake to negotiate a treaty, which I hardly think they will do, but if they carry out their promise, and then endeavour to put these articles on the free list, they have tied their hands, and they cannot legislate with regard to them during the continuance of the evening, these raw sugars which the people can treaty. So far as the power of this Parliament is concerned, that power remains in abeyance during the continuance of the treaty. the hon, gentleman said that it was not a fact that manufacturer; and so the manufacturer is to receive these negotiations were initiated by this Government. He repeated what he said at the opening of the session. Well, Sir, I have looked at the correspondence so far as it is laid upon the Table, and I find that the Government did take the initiative. I find that Mr. Blaine complains because statements to the contrary had been made by members of the Administration, and I find that the High Commis- Administration. They have run heels over head into sioner in a report made to the late Prime Minister on the subject declares that the statement of Mr. Blaine was correct, and that the statement made by the Government he represented was incorrect. Now the hon, gentleman has declared himself again in favour of the National Policy. I see the hon. gentleman is trying to escape from the promise made during the election, a vague promise, an indefinite promise, a promise as nebulous as the hon. gentleman says our view of reciprocity is. But there can be no doubt that the promise of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues as regards reciprocity is in the clouds. There is nothing tangible in it. He does not know and cannot say upon what basis we are to have reciprocity. He will not venture to say what articles should be put upon the free list. He has not said so this evening, and since the opening of the House no member of the Government has said so.

Mr. BOWELL. I should think not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why then should the definite than he is himself? Why should be think it would be proper for us to do what he says is improper for him? The hon, gentleman should at all events-I do not mean enter into minute details —but declare in a more specific way than he has what the Government propose to do. But he has no right to ask us to go into that minute detail, which, he says, would be little short of treason to the public interest, if it were done by hon, gentle-men on that side. Then the hon, gentleman says that there has been no appreciable increase in the public debt. Is that a merit? Was it a demerit when there was an appreciable increase in the publie debt? Was it a praiseworthy thing to increase the public debt by $100,000,000? When hon, gentlemen opposite add to the public debt, it is regarded as statesmanship. When they do not run in debt it is statesmanship. When they impose taxes it is again statesmanship, and in the public interest; and when they take taxes off they ask the gratitude of the country on account of the extraordinary favour they have done it by re-lieving it of grievous fiscal burdens. That is the line of argument they have adopted on all occasions. We are told that the country has put itself under everlasting obligations to the Government on account of the change in the sugar tariff; still, we say the Government did not go far enough. In my opinion, the tariff they have proposed is entirely unjustifiable. It is a tax which will yield no revenue. It is a tax of which the public will not receive a cent. It is a tax in the interest of a few manufacturers and not of the community at large. The hon, gentleman leaves off the free list, as my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) pointed out this consume in the raw state. The only sugars he permits us to import free are those that cannot be consumed, and must be refined or washed by the tof a cent extra profit on every pound of sugar which he washes, although that process costs him the merest fraction of that sum. The hon, gentleman has spoken of the strength of the National Policy. He says it is so strong that it cannot be uprooted or overturned. Well, the strength of the National Policy depends upon the necessities of the

They have impoverished us while they have increased our burdens, and the hon. gentleman says now: Look at the condition of things; we have imposed burdens upon you until $11,000,000 a year are sent abroad to pay the interest on our obligations: we have put you in the condition of the impoverished tenants of Ireland, who pay taxes to the non-resident landlords, and now we say, look at your condition, and we ask you how you are going to get on if you have unrestricted reciprocity with the United States? Well, my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) said here to-day what I said to my constituents when discussing the question during the election: We are neighbours, and can agree upon a plan of unrestricted reciprocity. may agree to put on the free list immediately articles mentioned in the schedule. We may agree that other articles, from time to time, shall go upon the free list, according as the fiscal circumstances of the country may warrant, until, within a Certain period of time, all the various products exchanged between the two countries shall go upon the free list. I do not say that is the only way, but that is one way of meeting the objection which the hon. gentleman presents. The hon. gentleman says you will have a deficit, and how are you going to make it up? My hon, friend beside me (Mr. Laurier) it up? My hon. friend beside me (Mr. points out how we can avoid a deficit, and the hon. gentleman says that is not satisfactory. Because it does away with his objection, and if hon, gentlemen opposite could only continue to object they would have more satisfaction in fighting us, but now we have answered them and dampened their powder, the result is, our position is altogether unsatisfactory to them. Hon. gentlemen opposite say we are always decrying the country. That is not so, but we are decrying the Administration, and we have reason for decrying it. We say: You have been faithless servants; you have been entrusted with great public interests and have been faithless to those trusts; you promised to accomplish great results and have failed to accomplish them; you told the people how the population would increase in our towns and cities until the farmers would find in them a market for all they produced, and the farmers have to seek foreign markets, just as before, and you have not only failed to supply the markets you promised but have put up barriers in the way of their reaching other markets. You have done more than that: you have created difficulties in the North-West. The hon, gentleman said we must take good care of the Indians. Well, it is not by giving them rusty pork and musty flour, and by using a large portion of the appropriation for the Indians on officials, that you are going to take care of that population. The Government has been a great failure; it has exhibited great incompetency; it has not procured any of those advantages to the country which it promised from the adoption of the National Policy thirteen years ago; but I say that the country has great recuperative force, and if you give it a fair opportunity prosperity will be restored. I do not believe the country is in that hopeless position in which hon. gentlemen opposite pictured it some years ago. It never was in that condition. The mischief arises from the irritating disease which sits on the Treasury benches and causes disorder in the country. Remove the hon, gentlemen and public health will be restored and public large portion of what you purchase from other country. Mr. Mills (Bothwell).

prosperity will begin. The recuperative power of this country is very great. I remember that a few years ago President Hayes, in discussing the growth of wealth in the United States, pointed out that to-day the United States can produce in three years and five months all the wealth they at present possess, including the value of lands; and so, where a country once begins to practise economy, and the people are industrious, there is scarcely disaster that may have overtaken which it cannot surmount. I admit that the disaster which has overtaken this country is very great, and it is not simply a disaster in regard to our material resources, but we have moral disasters as well. There has been an attempt to blunt the moral sense of the country, and to degrade official life, but we hope to see the official life purified, and the moral sense of the country restored and the hon. gentlemen removed, and the country will then be on the high road to prosperity. The hon, gentleman has referred to the importance of protecting our industries and to the misfortunes that would befall this country if protection were withdrawn. If the hon. gentleman was a consistent protectionist he would put a high duty on raw cotton in order to encourage the production of flax. Why should he not make every one wear linen goods instead of cotton goods? He might not prefer that himself, but he must look to the industries of the country and to its natural resources, and he ought to take precious good care to keep out all Scotch tweeds and all American cottons, or goods manufactured from cotton of American growth. But the hon. gentleman is not a consistent protectionist. His protectionism extends only as far as his interest, and his interest extends only to the limits of the Red Parlour. There are very few things which are produced in this country that cannot be produced at a profit without Government interference, and I will venture to say that there is nothing produced in this country that ought to have been called into existence by taxation. The people of the United States, for instance, have given protection to their iron industries. I do not know what the tax is at this moment, but a few years ago it amounted to $9 a The quantity produced was 2,000,000 tons, and therefore the consumer paid $18,000,000 to the manufacturer in consequence of this duty. was $58,000,000 of capital invested in this manufacturing enterprise, and if you take the interest upon that you will find it was about $3,000,000. Then take the labour. I think about 36,000 men were employed and about $12,000,000 paid to them, so that, to pay the interest on the money invested and to pay the labourers employed by the manufacturers would require $15,000,000; and Congress gave to these men by their system of taxation $18,000,000—that is to say, they gave them $3,000,-000 more than was sufficient to pay the wages of the men employed and the interest on the capital That principle applies to almost every establishment in this country. I do not say that that should be immediately withdrawn, but I say that you have a wasteful production, and you never can have an economical production as long as you come to the rescue of any class of the community in The hon. gentleman has said: If you have free trade with the United States and if you tries to the United States. That is not so. The kinds of goods the United States could furnish us with are not the kinds that we purchase from the United Kingdom, or only to a very small extent. We have now a duty of 35 per cent. on tweed goods, but are Scotch tweeds kept out of this country because of that? Is not the kind of tweed you wear very largely a matter of taste? A man is willing to pay 85 cents for goods that he might buy here for 60 cents, and this duty does not keep those goods out of this country, nor out of the United States, where the duty is very much higher. The Minister of Customs knows that right well. He has every opportunity of acquiring practical knowledge on these subjects, in consequence of his official position, and I am sure that he will not say that the imports which come into Canada from the United Kingdom would cease if we had free trade with the American republic. The hon. gentleman says: You have $80,000 worth of buttons imported from the United States and $190,000 worth imported from other countries, and if you have free trade with the United States you will buy all your buttons from the United States. The $190,000 worth of buttons I do not think so. imported from other countries are not the same kind of buttons as the Americans manufacture, or only so to a small extent, and the hon. gentleman need not be afraid that his clothes would go without buttons of the proper pattern if we had free trade in buttons with the neighbouring republic. The hon, gentleman failed altogether to make due allowance for the influence of taste in the purchases of a population. I was very much struck, in reading over the reports of the consuls of the United Kingdom, who are scattered over various portions of the world, in finding that goods of a particular pattern are sold largely in certain places, while other goods which are equally valuable and of equally good manufacture cannot find any sale in the particular market or place, not because the one is good and the other bad, not because the one is dear and the other cheap, but because the one is of a style which is suited to the tastes of the population and the other is of a wholly different kind. I am not going at this time of the evening to detain the House by a further discussion of the subject. I think it is obvious that the Minister of Finance in his speech did not expect a serious discussion of his objections to the proposition in favour of unrestricted reciprocity. A more futile series of objections, I venture to say, were never addressed to any deliberative body than those which he addressed to The House is prepared, I the House this evening. have no doubt, to give a fair consideration to the propositions which the hon. gentleman entertains when he is prepared to submit them. I again ask the attention of the House to the character of the resolution upon which it is called to vote. A great pointed out early in the course of my remarks, relates to the administrative action of the Government, especially to the conduct of the Departments of Railways and Public Works. I am confident that whatever view may be taken in the House, the country will not alter the opinions which it forms upon the character of the administration of those departments.

Mr. CASEY. The whole of the discussion on this motion, as well as the motion itself, has say a declaration of policy in regard thereto, but hitherto been of an extraordinary nature. It is a very unusual thing for a Government to put up one of its supporters to move an amendment on an occasion of this kind, containing a very large dose of taffy for the Government and a declaration of policy which, as the Government have adopted the motion, must be taken to be the Government It is, as I say, a strange and most unheard of, and hardly a decent, course for the Government to take under the circumstances, for they ask the House to vote they have done all that is good and great in all matters financial and otherwise, and to vote, in addition to that, an approbation of the Government's policy upon a most important question, and one that may affect the negotiations with the United States, as an amendment to the motion to go into Supply. I say that no Government that had any confidence in itself or in its supporters would adopt such a course as that. The discussion on that side of the House has been equally peculiar. The Hon. Minister of Marine has addressed the House in a style reminding us largely of his respected parent, respected at least by the Minister, the gentleman who now occupies a comfortable and well-paid position on the other side of the Atlantic. I do not know whether it will be necessary, in describing the hon. gentleman's speech, to revive a phrase that was classical in this House some years ago, when his father was a member thereof, and a phrase which passed without criticism, without anybody objecting to it as being out of order. I believe my hon. friend from South Brant (Mr. Paterson) was the inventor of the phrase; it was a phrase intended to characterize statements made by the High Commissioner when a member of this House, and would just as fitly characterize the statements made to-night by his son. My hon, friend used to say that such-and-such statements were flagrant and glaring Tupperisms. I do not know that we can find a better word to describe the speech we had from the hon. Minister to-night. It is an old proverb, "as the old cock crows the young cock learns." The young cock, in this instance, is evidently imitating the performance of his respected parent. But although the tune of the crowing of the young cock is similar to the tune crowed across this House by the old cock himself, the voice is different. The young cock has not yet attained to the magnificent assurance, to the unabashed hardihood, with which the old cock used to crow. The tune is the same, as I said, but the voice of the young fledgling is still as the voice of a spring chicken, the voice of a hardly fledged cockerel, and it will be long before he attains to the glorious proficiency of the venerable chanticleer who now crows upon other shores. Well, Mr. Speaker, although the voice has been weak and ineffectual, the young cock said something which requires notice. For deal of it has nothing to do with the fiscal policy instance, he found that the speech of the leader of the Administration. A great deal of it, as I of the Opposition, because he went into the pointed out early in the course of my remarks, question of trade relations with the United States, was not, as the Minister said, directed to the motion before the House; he said that the motion dealt almost entirely with the fiscal and internal policy of the country, and that my honoured leader should not have discussed such matters as he did. Now, as a matter of fact, the motion itself contains references to our trade relations with the United States. It contains, I will not it contains phrases intended to avoid the declaration of a policy in regard thereto, but still implying a reference to those relations. As a matter of fact, my honoured leader's remarks were perfeetly in place in speaking to this motion. But what did the Minister of Marine and Fisheries do? Did he confine himself to the fiscal and internal matters of which he spoke? Why, Sir, his speech from beginning to end was an attack upon the trade policy which he assumed we on this side of that House favoured. So that, while condemning our leader for referring to such a poliey, he himself alluded to that, and spoke of that, almost to the exclusion of any other subject; and the Minister of Finance followed in his footsteps, both practically discussing the resolution which was moved some days ago by the hon, member for South Oxford, and not the amendment brought before the House by the hon, member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins). Now, he went on to say—and in this particular he was re-echoed by the Minister of Finance, who should be his leader, but on this occasion followed in his footsteps—to assert that all the producers of this country, and notably the farmers, were in a very prosperous and satisfactory condition. Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Marine may tell that to the marines. The fact that he has ventured such a statement in this House may be due to his official association with that proverbially incredulous race of people. But if he were to go outside of this House into Ontario, and make that statement to any audience of farmers, he would find out that he had not the marines to deal with. I would scarcely care, as a matter of policy, to object to his statements in that particular. All I wish, Mr. Speaker, is that every farmer in Canada should know that in the opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, that in the opinion of the Government to which they both belong, those farmers are as happy and as prosperous as they have any right to expect to be. I am heartily glad that Ministers have taken this position—the position that the farmer of this country ought to be satisfied with his present condition, and has no need or no right to look for anything better. But, although the statement is contradicted by the consciousness of every man who may hear it, it is, perhaps, proper that those of us who represent agricultural ridings should speak of our own personal knowledge in regard to the condition of the farmer. I speak now of my own personal knowledge in regard to the county I represent when I say that the price of farm lands in that riding during the past ten years has declined fully 33 per cent., fully one-third. I say I have seen more than that, even. Farms within a few miles of a good market have been put up at public auction without a single bid being received for them. It is not only that land has become reduced in value, ruinously reduced in value, but that in many cases it is impossible to sell it at I speak in this respect, not only from observation, but from my own personal experience. I have found it impossible to sell lands at any price on several occasions, although they were well situated and desirable in every respect for farm We turn our eyes to other great producing industries to which the Minister has called Mr. CASEY.

business prospering? Look at the closed mills and idle saws at the Chaudière. Look at Hull, and the number of unemployed men, women and children there, who formerly earned a living in this industry. Take this as a sample of the lumbering business throughout the Dominion, and if you say that that great producing industry is prosperous you must be a marine.

Mr. DENISON. What about Booth's new mill?

Mr. CASEY. It is a fact that there has been an addition to that mill, but I still hold that the condition of the lumber yards, and of the Chaudière as a whole, with Booth's improvements thrown in, shows that the trade is not prosperous; and it must be admitted that there are more mills closed and more people out of employment than during many years past. I can speak from a recollection of 19 or 20 years, and I never saw so little doing at the Chaudière as this year. Take mining. The Minister of Finance has spoken as if something was done for mining by the so-called National What are the facts? Compare the north and south of Lake Superior. We have on the north shore vast deposits of iron ore lying undeveloped, while our neighbours to the south have increased their trade in ore from Lake Superior mines to the smelting works at Toledo and elsewhere by millions of tons each year. Is it not because there is a market on that side and not on our side? What is the only thing that will develop our mines? A market. Take the iron industry. Sir Charles Tupper told us when he proposed his last dose of protection to iron that they had in Nova Scotia some of the most remarkable mines in the world, situated especially well for producing iron cheaply; that they had iron ore, coal and limestone for flux, all in one happy valley, where they could be brought together more cheaply than elsewhere in America. He drew from this fact the peculiar deduction that because we could so cheaply manufacture iron we should protect it by largely-increased duties and a bounty. That was done several years ago. What has been the result? With $4 per ton duty and $2 bounty on pig iron we do not produce one-twentieth of what we require in this There are only one or two smelting country. establishments in Canada, and the principal one at Londonderry is in a chronic state of bank-Protection in its extremest form has done nothing for the iron industry. Why? Because, although we do not yet produce sufficient for the Canadian market, the market is so small that capitalists do not think it would pay to establish extensive works. What the iron industry wants is a market, and it is suffering largely on account of the National Policy. What has this policy done for coal? The Minister of Finance has told this House about the "vast interprovincial trade." The National Policy was intended as a force-pump to force coal from the Maritime Provinces into Ontario. It has not done so to any appreciable extent. Coal comes as far west as usual, but the quantity has not increased. The whole attempt to bring coal westward by the National Policy force-pump has failed. At the same time, our relations to the United States and the tariff have been the means of shutting off Nova Scotia coal from its natural market along attention—mining and lumbering. Do we find the sea-board of the United States. It is true they do there the condition of content and prosperity of not seem to feel their loss in this respect, as might be which the hon. gentleman spoke? Is the lumber expected, but it is one of the peculiarities of protection that those who think they are being protected are always afraid of taking any step in advance, and always fear a change in the existing state of things. It is not without appropriateness that the protected industries are always described by the advocates of protection as infant industries. They are so in one sense, although some have grown to consider-They remain helpless, as they did in the early state of their existence. Although some have been overfed to the point of dyspepsia, although some are overgrown under the system of monopoly, combined with protection, they are still fat, flabby "infant industries," and the bigger babies they become the greater demand they will make on us for sustenance. They remind me of a calf alluded to by an American politician, who said the more cows that calf sucked the bigger calf it became. The more we assist those industries the more help they will need, and the greater will be the burdens we shall have to carry in the future. The Minister said that the National Policy had caused such plenty that trouble was arising from over-production. It is not often we hear a country pitied on the ground that it is too rich and produces too much. As a matter of fact, I think it can be shown that Canada has not produced too much. If there was such a large surplus it would have been exported, even although not at a profit. What do the returns show? That from 1870 to 1889 there were only two years in which the exports were less than during 1889. While under the sad and gloomy rule of a revenue tariff, we had in 1873 exports to the value of $14,995,000, while in 1874 we exported $18,500,000, in 1875 $17,250,000, in 1876 $21,-000,000, and so on; and even in 1881 we exported 31,000,000. We find that since that time the exports have been generally decreasing, and they have sometimes been absurdly low. In 1884 we only exported $12,400,000; in 1885, $14,500,000; in 1886 there was an improvement to $17,000,000; but in 1889, the last year included in the Trade and Navigation Returns, our imports were rather less than $13,500,000 in round numbers. This being the case, it is absurd for the Minister of Marine or for anybody else to say that we are troubled with a surplus of useful products in Canada. It was also stated by the hon. gentleman that the National Policy had rather favoured trade with the mother country, fact being that while in 1878, the last year of Reform Administration, the last year of a revenue tariff, the percentage of our total exports sent to Great Britain was 52.75, in 1888, after ten years of the National Policy, the percentage of our total exports to Great Britain was only 41.25; while the percentage of exports to the United States grew from 49 65 in 1878 to 55 86 in 1888. Not only has the percentage of exports to Great Britain decreased, but the amount of exports to that country was decreased by over $2,000,000. So that the National Policy has not fostered trade with Great Britain, but rather with the United States. If we are to look for extended trade relations at all we must look in these directions in which trade naturally flows. If you want to drain a piece of land you observe in what direction the surplus water takes itself away; and if you find the natural water-course blocked up with obstructions of any kind you clear them out, and, if it is necessary, you deepen the channel by digging. Now, I say that if we want to increase our tariff money in addition to the other things I refer to.

relations with the outside world, if we want an outlet for our surplus productions, which the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine say we do want, let us look to the natural channels of trade. Let us look to where trade flows in spite of all obstructions; let us enlarge and deepen these channels, and our trade will be increased and our wealth increased with it. It is impossible to make water flow up hill, and it is impossible to make trade flow elsewhere than in its natural channels. Now, the Minister of Marine stated that the Opposition acted as if we were willing to say anything we liked that was insulting about the manufacturers of this country, but that we assumed a very different position towards the farmer, and he asked would the farmers listen to the tactics of the Opposition, and become excited about the way in which they are treated? The hon, gentleman need not ask, if the farmers' attention is called to these matters, will they take steps to right themselves? They have done it. All over the Province of Ontario-I cannot speak so well for the other provincesthe farmers are taking a leaf out of the book of those whom the Minister of Finance says are justified in combining to protect themselves. The farmers are beginning to combine for their own protection; farmers' alliances are springing up here and there all over the country, and the voice of the farmer will be heard in the future, not as the indistinct hum of the multitude, but as the voice of a mighty organization. It was heard in the last election; it has been heard since that election, by many a member on that side of the House as well on this. I say it was heard at the last election, which recalls to my mind a remark of the Minister of Marine, who stated that reciprocity had sustained a terrible defeat at the last election, and that the Government had won a great victory on their trade policy. The hon, gentleman is misinformed as to the facts, or he has not been able to convey the information he received correctly to the House. He knows perfectly well that the last elections were not conducted on a straight issue between reciprocity and protection. The Government went to the country asserting that they were in favour of some sort of reciprocity, and what sort of reciprocity they were in favour of was explained to suit the particular audience that was to be captured. The Conservative voters who favoured freer trade relations with the United States said that it was not a question between reciprocity and protection at all. They said: If we want reciprocity our old friends will give it to us, and we will rather trust them to give it to us than vote for the Opposition. Naturally, they preferred to get this benefit from their own friends rather than from their former opponents; but, in addition to that, the Government had other powerful support in carrying these elections. They had the support of the gerrymander, they had the support of the Franchise Act, and they had the support of money in vast supplies. We are beginning to find out where some of that money came from. We knew before that the pet monopolists, the particular infant industries which were being fattened—while the Government was a stepmother to other industries equally valuable—contributed largely to the election funds. We knew that they could afford to do so, but we are beginning to find out now how contractors were bled, and so on. I say that the Government had

Mr. STEVENSON. It is a good thing.

Mr. CASEY. My hon, friend from Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) says it is a good thing, and he evidently knows. I suppose it would amuse the House if he told us how much of it he had in his own election, but he will not do so. In addition to these influences I have named, they had the sentiment of loyalty to their old chief, who was then the leader of the Government, and for which I must give credit to the Conservative party. could not join in that feeling myself, but I must give credit to the vast mass of the Conservative electors of this country for having a strong feeling of loyalty for their old chieftain. The victory that that was won by the Government, narrow as it was, was not due to the preference of the people of this country for protection, but to the combined effects of love for the old man, love for the dollar, and the Franchise and Gerrymander Acts as well. Now, Sir, speaking of logalty, what kind of loyalty do the supporters of the Government profess in contradistinction to us? What right have they to speak of loyalty, whose leader, the Premier of this country, signed an annexation manifesto years and years ago? They may say that that was done in his youth. How do they know he does not entertain the same opinions still? It is a very bad certificate, at all events, for the party to give to themselves when they choose as the head of the ultra-loyal party of this country a man with such a record. Of course, I do not mean to infer that the Premier is a disloyal man at the present time; but I say that this fact takes out of their mouths the right to talk much about loyalty. But we are willing to talk about loyalty, and we are willing to do more than that: we are willing to practise it. Now, Sir, loyalty to what? Loyalty to whom? What, in fact, is the meaning of the word "loyalty?" Does it mean the mere sentimental effusion of "guff" and theatrical talk across the floor of the House? Does it mean the mere sentimental feeling which we have as British subjects for the Crown and the throne, and the present occupant of the throne? No, Sir; loyalty means a great deal more than That is mere surface loyalty. No Canadian is a true Canadian, no Canadian is a true Briton who is not loyal first of all to his own country. That is the principle of British loyalty; that is the principle on which Britons have always acted and on which they have maintained themselves among the nations of the earth for so many centuriesloyalty to themselves, loyalty to the truth, loyalty to common sense and reason, and loyalty to the country which has given them birth and the means Such loyalty as this we can all agree in, and I believe that 99 out of every 100 electors of this country are willing to support loyalty of that kind if called upon to do so. But, if Ministers think that they are going to cover up the effects of their policy and the failure of their promises by shouting about loyalty, and about the old man and the old flag, they are greatly mistaken. When the Budget debate began, and during the continuance of this second debate on practically the same subject, we have been waiting for a declaration, not of vague, unmeaning loyalty to Great Britain, but of the Government's policy, and why have we not had it? We have tried to get it, but the speech of the hon. Minister of Finance has been framed as if it were the policy of the Opposition ment of Mr. Blaine, contained in the documents Mr. CASEY.

and not the policy of the Government that was on We have failed to get anything from the Minister but the vaguest sort of theatrical talk as to what the Government mean to do. In short, if we have had to drop the nickname of stretcher which was formerly applied to a distinguished member of this House, we shall have to introduce a new nickname for the hon. Minister of Finance. Charles Tupper was known as the great stretcher when he occupied that chair and that portfolio, I am sure that its present occupant should be called the great wriggler, because he has wriggled out of every statement to-night, and has avoided giving us the details of his policy. We were told with great gravity when the Government went to the country, and it has been repeated since by members in the House, that it was of no use to begin negotiations with the United States in the last year of a moribund Parliament—that before they went to Washington to negotiate they must have at their back a majority who had confidence in them and in what they would do when they went there, and that for that reason they had to dissolve the House and to go to the country. It strikes me that it would have been more reasonable to say: We have gone to Washington and ascertained what we can get from the United States, and we have approved or disapproved of it, as the case might be; we agree or do not agree, as the case may be, to accept such conditions of reciprocity as we can get from them. If they had done that, and laid the proposition before the House, and asked the approval of the House, and the House had refused to give its approval, and they had then gone to the country, they would have been acting reasonably and constitutionally. Or if they had said: Before we go on with these negotiations we will submit to the country the provisional arrangement which we have arrived at with the American statesmen, they would have acted reasonably and constitutionally. But what did they do? Before they had any negotiations with the American statesmen, or any policy to lay before the House, or any issue on which to dissolve, except the vague statement of a wish to negotiate about something at Washington, they tried to snatch a verdict; and now, having got their majority, scanty though it be, they claim that it is a victory for the National Policy. It is nothing of the kind. It is a condemnation of the Government policy for the past ten years.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We will take a repetition of the same defeat.

Mr. CASEY. Perhaps you will not get it. The next time the Government go before the people, the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) will find that the people have found them out and know what side of the fence they are on. The Government profess to be in favour of reciprocity, and talk about going to Washington to negotiate a treaty, and yet in this House they talk nothing but unadulterated protection. They speak of sending ambassadors to Washington, and then the Minister of Finance gets up and gives away our whole case. He says if negotiations should fail at Washingtonit will be the fault of hon. gentlemen on this side who ask for unrestricted reciprocity, and who say that the United States will not grant partial reciprocity. But we have the statelaid before the House, that we need not expect partial reciprocity, or reciprocity merely in natural products, and that statement being public, I do not see how it can hurt our chances to repeat it. But what can hurt us is to find the hon. Minister of Finance standing up here and giving pointers to the American Government against our case, giving pointers against the only kind of reciprocity we have any chance of getting. He said he was off the track at the time, and I do not doubt that he was. It is quite clear he was, or else he was giving away, in a manner which can scarcely be characterized in parliamentary language, the cause it will be his duty to plead in October next. He tried to point out that if we had unrestricted reciprocity, whether Canadian manufactures from foreign raw material were admitted free or not into the States, in every case the United States would lose by the operation. He concluded by urging that whatever arrangement was made for unrestricted reciprocity the people of the United States must lose, and he said the people of the United States would be fools if they agreed to any such arrangement. will not call the hon. Minister a traitor, or an intriguer, or a Fagin, who conspires with the Yankees to the injury of Canada; but if any member on this side had got up and deliberately given away his case, deliberately given pointers to the counsel on the other side, as the Minister of Finance has done, he would have been called all these names. We have been called them for an infinitely milder and different treatment of the subject; and although I do not apply to the Finance Minister those names, I must say that he is guilty, if not of a deliberate intention to frustrate the policy the Government pretend to have at heart, then of an indiscretion which certainly unfits him to conduct any negotiations of any importance at all. He must take one horn of the dilemma or the other. Either he does not know what a foolish, injudicious thing it is to give away his case in this manner, or he must wish to give the case away. cline to the latter view, as I have a pretty good opinion of the hon. gentleman's intelligence, but a small opinion of his sincerity as an advocate of improved trade relations with the United States. The whole course of the Government has shown that they merely tried to steal some of our ammunition, and now, having gained office by that means, they are not prepared to go as far as they led the people to expect they would. They give away the whole case, and make it impossible for us to conclude a reasonable reciprocity treaty in October. There has not been a single gentleman on the other side who spoke of such a thing as practicable, and there never has been such a complete surrender of all chance of argument in favour of free trade with the United States as has been made by the Minister himself this evening. I am very glad he has taken the cloven hoof out of his neatly-formed boot, and let us see it, and we know now that he is riding for a fall and is trying so to manipulate this discussion and the resolution before the House that it will be impossible for us to conclude a treaty in October; and he will then say it was not my fault, but because you talked in a pessimistic way about blue ruin in Canada. Who are the pessimists, and who are those who have confidence in Canada? To put it in plain language, who is afraid of reciprocity and who is not? I say that those who maintain that Canadians are not able to in his theories. The position is very much like compete in all the walks of life with the people of the United States are the pessimists; I say it is they who are the prophets of blue ruin. It is they who, in a parliamentary sense, if not in a criminal sense, are traitors to their country. They are those who decry their country by saying we are not fit to take our stand among other nations. But on this side we pride ourselves upon being Canadians, and upon the ability of a Canadian to make his way, no matter what competition he may have to encounter. We claim that the Canadian is as good a man as the United States citizen, and a good deal better. claim that he has the enterprise and the intelligence to hold his own in business against them. We claim that he has fertility of soil and boundless resources in other respect, sufficient to enable him to exercise his intelligence and enterprise to the best effect. We are not afraid to compete with the United States; we are not afraid of reciprocity. We are not afraid even of being seduced into annexation. Hon. gentlemen opposite who have had a good deal of experience with the United States, the hon. Minister of Finance amongst them, seem to be fearful of their own virtue. They seem to be afraid that they will be coaxed into annexation if they should go a step nearer to the United States. We do not find the prospect so alluring. We are satisfied we can resist, and are sufficiently Canadian in sentiment not to go in for annexation. I have heard more annexation talk in my day from Conservatives than I ever heard from any people in the community, and now we find them confess they are afraid to go a step further towards the United States lest they would embrace the Yankees and become united with them. We are not afraid. They are. They have no confidence in their own virtue, and in the virtue of other Canadians, to resist the tempter and to maintain friendship with the United States without the result of political union. As usual, they have all set up the great bugaboo of direct taxation, and they have gratuitously assumed that that must be the result of reciprocity, and have insisted that it would be ruinous to the country. They have not proven that reciprocity would lead to direct taxation; but, supposing it did, in what respect would we be so much worse off? We have to pay the taxes that form the revenue now. All indirect taxes come down at last to the first producer, to the man who cultivates or digs out of the ground, or who cuts out of the forest, our raw products. Taking the case of sugar: if the manufacturer of refined sugar only gets To of a cent per pound protection, as estimated by the Government, that means an indirect tax of $1,600,000 a year. Although the Minister of Finance claims to have removed a large amount of the sugar duty, we find that $7,600,000 is paid by the consumer, and to whom? It will not go into the treasury or add to the revenue. If we had direct taxation the consumer would pay directly to the treasury, whereas now he pays his tax on sugar to the sugar lords, and he pays for the loss of revenue by an indirect tax on something else. In short, indirect taxation means a double tax, part going to the revenue and part going to the other producers or manufacturers, whose products are But people raised in price by the indirect tax. do not seem to feel indirect taxation as they do direct taxation, and the protectionist takes advantage of that unreasonable state of mind to get

The horse reprepotatoes. sents the farmer, the miner or the lumberman, who has to pay everything, who has to carry the monopolist on his back, and not only that, but has to carry a load of taxation besides which must be raised for the service of the country. If we could make the rider get down and allow the horse to have nothing to carry but the sack of patatoes we would be in better trim. I have plenty of notes here yet, but the speeches of the Minister of Marine and the Minister of Finance have been so much alike, have wandered so discursively over every ground, except that covered by the main body of the resolution, that I shall not follow them any further, because the House must be wearied of any speeches at this period of the morning, and I know that I am notable to make my remarks as tolerable as they might be under other circumstances. I will close by saying that neither the Minister of Marine nor the Minister of Finance has established in any way the statements contained in the main body of the resolution. They have given no statistics to show that the fiscal policy of the Government has been successful, that the aid which has been given to public works has been productive of benefit to the country, that the management of the finances has been wise and prudent; they have not pointed out the economy which has been observed in the estimates for the present year or in the expense of past years; they have not shown us what articles of universal use, except tea, coffee and sugar, have been exempted from taxation. In short, they have not discussed the motion of the member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins), but they have discussed the motion which was before us some time ago. I venture to say I would not be wrong in asserting that the speech of the Minister of Finance was one which he had prepared to wind up the Budget debate last week, because it has all the appearance of being cut and dried as an answer to my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and has very little to do with what is before us now. However, after all the stretching and the wriggling, and the display of fireworks, and the elever dodging of the Minister, the country will judge, not by his words but by his I agree with one remark of the hon, gentleman, when he said: "If you want to see the monu-ment of the National Policy, look around." I am glad the hon, gentleman admits that we have to put up a monument to the National Policy. are in the way of putting up monuments sadly enough. We have to put up one for an occasion which we all regret. The hon, gentlemen says we have to put another. He regrets the demise of that creation of his Government, and he says: If you want to see the monument of the National Policy, look at its results. I am willing to let it go on that issue. Let that be the monument to the policy which is now dead, and in regard to which we can only feel what Sinbad the Sailor. felt when he was relieved of the burden of the Old Man of the Sea, a burden we thought we would have to carry all our days, but which now the hon. gentleman who is the stepfather of that ernment, to an approval of all the public acts of the policy says we must put up a monument to. I am Government which have administered the affairs Mr. CASEY.

willing to join issue on the results of the National Policy. Let each elector judge of those results for himself, and that is how it will be decided. talk from both sides across the floor of the House will have very little effect on public opinion regarding it. Every man knows how it affects his own pocket, and every man will vote accordingly at the next election; because every man knows now where the two parties are in respect to it. One is for that reciprocity which I believe the majority of the people in this country desire; the other, while professing to look towards Washington for relief, talks nothing but pure protection before the House, and have put themselves on record as a protectionist Government, pure and simple. Let the National Policy be judged by its results; let the Government also be judged, not by their words, but by their actions, both during this debate and in the future.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would not trespass upon the time of the House at this advanced hour in the morning were it not that direct personal reference has been made to myself by two members of the Ministry. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in his speech which he made some few evenings ago, did me the honour to refer to me as one who had been compelled by the necessities of the occasion to desert my own leader, etc., as he expressed it, to "sail into victory" in the rear of my late honoured leader. The Minister of Finance this evening has also referred to me, and done me the honour of quoting some utterances of mine made during the election campaign in my county, when I was returned again to sit in this House. It is true, as the Minister of Finance has stated, and as I acknowledged myself on the occasion of my nomination, that I declared myself opposed to discrimination against the mother country in the event of any scheme of unrestricted reciprocity being carried in the country. I differ from my leader in regard to that position yet. I am opposed to the passage of any measure which, while offering certain advantages of free trade to the United States, should make it impossible for the mother country to enjoy those same advantages. I also expressed myself on that occasion as not believing that the scheme of unrestricted reciprocity, as advocated by those with whose political views I sympathise, necessitated the adoption of any common tariff with the United States. I expressed myself as believing that if the Liberals came into power and proposed any scheme of un-restricted reciprocity with the United States they would, as my leader declared it to be his views this evening, retain the control and management of our own tariff. I hold that opinion still. The Minister of Finance, however, could hardly have been serious when he expressed himself as entertaining any doubt as to how I should vote upon the resolutions of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins), which are now before the Chair. He knows well enough my opinions as to the character of the administration of the general interests of this country by the party of which he has been a distinguished member for many years past, and he can have no doubt as to what my view would be upon resolutions which would commit this House to an approval of the general financial policy of the Government, to an approval of all the public acts of the of this country for many years past. I shall content myself now with saying that while I held the views which I express now with regard to some features of unrestricted reciprocity, I shall have no hesitation in voting against the resolutions which have been presented to the House by the hon, member for L'Islet, containing, as they do, so many declarations of policy with which I have no sympathy.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 3 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, 5th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PETROLEUM INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 157) to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act. He said: This Bill consists of one short clause to be added to the present Act, by which power is given to the Governor in Council to make regulations to exempt wholly or in part the inspection of petroleum oils that are not fit and suitable for illuminating purposes. The difficulty experienced under the present Act is that it makes all petroleum oil subject to inspection, to the flash and gravity tests, which are arranged for illuminating oils. Oils that are used for lubricating purposes cannot be expected to meet these tests. This Bill is to exempt oils from these tests, except such as are used for illuminating purposes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BEET-ROOT SUGAR.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to-morrow to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may authorize the payment, out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, under such regulations and restrictions as are made by Order in Council, to the producers of any raw beet-root sugar produced in Canada wholly from beets grown therein, between the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-one, and the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and ninety-three, of a bounty of one dollar per one hundred pounds, and in addition thereto, three and one-third cents per one hundred pounds for each degree or fraction of a degree over seventy degrees shown by the polariscopic test.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand the Minister of Finance announced to this House, when he first intimated his intention of bringing this resolution before the House, that the bounty would be for one year only. I notice that this resolution says three years. What is the cause of the change?

Mr. FOSTER. It is only usual to discuss these resolutions when we go into committee on them. I have only given notice that to-morrow the House go into committee on this resolution. I will then explain it to the satisfaction of the hon, member for North Wellington.

Motion agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to rise to a question of privilege. The Empire newspaper of Toronto of yesterday has a telegram from Montreal stating, among other things, that Messrs. Beausoleil, Preston and Greenshields had been sent there on some mission, that we had meet, and had afterwards called a meeting of Liberals to be held at the Windsor Hotel on Sunday, and that we had secured certain letters or documents written by a member of the present Government, out of which we expected great results. I wish to state that although I went to Montreal on Saturday morning, I went home on Saturday evening and remained there until yesterday. I know of no such meeting and no such letters.

Mr. FOSTER. Is this in order?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is a personal explanation, denying a serious charge.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. The statement in the Empire is a fabrication, and there is not one word of truth in it.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. The other day when the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) wished to bring a matter before this House, and to deny a statement made in a newspaper published in Toronto, of what was alleged he had stated in Toronto, Mr. Speaker decided that my hon. friend was out of order, and he was not allowed to make his explanation. I gather from what the hon, member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil) has said, that this is a case somewhat similar. His explanation does not refer to anything that occurred in this House, but to something that occurred in Montreal.

SUPPLY-TIMBER LICENSES, &c.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you, Sir, leave the Chair, I wish to bring to the attention of the House and the country a matter of some importance, a matter that has been discussed in the House before. a matter on which this House has twice pronounced an opinion adverse to the opinion I believe it should have pronounced, a matter on which I will ask the House to pronounce an opinion again. We have in this country popular government, a government supposed to be by the people, a government the object of which should be to forward the interests of the people. We have a democratic Government essentially, and the public property, the public domain, the public resources, all that constitutes the wealth of the nation belongs not to cliques, monopolies or favoured classes or favoured individuals, but belongs to the people at large; and any conduct of the Government that is calculated to waste these resources, to impair these resources, to take from the people for the benefit of classes, the heritage that belongs to the people, is a policy that should receive the condemnation of the representatives of the people in this House. Money should be providently spent, the taxation imposed on the people should be as light as the circumstances of the people will permit. The public resources should be husbanded—resources in land, resources in minerals, resources in timber, whatever resources of a public character may be in the possession of the people, or of the Government as trustees of the people, should be carefully husbanded and wisely and properly administered.

Now, Sir, we have at the present moment, we had the other day in this House, an instance which showed carelessness at least on the part of the Government in the guardianship of the public rights in the matter of the public domain. We had a land grant put through this House which I do not believe the circumstances of the case warranted. We have a policy, Sir, which is frittering away the greater portion of our vast public domain in the North-West, and by which this Dominion, in the shape of large land grants, is placing in the hands of monopolies, in the hands of charter brokers, individuals who secure charters for railways from this House, and become charter hawkers, carrying charters around the country seeking to obtain purchasers; the Government investwith the right given charter, and endowing them with large land grants in order to enable them to float their schemes and obtain purchasers. The circumstances which attend the administration of affairs by this Government since 1878 have been characterized, I am sorry to say, in many instances by favouritism, by nepotism, by jobbery, by waste of public resources, by corrupt practices, and by practices calculated to debase and debauch Parliament, and to lower the moral tone of the people of this

The second of the control of the con

I wish to refer, Mr. Speaker, more especially application was granted, and in this way a very to the state of affairs that existed from 1882 to 1886 or 1887. On the eve of the election brought on in 1882, we had the Government of Canada making its preparations for the purpose of influencing public sentiment, and of attaching to its standard certain money and social influences that it was believed would be a great service in the approaching contest, and which undoubtedly was of great service to the Government. We had first of all the Gerrymander Act, and that Act was followed by the adoption of certain plans with regard to our public domain in our North-West Territories that were clearly intended, primarily, to secure for the Government different influences; to secure for the Government moneyed and other influential support.

We had first of all the colonization land grant scheme, by which applicants were enabled to secure from the Government grants of land in blocks of townships, at one-half the price at which these lands were offered to settlers. These grants were made upon easy terms of payment, holding out to the speculator embarking in the scheme the prospect of great wealth, in the securing of these grants under the colonization plan at a nominal price of $1 an acre, to be sold by these speculators to the settler at such price as they might deem fit to ask, or be able to secure, while the settler, for the same land, was charged by the Government double the price that the speculator was charged.

Then we had the scheme in regard to mineral We had a scheme propounded by the Government by which speculators were enabled to secure mineral and coal land leases at a mere nominal price by private application, without the necessity of competing with some other person who might want the same coal lands, and in this way the Government attached to its interests a class of speculators who wished to embark in the business of owning coal and mineral lands.

We had also the pasture land lease abuse. We had the Government granting to applicants blocks of pasture land, the only restriction, I think, being that they should not exceed 50,000 acres. We had the Government granting these leases at 1 cent per acre, the interest at 6 per cent. on 16 cents per acre, and in this way millions of acres were granted, far in advance of the wants of stockraisers, to speculators by the Government, and by this means the Government secured additional influence from that class of men who speculated in these leases.

Then we had the Government policy in regard to timber limits. We had in dispute between the Government of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada a large area of nearly 100,000 square miles, north and north-west of Lake Superior. The Government proceeded to parcel out a very large portion of that disputed territory for which it had no title, and to parcel it out among its favourites, and it carried this policy to our territory in the North-West. The Government policy with regard to the granting of timber limits was that, whenever an application was made, the Government considered that application, and if there was no other application covering the same area and if the person making the application, as I should judge from the returns and coal leases, pasture land leases, colonization grants, results, was of the proper political stripe, the and timber limits. Let us take first the subject of application, as I should judge from the returns and large amount of land was granted before the elections of 1882, thereby securing an additional influence on behalf of the Government. know of other influences, Sir, that were at work besides these, and we can understand how strong was the position in which the Government entrenched itself, through contract brokerage, through timber limit grants, through pasture land leases, through coal land leases, and through all these plans adopted by an unscrupulous Government in order to strengthen itself and to secure an additional support from the class who could wield influence in this country. Now, Sir, there was a note of warning sounded at this time. a note of warning sounded before the elections of 1882, in this House, by the Hon. Edward Blake. It became apparent to keen observers of what was transpiring, that the Government were disposing in a reckless manner of timber limits, of pasture lands, of coal lands, and of other resources belonging to the country, and in March, 1882, the Hon. Edward Blake moved the following resolution in this House:-

"That, in the opinion of this House, the existing system of granting timber limits is liable to result in gross abuse and in the cession of valuable interests in the public domain for inadequate consideration to favoured individuals.

"That it is expedient to apply the just principle of public compatition to the granting of timber limits." lic competition to the granting of timber limits.

This was a wise and proper restriction, proposed by the Hon. Edward Blake, then the leader of the Opposition, as regards the granting of timber limits in the North-West, and in the other public domain of Canada. Was that restriction accepted by the House; was this resolution adopted by the House?

Mr. DAVIN. In what year was that?

Mr. CHARLTON. In 1882. No, Sir, it was not adopted by the House. On the contrary, at the very outset of this great abuse --which culminated in the year 1884—when the leader of the Opposition warned the country and warned the House of the tendency of this condition of things, this House refused that motion made by Mr. Blake, and it refused it by a strict party vote. And so the Government went on its course without anything to restrict it in this matter. We knew, Sir, what was We knew what later investigations going on then. revealed; we knew that the Government were granting thousands of square miles to its favourites. We knew that individuals who never dreamed of lumbering, and who knew nothing of lumbering, were hawking Orders in Council giving them those limits, up and down the streets of this city and in other parts of the Dominion seeking for purchasers. We knew that the most venal influences were at work, and that a condition of things existed that was in the highest degree detrimental to the public We knew this when this motion of Mr. Edward Blake was moved, we knew it more thoroughly afterwards, and we knew it when the resolution which I shall shortly allude to was moved in 1886.

Now, Sir, I wish to call attention briefly—I will not go to the extent I did in 1886, into this matter, but I wish to call attention briefly to the influences that were exerted upon the members of this House, through these various schemes that this Government had devised; the schemes of making grants of coal leases. Up to February, 1883, 449 applications had been received for coal leases; and I shall give a list of the members of this House who made private applications for coal leases, which were placed in the hands of the Minister of the Interior and acted upon by him without competition being invited. These leases, when granted, were granted to those parties as favours; they were corrupt influences, which gave the parties an unjust advantage over the public at large. Among these applicants were:

Thirteen applications by men who were or have since become members of this House. There were also two applications by Sir A. T. Galt, who is reaping a fortune to-day from the coal leases granted to him, and two by the Hon. John Norquay. Here were thirteen members of Parliament placed in a position, throughfavours granted to them by the Government, to seriously interfere with the independent exercise of their functions as members of this House.

Next, let us turn to the colonization grants. Under Colonization Plan No. 1, by which the applicant was enabled to obtain one or more townships on easy terms of payment at $1 per acre, up to the 23rd of December, 1884, 251 applications were made, covering 2,295 townships of land; and I propose to give you the applications made by members of Parliament for grants of townships:

A total of 132 townships applied for by 23 members of Parliament; and of these applications at least twenty were merely speculative, made not with the intention of settling the land, but as a matter of speculation with the view of selling the grant to second parties.

Then we come to the pasture leases, under which, tion except that the good boy who stood in with the Government should be limited to 50,100 acres. These leases were granted far in advance of the requirements of stockmen, and in not one-seventh of these cases was any stock placed on the ranches.

Then we come to the most important feature of these abuses, that is, the granting of timber limits. Up to February, 1885--returns have not been brought down to a later period-over 550 Orders in Council had been granted for timber limits of 50 square miles each, covering an area of over 25,000 square miles of timber territory: and the bonuses received for them were practically nil. In cases where two or more parties applied for the same area the Government would allow these parties to compete between themselves as to who would give the highest bonus, and they could easily arrange the matter between themselves. The Province of Ontario has less than one-third of the area covered by these areas under license, and the bonuses which that province has received from putting its timber limits up at public auction amount to over $3,000,000, while the bonuses received by this Government for three times the area were practically nothing. Now, I propose to point out what influence this system has probably had upon the independence of the members of this House, from the facts that were elicited with regard to members of Parliament from the returns that were brought down. Of persons applying for and obtaining limits for themselves, who were then or are now members of this House, there were the following:

Now, here are twenty-three members of Parliament, -either then or now members of this House, or the Senate,—besides three ex-members, William Elliot, Oscar Fulton and David Blain—twenty-six members of Parliament in all who have received timber limits from this Government on private applications, without being required to compete with others, and paying therefor the nominal rental of $5 per square mile The course that should have been purper annum. sued by the Government at that time was to have placed these limits on the market, to have advertised them for sale, to have invited bids, and to have sold them to the highest bidder; but in place of that, these limits were placed in the hands of these members of Parliament, not one of whom intended to develop them, but only to hold them for speculation and to sell them afterwards for large bonuses to persons who wished to buy them. I think, over 2,000,000 acres of land were granted In the case of the Rykert limit, $150,000 was made privately and without competition, at one cent on an investment of $250 with the Government, an acre rental, per annum, and with no restrict other transactions were made at profits of thousands of dollars each by limit holders. And all profits, for one, the recipient being a brother-in-law. that accrued to members who had made application. Hon, John Haggart made successful application for and received limits, these members of this House one, also Mr. J. S. McCuaig. Mr. Thomas Farrow were enabled to make, through the Government placing these limits in their hands and giving them this unfair advantage over the general public. Then we had members who applied for limits without success, but there were not many. We had Mr. George P. Orton, then a member of this House, who made application on 21st October, 1884, but the limit he applied for was covered by a previous application. We had Mr. F. Vanasse, who applied on 28th March, 1884, but there had been a previous application, and he did not get the limit. We had Thomas Scott, who made application in August, 1882, but the limit he applied for was covered, and he did not get it. We had the Hon. George E. Foster, now Finance Minister, who made application on 25th April, 1883, but, for the same reason I have just given, failed to get the limit. Then we had a few members who applied successfully for limits on behalf of their friends. I will give you the list. There was Hesson who applied for and obtained six limits for six of his friends.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was that the member for North Perth?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes; he was member for North Perth at the time.

Mr. OUIMET. Did any Grits apply?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think not; they seemed to be out of the swim. Mr. Hesson secured these limits, one for his son-in-law, and five others for friends of his. Mr. C. H. Mackintosh applied for a limit for a friend and secured it. And I may say here, that perhaps the same degree of blame ought not to attach to members who applied for others which attaches to those who applied for themselves, as perhaps it was natural that a member should use his influence on behalf of his friends, and is not blameable in the same degree. Mr. Hector Cameren made three applications, with success, for friends. Mr. L. McCallum made two applications for his friends, and succeeded. Mr. C. C. Colby made application for one limit for a friend successfully Mr. J. G. Bergeron obtained one limit for a friend. Hon. J. Royal obtained two limits for friends. Mr. J. C. Rykert made a successful application for one. Hon. G. W. Howlan applied for three successfully. Mr. M. K. Dickinson also applied with success for three. Mr. John White obtained five for his friends. Mr. Sproule obtained two, one of which was for his brother.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that the hon, member for South Grey?

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, the hon, member for South Grey. Mr. Duncan McMillan applied successfully for five limits for his friends. Hon. John Carling applied for four successfully. Mr. Orton Carling applied for four successfully. Mr. Orton obtained five limits for his friends. Mr. Robillard mentioned in the House. We might find the applied successfully for one. Mr. Kilvert obtained names of other members, but this list I have given five for his friends. Mr. John Bryson applied successfully for two for his friends. Mr. Joseph Tassé applied successfully for three for his friends. Mr. H. A. Ward applied on behalf of his friends for three successfully. Mr. R. Tyrwhitt obtained one for a friend. Colonel Williams applied successfully successfully. Mr. R. Tyrwhitt obtained one riend. Colonel Williams applied successfully wo. Mr. Dalton McCarthy made successfully ation for two. Mr. Hugo Krantz obtained Sir Adolphe Caron applied successfully for two. Mr. Dalton McCarthy made successful application for two. Mr. Hugo Krantz obtained made application for three successfully for his friends. Mr. John Small applied for two, and Mr. J. S. Dawson applied successfully forone. We have in these applications made by members of this House on behalf of their friends, a total of 79 applications presented by 34 members of Parliament and covering 3,900 square miles, besides a total of 1,150 miles granted to members for themselves, making a grand total of 5,050 square miles of timber limits granted to members of Parliament on their applications, and we have 57 members applying, either for themselves or friends, for timber limits. The immorality of this does not require to be enlarged upon. To tell me that any man who receives so substantial a favour from the Government as the granting of 50 square miles of supposed valuable territory, has not his independence impaired thereby, is to talk nonsense. Such a practice saps the very foundation of the independence of the House of Commons.

I will trouble the House with a few of the names of the deserving Tories who received limits. We have the name of Sir A. T. Galt, Mr. W. B. Dickinson, Mr. John C. Sproule, O. W. Bailey, of Cookshire, son-in-law of the late Minister of Railways and Canals: John Geary, London; Robert Evans, Hamilton; J. M. Lotteridge, Hamilton; John W. Astley, A. S. Kirkland, William Broder, William Sharples, of Quebec, brother-in-law of the Minister of Militia: Peter McLaren, Archie Farrow, C. C. Small, who was at the time a brother of one of the representatives of Toronto: John Ginty, R. S. White, of Montreal, and I am not sure but that Mr. White is connected with the Montreal Gazette: Charles J. Campbell, brother of Sir A. C. Campbell; J. C. Jamieson, son-in-law of the Minister of Customs; J. H. Beatty, of Toronto; Alexander McInnes, whether a relative of the present Senator I do not know; M. Walsh, Ingersoll, who lately contested the riding represented by my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); I believe he was unfortunate, as there were previous applications and he was told to make a tender, which he did, offering $50 bonus, and got the timber limit. Mr. A. F. Drummond, Montreal; Mr. Henry O'Brien, Toronto; Mr. J. S. Atkins, Mr. P. R. Blackstock, of Toronto; Mr. G. B. Black, city treasurer, Montreal; Mr. Robert Laurie, of Port Arthur; Mr. Frank Arnoldi and Mr. J. H. Bulmer. These are some of the deserving camp followers and friends of the Government who received these favours in common with members of Parliament and their friends. There is a great number more, but it is not necessary giving the House all the names, or going through the entire list of 550 names, and we might find among these names those of individuals who ought to be reveals a state of things in connection with the management of the public domain which I believed then justified me in putting, on the 4th May, 1886, this motion before the House:

in order to avoid lasting injury to the public interest and to restore and maintain the independence of this House."

You would imagine that no member of this House would have voted against that resolution. It did not seem to me anyone could, and yet several did. We had a division taken the same night, and I have the list here. It must have been a strict party vote, for I do not seem to have detached one member from his allegiance to the Government which had been guilty of these abuses, and it was affirmed by this House, by ninety-nine votes against forty-three, that my motion was not a proper one, that these members ought not to be condemned, and this House sanctioned and upheld these proceedings by its vote on that occasion.

In connection with this matter, I may be allowed to deal with a personal charge against myself. One of the parties, whose name I gave in 1886 as an applicant, in company with another individual, a Mr. Broder, for a limit, was Mr. Charles E. Hickey, then a member of this House. This charge was permitted by Mr. Hickey to pass undenied. He was present on the occasion, his name was on the division list, but the charge that he was a co-applicant with Mr. Broder for timber limits he allowed to pass in silence. Four years later he denied that charge, and when the denial was made I, of course, accepted it and I proceeded to search the returns for the purpose of seeing if I had been mislead. The task was a very ponderous one, as the return amounted to about 12,000 foolscap pages. I searched for the letter which I had referred to in the statement I had made in regard to Mr. Hickey and Mr. Broder. Though I failed to find that document, in searching for it I found other ap-I found that my hon, friend Mr. Davin was on the list. I found that my friend Mr. Adam Brown of Hamilton was on the list. found that the member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) was on the list, I found that the Hon. Mr. Sanford was on the list, and that Mr. Macdowall and Mr. Bergeron were also on the list, so that the hon, gentlemen whose names appear here may thank the denial made by Mr. Hickey, and a subsequent attack made upon me this session by the Minister of Customs, for the facts which have been revealed as to those who were applicants and recipients of timber limits in the North-West. This letter upon which the charge against Mr. Hickey was based I repeat I have been unable to find. Whether it has been abstracted or not I do not know, but it is not there I believe. I am sorry that I could not find it because I believe that the document would warrant me in the assumption that Mr. Hickey was a co-applicant with Mr. Broder for the limit in question, and, in the absence of that document in its original state, I am obliged to take the version of Mr. Hickey himself as given in a debate in this House on the 7th May, 1890. The letter, as given by Mr. Hickey, and as it appears in the proceedings of the House of that day, is as follows:-

"Sir,—McMillan having failed in his agreement to have survey of timber limit in on the 17th instant, I claim, on behalf of Wm. Broder, the right to be a co-applicant for the limit covered by the application of Mc-Millan.

I trust we will get that equal consideration.

"Yours truly,

"CHARLES E. HICKEY."

Now, whether that is the exact language of the in 1890, that I have made a scandalous charge Mr. Charlton.

letter or not which I examined when I made this statement, I do not know. I believed that it contained, after "Wm. Broder," the words "and myself." I am sorry that I cannot get the original letter, but I must in its absence be governed by the statement of Mr. Hickey, and I submit that the expression which closes the letter—warranted me in the assumption which I made, that Mr. Hickey was interested with Mr. Broder in the application for this limit, and I submit that, after Mr. Hickey, having been present during that discussion, his name appearing on the division list in 1886, did not deny the assertion I had made and only challenged it in this House four years afterwards, I was warranted in supposing the statement I made in regard to him was correct, till it was denied by Mr. Hickey. I believed that it was correct, and if it was not so, Mr. Hickey should have disabused my mind of that impression. Then Mr. Hickey professed to produce an affidavit made by myself. I would like to see the original of that affi-davit. I have asked for the original, but it has not been produced. We have what purports to be an affidavit made by me in the village of Lynedoch, in the County of Norfolk, on the 14th February, 1887, before Z. R. Slaghtt. There is no person in Lynedoch of that name. The affidavit professes to say that:

"I, John Charlton, of the village of Lynedoch, Ontario, do hereby solemnly declare and say that I was a member of the House of Commons in 1886. That during the winter of 1886, I made examination of certain returns regarding timber limits. That the returns were voluminous and not printed. That the said returns contained an application from Wm. Broder. That Charles E. Hickey, M. P., was a co-applicant. That the application was made 20th April, 1883, and that an Order in Council for 50 miles on the south side of Lake Kasgaskok was issued upon the said application, 30th April, 1884."

This is the affidavit. That is simply a reaffirmation of the statement I made in this House that Mr. Broder was an applicant for a timber limit and Mr. Hickey was a co-applicant with him. My warrant for this statement was the words which were used in that letter:

"I trust we will get that equal consideration.

" CHARLES E. HICKEY."

I have not the original letter before me, and I am presenting the case on the strength of Mr. Hickey's own statement. Why did I believe that statement? I believe it because the language of the letter warranted that construction, and because at the time and for four years subsequently it passed unchallenged in this House by Mr. Hickey.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). As a matter of fact, did you know it was true?

Mr. CHARLTON. I believed it was true, and I was entitled to believe it was true. When Mr. Hickey disavowed it, I accepted his disavowal and expressed regret that he had not stated that before, and that I should have unwittingly made a charge which was unfair to that gentleman.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). That was after the disavowal by Mr. Hickey?

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Hickey should have disavowed this on the 4th May, 1886, but, upon a motion justifying the Government in granting limits to anyone who applied, he voted with them. The course taken by Mr. Hickey is a reflection upon other members of this House. Mr. Hickey assumes in 1890, that I have made a scandalous charge against him. I simply charged that Mr. Hickey had done what fifty other members of this House had done, that he had done what this House twice voted, and will perhaps vote to-day, that it was right for him to do. The moment Mr. Hickey made his disavowal, I accepted it as I would have accepted it four years before. Mr. Hickey takes the ground that an act performed by Minister Colby, by Minister Foster, by Mr. McMillan, by you, Sir, the Deputy Speaker, and by some fifty other members of Parliament in making applications for timber limits, is corrupt, and that he is not open to the charge of doing just what the others did, and that to charge him with doing what fifty-seven members did, and what this House declared by its vote to be a proper legitimate act is to make a grave and scandalous charge. The House has vindicated Mr. Hickey, Mr. Foster, Mr. Colby and the fifty odd others by a vote of 43 to 99, and that amounts to saying that the action of these gentlemen was proper and right, so I do not know that Mr. Hickey has any ground of complaint for what is alleged to be a perfectly proper and right transaction as declared by this House on two occasions.

This system has always been defended by Sir John Macdonald, it was defended by the then Minister of the Interior, the Hon. Mr. White, who was a most efficient officer and a gentleman whomeverybody respected, and it has been defended by the declaration of this House by an overwhelming majority; so that the action of Mr. Hickey in this matter is a reflection upon his own friends. I cannot help imagining that he was prompted in this matter, after four years consideration of these subjects, by a desire to mitigate, to some extent, the force of the revelations made in 1886, after the record of the scandalous revelations that resulted in the resignation of his seat in this House by John Charles Rykert, who was no worse in kind, and possibly not in degree, than many other members, who, at least, sought to make profit out of limits granted to them.

Now, this whole timber limit episode, in the history of this country, is a most discreditable one to this Government and to this Parliament, and it fits in very nicely with the recent revelations made with regard to contract brokerage and all the scandals that have lately been exposed in part, and have horrified the country. As the Househas twice refused to stamp its disapproval upon this line of action, as it refused, first, in 1882 to adopt a resolution that declared at the very outset that these things should not be permitted, a resolution which, if adopted, would have prevented all these abuses that followed the offering of that resolution of March, 1882; and as, after the culmination of all these abuses, after 550 Orders in Council had been granted, covering 25,500 square miles of territory, after twentythree members of Parliament had been implicated in making application for themselves individually, after thirty-four members of Parliament had been implicated in making successful application for their friends-after all these revelations and disclosures were made, the House again, on the 7th May, 1886, declared, by the motion which I have read, that these practices were perfectly proper, regular and right. I propose to ask the House either to reaffirm its position taken in 1886 or to rescind it, one or the other. If it still approves this line of action, let the House have the honesty, the Government adopted a very wise policy. It the hardihood and the manliness to say so; if it was done for the purpose of affording encouragethis line of action, let the House have the honesty, disapproves of it, let it retrace its action upon these two former occasions and cast off its sins in this respect and repent. I move, therefore, that the following words be substituted for the motion placed in your hands :-

That abuses with regard to the disposal of timber limits, mineral leases, pasture leases and other public reserves by the Executive have obtained in past years that were calculated to impair the independence of this House through the opportunity afforded to members to secure grants for themselves and their friends by private application at nominal rates, and without being subject to competition; that many members did secure such grants for themselves and their friends; that the House of Commons in 1882, and again in 1886, refused to condemn such practice; this House nevertheless believes that those practices were not proper and should entirely cease, and that timber limits should be disposed of at public auction to the highest bidder, after being first advertised, and after the lapse of ample time from the publication of such advertisements, to enable intending purchasers to examine That abuses with regard to the disposal of timber limits, advertisements, to enable intending purchasers to examine the limits offered for sale.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I must say that until the hon, member came towards his closing remarks upon the question that he has brought before the House, I was unable to see what purpose he had in I think that he cannot have attached very much importance to his motion or he would have given notice to myself, who am more particularly interested in this matter, or to the Government, that he proposed raising this question. I thought, also, that he might have given the Government an opportunity of showing how the administration of those lands had been improved from 1883 until 1887, to which period he has particularly referred as being the period within which he considers those improper dealings have taken place with the public domain and the timber limits.

Mr. CHARLTON. Only up to 1886.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Well, I cannot for the life of me see why he should have gone back, at this late date, to such ancient history as that. With regard to the policy of dealing with the colonization lands and timber limits which he speaks of, I may say that, in looking back, I cannot see how the country has suffered from the colonization scheme which was entered into, and which, to a very great extent, as the hon. gentleman knows, was taken advantage of by the people in the interest of coloni-We all know that it did not turn out as we expected, people did not come into the country as quickly as we anticipated, and the colonization scheme did not realize as much for the promoters as was anticipated. But the country has lost nothing by that. The colonization companies who found, after experimenting for some time, that they were unable to bring as many people into the country as they anticipated, came to the Government and said so, and the Government commuted with the colonization companies, and for every settler that was put upon the lands the company received what they were entitled to receive, and the balance of the lands reverted to the Government. In reference to the mineral leases and the coal leases which the hon, gentleman speaks of, I must say that I was unable to understand to what he refers: To day I do not know of a single coal lease which is in the hands of any member or any company in the North-West Territories. The mineral lands have been sold for a certain sum, and, so far as I know, no mineral lease exists to-day. With regard to the pasture leases, I believe that ment and to demonstrate to the world that we had a large pastoral region of the country, unequalled; on the continent, and liberal provisions were given; by which parties who felt inclined to go into that business were allowed to bring in cattle free for a certain number of years. A large number of applications were made. It could not be avoided that some parties held their leases for speculation, but the principal operators were men of capital who would not have gone into the business unless some inducements had been held out to them. As time went on, it was found that there were persons who had leases under their control who were holding them for speculative purposes, and in those cases they were cancelled, and leases for hundreds and thousands of acres have been can-celled within my time. I fail to see that any harm has been done by that policy. The hon. gentleman has brought forward the names of members of this House, who certainly had as much right to take advantage of the opportunities afforded in the western country as any other people. He has mentioned the name of the hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) with regard to the colonization scheme with which he is connected. That is one of the two companies that exist to-day. The company has been carried on in a business-like manner; it has been successful as far as the country is concerned, and it has returned to the Government what was expected from it. I may state for the information of the hon, gentleman, although he is no doubt aware of it, that during the last few years there has been a change in our policy with respect to timber lands, and these lands since I have been in charge of the department, have been put up at public competition, and we have received very fair prices for them. I am not prepared to say that the policy of selling at public competition is not a better one; I believe it is. But why the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) should have gone back to the early days of the North-West, I cannot understand. When the hon, gentleman came down to the personal matter and took the opportunity this afternoon of making his explanation- and I believe that was his only purpose he had in bringing forward the motion—I was sorry Mr. Hickey was not in this House. It was a painful matter when brought before the House on previous occasions, and so strongly did Mr. Hickey feel on the question that I understand that if he had been here another session he intended to propose the reference of this matter to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in order that the truth might be arrived at. It is a matter in which I am not interested, except as regards the veracity of a former colleague on this side of the House and an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, but I should have liked to have seen the matter cleared up. I do not see any necessity for this motion, nor does the hon. gentleman expect that the amendment before the House is likely to ead to a very long debate, for no member will fail to understand that no beneficial results can be derived from it. The hon, gentleman has submitted a motion similar to one he moved some years ago, which was voted down, and I believe the same views will be held by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House as were held then.

Mr. BARRON. The hon. Minister appeard to find fault with the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) because he did not give him notice of his Mr. Dewdney.

intention to move an amendment to the motion to go into Supply. He assumed, therefore, that the motion was of no importance whatever. I think we have only to look at the history of the last three years to see the mismanagement which has characterized the administration of hon. gentlemen opposite in the North-West matters, to come to the conclusion, not that this motion is unimportant, but that it is of the greatest possible importance. hon. Minister thinks that no harm has been done by the Government policy regarding colonization companies. That may be his view, but it is not the view which will be held by anyone who has taken the trouble to interview settlers in the North-West. Do we not know that the whole history of this country shows that the desire of the people has been against giving monopolies large tracts of land? can tell the Minister that man after man has left the North-West because he found the whole territory honey-combed with colonization companies. Settlers desiring to locate on particular lands found that those lands were in the hands of colonization companies who extracted from them the most stringent conditions in regard to settlement. Then the hon, gentleman, answering I think too briefly this very important amendment, said that during his incumbency of office he had put up timber limits to public auction and had realized fair prices for them. I ask if he received a fair price for the timber limits situated at Indian Reserve No. 6, north shore of Georgian Bay, which was sold to an hon, gentleman who now sits in this House? The hon, gentleman says he put up these limits to public auction. How? If I understand the practice aright it is this: An application is made for a timber limit by some person who has become aware of the fact that there was valuable timber The Minister then calls for tenders. ders are received secretly by the Minister and behind the door of his own office, not received openly so that everyone can bid, as is the practice followed by the Ontario Government. But the Minister says he has received fair value for the limits. Did he receive a fair value for the timber limit on the north shore of Georgian Bay for which $317 were paid for 79 square miles, when at that time the Ontario Government were selling limits for $2,000 and $3,000 per square mile in the same locality? Yet the Minister has the hardihood to say that he received a very fair value for the limits. Why did he say that? Because the men who had a right to complain were not the men who had votes, but were Indians, over whom the Minister was placed in the position of guardian, they being wards, and it was his duty to have done his utmost to obtain the best possible prices for those limits.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That was done before my time, and if the hon. gentleman wants to go into it, I can show how his friends treated those very Indians.

Mr. BARRON. Then the hon. Minister endeavours to get out of this iniquitous transaction by saying that he was not in the department when it was done. Then, his predecessor in office was to blame; and out of his own mouth he proves the iniquity of the transaction. Let me give a little attention to this matter. Who asked to buy this timber limit—this timber limit on the north shore of Georgian Bay of 79 square miles, a most valuable limit? Here is the letter from the applicant:

"OTTAWA, 13th Oct., 1885.

* The Minister of Indian Affairs, Ottawa.

"SIR,—We the undersigned hereby make application to obtain privilege of cutting timber on an Indian reserve situated on the north shore of Lake Huron and known as the Whitefish Indian Reserve.

"The accompanying sketch, coloured red, will show the territory applied for.

" Yours respectfully, "JOSEPH RIOPELLE & CO."

When I read that letter in this House a session or two ago some hon, gentleman said I had not proved that the applicant was an hon, member of this House. Let me read further a document which will show the names of the persons who constituted the firm of Riopelle and Company:

"Ottawa, 11th November, 1885.

" To the Minister of Indian Affairs, Ottawa.

"Hoy. Sir.—I take the liberty to remind you of my application for license to cut timber on an Indian reserve. "Will you please let me know the result of your conclusion in this matter, and much oblige.

"Your obedient servant,

" H. ROBILLARD."

Mr. Honoré Robillard being at that time the junior member for the city of Ottawa; and yet, Sir, when I first of all spoke upon this subject a session or two ago, it was sought to make it appear that Mr. Robillard was not the applicant, but that the applicant was Riopelle & Co. Now, Sir, during that discussion, and that is more particularly why I rise to my feet, because I do think that we should try as nearly as possible to get down to bottom facts in our discussions upon the floor of this chamber, and on that occasion I made the statement to the House on information which I was informed to be true, accurate, and reliable, that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Robillard) was interested in that timber limit. This is what occurred on that occasion, and I quote from Hansard:

"Mr. BARRON. Now, I would like to know from the junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard) how much money did he get for this?

"Mr. ROBILLARD. I got nothing at all. I had no interest in it more than the hon, gentleman himself,

"Mr. BARRON. Who had? The Government got $316 from the junior member for Ottawa and the property was sold to him, it was sold to Riopelle & Co., and the hon, gentleman was one of that company, and he certainly realized some of this booty out of the sale to Francis Bros. If I am not altogether misinformed, he realized something between $45,000 and $50,000. The hon, gentleman shakes his head. shakes his head.

"Mr. ROBILLARD. I say it is false."

In other words, Mr. Speaker, he said that the statement I made was false.

- "Mr. BARRON. Well, I suppose I am bound to take his statement inside this House, but if I were outside this House I do not think I would take his statement.
 - " Some hon, MEMBERS. Order.
 - "Mr. BARRON. It has been suggested-
 - " Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.
 - "Mr. BARRON. Withdraw what?
 - "Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is a very offensive statement.
- "Mr. BARRON. I say I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's statement.
- "Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The hon, member said he would not take this statement outside of this House. That is unparliamentary.
- "Mr. BARRON. I am bound to accept the statement of the hon, member inside this House, but it is very extraordinary that Riopelle & Co., one of whom was himself, should have got this money from Francis Bros., and ne, the junior member for Ottawa, should not have got anything at all."

I have taken the trouble to read that at length, because here I have the statement over the signature of Mr. Latour, a gentleman who can be found very easily, that what I stated then was true and correct, and that the statement of the hon, member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard) was incorrect and unfair to me. Let me read the statement of Mr. Latour:

"OTTAWA, 28th March, 1890.

"I beg to state that learning that Mr. Honoré Robillard has acquired and was owner of one-half interest in the timber license upon Indian Reserve, Treaty No. 6, 79 square miles in extent, from Dominion Government, I met him and offered him for his individual one-half share the sum of $10,000 in cash. I said to him: 'You come up to the bank and I'll give you a cheque right off.' Mr. Robillard replied that he would consult with his partner. Mr. Joseph Riopelle, and give me an answer. I understood at this conversation from Mr. Robillard, that he owned an individual one-half interest and Mr. Riopelle the other individual one-half interest in said limit. Having obtained no reply to my offer and subsequently meeting Mr. Robillard in the lobby of the House of Commons. I mentioned the subject of my offer to him and he then replied that he sold his interest in the limit to Mr. Barnet, of Barnet & McKay, Renfrew, for the sum of $15,000 cash. I reproached him for not giving me an opportunity to raise my offer, and he simply expressed his regret at my disappointment, as he thought it best not to refuse the offer of $15,000. This latter conversation took place after Mr. Robillard's election as a member to the House of Commons. I have reason to believe that Mr. Barnet transferred his half share to one Maguire, who was in his employ, and for whom he bought the half interest. Riopelle and Maguire were then the owners and proposed to work the limit, but receiving an offer for the whole of $55,000 from Allan were then the owners and proposed to work the limit, but receiving an offer for the whole of $55,000 from Allan Francis, of Pakenham, disposed of the limit to the latter for this amount.

(Sgd.)

There, Sir, is my justification for the statement I made, which statement was characterized as false, and that letter also is an answer to the hon, the Minister of the Interior, who has said here to-day that he got a fair price for that limit. That letter shows. Sir, that the gentleman who received the limit finally from Mr. Robillard got $55,000 in hard cash for that timber limit, belonging to the Indians, which the Government sold for $316. Three hundred and sixteen dollars, Mr. Speaker! Ten per cent. of it was divided among the Indians, and there being 100 Indians they got 31 cents each; while Mr. Robillard, the member for Ottawa, puts $15,000 in his pocket for which he only gave $316. Then, Sir, we find the Minister of the Interior trying to make us believe a session or two ago, that that was a very laudable and beneficial sale indeed, and that, in his character of trustee and guardian of the Indians, he was looking after their interest so carefully, and was doing all for them that a parent ought to do for a child; then he tells the House: Why after all, although it was sold for $316, it is a grand sale, because in dues the Indians will get $20,000 before the limit is cut. Could there be any more condemnatory statement than this out of the mouth of the Minister himself? If the Indians were to get $20,000 in dues, the timber must have been there to produce the dues, and if the timber was there to produce $20,000 dues at $1 per thousand, there were 20,000,000 feet of timber, and at $2 per thousand, which would be the fair and ordinary price, it would amount to $40,000 which the Minister of Interior out of his own mouth proves he should have got for that timber limit instead of the $316 for which it was sold to Mr. Robillard. What do we find further in connection with this, Mr. Speaker. We find that as soon as the sale was made, Messrs. Francis Brothers who operated that limit, in a letter addressed to the department on the 14th October, 1889, state that in one year, they cut 19,900 pieces of sawlogs containing 2.500,000 feet board measure; 2.095 square white pine, containing 125,000 some odd cubic feet of timber; and 481 pieces of red pine, containing 23,000 or 24,000 odd cubic feet, in one year, which at a fair and reasonable price, would amount to $8,250. In other words, they got $8,250 in one year alone for that which the Government soid without competition for $316 to a supporter of theirs in the city of Ottawa. And yet the Minister says that they have been putting up to public competition the limits that they have been selling. Why, Sir, if they had advertised that timber limit of 79 square miles for sale, they likely would have got a bid from Francis Brothers; and Francis Brothers gave $55,000 to Mr. Riopelle and his friends. Why, in the name of common sense, would not the Messrs. Francis Brothers have given that same sum of money to the Government of Canada, if the limit had been put up to public competition by public auction? But the Government did not do that. They secretly and behind closed doors in a room, sold the limit to Mr. Robillard for $316, and the Indians got the paltry sum of 31 cents each, being a distribution among them of 10 per cent. of this $316. And they are told by the Government to be consoled, to be happy, to go to their camps, to remain happy and contented, to go to their firesides and rejoice with their little ones, because they are going to get $20,000 in dues.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BARRON. Hon. gentlemen opposite say "oh," but I will undertake to say that if they were in the position of these poor Indians; if they were the wards and had a trustee who would do this with their property, they would not rest until they had punished him by the law.

Mr. HAGGART. Does the hon, member not know that they got $13,000 besides the $316. Was he not in the House and heard that last year?

Mr. BARRON. The hon, gentleman says they got $13,000; I admit they got $13,000 in dues.

Some hon. MEMBERS.

Mr. BARRON.

Mr. BARRON. I admit that, and the very statement now made by the Postmaster General, who is always so eager to back up the Government, proves the value of the limit. If they could get $13,000 of dues, surely there must have been 13,000,000 feet at $1 a thousand to produce $13,000; and at $2 a thousand of a bonus, there would have been $26,000 the Indians should have received. stead of that they only got $316. In the next year the Messrs. Francis Bros. report having cut a quantity of timber which brought to themselves $28,000. In the two years they cut from the property, which was sold for $316, timber of the value to them from their own statements of $36,250. And yet, Sir, the hon. Minister of the Interior, replying to the hon. gentleman who moves this amendment, says that all has been beautiful and lovely, and that they have been doing all that is right and proper and for the best. I will leave it to this House to say whether or not they have dealt fairly in the past, and whether, judging them by the past, they are likely to deal fairly and properly in the future, and to say whether a stop should not be put to the iniquitous system which has been ment was going to be brought before the House. I tlemen might find some excuse if they could say that they knew nothing about this territory, that they had not discovered that it was an Indian reserve, and had no knowledge that this timber limit was so valuable. I have the letter of the very agent of these Indians, and I will read it if the hon. gentlemen opposite want to hear it, in which he writes down here to Ottawa, and in which he says: Do not sell that timber limit until you have had it inspected.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read.

Mr. BARRON. Here is the letter from Mr. Phipps, written in 1885.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is ancient history.

Mr. BARRON. Yes, the hon. gentleman thinks the letter ancient history, because he knows that ancient history is a condemnation of the acts of hon, gentlemen opposite. Mr. Phipps' letter is as follows :

"Sir.—I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of official letter dated 23rd inst., instructing me to report on the application of Messrs. Joseph Riopelle & Co. to obtain the privilege of cutting fallen, dead and green timber on the Indian Reserve at Whitefish Lake. I beg respectfully to state that, although I am not well acquainted with the reserve in question, yet I am satisfied from what I have seen that it contains a large quantity of pine timber, much more than the Indians will be likely to require for their own purposes. I have every reason to believe that the Indians would be willing to agree to the timber being sold by the department for their benefit. The chief stated to me his intention of coming to Manitowaning this fall, and I shall be able then to ascertain his views upon this point. The value of the dead and fallen pine should be, in my opinion, realized as early as possible, as that description of timber deteriorates rapidly. As for the timber, any opinion of mine without a more perfect knowledge of the quantity would be almost guesswork. I would suggest, if the Indians are willing to surrender, that an examination be made by an experienced lumberman."

There, Mr. Speaker, is the letter of the agent, who There, Mr. Speaker, is the letter of the agent, who ought to know all about these Indians over whom he presides as a sort of guardian, and in whose charge this reserve was placed, telling the department down here that the timber, so far as he knows, is very valuable, and suggesting that they should send up a man to inspect that timber limit before selling it to anybody. Did they do that after the manner and example of the Ontario Government? No; but placing a bandage before their eyes, they tell Mr. Robillard that he may have this valuable timber limit of 79 square miles in extent for $316. Now, I see the hon. member for Ottawa in his seat, and I tell him that I have read the statement of Mr. Latour in which he says that he offered the hon, gentleman $10,000 for his half-interest in this timber limit, and that the hon. member for Ottawa refused it, that afterwards he met the hon. member in the lobby of the House, and that the hon. member for Ottawa told him that he had received $15,000 in cash for his half-interest; and it was especially for this reason that I got up on this occasion, because last session he contradicted me flatly, saying that he had no interest in that limit.

Mr. ROBILLARD. I do so again.

Mr. BARRON. Then all I can say is that if he says so, he can fight the matter out with Mr. Latour, who says the very opposite. Now, I think, under all the circumstances, that this amendment is not so unimportant as the hon. Minister of Interior thinks it is, because, for sooth, he states that notice was not given to him that the amendgoing on in the past. What is more: Hon. gen- am not altogether satisfied that the treatment accorded to us on this side of the House has been such this session as to require us to give them notice of amendments on going into Committee of Supply. But in any case the hon. Minister of the Interior is not justified in saying that the amendment is not an important one. What can be more important than the manner of disposing of the heritage of the people of Canada, especially the manner of disposing of the property of the people—not that class who have votes, but those over whom the hon. gentleman presides as trustee and who are his wards. Under all the circumstances, therefore, this is an amendment which ought to commend itself to the fairness and reason of hon. members of this House, and which justifies the hon. member who has moved it in asking that it shall be supported by a very large majority.

Mr. ROBILLARD. Mr. Speaker, last year, when a similar charge was made against me, I rose in my place and made a statement in reply to it; but it seems that the hon. gentleman will not accept my statement, and is bound to convict me whether I am guilty or not guilty. Now, when I deny the charge he refers me to a man from whom he says he got his information. I now repeat what I said last year. People would meet me on the street, and they would have it that these were my limits. I stated that they were not. I wrote a letter to Sir John; I was then a member of the House in Toronto; and the application was not entered in my name. Latour met me and asked me if I would take $10,000 for the limits. Of course I will not give everybody my private business, and I said I would not touch it because the limits were not my own. As for the statement that I got $15,000, I say it is false. Mr. Latour in stating that stated a falsehood, and the man who repeats it repeats a falsehood. I said I had made something from the grant of Mr. Riopelle, who is a Liberal living in this city. As for what I made, it is nobody's business; it is my private business. I defy the hon. gentleman or anybody else to show that there was anything irregular. I never bought a timber limit, and I do not know any man of the name of Francis: I will say that on my oath. I do not know the firm of Francis Brothers. I never saw the limit, I never cut a tree on it in my life or sold a board or log off it or anything of the kind. Mr. Latour is a Grit, of course, of the worst kind, something of the stamp of my hon. friend who has just spoken. I made the statement and I repeat it, that I did refuse $10,000, because I could not sell what I did not own, and as regards the $15,000 I never got that nor did anybody offer it to me. I brand that as a falsehood. The hon, gentleman says to me to go and find out from Mr. Latour, but it is he whose duty it is to go and find out, if he thinks he can prove his false charge. I see by the blue-books of Ontario that the hon, member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) received $1,500 as lawyer for this firm of Francis Brothers who had a suit against the Government. I do not see why the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) is bringing this matter up every year. I repeat it is false that I ever got $15,000; and as regards what little I did get, that is nobody's business. Then I am told by my hon. friend that he is satisfied there was some secret chamber business about all this. Well, I applied for the limits according to the regulations, but could not tell now what the regulations were, but I paid whatever there was to pay. The application stood some six months with the clerk. I went to the department and saw the surveyor's note. veyor said it was all water and burnt land; I can give the man's name from whom I got the report. name is Austin, and he said there was a little timber around the lake, and I bought it in that way. I put in the application for Mr. Riopelle and others. I do not know what is the motive of the hon. gentleman in bringing this matter up every session. was taunted during the election about it, and I gave the same explanation. I was asked what profit I made? and I replied that, as regards the little profit I made, it was none of their business; and it is none of the hon. gentleman's now. I might as well be asked what money I made in California or Australia.

Mr. CASEY.—The hon, gentleman has certainly not put himself in a better position by his explanation. He has admitted, what he had to admit, that the application was made in his name and the grant was made in his name.

Mr. ROBILLARD. I did that last year.

Mr. CASEY. That is admitted; but he says he did not receive the sum which Mr. Latour says was paid him for his interest. He admits that Mr. Latour offered him $10,000 and that he refused it; but when, in noticing the remarks of my hon. friend, he said that my hon. friend repeated a false accusation, he was not acting in a parliamentary manner, because my hon. friend had every reason to believe that Mr. Latour's information was genuine and correct; and as far as this House knows anything about the matter, it is simply a question of veracity between Mr. Latour and the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard). Of course, when the hon, gentleman makes a statement to this House, we are bound to accept it; but, as between him and Mr. Latour, the difference still exists, and individuals outside the House are at liberty to accept Mr. Latour's statement as correct until the hon. gentleman disproves it. We have one admission, however, from the hon. gentleman which is quite sufficient to condemn the Government and himself. He admits that he made a profit out of this transaction, but refuses to tell us the amount, on the ground that it is none of our business and that we might as well ask what he made in Australia and California. I beg to differ from the hon. gentleman. He made this profit in virtue of his position. as a friend of the Government. He was at the time in public life, a member of the Local House, but before the transaction was completed he was a member of this House, and as such profited by his influence with the Government. Why was he asked to put in an application? Because it was known that he had influence with the Government, and was more likely to get the limit than the other parties interested who used his name. therefore, his influence with the Government which he sold, and out of which he made profit. Government, on the other hand, are convicted, on the hon. gentleman's own statement, of having granted him a limit for $316 which was afterwards proved to be actually worth $55,000. The Postmaster General thought this was a point, for he interposed with one of his habitual interruptions when this fact was brought out. We have no objection to the Postmaster General making these interruptions, for he never opens his mouth to object without putting his foot in it, and on this occasion he put his foot half way down his throat. He established in the first place that the timber was very valuable, and in the second place he showed a desire to mislead the House, by making a statement which would lead us to believe these $13,000 were paid to the Government for the same privilege for which Messrs. Francis Brothers paid $55,000. If his interruption meant anything, it meant that the Government got $13,000 for that same privilege. I do not object to the Minister making himself ridiculous in this way from a party point of view, but it is certainly rather degrading to the House to see a Minister of the Crown thus endeavour to create a false impression. The fact is Messrs. Francis Brothers paid these $13,000 over and above the $55,000, and the Government might as well have had the $55,000 from Messrs. Francis Brothers and the $13,000 extra for dues, as let Messrs. Robillard, Riopelle & Co. get the $55,000, while the Government only got the $13,000 dues. That is the position, and I leave the Postmaster General to the tender mercies of the Finance Minister, who explained on one occasion that he was a particular friend of the Indians and was very careful to see that the treaties made with the poor helpless creatures should not be broken for the sake of any economy on the part of the Government. leave him also to the mercies of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), who is in a special sense the guardian of the Indians, being the trusted and well-beloved agent of Her Majesty in his dealings with them. I leave the Postmaster General, and the Minister of the Interior, and the hon. member for Ottawa in his hands, knowing that he will mete out to them due punishment. He certainly can never go back and deal with the Indians who have votes in his county in his official capacity as ambassador for Her Majesty while this blot rests on the Government. He can never go back to them and say he supported the action of the Government in selling land for $316, belonging to the Indians, which ought to have brought $55,000. I am sure he will never defend such a transaction, but will mete out full justice to those who have put him in such a false position.

Mr. TISDALE. Judging from the ground taken by the mover of the resolution, he endorses the arguments which have been addressed to the House by the hon, gentleman who has just taken his seat. Let us consider whether they are fair or proper arguments for any member of any deliberative body The hon, gentleman's statement was that to use. no friend of the Government should make money out of any public transaction in connection with the Government, because, if he did so, it was a corrupt act on his part, because he used his influence as a friend. He says further, that if he becomes a member of Parliament, so much the greater is the Let me apply that to the brother of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who is a respected member of the Local House in Ontario, and is the owner of certain timber limits in connection with his brother. I am not going to adopt the policy of some hon, gentlemen opposite. I am not going to say there has been anything dishonourable in this. I do not think that is any argument, and I do not believe that one wrong justifies a weak statement as he did when he said that this another in debate. Following out his line of argu- could not hurt Dr. Hickey because this House had Mr. CASEY.

ment, let us see whether the regulations of the Ontario Government may be-to which I will refer later-if what the hon, gentleman insinuates is true, how that Government can favour the brother of the hon, member for North Norfolk who is a member of the Local House of Ontario. One of the regulations of that Government is that, when you are taking off, as his brother is doing and the hon. gentleman with him, the timber from the land, the duties you are to pay are regulated by the measurements, and the measurements are controlled by the merchantable lumber, and, if the Government wishes to favour its supporters in handling this lumber, the measurement is made out accordingly. I have heard statements made, but I have reason to know that many of the logs were rejected as non-merchantable, which were afterwards shipped, showing that there must be some value in them. Following the line of the hon, gentleman, I have the right to say that the hon, gentleman and his brother are a great deal more open to such accusations, because the transactions are now going on. I would scorn to make such accusations, and I think it is reprehensible to descend to this kind of argument in order to sustain any cause. So much for that. As to the hon. member for North Norfolk, in his dealing with Dr. Hickey, I may point out that Dr. Hickey is not now here to defend himself. When he was here, now here to defend himself. he was quite able to defend himself; but I think the hon, gentleman was exceedingly unfair. I take the same documents that he did, and I say that no person who reads that letter carefully, no person of ordinary intelligence can come to any but one con-The letter reads:

"McMillan having failed in his agreement to have survey of timber limit in on the 17th instant, I claim, on behalf of William Broder, the right to be a co-applicant for the limit covered by the application of McMillan. I trust we will get that equal consideration.

"Yours truly, "CHARLES E. HICKEY."

As the hon, gentleman well knows, McMillan and Broder were rivals in connection with this limit, and the language of this letter can have no other fair construction than that Dr. Hickey applied on behalf of William Broder.

Mr. CHARLTON. The phrase is—

"I trust we will get that equal consideration, " CHARLES E. HICKEY."

Who are "we"?

The "we" would apply to the Mr. TISDALE. member who was interceding for the gentleman who asked to become a co-applicant with another, and if the hon, gentleman will read his own affidavit, he will see that he admits that. will be very short because this was dealt with at length last year, when the hon, gentleman had the advantage of the presence of Mr. Hickey. He states that Mr. Hickey was a co-applicant. I wish to be fair in this matter, and I do not think the hon, gentleman or any of his friends would go the length of making a solemn declaration by which he is bound in conscience as well as from a sense of fairness to examine into the facts before he makes a statement to be circulated amongst the public detrimental to Dr. Hickey without believing it. I apologize for the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) on his own behalf for having made such justified him. Then, from the hon, gentleman's stand- profitable, surely during all these years that have point, why did hemake theaffidavit if it was not with elapsed, when they claim that the friends of the Govthe intention of hurting Dr. Hickey in his riding? Why did he publish the affidavit at all? Under other circumstances, I would believe the hon. gentleman under his solemn affirmation, but I think it ill-becomes him to bring this matter up again after he has put himself into such a questionable position by the documents which he himself has signed. We know we have to be patient here; but I am but I do not want to avoid any responsibility on getting tired of listening to ancient history. It is all very well for the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) to say that we on this side do not like ancient history. We ought to have no reason to be afraid of it, because again and again the people of this country have proclaimed their confidence in us. But I think we all desire to get through our public duties as soon as possible and get to our homes, and I think this ancient history might be dispensed with. When the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) got those 24,000 or was it 12,000?—pages of history to read up, how many times have we heard of that and how many times more are we going to hear of it? to myself, I simply wish to show the wisdom of the policy of the Government which was adopted with regard to timber limits in the North-West in early days. Hon, gentlemen opposite know as well as we do that the policy which would be suitable in old provinces with rich timber districts for sale would not be suitable in a new province with new timber districts, with poor and sparsely timbered districts, and with a large prairie country, and that the policy ought to be different, at all events at the start. The policy adopted had two characteristics. First, to procure cheap lumber for the settlers, because everyone who went in there in the early days knew the enormous prices which the settlers had to pay for lumber. Secondly, it was to attract attention to that country, and in the end that did no injury, either to its development or to its advancement. Now, I claim that that policy has been proven, by events, to have been a wise policy. Have not the events happened that I have mentioned? Why, lumber there is almost as cheap as it is in the old Province of Ontario now. These hon, gentlemen always forget one thing, and it is very unfortunate, because it takes time to correct them and it does not advance their own cause—they always forget to mention the very important condition annexed to all these limits which does not prevail in Ontario, and ought not to prevail in Ontario, because there they sell limits to get money. That important condition is that you must build a mill within so many months; more than that, the dues paid are greater than the dues in Ontario. Now, I would like to ask the hon. member for North Norfolk, how much he would give for a limit in Ontario if he was compelled to build a mill and manufacture lumber within a certain limited time? It is not a fair way to put it. Now, one remark in answer to the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), who spoke about colonization, and about timber limits. Let him see what has been the result. How many colonization companies exist now? I think two. How many timber limits have been taken under the original conditions concerning which hon, gentlemen have been crying out about corruption, and about unfairness, and about favouritism? All but about six of to the belief that there has been something corrupt, them were never worked. Surely if they had been so and without an explanation on the part of the acernment have been running riot in timber limits, and corruptly making great riches thereby, surely somebody would have taken up and worked more than half-a-dozen limits out of all that vast number in which it is alleged such great riches could have been made. Now, as to my connection with timber limits. I was not then a member of Parliament, that account. I claim that, within proper bounds, the public men of the country on either side of the House have just as much right as any other individual to purchase and work timber limits, the same as is done under the Ontario Government, where many members of the Legislature--I was going to say a majority of the Government supporters-have limits, and they have obtained them properly, under the regulations that exist in that province: the same as hon, members on both sides of this House, and a great many people outside, on both sides of politics, have acquired limits in the North-West. This is the way I came to be There was a number of geninterested in a limit. tlemen, some Liberals and some Conservatives, who said there were valuable timber limits in the Riding Mountain district of Manitoba. The North-Western Railway was going from Portage la Prairie up into that country, and they claimed it would be a good operation, for the people who had capital, to build a railway from the Riding Mountain down to that road, and, to justify the enterprise, it would require a large body of timber behind it. And so some gentlemen on both sides of politics propounded this scheme and they induced some other gentlemen to enter into it, and went the length of getting a charter from the Local Government for the railway. Then I said: Gentlemen, I think you are going a little too fast. They were assessing us so many hundred dollars apiece, and I wanted a little more information about this vast tract of timber. And so we sent a gentleman up to explore those townships and we found that instead of there being several hundred millions of timber, there were only four millions in the whole tract. So, like a great many other timber projects, it did not meet the anticipation of its promoters. Hon, gentlemen know that at that time there was a speculative spirit abroad, and this spirit seized upon many gentlemen on both side of politics. The Minister of the Interior tells me that not over half-a-dozen of the timber limits taken up have ever been retained and worked by the people who, in that speculative period, were attracted by the glowing prospects of making money in the North-West. Now, the hon member for North Norfolk knows all this, and I blame the hon. gentleman for standing up behind the back of Mr. Hickey, who was then a member, and making, as I think, to put it in mild language, unfair representations, and to single out members of Parliament and speak of them as corrupt. Mind you, for my own part I do not mind it, but here is the disagreeable consequence of his charges. If a man does not get up and deny the charges, they are taken for granted in the country to be true. It is retailed by enemies in his constituency. They say that he is accused of such and such a thing, and accusation is made in such a way that it leads cused member, he is likely to suffer. Charges were made against me during my election, and the result was that I had six times the majority I had before, because the people had come to disbelieve all these unfair insinuations; and if you are innocent the people will find it out, and they will reward you by a greater support. Now, one word about the policy of the Ontario Government, because hon, gentlemen opposite are always lauding the policy of that Government, which is controlled by the Liberals. Under that policy the Government have a right to sell the limits by auction. But what has been the result? Why, against the protest of the Conservative party, dating back to the time of Sandfield Macdonald, and in spite of their opposition, what has the Ontario Government done? First, the Local Government took the matter into their own hands, and would not allow the House to say whether these valuable limits, which were the future heritage of our province, should be sold with or without the consent of the House. The Government took the matter exclusively into their own hands. And what occurred against the protest of the Conservative party? They have sold thousands of square miles of timber that stands there to-day untouched and uncut, in danger all the time of fire, the holders only risking the bonus paid the Government. I have the figures and will give them for publication if any hon, gentleman wants to see them. I say if the Ontario Government had withheld the primeval forest, which still stands uncut and untouched to-day, that Government would be richer by $55,000,000, instead of the $7,000,000 which they have received.

Mr. BARRON. Why does not the hon, gentlemen protest against this Government selling limits without the consent of the House?

Mr. TISDALE. I said it is a different policy. Either I cannot make my argument clear, or the hon, gentleman's capacity for seeing it is small. The whole argument is that in the North-West.the timber is scattered and the limits are of little value. But in British Columbia they are valuable, and the Government is adopting more stringent regulations. In Ontario there are no conditions whatever; you pay the bonus, a small ground rent, and you can keep it as long as you please. Let me tell you one thing more, to show that the Local Government's method of handling the land is open to abuse. I can prove the facts from the Gazette. In a sale they made of a great many square miles, they advertised in August and they sold in October. Now, any one who knows anything about timber knows that it would take a purchaser all that time to go over one or two limits and examine them carefully, and estimate the timber upon them, whereas many limits were so advertised and sold. Now, it has been insinuated that they said to their own friends, quietly, long before the advertisements were published: "We are going to advertise in August and we will sell in October. You boys look through the whole of this, and take the first chance." that charge has been made. I know some gentlemen who told me that two limits were the utmost they could explore within the time the Government advertised and the time of sale. So I say it is not proved that no abuses can occur under the system of selling timber by public auction. The only safe-guard we have is by keeping the Government up to the mark.

Mr. TISDALE.

Mr. McMULLEN. All these charges about the manner in which timber limits have been handled in the Province of Ontario, of course, are a reiteration of what has been said by the leader of the Opposition in the Ontario House. The policy of disposing of the limits by the Ontario Government has been sanctioned by a very large majority of the. Local Legislature, and the country generally approves of the policy of that Government as the most desirable one they could pursue. Hon. gentlemen opposite will remember that after the decision in favour of the Ontario Government of the question which was in dispute as to whether the timber really belonged to the Province of Ontario or to the Dominion of Canada, a large tract of that land which had been sold by the Dominion Government for a mere nominal sum was afterwards sold by the Ontario Government; they took them out of the hands of the Conservative party and offered them at public auction, and realized large sums for them. The hon, gentleman contended that the Ontario Government should have held their timber limits instead of placing them on the market. What is the fact? After making a thorough and extensive investigation of the timber limits under the control of the Ontario Government, they came to the conclusion that if they were to keep them a large staff of men would be necessary to see that the timber was not stolen and not set on fire, and an enormous annual expenditure would be thereby involved. The Provincial Government, therefore, decided that in order to free themselves from the necessity of those charges, they would place those limits on the market and sell them under the hammer to the highest bidder. It will be remembered that on one occasion when Mr. Pardee, who was Commissioner of Crown Lands for a great many years, and who discharged the duties of the position with great credit to himself and great advantage to the Government, had arranged to sell certain limits, a combination was formed among buyers to force him to grant more advantageous terms than he was disposed to give them. Notwithstanding that fact, he upheld the interests of the province and refused to grant them any concession, and when the sale took place the limits realized prices far in excess of anything the Government expected to obtain. Another point showing the wisdom of the Ontario Government is, that they sold the limits at a time when they were able to obtain outside prices, and they did this under the hammer and not in the miserable, clandestine, secret way in which limits were dealt with by the Dominion Government when applications were made to them by their friends. The question of timber limit selling cannot be brought too often before the House and the country. The hon, member for South Norfolk objects to this subject being brought up to-day on the ground that the people of the country have sanctioned the course adopted by the Dominion Government and have again returned them to power. It must, however, be remembered that the people were so thunderstruck and taken by surprise at the statements made that a great many men were not disposed to believe it was possible that the amount of stealing was carried on that really took place. Since other matters have transpired, since the exhibition of the irregularities during the present session on evidence under oath, the people begin to think that after all we were correct with respect to the steals in timber limits, and that the electors should have given a more attentive ear to the utterances of those who were exposing this condition of things. The hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard) said this afternoon that he never made an application for a timber limit.

Mr. ROBILLARD. I have not.

Mr. McMULLEN. That he was not an applicant for, and had not received a timber limit. will read his application as stated in the Hansard, which he will hardly refuse to hear. It is as follows :-

"Ottawa, 11th Nov., 1885.

"To the Minister of Indian Affairs, "Ottawa.

"Hon. Sir.—I take the liberty to remind you of my application for license to cut timber on an Indian reserve. Will you please let me know the result of your conclusion in this matter, and much oblige,

" Your obedient servant, " H. ROBILLARD."

I should like to know whether that statement is true or not? The hon, gentleman said he never made an application.

Mr. ROBILLARD. I did not make that state-

Mr. McMULLEN. There may be more than one Honoré Robillard in Ottawa; it may be very convenient to shift the responsibility off his own He may, perhaps, have a son of that name, and he may have applied for it perhaps not for himself but for his son. A great many applications have been made in that way. It has been stated that parties who obtained timber limits had in each case to build a mill within 12 months from the time the timber limits were The fact was this had to be done only 12 months after the license was granted. The right of the applicant to cut timber was first acknowledged by the Minister of the Interior, but the time did not begin to count until the license was issued. At the end of a year from that time, if the party was not able to dispose of the limit profitably, he would arrange with a friend who would make an application for the limit. The person to whom the limit was granted would then express a desire to forego his rights, and a second applicant would become owner of the property. If at the end of another year a successful sale was not made, a third party made application, and in this way a limit was kept in the family for several years. We know there have been several cases such as this. respect to the question in regard to the unfortunate Indians, it is my duty to call the attention of the House to it. I am glad there are no Indians in my riding, if there were I should warmly resent the action of the Government in squandering the property of the Indians. I must express surprise that hon, gentlemen opposite who represent constituencies where there are a large number of Indian voters, such as is the case in Haldimand, should cheer and jeer the remarks of the hon, member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) when he was advocating the rights It speaks badly that of those individuals. a man who is sent here, after using the Queen's name to try and induce those people to return him to Parliament, should jeer and sneer at the remarks of my hon. friend from North Victoria on behalf of the poor creatures who have been robbed of their rights. I am sorry the hon, member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) is not here, because he is men opposite are prepared to wink at, and carry interested in the matter, as there are Indians in his constituency, and he has done them no benefit by jeering the efforts made by my hon, friend in the interest of the Indians. I hope this will be the last sacrifice made in connection with property that properly belongs to those poor unfortu-nate creatures who are the wards of the Dominion Government. The Government should carefully watch their interests. No doubt there is a large amount of money and property to their credit, but their necessities are large, and if the Minister of the Interior discharged his duty properly he would see that above all other interests in the Dominion the interests of these unfortunate creatures should be carefully and properly respected. But instead of doing so, the Government proceed to improve the financial condition of one of the hon, gentlemen opposite by placing $15,000 or $20,000 in the pocket of a supporter or a friend, by handing over to him, for a comparatively trifling sum, limits which he was able to sell for $15,000 or $20,000, and he was thus able to place thousands of dollars in his pocket without spending one farthing. I say that it stands as a monument of discredit to hon gentlemen opposite, that they will secretly and quietly try to carry out a transaction of this kind, and ask that the country and this Parliament should wink at such abominations, and allow them to pass without the condemnation they justly deserve. The hon, member in front of me (Mr. Charlton) has done the country a great service in his honest effort to try to put a stop to the abominations in timber limits that have been practised by hon, gentlemen opposite. The more the country knows of such matters as this; the oftener the country is made aware of the transactions that are carried through by the Government, and the abominations that are brought to light from time to time, the better it is for the country. I am glad to be able to say that there are in the ranks of hon, gentlemen opposite, men whom I believe would not be parties to these transactions; I am glad to say that I believe there are men in the Conservative party who are too high-minded for such things, but I am sorry also to say that there are men in that party who are willing to stoop to these things; and that there are members of the Government who are willing to quietly wink at such abominations and to cheer, and jeer, and whistle, like the hon. Postmaster General, when exposures are made before this House of a character that would bring a blush of shame to any honest, upright and true-hearted Canadian. I said before, the hon. gentleman in front of me (Mr. Charlton) has done a good service in bringing this matter forward. It was he who first exposed this matter; he considered it his duty to the people of this Dominion and to the constituents that he represents to bring this important question before Why, Sir, when he brought it before the House. this House at first he was howled down by hon. gentlemen opposite with a bitterness, I might say with a wickedness, that would have almost annihilated any ordinary man. But the hon, gentleman (Mr. Charlton) has stood manfully to his guns, he has brought up the matter again and again before this House, and I hope that as long as there is a vestige of a justification on which to hang a repetition of these abominations, he will bring it up from year to year. The way in which hon, gentle-out the sale of the valuable resources of the poor Indians, and the people of this country, the same as we have exposed on the floor of this House for many years past, I claim that the Opposition in this House has done the country a great service this year, in endeavouring to expose these abominations. My hon, friend opposite says he wants to get through the business and go home; but I will tell him that we will sit here as long as we can expose hon, gentlemen opposite and their wrongdoing. We are going to discharge the duties that properly devolve upon us as representatives of the people. We are sorry to say that there are such a tremendous amount of abominations to be unearthed and exposed. We may say that there are mountains upon mountains of iniquity, and the more we go into the whole mass of corruption, the more abominable and more odious it becomes in the eyes of all honest, upright Canadians. We are going to do our duty on this side of the House. It is unpleasant for us, but I have no doubt it is more unpleasant for hon. gentlemen opposite, for I believe that they do wince sometimes. I have no doubt that my hon, friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) is anxious to get away. I have no doubt that he feels considerably disgusted at the exposures which he has been called upon to witness both in this chamber and in other rooms of the House, and I dare say that he would be glad to getaway to a purer and bettersphere than that which he has been compelled to mingle with here. But the hon, gentleman has got a good many more days to spend here, and he has got a good many more obnoxious things to hear before the session closes. I am glad indeed that my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) has brought this question up, and I am glad to know that hon, gentlemen opposite feel the sting of this abomination, because you can always tell when hon, gentlemen feel it. always commence to squeal when they feel it, and the more they squeal the more we know the medicine is unpleasant, and the longer they squeal under it the more they will get of it. Therefore, if they want to see the end of these exposures quickly, they had better take the medicine quietly. Let them repent. There is time yet, but it is getting very short, and if they do not repent they will find that the consequences will be very serious indeed. consider it my duty to offer these remarks, and I hope that hon, gentlemen opposite will not forget the lesson that has been taught them this afternoon in regard to these abominations.

Mr. DAVIN. This debate that my hon, friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has introduced this afternoon cannot, in my opinion, do any possible good. The hon, gentleman brought this matter before the House on a previous occasion, and I really do not see, as an hon, member on the other side has already said, what good he proposes to himself, in the introduction of the subject today. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the object of the hon, gentleman in mixing up two sets of cases? One set cannot even in his opinion, even from the lofty standpoint of purity that he takes, could not have the least impropriety attached to it. mentions the cases of gentlemen who are not members of this House applying for timber limits, and who each got one timber limit. Is there anything improper in that? Before a man could get a Mr. McMullen.

hon, friend from Norfolk has referred to the difference between timber limits in Ontario and the North-West Territories, I may say that it will cost some $400 to survey a limit in the North-West Territories.

Mr. TISDALE. Twice that.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, probably; but at any rate it will cost a considerable sum to survey the limit. gentleman applies for and obtains a limit, and as the hon, member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has explained, he has to build a mill, and when he has his limit in operation he has to pay dues. The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) turns around and he mentions in a cadent voice: N. F. Davin as having applied for and got a limit. That gentleman actually did apply and got a limit. I was going up to the North-West at the time, and I had been up before. We had at that time, as the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) knows, grand visions about the North-West, and when we spoke about that country it was in the large language of the earlier gods. But, after a time, our high-vaulting ambition in regard to that country took a more sober view of things, and we found that we could not do all we proposed. The limit I got was cancelled, as many a limit up there that was obtained has been cancelled, as the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has pointed out. What I want to ask my hon, friend (Mr. Charlton) is this: What rational object can be have in mixing up two sets of cases? He refers to my hon, friend from South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who was not a member of the House at the time. Could there be the least impropriety in that gentleman applying for a limit and getting a limit? There was no impropriety whatever in it, and if you search the records of the Interior Department I venture to say you will find that Liberals applied for limits and got them too. I think there used to be a member of this House the member for Simcoe, and I rather think that his name has been connected with timber limits, and connected in a manner very different from the present case.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Mr. McCarthy.

Mr. DAVIN. No; I was speaking of Mr. Cook. Mr. Cook was a large holder of limits, and had large lumber transactions with the Ontario Government. I remember very well going down to attend a sale of limits which took place some seventeen or eighteen years ago, when Mr. Scott was Minister of Crown Lands in the Ontario Government, and I remember very well that there was a strong suspicion that word had been given to friends of Mr. Mowat, that this sale was going to take place, and it was said they had the advantage, because they had their limits picked out before-hand. Now, Mr. Speaker, my hon, friend refers to colonization companies. I know something about these colonization companies, and something about the North-West, at any rate as compared with my hon, friend from North Victoria. What language did the hon, gentleman use? I am afraid that my hon, friend from North Victoria is about to spoil a most promising career. I described him once here as the rising hope of the Reform party; but it seems to me that he is going to spoil the brilliant prospects that were connected with his and who each got one timber limit. Is there any-thing improper in that? Before a man could get a timber limit he has to survey the limit. As my speaks of the North-West having been honeycombed with colonization companies, so that when people went up there to settle, they could not settle, for sooth, for this reason. What idea has my hon. friend of the North-West, and of the relation of the number of acres which were taken-up by a few colonization companies to the millions of acres on which they lay like isles few and far between on the broad bosom of the Atlantic? Mr. Speaker, these colonization companies were separated from each other by long distances; and to suppose them honey-combing the North-West, or that there is or can be any difficulty for many years in getting a homestead in the North-West, is to show an absurdignorance of that country. Now, when the colonization companies were started, I remember taking the agreement that these companies had to sign before they could get their lands, and showing it to the shrewdest man in Canada. He was then a judge; he is no longer a judge; but he is undoubtedly among the shrewdest men in Canada as a good lawyer, with a large experience in speculation. We read that agreement over together, and we both came to the conclusion that no body of demanded, and when the vote came to be taken, men in their senses would sign that agreement, because if the conditions were carried out not one penny could be made. And what are the facts? With one or two exceptions, all the lands granted to these colonization companies have reverted to the Government; and one of the objects of the Government at that time, as I know from conversations with Sir John Macdonald, was that they should act as immigration agents, and spread abroad throughout the British Isles and all over Ontario a knowledge of the country; and did they not do that? There cannot be the least doubt that these companies were active immigration agents, and that very often they succeeded in bringing valuable settlers to the country who are now on lands which formerly belonged to some of these companies, but which passed away from their control. Now, the hon member has spoken of grazing leases. Does he know anything about the subject? He speaks as though these grazing leases were of great value, and he dwells especially on the necessity of advertising them. If he will ask the Deputy Minister of the Interior, or Mr. Hall, or any of the officers of the department who have had to do with the matter, they will tell him that the regulation that was forced upon the department to advertise grazing leases has cost the department more than it could possibly gain. a man wants a grazing lease, he makes an application; he has found out the grazing lands he wants, and instead of the department making a bargain with him, as it could, and demanding a bonus of $50 or $60, it advertises it, and the man sends sometimes only $5. Not another soul applies or competes with him for the lease, because people will not take the bother of going to see these grazing lands. The consequence is that the man who applies puts the department to the expense of $30 or $40 in advertising in the different papers of the North-West for several weeks, and sends only $5 as his bid because there is no one to compete with him. So that when my hon friend talks as if any great gain could be got from advertising these grazing. lands for competition, he does not understand the country. Now, Sir, my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) spoke here with great indignation; he spoke as a man whose righteous soul was vexed, and as one who you would think would aid in trying to keep lown every unnecessary | 1882.

expenditure. But a short time ago when I was forced in one of the committees, by the reason of the case, to take an unpopular stand with the view of keeping down what seemed to me to be an improper expenditure, that hon, member was one who voted for a course which I understood him to say across the table could not be justified.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not say so.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, you voted for it.

Mr. BERGIN. I do not think it is in order for either of the hon, gentlemen to refer to what took place in a committee.

Mr. DAVIN. I will not refer further than that; but anyway the fact remains. Another hon, gentleman who was there, the hon, member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville), afterwards told certain persons who were interested in the vote on the committee, that I had abused them, whereas, as a fact, I confined myself to the question, stating that in principle I could not justify the expenditure the committee, by a large majority, supported the view I took. True, the hon, member for North Wellington will come here at times and show the greatest possible indignation at what he calls extravagance; but I venture to say that if his friends were across the floor, he would be very dumb in regard to anything they would do.

Mr. McMULLEN. Give us a trial.

Mr. DAVIN. I am afraid I cannot do that; that is for the country to do. But on my honour, if I had it in my power, I would give them a trial, in order to show the country the ineptitude they would display. Although I should be willing to do it, and although I should stump all Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces, and the North-West and British Columbia, I know very well that although I might combine in myself the eloquence of Demosthenes and Cicero, I would not be able to persuade the country they could carry on the Government properly, so that I cannot give you the trial. You will have to remain where you are. I wish I could give you the trial. What a beautiful sight it would be to see my hon. friend here administering a department. We have some other gentlemen who would outvie him, and I say this, that the result would be if you stayed in power for a year or two, the Conservative party would recross the floor with a still greater majority than they have now.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I wish to ask the honmember for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) if he used these words: "That C. H. Mackintosh, a member of this House, applied for and obtained limits for himself and his associates, and seven townships in the North-West.'

Mr. CHARLTON. My statement with regard to the hon, gentleman in connection with timber limits, was that he made application for one timber limit for a friend, and I prefaced my remarks by saying that I had no doubt many hon members considered that, in making applications for their constituents, they were performing an ordinary act of friendship, and that it was for the House to judge what blame should attach to such acts. The application was for one limit on the 9th September,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gentleman will find himself very much misreported, if that is

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon, gentleman said: "Members applying for and obtaining limits for themselves, who were then or are now members of the House;" and then he proceeded to give the names, my name being on the list.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon, gentleman is mistaken, as I did not state that he had applied for a limit for himself.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. If the hon, gentleman is reported as I understood him, I trust he will correct the report.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not say so and am not so reported.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. I should not trouble the House in the least with regard to this matter, but, as the hon, member for North Norfolk is quite aware, seven years ago 1 sat opposite to him and explained the whole matter. I gave the particulars and every detail connected with it, and he virtually withdrew the charge. To-day, however, he brings the matter up again, and when pressed says he made no charge. But what has he asked the House to do? He is asking the House, by his speech and resolutions, to stultify itself, by condemning members for what they never did.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon, gentleman is attributing to me what I did not say. I gave a list of thirty-four members who made applications for timber limits for their friends. These applications to the number of seventy-nine were granted, and the hon, member for Ottawa was one of the applicants. I gave his name as one of the members who had made an application for a friend for a timber limit, which application had been granted, and I stated further that I did not attach the blame to members making applications for friends which I would to members making application in their own behalf.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon, gentleman stated distinctly: All members who applied for and obtained lands for themselves and who were then or are now members of this House. I was not a member at the time I made the application, and I made the application, not on my own behalf, but on behalf of myself and associates, who were forming a society for colonization purposes, to obtain a grant of seven townships, and the application was not pressed. But the language of the hon, gentleman and his resolution are so vaguely worded as to convey the impression that I, with other members of this House, had made an application to the Government for townships and timber limits for our-

Mr. CHARLTON. It would be as well if the hon, gentleman would wait for the official report of the debate, as he is misrepresenting what I said.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon, gentleman made the same charge in 1886. I then explained to to him that, at the time, so far as the limit for which application was made is concerned, I was not then a member nor had I been a member, and was not directly or indirectly interested in obtaining the limit, and had not made the application on my own behalf, and I referred the hon. gentleman to all own behalf, and I referred the non. gentleman to all a "Sir,—I have the honour, by direction of the Minister the papers in connection with that matter, and he of the Interior, to acknowledge the receipt of your Mr. CHARLTON.

expressed himself satisfied that what I said was true. But what does he do now? He again uses my name. He again resurrects the old charge that I, while a member of Parliament, made application for a timber limit and for seven townships in the North-West.

Mr. CHARLTON. My statement covered a list of gentlemen who now were or had been members of Parliament.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. The hon, gentleman had better change his resolution and his speech also, for he cannot say that I was then or had been a member of Parliament; and when the hon, gentleman makes the bold statement that I was, I ask the House to confirm my statement of the case, because I did not sit in the House until February, 1883. I was elected in June, 1882, and this application was made sometime in March, 1882, before I had any idea that I would have a seat in the House. I explained all this to the hon, gentleman, but he returns to the charge again, and when I ask him to withdraw it, he says: Wait until you see the When the report appears, he will find that I am right, and that he is insulting the House in asking it to affirm a statement which he knows he ought to withdraw. With regard to the seven townships, I explained the whole matter years ago. At the time there was a craze for colonization societies, and some prominent supporters of mine, wealthy men, asked me to associate myself with them in order to form a local colonization society and obtain a grant of townships for colonization purposes. I said: Very well; and I have here the correspondence which will show the House how unfair is the whole position the hon. gentleman takes. On 1st March, 1882, we, as an association, wrote to the Interior Department:

"Str,—We, the undersigned, hereby apply for the following townships in the North-West Territories, namely:—
"In Ranges west of the Second Principal Meridian, Nos. 22, 23, 24. Townships 47 and 48.
"In Range 22, Township 49.

Shortly after that a number of gentlemen, Liberals and Conservatives, formed a Press Colonization Society, including almost all the members of the press gallery, and they represented to me that this application of ours would interfere with their association. I at once said: Gentlemen, we withdraw the application; and wrote as follows to the Interior Department:—

"OTTAWA, ONT., 6th May, 1883.

To the Honourable the Minister of the Interior.

"SIR,—Some weeks since an application signed by C. H. Mackintosh, E. Skead, and C. Moore was sent to the Department asking for lands, amongst which were broken townships number 49, 48, 47, Range 24, west of the Second Principal Meridian. We beg to withdraw the said application.

"On behalf of applicants, (Sgd.) "C. H. MACKINTOSH."

And I received the following reply:-

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

"Secretary."

Now, the hon, gentleman must see the injustice he does; but he does not get up in this House and say: I find I am mistaken; you have proved your case. Not at all; he is willing to have his speech printed, and these charges circulated during any bye-election or future election, as they were last election, and as they were in 1887. Although I explained the whole matter apparently to his satisfaction, he still returns to the charge, and refuses to do me the justice of withdrawing his remarks. He has made a statement which he cannot substantiate, for he cannot show that during the time I was in Parliament I, on any occasion, directly or indirectly, trafficked in lands or timber limits: and if he could prove that I did, I would be perfectly willing to resign my seat in this House. I think the hon, gentleman should do me the justice of withdrawing his statement.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have to say that I made a statement which was true and I have to stand by it. When the report of the debate is published, we will see which of us is right. I did not make the statement the hon. gentleman has attributed to lows :-

Mr. SPROULE. We have heard from the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) his usual and almost his annual budget on the question of timber limits. On many of the points which he other tenderer failing to fyle his survey, has the made he has been set right on before, not once, but many times, inside and outside of this House, and yet he comes forward again-I was going to say with brazen effrontery, but that would be unparliamentary, and so I will not say it—but he uses almost the same words and arguments as he did in 1886, and characterizes the conduct of the members of this House and of previous Parliaments as dishonourable and dishonest, because they have been connected with timber limits, grazing leases, or mining The hon, gentleman makes no distinction between members of Parliament doing their duty to their constituents, or doing something which relates to themselves alone. The hon, member is leaving He is like the coward who always the chamber. clears out when you commence to talk to him. That hon, gentleman who attempted to defend his act of perjury when it was brought up against him by Mr. Hickey, then sycophantly whined about it and said he did not mean any harm, but now he again attempts to justify it by a strained and unnatural interpretation of the meaning of the words. Notwithstanding the affidavit made by Mr. Broder that Mr. Hickey had no connection with that timber limit, either directly or indirectly, when that hon. gentleman opposite was obliged to face the matter, he admitted that his information was incorrect, but he now attempts to bolster up his conduct upon grounds which he did not attempt to justify then. Then he attempted to justify his words by the Order in Council, which he said warranted him in making the statement he did. When that statement was brought up on the 11th March, 1890, Dr. Hickey

"I understand that, when I was out of the chamber, the hon, member for North Norfolk said that I had been an applicant for a timber limit. I wish to say that I never made an application for a timber limit in the North-West or in any other part of this country. The same statement was made by the hon, member for North Norfolk a few years ago, before the last election, and it was brought up against me in my county, where I challenged the men who brought it up to give any proof of it, and they offered to get an affidavit from the hon, member for North Norfolk, but it was never produced. I did write a letter urging the Government to see what they could do with reference to a claim Mr. Broder had made, and that is my only crime."

The hon, member for North Norfolk then said in his defence:

"I rise to an explanation in answer to the hon, member for Dundas. I did this in discharge of a public duty, and endeavoured to do it impartially; and among the Orders in Council I found one for C. E. Hickey, M.P., coupled with the name of Wm. Broder."

Now the hon, gentleman tells us that he never saw the Order in Council. Then, after this was brought up again by Mr. Hickey and dealt with at great length, the hon, gentleman refers to a letter and says that justifies him in a contention he made, and now, after the abject apology he made for his conduct last year, he comes here again, because Mr. Hickey is not here to defend himself, to attempt to bolster up the charge and the libellous slander he gave vent to against a member of this House. Last year he said the Order in Council justified him. Now he says it was a letter written on the 20th April by Chas. E. Hickey as fol-

"SIR,—Macmillan having failed in his agreement to have survey of timber limit in on the 17th instant, I claim, on behalf of Wm. Broder, the right to be a co-applicant for the limit covered by the application of Macmillan." That is, that Wm. Broder, on account of the right to be recognized as a co-applicant; and then Dr. Hickey winds up with the usual language which is well known to legal men:

" I trust we will get that equal consideration." That is what any lawyer would say in regard to his client. But he says distinctly that he is speaking on behalf of Wm. Broder, as Macmillan had failed to come up to the terms of the regulations. member for North Norfolk to-day repeated his statement; but had to confine himself to the lame explanation and justification of his conduct when he made an affidavit which was in reality a perjury. He attempted that last year, though he said he did it innocently and that he thought it was all right, but now he bolsters up that affidavit and attempts to justify it. Then, again, I have here the affidavit of Mr. Broder in which he says that Hickey had nothing to do with this timber limit at the time or prospectively or in any other way, and yet the hon. gentleman sticks to this statement. The resolution "That the conduct of John Charlton in the premises was and is discreditable, dishonest and scandalous." To prevent that resolution from passing, Mr. Charl-He says: ton made an explanation.

moved at that time contained the following:

"I believed that the hon, gendeman was a co-applicant for the limit on the 20th April, and there was a limit granted on the 30th April."

Then he refers to the Order in Council. Now he refers to the letter. He goes on to make his apology:

"If I fell into errors in doing my duty, I greatly regret it; and if any statement I made is not borne out by a critical examination of the documents, it was made in-nocently and not with any intention to injure any person."

 $109\frac{1}{2}$

Does any person think the hon, gentleman can make an affidavit of that kind and send it broadcast over the country without injuring someone? A copy of that affidavit was read on platform after platform in my constituency, and Dr. Hickey was held up to reprobation as a man who was not fit to hold a public position; but, when the hon. gentleman is referred to in a resolution as not being fit to sit in this House, he comes forward and makes an abject apology, and now he makes his charge again in new terms which are just as untenable as those in which he made it before. The hon, gentleman refers to two classes of people, members of Parliament who applied for timber limits or grazing lands or mining lands in the west for their constituents and members of Parliament who applied for themselves and their friends. He makes that distinction in his speech, but in the resolution which he asks this House to affirm, he does not make any such distinction, but simply affirms that these parties are doing something which members of Parliament ought not do. Now, in accordance with Lis view of what is fair, he reads over a certain number of names of members of the late Parliament and some of the present Parliament, who did these I may say that he has used my name in connection with an application that I made for a timber limit on behalf of brothers of mine—at least I am told that was his charge, as I was out of the House when he made it. Now, I want to show the unfairness of the hon. gentleman.

It being six o'cock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. SPROULE. When the House rose at six o'clock I was discussing the motion made by the hon, member for North Norfolk regarding the policy of the Government in the past concerning timber limits, colonization lands, grazing land, and other matter of that nature. I said it was the usual budget which we have from that hon, gentleman from time to time, which he had brought up again, in my opinion, more for the purpose of keeping certain things alive before the public than for any public good; and that, notwithstanding the fact that the hon. gentleman had at various times been contradicted with regard to the allegations that he had set forth in his speeches upon this subject, and although he had been obliged to withdraw many of his accusations and make ample apologies for them, yet, whenever he returned to the subject he invariably dished them up pretty much on the same lines. I referred to the fact that no longer ago than last year, when a motion was made in this House to declare the hon, member's conduct scandalous with regard to an affidavit which was made, directed against another hon. member of that House, the hon. gentleman was then obliged to withdraw a great deal of what he had said, and to make an ample apology, and to ask the House not to pass that condemnation upon him. But after the House had thus generously consented to the withdrawal of that motion by Dr. Hickey, after a short time had elapsed the hon, gentleman comes up again in this new Parliament and virtually reiterates the statements that he made then and attempts to justify the affidavit which he made.

Mr. CHARLTON. I made no statement regard- his offence then and endeavours to justify it to-day. ing Dr. Hickey this time. Last session, on Dr. This is not the first time he has had to withdraw un-Mr. Sproule.

Hickey's repudiation of the statement that he was a co-applicant, I did withdraw the statement I made then, and I have not made it to-night.

Mr. SPROULE. I may remind the hon gentleman that he gave reasons why he might be correct, and one reason was a letter which he read, and which I have given to this House, stating that, on the 20th of a certain month, Dr. Hickey wrote so-and-so, and finished up that letter by saying, "I trust we will get that equal consideration." I have that letter here, if the hon gentleman denies it:

"Sir,—Macmillan having failed in his agreement to have survey of timber limit in on the 17th instant, I claim, on behalf of Wm. Broder, the right to be a co-applicant for the limit covered by the application of Macmillan. "I trust we will get that equal consideration."

Upon the strength of that single word "we" that Mr. Hickey had used he argues to-night that he was in a measure justified in putting the construction he did upon that correspondence, the construction that Dr. Hickey was interested in a timber limit, and that in face of the fact that Dr. Hickey had placed on record in this House an affidavit from Mr. Broder, on whose behalf this limit was applied for. The affidavit from Mr. Broder declared that Dr. Hickey was not directly or indirectly, at present or prospectively, interested in that timber limit. But to-night the hon, gentleman endeavours to justify his accusations of last year. I read a portion of the hon, gentleman's affidavit, and that of the party before whom it was made, and he says that he does not know that such a party exists. Now, the hon, gentleman did not deny the affidavit when it was under the consideration of this House last year; he did not deny that he made it, but he apologized saying that if he did any wrong to Dr. Hickey he regretted it very much and he did it innocently, because he had no feeling against him. But to-night he pretends to justify his attack by saying that the interpretation which he has put upon this letter justifies him in assuming that Dr. Hickey was in some way interested.

Mr. CHARLTON. No; I did not.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, that was certainly the tenor of his remarks. Then, referring to the affidavit, he says he does not know that such a person exists. Who made the affidavit? Why, it is signed by John Charlton, and it was distributed all over this country during the elections of 1887. I know it was exhibited on platform after platform in my riding, and I have heard of its being exhibited in various other ridings; therefore, I assume it was used all over the country. Then, the hon, gentleman says he does not wish Dr. Hickey any harm; still he gets up to night and repeats his attempt to destroy his character and kill his reputation. How would he like to have Shakespeare's language applied to him? Shakespeare makes one of his characters say:

"He that steals my purse, steals trash, but he that robs me of my good name takes from me that which does not enrich him, and leaves me poor indeed."

Shakespeare puts the character of a man who steals a fellowman's reputation even below that of a thief, and I say that this character would, in a measure, apply to the conduct of the hon, member for North Norfolk. The hon, member apologized for his offence then and endeavours to justify it to-day. This is not the first time he has had to withdraw un-withdraw a letter he had written regarding his French leader in this House. It was spread over the country, but he had to apologize for that. His time is largely divided between making allegations and making apologies and withdrawals. what is the hon, gentleman's contention? He condemns a member of Parliament being interested in transactions with the Crown, no matter what the nature of the transaction may be, where regulations are laid down, and where a member of Parliament may do in that transaction the same as any outsider. Moreover, the hon, gentleman condemns a member of Parliament who may attend to a business transaction with the Government on behalf of his constituents, because he says that, in some way, it interferes with the independence of Parliament. Then, he goes on to read a number of names of hon. members of this House who, as he pleases to call them, are sinners in that respect. The hon, gentleman says that he does not think they are equally as guilty as those who ask timber limits for themselves, and he does not put them in the same category. But he still holds they are guilty; he still condemns them as having done something Now, the hon, gentleman in reading over these names has included mine in the number. And what is the transaction? Had the hon, gentleman not been given an explanation of that circumstance years ago, when he was informed in his place in the House what the nature of it was, and what duty was being performed, I would feel like exonerating him, believing that he did it inno-But it is not the first, or the second, nor, I think, the third time, that this question has been debated in this House, nor is it the first or second time that I have been obliged to make that explanation; yet, in face of the fact that it has been made, and the hon. gentleman understands it, he gets up and reads again that list of names, in order to lead the public to believe that the members of Parliament, whose names appear there, have done something wrong. He accuses me of sending in applications on behalf of my constituents, many of whom I never saw. I say that out of twelve or fifteen of those individuals, I only saw three or four of them; the balance of the number I never saw, nor would I know them if I met them on the street. These parties wrote to me asking me to do for them a certain duty as a member of Parliament, and because I did it, I am dragged before the country as one who did something that destroys my independence as a member of Parliament. Then he says: "Such and such parties, I understand, are brothers of the member for East Grey." I may say that two of my brothers, whom I had not seen for years, were living in that country, and with an associate of theirs they made an application for a timber limit with the object of taking up a mill and beginning operations there. That application was sent to me, and I put it in in the same way as I did the others, and as other members were doing. An Order in Council was, I think, passed in regard to one, though I never paid any attention to it afterwards. There was no timber limit given, no regulations were carried out, and nothing was done beyond that. But the fact that two of those parties happened to be brothers of mine, the hon. gentleman considers a reason why he should condemn my act as a member of Parliament. Now, let me apply the same | Parliament is to be condemned for such a reason, rule to the hon, gentleman. Because a member of surely the hon, gentleman should condomn himself, founded charges. Only a short time ago he had to Parliament happens to have a brother that may be in any way negotiating with the Government, or transacting business with the Government, the hon, gentleman says that such a member violates the Independence of Parliament Act if he appears in any way as a medium between the two. Now, I have here the Parliamentary Companion, and what do I find there? I read there that the hon. member for North Norfolk has a brother, William Andrew Charlton, and the account goes on to say that he came to Canada from the United States; age 50; born on the 9th of May, 1841, married in 1869, engaged in the mercantile and lumber business, and he is the brother of John Charlton, M.P. This is the local member for North Norfolk, who is the partner of John Charlton, M.P., who is member for North Norfolk in the Dominion Parlia-The member in the Local Legislature with his brother in the Dominion Parliament are both interested in timber limits obtained from the Local Government, and the former is no doubt on behalf of his brother negotiating with that Government regarding settlements which from time to time take place. What analogy is there between that case and mine? I never had any interest direct or indirect, present or prospective in timber limits, mining lands or grazing licenses in the western country. But I performed a duty which every member was obliged to do when parties wrote to him, and assisted my friends when they wished to make an application, and I am now held up to execration because I did it. Where is the analogy between the case of an hon, gentleman, whose own brother is in the Local House and is dealing with timber limits sold by the Local Government, out of which both profited very largely last year, and my case? The hon, member for North Norfolk has condemned this Government because they have not sold timber limits at public auction, but if they are not sold by public auction they are sold under certain regulations with which the purchasers are obliged to comply, in a similar manner to regulations laid down by the Local Government of Ontario when they sell timber limits at public auction. We are not so short in memory as to forget some very crooked transactions that occurred with the Local Government. What are the conditions on which timber limits in Ontario are sold? One of the conditions is that a royalty shall be paid to the Crown. Do we forget that only a few years ago when H. H. Cook was dealing with the Local Government, on the same principles and on the same lines, that some years afterwards when the royalty had to be paid on the measurement of the lumber, that gentleman contended that a wrong measurement had been made, and Mr. Cook and his friends applied to the Local Government, who are his political friends, for a remeasurement of lumber which had been shipped out of the country. A remeasurement was made, notwithstanding the fact that it was not there to measure, and he profited by the transaction to the tune of over $2,000. The hon, member for North Norfolk through his brother, I presume, has the same duty to do; I am not saying he is doing it unfairly, but he is as unlikely to do it unfairly as is any hon. member in connection with his transactions in grazing, mining lands or timber limits. Where is the difference? If a member of because he has gone much further than hon, members have gone and he is entitled to much greater condemnation. Then, again, the hon. gentleman for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) treated the House to a great deal of righteous indignation because timber limits belonging to Indians were leased and worked by members of Parliament, and he gave an account of what he termed a shady transaction between the hon, member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard) and the department. When the hon. member for North Victoria condemns the hon, member for Ottawa, he condemns his own colleague the member for North Norfolk, because he is doing the same thing to-day, that is operating timber limits leased from the Indian Department, and under the control of this Government. I should like to ask the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron)—and I am sorry he is not in the House—a question that I think may be considered pertinent. He treated the House to much indignation in regard to this transaction to which I have referred, and said it was a very serious offence, one that could neither be condoned nor overlooked. I should like to ask him, if it is a fact as alleged that the hon. member for North Victoria was instrumental in securing for a friend a timber limit up in the western part of Ontario from the Local Government for $40,000, which was shortly afterwards sold for $140,000? I wonder if it is a fact, and, if so, will he admit it. It is alleged to be a fact and the information is so given to me. Moreover, I am told that the hon, member for North Victoria got $10,000 out of the transaction for his services. That hon, gentleman was showing some time ago what a great crime was committed by the Government in permitting limits to be acquired by political knaves, members of Parliament, but he altogether forgot to tell the House regarding his own action. Did he give full value for the money when he got these $10,000 out of a timber limit transaction, the limit being bought for $40,000 from the Local Government and afterwards sold for $140,000? Who is most culpable, the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) or the hon, member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard), the latter of whom declared in his place that he had nothing to do with the transaction referred to, that he was simply acting for another party and that he got no money out of it; while the former got $19,000 out of the timber limit transaction? Could that hon, gentleman condone that transaction when it was much more flagrant in its nature and more injurious in its effects than were the actions of other hon, members to whom he has referred. Then we have the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who denounced the Government in stentorian tones for this extravagance. He is on economy now. Hon, gentlemen opposite seem to be revelling in scandals, and at this time especially they endeavour to boom scandals because they remember the past, that they once got into power over what they were pleased to call a scandal and they hope and believe they may accomplish it again, and, consequently, they devote their whole attention to scandals. "Like the dog returns to his vomit and the sow that is washed to her wallowing in the mire," they return to their pet hobby. The hon. member for North Wellington treated this House to advice on economy. Only a short time ago the hon, member was dealing with the item was to sell by private sale, for of contingencies in the Estimates. He was speak- that they could not get bidders. Mr. SPROULE.

ing on the subject of jack-knives, pencils and pens for the senators. He condemned the Government for extravagance, and he said he did not know what 86 or 90 senators wanted with 339 inkstands. He z did not know why they required 416 jack-knives or 144 scrap books. He said he did not believe many of those old gentlemen were aware of the fact, and he added: "They quietly take their seats and their knives and their scissors, and knowing a great many as I do, I cannot believe they are winking at the extravagance which is going on in that chamber." The hon, gentleman referred over and over again to the large number of jack knives they were using, and asked what they were doing with them. He forgot to tell the House that he has already got three jack-knives himself this year. So it is not a good argument for the hon, gentleman to use this jack-knife policy of economy. Although he condemns this expenditure for jack-knives, yet if he keeps on at the present rate until the end of the session he will have used a larger number than does each senator. He wants an argument for next year and he is manufacturing one now, in the same way as he dirtied the napking at Government House and then came here and condemned the extravagant expenditure for washing them. Is this the kind of argument that should be used by members of Parliament? How did it apply when brought home to hon, members who are perpetrators themselves? These transactions to which I have called attention do not bear the light of day, and the parties deserve condemnation. What does this amendment ask this House to do? In this resolution he asks the House to condemn the principle of selling timber limits except by public Well, timber limits have been disposed of by public auction for the last four years, and I cannot understand why he should ask the House to say this, unless he intends by his argument to wrongfully lead the country to understand that the principle of selling timber limits by private sale which was abolished five years ago still obtains. The Minister of the Interior told him that for the last four years timber limits have been disposed of by public auction, and that should satisfy the hon. gentleman, if anything can satisfy him. I understand that the hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) is the seconder of this motion, and I would like to ask the hon, member for East York, if he were in the House, and the hon, member for North Norfolk: Who first adopted the principle of selling these timber limits by private sale? If I remember correctly it was the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) of which the hon. member for North Norfolk was an ardent admirer and strong supporter, which adopted this principle of selling timber limits by private sale, and there were timber limits sold by that Government by this means, and without being put up to public auction.

The hon, gentleman Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). says that this system was introduced by the hon. gentleman from East York (Mr. Mackenzie). He is mistaken; it was in vogue before.

Mr. SPROULE. Well, at all events, the Mackenzie Government continued the principle.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) amended the law, and made it conform with the practice. The practice was to sell by private sale, for the simple reason

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. And the practice was so correct, and the hon. member for East York the limit had three years to make a selection, and (Mr. Mackenzie) so fully approved of it, that a statute was passed to make it law.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, the Minister of Justice knows that the reason for the continuance of the practice was that there could be no bidders

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. And I think that was a good reason.

Mr. SPROULE. At all events it was practically the same. If the principle was a bad one, the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) and the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) endorsed it when they were in power, and they carried it to such an extreme, that the system became very injurious to the people, because, under the Mackenzie Government, the regulations surrounding the the transactions were not by any means so stringent as the regulations provided by the Government of the late Sir John A. Macdonald. I find that on the 4th of October, 1878, in the dying days of the Mackenzie Government—and remember that the elections took place on the 17th September, when they were ignominiously defeated at the polls, and were virtually a moribund Parliament, and had no right in all fairness to make any important changes or to enter into any important negotiations at that time-I find that notwithstanding the fact that they expected to leave power in a few days, the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) reported in favour of granting 200 square miles of timber limits in the North-West to H. H. Cook & Remember, Mr. Speaker, they granted 200 square miles, as against the 50 square miles that are granted according to the amended regulations of the Conservative Government; and they gave H. H. Cook & Co. the privilege of picking out any part of that territory of 200 square miles during a period of three years, in which they were to make a selection. Not all in one block either, but in blocks of 20 square miles when they could find That was done by a moribund Parliament under the Mackenzie Administration, and by men who were virtually out of power as soon as they could square up their offices and leave their places to their successors. Notwithstanding that, and after they were defeated in the country, they gave to a political friend 200 square miles of land by private sale and not by auction. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that they did that because they could not get bidders, but we must remember that the late leader of this Government gave that same reason; but he lopped off all those objectionable features in the transaction which were found to be injurious, and which were the practice under the Liberal Government. The Conservative Government continued this policy for the purpose of getting men into the country to saw lumber for the settlers, to give them cheap lumber, and because they could not sell the limits readily by public auction. The Conservative Government, however, made the regulation that a person could only get 50 square miles of timber limits, instead of 200 as under the Mackenzie Government, and they further provided that the person who got the limit should build a mill within two years, and saw so much lumber every year for would make an abject apology as he did last year the settlers. In the instance I refer to under the when he thought the House was going to pronounce Government of Mr. Mackenzie the person who got before he had to do anything—and I do not know what length of time he got after that—before he was obliged to turn out a single board of lumber. Now, I ask hon, gentlemen which of the two Governments had the better policy? I say that this Government, finding they could not self limits to advantage by auction, and that better inducements had to be offered to get lumber for the settlers, devised regulations by which the person taking the limit had to build a mill and turn out a certain quantity of lumber every year for the benefit of the settlers, and they altogether improved on the regulations of the Liberal Government. However, as time advanced and settlement went on, and it had been found that the limits might be sold to advantage by public auction, the Conservative Government changed the regulations and fell back upon the rule, which exists in the Province of Ontario today, of selling these limits by public auction. That change was made four years ago, and yet the hon, member (Mr. Charlton) seeks to make the country believe that the change has not been made yet, and that the objectionable practice of selling timber limits by private negotiations is in existence still. In moving such a resolution as this, the hon, gentleman is condemning the hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), whom he asked to second the resolution, in stronger language than he can condemn this Government, because the regulations under the Mackenzie Administration were much more objectionable than the regulations under the Government of Sir John A. Maedonald. Timber limits have been sold by public auction for the last four years, what reason can the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) have in wasting the time of the House every year with this resolution, unless it is that he wishes to mislead the country for party purposes. If I were inclined to attribute motives to the hon, gentleman I would say that he has taken this course for the purpose of getting up a little campaign literature for the by-elections, and in order to try to make the people of the country believe that there is something wrong, which does not exist at all. If he wanted to do away with the objectionable practice of selling timber limits by private sale, why did he not do it long ago when his own friends who sit beside him were in power and carried on the objectionable practice? Does the hon, gentleman want to make the country believe that members of Parliament, in doing things which they were perfectly entitled to do, have done something wrong. He has been obliged to withdraw those charges time and again in this House, and what motive can he have in reiterating them now? The hon, gentleman is well aware that were it not for a fact that he is privileged as a member of Parliament, and that whatever he says in this House is surrounded by parliamentary privileges, he would long ago have been brought before the courts of the land for libelling hon, members of this House, and he would be involved in litigation which would not be honourable or creditable to him. If the hon, members of this. House should attempt to pass a resolution that his conduct was discreditable, that it was ungentlemanly and uncourteous, and that he was not fit to sit in this House, he that sentence against him; but should the House withdraw it, as soon as the danger was passed, he would attempt to bolster up the course he had taken again. Now, I think it is time that we had a rest from these allegations from year to year. think it is time that the hon, gentleman dealt more fairly with his fellow members in this House, who are endeavouring to discharge their duties here as faithfully and as honourably as himself. I think it is time that he let ancient or medieval history alone, because he can scarcely touch a subject in this House without stumbling upon something in connection with his own career that is not impregnable. He is the last man who should come here and talk about inconsistency in members of Parliament. think it is time the country was treated to some-But because the Government and their thing else. supporters are not inclined to agree with hon. gentlemen opposite, because they are not inclined to sit quietly by and listen to all kinds of abuse and indignities which are heaped upon them, threats are used that we must sit here all summer. It is just as well that hon, gentlemen opposite should know that we on this side of the House are ready to stay here all summer or even till next year in order to discharge our duties, in spite of the vituperations or threats of hon, gentlemen opposite. I think we can hold out as long as they can; and when we are discharging our duties as faithfully and honourably as hon. gentlemen opposite, we ought not to be subjected to these threats to the extent that we are. I think it is time that we settled down to business and endeavoured to do something useful, for which the country gives us our indemnity. I think it is time that we endeavoured to carry through legislation which will be beneficial to the country, instead of taking up the whole time of the House in fishing out alleged scandals, in making allegations that cannot be substantiated, and in trying to create the impression in the country that there is something wrong at the seat of government, in the hope of destroying the feeling of confidence in the Government which prevails throughout the country to-day. I think it is time hon, gentlemen opposite ceased their attempts to cry down members of Parliament who are supporting the present Government, who are endeavouring to discharge their duty faithfully, honestly, honourably and intelligently, with credit to themselves and with good to the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to make a personal explanation. The hon gentleman, I understand, has stated in my absence that I had secured three jack-knives, while I had complained against senators getting four. I may state to the hon. gentleman that the statement he has made is untrue. do not charge him with stating what he knows to be untrue; he may have thought it was correct; but it is not correct. I have to say this more. do not know that I should have called the attention of the House to it, only that it has been before the House before; and my hon, friend can hardly be held responsible for what he says when his mouth

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has no right to make that remark in connection with a personal explanation.

Mr. SPROULE. I said that I was credibly informed, and if I was incorrectly informed, I certainly withdraw the statement, because I had no House. He had better bring it forward when the Mr. Sproule.

intention either of misrepresenting the hon, gentleman or of saying what he says is not the fact.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman means that he was credulously informed. statement which he has just now made shows how very credulous the hon. gentleman is. The hon. gentleman has charged the hon, member for North Norfolk with having abused his right as a member of the House, and with having made a most improper attack upon an hon, gentleman who was formerly a member of this House. Well, the hon, gentleman has read the statement upon which the hon, member for North Norfolk proceeded. My hon, friend from North Norfolk read an extract from a letter written by a late member of this House, Dr. Hickey, in which the latter speaks about the claims that "we" will be entitled to under certain conditions; and the hon, member for East Grey makes a most violent attack upon the hon, member for North Norfolk for assuming that the pronoun "we" includes the person who uses it as well as somebody else. Well, Sir, my opinion is that the hon, member for North Norfolk is right that he was entitled to assume when Dr. Hickey used the pronoun "we" he intended to include himself along with the other parties named. Now, when Dr. Hickey stated in this House that he had no such intention, but that he had used the word rather in a conventional sense than in its strict literal sense, my hon, friend from North Norfolk accepted his explanation. That was the whole case; and, when violent attacks were made upon the hon, member for North Norfolk for having made the charge upon Dr. Hickey which he did, then my hon. friend pointed out how it was that he came to make the charge, and that he was to some extent justified in making it, on account of the phraseology of the letter which had been addressed to the department by Dr. Hickey. But, Sir, I am not going to detain the House by a discussion of that matter. The hon, member for East Grey has made a long and a violent speech. His speech possesses all those characteristics which he deprecates in the observations addressed to the House by my hon. friend from North Norfolk. The hon. gentleman, if he was not very strong in his denunciations, was certainly vituperative and very violent, and he intended to be severe. Then the hon, gentleman asked my hon. friend from North Norfolk, what would he think if he applied to him the language used by Shakespeare, that—

"He who steals my purse, steals trash; but he who filehed from me my good name robs me of that which enriches him not, but leaves me poor indeed."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not need to make the whole quotation. The hon, gentleman asks whether my hon. friend is not to be put in a class below those who steal purses. He occupies a lower position than the ordinary thief; his conduct is more heinous, because he insisted that when a man used the word "we" in a letter, intended to include himself along with the other parties referred to. Then the hon, gentleman has told us that the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) had obtained a large sum of money from somebody to which he was not entitled—a sum of $10,000. Well, the hon, gentleman had better formulate that charge and have it referred to a Committee of this hon, member for North Victoria is in his place, when we will have an opportunity of ascertaining whether the hon, gentleman is undertaking to vindicate the purity of Parliament, or whether he is calumniating a member of this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I said that it was in connection with the Local Government, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman can readily understand that no charge was made in this House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon, gentleman's charge was what the law permitted him to make; and there was no moral wrong in itself, if it was a fair compensation for the labour performed. Then the hon, gentleman has accused hon, members of speaking in "thundering stentorian tones," and he also said they spoke "in various stentorian tones." Well, I do not know exactly what the hon, gentleman means by this kind of oratory which he has undertaken to characterize by these expressions. hon, gentleman has also said that my hon, friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was the first person to introduce the sale of timber limits and mining interests, and so on, in public lands without competition. The hon, gentleman is mistaken. There was a law put upon the Statute-book of the first session of the Parliament of Canada, copied from the Act of the Parliament of old Canada, providing that competition should be had in all such cases. Well, when sales came to be made in the North-West Territories, the Government led by the late Sir John Macdonald found that the law could not be complied with, and that if the people there were to have houses or barns and the other necessary edifices for the protection of themselves and their domestic animals it was necessary that lumber should be had, and that lumber could not be had unless certain favourable conditions were furnished to parties as an inducement to erect lumber mills in those districts. The Government of that day then undertook to make, and did make, sales of limits without competition, by private sale, without making any changes in the law. They disregarded the law. They allowed the law to stand requiring the Government to sell timber limits by public auction, but disregarded it; and when Mr. Mackenzie assumed office, Mr. Laird, who was then Minister of the Interior, introduced to the House an amendment which was rendered necessary by the condition of things then existing. That policy was justifiable as long as the condition of which I have spoken continued, as long as we had to hold out inducements to lumbermen to persuade them to erect mills and cut lumber for the accommodation of settlers. Now, I have said there were sales of that sort which took place before Mr. Mackenzie came into office; there was a sale to Turner, to Fuller, to McCaulay, to Dennis, a brother of the then Surveyor General, and the area sold to them was not lots of fifty square miles, but of a hundred square miles. That was the area sold before the law was changed in the year 1873. Hon. gentlemen opposite have referred to a case which has often been referred to in this House before, and often explained, and that is the sale of timber limits to Cook & Sutherland. Well, these parties aspired for a limit, not on the eve of an election, but early in the year 1878, and there was an attempt made to see whether there could not be found bidders before any arrangement was made with those parties. Communication was tained, it went to the man who made the sur-had with various lumbermen by the surveyor general, at that time Col. Dennis, and it was found that in the Saskatchewan country, where there were many settlers, who had gone into that district believing it was in the direction in which the Canadian Pacific Railway would be built, it was well nigh impossible to get parties to erect lumber mills and cut lumber for the use and accommodation of the population. Now, the hon. gentleman refers to the sale of a limit of 200 square miles as if it was a very extraordinary sale. In the forest district of Ontario it might be so regarded, but there had been timber limits of half this extent in the North-West sold to parties, which limits had in six years become exhausted. I remember calling the attention of the late Mr. White, when Minister of the Interior, to the case of a party who was well known to him, who had purchased a timber limit in Manitoba and had exhausted his limit, and was asking for another limit before Mr. White himself came into office. did we provide in the sale to Cook & Sutherland. We provided that not less than ten square miles should be taken in any place, and we made that provision for the purpose of protecting the narrow strip of timber which extended along the borders of the rivers, in some cases a quarter of a mile and in others a half a mile in depth.

Mr. BOWELL. Was it not twenty instead of ten?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes; I think so. No portion of these two hundred miles was to be in a block less than twenty miles in extent, so that it was impossible to purchase a fringe of timber without taking an extent of prairie land far in excess of that which was covered by the timber. That was kept in view, and it was rather with the design of preserving a margin of timber along the rivers for the use of the population than for any other reason that this provision was made. Now, what was done after we retired from office? I say it would be an act of cowardice on my part, when these claims had been before the department for several months, to have refused the sale of timber limits for the ordinary accommodation of the population of a country destitute of the necessary material to erect houses for the protection of themselves and families. That sale was made, with the ordinary conditions attached, and there was a provision besides that the lumber was not to be sold beyond a certain maximum price. Now the hon, gentleman says that, under the new regulation, there was a sale of fifty square miles to one party. But what has been done under that regulation? Why, a man makes a survey, it may be of five hundred miles, and he gets five or ten parties to apply to the department, each for a limit of fifty square miles; and the result was, as I know, for I could name the parties, that parties have made applications and obtained limits which they immediately assigned to the lumbermen who induced them to make the application. I could name Edward Farrar and others who were in Winnipeg, on whom a lumberman waited and said: I have surveyed such and such a district in the North-West, and want you to apply to the department on my behalf to obtain this timber limit of fifty square miles; and the timber limit was obtained, and, as soon as ob-vey; so that not only two hundred square miles, but possibly twice two hundred miles could go into the hands of a single lumberman. under our regulation there was no attempt to sell to any man who was not prepared to erect a mill, but the hon, gentleman treated the timber limits as an article of ordinary merchandise, to be sold to anyone who offered. Mr. Edward Farrer was the editor of a newspaper when he made application for a timber limit. Dr. Schultz, now Lieutenant Governor, when he applied for a timber limit had no intention of erecting a mill. It was simply for purposes of speculation. The hon, member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) was not going to introduce mill machinery on his timber limit and abandon his literary pursuits, and go to the woods in order to make lumber. That was not the intention. That was not the way the business was done. This was just as much a matter of speculation as the railway charters which have been carried through this House have been made a matter of Then the charges were diminished speculation. by one-half. More than that. Our regulation was that no piece of timber lands could be taken unless twenty miles at least was taken. There might be only one square mile of timber, but twenty miles together to be selected. But under the new regulation the limit was reduced to two miles. pointed out to the late Prime Minister, in a conversation on this subject, that his regulation practically placed the fringe of timber along the rivers in the North-West under the control of the lumbermen, while it was intented by the regulation of 1878 to protect that timber for the use of those who went in to settle in that country. I have discussed this matter before. I say that the regulations offering timber for sale otherwise than at public auction are justified when the country is new, when there is difficulty of access, when you cannot secure competition in the matter, and when you are looking rather at the accommodation of the settler than to revenue or profit you are likely to derive from That is a rule of common sense and a practice the Government are justified in applying and continuing as long as that condition of affairs continues. But when the country outgrows that, when you have lumbermen competing against each other for these limits to supply mills, and when lumber becomes an ordinary article of merchandise. then you have reached a condition of things when a change becomes necessary, and then it is the duty of the Government to introduce the system of competition, and do away with the system of sale to privateparties and by private arrangement. I think that condition of things was outgrown some time ago. I know that last session, in the discussion which took place as to the timber limit purchased by Mr. Rykert, we had an illustration of the abuse that might grow up and the loss which the public might sustain, without any advantage to the settler, when the country had made such progress that competition was practicable. Reference has been made by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) to sales of timber on Indian reserves. I think that should not have taken place. I think the result shows that if there had been a sale at public auction a very much larger sum would have been realized for the benefit of the Indian population than was realized by what was done. I do not charge the Minister with having acted corruptly. I am making such a large sum for his services.

no such charge at all; but I say there was a departmental mistake. There was a condition of things that made it right and proper that the system of advertisement and sale at public auction should have been followed, and there is no doubt in my mind that this is the rule which is now generally applicable to every portion of the country which is accessible for settlement, and the rule which I think the Government ought to announce as a rule of public policy, to be adhered to and formulated by legislation, instead of left to departmental regulation.

Mr. BARRON. I rise to a personal explanation. Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BARRON. I understand that the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), when I was absent from the House, made a statement that I had secured timber limits from some Government -I do not know what Government—for which I received $10,000. I ask permission to say that there is not one single word of truth in that statement. I desire to say, furthermore-

Mr. BARRON. I desire to say, furthermore, that I have repeatedly had occasion on behalf of my clients, having many lumbermen among them, to apply to the Ontario Government-

Mr. LANDERKIN. If there is any question about it, I will move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. BARRON. I have always been told by the Ontario Government that no timber limits could be granted except such as were put up at public auction. As to having made any money myself, I state distinctly that, except as acting as solicitor for clients, I have never made a single, solitary cent, and never in the way indicated by my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. SPROULE. I may tell the hon member for North Victoria that I did not make the statement he has alleged. What I said was, that if the member for North Victoria were in his place I would ask him if it were true, as alleged, that he had got for a friend of his a timber limit for $40,000 which was afterwards sold for $140,000; and for which it was said the hon member for North Victoria got $10,000. I certainly accept the hon. gentleman's denial, and I will not do what has often been done in this House, repeat the statement; but I must say that the most incredible thing, to my mind, in the whole statement, was that the hon. member for North Victoria could get

Mr. MACDOWALL. I should not have troubled the House on this occasion if the hon, member for North Norfolk had not mentioned my name amongst those to whom limits had been granted. I do not know in what way he made his enquiries as to the list which he produced. Perhaps, if I tell him my tale of woe, he will understand that there has not been so very much wickedness in obtaining timber limits. The year in which I made the application was, I think, 1882, when I was still a verdant immigrant in the country. I found there were certain regulations under which timber limits could be obtained, and I determined to go through the form of applying for one of them. I had no political influence at all; I did not know a single living soul in Canada when I came here. I had to fight my own battles the whole way through, and I can assure him that the fact of my having adopted one side of politics is not owing in the least to the battles I had to fight in order to obtain these tim-Government at that time I obtained in a proper that was an act of Sir John A. Macdonald, because, and regular manner, and I believe that I had to from my long experience as a pioneer in the Northpay a good deal of money for it. In those days sugar with us was worth 50 cents a pound, bacon member for Bothwell himself justified it when he 50 cents a pound, permican 40 cents a pound, said that the practice was to accommodate the and everything else in proportion; and at that settler, and a change should only be made when it time, also, we could only travel through that became necessary through competition. Therefore, country with a dog train. When my hon, friend I think he himself endorsed the act of Sir John A. from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) talked of the expenses Macdonald. Then, he says that Mr. Laird, who of surveying a limit as being $400 I was astonished, because $400 would not even pay the preliminary expenses when I got my limit. At the same time, when I obtained my limit I not only complied with all the regulations laid down by the department, but I did so under very great difficulty, because at that time there were no railways in that country. When I came into the country the hon, member for East York was the leader of the Government, and inot suppose there was any prairie included, because he had publicly stated in this House that the policy of his Government was such that he did not mean to go through the empty process of driving stakes in the prairie, so as to detake in more of the river bank, which the hon. lude the settlers to take up land or make member for Bothwell says was the very thing his investments in that country. When I went into Government endeavoured to avoid. But that systhat country the course of the Canadian Pacific tem of survey was observed in those days; Railway had not been changed, and when I went speak as an old settler and I know this to be to Prince Albert it was with the belief that within a fact. Well, these 200 square miles laid down a very short time the Canadian Pacific Railway in limits in that way would allow of Cook & would pass through there. We brought in our machinery for mills at great expense. We had to pay 10 cents per pound for freighting, and some of the castings were over 5,000 weight, and everything was most expensive. I think the tax-payer of Ontario has certainly not suffered by the grant of such timber limits in the North-West. With regard to the timber limits granted to the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and the hon, member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), they have told you very generous sentiments towards the people of that those limits reverted to the Crown, those the North-West they would have looked more that those limits reverted to the Crown, those limits are still in possession of the Crown. I think if the hon, member for North Norfolk considers these limits are of any value, and if he will make his application to the Minister of the Interior, he will find it just as easy to obtain one of these limits now as it was before, because it is a well known fact that timber limits are worth nearly nothing unless they are worked on mercantile principles, and they can only be worked on mercantile principles when you have a market for limits were granted to Cook & Sutherland. When my friends and myself could only obtain from Mr. Laird 23 square miles. the products.

took up these timber limits in the North-West there was no market, and I believe that many of the settlers amongst the older class who inhabit that part of the North-West have had cause to bless the mill that not only gave them the wood to make houses to cover them from the blasts of winter, but also gave them the flour which fed their bodies during the long cold winters, and I believe we have paid, even in that way, a higher price and a higher premium than ever my pure friend from North Norfolk could have demanded from us. Now, the hon, member from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was speaking when I came in, and I did not hear the full intent of his remarks; but I heard him state that it was shortly after Confederation and under the administration of our late lamented leader, Sir John A. Macdonald, that an Act of Parliament was framed enabling the Government of Canada to give timber limits on easy terms to the people, so as to enable them to settle in that country. I am very Anything I got from the Dominion glad, indeed, to hear on his authority that West, I believe it was a wise measure, and the hon. was my opponent during the election of 1887, introduced a modification of the laws, and that it was during Mr. Laird's time that timber limits were given to Messrs. Cook & Sutherland. He says the reason he gave these timber limits to Cook & Sutherland was to enable them to lay out their limits in lots of ten square miles each, or ten miles each; he said ten square miles each. I do in those days a system of survey was adopted which allowed a great many jogs in the survey, and which would have enabled Cook & Sutherland to in limits in that way would allow of Cook & Sutherland altogether avoiding prairie, and it would have enabled them to take in the whole timber from the Rocky Mountains down to the Cumberland Lake on the Saskatchewan. Well, I may tell the hon. member for Bothwell and this House that Cook & Sutherland were not the only applicants for timber limits in that country, and if the Government of the hon. member for East York had really entertained those kindly on the application of Captain Moore, who went into Prince Albert in 1873. Cap-tain Moore intimated to Mr. Laird, who was then Minister of the Interior, that he was prepared to take a mill across the prairies, and not only to cut the lumber necessary for the settlers' houses, but also to grind their wheat into flour, and he asked Mr. Laird whether his Government would grant him timber limits on the same terms as timber How did the Liberal Government show them that they intended to benefit the settlers of the North-West? You simply have to refer to the records of the House of those days to prove what I say is true, that is to say, that when the Government buildings were put up at Battleford, that is, when the old Government House, now the industrial school, and the barracks were being constructed at Battleford, Mr. Sutherland brought down all the timber for those buildings from Edmonton, and if you look into the Public Accounts of that day you will find that the timber cost the country $120 a thousand. And yet Captain Moore offered to lay down timber for $60a thousand at Battleford, and the Liberal Government would not accept his offer. Therefore, you see how the Liberal Government had been trying to help the settlers and to save the money of the people. They only tried to build up money of the people. They only tried to build up that country when they could help their own friends. I suppose they thought that $120, when it could go into the pockets of a friend, was less than $60 when it went into the pockets of a poor immigrant. The hon, member for Bothwell also said that it would be a cruel matter to leave the new settlers of that country destitute of building material, and I entirely agree with him. And, therefore, I say that the laws ought to have been made so elastic as that they would have allowed people with the necessary capital to go in there and supply the building material. I do not suppose that if the hon, member for Bothwell goes through that country, from Edmonton down to Cumberland Lake, he will find that the confidence of the Government was misplaced, because the people throughout the country have been treated generously. I believe the prices of lumber were high, to a certain extent, compared with present prices. same time, you must remember that in Winnipeg, in 1877, when they were selling lumber at $80 a thousand, they were selling it at $40 in Prince Albert. In Winnipeg, however, the people had to pay cash for their lumber, whereas in Prince Albert they could exchange for lumber their wheat and oats, or whatever crop the farmer produced, which was always turned into eash. Therefore, the object was gained that the hon, member for Bothwell desired by the granting of 50 milelimits in place of grants of 200 miles, which latter really meant much more; because, according to that system, it would cover the whole timber country of the Saskatchewan The hon, gentleman has said he believed there had been as much speculation in timber limits in the North-West as in railway charters. I do not know to what railway charters he particularly refers. Perhaps he refers to the Qu'Appelle and Long Lake Railway. I do not think there has been much speculation there. There was an attempt made by the original promoters to build it. They have now succeeded in building it, and I am glad to say it has been a very great boon to the country, and I hope the promoters will soon reap benefit from it. The hon. gentleman may have referred to the North-West Central Railway; but it was asserted the other day by the acting Minister of Railways that the company were proceeding with the work and would carry the road to completion. I, therefore, suspect that the hon gentleman referred to the Hudson Bay Railway, and when he did so he made the greatest mistake in the world, because that railway is of the most material importance to the made against him by the hon, member for East Mr. MacDowall.

North-West, and I think, although I have not hitherto spoken of Mr. Sutherland in complimentary terms, I may now turn round and refer to him in complimentary terms. The promoter has shown his determination to build this railway, and during the last three years he has stuck to the enterprise through thick and thin, and made it the one object of his life, and I hope he will carry it to completion. As to speculations in timber limits: if the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who has objected to such speculation, would go into the North-West and look up those very timber limits respecting which applications were made to the Government, and make a tender for them, I believe he would not find anyone to oppose him in taking In considering this motion I think there are two or three points of view from which it may be regarded. In the first place, there seems to be a certain amount of personal element introduced into the discussions of the House during this session, and I deprecate that very much. It is a very great mistake. If we are to attend here to the interests of the public and the interests of the country we ought to leave personal matters out We ought to regard all these matters, altogether. whether railway charters or steamboat lines, or grants of timber limits, or any other matters of that sort, from the standpoint as to whether they would prove beneficial to the country and would aid in promoting its growth. There is also another point of view. If the hon, gentleman did not mean to make any personal reference, and he stated he did not desire to do so, then the only reason which could induce him to bring this motion before the House was to create an impression throughout the country that here was a new scandal on foot. and that this, although an old scandal, was really a veritable scandal. If it was for this reason the hon, gentleman brought forward his motion. I can only say I deprecate the motion. I think it is one of the indications of the very low state into which our political life is sinking if we are to do nothing more than to bring forward scandals against political opponents. we are true and loyal Canadians, and believe that our country is worth living in, and that it produces men worthy to live in such a great country, we should be proud if we can show honour among our public men on both sides. But that does not seem to be the view of hon. gentlemen opposite. During the whole session they have been doing nothing but scandal mongering. What does it all amount to? At the end of the session we will show that it will result in nothing. believe the bye-elections will show that the Government will be sustained by the people, because the people will not approve this course of political life. It may be called political life, but it is an abuse of the word "political" to use such a term. I consider that, although as I come from the North-West, I may be considered an out-and-out barbarian compared with intelligent members from the east, it is scarcely worthy of the public life of Canada that so much joy should be exhibited in attacking men occupying high positions and in bringing them into scandalous disgrace.

Mr. WALLACE. I was struck very forcibly with the skilful way in which the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) avoided the charge Grey (Mr. Sproule). He has not replied to the charge or the query put by the hon, member for East Grey, and therefore I suppose we shall have to assume that he cannot do it. The charge is that the hon, member for North Victoria had dealings which resulted in his obtaining $10,000 in a timber limit speculation in connection with the Ontario Government.

Mr. BARRON. I ask the hon, gentleman to make the charge.

Mr. WALLACE. Why did you not deny it?

Mr. FOSTER. We will have you before the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr. WALLACE. Why did the hon, gentleman not deny it.

Mr. BARRON. I will deny the charge, both as made by the hon, member for East Grey and the hon, member for West Toronto, if they will only make the charge.

Mr. DENISON. I did not make any charge.

Mr. WALLACE. A good deal has been said about colonization companies and in regard to hon. gentlemen applying for timber limits in the North-West. As I am one of those charged by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) as being implicated in applications for land for colonization purposes, I may say that I am not here to deny or excuse my connection with colonization companies in the North-West. If I required authority for the course I took I might refer to the hon, gentleman whom the hon, member for North Norfolk seemed to force into the position of seconding his motion this afternoon—I refer to the hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie); for when I first went into the colonization business I had for my guide the hon, member for East York, who was among the first to incorporate a company for colonization purposes in the North-West, of which he was a member and president. The application was made on 10th January, 1882. Alexander Mackenzie was the president of one of the five promoters. Robert Jaffray, the president of the Globe company, was one of the other promoters, and the company was called the British Canadian Colonization Company, limited. The object of the company is thus stated:

"The purposes for which colonization was sought are the acquiring by purchase, lease or otherwise, from the Dominion or Provincial Governments, or any corporation or persons, of land or any interest in land in the Dominion of Canada and the cultivation thereof; the erection of buildings, &c."

Our charter, that of the York Farmers' Colonization Company, was copied exactly from the charter of the company incorporated by the Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, the present member for East York, and the late leader of the Liberal party, and then a member for the House of Commons. There was nothing illegal in the act. In fact, during my career in Canada there is one fact to which I look back with pride and satisfaction, and it is, that when hon, gentlemen opposite were telling the young men of Canada that their only hope of prosperity was to remove to the United States I was instrumental in having our young men settle in our own country and assist in building up and cultivating the land of our own Dominion. In this we were most successful. Perhaps the terms of the agreement by which these colonization companies were organized are not familiar to some members of the House, as it is many years since these regulations were decided upon, and I will just recall a few of them. The lands of the North-West were divided into four classes. Class "A" included lands 24 miles on each side of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Class "B" included 12 miles on each side of the branch lines. Class "C" included all that land south of the Canadian Pacific Railway and not included in Classes "A" and "B;" and Class "D" were the lands far away from a railway, and to the north of it. The colonization companies were only given permission to have lands allotted to them in Class "D," far away Our company selected lands from the railway. from 80 to 90, and even 120 miles north of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We induced many young men from the West Riding of York to go on these lands; we sent immigrant agents to Europe, to England, Ireland and Scotland, and we succeeded in bringing out the finest class of immigrants that could be desired for this country. These, to the number of 200 or 250 families, settled in our colony, and some of these young men went there with very little money, if any, undergoing the hardships that are no doubt common to the first settlers in that country; but we have them to-day the most satisfied, the most prosperous, and the most contented class of people, I believe, that can be found in the Dominion of Canada. And, Sir, when the member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) says that the settlers left the North-West because they were honeycombed by colonization companies, I can say. so far as our company, and other companies that I could name him are concerned, that he utters a vile slander upon these colonization companies, and makes statements which he cannot prove, because they are not capable of proof. I will give the hon, gentleman the addresses of more than one hundred of our settlers, in fact, of every one of our settlers in the North-West, many of whom we have aided in going up there, men to whom we advanced money, when they required advances, at the moderate rate of 6 or 7 per cent., men who were assisted in every way, in purchasing oxen and implements; and, Sir, I can tell him that we have built up a prosperous and a happy and contented settlement in the North-West. That, Sir, instead of being open to the stabs of any political assassin, should be something to commend these companies to the Government and to the country. It is true Mr. Speaker, that there is one company, the Temperance Colonization Company, which, I believe, did not from the start, nor up to this day, fulfil the conditions under which they were organized. Sir, the fact that one company has defaulted in that respect should not cast a stigma upon our company, who have honestly attempted to fulfil, and have carried out, the duties and obligations which were imposed upon them by the Dominion Government.

Mr. WATSON. How many colonization companies are in existence to-day who have complied with the conditions?

States I was instrumental in having our young men settle in our own country and assist in building up and cultivating the land of our own Dominion. In this we were most successful. Perhaps the terms of the agreement by which these colonization companies were organized are not familiar.

Mr. WATSON. There are about three companies out of the whole batch.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not familiar with the working of the other companies, but I have heard the hon, member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) make insinuations time after time in this House against the colonization companies of the North-West, and I defy him now to make a single charge against the company with which I am connected.

Mr. WATSON. That is one.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, that is one that the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has been easting slurs against this afternoon. will ask the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), who has said that we were implicated in something-it must have been dishonest or dishonourable, when he used the word implicated—to make a single charge of malfeasence or wrong-doing in any respect against our company. He cannot

Mr. CHARLTON. I made no charge against the hon, gentleman's company, or against any other company.

Mr. WALLACE. Then what are you doing?

Mr. CHARLTON. My charge is against the policy of the Government.

Mr. WALLACE. The policy of the Government was, I believe, a wise and prudent one in this respect. It is true that the North-West settlers were not so prosperous as we at first expected. Everybody knows that there was a great boom for a year or two, and that it collapsed; but I believe that that policy of colonization companies, in which the Government undertook to become partners with companies who would assist them in colonizing and opening up the North-West, was a good and wise policy. I think that the Government in the course of a few years, when the conditions are somewhat better, would be doing a wise and prudent thing by adopting some such policy as they adopted in 1882. The hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in trying to defend the Mackenzie Government, and he himself in particular, from the charge of handing over the most valuable timber limits in that country to two men, practically without compensation or without any conditions whatever, made the remark that it would be an act of cowardice on his part to leave the settlers without timber. Does he mean to say that his Government, when ignominiously defeated and driven out of power, and when they were not responsible to the peopledoes he mean to tell the country that if they did not grant the timber limits to Cook & Sutherland there would be no timber for the settlers in the North-West? Why, Sir, the timber remained there, and it remained under a wiser and better provision, made by the Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, than that which he had established and carried out. I say, Sir, that the course of the Conservative Government with reference to the timber limits has been a wise and prudent one. They have brought their regulations up to the spirit of the times; they have acted liberally with the settlers of the North-West, and enabled them to obtain almost as cheap lumber as can be obtained in the older and well-wooded parts of the Besides that, Mr. Speaker, I other provinces. claim, notwithstanding that settlement had been retarded for a number of years in the North-West | years. Well, if they have, it seems to me that Mr. WALLACE.

from a number of causes, that the policy inaugurated in 1882 of establishing colonization companies was a wise and prudent policy at that time, and that the motion condenning the Government for their action in this respect is one which will not meet with the sympathy of the House nor with the sympathy of the country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mr. Speaker—

Some hon, MEMBERS. Question. \cdot

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am about to speak to the question. I think the discussion has wandered away somewhat from the question, and I wish to make a few remarks that will bear upon it. If I understand aright the motion of the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), it is simply asking this House to declare that it believes it is a wise and proper thing that in the disposal of the public lands and timber limits of this country they should be disposed of by public auction. That seems to me to be a fair proposition; and great indignation has been poured out on the hon, the mover of the resolution, who has been charged with making personal attacks upon members of this House. There was allusion made to that, there is no doubt; but it seems to me to have been made by the mover of the resolution to explain why he offers the present proposition to the House. He recited briefly that in times gone by the policy of the Government has not been to dispose of these timber limits by public auction, but to do it in a private way, and that in the disposition of these timber limits in times past many of the members of the House had made application for themselves or for their friends for one or more of these limits. He recited that he considers that policy tends to subvert the independence of the members, though not being contrary to the Independence of Parliament Act. It was first proposed in 1882, by Mr. Blake, that the limits should only be disposed of by public auction, and that this policy that the Government had begun, of disposing of them by private sale, should be withdrawn. That was voted down, the majority of the House on that occasion declaring and giving instructions to the Government that they wished the timber limits to be disposed of in the manner they had been disposed of before. In 1886, if I remember rightly, my hon, friend himself introduced a similar resolution, in which he recited again that many members of Parliament, either for themselves or for their friends, had made applications; and he simply pointed out that that would have a tendency to subvert the independence of members of the House, and proposed in his resolution as a remedy that the plan should be adopted of disposing of the timber limits and of our public lands by public auction. And to-day he simply recites that, I think as a matter of history, in order to give force and effect to the resolution which he submits to the House, and which he asks the House to endorse. Although the House on two previous occasions some years apart had declared that they did not wish this policy to be carried out, but wished the limits to be disposed of privately, he believed that this new House might be prepared to express its opinion, and, if it sees fit, instruct the Ministry that in the future they should adopt the course he proposes. But his statement is met by the announcement of the Minister of Interior that the Government have been doing that for the past four they themselves have arrived at the conclusion that is the proper way in which the limits should be dealt with; and that being the case, they will have no difficulty at all in assenting to the proposition of my hon. friend. My hon. friend takes the position that while the Government may possibly have adopted that course by passing an Order in Council, if they have taken that step they have done so in the face of a resolution of the House declaring that the House did not want that course to be pursued. That is the position in which the matter stands. So far as Parliament is concerned, the instruction of Parliament to the Ministers was not to pursue the course which the Minister of Interior says has been pursued for four years, but to continue the practice of disposing of the timber limits privately; and my hon, friend wants the course which the Minister says has been adopted declared by Parliament to be the course it desires to have adopted. My hon, friend says that if that has been done merely at the will of the Minister it can be rescinded at the will of the Minister, and he desires to have the distinct instruction of the House given to the Ministry to adopt that course. He does not move his resolution for the purpose of making a personal attack upon members of this House. I wish to judge him charitably. I think he recited these historical facts in order to illustrate the propriety of bringing up his motion to-day. And has it not a tendency—and, I think, that is the word my hon, friend used—to subvert the independence of Parliament, for the members of this House to have dealings with the Government? Was not the Independence of Parliament Act passed to prevent anything of that kind? If there was not a danger of that kind, and if it was a right and proper course to pursue, why the sensitiveness manifested by hon, gentlemen opposite when their names are mentioned in connection with it? Why should the hon, member for East Grey get so aroused and wrathful when the hon, member for North Norfolk simply points out that he had made an application for a timber limit for some friend, and said that he had done it because it was his duty to do it, while he was not doing anything contrary to the decision of Parliament or the Act of Parliament; and why does he talk of the hon. member for North Norfolk stealing his character, which is of more value to him than money?

Mr. SPROULE. For this reason: because, when I go into the country parties get up and say: this statement was made on the floor of Parliament when you were there, and therefore it must be correct. This was brought up perhaps fifty times before me in the country, while the declaration I made is conveniently kept back, and the public are given to understand that I have been doing something discreditable.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But my hon friend can see that the line of reasoning he takes, while exculpating him, if he needs exculpation, would inevitably condemn others of doing what he says he did not regard as anything very dishonest or wrong. But that is not the way this question is put, which ought, it seems to me, to be discussed without personalities. It is the discussion of a principle, of what is the right course for the Government to pursue in this matter. I would fain admit, and the hon member for East Grey, and every other hon member on the other side must admit, that the Government having adopted the course recommended on this side, in spite of the contrary instructions of the House, believes that to be the right and proper course to pursue. Does it not carry on its face that that was a wise and prudent course to pursue? If these timber limits and lands are to be disposed of by public competition, where every man would have an equal chance, would there be any necessity for anyone to intercede with a member of Parliament to write to the Government to urge his claim? Is not the very fact that the services of members of Parliament were asked to urge the claims of parties desiring timber limits and lands a proof that the public at least believed that a member of Parliament would have influence in securing that which, according to all principles of right in dealing with the public domain, ought to be as open and free to one man to secure as another, without the intervention or help of any member of Parliament? That very fact carries on its face the idea that the Government were or could be influenced by members, and that in turn they could influence members. I am not making a charge; but I say that the very fact of friends of members of Parliament asking them to do that is proof that that idea prevailed. I do not wish to go into the revelations of actual transactions that have taken place. I trust that the course adopted by the Minister resulted from the discussion of the matter, showing the evil which was brought clearly before the House, and to which I need not to allude in plainer terms. In connection with that, a violent attack was made upon the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), because in the illustration of this principle he recited an event that transpired in connection with the management of public affairs, in which an Indian tribe, the wards of the Government, suffered a severe loss from this very cause; and because he brings that case forward, not to bring up an old charge or to reiterate something that had been said before, but to enforce the desirability of the House adopting the proposition of the hon, member for North Norfolk and laying it down as a line of policy, the vials of wrath are poured out upon his head by several hon, gentlemen opposite. And I want to say here, that that one instance, if we had no other criticism, demands that the policy propounded by the hon, member for North Norfolk ought to be endorsed by this House, and that would be an instruction to the Ministry stronger and more binding than any Order in Council, which they may adopt and rescind again at any time they wish. What are the facts in connection with that matter? That for $316 the right to cut timber over some 79 miles was given to a gentleman, and that sum went to the credit of that Indian tribe. I was sorry, when this matter was mentioned, to hear on the other side, not from all of those hon. gentlemen, to their credit be it said, but to hear from a good many hon, gentlemen on the other side, loud scoffs. and jeers, and laughter, when this case was mentioned by the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). Each hon, gentleman opposite recognizes the position of these Indians. Like the other Indians in this Dominion, they are the wards of the Government, and the Superintendent General is the man, above all other men in this Dominion, who is charged with the management of their affairs. This Parliament and Government withhold from them the management of their own affairs, and entrusts

it to the Superintendent General; and while I do no answer to say that policy has been embodied in corruptly, I point out to him that he could not have made the fatal mistake he did, in the interest of the Indians, if the policy were binding upon him which my hon, friend from North Norfolk (Mr. which my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. tion of Parliament that it did not want it done; Charlton) proposed, if it were the law that all sales and what my hon. friend wants Parliament to do of Indian properties should be made in open competition by public auction. If that had been the law the Indians would have made tens of thousands Government to carry it out. of dollars which they have lost, and by which other men have profited. When that is mentioned, hon. gentlemen opposite were found to jeer, and to laugh, and to sneer at my hon. friend from North Victoria. Why, Sir, this is a serious matter. If there is any question which calls for sympathy, and justice, and right dealing on our part, it is a question of These Indians have no say in this this kind. matter, and the Superintendent General alone can act for them; and by acting as he did he only obtained $316 for limits belonging to the Indians, on which the purchasers realized $55,000; and I am told that after working these limits for two years, and paying $13,000 in timber dues, the second purchasers sold them again to another individual for $60,000. Yet hon, gentlemen opposite scoff, and jeer, and laugh when that matter is brought before them. They ought to remember that these Indians have not a voice in this Parliament, that they are considered by law as minors, unable to act for themselves, and that the Superintendent General is the one charged with seeing that their interests are not The hon. Postmaster General asked neglected. my hon, friend from North Victoria if he did not know that, in addition to that $316, $13,000 had been placed to the credit of the Indian band as the result of dues collected on the timber cut. True, but instead of that being an excuse for the sale it only demonstrates how ruinous that sale was, as far as the Indian affairs were concerned. the very fact of that amount of dues having been collected demonstrates how rich in timber that limit was; and if there had been $100,000 of dues collected and placed to the credit of the Indian band that would only have proved so much more clearly the exceeding value of the timber limits which were sold for $316. Does the hon. Postmaster General not know that if, instead of selling these 79 miles for $316, they had been put up to public auction, those parties who paid $55,000 for them would, in all probability, have bid that at the auction sale, so that $55,000 would have gone to the credit of the Indian fund besides the $13,000. The amount of dues paid does not in the slightest degree lessen the loss to the Indians. Their loss was made in selling the right to cut timber for only $316; when the parties who acquired that right within a very short time resold it for $55,000, and I have been told that the last purchasers, after working the limits for two years, sold them for $60,000. only use this as an illustration, and that is the reason why the hon, member for North Victoria brought it up, to enforce the desirability of this House adopting the proposition of the hon, member for North Norfolk, the essence, the kernel of which is, that in future sales of this kind will be made in the open market to the highest bidder, after being sufficiently advertised. Had we adopted in 1886 that policy which my hon, friend from North Norfolk then proposed, not only the Indians but the public domain would have benefited. It is ciple of sale by auction, it is not by any means Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

not charge that gentleman with doing anything an Order in Council, which the Government themselves have adopted, because they have the liberty of rescinding it at any time. The Government adopted that rule in the face of the declaranow is to say that it wants the policy we advocate carried out, and that will be an instruction to the

> Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, member for Brant always pleases the House, but he has disappointed it this evening very seriously indeed. He promised, when he rose, to speak to the question; he promised, of course, in a humorous sense, because the call for question had been made, but nevertheless we took him at his word and really did believe he meant to speak to the question when he rose. The hon, gentleman did not touch it. He did not deal with the question as he promised to do, for the obvious reason that he was not well informed on the point under discussion. He was probably not in his place during the afternoon debate, and certainly could not have been in the House when the subject was debated in 1886. For example, he commenced with the statement that this was a question which ought not to excite any feeling, about which there ought to be no warmth, into which there could be no personalities thrown, because it was a simple expression of opinion on the part of this House that there should be a disposal by public auction of certain portions of the public domain. I dare say now, after he has finished his speech, he is under the impression that this is all the resolution of the hon, member for North Norfolk contains; but when he reads the resolution he will hardly be prepared to vote for it, because he will find it is not the resolution he has spoken to, and that while the resolution, for the purpose, perhaps, of creating a favourable impression on the public mind, lays down the principle that there ought to be a disposal of these properties at public auction, the essence of the resolution is an expression of censure and opprobrium as regards the law and the practice which have hitherto prevailed. When the hon, member for Brant declares that this resolution simply affirms the principle of sale by public auction of public property he evidently could not have listened attentively to the resolution itself, and will be surprised to hear that it contains these words:

> That practices with regard to the disposal of timber limits, mineral leases, pasture leases and other public resources by the Executive have obtained in past years that were calculated to injure the independence of this House, through the opportunity afforded to members to secure grants for themselves and their friends by private application, at nominal rates, and without being subject to competition: competition;
> "That many members did secure such grants for themselves and their friends;
>
> "That the House of Commons in 1882, and again in 1886, refused to condemn such practices:

"That this House, nevertheless, believes that these practices were not proper and should entirely cease, and that timber limits should be disposed of at public auction to the highest bidder, after being first advertised, and after the lapse of ample time from the publication of such advertisement to enable intending purchasers to examine limits offered for sale."

So that, while the resolution does contain, as the hon, gentleman has said, the affirmation of the printruthfully described as being merely a resolution affirming that principle, but it contains an assertion that practices have existed in the past which have been detrimental to the independence of this House, that many members of this House have availed themselves of those practices in order to obtain limits for themselves and their friends, and this is reprobated, not only in this resolution, but in the very extreme and violent language of the hon. gentleman who moved it, in which he asserted that the conduct of the Government had been corrupt and improper, and that it amounted to nepotism.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not use that language in regard to the timber limit question. I was speaking of the record of the Government in a general sense.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I thought when the hon, gentleman was making that speech he was moving his resolution, but if he says that the speech in which he used those words, and many more like them, was not applicable to this resolution in regard to the timber limits, to the mineral leases, to the grazing leases, or to the policy of the Government in regard to colonization companies, I have, of course, to accept the hon. gentleman's statement; but I think it will be a great surprise to everyone who heard him a few hours ago. Let me call the attention of the hon, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) to another particular in which he is entirely mistaken as to the intent and meaning of this resolution. He asserts that the policy of the Government now is to dispose of these properties by public competition simply as a departmental policy, and he is greatly alarmedinasmuch as the House in 1886 gave, as he says, a mandate to the Government not to sell at public auction, but to continue the private sale of these properties—that, under the mandate of the House, in 1886, the departmental regulation may change and we may go back to the system of private sale. Let me call the attention of the hon, gentleman to the fact that there was no such mandate given by this House to the Government in 1886, but that in that year the resolution which was then moved by the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was not what the hon, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) supposes it to be, a simple affirmation of the principle that these properties should be sold at public auction, but this was the language of the resolution:

"The practice of members of the House applying for and becoming personally interested in the disposal by the Crown of those public resources which are dealt with by the Executive or by Parliament on its recommendation, has grown to alarming proportions, is in its nature liable to abuse, has in fact been abused, and should be checked, in order to avoid lasting injury to the public interest and to restore and maintain the independence of this House."

So there was not a word in the resolution of 1886 indicating that the practice of selling at public auction should be adopted, and in negativing that resolution the House did not give any mandate to the Department of the Interior to continue the practice of private sales. The resolution which has been moved by the hon, member for North Norfolk today, and upon which we are soon to vote, is characterized by language which may well justify a feeling of bitterness and resentment on this side of the House. I shalldeal in a moment with the matters of policy which are involved in this resolution, after I have convinced, as I am trying Hickey's letter at all which was involved, but it was to do, the hon. member for South Brant that the resolution is not what he supposes it to be, and in the next place that the resolution adopted in 1886 by no means contains the mandate which he supposes is pressing with such great weight on the Department of the Interior as to induce it to go back to the previous system of disposing of timber limits by private sale. But, before I do that, I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to what the law of the land is now in regard to this subject, because I think, then, the hon, gentleman will see that this resolution is absolutely unnecessary, though it may contain the germ of the system which he admires, but that it would leave the law as it stands to-day. Under the statute we have power to pass Orders in Council which have the force of law, and in 1889, in pursuance of that statute, regulations were adopted, the first words of which are :-

"All licenses to cut timber shall be disposed of by public competition."

And the succeeding words go on to say how advertisements shall be issued, how applications shall be made, and how surveys shall be made on those applications. So, if the hon, gentleman and his friends think, as I am sure my hon, friend from Brant did think when he addressed the House, that this was simply a resolution affirming a principle which he admires, he will now see that first of all it is not a resolution of that character, and, secondly, that it is not necessary, because, by force of law, the principle has been adopted which the hon, gentlemen desires to see affirmed by the House this evening. Now, although I do not at all wish-and it is exceedingly distasteful to me to do so-to go into matters of a personal character which have been brought up this afternoon, I feel compelled to do that in consequence of what has been said by the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. The hon, gentleman was indignant at the Mills). hon, member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) having addressed some strong expressions to the House in reference to the mover of this resolution, but the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) made a very great mistake when he accused my hon. friend (Mr. Sproule) of having referred to the speech of the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) in that way. The references he made were to the celebrated affidavit of the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). As the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has raised that question, I feel compelled to call attention to the terms of that affidavit and to the question which has been raised between that hon, gentleman and the hon, member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). My hon, friend from Bothwell stated that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) had been misled by an expression in a letter written by Dr. Hickey three or four years ago, and that, as Dr. Hickey had used the expression "we," the hon. member for North Norfolk might fairly have inferred that the application referred to in that letter was a joint application by Dr. Hickey and a man named Broder. I am compelled to point out that was not the question at all. It would be more pleasant for me and for the House if we had not to refer to the other matter, if we had not to consider the fact of the making of a false affidavit. But the ground the hon, member for Bothwell argued about was not the cause of the controversy, it was not Dr.

a solemn affidavit made by the hon, member for North Norfolk, not referring to that letter, not based upon that letter, but swearing that he had carefully examined the record and that he had found that Dr. Hickey was a joint applicant with Mr. Broder, and that upon their joint application an Order in Council had been issued. It was not a mere question of being misled in the accusation in the House made against Dr. Hickey in consequence of his letter:

"I, John Charlton, of the ville ge of Lynedoch, Ont., do hereby solemnly declare and say that I was a member of the House of Commons in 1886. That during the winter of 1886 I made examination of certain returns regarding timber limits. That the returns were voluminous and not printed. That the said returns contained an application from Wm. Broder. That Charles E. Hickey, M.P., was a co-applicant. That the application was made 20th April, 1883, and that an Order in Council for 50 miles on the south side of Lake Kasgaskok was issued upon said application, the 30th April, 1884."—

The person who made that affidavit had or had not made the examination that he speaks of here. If he had made the examination that he speaks of here, he would have found that it was an absolute impossibility for him to swear to the affidavit which he had written. If he had not made the examination, I ask the hon, member for Bothwell what he thinks of an hon, member swearing that he made it and then basing a charge upon it? The member for North Norfolk may well have been mistaken in the session of 1886 in reading the letter of Dr. Hickey and basing his charge upon the use of the term "we," and he might have gone on under that supposition. But when the elections came on twelve months afterwards, and he had had ample opportunity of examining the records for himself, he ought not to have been misled by any chance expression in the letter. had examined the record; he swears he had; and the record was the reverse of what he said. the letter of the 20th April, 1883, is printed here, but it is not an application at all. It refers to the fact that there was already an application in, and the record goes on to show there was an application made after that, and that all these applications were the separate applications of Mr. Broder, and that the letter of Dr. Hickey of the 20th April, 1883, was not in itself an application, but an allusion to a former application of Wm. Broder, Macmillan, a previous applicant, having failed. Broder claimed to be a co-applicant for the limit, Dr. Hickey himself did not ask to be a co-applicant with Broder, but he asked, on behalf of Broder, that the latter be allowed to be co-applicant. But, as I have said before, much as the hon, member for North Norfolk may have been excusable as mistaken in the session of 1886, there is no excuse for him when he came to examine the records and found subsequent applications by Broder himself in which Dr. Hickey was in no way concerned, and when, above all, he read the Order in Council of 30th April, 1884, and he found there that it is an Order in Council, granting the area to Wm. Broder, and that Dr. Hickey was in no way connected with it. That is the reason why I think my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) was not far astray when he called the attention of the House to the character of that affidavit, more especially as the House will remember that the hon, member for North Norfolk himself, in moving this resolution, spent one-half the time that he occupied in addressing Sir John Thompson.

endeavouring to explain away its terms, and attempting the impossible task of reconciling it with the record, and insinuating, as I think the hon. member for Grey was fairly justified in thinking he did. and as I thought he did—insinuating that the allegations in the affidavit of Dr. Hickey on this subject were incorrect; because, unless I misheard the hon, gentleman altogether, at one stage of his speech he paused and expressed a great desire to see the affidavit which Dr. Hickey had made upon the subject. Now, when the hon, gentleman had had ample time to investigate the record-and he did investigate it, as he swears he did-I think it was hardly to be expected of him that in view of the general election of 1887 he should make such a strange affidavit and send it to Dr. Hickey's county to injure him in the campaign in which that gentleman was struggling to regain his seat in this House. Now, there were a few other observations made by the hon, member for Bothwell which I so fully concur in that really my principal object in rising was to apply them to the subject under discussion to night. Let me call the attention of this House to what the argument and the statement of that hon, gentleman He stated in terms in which I quite agree with him what the law and the practice and the reason for both were in early times. He showed that under the first Administration of the late Sir John A. Macdonald the law absolutely required what we are asked to confirm to-night, namely, that these properties should be disposed of at public auction; he showed that that law was almost futile. Why? For the obvious reason that these areas in the North-West were remote, not only from improvement, not only from use, but from search even. With no railway communication in that country, the task of making explorations sufficient to make an application for a timber limit involved sometimes an expenditure of thousands of dollars, and when the timber limit was located and the application made it had to be followed by a survey, involving hundreds of dollars, and sometimes upwards of a thousand dollars in expense. When that was done the license had to be procured, and this was guarded by terms that not only included heavy charges for the timber cut, but required at the same time that the lessee should cut a large quantity of timber every year, and that mills of certain capacity and dimensions should be put upon the land. These were onerous conditions, and at the same time the country was pressing for the settlement of the North-West, and timber was one of the great requisites of that country. Who would compete, when asked season after season to expend thousands of dollars to search for an area, and to enable the person searching to make his application? If any one were to compete with the discoverer he would be using the expenditure and enterprise of the man who had made the exploration. Therefore, during the regime of the first Government of Sir John A. Macdonald, after Confederation, the practice of obeying the law in this regard fell into disuse, and it was found absolutely necessary to entertain private applications of the individuals who had made explorations and were willing to go on and expend the necessary sum to get out the timber. When the party opposite came into power they concurred in the disuse of the regulation for competition; they House, on the subject of that affidavit, recognized the policy which had driven Sir John Macdonald's Government from an adhesion to the principle of competition, and they passed a statute, as the hon. member for Bothwell described to-night, which has been on the Statute-book ever since, until this regulation was adopted in 1889, allowing such properties to be granted on private application. Now, then, the statement was made in 1886 that the right to make a private application was abused by members of Parliament for their own advantage. We remember the scenes of 1886; we remember the afternoon on which the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) made his accusation, and, Sir, I remember that when the morning light streamed in through those windows the hon. gentleman was still making apologies for the unfounded accusations he had made against members of this House. The hon, gentleman accused a long list of members with having seized the public domain, with having engaged in what the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) described as "the great timber steal," and in the parade of names which he placed before the House then he called up not only my hon. friend from Ottawa Mackintosh), who gave us a reminiscence of that debate to-night, but some thirty or forty other members, who had been accused of violating the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act, and of attempting to steal the public domain; and it transpired after all that nearly all of them had done nothing more than simply to discharge the ordinary courtesy of a member of this Parliament, who, when applied to by a constituent to forward his application to the proper department, simply encloses it and asks that it should receive proper consideration at the hands of the Minister. I remember, for example, that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was accused, and it turned out afterwards that he had not applied for himself nor on behalf of a friend of the Government, but on behalf of a gentleman actively opposing the Government, and a worthy and respectable constituent of Mr. McCarthy, who had desired him to forward his application, not for a corrupt reason, as suggested by an hon. member, but from the supposition that the influence of the hon, member for North Simcoe would expedite the application which he was about to make. Every member of the House will agree with me in recalling experience he has had with his constituents when he has been applied to to aid them in making applications. Applications connected with every department of the Government come to me from my constituents. They know it is my duty to forward them, that it is my duty to press for an early answer; and so it is with the other members of the House. Surely, people are not to be charged with corruption because they desire their members who are in Ottawa attending to public business to forward and advance with speed their interests in regard to their private business with the departments of the Government. people of this country who are accustomed to avail themselves of the services of their members would be greatly surprised if told that, when they enclosed their applications to their members to be presented to the Department of the Interior with a request that they receive prompt attention, they are guilty of attempting to corrupt members of Parliament and are using improper influence on the Government. I can only say that every day we receive these applications.

receive them with courtesy and attention, as a matter of duty, as freely from members on the Opposition side of the House as from members on our own side of the House, and we recognize that when applications come from them they are as worthy of prompt attention as if they came through our own friends, and the suggestions of improper motive and a desire to use undue influence is utterly out of the question in these cases. And so the debate of 1886 went on. The hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) found when he had done that he had raised a hornet's nest about his ears, and the men whose conduct he had impugned, men like Dr. Hickey, the hon. member for Ottawa, and the member for North Simcoe, had been simply discharging the ordinary duty of transmitting applications from their constituents, and for this they had been branded in the speeches made in that debate and in the speeches made throughout the country with being boodlers, and men who had taken part in that which the hon, member for North Wellington called the great timber steal, and with being guilty of, to use the words of the hon, member for North Norfolk this afternoon, corruption, jobbery and nepotism. The next question which the hon, gentleman presses upon us is, whether it is proper for a member of Parliament himself to be an applicant in relation to the public domain. It is not necessary to go into this question at any great length; but I call attention to the argument presented by the hon. member for Bothwell, which is this: When an accusation was made, or rather when a suggestion was made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), that an hon, member who had taken part in this debate, an ardent friend of the Ontario Administration, had made $10,000 out of the sale of timber limits which had been granted by that Government, what was the answer of the hon. member for Bothwell? His answer was: Even if that were true. the gentleman referred to has complied with the law of the land; he was as much entitled as any other person to make his application under that law. The hon, gentleman has only to apply that language to the cases of 1886 and he will find this to be the case: The persons alleged to have been engaged in this great timber steal, and who are accused of corruption, nepotism, jobbery, and everything of that kind, by the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), had made their application in accordance with the law of the land, not with a purpose of stealing the public domain, but, in so far as they had made applications on their own behalf, they had made applications for grants which they could not receive except under very onerous conditions indeed, conditions involving the immediate development of the territory to which the grant would apply. They were required to put up a mill the first year, of ample capacity, according to the size of the area; they were obliged every year to cut a certain quantity of timber, the quantity being prescribed by the license, and the license would be forfeited, notwithstanding the mill, if the required quantity were not cut. Were those hon. gentlemen, then, not complying with the terms of the law? Let me suppose that the principles involved in the Order in Council I have read, and in this resolution, are to be adhered to, and sales of timber limits made only at public auction. Is it to be said that a member of Parliament shall not bid We at the auction? Why? Is it because his positions as a member of Parliament forbid him occupying the relation of tenant to the Crown, thus giving rise perhaps to multifarious questions as regards the timber dues which he has to pay to the Government? Are his relations as a member of Parliament to the Government likely to be affected by the terms and conditions of the lease? As a member of Parliament is his independence affected, perhaps unduly swayed by the Government, in order to get a modification of what may be considered onerous terms? Is this implied? If so, let me ask the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) if he is not in that position himself, if he is not a lessee from the Crown, if he has not had a timber limit from the Crown, if he has not applied to this very Department of the Interior to relax the conditions imposed on him? Perhaps I should not press him unduly for an answer.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am ready to give the answer, if the hon, gentleman wishes it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am perfectly willing for the hon. gentleman to make any statement.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am the lessee of a timber It was granted many years ago. I bought it from the estate of R. C. Smith, of Port Hope. I am operating that limit. I have made application to the Crown to have justice done me. I am obliged to deal with the Crown, and I wish the Crown to deal fairly with me. I obtained this timber limit as a private purchase.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am pointing out that the hon, gentleman desires some modifications from the department. Let the hon, member not misunderstand me by any means: I never imputed to him that he acquired his timber berth unduly. I presume he did what was done by those members of Parliament whom he has accused and maligned for acquiring limits—fully complied with the terms of the law. But I want him to remember this additional point, that while he is in the position they occupy, no one in this House or the country supposes that his independence as a member of Parliament has been greatly affected by his relations to the Crown, and he might surely indulge in a small measure of charity as regards members who sit on this side of the House. Without detaining the House longer than is necessary, I want to reply to another observation made by the hon, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), because he was hardly justified in using the terms in which he has alluded to this House, and the manner in which hon. members received the charges made by the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) this afternoon. Referring to the subject of the granting of that license, I agree with what the hon, gentleman said as to the duty that devolves upon us as trustees of our Indian wards. No one can help regretting if in that transaction their interests were not as jealously guarded as they should be. The hon. gentleman will admit with me that a transaction of that kind, in which it would appear almost certain that the department had been overreached in some way, is impossible under the terms of the Order in Council of 1889. But what did excite the amusement of hon. members on this side of the House was the manner in which the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) made his charges, if he will excuse me, as I hope he will, if I discuss this matter. He put himself forward, certainly, as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. Mc | if I had not thought the hon. member for South Brant Sir John Thompson.

Mullen) thought, as the defender of the Indians and Indian rights in connection with this subject; whereas, if I am not very much misinformed, the way in which the hon, gentleman acquired all his valuable information, which he thought proper to communicate to the House, was as solicitor for an individual who, under a grant from the Province of Ontario, claimed the right to deprive the Indians of the timber limit altogether.

Mr. BARRON. I acquired it, Mr. Speaker, from a return brought down to this House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Oh, yes; after the hon, gentleman was retained for the patentee he moved in this House for the return. I am sure that the return which the hon. gentleman has got has been a useful one to him, not only because it has enabled him, with great force, to bring this matter to the attention of the House, but also because it supplemented his brief in the most ample and efficient manner. I am sure, now, that when the whole thing is over he will agree with me in expressing great satisfaction that the Indians have after all got that 31 cents each, because if the hon, gentleman had succeeded in the exercise of his professional talents elsewhere they would not have even got that, and the Ontario Government's pateatee would have got it all. I think that a little levity was excusable when we heard him with great vehemence declaring that a hundred Indians divided into $316 amounted to 31 cents per head; and the hon, gentleman not only did that with great earnestness, but with what my hon. friend from Grey (Mr. Sproule) described, to the disgust of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), "various and stentorian tones." I think, Sir, we were a little justified in professing our scepticism, not at all—as the hon, member for South Brant supposed-our contempt, for the rights of the Indians. I think we are a little justified in being amused at the hon, gentleman's attack upon the Minister of the Interior. Minister of the Interior had answered the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) assailed him, the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. with all the ardour and fury with which he had assailed his wards, the Indians, in the courts of Ontario; and when the Minister of the Interior rose and indicated that the hon, gentleman was mistaken, and that he had not been Superintendent at that period, and that the fury of his attack must be directed elsewhere, then the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) declared that the whole case had been admitted, and that when the Minister of the Interior had corrected him in point of historical date he had confessed that the whole transaction was a crime and that the Ministry had been conderaned out of his own mouth. These were the circumstances, I think, that the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson), if his face had been turned this way, would have been excited at the amusement of this side of the House. It was not by any means as he indicated to the House tonight, and as I would not like the country to suppose, because of the contempt for the interests that were being discussed by the hon, member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron). Mr. Speaker, I would not have troubled the House to address it on this occasion, as this matter has been so frequently discussed,

(Mr. Paterson) had himself mistaken the purport of the resolution, and had mistaken the record of 1886—or, at any rate, unintentionally presented it to the House in a light in which it was not entitled to be received by the House; nor would I have spoken if I had not thought that the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) had unduly attacked my hon friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not attack him.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Well, we shall say nothing more about that. I would not have spoken if I had not thought that the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) had himself, in a moment of frankness, discussed this question in the House in terms which completely defeated all the reason and sense of the resolution of the hon, member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I certainly should not have troubled the House had not it been for the speech of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, nor would I have troubled the House even then if the hon. Minister had abstained from, I think, rather disingenuously representing the real issue before the House. The question which has been brought up by the resolution of the hon member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), after all said and done, is this: is it or is it not desirable in the public interest, at this present time of day, that we should dispose of the public property by public auction, and in such a way that either the public of Canada at large, or the Indian wards of the Crown, as the case may be, could have a reasonable ground for expecting that they would get the fair and honest value of the property so sold? That, Sir, nothing more and nothing less, is the proposition of my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). Now, it does not matter one straw to the merits of this question what the law was in the time of Sir John Alexander Macdonald, or how he observed it. It does not matter, in regard to the question, whether it is desirable at this time of day, with all the advantages of transport that we now possess, with all the knowledge that we now possess of this region, to dispose of this property at public auction—it does not matter, I say, a straw, what was the practice under my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) or under the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie. The question is, whether to-day, at this time, and at this hour, it is desirable that this House should lay down the broad principle that in dealing with the public domain you should dispose of it by public auction, and in such a fashion as to put a stop, now and forever, to divers scandals which only a year ago the Minister of Justice himself agreed with me, for once in his life, in pronouncing corrupt and discreditable. Sir, from the circumstances connected with a certain timber limit obtained by one John Charles Rykert, on which the late House pronounced a judgment, it will appear that there is ample warrant for the motion that my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) has placed in your hands. Now, with respect to the preamble which has wrung the withers of the Min-ister of Justice and so many other gentlemen on that side of the House, what have they to complain of? If their hands are clean, if their consciences are pure in this matter, it does not touch | Interior, from altering that Order in Council. If I them in the least. The only men it touches are am wrong the hon. Minister of Justice will correct these men, if there be any on that side of the House, or if there were in past times, who used their place and position as members of Parliament to obtain unfair advantages for themselves. The hon. Minister of Justice will not say that he is one of them; he will not admit, I suppose, that hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House are in that predicament, and, if so, all this virtuous indignation of his about the preliminary language used by my hon. friend (Mr. Charlton) appears to me wholly and entirely out of place. The hon. Minister, I was glad to observe, admitted frankly and fully that there was very serious grounds for believing that in a particular case alluded to by my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Barron) the interests of the Indian wards of the Crown had been gravely slighted. Nor is it possible for any man who considers the facts, for any man who knows that 79 miles of timber limits were sold for $316, to feel otherwise, under all the circumstances which have been detailed. It could not be otherwise, in the face of the knowledge of what the Ontario Government got for similar lands in that locality, of the knowledge that these limits have been sold for $55,000 after large quantities of timber had been cut off them, and as I am informed, and as I think my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) stated, after two whole years of operations had gone on, and a very large quantity of valuable timber had been removed, what remained was so valuable that it has been sold lately for $60,000. If the hon. Minister of Justice and the Minister of the Interior want to trace the transaction I may mention that Mr. Saxe, of Albany, the other day, gave $60,000 for what remained of that timber limit after two years' cutting. I say that there is a case which, to the credit of the Minister of Justice be it said, he seems to feel is indefensible. Now, Sir, is it not plain and clear that had the rule asked for by my hon, friend from North Norfolk been adopted by this House that great fraud on the Indians could not have been by any possibility committed? And is it not equally clear and plain that such a deplorable instance as that which stained our annals in the case of Mr. John Charles Rykert could not have occurred if such a rule had been laid down by the House? The hon. Minister of Justice tells us that this is all needless. Why, Sir; because the law has been altered? Not at all. The law, as I understand it—and I am open to correction if I am wrong-stands on the Statute-book to-day just as it did when Mr. Rykert got his timber limit and just as it did when Mr. Robillard arranged his little matter as respects this Indian reserva-tion. But the hon. Minister of Justice tells us that we are to be quite content, because in 1889 a regulation by Order in Council was adopted laying down certain rules, very much in accordance with this very motion. Now, I take for granted that the same power which made could undo. I take for granted that to-morrow, if a less conscientious person than the hon. Minister of Justice were occupying that seat, and it was found desirable or convenient, for reasons of state or of political exigency, that this Order in Council should be altered, while the law remains on the Statutebook as it is to-day, there is nothing to prevent another Minister of Justice, or another Minister of the me as to whether he could not rescind that Order in Council to-morrow.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes: I presume he could; and the hon, gentleman will allow me to add that the passage of this resolution would not make any difference in that respect.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is precisely where I take issue with the hon. gentleman. An Order in Council may be rescinded and nobody, for a very long time and until a great deal of mischief had been done, would be any the wiser; but a resolution such as my hon, friend has brought in—in place of introducing a Bill, which it would be impossible, as the hon. gentleman knows, to get passed this session—remains on record; and I do not think the hon, gentleman or his colleagues would say that if this resolution passed it would not have a directory and binding effect on this Government or on any Government. Of course, if it passes to-night it ought to be followed by legislation at a convenient season; there is no doubt about that; so far I would quite agree with the hon. Minister of Justice. But I do respectfully submit, waiving all these personalities which have been introduced from one side as well as the other, that enough has transpired, enough has been proved at various times in this House, and in those two cases alone to which I refer, to show that there is good reason now and at this particular time for laying down a positive rule that the public domain should be disposed of by public auction. Sir, the record of our dealings with the North-West, as I have often pointed out, has been anything but creditable to our skill in managing a great public domain. The hon, gentleman knows perfectly well- there is no need to refresh his memory—that hopes were held out to the people of Canada, times without number, that by the judicious sale of our public lands, timber limits, coal areas, mines, and what not, all the cost, and charges, and the great outlay in constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway, would be repaid to the people of this country, and that many millions of dollars, besides, would come into our coffers. He knows, and we all know, how bitterly the country has been disappointed in that matter. He knows that in place of $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 of assets we have to-day a deficit in connection with the management of the North-West. Now, looking at all these facts, it does appear to me that the time has comeand that is really all, when boiled down, that my hon, friend's resolution declares—when we should use the same prudent precautions in dealing with our public domain which have proven so eminently successful in dealing with the domain of the Province of Ontario. I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Justice is aware, but I think I am correct in saying-I speak from memory-that the result of Mr. Mowat's administration of his Crown lands-which are not one-twentieth part so valuable, in my judgment, as those which we inherit in the North-West—has resulted in adding some $12,000,000 or $13,000,000 to the resources of the Province of Ontario during the past dozen years; whereas ours has resulted in a great loss, in place of many millions of dollars being put into our exchequer. That alone is a sufficient justification for the motion which my hon. friend has made; and I am sure, in addition, if we must go into the Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

emanating from Mr. Hickey, which had been read by the hon. Minister of Justice and which had been read before, in respect to those timber limits, although I am now perfectly willing to admit the statement which has been made by the hon. Minister of Justice and others, that, as a matter of fact, Mr. Hickey was not personally interested in that timber limit-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hon. gentlemen had better wait. I, myself, in reading that letter, particularly the last line of it-"I trust that we will get equal consideration "-and knowing how common it is for members of Parliament to hunt in couples, after the fashion of Messrs. Rykert and Adams, let us say—would be disposed to put the same construction upon it as my hon. friend from North Norfolk has done. And I must say that, primâ facie, I do not think he is at all liable to the very grave charges that were brought against him on the other side of the House, of having wilfully and maliciously slandered Mr. Hickey. My hon, friend stated what he thought, and honestly thought, was the fair construction of that letter; and remembering all that my hon. friend had discovered as to the number of parties who were interested in various ways in Crown properties, and looking at the matter reasonably and fairly, nobody can say that there was any great wonder that my hon. friend was mistaken. My hon. friend tells me that Mr. Hickey at that time did not deny it. That I do not know anytime did not deny it. That I do not know anything about; but I do recollect that letter being read, and I recollect perfectly well the impression which it made on my mind at the time. As to the statement that my hon, friend has also a timber limit which he bought twenty years ago from another party in the open market, does the hon. Minister of Justice pretend to think that there is any sort of comparison between such an act done in the ordinary course of business, and such a proceeding as he seeks to guard against—a member of Parliament going in camera, in the obscurity of the private chamber of the Minister having charge of the public domain, and arranging with him to become possessed of a very valuable tract of property; and he took as an illustration what the hon, member for Ottawa and his friends did. It appears on the face of it that a portion of the public domain, worth certainly not less than $60,000, and worth probably $80,000 or $100,000, if the truth were known--and looking at the prices obtained by the Ontario Government for similar lands, it might very likely have fetched those sums in open market—was parted with, not under the present Minister of the Interior, but his predecessor, to a political friend for $316. the fact staring us in the face; and I repeat again that, in the teeth of such facts, it does appear to me a very reasonable request on the part of the hon. member for North Norfolk that the House should declare it is not expedient that such relations should subsist or be possible to subsist again beween members of the Ministry and their political friends, either in this House or out of it, and that there is danger to the independence of Parliamentif these things are left to hang on the precarious tenure of an Order in Council. I think it is the duty of this House to pass a declaration such as my hon. personal question, that when we heard the letter friend proposes, and I think also that declaration should be followed up by a Bill strictly defining what ought to be done and restoring the law to the position in which I understand it originally was, seeing that the time has now come when these precautions can be taken, not only without detriment to the public interest, but with the best results to the public service. As to the others questions the hon. Minister has raised, probably he and I would not be found to differ very widely in our interpretation of them. I have always taken the ground -although I admit there are technical difficulties in the way of putting my views on the Statute-book which I would like to see the Minister of Justice use his well-known legal talent to overcome —that the position we occupy here is that of trustees of the public in a very strict sense, and that, as trustees, we certainly ought not to be allowed to make a profit in any shape or form by dealing in the property of our wards. If the property of the country be put up, with full notice, at public auction, then I admit that probably members of this House may bid, as is commonly done in Ontario and elsewhere, for timber limits for themselves, without any very serious risk or injury to the public-although, if it were possible, I would be very glad, for my part, that the law should be so amended that it would be impossible for any of us to be brought in any pecuniary relations with the Government of the country in any way. That is the ideal which we ought to endeavour to attain, and I invite the hon. Minister of Justice to consider whether it would not be possible to introduce and place on the Statutebook some Act which would define better than is now done the position of members of Parliament, and make them in law what they are in reason and equity, the trustees of the people, subject to all the pains and penalties that attach to trustees in dealing with the property of their cestui qui trusts.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat commenced with the declaration that my hon. colleague the Minister of Justice had been disingenuous in the manner in which he had treated this subject. If that epithet were applied to the hon, gentleman himself it would have been much more effective and truthful. To establish that point I shall, before I sit down, point out the manner in which I think he merited the epithet he applied to my colleague the Minister of Justice. But before doing so, there is one point in connection with this subject which has not been clearly brought before the House, as I think it should be. We shall have the spectacle in a very short time of seeing those gentlemen who occupied our places a few years ago voting in condemnation of themselves. We shall find them recording their votes in direct opposition to the policy they themselves laid down as the proper one, and which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has to-night so logically, forcibly and well defended. been pointed out by that hon gentleman, in the earlier period of the history of the North-West, when very few people inhabited that country, the practice then pursued was the only correct one, surely that reason would be equally forcible when the present Government assumed the reins of It cannot be said that the circumstances connected with the North-West Territories were any different in 1878, when the Conservatives came to power, than it was when the hon gentlemen left office. They argue that it is more venal or his late colleagues, rising and voting for this resocorrupt for a member of Parliament to ask from the Government a timber limit now than it was in 1878, when those hon gentlemen were in power and had the authority to pass, and actually did pass, Orders in Council giving to members of Parliament large areas of the public domain. The hon, member for Bothwell pointed out, in that dexterous manner in which he deals with all questions, the differences between the course pursued by the present Government and that which he pursued. What are the facts in connection with the timber limit to which he referred? One of the gentlemen who applied for that limit was a member of the House of Commons. That hon. gentleman had, the hon, member for Bothwell tells us, been applying for that limit during the earlier months of 1878. I speak now of Mr. Cook, then member for North Simcoe. But it was only after the people of this country had expressed their want of confidence in the gentlemen who are now in Opposition, that the Order in Council giving Mr. Cook and his associates a large timber limit of 200 square miles was passed. True, a member of Parliament had been urging upon that Government for months the propriety, I presume, I may say at least the necessity, of his obtaining the limit which they sub-sequently gave him. The facts are simply these: In 1878, on the 17th September, a day those hon. gentlemen very well remember, the Mackenzie Government was defeated. On the 4th October, 1878, the then Minister of the Interior, my hon. friend from Bothwell, recommended to the Council a grant to Messrs. Cook & Co. of 200 square miles of timber on the banks of the Saskatchewan, but these 200 miles of timber limits were not to be confined to any particular locality. From the Rocky Mountains to the point where the Saskatchewan empties into Lake Winnipeg they could be selected, from Messrs. Cook & Co. could one end to the other. traverse the whole of that country in order to pick out their limits, and the hon. member for Bothwell told us to-night: I did not think it was as bad as he painted it—that these 200 square miles could be selected in areas of ten miles each. He has placed the matter in a much worse position than I should have done. I was under the impression it must have been twenty miles, but he enabled them to go from one end of that territory to the other in order to select the best timber limits in that country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You reduced it two miles.

Mr. BOWELL. So much the better. Then they could not absorb so much land, because it must be apparent to anyone that the terms upon which those limits were granted in those days absolutely vested in the lessee, not only the timber, but the land itself, and no one could control or interfere with him in the twenty mile area that he might select for the purpose of taking timber. On the 4th October this order was recommended by the hon, gentleman; on the 7th of the same month Council approved of that minute, and on the 8th of the month the hon gentleman obeyed the mandate given by the people, by resigning. Though defeated at the polls they took advantage of their position, and granted a large limit to a friend and supporter, and a member of Parliament. Yet I presume we will see the hon. gentleman to-night, together with lution, which in express terms condemns their own action. My hon, friend shakes his head. Let us see what the resolution says:

"That practices with regard to the disposal of timber limits, mineral leases, pasture leases and other public resources by the Executive have obtained in past years that were calculated to injure the independence of this House."

Did not the necessity for that system of granting licenses prevail in 1879, 1880-81-82 and 83, as it did in 1878, when the late Government passed the Order in Council granting 200 square miles to one firm? The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has denounced, though not so vehemently as usual, this practice, and has asked the House to vote condemnation of himself, for he was a member of the Government who passed this regulation and whom this motion would condemn.

Mr. MILLS Bothwell). Would you allow me to put you a question?

Mr. BOWELL. When I get through.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is too late then.

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, bottle up.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon, member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) and the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) say that the House should affirm this principle. If they sincerely desire, as I suppose they do, to have this principle honestly affirmed, they should have taken some other opportunity to place this resolution before the Commons of Canada. The hon, gentleman knows that this resolution is not only a condemnation of himself as a member of a former Government, but is a direct vote of want of confidence, and he knows that, no matter what view supporters of the Government might take as to the manner in which these timber limits should be sold, he is forcing every one of them to vote against his resolution. It was moved in this way for that purpose. I am not going to accuse hon, gentlemen opposite of inconsistency. Some one has said that there is no animal so consistent as a donkey. I am not going to apply that to hon. gentlemen opposite or to accuse them of inconsistency of the donkey character; nor will I insult the donkey by comparing it to the member for North Norfolk who used the comparison. I have but one other point to which I desire to call the attention of the House, but before doing so I might call the attention of the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to the strong language he used towards the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). He accused him of having attributed motives, and insinuated that the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) was not actuated by pure and patriotic motives. If I am not out of order in referring for a moment to a debate which took place not long ago, the hon. gentleman threw out very strong insinuations, and used language which, if applied to me, I should at once have repudiated or called upon the House to condemn me. Speaking of my hon. friend on my left (Mr. Foster), he said he had been connected with certain subsidies or subventions given to steamers, and insinuated that he had some interest in them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I never insinuated that the Minister of Finance had any pecuniary connection with anything of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose you never mentioned it at all?

Mr. Bowell.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I said there were departmental irregularities in connection with these mail subsidies, and I said that the hon. gentleman had let the contracts to a member of this House—

Mr. FOSTER. I did not do it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell),—and that subsequently that member became a member of the company.

Mr. FOSTER. You are quite wrong.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps, when the reports are before the House, the hon. gentleman may find it convenient to make explanations, as other members have done. I called the attention of my hon. friend at the time to the fact that this was an insinuation he should not allow to pass, but he said it was a matter of perfect indifference to him. I replied: "That goes into Hansard, and the time may come when it may be thrown at you." When the hon, gentleman referred to steamship subventions he said: "Yes, you have been concerned in granting steamboat subventions of which you will hear more in the future." There was only one conclusion which could be drawn from that because of the introduction to it in the speech of the hon. gentleman. I agree with the remarks made by my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), that it would be better if we could discuss these questions without personal references.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Set us the example.

Mr. BOWELL. I would endeavour to do so, but it is too late. I am only following in the wake of hon. gentlemen opposite. I may have spoken very strongly on some questions in this House, but I appeal to the honour and the honesty of the hon. gentleman who has interrupted me if it were not provoked by a personal attack upon myself. If I had been the Minister of Finance, when these insinuations were made last night, I would have repudiated them at once. Let me tell the hon. gentlemen opposite that they are too apt to allow their bitter tongues to run away with their better judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. They had not a heavy load to carry.

Mr. BOWELL. I object to my hon. friends laughing, because laughing has become a crime in this House. On two occasions lately I have been chastised for laughing. No one would expect any laughing from the other side, judging from the sour visages which we generally see there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Do not slander our appearance.

Mr. FOSTER. We could not do it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Do not abuse a funeral.

Mr. BOWELL. The good nature of some people opposite is lost when they get on their feet, and if a man dares to laugh at any of their absurdities some one of them at once works himself into a passion and talks about sneering. Well, I did not know that laughter was sneering before, but if it is I can assure the hon. gentleman that whenever I feel inclined to laugh I shall do so, and not follow in their footsteps, and continually look sour and glum, as they do, because they cannot get on this side of the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Order.

Mr. BOWELL. Does not that apply to you? Now, the hon. member for South Oxford dealt disingenuously—I do not desire to use a strong word, but I suppose if I use the word he will not be offended, since he applies it to others—if ever any member of this House treated a subject disingenuously, my hon. friend treated the question of that affidavit as disingenuously as a man could pos-The hon, member for North Norfolk may have been led astray, to use a gentle expression, by the use of the word "we," but the hon, member for South Oxford, in the interpretation he gave of that letter written by Dr. Hickey, studiously avoided stating that the member for North Norfolk had sworn positively that he had read the Order in Council, and that that implied that the doctor was associated with the granting of a timber limit. If as he says he had read the Order in Council he could not have been misled, innocent as he is, in reading that letter as pointed out by the hon. member for South Oxford. Could be possibly have been misled after he had read, as he swore he did read, the order in which Dr. Hickey's name does not appear at all? I leave this part of his disingenuousness to the hon. gentleman's own conscience; and have the pleasure of seeing him, in a few minutes, voting a condemnation of the policy which he pursued when he was on this side of the

Mr. WATSON. I think this motion ought to receive the support of the House. I am not going to discuss what occurred ten or fifteen years ago. There are many new members in this House, and the only benefit to be derived from discussing these old questions is to improve and learn by past experience. If the system which has been in force in the past has not been in the best interest of the country we should attempt to improve it, rather than remain in the position we are in to-day. has been stated on the other side of the House that the policy that was in force, of granting limits without competition, had been abandoned, and that now timber limits were granted by competition. Well, Sir, timber limits are granted by competition, but in what shape? It is by tenders; it is not by public competition; and for my part, and I think a great many members in this House and a great many people in this country will agree with me, I doubt very much whether applicants would get a square deal from the heads of departments after sending in tenders for timber limits. We have learned within the past few days that tenders have been received and have been manipulated in the interest of certain parties putting in those tenders.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I would ask the hon. gentleman to name the cases he speaks of.

Mr. WATSON. I will name the cases which have been brought to our notice in the Public Works Department.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Tenders for timber limits?

Mr. WATSON. No; I am speaking of the general practice of tenders being received. In speaking of the Interior Department, I will say that away back in the early '80's, while Mr. James Anderson was Crown timber agent in the city of Winnipeg, and when one Laycock was his assistant agent, tenders were manipulated in the interests of the officers who were in charge of the department, and no matter what a man spent in surveying the limit and making an application, he was informed by these gentlemen that certain applications were in before him, when the persons who were supposed to have put in those applications had never seen the limit nor ever made a survey. The result was, that these gentlemen had to receive a certain percentage of the interest in the limits before the individual who had applied and made the survey could secure those limits. Consequently, I say that the proper mode would be to advertise those limits and dispose of them at public competition by public auction. I am not to-day charging that the Interior Department has manipulated tenders, but there are reasons for doubting that tenders will be handled as they should be after the evidence we have heard during the past few days concerning the way tenders are treated in some of the departments. Now. the hon, member for West York (Mr. Wallace) stated that I had on repeated occasions objected to the system of Government granting large tracts of land for colonization purposes. I have done so, Mr. Speaker, and I feel satisfied that I was right in doing so. The past history of that system of granting large tracts of land to colonization companies has proven that I was right in my contention. Out of some 100 colonization companies which have tied up large tracts of land in Manitoba and the North-West for a number of years, I believe only three or four of them have attempted to comply with the regulations of the department, and to-day the Government have seen fit to dispense with the services of the inspector of colonization companies, finding that he had little or no work to do. That goes to prove that it was a bad system, locking up large tracts of land simply as a matter of speculation. Now, we find that proper notice was not given, and possibly the price was not secured that was asked, and I will suggest that the price may not have been secured on account of the attention of the public not having been called to a valuable piece of property that was advertised for sale a few days ago at Paspaschase Indian Reserve. I find by enquiry of the Minister of the Interior that out of some 40 square miles of land that was advertised for sale only some fifteen quarter-sections were sold at auction. Now, I have reason to believe that the reason that land was not sold was because due notice was not given of the sale, and the land was advertised for sale at an improper time, before a railway was secured to Edmonton. Now, I certainly think that in the interest of the country and in the interests of the people wishing to obtain limits or any other portion of the public domain, either of land, timber, or minerals, the property should be advertised for sale and sold to the highest bidder at public competition. Then every person will receive his just due, every person will have a fair opportunity, and the public will realize the benefit of that competition and receive everything that these portions of the public domain are worth. I am certainly in favour of the resolution now before the House, and the principle of granting the limits or leases exclusively by public auction.

(In the Committee.)

Quebec Water Police.....$6,300

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe a considerable reduction has been made in this item. What is the policy of the Government in regard to the Quebec water police? Is it proposed to abolish the force altogether?

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, gentleman will recollect that we abolished the water police in Montreal. In connection with the water police in Quebec, we have watched very carefully the expenditure there, and we found we could cut down the force to one-half the number that was necessary when the shipping at the port was larger. That accounts for the reduction proposed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Am I to understand that about $7,000 will represent the probable future outlay?

Mr. TUPPER. That represents what we spent last year. We are making the present estimate on that expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister does not expect to reduce it further?

Mr. TUPPER. No. There is a tax collected from the shipping of the port which nearly pays this amount,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the hon. Minister going to do with this amount?

Mr. TUPPER. It is chiefly used in raising sunken ships. We have recourse against owners, under the statute, when they are known; but when the owners are unknown the expense in connection with removing obstructions is taken out of this vote

Tidal Observations......$9,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not recollect this matter being up before, or any statement being made as to what the hon. Minister proposes to do with the vote. I shall be glad to receive an explanation.

Mr. TUPPER. This subject had been discussed for some years. The shipping interests of Montreal, and all those interested in shipping in the River St. Lawrence and the Gulf, agitated the question very forcibly, and eventually it was brought before the British Association of Science, and many of the gentlemen connected with that organization in Montreal took the subject up, and finally the question was pressed upon the attention of the Government, and last year we asked for a small appropriation of $2,000, in order to enable us to obtain in England the apparatus necessary for taking observations as to the rise and fall of tides. The ultimate object of this is that we may ascertain the various currents in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. For instance, there is very great danger in reference to which complaints frequently reach us, there has been a wreck last year and another wreck this year, and many of these accidents are ascribed to the effects of unknown currents in the Gulf, which masters can by no means guard against, unless they have the result of these investigations, such as have been obtained by surveys on the coasts of Great Britain and the United States. Before we can ascertain the movements of the currents we must first ascertain the rise and fall of the tides correctly; so, under this scheme, which is under the direction of Professor Carpmael and Lieut. Gordon, stations are proposed to be established where these tidal gauges will be erected and the observations noted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this likely to be a permanent charge?

Mr. TUPPER. It will extend over a series of years, as explained in the annual report. It is estimated to cost about $140,000, but $10,000 a year will be as much as we can spend in working it out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does this apply to the Gulf of St. Lawrence only?

Mr. TUPPER. It applies to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts as well.

Salaries and allowances. &c., of lighthouse keepers........ $ 189,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this increase caused by the salaries of new men, or by the increase in the old salaries?

Mr. TUPPER. The salaries have been increased as usual, in some cases where there has been long service, or where it has been found that the amount at the station was inadequate for the services performed. The increase here is due to the fact that we were in the habit of taking a vote in excess of the sum required, and it was last year cut down too low to provide for the keepers of new lights as constructed from year to year.

Mr. BOWERS. In connection with this item, I would call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the lighthouse at Peters Island, at the entrance to Westport harbour. Here, the lighthouse keeper has a salary of $300 a year, and he has to attend to a fog-horn, or some article that he has to blow by hand, which requires considerable Last year and the year before manual labour. he had to hire a boy, and pay him forty or fifty dollars to assist him in the work. The hon. Minister will see that this lighthouse-keeper's salary is small enough, without having to pay any extra help, and he should have some better recompense for this. I would also point out to the Minister that the fog-signal used there is not sufficient for the purpose. It is very little better than the horn used on an ordinary vessel, and the hon. Minister should put some more efficient instrument there for the benefit of vessels and steamers entering the harbour in thick weather. There should be something in the shape of a bell that will ring by being wound up, or there should be a bell buoy off the southern end of the harbour. I would ask the hon. Minister that the lighthouse keeper in this case should have some extra allowance. He asked me to draw attention to the fact that he was underpaid when I came here.

Mr. TUPPER. I will investigate the work that is performed by that officer.

Maintenance and repairs to Lights, Fog Whistles, Buoys, and Beacons, and Humane Establishments......$245,000

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to this item also. been for a long number of years three buoys at Westport harbour; one at the northern end of the harbour, one in the harbour on a ledge, and one off Dartmouth Point. About three years ago tenders were asked for the keeping of these buoys in position, and a gentleman tendered at something like $300 a year, I think. The Minister will correct me if I am wrong in the amount. Ever since that gentleman has taken over the contract for the three buoys, there have been only two buoys I put in for the contract myself, with the expectation of there being three buoys to look after, but there has only been two, and I think the department should take some steps towards putting the three buoys down, or paying in proportion to the number placed there.

Mr. TUPPER. That has been brought to my attention lately, and I will look into it.

Mr. CASEY. Under the head of maintenance and repairs for lights, and so on, I see a vast number of supplies noted in the Auditor General's Report, and I wish to ask whether these things needed about a lighthouse are bought wholesale by the Government and dealt out to the lighthouse-keepers, or if the lighthouse-keeper buys these articles himself. Of course, I am aware that with regard to oil there is a contract; but there are a large number of things, such as paint and lamps, and matches, and so on, which I would like to know how they are bought.

Mr. TUPPER. The keepers send in a requisition every year as to what they require for the maintenance of the light, and all the important articles are tendered for by advertisement and contracts awarded. The small articles are kept in stock at the different agencies in the different provinces, and are distributed by the supply steamer on her annual trip.

Mr. CASEY. Are they bought in the first place by tender?

Mr. TUPPER. Those articles too unimportant to be tendered for by advertisement are obtained in the market at the market price, and are paid for on the account being certified in the usual way under the audit, and by the agent of the particular division in which the articles are bought.

Mr. CASEY. Could the Minister state from memory which articles are bought by contract?

Mr. TUPPER. Paint, oil, lamp shades, soap and brooms.

Mr. BARRON. Under this item, perhaps it may be proper for me to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine to the fact that at the entrance to Sturgeon Lake from the Fenelon River, in South Victoria, two lights have been placed, and that, as I am informed, one of these lights, if not both, have lately had to be maintained and looked after at private expense, and I was asked whether the department would not bear the expense, as I understand they did before.

Mr. TUPPER. That subject was brought to my notice some time in May, and I gave instructions to the officers to report upon it. I have not yet received a report.

Mr. CASEY. In connection with the late wreck at Anticosti, it has been stated in the papers that the means of warning vessels from that shore are not sufficient. Has the Minister's attention been called to the matter?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes. There was a wreck there last year, and it has been found that the old Bayfield chart has become misleading, so many changes have taken place since it was made. A survey is required, and negotiations have gone on between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government for a survey under an Imperial officer, the Imperial Government paying half the cost and this Government paying half, and the Imperial Governhave intimated their willingness to complete that survey.

Mr. CASEY. Has the Minister's attention been called to the desirability of improving the means of calling attention to the coasts in the meantime? At present it is stated there is nothing but a gun, which is fired every half hour, and which cannot always be heard. It is said that vessels have to go pretty near the Island at that point to get their bearings for their future course, and it is a place where it is very necessary to have efficient means of warning them when they are near the land. I saw in the Montreal papers several statements from captains who said that it was very dangerous, even for steamers, under present circumstances.

Mr. TUPPER. The newspapers of course are not very reliable, and the captains are always very anxious-I am not blaming them-to ascribe a disaster to a light or a fog-alarm if the vessel is We do not pretend that we can prevent a wreck off the coasts, and the best alarms we have are of little use in a certain state of the atmosphere. Last year I sent the engineer of the Marine Department, and Captain Smith, the Chairman of the Board of Examiners of Masters and Mates, to investigate all these complaints made by shipmasters in reference to the rearrangement of the lights of the St. Lawrence all the way from the Straits of Belle Isle up to Quebec; and hon, gentlemen will see that the subject is thoroughly gone into in the report; which has been printed, and we are carrying out their recommendations. With reference to Anticosti, I am not sure that the arrangements there are as represented. We shall have a full report on that subject very soon,

Mr. McMILLAN. I was down at Montreal Motion agreed to; lately, and in conversation with a captain of my 12.30 a.m. (Thursday). Mr. Tupper.

acquaintance, he told me that when the weather became thick the gun was fired every fifteen minutes.

Mr. TUPPER. At certain stations it does fire very much more frequently than at others. I could not say how often the gun at Anticosti fires.

Mr. CASEY. Owing to the want of a survey, I think there should be a more frequent alarm at that point.

Mr. TUPPER. I think there is. I will make enquiries as to that.

Mr. FLINT. I see in last year's accounts a charge of $63.50 for an amateur photographic outfit in Prince Edward Island. That is a little unusual.

Mr. TUPPER. The marine engineer of the department, who does in this part of the country much of the work that is done on the Island by the agent, has a similar apparatus. That is done under instructions. When an officer is at a station he takes a photograph of the buildings; and the engineer at the head office, who has to inspect all the plans on requisition for improvements and repairs, is able to do his work much more satisfactorily by having not merely the formal report of the condition of the buildings, but also a representation of them. We have adopted that plan for about a year.

Mr. FLINT. I think it is an excellent idea, and I trust that the Minister will extend it to the other provinces.

Completion and construction of light-houses and fog-alarms.....$40,000

Mr. BOWERS. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that two years ago there was a petition from Westport asking that a lighthouse might be erected on the northern end of Briar Island. There is no harbour from Digby to Briar Island, a distance of 40 miles, on the Bay of Fundy coast, and the entrance to Westport harbour is very blind at any time, particularly in the night, as the land overlaps, and in order to get the harbour light you have to be in about a mile and a-half or two miles from the shore, which is nearer than strangers like to approach in making the harbour. A small light on the northern end of the Island would be of great advantage to vessels from St. John and other ports on the Bay of Fundy. It would be also advantageous to our own fishing vessels and to the strangers and the regular steamers which run from St. John to Yarmouth twice a week. If the hon. gentleman would look into this matter, I think he would be apt to put a light there.

Mr. TUPPER. I will look into that, although I may tell the hon, gentleman that there is no record of any application from any of the steamers in the records of the department, so far as my memorandum goes, and it extends over several years.

Mr. BOWERS. I think there was a petition also from the pilots of St. John.

Mr. TUPPER. I may be wrong, but will look into the matter.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Thursday, 6th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock. PRAYERS.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. WALLACE moved:

That the evidence now being taken by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts in respect to certain payments made in the Port Office Department for extra service be printed for the use of the members of that Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Eleventh Report of the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Maintenance and repairs of Government Steamers...... $128,000

Mr. LAURIER. I notice there is quite a decrease in this item, and it will require some explanation.

Mr. TUPPER. There was an item of $70,000, included last year for the new steamer for British Columbia, and that has been struck out.

Mr. McMULLEN. How many Government steamers are there in use?

Mr. TUPPER. There is the Alert, the Newfield, the Lansdowne and the Druid on the east coast, and the Douglas on the west coast, in the Marine Department. There are besides the Acadia, the Canadian and two or three schooners in the fishery protection service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Dream is not a Government steamer?

Mr. TUPPER. No; she is a chartered steamer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon, gentleman say from whom the Dream is chartered?

Mr. TUPPER. From Mr. Thorne, of St. John, I think. I know he is one of the owners, and I think the only owner. She has been under charter ever since I have been in the department.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Would the hon. gentleman state what amount he pays per year for that Mr. TUPPER. I would not be sure, but I think it is $300 per month. I will give him the exact amount later.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would like the hon. gentleman to be in a position to be able to state exactly later on.

Expenses of Steamboat Inspection... $26,000

Mr. McMULLEN. How many inspectors are there, and how are they remunerated?

Mr. TUPPER. There is a steamboat inspection board. There is the chairman, Mr. Meneilly, here, two inspectors, I think, in Toronto, one in Kingston, and one other. We have two inspectors in Quebec, and one inspector in the Maritime Prov. 1890, have given rise to a great number of abuses.

inces. The lowest salary, I think, is $1,000, and the highest $1,600, which is paid to Mr. Meneilly. The Dominion is divided into inspection districts. There is a special report of all these officers from the different districts.

Mr. McMULLEN. What are the duties of these overseers? Do they make reports from their different districts?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes. A synopsis of each report is in the annual report of the Fisheries Department which is laid on the Table each year.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are they supposed to look after the streams throughout the Dominion for the purpose of protecting the fish in them?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes; they are fishery guardians with magisterial powers, each having the supervision of a specified district, and having within that distance the authority of a justice of the peace.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is supposed to be their duties with regard to preserving the purity of streams?

Mr. TUPPER. The instructions sent to these officers include the Fishery Act and the regulations of the particular province to which they belong, and they are supposed to enforce all these laws. In reference to the pollution of streams, and in reference to fishing at particular times, if they ascertain that these laws have been violated, and detect the offenders, they prosecute them, and report each case to the department. They render a monthly account of their work and their disbursements, which is audited in the usual way. We pay them their travelling expenses in addition to their salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. My reason for asking the Minister is this: In the section of country from which I come there are some valuable streams containing speckled trout, and I have heard people complain that owing to the streams being polluted these fish are fast becoming extinguished. There is one inspector in the district who tries fairly to discharge his duty; but I think the Minister should very strongly urge these inspectors to see that the law is rigidly observed, so that the people who live in the different localities may be able sometimes to enjoy an afternoon's angling, which I sometimes enjoy myself. I would certainly like to see such steps taken as would preserve these streams from pollution, for more reasons than one.

Mr. TUPPER. We are doing our best in that direction, and we have had very considerable results. We find that from time to time officers have been lax in their duties, and we do all we can to stir them up. As soon as we find that it is impossible to make them carry out the law, we remove them and appoint others.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I wish again to draw the attention of the Government, especially the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to the very unsatisfactory manner in which the fishery regulations are carried out by his officers in the district of Richelieu. The regulations which were adopted in 1887 and suspended in 1888, and re-enforced in 1889 and

The law has not been carried out equally. While in some counties the license fee has been collected with the greatest strictness, and the fishing apparatus have been confiscated when the law had been infringed, in other counties no effort has been made to collect the fee, and no fee has been collected. According to a report submitted to the House some time ago, I find that the license fees were collected in the Counties of Berthier, Maskinongé and Nicolet, while nothing has been collected in the Counties of Richelieu, Yamaska and St. Maurice, although these counties are equally large, and their fisheries are of much greater value than the fisheries of the other three counties. I, of course, assume that the figures given to the House are correct, and they show that the regulations have been applied in three counties only, while there has been a thorough neglect to apply them in the other three counties which I have named. course, at that time the County of Richelieu was represented by Mr. Massue, a supporter of the Government, the County of Yamaska by Mr. Vanasse, another supporter of the Government, the County of St. Maurice by Mr. Désaulniers, another supporter of the Govern-I would like to know if that accounts for the different treatment meted out to those counties by the fishery officers, or whether there are other reasons. Now, I wish to protest against these regulations, which I have always characterized as unjust, and which I now characterize as unjust and tyrannical. Complaints have been made from the beginning by the whole fishing population of that district. The question was brought before this House, and it was promised that changes would be made, but they have never been made. Last year the Government undertook to make an investigation of the complaints brought to the notice of the Government, both by members of the House and by the fishermen. They asked Senator Guévremont, among others, to study the question, to make a visit to the fishing grounds and to report. After going over the grounds, Senator Guévrement has come to the conclusion to recommend the Government to abolish the system of licenses or to make the fees purely nominal. He recommends that the licenses be issued for statistical purposes only, which was the reason advanced for them by the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, now Minister of Finance. He said that those licenses were issued for the purpose of obtaining statistics of the value of the fish caught, the number of the fishermen, and the fishing apparatus which they were using. Senator Guévremont, after going over the ground and consulting the fishermen, has recommended the Government to reduce the license fee to 10 cents. He says, with a good deal of reason, that this is enough to compel the fishermen to take out licenses, and this would suffice to obtain all the statistics which the Government requires. Senator Guévremont has also reported that the fish caught in that district is of very little value and of very small quantity, and that it was utterly impossible for a large number of the fishermen to comply with the regulations and at the same time maintain their families. Everybody, upon such a report, expected that, seeing that there was a well-founded grievance, the Minister would take the means of remedying the evil complained of. But far from it. This year the regulations have been enforced as usual, and before. Not only were the overseers instructed to carry out the regulations very strictly, but they exacted their fees with a great deal more severity than before. There was only one surveyor formerly for the district of Richelieu and Yamaska, but they have divided that district into two, and have appointed a man named Lavallée for Richelieu, and a man named Shooner for Yamaska. Mr. Lavallée has taken it upon himself to give the law a new interpretation, and not only to prevent licensed fishermen of other counties from enjoying the benefits they formerly enjoyed of going from one county to another and fishing in Lake St. Peter, but he has refused to grant licenses to outside fishermen to fish in the waters of Richelieu County, and has thus driven a great many fishermen of other counties out of the waters of the Richelieu. Instead of the department doing justice and acting in accordance with the recommendation of the commissioner, they have rendered the regulations more odious, unjust and oppressive than they were before. I believe we have good grounds to complain. I believe that justice is not being done to the fishermen of the district to which I refer as it has been to others, and I hope the hon. Minister of Marine will see the advisability of dealing in a better spirit with those fishermen. They are poor people, as he knows, and as he has been often enough told. The commissioner has reported to him that these people are unable to pay the taxes exacted from them, and that they deserve most favourable consideration at his hands, and all those who have been consulted in the matter agree that the fish caught in Lake St. Peter are of small value, that the fishermen are poor, and that the whole revenue from the tax does not exceed $400. I would urge on the hon. Minister the propriety of deciding that it is better to give satisfaction at once than continue a system which certainly will give rise to complaints every year until remedied. In the Counties of Berthier and Maskinongé put together there are eighty-eight fishermen who have taken licenses for 1890, and the total value of the fish caught by them during the season is computed at $2,000. Out of that they have been obliged to pay over $100 for their licenses, so that these eighty-eight fishermen and their families have less than $1,900 to divide among them out of the proceeds of these fishing grounds, being an average of less than $25 each. In the County of St. Maurice, where no license is paid, but which has cost a much larger sum for overseers than Berthier and Maskinongé, the total value of the fish caught is $49,560. So you see in one county nothing is paid to the Government under the regulations, and no licenses are issued or license fees paid, and the fishermen catch as much as $49,000 worth of fish; while in Maskinongé and Berthier the fishermen have to pay over $100, and their total catch is not worth over $2,000; and this is contended by the hon. Minister to be an impartial administration of the law! I say that a law which is administered in such a spirit is one-sided and unjust, if not in principle at least in execution. It is an oppressive law, which reflects no credit on the officers of the department. There is only one remedy, and that is to revise these regulations, and instead of exacting licenses costing such high fees, compared with the means of the fishermen and the value of the fish caught, the Government should substitute a purely nominal fee, say 10 cents, so that the object for which the enforced with a good deal more severity than former Minister of Marine (Mr. Foster) said the fee Mr. Beausoleil.

was imposed, namely, the collecting of statistics, may be accomplished. There should be no preference or partiality, but equal justice should be rendered every county, whether it returns supporters or opponents of the Government.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman last year, and I think the year before, brought up the same question which he has so kindly explained in English to-day; and I then attempted to convince him that the object we had in view was not a political The hon, gentleman has himself, in addressing the House, mentioned the name of Senator Guévremont as holding the same views, and he will therefore see that if there were political motives in the matter I would not be so anxious to go counter to Senator Guévremont's wishes. any rate, Senator Guévremont, I may tell the hon. gentleman, has been just as energetic and strong in his opposition to the policy of my department as the hon. gentleman himself; and it would give me personally great pleasure to be able to come to a decision satisfactory to both. I felt, however, on going into the subject, that the arguments are entirely against the views and wishes of the fishermen of that district. They practically asked us to abandon the license system, and we have hit on a happy medium, which is this: that with reference to the coarser fish, or the fish taken for local consumption, the instructions are not to charge a license fee; but in connection with the fish for export, and which supply a very lucrative business, the necessity for a license system is just as great as it is in any other part of where Canada that system is in I gave to the House last session or the session before the actual amount paid per fisherman, and it was not at all a large fee. It is certainly no larger than the regulation size, but we have made this exception, that licenses for local consumption are granted on the payment of a very nominal fee, and I think I communicated those instructions to the hon. gentleman by letter, in the correspondence we had on the subject. I did not expect this matter would be brought up, and I hope the hon, gentleman will not consider me careless in not being able to give definitely the reasons for the state of affairs which exists in other counties; but I may be able to give him one reason, which may explain the non-appearance of returns of licenses in some of the neighbouring The department has had this trouble in some of the districts, that the opposition to the enforcement of these regulations is so great that the department has been compelled to prosecute and sue for the penalties under the law. If my recollection serves me, we have never yet been able to obtain judgment and execution; but, nevertheless, the instructions from the department have been in those cases, as well as in all others, that where the law should be enforced, and where it turns out that it cannot be enforced at the time, the parties should be prosecuted. I state in the most positive manner that I have not in the slightest degree considered the political representation of those counties. That has not been put before me, and I am not sufficiently familiar with those counties to state who are their representatives. The action which has been taken by the department has been wholly regardless of that matter, but the case of those fishermen in the county of the hon. gentleman, as well as in the others referred to, was centre of his division, and not at the extremity.

represented to the Government, and it was stated that many of them were in poor circumstances, and were fishing simply for local use, so we gave instructions allowing the officer to depart from the rigid construction of the regulations, and to make those regulations as easy as possible in that case. The object of enforcing the system of licenses there is the preservation of fisheries. All our authorities go to show, in regard to the Province of Ontario as well as the Province of Quebec, that we could not control or regulate or preserve the fisheries without such regulations, that our fisheries are exhaustible, and that we could not suspend the law in the direction referred to in the interest of When the hon, gentleman the fishery itself. attacks that policy he opens up a very wide field for discussion, because that is not confined to those counties, but it is a principle which is adopted in that province, and also in the Province of Ontario, by the Local Administration.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. I should like to call the attention of the Government and of the Minister of Marine to the utter incompentency of the overseer of fisheries in the County of Montmagny. He is a young man who took the place of a very competent man who was put out of office simply because he was a Liberal. Mr. Caron, who occupied that office before, had a case against the Tory candidate in the County of L'Islet, and because he lost that case he was put out of his office and Mr. Eugène Pelletier was put in his place. This young man spends all his time in making speeches on the hustings and writing in the newspapers, insulting his opponents. I had to meet him on the hustings, and I was abused by him. I do not complain much of that, because I do not think his speeches or his writings would have much influence with the electors, but I say he is incompetent to fulfil his duties. A case arose in my county that this man had to be sent three or four times to settle, a very small matter, and but for the good will of the Minister himself, who did all he could to settle that matter, I do not think it would have been settled. I have no fault to find with the Minister in regard to this: on the contrary, I thank him for his action, but this fishery officer was unable to settle that matter. I will refer the Minister to his chief clerk, Mr. Bauset, to discover what his capacity is. Mr. Pelletier lives at the extremity of the district, which includes Bellechasse, Montmagny, L'Islet, and a part of the County of Lévis. Mr. Pelletier lives at the end of the County of L'Islet, and the greatest part of his work has to be done in Montmagny, Bellechasse and Lévis. I think that man should be changed. I do not want the change to take place in favour of any one of my friends. I know that the friends of the Government should be appointed. I do not care who is appointed, but I think there should be a man who is able to fulfil his duties and who should not abuse his opponents at election times.

Mr. TUPPER. I will obtain a report as to the manner in which this officer performs his duty. We have no desire to retain any officer who is not only not able to perform his duty, but who neglects his duty, and there certainly is a point in what the hon, gentleman says as to the place of residence of the officer. The rule we have applied is that the officer should reside as near as possible to the

Mr. LAURIER. I have no doubt that the view in connection with the license system. Minister of Marine speaks very sincerely when he says he has no intention of employing any but competent officers; but I am sure that, notwithstanding all his good wishes and intentions, he may sometimes be imposed upon so as to appoint men who may be recommended to him by his political supporters. No doubt this officer earned his spurs in election times. No doubt he was very efficient in fishing for votes, and perhaps he showed more capacity for that than for the duties of the office to which he has been appointed. However, in regard to the general question. I will give credit to the Minister for the intention he has expressed, if they continue the license system, of looking to the public interest and seing that rivers and lakes and inland waters are not depleted of fish. I am no judge on this matter. The system may be good or may be bad. I have no opinion to offer upon that. I do not blame the Government for their action in this matter, but the hon, gentleman must admit that, judging by the report which has been laid upon the Table by his own department, the law, good, bad or indifferent, is not administered in all the counties in the same impartial manner. The hon, gentleman states that from this report it would appear that in St. Maurice the value of the fish caught was almost $50,000, and yet not a cent has been levied for licenses in that county, whereas in the County of Berthier and in the County of Maskinongé license fees have been collected to the amount of $125. It happens that St. Maurice is a Conservative county and that Berthier and Maskinongé are Liberal counties. I know that the Minister would not stoop to do anything of this kind because of the political complexion of the county, that he would not countenance orders to comply with the regulations in one county where the people were not of his own stripe of politics, but allow them to remain in abeyance in other counties; but I will not say so much in regard to his officers, and I think it must be apparent to him, as it certainly is to me, that the officers of his department in the County of St. Maurice must be wilfully neglecting their duties when those in the neighbouring Counties of Berthier and Maskinongé are enforcing them strictly. What is the reason? The reason is obvious My hon, friend said the law was unpopuenough. lar, and the officers, finding in the only county which is represented by an opponent of the Government that the law is unpopular, refrain from creating more unpopularity by not applying an unpopular law; whereas, in the neighbouring county they have no such excuse, and they apply the law. But the result, after all, is that there is discrimination between one county and another, the law is applied in one county and not applied in another. As I said a moment ago, I am quite sure the Minister would not countenance such things if they were brought to his attention; but either one of two things, the law must be applied everywhere without discrimination, or if it is not to be applied without discrimination, the law should be repealed. But if it is to remain upon the Statute-book, then there is only one thing to do, and that is to apply it everywhere equally, whether it makes the Government popular or unpopular.

ignored political considerations in the regulations in those districts, and the hon. gentleman accepts my statement. But he thinks there must be a difficuly somewhere, according to the reports. I may tell him frankly that I have not looked carefully into the matter lately, and the only excuse that occurs to me now to offer on behalf of the officers is that referred to by the hon, gentleman who first spoke, who says that the inspector has not collected any fees for the reason that the fishermen rebelled and refused to take out a license. The officer applied for instructions, and the instructions which went from my department to the Department of Justice were to the effect that the necessary actions should be taken, and the prosecutions were begun; and if I may venture to whisper it across the House, the court before which they took one of these cases actually abstained from giving judgment for a very long period, and I think has not yet given judgment, evidently sympathizing, as it would appear, to some extent, with the feelings of the fishermen in connection with the enforcement of this license system. These are the difficulties which probably brought the state of affairs to which the hon, gentleman alludes. But since special attention has been given to the subject, I will undertake to see exactly what the facts are, and I can assure the hon, gentleman that the Government will not retain any officials who have been treating the regulations as a dead letter, without instructions, or departing from the instructions given them from the department. We desire. that no discrimination should be made.

Mr. LAURIER. If the law is such that even courts of justice, which are bound to administer the law, connive at wilful offence against the law, then the hon, gentleman may come to the conclusion that the remedy suggested by my hon. friend had better be applied, and that the license fee be made purely nominal. As I understand the hon. member for Berthier (Mr. Beausoleil), he complained that the fees were simply too high. whether high or low, for the general class of fishermen even a low fee may be a large sum. Even if it be the intention of the department simply to prevent the rivers from being depleted of fish, he will reach his object just the same by keeping the license system and reducing the fees.

Mr. TUPPER. The fee itself is already small. I think the largest amount charged, if I recollect aright, is $6 or $7, and the lowest fees were $1, or $2, or $3 each. But I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, in reference to our changing the policy, because a magistrate or justice of the peace had neglected to enforce the law, that it would be unwise to change the policy, because we have found the greatest difficulty in enforcing the fishery regulations apart from the fees altogether. It has frequently occurred that a man will go to a friendly magistrate, having violated a regulation, and a very proper one, and presenting his case, will confess judgment and be fined $1, and then when our officers ascertain the violation and endeavour to prosecute the offender in the regular way he pleads a former conviction. Of course, we could not recognize the action of these different authorities as a sufficient reason for changing the regulations. As Mr. TUPPER. I am glad the hon, gentleman to the other remarks of the hon, gentleman, I do accepts my statement as to the policy I have in not think it would be wise to reduce the fees much below the present rates. We receive, I may say, nearly $40,000 throughout Canada in fees and they go largely to defray the expenses incurred in administering the license system, in printing the licenses, and defraying the expenses of registration, and so on. If we reduce the fees we might produce two results: first, to render the applications so numerous, that the difficulty of restraining overfishing would be very great; and, secondly, there would be a less revenue derived from practically a nominal tax.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I am very glad the Minister admits that the regulations are unpopular. They are thoroughly unpopular all over the district, and I believe it is almost useless to try to enforce those regulations. They are now in force in one district where they have never yet been in force since Confederation, and the people believe that they are new regulations and consider them oppressive. Even though the license fees are small, the fishermen, as a class, are very poor and consider it hard work to catch fish enough to pay the fees and yet support their families. If the Minister will look over the statement which he has furnished of the catch of fish in the Counties of Berthier and Maskinongé, he will find that it amounted to: eels, 3,000 lbs.; bass, 2,500 lbs.; pickerel, 4,900 lbs.; pike, 5,500 lbs.; coarse fish, The whole amounting in value to only 37,000 lbs. The Minister will see that there are very few fish caught there, and there is no export of fish at all from these counties. If the instructions which were issued two years ago had been enforced, there would not have been a single license issued in those two counties. Those two countics have been forced to pay in licenses more than all the rest of the district, although they catch a smaller proportion of fish than the rest of the district. There is no justice, there is no impartiality in the administration of the regulations in those two counties. only one way in which the Minister can get rid of complaints, and that is to repeal the regulations and substitute a nominal fee of say 10 cents for the present fee of $1 for some kinds of fishing apparatus, and 25 cents for other kinds. at present the revenue amounts to only $400, so that a repeal of the regulations would cause no appreciable loss to the revenue, and would give a good deal of satisfaction to the fishermen in those The Minister cannot hope to have two counties. any peace on this subject until those regulations are repealed. At present the fees appear to be small enough, but still some people have to pay $4, or, $5, or $6 for their license, and when the catch of fish is so small as it is shown to be by figures supplied by the Minister himself, when a man catches only about $25 worth of fish, and has to pay from $4 to $6 for his license, even that fee becomes oppressive and ought to be repealed.

Mr. McMULLEN. In looking over the salaries of the fishery officers, I notice their salaries vary from $75 to $300. How are these salaries regulated?

Mr. TUPPER. Practically, according to their relative work in the different districts. The diaries of these offices are kept, and the salary is paid according to the amount of travelling necessary and time occupied in going over the district.

Mr. McMULLEN. The salary in Ottawa, I observe, is $100 and in Hull $300?

Mr. TUPPER. Both these are old offices.

New Brunswick, salaries of Fishery officers.....

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I should like to call the attention of the Committee to the importance of the shad fishery of the Bay of Fundy. is known to those who live in that section of the country that there has been a very serious decline in this important fishery for some years past. The fishery is confined in New Brunswick chiefly to the Counties of Westmoreland and Albert; and in Nova Scotia to the Counties of Cumberland, Colchester and Hants. In looking over the reports I find the inspector of fisheries in Nova Scotia, Mr. Hockin, reports

"The history of this fishery has been one of rapid decline; the total eatch for successive three years being:

1881-82-83	13,037
1884-85-86	6.192
1887-88-89	1,777

"The catch of 1890 shows a slight increase over the average of the three last years, being 750 as compared with 592 barrels."

The catch for the three last years has only averaged 592 barrels. The report of Inspector Chapman is to the same effect, that there is a catch this year in the estuaries in the Bay of Fundy where these fish used to be plentiful. overseers Goodwin and Cormier report to the same effect, and the overseer of Albert County states that only 10 barrels have been reported in that district during the last year. In looking over the reports I find that this year the inspectors have referred to the cause of this decline at some length. Inspector Hockin says:

"The theory has been advanced that the shad taken in the bay are not the result of spawn deposited in our rivers, but in rivers further south, and that there is no necessity for legislation affecting the spawning scason. While it may be possible that all the fish that come into the bay did not spawn in our rivers, still I see no reason for believing that they are not contributing nurseries of the fishery, and that some remedial legislation is necessary. Nearly all the shad taken in Shubenacadie River, for instance, are full of spawn; and the fish ascend the river for the purpose of depositing it. There is, therefore, an immense destruction of ova, and at the very lowest calculation, the catch this year, of 164 barrels, in this river alone, must have destroyed 50,000,000 of ova."

Then I find Inspector Chapman says:

"There is a very small catch this year in the rivers and estuaries at the head of the Bay of Fundy where they used to be so plentiful. There is only one way that will restore these fish and that is, not to allow any to be caught anywhere in this province until the 1st July. I have watch the shad coming into this, the Moncton market from St. John, from the 10th May to the middle of June, and every female shad opened is full of spawn. It certainly seems a great mistake to thus exterminate what was once so valuable an industry, when the cause is so apparent and the remedy so plain."

Inspector Goodwin says:

"Shad fishing in Sackville was fair for a few days in the first part of the season. Those interested complain that the taking of parent fish in St. John harbour, before spawning, is utterly destroying this once valuable fishery. There are no abuses to complain of in this district; the several close times are well observed."

I find also that Overseer Davidson says:

"The great decrease in the catch cannot be attributed to over-fishing, because the apparatus used are small when compared with former years. No doubt, this has had something to do with it; but for a number of years, while the yield in the bay is not one-tenth of what it formerly was, the catch in the rivers during the spawning season has been on the increase. Neither is it reasonable to suppose that there will be a speedy return of these fish, when they are altogether unprotected during the time of breeding. There should be a close season, both in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, during the spawning season. Were this done, there would soon be a return of this valuable fish."

It appears from these reports that the inspectors all agree as to the destruction of the fish and as to the causes which have brought about the destruction. Overseer Hawkins refers to a theory which I am aware has been very generally held among fishermen for some years, that shad were not accustomed to resort to the rivers along the Bay of Fundy for spawning purposes, that they usually deposited their spawn in rivers further south on the Atlantic coast, rivers in the United States, and therefore no legislation is needed so far as this Dominion is concerned. It appears evident, however, that although this theory may be partly correct, while it may be that the principal number of shad deposited their spawn in rivers in the United States, yet to the River St. John and the Shubenacadie River a large number of shad come annually for the purpose of spawning; and it is well known, too, that under present conditions these shad are destroyed in a wholesale manner at the mouths of the rivers and by those living along the banks, because the regulations do not prevent fishermen along the rivers from placing as many nets in the rivers as they choose for the purpose of catching those fish. draw the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and the Committee to this subject because I consider it is a very important one, and this is a very valuable fish. It is quoted in the reports as worth $10 a barrel. I know as a fact that in my own county it is very difficult to obtain any shad at present and the price is much higher than that I have named, even $12 or $14 a barrel having been the usual price during late years. I do not intend to reflect in any way on the Department of Marine The idea has prevailed in past years and Fisheries. that no regulations in this country were necessary for the shad fishery, but I think the facts brought out in the reports of the inspectors show that some regulations are needed, and that if some regulations were adopted, this very valuable fishery might be restored. I am very glad that the Minister has adopted a more vigorous policy than heretofore, in regard to the lobster and oyster fisheries of my own county, and I hope that he will also deal with this question in the same vigorous manner, and adopt some regulations that will have the effect of preventing these fish from being destroyed as they are at present, and restoring this very valuable fishery.

Mr. TUPPER. The subject that the hon. gentleman has mentioned is, of course, of great impor-We have at present in reference to the shad fishery, as the hon, gentleman knows, a weekly close time in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, but St. John harbour is excepted, and I suppose the hon. gentleman would advocate a little more vigorous policy in that fishery district. I may mention, however, that while those interested in the fisheries differ as to the proper time for a close season, the shad have rendered a considerable portion of this discussion unimportant, as this year the shad fishery in St. John harbour has been excellent and much better than for years past. That supports the theory referred to by Mr. Hockin, in his discussion of the question, and which Mr. Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

Hockin rather casts some doubt upon: That these shad which come to our waters for the most part breed in southern waters, and that we, to some extent, benefit by the artificial production of these fish by our neighbours in the United States, for which, of course, we are duly thankful. The question which the hon, gentleman has brought up was discussed by all the fishery officers at their recent conference here, and as that conference only took place a short time ago, I have not yet had time to give the deliberation full consideration, There was, however, a very great difference of opinion between the various officers on this subject, and I fear that at present we have very little evidence upon which we can base a general regulation differing from the present one. There are a great many arguments in favour of enforcing a weekly short time everywhere, instead of making an exception in the most important district. This subject will receive every consideration.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice there is quite a discrepancy in the travelling expenses here, from the amount in the other provinces.

Mr. TUPPER. The fishery districts are much smaller and the rivers closer together.

Mr. PERRY. Is it the intention of the Minister to appoint inspectors to carry out the Act preventing the use of purse seines?

Mr. TUPPER. No additional officers are required and none will be so appointed.

Mr. PERRY. Whose business is it to carry out the Act?

Mr. TUPPER. The fishery officers.

Mr. WATSON. In connection with this I would like to call the attention of the Minister to a matter affecting a large number of people in Manitoba. Last year, and previous years, complaints have been made by residents in Manitoba that the licenses granted to the fish companies there were depleting the fisheries in Lake Winnipeg and Lake Manitoba. The Minister very wisely undertook to investigate the causes of these complaints, and the friends of the fishing companies contended that the fisheries were not depleted, while those on the other side of the question contended that they A very long report on this investigation by Mr. Wilmot is published in the departmental re-I consider that a very great injustice is done the local fishermen in Manitoba under the regulations at present. I must say that I approve of the act of the Minister in curtailing the limits for which the fishing licenses are granted to these large companies. The fishing companies that are now engaged in fishing in these water are composed almost entirely of Americans. They substituted a Canadian name for the purpose of getting a license, but it is, nevertheless, practically an American fishing company. The license is granted to the fishing company for commercial purposes, and to the residents for domestic purposes. The license to be called a domestic license, is granted to Indians and settlers to carry on fishing for home use and not for export. Now, Mr. Chairman, I say that is an injustice to our own local fishermen.

They do fish for export, and they do most of their fishing for export in the winter months. The large fishing companies have got quite a fleet of fishing boats, and they have erected ice-houses, and with their wealth they are able to store the fish they catch in the summer time and export them. But the natives of the country, the Half-breeds and Indians, and the Icelanders who have settled on Lake Winnipeg, are prevented from selling any of this fish which they may catch during the winter months, for export purposes. I claim that is an injustice to the resident fishermen in the Province of Manitoba. These regulations appear to be framed purely in the interest of the large fishing companies, who are able to employ a few people around Lake Winnipeg during the summer months, in catching fish and storing them away, and a very small portion of the profits is realized by these people. Last year there was somewhere in the neighbourhood of $25,000 worth of fish caught under the ice by the Indians, Halfbreeds, and Icelanders. It is needless to say that with the exception of the small amount which was received by the men who handle those fish, that amount went entirely into the pockets of the fishermen themselves, and was the means of supporting a great number of families. I do think that this is a matter worthy of the consideration of the Minister, and that these settlers should be allowed to sell their fish for export purposes the same as the large companies who receive the licenses. a live question in Manitoba, and we find that the fishermen, even with the restrictions that have been placed on them are catching more fish this year by their operations in Lake Winnipeg, than they were the year before. Their ice storehouses are almost filled with fish day. I approve of the Minister trying to protect those fisheries; but instead of encouraging a large American fishing company to fish out our lakes, encouragement ought to be offered to the residents who are dependent upon their industry for a living, especially in the winter time. It can easily be understood that the Indians and Half-breeds are not wealthy enough to erect ice-houses and store their fish, so as to be able to catch them in the summer time. If they were in a position to do that, it would be impossible for them to purchase an outfit to enable them to fish in deep waters. is well known that the whitefish in the summer time go into deep water. I think the hon. Minister would be doing an act of justice to the Half-breeds , and Indians, or to any persons else who wish to catch fish in the winter time through the ice, to allow them to sell them for export as well as a large fishing company, particularly when its profits go almost entirely into the pockets of Americans.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows that when this system was introduced—and it has been introduced only recently-it was by no means intended to be an unalterable rule or law, but merely a tentative measure. But before its introduction there was a tremendous outcry in Manitoba that the time had long come for regulations to prevent the overfishing of the lake by gentlemen carrying on very large operations. I did not know they were Americans. Of course American capital may be behind them, though I did not know the hon. gentleman would strongly object to that. But those parties, so far as I am aware, were averse to any be made by the people of Manitoba. While I do interference, and I attributed a great deal of the agitation which arose after the regulations were introduced-not to the Indians or settlers, for we have attempted carefully to guard their interests and to give them the preference—but to the large operators to whom the hon, gentleman has alluded. The hon, gentleman will be glad to know that after the agitation arose against the regulations, and after a full explanation was given of what the distinction was between a domestic license and a commercial license, and of the extent to which we assisted the settlers and the Indians, the agitation has almost subsided. I was glad to see in a Manitoba paper the other day that the people of Gimli, for instance, were quite pleased with the instructions based on these regulations which have been given. For instance, they were very much afraid that we would destroy the winter fishing. It is particularly in the interest of the residents, Indians and half-breeds, that we are interfering; because one of the arguments urged upon the department by the people of Manitoba was the great danger of exhausting the fisheries, and the consequent injury that would be done to the Indians and settlers; and the object of the department, I can assure the hon. gentleman, is not to interfere unduly with the settlers or the Indians, but to restrict as much as possible these large companies. The chief object was to restrict the commercial licenses to certain waters, and to prevent fishing in waters where we had reason to believe the breeding grounds are found, and it is specially for the sake of the settlers and Indians that we have

Mr. WATSON. It does not pay the fishing companies to bother fishing in the winter time. want larger profits and a larger catch than the settlers, so that they do all their fishing in the summer time. It appears to me that any person who will go out on the ice, and fish under the ice with a net of a certain length according to the regulations of the department-

Mr. TUPPER. I may tell the hon, gentleman that the regulations now in force have nothing to do with winter fishing, but refer to the summer season only. The regulations for winter fishing have not yet been prepared, but they are being reported upon.

Mr. WATSON. I can assure the hon. Minister that people in Manitoba are not as well satisfied with the regulations as he thinks they are. I find in very recent papers from Manitoba that correspondents are writing about this matter, and demanding a change. I certainly agree that restrictions should be placed on these large fishing companies, because there was reason for alarm at their operations. They stretched miles of net across the breeding grounds of Lake Winnipeg, and they would in time have depleted the lake of fish, but if the settlers were not allowed to fish for exportation-

Mr. TUPPER. They are.

Mr. WATSON—these companies would have the entire monopoly of the fishing in Lake Winnipeg or Lake Manitoba. What I wish is that the Indians and settlers may be allowed to sell or export the fish they catch in winter. If any money is to be made out of the fish in Manitoba, it should not object to American capital coming in, I know that down by the sea the hon, gentleman is not willing to allow Americans to fish within the 3-mile limit, and we do not want them to be allowed to fish in Lake Winnipeg or Lake Manitoba either. I think those fisheries should be protected as much as the fisheries down by the sea.

Fisheries, North West Territories......$4,000

Mr. McMULLEN. What are the regulations with regard to fishing in the North-West Territories? Are they anything different from those in Manitoba?

Mr. TUPPER. The only difference is in regard to close seasons, which vary according to the geographical situation of the different rivers and lakes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think every liberty should be secured to the poor Indians of the North-

Mr. TUPPER. They are favoured everywhere as far as possible.

British Columbia, salaries and disbursement of Fishery officers, &c....... $6.500

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I desire to enquire whether or not there are any special reasons for extending the close season in Lake Huron from the 1st | of November to the 15th of October. The fishermen complain bitterly that the two weeks of their very best fishing season have been cut off by the regulation.

Mr. TUPPER. The action of the department is based on the report of Mr. Charles Wilmot, who has been collecting fish for some years for breeding purposes. He has been in Lake Huron and Georgian Bay in order to obtain these fish, and he observed the fish were more full of spawn after the 15th of October, and that the previous close season did not cover, as it was intended it should, the larger part of the breeding season. Of course the fishermen are against this, but strong pressure has been brought on the Government constantly, particularly from those waters, to guard those fisheries in the strongest possible manner, no matter how unpopular such action might be. There is no regulation so important as the regulation in reference to a close season, and I think the evidence we have with reference to the proper season for closing those waters is satisfactory, coming from an officer who has spent many years in collecting breeding fish.

Mr. CAMERON. There is no doubt as to the propriety of having the close season sufficiently long for breeding purposes, but if the opinion of Mr. Wilmot is such as the hon Minister says it is, it is not that of the majority of the men engaged for many years in the fishing business. The hon. gentleman ought to consider very carefully the wants and opinions of those engaged in that business, and I am quite sure, if he would visit Lake Huron in the month of November, he would find that, after the 1st of November, fishing is most dangerous and the fishermen have to leave the grounds at that time.

Mr. TUPPER. No doubt, as the water is too rough and breaks the nets.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). And they feel bitterly Mr. WATSON.

less the reasons are insurmountable, I think the hon, gentleman should meet the views of the fishermen.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the course taken by the hon. Minister in extending the close season deserves our highest commendation. That is a subject on which I have battled for many years. I have always contended that the close season should not begin later than the 15th of October. It was put off to the 1st of November, and no wonder the fishermen liked to have it then because that gave them an opportunity for catching fish during the spawning season. Now, the fishermen are, like other people, sometimes a little selfish in their views. They are certainly very short-sighted with reference to this close season, and I am sure the hon. Minister has done perfectly right, and that the action he has taken is entirely in accordance with the opinion of the great majority of the overseers, although those actually engaged in fishing, who want to make the most of the present moment, will not support him in the course he has taken.

Mr. CORBOULD. I would like to know if the item under discussion covers any expenditure that may be required for the encouragement of lobsterbreeding in British Columbia? I understand the hon. Minister has had this subject under consideration for some time both last year as well as this, and I see that lately a lobster fishery has been established in the Maritime Provinces. I would like to know whether it is the intention of the Government to take steps to encourage the breeding of lobsters in the waters of the Pacific? I would also like to ask him about the whitefish. Our lakes in British Columbia, as regards the temperature of the water and otherwise, are well adapted for the breeding of whitefish. It appears the industry in this province has been encouraged to a very large extent, and I am sure with profit, and I hope the hon. Minister will see his way to placing a sufficient number of fry or eggs in the British Columbia lakes so that the industry may be encouraged there also.

Under this vote it will be im-Mr. TUPPER. possible to provide for any new service, but the subject as to whether lobsters would thrive in British Columbia waters has engaged the attention of the department for some time. We have deemed it wise, however, not to undertake the experiment, which would entail some cost, of transporting lobsters from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in view of the fact that the United States authorities have been engaged in that experiment for some years, and, up to the present, with apparently little success. I will tell the hon, gentleman an amusing circumstance in connection with the efforts of our neighbours, and that is the shad which they have been breeding on the Atlantic coast shows a preference for our waters, and it is supposed that the great increase of that fish in St. John's harbour this year was due to the good work of our neighbours.

An hon. MEMBER. And codfish, too?

Mr. TUPPER. Codfish as well. With reference to the lobsters, the Americans have gone to great expense. Special care must be taken to have the lobsters alive, and to bring them across the continent alive. The salt water has to be at a certain temperature, its saline qualities preserved and so on, and the lobster has to be handled very carethe cutting off of two weeks of their best season. Un- fully. The results have been small. The chief result is that three lobsters have been found on the British Columbia coast which it was supposed had come from the American shore. I believe three lobsters were discovered this season in those waters, and they are supposed to have come from below. That would be an additional argument for waiting for additional results from the United States, because if the result proves that they will do the work, we should be thankful to obtain the result. In view of the experimental nature of this work, and of the fact that their efforts have not yet been crowned with success, it has not been deemed wise to duplicate that experiment, and at present there is no proposition to introduce the lobster into the waters of British Columbia. to the Atlantic coast, however, it is different. The lobster is already there. What we are doing is this. We hatch the salmon for the Fraser River in order to preserve the fish which are accustomed to that water, but that is a very different thing from the introduction of fish into new waters, as would be the introduction of the lobster in British Colum-As to whitefish, I have asked the officers of the department, and particularly Mr. Wilmot, who superintends the hatcheries, whether it is not possible to send whitefish eggs from the east to British Columbia. I should be glad to be able to carry that out, and I think that may be done within the amount of our appropriation.

Mr. CORBOULD. I understand that there is no difficulty in transporting the berry, as it is called, of the lobster, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and, if that is the case, I hope the Minister will take steps to have those berries transported to our waters.

Fishways and clearing Rivers...... $49,000,

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). What provision has been made for the harbour at Shediac?

Mr. TUPPER. The surveyor has surveyed that harbour and located the sites of the old beds, and it is intended to plant the oysters this fall, and arrange for the collection of the spawn next season in proper time.

Mr. BOWERS. In connection with this item, I would call the attention of the Minister of Marine to the distribution of the fishing bounty. I find there are 597 vessels with 31,077 tons, which received $46,615.50 last season. It is the manner in which the bounty is distributed, that I consider very unfair.

Mr. TUPPER. Do you refer to the principle of the bounty, or to the system on which it is distributed?

Mr. BOWERS. I refer to the principle on which it is distributed. The average is given simply as $3.64 a man; but I find that in Digby County, which I have the honour to represent, the amount per man was only $2.45; in Halifax, $2.54; in Yarmouth, $2.43 per man. On the other hand, the County of Richmond received $4.19 per man, Cumberland County $6.43, Lunenburg $4.54, Queens'$4.18, and so on in different ratios throughout the province. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may say that the division of the bounty is intended to encourage the building of the largest style of fishing vessels, but if he takes half of this amount, $23,307.75, and divides it amongst the vessels at the rate of 75 cents a ton, that would be an encouragement in the same manner to build larger vessels, while he might take the other half and divide it amongst the fishermen. I find that some men received only 87 cents, while others received $16, though those who only received 87 cents may very likely have worked harder than those who received the larger amount. I have an instance in my own Island where a gentleman with only two of a crew fished only three months with a vessel of 25 or 26 tons, and the men received a bounty of $6 or $7 each. The attention of the Minister being called to this, I hope he will try to make some arrangement by which the fishermen of each county will receive the same amount of bounty.

Mr. STAIRS. I have not enquired very carefully into this matter, but I think it is one which requires some consideration on the part of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. What the remedy should be I am not prepared to say, but it does seem to be unfair that the bounty received by the individual fishermen should depend upon the size of the vessel in which they fish. I cannot see why a man who is fishing in a vessel of 80 tons should receive more than a man who is engaged in a vessel of 20 or 30 tons. I hope the Minister of Marine will look into this matter and see what remedy can be found.

Mr. TUPPER. It would be very hard to accomplish the object of the bounty in that way. The bounty is intended to induce competition, and it is no argument against it to say that one county does not earn as much as another. The object of the bounty is not the distribution of so much charity, but to give the amount according to the result of the work. If a certain number of fishermen in one district are in the habit of fishing in small boats, they cannot expect the same result as those who fish in larger boats. the County of Lunenburg, for instance, there is a large distribution. Lunenburg has gone to the front and has built some splendid vessels, and those who advocate the bounty would use that as a justification for granting the bounty by showing that, since we have been paying it, we have been fulfilling the object by getting our fishermen to build larger and faster fishing vessels. They are doing that now, and they will be a credit to the ports from which they come. In fact, we are now the rivals in that respect of the fishermen who set us the example in that matter. As the hon, gentleman has proposed, for tha first time in my hearing, a consideration of the principle upon which that was based, I will carefully consider it, and if I reach a different conclusion, I will communicate it to the House.

Mr. BOWERS. For the encouragement of the larger vessels, half the amount of the bounty could be paid to them in just the same manner. I do not think for one moment it is given in charity. I notice that alongside the County of Digby, in the County of Annapolis, the fishermen get about $1.20 per man per vessel more than the same class get in Digby County.

Mr. TUPPER. Because they fish in larger boats.

to encourage the building of the largest style of fishing vessels, but if he takes half of this amount, $23,307.75, and divides it amongst the vessels at the rate of 75 cents a ton, that would be an encourage, than men fishing in our vessels. They get nearly $3 per man and $1 for the boat, while our fishermen only get $2.45 who fish in vessels.

Mr. McNEILL. Before this item passes I wish to take the opportunity of correcting a slight error which appeared in the Hansard report, of some remarks I made on the last occasion this matter was before the House, in reference to the condition in which fish were landed by these large companies. My remarks had reference to the hot weather; I certainly did not wish to be understood as saying that even in hot whether, all of them, or even the bulk of them, were unfit for human food. What I wished understood was that sometimes the bulk of them were, in my opinion, very unwholesome.

Census and Statistics.....$175,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I thought you were going to let that stand until we got the returns of population?

Mr. FOSTER. Then we shall have to wait quite awhile.

Mr. CASEY. I think some one of the Ministers ought to be able to give us some information on this point by this time. There is really no reason why we should not have the returns of population before now. I have no doubt they are practically completed by this time, with exception, perhaps, of some districts in Algoma or the utmost parts of the North-West Territories. Surely the meronumerical counting of the heads must be completed long before this. Can't the Minister tell us approximately when the returns will be ready?

Mr. HAGGART. The numerical returns have only come in, the last of them, within a day or two, and the department will not be able to give the numerical return for the whole Dominion before about three weeks, according to the information I have received from the department. The first information the hon. gentleman has mentioned was perfectly correct, as I got it from the department, that we would be able to make a statement at the beginning of this month. Upon enquiry to-day I find, however, that it will be impossible to have any reliable numerical information as to the present population of the Dominion before, at least, two or three weeks.

Mr. CASEY. I understood the Minister to say that the last returns had come in within a day or two.

Mr. HAGGART. So I understood.

Mr. CASEY. If the returns are in, it certainly cannot take the census staff very long to add the last returns to what have been already received. The bulk of the returns must have been in long ago. No doubt the Minister could give us the returns for practically all the provinces. I think it would be well for him to give the House what information he has, reserving the few counties where the figures are not complete, for a future period. But with the large census staff at his disposal it cannot take long simply to count the heads furnished by the last returns and add them to what has already been received. I do not think a delay of three weeks is a reasonable one, if the last returns are in now.

Mr. HAGGART. Some of them only came in this morning from some of the Montreal districts. Mr. Bowers.

Mr. CASEY. Even so, it cannot take long to add those returns to what has already been received and counted up. I suppose that practically all the returns have been received from Ontario, excepting, perhaps, the back parts.

Mr. HAGGART. I think Ontario is not complete yet.

Mr. CASEY. I understood the Minister to say that the last ones had come in this morning.

Mr. HAGGART. The last returns from the city of Montreal came in only this morning.

Mr. CASEY. That shows certainly great neglect on the part of the enumerators, who should have been through with their work before now, and the hon, gentleman ought to have seen that they were through with their business before now. It is of extreme importance, considering other questions that may come before the House, to have this information before us during the present session. seems peculiar and strange, when the session has continued to such an unexpected length, that we should not have them by this time. We talk about the prosperity and progress of the country, and we are talking to some extent in the dark, until we get these figures. The Government do not wish to conceal anything from us, I hope, that we ought to know in this respect; but if they want to avoid the suspicion on the part of the public at large that these figures would not be as favourable to them as they have predicted, they ought to hurry this matter up and bring down as soon as they can the figures, at least so far as returned. For all practical purposes what we have on hand, if they were brought down to-morrow, would be of as much use to us as if we had complete returns. It does not matter, in discussing great questions before this House, whether some particular district in Montreal, for instance, is left out of the returnsalthough I understand the cities are complete now. But it does not matter whether there is some particular district in northern Algoma, or in the Rocky Mountains, which has not been returned, as long as we have substantially the returns from the great bulk of the districts. These ought to be brought down, and they would be of great use to us in our deliber-

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Certainly we should not be asked to pass this item until we have the information.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think we will let it stand. Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This has been promised to us before now.

Mr. HAGGART. As soon as we have the returns of the population they will be brought down immediately to the House—as soon as the calculation is made.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister promised first that they would be done in July.

Mr. HAGGART. No; I think I said about the beginning of August.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think that was the second answer, if I remember rightly. It seems to me that we should have them already. Only about a week ago there was a somewhat rude interruption by an hon. gentleman opposite to an hon. gentleman speaking on this side of the House, who was using a set of figures as late as were at his command; and an hon. gentleman opposite, interrupting him in a rude manner, wanted to know, "What is your authority? What are you quoting from? The hon. gentleman on this side gave him the answer, which was met with a jeer and a remark from the hon. gentleman opposite: "Oh, you had better wait till we get the official figures." He was asked when they would be ready, and he replied with all the assurance of an expectant Minister: "In about a week." That tallies with the answer the Minister himself gave in reference to it. I submit that the figures should have been entered before now. If there has been delay, as undoubtedly has been the case, blame must rest on the officials of the department, because it was the duty of the department to see that the returns were sent There must, at all events, have been sufficient information obtained to warrant the Government laying it on the Table, especially as the public press is making use of it. Information is being given to some people in regard to the returns, and yet those returns have not yet been brought down. If there are persons who desire to learn that no progress has been made in this country, I am not one of the number. I shall rejoice if it can be shown that we have increased in population and I hold, however, that outside persons prosperity, should not be in possession of information when the Acting Minister tells us that the information cannot be given to the House. It is, however, evident that some of the officials have neglected their duties. This is apparent when it is admitted by the department that some returns have just been received, the returns from Montreal. There should have been measures taken to see that the officers in Montreal completed their work earlier.

Mr. HAGGART. The Deputy Minister informs me that no information has been given to anyone outside the office. He further says that every effort has been put forward to get the returns as quickly as possible.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I recollect that I saw reference made in the press to these returns, especially as regards British Columbia, and it was said they would show the great progress made by that province. There must have been some information given, or we are to suppose that the story was manufactured out of the whole cloth.

Mr. FOSTER. Were the figures given as regards British Columbia?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No. The writer pretended to say that from official information obtained from the department that the returns would show this.

Mr. FOSTER. That appeared in a newspaper. Against that you have the statement of the deputy head that no information has been given to outside parties.

Mr. CASEY. To his knowledge.

Mr. FOSTER. That is all a departmental head can do. He can only state what he knows, and take all care possible in order to avoid information being obtained by outsiders. I do not see any reason for asking that this item should stand until some figures are brought down. The work is going on, and is being pushed forward with as much vigour as possible. I know myself that the Minister is anxious to have the returns ready as soon as possible. Why should he not be? Some hon, gentlemen think there is something which causes suspicion that for some reason or other the Minister in charge of the department is unwilling to have the information brought down. What can be gained by keeping back the information five or six days? Do we not know that the information is bound to come, that it will come down to the House as soon as it is ready, that the House will be in session long after the information is brought down? Nothing is being injured in the meantime. I see no reason for asking that the item should stand.

Mr. CASEY. It does not appear to us as if the work was going on. If it had been pushed with ordinary business promptness since April we would have had the returns from a month to six weeks ago.

Mr. FOSTER. It is no child's work.

Mr. CASEY. The delay is much longer than usual, and is an unreasonable time. The Minister has told us that within a few days returns have come in from Montreal. It is absurd to suppose that they could not have been sent before. There must have been delay either from laziness or intentional neglect on the part of some one. We cannot lay all the blame on the department, but a large proportion of it must fall on the department for not compelling the enumerators to send in the returns ear-In the case of Montreal, the Government would not be open to the suspicion of keeping back the information intentionally, because the cities have probably grown pretty rapidly, and there might be a point to be made for the Government by bringing down the returns for Montreal. There has been scandalous delay in sending in returns from that city. The number of items to be collected from residents in a city is much less than the number in the country districts, and would not occupy one-quarter of the time. Yet we have the admission that the returns from that city were received only a few days ago. The Minister of Finance says it makes no difference when the returns come down, as the House will be in session. What reason is there for believing it? We do not know but that the House will prorogue in three weeks; even if it should continue six weeks we have no reason for believing the returns will be brought down. Whenever we have reached the end of the rainbow it has moved further on. Whenever the time promised has expired we have been told to wait a few more weeks. I venture to predict that these returns will not be brought down until after the session. It makes a great deal of difference to us, as we desire to discuss them. Even if there are not complete returns, I ask the Minister that those returns which are completed should be laid on the Table. Unless there is some satisfactory reason to the contrary, we have a right to demand that these returns be laid on the Table of the House as is any public document. 🦂

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Speaking from recollection, I think, on previous occasions, when facilities for communication with different parts of the country were vastly inferior to what they are now, we received the information sought for early in July, three months after the date of taking the census. It appears to me that 6th August is a very late date, too late a date, for the Government not to be able to give us, at all events, the returns for the older provinces of the Dominion.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman's statement is pretty near correct. It was some time in July, nearly the end of the month, when the returns of the last census were made known. The department has used the utmost effort to press on the enumerators the necessity of sending in the returns at an early date, and every effort has been made to get the returns in early.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do you see any objection to submitting to the House the returns already prepared?

Mr. HAGGART. I was asking the deputy how the figures had "panned out," and whether the figures gave anything like the calculation he had made. He said it was impossible to give me any information as to how the numbers had turned out in the different provinces. I do not know whether the returns for any of the provinces have been made up. All the Deputy Minister states to me is that it is extremely objectionable that any figures should go out until the total result is known, because once a number is circulated throughout the country as the total population, it is very difficult to remove the impression.

Mr. CASEY. Nobody would suppose that this was published as the total population of the province or of the country. What we want brought down is as many counties or districts as are complete. If the provinces are not complete we do not want them. Perhaps the Minister could ascertain from the deputy, who is now present, how many counties or districts are complete.

Mr. HAGGART. The deputy states that a great number of the constituencies are complete. I asked him to give the reason why he could not have the total number ready in a shorter time than three weeks, and he says he may have it ready before that.

Mr. CASEY. We are speaking about such information as is complete.

Mr. HAGGART. I think it is extremely objectionable to bring down information without the complete returns for the whole Dominion. I would rather urge upon the department the necessity of making an effort to get it done in half the time and if necessary to employ an extra staff if the House is bound to have the information.

Mr. CASEY. The returns which are complete should be brought down now, unless the Minister can give a stronger reason than the opinion of his deputy. The House has nothing to do with that opinion, and it is for the Minister to say whether he will bring down the returns which are complete or not. The only reason given by the Minister is that incomplete returns might go abroad as representing the total population of the country. No such impression could go abroad if the returns brought down are marked "incomplete." If there is no stronger reason than that, the Government is not acting fairly by the House in not bringing down such figures as are complete.

Mr. McNEILL. What great advantage does the hon, gentleman expect to derive from bringing down these incomplete returns?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). They will facilitate that make. T discussions in this House. When a gentleman was speaking here, he was rudely asked by a gentlethan it is now. Sir Richard Cartwright.

man on the other side what he was quoting from, and when the hon, gentleman replied that he was quoting from the only data available, he was told: "You had better wait until you get the official figures." If we had the official figures even in part, it would do away with a good deal of controversy. am not referring to ascertaining the population for representation purposes, or anything of that kind, but you ought have completed the returns from many counties and from cities in Ontario which would enable us to give an approximate idea. The gentleman referred to by me pointed out that certain counties had lost their population, when the rude interruption was made, and the gentleman who made the interruption said: "You will get them in a week." He was sitting beside a Minister when he made that statement; he was not Minister himself, his age and time in the House would hardly entitle him to look for that position. Do you not see that if we had the population of these counties which are completed, discussion would be facilitated and we could have accurate information without any danger whatever to the public interest? I do not understand the returns not being in yet from the cities, for it is very strange that they could not be completed from April to August. I would like to ask the linister: Have any returns, from the city of Montreal for instance, been received at the office and sent back, for any reason or cause, to the enumerator?

Mr. HAGGART. The deputy says that none of them has been returned.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I should not have supposed that would have been permitted. It seems to me marvellous almost, that there should have been no returns received from cities so easy of excess as Montreal up to this present time, without the department finding severe fault with their officers for not having the work done more promptly. If the department had done its duty fully, I think the hon, gentleman must admit that the returns would have been complete long ago.

Mr. McNEILL. I think the information asked for is something unprecedented, and I never heard of such a thing as an incomplete return being asked for in this House. Although some gentleman on this side of the House may have spoken in a manner that my hon, friend (Mr. Paterson) does not approve of, I do not see why that is any reason that we should depart from our usual rule. Some of us would like to see the population of the villages and in our counties, and if you ask for this partial and incomplete information, I do not see where you can draw the line. If you bring down incomplete returns from the provinces and some of the counties, we might as well ask for the returns in some of the villages. It seems to me a violation of principle.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). My hon, friend forgets that when the information is published for the use of the House, it is given by counties and villages, and that is the manner in which it is now being prepared in the department.

Mr. McNEILL. But it will be complete.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What difference does that make. The information will be given by districts and each of them will be no more complete than it is now.

Mr. McNEILL. Would my hon. friend go so far as to say that he thinks it would be advisable that we should ask the Government to bring down the census of the population of a village? It is absurd.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am not so anxious to get incomplete returns, but I do think that where a large sum like this is asked for, we ought to know whether it has been carned in a satisfactory manner or not. I know for a fact, in the district in which I live, the enumerator had done the work before this House had met at all. Now, Sir, it would be very satisfactory for us to know where the blame lies. Was it the enumerators who were to blame; did they neglect their work; or was it the commissioners to whom they made the returns? I submit that before we are asked to vote such a sum as this we ought to know that. If these men neglected their duty there was plenty of time to appoint others in their place and have the work satisfactorily done. The information should surely be in our hands long before this present time. I think the Minister ought to be able to furnish this Committee with information on the point as to whether it was the enumerators who were to blame for the delay, or whether it was the commissioners, and before we are asked to vote this enormous sum we should know where the blame rests, and take some steps to remedy it.

Mr. DENISON. After all, what is all this talk about? We have had the census going on for four months, and now the Minister who is acting in this matter tells us that the whole thing can be finally completed in three weeks, or possibly in less than three weeks. He says it may be done in two weeks, and he has suggested that if the House were very anxious to have it through in less than three weeks, some extra clerks could be put on to have the work rushed through so that it could be done in a very short time. I am strongly of opinion that it would be most objectionable to have these returns published in a partial form. I saw in a paper the other day a report, which was no doubt without foundation, that the population of Toronto was in the neighbourhood of 190,000. But that is a newspaper report, and if it should turn out afterwards that the population of Toronto was 195,000, a great many people would have formed a wrong idea. That is not fair to the city, and the same may be said of the provinces. The moment the returns come, they will be added up for each province, and these imperfect figures will be sent out, and the public will take them as representing the population of the provinces. So that the publication of these partial returns would have an injurious effect. But what is all this talk about? The possibility of a delay of two or three weeks, which might be abridged and brought down to one week.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. member for West Toronto seems to cast a reflection upon the department. He says that if the return is brought down, and they find that it is not right, it will be changed.

Mr. DENISON. I said this was a newspaper report : and if you would keep your ears open you would hear what I said. As you know, these reappears in the newspapers is conjecture.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But the hon. gentleman represents that the department would bring down an incomplete report of the city of Toronto.

Mr. DENISON. I did not say an incomplete report of Toronto. I said an incomplete report of the different provinces.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon, gentleman is in a very peculiar position. He thinks that if they got a little more time, the population will be increased. I do not understand how he expects that that will be done after the enumerators have The enumerators finished finished their work. their work in Toronto a little after the House met. In the riding which I represent they finished their work in May, and I have an idea that by adding the aggregates of the different places, I could have compiled the population of that district before this myself. I do not see the reason for delay. are a great many officials engaged on this work, and I think it is reasonable that this item should be suspended until we get the return. If the Government want to force it on, of course they can do so, and we can only discuss it partially until we get the facts and figures before us. If they are bound to force the item through nolens rolens, perhaps it will be a question for consideration whether or not we should go into a discussion with the incomplete information before us. If the officials are kept out of their pay for two weeks, that is not a serious matter. Many people have to wait two weeks for their pay, and these officials in the census department are not suffering more than I think we should let this item stand until we get the information.

Mr. CASEY. My hon, friend from Toronto speaks of getting incomplete returns from cities and counties, as if we asked for them to be brought down before they are complete. We have not asked anything of the kind. We do not want the population of any city or county until it is complete; and the hon, member for North Bruce will see that we cannot have the population of his county without having the population of the townships, towns and villages in it as well. The hon. gentleman says, if it is reasonable to ask for the population of a county, why not ask that of a village, or a township, as soon as it is completed. I think the great body of the House can see the reasonableness of the distinction between the two It is of interest and importance to have the population of large cities, towns and counties, while it is of no particular importance to have the population of a township or a village. Now, the hon. Postmaster General, who has charge of this item to-day, tells us that, after speaking to the deputy, he finds that the return is very nearly complete, and that, by putting on an extra force of clerks, it may be completed in less than three weeks. Well, I have already alluded to the illusory nature of these promises. His remedy reminds me of the usual course of the departments in matters of this kind. They neglect their work till long after it should be done, and then, when the result is called for at short notice, the only remedy is to employ a number of extra clerks and pay out a great deal more money. Now, it is perfectly absurd, notwithstanding what the deputy, the ports are private until they are given out officially Minister or any member may say, to urge that the by the Minister, and until then anything that numerical count of heads could not have been com-Minister or any member may say, to urge that the pleted weeks and months ago. In my county, like others which have been heard from, the enumeration was made before the opening of this session; and I have no doubt that the commissioner, who was my opponent in the last election, and who I know is an active man, sent in his return long ago. Why not bring down those returns which are complete? If all of them are so nearly complete, the districts left uncounted can make no practical difference in the inferences drawn from the enumeration. But even if we had these papers before us now, we still have a grievance, that they have been deferred so late as my hon. friend from South Middlesex has pointed out. Before we vote this item we want to see whether the census officials have earned their money. As my hon, friend from Grey has said, one person working half the time that has elapsed since the enumeration could easily have added together all the returns from the census district to show the total figures for each county and city.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Minister says that the return will be down before the House rises, and he can shorten the time. I hold it as a reasonable proposition that this item should stand, especially as we will not thereby delay the business of the House. In fact, I do think that to allow it to stand will expedite our work.

Mr. FOSTER. Really, if we are going to ask that items should stand, we ought to do so on some fair and reasonable ground. Hon, gentlemen opposite have not advanced any reason why we should depart from the regular course and not pass this The hon, member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) ought to be happy. He has stated from his place that he has a grievance, and surely he does not want anything more. My hon, friend who has just taken his seat will surely not support the argument used by the hon, member for Elgin and others, that we must not vote this money until we know it has been earned. There is not an item in these Estimates in which we do not vote money for services yet to be performed, and if hon. gentlemen opposite take that ground they will not vote any more money at all. Is it any reason to ask for delay in voting this amount that we should wait until we get the gross figures of the popula-tion, or until some one or two members will have their curiosity satisfied as to how the figures stand in certain places? I submit that is not sufficient reason. The information will be brought down none the sooner if the item stands than if it were passed. This item is for a very small amount of the work that the census takers have to do. any one member has a right to ask that an item should stand, another has the same right, and we must be careful not to fall into that method of proceeding.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. Minister is right in saying that an item should not stand unless there is serious reason; but I submit to the hon. gentleman himself that there is really a good deal of ground for asking that this item should stand. There is probably no question in its various ramifications, both politically and as affecting the property of the country, so important as the knowledge of the distribution of population. There is good reason why it should be exhaustively discussed in committee, where a valuable check might be afforded with regard to the results of the Mr. CASEY.

is asked for. It is the more important we should. have this enumeration in view of the fact, which the hon. gentleman must remember, that in opposition to our repeated protests, the Government have not only adhered to the de jure system of taking the census instead of adopting the de facto system, but have entirely omitted to take any check to show the number of persons counted in our population under the de jure who might not be under the de facto system. know very well the general returns cannot possibly be made up for a year or two, but the mere enu-meration of the population is a comparatively small matter; and if all the returns are in, and the Postmaster General tells us they are, that could be very easily done within a week or ten days by leaving, as might properly be done, the rest of the business of the census aside until we had that single item, and that would be of very material service in our deliberations. I have abstained, in the hope I was justified in entertaining, in view of the language of the hon. Minister, that we should have this return, from alluding to the population of the country or entering into calculations concerning it, which I assuredly otherwise would have done in the course of the recent debates, had I not expected to have been put in possession of that information long before this. There is no time so convenient for threshing a question out as when we are in the Committee of the Whole, and no doubt this is a question concerning which, under our constitution, publicity should be given in advance, so that, if there is any risk of any serious error having occurred, some check should be applied. I know, as a matter of fact, that in some of our smaller towns people have been counted twice and thrice over, for this reason, that they have occupied during the time occupied in taking the census different parts of the city. For instance, they were enumerated on the 4th of April in one quarter, and on the 14th of April in another. Quite a number of such cases have at various times been reported to me, and under our system protracting unnecessarily the time during which the enumeration is taken, those double accounts might occur to a great extent, particularly in a large city. editor ought to have furnished the Postmaster General with more satisfactory reasons for this unusual delay. There is no wish to unnecessarily prolong this discussion, but I would suggest, as the matter now stands, that the Postmaster General, who cannot possibly be expected to be familiar with all the details of this matter, should take until to-morrow or the next time we meet, to look into the matter for himself, and make a statement to us as to whether it is at all possible to comply with the wishes of my hon, friends in a reasonable time, or whether it is practicably impossible for him to grant their request.

Mr. HAGGART. I expected that these questions would be asked when I came here to explain these Estimates, and I made particular enquiry on the very point which has been raised by the hon. member for Oxford. I stated that I had given the promise to the House, at the instance of the department, that the numerical returns would be ready at the beginning of August at the latest, and I supposed I would be expected to give some information and would be questioned very minutely as to enumeration as to numbers alone, and nothing else why the returns were not in, so I desired to have the assurance of the Deputy Minister, which I might give to the House, that they would be down in the quickest possible manner. The Government cannot have any objection to furnish to the House as quickly as possible the numerical statements in regard to the different provinces. I asked the Deputy Minister what was the least possible time in which this could be done, and he said he would not like to state that he could do it in less than three weeks, though possibly it might be done in ten days. That is the only information I can give to the House. I made the fullest enquiry to-day in order to get the information.

Mr. CASEY. Then I have only to refer to the remark of my hon. friend the Finance Minister, who said I ought to be happy because I have a grievance. I am not happy until that grievance is remedied, and, if the hon. Minister thinks it too much to ask that the voting of this item should be postponed until this grievance is remedied, it is strange that he should be so ignorant of constitu-tional usage and principles as that. The great constitutional principle is that no money shall be voted by the House of Commons until grievances are redressed. That is the reason why an opportunity is given to raise the question of grievances when we are going into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FOSTER. Your grievance is redressed every day.

Mr. CASEY. I suppose the hon, gentleman means that my grievance takes a new form every day. That is almost true. Scarcely a day passes without some new grievance arising against the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Then we would never get Supply from you.

Mr. CASEY. I am afraid, if they never got money until all the grievances were redressed, they would not be able to carry on much business.

Mr. FOSTER. Now your case is all broken down.

Mr. CASEY. The public have been cheated out of the information they should have had by this time, and it is proper to discuss, not only the money we are now voting, but how that money was spent which was voted last year for this purpose. It is perfectly proper to object that we do not get value for that money, and to find fault with the system under which this The hon. Minister says this is only an is possible. attempt on the part of a few individuals in order to find out the population in certain places. not an answer worthy of a Minister. The reasons are just the same as those for which a census is required at all. We want to draw a conclusion from the census, and we are informed that it is now very nearly ready. The hon. Minister says the clerks have more work now to do besides counting the heads, and this is the reason for the delay, that, instead of counting the heads first, they have been working at enumerations which are of no use for the present. The Government should have been ready this session with a redistribution based upon the number of the population. No one knows when a dissolution might take place. It might be before the redistribution takes place, and we might be going to our old constituencies without having had that redistribution. The Government should have been ready with their information by on the part of the Government or an attempt to conceal this information from the public. We have a right, when we are granting this vote, to demand some information which is in possession of the Government now, and the Government are not at all advancing business by insisting on this item getting through now. They are compelling a discussion on this subject which might otherwise be very brief, a discussion based on calculations which we may make, and a great deal of time may be lost instead of gained by the course they are pursuing. I think they would consult their interests by giving all the information they have now and by hurrying up the remainder, because this course cannot but give rise to the suspicion that there is something in the figures which they do not want to give to the public.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that the contention of the member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) is not well taken. It is that, because we have not this return, we should not vote money for the services which are being performed. It seems to me that it would be fair and legitimate to ascertain what is to be done with this money, whether it is to be properly expended, whether too much was likely to be paid for the services or too little; but to say that we have no right to vote money for work which is being done and must be done is unfair and unreasonable. If it was a matter of commerce, I could understand the hon. gentleman should have the information, but I cannot understand why he requires this information in order to enable him intelligently to vote this money. I see a very strong objection to bringing down an incomplete return, because, as many are aware, newspaper men are anxious to give information to the public, and if, say, only forty-six counties were represented in the returns for Ontario, they might add these up and publish it, and many readers would be misled, believing it to be the whole population of the How many readers of those newspapers would know that that was an incomplete return? How many would be misled? The hon, member for South Oxford gives another He says that under the de jure system we should have this return before this date, as it is four months since the census was taken, but he must have read that the census was taken as to the population on one particular day. The people are asked: Where were you on that particular day? and they have to discover where the party was domiciled on that one day. If the party had moved in the meantime and the enumerator asks where he was, he would have to give that information. He could not give the information where he was living on the 1st of July, because that was not asked; and, therefore, there is no probability of making that mistake which the member for South Oxford said he was very liable to make. if he had read the regulations under which the census were taken, he would understand that it would be utterly impossible to make such a mistake, unless it was made by the grossest carelessness on the part of the enumerator. With regard to the time, it was said that the last census were taken and the returns furnished inside of three months. But the hon, gentlemen who say that the present census ought to be completed within as short a time as the last one, forget that there is a this time. There has been either gross negligence great deal more work to be done this time, and more schedules to go over; therefore it ought to take a longer time to get the work to that stage of advancement which would enable the Government to give reliable information to the country. If there was only the same amount of work as there was in the last census, it is probable that the information would be forthcoming now, but there has been a great deal more work to do. It seems to me it would be most objectionable for the Government to give, at the present time, incomplete returns of the census, and I can see no urgent necessity why we should have complete returns before this House is called upon to vote the usual sum of money for the appropriations of the present year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to correct the hon, gentleman on one point. I have nothing to say as to what may have been the instructions given. I spoke simply of certain facts which were given to me by certain persons, saying that the particular error to which I alluded had occurred in some cases. It is utterly out of the question to say whether it occurred in many cases or But this much is clear, that if you depart from the principle of taking the population on a given day, and if you allow the population of towns, or of cities, or of places, to be taken over a number of days, just in proportion to the extent in which the population in any given locality may niove from one particular city or township to another, or from one particular district of a city to another, will the chances for mistakes be multiplied. Now, that is a matter of fact, not a matter of instruction; and it is a matter of fact on which the statements were made to me, that I have given to the Minister for what they are worth. I do not pledge myself as to their accuracy, but I do pledge myself to the fact that particular instances were given in which that mistake was stated to have occurred.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon, gentleman must remember that the law of averages would apply. If there were three or four in a particular district who did not belong there at the time their names were taken, the probabilities are that three or four others had moved out before and were never taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; as I understand it that does not apply. The information given to me was this: A particular enumerator was to do a special district in a particular town assigned to him; I think the same enumerator had the whole town assigned to him. He begins the town and counts the people in one district, and after the lapse of several days he goes to another part. Remember, he has already taken the people in that one district, and he does not go over it again. He just takes them as they were, and if any of them have moved into another district he enumerates them the second time.

Mr. HAGGART. I perfectly understand the hon gentleman. He says that parties who are enumerated in the first district had moved into the second district. Now, if a man had moved into another district and been taken again by the enumerator, some other individual may have moved out of this second district into the first district.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is possible. It would not, therefore, make a very large error, but it might make a considerable error pro tanto. Mr. Sproule.

Mr. CAMP were there for made to each?

The hon, gentleman must recollect this, that there is a distinct object, as we all know, in swelling the details of a particular county or a particular province; and it was by reason of the temptation which is offered by the de jure system, that it is desirable that the fullest information should be given at once while we are in session, and that the details of it should be laid on the Table of this House and be examined by the members and commented on by the press, if possible, before this House breaks up. The hon, gentleman will understand that, and there is a very good reason for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Quite right.

Mr. HAGGART. I may state with reference to the position of the Government in this matter, that we are determined to have the census completed in the shortest possible time. Under this vote we are now taking, we shall be able to finish the whole census, and it will be completed in a shorter time than ever a census was completed before. We intend to have the census completed to the end of the financial year. This vote will complete, as I understand it, the financial part of the expenditure, and we expect to have a larger enumeration made and more information taken for the same amount of money, than was taken ten years ago.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMILLAN. The question has been asked why we want any returns of the census before voting this item. We desire to ascertain something as to the way in which the work has been done before voting this large sum, especially when we consider the fact that the returns of the population should have been submitted to the House in July. It is admitted that the last time the census was taken the returns were submitted in July. During the early part of this session the promise was made that they would be brought down during that month, but subsequently the time was extended to August. The returns should have been laid on the Table before now, especially when you consider the work of the enumerators. Each enumerator makes his round and fills up his own rolls and returns them complete to the commissioner. The commissioner on receiving the rolls compiles the returns for his district. These are then sent to the department in this city for final computation. I utterly fail to see what injury or false impression could be created by submitting the returns as far as completed. Some statement was made with respect to the population of a county, to the effect that it would include the population of the different villages therein. making up his return each enumerator keeps the population of each village separate, and district returns are forwarded to the commissioner. The complete returns thus show not only the popula-tion of the county as such, but also of each city, town and village in it. With the large staff at work, I understand 20 hands, the returns should be here in less than 10 days if the work was earnestly entered upon and pushed forward. There should be some further statement made by the acting Minister before the item is allowed to pass.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many commissioners were there for Ontario, and what payment was made to each?

Mr. HAGGART. There were 215 or 220 commissioners. They received $4 for every 100 families; in some districts for 100 families and for others 50 families.

Mr. PATERŠON (Brant). How many general officers were there?

officers; four in Ontario.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How are they paid.

Mr. HAGGART. 85 per day and travelling expenses. They were paid till 23rd May.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Are not commissioners still being paid by the Government?

Mr. HAGGART. My information from the department is that their salaries ceased on May 23rd.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the enumeration is not completed and the commissioners' services are dispensed with, was there any necessity for their services at all? How could the Government dispense with them before the returns were all in? I understand the Montreal lists only came in the other day. The chief commissioners have been out of employment since May 23rd.

Mr. HAGGART. Their chief business was to organize and instruct the commissioners.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Who instructed the commissioners in the Montreal district, whose reports are just received?

Mr. WATSON. I have seen some of the commissioners around here, and I understood they were at work. Is Rufus Stephenson still in the employ of the Government?

Mr. HAGGART. No.

When did his services Mr. McMULLEN. cease?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand from the department that his services ceased on 23rd May.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It would be well to allow this item to stand over until full information was obtained without assumptions being made by the acting Minister. I do not blame the hon, gentleman, because he has charge of another department, but the item should stand over until he could look

Mr. HAGGART. The gentleman who looks after that part of the statistics, the census commissioner, states that the commissioners ceased being paid on 23rd May last, Rufus Stephenson among the rest.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand there are both census commissioners and enumerators. To which class does the Minister refer?

Mr. HAGGART. I refer to the census commissioners. The chief officers' duties ceased on 23rd May last.

Mr. McMULLEN. What was the allowance paid to the enumerators?

Mr. HAGGART. 3 cents for every name, 15 cents for every farm, 20 cents for every industrial

Mr. McMULLEN. What is allowed for property in town that is not farm property?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no allowance for that, I understand.

Mr. McMULLEN. Suppose the enumerator takes the number in a certain house, is he not allowed 15 cents for the farm that they live on?

dr. HAGGART. Yes, that is the arrangement.

Mr. McMULLEN. Suppose that man is a tenant, and the enumerator goes to the owner's house Mr. HAGGART. There were 14 principal census and gets information about the farm there; is he allowed 15 cents for that also?

> Ir. HAGGART. I understand not.

Mr. McMULLEN. My reason for putting the question is not to trouble the Minister, but to get In my own case the enumerator information. came along and he took the number in the household, and then he asked me about the farms. I gave him a list of them, and I learned afterwards that he got some 15 cents a farm, or three or four dollars in all. Did the other enumerators who went to the tenants of these farms get an additional fee of 15 cents each?

Mr. HAGGART. The gentleman who is at the head of the census says he is not allowed for that. and sometimes when they send in their bill for it, it is cut off.

Mr. McMULLEN. Are we to understand that it is only in the case of ownership that the 15 cents is allowed?

Mr. HAGGART. He says it is only on the place where the person in occupation gives the information that they are allowed.

Mr. WATSON. Suppose these answers do not prove to be correct, is it he or the Minister that is responsible? I think the Postmaster General, who is acting for the Minister of Agriculture, should give this information on the authority of the Minister.

Mr. McMULLEN. I can easily understand the Minister finding it necessary to have a person here to give information, and I do not object to that. The Minister says that where a tenant is on a farm the enumerator only gets paid for taking the number in the house, and for the crop, and so on. What is he allowed for taking the crop?

Mr. HAGGART. He gets an allowance of 15 cents where he takes that information from the party giving it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The census commissioners who got $5 a day ceased their duties on the 23rd May, did they not? Did their work commence before the 6th April?

M. HAGGART. Some time in February.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And they got $5 a day from February until the 23rd May?

Mr. HAGGART. For about four months, I believe.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then, as I understand the Minister, in addition to that there is a commissioner for each county or city, and he gets besides $4 per hundred names. He appoints the enumerators, and these enumerators get 3 cents per name or $3 per hundred?

Mr. HAGGART. He gets $4 for every hundred names, and a fixed allowance besides.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The enumerators, though appointed by him, have their allowance fixed by departmental order. Do all these different enumerators in a county hand their list when completed to the commissioner for that county?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, for that district.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it the duty of the commissioner to make the additions?

Mr. HAGGART. The commissioner has nothing to do with that; that is done in the office here.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The point I am trying to make is this: There has been very great delay in some districts, as the Minister has stated; is the commissioner, or are the enumerators for these districts, responsible for the delay?

Mr. HAGGART. The commissioner is the means of communication between the Government and the enumerators. If there is any delay the head of the department communicates with the commissioner and urges him to look after the enumerators. I was incorrect when I stated that the whole of the returns were in. I hear from the commissioner that a return from Nipissing, and four returns from British Columbia, are not in yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to enquire from the Minister whether it is the habit of the department to have the names preserved? Are these lists of names as taken preserved?

Mr. HAGGART. The lists of the names are scheduled and they have them for three or four decades past.

Mr. WATSON. Are the returns all in from Manitoha?

Mr. HAGGART. There are two from Manitoba not in.

Mr. WATSON. What districts are they from?

Mr. HAGGART. Selkirk, I believe.

Mr. WATSON. What is the name of the commissioner in that district?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Clifton.

Mr. WATSON. He was a candidate in the last election. I suppose he was too busy looking after the elections to look after the census?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of curiosity, if it would not be too much trouble, I would like to know if my own name is down as one of the citizens of Canada, for I have some considerable doubt that it is?

Mr. LANDERKIN. What instruction is given to the enumerator in reference to non-residents?

Mr. HAGGART. The instructions are printed, and have been published in every newspaper in the country.

Mr. LANDERKIN. For what length of time do they come under the enumeration?

Mr. HAGGART. The time limit is twelve months.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What does the salary of a sub-commissioner in a riding amount to?

Mr. HAGGART. There are no sub-commissioners. There is only a commissioner for each riding.

Mr. LANDERKIN. There are seven or eight chief commissioners, and surely there must be subcommissioners.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. Minister say how many columns have to be filled up by the enumerators?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Mr. HAGGART. Twenty-two.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If these returns are not in—three from British Columbia, two from Manitoba, and one or two from some other places, how can the department be sure that they will be in within ten days or three weeks?

Mr. HAGGART. We could telegraph to the commissioners and get them, and in that way the chief commissioner might make a return similar to that which was made when the last census was taken. That could be obtained in two or three days.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It would not be quite a complete return.

Mr. HAGGART. It would not be quite complete, but it would be the same as the return made at the time of the last census.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). My hon, friend from Toronto would object to that.

Mr. DENISON. No, that would be sufficiently complete for me.

Mr. FRASER. I venture to suggest that no such return should be given. I do not think the department should depend on telegrams for any of the census returns. While I am satisfied that the work might have been completed before this, considering the number of officials at work upon them, I am equally of opinion that it would be a mistake to publish any other than authentic returns. If you publish partial or incomplete returns, we all know that they will be accepted as the correct The census is a matter of great importance to the country, and I do not think any partial return should be made. None but authentic returns should be published, but at the same time I think they should be published immediately, and if there are not enough men employed let the department get more. The census is a matter of too much importance to be kept back, but let it be authentic when it comes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As to this vexed question of the de jure system, I want to understand from the Minister whether any limitation was laid down in the instructions given to the enumerators as to the length of time they would consider sufficient to warrant them in including a person as one of the inhabitants of Canada? What precautions were taken, in other words, that the de jure system should not be abused by persons who did not really belong to Canada?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that instructions given to the enumerators were that no one was to be taken who was absent more than twelve months.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon, gentleman is probably aware that complaints were made, and I think that in some cases they were well founded, that in the last census persons who had been absent from Canada for five or seven years, and in some instances for longer periods, were put down as de jure inhabitants of Canada.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understand that a person who was absent for over twelve months, but who expressed his intention to return, would be enumerated. Is that correct?

Mr. HAGGART. I believe it is.

Mr. TROW. I understand that the census enumerators in the County of Perth put no question as to whether any member of the family resided in the United States or in Timbuctoo. They merely asked whether he had been in that homestead within the past twelve months, and did not ask whether he intended to return or otherwise. So that we shall have included in the census a great number of non-residents, probably as many as 100,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I am informed that the enumerators were all instructed to ask that question.

Mr. McMULLEN. I know that the enumerator in my section in some cases, where any members of a family had been absent a considerable time, put the question whether they intended to return or not; and if the head of the house intimated that they did, I understand that they were enumerated.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that that is correct. That was the instruction the enumerators got.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Can the hon. Minister his reward very suddenly. state at what date the county commissioners were appointed?

Mr. FRASER. Were the appointed?

Mr. HAGGART. About the 9th or 10th of March.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In view of what the hon. Minister has stated, if a parent chose to think or say that he expected the absent members of his family to return, would it not be quite possible for persons who have been absent for more than twelve months, even for five or six years, to be enumerated as citizens of Canada?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand from the commissioner that there are very few of those cases.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But still it would be quite possible.

Mr. HAGGART. What the hon, gentleman wishes would be a column showing the number of those cases.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is what I did suggest more than once, a year or two ago. It would be an item of information of great value in checking the accuracy of the returns. Is there a possibility of having such a column?

Mr. HAGGART. They are not making a report of those.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They could not possibly do it now?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand that they cannot. I understand at the same time that the cases are very rare.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That might be in certain localities, and in certain other localities it might not. Without any intention to deceive the enumerators, it is a natural thing for parents to hope their children will return, and a very considerable number in certain localities might be so included; but, as I understand, the instructions to the enumerators were, that they were not to enumerate anybody who has been absent more than twelve months, unless told by the parents or some relation that they would return.,

Mr. HAGGART. That they were positive they were going to return.

Mr. TROW. Were there any definite instructure been taken that system has been followed. That tions given to the census commissioners to direct they happened to be here just before the election the enumerators that the roll should be completed on or before a certain day, except in the case of districts such as Algoma, where the settlers are very remote from each other?

Mr. HAGGART. There was no possibility of having that carried out. In some districts it would be totally impossible.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Who is the commissioner for North Brant?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember his name.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. Was it Mr. Robert Hamilton?

Mr. HAGGART. He was one of the commissioners, but I do not remember whether for North or South Brant.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Who recommended his appointment; because he was the Government candidate in North Brant on the 5th of March, and was appointed commissioner on the 9th? He got his reward very suddenly.

Mr. FRASER. Were these census commissioners permitted to take any part in elections, when travelling through the country at the expense of the Government to gain information?

Mr. HAGGART. There is no report as to whether they did or not at the department.

Mr. FRASER. Were the instructions from the Government that they should take no part, either in Dominion or local elections, while travelling in Government pay?

Mr. HAGGART. They had no such instructions.

Mr. FRASER. Such instructions ought to be given them when next appointed, because the commissioner of Nova Scotia did take a lively part in the local election in Antigonish. I think that is a matter the Government should call attention to.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the hon. Postmaster General why these appointments of census commissioners were made during the election, and how it came there happened to have been a convention of them held at Ottawa, no doubt to receive instructions for their conduct during the campaign, and how it came that extreme partizans were appointed?

Mr. HAGGART. I was not aware that any partizans were appointed as commissioners. I thought they were a very efficient body.

Mr. MULOCK. How came it that they met in convention during the election campaign in Ottawa, if they were not intended to be used for political purposes?

Mr. FOSTER. As soon as the commissioners were appointed, and they were appointed at the proper time to enable them to get a knowledge of their duties, they were called to Ottawa, and were here for six or eight days, being constantly drilled so many hours a day in their duties by Mr. St. Denis and Mr. Johnson. I know this because the commissioner for New Brunswick, a friend of my own, was here at that time, and I know the number of hours he was engaged in that work every day. It is impossible that these men should perform their work properly without having the preliminary training, and whenever a census has been taken that system has been followed. That they happened to be here just before the election was not because any new departure was made, but because the elections chanced to fall during that

Mr. MULOCK. I presume it was the same sort of coincidence as that which occurred in connection with the payment of the fishery bounties, when, on the eve of the general elections, great activity was manifested in that branch of the service. I think that the whole system of census appointments was made use of as a political lever during the campaign. These appointments were held out and made use of for the purposes of party gain in each locality. That, however, is but in keeping with the general practice of the Administration. Not the slightest practice of the Administration. public service will be allowed to be discharged unless with the object of helping to keep a dozen men in office. The Government are using the whole public patronage for the purpose of securing You cannot look at any of the papers produced before any of the Committees without finding through them all the determination to sacrifice the public treasury for party purposes. -Almost everything that comes from a department is tinged with that motive. You will find, Sir, running through all the documents and communications from outside people the expression: If I cannot take the contract somebody else who is a good Conservative can; and this small matter, as it may seem, of the appointments to the census has been made to do service in like manner. I have been looking through a number of papers during the last few weeks, and in all these papers and in all the transactions they relate to, the same feature is presented of the public resources being used for the sake of protecting the Cabinet.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to ask the Postmaster General who was appointed the commissioner in North Norfolk?

Mr. HAGGART. The Deputy Minister does not remember?

Mr. TISDALE. The hon, member knows very well.

Mr. CHARLTON. Of course I do know. That was another case where the hon, gentleman, as in the case of the appointee in King's County, who he says was a friend of his—a political friend I suppose—appointed another political friend. I suppose all the appointments have been made in that way. I do not know that it is improper, but the appointee in North Norfolk was a candidate leading a forlorn hope in the local contest, and he received his reward by being appointed census commissioner. I believe he is a very decent gentleman, but that has been the course taken by hon, gentlemen throughout. Their appointments have been made more on the ground of political influence than on the ground of efficiency.

Mr. FOSTER. Was that gentleman unfit for his position?

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not say that he was, but it is a singular coincidence that in all these cases, the appointments have been made of those who were active party workers, of those who had done or were in the future willing to do services for the party in consideration of their appointment. That has been the whole system of hon. gentlemen opposite, a system simply to advance their own interests. They have that in view on every occasion, from a contract for supplying a cord of wood | So this included all.-

up to the cross-wall in Quebec. They are wise in their day and generation, but such a condition of things is a proper subject for criticism in this

Mr. FRASER. As might be expected, the Government appointed their own friends. I do not find fault with that, but what I would find fault with is their promising to appoint too many. In one district in the county which I represent the old official was promised that he would get his office. He was a poor old man with only one leg, and of course he expected it, so he took the coach to come into Guysborough. He saw the notice that they were all to come into Guysborough on a certain day. A friend of mine was in the coach and the old man asked for a loan of $10. He said he was going to Guysborough to be instructed. Another man was on the coach, and they got into conversation, and it was discovered that my Silas Wegg and the other man were both going by the same coach to Guysborough to get their instructions for the same position. Both these men had received their promises in writing, but the poor old man who was lame had to return home. While it may be bad enough to give these positions to political friends, I would not expect anything else; but I think the Government should not be so profuse in their promises as to make two at the same time.

Establishment and maintenance of Experimental Farms.....

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). Before I commence what I have to say on this subject, I want it to be understood that, while I believe a considerable amount of benefit is derived by the farmers of the Dominion from the experiments carried on with respect to grains and feeding animals and all that, I desire to criticize this expenditure fairly and honestly. In the first place, I will go back and enquire what was the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture, when he first asked the House to purchase a site for the Experimental Farm. -On the 30th April, 1886, in answer to the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), he said:

"I think the total expenditure for the Central Farm will be something like $126,000."

It must be understood that I speak subject to correction. Some time ago I called for the amounts which had been expended up to July, but as far as I am aware they have not yet come down. Minister went on:

"One in Nova Scotia, one in New Brunswick. one in Prince Edward Island, one in Manitoba, one in the North West Territories and one in Pritish Columbia—each of these outside stations will be established at a cost of $25,000 each."

In answer to another question, if he had fully considered what the annual expenditure would be, the answer was:

"Yes; the estimated annual expenditure for the Central station and the other stations will be from $30,000 to $35,000."

Then, I find again in Hansard, page 1147, of the 7th May, 1886, the Minister said:

"The total cost for the Central station will be $120,000, that is for purchasing of the land, 400 or 500 acres, for fencing, for buildings, for horses, harness, implements, machinery, trees, shrubs, chemical apparatus and fittings, a propagating house, a house for the director, and houses for the officers, and contingencies."

"Altogether, I estimate the total cost to complete the central station will be the sum named, that is, $120,000, and the annual cost will be from $12,000 to $15,000, supposing there are no returns from the farm."

these experimental farms and see whether the sum stated has not been already voted if not exceeded. In 1886-87 $91,543 was spent on account of purchase and improvements upon the central experimental farm at Ottawa. In 1887-88 there was an expenditure of $65,126. In 1888-89 these items, which previously had been given together, were separated into buildings and maintenance, and I find that that year the amount of $59,006 was spent on the buildings at the central farm and $42,308 for the rest, or in all $101,314. In 1888-90 there was expended for buildings $13,847 and $44,540 for establishment and maintenance, or $58,387 in all that year. So that, down to the 1st July, 1890, we find that the central experimental farm has cost in all $316,370. Now, when we come to calculate the running expenses for three years, we find them to be $42,000, according to the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, before the farm was established. When we deduct that sum, we find it leaves $274,373 to be spent in establishing the central experimental farm, whereas the Minister stated that it would he established for $120,000. Why this increase of $154,373 spent in establishing that farm, after taking off $14,000 for annual running expenses? I think, Sir, it is time we should call a halt and have the Government give us some explanation of the changes they have made in their first plan of conducting that farm over and above the expenditure that the Minister stated to this House he would require to establish the farm. That extravagance is something that we cannot stand for any length of time. While I believe that a certain amount of benefit is derived from that farm, that benefit does not correspond with the enormous amount of money that has been spent upon it. Then we find in the other experimental stations that they were to be established for $25,000 I find on the Nappan farm there has been spent for buildings, $15,929, for establishing and maintenance, $35,812, or $51,742; whereas the farm was to be established for $25,000. On the farm at Indian Head there has been spent $23,575 for buildings, and $23,364 for establishing and maintenance, or $46,940, when we were told it would only cost $25,000. When we come to Brandon we find that the buildings cost $6,697, establishing and maintenance, this was spent before the 1st July, 1390, and I in such soil as that, it ought to be done for 50 cents last year. Then we have in the estimates of last year $23,344.57 voted to the Agassiz farm. Besides, there was spent amongst all the farms for general purposes, $5,928. I find in the Public Accounts of last year three items in the Public Works Department amounting to $938, which makes the total drains, and boarding my men, and that is all that sum expended up to the 1st July; 1890, $480,432 the drain cost me. Where I have put in a six-inch upon those farms. Then I find we paid out last tile three feet deep it has cost something like $1 per year $110,500, so that $590,932 have been voted for rod. Now, I would like to have an explanation of the experimental farms since the year 1886, when the reasons why those drains have cost so much? I the Minister made his statement with respect to the cost of these farms. I believe, Mr. Chairman, it is time formed by day's work, or whether the work was something was done, and although an experimental let by contract? Let me say that in my experience, farm can never return revenue, it is certainly time where a farmer is going to drain largely, it pays would not be required to spend every year such enormous additional sums of money. I was very I will turn to the sums which have been voted for much pleased, when we went out one day lately to examine that farm, to find that it was in very good order; but when I came back and added up the figures, and found that the sum of $4,172 was spent in purchasing manure to put on that farm, I asked myself, where is the farmer in this country who can afford to spend such large sums of money for labour and manure to put his farm in good condition? Sir, we find that only for ordinary farm work, and for the care of stock during the last year $5,677 have been spent, and that does not include several other items: it does not include the horticultural department, nor the botanical department, nor the care of the grounds and of the shrubbery, nor the clerical assistance in the office, all which items are omitted from that amount. Now, I hold it is time the Government should come forward and give some explanation to this House of the change they have adopted in the system of conducting this farm, and why have they made changes that involve such an enormous amount of expenditure. I understood at the time these farms were established that a deputation had gone to the other side and visited many of the experimental stations in the United States, and after coming back had formed a well-matured scheme, which was brought down to this House, when the Government asked for a certain sum of money, and made the statements that I have already read to this House. Now, I would like to know what changes have taken place, and what benefits are to be derived from them beyond what were promised in the original scheme. We know that a large amount of drainage has been done on that farm, and I have never been able, up to the present time, to get any statement of the amount of drains which were made upon that farm, nor their cost. But I find in the annual report of the experimental farm that last year a mile and a quarter of drains were put in, at a cost, according to the financial statement, of $1,727. I drain largely and am pretty well acquainted with drainage. I have just figured this up to see what it would cost per rod to put these drains in. According to the statement of the department it has cost $4.31 a rod.

An hon. MEMBER. What size?

Mr. McMILLAN. I cannot tell. But even if it was a six-inch drain in-ordinary clay soil, it ought to be put in for something like $1 a rod, but where $28,488, making a total of $35,185. Remember all there is a three-inch tile two feet or three feet deep, have not taken into account the estimates voted a rod. I drain largely upon my own farm, and I have kept an account of what it cost me, and I have put in a three-inch tile drain two feet and a half deep for 47 cents a rod, including the freight upon the tiles, the drawing of them to the farm, cutting the drains, putting in the tile, filling the would like, also, to ask whether the work was per-him better to let the digging of his drain at so amount of capital account is nearly $480,000, or much per rod, while he himself sees to putting in the tile, and covering it. That is the manner in which I conduct my own farm. Now, the first question I will put, is in reference to an item of $725 which appears on page C-8 of the Auditor General's Report, for superintending heating apparatus and coal. Will the Minister explain that?

Mr. HAGGART. The coal referred to is used for the office, and for some apparatus for seed testing.

Mr. McMILLAN. Why was this item not charged to the regular expenditure of the farm? And why does it appear under the head of Public Works Department?

Mr. HAGGART. The coal is furnished by the Public Works Department.

Mr. McMILLAN. If such amounts appear under different headings, it is impossible to tell the total sum spent annually on the farm. It is a part of the annual expenditure and should so appear in the accounts.

Mr. HAGGART. The two items of heating and lighting are furnished by the Public Works Department, as is the case with all public buildings.

Mr. McMILLAN. I find also a similar item in connection with the Brandon farm, the amount being $55. I hold it is a wrong system to charge amounts to the Public Works Department which really form part of the annual expenditure of the farm.

Mr. TUPPER. Exactly the same thing takes place in connection with other services. Take the post office. By the hon, gentleman's reasoning all the supplies of wood and coal should be debited to the post office, but the items of heating and lighting belong to the Public Works Department. It is so with all the buildings of the public service. It is in one sense a charge made necessary because of a certain branch of the public service, but heating and lighting is under a separate vote and belongs to the Public Works Department. That is the reason why the Auditor General included it under that head.

Mr. HAGGART. The Auditor General would not have passed these accounts if charged against the farm. They had to pass through the Public Works Department and to be charged in the usual

Mr. McMILLAN. I hold, as a farmer, that wherever a farm is established the necessary annual expenditure thereon should be debited to the farm. I am convinced the farmers will not be satisfied if money spent on the farm annually is not included in the regular expenditure of the farm. How does it come about that such a large expenditure has been made to establish the farm, seeing that the Minister said in 1886 that it would only cost $120,000, whereas it has now cost $274,000?

Mr. HAGGART. The expenditure on capital account for the central farm and all the farms, one in each in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, North-West Territories and Manitoba, was $480,000. A return of the exact expenditure is now being prepared, in answer to an Order of the House. The amount stated by the hon. gentleman is nearly correct; but he has not deducted sufficient for annual expenses. The actual | Sunday.

about the same amount as the capital account of the Guelph farm in Ontario. The reason of the increased expenditure over the stated expenditure of the Minister was that there were other lines entered into and other experiments made which were not contemplated at the time.

Mr. McMILLAN. The statement was made that the whole farms could be established for $340,000. I have deducted $140,000 for annual running expenses, and for the first year it did not cost that sum.

Mr. HAGGART. I believe the farms have cost more than was contemplated at the time, on account of experiments being conducted on a larger scale and other lines being entered into beyond those contemplated at the time by the Minister.

Mr. McMILLAN. The cost should have been even less, as implements have come down and were even lower than at the time the statement was Farm stock was also lower. Next, in regard to drains, how is it that those drains have cost so much?

Mr. HAGGART. The cost depends on the soil through which they pass. If rock, it has to be blasted and the expense is considerably increased. I understand from the gentleman in charge that 3-inch drains can be laid for from 40 to 55 cents, and 8-inch drains for 75 cents per rod. The expense, I believe, was largely increased beyond the estimate, on account of having to blast through rock.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is no subject on which the farmers of Ontario require more information than on draining. We should have had the cost per rod of all descriptions of drains put in, and a description of the soils and materials cut through and the cost of each.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon, gentleman can have the cost per rod on the different soils. The head of the farm has kept an account of the actual expenditure.

Mr. McMILLAN. I desire an explanation of the item "J. A. Chicoign, lecturing, ten months, $1,000?

Mr. HAGGART. He was employed in the Province of Quebec, for the reason that they had no instructor here who could speak French.

Mr. McMILLAN. I see another item here of $93.69 for expenses of T. A. Sharpe in travelling. What did he purchase at the time he was travelling?

Mr. HAGGART. He is superintendent of the agricultural farm at British Columbia, and he came to Ontario to buy stock for the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN. I see an item here for $367 for John Brennan, teamster, who worked 354 days, and another item for George Davy, teamster, who worked 346 days. How do these men come to work so many days in the year?

Mr. HAGGART. They have to work on Sun-

Mr. McMILLAN. A teamster does not attend to cattle when they have a special man for that purpose. These men could not be all working on

Mr. HACGART. The superintendent says the men worked on Sundays. One of them drives on Sunday the same as on a week day.

Are they hired by the Mr. McMILLIAN. month or by the day?

Mr. HAGGART. They are paid by the week-$8 a week in summer, $6 a week in winter.

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say here, with respect to the farm at Guelph, that all the hands employed on a farm should work their regular hours except in harvest or spring, and they should only be worked extra when there is an actual necessity for it. This farm should be carried on on the same principles that every judicious farmer carries on his own farm, and there should be no extra time and working late when they are drawing hay or in harvest. These men have not to go out when it is rainy On a farm like this, the hands ought to be hired by the year and not by the day, so that you have their services all the time. How many foremen on the farm altogether?

Mr. HAGGART. There is a stable foreman, a farm foreman, and foreman of the horticultural department.

Mr. McMILLAN. If that is all the foremen you have, I do not find any fault with it. I find here that you paid $203.39 for painting implements. It may be a small item, but it would be very large if it were on a private farm for one year. Are these all implements belonging to the farm?

Mr. HAGGART. Every implement on the farm is painted each year. A painter was hired by the day and the paint bought for him. It costs at least $200 to do that.

Mr. McMILLAN. I run a farm of 450 acres and my implements are painted every year, but they are painted on wet days when the men that work the teams cannot do anything else. If this farm were worked on economic principles the same thing should be done here. I see here an item of $338 for car hire, and I understand that a team runs twice a day for parties wishing to visit that farm. Every year that I have talked about this farm, I have had the experimental farm at Guelph thrown in my face, and I thought I would go to that farm this year. I found that something like $30 was spent on the Guelph farm for car hire this year, and with the exception of $5 or $6 of that amount, the remainder was spent in taking out the Tenant Farmer Delegates when they visited this country. Seeing that a rig runs twice a day, I would like an explanation of how so much money is spent.

Mr. HAGGART. The cab-hire was for the Minister himself, and as you all know he takes out a lot of visitors almost every day to see the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN. I find that you paid $350 each for Holsteins. I have been paying considerable attention to the sale of first-class animals in the old country; and I saw within a few months firstclass animals sold for something like £50 there. However, perhaps they could not be got much cheaper in this country. I see $297 for freight on cattle and expenses, and $20.29 charged for delivery of cattle.

Mr. HAGGART. In reference to the high price that the hon. gentleman thinks was paid for cattle, I am informed that they are from 25 to 50 per cent.

gentleman himself. They were given at that reduced price for the purpose of having them placed on the experimental farm. The freight was for the whole lot of animals at different times which were brought to the farm and the Auditor General has put them all in one amount.

Mr. McMILLAN. I find that $409.78 was paid to a brewing company for loss in testing Scotch barley.

Mr. HAGGART. It was a loss caused by instructions which were given by the Minister to those brewers to purchase a certain amount of Scotch barley in order to test it for purposes of comparison with the six-rowed Canadian barley. The Canadian duty on it I believe was over $100. The amount was 500 bushels.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is a charge here for teaming drain tiles. It is only $18; but upon a well-conducted farm, that is something that ought to be done at a season when the teams are not otherwise engaged. On a farm where there are so many teams as there are on that farm, there should not be an item of this kind; and we believe that this farm should be conducted on economical business principles all through, and stand as an example. On the Nappan farm there is a charge for eighteen steers, costing $557. I see among the returns from the farm a small sum from sales. Every farm ought to give an account of the animals bought, the amount of feed they consume, and the prices realized for them, so that we might know whether it was making money or losing in these purchases. That is something that would be beneficial to the farmers of the locality where these cattle are bought, because it would enable them to test the system of feeding pursued.

Mr. HAGGART. These are the same kind of cattle as were on the central experimental farm. The returns from them were sent into the Receiver General, but the Auditor General does not publish the details of the amounts received. If they are wanted, they can be got from the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN. On each farm, when animals are purchased, I think it would be well to state their cost, their age when purchased, the cost of feed, their weight when they are sold, and the prices realized. These are points of information which would be valuable to the farmers of each locality. I see that on the Agassiz farm in British Columbia, the labourer was paid $356 for 173 days. labourer, that is a very large sum. How does it come that he gets so much more than the other labourers?

Mr. HAGGART. Labourers command higher wages in British Columbia. They have to be paid $1.75 per day, and sometimes in harvest time from $2 to $2.25.

Mr. MARA. I may say that if the managers of the experimental farm got labourers last year for $1.75 per day, they did better than ordinary farmers. The general rate is higher than that.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may be permitted to say a word in regard to this matter. I have not the slightest doubt that the gentleman in charge of the experimental farm and the Government are putting forth their best effort to benefit the agricultural interest; but I am afraid that the sum added annually on capital account to the cost of this farm is a cheaper than they could possibly be got by the hon. little in excess of what it should be. Now, that most of the buildings are built that will be required, I think great care should be taken by the Government to see that the expenditure is kept down. I amount of $626. What stuff was contained in that, understand that there is a portion of the farm that may require draining, but that should be done as economically as possible. While I think that berries that were sold to him. In answer to the this side of the House would be quite ready to encourage every reasonable experiment on this farm for the benefit of the farming community generally, at the same time it is their duty to see that money is not squandered or extravagantly expended. The remarks made by my hon, friend from Huron (Mr. McMillan) come from a person who is perfectly cognizant of all the necessary expenses connected with the management of an institution of this kind. Being a practical farmer, he is able to speak from a practical standpoint. notice by the estimates that there is a considerable increase in the vote, some $15,000 more being asked this year. Now, I am pleased to notice the experiments made on that farm; I have been out there and had a look over it; I think the general manager is making an honest effort in the interest of the farming community; but at the same time I think it is quite in place that we should strongly urge that the expenses should be kept within reasonable limits, and that we may not be called upon year after year to add largely to capital account, and thus swell up the amount that will be sunk in that institution. If hon, gentlemen keep on asking the House from year to year to grant largely increased sums, I am very much afraid that we may make another Langevin block or cross-wall, or a dredging contract of this. We do not want anything of this kind in connection with the experimental farm. We want it conducted in such a way that we shall not need to bring its secrets before an investigation in a committee room upstairs, which will be unpleasant for us and unpleasant for hon. gentlemen opposite. hon. Minister who is now representing the department is, I suppose, only there temporarily; but if he expects to answer for it in future, he will undoubtedly require to post himself in regard to it better than he is now, if he is going to meet all the questions put by my hon. friend from South Huron. While we are all anxious that the experiments conducted may be turned to good account in the interest of the farming community, we are equally anxious that no squandering of money or unnecessary expenditure should be permitted to take placein connection with that institution, so that we may not wake up at some future time to find that an enormous sum of money has been buried there without the country deriving an adequate benefit from it.

Mr. MARA. There is a good deal of dissatisfaction in British Columbia owing to the slow progress made on the experimental farm in that province. The returns which I moved for in the early part of the session have not been brought down, so that I am unable to ascertain what has been paid on capital account on each farm. there is a feeling in our province that moneys which have been voted for our farm have been expended on other farms. I know there are some excuses for the delays that have occurred, but I hope to have the assurance of the Minister of Agriculture that the works will be prosecuted with vigour and that the sum voted will be expended.

Mr. McMullen.

Mr. McMILLAN. I find that a Mr. Borthwick purchased from the Ottawa farm stuff to the and who is Mr. Borthwick?

Mr. HAGGART. It was strawberries and rasphon, gentleman from British Columbia, the amount expended on the experimental farm in British Columbia is about the same as that expended in each of the different provinces.

Mr. MARA. The buildings have not yet been crected, although the money was voted three or four years ago.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not in this vote. believe we will take a vote for that.

How comes it that Mr. Mr. SOMERVILLE. Borthwick gets all the berries? I understand a number of the other dealers complain that he is a favoured man. Are tenders asked for ?

Mr. HAGGART. The first year tenders were called for, and his was the highest. The next year there was not much demand, and he was the only one who offered. This year tenders were asked, and I believe he was the highest.

Mr. DALY. I wish to express my views in conrection with these experimental farms. I take it that the criticisms extended by the hon, member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) were made in perfect honesty and candour. That hon, gentleman has been a very successful farmer, and I am sure he is only desirous that these farms, established in his interest, and that of the other farmers throughout the Dominion, should be a success. I have not heard from the hon, gentleman that he believes they are carried on in an extravagant manner. From my personal experience, I am perfectly satisfied that the farms at Brandon, at Indian Head, and also at British Columbia, are most carefully and economically conducted. In fact it is a matter of remark to every person who visits the farm at Brandon that the manager could not conduct it more carefully and economically if it belonged to himself. I would like to direct the attention of this House and the country to what the Government have been doing in this matter. We have but to refer to the reports contained in the blue-book printed this session, in which you will see being done on the several farms. friends opposite are fond of talking about the poor farmer: but, strange to say, this item to be voted now, the total amount of which is $105,000, meets with extended criticism and objection on their part. I do not know whether the criticism of the hon, member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has been adverse to the vote or not; but it seems to me an extraordinary thing that when the Government have been making every effort to benefit the farmers by means of these experimental farms, these hon, gentlemen should continue, year after year, to criticize adversely the course taken by the Covernment. To such an extent have they carried their objections that this vote last year excited one of the longest debates we had. They appear to overlook the fact that these farms have only been established during the past few years, that the expenditure thereon has been an extraordinary one, mainly on capital account, and differs entirely from the expenditure which the hon. member for Huron and others would make in matters of this

The hon, gentleman has told us that he owns? a farm of four hundred acres, and I am aware that ! his farm is not surpassed by any in the portion of Ontario from where he comes; but it has been built by the industry of himself and his family during thirty or forty years, and the expendi-ture on capital account is the result of the savings during these years. But the expenditure on capital account on the Government farms has been made during a few years; and I defy any hon, gentleman opposite from Ontario to come forward and say that the expenditures on the farm at Ottawa or on the other experimental farms have not been made as economically as they possibly I can assure you, Sir, that the farm at Brandon is recognized by the farmers of Manitoba to-day as one of the greatest boons granted them by this or any other Government. Sir, it is a matter of common occurrence to have from fifty to sixty visitors every day at that farm. People come long distances from every part of the province, and special rates are given over the trains to those who so desire to visit it. Frequently pienics are organized in the region of the farm, so that people may visit it, and benefit by the experience they thereby Let me refer briefly to the report of Mr. Bedford, the superintendent of that farm, with reference to the question of wheat.

"Sixty varieties were sown in large plots on the experimental farm this year, thirty varieties on the higher portion of the farm, and 30 acres in the valley. The stronger lands of the valley averaged the largest yields, but the uplands gave the best samples; very little, if any. of the grain from the higher land was injured by the frost of 22nd and 23rd August, but its effects were plainly seen on the late varieties in the valley. A very striking difference was shown in its effects on different varieties of wheat maturing at the same time, the close and heavy chaffed varieties appear the least liable to injury from this cause. varieties appear the least liable to injury from this cause. White fife and white connel are striking examples of this, for although neither of these varieties were much earlier than the red fife, the samples were much better. "Tests were made of cutting wheat at different stages of ripeness, but owing to the exceptionally cloudy and wet weather prevailing during harvest, he tests were not reliable for average years."

From that quotation alone any person conversant with farming in Manitoba or the North-West will see that, in the working of these wheat tests, that farm is doing something that will be of infinite value to the farmers. Coming to the next item. which is the most important one, the question of fodder, it has been a matter of difficulty on the part of the farmers in Manitoba and the North-West, to provide every year, season in and out, whether it be dry or wet weather, fodder for their cattle. The natural grasses of the prairie give the richest possible fodder which cattle can live upon. Unfortunately, we have had dry seasons there, and in these years when farmers have not had the advantage of hay lands on their farms and have sown timothy and other grasses, they have not had the results from those grasses they would like to have. One of the experiments at the farms at Brandon and Indian Head was to find the natural grasses that would give the very best results in the feeding of cattle. Now, I find from the report of Mr. Bedford that, in relation to the cultivation of grasses, he says:

"Of the 12 varieties of cultivated grasses sown in 1889. only the following survived the winter: Tall, Hard and Meadow Fescues, Timothy and Kentucky blue grass. The Fescues made very little growth, and were only fit for pasture. The Timothy yielded about 1½ tons per acre. The Kentucky Blue grass was very thin in spring, but thickened out during summer and remained quite green until late in November. This is a very promising pasture grass. Of the clovers sown in 1889, Common Red and Lucerne, being somewhat sheltered, survived the winter and gave two cuttings, but the plots were too small for accurate returns to be obtained."

In reference to this question of clover, I may say that up to the time of the experiments which were made on the farm in Brandon, no farmer in Manitoba believed that we could successfully grow red clover or Lucerne in the province, but this shows that the farmer may be able to grow grasses of that kind in our country. Mr. Bedford says:

"In May of this year, twelve varieties of grass and nine varieties of clover were sown with spring wheat; all germinated readily and were looking thrifty when winter set

Now, as to native grasses, and it is to this particularly that I desire to call the attention of hon. gentlemen, he says:

"I have pleasure in reporting continued success with the cultivation of native grasses. The six varieties menthe cultivation of native grasses. The six varieties mentioned in my last report as having been grown successfully in 1889, survived the past winter, and have given a fair yield of fodder. All were permitted to ripen their seed. We were, therefore, unable to test their value for feed. A considerable quantity of seed of these varieties has been secured, which will be sown next spring. During the past season, several additional varieties have been sown, some of which are promising. Below will be found the names, height and estimated yield this year of the seven varieties of native grasses sown in 1889. One variety (Agropyrum tenerum) was omitted in my last report, but is included in this." the cultivation of native grasses.

I will not burden the House by giving the technical names, but I will ask hon, gentlemen to look at the report, and they will see the results in regard to the height and the estimated yield in tons. and this will show that the question, which has been a serious one for the farmer in Manitoba, of having a proper grass for his cattle, has been satisfactorily settled by the experimental farm at Brandon, so that our farmers need not wait for timothy or other grasses, but can get grasses growing on the prairies which will yield, as has been shown, to the extent of two or three tons to the Another question is that of fodder corn. I am glad to say that by the experiments which were made last year on the Brandon farm, it has been established beyond a doubt that we can raise folder corn in our province as successfully as it is raised in Ontario, and giving, I am glad to say, a better yield. Mr. Bedford says:

"Thirty-two varieties of fodder corn were grown on the farm during the past season. The seed was sown on 31st May, with a common wheat drill, in rows three feet apart, and the plants thinned out to about six inches apart in the rows. Weeds were kept down with the horse cultivator. The season being favourable, the growth was very rapid and the yield large. All the varieties were cut on 29th August. It was then cured in stocks of about 600 lbs. (green weight). The cured fodder was readily eaten by both horses and cattle."

Among these varieties was the thoroughbred white flint; which was sown on the 31st May, came up on the 13th June, and yielded 46 tons 400 pounds to the acre in tassel. That is to be found on page 254. It is certainly an extraordinary yield, but hon, gentlemen will see from that, that Manitoba cannot give way to any province in the Dominion, or any state in the Union, as far as production of fodder corn is concerned. Then as to the question of forest trees and shrubs. We find from Mr. Bedford's report, the following very interesting statement, and it is very important to the farmers in Manitoba and the North-West that they should be able to surround their homesteads with trees, and to beautify their grounds with shrubs, and so enjoy the same privileges in this respect as those which are enjoyed in the older provinces. We find this in his report:

this in his report:

"During 1889 nearly 12,000 forest trees and shrubs were planted on the farm: the greater portion of these were used in planting a windbreak on the west boundary. Owing to the drought of the summer of 1889, followed by a severe winter, 7,378, or over 60 per cent., of these have died. During the present year, 21,271 trees, &c., were received from the central farm, Ottawa, and from Nebraska; of these, 2,24 have died. The loss, however, of about 1,400 of these was, no doubt, attributable to heating in transit, leaving a loss of only 783 trees, or less than 4 per cent., chargeable to the climate.

"The trees planted in the shelter belt, on the west boundary of the farm, in 1889, were placed 9 fect apart; this year an additional tree has been placed between these, making them 4 feet 6 inches apart, and 738 yards of additional belt, 50 feet wide, has been planted. A large proportion of the trees used in the belts this year were native varieties raised from seed on the farm, and are likely to prove hardy. On this farm the following varieties of trees are found to succeed best:—native ash-leaf maple, native ash, American elm (from native seed), Russian replants and villars, eattenwards (recther green). maple, native ash. American elm (from native seed), Russian poplars and willows, cottonwoods (northern grown), alders, birch and white spruce.

"Of shrubs, the following have done well:—Asiatic maple, caragana arborescens, flowering currant, cytisus capitatus, lilac's spiraea opulifolia, bilardi and pobleme."

Now, in reference to what Mr. Bedford has stated here, there is sufficient evidence for anyone who looks at it from the proper standpoint, to show that from the experiments in regard to trees and shrubs which have been made by the farm at Brandon and the farm at Indian Head, those experiments have indicated to the farmers of Manitoba, who are most interested in this matter, that they can grow certain varieties of trees, and anyone who knows the matter and, as my hon, friends opposite have done, have farmed, will know that in the summer season, when everything is in the rush with the farmer in Manitoba, he has not the time, even if he had the means, to experiment upon these matters, and I say that in the matters to which I have referred, in wheat, in grasses, in trees, the experimental farm in Brandon has fully paid its cost in the past, and for many years to come, in giving the information to the people which it has supplied. There is another matter to which I might refer, of which Mr. Bedford speaks under the head of "Visitors to the

I take pleasure in reporting a rapidly-increasing in-terest in the work of the experimental farm, as evidenced by the large and increasing number of visitors during the summer months

"Since the completion of the different railroads centre-ing in Brandon, the advantage of this location as a site for the experimental farm is very apparent. It is within easy reach of farmers living within all portions of the pro-vince, and the system inaugurated last year by the differ-ent railroad companies, of granting reduced fares on special days, enables all to visit the farm at very little expense.

In July the county council of the municipality of Corn-

"In July the county council of the municipality of Cornwallis visited the farm in a body, and at their next meeting passed a resolution strongly endorsing the work of the farm, and advising all in their municipality to visit it.

"The British delegates, with their friends, said a visit to the farm in September. As the harvest was about over, and there was no opportunity of examining the growing crops, samples of the produce of the farm were displayed in the new barn. All expressed a deep interest in the work of the farm generally, but particularly in those experiments connected with the culture of grasses, roots and fodder plants."

Now, another matter that will show the amount of work done upon that farm, is the correspondence. Mr. Bedford says:

"The correspondence between the farmers of the pro-vince and the experimental farm is rapidly increasing. from what I have seen of that farm and from what Mr. Daly.

In 1889, 467 letters were received: 1890, 842, or an increase of nearly 100 per cent. Many of these letters are of such a nature as to occupy considerable time in answering. The correspondence and the book-keeping connected with the farm has so far been carried on by the superintendent? dent.

Then there is another benefit that the farmers have derived from this farm, and that is the distribution of seed grain. In reference to that matter, Mr. Bedford says:

"During the early spring of the past year a number of farmers throughout the province were supplied with promising varieties of seed grain grown on the farm, the amounts sent to each applicant varying from 3 lbs. to 2 bushels, quantities of 1 bushel or more being charged for at market rates. The reports so far as received from these farmers are such as to lead us to hope that the farm will prove very useful in distributing throughout the province new and improved varieties of seed grain.

"The quantity available for distribution this year is much larger, but judging from the number of applications much larger, but judging from the number of applications already received, all will be applied for."

Then another matter which has been a benefit to the farmers at large is the exhibits made at the different fairs. On this point Mr. Bedford says:

"Some of the products of the farm were exhibited at the following summer and fall fairs:—Brandon, Pilot Mound, Deloraine and Killarney.
"Samples were also sent to the Manitoba Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and were exhibited by them throughout the Eastern Provinces. The exhibit from the farm shown at the International Exhibition, St. John's, N.B., by the Manitoba Government was awarded a diploma for the best collection of farm produce." farm produce.

Then another matter is the establishment and carrying on of the various institutes, concerning which Mr. Bedford says:

"During the present winter an excellent Farmers' Institute has been formed at Brandon, the meetings are well attended and much interest shown in the subjects under discussion. Other institutes are being organized throughout the province and will no doubt be productive of much model.

throughout the province and will no doubt be productive of much good.

"Papers on the following subjects were read by me at the Brandon Farmers' Institute: 'Notes on some of the varieties of wheat tested on the Experimental Farm,' and 'The selection, treatment and method of sowing grain.'

"I attended a very interesting meeting of the Manitoba Dairymen's Association held at Portage la Prairie on January 15th and 16th, at which the following papers were read: 'Canadian Dairying.' by Senator Boulton; 'Dairying in Manitoba,' by Professor Barre: 'Grasses and Forage Plants suitable for Manitoba,' by S. A. Bedford, Superintendent of the Manitoba Experimental Farm.

"Interest in dairying and mixed farming is increasing throughout the Province, and many enquiries are received regarding the work to be undertaken in this line by the experimental farm."

Sir, I apologize to the House for having spoken at such length, but I am endeavouring to establish by these extracts from Mr. Bedford's report, that the work he is doing and the work that has been done by the central experimental farm at Ottawa, and by the farms at Brandon and other places, is bearing fruit a hundred fold, and I say that the Government did a wise thing in creating these farms, and no greater boon has ever been conferred upon the farmers in every province in this Dominion, than has been conferred by the establishment of those farms. I have proved from the report of Mr. Bedford alone that in the Province of Manitoba the farmers have received an incalculable benefit from that farm, and I am satisfied, from my knowledge of the manner in which Mr. Bedford has managed that farm, that it has been managed as economically and at as small a cost as practical farmers have told me who visited that farm, that it is only right that the Government should recognize Mr. Bedford's efforts in this connection, and his good management of that farm, by increasing that gentleman's salary, and giving him more assistance than he has at present. I will say in conclusion, that I do not think the Government of this Dominion have ever made an expenditure from which the farmers of this country will reap a greater benefit than from the expenditure they have made upon the Central Experimental Farm, and upon these other farms throughout Canada.

Mr. McMULLEN. In reply to the hon, gentleman I wish to say that if he understood me as being opposed to the expenditures on these farms, he misunderstood me. I am quite willing to encourage experiments in the interests of agriculturists of the country, and I give the Government credit for the honest effort they have made in that direction, and I hope the hon, gentleman will be still more successful. At the same time, I repeat that I hope such an economy will be practised in the future as will prevent the necessity of coming down yearly and asking for additional expenditures. I would like to ask the Minister if he can tell me the name of the person who did the painting.

Mr. HAGGART. We hire a painter by the day.

Mr. McMULLEN. Who did the painting last year?

Mr. HAGGART. The farm foreman hires the painter. We do not remember the name.

Mr. McMILLAN. I was out at the farm the other day and went over it, and I want to say that I saw some very fine varieties of grain, which, if spread among the farmers through the country, will be a great benefit to them. I see that $444 worth of grain was sold on the Indian Head farm last year, and I would like to ask if this grain was sold for seed purposes, and what system was adopted in selling it, and at what price it was sold?

Mr. HAGGART. The usual system adopted is to charge five to ten cents a bushel above market price so as to place the grain at the disposal of the farmers.

Mr. McMILLAN. There is not an unlimited quantity of grain, and I have not the least doubt that there will be a large number of applications. I will suggest that no grain be distributed until a certain time during the winter, and that the public should be notified that the grain is for sale; that no farmer will be allowed to get too much, and that he shall not get over a certain amount, according to the applications that are put in, and thereby the benefits will be spread among a larger number of farmers. I would like some explanations on one or two other items. I find at the Indian Head farm that $44.80 were received from an agricultural society. I hope the Government is not purchasing blooded stock and carrying it up to that country, and showing it against the farmers, and carrying off the prizes. I think that would be an unwarrantable proceeding. I find this item on page E-110, the first item of revenue from the Indian Head

Mr. HAGGART. That is grain, I am informed, sold by the agricultural societies.

Mr. McMILLAN. That is all right. I thought if that sum came from the source I supposed, it would be a very improper proceeding.

Mr. HAGGART. It has never been done.

Mr. McMILLAN. Very well, I believe the central farm, if conducted properly, will be a great benefit to the farmers, especially in the experiments with grain. I was very much pleased the other day in examining the different varieties of grain, and ascertaining the experiments that are being made, which I think will be a great benefit to the farmers. But the farm now has a good stock of cattle, it has a good stock of implements, and everything else, and the expenditure should be brought down to a regular basis. I would like to ask to what purpose the appropriation that is asked for this year is to be put?

Mr. HAGGART. I have not got information with regard to the buildings, for the particulars will appear under Public Works appropriation. I can give the general expenditure for this year, the total amount of which is $39,200. About $6,500 is for distributing literature. A considerable amount is for harness, &c.; then there are amounts for salaries, drainage, feed, repairs and other items. There are wages, $4,500; care of stock, $1,500; horticultural department, $1,500; botanical department, $500, and others items. With respect to the distribution of grain, I may say that the managers of the farm are very careful in that regard. About 17 or 18 tons were distributed in small parcels through the post, and where there was much demand the utmost sold to any one individual was two bushels.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the farm should cease spending money on purchase of manure. If the farm is to be of practical benefit to Ontario farmers, if large sums are to be paid for purchasing manure, besides all that is raised on the farm, then the farm can afford no guide to the practical farmer. In case they sold a large amount of seed grain a certain quantity of manure might be purchased. It must always be remembered that the ordinary farmer cannot obtain more manure than is made on his own farm. That would be in the line of the most advanced farm in the Province of Ontario, and unless the manure question on the farm is conducted on the system I have indicated, the farmers of the province will not be benefited. I desire now to call attention to a matter which is rather a disagreeable one to myself. I called in the early part of the session for a statement of the conditions under which entire horses were stationed at the experimental farm. I was told if I wanted that statement that I should have to ask it by order of the House. I did so, and the correspondence has been brought down. I was very much astonished when I read it. I have not been so much surprised at anything which has come under my attention for a long time. The best plan to adopt in regard to it is to read a part of it to the House. The first letter sent to the Minister of Agriculture is as follows:--

"The Honourable John Carling, "Minister of Agriculture, Ottawa.

"SIR,—The Haras National Company has had the honour of your visit accompanied by Professors Saunders and Robertson; you have visited our establishment in detail, you have ascertained what we have done, what kind of horses we have imported and if those horses are likely to improve our breeds in Canada; you must have left with the impression that a large capital has been spent

"If you have visited the large studestablishments of the Government in France which have been so effective in creating, improving and maintaining the famous breed of horses of that country, and making them the principal item of exportation of agricultural products, you must have remarked that we are following closely in the footsteps of the motherland of a great many amongst us. We have a Haras now in Canada, if not as numerously stocked as those of France, at all events head for head as well ed as those of France, at all events head for head as well

"To provide each season six thoroughbred stallions for the improvement of stock in the rural districts, under the direction of the Department of Agriculture and to the places mentioned by it; each mating not to cost more than $4; each horse to be taken at the places stated by an employé of the owners, at their expense, which horse will be kept and fed by the owners, and will remain all the time at their risk." the time at their risk.

The correspondence embraced here is a correspondence which passed between the Haras Company of Montreal and Premier Mercier, the company having sent a certain number of entire horses to the Province of Quebec under the same conditions as are proposed, and it appears that this document must have been sent to the Minister of Agriculture in order to influence him to enter into a similar arrangement for the Province of Ontario. Now, I will read another letter:

"OTTAWA, 10th February, 1891.

Honourable L. Beaubien, "President, Haras National Company, Montreal.

"DEAR SIR,—In answer to your letter of the 30th January last, addressed to the hon, the Minister of Agriculture, submitting a proposal of your company to place six of its horses at the disposal of the Government for the use of the different experimental farms and asking for an early reply, stating you have to prepare at once for an early spring; the terms of the agreement your company proposes being the same as those agreed to by the Legislature of the Province of Quebec for the same number of horses, also by the County of Hochelaga Agricultural Society for last by the County of Hochelaga Agricultural Society for last summer's season, I am directed to state that the Department of Agriculture will accept your offer subject to such conditions as the Minister of Agriculture may make. If this answer is satisfactory, by your informing the department that it is so, you may make the necessary preparations for the coming season. You will be informed in time when and by whom the selection of the horses will be made and how directed to the several experimental farms or elsewhere at the option of the department.

I may say that the selection was made by Professor Hodgins and Mr. T. G. Hodgins, of London. Another letter is as follows:

" MONTREAL, 11th May, 1891.

"Dear Sir.—I was very glad to-day at receiving a letter from Professor Saunders, in which he says he is well satisfied with the choice he made of our horses. I am sure they will be a credit to you wherever they go, more especially the two going to Ottawa."

"H. B. SMALL, (Sgd.)

"Secretary, Department of Agriculture.

"The Hon. Louis Beaubien,

"President, Haras National Co., Montreal."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Government has to pay $1,000 per annum for each horse; two to be stationed at the experimental farm at Otttwa, two at Brandon, one to be stationed at the experimental farm at Indian Head and another at the Nappan experimental farm in the Maritime Provinces. Those six horses are each to get a bounty of $1,000 a year or in all $30,000 is to be given to these six horses for coming to these stations for five years. This $1,000 is for each horse and the company are to let the horse serve for the sum of $4 each mating; that is each time that a service is rendered the sum of $4 is to be paid to the groom, the money going to the company besides the $1,000. Now, I have gone out to the Experimental Farm and seen these horses. I have examined them very closely, and I have ascertained how they have been appreciated by the farmers around the experimental farm. I have learned that the Percheron has served forty-four mares, and the other horse has served fifty mares, a small number indeed when we consider the small amount that is charged for a single service. I believe it is the duty of the Government to encourage improvement in every direction in agriculture and in breeding, but; wherever private enterprise in any part of the Dominion of Canada has taken any question up, and has filled the bill as far as any class of animals is concerned, it is certainly not the duty of the Government to interfere with private interests, which I contend has been done in this case. have put myself to a little trouble to ascertain the facts, and I find that there are over twenty registered entire heavy draught horses situated within a radius of ten miles of the experimental farm, and they are horses in every way superior to the heavy draught horse there. That animal is a Percheron, and let me say that every country and every part of a country adapts itself to animals best suited to the wants and interests of the farmers of that country, or that part of the country. The farmers of the Province of Ontario have had a trial of the Percherons years gone by. Being honoured with a seat on the board at the time the agricultural commission sat in the Province of Ontario and hearing the evidence of many of the best breeders of that province, the general evidence given was in favour of the Clyde or Shire horses. The evidence was that the Percheron itself was a nice animal, and that colts from the Percheron will thrive very well until they are two years old, but after that they did not come up to the standard of the cross of our Canadian mares with Clyde or Shire entire horses. Let me say from my own experience of breeding horses that these Percheron horses will not bring in the market —unless there is a very great change indeed—more than from $70 to $100, whereas crosses from a firstclass Clyde will bring from $110 to $140. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that at the present time under the McKinley Bill the horse that you will buy for $70 will pay the same amount of duty to be taken out of the country as the horse that you will buy for $140. The United States are our market for our heavy draught horses, and they are taking them from the County of Huron yet, notwithstanding the From my knowledge of breeding heavy duty. horses I say that the introduction of such an animal as the Percheron, an animal of his weight, of the amount of bone that he has got, and his lowed. It is an injustice for the Government to general get up, that he will do more to stop the do anything of this kind. I see the hon. Minister export of horses from Canada to the United States than the McKinley Bill ever will do; because, when the American comes across to buy horses, he will get a class of animals that he will purchase and pay duty on. They are not fit for drivers and they are not heavy draught animals. Public opinion is one of the best criterions you can get with respect to the efficiency and profit on any class of animals when once introduced to any country. remarks apply entirely to the Province of Ontario; the Percheron may be a good horse for the people of the Province of Quebec, but the mares that we have got to breed from in Ontario he is not the horse that is suited to us, and public opinion has so stated by them disappearing from many sections of the country where they were once used. Let me say with respect to the other horse on the experimental farm that he is not a horse that should be introduced to improve the stock of this country. There is a class of horses for which we have a profitable market in Great Britain if we had the proper stamp to send to that country. The kind of horse we want is a horse from 15½ to 16½ hands high, weighing from 1,200 to 1,400 lbs., with good flat bone and muscle, and well up in the withers and in the neck. An animal of good quality and good substance will find a ready market in England when taken there. But let me state that this carriage horse that is stationed at the experimental farm will not produce horses of this class. In the first place he is too small. He has a very nice bone and a nice body; but when you look at his front, he has not that fine appearance that a carriage horse should have; he does not show the fine neck and head which is necessary in a carriage horse going to the I have a brother in-law who has old_country. been in this country from January to the present time buying horses for the British market, and out of 125 which went to Britain 90 were taken by him to that market; so that I am well acquainted with the kind of horses required in Great Britain; and both of these animals are such that they would not be of any benefit to the individual who owned them or to those who use them for breeding pur-Any farmer who uses heavy draught horses and raises mares from them will never sell his It is the greatest folly to bring these horses stock. to this farm that has ever been perpetrated in connection with it. I speak of the Province of Ontario. I know nothing of the other provinces, and I am certain that when the farmers of Ontario find it out, they will be very much displeased at the action of the Government. There is another view of the question. Some heavy draught animals were purchased in the old country market at high prices, and every farmer in Canada had an opportunity of having their service; and at the present time there is a superabundance of heavy horses all over the country. The business is being overdone. We have animals standing all over the country this year at from $5 up to $14. I saw two animals that only served some ninety mares and earned only some $900; and yet we find the Government paying $2,000 for inferior animals stationed at the farm, so that it has cost the country $31 for every service that these horses have given, independent of what the owner has to pay. hold that it is a system that ought not to be fol-of Finance and the hon. Minister of Justice derisively smiling at what I say. It only shows the ignorance of these hon, gentlemen. It is an injustice to gentlemen who have spent large sums of money, to bring these animals into their locality and give them an inferior service; and an individual who would state that these animals are perfeet beauties and that they would please the people, states what no experienced horseman in the Province of Ontario will admit. I visited that farm in company with one of the most successful owners of entire horses in the Province of Ontario, and I hope he will give his opinion on this subject. My opinion is that this horse should not be used for breeding purposes. As a carriage horse he is too light; he is not a fast horse; he is a very poor travelling horse; he throws his front feet in such a manner that he will never command a high price. This is a question to which I have paid considerable attention. When I first heard that these animals were placed at the farm, I thought that perhaps they were to be given their keep with the man, during the season: but I find that this is not the case, but $2,000 annually is to be paid for them; and so far as the interests of even the farmers around Ottawa are concerned, they had better put their money in the stove. This is a matter of no personal interest to me, but I speak advisedly, from my knowledge ! of the class of horses that are being exported from this country. The breeding of horses is one of the most peculiar businesses in the country. It requires a very large amount of experience and knowledge, and I know that not one in ten of those who go into that business succeed. breeding of heavy draught horses in the country is overdone at the present time, while there is a lack of good carriage horses. But we do not want such animals as these. We want an animal which can be sent out at four years of age, standing 16 hands high and weighing 1,400 to 1,500 pounds. The British people do not want horses so much for speed as for good action as carriage horses and cavalry horses; and this is the only kind of horse

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Everybody knows that there is no better practical agriculturist in Canada than my hon, friend, and his criticisms on this subject certainly deserve attention. But, looking at the matter simply from a business point of view, it does appear to me to be a very imprudent act for the Government to enter into an agreement by which they will pay $30,000 for six horses for five years.

Mr. HAGGART. I may state that this subject does not properly come under this vote. A separate vote will be taken for these horses in the Supplementary Estimates. However, I may state that the Government have been impressed with the necessity of improving the breed of horses throughout this section of the country. They may have made a mistake; I am sorry to hear from the hon. member for South Huron that the breed they have selected is not the best; but he must remember, if he has read the communications addressed to the Minister of Agriculture on the subject, that out of about fifty entire horses, they made a selection of those which they thought the best. The price is the price which is fixed in other coun-

Mr. McMillan.

I believe, in Lower Canada pay. It is the price that the Government of Quebec pay, and I have been informed that it is the same price which the European governments pay for the same purpose. I suppose there is a good deal of truth in the remarks of the hon, gentleman who seems to be thoroughly posted on the subject, and I should suggest to the foreman of the experimental farm that, in making a selection next year, he should make a selection of horses which perhaps would be more suited to the wants of the country than those which the hon, gentleman complains of.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that cannot be done, as you are bound for five years.

Mr. HAGGART. No; we have the selection out of some fifty horses and can choose the six best among them.

Mr. ROWAND. It is quite true you can select from the same stable, but you cannot change the kind of horses.

Mr. HAGGART. I think so.

Mr. ROWAND. Does this company keep Clydesdale and Shire horses as well.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand they have only Percheron and carriage horses at present, but they are making importations of other kinds, and we will be able to make a selection to satisfy the hon. gentleman.

Mr. ROWAND. Would it not be well for the Government to consider whether it is wise to spend The the country's money on those animals in competition with private individuals. I have seen horses in this vicinity which would be a credit to any neighourhood-horses imported, and for which have been paid $2,000 to $2,700, and I am told there is not sufficient employment for them. have had Percheron horses in the west and have tried them. I know a gentleman who sat in this House not long ago, and who spent a good deal of money in trying to introduce the Percheron horses, which we can profitably breed for the British but he lost heavily and got out of it. That has been the experience all round in connection with this horse. As the hon, member for Huron (Mr. McMillan) has said, public opinion will decide what is best, and the market demand is the best It has come to be understood that the Percheron is a very good agricultural horse, but he is not a dray or a driving horse, and there is no market for him at all, either in the United States or in Great Britain. You cannot send the crosses from this horse with common mares to Great Britain at all. I have seen the Normandy horse, and although he would make a nice little driver he has neither the size nor the style to cross with our mares and produce the horse wanted in the British market. If you are going to carry on this thing, you had better try and find the kind of horse most popular in the country, and that kind is the Clydesdale or the Shire. For the last twenty or thirty years, those are the only horses we have a steady market for. Now, that a duty of $30 is imposed on horses under the McKinley Bill, if we wish to export to the United States we had better cultivate animals which are high priced and realize $140 for a horse instead of $70. With regard to competing with private individuals, I have had a good deal of experience in riding and agricultural societies, and tries. It is the same as the agricultural societies, I remember that in Bruce at one time we gave up the exhibition and used the money in purchasing stock; but we had not done so many years when we found private enterprise met the want, and we went back to the exhibition again. The Government will find that private enterprise is ahead of them, and that the expenditure they are making now is an expenditure which the people will not appreciate. They will find that it is an unnecessary expenditure, and that they are entering into competition with men who have been paying high prices, and have gone to a good deal of trouble to bring in such animals as the country re-There are many of our farmers who are not good judges of a horse or of any other kind of stock, I am sorry to say, and who, if they can get their foal for $4, will never pay $10, and that is the class which will patronize these horses on the farm, and the Government will find they will derive very little credit from the results of the enterprise they have gone into. With regard to farming in general, I was glad to hear such a gild-edge account of the Government farm of Manitoba. Some of the statements of the hon, gentleman (Mr. Daly) did strike me as extravagant; for instance, his statement that 46 tons of corn to the acre were obtained out there. That is away beyond anything I ever heard of before, and I think, if the hon. gentleman who made that statement had been candid enough and read the foot note appended to the report. he would have shown how that result was obtained. He would have stated that corn in the field cannot be compared to corn in a small plot. If you take two rows of corn and plant them in a plot ten or twelve feet apart, you will get double what you would get if they were planted in a field. Twelve to twenty-five tons per acre is a fair crop in Ontario, and I have seen Manitoba and think we can grow as heavy crops in Ontario as in Manitoba. am interested in these farms just as the hon. gentleman for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) is, and I want to be able to defend the expenditure when I go before the people. There are not many farmers in Ontario who would not laugh at anyone who would tell them that he could grow forty-six tons of corn to the acre, because it cannot be done in the field. This statement which the hon, gentleman read applies only to small lots, and yet he wants us to infer that in Manitoba you can grow forty-six tons to the acre. It would be better to put things in their proper light if these Government farms are to succeed and to make such statements as we will be able to defend when we go before the country.

Mr. DALY. I merely quoted from the bluebook the evidence, and if the hon. gentleman will take the report he will see in it a statement showing the results of twenty varieties of corn and the yield given by each variety, and that will satisfy him as to what the country can do in the different varieties of corn. I recollect seeing the corn myself, and I think if the hon. gentleman will com-municate with Mr. Bedford, he will get full par-ticulars and will see that the actual weight was I have nothing to say forty-six tons to the acre. with reference to the productive qualities of the soil in Ontario. I only say that is an example of what we can do in Manitoba. I am satisfied from all I can see, that Ontario is going to have a good harvest and I can assure hon. gentlemen that, from all indications, we will see the same result in Manitoba. My whole desire, in bringing this matter up establish stations.

so fully as I did, was to quote from the report of Mr. Bedford, which is very seldom read here, and to show that, so far as the experimental farms are concerned, they are a good investment on the part of the Government. In all the provinces they are managed by first class men and are economically conducted, and I am satisfied four-fold returns will be made to the people from the expenditure.

Mr. ROWAND. I would like to read the foot note to Mr. Bedford's report for the benefit of the House:

"[Note.—The weight of each variety as given is accurate, but it must be borne in mind that it is seldom that a large plot or field will give returns per acre equal to a small plot, where special care is given to the growth of the plants.]"

Mr. McMILLAN. I would like to know where the experimental stations are to be situated, and whether they are for the purpose of improving the quality of butter and instructing the farmers with regard to that article?

Mr. HAGGART. They are intended to be itinerant, travelling around, and for this year they are intended to remain five or six weeks at each place.

Mr. McMILLAN. What localities are they to visit? I suppose the Government has a scheme, or a system.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand there have been five locations selected in Eastern Ontario, and five in Western Ontario, covering the principal dairy counties. They cover the whole province. The only places the superintendent remembers are Pembroke, Belleville and Peterborough in the east, and London and Dunnville in the west, and there is also one in the Orangeville district.

Mr. McMILLAN. Do I understand that they will be established for five or six weeks in each locality they visit?

Mr. HAGGART. For the first year it is intended that they shall remain for only five or six weeks in each locality, but next year or the year after, it is intended to fix a locality and place them there.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have been long interested in butter-making, and also in cheese-making—I am a shareholder in a cheese factory. I believe that the system of bringing the farmers together and instructing them in regard to dairying is a more efficient system than to establish one of these at any one point, because if you have only six localities in the province, and the instructors are there for only six weeks, it is only a certain number who can meet and from within a certain distance; but, where they can change from day to day and from place to place, where they can get up in the morning and make their butter, and give lessons to the farmers in the different systems of skimming or putting the butter into prints or tinnets, I think that was the best scheme. That would be more beneficial than establishing stations all over the country, because the farmers are, I believe, going to continue to make a large amount of their butter at home, and that system would be more satisfactory than to

Mr. DEVLIN. Why is it that the Government have established no stations in the Province of Quebec ?

Mr. HAGGART. The instructor and special dairy commissioner are travelling in Quebec in the same way as in Ontario and are visiting all the sec-

Mr. SCRIVER. Perhaps the Minister will state in what part of the Province of Quebec this instructor is travelling now?

Mr. HAGGART. At present, or lately I believe, they have been working in the Eastern Townships.

Mr. SCRIVER. That is a pretty wide region.

Mr. HAGGART. It is, but that is as specific as I can get it. They have been down at Chicoutimi, I think.

Mr. SCRIVER. That is hardly the Eastern Townships.

Mr. FLINT. How is it there are none in the Maritime Provinces?

Mr. HAGGART. I believe there are two or three working in the Maritime Provinces on the same plan.

Mr. McMILLAN. I understand that a good deal of the instruction to be given is for the purpose of inducing the farmers to make butter in winter. I hold that the instruction given by parties who are sent out from the experimental stations should be based on the experience obtained from what they have done on those farms, what they have done in the way of winter dairying, and what they can accomplish in making good butter for the English market. There is a dairy out at the central farm which I believe is doing very good work, but I think a few firkins of that butter ought to be sent to the English market to see how it would sell there. There is no fair criterion obtained of the quality of the article unless you take it into the markets of the world, where it will meet the produce of other countries. I hope the manager of the experimental farm will see that this is a proper suggestion and one which ought to be adopted.

Mr. HAGGART. The manager says it is the intention to do that.

Mr. DEVLIN. I should like to ask if there has been a station in the County of Ottawa at any time?

That is one of the points Mr. HAGGART. which has been selected, and I believe there will be one there in the course of a few weeks.

Mr. DEVLIN. That is very fortunate, because that is a more important agricultural district than Chicoutimi.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have been sitting here pretty late night after night and I think we ought to adjourn now. I have no objection to the hon, gentleman taking this vote on immigration if he reserves the final item, which is the large one, and it is understood that a full discussion of the whole matter may take place on that item.

Mr. McMillan.

You might Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. state whether any changes of importance have been made in the other items?

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.15

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 7th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That Government Orders have precedence on Mondays for the remainder of the session.

Mr. LAURIER. I would suggest to the hongentleman, that he ought to give us at least next Monday, as there is a good deal of business on the Order paper to be disposed of.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon, gentleman must remember that on the last two Mondays we did very little business in the evening. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would be satisfied if Government Orders came after questions by members? The notices of motion were called two or three times, and we were asked in the case of several to allow them to stand.

Mr. LAURIER. Of course, I understand that the House is with the hon, gentleman, and if he presses his motion we will submit. But I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, that he should at least give Monday afternoon next, and allow us to have questions by members on every Monday as usual.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will agree to that, and the motion may be amended in that sense.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. WALLACE moved:

Mr. HAGGART. We will leave the last item. That the Return to an Order of the House of the 5th May last, for copies of the tenders asked for to construct a graving dock at Kingston; the tenders received: the reports and calculations made by the engineers of the Department of Public Works made and based on these tenders; the contract which has been entered into: the reports of the engineers which may have been made on the carrying out of the works: or the changes which may have been made in them: and also, a statement of the sums paid out to the contractors up to date, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the accordance with the recommendation contained in the Twelfth Report of the said Committee.

NORTH SHORE RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER (for Mr. Bowell) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee, on Monday next, to consider the following resolutions:

Whereas subsidies to the extent of $1,500,000 were voted by Parliament in the years 1884 and 1885, to be used in such manner that the city of Quebec and other portions of the province north of the River St. Lawrence should be reached and served by the Canadian Pacific Railway, the then existing North Shore Railway to be utilized for that purpose, and that its road-bed and other properties, as well as its equipment, should be improved so as to make that portion equal to the other portions of the Canadian Pacific Railway system: and the Government, in 1885, made an arrangement concerning the acquisition of the Pacific Railway system: and the Government, in 1885, made an arrangement concerning the acquisition of the North Shore Railway by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the aforesaid purposes, by which it was agreed that in the event of the net receipts arising from the operation of the said railway, after paying the operating expenses thereof, proving insufficient to meet the interest on the mortgage bonds of the said North Shore Railway Company, including those held by the Government of Quebec as collateral security for the balance of the price of the said railway, the Government would apply the interest on the said sum of nine hundred and seventy thousand dollars, at the rate of four per cent. per annum, in whole or in part, as might of four per cent. per annum, in whole or in part, as might be required, towards the payment of the deficiency; but that if, or when after payment of all such deficiencies, the net receipts of the said railway should be sufficient to pay the interest on the said bonds, the company would cease to have any further claim or demand upon the Government in respect of the said sum of money, provided, as regards operating expenses, that the cost of no new works or renewals of a more expensive character than existing works were when new, should be accounted as forming part of such operating expenses, unless the previous consent of the Minister of Railways and Canals had been obtained to the construction.

And whereas subsequently, with the consent of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Government applied the sum of $970,000, part of the said subsidies, to the purchase of the bonds of the North Shore Railway Company, to the amount of $1,108,626, said bonds forming part of the issue of about $5,000,000, secured by mortgage on the North Shore Railway, the balance of the purchase price of that railway by the North Shore Railway Company amounting to $3,500,000, being secured by a first charge on the said railway in favour of the Government of Quebec as vendor's lien (privilege de bailleur de fonds) and, therefore, ranking before the charge in respect to the bonds so held by the Government as aforesaid, such purchase being made on the understanding that the interest on the bonds purchased should be applied in whole or in part, if required, in payment of deficiencies in the same manner and to the same extent on the interest of the said sum of $970,000 would have been applied under the said agreement above mentioned. ment above mentioned.

And whereas since the said arrangement the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has not become liable under its provisions to pay, and has not paid, interest on any part of the bonds so held by the Government as aforesaid, the return of the company to the Government showing that the net receipts arising from the operation of the railway ofter naving the operating expresses thereof as above the net receipts arising from the operation of the railway after paying the operating expenses thereof as above mentioned has proved insufficient to meet the interest on the mortgage bonds of the North Shore Railway Company as provided for in the said agreement, and that the deficiency was $534,368.36 up to the 31st day of December, 1890, of which amount a considerable portion was expended in bridges and permanent improvements of the said railway, and the effect of the said agreement has been to remove any incentive for the company to improve the road-bed or other properties included in the lien by which the said bonds are secured, or the equipment and service.

QUESTION ON PRIVILEGE.

Mr. COLTER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to state that my attention was called yesterday afternoon by an hon, gentleman to a statement which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of yesterday, and to a very offensive article of the railway between St. Martin's Junction and Quebec, inasmuch as the expenditure thereof, although in the interest of the public, would not result to the benefit of the company, and consequently the city of Quebec and other portions of the Province of Quebec have not received the benefit which Parliament intended them to receive from the subsidies so voted.

And whereas it appears, that under the circumstances it is improbable that the company will ever become liable It is improbable that the company will ever become liable to pay interest on the said balance, and that in the meantime the object of the said subsidies will not have been attained, and it would be in the interest of the country that the said bonds so acquired by the Government, with part of the said subsidy, should be cancelled, as being an obstacle to the improvement of the road and to carrying out of the true intent and purpose of the said several subsidies.

And whereas the company has made certain renewals of And whereas the company has made certain renewals of a more permanent and expensive character than the works which were replaced by such renewals when new, and the company has proposed that if the said bonds so held by the Government should be cancelled, the company would execute a deed of arrangement in such form as might be determined by the Government, binding itself to complete and provide with all due diligence, the following works and improvements namely:—

ing works and improvements, namely:—
Rolling stock, including sleeping cars, day coaches, baggage, mail and express cars, locomotives and freight cars, of a standard equal to that used on other portions of the company's railway system, involving an outlay of about $350,000.

about $350,000.

Improvements over the whole line between St. Martin's Junction and the city of Quebec, of such a character as to bring that section up to the highest standard of the other Canadian Pacific sections, including additional accommodation for passengers at nearly every station, and increased space for the handling of freight, the lengthening of platforms and sidings, the furnishing of new sidings for the development of stone, lumber and other traffic, the substitution of iron for wooden bridges on the line of the North Shore Railway, and the construction of the following specific works, that is to say:—

(1.) In the city of Quebec:

(a) One grain elevator.

(b) One flour shed.

(c) Such local improvements and facilities as are

(a) Such local improvements and facilities as are necessary for the handling of the traffic of that city.

(2.) In Three Rivers:

(a) One small elevator.

(b) Improvements over the loop line. (c) Improvements on the Piles Branch.

The said improvements over the whole line involving an outlay of about $300,000 in addition to the said outlay an outlay of about $300,000 in addition to the said outlay on rolling stock.

The whole to be completed to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways.

Resolved, That under the circumstances, the release of the said obligation and the cancellation of the bonds would not take from the Government an asset of any real value but would not be a company to the said only real.

would not take from the Government an asset of any real value, but would enable the company to raise the unds necessary to accomplish the said works and improvements, and thus carry out the intention of Parliament in granting the said subsidies.

2. Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that on the execution by the company and the Government of a deed of agreement in such form as shall be determined by the Government, effectively binding the company to commence forthwith and to complete within such time as shall be prescribed in such deed the execution of the works and improvements, as well as to furnish the rolling stock and equipment hereinabove detailed in the fifth resolution, and on the Government being furnished with proof that the sums required to be expended under such deed of agreement, together with the sums already expended by the company in bridges and other permanent improvements of the said railway; amount to at least $970,000, the Government be authorized to cancel and destroy the said houds so purchased and now held by the Government as aforesaid, and to discharge the company from any liability in respect thereof.

which appeared in the Montreal Gazette of the same day, in which I was accused of having broken my pair with the hon, member for Northumberland (Mr. Adams). I simply wish to state that I paired with that hon, gentleman up to ten o'clock last Tuesday evening, and no longer. coming up on the train on Tuesday an hon. member of this House informed me that the hon, gentleman told him that he thought it was till Wednesday, so that I did not vote in the vote which was taken early Wednesday morning. Some time on Wednesday I saw the principal whips of the party and informed them that I had paired with that hon, gentleman only till Tuesday at ten o'clock p.m., the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) came across the floor of the House to see me, and I consented to continue the pair till Wednesday at ten o'clock. Now, as the article in the Montreal Gazette is a very offensive one indeed, I wish to contradict it. I paired with that hon, gentleman only till Tuesday at ten o'clock p.m.

CARLETON BRANCH RAILWAY.

Resolution reported from Committee of Whole. 9th July, was read the second time, and concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 158) to authorize the sale, to the city of St. John, of the Carleton Branch Railway.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Resolution reported from Committee of Whole, 31st July, was read the second time, concurred in, and referred to Committee on Bill (No. 116).

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 116) further to amend the Inland Revenue Act (Mr. Costigan).

(In the Committee.)

On section 9,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This clause enacts very much more severe penalties than now provided. In addition to the many fines, there is imprisonment as well. I suppose the Minister has given that serious consideration, but the point to which I desire particularly to call his attention is sub-section two of this section. Is it his intention that these severe penalties shall apply to anyone except the compounder himself.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; it says to anyone who exposes or offers for sale.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is what I thought. I think the Committee should give that some consideration, because it certainly appears to me to be a very stringent clause, where an innocent person might become a purchaser of some article not properly labelled, and might offer it for sale, and render himself liable to a penalty of $250 and imprisonment besides. I think that clause should not pass in its present shape. I am not finding fault with the imposition of a penalty on the compounder, whose duty it is to comply with the law, but I think it is a dangerous provision to visit with such a severe penalty an innocent purchaser who may know nothing about it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is something in the same the colline as the Act as to illicit distilling. The law is alties.

very severe against the illicit distiller, but to make the law effective it is equally severe upon numbers of innocent parties. If a still is found in the possession of a man, though it is not proved that he has used it illegitimately, he is liable to the penalties. That appears to be severe, but it is the only, way in which you can enforce the law. Of course this appears to be very hard, and perhaps we might get over the difficulty if the clause were amended. Perhaps we might strike out the words "who sells, exposes or offers for sale," and let the clause read simply "every person who removes from any warehouse." Then of course any man who would remove from the bonded warehouse of a compounder would be liable to the consequence in the same way as the compounder himself, and that would free the retailer from the consequences.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No doubt that would be better. As to the illicit still, the law is very severe, but it would be known generally that anyone who had a still in his possession would not have it legally. This, however, applies to general articles of merchandise, and the purchaser cannot possibly know whether the provision of the law has been complied with or not. I do not think there should be any penalty put upon them at all, or that they should be bound to guard against that, but I have no objection whatever to have the penalty made as large as you like in regard to the man himself, the compounder, who knows what he is doing. In the old Act I think that was guarded against. It says:

"Every person who exposes or offers for sale, or who removes from his place of manufacture, any compounded article—"

And so on. It seems to me that that section confines the penalty to the manufacturer alone, whereas here it is provided that:

"Every person who sells, exposes or offers for sale, or removes from any place of manufacture, store or warehouse, any compound article—"

That is, that an individual purchasing from a store, or the drayman who carries it away, is as much liable as the storekeeper himself. That cannot be the intention of the Minister, and I think it is sufficient that penalties should be imposed on the manufacturer, who is the only one who deliberately violates the law.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Will the hon, gentleman be satisfied if I substitute the old clause?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like the opinion of some of my legal friends on that subject.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Now, not only the manufacturer but anyone ease who aids and abets the manufacturer might be punished under this section. The hon. gentleman will see the effect of this sub-section as it now stands. If he would strike out the word "any" and put in the word "his," then it would confine the provision to the man who manufactures. Then, further, he might strike out the words "sells, exposes or offers for sale."

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am disposed to go as far as possible to meet the views of my hon. friend from Brant. I think, however, that if we were to strike out the word "any" and insert the word "his," it would be open to all sorts of abuse.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As I understand, the contention of this Bill was to increase the penalties.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then it is unnecessary to make the Act more extensive in regard to the persons affected than the former Act.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think the hon. gentleman will see that under section 2, it is not confined to manufacturers. It says: "Every person who exposes or offers for sale" is liable; or, who removes from his place of manufacture.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is just the point I want to be sure about. I am not a lawyer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Every person who exposes or offers for sale is liable, as well as every person who removes from his place of manufacture. But every person who offers for sale, though he does not remove from his place of manufacture, is liable under the law as it now stands.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I doubt if the hon. gentleman's construction of that clause is correct. I read that it would apply only to the manufacturer.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the hon. Minister is correct in his view, I want it altered. I would like to have the section amended so that it may not embrace a class of innocent persons.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Then the suggestion I made with regard to the clause in the new Bill will cover that ground, and would exempt persons who offer for sale. The hon. member for Huron wishes me to say: "Every person who removes from his place of manufacture." I cannot go that far, because it would be opening the door to abuses.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The objection of the hon, member for Huron comes in there. A person who removes from any place of manufacture might be a drayman. A merchant may send one of his clerks to the manufactory to bring him a dozen bottles of essences, or something of that kind, and the Minister brings this clerk or drayman under a penalty. I think the Minister should not try to enforce this penalty upon anyone except the compounder himself, who, knowing the law, violates it; and there should be no danger at all to an innocent person who has no means of knowing. How would an innocent person even, purchasing an article, know whether the proper brand or label was upon the article or the bottle? He would have no means of knowing. The only man who can know, the compounder himself, is the man who contravenes the law. I am not objecting to increasing the penalties, but I do not want any innocent person made liable.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). The way the clause reads now would make an innocent man liable. A drayman, or any person who is carrying stuff from a warehouse to a place of business, and who may not be able to distinguish whether there is a label on the bottle or not, or if there is a label, he may not know what it consists of, under this clause, would be liable to a penalty. The hon, gentleman should frame his clause so as to embrace only the man who has an intent to cominit the fraud.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to this point, as a layman seeking for information. I would call his attention to the clause succeeding the one we are discussing in the new Bill. The point is, that the compounder himself will know whether the article he is offering for sale, is a compound article or not. Some individual may be dealing in articles that are not compounded articles. There are certain articles concerning which it is not required to state that they are compounded, even in this very Act, and an innocent person purchasing that is liable to a penalty of $250, or to imprisonment. That is something the Minister should not insist upon. This clause ought to be framed so that the compounder himself, who is the only man who transgresses the law, and who will know that he is transgressing the law, shall be visited with penalties.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Would the hon, gentleman suggest an amendment?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would propose an amendment to cover the compounder alone. The point I take is that under the wording of this clause an innocent person is liable to the same penalty that a guilty person is, and that should not be.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If it is desired to exempt all who have not actual knowledge, we might insert the word "knowingly."

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). How will that help the hon, gentleman? Everybody who sells does it knowingly.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Everybody who knowingly sells or removes an article compounded under the provisions of this Act for which a license ought to be taken, contrary to the provisions of this Act, ought to be punished, whether he is a drayman or anybody else.

Bill reported.

SCRIP TO VOLUNTEERS—REBELLION, 1885.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved concurrence in certain proposed resolutions reported from Committee of Whole, 29th July.

On resolution 5,

Mr. DAVIN. Before that resolution is adopted, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Militia whether he has asked the opinion of the Department of Justice in regard to the claims of the St. Albert Volunteer Company?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Speaker, it was my intention when this resolution came up to tell the House that I did submit the claim of the St. Albert Home Guard to the Department of Justice, and upon the report of the Department of Justice, it was and is still my intention to deal with it as I intend to deal with the other corps mentioned in this resolution. But I am dealing in this particular case under the last resolution, and, as I explained the other day, I consider that the resolution is quite sufficient to cover the case of the St. Albert Company.

Resolutions concurred in.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 159) to make further provision respecting grants of land to members of the Militia Force on active service in the North-West.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

FRAUDULENT MARKING.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 140) an Act in restraint of fraudulent marking.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This Act, I understand, is just confined to the two articles that are mentioned in the schedule meanwhile.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is all. It takes power to add, of course.

On section 3,

Mr. COSTIGAN. I would ask to amend that clause so as to read as follows:—

Any Order in Council made under the provisions of the next preceding section shall have effect only until the end of the next succeeding session of Parliament.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That means it has force only until the next meeting of Parliament.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It drops unless a statute is passed carrying it forward.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How will the public be aware of that?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is to be published in the Gazette.

On section 4,

Mr. CURRAN. Before the Bill is reported, I should like to say that I presume it is understood that before the Bill is read the third time parties who are interested in the manufacture of white lead will have opportunities of making representations to the hon. Minister in reference to it. first clause of the Bill is considered by many in the trade to be too extensive. It is thought that the word "pure" should alone be used as the legal term to express unadulteration. The term "genuine" and certain other expressions having a legal value have a different value in trade, owing to certain brands of white lead having been sold under these terms, and as such having acquired a large value in the market, after having been introduced at great expense; and they contend that this Bill is likely to injure those brands considerably. Their conclusion is that the word "pure" should alone be used in the law as a common description to indicate unadulteration. There is also a representation with regard to the last clause of the Bill, which is held open to some objection. So that I trust that if the hon Minister has not these matters, already under consideration, he will kindly take them under consideration, and that those who are interested in this legislation may be heard before the Bill receives its third reading.

Bill reported.

DECK AND LOAD LINES.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 106) to provide for the marking of deck and load lines.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. TUPPER. I may say that this Bill has been before a Select Committee, and, as it concerns a very important subject, it has received the care-Sir Adolphe Caron.

ful attention of that Committee. It is also acceptable to the shipping interest, so much that the only two or three suggestions which were received from that interest, were in accord with the Bill, and there is only one amendment made by the Committee.

Bill reported.

QUEBEC SKATING CLUB.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to convey to the Quebec Skating Club certain ordnance lands in the city of Quebec, subject to such provisions and conditions as the Governor in Council deems proper.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DEWDNEY. Last year I introduced a . similar Bill, but there was some objection taken. One objection, I think, was that the Bill should be introduced by a resolution; another was that we were dealing with ordnance lands in an unusual way, by making free grants when it was understood they should be sold at public auction. I withdrew the Bill, and now I propose to introduce a resolution asking power to introduce a Bill, and I may state that since last session I have communicated, through the High Commissioner, with the Imperial Government in reference to the matter, and they have answered that they have no objection to our dealing with the lands as proposed. The Quebec Skating Rink Company applied a year and a half or two years ago for a piece of land to erect a rink on, with the understanding that they abandon the old rink which had been reported as being inconveniently placed as regards both the fortifications and the Parliament Buildings. The Local Government of the Province of Quebec also offered in consideration of this change being made and of the hall being kept for an exhibition hall, to give $5,000 towards its construction. This offer still stands, and the object of the Bill is to authorize the Government to transfer this piece of land upon which the new hall is to be built.

Mr. LAURIER. What becomes of the property now held by the skating rink next to the wall? Is it transferred to the Local Government?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think so.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not to be built upon.

Resolution reported.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 138) to amend the Act respecting the Supreme and Exchequer Courts.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a very important measure and one which will require some consideration. The only remark I intend to offer to the Minister of Justice is in regard to sub-section 6 of the proposed section 37:

"The opinion of the court upon any such reference shall not be considered an authoritative decision as to any question involved therein, but shall be taken and held to be advisory only; provided that, for all purposes of appeal to Her Majesty in Council, such opinion shall be treated as a final judgment of the said court."

As I understand the wording of this Bill, it is proposed that on all questions arising out of the appellate jurisdiction given to the Government and to Parliament, where the provision regarding separate schools in the provinces is concerned, on all such questions which may be referred to the Supreme Court the decision of the court is to be final and binding That is, whatever the legislaon the Government. tion referred to may be under such circumstances, if it is pronounced by the Supreme Court to be legal or not legal, or within the power of the province, that decision shall be binding on the Government, and that shall be an end of the question; but that upon all other questions arising out of the power of disallowance now possessed by the Government, if any such question is referred to this tribunal its decision shall not be final, but it shall still be in the power of the Government to exercise the right of disallowance or not. The discussion of this question may be a long one, but I submit to the Minister of Justice that at present, as the powers of the Government have been construed since Confederation, the power of disallowance can be exercised It can be exercised for political in two ways. reasons, and it can be exercised for judicial reasons also. If the Minister of Justice is of the opinion that an Act passed by a Local Legislature is not within the powers of that Legislature he can report to that effect to the Government, and the Government will, upon his report, disallow the Act. That is a judicial decision. On the other hand, if for reasons which are purely political the Government choose to disallow an Act, they can do so whether it be or be not within the powers of the Local Legislature. This is a political power, and is exercised under a responsibility to Parliament, because Parliament may subsequently approve or disapprove of the reasons given for the disallowance. In like manner the Minister of Justice, or rather the Governor in Council, upon the advice of the Minister of Justice, can give his opinion that any Act passed by the Local Legislature is not within the powers of that Legislature, and disallow it. This is a power, I submit, which, in time past, has been exercised, and, without venturing at all any criticism, has been exercised in a manner which sometimes may have been open to doubt. For instance, when an Act of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario has been passed, and when this Act has been pronounced beyond the powers of the Ontario Legislature by the Minister of Justice, however-weighty the opinion of the Minister of Justice may be, the opinion on such questions of Mr. Mowat, who is the Attorney General of that Province, is also one which is equally entitled to great consideration. I submit that there is good reason to believe, notwithstanding that the Minister of Justice, whoever he may be for the time being, has pronounced such an Act to be beyond the powers of the Legislature of Ontario, there is still reason to believe that after all the question is not free from doubt. Now, as I understand it, it is that class of cases which it is intended by this Act to refer to the court for their opinion upon them. So far, it is very proper; it is proper that this power of disallowance should exist—that is to say, the power of deciding whether an Act is within | propounded to them by the Governor in Council, 113

the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature or not should be determined upon by judicial authority after the provinces have had an occasion to be heard, and after counsel has been heard on both sides. But I submit to the Minister of Justice that if, after this has taken place, after the court has given an opinion that the Act, for instance, is within the power of the Local Legislature, if he still keeps to himself and exercises the power of pronouncing against the opinion of the court, which may take place if this section is not modified, the evils which now exist will be intensified instead of being remedied; because, certainly, if the Minister of Justice gives an opinion against an Act of the Provincial Legislature his opinion, at all events, will be challenged by the Legislature, and the Attorney General of that Legislature will pronounce in favour of his Bill. But, after all, it is only putting one opinion against another, and the prevailing authority rests with the Minister of Justice. But if, after the Act has been pronounced constitutional by the Supreme Court, the Minister of Justice takes it upon himself and reserves to himself the power to pronounce against it, it seems to me that he is defeating the very object of the Bill. The hon. gentleman will understand that I do not at all refer to political power. If the hon, gentleman has disallowed a Bill for political reasons it is of course beyond the question which is here involved; but I submit to the Minister of Justice that whenever the constitutionality of an Act has been proposed to the court for decision its decision should be binding and final, not only upon the appellant jurisdiction of the Government on matters of education, but on all other questions as well.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman has been somewhat misled by the language of the section which he referred to, and which is not satisfactory to me; in fact, I had drawn an amendment for it which I will read presently, although, even as it stands now, I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me, on reflection, that the section is hardly open to the objection which he urges. Now, it is not intended by this Bill in any way to limit the power of disallowance which is conferred by the British North America Act. All that we propose to do in this Bill is to provide for greater facilities in investigating constitutional questions than we have had before, and this will, to a great extent, lead to the settlement of these legal questions by other means than the mere report of the Minister of Justice. Under our present system the power of disallowance is exercised, as the hon. gentleman says truly, in two classes of cases; the first being cases where an Act of a Provincial Legislature is deemed to conflict with Dominion policy, or with Dominion rights, or with Dominion property. In that case an Act is sometimes disallowed. The other class of cases covers those in respect of which we deem that the Legislature has exceeded its powers. We have dealt with that class of cases nearly always on the mere report of the Minister of Justice, as the hon, gentleman has said. We have not used very much the power which now exists of referring a case to the Supreme Court for its opinion, principally because under the present practice the judges give no reasons for their decision; they simply answer categorically questions and their decision, therefore, is of little importance The conclusion of the court may be arrived at by a mere majority; it may proceed from the fact of different reasons influencing different judges, and so on. But another difficulty about the reference to the Supreme Court, especially in educational questions arising under the British North America Act, has been that there is no power to take evidence on questions of fact—as, for instance, in the case arising in Manitoba under an Act passed during the session before last by the Legislature of that province, concerning which it was contended that that legislation injuriously affected the rights of the minority. The rights of the minority had been secured by an Imperial statute which prevented any encroachment on any rights which the minority had in that province, as a matter of fact, whether under sanction of law or not, at the time of the Union: and, therefore, in submitting that Act to the Supreme Court to decide as to whether it was constitutional or not, it was absolutely necessary that there should be some investigation of the questions of fact. As to matters of that kind, therefore, the Act must be amended as we propose to do here, so as to enable the court to take evidence on questions of fact. But how does the matter arise in regard to the exercise of powers in relation to provincial Acts which are deemed to be unconstitutional? At present, in nine cases out of ten we leave to their operation Acts which are of doubtful validity, in order that the parties interested may raise the question before the courts in the ordinary way. But in cases where we think an Act is unconstitutional and its operation would create public inconvenience we recommend its After the passage of this Bill, I disallowance. take it for granted that in nearly every case of that kind, reference to the Supreme Court will be had, with a view of ascertaining what the constitutional rights of the Legislature are. Now, we must remember that in all cases referred, whether referred, as such questions were at one time, and for a long time, in England, to the judges attending the House of Lords, for their opinion, or whether referred since under statute to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, or whether referred, in Canada, to the Supreme Court of Canada, the judgment of the court is advisory only to the Executive, and the bare power of disallowance for constitutional reasons would still remain. The Executive, for instance, would ask the Supreme Court whether a statute of the Province of Ontario were constitutional or not; if the court pronounced it to be constitutional it would be most absurd. and practically impossible, for the Minister of Justice to advise that it should be disallowed, after the highest tribunal had decided that the Act was within the powers of the Provincial Legislature. Now, what we meant by putting in that section was not at all to give any kind of sanction to the disallowance of an Act on constitutional grounds, which had been declared to be constitutional, but it was intended to provide that inasmuch as by the constitution an opinion given by the Judicial Committee, or by the Supreme Court, is only advisory, no appeal to Her Majesty in Council would lie against the decision of the Supreme Court... Therefore, the object of this clause is not to make it advisory, but to make it a final Mr. LAURIER. Is it the settled opinion judgment for purposes of appeal. At the same time of the Minister of Justice that a judge the clause is awkwardly expressed, and I have had this amendment drafted to express more clearly what we do mean:

"The opinion of the court in any such reference, although advisory only, shall, for all purposes of appeal to Her Majesty in Council, be treated as a final judgment of the said court between the parties."

We simply want to make it clear that there is an appeal in so far as we can do so, but not make it less effective and authoritative.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This section enables the court to be held on 1st Tuesday of October, instead of 4th Tuesday. At present, immediately after vacation, which lasts to 1st September, there is practically another vacation till the 4th Tuesday. This was arranged to suit the convenience of the bar of the different provinces, but we have arrived at a satisfactory adjustment, after consultation with different members of the bar of the provinces, by which the courts will sit on the first Tuesday of October. That will suit the bench, I think. It will also suit the bar, for the bar of Ontario asked for the change, and all the bars are agreeable to the change, if the Maritime cases come up last.

On section 2,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The first point aimed at in this section is to obtain an appeal on the judgment of the court below granting a new trial. At present, from the refusal of the court below to grant a new trial there is an appeal; but if the court grants a new trial there can be no appeal, except on the ground that the judge trying the case has not ruled according to law. For instance, if a new trial be ordered on the ground that the verdict was against the weight of evidence no appeal would lie. So, a court below can go on ordering new trials without the possibility of the aggrieved party having any redress. We want to establish that the court has jurisdiction in cases of certiorari and prohibition.

Mr. LAURIER. In what cases? At present the court has jurisdiction in matters of habeas corpus, but only in certain limits, as I understand the Act. I suppose the hon. gentleman means that the court should have equal power to issue certiorari or prohibition in cases of the nature in which it can now issue writs of habeas corpus.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON: No. By the legislation of some of the provinces, especially New Brunswick, the courts have power to review on certiorari a great many matters in which the superior courts have no original jurisdiction. instance, important questions of assessment and taxation are reviewed by the Supreme Court of the province under certiorari, involving thousands of dollars, and there is no appeal from the judgment of the court, because its jurisdiction was originally exercised by certifrari and the suit did not begin in the court itself.

Mr. LAURIER. Is this power as to certiorari and prohibition to be exercised by way of appeal? Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

should express his dissent when he does dissent? Would he not prefer the system that prevails in other courts, of having the report of the court, and not the opinion of Mr. Justice so-and-so, and so-and-so, who may dissent. In the Privy Council and in the Cour de Cassation in France, the question is deliberated upon by the judges—and I presume that they have to settle amongst themselves that the majority must rule—the report is given as the opinion of the court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would not make it compulsory for the judge or judges who dissent to give their reasons, but I would allow it to be obtainable for them. We will say:

That any judge who differs from the opinion of the court may, in like manner, certify his opinion and his reasons.

And substitute the word "may" for "shall."

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I think that would be a mistake. If this were a court of final resort, and if there was no appeal from it, then the suggestion of the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) would be quite correct; but this is not a court of final resort, and therefore the opinion of the dissenting judge or judges, and their reasons for dissenting, and the authorities upon which they dissent, should be given as a guide to litigants as to whether it would be judicious to appeal or not. In every other court that I know of, from which there is an appeal, the judge who dissents gives his reasons, and as a general rule gives his reasons, perhaps, more fully than the judges in the majority. I do not see any reason why the same rule should not apply to the judgment of this court, when it is not final.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There may be a good deal in what the hon gentleman says, and if he can convince the hon member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier), I have no objection.

Mr. LAURIER. I would be in favour of the French system and the system of the Privy Council. I do not attach sufficient importance to it to make it a point, but if the Minister of Justice and my friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) are satisfied, I have no objection.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When I consented to change the word "may" for "shall" I was quite convinced that any judge who dissented would regard it as an instruction to him to give his reasons.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Is the section to be changed?

Mr. CHAIRMAN. No; it remains as it is.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I desire to move the Section 29 of the addition of another clause. Supreme and Exchequer Court Act makes provision for appeals from the Province of Quebec, involving less than $2,000, and there are these restrictions: the appeal must involve the question of the validity of an Act, or relate to a fee of office, duty, rent, revenue or any sum of money payable to Her Majesty, provided such appeals shall lie only from the Court of Queen's Bench. Under the present judicial system, other matters in which Her Majesty's rights and revenues are involved to the extent of $2,000 and over are sometimes adjudicated upon in other courts, and I want to give an appeal in all such cases to the Supreme Court of Canada by adding this section:

Where the matter in controversy involves any such question, or relates to any such fee of office, duty, rent, revenue or sum of money payable to Her Majesty, or to any such title to lands or tenements, annual rents, or such like matters or things, where the rights in future might be bound to, or exceed the sum or value of $2,000, there shall be an appeal from judgments rendered in said province, although such action, suit, cause, matter or judicial proceeding may not have been originally instituted in the Superior Court.

I may state that this amendment was suggested by an eminent member of the Quebec bar, who was one of my predecessors in office, and that it was shown to the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, who submitted it to his brethren and they recommended it.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand the object to be this. The circuit courts, whose jurisdiction is limited to $100, in some such cases may adjudicate on a question where future rights are involved, or upon municipal assessments, amounting perhaps to thousands of dollars, and their judgment is final; but this, I understand, is to give an appeal to the Supreme Court, though there is now an appeal from the Queen's Bench.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. At present there is no appeal at all to the Supreme Court here, if the cases do not originate in the Superior Court.

Mr. LAURIER. I would ask that the third reading of the Bill be deferred long enough to admit of this being submitted to some members of the Quebec bar.

Bill reported.

THE INDIAN ACT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 144) further to amend the Indian Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the Minister should explain why he has found it necessary to propose such a stringent amendment to the Act. He will see, by comparing it with the Act as it now stands, that it gives very great powers to one individual. The section to which it is added provides that in cases of the kind, when complaint is made to a Superintendent General, he can take cognizance of it and depute some person to attend to it. That precaution is taken, that is, that the Superintendent General himself sees that a com-plaint is made before he gives authority, but we amend this by giving power, if I understand it irghtly, to any Indian agent or the chief of the band, or a constable, to do what the section previously, in the wisdom of Parliament, saw fit to order should be done only after formal complaint had been made to the Superintendent General and his own notice taken of it. It seeems to me these are very great powers. If any person fails to comply with the order of that constable, &c., he shall, upon summary conviction, be liable to a penalty of not less than $5 and not more than $20 for every day That sumduring which such failure continues. mary conviction will mean simply that this constable tells that man to get off the land, and that, failing to do so, the man would be fined and imprisoned. I do not know what could have induced the hon. Minister to require such extraordinary powers. This will also cover the case of an Indian of the band. I know that the first section alludes to any person, or an Indian, other than an Indian of the band; but the same section to which this is added also provides that any Indian of the band illegally in possession of any land may, on complaint of the Superintendent General, have his case looked into and be removed. The hon. Minister no doubt will know that on a reserve parties may be residing on a plot of land to which, after investiga-tion, it may be found they had not a legal right, but still it will be a very peremptory thing that any constable should have the right to go to that Indian and order him off the land.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This amendment is for the purpose of imposing a fine on trespassers who, after they have once been removed from a reserve, return the second time. There is no means by which a fine can be imposed, and very often trespassers who are being put off their reserve escape without any penalty at all because of the cumbersome process necessary to be used—that is, by the Superintendent General issuing his warrant to the sheriff or some other agent appointed by him. Section 22 provides for the removal of an Indian, or any person or Indian other than an Indian of a band. Section 23 provides only for imprisonment, and then, in case the party returns, he will be notified to do so, either by the Indian agent, or constable or chief, and if he does not remove, of course he has to stand his trial before a magistrate, and on summary conviction will be fined. There is no special hardship in this, and it is necessary in many cases in the west in order to get rid of bad characters on the reserve as soon as possible.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The words in the amendment "Indian aforesaid" may be taken to apply to an Indian of the band, and I would suggest that the words be added "other than an Indian of the band."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose the Minister does not intend to adopt as a policy the right of giving the privilege to hunt and fish. Where does this apply-in the North-West?

Mr. DEWDNEY. No; principally in Ontario and Quebec. I do not know whether we have any leases in Quebec, though there was an application recently, but in Ontario we have three leases on Walpole Island, one on the Caradoc reserve, and one on the Oneida.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do the Indians want

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; and it is in their interests that this is introduced as much as in the interest of anyone.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Can the license be revoked at the will of the Superintendent General?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes; and they are only short. term leases. Our object is to protect the game and keep poachers off, and that is as much in the interest of the Indians as of the sporting community.

Mr. DAVIN. While this subject is under discussion, I would call to the attention of the Minister a matter with which he is conversant in the that prairie chickens form a very small portion of Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

North-West Territories. This and other clauses assume, and, I think, properly assume, that the Indian is capable of realizing his responsibility to the law, and the Minister knows that in the North-West at all times the Indians are allowed to shoot game and to take the eggs of game, and the result is a great destruction of the game there. I think the time has arrived when we ought to make the Indians in the North-West amenable to the game laws. Quite recently an immense quantity of eggs of game were found in the possession of Indians coming from the south of Regina, and in that way the game is being destroyed. I think that, as the Indians are found capable of obeying the law under such a clause as this and the second clause of this Bill, we might consider, and I urge it now on the Minister and on the Government that we should consider, whether the Indians should not be made amenable to the game laws as the white settlers

Mr. McGREGOR. I might ask how is the Indian going to get his living if you do that? The larger portion of the Indians live on the game and eggs which they get from the creeks and lakes and along the edges. What are they going to live on if this course is going to be adopted? Not altogether on the bacon you send out to them from Regina, which is sometimes a little rusty, and when you send them bacon they might be allowed to have an egg or two with it. When the game there is large enough to fly it generally goes to the south and is killed across the border, and I do not see why our people should not have some of it. The game laws and the fish laws do well enough in some districts, but not everywhere. Take the fishing laws: In our section of the country the people on our side of the river may use four, or five, or six nets, while on the other side they may be using one hundred and fifty nets. We are preserving the fish for the different states on our borders. They have Pennsylvania, New York, Ohio and Michigan, which have each the right to make the laws they see fit, but we are preserving the game and the fish for the benefit of the people of the south. I think the Indians should have the privilege of using the game in the season when it is in their district, before it goes to our American brothers.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think there is a good deal in what the hon, member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) says in some portions of Manitoba and the North-West Territories; where the Indians are becoming to a large extent self-supporting they realize that good results flow from protection, and in some places they are quite willing and anxious to refrain from shooting the game, especially the prairie chicken, on the reserves, and to help us to protect the game. In the far north it is very different, where the Indians are thrown almost entirely on their own resources, and it would be a great hardship-in fact, it would be impossible-to prevent them from killing game. We tried that some years ago in regard to the buffalo and found it impossible, and so it will be as to the other game. I can assure the hon, gentleman that there is a great number of Indians who do appreciate the necessity of preserving the game, especially in those districts where they are becoming selfsupporting.

Mr. McGREGOR. The hon, gentleman knows the food of the Indians, and it would require a great many of them to afford the Indians any considerable portion of food. Prairie chickens are becoming acclimated to the North-West and they do not go south in the winter. But wild geese, wild ducks, and game of that kind do, go south, and I think we ought to let these people use them.

Mr. ROOME. I think we must remember the interest of the shooting clubs in the different parts, and I would like to add the following words to this clause: "any person or persons."

Mr. DAVIN. With reference to the remarks of my hon, friend from North Essex (Mr. McGregor), I may say that the game is best preserved by the game laws, and it is bad food when out of season He speaks about taking the eggs of prairie chickens

Mr. McGREGOR. No; I said it made no difference about them.

Mr. DAVIN. I presume he would approve of the Superintendent General adopting the policy of preventing the taking of the eggs of prairie chickens, but allowing them to use eggs of ducks and geese. But he forgets that the Indians kill a tremendous quantity of ducks and geese, especially ducks, and they are good food, not only for Indians, but for the white settlers. Geese, duck and prairie chickens have been a great aid to white settlers, and constitute almost the staple food of the Indians at certain times. I agree with the Minister of the Interior that some of the Indians do appreciate a restraint like this; in fact, a man who has observed the Indians for some years back becoming traders, and bringing hay to Regina and selling it on their own behalf, and the good sense they show, and their appreciation of a civilized bargain, will come to the conclusion that they would very soon learn it was to their interest to submit to a restraint such as I have suggested.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have no objections to the amendment proposed by the hon, gentleman from North Middlesex (Mr. Roome).

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The difficulty is that the Interpretation Act would exclude those words. If we put them in here we would have to put them any need to borrow this money? in everywhere.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

BOUNTY TO FISHERMEN.

Mr. TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 152) to amend Chapter 96 of the Revised Statutes of Canada to encourage the development of the Sea Fisheries and the building of Fishing Vessels. He said: This Bill, as I explained in Committee on the resolution, is simply for the purpose of increasing the fishing bounty from $150,000 to $160,000. That is based practically on the expenditure that has been made since the Act was introduced in 1882.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SECOND READING.

second reading of Bill (No. 151) respecting The that the amount was only $72.26.

Ontario Express and Transportation Company, being read,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the time has come when this Bill may be properly read the second time and referred to the proper Committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

PICTOU HARBOUR.

Mr. TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 150) respecting the harbour of Pictou, N.S.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the hon. Minister will explain the object of the Bill.

Mr. TUPPER. It gives the harbour commissioners borrowing powers.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does this Bill create a new corporation?

Mr. TUPPER. The harbour is now under an Act creating commissioners. These commissioners are charged with certain duties, but have no power to borrow money whatever.

On section 4,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has this Bill been asked by the harbour commissioners?

Mr. TUPPER. The draft Bill was sent Yes. by the harbour commissioners to me as Minister of Marine, with a request that it should receive the sanction of Parliament. Clause 3, as in the draft, I hold over, in order to recast the clause in the form usual in harbour commissioners' Acts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the estate vested in the harbour commissioners?

Mr. TUPPER. Under clause 2 the commissioners will have power to obtain real estate on which to erect wharves.

Mr. FRASER. I should like to ask if there is

Mr. TUPPER. The necessity of the provision is apparent from the report of the commissioners. There are practically no funds available at present, and they are pressed for improvements in East River particularly, and at other places.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am only concerned in taking care that we in no sense, impliedly or directly, become in any way responsible for any money they may borrow.

Mr. TUPPER. There is no application to me to that extent whatever. The only powers asked are the ordinary powers vested in harbour trusts where local improvements are carried on by such trusts.

Mr. FRASER. Perhaps there is no need for this money. I know that the wharves about Pictou are in a deplorable condition. The ballast wharf and the wharf at Abercrombie Point both need repairs. I understand there are $3,000 or $4,000 at present in the hands of the commissioners, and they should utilize that money before borrowing more.

Mr. TUPPER. If the hon, gentleman will refer On the order to resume adjourned debate on to the Harbour Commissioners' Report he will find Mr. FLINT. It is advisable to add to this clause that the mortgages should be subject to the Governor in Council.

Mr. TUPPER. That is in the preceding sections 2 and 1.

Mr. FLINT. It should be added to clause 4 as well, especially as it gives the commissioners quite extensive power.

Mr. FRASER. I think the wharves at New Glasgow need improvements. Efforts have been made for some time to obtain money to improve the wharves. The people are satisfied there is money in the hands of the commissioners. If the commissioners state in their report that they have no money, and that all the money received by them has been expended except $72, I have nothing to say. But I am satisfied that there is money that should be utilized.

Mr. TUPPER. There is an uncollected amount of $2,000, to which the hon, gentleman refers.

Mr. FRASER. Who is the creditor?

Mr. TUPPER. I may tell the hon, gentleman that the collector of Customs for the port of Pictou is accountable for a large amount of money to the commissioners, and if the hon, gentleman wants the full particulars in relation to it I can give him the answer that the collector has made. The late secretary is also accountable for a certain amount. They have been embarrassed in that harbour for several years for want of funds, and the public are demanding the conveniences, while the answer of the commissioners has been that they cannot make any improvements there, as they have not the available cash. They ask for powers that every other board has been given without question in this House, and a year or two ago I put through a Bill for that purpose.

Mr. FRASER. I am not objecting to the appropriation.

Mr. TUPPER. There is no appropriation; this is not asking a dollar.

Mr. FRASER. I mean the appropriation by the commissioners. I know Parliament is not voting them any money.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) All I am afraid of is that they will have to, one of these days.

Mr. FRASER. While I fully agree that the improvements are necessary and ought to be made, I think the Government should call upon the commissioners to see that all moneys were collected before they empower them to borrow more. I am satisfied that if this money is borrowed it will have to be paid, and this money will never be collected.

Mr. TUPPER. I may say that the department has given full instructions with reference to the amount due.

Committee rose and reported progress.

FEMALE OFFENDERS IN NOVA SCOTIA.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 143) respecting certain female offenders in the Province of Nova Scotia.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. TUPPER.

(In the Committee.)

On the preamble,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may explain briefly that an institution for the reformation of female convicts has been formed in the Province of Nova Scotia by the community of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, a branch of the organization which exists at the city of Ottawa; and the scheme proposed by the Bill is that female prisoners who are sentenced to the ordinary penal institutions in Nova Scotia may be transferred to this institution, and kept under the restrictions which are imposed in the like institutions in the Provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia and Manitoba. The institution being formed under the auspices of ladies who are connected with the Roman Catholic Church, the operation of the Bill will necessarily be confined to convicts of that faith, and the like provisions exist, as far as that province is concerned, in relation to the Protestant Industrial School, the Roman Catholic Reformatory, and in the Province of Ontario the Mercer Institute. The Bill was introduced in the Senate, and the gentleman who introduced it there has satisfied me that every provision of the Bill is taken from some other that has been already adopted and tried under the like circumstances.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I saw in the newspapers that there was some opposition to the Bill in the Senate. Does the hon, gentleman know what the nature of it was?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As far as I have gathered from the debates of the Senate, there seemed to be some impression there that the institution might be made use of in proselytizing. I am not able to understand the force of that, and I do not think that it is open to that objection; but I think that the principal objections made in the Senate were afterwards withdrawn.

Mr. DENISON. I have no objection to this Bill, but one or two things have been pointed out to me that might be altered with benefit. For instance, in clause 2, and all through the Bill, they use the word "woman" or "girl," and it was suggested in the Senate that the word "female" would be better, because it is a term used in cases of that sort in all statutes, and it is an advantage always not to depart from old-established usage in a matter of that kind. I also notice that according to clause 9 a young offender would receive a light punishment, but not go to the institution, while an old offender would receive a heavy punishment, and go to this institution. A young girl who is committed for one year would not go to this institution because she would not come under clause -because, according to clause 9, if under the age of 16 the sentence must be for over two years, and The effect of that is not exceeding five years. this: that a young offender, and one who, to my mind, would be more likely to be influenced for good in an institution of this kind, would not go there, while an old offender, who would get a heavier punishment on account of being an old offender, would go to this institution. Then I think clause 13 might be altered. It reads:

"If any respectable and trustworthy person, being a Roman Catholic, is willing to undertake the charge of any girl committed to the Industrial Refuge, when such girl is over the age of twelve years, as an apprentice to the trade or calling of such person, or for the purpose of domestic service, and such girl is confined to the refuge by virtue of a sentence or order pronounced under the authority of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, the superintendent or superior of the rafinament of canada, the superintendent or superior of the refuge may, with the consent of the stipendiary magistrate of the city of Halifax, bind such girl to such person for any term not to extend, without such girl's consent, beyond a term of five years from the commencement of her imprisonment, and the stipendiary magistrate shall thereupon order that such girl be discharged from such refuge on probation; subject however, to the provisions of the next preceding section: Provided, that any wages reserved in any indenture of apprenticethat any wages reserved in any indenture of apprentice-ship made under this section shall be payable to such girl, or to some other person for her benefit."

This clause is confined entirely to Roman Catholics. and as the institution is, I understand, supported by the whole community, it seems to me proper and right that any person should be allowed to apprentice a young girl if respectable and trustworthy and to the satisfaction of the superintendent of the institution, no matter what religion such person may profess. It is only reasonable to allow that to be done, as this clause applies to girls over the age of twelve years; and I think, there would be little danger of proselytizing being done against the interest of the Roman Catholic Church. We know that many girls over the age of twelve years go out to domestic service, and are allowed to worship at the altar of their own church without interference. It seems to me the Committee might well consider whether this clause should not be made more general, especially for those who are over twelve.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is another objection which I see to this Bill. We are giving to this private institution the power of dealing in a very summary way with criminals. We are handing over to a private institution powers which properly belong only to the Government; and, if that is to be done, I think the institution ought, at any rate, to be subject to a much more severe and thorough inspection than is provided for by the Bill. The only clause which provides for any inspection is clause 15, which says that such reformatory and such industrial refuge shall at all times be open to inspection by an officer appointed by the Governor in Council. Now, what is the business of nobody in particular is seldom done at all, and the probability is that under this Bill there will be no inspection of this institution. I say that inspection ought to be peremptory. If you are going to give the institution the power of dealing with criminals in the way proposed, then the Government ought to take the responsibility of having a thorough, careful and regular inspection of it made; otherwise, you are opening a door to great abuse. Something that happened in the Province of Quebec a few years ago showed the need of this. An asylum of great value was burned, and statements were made, which I never saw contradicted, indicating that in that institution, which was carried on by the Catholic Church, there were not such methods in use as are applied in all modern institutions and by modern principles of govern-There had been no inspection, or if there had been it was not sufficient; and that institution was very inferior in all particulars to other similar institutions in the Dominion. This institution being conducted on somewhat similar principles it is necessary, and I think this House should insist that there should be established a thorough, regular and efficient system of inspection. Under no other circumstances would I vote to hand over to any institution, Protestant, Catholic, or otherwise, such powers as are proposed to be given by this Bill. With all the best intentions in the night, but the hon, gentleman should give notice of world on the part of those by whom the institution is to be conducted, it is quite possible, I will not say that abuses may arise, but that there may be various defects in the mode of conducting it which would be remedied if it were properly inspected. Therefore, when we reach the 15th clause I will move--unless the Government take the matter up -to the effect that there shall be such an inspection as will make the Government thoroughly responsible for this institution.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I agree with what has been said by the hon member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) as to the expediency of changing the word "woman" or "girl" to "female." I do not quite appreciate the force of the objection raised, I think, in the Senate, on that subject; but there may be something in it. As regards short-term and long-term prisoners, this institution is entirely voluntary; it is established altogether for charitable purposes, and we could hardly compel its managers to accept any class of persons whom they do not want; and it seems they do not wish to take girls unless they are sentenced for at least two years, so that they may remain long enough to become reformed and to learn some useful occupation. If the city of Halifax should contribute something out of its funds towards the support of these prisoners it will do so, and if not, it is not obliged to do so; but the city has acted on the principle of giving to such institutions about $60 for each prisoner sent there from the police court. With regard to inspection, I am entirely willing to accept any suggestion for full inspection by a competent author-I am not acquainted, except through the newspapers, with the particulars of the case to which the hon, member for Muskoka refers. I did not gather, however, from the account published, that in that institution the defects arose from the want of inspection, but I gathered that they existed notwithstanding that there was a system of inspection. However, I am entirely willing to accept an amendment on that subject. I think there cannot be too complete a provision for inspection of institutions to which persons are sent by the courts of justice. As regards clause 13, to which the hon member for West Toronto has referred, enabling the ladies of this institution to bind girls as apprentices, I shall not be able to accept his suggestion either that a Roman Catholic institution should be at liberty to bind children, male or female, to Protestant guardians, or that Protestant institutions should be able to bind Roman Catholic children. This is simply an enabling clause to enable articles of apprenticeship to be entered into. They do not desire, and would not accept or use any authority in any other way than is provided here; and the provision is a safeguard against any class of persons, or any voluntary institution of this kind, obtaining such power as in any way to change the religion of the prisoners under théir control.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I thoroughly agree with the suggestion made by the hon, member for Muskoka, and I am very glad indeed that the hon. Minister has recognized its importance. I would suggest, if the hon, gentleman intends to move an amendment to the Bill, that it should be carefully prepared, and that he should not rush it through in a hurry. The Bill should not pass through to-the amendment, so that we can see exactly what sort of inspection this institution shall be subject to. There is no doubt that where you permit the sentencing of criminals to private institutions of this kind it is essential in the public interest that the state should maintain the right to have the strictest supervision over the persons imprisoned in them; and we should see that this is carried out, not by a clause merely giving power of inspection, but by a clause so drafted that an efficient inspection shall be maintained at all time. that safeguard. I think the general scope of the Bill is one to which no objection should be taken. I would suggest to the hon, member for Muskoka that if he has not a clause of that kind drawn he should confer with the Minister of Justice in reference to it, as I consider the matter very important.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I hope the Minister of Justice will draw such a clause. As he has accepted the suggestion, I hope he will carry it out.

Mr. FRASER. I think the clause should be in the direction of providing for this institution the same inspection as all the other institutions in Halifax are subjected to—for example, the poor asylum, the Victoria hospital, and similar institutions. And all the other institutions in Halifax are subject to inspection; and I think it should be handed over to the same power to make an inspection. That would be more effective than if the Government took charge of the inspection, and I am sure to the citizens of Halifax that would be thoroughly satisfactory, because the competency of the board that makes the inspections of all these buildings will be relied upon by all the citizens of Halifax and the province.

Mr. DENISON. As the Minister of Justice has an official now for inspecting the prisons, Mr. Moylan I believe is his name, that officer might be used for this purpose.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There will be no objection to that.

On section 1,

Mr. DENISON. That is a clause to which I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister. When any woman or girl above the age of sixteen is sentenced to two months' imprisonment she may be sent to this institution; but a young girl who would be amenable to discipline, and perhaps be influenced by good example, is not allowed to be sent there, but has to go to the common gaol, and she may be sentenced to imprisonment for any term up to two years. If there is any class in the community that requires protection it is that class of innocent girls, if I may use the term, who commit their first offence. Before a criminal becomes hardened you can do something with her, but the oftener a criminal is convicted the more difficult she becomes to deal with.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When I find institutions willing to receive these persons I shall be glad to ask Parliament to give power to send them there, but this institution is not willing to receive them.

Mr. FRASER. I had not noticed section 15 when I spoke, which I find will suit the very point raised, because they have very stringent rules in Halifax with regard to the inspection of buildings, think that will cover the difficulty.

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not think it is sufficient.

Qn section 5,

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I would ask whether the term for which prisoners are sentenced in these reformatories differs from the terms to which they are sentenced if sent to a common prison?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No: we must not make it so, and I will look carefully through the Act to see that it is not made so.

On section 15.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose to let that section stand, as, in providing for the inspection of this institution I propose to provide for the general inspection of any institution which possesses such power.

On section 16,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We will let that

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would call the attention of the Minister to the terms of this section, as I do not understand it:

If an offender detained in such reformatory or such refuge becomes incorrigible, she may, on a certificate of the superintendent or superior, be removed to a penitentiary, as provided in the Penitentiary Act.

It could never be intended that a person convicted of an offence against some statute should be sent to a penitentiary on the mere ipse dixit of the superintendent of an institution. If the magistrate has not the power to send the person to the penitentiary it would never do to give the superintendent of the institution that power.

Committee rose and reported progress.

INSPECTION OF SHIPS.

Mr. TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 149) respecting the Inspection of Ships.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the Minister made a short explanation when this Act was introduced. I have really forgotten it.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will recollect that the unions of ship labourers have, for some years, been petitioning this House, and sending delegations pressing for some legislation by which the safety of seamen can be better secured, in respect, particularly, to the defective rigging of ves-I do not think that many complaints have been made concerning vessels that are engaged in ocean navigation, but in the inland waters there have been constant complaints, and the records show on some vessels that very distressing accidents have occurred. This Bill is introduced for the purpose of preventing those accidents, if possible, and we propose to take powers almost similar to the general clauses of the Steamboat Inspection Act. That applies only to boilers, &c., but this gives us charge over the whole ship. In order to prevent the necessity of imposing more dues on shipping, the hon. gentleman will see that I have avoided that by making the violation of the law a penal Act, and have imposed the duty on our officers of making inspections, and we also impose the obligation on owners, when they become aware of defective rigging, of taking the necessary precautions to repair it; and in that way I hope we will be able to meet the wishes of the sailors, and give them more protection for their lives, without at the same time imposing any burden whatever upon the ship-owners, simply insisting that they shall take every possible precaution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the ship-owner to pay for making the inspections?

Mr. TUPPER. No; the hon, gentleman will see that we put upon him the necessity of seeing that the ship is all right, and if he does not do that a penalty is exacted. Our officers, on complaint or on rumour, have power to go on board and inspect, and we notify the owner that unless he takes the necessary steps, he is liable to prosecution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no such Act I suppose, in force in the mother country?

Mr. TUPPER. There is no Act like this, but they have an Act that answers the purpose-They can stop vessels, and under their Safety of Ships Act they have greater powers in that regard than we have.

Mr. STAIRS. Does this Act apply to steamships?

Mr. TUPPER. To all ships.

On section 3,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How are the inspectors to be paid?

Mr. TUPPER. They are paid now. The hon, gentleman will see that this enables us to give additional authority to the officers we have now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But don't you propose to give them additional pay?

Mr. TUPPER. No; because the additional duty would be very small. When they are on the ship now, they inspect the hull, the engines, &c., and they can, without much trouble, do all the additional duties that we impose upon them here. For instance, I could send a general officer of my department, who is paid a salary, off to inspect a ship, but I cannot do that at present.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am perfectly satisfied the hon. gentleman will be disappointed. I do not want to see a large army of office-holders created, but I am sure, if these additional duties are thrown upon these men, the chances are that the duties will be performed perfunctorily.

Mr. TUPPER. It may be so, and we may have to come to Parliament again.

Mr. FLINT. I notice the Governor in Council is to make regulations from time to time with regard to these matters.

Mr. TUPPER. That is the usual clause in Bills of this kind; that is in the Steamboat Inspection Act. The reason is, that it is found sometimes that circumstances occur in which it is difficult to enforce the regulations, as sometimes they may be entirely too stringent. Enforcing these regulations might bear with great hardship upon the interests affected. In this way we are able to change the regulations. We proceeded in the same way in reference to other legislation of this character.

Mr. FLINT. I am afraid this measure will not receive very warm acceptance from the ship-owners. It seems to me to a large degree unnecessary, although I was not present when the Minister introduced the Bill, and had not the pleasure of hearing his reasons for its necessity. well known among those who are conversant with ships under the rules of the French and English "Lloyds," and the French "Bureau Veritas," and the "American Record," that the surveyors of these various companies inspect the ships every two years, and also inspect them under certain other circumstances when their attention is called to them. Unless the ships and vessels so surveyed and inspected through the agency of these companies are kept in first-class condition they are liable to lose their classification, and liable to lose their rating in the insurance companies. Unless a strong ground is made out by the Minister of Marine for the passage of an Act of this kind I very much fear that he may be bringing into operation a machinery that is likely to become very embarrassing, either to the public treasury or to the ship-owning community; because, if it is enforced to any extent these surveyors and inspectors must be paid; otherwise there will be a revolt, because extensive fees are now demanded by the surveyors of the companies I have alluded to.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, gentleman has spoken on behalf of the very class of ship-owners who will not be affected in any respect by this Bill, because we do not want to get at ship-owners who keep their vessels in good condition, but those ship-owners who are so reckless they care not whether the lives of the sailors are lost or preserved. It is at that utterly reckless and almost criminal class this Bill strikes. This Bill is an answer to the appeal of seamen whose fellow-workers have lost their lives from the neglect or carelessness of ship-owners. It is quite certain that none of the ship-owners of the class to which the hon, member for Yarmouth alluded, ship-owners who have their vessels classed, will find any difficulty in connection with this Bill.

Mr. FRASER. In view of the fact that the Bill gives power to the inspector to board the ship and interfere with the captain and owner, it might be well to exempt any ship holding a certificate from Lloyds'. There was apparently no need for inspection by a Government officer when the captain presented a certificate of inspection from Lloyds' agent.

Mr. TUPPER. I made a mistake in saying, some time ago, that this Bill applies to steamers. It applies only to sailing vessels.

Mr. FRASER. I really think that vessels holding Lloyds' certificates should be exempt from this Bill, as under it a ship might be detained.

Mr. TUPPER. No inconvenience would be suffered by them. A vessel would only be detained in case the Government officer found it was not in a condition to go to sea. All the facts will have to be stated in each case.

Mr. FRASER. No doubt. But after an inspection by Lloyds' agent, who is a much better authority than any of the officers mentioned here, an inspection by the Government officer is unnecessary. A Government inspector may think a vessel is not seaworthy when she has been declared seaworthy by Lloyds' agent and a certificate given.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not agree that Lloyds' agents are such wonderful authorities as the hon. gentleman appears to think they are. I do not consider they are to be placed ahead of the officers we employ, and pay according to their professional knowledge, and each of whom had to pass a very difficult technical examination. Officers in the service of the Department of Marine hold a position certainly not such as the hon, gentleman conceived it to be. We do not propose to interfere with ships such as he has described. The reasons have to be explicitly given before any interference is made. Take a case in point. A ship is classed, and the owner supposes she is in perfect condition. When our officer inspects her and points out defeets—for example, such an officer as Capt. Smith of Halifax or Lieutenant Gordon—the owner may say: "I have my ship classed, and I do not care for these defects. It is to prevent that recklessness and to compel owners who fail to put their vessels into proper condition, and thoroughly equip them, that this Bill was framed. I cannot conceive a case where the owner of a vessel that has a good class would not, on defects being pointed out, proceed to remedy them.

Mr. FRASER. I submit that my point is established. I hold that, speaking generally, the harbour masters of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are not as capable as the officers I mentioned. I therefore hold that if a captain presents a Lloyds' certificate the vessel should not be subjected to inspection by a harbour master, who may override the agent's decision and declare that the vessel is not fit to go to sea. He may telegraph to the Minister of Marine, and the vessel may be detained. I know that very many vessels go to sea that should not be allowed to do so, and I admit that the object of this Bill is a good one, but it gives too great power to the Government officers. vessel should be detained from going to sea if she has a Lloyds' certificate.

Mr. TUPPER. This clause is almost identical with that of clause 50 of the Steamboat Inspection Act. That is really the clause that affords a guarantee for the safety of sailors. The hon, gentleman can understand that no department of the Government would interfere with a ship unless it was an extreme case, and reasons for detention have to be given in detail by an officer, and a competent one. Of course, if the hon, gentleman holds that our officers are incompetent, and cannot properly deal with these nautical matters—

Mr. FRASER. No.

Mr. TUPPER. It will be difficult to discuss it. Our legislation under those circumstances must be of a dangerous character, for we are entrusting the Government officers with great powers. The situation would be different if any charges could be brought against any of the departmental officers, to whom we pay large sums.

Mr. FRASER. I am not saying anything about the officers.

Mr. PUTNAM. Does this Bill apply to sea-going ships?

Mr. TUPPER. Yes. Mr. Fraser.

Mr. PUTNAM. After our vessels are inspected by Lloyds' agent and by the inspectors of other underwriting officers they should be in a position to go to sea without being submitted to further inspection.

Mr. TUPPER. I know that ship-owners are against any legislation in reference to their shipping. Most of them in Canada, I believe, are perfeetly fit to be trusted with the management of their own property, and in their own interest they will take care of that; but the trouble is, that Parliament has found years ago that some ship-owners are not so careful, but are reckless, and given to speculating, and so on, and it was for that reason that Parliament has interfered with the management of their ships to such an enormous extent. do not think that the hon, gentleman from Hants (Mr. Putnam) has carefully read the Bill through, or he would see that a ship properly classed need not be detained for a day; but if a report would be made by an officer of our department that the rigging is insecure and inefficient I have no doubt whatever that the captain of the ship would be glad to remedy that before putting to sea. It is not only that there is some slight defect, but the reason must be given that the ship cannot proceed to sea with safety, and without endangering life or property. A certificate from Lloyds', or a policy, or anything of that kind, would not avail for such a defect as I have referred to, and that is the only case where we could stop a ship. However, we had better discuss the clauses in order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suppose it would have been better to discuss the principles of the Bill before we went into Committee, but I honestly confess I did not give it the attention I ought to. The Minister's object would be attained, I suppose, by applying this to ships on inland waters only. understand that the complaints that brought about this legislation arise from the defective gear of the ships on the inland lakes, and I assume, from what the Minister said, that no complaints have been made from seaport towns with reference to seagoing ships. Of course, there could be no desire on the part of the Minister or anyone else to put harrassing stipulations or conditions upon the owners There are two or three guarantees that of ships. the owner of the ship will not send his vessel to sea in an unseaworthy condition. In the first place, we have the guarantee, and a very high one it is, of the inspection by the officer of Lloyds or the Bureau Veritas, and in the second place, if a ship-owner sends a ship to sea in an unseaworthy condition he has to lose his whole insurance. In addition to that, we have the experience of a great many years that no complaints have been made that unseaworthy ships have been sent to sea. We have had this legislation because complaints have come from certain labour societies that the ships on the inland lakes are sent to sea in an unseaworthy condition. the hon, gentleman whether it is wise to include that large class of sea-going ships, with respect to which we have several and sufficient guarantees that the owners will not send them to sea in an unseaworthy condition? We know that there is nothing that a ship-owner or merchant dreads so much as incessant inspection of his property. You may say that no harbour master would improperly detain a ship, but if you invest these jacks in authority with a lot of power in an outlying port, and the ship-owner is not on good terms with them, they can put him to almost incalculable trouble and expense. Unless there is real necessity for it, I would impress upon the Minister the desirability of applying the Act to the evil which he seeks to cure, in reference to ships on the inland lakes.

Mr. TUPPER. I can inform the hon, gentleman that the request for this legislation has come from all parts of Canada, and I think petitions from Halifax are before the House. When I had in my mind accidents confined to the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario last year I by no means say that these dangers exist only in these provinces. While much of the hon. gentleman's contention is correct with reference to the object of a cautious and honest ship-owner or captain, there are reckless persons connected with the shipping, and they are not confined to any particular province. I see no reason why we should not protect the lives of sailors in sea-going vessels as well as sailors on the inland lakes. I recollect last year, for instance, and it seemed to me an extraordinary state of affairs, that there were very serious complaints in connection with the condition of a ship in Quebec, the name of which I have forgotten. The captain, for the sake of saving the expense, was anxious not to repair at Quebec, but to patch her up there and take her across the ocean. presentations were made to me in reference to this by a good many authorities—I think the Board of Trade at Quebec was one—and I found we had not power to detain the vessel. Her class would not make any difference, because she met with this accident and damage coming up the river.

Mr. TUPPER. I have forgotten. I am most anxious not to put any difficulty in the way of shipping, but I cannot see that this Act is giving that extraordinary power to the officers which the hon. gentleman is afraid of. It is not in the power of an officer in an outside port to vent his spite or his ignorance in the way mentioned upon the ship, by saying that he will detain this vessel, for he must give us his reasons for the detention. Let me read section 9, which says:

If an inspector reports to the Minister in writing that he considers that any ship liable to inspection under this Act could not make a voyage or trip from any port or place in Canada without endangering-life or property, stating the facts on which his report is based, the Minister may direct such ship to be detained, and the inspector may thereupon detain such ship and notify a chief officer of Customs, at any port; and no ship so detained shall go on any voyage or trip as aforesaid, or be used for the purposes of navigation, until permitted by the Minister.

That means, of course, an examination by our nautical experts, who will not be under such influences, and the hon, gentleman will see that an officer cannot detain the ship unless he gave his reasons that in permitting the ship to go to sea it would endanger life and property. There could not be any such misrepresentation, except in very rare cases indeed. The case I have in my mind is where a vessel is patched up in a careless way, and for the sake of saving a few dollars puts to sea in that condition. While the ship was engaging her crew and getting ready for sea there could be the fullest investigation and no unnecessary detention. I do not think there is an opportunity, therefore—and the hon, gentleman's argument is directed to that—of a sudden action on the part of a comparatively irresponsible officer. We have against that the fact that the act of the officer would be reported to the department, and the hon gentleman can understand how carefully the whole case would be weighed before any Minister would take a step that would lead to such a consequence as the stopping of the vessel. But it is just in view of the fact that lives have been lost for the want of this legislation——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I confess that I had not in my mind the particular clause to which the hon. gentleman refers, nor was I so much afraid of an improper exercise of the power vested in him as the Minister of Marine. The hon, gentleman has defended the Bill chiefly on the ground that the equipment of the vessel might be out of order. But he goes further; he not only provides for the inspection of the apparel of the vessel, but of the hull.

Mr. TUPPER. We have that power now as to hulls, boilers, engines, and so on, and we propose to extend it to tackle.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I quite recognize the propriety of all the provisions in the Steamboat Inspection Act, and I admit that steamers carrying passengers ought to be subject to a most stringent inspection at the hands of the Government. But I fail to see that there is any analogy between the inspection of steamboats carrying passengers and the inspection which is proposed with reference to sea-going vessels. The 4th section empowers the officer to inspect the hulls; the 5th section empowers the Governor in Council to make regulations for that inspection; the 6th section requires the master to make his report when anything goes wrong; the 7th section authorizes the inspector to go on board the ship and to inspect and examine the same at any time, and he may require the unloading or removal of any cargo, ballast or tackle. This is a great power to vest in a harbour master.

Mr. TUPPER. We have that already.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; in the Steamboat Inspection Act; but I deny that there is or ought to be any analogy between the inspection of steamboats, which are authorized to carry passengers on the inland waters of Canada, and the inspection that we ought to require of sea-going ships.

Mr. TUPPER. That is a straight denial of the petition of the seamen. The seamen say: Our lives are just as important as the lives of passengers, and you have protected passengers; we have lost many a fellow labourer from the recklessness of the shipowner and the carelessness of a shipmaster; and we ask you to prevent that as far as you can. We, therefore, in this Bill extend our authority—which now exists, so far as the inspecting power is concerned, to the hull of a ship—also to the rigging up which these sailors are bound to go, subject to imprisonment if they refuse. Therefore, they say: Before we are compelled to do that, we want you to see that the ship-owners take the necessary precautions to have all the rigging safe and secure.

that condition. While the ship was engaging her crew and getting ready for sea there could be the argument I urged before, that you have already fullest investigation and no unnecessary detention. I do not think there is an opportunity, therefore—and the hon, gentleman's argument is directed to that sailors are not bound to go to sea in an unseaworthy ship; under the Merchants' Shipping Act they can refuse. I was pointing out that the hon. gentleman is vesting enormous powers in officers, such as port wardens, harbour masters, &c. They can stop a ship which is just ready to go to sea, order it to be unloaded, though after it is unloaded it may turn out that the hull is all right; and they may exercise this arbitrary power in a manner which will be very oppressive to the ship-owner.

Mr. TUPPER. I am not at all disposed to press the exact wording of these clauses; I am only too glad to get the assistance of the House in improving them. The hon. gentleman, however, seemed to me to be discussing the principle of the Bill, which is, after all, that we have reached a point where we must interfere in the case of sailors as we have interfered in the case of passengers. There has been a distinction drawn in our legislation hitherto. More severe safeguards and more stringent regulations have been applied to the owners of ships carrying passengers than to ships carrying freight. That has been the spirit of our legislation. This Bill, however, is founded on the request to go a step further and in certain events to interfere for the protection of the life of the sailor. I would suggest that we should assume that the principle of the Bill is approved, and go on in Committee, and deal with the language and the powers granted in each clause; then, on the third reading the whole measure may be discussed, and the House will be in a position to take such action as it deems necessary, either to reject the Bill or to propose substantial amendments.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I want to call the hon. Minister's attention again to the question I asked before, as to whether the case referred to in Quebec was the case of a classed vessel or not. understood him to say that it did not make any difference. In my humble opinion, it makes all the difference in the world. If that vessel was in Quebec undergoing repairs, and was a classed vessel, she would have to undergo those repairs under the inspection of a Lloyds' inspector or an inspector of the Bureau Veritas, and that inspection surely would be sufficient to ensure the safety of any crew that might afterwards go to sea in it. If, on the other hand, she was not a classed vessel, she would come under the operation of this Bill if the proposal of the gentlemen who have spoken to-night should be carried out. It does appear to me that the position taken by several hon, gentlemen tonight is really a sound position, that this Bill should not apply to vessels which are classed either under the English Lloyds or under the Bureau With regard to the petitions the Minis-Veritas. ter has referred to, so far as I am informed, these petitions have originated altogether in the west. I know that some petitions were circulated in the locality where I live, and were signed by some of the labouring associations there, but I do not know of a single case in which they were signed by those who had any interest in this matter, or knew anything about shipping at all, and the petitions which were signed there were sent by the organizations in the west for the signatures of those associations in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think there can be no doubt that the Government had better allow the business of inspection of vessels by Lloyds' agents to the small number of men on each tow barge. Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

and underwriters to remain as they are. This Bill proposes to create a class of port wardens, harbour masters and inspectors of hulls, whose function will be of an inquisitorial character, and the results will likely be of a most vexatious kind. I do not think the Government has any cause to find fault with the classing of vessels under insurance regulations, and if they attempt to take that matter into their own hands they will expose shipowners to vexatious detentions and give opportunities to ill-intentioned persons to injure owners by means of collusion with those officials in many cases. I do not see any necessity for having two sets of machinery to secure what is sufficiently well secured already by the operation of the insurance companies. I quite agree with the hon. Minister as to the necessity of having this law uniform as regards both sea-going vessels and vessels navigating inland waters. If precautions are necessary in one case they should be applicable in all cases. I doubt whether, in drawing up the provisions of this Bill, the interests of vessel-owners have been very much considered by the hon. Minister. He must have been influ-enced by petitions from sailors' unions and organizations of that kind. The object, of course, is laudable, that of making proper provisions for the safety of the lives of sailors, but it is proper also that we should consider the rights of the owners. I see in sub-section (a) of section 2 that this Bill includes tow barges. I suppose the hon. Minister of Marine is aware that, particularly in inland waters, the kind of vessels that are not classed are used for the business of transporting lumber. They are made up in tows and loaded with lumber, and towed by steamers, and a number of those constitute what is called a tow. The business of towing lumber is one in which the risk is comparatively small. The cargo itself ensures the vessel against foundering in the charge of a good staunch tow boat, and the risk is comparatively trifling. The vessels go down with a cargo of lumber and come back light on those short lake trips, and the provisions of this Bill will simply put an end to that branch of lake commerce.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would remind the hon. gentleman of a loss that occurred on Lake Ontario three or four years ago just in consequence of defects this Bill is intended to remedy. I well remember the circumstances, as it was very notorious at the time.

Mr. CHARLTON. What was the name of the vessel?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not remember, but the circumstance is very fresh in my memory.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose the business of transporting grain and lumber is not unattended with risk.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This was a case of pure neglect.

Mr. CHARLTON. But this branch of business is a very extensive one, and the casualties in proportion to the amount of business transacted are very light, lighter, I venture to say, than in almost any other branch of lake commerce.

Mr. TUPPER. The only case this Bill reaches is where it would not be safe for life and property for a tow barge to put out. Surely the hon, gentleman does not wish that such a tow barge should be permitted to go out. The small loss of life is due

Mr. CHARLTON. If this to barge was not a vessel that would meet the requirements of the inspection such as he provides it cannot go into business at all; and if the provisions of the Bill are carried, it would simply shut out a very large class of lake marine from participation in the business of carrying lumber.

I do not think the hon, gentle-Mr. STAIRS. man is quite right in saying that the same rule should be applied to sea-going vessels as to vessels navigating inland waters. What ought to govern legislation proposed in this House is whether such legislation is required. The point taken by those who are opposing the application of the Bill to sea-going vessels is that it never has been shown that this legislation is required; and with all deference to the opinion of the hon. Minister—and I agree most heartily in all that he has said with regard to our taking every precaution to secure the safety of seamen, for their safety is just as well worthy our attention as the safety of passengers—I think the hon. Minister should show that the seamen of the Maritime Provinces have asked for a measure of this kind and have themselves felt that their safety is endangered, owing to the difficulties or troubles he now purposes to remedy. I am confident that throughout all the different ports in the Maritime Provinces the Minister will not find that there is any feeling, either among fishermen or seamen, that their lives have been endangered owing to unseaworthy vessels, though no one can deny that unseaworthy vessels occasionally may sail. With respect to what the hon, member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) has said about petitions, I am confident that those which came from Halifax and were presented by my colleague and myself were all inspired in the west, and were sent down by the different labour unions in the west, and did not come from the sailors and those more particularly interested in this matter. I agree very strongly in what was said by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) It is desirable the hon. Minister should try and exempt sea-going vessels for the reason given, and that is, that the provisions which exist for securing the seaworthiness of these vessels and the tackle they use are amply sufficient for the purpose. I would also suggest in this connection to the hon. Minister, that if he should consent now to except these vessels he could easily, at any time in the future, should it be found that life is in danger on the ocean owing to the unseaworthiness of vessels, strike the exception out, and make the Act apply; but up to the present, I submit, that this has not been shown, and he ought to give consideration to the representations made this evening and see if he cannot exempt these vessels.

Mr. INGRAM. I would like to say a few words with respect to the petitions which have been presented. Hon, gentlemen have stated that these petitions emanated from the west entirely. to differ from these hon, gentlemen in that statement. Last summer a large number of men from all over the Dominion assembled in Ottawa, and among them were a great many sailors, and it appears that the sailors agreed that, owing to the unseaworthiness of vessels leaving certain ports in him some appalling instances of the accidents the Dominion, the only hope they had of saving in those tow barges. We have no desire to life was to present petitions to this House, so that hamper them, but when we find that a barge this House might pass legislation in the interests of sailors, though not against the interests of owners. As I understand, the sailors are very willing to recognize all the rights of the owners, but at the same time they ask to be protected in their work of sailing vessels for the owners. These petitions were circulated all over the Dominion, wherever sailors were to be found, to be signed, and they were signed, and on the strength of these petitions the Minister has framed the Bill. I remember that in the early part of this session a deputation came down and saw the late Premier and other Ministers, and the late Premier promised the sailors that a Bill of that kind would be introduced. I believe one or two years ago a model of a hull was brought to Ottawa in order to show members of Parliament the kind of hulls that were allowed to be put in the water. It is only just that the sailor's life should be protected, not withstanding that the hon, gentleman from Prince Edward Island says steamers should have all the protection because they earry passengers; but I take it that the lives of sailors are as important as those of passengers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman must not misrepresent me. I did not say the lives of sailors were not as valuable as those of passengers. I only said it was not fair to draw an analogy between the sea-going ship guaranteed by Lloyds' agents, and carrying an enormous number of passengers, and the small steamers which may be paddling around in the inland waters. It does not necessarily follow that the same rule should apply to both. I have always lived in a seaport town, and I know that, between Lloyds agent, who is generally a very exacting man, and the insurance companies, you have enough security, and I think you will do well if you adopt the suggestion of the member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) in regard to vessels which are certified at Lloyd's, or the Bureau Veritas, or the American Record, and I think that would be sufficient in their case.

Mr. TUPPER. I will consider how far we can do that, but my difficulty is, that though a vessel may be of the best class, the accidents which are aimed at in this Bill in one or two sections may have occurred, and have occurred. The hon, gentleman shakes his head, but he is not going to say that because the vessel is of the best class that will prevent accidents from occurring.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). She will not go to sea again. She has to be repaired under Lloyds' inspector, and she loses her class if she is not repaired to his satisfaction.

Mr. TUPPER. If she does not do everything proper in that respect she may not only lose her class but also the lives which we want to protect. The hon, gentleman from Hants (Mr. Putnam) has sailed a ship and knows that he can be detained at any British port until the officers are satisfied that his ship is fit to proceed to sea. They will not recognize the certificate in England if any defect exists in the vessel, but I do not include that part in this Bill. I will investigate and see how far it is safe to exempt vessels of a high class. The hon, gentleman has referred to tow barges. I could give is nothing but a rotten tub or coffin, we are not going to allow the owner to make a lot of money and to run chances in regard to loss of life. The evidence is overwhelming from all parts of Canada, for this legislation has been suggested by labour unions, whether they were composed of sailors or others. They are acting all for the same purpose, for the protection of their co-workers. The hon, gentleman asks whether the sailors of the Maritime Provinces have petitioned, but he knows that a large number of those who are employed on the vessels going to sea from the Maritime Provinces are foreigners, and are not like those out west, who are Canadians, and who are able to cooperate. The only organization for those living in Halifax, for instance, and going to sea as seamen, is the general labour organization. A whole string of petitions came into this House on the 14th May of this session, including the Bricklayers' and Masons' International Union of America, of

An hon. MEMBER. Were they seamen?

Mr. TUPPER. No; but seamen are members of these organizations. These are the labour organizations, and while the name of some are not nautical names, they are, I believe, the only associations to which the sailors have access. there are the Steamboat Longshoremen's Union. the Ontario Trades and Labour Union, the Shipwrights' Association, and others of British Columbia, and many others to the same effect. them not only on the Atlantic, but we find that from the Pacific and the west petitions have been sent to this effect, though, of course, the petitions are not the only basis of the Bill. The petition goes for what it is worth, but the appeal which it makes seems to require attention at our hands. As to whether we should take power to exempt the high class of vessels, though there is a possibility of danger in regard to them, on the understanding that we come back to Committee to consider a clause in that respect if I feel I can do that after considering the arguments, we might go on with the other part of the Bill and report progress.

Mr. PUTNAM. I believe this Bill is all right so far as the inland waters are concerned. The barges are not now inspected at all, but that is altogether different from the sea-going vessels, which have to be inspected every two or three years, and if not in proper condition we are compelled to put them in order, and if we do not we cannot get our certificates. I think this Bill is entirely unnecessary in regard to sea-going vessels. I believe there is a sort of inspection by underwriting agents for vessels on the lakes, but nothing more. We are subject, in the first place, to the surveyors of the Englsh and French Lloyds, and in all the different ports underwriters' agents visit the vessels almost every day.

Mr. SPROULE. In the consideration of this Bill we have very much the same arguments presented by those who oppose it that we had in past years, when Bills relating to shipping were introduced into this House. The Bill for the purpose of inspecting boilers was fought with great persistence. The same arguments that were urged against that are being urged to-day, namely, that it was an annoyance to shipowners, expensive, and liable to cause unnecessary delay. However, that Bill was passed, and found to be useful. Then, when it was proposed to ex-Mr. Tupper.

tend the inspection to hulls the same arguments were used and the same objections urged as against the present Bill. I think no person can deny that the petitions which have been poured into this House during the last two years, asking for such a measure, and very numerously signed, ought to receive some consideration at our hands. I know these petitions came from my part of the country in large numbers, not only from seamen, but from labour unions, whose members or friends were employed in navigation. Now, it was held that ships that were repaired under Lloyds' survey could not, for that reason, be in an unseaworthy condition; but, notwithstanding that survey, it has been found, from time to time, that accidents have occurred on those ships. I have not the reports before me, but I know they have been cited in this House, and we know that many deplorable accidents have occurred within the last few years. What has happened before may happen again. In regard to towing barges on the upper lakes, we know that accidents have happened more than once, and those accidents have been attributed to the fact that the barges were not fit to be taken out. I think that if that has been found to be the case there is very strong reason why we should go further and inspect them. I understood the member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) to say that he could understand why steamships that carried a large number of passengers should be inspected, but he did not think that reason should apply with the same force to ships that only carried their crew. Now, surely the lives of a crew are just as valuable as the lives of the same number of passengers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman, I hope, does not want to misrepresent me. I urged the same arguments that are urged on the other side. I said there was no reason to apply this to efficient sea-going ships that are already under efficient inspection.

Mr. SPROULE. I am not referring to what the hon, gentleman may call sea-going ships; but that is not the line of argument he took. He could understand why it would apply to vessels carrying a large number of passengers, but he did not think it should apply with the same force to ships that only carried a few passengers, or the crew. Now, in my opinion the life of one is just as valuable as the life of another, whether he be a poor unfortunate sailor or a millionaire. Now, in the interest of humanity I think a change is needed, because the history of accidents shows it is needed I do not see how this House could well ignore the petitions sent here year after year asking for further legislation, nor do I think the arguments that have been advanced against this Bill are any more forcible than the arguments that were advanced against the inspection of hulls or boilers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When the hon gentleman comes to consider the suggestion I made I hope he will bear in mind that he has already introduced a Bill this session providing that in addition to the present inspection sea-going ships will be subject to a load-line marked upon them.

On section 5, owners, expensive, and liable to cause unnecessary delay. However, that Bill was passed, and found to be useful. Then, when it was proposed to expensive, and come to some conclusion as to whether this Bill is to be applied to sea-going ships A portion of this work having been given to a Mr. before we go through the other sections. If the Bill is to be applied to sea going ships some of these sections must be critically examined. There are some things in them which we cannot allow to go; and if it is not to be applied to sea-going ships I fancy the Bill will be pretty generally accepted.

Mr. TUPPER. I think we can save time by going on now. There will be very little trouble if we make provisions for exemption.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the exemption is granted.

Mr. TUPPER. We will go on with the understanding that we can bring up any clause when we come back to the Committee.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would suggest after the word "inspector" we add "or to a collector of Customs," in the thirty-fifth line. It is much more easy for the master to report to the collector of Customs than to an inspector. He may not know where the inspector is.

Mr. TUPPER. We will make that change.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then I would suggest to the Minister whether in the twenty-seventh line we had not better make that penalty not to exceed $100. This clause fixes an arbitrary penalty.

Mr. TUPPER. Very well.

Mr. STAIRS. I ask, what would happen in case of vessels subject to the inspection of the Lloyds' inspector, if there was a conflict of authorities between that inspector and the Government inspector. They might differ in opinion as to what should be done. It would be necessary, in the interests of the shipowner, and in order to secure the insurance, that the recommendations of Lloyds' inspector should be carried out.

Mr. TUPPER. This point will be considered. Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 10th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MR. S. W. McCULLY.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked, Have the services of Mr. S. W. McCully, an employé of the Intercolonial Railway, been dispensed with, or has he been notified that his services will not be required? If so, what were the reasons for his dismissal, and has Mr. McCully been informed of these reasons?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. McCully never was what was understood to be an employé of the Intercolonial Railway, and consequently could not have been dismissed. He was, however, when his services were required, employed in the repairing of clocks at the stations on a section of the Intercolonial road where there was work to be done.

Gould has, I suppose, led to the charge that Mr. McCully had been dismissed.

GOVERNMENT RAILWAYS-PRINTING.

Mr. JONCAS asked, I. What was the amount paid last year by the Government for the printing of time-tables, blank books of all kinds, cards, account books, bills of lading, &c., in connection with the Intercolonial Railway and other Government railways? 2. To what printing establishments was this amount paid? The name of each establishment, and the respective amount paid to each of them?

Mr. BOWELL. The amount paid for the printing was $44,336.12. The following sums were paid, as per rates established by the Queen's Printer:-

Moneton Times, Moneton	12,691 48
Herald Printing Co., Halifax	8.515 28
Nun Publishing Co., St. John	12,093 21

CARAQUET RAILWAY.

Mr. LAURIER (for Mr. MULOCK) asked, What were the amounts of receipts and expenditures respectively of the Caraquet Railway for the fiscal years ending 30th June, 1890, and 30th June, 1891?

Mr. BOWELL. Earnings 1889-90, $20,256.31; expenditure, $25,616.14. The returns from the company for 1890-91 are not yet made to the Government, railway companies having until October in each year to make such returns.

MONTREAL AND SOREL RAILWAY.

Mr. MONET asked, 1. Have the Government made arrangements with the Great Eastern Railway Company for the completion of the Montreal and Sorel Railway, in accordance with the subsidy granted in 1890? 2. Are the Government aware that that road has been closed to public traffic since the 27th June, 1891, and for what reason? 3. What sum have the Government paid to the Great Eastern Railway Company out of the subsidy of forty thousand dollars, and why was that sum paid? 4. Have the Ottawa Government received a report from their engineer relative to any work done on the Montreal and Sorel Road, and have the engineers stated what work has been done? 5. Did the Government pay, during last winter, and during the last Dominion elections, to the Great Eastern Railway Company, or to C. N. Armstrong, its managing director, any sum of money for the benefit of the Montreal and Sorel Railway, and if so, what amount of money was paid, and for what purpose? 6. Are the Government aware that the Montreal and Sorel Railway was closed to the public during a period of about two months during last winter, and why traffic was so suspended on the said railway, when a subsidy of $40,000 had been voted to complete the work to be done on the said railway? 7. Has a statement of account been filed by the Great Eastern Railway Company, or by any other person, for any outlay on the Montreal and Sorel Railway, and if so, when; and what is the amount of the account so filed? 8. Are the Government aware that during the last Dominion elections a sum of four or five thousand dollars, or any other sum, was paid to the Great Eastern Railway Company, or to C. N. Armstrong, for the purchase of an engine, and that the said engine was taken away and is being used by the said C. N. Armstrong for his own personal service?

Mr. BOWELL. 1. Yes. 2. The Government is not aware that the road has been closed. If closed, have no knowledge of the reason of such closing. 3. The total amount paid was $23,835.37. The reason for such payment was that after inspection by an engineer of the department it was found to have been earned. 4. Yes. The following amounts were paid to the company:--On 2nd December, 1890, $1,697.50; 4th December, 1890, The payments $5,184; 4th March, 1891, $4,000. in December, 1890, were for work done on account of subsidy. The payment in March was for a locomotive purchased and delivered. 6. Yes. Government is aware the road was closed for some Understand the reason for such closing was that the road was blocked with snow. 7. No such account has been filed in the department. The above-named sum of $4,000 was paid to the Great Eastern Railway on account of the subsidy for an engine. The Government is not aware that Mr. Armstrong removed the engine and is using it for his own personal service.

INTERNATIONAL ABATTOIR COMPANY.

Mr. SPROULE asked, Is it the intention of the Government to grant permission to "The International Abattoir Company" to import cattle from the United States to be slaughtered and the meat exported?

Mr. HAGGART. It is at present under consideration of the Government.

LABOUR STATISTICS BUREAU.

Mr. LÉPINE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to put into operation the Act of 1890 creating a Bureau of Labour Statistics; if so, when do they intend to commence the organization of the said Bureau?

Mr. HAGGART. It is the intention of the Government to put into operation the Act creating a Bureau of Labour Statistics. The statistics which were collected by the census, forming the basis of such Bureau, are being compiled as rapidly as possible. When such compilation is completed the Bareau will be organized.

MONTREAL LETTER-BOX CONTRACT.

Mr. LEPINE asked, Whether the Government have renewed the contract for the service of letter-boxes in the city of Montreal, and for what period of time? Had they called for tenders, had they awaited the expiration of the previous contract, and were they aware that several parties had manifested an intention to compete for that service?

Mr. HAGGART. The contract for the street letter-box service in Montreal was renewed with the present contractor for four years from the 1st September proximo. Tenders were not invited. It is not the practice of the department to await the termination of a contract before making new arrangements, as these arrangements require time. The department was not aware of a desire on the part of anyone to tender for the service in question.

QUARANTINE OFFICER AT RIMOUSKI.

Mr. LANGELIER asked, What are the names of the steamers visited by Dr. P. A. Gauvreau, of Rimouski, in pursuance of instructions from the Government, since the opening of navigation this season? On what dates were such visits made? In what manner and by whom were the Government informed that Dr. P. A. Gauvreau, of Rimouski, visited certain steamers, as stated in the answer made by the Government to an enquiry in this House, on the 27th of July, 1891?

Mr. HAGGART. No steamers have been visited by Dr. Gauvreau at Rimouski since the opening of navigation during the present season, for the reason as stated, that no mail steamers have called there. It was not stated, in answer to a question on 27th July last, that Dr. Gauvreau had visited certain steamers. The answer then furnished was that "Dr. Gauvreau now claims the yearly salary, notwithstanding the non-calling of the steamers, in his quality of quarantine officer."

MONTREAL CUSTOM HOUSE.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, The names of those civil servants superannuated in the Montreal Custom house since the first day of January, 1891; the number of years of each in the service; the retiring allowance granted to each.

Mr. BOWELL. Knowing the thirsty desire of my hon. friend for information, I have added the amounts of salaries, and other information that will make the return more complete. The following is the list of those asked for :---

Name.	Salaries.	Years of Service.	Age.	Retiring Allowance.
J. F. Hilton,	$1,800	12 years.	61	$540 00
Edward Meyer	1,400	38 "	68	980 00

CARAQUET RAILWAY.

Mr. LAURIER (for Mr. Mulock) asked, Whether the Government has acquired the steamer Keewatin? If so, when, from whom, and on what terms?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am not aware of any steamer of that name belonging to the Government.

TAY CANAL.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron) asked, I. How many locks are there on the Tay Canal? How many men are employed in connection with each lock, and how much is each paid? 2. How many bridges span the Tay Canal within the limits of the town of Perth, and without? Of what materials are they built? How many of them are swing bridges, and what distances are they apart? 3. How many men are employed in connection with each bridge, and how much is paid to each? 4. What sum was spent last year (up to 30th June, 1891) in the management and working of said canal, apart from construction expenses?

Mr. BOWELL. In reply to the hon, gentleman I may say that: 1. There are two locks on the Tay There are two men (a lockmaster and a labourer) employed on the two locks and the swing bridge at the locks. The lockmaster is paid $1.25 per diem. 2. There are three bridges within the town of Perth, and one without. Three of the bridges are of steel and iron and one of wood. The four are swing bridges. The distance from the wooden bridge at the locks to Craig Street bridge is about six miles. From Craig Street bridge to Beckwith Street bridge is 1,600 feet. From Beckwith Street bridge to Drummond bridge is 500 feet. 3. Two men for the three bridges in the town of Perth since 1st August, 1891, at a salary of $1.25 per diem each. 4. The total sum paid for the year 1890-91 was $743.75 for maintenance and working of the canal.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Does that include the bridge under contract?

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot say, but I will enquire.

REFRESHMENT CONTRACT ON THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Has Joseph Fortin, of Levis, a contract with the Government for the sale of refreshments, newspapers, &c., on the Intercolonial; if so, was the contract awarded after tenders had been asked for, when does the contract expire, and what is the price thereof?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Joseph Fortin has the con-Tenders were invited in May, 1880, for the tract. whole line of the Intercolonial Railway, the highest offer being $1,200 per annum. The contract was awarded to Hamilton, who performed the service very unsatisfactorily and the contract was can-The road was then divided into two seccelled. tions, the contract being given in 1883 to the Dominion News Company between Halifax and Campbellton for $900 per annum, and to Fortin between Campbellton and Lévis at $300. In 1885 the rental of the Dominion News Company, now the Canadian News Company, was increased to $1,200 and Fortin The Canadian News Company in 1889 were called upon to pay $1,418.96 per annum on account of an extension of the road, which they are now paying. Fortin's last contract is dated 1889 and it had been renewed from year to year. Fortin's contract expires on 1st July, 1892, and he is notified that the service will be put up to competition from that date. Fortin now pays $400 per annum.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Are the Government aware that the following notice has been posted up in nearly every department of the Government Printing Office:

"Employés are requested to have their newspapers, letters, &c., addressed to their private residences or boarding houses. After this date, all mail matter addressed to the Printing Bureau will be returned to the post office, and this department will not be responsible for the same. "A. SENÉCAL,
"Supt. of Printing."

If so, by what authority was the said notice posted up, and what is the reason thereof?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I authorized the Superintendent of Printing to take the measure which he has taken in that direction.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. What is the reason?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I was informed that it involved a great deal of loss of time in the department and a little loss of money to the treasury.

LUNDY'S LANE BATTLE-MONUMENT.

Mr. GERMAN asked, Is it the intention of the Government to erect a monument on Drummond Hill, at the village of Niagara Falls, to commemorate the battle at Lundy's Lane, and if so, when?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. An amount has been placed in the Estimates for that purpose. Since then, the parties representing the petitioners who applied for a grant of money towards the Lundy's Lane memorial fund, have asked that the monument be not now erected, as they intend to obtain subscriptions which, added to the Government contribution, would enable them to erect a larger and more elaborate structure. The amount is still at their disposal.

DAMAGES TO LAND ON THE RIDEAU CANAL.

Mr. BAIN (for Mr. Dawson) asked, Have any claims for damages to lands adjoining the Rideau Canal, by the owners or occupiers of such lands in the Townships of Kingston, Storrington and Pittsburg, been presented to the Government, within the last five years? 2. If so, by whom? When? What amount of damages? The nature of the same, and how disposed of? 3. Has the Government, within the same period, purchased, or leased, or otherwise acquired any lands in the said townships? If so, from whom? When? For what purpose, and what consideration? 4. Have any of such claims been rejected? If so, whose claim, and for what reason? 5. Have Alexander Martin, Patrick Blake, John Hogan, John Brannington, Christopher Langwith, Daniel Hugh Folland and Joseph Folland presented any claims to the Government for damages to land adjoining or near to said canal? If so, for what land? For how much land? What was the nature of the claim of each, and how was each disposed of, and when? 6. Were any of such claims rejected? If so, whose, and why? 7. Who investigated such claims, and who finally disposed thereof?

Mr. BOWELL. That question involves altogether too much to enable me to give an answer for some days. I would suggest, therefore, that it be brought down by return.

Mr. BAIN. Will you accept the question as notice?

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objection.

EXTRADITION OF LEDA LAMONTAGNE.

Mr. LAURIER asked, Has the Government now taken any action upon the petition presented for the release of Léda Lamontagne, now detained in the gaol of the district of St. Francis, Province of Quebec?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have not.

Mr. LAURIER asked, Is the Government now prepared to lay down the correspondence exchanged between the American Government and the Canadian Government on the subject of the extradition of Léda Lamontagne?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes; probably in the course of the present week.

RECIPROCITY BETWEEN CANADA AND SPAIN.

Mr. LAURIER asked, Is the Government aware that a reciprocity treaty has been lately concluded between the United States and Spain? 2. Is it the intention of the Government to resume negotiations for a reciprocity treaty between Canada and Spain?

Mr. FOSTER. To both questions the answer is, yes.

SEIZURE OF THE IRON BRIDGE OF WALKERTON.

Mr. TRUAX asked, Did Mr. Michael McNamara, Sub-Collector of Customs at Walkerton, receive from the Government, in addition to his salary, in the year 1888 or 1889, the sum of $236.44 as his share of the seizure of the iron bridge at Walkerton? If so, what service did he render for this amount, and what amount of undervaluation was found to exist in the bridge materials?

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon, gentleman will refer to page 3398 of the Official Report, he will find an answer to that question. I have answered it already. If he desires further information I can inform him that the $236.44 which was paid to Mr. McNamara, and which appears in the Auditor General's Report of 1887-88, had no connection whatever with the seizure, or with the difficulties that arose in connection with the iron bridge.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You do not answer what service was rendered for this amount.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman does not ask it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes.

Mr. BOWELL. No, he does not. If you will look at the question you will find that it refers to the seizure of the bridge and the iron.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, what service did he render for this amount of $236.44?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I answered the question fully, and more than I was asked.

PURCHASE OF TYPE FOR THE PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. LAURIER (for Mr. Trow) asked, What is sitting the total amount paid by the Government for type terms.

Mr. Bowell.

purchased for the Printing Bureau, and what commission was paid to deliver such type into the Government Office at Ottawa?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. $116,005.24. The account for commission has not yet reached the Department of Printing.

WHARF AT SAULT STE. MARIE.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell) (for Mr. LISTER) asked, What amount has been returned to the Government by the wharfinger of the Government wharf at Sault Ste. Marie, as tolls or fees up to the 30th June, 1891?

Mr. TUPPER. Nothing has been returned, merely a claim in reference to the subject, which is now being investigated.

SURGEON OF INFANTRY SCHOOL AT ST. JOHN'S, P.Q.

Mr. DELISLE asked, 1. Whether the Government require that surgeons appointed to the military schools shall reside in the barracks of the said schools? 2. In the case of the Infantry School at St. John's, P.Q., is the surgeon a resident? 3. Is it true that Dr. F. W. Campbell, surgeon to the said school, resides at Montreal, and that he draws his rations as though he lived in barracks? 4. Do the Government intend to require that he shall reside in barracks, and, on his refusal, to call upon him to resisign?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Surgeons appointed to the military school, as a rule, have not been required to reside in the barracks. 2. In the case of the Infantry School at St. John's, P.Q., the surgeon is not resident. 3. It is true that Dr. F. W. Campbell, surgeon of said school, resides at Montreal. Information has been asked as to his drawing rations. 4. I am not aware that the Government intend to require him to reside in the barracks, and on his refusal to call upon him to resign, as the service has been efficiently carried out.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Mr. LEPINE asked, 1. Have the Government been notified of the death of the Honourable the Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench for the Province of Quebec, Sir A. A. Dorion? 2. Is it the intention of the Government to fill the vacancy so created in the said court, before the next terms of the Court of Appeal in criminal matters sitting at Montreal and at Quebec? 3. Are the Government aware that the number of judges sitting in the Court of Queen's Bench (in appeal) has been but four, during several terms or portions of terms of that court during the past two years, counting judges ad hoc appointed temporarily to replace judges on leave or absent?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We have been notified of the death of the chief justice, and it is the intention to fill the vacancy before the next term of the Court of Appeal for criminal matters. I have not been informed that the number of judges sitting in that court has been but four during several terms.

CAPTAIN BERNIER, OF CAP ST. IGNACE.

Mr. CHOQUETTE asked, Why was Captain H. O. Bernier, of Cap St. Ignace, notified to attend at Quebec for the 10th April last, in order to undergo an examination in reference to his application for the command of the Alert, inasmuch as, when there, he was not called upon to undergo the said examination? Is it the intention of the Government to repay him his travelling expenses?

Mr. TUPPER. I am very sorry that I cannot speak with the accuracy, with regard to this question, that the hon, gentleman desires; but I may say in advance of the exact answer as to this particular candidate, that the different applicants who have applied for that office were notified that on a certain day of this spring an examiner, in company with an officer of the Marine Department at Quebec, would examine such as desired to present themselves. If this candidate presented himself at the office for examination, I know no reason why he was not examined. The matter was purely voluntary on the part of the candidates for the position of master There is no intention, nor was there of the Alert. any intention, that their expenses would be paid by the department. It was simply an opportunity offered to all intending candidates to come forward and show their qualification. I will ascertain the reason why this candidate was not examined.

KINGSTON GRAVING DOCK.

Mr. SPROULE moved:

That the evidence taken by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts in connection with the item Kingston Graving Dock, "B" of the Appropriation Accounts for the year ending 30th June, 1990, be printed for the use of members of that Committee, and that Rule 49 be suspended in accordance with the recommendation of the Four ed, in accordance with the recommendation of the Four-teenth Report of the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

QUEBEC LANDSLIDE.

Mr. FREMONT moved for:

Copies of all Orders in Council, memorials, correspondence and documents respecting the rock-slide fr Citadel at Quebec, on the 19th of September, 1889.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to call the attention of this House to a question which is of great importance to my fellow-citizens of Quebec, I do not speak without a certain apprehension, and I feel the necessity of asking the kindest indulgence They will of the hon, members of this House. bear in mind that I am labouring under various disadvantages. I am addressing this House in a language with which I am far from being familiar, and though the object of my remarks is worthy of the profoundest sympathy of the House and of the country, yet I feel difficulty in stating it as clearly and fairly as I would desire to do. Everybody knows, and I think there is not a single member of this House who has not read or heard the lamentable story of the disastrous accident to which I am about to refer. It is commonly known under the name of the Quebec land-slide, and occurred on the night of September 19, 1889. A portion of the rock over which is built the citadel of Quebec became detached, and rolled down the mountain side. In its fall it crushed and destroyed several houses, occupied by a large number opinion that a public subscription should be of families. Nearly 50 persons were killed, opened to assist the poorest and the most several others crippled, and many were more or less seriously wounded. The disaster has been a great one, and the worst is that there is much that cannot be restored. The lives destroyed cannot be restored, and many have lost some who were near and dear to them. who were taken alive from the ruins lost all they had, their furniture, and even their very clothing. They have been thrown on the streets, obliged, as it were, to begin life over again and to earn the very first necessaries. Some are not only penniless but are incapable of earning their living, being wounded or crippled. Let me mention one single case to illustrate the unfortunate condition of these Among the families so cruelly afflicted there is one of the name of Black. Mr. Black was a very respectable citizen of Quebec, and before the landslide he earned his living honourably and easily. He was proprietor of a foundry. family consisted of his wife and a young girl 10 or II years old. The foundry has been destroyed; the father has been killed; the mother was withdrawn from the ruins disabled and the poor little child was made a cripple. They have lost a comfortable home, and now they are not only penniless but incapable of earning their living. The following letter Mrs. Black wrote to a friend some time after the accident:

"Will you kindly send me answer if you have received any word as to whether some assistance will be given to us, or have they (the Government) really decided against us. I am anxious to know, for I intend taking a step towards trying to waken them up to a knowledge of my real position. I do not intend to die of want, or yet to let my child suffer deprivations without making an effort to help her. I once thought of going to Ottawa and taking her with me. Do you think it would do any good to let them see what a wreck she is. I am altogether out of means, and but for a neighbour who suspected how it was with us. I would have never let it be known myself, but she found it out and has been very kind to us. At her instigation, the ladies of Chalmers Church have arranged to pay my rent, and we have to get along as best we can to live. You can understand what this must be for us who had a comfortable home and a kind husband and father. Sometimes I feel as though I must sink under the weight of my trouble: Why I am letting you know this is that you may urge the Government to do something at once for us. Please excuse me for writing, but I am not able to walk, and I have no longer the means to drive."

This case which I have just mentioned, Mr. Speaker, is not an exceptional one: there are, alas, too many such cases, as the result of this accident. Many demands and claims have been made; several petitions and memorials have been sent to the Government on behalf of the victims, but up to the present moment the Government has refused to do justice to the families and survivors of that awful The Government has even refused to accident. take steps to prevent a recurrence of similar dis-Of course, there is much that cannot be repaired, although the accident could, perhaps, have been prevented, but now we can by no possibility recall the valuable lives which have been sacrificed. The Government can never compensate the bereaved families for the loss of those who were near and dear to them, but it was expected that the Government would be prompt in coming to the assistance of the survivors. Immediately after the accident a sum of $5,000, I believe, was collected in Quebec to provide for the immediate and pressing wants of the victims. The citizens of Quebec held a public meeting, and some expressed an needful, but it was then and there stated by very influential persons, and friends of the pre-Administration, that the Government, responsible for the accident, was would not deny such responsibility, would not only come to the assistance of the poorest sufferers, but would repair the loss so far as lay in their power. However, nothing has been done, and the Government seemingly felt satisfied that they had fulfilled their duty in sending engineers to the scene of the accident. Major-General Cameron and Major Mayne, both of the Royal Military College, Kingston, were sent to Quebec with the following instructions: First, to report on the extent of the damage; second, to report on the probability of any further landslide in that locality; and third, to offer any recommendation for precautionary measures to prevent any further loss of life and damage to property. have not had the privilege of reading Major General's Cameron's report, but I have the good fortune of having in my hand Major Mayne's report. Hehasnot given any details as to the extent of the damages caused by the landslide; he simply mentions the quantity of rock by which a number of houses were destroyed, and I believe the approximate loss of life. He examines the geological causes of the accident and reports fully as to the second and third parts of his instructions. Well, Mr. Speaker, this is about the entire extent of the assistance offered by the Government to the victims of the I am told that the contention of the hon. the Minister of Justice was that the Government is not responsible for the accident, and further that there is no obligation on the part of the Government to take any steps to prevent a recurrence of such a lamentable event. The hon. Minister of Justice will allow me to say that the whole population of Quebec was deeply moved when the news spread that such was his opinion, Last year delegates selected from the City Council of Quebec came to Ottawa; and they were received by the Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald and by the Minister of Public Works and by the Minister of Militia and Defence. They urged upon the Government the necessity of coming to the assistance of the victims. If my memory serves me right, the late Prime Minister, without acknowledging their claims, stated that he was not ready to say that the matter was to be settled on strict principles of civil law, but that he was willing to consider the question from an equitable point of view, and that the matter might be settled provided that there would be sufficient ground to show a a good bond fide case before Parliament. We returned to our homes satisfied, we were confident that some relief would be given, but the session came to a close and nothing was done. Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that it is my duty to bring the matter before the Government, the House and the country, and I feel confident that the hon. members of this House will be convinced that it is not only a bond fide case, but that the claim on the Government is just and reasonable. I maintain that, in justice, the victims of the landslide are entitled to an indemnity by the Government of Canada, and, moreover, if the question is viewed from a humanitarian and philanthropic point of view, I contend that it is the duty of the Government to improve, as far as in their power lies, the unfortu-loss which can yet be repaired. I say further, Mr. Speaker, that in many cases claims have been settled by the Government which were not placed on as good and as solid a basis as the present claims, and I will add that it is the bounden duty of the Government to take immediately such steps as will prevent further accidents of a similar nature in the same locality. I have said at first that the victims of the landslide are entitled in justice to an indemnity from the Government of Canada. I am quite aware that a contrary opinion has been expressed by a high and respected authority. It was stated that the catastrophy was due to the natural formation of the rock, or to forces of nature, or to both. It was also said that it did not result from any act of man, and supposing that such was the case, the hon. Minister of Justice stated that there was no liability under the civil law, or at common law, on the part of the Dominion Government, as the owners of the land. This opinion is based on the supposition that the catastrophe is due wholly and entirely to natural causes, without any intervention of man. Now, it is generally said in Quebec that there are several acts of man which might have caused, and indeed have contributed, to the great misfortune which befell Quebec that Formerly, at the foot of the mountain night. over which the Citadel of Quebec is built, there was a row of houses. Further on, ran Champlain street, on the other side of which were the houses destroyed by this accident. Some years ago, the houses at the foot of the mountain, but on the north side of the street, were demolished by the order of the Government. No doubt it was a humanitarian act on the part of the Government to cause the people living at such a dangerous spot to move away; but I believe it was a grave error on the part of the Government to have these houses removed. they been allowed to remain, but unoccupied, they would have receive the whole avalanche of stones and rocks, and would have to a great extent acted as a buttress, and prevented the rocks rolling as far as they did; they would have been a shield and protection to the other side of the street. argument is based on Major Mayne's report, which recommends that in future such a plan be followed. Here is what Major Mayne recommends:

"That all houses and even offices under the dangerous portion of the hillside, should be evacuated but not removed, for they will assist in catching falling debris and preventing it reaching the whaves."

The above facts, Mr. Speaker, cannot be denied. It is a well-known fact that the houses at the foot of the mountain which I have mentioned, formerly existed, and everybody in Quebec knows that these houses were removed by order of the Dominion Government. The only point which might be questioned, is what would have been the result had these houses remained. To make this point clearer, I have asked the opinion of an engineer I wrote to, Mr. Charles Baillairgé, city engineer of Quebec, who knows the locality perfectly well, and who is a very well-known engineer, being a member of the Royal Society of Canada, and being also a member of various scientific societies both in England and elsewhere. Here is the letter which I wrote to Mr. Baillairgé—it is a translation from the French:

" Ottawa, 16th July, 1891.

to improve, as far as in their power lies, the unfortunate condition of the victims and to make good the way of the rock at Quebec, recommends that the houses in Champlain street should be emptied of living tenants, but should not be pulled down in order that they may become retaining walls and ramparts in case of a fresh downfall of rock. Formerly there were houses on the north side of the street. These houses were demolished, by order of the Government, several years ago. Is it your opinion that if these houses had not been pulled down they would have if these houses had not been pulled down they would have served as buttresses and protected the houses which were destroyed by the landslide of the 19th September, 1889? In case you are not of this opinion in its fulness, do you agree with it so far as to consider that it would have had the effect of lessening considerably the destruction on the south side of the street, and probably of sparing the lives of a good number of the victims?

"You would oblige me by sending me your opinion in this matter to Ottawa, at your earliest convenience.

Believe me to remain,

"Yours truly.

"J. FRÉMONT."

Here is Mr. Baillairgé's reply:

"Engineer's Office, City Hall, "Quebec, 18th July, 1891.

"J. FRÉMONT, Esq., M.P.,
"Mayor of the City of Quebec.

"Sir,—In reply to yours of the 16th instant, respecting the landslide from the Cape on the Citadel front, at the south-western end of Dufferin Terrace, which occurred on the 19th September, 1839, I am strongly of opinion that if they had done at that time what I then recommended in my report to Sir Hector, dated the 21st January, 1830, no slipping of the rock would have taken place. I refer to the building of a certain number of buttresses to shore up the rock at that time in a state of stable equilibrium, a vertical line drawn through whose centre of gravity passed wholly within the base.

passed wholly within the base.
"I will say further, I am persuaded that the party walls alone of the houses would have shored up the Cape strongly enough to have prevented its fall for a long time; and the report of Major Mayne, of 1889, only corrotine; borates the conclusions formed by me some ten years pre-

"In fact, if you examine, in the office of the Public Works Department, the plans made by me to accompany the report I have above-mentioned, you will see that the houses, nine in number, at the base of the fallen rock, give ten gable ends or party walls at a mean distance of 47 feet apart, sufficiently close to underprop the rock and keep it in position, the effect of which would have been in all cases to have, rendered the slipping slower, and to have held back its motion to such a degree that the debris would not have reached the opposite side of Champlain would not have reached the opposite side of Champlain Street.

"Your obedient servant,

"C. BAILLAIRGÉ."

But there is more, Mr. Speaker. It has been stated to me by well-informed parties in Quebec that the Government have constructed on the hillside certain drains which do not carry the water to the public drains of the city nor to the River St. Lawrence, but convey the waters to the vicinity of the crevices which exist in the mountain. Now, it seems quite clear that whatever be the theory accepted as to the causes of the landslide, water and its freezing in the crevices have contributed largely to I might refer again to Major the catastrophe. Mayne's report, in which he says:

"Water and melting snow has passed down them and freezing has in time forced some of the layers apart. Into these openings earth has fallen, which, by its being swellen by water, has assisted in still further forcing apart certain of the layers. This action may have been still further assisted by the hydrostatic pressure exerted by any water which may have filled the openings from time to time when the rainfall has caused more water to run in than the joints and fissures have been able to carry away, and also by the softening powers of the water away, and also by the softening powers of the water which causes the joints to yield more readily."

Well, Mr. Speaker, if the engineers believe such to be the effect of rain, would not the waters brought into the crevices artificially by means of these drains in much larger quantities, contribute a great deal more to the forcing of a way through the layers of shale which exist in the mountain? This is an act of man which has contributed largely to is a matter not to be settled by me, but by the en-

the widening of the crevices and to the landslide; and I think for the above reasons the Government should consider themselves in justice responsible. But if the hon, members of this House examine the question from a humanitarian and philanthropic point of view, they will see on the one side a class of poor people who were unable to take any steps to prevent the possibility of such an accident; and on the other side, a wealthy and a powerful Government which is proprietor of the rock that caused the whole harm, and which, for military reasons, I presume, will not permit outsiders to interfere with the rock in question. Now, the catastrophe by itself, without taking into consideration the question of liability, is of such a nature and of such an extent that I think the Government should have been prompted by more generous motives and should have acted thereupon. For this, there is more than one precedent to invoke. In several cases in which there was no question of liability whatso-ever, but simply of a frightful disaster, the Government of the country has come to the relief of sufferers. This was done some years ago, in the case of the fire of Hull and in that of the great fire at St. John's; but I might go still further and say that, in some instances, the Government have considered it just that the party aggrieved should be relieved, although the grounds were not so strong and pronounced as in the present instance. I might mention one case, and I am told that there are many others. The case I refer to is one with which the members of this House are familiar, because it is one in which they were invited, some weeks ago, to consent to this vote for relief of which I A civil engineer of the name of Dufresne speak. obtained from the Government a contract to make a certain survey in the North-West Territories. While camping on the prairie with his men his foot got badly hurt by an axe falling on it. No medical assistance could be had, and the wound became worse and worse, and when he was brought to the hospital in Winnipeg he had to undergo an operation and lost his foot. been rendered unfit altogether to practise any longer his profession, but undoubtedly the Government were in no way responsible for the accident, still they gave this unfortunate man a berth in the Civil Service at Ottawa, and allowed him a sum of over $1,200 as indemnity for the accident. Well, I feel confident that when the hon. Minister of Justice will compare these two cases, the case I have just mentioned, of Mr. Dufresne, and the case I alluded to in the beginning of my remarks, that of Mrs. Black and the other sufferers by the landslide, I feel confident that the hon. Minister will admit that if there is a lien de droit between the sufferer and the Government, it is a great deal stronger and more pronounced in the case of Mrs. Black and the other victims of the slide than in the case of Mr. Dufresne and others, however deserving these latter cases Before resuming my seat, there is anmay be. other question to which I desire to call the attention of the Government, and that is the immediate necessity of taking such steps as will prevent the recurrence of other landslides in the same locality, or at least prevent further loss to life and damage to property. That there is immediate danger that at any moment there may be other landslides and further loss of life, is a fact which everybody knows. What are the necessary works to be done gineer. I may refer to Major Mayne's report as to the immediate and constant danger of other land-Here is what he says:

"But if the fall of the rocks has been occasioned by a sliding movement of a mass of rock behind, as I consider is the case, then the danger is a constantly threatening one and should be dealt with as soon as possible to prevent any destruction of the wharves and any danger to the Citadel above, besides possible loss of life.

A little further on he continues:

"In any case, on account of the formation of the rocks described on page 3, I do not think that there is any fear of the landslide extending in the future, any further than a few yards to the west of its present western limit, but I fear that it may extend eastwards in time to as far as the first kiosk from the west end of the terrace.

"There is, however, one piece of rock which seems to be coming out of the face of the cliff, and which should be carefully watched and even blasted out now."

This report was sent to the Government two years ago and yet no action was taken. Now, as to the necessary work to be done, I might cite the Order in Council, dated 16th January, 1890, which is as

"The Minister states that the engineers who have inspected the scene of the disaster have made the following recommendations, which are now submitted for the information of His Excellency:—

"First.—That all the houses and even the offices under the dangerous portion of the slide be evacuated, but not removed, for they will assist in catching any falling debris and preparating it reaching the whorever and preventing it reaching the wharves.

"To aid in this purpose, and to prevent their reoccupation the roofs might be removed and these houses filled with bricks and stones and with the rubbish of the fallen houses. Second.—That the present debris be left in place to

"Second.—That the present debris be left in place to act as a natural buttress to what remains standing, so as to prevent as far as possible any further falling or sliding, and that the road be made to pass round the foot of it as far from it as possible.

"It is also recommended to fill the gap where these houses have been swept away and to construct a strong rampart of built up loose stones at least six feet wide at the top and ten feet high above the curve of Champlain street to prevent falling rocks reaching the wharves as they might easily do, to the damage of life and shipping.

"Third.—That a part of the mass of rock now left standing and all the terrace on it as far as the first kiosk, from the west end of the terrace, be removed. The mass of rock to be removed should extend the whole length of the dangerous portion and start from above half way of rock to be removed should extend the whole length of the dangerous portion and start from above half way down the face of the standing cliff, and be gradually sloped upwards to the edge of the large crevasses about 80 feet in rear, the excavated material being thrown on the debris below to add to the strength of the buttress formed by it, and so to still further add to its resistance to any sliding movement of the mass of rock in rear.

"This last-mentioned work would be of dangerous execution, and, according to engineers, might be done by a company of royal engineers who could be brought from Halifax; nevertheless, the Minister of Militia and Defence is of the opinion that under the superintendence of an officer belonging to the Royal Engineers such, for example, as Lieut. J. T. Lang and others at present in Canada, and who superintended important works since they have left our Royal Military College, this work could be done without asking for a company of Royal Engineers."

The above quotations contain, to my mind, con-

The above quotations contain, to my mind, conclusive evidence that there is immediate danger of other landslides in that locality, and that there are certain necessary precautions to be taken to avoid further loss of life and damage to property. Now, the only question which remains for us to examine is who has to perform the works. mind this question has never presented the slightest doubt. I think that the same rule which applies to ordinary cases should apply to this one. house is in such a position as to be a danger to the neighbourhood, it is the duty of the proprietor to take such steps as will remove the nuisance. the present case, the nuisance is Government property, and I think the Government should take go now over the ground which the hon. gentleman Mr. FRÉMONT.

such steps as will remove all danger in the future. The Department of Militia and Defence have acknowledged that such is their duty, since the Council, to which I have referred, Order in mentions that in the past the department always performed the work they thought necessary. I may mention that part of the Order in Council. It reads as follows:

The Minister desires to add that, since the Department of Militia and Defence has taken over the control of repairs to militia properties in July, 1884, whenever reports have been made to that department by the civic authorities of the city of Quebec regarding the dangerous state of any portion of the fortifications and that these works have been deemed urgent to prevent lives being endangered, and within the superintendence of his department, he has given immediate instructions to the officers of the Department of Militia and Defence to have the work done." work done.'

The civic authorities in Quebec since the landslide and before, have often notified the Government of the present danger, so that the Government cannot plead ignorance. I have stated that it is the duty of the Government to make such works, and I add that it is not in the power of any other person The Deor body to do so in the present instance. partment of Militia and Defence has always refused to allow any other person to interfere with the rock in question. I remember some years ago, when a passenger elevator was under construction, not very far from the scene of this landslide, that the Government kept a guard from "B" Battery on duty in order to prevent the rock from being touched. As the Government did not take any precautionary measures in this case, we in the city of Quebec had the rock declared dangerous and a public nuisance, under our city charter, and we notified the Government of that, but the Government did nothing. I then wrote to the Department of Militia and Defence, asking that the action of the city authorities be not interfered with, if the city authorities took measures to prevent further loss of life or damage to property, but I have not yet received any definite answer to that communication. In conclusion, I say this matter cannot be left aside any longer. Some parts of the rock are crumbling day by day, and the danger is increasing. On the 17th July last, the Quebec Chronicle said:

"The Dangers of the Cliff.—The Cape Diamond cliff shows signs of uneasiness, good sized pieces of rock are continually falling and under the influence of the recent rains quite a quantity of material has been washed down." I feel confident that the Government will appoint a commission to investigate the causes of the accident, and the amount of damages to be awarded, and further will take such means as will prevent as much as possible any future loss of life and damage to property.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend who has just resumed his seat as usual has argued his case with an ability which we all recognize in him, but, in putting it as strongly as he has put it, it seems to me possible to differ with him as to the course which has been followed by the Government in this matter. It might possibly have been more convenient to have postponed the discussion until the papers which the hon. gentleman is seeking to have laid upon the Table were produced, and to the production of which there is no possible ob-However, I am quite prepared, and in jection. doing so I shall be frequently speaking from memory, not having the documents before me, to

It is hardly necessary for me to exhas covered. press to Parliament and the country the deep feeling of sympathy of the Government in regard to the loss of lives which took place in Quebec in consequence of that accident. However, as often occurs in matters of importance, it is necessary, in our positions as public men occupying the positions of administrators of public departments, not only not to give way to our sympathies but to see that the public are protected against the manner in which public money might be distributed by the men who are at the head of the various departments and trustees for the public. We felt, immediately after the question arose, that we should investigate, and that without the least possible delay, the causes which had led to the unfortunate catastrophe in Quebec, and, immediately upon our hearing of it, I despatched to the spot two gentlemen who were considered in the department to be the best authorities from an engineering standpoint. The one was Major Mayne. Before he came here and was appointed an instructor in the Royal Military College, he had a reputation in the old country which placed him among the gentlemen who were at the head of their profession. sent there and also Major General Cameron. After having ascertained the damage which had been committed and after having the opinion expressed by these two experts, what where the means that could be adopted to prevent the recurrence of such a catastrophe, it became the duty of the department to ascertain how far the responsibility and liability of the Government were concerned, so that we might, if it had been decided that the Government were responsible, discuss the damage, the quantum of damage, which the Government were responsible for if called upon to pay. We were receiving some claims every day, claims covering large amounts of money. It was evidently the bounden duty of the department to ascertain the legal responsibility of the Government as far as the damage was concerned, and means were taken to ascertain how far that responsibility went, and upon the report of the Department of Justice it was decided that the Government were not legally responsible. was shown that the landslide had not occurred from any fault or negligence or carelessness on the part of the Government. That it was an accident in the ordinary sense of that word, an accident occurring by the will of God, and that we should not and could not in any way saddle the responsibility of any act of carelessness on the Government. This point having been cleared, it was ascertained that the Government could not be held responsible for the damage. Several deputations interviewed the Government, some of which I had the honour of meeting in Quebec, and others of which, as my hon. friend has stated, came up to Ottawa for the purpose of interviewing the late Prime Minister and also the members of the Government whom he has mentioned, my hon. friend and colleague, the Minister of Public Works, and myself. After meeting the deputations I again submitted to Council a report, without admitting in any way responsibility for past damages, for the purpose of trying, so far as it was possible for the department, to avoid any recurrence of the accident for the future. Now, the hon. gentleman says that we pulled down some houses on Champlain street which might have been some protection against the avalanche or the landslide, and preventing it from crossing the street and destroying other houses. Well, I think that would have been a very problematic remedy; and in any case it does not often occur that houses are kept standing for the purpose of preventing rocks from rolling across the street. If the houses had been left standing, the landslide which occurred would have swept the houses away as it crossed the Now, the hon. gentleman, in the course of his interesting speech, has given several cases, and he quotes one, that of Dufresne, as a precedent which might be utilized for the purposes of his argument in favour of the Government assuming responsibility in the case of this landslide. Now, Sir, there is no parallel between these cases. According to the instructions we have received the landslide occurred without any fault of the Government. In the case of Dufresne, he was injured in the service of the Government, and we gave him that consideration which, I think, any public servant situated as he was, would be entitled to. I see no parallel whatever between these cases. Dufresne was injured in the service of the Government, through an accident, and being unable to receive medical attendance upon the spot, he had to be removed, to a great distance to receive that medical attendance as far as I can recollect the case, and unfortunately lost his foot and was taken care of by the Govern-The hon. gentleman says, in quoting some of the reports of my department, that we did all the necessary works which were required by the corporation, when reports were made as to the danger arising from certain of our military works to life and property in Quebec. I admit that, but I see a great difference between this case, and the cases of the landslide. In the cases in which instructions were given to comply with the demands of the Corporation of Quebec, we recognized that it was our own property, and we considered that, therefore, we were bound to protect the lives of the citizens from any accident that might occur. Such is not the case with the landslide, according to the advice we have received. Now, I desire to tell the hon, gentleman that so far as the papers are concerned I shall have them brought down as speedily as possible. I would like to read to him a report which I made to the Council, and which was embodied in the Order in Council which has been signed by His Excellency, and which, for the future, may relieve his mind and the minds of our friends in Quebec, from apprehensions of the possibility of a recurrence of such accidents, by reason of the effectual precautions which we have taken:

"The Minister recommends, although he does not consider the Government liable in any way for the catastrophe. or the results, that the Government, as to contribution, should do the work above-mentioned, provided always that the city of Quebec shall undertake to relieve and to hold harmless the Government against any obligation towards any person, to carry away the debris, and will secure the Government against any damage which may occur while the work is being proceeded with by furnishing the necessary police force to warn the people off, and by causing the tenants of the houses in dangerous proximity to the work, to vacate their residences during the process of such work, and preventing traffic in such portion in certain streets and at such times as may be considered dangerous for the lives of the citizens; and provided the civic authorities undertake to use every precautionary measure requisite to ensure the work being carried on successfully and without danger."

Now, the intention of the department is to carry out the suggestion made by Major Mayne and to have that portion of the rock, which is now considered threatening, removed under the supervision of one of the skilled officers of the Royal Military College and to have that portion of the rock cut down.

What is the date of that report? Mr. AMYOT. Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Order is dated on the 18th July, 1891. The hon, gentleman knows well that Major Mayne has always been of the opinion that the debris should not be removed, but that it should be left there for the purpose of forming, as the hon. gentleman correctly stated, a kind of buttress to prevent the danger that may arise from any further landslide occurring. I am pre-pared to carry out that suggestion, and it was my intention to see the hon. gentleman and to give him a copy of this Order in Council, which I shall send to him, and as soon as the city and the department can agree as to the conditions to be observed, I shall be prepared to give instructions to have the work carried on.

Mr. LAURIER. I desire to offer my very sin cere congratulations to my hon. friend from Que bec County for the very able and lucid manner in which he has presented this case to the House. If the Minister of Militia will permit me to say so, it seems to me that he has not at all answered the argument of my hon. friend, in urging that the Government is not responsible for this accident, because, although it occurred on their property, it was, as he says, an act of God. In one sense the occurrence did take place by the will of God, but the hon, gentleman will admit that this is a very It was an act of God, no vague explanation. doubt, but had the hon. gentleman exercised the slightest prudence the injury to life would not have taken place. It was an accident against which human prudence might have found an escape for life and property. Every one knew, from the reports of the Geological Survey, what was the structure of the rock, and every one had seen the crevice that had been existing there for many years, and the Government must have known that some time or other the landslide would occur which actually did occur. The very pre-by the hon. caution which is now taken by the hon. gentleman to prevent a recurrence of the accident would, if carried out previously, have, no doubt, prevented the occurrence of the accident. Under such circumstances, it seems to me to be quite a debatable question as to whether the Government would not be responsible in a court of justice from this very fact, that, though the accident occurred from the nature of the ground, still it was of such a nature that it could have been avoided with human prudence. But whatever may be the legal aspect of this case, everybody is aware that the people who suffered from this accident have been reduced to such penury that it was impossible for them to seek a remedy in the courts. Then they must apply to this Government for a remedy. The hon, gentleman, as I understand him, places himself simply behind the legal aspect of the case, and because he had the advice of the Department of Justice, that it was an accident arising from the laws of nature, out of the nature of the ground, for this reason, he says, the Government are not responsible. Well, that may be so. Let us say that in the point of law the people who suffer from this accident would have no remedy. Sir Adolphe Caron.

justice arising out of the law of the land-which perhaps may shield the Government in this instance -suggests another and a higher aspect of the If the Government are blameless, then I concur with the hon, gentleman that the Government are free from responsibility. But if the Government are not free from blame and have neglected to take the precautions which the very nature of the case should have induced them to take, under such circumstances should not the principles of humanity lead them to give the assistance to those people to which they were entitled? The hon, gentleman has referred to the case of Dufresne, adverted to by my hon, friend; the Government had assisted Dufresne simply because the accident he met with occurred while he was in the service of the Government. Far be it from me to blame the Government for having assisted that man; on the contrary, I think they did But, if the principles of justice and humanity dictated to the Government to act in such a way when one of their officers received an accident, through no fault of theirs whatever, but while he was in the service of the Government, there is far more reason for the Government to come to the rescue of those who suffered from this disaster, if the Government were not altogether free from blame. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. He cannot overcome this objection: that if he had taken the precaution which he now suggests the Government will take, if he had had the rock blown down and the deposits left at the bottom to act as a buttress, not only the chances are, but it is almost a certainty, that no accident whatever would have occurred under such circumstances; and although the Government might in a court of justice evade responsibility, there is even greater reason to compensate these victims than there was to compensate Dufresne for the accident he met with while in the service of the Government.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I should like to join the hon, gentleman who has just spoken in congratulating the member for Quebec County (Mr. Frémont) on the way he has presented to the House a case, which certainly must have enlisted his sympathies very strongly indeed, irrespective of the duty he holds as a member of this House, to those connected with that great catastrophe. I am certain nothing has been said by the Minister of Militia as to the extent to which this calamity has been deplored that is too strong, and nothing has been said by him that cannot be joined in by any person from any part of this country. The question, however, which arose in connection with the landslide and with the damage which resulted from it was not a question of humanity and was not a question of charity. Very extensive claims were laid before the Government in connection with that matter, and it was absolutely necessary that the Government should deal with the matter on the basis of right. It is true, as the hon. member for Quebec County (Mr. Frémont) has said, that there have been instances in which the Government have come to the relief of communities when there was no question of right involved; as, for instance, the case of the city of Hull, and the case of the city of St. John. Those were cases in which there was not merely individual disaster but in which the There whole community was involved in an overwhelming is another aspect of the case. A part of human calamity, and under circumstances of that kind it has been felt occasionally that the call for assistance on the ground of humanity was one applying to us as well as to the provincial authorities. In the case of the unfortunate sufferers in Quebec, it was not a matter of a whole community being overwhelmed, it was not a matter of irreparable pecuniary loss, because the great city of Quebec, I have no doubt, as far as humane treatment is concerned, is amply able and willing to deal with any call of charity. We have to deal with the matter on the ground of right, not only on account of the extensive nature of the claims which arose, but on account of the very important principle involved. We are very important principle involved. We are vested with the title to enormous tracts of country, subject to the same accident as occurred at Quebec, which may involve disaster at any time, not only to the inhabitants of the locality, but to the public works of the neighbourhood, railways, &c.; and it is impossible to admit this claim, unless it is held that, with respect to all these properties, we are under a liability to keep up the formation of the soil and of the rock, irrespective altogether of the forces of nature. The question which was submitted to us was this, whether, under the circumstances of the case, as stated in the reports presented, there was a liability on the part of the Government. The reports prove beyond any doubt, if they are credible, the fact that the disaster which occurred at Quebec arose from the forces of nature, and not as the hon, member for Quebec has expressed it, as the result of the work of man, or as the result of negligence on the part of the proprietor. The hon, leader of the Opposition has intimated that the Minister of Militia has almost admitted that there must have been a default on the part of the Government, because he said, if the same precautions had been taken which are about being taken, namely, the precaution of blowing down all rock which by any possibility would seem liable to fall, the difficulty would not have occurred. But the hon, gentleman will see that it is one thing after a great mass of rock has fallen from the Citadel and caused fissures to appear which make it probable that a further fall may take place, then to take precautions for the removal of that rock; and it is quite another thing to have foreseen that which the reports of the best experts we had to investigate the cases declare could not have been foreseen and could not have been provided for by any human prevision. Under these circumstances, dealing with the matter not as one of charity but on the reports we have had, we feel that no fault rests with the Government in connection with this matter; we feel all has been done in the direction of duty, and we are of the opinion that before the large claims that are involved are dealt with even on humanitarian principles we should have a decision of the court on the question of liability involved. It is stated that those who are most aggrieved have not the means to carry on the litigation. But if I remember aright, the city of Quebec has itself instituted an action which is going to trial, and no doubt in that suit all the questions involved will be fully tried and determined. If the result of that investigation into the facts or into the legal question involved should be unfavourable to the Government it will be unnecessary that individual sufferers should incur ex-member for Quebec County (Mr. Frémont) seems disposed to think that I had given an opinion that there ought not to be any work undertaken by this Government for the prevention of future accidents. He was somewhat misinformed upon that point. The slide having occurred, it became manifest to the experts who were employed that a further slide might be expected, partly as the result of the first one, and partly because the fissures had so developed that it became apparent that the danger, as regards the remaining rock, was more imminent than it ever had seemed to be before. Under these circumstances, it is not a question of mere liability on our part, nor is it a question of mere humanitarianism, it is obviously the duty-the moral duty at least—of those who have the proprietorship of a piece of property which is liable to fall, even without fault on the part of the proprietor, to do all they can to avert disaster to life and property from that fall. It was with that view, that as regards the future, we had determined to do all that is possible in the way of removing the superincumbent mass of rock, which is likely to be detached in the near future. But as regards the past, for the reason I have stated, and without any want of sympathy at all for those who were concerned in that great disaster, we have felt it absolutely necessary that our liability on the subject should be put to the test in the courts of justice.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. Minister of Justice seems to forget that in 1880, the Government was notified of the state of that place, and that they received a report of one of the most able engineers in the country upon it. I think the hon. Minister of Justice is very generous in assuming the responsibility as to that, because it does not belong to his department, and I do not think he was in this House when that report was officially sent. I presume it is due to his spirit of fairness and justice that a petition of right has been granted, and that the fiat of His Excellency has been given. But the hon. Minister will doubtless remember that this accident occurred two years ago, and if the parties, very poor as they are, continue to go on suffering for a much longer time, they may die before the remedy is applied. The hon, gentleman says that a report has been made by engineers. Well, I do not believe in these exparte reports, and I think it should have been the duty of the Militia Department to have a contradictory report, because only one side of the question has been presented. As far as I can remember, I do not believe there is a word in these reports, as to the firing of the guns morning and night from the top of the Citadel, and although every stranger who visits our town, every intelligent man who was walking on the terrace when these guns were being fired twice a day, and sometimes twenty-one times a day-every one used to say: This is shaking the cliff, and we will see one day or other some accident arising from That was very well known in Quebec, and it is one of the acts of man which makes the Government responsible. But there is another point. The rock of the Citadel is not now as nature made it; it has been changed, walls have been built on the top of the cliff, the Citadel itself has been built, large ditches have been constructed, and the entire form of the ground has been changed. It is not now as nature made it, and the works which have been penditure for litigation. I am sorry that the erected, as well as the water coming from the melting snow, have contributed to this accident. I say that it would lie with the Government to prove that these works did not contribute to the accident in order to avoid any responsibility in the mat-Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to join in the praise so well deserved by the hon, member for the County of Quebec (Mr. Frémont). I am glad to say that, although he is not the member for the division in which this accident occurred, he has had the courage and the capacity to work this case up very well, and to present it ably and forcibly to this House. I hope that two years more will not elapse before the works begin, and before the Department of Militia tries to obtain that agreement with the Corporation of Quebec which has been spoken of. I hope that the Minister of Militia will not take so much time over this, as the time he has taken to make terms with the Corporation of Quebec to supply pure water to the volunteers when they are drilling, and without forcing them to drink water which has remained in a barrel for weeks. I hope he will also succeed without further delay in getting a supply of water in the drill shed for the use of the volunteers, so as to make the place healthy. I hope the Minister of Militia will pay immediate attention to that, and that at least for the future, whatever may have been differences of opinion in the past, his action will be immediate, and such as to avoid any further loss of life and property.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES-CASE OF J. J. GRANT.

Mr. DAVIN moved for:

Return of all the correspondence in the case of J. J. Grant, N. & Section 30, Township 20, Range 21, W. 2nd Meridian, in connection with his settlement thereon, and purchase of the house left by the settler who had abandoned the homestead; all letters and telegrams respecting the same which passed between H. H. Smith, Commissioner of Dominion Lands, and His Honour Edgar Dewdney, then Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories: between William McGirr, or His Honour Edgar Dewdney, and any official of the Department of the Interior; between J. J. Grant and any official of the Department of the Interior; between the said H. H. Smith and any official of the Department of the Interior; between the said H. H. Smith and Nicholas Flood Davin, of Regina; between the Honourable Thomas White and Nicholas Flood Davin; together with all receipts for money paid into the Dominion Lands Office, Regina.

He said: I proposed this motion last Monday.

He said: I proposed this motion last Monday, or the Monday before, I forget which; and I was about to propose it without making any comments, but the hon. Minister of the Interior said that he wished the motion to stand as he wanted to make a statement. Since that time, circumstances have occurred in the North-West, and statements have been made in regard to this motion which make it necessary that I should take up the time of the House for a short time. I furnished myself with the original documents that were in the hands of Mr. Grant, also with some original documents that were in my own hands, and I have a précis of other letters, all of which we shall want. I may say here that I have a two-fold object in moving this motion. I want to make it a basis, either this session, or if I am spared, next session, of a motion that will affect Mr. Grant. I want also to make it next session one of the bases of a general motion deal-wish to say that the first official document I have here is a receipt for bond fee from the Department of the Interior at Regina for $20 to John J. Grant for the entry for the N. \(\frac{1}{2}\) Section 30, Township 20, Range 21, West 2nd Meridian.

Mr. DEWDNEY. What date is that?

Mr. DAVIN. It is the 27th June, 1887. It is signed W. H. Stephenson, agent of Dominion Lands. The second document is a letter from W. H. Stephenson, dated Dominion Lands Office, Regina, 28th June, 1887, and addressed to John J. Grant, Regina :

"Sir,—I have the honour to enclose herewith bond fee receipt for \$20 in connection with the cancellation of the $N.\frac{1}{2}$ 30, 20, 21. W. 2nd M."

Then, on the 30th June, 1887, a telegram comes from Winnipeg:

"Do not grant re-entry for land without referring to this office.

On the 17th of July Mr. Burpé wrote Mr. Stephenson, saying:

"Give Grant right to enter, subject to payment of $20 and $30 for the house, which latter sum you can pay over to Lieutenant Governor Dewdney."

On 11th July the Hon. Edgar Dewdney writes to Mr. Stephenson applying to buy the quarter section. On the 12th of July, 1887, Mr. Stephenson writes to Mr. Grant, as follows:

"I have the honour to inform you that you can now obtain entry for the N. 30, 20, 21, W. 2nd M., upon payment of $20 for inspection, in addition to the usual entry fees of $20. You will also have to pay $300 for the house built by Cowan and the value of any other improvements, which amount is to be ascertained by the affidavits of two disintential parties to be accordingly by the affidavits of two disinterested parties to be procured by you.

At the same time, I may tell you that Grant was there with his two sons, and he obtained authority to enter for them; and I may add that subsequently they came up, and these sons are now among our most industrious farmers, and he himself is on the half section he wanted at that time to procure. On 2nd August, 1887, Mr. Burpé, Secretary of the Dominion Lands Commission at Winnipeg, writes to John J. Grant:

I nave the monour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th ultimo, and am directed in reply to inform you that it will be impossible to alter the conditions in regards to the terms of re-entry to the north half sec. 30, 20, 21, W. 2nd, as communicated to you by the agent at Regina." "I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your

The next document is a receipt for conditional entry, dated 24th August, 1887:

"Received from John J. Grant, sr.. of Craven, in the Province of Assiniboia, the sum of $340, being for conditional entry on N. ½ of Section 30, in Township 20, Range 21, W. 2nd Meridian."

On the 1st October, 1887, Mr. Burpé writes to Mr. Grant from Winnipeg:

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th ultimo and am directed to inform you that on the receipt of the homestead Inspector's report on the N. ½ 30, 20, 21, W. 2nd, the agent at Regina will be instructed in regard to the conditional entry granted you for the above land. Instructions to inspect the improvements were given some time ago."

On 2nd November, 1887, Ruttan, who is in the office at Winnipeg, writes to Stephenson, saying: Roger's had reported the building on north half of Section 30, in Township 20, Range 21, west 2nd Meridian, to be worth $660, $300 more must be paid in order to acquire entry; also, to ascertain from Mr. Dewdney if he is willing to purchase the land if Grant fails. On the same date, H. H. Smith, tories. I shall not waste the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, by making many comments, but I of Winnipeg, telegraphs John J. Grant at Regina:

Mr. Amyor.

About this time Grant was brought up to me by a prominent supporter of mine, and I said to him: "Don't pay a cent more than the $300; I will see that you will get your homestead on paying the $300;" for at that moment and up to quite recently the practice was that whatever was given for a house to the outgoing settler, that amount was all that could be charged to the man coming in. Thereupon I at once wrote to Mr. White, then Minister of the Interior. On 7th November the Hon. Thomas White wrote to me:

"My Dear Davin,—I have yours with its enclosure in relation to Mr. Grant's entry for a cancelled homestead. I have sent to Mr. Smith for an explanation, and will let you know further as soon as I hear."

On 9th November, 1887, there is a letter from Mr. Dewdney saying that he is prepared to buy the land; he thought if he could not purchase the ground, he would be able to remove or sell the house. On the 10th of November, 1887, Mr. Smith, the Commissioner of Dominion Lands in Winnipeg, wrote to me as follows-this is the original letter, of which there is no doubt a copy in the office in Winnipeg :-

"Dear Mr. Davin,—Mr. White has forwarded me your letter to him on the 3rd inst., respecting John J. Grant's entry for the N. ½ 30, 20, 21, W. 2nd M. It seems that the former homesteader of this land, Mr. Cowan, desired to dispose of his buildings and abandon his entry; and, as Lieut. Governor Dewdney was then thinking of building a country house at Long Lake, he decided to buy Cowan's building and remove it. He completed the purchase, paying Cowan $300, but afterwards abandoned his intention of removing it to Long Lake; and in June last, during my absence in Ottawa, called at this office and asked Mr. Gordon, the Acting Commissioner, that on Cowan's land being re-entered for the money he had paid might be collected for his benefit. This was agreed to, and when Grant applied for entry for the land, he was told he could do so subject to payment of $300 for the house and a certain amount for the other improvements. Grant continued to correspond with this office, with the view to obtaining more favourable terms of entry, and eventually an inspector was sent to report as to the value of the improvements, with a view to seeing whether anything applied by the large of the land of the report of the land of the improvements, with a view to seeing whether anything applied by the large of the land of the land of the improvements. eventually an inspector was sent to report as to the value of the improvements, with a view to seeing whether anything could be done to meet Mr. Grant's wishes. He reported the house to be worth $650, and a stable valued at $10. The arrangement with Mr. Dewdney did not appear on the fyle, and as Mr. Gordon and Mr. Burpé, the only ones in the office, who knew anything about it, were away at the time, Mr. Grant was telegraphed to that he would have to pay $360 extra. Mr. Gordon arrived in the city to-day, and I have discussed the matter with him, and have discovered the arrangement in question. Although the house is worth $650, and Grant could not well grumble were he asked to pay the full amount. I have no objection to his retaining it for the $300 he has already paid, provided Mr. Dewdney is agreeable to that arrangement. Of course, the house being the property of Mr. Dewdney and not of the department, any decision made must be subject to his approval." ject to his approval.

I may say here what I have said again and again in dealing with these matters, a house is realty, and the moment a man abandons his homestead, the homestead reverts to the Crown, and all the realty on it is the property of the Crown, and nobody else has any right whatever to it, as in fact is acknowledged by the arrangements made by the department within four or five months, namely, that any money paid for improvements, such as houses, ploughing or stables, and so forth, shall go, not to the settler who has left, but to the Gov-There is a man named Young in Regina who wants to get the value of his improvements, but I have a letter from the Minister saying that he cannot get the improvements because he aban-

"If Grant will fyle with the agent at Regina a document from Mr. Dewdney to the effect that he will be satisfied to accept the sum already paid, I will instruct the agent to confirm his entry.

"Yours truly,

"H. H. SMITH."

Then, on 17th November, Mr. Smith writes as follows :-

"Write full particulars of difficulties about Grant's entry, and state why matter was not arranged. On 21st November, Mr. Smith sent the following telegram :-

"Reserve north half of 30, 20, 21, and wire me."

A letter of the same date, signed Ruttan, set forth certain arrangements for Mr. Dewdney, and Mr. Stephenson writes from Regina on 2nd December, 1887, to Mr. Grant, as follows:

"I have the honour to inform you that the commissioner advises that it being contrary to the practice of the department to make any refund of office fees. except in very special circumstances, which do not appear in your case, no refund can be made. Be good enough to inform me if I am to cancel your entries for the S. ½ 30, 20, 21, W. 2nd M."

What that means is this, that when Grant found he could not get his entry without paying $600 he wanted to go back. He wanted the $20 he paid himself as an entry fee and the $20 paid for each of his sons, making $60. They gave him back his $300, but refused to return the fees he had paid for himself and his sons. They handed him $300, and Grant cleared out, the department at Regina keep-That year in which Grant was kept ing the fees. out was the best year we had in the North-West; and if he had been allowed to go in, he would have had the advantage of that year. He subsequently came in, and in the meantime I was at the department but could never get anything done until the 12th of June, 1888, when the Hon. Mr. Dewdney was about to become Minister of the Interior, and then I got a letter from Mr. Smith to the following effect :-

"In reference to your recent note to Mr. Burgess, I have had a letter from Lieutenant Governor Dewdney, saying that if Mr. J. J. Grant is prepared to pay $300 for his house on the N. ½ 30, 20, 21, W. 2nd M., he is willing to sell it to him at that figure. I think that if Mr. Grant really wants the building he ought to close the transaction immediately, as the matter has already been in abeyance so long."

I myself used any other influence I could have, but I could not get it for Grant for the $300, no matter what I did; and there was no more right in the hon. gentleman, as he knows now-I do not think he knew it then, from the tenor of some of his letters, and I do not say there was any blame for his not knowing, as there was nothing in his position of Lieutenant Governor to call his attention to the law respecting Dominion lands—but I say this is the serious thing that the department is so managed in its most influential branch—aye, and is so managed here, for I spoke to Mr. Burgess about it—that it was ready to put through a transaction like this for a person outside, who ought to have had no more influence in the department than anydoned his farm and came into Regina where his body else. He had no connection with the department and no authority whatever, but for some reason his wishes were considered in this matter. do not blame him, but I say that it lays the foundaation for a proposition which I have indicated here and will lay down here next year, and that is, that the department requires reform. I do not think that is very wild proposition to lay down.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A few days ago, when there was question of this motion being dropped, I stated I preferred that it should stand, as I wished to make a few remarks in reference to it. The hon, gentleman, when moving a motion of his, a short time ago, in reference to a land matter, endeavoured to show, by a transaction which had taken place with reference to the purchase of this house of Mr. Cowan's, that I had treated settlers unjustly, and gave that transaction as an example of how the settlers were treated in the North-West. Well, I think I showed that, in the first place, instead of doing an unjustifiable act to one of the settlers I did him a favour; and, in regard to Grant, if he had only acted in a straightforward way, he would have been in possession of that house and lot months and months before he was. Mr. Cowan, I must inform the House in the first place (and I do not think the hon, member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) knows it), had special permission from the department at Winnipeg to remove his house from his lot. If he had not had that permission in the first place he could not have sold it, and the extensive improvements which he made would have had to be dealt with in the same way as other improvements are generally dealt with on a cancelled homestead. But he had special permission granted to him to remove this house, and if he had not received that permission he could not possibly have sold it; but he obtained this permission from Mr. Smith, and, when he was hawking this house about for sale, he had to state that he had this permission or no one would have purchased it, and Mr. Grant, when he came in on the cancelled homestead, would have had to pay the valuation of the improvements to the Government. It appears that a valuation was made, of which I was not aware until the hon, member spoke of it, and that the homestead inspector valued the house and improvements at $650, and that would have been the amount which would have had to be paid to the Government by the person who got the When I purchased the house from Mr. Cowan I intended to move it, and I could have moved it within twenty-four hours, but I did not, and Mr. Grant could have got that section at once; but when notice was given to the department that that house was sold, and that I had purchased it, it was right for the Dominion lands to hold it over until the difficulty was satisfactorily settled. Mr. Grant asked me what I would take for the house, and I offered it to him for $500, and he would have been willing to pay that sum if he had not received subsequent information that, if he could get an entry for the land on which the house which I had purchased stood; he had me in his power, and could have brought me into any terms he chose. Mr. Grant did notact in a straightforward way, and when I found that, I said I would not sell the house unless I received what I would consider a fair price for it. That dispute led to the delay, and it went on from month to month until, I think in the month of June, he re- speculations of anybody, I care not who it may be, Mr. DAVIN.

ceived his entry and made a deposit of $300 for the house, which was the amount which I had paid. If I had not been leaving for the East at the time Γ would have rather pulled the house down and removed it off the lot; but, as I was leaving for Ottawa, I preferred to take just the amount I had paid. I have here a letter from Mr. Cowan which I desire to read to the House:

"I regret to notice in the newspapers that a charge has been made against you by Mr. N. F. Davin, M.P., in connection with the purchase by you from me of my dwelling house at the time of my removal from the Region nection with the purchase by you from me of my dwelling house at the time of my removal from the Regina District to Alberta, and fearing that you may suffer from the charge which has been made I deem it my duty to state the facts as they are and as I recollect them. When I decided to leave the Regina District for the District of Alberta it was necessary for me to realize upon whatever property I had in that district, and I offered my house for sale at $300 to several parties, namely, N. F. Davin, M. P., Mr. J. W. Smith, Regina; Dawson Bole & Co., Regina, and others (after having received liberty to dispose of the same), but could not sell it to any of them at that figure. I then offered to sell to you at the same price, when you replied that you could make no use of the building for yourself, but would endeavour to send me a purchaser. About a week or ten days later I again met you, when you asked me if I had yet found a purchaser for my dwelling and I replied "No; it seems impossible to dispose of it," or words to that effect. You then ask me how much I asked for the house and I said I had been asking $300 for it, but was willing to accept $250 rather than leave it there unsold and uncared for. Without any further negotiations you then said you did not wish to see me go away out of the Regina District without realizing something upon the house, and at once wrote out your cheque for the sum of $300 and handed same to me, saying you would take the house. Whilst I must admit the property cost me considerably more than that sum, I was at that time very glad to receive $300 for it, and I did not at the time, and do not now, think that you had any particular use for the building, and believed that you purchased same merely to assist me and not to benefit yourself. The transaction was a perfectly open and honourable one on your part, and I considered you did me a great favour at that time in third it the large for the sum of the large for the building, and believed that you purchased same merely to assist me and not to benefit yourself. The transaction was a perfectly open and honourable one on your part, and I considered you did me a great favour at that time in taking the house for $300, and I do not believe I could have obtained that sum for it from any other person at that time. I might further remark that Mr. J. Grant, whose name is mentioned in relation to this matter, and who entered for the land upon which the house is built, received the benefit of all the other improvements I made on the land gratis—consisting of about 35 or 40 acres of well cultivated land ready for crop, and a bank stable 32 feet by 40 feet, with stoned well inside."

I read that letter in order to show that, as far as Mr. Cowan was concerned, he considers that I did him a favour in purchasing the house, and that it was simply because I knew the position in which he was placed. As to Mr. Grant, I have no sympathy with him at all. I consider that he got a very good house and property for the money he paid, and, if I had not been going to Ottawa at the time, I would have insisted upon getting an amount which would have been a much more fair one; but, when he found that he had me at his mercy in that respect, he refused to give more than I had given myself for the house. I am not at all ashamed of my action in the matter, and I do not think the hon. member for West Assiniboia Mr. Davin) can show that the transaction was one that would indicate that I was in the habit of doing any injustice to the settlers in the North-

Mr. DAVIN. Of course I have not said any. thing as to the action which took place between Cowan and the then Lieutenant Governor. I have only referred to it as leading up to what I think is a thing to be condemned, and that is that the department should make itself subservient to the whether a Lieutenant Governor, Indian Commissioner, farmer, or anybody else.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is done every day.

Mr. DAVIN. Then I am very sorry to hear it. This is the transaction as I understand it: Grant wants to go in on that section. The amount of $340° is accepted from him by Mr. Stephenson, land agent at Regina. Clearly Mr. Stephenson thought that was the proper payment to be made, and, without even that, as the correspondence will show, they thought at Winnipeg that it was sufficient. But what happened? If you look at the dates and observe what Mr. Smith says in his letter, you will find that in the meantime the Lieutenant Gover-nor of the North-West Territories called at the office at Winnipeg and then it was that the telegrams were sent and the correspondence took place preventing the settler from completing his settlement or entering upon his lot; and for what reason? The hon, gentleman says he is not ashamed to state that the reason was that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories wanted to make 100 per cent. out of an incoming settler. He is not ashamed of it. It would bring good profit and would be a good bargain, and that is the sort of thing which would commend itself to his heart and his conscience and his intellect. I cannot complain of that. What I do complain of is that the Ontario farmer going up there to settle and having received his entry, a man who was to take any part or act in regard to settling the territories should have been a friend and director of the settler instead of, as he says himself, trying to make a good bargain for $500, though Mr. Smith is kinder to him than he is to himself, because he says it was worth $600 and that this amount must be paid to Mr. Dewdney unless Mr. Dewdney is willing to take less. Suppose the additional price was only $200, that was a pretty good thing to ask as a profit on $300 on a new settler. This settler would have the amount handed back to him for which the house had been purchased, but he would not get his fee back. He would not get his fee, and unless such an accident had occurred, for instance, as the hon, gentleman becoming Minister of the Interior—he will pardon me my presumption in calling it an accident—if an accident like that had occurred, then to this hour, probably, we would have been corresponding about that, and the North-West would have been without a settler, and a settler would have lost a good place, because the place is well fitted for agriculture, and he has grown good crops on it since. hope that the day is past when the public of Canada, or the Parliament of Canada, will think that any such transaction as the hon. Minister says he is not ashamed of, would meet with any sympathy at the hands of this House. When the papers are fully brought down, probably next session, I may refer to this matter on a much larger scale, with a view of dealing fully with the whole management of affairs in the North-West.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no desire whatever to enter into the personal matters in which the Minister of the Interior is involved. But there is a question of policy suggested by the hon, member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) to which the House cannot be indifferent. That hon, gentleman has stated that the land department of the Department of the Interior at Regina, is made the vehicle whereby certain parties can be made to pay their debts. The Minister of the Interior says that is done every day. If that is the case the House must certainly come to the conclusion that that is a most vicious principle. Settlers going to the North-West ought to be given every facility to make their entries, and if, instead of finding facilities to make their entries, they are met at the doors of the department with a collecting agency, or with the officiousness of some officer who tries to collect the debts which may be due to some other party, be they high or low, it is a practice which everybody must acknowledge is detrimental to the settlement of that portion of the country. Everybody must agree that it ought to be the policy of the country to give every possible facility to set-tlers coming in, and not throw obstacles in their Then there is another statement made by the member for West Assiniboia, to which no answer has been given by the Minister. I understand from the member for West Assiniboia that this Grant had to pay $60 when he made his entry, $20 for himself and $40 for his two sons. I shall not enter into the reasons given by the Minister of the Interior so far as to say whether they are good, bad or indifferent, in justifying the action of his department. But it appears that when this man found he could not complete his entry, he asked back his money and could not get it. If that statement is true, it is surely an intolerable act, it shows maladministration in the department, and is one which, it seems to me, cannot be justified under any circumstances. If the facts are as stated, the member for West Assimboia was perfectly right in saying that the manner in which the department has administered the affairs of the North-West ought to undergo the most careful scrutiny.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I did not understand the hon, gentleman to say that he had asked back his money and could not get it. He never asked to have that entry cancelled.

Mr. LAURIER. That is what I understood.

Mr. DEWDNEY, If he had, it would have been done within 24 hours. It was the house that he wanted, and as long as he thought there was a chance of getting that house for a song, he held on to that entry. It was not the land he was after, but it was the house, and if we charged $1,000 for it, it was nobody's business.

Mr. DAVIN. What I stated was that the fees amounting to $60 were not returned to him. How could he cancel the entry? I do not blame the Minister for not knowing anything about the Department of the Interior before he came into it, I do not blame him for not knowing anything about the land law, but I wonder at the Minister stating that if he had cancelled the entry that man could have got his money back.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If he applied to have it cancelled.

Mr. PAVIN. That is to say, to have his entry cancelled.

Mr. DEWDNEY. If he had applied to have his entry cancelled.

House cannot be indifferent. That hon, gentleman has stated that the land department of the Department of the Interior at Regina, is made the vehicle do it, because the man had never got an entry.

Mr. DEWDNEY. You said he had, just now.

Mr. DAVIN. He paid the fees, but you prevented him getting the entry. He got an additional entry; the fees on that additional entry were taken, and he was prevented by the Lieutenant Governor of the territories from getting his entry, and when he left the country he could not get back his fees.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Everybody must agree that settlers going into that country ought, as the leader of the Opposition has said, to receive every facility for settlement. There is another class of people who are also entitled to the protection of the Government, and that is the settlers who are This appears to have been the case of a man who put up a house on a lot and was not able to continue to hold it. It would have been very much to the advantage to any party entering into that country to have purchased that land, house and all, from the Department of the Interior, for either $20, $40 or $60, if he could. If the Department of the Interior managed affairs in that way, I, for one, would be very much ashamed of it. understand the Minister of the Interior to say that the department endeavours in such cases to see that he gets the full value of the improvmeents made by the out-going settler from the in-going settler. If a man is not allowed to get such a house and lot free, I think it is a very wise administration.

Mr. DAVIN. The Minister is quite under a misconception in thinking that I said he was going to get them for $40 or $60. These were the fees. He had paid $360; the $300 were returned to him, and the $60 for fees were not returned.

Mr. LAURIER. The man deposited $60 to make an entry, that was the fee, but the entry was not made, and if the entry was not made, surely he was entitled to get his money back.

Motion agreed to.

ACCIDENTS FROM CAR COUPLING.

Mr. INGRAM moved:

That, in view of the great loss of life resulting to employés of railway companies in the coupling and uncoupling of railway cars, it is the opinion of this House that a sum of money should be set apart by Parliament to be offered as a reward for the invention of the best and most satisfactory self-acting car coupler calculated to obviate such accidents, and that means should be provided by the Government to pass upon said inventions and report upon the same to the Minister of Railways and Canals, or such person or persons as he may designate to receive such report, and to make the award as provided for in this resolution.

He said: The interest which has been shown in this House in the discussion this afternoon concerning the loss of life and limb by an accident in the city of Quebec, encourages me to suggest to the House some means by which the loss of life and limb can be prevented upon our railways in the Dominion. It may not be a matter of much importance to some hon, gentlemen, but I may say that in several states of the United States legislation has been sought for upon this very question. I find that the President of the United States, in his message to the 2nd session of the 51st Congress, has made reference to this matter:

"It may still be possible for this Congress to inaugurate, by suitable legislation, a movement looking to uniformity and increased safety in the use of couplers and brakes upon freight trains engaged in interstate commerce. The chief difficulty in the way is to secure agreement as to the Mr. DAVIN.

best appliances, simplicity, effectiveness, and cost being considered. This difficulty will only yield to legislation, which should be based upon full enquiry and impartial tests. The purpose should be to secure the co-operation of all well-disposed managers and owners, but the fearful fact that every year's delay involves the sacrifice of two thousand lives and the maining of twenty thousand young men should plead both with Congress and the managers against any needless delay."

In looking over the blue-book and reading the list of accidents that occurred on railways for the year ending 30th June, 1890, I find in the summaries of accidents, that no less than 1,052 occurred, from the following different causes:—

"1. Fell from cars or engines: 2, jumping on or off trains or engines when in motion: 3, at work on or near track, making up trains: 4, putting arms or heads out of windows: 5, coupling cars; 6, collisions, or by trains thrown from the track: 7, walking, standing, lying or being on the track; 8, explosions; 9, striking bridges; 10, other causes."

Now, Sir, my chief reason for bringing in this motion is the fact that after carefully looking into the figures I find that no less than 765 railway employés were killed or injured out of the total number of 1,052 persons, and of the former number no less than 366 persons were injured in coupling and uncoupling cars. When I further refer to the report of the Department of Railways and Canals I find that the Chief Engineer and General Manager of the Intercolonial Railway makes the following recommendations to the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals. He says:

of Railways and Canals. He says:

"With a view to the better protection of the travelling public and the employés, a system of heating by steam from the locomotive, and lighting by electricity, is being introduced into the passenger car stock, of which 102 cars are now fitted with appliances for steam heating and 81 for electric lighting. The air brake has been applied to 464 freight cars. The maintenance of these improvements adds materially to the operating expenses, the working of the electric light being very costly. I am, however, strongly in favour of the extension of these improvements to the entire car stock, and I accordingly propose to ask the right hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to place a sum in the Estimates for these purposes for submission to Parliament. The steam heating is said to work admirably, but the electric light has not proved to be altogether reliable, for although it is an excellent light while burning, it is apt to get out of order on the journey, partly from the motion of the train, in which case the old system of lighting by lamps has to be resumed. I hope, however, that both this difficulty and the excessive cost may eventually be overcome. The air brakes on the freight cars have proved of great advantage, and I trust the day is not far distant when they will be in general use upon the railways of Canada."

In this recommon the total cars is much to

In this recommendation, in which there is much to approve, I find, however, there is not sufficient attention paid to the appliances for coupling and uncoupling cars. The total number of accidents on the Intercolonial Railway during the year ending 30th June, 1890, was 186, of which 166 were to employés, and of that number 51 were injuries by coupling and uncoupling cars. That seems to me to be a very large proportion of employés to be injured in that way, and for that reason I maintain some inducements should be held out to the inventors to invent an automatic coupler which would be the means of preventing this enormous loss of life and limbs. This is a question which affects every member of the House. It will be remembered that not many years ago when hon, gentlemen came to Ottawa to attend their sessional duties they travelled on passenger cars held by the ordinary brake, and on those passenger cars were to be found the old fashioned coupler. Many hon. members will remember when they had to take a very long step to pass from one car to another.

Mr. Miller invented a platform and car-coupler, which is now used on all railways in the land, and it is owing to that invention hon, gentlemen can have the pleasure of having meals on the train without being disturbed, and berths and other conveniences such as can be had in any house. In the State of Michigan a law was passed compelling the railways of the state to adopt certain safety appliances on the roads, but after some years' experience, it was found by the state commissioner that they could not be made workable, because the state had not control over the cars passing from one state to another, and he therefore suggested to the Governor to ask the passage of concurrent resolutions by both branches of the Legislature with the view of sending them to Washington, and bringing before Congress a resolution to secure the adoption generally of greater safety appliances on the different railways in the United States and Canada. On examining the statistics of the railways of the United States, for the year ending 30th June, 1889, it appears that 300 employés were killed and 6,557 injured in coupling and uncoupling cars, being 56 per cent. of all accidents happening to trainmen. In the same year 551 employés were killed and 2,307 injured by overhead obstructions or by falling from trains and engines, being 23 per cent. of all accidents happening to trainmen; or in both countries, 307 were killed, 6,916 injured, or a total of 7,223 employés killed and injured, caused by coupling and uncoupling Hon. gentlemen may ask, are there not sufficient inventors to invent some appliance that the railway companies could adopt? It may surprise hon, gentlemen to know that during the last 15 years over 3,000 automatic car-couplers have been invented, and at a convention of master car builders, held three years ago, of all that number only seven were considered worthy of notice and only three deserved consideration. To-day the railway companies have only three types of couplers, namely: first, the old link and pin; second, vertical plane type, as represented by the Miller, Jernacy, Cowell, &c., couplers; third, the horizontal plane Take the ordinary old coupler, and it must be said they cause great loss to railway companies. The link and pin type are dangerous as regards coupling the trains and very often accidents occur to trains from improper couplings, whereas if an automatic coupler were employed many of the accidents could be avoided. Some critics say that railway companies are soulless corporations and are not prepared to adopt anything of this kind, even although it would benefit them. From that I beg to differ, for this reason: The railway com-panies of the Dominion and of the United panies of the Dominion and of the United States have their superintendents associations, train despatchers' associations, master mechanics' associations, master car builders' associations. these assemble at different periods of the year at different places and discuss among themselves what measures they believe to be for the best interests of the higher railway system of the two countries: and, as I have said already, when they discussed this question of automatic couplers in the master car builders' association, they came to the conclusion that there had been nothing effective yet invented, and that it was impossible for the companies to adopt an efficient uniform appliance until miles, it is the duty of the Government to place a certain sum in the Estimates for the purpose of encouraging inventors to invent some coupler that would prevent the accidents and loss of life, or at all events diminish the same both in the United States and Canada. They should test such inventions on the Government railways, and after satisfying themselves that they had struck the right one in the shape of an automatic coupler, it would then be well to place an Act on the Statute-book, compelling all the railway companies to adopt it. When the hon, member for South Leeds introduced the question of an alien labour law, he was requested by the Minister of Justice to defer his Bill until another session, or at all events until such time as would allow the Government an opportunity of bringing the matter before the authorities at Washington. I now point out to the Minister of Justice and to the Government that while at Washington this matter which I have brought before their attention is worthy of consideration as one affecting both the people of the United States and of Canada, and besides it is not a question that can be decided and dealt with unless a certain course to be agreed upon were adopted by both countries, owing to the fact that interchange of cars through different states of the union and these provinces is not affected by state or provincial laws. A few years ago an hon. member in the Ontario Legislature introduced a Bill to compel all hotels and public institutions to adopt a fire escape. That appeared to be quite a hardship to individuals; but in a few weeks after the Bill had become law several inventors of patent fire escapes visited Toronto, and there was adopted the escape which will be found on all hotels and public buildings in the province; and no one can say but that it was a step in the right direction. I have to thank the House for its indulgence but this is a matter of very great importance, and I was anxious to bring it to the attention of Parliament.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 140) in restraint of Fraudulent Marking.—(Mr. Costigan.)

THE EXCHEQUER COURT ACT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

what measures they believe to be for the best interests of the higher railway system of the two countries: and, as I have said already, when they discussed this question of automatic couplers in the master car builders' association, they came to the conclusion that there had been nothing effective yet invented, and that it was impossible for the companies to adopt an efficient uniform appliance until it was first invented. The Dominion of Canada owning and operating a railway covering 1,200

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This section refers to the provisions of the 7th section is to give the court jurisdiction in case of claims to public lands, where there are conflicting claims to patents of such lands. There is outstanding an old statute of Ontario giving this jurisdiction to the Ontario courts; but of course since the union of the provinces that has not been exercised, and questions have not been referred to the courts under that statute. It is considered a desirable provision to have that jurisdiction in relation to the Exchequer Court. Under this Bill:

"The Exchequer Court shall have exclusive original jurisdiction, at the suit or upon the application of any person claiming to be entitled to public lands, for which no patent has issued, as being the heir, devisee, representative, or assignee of the original grantee of the Crown, or as having derived a title or claim from or through any such heir, devisee, representative or assignee,—orat the suit or upon the application of the Attorney General of Canada, in any case in which public lands are claimed by any such person,—to ascertain, determine and declare who is the person to whom the patent for such lands ought to issue: 2. The court shall decide all such cases as in its judgment the justice and equity of the case demand, and shall report its decision to the Governor in Council, and letters patent may issue granting the lands in question in accordance with such decision.

At present these matters have to be settled altogether by departmental enquiry, and the department in so settling them has not facilities for taking evidence and, moreover, the parties are not bound by the decision and can always litigate among themselves

On section 3,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object of the third section is to make provision for a judge ad hoc in cases where the judge of the Exchequer Court is interested. The present statute provides that the Governor in Council may provide a substitute when the Exchequer judge is disqualified. That disqualification, as members of the legal profession know, arises only from relationship, or some pecuniary interest in the result of the litigation. There are cases, however, not quite coming up to that disqualification, in which it is desired on the part of the judge himself that he should not sit; as, for instance, cases in which he has taken an active part on one side while in the Department of Justice, and has given an opinion. Cases of that kind are now pending in the court, in one or two of which his name appears in the correspondence as having advised in one way or the other; and it is therefore proposed, instead of power simply to appoint an ad hoc judge when the Exchequer Court judge is disqualified, to exercise power at any time to appoint an ad hoc judge without its being necessary that he should have absolutely no jurisdiction. So that in any case in which the judge feels as a matter of delicacy or propriety that he should not sit, we shall have power to appoint a judge pro hac vice, even though he be not disqualified in law from sitting.

On section 6,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object of this clause is to conform to Bills which we have already adopted in relation to patents, copyrights and trade marks. Jurisdiction was given to the court last session in cases in which the Attorney General might intervene as representing the Crown, even though on the relation of a subject, and it is proposed by this clause to widen that provision and give the court jurisdiction in all cases of conflicting applications for any patent of invention, or for the registration of any copyright, trade mark or industrial design. I propose to amend section c slightly. The words here would seem to include jurisdiction on contracts relating to these subjects, but it is only intended to apply the jurisdiction to cases arising out of copyrights, trade marks or patents. Sir John Thompson.

On section 7,

Mr. LAURIER. Is the object of this clause to substitute judicial action for departmental action?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 8,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The object of this section is to adopt the interpleader practice in the Exchequer Court. At present there is no system by which the Crown can have interpleader there.

Mr. LAURIER. I confess I do not understand the term interpleader.

Sir JCHN THOMPSON. It sometimes happens that, for instance, a station master on the Intercolonial Railway finds a person claiming goods who is not the consignee, but claiming under bankruptcy process or otherwise. He has no means at present, nor has the Crown any means of calling on the parties claiming the goods to litigate between themselves, and the Crown has to bear the weight of the litigation, and has to deliver up the goods at its own risk, and to compensate the other party if it should turn out that the person receiving the goods has no title to them. Our interpleader practice is simply to enable the Crown to call upon the claimants to enter into litigation between themselves.

On section 9,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no provision in our present expropriation Act for considering what is called in the United States the betterment by a public work; as, for instance, when a piece of land is taken for the construction of a public wharf, the benefit to the surrounding land is to be considered in ordering compensation for the part taken.

On section 10,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is to provide an appeal in all these cases in which we have given jurisdiction on that subject.

Committee rose and reported progress.

PETROLEUM INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 157) to amend the Petroleum Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. As the Act now stands it requires the inspection of all petroleum. We find great difficulty, under a fair interpretation of the Act, in the inspection of lubricating oil that would not come up to the test required for illuminating oil, and, strictly under the law, must be condemned. It is, therefore, necessary to authorize the Governor in Council to exempt by regulation, wholly or in part, from the provisions of the Act as regards inspections, any oils of a nature not suitable for illuminating purposes, and which are used entirely for lubricating purposes.

Mr. LAURIER. Would it not be better to exempt such oils altogether by law?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The present lubricating oil cannot be used for illuminating purposes, but it might be possible to produce a lubricating oil that might be refined and used as an illuminating oil.

It will be safe to leave the matter in the hands of the Governor in Council to deal with by regulations, which may be changed from time to time as required.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved third reading of Bill (No. 138) to amend chapter 135 of the Revised Statutes respecting the Supreme and Exchequer Courts.

Mr. LAURIER. I would ask the hon, gentleman not to pass the third reading this evening as the Bill introduces an important amendment in the law of Quebec, and I have communicated with the Chief Justice about it. I move that the debate be adjourned.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 156) further to amend the Customs Act (Mr. Bowell) was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

QUEBEC SKATING CLUB.

Resolution reported from Committee of Whole August 7th was read the second time and concurred in.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 160) to authorize the conveyance to the Quebec Skating Club of certain ordnance lands in the city of Quebec,

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 147) further to amend the Dominion Controverted Elections Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 8, sub-section 3,

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand this clause, when the judges disagree upon any point, the party may appeal to the Supreme Court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Wherever two judges sit and they disagree there is no judgment, and therefore there is nothing to appeal from.

Mr. LAURIER. The intention of the law is to have the case determined by two judges finally.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If they determine it as an appeal.

Mr. LAURIER. That is to say, their ruling, whether they come to a conclusion or not, is final; there can be no appeal.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If they come to a conclusion there is an appeal.

Mr. LAURIER. And if they do not come to any conclusion there is no appeal.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me this law is subject to criticism. If two judges have come to a conclusion there is an appeal. When they both agree upon the one point as to whether the election is void, there is an appeal, and if they do not agree at all, then there is appeal. It seems to me that it ought to be quite the reverse. If you have the unanimous opinion of two judges who try a case, then it seems to me the balance of authority ought to be that the case has been properly disposed of, and there should be no appeal; but if, on the convery, the case is so dubious that the two judges do not agree, that they cannot come to a unanimous conclusion as to whether the election ought to be voided or ought to be maintained, under such circumstances you do not allow an appeal. Certainly this is not in accordance with logic or with sound legislation. The Minister himself must admit that if the case is so clear that two judges can agree, that is a presumption that they are right, and there ought not to be an appeal; but if it is of such a nature that they cannot agree upon it, then certainly there ought to be an appeal. If you grant an appeal when they are unanimous, a fortiori you ought to grant an appeal when they are not unanimous.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon, gentleman's reasoning would be very good if he started a little further back. The theory underlying the Bill is that the disposal of an election petition is a matter which should not rest in the hands of one judge, but should rest in the hands of two; therefore, no charge made in a petition ought to be considered as sustained unless the petitioner can get the consent of both judges. If the matter rests in such doubt that the judges are unable to agree that the petitioner has proved his case, then it will stand that he has not proven his case. In England, at first, trials were held before one judge, but when the system was changed and two judges were required to try a petition, this is the very enactment that was adopted.

Mr. LAURIER. And what about the appeals? Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The petition drops unless the two judges agree.

Mr. LAURIER. Then there is an appeal?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is an appeal when the two judges concur.

Mr. LAURIER. It does seem to me, notwithstanding the authority of the legislation in England, that this provision is quite contrary to what we would expect. If you suppress an appeal when the two judges cannot agree, it seems to me more natural and more logical that you should suppress an appeal when they do agree.

Mr. FLINT. I assume, from the explanation of the Minister of Justice, that where the two judges disagree, it is equivalent to the Scotch verdict of not proven; the petitioner fails to prove his case.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Notwithstanding the authority of the Minister of Justice and of English legislation I cannot see the wisdom of this provision. You provide that if the two judges agree that a member was not duly elected then the election is to be deemed void, but if one of the judges says he has been duly elected and the other says he has been unduly elected, the case is evidently open to doubt, and still you allow the election to stand, and you refuse an appeal. When the balance of authority would appear to show that the decision is right, then you allow an appeal; but, on the other hand, when the case is of such a doubtful nature that the two judges cannot come to a conclusion, then there is no finding at all, and the party who feels aggrieved is shut out from a remedy. If you maintain an appeal to the Supreme Court you should maintain it everywhere. If you maintain an appeal to the Supreme Court when there has been a decision, certainly you ought to apply it as well to the party who feels aggrieved from the absence of a decision.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no other way of doing it. Cases occur frequently where the court is equally divided. If a suit is argued in the Supreme Court of a province before four judges and the court is equally divided, there is no appeal, and the original judgment stands. If the case is heard by these judges and they are unanimous, there is an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. So it is with similar tribunals where three or two judges sit and are unable to agree, the case stands without appeal, simply because there is nothing from which to appeal.

Mr. LAURIER. I think in such a case it would be better to leave the law as it is, and have the case tried by one justice.

Mr. AMYOT. Are the preliminary proceedings to be taken before two judges?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; only the trial.

Mr. AMYOT. As to the question of cost, what will be the result if the judges do not agree?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No one would get any costs.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) From what source did the idea come of having the trial before two judges instead of one? Was it suggested by the Committee to which the Bill was referred?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am afraid there will be anomalies. I am glad the clause will be allowed to stand.

On section 9,

Mr. LAURIER.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is a provision in the present Act that notwithstanding the service of the petition, the petition shall be advertised. My attention has been called to the fact that a petition advertised in more than a column of the newspaper involves very unnecessary expense. I have accordingly prepared a section to be substituted for the present section.

Mr. AMYOT. Has the hon. Minister come to any conclusion as regards the time within which petitions may be presented?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That clause stands over. I may say, however, that the only provision I can suggest is the one contained in the Bill, and that is that 30 days after the return the petitions must be presented. It may be that we can meet the views expressed by making some provision as to the time after the election within which the return must be made, and I am quite willing, if a proposal of that kind can be suggested to the satisfaction of the House, to adopt that provision. The difficulty I have in framing it is simply to prevent its being absolutely fixed in such a way as to invalidate elections if returns are not made in that time. I am quite willing that the return should be left to one week after the polling and the petition say 30 days after that.

Mr. AMYOT. Putting the petition 37 days after polling day would reach that result.

Mr. OUIMET. Referring to section 8 of the amended Bill, I think the section is a very wise one. I think we ought to follow up the principle embodied in that amendment; we ought to abolish the right of appeal in every judgment rendered by an election court, especially now that we have two judges who require to agree to form a judgment. My intention, when the Bill comes back before the Committee, is to move an amendment in order to repeal entirely that right of appeal embodied in section 50 of the Controverted Elections Act.

Mr. LAURIER. Is my hon, friend prepared to maintain the opinion that the system of appeal has not worked advantageously?

Mr. OUIMET. I know that it has been the ruin of a good many members who have been unfortunate enough to reach this House, and it has worked very disadvantageously to some parties. I think we ought to have confidence enough in two judges, without feeling obliged to go to a court of appeal to reverse their judgment. I do not think that anyone can congratulate themselves very much about having that appeal, at least that is my experience.

Mr. LAURIER. On the contrary, I think the hon, gentleman admits the theory which has been used by all members of the profession. Courts of appeal are very useful, as a rule, not only as a rule, but the administration of justice would be impeded without courts of appeal.

Mr. OUIMET. Very useful to the profession.

Mr. AMYOT. Most decidedly, in politics especially, an appeal should be allowed. It is a bad principle to leave the fate of a man and his political future in the hands of two judges only, without the right of appeal. In our country, very often, political feelings are kept in a man's mind when he is on the bench. We have any amount of precedents for that. It is not very agreeable to quote them, but we know they do exist. When the judges know there is a court of appeal above them, then they will go more prudently to their work, and we have a chance of having less injustice or at all events having a judgment reversed if there is injustice.

Mr. OUIMET. If there were any grounds for my hon. friend's pretension he would have to contend that there is less prejudice among the higher court than the lower courts, and I am decidedly of opinion that the judges in the court of first instance are just as much above all prejudices as those who have had the good luck, very often, of getting into a higher court. I contend that two judges in a lower court are just as competent to decide in an election trial as five judges in the Supreme Court.

Mr. AMYOT. I am sorry to say that, as a matter of fact, I cannot agree with the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet). It is a disagreeable thing to do, but I might quote here, and I will do it privately to him, a certain judge in a certain district who has committed the gravest possible wrong.

Mr. OUIMET. Order.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not give the name, but I give the fact; and I have been very ready in a certain instance to bring the matter before the House. I say that there are certain judges; but, fortunately, they are not very numerous.

Mr. OUIMET. Order.

Mr. AMYOT. I believe that in the city of Montreal they do not complain of that: but there are certain judges who are politically biassed in cases, and we want, at all events in our section of the country, to keep the right of appeal. If the hon, gentleman takes the responsibility of moving such an amendment I will state the facts publicly.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 9.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Tuesday, 11th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I may say that I understand that the Minister of Public Works informed the Committee on Privileges and Elections this morning that he had tendered his resignation. I would like to enquire whether that resignation has been accepted

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The resignation of the Minister of Public Works has been tendered, but no action has been taken upon it as yet; but another Minister will take charge of the department in the meantime.

ENQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. McMULLEN. An Order of the House was made on the 1st July for a return of all the employes in the Department of Public Works, designating whether they were male and female, and so on. The Minister promised to bring it down, but it is close to the end of the session and has not yet been brought down.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will make an enquiry in reference to it.

SUPPLY-KINGSTON GRAVING DOCK.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. AMYOT. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I want to bring before this House a matter which I judge to be very important. I want to refer to the contract which was given for the Kingston graving dock. The first point to which I will draw your attention is the lack of information or proper data which the Government seem to have had when they decided to build that dock. I think the for Montmorency complained that the papers were first time that the matter came before the House was in 1888, when a sum of $75,000 was asked in order to begin the construction of a graving dock at Kingston as a Government work. It was then stated that the exact location had not been decided upon, so that the Government could not state what the total cost would be, but the then Minister of Public Works estimated that the cost would be from $250,000 to $400,000. It was then asked why the Government undertook that as a public work for the Dominion, and the answer given by the then Premier of Canada was that the maritime interests of the lakes were not able to undertake these works themselves, and, therefore, it was necessary for the Government to do it. The next year, on the 22nd March, 1889, Parliament was asked to vote $124,000. I find in the Hansard of that year that Mr. Jones, of Halifax, enquired what would be the total cost of that work. reply of the then Minister of Public Works was that the total cost would be $350,000. He gave the exact measurement of the work. The length was to be 280 feet, the width at bottom 70 feet, the width at top 72 feet, width at the entrances 48 feet, and he said that would be sufficient for the largest vessels that ply on the lakes. The year following, that is, last session, the amount of $160,000 was voted for this work. Mr. Jones, of Halifax, again enquired, "What are the estimates for the completion of this work?" Sir Hector Langevin replied: "The total estimated cost of the dock, including everything, is $318,000, and this is required to complete the dock." Now, if we refer to the estimate which was given when an alteration in the work was decided upon, if we refer to the report of the engineer who was acting for the chief engineer, Mr. Louis Coste, we find that, on the 22nd July last, the total cost of the work was estimated, not at $318,000 as was declared on the floor of this House, but at $350,000. But, on the 16th of March last, when the Government asked for a special vote of $60,000, the chief engineer of the department stated that the total cost of the dock would be, not as previously stated from $250,000 to $400,000, nor $350,000, nor $318,000, but $450,744.62. It seems extraordinary that works of that character should have been gone into by a department having at its disposal so many experienced engineers, and that they should vary in their estimation of the total cost of that work to such an extent. Tenders were asked for that work in February, 1889, and I read in the notice published in the press, amongst other things:

"Intending contractors are requested to bear in mind that tenders will not be considered unless made on the printed forms supplied, and accompanied by a letter stating that the person or persons tendering have carefully examined the locality, have satisfied themselves as to the nature of the materials to be excavated, and the foundations for the coffer dam, and its probable cost. Tenders must be signed with the actual signature of the tenderers." tenderers.

There was a widespread rumour that something was incorrect in that contract, and at the beginning of this session the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Tarte) applied for the papers in this He made a motion on the 5th of May, asking, amongst other things, for the reports of the engineers which were being made on the progress of the works, or the changes which may have been made in them. Later on the hon, member not forthcoming. Then the Minister of Public Works stated in the House:

"The papers the hone gentleman has mentioned are being prepared in the department. I am writing now to the deputy of my department to ask if they will be ready to-morrow, or when they will be ready."

This was on the 2nd of June. When the papers were produced at last, we looked at them and found they were most incomplete. The plans, the calculations made by the engineer as to the probable cost, and the details of the extras, of which I will speak in a moment, were not brought We wanted to find out the handwriting of one of the tenderers, whose name was Andrew C. Bancroft; and the only clue we could find, or the only way of discovering anything, was by his post office address accompanying his tender. We then enaddress accompanying his tender. quired from the Government who was the lessee of that box in the Kingston post office. You must remember, Mr. Speaker, the answer we received upon that question—we could not obtain the required information, and then we were seriously told that the boxes of the Kingston post office were held in the names of parties who could not be found nor remembered, though their names must have been registered in books, still the name of the lessee of that box could not be found. The Government could not obtain from their numerous employés at Kingston any information upon a point so recent as to the lessee of a box who necessarily must have gone or sent every day to receive his papers and letters. Every member of this honourable House must know how these things are done in post offices. Inside the post office the name of the proprietor of a box is written or printed, the employés of the post office see it daily, and nobody will believe for a moment that there was good faith on the part of the officers of that post office in the answer they gave—because I am bound to accept as truthful the answer of the hon. Postmaster General—nobody in this country will believe for a moment in the good faith of the officers of the Kingston post office. It was, therefore, the duty of the Government to enquire further, it was their duty to press upon their officers to find out the information so as to be able to tell this honourable House the name of the proprietor, so that we could have some means of tracing the identity of the party whom we were seeking for. sorry, therefore, to have to say that the Government were apparently trying to shield and cover up what had been going on. At all events, we moved again to have the missing papers; and on the 1st of July I moved for:

"Copy of the original plan and also alterations made in the Kingston Dry Dock, showing the additional excavation, crib work, extra masonry and additional iron works and caissons; together with the quantity of each class of extra work paid for or undertaken to be paid for, and the rates of payment for said extra work."

Well, we have not yet got these papers. We have seen the original, the copy of which has already been laid down before the House, but the plans of the work, the details of the prices given by the chief engineer, as to the contract itself, and the details as to the extras, were not given, and we have not been able to obtain them. Mr. Speaker, I now refer to that tender, notice of which was published in the press, but the record does not contain a letter accompanying the same from the person tendering. The tenderer, Andrew C. Bancroft, does not appear to have accompanied his Mr. House.

tender with a letter; though it is one of the conditions stipulated by the notice. If I remember rightly, there were twenty tenders; Bancroft's tender, and the tender of Michael and Nicholas Connolly, were not accompanied with this letter, although all the others were. Department of Public Works have passed over that, and have granted the contract in spite of that missing letter. That was requested, I presume, as the department thought fit to insert it in the conditions for granting a con-Then it says that the tender must be signed with the actual signature of the tenderer. Why? In order that the department might know exactly with whom they had to deal. Well, the tenders were opened; Bancroft's was $260,000, in round figures; Macdonald & Aylmer's were $265,000; Nicholas & Michael Connolly's, $322,000. The tenders were accompanied by cheques of $20,000. I may say now that after having failed to obtain the necessary information as to the post office box, we went on in our enquiries to examine the parties who had witnessed the signing of the We could not obtain any information further than that there were three contractors who signed the contract. Mr. Saucier was the witness who saw the signing of the contract, and he said that all he knew was that three contractors were introduced to him by Mr. Gobeil, who is now the Deputy Minister of Public Works. We examined Mr. Gobeil, who said: I know the two Connollys, but I do not know the third one who was introduced by them as Mr. Bancroft. Then we examined the officers of the Finance Department and we ascertained that the cheque went through the Union Bank, but it had been sent to the department through mistake as having been signed by Babcock instead of Bancroft. At all events we went on. We got an official from the bank. The answers we received from him were these: The Union Bank of Quebec had advised the Union Bank of Ottawa to place $20,000 at the disposal of Nicholas Connolly. Nicholas Connolly went to the bank with a cheque signed by Bancroft, asked the amount of $20,000 to be deposited in Bancroft's name, and deposited a cheque in Bancroft's name, which was payable to the Minister That cheque was sent with of Public Works. tender, but the Connolly's tender Bancroft's was also accompanied by a cheque for $20,000, and both were in the same handwriting, and so it was easy for the department to find out by comparing the handwriting the identity of the tenderer. After we had examined the officers of the bank-

Mr. SPEAKER. Is the hon, gentleman referring to an examination of witnesses before the committee?

Mr. AMYOT. I am speaking about papers which belong to the Committee on Public, Accounts and which are presumed to be before this House, because if I wait until all the papers are brought before this House I may have to wait till next year.

Mr. SPEAKER. Have they been reported to this House?

Mr. AMYOT. I think so.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The evidence has not been reported.

Mr. AMYOT. It is never fully reported to the House.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, it ought to be reported.

Mr. MULOCK. The Committee has discharged itself of the enquiry.

Mr. AMYOT. Not only so, but the Committee have moved that all the papers be referred back. There are many members of the Committee present, and I will be corrected if I am in error, as I proceed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have been refraining from taking the point of order against the hon, gentleman, as I did not want to do so. I understand his object is to call the attention of the House to something he regards as an irregularity in this matter; but, if he intends to follow his remarks with a motion on the investigation before the Committee, I shall have to take the point of order, because, until we get the evidence before us, it will be absolutely impossible to judge what it is and what the result of the investigation may I do not understand that the Committee has made a report.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not understand that the Committee has made a report in this case. If it has reported, has it sent in the evidence?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They have reported the evidence.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Then the hon. gentleman may be right in referring to it, but he will surely give the House an opportunity to read the evidence on which he expects to make a case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The papers have all been reported to the House.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No.

Mr. DAVIES. (P.E.I.) I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. The Committee have made no finding on the evidence, but the report of the evidence and the papers have been presented to the House and the House is in full possession of the necessary evidence. As to whether the debate should proceed after the hon. gentleman had made his statement, is another matter.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think the hon. gentleman is in error. What the Votes and Proceedings say is as follows:-

"On motion of Mr. Sproule, it was Ordered, That the evidence taken by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts in connection with the item "Kingston Dock" set out on page B—349 of the Auditor General's Report on Appropriation Accounts for the year ended 30th June, 1890, be printed for the use of the members of the Committee, and that Rule 94 be suspended in relation thereto, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Fourteenth Report of the said Committee," thereto, in accordance with the recommendation contained in the Fourteenth Report of the said Committee."

Mr. SPEAKER. I find the record is, according to the Votes and Proceedings, as the hon. gentleman for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has stated. The evidence has not been reported to the House, but an Order of the House has been passed giving authority for the printing of the evidence for the use of the Committee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood the evidence was brought down yesterday, and an order given for the printing of it.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I also call attention to the fact that the report of the Committee presented yesterday states that the evidence on this question that the evidence, not which had been taken, but which is now being taken in connection with the item Kingston Dock, page B-349 of the Auditor General's Report on Appropriation Accounts for 1890, be printed for the use of members. So it would seem that the enquiry is not yet finished.

Mr. AMYOT. I may state what I know to be the facts, and if hon. gentlemen are going to contradict all the facts, I am ready to wait till the full evidence is laid before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. While the hon. gentleman was going on with his speech I supposed he was referring to something which had taken place before a Committee; but as he had not said so, I waited until he came to make the statement that certain officers had been examined, and then of course it was perfectly obvious that the hon. gentleman was stating something that had taken place before a Committee. As I find the matter referred to has not been reported to the House, the hon, gentleman is not in order.

I will bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker. The facts are so simple,—there is only one fact out of the record to which I desire to refer, I might go on, I think, without injuring anyone or committing any wrong.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. LAURIER. Two reports were made yesterday to the House. One was with respect to the Langevin Block, which embodies the evidence. The other report was in reference to Kingston Dock, and I confess that at the moment I thought the two reports were identical. I find they are not so, and I hold your ruling, Mr. Speaker, to be correct, and I, therefore, advise my hon. friend to wait for another opportunity to make his remarks.

Mr. MULOCK. It is only reasonable, of course, that the House should, if possible, have the evidence taken before Committees in its possession when the judgment of the House is invited on any such matter. In order that public business may not be delayed, I ask that whoever is responsible will see that this objection of the non-printing of the evidence does not meet me when I move a motion at an early date in regard to expenditure on the Langevin Block. I believe the evidence has been ordered to be printed for the convenience of members of the Committee. I do not know whether it is necessary to have it reprinted for members of the House. If so, it seems to be a rather unnecessary waste of money. If there have not been a sufficient number of copies printed 1 direct the attention of the Government to the matter, as I cannot wait until they in their leisurely manner get the evidence printed. I intend, at the earliest possible moment, to make a motion in regard to the Langevin Block expenditure. I presume the evidence will be printed and in the hands of the members almost at once.

Mr. FOSTER. When the evidence comes down, then it will be for the House to deal with it and send it direct to the House Committee on Printing.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I understand the evidence given has already been printed and distributed to the Committee. There is no delay in this matter.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not complaining; I am only calling attention to a certain point. It is quite is now being taken. The Committee recommended | reasonable that each member should, if possible, have the evidence in his possession; but if the House delays, or if the department or whoever is responsible for the printing delays, members of Parliament cannot be expected to postpone making their motions. It would be perfectly in order to make a motion based on the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee, in reference to the Langevin Block. I presume that evidence is technically before the House now.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. It is laid on the Table.

Mr. MULOCK. Of course it should be printed, to be available by members. The Government will, therefore, be to blame if, when I make my motion after a day or so, the printed evidence is not forthcoming. They cannot expect to hold back motions by not printing evidence. I do not want to be met with this point, when I make a motion which I will do at a very early date.

Mr. LAURIER. When the evidence is on the Table, whether printed or not, my hon. friend will be in order with his motion.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps the leader of the Opposition might be correct literally, but the practice has always been that where evidence is reported from a Committee of the House, the order of the House is then to refer it to the Printing Committee to have it printed at once for the use of members. It is not particularly the duty of the Government, as the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) sees, and they cannot be held responsible for the non-printing immediately of every report, as he suggests it should be. I do not wish to be understood as taking objection to the arguments of the leader of the Opposition, but I state that the practice has always been different. With regard to the Langevin Block, the Minister of Finance intimated, as the hon. gentleman will remember, that the architects would be called before the Committee at the earliest possible moment, and the hon. gentleman, I hope, will at least delay his motion until the matter is fully investigated. It is only the other day that I had an interview with the two architects in which they pointed out what they considered some discrepancies in the printed evidence, and I told them I thought they should come and correct it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I rather think that Committee does not meet until Thursday, and if I am correctly informed there is another order of reference made. If this business is urgent, as the hon. Minister seems to indicate, arrangements should be made for having that Committee meet to-morrow for the express purpose of getting in this evidence which the Minister of Customs states it is so desirable to have. I refer to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think my hon. friend will say that any member of the Government has delayed any investigation, or attempted to delay any investigation before that Committee. If these architects have not been before the Committee at an earlier date, it is because the time of the Committee has been fully occupied for every moment from ten to one o'clock each day, by the members of the Opposition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be; but the hon. Minister states that the investi-Mr. MULOCK.

gation is not yet closed, when we had all supposed it was closed. I submit that, in the public interest, and for the public convenience, and for the convenience of Ministers themselves, it would be desirable that these witnesses which the Government wish to produce should be called for to-morrow when this Committee might meet. I suppose an hour would be ample to-morrow to dispose of the case.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Witnesses have been summoned which would take not only an hour to examine, but to-morrow and the day after, if the summonses are in earnest.

Mr. BOWELL. If the members of the Committee, most of whom are here, would consent to have the matter taken up the first thing on Thursday morning, I will see that the architects are before the Committee. I am very much afraid that an hour will not do.

Mr. MULOCK. Take to-morrow. The hon. Minister will remember that last Friday we came to a sudden termination of our enquiry into the Langevin Block matter, owing to certain action of the Committee, and at that stage I moved that the proceedings be reported to the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon, gentleman is getting into the same difficulty as the member for Bellechase (Mr. Amyot). Perhaps I might be permitted to say, that although a discussion on going into Committee of Supply may take a wide range, yet if my hon, friend proposes to move, the proper time to discuss the question would be on a motion.

Mr. AMYOT. I would be entitled to move if I wanted to, but I understand it is better that the House should have the evidence printed. I do not want to blame any one for the delay. I do not think there is a considerable delay, but I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the importance of getting that report, which is very short, printed at once and laid before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. It is already printed and partly revised.

Mr. AMYOT. I hope a sufficient number of copies will be printed so that each member of the House will have one.

Mr. LAURIER. As soon as the evidence is put on the Table of the House my hon. friend has a right to move. For convenience sake, and if the hon. gentleman would facilitate the business, we will be happy to wait until the evidence is printed, which must be done of course within reasonable delay.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that there is a new name introduced here, Mr. J. Franckum, at 30 cents per day, under Order in Council. Will the hon. Minister give us an explanation of the cause of that?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The increase to which the hon, gentleman has referred is the result of a recommendation made by myself as Minister of Militia. The Order in Council states that Gu ner

J. Franckum, of "A" Battery, of the Royal School of Artillery, while on duty as marksman at the butts, was injured by a rifle bullet striking him above the ear. The board sat at the time and reported on the case, stating how the accident had happened. Gunner Franckum has since continued to suffer from his wound, and his case has become aggravated, and he is now in a lunatic asylum. The papers in the case were referred to the Minister of Justice, who reported that the matter came under paragraph 906 of the Regulations and Orders of the Militia; and considering the above circumstances, I recommended that a pension of 30 cents per diem be granted to Gunner Franckum. He was compelled to leave the service, and he left his family perfectly helpless.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not disposed to object to the pension itself, but I would just call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that apparently it is classified under pensions payable on account of the Fenian Raid, which took place a considerable number of years ago, and it appears to me that it is an obvious error.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I made the same remark to my officers that my hon. friend makes to myself. I could not understand how this item came to be charged to the Fenian Raid, but I was told that it came under the statute which permitted pensions to be given on account of the Fenian Raid. But it is a misnomer, no doubt, and I mean to have it changed hereafter.

To meet probable amount required for Veterans of war of 1812.....$1,230

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the number of these old gentlemen remaining?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Forty-one patriots, at $30 each. The decrease this year is $1,080.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of some little interest, does the hon. gentleman happen to know the ages of these worthy veterans? None of us will grudge them their $30; but seeing that it is 80 years since this war took place, it is a curious matter how many centenarians our country has produced among these veterans. There seems to be a considerable number over 100 years of age.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It shows want excellent care the Department of Militia has taken of these veterans. It is a question which has been discussed every year, and I have been trying to ascertain their exact ages, but I have had to give it up; and as the decrease is so considerable, I thought it well not to go into the investigation again.

Pensions payable to militia men on account of Rebellion of 1885...... $23,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that there is a considerable reduction in the vote—nearly 10 per cent. Will the Minister explain how that has come about? Is it by deaths among the pensioners, or in what way?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, it is by death, and by the children who were entitled to pensions up to a certain age, passing that age.

provisions and prevented the main body of the army from having their necessary supplies. That happened in one circumstance, and if Riel had not

Mr. AMYOT. I would take this opportunity to bring before this honourable House the subject which has been referred to occasionally by the press of this country. I happened myself to be in command of a battalion when what is called the North-West Rebellion took place. When we came back there was not praise enough for my battalion and for the commanding officer of that corps. Later on I thought proper to give up my party allegiance, because I was of opinion that, politically speaking, I could not go along with my old chiefs any more. Then, in the session of 1886, I made a speech before this honourable House in support of my way of looking at the administration of the North-West. I made that speech honestly and with the least possible offence, and in answer to my speech the hon. Minister of Militia got up and read, without notice and without my expecting it, private telegrams which I had sent to him. I do not want to-day to go back to a discussion on that matter. I will only say that I had been requested by him to keep him posted as to everything I should observe or find out in the North-West, and I did so confidentially and in a friendly manner. of those telegrams were partly quoted by the hon. Minister, and if I remember rightly, they were about in these words:

"Men fighting in the same way as the rebels should be selected to fight them, and the volunteers here would be better adapted for the protection of forts and provisions." Since that time, in spite of my explanations before this House, it has been distinctly said by the press that this was an evidence of personal cowardice on my part.

An hon. MEMBER. No doubt.

Mr. AMYOT. I hear "no doubt"; I do not know who said it. Mr. Speaker, I said then, and I repeat to-day—and after that the press can say what they like—that being in the North-West, on the open prairie, I was invited by one of the best officers of the British army to go with him over the And I found it great folly to have 3,000 or 4,000 men of infantry going about the country chasing mounted men. The officer seated near chasing mounted men. the door of this House was there in control of a battalion, and he himself saw me with the officer to whom I refer. I travelled all day, and when I arrived at night at the camp I was convinced that the war was being conducted on a wrong principle, and that we might be months running after an invisible foe without If the hon. being able to catch up to the enemy. Minister who laughs at me, instead of having been quietly seated in his office, had been in the North-West with us, he would have seen whether I was right or wrong. It was in this the war was conducted stupidly and foolishly. It was conducted for the glory of one man, the general in command, and for nothing else. Thousands of men were and for nothing else. scattered over the prairie, hundred of carriages had to be sent hundreds of miles through the country, and at any moment ten or fifteen men at night could have attacked and captured all the provisions and prevented the main body of the happened in one circumstance, and if Riel had not been a fool, most decidedly those would have been the tactics he would have adopted. If instead, four hundred or five hundred mounted men had been despatched, in eight days the whole war would have been over, without the expenditure of $6,000,000 and the loss of 200 lives. Do these brave men who attack me to-day know what is meant by supplies and provisions? Do they know that the efficiency of an army depends on the perfection of what is called the base of supplies, and on communication with it being open? Do they know that if an army be deprived of provisions it can do nothing. I am not well versed in English, but I am doing the best to present my views, and I knew what I meant when I sent that telegram. I am not a fool, and would not have signed a telegram saying that I am a coward. What I meant was that the volunteers should be used in order to protect the base of operations and keep up free and unimpeded communication between the troops in advance and the base of operations. This is very simple. Of course a portion of that press which costs very dear to the country will go insulting me from year to year; and to everything I say, they will answer me: You have wired in cipher to the Minister of Militia that the volunteers were only fit to take care of the provisions and the forts: and when, at the time, I was trying to prove that it was not right to hang Riel, what was the answer I received from the head of the Militia of this country, from the one to whom the country looked to reward the volunteers and acknowledge their devesion to the state? I received the answer: You are a personal coward.

An hon. MEMBER. Hear, hear.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon, gentleman who says "hear, hear," would not dare to tell me that outside these precincts. He would not dare to thus insult me, eye to eye. I was not sent to this House as a man able to fight or to box, but if I am thus to be insulted I will try to make one or two examples. I may be beaten then, but they will see whether I will run away or not. Well, Sir, this was the meaning of my words: it was that the war was being badly conducted. As a friend of the Government I did not want to throw blame upon them, but I did what my duty compelled me to do: and I felt that hundreds of, nearly thousands of carriages, were scattered over the country, at the mercy of any enemy who might choose to attack them. At any given moment the two or three buildings composing the forts might be captured and burnt, and then the supplies cut off, and the main body of the army, distant hundred of miles from the base of supplies, might be deprived of their food. I know that it is impossible for me to get my honest intentions acknowledged in some quarters, but those who criticize me were never at the front; and I would ask those who attack me to point out any wrong act on my part during the whole I would ask them to campaign. point out when I refused to obey a single order. What harm have I done? I was occupying my seat in this House, and, had I chosen, I might have said, when I received the orders to go to the front, that I was a member of Parliament, and according to the usage in the British Empire, was not bound to vacate my seat. I did not do that; but I went to the front and obeyed every order given to me. I never was reported for a that when they attack me they are not only attack-Mr. Amyor.

single thing to which I had to sign my name, and I had to sign it thousands of times, acting, not only as commander of the brigade, acting not only as commander of the whole militia force of the district of Alberta, but acting besides as replacing General Strange; and I never received any recompense. Hon, gentlemen are careful not to say in this House that I am a personal coward. happy to find in his seat the hon, member for Algoma, who, the other day, referring to a speech made by the hon, member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser), said:

"Who appear on certain days in the uniform of Her Majesty, and are never heard except when they say they are willing to lay down their lives for their country, when there is no battle to be fought."

The hon, member for Algoma commenting on this

"I do not see the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot); I am sorry he is not here."

I hope the hon, gentleman will explain what he meant. I hope he will explain his allusion and the inference to be drawn from his remarks. I never insulted or provoked him in any way; but I will give to him my explanations, and I mean in this House to put a stop to this personal abuse. These attacks on me are made specially by two papers in this country. They are made by the Empire, which is a very able paper, but I do not know who controls it-

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a jointstock concern.

Mr. AMYOT. There is another paper which has indulged in these attacks, and that is Le Monde, a newspaper controlled by the hon. Minister of Public Works, as he has admitted this morning in the committee of investigation. Well, the person who writes in Le Monde was a member of this House, and, either through cowardice or some other sentiment, received moneys from the corruption fund, and shelters himself behind the doors of his office where he writes to abuse and insult me. Is that fair or just? As I have said, I did not entrench myself behind my privilege, but went to the North-West and was everywhere I was ordered It is not during the heat of battle that a soldier decides to sacrifice his life, but it is when When the fight is on, there is he leaves his home. something in the smoke of the powder that makes a man no more himself, and a man has to see actual fight to find out whether he is sufficiently master of his nerves not to be afraid to do his duty. But I defy any member of this House or any one in the country to quote one instance in regard to the North-West where I lacked in my duty and where I was not worthy of my position. Have you heard any complaint or any reproach made against me in public? What have I done that is wrong? If I have done nothing wrong, but if I have used an expression which was not correct but which meant something which was correct, is it honourable or is it just that a man should try to stab me in the back as the Conservative party press constantly does? This is not the way to encourage the volunteers who have risked their lives for their country. Why should they be subjected to attacks such as those to which I am subjected? I would not mind these attacks much if they affected me alone. I know that a public man is exposed to many things of that kind, but, commanding as I do a battalion, I feel ing me but also the battalion which I have the honour to command, but they have the pleasure in their hearts of attacking the whole of my race.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. AMYOT. No? Well, look at what Mr. Goldwin Smith said in his last book, "Canada and the Canadian Constitution." He not only attacked me but he also attacked the hon, member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet). He said there were two French-Canadian commanders in the North-West, and he insinuates that both of them were dishonoured. I left this House during the session, I organized my battalion, I went to the North-West, I was crowded with all sorts of praise when I came back, but, when the political question arose, I was met with various accusations, and parts of my telegrams were read in such a way that they appeared to be contrary to the views which I entertained. I wrote to the Minister of Militia, I thought I was writing to a friend. I did not think I was writing official correspondence, which as a military man I could not send in such a way, but I thought I was writing to a friend, and to-day the organ of the Minister of Public Works-another Frenchmanthe paper representing him in the Province of Quebec is constantly accusing me and insinuating that French Canadians are cowards. I will not say that the Minister encourages that, but certainly he could stop it if he chose. I suppose it is a good thing to belittle a political adversary, no matter what is done for the honour of one's race. There was no wrong done by myself or by any members of my battalion. We were scattered over the prairie and I had a living witness here when this case was brought up before, and I am not ashamed of what I did there. When, because of the false use of a word, I am open to the attacks of the press, I say to the English press: You are not doing the best to bring about what you say you want, a great nation which will be united, but you are sowing hatred in the hearts of the different races in Canada; you show that in your hearts you do not love us. As to the French press, I say to the hon. Minister: If you do not care for the honour of your race, what do you care for? The press will go on and sneer at me, but I think I was right in stating that the war was badly conducted, that mounted men should have been selected to run after mounted men, and that, as the volunteer militia were there, they should have been used to protect the forts and to see to the safety of the provisions between the forts and the main body. If those at the head of the Government of this country believe that it is a fair way to encourage and reward the efforts and the devotion of the volunteers, to act as they did, let them take the responsibility. I have never, for my own part, been kept back by these accusations and insults. These have never prevented me from deciding upon political questions as my conscience The press to which I have referred will go on attacking me. Let them do so. I will not lower my forehead on that account, because I have done no harm. I have simply done my duty. The volunteers in my battalion love me, and, instead of leaving my command in consequence of these attacks, I remain at the head of my battalion, and anyone who has seen it will say that it is one of the finest military bodies in the Province of Quebec and may compare advantageously with any instructions they received, whether they got inother battalion. I hope this explanation is clear If the press choose to go on with it, let them go on, but the disgust which will be felt by the country will be such that some way will be found of recompensing the efforts which we have made in its defence.

Mr. DENISON. I am not aware what the explanations of the hon, gentleman has given have to do with the question before the House, nor do I intend to deal with them; but the hon, gentle-man cast a reflection on the management of the campaign in the North-West by the Minister of Militia. I was not in the North-West during that expedition, but the corps to which I have the honour to belong formed part of the force, and all my brother officers and all the members of the corps have taken every opportunity to put in a good word for the Minister of Militia and for the way in which he managed that expedition, for the manner in which he looked after the corps on the north shore of Lake Superior and further up, so that they never suffered from lack of a meal but were always well fed; and every one knows the difficulty of provisioning is one of the greatest difficulties to be encountered in war times, but they never experienced any serious want in that way. While I am on my feet, I may take advantage of the opportunity to draw the Minister's attention to a point which I took two years ago, and that is in regard to a change which I would like to see made in the management of our military schools. I would now suggest again, as I did then, the desirability of allowing young fellows to enter the schools as they did some years ago. At the present moment, the only classes who enter the schools are those who are officers of the militia, or privates, or non-commissioned officers. The result is, only a few go in to get their certificates. I know in one battalion, that out of 17 officers, 14 are not qualified; and if you turn over the pages of the militia list you will find a great many in the same position in every battalion. I think that would be remedied considerably if the old system was adopted by which anybody might enter the schools and qualify to be captains and receive a gratuity, as they did at that time. The other class who enter the schools are the non-commissioned officers and men. learn only the duties of non-commissioned officers, they learn duties that would be suitable for men holding that rank, and if they are afterwards promoted to be officers, they have acquired certificates that are of very little advantage to them. On the other hand, if the general public were allowed in, if young men of 17 or 18 or 20 were admitted at an age when they can generally afford the time, they could be supplied with a cadet's uniform, such as was supplied before, and they would not be called upon to live in barracks as soldiers, which is objectionable to a great many. The class that we have in this country in our permanent militia are far superior to the class they have in the army of the United States; yet the respectable young men I refer to do not care to be obliged to enter into barrack-life with old soldiers. It has been urged that they would not get the proper knowledge of their duties unless they were in barracks. I think that there is very little in that objection; it would naturally rest with the commandant of the school as to the nature of the struction in interior economy or not. I am sure that these men obtaining certificates in that way, as was the case 20 years ago, would be an element from which the officers of the force could be drawn afterwards, and would be very useful members of the force. At the present time it is impossible for any person to go in, unless an officer of the force having a certificate, and be qualified as lieutenant-colonel or as captain; and the result is that a great many, even of the present officers, cannot afford to go to the expense of buying further uniforms to go to these schools, and are obliged to stay at home. That, I think, is one of the serious faults of the system, and I would like to see the Minister of Militia consider this question again. I think there is an opportunity here where great good could be done to the militia, if it was only allowed that cadets could go to the school, at the same time allowing officers, non-commissioned officers and men, to enter as under present system.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). As the hon, member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has brought my name into the discussion, perhaps the present opportunity would be a good one for me to reply to him. In the remarks that I made on the 28th of July last, in using the language I did with regard to some remarks that were made by the hon, member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) during a previous debate, referring to the different classes of people that were loyal, the last class I referred to were those dapper little gentlemen who parade with the Queen's uniform upon certain occasions. Now, Sir, the words as quoted by the hon, member for Bellechasse are perfectly correct; but let me do the hon. member the justice to say that, in making the remarks I did, I did not wish for one moment to imply any doubt as to his personal bravery. As to that, I know nothing whatever: whether he is as brave as a lion or as brave as a jackal, I do not know the first thing about it. I merely wished to ask if the remarks dropped by the member for Guysborough applied to the gallant colonel from Bellechasse. The first time I had the pleasure of knowing who that hon, gentleman was, was during a very fiery speech he delivered in this House during one of the debates that took place since I had the honour of occupying a seat in the House, and it struck me at the time that the fiery sentiments enunciated by the gallant colonel were not those that would commend themselves to an officer commanding a battalion in the militia; but so far as his personal bravery is concerned, I know nothing about it. I did not mean to attribute to the hon, gentleman anything like cowardice, and upon two or three occasions when he mentioned it to me privately, had I been of as irascible a disposition as himself, the chances are that we would have come to fisticuffs. But, Sir, I fight with no man on account of either politics or religion; consequently I endeavoured to keep as cool as I could, assuring the hon, gentleman that I did not wish to insinuate anything as to his want of personal bravery, and that when I had an oppor-tunity in the House, I would explain my previous remarks.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will say one word in answer to the two hon, gentlemen who have spoken this evening on the vote for pensions. I cannot trace the reason for this ebullition of temper and the extraordinary display of eloquence of the Mr. Denison.

Major General, perhaps his views may be different from those who preceded him; but I tell the hon, gentleman with all candour that the consensus of opinion, so far as military men are concerned, is that we cannot possibly do away with the present Mr. Denison.

hon, gentleman for Bellechasse to-night. Three years ago this, matter was discussed, and we went into all the details, and I, for one, decline now to be drawn into the discussion of the events which then occurred, and which ought to be left, so far as possible, where history has placed them. Now, Sir, it is impossible for me, speaking from memory, to state exactly all that the hon. gentleman has done for his country, and all that other hon. gentlemen have done for their country; but I remember very well when the hon, gentleman used to be good enough to state that he recognized the kindly hand of the Minister of Militia all over the North-West, extending every possible comfort to the troops who were under his command, and under the command of his brother officers. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am quite prepared for one to stand by the record of that day, whether I was right or whether I was wrong, for I am satisfied that, in so far as I was personally concerned, I did my duty in the position I was occupying, and I shall allow the events of those by-gone days to rest. Now, my hon. friend from Toronto West (Mr. Denison) has taken the opportunity, as he had a perfect right to do on the vote for pensions, to speak about the system which he considers to be the best system that could be introduced concerning the training of our Militia force. I thought that, perhaps, this question might have better come up upon the item which referred more particularly to our training schools; however, I can tell the hon, gentleman that, although men who have given a great deal of their time, as I know he has, to our Militia force, and view the matter as he does, and believe the system which he is advocating would be more to the advantage of the force than the one which now prevails in Canada, I think that the consensus of the opinions of military critics, and men like the Major General in command, is that it would be impossible to resort to the old system, and I shall give my hon. friend the reason why I think that it would be impossible to go back to the old training schools of the past. I can very well understand that when we had the advantage of possessing Imperial forces in Canada those forces were the nucleus which we were permitted to use for the purpose of training our volunteers. When those troops were withdrawn from Canada it became imperative, as the law is that we give a commission only to a man who has taken out a certificate to organize some such training school as we now possess, and so far as my experience as head of the department goes, which now extends over several years, and the reports which I received from the officers who are the military advisers of my department, I consider it would be impossible under the present system to do away with our training schools or change the system which is now the system of training in Canada without great detriment to the efficiency of our military However, I may tell the hon. gentleman, as he knows well, that every opinion expressed by him and by those who have given as much time as he has devoted to military matters, I am always quite prepared to consider, and as we have a new Major General, perhaps his views may be different from those who preceded him; but I tell the hon. gentleman with all candour that the consensus of opinion, so far as military men are concerned, is training schools without affecting very materially the efficiency of the force. I can tell the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) that ever since he and I discussed these matters on the floor of Parliament, so far as I am concerned, I have never referred to the hon, gentleman in any shape or form, and I am unable to understand why he took advantage of a vote which had nothing to do with the matter to bring up a dead issue.

A SECURE OF THE PARTY OF T

Mr. MULOCK. A live issue! The widows of dead militiamen.

Mr. AMYOT. I took the opportunity afforded me on this item, because we are not quite sure when the proper time arrives to discuss these matters, for we may find ourselves detained in committees I think I was right in doing so, beof enquiry. cause the item referred to the volunteers in 1885, and I happened to be one. The Minister cannot complain

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not complaining. Mr. AMYOT. I will not cross swords with the hon, gentleman on the point, nor recall what he has done. I recollect perfectly well all I wrote and said during that time. I remember I complimented him and treated him as a most trusty friend; but I was met with the reading of private telegrams, and parts only of them, read in such a way as to put in my mouth or from my pen an admission of personal cowardice. I complained, moreover, that the Ministerial press, the Empire, in Toronto, and Le Monde, in Montreal, are constantly endeavouring to injure my personal reputation and also the reputation of the race to which I belong. I am very glad the hon, member for Algoma (Mr. Macdonell) has given that explanatino, and I will not deal with what he has said. to the training of the officers of the force, I understand very well that it is not easy to undo the present system or change it materially; but I call the attention of the Minister to a point on which hon, members of this House and myself We have asked that those have interviewed him. who went through the campaign of 1885, who saw active service and who acquired experience, should, on the recommendation of their respective commanding officers, receive certificates. there is no one more responsible for the efficiency of the corps than the commanding officer; no one who knows more correctly its wants? Those who went to the North-West and who are known to the commanding officers worthy of being recommended for a certificate should receive it. harm could be done to any one. It would be good for the whole corps that these certificates should be granted, and they would afford a fair recompense for services. In my own battalion I have eight or nine officers who are perfectly qualified on every point, but who cannot spare time to go to the St. John School in order to obtain certificates. This is not in the interest of the Militia force. We should give these officers certificates if they are recommended as efficient by their commanding officers. I hope the Minister will see that is done. We will not object to these applicants undergoing an examination, provided that the board is not composed of men who will take opportunity of this occasion that it is only at the military schools that we may qualify efficient officers. Give us a good and fair board and we will not object. We want to get some good officers, and we have great trouble in this document, Mr. Schrieber said: I want Mr.

securing them; the best men are those who cannot spare the time to attend the military schools. ask the department to grant this request, and I hope it will be acceded to.

Mr. DENISON. The Minister seems to have run away with the idea that I am opposed to the If I said so, I did not intend to say so. schools. I think the schools are most essential. What I wanted to say was that we should engraft the present schools on the old schools. In the Canadian Military Gazette of 27th December, 1888-I do not know whether this journal voices the views of the militia of Canada, but it is supposed to do so in a certain measure—I find the following remarks :-

marks:—

"We are convinced of the desirability of opening our military schools to candidates for officers' appointments as well as to those who have already had appointments conferred upon them. There is at present a course of instruction in non-commissioned officers' duties, but that does not fill the bill. The non-com.'s life at the school is congenial to very few aspirants for commissions. There are constantly being added to the ranks of the Militia officers who know nothing of military duties, and who are allowed to hang on from month to month and year to year without qualifying. Once allowed in, it is hard to get rid of them. Were the school system changed, all intending officers could be taught a great part of the knowledge essential to the desired position before being allowed to wear the uniform in public."

Those words about express my ideas.

Superannuation-Extra allowance to W. Wallace, ex-postmaster at Victoria, B.C. $240

Mr. PERRY. I should like to be assured that every man stands in the same position in Canada as does this gentleman, to whom it is proposed to grant an additional $240 as superannuation. I now desire to allude to the late postmaster at Summer-side, P.E.I., Mr. Green. That gentleman has been acting postmaster for a quarter of a century. was dismissed a short time ago. I am not aware, although living near Summerside, which is in the county I represent, that he ever neglected his duties as postmaster, that he had stolen any money from the Post Office Department or interfered with the head of the department, or that any complaint was ever made that he neglected his duty. We know there have been times when the whole of the post office correspondence from Canada to Prince Edward Island passed through Summerside, and Mr. Green acted during those years as postmaster and no fault was found with him. gentleman to be superannuated? I do not know what has become of the Postmaster General. I suppose he will be able to explain; but I would like him to explain a little more than whether Mr. Green is going to have superannuation or not. I would like to know why Mr. Green has been so abruptly dismissed; I would like to know if he has been dismissed to gratify the self-will and wishes of a defeated candidate; I would like to know why he has been dismissed as abruptly as Mr. Saunders and Mr. Muttart, the section foremen, have been dismissed from the Prince Edward Island Railway. I have a notice on the paper asking for this information in respect to Mr. Green, and I suppose the information I am going to get will be a fac simile of the information which the acting Minister of Railways, I was going to say, had the impudence to lay on the Table last night in relation to Mr. Saunders and Mr. Muttart.

Unsworth, Manager of the Prince Edward Island Railway to dismiss promptly Mr. Saunders and Mr. Muttart. Is that an answer to my motion? Will that show me the reason why these men were dismissed? Will it satisfy the House, will it satisfy the people of Canada, and the people that I represent here? Are the Government ashamed to give us the information? If these men have been neglectful of their duties-and although they are in my county, but I do not know whether they voted for me or not--I would say dismiss them; but I take it for granted that they are not guilty of neglect of duty when the Government are ashamed or afraid to bring down these returns. My motion was complete and it asked for the orders relative to the dismissal of these gentlemen, but this order was not brought The order emanated from Mr. Schrieber, Superintendent in Chief of the Government Railways, to Mr. Unsworth, Manager of the Prince Edward Island Railway in Charlottetown, and what did it say?

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that he is speaking to a subject which is not at all included in the item before the Committee. A little while later the Intercolonial Railway items will be up, and then his remarks will be in order.

Mr. PERRY. The Minister of Finance is getting very captious, and I am glad to find that he is not always in a moment of weakness. I contend that I am only showing the smallness in which the Government is acting in respect to officers in Prince Edward Island, and especially in Prince County.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. We are not now discussing the item of Railways and Canals, or anything connected with it.

Mr. PERRY. I will submit to your decision. I know you are very impartial, and I like always to see you in the Chair. I want to know if Mr. Green is to be superannuated, and I have a right to know that from the Postmaster General. This gentleman has been a civil servant—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is commencing again the very same thing. I think this would better come up in discussion when we come to the items for the Post Office Department.

Mr. PERRY. The item we are now discussing is additional superannuation to a postmaster in British Columbia, and if I am not in order the House will be taking a new departure. I am quite willing to go on the lines of the new departure, but I would like to follow the old mode, if there is no objection. I would like to know if the postmaster at Summerside, P.E.I., who was dismissed without any reason, or because of some spite that a certain individual had and who made some false representations to the Government, is going to be superannuated. I contend that a public servant who has served his country for a quarter of a century has a right to be superannuated. I do not know how long Mr. Wallace served as postmaster in British Columbia; I do not know what great service he has rendered his country to entitle him to this $240 increase of superannuation; but I suppose the Government in their wisdom have examined the case and I presume he is worthy of this amount; Mr. PERRY.

his country honestly, and without anyone being able to point the finger of scorn at him, and who was dismissed without any reason; I say that the Government has a right to tell this House and the country, that his faithful services would be appreciated by superannuation. I suppose the Government will bring down another small supplementary estimate, and I hope and trust that in that supplementary estimate they will come down to the scratch; come down to whatisfair and just, and give Mr. Green suitable superannuation for the services he has rendered the country for a quarter of a cen-I do not expect that the Postmaster General will now give the reasons which induced him, in some particular moment or other, to dismiss this gentleman; but I will take another opportunity of learning that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who is this Mr-Wallace; when was he superannuated? What was the amount of his superannuation allowance; who succeeded him; what age is he now, and why are you granting this extra superannuation allowance?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon, friend must know, although probably he has forgotten it for the moment, that this item has been in the Estimates now for two years, and has been explained each year; and it will remain in the Estimates so long as Mr. The facts are I believe that some Wallace lives. two or three years ago Mr. Wallace was superannu-He was superannuated on certain time, and once the superannuation was fixed and had passed the Treasury Board and Council, it is impossible to review it again, except for the purpose of correcting a clerical error, if there be one. Previous to that there had been an agreement between the Prime Minister and Mr. Wallace that he should have five years added to his time. It was impossible to review the superannuation as it had passed the Treasury Board and Council, and this sum of $240 was put in, and will be put in the Estimates each year so long as Mr. Wallace lives, to make up to him for what would have been his full superannuation allowance each year, provided the agreement had been carried out at the time of the original order. This has already been explained two or three times, and I suppose the fact of having it appear in the Estimates will call up the same discussion each year, although it might be well if the discussion were dispensed with to save time.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is the amount of the superannuation allowance?

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the amount here.

Mr. HAGGART. I brought it down last year and the year before, and I did not think it was at all necessary this year. You will find it in last year's Hansard.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not want to take the trouble of looking up Hansard, nor do I remember what was said last year. If the Ministers made false calculations, and have put themselves in a position to be obliged to take this step, they should be competent to answer questions and necessary information.

rendered his country to entitle him to this $240 increase of superannuation; but I suppose the Government in their wisdom have examined the case and I presume he is worthy of this amount; and if he is worthy let him get it. I contend that the postmaster in Summerside, P.E.I., who served to remember and know all about it the Ministers are taking him to task. If they knew it they might have easily informed him of the fact. They had better consult the amenities of debate, and the rules of propriety a little more in this matter, when members rise to ask a question.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon, gentleman is entirely mistaken. There was not the least intention on my part, and I do not think any inference could be taken from my words, that I intended to cast any reflection on the member for Brant (Mr. Paterson). I simply called his attention to the fact that it had been in the Estimates for two years previous and had been explained, and I presumed that he had forgotten it for the moment.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon, gentleman thinks I should remember all about it. He will, no doubt, remember all about it; and I now ask him, what was said last year about the total amount of superannuation Mr. Wallace gets, what was said about the man's age, and what was said why he was superannuated? What was said about why he was superannuated? What was said about who succeeded him? And what did he say last year would be his age this year?

Mr. FOSTER. I did not say that the hon, gentleman ought to remember these points. I said that he should have remembered that the subject was discussed and the explanations made in previous sessions. I certainly do not ask him to keep a travelling record of these things in his head; I simply called his attention to the fact that the subject had already been discussed. Mr. Wallace was superannuated for the exact time he had served; it was intended to add five years to his time of service; and this $240 is simply the extra amount which would have been added to his superannuation if the time had been added.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was his age?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know what his age was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It looks very much like a bargain for the purpose of putting in some other gentleman.

Mr. TROW. I had the pleasure of seeing this officer a few months before he was superannuated, and I think he was a much more efficient officer than the present incumbent. He understood his duties thoroughly, he was a practical man, and he was most anxious to retain the position. I should like to know what was his age at the time he was superannuated, and for what purpose he was relieved of his duties which he understood so thoroughly, and an ex-member of Parliament put in his place.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that the gentleman was of a fairly ripe age, and that he was anxious to go home to England where his friends were, and pass the remainder of his life there; and Mr. Shakespeare was appointed in his place.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think it is quite clear that there is something very irregular in connection with this superannuation. I have taken occasion, on the several opportunities that have been presented to me, to discuss this whole question of superannuation, and I think this case of Mr. Wallace is one which shows that the Act has been continually abused, in order to provide places for those who wallace?

have been pressing on the Government their claims. This gentleman, who was postmaster of Victoria, it is quite clear, was removed from that position in order to make room for a gentleman who once had a seat in this House, Mr. Shakespeare. The hon. Minister of Customs, when the question of superannuation comes up, usually delights to present a statement to the House to show that under the operation of the superannuation system the country is making money. In this case that claim cannot be made, for the simple reason that Mr. Wallace was drawing a salary of $2,400 a year; he was removed and granted not only the superannuation allowance to which he would be entitled under the statute, but an increase of $240 a year, and Mr. Shakespeare was appointed in his place at $2,400 a year. This is another evidence of how this system is abused. I see that last year thirty-five names have been added to the list, of whom thirty-one are granted an annual allowance, so that the entire sum which was added last year, and which will continue as long as these men live, was $15,486.75. I find that there are some men on the list who are not by any means aged. In the Customs Department there was added to the list last year $6,074.64: next comes the Post Office Department, with an addition of $3,850.84; the Department of Railways and Canals comes next with $2,482.55; the Marine Department added $496, a moderate sum; the Inland Revenue Department $721, and the Finance Department $1,860. The gratuities amounted to $15,051.95. I find that we had on the superannuation list on the 30th of June, 1891, 532 persons. Of these, I find that there are no less than 114 men who are under the age of 54 years drawing annuities out of the treasury of this Dominion. That is an evidence that the Act has been abused, ridiculously abused, for the purpose of making room for other men who are pressing their claims on the Government for positions. And now we are asked quietly to pass an item of $240 extra to a man who was compelled to leave his position. Now, I contend that this whole system should be changed. Last year we paid $241,000 in superannuations, which shows on the face of it that the system is grossly abused, and it is time that some change should take place.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask the hon, member for Victoria if he has seen Mr. Wallace lately, and how he is in health?

Mr. PRIOR. I have not. I do not believe he is living in British Columbia at the present time.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Where is he living? Mr. PRIOR. That I cannot tell you. If you look up Hansard you might find out.

Mr. HAGGART. If the hon, gentleman wants full information, I have not got it here, as I did not expect this matter to come up. It belongs to the Post Office Department, and I will bring down the information when the Estimates for the post office are being considered.

Mr. FOSTER. I can give the hon, gentleman some information, which I find in the Public Accounts, which are accessible to him as well as to me. Mr. Robert Wallace was superannuated in the year of our Lord 1888, and his annual allowance was $912. His age at the time of retirement was 67.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is this the same. Wallace?

Mr. FOSTER. The same Wallace—the postmaster of Victoria; there is a mistake simply of a letter in the name. The number of years of his service was fourteen. The cause of his retirement was vice was fourteen. age. His salary, at the time he retired, was $2,400. The average salary for the three years previous was $2,400. It has been paid twelve months. I think that is full information.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. Minister has given us information which was not furnished the House, when the House voted this amount in 1889. looking to Hansard of 1889, I find it stated there that:

"Mr. Wallace was for such a long time in the service of the country that he was superannuated, and in consequence of his long term of service, ten years were added to his superannuation." to his superannuation.'

Now, we are told that fourteen years is such a very long term of public service that when a man who has been that number of years in the service is superannuated for any reason, he is to have ten years added. Is it quite true that that long service was only fourteen years?

Mr. FOSTER. It seems by this to have been fourteen years.

Mr. MULOCK. Then it is quite in order to refer to what has taken place. If the grant of this extra amount was in consequence of long service, it is quite clear that, had we known that long service was only fourteen years, we would not have consented to the extra ten years. The matter is fairly open for our consideration; and in view of the contradictory statements in the Hansard of 1889, we should have the papers brought down. It is stated by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. MeMullen) that Mr. Wallace was induced to send in his resignation for certain reasons, and that this increase was given him as hush money to prevent his making known the reasons for sending in his resignation. That statement was contradicted, but the Committee was not furnished with the evidence, which is no doubt in the possession of the department, showing exactly the circumstances under which the resignation took place. There must be some correspondence. If Mr. Wallace asked to be retired, his application will be in the department; if there is any correspondence, that will be in the department; and we should have now before the Committee all the papers before proceeding further with the vote. The hon. Minister of Finance must be in error in saying that explanations were given last year. I do not find any allusion to this matter in the Hansard of 1890, though possibly I may have missed it.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is there.

Mr. MULOCK. But I do find the statement to which I refer, on page 1597 of the Hansard of 1889, and if the House was not then in full possession of the facts, we should be put in full possession of them now before we vote this money. I would suggest, therefore, that the item should stand.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the item should stand. Any information we have in the department will be brought down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It ought to be down now. My hon, friend will see that when the Government take the responsibility, on a service of fourteen years, of nearly doubling the be given. From what my hon friend has said, the late First Minister must have supposed the service had been very much longer. It is a gross abuse of our system of superannuation to add ten years to a man's service, who only served fourteen years, without very grave reasons. The explanation given is not satisfactory. This whole superannuation matter excites a great deal more attention in the country than perhaps the hon. gentle-man is aware of. There is no doubt whatever that this $250,000 which we pay as pensions is looked upon with a very evil eye by very many of our constituents; and although I do not myself see my way, within due bounds and moderation, to adopt the very radical remedy proposed of abolishing the superannuation system, yet I must warn the Government and the civil servants too that the way in which it is being conducted tends to imperil the chances of the system being prolonged much longer.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hardly agree with my hon. friend, and believe the whole thing should be swept away. It has been and will be productive of abuse, and I believe we had better adopt the system of paying the civil servants for their services, letting them serve while they are able and take care of themselves afterwards. I do not believe the superannuation system is a good one. I believe of the five hundred or six hundred people on the list nearly half might be performing their functions, and that the course taken by the Government is such as to have provoked the animosity of the country with regard to the whole system, and we will be obliged to repeal it not many years hence. For that course my hon. friends will be largely responsible. This case we are considering now is one the country will consider as furnishing good reason for a repeal of the system entirely. think the item had better stand until we get the papers.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It is not very often that I have the good or the bad fortune to agree with hon, gentlemen opposite. I do not rise for the purpose of awarding to them any credit for the manner in which they conducted the superannuation system when they were in power, because it is within my own knowledge that a very large number of men were superannuated. No such credit, Sir, is due; when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, men who should not have been superannuated were superannuated, these cases being a clear abuse of the very system we are discussing. I may differ very materially with the Government and with many members on this side, but I confess I do not see any reason why we should keep up this system.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am not talking for cheers from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LANDERKIN. We can cheer if we like.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Certainly, you are at per-ct liberty to do so. At the same time, you must fect liberty to do so. remember you are doing it in the light of your record in this matter when in power. officers of the Government are not well enough paid to provide for the future, they should be better paid, and this system of superannuation entirely abolished. Surely this House, free enpension, by adding ten years to it, a reason should tirely from partizan considerations, should take upon itself some opportunity to discuss the matter and come to a logical and fair conclusion.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What do you think of this particular item?

Mr. MONTAGUE. I know nothing of this particular item, as I was unfortunately absent when the explanations were made.

Mr. CURRAN. As this subject has taken so wide a range, I may be permitted to say a word.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Oh, yes.

Mr. CURRAN. As this debate has taken so wide a range, I may be permitted to say a word or two on the subject. My hon, friend who has just resumed his seat has spoken in favour of abolishing the superannuation system altogether. I hope that abolition will not take place at all events until justice has been done to one gentleman who was employed in Montreal for some years. I refer to Mr. George Craven, who was employed as a warehouseman at a salary of $550 a year. He was only 55 years of age when he was superannuated, but he had been continuously employed from the 1st June, 1853. Although he was a political opponent of mine, he was permanently appointed, on my recommendation, on the 1st March, 1884. The inrecommendation, on the 1st March, 1884. spectors having reported that the poor fellow is nearly blind and is physically unfit to discharge his duties and should be replaced, I think it is only fair to a man who has been in the service for 37 years to give him a superannuation allowance. is true that, under the Civil Service Act, a person requires to be ten years in the service in a permanent appointment in order to come under the Superannuation Act; but, because this poor fellow was not permanently appointed until eight years ago, it is hardly fair that he should be turned adrift when he is nearly blind, according to the official report; and I hope some means will be taken by which this case will be dealt with in an equitable spirit, so that after the 37 years of service which this man Craven has given to the country, he will have some allowance for the few remaining years he has to live, and that, if he is physically unfit to discharge his duties and is nearly blind, he should have some commiseration shown to him. As I have said, he never supported me politically and was always on the other side; but I believe we should do justice to a poor man who is in such an unfortunate predicament.

In reply to the remarks of Mr. McMULLEN. the hon member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), I am very glad to find that he endorses the movement for the abolition of the superannuation sys-He pointed out that some similar cases took place during the term of office of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie). That is true. Some of those were cases in which, if the Government had dismissed the parties without a retiring allowance, the Government would have been accused of harsh dealing. The brother-in-law of the late First Minister was superannuated and drew the largest superannuation on the list. the new First Minister had dismissed that gentleman instead of superannuating him, he would have been blackguarded from one end of the country to the other for such an inhuman act. I was sorry to hear the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) that it should be placed to their credit at interest, say he was not in favour of doing away with super- and that it should be paid to their families, in case annuations; but perhaps the hon. gentleman himself is looking forward to taking shelter under the superannuation system. Of course, we know that Montreal is a very important port of Customs, and it is not impossible that the man who is now there might have to be superannuated, and then my hon. friend might desire to take his place. will have to keep our eyes open in regard to this matter, and, perhaps, after all, we may find that what my hon. friend is looking for is getting a position for himself, and that after he obtains that position, he would consent the abolition of this particular system. The Minister of Customs was not in his place when I made my first remarks, but I notice that he has taken the lead in this superannuation business. I see that he superannuated a large number of officers in the city of Montreal last year. Either a number of these were not required or else he has superannuated them for a purpose. He says that the offices have not been filled and that he has no intention of filling them. Well, if the affairs of this country under the management of the Minister of Customs are so conducted that three or four men can be superannuated and their services dispensed with without any inconvenience to the service, there must be a great deal of looseness somewhere in the management of that department. If that is the way in which the hon, gentleman manages an important port like the port of Montreal, so that he can dispense with the services of these men without any inconvenience, it would be well to find out if there are unnecessary men at other points. There might have been a time when the superannuation system might have been considered a necessity. In England, I think, when it was first introduced, the system of life insurance was scarcely known, but here in a country like ours, where a man can pay an insurance premium upon his life and can draw the amount when he arrives at a certain age, it is very much better, and it would be better for the Civil Service that the superannuation system should be abolished, and this should be done. In that case, the civil servants would control the whole of their salaries, and they could insure their own lives and could be certain, either of receiving money at a certain time, or that, at the time of their death, it would be paid to their families. How is it now? A man may pay into the superannuation fund for twenty years, and he may die in the service, and his family never gets a single dollar from that. Those who are superannuated draw a certain annuity for their lives. I think it would be better for the Civil Service to allow them to control their ownmeans, to insure their lives and to provide something for their family, if they were taken off in years, or for themselves, if they live up to an old age. You have now on the superannuation list 114 men under the average age of fiftyfour, and that proves that the system has been steadily abused by people being placed on the superannuation list in order to make room for those whom the Government desired to appoint. I agree with my hon. friend, that this system ought to be abolished. I would have no objection to the system which was proposed by Mr. Blake in this House, when he moved that we should deduct 2 per cent. from the salary of the civil servants, and of their death, or to themselves, when they retired from the service.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we must insist upon having information before we can give our consent to the passage of this item. If, after this discussion, the item is passed, next session the Minister of Finance will say that it was thoroughly discussed in 1891, and, after the most mature deliberation, the House came to the conclusion that the item ought to be passed. Now, he is asking us to pass it in the dark, just as we did in 1889 and 1890, without any information, and he asks us to pass it without any information to-day. This is a new Parliament, and, as the hon, member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) suggests, one-third of the members of this House have never heard anything about this item, and are in no way committed to this item at all. But whether that one-third is seeking information or not, I, as an individual member of this House, demand information before being called upon to vote yea or nay on this mat-It is time to discuss whether the best mode is adopted in appointing civil servants, and we suggest that the time has arrived when the salaries of civil servants, instead of being secured to them after they have ceased to work, should cease at that time; and, further, that they should not be considered different from the earnings of other citizens, but should be attachable at the instance of the creditors. I do not believe in placing civil servants beyond the control of their creditors; it is a most dishonest principle. And this system of superannuation promotes dishonesty on the part of the Government at times, because it is used as a bribe to induce people to make way for politicians who are inconvenient, or whose places are desired for other parties. However, apart from the general merits or demerits of this question, we are now dealing with a particular item, and we must have information before we pass this item. The Minister of Finance himself understands that it is his duty to lay this information before the Committee. He thinks probably, that by obstinately withholding information, he will make progress. Now, his experience in this House ought to have taught him that this is the poorest way for him to make progress in public business. no desire on our part needlessly to delay business, but considering the extravagance of the Administration, considering the enormous increase in the public expenditure, it is time for each and all of us to do our duty now, to supervise carefully every item of public expenditure. We must be careful of the small items as well as the large ones. Although this is a small item, it is one of a class embracing nearly a quarter of a million dollars per annum of We will not be tax upon the people of Canada. doing our duty if we do not insist upon having this information, and the Minister of Finance will not be doing his duty unless he gives it to us. Let us have the whole of the correspondence and the papers, and probably a perusal of these may satisfy the members, so that no further discussion will be needed; but until that information is laid upon the Table of the House, he must expect that there will be a very proper desire on the part of hon. members to know all the facts concerning this item.

years before the House. The gentleman was superannuated in 1888, and it could not be ex-The gentleman was pected that the Minister would come here with full details of that superannuation, nor could the Minister have expected to be asked to explain what has already been before the House two or three times. I told the hon, gentleman that if the item was allowed to pass to-night, I would, on the first item that was introduced on the post office estimates, give all the information I had in my department. I doubt very much if there is any fuller information; I think no more information can be given than the statement that the hon. Minister of Finance has read from the Public Accounts. I do not know of any arrangement when Mr. Wallace was superannuated. I do not know what arrangement, if any, was made with him for the appointment of his successor. The hon, gentleman must know that none of the departments contain any information as to an arrangement, such as he insinuates, having been made. With reference to the statement of the hon, member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that 114 employe's of the Government had been superannuated whose age did not average fifty-four years, I can state to the hon, gentleman that a great proportion of those who were superannuated in the Post Office Department, were superannuated for grave and serious reasons, which are all set forth in the Orders in Council for their superannuation; and the insinuation that they have been superannuated for some reason or another which the Government dare not make patent, is altogether a fabrication of the hon. gentleman. I may state that there has not been a single superannuation for which the best of reasons were not submitted to the Council, and the superannuation was passed by the Treasury Board. The reasons are given in the Orders in Council. A person may be sick for six or nine months and incapable of duty; he may have a medical certificate ordering him on leave of absence for 12 or 13 months, showing that it was impossible for him to perform the duties of his position. Every reasons were given by the chief of the department to show why the gentleman was superannuated.

Mr. CHARLTON. It may be very true, as the Postmaster General informs us, that there has been no superannuation without the very best reason, but we would like to have the evidence laid before us showing that such is the case. a particular matter before us now, and when we are disposed to question whether that was a proper superannuation, the Government require us to take The Postmaster their assurance that it was. General tells us that he could not be expected to have the information brought down. Well, we say if he has not brought the information down, let this item stand until he does bring it down. We require the information, and we do not suppose the Ministry expect to force all these items through without according to us sufficient reasons therefor. The hon, gentleman says this item has been passed twice already, and that is a reason why it should be passed again. Sir, if this House, or this Committee, has been remiss in its duty upon two former occasions, that is no reason why we should be remiss upon the third occasion. It is a good reason why Mr. HAGGART. I think the hon. gentleman should be satisfied with the statement I gave, because this is an item that has been two or three to have demanded upon the two previous occasions.

Then, this is a new House, and there is a large number of members in this House who were not here on the two previous occasions, and they may want to know the reasons that actuated the Government in making this superannuation. Is it possible that the Government, when we demand the papers in regard to a matter, when we demand all the information that we are entitled to possess with regard to this matter—is it possible that the Government dare to tell us that they will not give it?

Mr. FOSTER. We have never said so.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Postmaster General tells us that if we will let this pass, he will bring down the information. That is equivalent to saying that we will hang the man and try him afterwards, to see if there was any reason for hanging him. We do not intend to let this matter pass till we have the information, and I can assure the hon, gentleman that it will probably save time if he will allow this item to stand, and bring down the information we ask for, and that we are entitled to receive at his hands. If we find that the matter is all right, and that there is no reason for refusing the item, it will pass as a matter of course.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is no force in the argument of the Minister, that because this item has appeared in two previous years, it should pass now. We know very well that this item is subject to a change every year. The mere fact that having been passed on two previous occasions does not at all justify us in passing it now, without sufficient reasons having been given. This is entirely a new House, and the Minister himself will see the reasonableness of his showing the new House the reasons why he asks this vote to pass. The hon, member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), says that he does not know anything about this item at all, and he may desire to know something about it, and if the hon, member for Haldimand is in that position, a great many other new members of the House are in the same position, and may be averse to letting an item pass about which they know nothing. The Minister doubts very much whether he can give us any more information. Well, let the matter rest until he is sure. It seems to me there ought to be some information as to whether this man desired to be superannuated or not. That would weigh upon the question. If I remember rightly, I think when I was in Victoria a few years ago along with my hon. friend from Perth (Mr. Trow), he stated that he saw Mr. Wallace, and he was quite well. I do not know that he met him personally himself, but I understood him to say that he was quite capable of discharging his duties. know that the hon, member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) in a speech at the opera house alluded to coming events, and the reference was enjoyed very much. Here is the point. The Government superannuated this officer and then endeavour to add 10 years to his service. For what reason is this addition to be made? Is it for long length of service? The hon. Postmaster General said it was so; but the Minister of Finance said it was not for long service, for 14 years is not long service. Thus there is a direct contradiction between one Minister and another. This man who was practically capable of discharging the duties of that office, was superannuated after 14 years' service, and now the Government come down and ask the House to grant a superannuation allowance based on 10 years' additional service. That At present it is simply a question whether $240 is equivalent to giving him superannuation for every year except 4 years during which he was in the public service. And yet this gentleman is in perfect health and able to discharge the duties today. Does the Minis er of Finance say there is nothing worthy of explanation in this matter? Does he mean to say that he can shelter himself behind the fact that because such votes have been made on representations, which even according to the Minister of Finance himself were not correct, we are to-day to take similar action? It is only reasonable that a full explanation of the facts should be given to the Committee, as there are so many new members of the House who are not acquainted with the merits of the case.

Mr. DEVLIN. As a new member I should like to know why we are called upon to vote this The only explanation given to the Committee is that there is

"Item 92. Extra allowance to W. Wallace, ex-post-master at Victoria, B. C."

You might put down 216 other citizens for a similar amount, and we would not be much wiser. agree with what has been said, that because this House has in past years voted this amount, that is no reason why it should be voted again. At all events, we should have some explanation regarding the matter. Apart from that, I agree with what was said by the hon, member for Haldimand regarding the system of superannuation. I do not think it is the most commendable system to adopt. It is said that it existed in the time of the Mackenzie Administration, and that is set forth as an argument by hon, gentlemen opposite. But I always thought that hon, gentlemen opposite condemned what was done by the Mackenzie Administration, and yet here to-day we find their action brought forward and endorsed. When gentlemen obtain good positions in the Civil Service at high salaries, I do not think that after they have served their country for a few years they should be entitled to a large retiring amount. The business man is obliged to provide for the future. The farmer, although he obtains a much smaller remuneration than an ordinary civil servant, is obliged to provide out of it for the future. The labouring classes have to assist in providing for the maintenance of the Civil Service, and are they to be asked to allow themselves to be taxed still more in order to provide a fat thing for a civil servant who does not want to work any longer, and yet the labourer has also to provide for his If a civil servant wishes to retire from the service, let him, while in it, provide for the future from savings from his salary. We were told by the Postmaster General that superannuation is never allowed except for grave and serious reasons. Perhaps some so retired would have been worthy of dismissal instead of superannuation. The whole matter is one deserving of the most serious consideration; and respecting this special item, I think as a new member I am entitled, as are many others who are here for their first session, to more information before we vote this amount.

Mr. BOWELL. The argument addressed by the hon. gentleman would be applicable if the question of the repeal, extension or amendment of the Superannuation Act were before the House.

should be given to Mr. Wallace in addition to the amount he is receiving as superannuation.

Mr. DEVLIN. We could not get the reason why it should be voted.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know why this needless and lengthy argument on the principle of superannuation should have been addressed to the Commiteee. I do not hold myself responsible, I speak now individually, for the Superannuation Act. I took very much the same ground as the hon, gentleman who has just spoken when it was passed in 1870. I opposed the Act then for the reasons advanced by many of the hon, gentlemen who have spoken; but we are dealing with an Act on the Statute-book, and they who have its administration in charge should endeavour to administer it as nearly as possible in compliance with its provisions. Unless it is shown that this is not done, the violent remarks addressed by some hon, members are certainly not in place. I regret as much as the hon, member for Montreal Centre can possibly regret the position in which he finds an officer whom I considered it my duty to remove from the service for reasons which he himself has given. If it had come to the knowledge of some hon, gentlemen opposite that I had an officer drawing $700 for doing nothing for twelve months, who was really incapacitated on account of loss of sight and ill-health, I would have been attacked just as violently as the whole system has been attacked for keeping people in the service who really did nothing and drew full pay. Now, because in the interest of economy, and in the interest of the service, I took the only means left to me under the Superannuation Act to remove him from the service, that was to give him a gratuity of one month's salary for each year in which he had been upon the staff, I am assailed. It is true, as the hon, member for Montreal Centre said, this man had been in the service for a number of years.

Mr. CURRAN. Thirty-seven years.

Mr. BOWELL. I was not aware of it. He was one of the temporary clerks who received $1, $1.25 or $1.50 a day. Some are recommended by collectors to be placed on the permanent list, they having proved good servants in the past, and I have no doubt that these recommendations in many cases are made in order that in their old age these men, not receiving very large salaries, may retire on allowances and become really pensioners on the country. In regard to the case before the Committee, I understand that when Mr. Wallace was superannuated, he was promised by, I think, the late Premier, although I will not speak positively on that point, an addition to his years of service. When the question came before the Treasury Board they knew no particular reason why any additional years should be added, and, consequently, recommended to Council the superannuation of Mr. Wallace with an allowance based on the time he had been postmaster at Victoria. Subsequently, it was urged that this promise having been made to him, the additional amount should be voted annually. We were advised by the Minister of Justice at the time, that the Treasury Board and Council having once acted on the question of superannuation of any officer, and the recommendation having passed Council and received the sanction of the Governor, our functions then ceased, and the superan probably I would.

Mr. Bowell.

nuation could not be amended unless it could be shown that there was an error either as to the number of years served or some other cause. Under the circumstances the board was not able to reconsider this question and recommend an additional number of years to be added to this man's service, and, consequently, it has been placed ever since in the Estimates. This is the only information that can possibly be given to the House, and it becomes a question whether, under these circumstances, and in view of the explanations which, I believe, were given by my colleagues before I entered the chamber, if the House thinks that this is an improper expenditure of money to pass, the best way is that either the Minister of Finance should drop it, or that the House reject it. I do not think, and I am speaking with all sincerity, that any other information can be given on this question. I was not a little amazed at the arguments used by some hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House, which would tend to show that all the iniquities-if they are iniquities-and all these wrongs-if they are wrongswhich have been perpetrated under the Superannuation Act, have been perpetrated by the gentlemen who now occupy the Treasury benches. However, it is just as well that I should call attention to a few facts which I find in the superannuation list now before me, as there are a large number of new members in the House who may like to know how the Superannuation Act was administered under the Administration of my hon, friend who sits before me (Mr. Mackenzie). I find on looking at this list—and there are a number who died off since and consequently do not appear in the list for the present year—that Mr. Brennan, bailiff of Trinity House, Montreal, was superannuated, and had served only six years

Mr. LANDERKIN. What date in the year was that?

Mr. BOWELL. What does the hon, gentleman say?

Mr. LANDERKIN. What date in the year 1873 was that?

Mr. BOWELL. Will the hon, gentleman be quiet for a few moments; will he kindly permit me to finish what I am stating? I find that ten years is added to Mr. Brennan's service.

Mr. LANDERKIN. That was done by your own Government.

Mr. BOWELL. You are now making a statement that you have not proved.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am making a statement that is nearer the truth than your statement, because your Government was in power for eleven months during that year.

Mr. BOWELL. That is only a repetition of that insolence that always characterizes that hon. gentleman.

Mr. MULOCK. You had better take that back.

Mr. BOWELL. I will not take it back.

Mr. MULOCK. Oh, yes, you will. I will leave it to the Chairman whether you should withdraw that expression or not.

Mr. BOWELL. If I were speaking about you probably I would.

Mr. MULOCK. That will not do. If you would be kind enough to wake up, Mr. Chairman, and restore order, I have a point of order to make.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If that were for the fiscal year of 1873, it would not be under the Administration of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie).

Mr. LANDERKIN. Allow me to speak to the point of order. I do not wish the Minister of Customs to take anything back which he says about me. I consider always the source from which it comes. Do not be uneasy at all; I am not uneasy about it.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. You know hon. gentlemen in Committee like to say a great many things that they do not want to take back, and it does not amount to much anyway.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But we would like to have your ruling. The hon. Minister of Customs accuses my hon. friend of insolence, and I submit that it is not strictly parliamentary. If you rule that it is, of course that is a different matter.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I will not rule that it is or it is not. I am not familiar enough with the English language for that.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Then I will translate it for you.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). Mr. Chairmau, I rise to a point of order also. I wish to draw your attention to a personal insult to yourself. hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock) asked you to wake up, and that is an insult to the chair, and a reflection on the way you discharge your duties in this House.

Mr. MULOCK. I will withdraw the observation and the Chairman can be at liberty to remain asleep if he likes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Hon. gentlemen will remember that a discussion like that which has been going on for the last two hours is enough to make anybody sleep.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand that according to your ruling-

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not know that I have ruled.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is just as well that we should know that according to your ruling, Mr. Chairman, the word "insolence, That is a very interesting strictly parliamentary. point to have decided.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I do not say it is parliamentary, but I can say that I have been sitting here for an hour and a half and I have heard a great many things that were not parliamentary and nobody drew my attention to them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Oh, never mind; that language is quite customary in the Customs Department.

Mr. BOWELL. If I said anything in this Committee unparliamentary, I am quite willing to withdraw it.

Mr. MULOCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Very well, I accept your apology.

Mr. BOWELL. This little digression has taken place because I was not able to give the day of the month on which this superannuation took place after six years of service and to which ten years are added. Look a little further down the list and you will find that in 1877—and I do not think there is any doubt as to who was in power then--that the Rev. John Cameron, a clerk in the statistical office in Halifax, who had served only three years, had ten years added to his service, and is now drawing a salary on thirteen years' service instead of three.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You are not opposed to the clergy, are you?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I must appeal to you for protection in this House. The Chairman as Speaker must protect gentlemen who are speaking in the House from these unseemly interruptions. Go a little further down on the list and you will find that, in 1874—I do not think there will be any doubt about the Liberal party being in power then—that John Costley who had served ten years had ten years added to his term of service, and he was superannuated upon a twenty years' allowance. If you look down a little further you will find that in 1877, Mr. T. B. French was superannuated after thirteen years' service, and had ten years added, so that he is drawing a superannuation allowance for twenty-three years. A little further down and you will find that in 1875 George Futvoye, then Deputy Minister of Militia, was superannuated after twentyseven years' service, and had eight years added making thirty-five years, which ha schabled him to draw the largest possible amount that could be drawn under the Superannuation Act, namely, 70 per cent. of his salary. The names on the list which I am reading from are given in alphabetical order and not arranged according to the dates, but if you look again in 1875 you will find that J. W. King, director of penitentiaries, served only six years, was superannuated on account of abolition of office, and had ten years added to his service. In 1878—the same discussion might arise on this as did arise a few moments ago as to whether the present Government, or the previous one were in power-but if you refer to the name which is that of John Langton, you will all know that he was superannuated by the hon, gentlemen opposite, and he had ten years added to twenty-three years' service.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In order to give a member of Parliament his place.

Mr. BOWELL. I will not give any reason for it, but I have no doubt that it was for the reason the hon, gentleman states. I find that in 1876, Mr. Lindsay had ten years added to twenty-four years' In 1877 the Rev. H. McMillan, secretary of the statistical office at Halifax, had served eleven years and had ten years added to his length of service; and in 1877, Mr. C. M. Nutting, a clerk in the statistical office in Halifax, had ten years added to five years' service; and I might go on giving a number of similar cases. Here, in 1877, is another very good sample: A Mr. Ryan, who was a messenger in Halifax, had served only three years and he had ten years added to it, making thirteen years, and is still drawing the amount of that superannuation. It is true it is only $75.72 per annum, but being a messenger the amount would not be very large; the principle, however, is the the same. In 1875 there was a Mr. Wilson, who served nineteen years, and had six years added to his term Now, I do not pretend to say that cases have not occurred during the time of the present Administration, in which two, three, five or ten years have not been added to an officer's length of service; but in every instance there has been good reason for the addition. I find that in most of these cases in which the ten years were added, it was done because of the abolition of the office.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear;" but that is simply in accordance with the superannuation law as it exists on the Statute-book. When the Government abolish a man's office, they have the right, if they think proper, to add from one to ten years to his term of service, but they cannot exceed ten years. I am not finding fault with our predecessors for what they did in this matter, but I am pointing out that in administering the law, they found it necessary, presumably in the interest of the service, to superannuate these men on account of their unfitness or illness, or because of the abolition of their offices. I shall not refer to the remarks made by one hon, gentleman with regard to the Montreal Custom house. I made a plain and distinct statement the other night, in answer to a question as to why those gentlemen were superannuated. I also stated distinctly and positively that I did not intend to fill their places, because I did not think the service required it. That statement ought to have been sufficient; and when a statement of that kind is made, if it is shown that the Minister who makes it has told an untruth, or has not carried out the promise he made to the House, then it will be time enough to insinuate that he told a falsehood, and did not intend to carry out the promise he made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Some of the cases the hon, gentleman has alluded to hardly bear out the case which he has undertaken to de-Take the first case, that of Mr. Brennan, of Montreal, who he said secured an addition of ten years. Well, I find that Mr. Brennan was super-annuated on the 1st day of September, 1873. I will try to fix the incident a little more clearly in the hon, gentleman's mind by reminding him that that was fifteen days after a certain prorogation of Parliament, which took place under remarkable eircumstances in 1873, and it was, I think, about two and a-half months before the Canadian Pacific scandal cabinet, of which the hon. gentleman it is true was not a member, was driven ignominiously from power.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, deservedly driven from power, under circumstances about as disgraceful as some of those now transpiring in this House.

Mr. BOWELL. We will treat that upon its merits.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We will treat that upon its merits, of course. As to Mr. J. W. King, I think his office was abolished, and I remember very distinctly the late First Minister making a very vehement appeal to our side of the House, that if it was necessary to abolish the office, Mr. King, and I think another gentleman whose office have all possible consideration that could be granted | turn up the list of superannuations on page B-220 to them in conformity with the statute, which I think was done. As an hon, gentleman remarked before me, I will take the responsibility of having, in common with my colleagues, dealt perhaps too generously with Mr. Bernard, who was the Deputy Minister of Justice, and a brother-in-law of the late Premier. I believe we allowed him several years additional; and I think that most of those whom the hon, gentleman has alluded to, and who were perhaps too generously dealt with, were gentlemen who were very great friends of hon, gentlemen opposite and very strong political opponents of ours, and who, if they were so dealt with, were certainly dealt with not because of any particular partiality we had for them but on broad principles of equity.

Mr. COCHRANE. In order to put some of your own friends in the same positions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No. Sir; to improve the efficiency of the public service. That was the ground on which we acted, and on no other ground. I recollect well, during the election of 1878, a great number of hon, gentlemen opposite, and notably my hon, friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) whom we miss so much, and whom we have so long missed in this House at a critical period, used to include in the most envenomed periods against the Mackenzie Administration, because we increased in four or five vears the superannuation allowance from about $60,000 a year to $104,000 or $105,000. But, Sir, these hon, gentlemen and their successors have not a word to say now—except the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), who is perhaps anticipating the time he must appear before his constituents, and wishes to pose as a purist—about an expenditure of $241,000 a year. Now, with respect to the particular instance before us, the allegation made by my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock)—and he gave proof of it—was that this particular gratuity had been arranged under misrepresentations - erroneous, though I do not say intentional-made to this House by no less a person than the late Premier. He read from Hansard in proof thereof, and he elicited from the Minister of Finance the statement that that was sufficient ground for asking why the ten years were added.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before you left the Chair, Sir, the hon. Postmaster General challenged the statement I presented to this House, in which I showed that there were on the superannuated list 114 civil servants, who were of an average age of 52 years. The hon, gentleman challenged that statement, and I think pronounced it "bosh," or made some remark of that kind.

The hon, gentleman is mis-Mr. HAGGART. taken. I did not challenge his statement, but the inferences he drew from it.

Mr. MULOCK. You used the word "fabrica-

Mr. HAGGART. 1 did it unintentionally.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to prove that my was likewise abolished at the same time, should statement was true. If the hon, gentleman will

He will find that ten.gave their birth as in 1830, that eight stated they were born in 1831; that eight gave 1832 as their date of birth; that seven were born in 1833, four in 1834, ten in 1835, seven in 1836, eight in 1837, five in 1838, three in 1839, four in 1840, seven in 1841, one in 1842, three in 1843, four in 1844, three in 1845, one in 1846, three in 1847, two in 1849, three in 1850, one in 1851, two in 1852, three in 1853, two in 1854, three in 1855, one in 1858, one in 1860 and one in 1864. These 115 names show an average of 52 years on the 1st of July last. Now, the hon. Minister of Customs attempted to defend the superannuation system, so far as the port of Montreal is concerned. I notice we have no less than 45 superannuated officers, who were living in Montreal up to the 1st July, 1890, and since that the hon. gentleman has added four to the list, which makes fortynine superannuated officers living in the city of Montreal. The people, the labourers, chanics and artizans of that city as well as the surrounding country, have got to provide an annuity for forty-nine men in that city, who do nothing but live on the allowance granted them under this system. The hon, gentleman also attempted to point out that considerable abuses had taken place under the Mackenzie Government. But of the 115 shown in this list only 31 were put on it by the Mackenzie Government. All of them with the exception of three, have been superannuated by hon. gentlemen opposite. Again had the superannuation system been adhered to as it was first inaugurated, had the percentage first imposed on the salaries of civil servants, when the Act was introduced by Sir Francis Hincks, and which was 4 per cent. on the salaries of those drawing from $600 to $1,000, and 5 per cent. on the salaries over $1,000, we would be paying much less than we do to-day. But hon, gentlemen opposite, in their magnanimity and liberality, reduced that just one-half. They struck off, when Sir Leonard Tilley was Finance Minister, 50 per cent. from the fees, and deducted from the wages of the civil servants only half the percentage formerly deducted. Had they allowed the Act to remain as it was, even with all the abuses which have been perpetrated, the system would have been almost self-sustaining, but they have abused it in two ways. First, they have reduced the amount taken from the wages of the civil servants 50 per We are now collecting about $50,000 of dues per year from the entire list, whereas had the Act been allowed to remain as it was, we would have been collecting $102,000 and would only have been losing $150,000 a year, instead of $250,000 as at Last year we paid $240,000. This shows that hon, gentlemen opposite have abused the Act in two ways: first, by reducing the amount taken from the civil servant's salary; and second, by largely and unnecessarily increasing the superannuations. The hon. Minister of Customs quoted a great many superannuations which had been made by the Mackenzie Government; but I defy him to show any case in which any man was superannuated who had never contributed a cent to the fund. The Mackenzie Government may have added years to their term, and, if they did, I do not endorse their action, but they never allowed a man a super-of the Auditor General's Report, and take the ages the fund. The time has arrived when we should as there set down, he will find the following reabolish the system. There is no necessity for it, There is no necessity for it, and I believe that the civil servants themselves, if it were left to their vote, would vote that the system should not be kept in force any longer. If, as the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) has said, their wages are not sufficient, pay them what is sufficient and give them control of their own means. But I say there is no class in this country at present receiving a better annual allow-ance than our civil servants. There is no class half as well paid for the work they do. Bank clerks, wholesale clerks, school teachers, ministers of the Gospel, the best educated class we have, taking all their salaries together and dividing the total by the number employed, are worse paid than our Civil Service clerks. That being the case, why not allow these people to provide for themselves. It is not their fault if the Act is in the statute; it is not there at their request or with their consent; and it was not put there for their benefit but for the sole purpose of giving the Government power to remove from office clerks who are efficient and faithful but whose positions are wanted for others. It is for that purpose the Act is in our statutes, and the Government take every opportunity of using it. I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Customs used the Act to get a comfortable position for his own son in Victoria, B.C., as I understand he has a son there as collector of Customs. Perhaps the hon, gentleman will tell us whether he utilized the superannuation system in order to make room for his son or not. He does not appear to take any notice. I suppose it is convenient for him not to take any notice. No doubt it would not be convenient for him to answer the question, and he prefers to take no notice. Therefore I must come to the conclusion that the superannuation was used for two purposes in British Columbia. It was used in the first place to remove Mr. Wallace, the post-master, in order to make room for Mr. Shakespeare, who was once a member of this House. In the second place, I presume, as the Minister of Customs has not contradicted it, it was used to remove the Customs officer at Victoria in order to make room for the son of the hon, gentleman him-We do not know how often this has been used for similar purposes, and it may be used, as I suggested before, to make a vacancy in the important port of Montreal for the benefit of an hon. member of this House. If it were not convenient for the Government to use this system in this way, it would have been abolished long ago. Service would be glad to have it abolished. They do not desire to have a portion of their salary taken out of their own hands. Some of them complain very loudly of the discount which is taken off their salaries every month in order to pay to the superannuation system, because the only way in which they could derive any benefit from it would be if they were put on the superannuation list, whereas, if they should die in the service, neither they nor their family would get a farthing. would be better that they should be paid the full amount of their salary, with perhaps the exception of a small percentage to secure the proper performance of service on their part, and then let them insure their lives on their own account. I want the Postmaster General to understand that the statement which I presented to the House is a annuation allowance who had not contributed to correct statement, and I advise him not again to declare that statement bosh or to ridicule it without being further informed on the subject. I am prepared to submit this statement to the Clerk of the House, and let the Postmaster General submit his statement in the same way and I will leave it to the Clerk to decide.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I desire to say something in regard to this iniquitous system. cannot understand why a certain class of people in this country should be selected and pensioned off at the expense of the people generally, when the rest have to look out for themselves. Everyone is aware that the civil servants are better paid than any other class of the same standing and the same education, and I cannot understand for the life of me why they should be allowed to retire into the world with a compensation or a pension. know whether the Liberal party objected the introduction of this system by Sir Francis Hincks in 1870, but, if they did not object, they did not do their duty, and I think that the Liberal party did not do their duty when they were in power from 1873 to 1878 when they allowed this measure to remain on the Statute-book. I do not care for any party in this matter, but I think the country should be saved this money. When we consider that more than $200,000 is annually paid in pensions without any claim for compensation except that the recipients have served the country for a few years, I think it is not a fair system at all. Take the teachers of this country, whose education is certainly as high as that of the civil servants, and they do not expect the Government to come to their aid. It is true that they contributed largely to a superannuation fund in the past, but during the last few years, the Government has refused to contribute, and they are now thrown on their own resources. The Government saw the error of its own way. In 1882 the Liberals in this House took a decided stand in reference to this question. The Superannuation Bill was before the House, and, when it came from the Committee, Mr. G. W. Ross moved:

"That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole to amend the same so as to provide, with due regards to the rights of those who have been already admitted to the superannuation list, for the abolition of the present and the substitution of a plan whereby a percentage of the salary of each civil servant shall be retained and placed to his credit and shall be payable to him with interest on quitting the service or to his family in case of his death in the service."

That was a fair plan submitted by the Liberal party in 1882, but every Conservative voted against The Liberal party is therefore not responsible for the continuance of this iniquitous system. Two years ago I was told by a member of Parliament that he knew thirty Conservative members of this House who would willingly vote for the abolition of this system if they dared to oppose the Government. That proves that even the supporters of the Government do not believe in the principle involved in this system. Take the amount of money which has been paid to those who have been superannuated because they have been supposed to have been unable to earn any more money during their lives. Let me give you a list of a few of these. A gentleman by the name of C. J. Birch was superannuated, the amount he had paid in was $112,

I have been able to get the figures, amounted to $10,207. In fact, he made a fortune after he had left the service larger than many men have the opportunity to make by their hard work. Then there was H. Bernard, who had paid $505 in, and up to that date he had drawn out $18,704. Another case was that of C. Bristow, who paid in $69, and drew out $10.973. Mr. W. G. Fyfe paid in $212 and drew out $10,773. Mr. G. Futvoye paid in $420, he was superannuated because he was of no more service to the Government, and he drew out $24,580; Mr. Thomas Hewitt paid in $112, and drew out $10,873; R. Kimber paid in $275, and drew out $11,187; John Langton paid in $847, and drew out $20,147; Joseph Lesslie, formerly postmaster of Toronto, paid in $584, and drew out $16,-858; E. A. Meredith paid in $639, and drew out $18,060; Gilbert McMicken paid in $261, and drew out to the date I have mentioned $12,507, or up to the time of his death, over $16,000. Alfred Patrick, the late Clerk of the House, paid in not a solitary cent; during that period he received $12,-090, and up to the present time he has received about $20,000, and the sum will keep on growing. Now, let me give you some details with reference to those superannuations, to show how the system is abused; and it will be abused, no matter in whose hands it is placed. If it is placed in the hands of the Liberals, outside influences will be brought to bear to make a place for some Liberal who wants a position; and if the Government themselves want to open a position for a friend it is quite likely-because we are all human-that some position will be opened and some person superan-And what is true with us, is true with any other Government. Influences are brought to bear every day upon the Government for a position in the Civil Service, and these influences are so strong that some person must be superannuated in order to make room for the party that is pressed upon them. Or if the Government is anxious to put in some strong supporter of theirs they will make room for him. Now, I say that the system should be abolished, and some other system established whereby those influences by outside parties on the Governments should be overruled. Let me give you a few instances to show this. Take the clerkship of this House. Mr. J. G. Bourinot, a gentleman who is as capable of filling that position as any man in the Dominion, and who fills it with honour to himself and dignity to the House-he receives a very fair salary, $3,400; and my friend who sits at his right and acts as his assistant, receives $2,800. Now, if that were all I would have no objection; or, if $3,400 is not a sufficient salary for that gentleman to discharge the duties of clerk, I say the Government ought to increase it; and if $2,800 is not sufficient for the assistant clerk, let it be increased. But we have We have Alfred three superannuated clerks. Patrick, who has been drawing a salary of $2,400 a year for the last 10 years out of the exchequer of this country because he is not able to discharge the duties of Clerk of this House. We have another, Mr. Leprohon, who receives $1,500 a year as superannuation allowance, and we have another gentleman, Mr. U. Piché, who receives $400 a year. Now, the position of clerkship of this House costs the country $10,500 a year on account of this iniquitous system and the amount which he had drawn out up to the which is in vogue, whereas it should only cost us 1st January, 1886, which is the last date at which $6,200. Let me give you another instance: Mr. McMullen.

Gilbert McMicken, of Winnipeg. I know I shall be told that he was superannuated under the late Liberal Administration. I do not care under what Administration it was, it only shows that the system is bad. He was superannuated because he was sick, and received an allowance of $1,579 per annum. After he received that some years, he got quite well, and ran and was elected for a constituency in Manitoba for the Local Legislature. He was appointed Speaker of that Legislature. Now, what has he been drawing from the two Governments, his salary as Speaker, his indemnity as member, and $1,579 superannuation allowance, because it was said that he was so sick that he could not do anything at all. Is that a proper system for this country to follow? Take another case. You will all remember a few years ago, when the Liberal party was in power, there was a certain gentleman in the city of Toronto then writing for the Mail. He was a vigorous and trenchant writer. He abused the Liberals right and left during the time they were in power. was the Opposition's right hand man at that time. In 1878, when the Liberal party was defeated, this gentleman, who was then a writer for the Mail, came to Sir John A. Macdonald, or his Government, and said: "Now, I want my reward. I have written many strong editorials in favour of your party during the last four years and I take to myself the credit, to a large extent, of having defeated the Liberal party." "What do you want," says Sir John A. Macdonald. He answered: "I want the position of postmaster of the city of Toronto." "But Joseph Lesslie has that position, and he is comparatively a young man, only 62 years of age." "Well," says the editor: "You can superannuate Joseph Lesslie and give the position to me." Joseph Lesslie was an active man, and had held that position for 30 years, giving the utmost satisfaction to the people of Toronto in the discharge of his duty. But strong influences were brought to bear, and he was superannuated, and has been drawing $2,400 a year ever since 1880. And, Sir, Thomas Charles Patterson was placed in that posi-And, Sir, tion with a salary of $3,000. But $3,000 and $2,400 make $5,400 that that office has cost this country each year, during the last ten years, on account of this system of superannuation which has been adopted and continued by the present Government. But that is not all. There was a gentle-man in the post office in the city of London a few years ago-no doubt the hon, member (Mr. Hyman) remembers himnamed John Gordon. He had occupied a position in that post office for 35 years. But the Minister of Agriculture wanted that position for a friend of his; influences were brought to bear upon Mr. Gordon who refused to be superannuated, but he was shoved out, and received $600 as superannuation fee, and another gentleman was put in his stead, and John Gordon since then hasdrawn $4,000 from the funds of this country on account of that superannuation. Gordon to-day is under sixty years of age, and is as smart as any man in this House of that age. But that is not all. Hon. gentlemen will remember that a few years ago they superannuated a man by the name of Alexander McNab, an engineer of the Prince Edward Island Railway. It was supposed that he did not discharge his duty properly, or the Government was at fault; however, he was those men would receive the compensation they superannuated on the ground of ill-health. Now, expected to receive when they entered the service.

Mr. McNab was at that time only forty-five years of age, and he has received a superannuation allowance for nearly ten years, and is as robust and as healthy a man as there is in the country, and has taken charge of another railway as engineer. I might go on from one case to another; I might go through one hundred and one names, if it were necessary, but these are sufficient to show the iniquity of the principle which is pursued. Why, the people in the country, when I tell them that a large number of able young men and of older men, have been superannuated at their expense, they stare at the iniquity that has been perpetrated upon them. Take the farmer who goes early to his work and returns late at night, year in and year out, for twenty or thirty years; when he has cleared his farm and made improvements, he has served his country, and if he fails during those years to make a sufficiency for himself and his family in his old age, he has not the Government to fall back upon, he is not able to ask them for assistance. Take the mechanics of our country, or the workmen in our manufactories; take the school teachers who teach our children; take the clerks who labour in our banks and our various other institutions—they have nothing to fall back upon, and consequently they are more economical during the first period of their lives, they save something every year, and that habit of economy builds up their character and they become better men and women than those who depend upon superannuation to support them after they have become unable to work. Now, after looking at all these facts, I would ask that this system be abolished just as rapidly as it can This particular item, I understand, is called for by the Government to pay a Mr. Wallace of British Columbia, and I understand that the Government refuse to give information to this House as to what that amount is asked for. put it to the common sense of the Ministers, have we not a right to know the reason why this $240 has been asked for? If this Mr. Wallace is entitled to it, if he has done work which deserves compensation to the extent of $240, are not the members of this House entitled to know what Will not the country was? that, service demand from the members of the Government, from the party on that side of the House, a minute explanation of all the moneys that are paid out? If this money has been paid fairly and legitimately for work done, why should the members of the Government refuse to give the information to the people which they are naturally entitled to receive? The refusal of the Government to give the information has caused a delay in the passage of this item for the last three or four hours. Now, in view of these facts, I would ask the Government and the supporters of the Government, I would ask our own friends on this side of the House, to put their heads together and devise some means by which this iniquitous system may be wiped off the Statute-books of this country, and be replaced by some other system that will be more truly in the interest of the Civil Service. And whatever statute is passed I am not in favour of compromising the vested rights of those men who entered the Civil Service on present conditions. The Act would be passed, and it would take effect gradually, so that

My only desire is to facilitate Mr. FOSTER. the business of the House, and I think I am in strong contrast with some hon, gentlemen opposite in that respect. I do not rise for the sake of replying to the long speech of the hon, gentleman who has just sat down. He has undertaken to discuss the whole merits and demerits of the system which has been adopted by Parliament and kept on by both parties for a number of years. The accuracy of the hon, gentleman's information, if it may be tested by a particular point, will be known to the House when I state, that although the hon. gentleman rounded up one of his periods in a very eloquent manner by declaring that Mr. McNab, who has been superannuated, was walking round as robust as ever in his life, I am credibly informed that Mr. McNab has been dead for a certain length of time, and consequently I suppose is not very robust.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). He was not dead this time last year.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to say that this iniquitous Act which has been on the Statute-book for a length of time, and which has been so roundly denounced by some hon, gentlemen opposite, is an Act, I understand, placed on the Statute-book in 1869 or thereabouts. The amendment which was referred to, making the percentage smaller, was, I think, passed in 1873; that, I think, was before the Mackenzie Government came into power. fact remains that the Liberal Government were in power in 1874; but instead of sweeping this iniquitous Act from the Statute-book they took advantage of every provision in it, and I am quite willing to make a comparison between their administration of that Act and the administration of it since by the Liberal-Conservative Government. Reference has been made to a great many different There is one comes to my mind now. In 1875, when hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, there was a certain robust, healthy, active and competent postmaster in the city of St. John, N.B. He had been in the service for a number of years. He was at that time 62 years of age. He was superannuated, and has from that time up to the present day been receiving $1,400 yearly out of the public treasury, and he is, as the hon. gentleman said of Mr. McNab, but in a truer sense, walking about the city of St. John to-day robust, hearty and well. "And tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Askelon," if that is the correct scripture quotation, this very same Mr. Howe, in the bloom and pride of his manhood, was superannuated for no other purpose than to allow hon. gentlemen opposite to put in a partisan of their own, John V. Ellis as postmaster at St. John. If such a thing had happened as an act of this Administration we would have had two and a half hours speeches on it. I simply call attention to the fact, and leave it there. not going into a discussion of the principle of a Superannuation Act or an insurance scheme to provide for the civil servants. I have my own views on that score. I do not think this is the best time to discuss this policy and to define what we should do when we are on an item of the Estimates, and consequently I leave that part of the discussion. What I will do is this, to come to the simple point at issue and ask hon, gentlemen if they really have anything to complain of in the attitude of the Government in connection with this item. Please remember that Mr. MACDONALD (Huron).

hon, gentlemen want brought down the written orders containing the statements that have been made here by Ministers, has been laid before hon. gentlemen. What is the information they want? The information as to the condition want? The information as to the condition of Mr. Wallace at the time of the superannuation? Very well. He was 67 years of age. No hon. gentleman will contend that was not primâ facie a fair age to entitle him to superannuation. By the Act civil servants can be superannuated after 60 years of age; he had passed 7 years beyond His term of service was 14 years, a very An addition respectable service for that one office. is made to his time provided for in the item now before the House. I have explained that fully. I have given more information to the House than hon, members could get from the papers. I am informed by the Postmaster General that after the House rose he went to his office, saw his deputy, and found there is no correspondence in his office on this matter. What more can be got by hon, gentlemen opposite when the papers are brought down is the Order in Council, and the minute of the Treasury Board embodied in the Order in Council with respect to this superannuation. The facts are as I have stated them: That this gentleman of 67 years of age was recommended for superannuation; that he was of an agesufficient to entitle him to it; that after the Treasury Board Order had passed and superannuation named, and the Order in Council passed, the case could not be opened except for a clerical error; that an addition of five years was made to his time, and that additional allowance for the five years, as it was not included in the first Order in Council, is here as an item in the Estimates, was placed there first in 1889, and has been voted for two years. do not see that any fuller information can be got or is required than that. I do not suppose the House proposes to go back on the action of the Government and on its own endorsation of it during two Any desire for reasonable information ought to be met, and any demand for reasonable information respecting this item has, I contend, been met to-night. With this explanation and with the statement that the Order in Council and the Minute of the Treasury will be brought down and laid on the Table of the House for the information of hon. gentlemen, I think this item ought to pass, and I do not think the business of the House on this 108th or 110th day cught to be obstructed for any lack of information, alleged by hon. gentlemen opposite, on this one item. I think the House ought to pass it, and if not passed the responsibility for the delay will not rest on the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is something more than the mere item itself or the merits of the item involved in the discussion which has taken place since 8 o'clock, and before that hour I did not We are considering now not the item in the Estimates, but we are considering the question of superannuation altogether, and it is just as well for the House to discuss it on an item of this sort as by a Bill submitted by an hon. gentleman which perhaps he would not succeed in having carried. The hon, member for South Huron has read a resolution proposed to this House by a member sitting on this side in 1882, enunciating the sentiments of the Liberal party, and if that resolution had received every bit of information that is available, unless the support of a majority of the House there is no doubt whatever it would have been immediately followed by the submission of a measure carrying out the principles stated in that resolution. every member who was elected as a follower of the Conservative party, voted against that resolution and for the maintenance of the principle of superannuation. I remember very distinctly the discussion which took place in this House when Sir Francis Hincks, as Minister of Finance, proposed the adoption of the principle of the superannuation allowance The hon. Minister at that date, in submitting his measure to the House, proposed to reserve 4 per cent. of the salaries of public officials, out of which this retiring allowance to which the members of the public service were to be entitled was to be paid. It was not supposed that after the measure was well established and came into operation, that there would be any charge upon the public treasury whatever. Of course it was then stated and it was supposed, that there would be a larger amount charged for a few years than the contributions would have afforded, because in the beginning those who would first be retired, would be men who had been contributors to the fund but for a few years. It was also stated at that time by Sir Francis Hincks, that the members of the Civil Service had, up to that time, been paid very moderate salaries, and the small salaries which they had received might be considered as if a sufficient sum were reserved to entitle them to draw from the superannuation fund whenever their retirement took The reason assigned was that the members place. of the Civil Service were very much like the sailors; they were a class that were not very well fitted to provide for themselves; they were an improvident class, who paid very little regard to the principles of economy; that unless some portion of their salary retained for the purpose of establishing a fund of this sort, they would be kept in the public service long after their usefulness had departed. original Bill provided that the Government should have the right to retire any man after he arrived at sixty years of age, and they might retire him at an earlier period if there was any indication of his mental or physical unfitness for being retained in the public service. It was then said by the Minister of Finance: If you make no provision and a man in the public service tells you: I am depending on the salary which I earn for the maintinance of myself and family. I have succeeded in saving nothing, I have been kept here in a town where the cost of living is very considerable, and the amount which I have received has been very moderate. It was said that it would be very difficult to dismiss him under these circumstances, but that if there was provision made by the retention of a portion of his salary for the creation of a superannuation fund, then it was said: You will be at liberty to discharge him whenever you feel that he has less fitness for the public service than what he had in the prime of life. These were the arguments used by the hon. Minister of Finance when he submitted the original Bill for the consideration of the House. It had not been on the Statute-book very long until there was a very strong pressure on the part of the civil servants for the payment to them of a larger amount than they were entitled to receive under the original Bill; and in the year 1871, or there- law was not more abused by hon. gentlemen on to 2 per cent., and so the funds, by this reduction, were made altogether inadequate to carry out the original plan without imposing some charge upon the public treasury. If the original plan had been strictly adhered to, it is not improbable that the public treasury would not have suffered, and it is highly probable that the fund thus created would, after a period of ten or fifteen years, have proved adequate to provide the retiring allowances. It was not adhered to, and a very large number of persons have been retired who no doubt did not fall within the policy of the law. I know myself of many persons who were retired, and who are still fit, after many years' withdrawal from the public service, for the discharge of those official duties which were imposed upon them at the time this retiring allowance was provided. Now, it does seem to me that the plan suggested by the resolution of 1882, proposed from this side of the House, would, if embodied into a statute, carry out the policy of the law as it was originally intended. you were to retain from each person a certain percentage of his salary, and as you do now retain also the right of dismissing him from the public services when you felt he was no longer qualified to efficiently discharge his duties in that service; he could have had handed over to him the amount reserved with the interest that had accrued upon it up to the time of his retiring. There is this further advantage in such a system: If a person dies in the public service under the present law his family receives nothing. He may have been a contributor to the superannuation fund for a quarter of a century, and yet, if he dies in the service his widow or his children receive nothing; whereas if a percentage, with the interest which had accumulated upon it, were paid out upon his ceasing to be a member of the public service, or upon his death was paid to his family, then some one in whom he has an interest would receive back that portion of his salary which has been deducted with the interest which had accumulated thereon. For these reasons, the representatives on this side of the House came to the conclusion that a law based upon the resolution of 1882 would prove more satisfactory, and would leave the Administration equally free to carry out the legitimate intention of the law of 1869. It is, I say, pretty clear that that law has been abused. I take the case of the retirement of the postmaster of Toronto. That officer at the time he was superannuated declared himself still fit for the public service. He did not wish to retire; he wished to retain his office, and he was threatened, if I remember rightly the facts, with some investigation into his conduct, which, if the charges which had been made against him could have been established, would have disentitled him to any retiring allowance whatever; and thus he was subjected to moral coercion which compelled him to comply with the wishes of the Postmaster General of that day, and to ask to be put upon the superannuation list; and another gentleman not any more competent to discharge the duties of his office was put into his place. And so the public treasury has been burdened with a superannuation allowance to a retired postmaster that ought never to have been imposed upon that fund. One hon, gentleman on that side, I think the hon. Minister of Finance, has stated that the abouts, the amount was reduced from 4 per cent. the Treasury benches than it was by their predecessors in office. Well, Sir, I do not admit that; but I contend that however forcible an argument of that sort might be addressed to those who were Ministers of the Crown at that date, it certainly can have no force when addressed to the people at large, or to those who represent the people who were not members of the House at that time. But I do not admit that to be the case. If you look at the annual increases in the charges which were imposed upon the superannuation fund each year, you will see that they were very much less under the Administration of the hon, member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) than they have been under the Administration of those who have succeeded him in office. But I do not care, Sir, to argue that question. I do not care seriously to consider an argument which says that an Administration which held office some thirteen years ago, and from which the people at that time withdrew their confidence, is to serve as a perpetual barrier against progress and improvement, when the progress and improvement are pressed upon the attention of hon, gentlemen to-day. I am ready to adopt the proverb of the Turks, and say I would rather change every day than remain always in the wrong; and when hon gentlemen tell us that an Administration thirteen years ago has superannuated year by year, during the period of its existence in office, as many as they have done, I say that is no answer whatever to the charge that the Act has been abused, and that whether abused or not experience shows that there is a more excellent way of providing for the Civil Service than the one indicated by that measure now on the Statute-book. I think, Sir, that it is not wasting the time of Parliament or impeding the public business to consider this question. I trust that the discussion here this afternoon and this evening will better prepare the House for the consideration of the defects of this measure and of the remedies which would be appropriate to produce more satisfactory results, not only to the Civil Service, but to the country at large.

Mr. McMULLEN. On page B—236 of the Auditor General's Report I see that Mr. Wallace drew last year $1,271.85. I would like to know how that is made up?

Mr. FOSTER. There were $316 of arrears due to him which were paid last year.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the regular allowance?

Mr. FOSTER. $912.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman has intimated to the House that there were ten years added to his time of service.

Mr. FOSTER. Five years.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then he is allowed under the Act nineteen-fiftieths of his salary, and this vote is for five years more, which makes his allowance twenty-four-fiftieths of his salary.

Mr. FOSTER. His full allowance is $912, which includes the $240, so as to make it nineteen-fiftieths of the whole.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that some officer has been dropped. What particular brigade major has been dispensed with, and for what reason?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The decrease is caused by the dropping of two brigade majors. One died, Colonel Lewis, and we did not consider that it was necessary to replace him, as I believe we ought to make use of all the money voted by Parliament, as far as possible, to increase the efficiency of the force, and to decrease the expense of what I consider to be an expensive staff.

Clothing and great coats.....$90,000

Mr. MULOCK. Is this clothing purchased?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is given under contract. There is no clothing purchased except under contract given under the Order in Council passed two years ago on the recommendation of the officers of the department, that a three-years' contract would be preferable to entering into one every year, because the contractors had gone to great expense for the purpose of fitting up machinery to make the clothing more perfect than we ever had it before.

Mr. MULOCK. Were the contracts given after the tenders were publicly invited?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes; in one way. The contracts were given to certain firms under the Order in Council; and I believe the hon. gentleman knows almost as much as I do about it, for I had the pleasure of being subjected to his cross-examination for a couple of months before the Public Accounts Committee, and I believe I gave him all the information his acute cross-examination could get out of me. I told the hon. gentleman then that the contract system had been limited to the extent of giving the contract for three years, and the officers of my department have assured me that under that system the clothing has been much more satisfactory than previously.

Mr. MULOCK. I do remember having endeavoured to get information from the hon. gentleman, and I found there were some abuses then in consequence of that regulation, and I wish to know now whether these abuses continue to exist. example, at the time to which I refer, there was no system of asking competition by public tender, and that I considered wrong. The hon, gentleman had a system of awarding contracts to those he wished to favour with his patronage. That was about the extent of his competition. It was not open and above board. The Minister offered as an apology to that course that he desired to continue his patronage to those who had familiarized themselves with the work required; but I contended that was not a proper way for letting contracts of these proportions. It is one thing to get good material and cut, but is also very important that we should not pay too much, and my recollection is that the prices paid for the scarlet uniforms, at all events, were very excessive. Another feature in that connection was that the contract for a portion of the clothing was let practically to a member of Parliament. It was let to the firm of Sanford & Co., an incorporated company, it is true, but practically owned by Mr. Sanford, who had been raised to the Senate, and who previously had the contract in his individual capacity. believe the Government endeavoured to prevent all information on that point coming to light, but none the less it was ascertained that the contract was let to the same old contractor, trading under the name of an incorporation. I do not think it is proper that the spirit of the Independence of Parliament Act should be violated by giving contracts to companies substantially controlled by members of Parliament. I am aware that the law permits such a thing to be done, but it is time the law should be amended, and that Parliament was shown the extent to which incorporated companies are really controlled by men occupying public positions. I can see no difference in principle between a member of Parliament contracting directly in his own name and contracting through the medium of a corporation. It may be necessary, in the affairs of life, to make exceptions in the cases of corpora-tions, otherwise it would be difficult or dangerous for members of Parliament to have any dealings at all. But a small interest on the part of a member of Parliament in a company which may have a contract with the Government is a very different thing from the case of a member of Parliament who is practically the company himself. If that be the case with regard to the Sanford Manufacturing Company of Hamilton, the objection stands as sound to-day as when I raised it three years ago. Coming now to the question which concerns the public treasury itself, and that is the question of tendering for the work, if the Government is still simply working out the old contracts that were before the House at the time I mentioned, I will make no further comment; but if new contracts have since been entered into, I have the right to complain that the old system has been maintained. I know that at concurrence there is no opportunity practically for discussion, but if the hon. Minister will be good enough to furnish a statement of the case, I will not press the matter at this stage, but will endeavour to do so on concurrence. I would like that statement to be full, frank and candid, and to set forth the dates of the contracts entered into, under which these supplies are furnished, and also what steps were taken by the department to obtain the best results at the lowest prices. I do not think it is right to simply renew a contract with the existing contractor without giving other parties an opportunity to compete. There is a feeling in the country now that the department is playing into the hands of certain favoured contractors, that there is a ring, and I am not in favour of any set of contractors being in possession of even my hon. friend the Minister of Militia; and I want to strenghen his hands in order that he may be enabled to apply business principles in carrying out the work of his depart-

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon, friend is so frank in his criticism that I could not help being absolutely frank in giving him all the information he requires from me. The hon, gentleman remembers, when the question was enquired into by the Public Accounts Committee, and I told him then, when he was taking a particular interest in the debate, as he is to-night, that, whether I was wrong or whether I was correct in my judgment, I was acting as I supposed to be right in the interest of my department. I shall lay every paper on the Table. Every contract I have given has been given on the authority of an Order in Council. I have never relied strictly on my own judgment as head of that department without obtaining the sanction of my colleagues, and I am prepared to leave the whole matter to the judgment of the hon. gentle- but Orders in Council are not going to shelter man, who, for once, if he finds I am right, may possibly say that the Minister of Militia was not wrong in giving out these contracts. My hon. friend remembers that this matter was referred to upon a motion when we were going into the Estimates, and my hon. friend may remember that the largest majority which the late Government of Sir John Macdonald ever had, was given on this very question.

Mr. MULOCK. It spoke very little for the judgment of the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not bringing up dead issues, but I am simply warning the hon. gentleman that, when the case comes up again, he may find himself in the same position as he did when the attack which was made upon the department before in relation to this matter culminated in that large vote sanctioning what had been done.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman plumes himself on the result of that vote. I happen to know something as to how that majority was obtained. I understand that quite a large number of the hon, gentlemen who support the Government in this House up to six o'clock in the evening told the hon, gentleman that, unless he mended his ways, they would vote against him.

Some hon. MEMBERS.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon, member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) say what his attitude was on that occasion?

Mr. DENISON. It is not so.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon, gentleman know what attitude every military man in this House took upon that occasion?

Mr. DENISON. What is that?

Mr. MULOCK. I thought you knew what you were talking about. Although I do not wish to detract from the credit of the majority the hon. gentleman obtained on that occasion, I understand that unusual efforts were made and very substantial pledges were given at that time. I remember that my hon, friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) had a very serious grievance then. I do not say that he went so far as to say he was going to condemn the Government unless his grievance was redressed, but his attitude was not very far from Then my hon friend from South Simcoe that. (Mr. Tyrwhitt) had a grievance and he was a kicker too, but he came into line.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Allow me to contradict the hon, gentleman.

Mr. MULOCK. Then his loyalty to his party was greater than his loyalty to the service.

Take it back. Some hon. MEMBERS.

Mr. MULOCK. I will not take it back, because the hon, gentleman told me himself that he had these grievances, and I found that the freedom of these militiamen was so curtailed that I had to look after their interests myself, because of the neglect of those people who should have been their defenders or advocates. However, because I do not desire to refer to the past so much as I am anxious to look to the future, I will remind the Minister of Militia that what I am specially anxious about is not in reference to Orders in Council. I do not know under what authority he has acted, people unless there is a proper authority for these Orders in Council. I do not say that the Minister of Militia is to blame for anything. I do not know at present under what authority these contracts were let; but these contracts are made, I presume, after public competition of some form, after a substantial invitation for tenders from the public. It may be through departmental officers making a recommendation to Council, and Council may in its wisdom approve of the recommendation and let the contract privately. I say that system is vicious, is dangerous, is objectionable, and is contrary to the sound principle of getting value for the public money which is expended. I want to know if the discussion which took place before has borne fruit in bringing about a change in that respect. I know that at that time you continued a contract for a certain part of the militia uniform with the same contractor at the former prices for a period of five years.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; for three years. Mr. MULOCK. Well, call it three. there was a large fall in the price of wool during that time, but the same prices were paid by the country, though the price of the staple had fallen. Perhaps this was necessary, but the Government had not the necessary evidence at hand to satisfy a body like this. They could not say they invited publictenders. They took the responsibility themselves, and, whenever the Government take the responsibility of departing from the sound, wholesome custom of public competition, they take all the onus of proving that they made a good bargain. than that, they invade a sound system in taking any such action. I hope, in the statement the hon. gentleman brings down, he will make it perfectly clear what steps have been taken, and will not try to hide them under Orders in Council. I have had occasion before to find fault with Orders in Council.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We ought not to wait for this return in order to get an account of the expenditure of money which has taken place. think this is the time for us to have such information in our possession, and the Minister is supposed to know all about his department and how these contracts are made, whether they are let by public competition, when they are let, and who obtained the contracts. I have a distinct recollection of the investigation which took place in the Public Accounts Committee in regard to the militia clothing, and I know we had some officers there from some of the crack regiments in Torontowho swore that the clothing handed out by the department was unfit to be worn by the men in their regiments, and that, rather than allow the men to wear it, they imported the clothing themselves from Great Britain. I think the House is entitled to know if the contractors who were then violating the contracts are still contractors, and if that contract has been renewed since that investigation took place. expenditure for militia clothing amounts to a very large sum of money, and we should be placed in possession of all the information in the possession of the Minister before this vote is passed. I also concur in the statement of the hon, member for North York (Mr. Mulock) that there is something unseemly and something which ought to be improved upon in allowing contractors to make private contracts with the Government. Now, I live in the section of country where the that I have continued the contracts, and I did Mr. MULOCK.

Sanford Manufacturing Company is located, and the information I have with regard to that company is that the Hon. W. E. Sanford and the Sanford Manufacturing Company are, to all intents and purposes, the same parties, they are members of the same family, and that the company was formed for the purpose of evading the law after he was elevated to the Senate in order that he might obtain these contracts for militia clothing. This company was organized for the purpose of evading the law, as other companies have been organized in other branches of business in connection with the public service, for the purpose of evading the law. It is well known that a large number of newspaper concerns in this country have been formed into joint stock companies since the passage of the Independence of Parliament Act, in order that the proprietors might get round the law. In years gone by I have had opportunities of showing to this House where large sums of public money have been paid to the proprietors of newspapers who had formed companies for this purpose, and to this day such infringements, as I may call them, of that Act, are still carried out by obtaining money from the Government for printing. Now, my opinion is that the Act ought to be amended, in order that these practices may be stopped; because it is all the same thing whether Mr. Sanford receives this money as W. E. Sanford, manufacturer of clothing, in Hamilton, or as the W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company, for he is the head and front and tail of the W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company, and the money goes into W. E. Sanford's pocket. I have been informed on very good authority that W. E. Sanford, of Hamilton, is a very liberal contributor to the election funds of the Conservative party whenever they require any large sums of money for carrying on elections in the Province of Ontario. There is some reason why Mr. Sanford should be a liberal contributor. He obtains liberal grants from this Government for clothing, has done so in the past, and, I suppose he is still manufacturing the militia clothing that is required by the department. I rose to ask for that information. I want to know now who has the contract for the manufacture of the militia clothing which is required by the department here, when these contracts were let, how they were let, and whether there was proper public competition offered when the contracts were let? I would like the Minister to give me that information.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can give the hon. gentleman all the information he requires.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I am glad to hear it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I generally give the hon, gentleman whatever information he asks for in so far as my department is concerned. My hon. friend for North York (Mr. Mulock) probably knows very well that I have continued the system I now follow, because after the severe criticism which he inflicted upon my department and upon myself, Parliament declared that I was right and that he was wrong, by the largest vote that had ever been given in that Parliament. I continue to follow the system which the country, through its representatives in Parliament, has declared to be a far better system than the one the hon. gentleman wanted to introduce. Now, the hon. gentleman asks me if the contracts have been continued with the same contractors. I tell the hon, gentleman so, because I would have been oblivious to the interest of the department over which I preside, if I had not taken advantage of the opportunities afforded by people who have imported from England, at a large expense, machinery for the purpose of filling contracts for the militia clothing, as some firms had done. Now, I can tell the hon. gentleman there was nothing hidden about the tender I gave out. I sent it to different firms who were prepared to take contracts for the clothing for the militia of Canada. The hon, gentleman may not have gone into these matters as closely as I have had occasion to do, from the fact that I had to know exactly how the department could best be conducted. I can tell the hon, gentleman that there are very few firms, even in England, who manufacture militia clothing, only four or five, I think, who manufacture the clothing for the Imperial army. I can further tell the hon, gentleman that continental nations come to the same English clothiers for the purpose of getting their militia clothing. Now, I thought I was doing right, in so far asmy judgment goes, by going to the men who had invested capital and imported machinery for the purpose of manufacturing the clothing that we require for Canadian army. Now, Mr. Chairman, I can tell you that when I became head of this Department, $200,000 of Canadian money was sent out of Canada every year to firms outside of this country, who did not belong to Canada, to purchase the clothing for our militia force. In that respect I may, perhaps, be in antagonism with the views of the hon, gentleman sitting on the left of the given out as we have given them out before. Speaker. I thought it would be a benefit to Can- Mr. SOMERVILLE. How was that? ada to keep that money in this country, and let Canadians get the benefit of the $200,000, or the $250,000, which we were spending annually for the militia clothing.

Mr. MULOCK. What benefit would it be to give to the Canadian contractors more than the service was worth?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I say to my hon.friend what he has investigated and what he knows to have been proved, that when the clothing was imported from England we were getting an inferior article: I say that we ought to expend our Canadian money in the interest of our Canadian people, and in doing so we were getting a more substantial article, and that instead of purchasing clothing from abroad, which only lasted for four years, we are now giving them clothing which lasts six or seven years. That is my policy so far as Canadian interests are concerned. I know very well that I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman on that point, but I am still prepared to stand by the old policy; I am still prepared to say that that policy has done more good to Canada than the policy the hon. gentleman was in favour of pursuing when he was getting up investigations to prove that Canadian goods were inferior to goods imported from the old country, and when we were sending to the old country $250,000 a year, which it was to the interest of Canada to expend among our own people.

The Minister has not at Mr. SOMERVILLE. all answered the questions I asked. He rose with a great flourish of trumpets stating that he intended to give me all the information I asked for, and now he has sat down without giving me a particle of the information I asked for I asked for information on these points: Who are the present contractors: knows it, and he need not apply to me.

When did they obtain the contract? Were opportunities offered to the manufacturers of clothing in this country to compete when that contract was let? I would like the Minister to answer those three questions.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can give the hon, gentleman the names of the contractors, if that is what he wants. What does the hon, gentleman want?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I will repeat my question for the third time. I want to know when the contracts at present running for militia clothing were let, to whom they were let, whether there was a proper opportunity given to clothing manufacturers to enable them to compete, by sending in tenders for the work required?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have answered that already.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. No.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon, gentleman will permit me to answer his question, I will give him the names of the contractors. For tunics, the Rosamond Woollen Company; for trouser cloth, the Rosamond Woollen Company; Shorey & Co. for trousers. Other contractors are O'Brien & Co.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. gentleman has yet failed to state when the contract was given, and whether a proper opportunity was given the manufacturers of clothing to compete.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The contracts were

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Upon the recommendation and reports of the officers of the department that it was better to give the contracts to firms who had been in the habit of contracting with the department, and we let out contracts, giving information to the different firms for the purpose of their contracting with us.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You did not advertise for tenders?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No: and have not done so for several years past.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You wanted to favour certain manufacturers?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not say so.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon, gentleman wanted to favour the men who had imported machinery to manufacture the cloth. He does not imagine there are any other men as enterprising as some of the firms he refers to. I understand that the Rosamond Company are not tailors at all. They do not make up clothing, but only manufacture the goods. I should like to ask the Minister if he has not a contract with the W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company, of Hamilton.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; I gave the hon. gentleman every contract.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Does the Rosamond Manufacturing Company manufacture the clothing?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not know what they manufacture.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Where is their place of

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell him, but he

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the information given by the Minister of Militia is very unsatisfactory to this Committee. It cannot be considered satisfactory, because he shields himself behind the idea that as he was supported at the investigation which took place in the Public Accounts Committee with respect to the militia clothing, because a majority in this House declared that the system which he adopted was right, it must be right and must be followed for all time to come. It is well known that majorities are not always right, that in most cases the minorities are right. I am of the opinion that the minority in this House is nearly always right, and the majority sitting behind the Minister is generally wrong. The investigation which took place before the Public Accounts Committee showed conclusively not only to the Liberal members of the Committee, but to many of the Conservative members that the clothing furnished by those companies which obtained the contracts in years gone by was not equal to the clothing that it was proved could be obtained from other manufacturers. It was shown conclusively that the prices paid to the clothing manufacturers, the W. E. Sanford Company, were in excess very largely of the prices for which clothing could be obtained from other manufacturers. I do not think that because a majority declared that the Minister was right in selecting that company as the manufacturers of the clothing that ought to create in him the opinion that he is acting rightly in continuing the system. I believe that the militia should be clothed as cheaply and as well as possible for the money expended, and I do not believe the Government should expend public money for the purpose of supporting any manufacturing establishment, even if the firm does import special machinery from the old country to manufacture the clothing. It is the duty of the Government to purchase the clothing required for the militia in the cheapest market. It is a wrong principle that has been enunciated by the Minister that because a certain cloth manufacturing firm imports machinery suitable for the manufacture of this class of goods, no other person should be at liberty to compete when tenders are asked for. According to his statement when he wants a new batch of clothing for the militia, and is ready to make a contract, he sends a letter to Messrs. Rosamond, of Almonte, or Sanford & Co., of Hamilton, who no doubt share in the plunder, for no doubt, although the contract is let to the Rosamond Company, yet Mr. Sanford, who sits as a Senator, has a share in the contract with Rosamond or some other contractor who furnishes the clothing for the militia. It is altogether tia. adopt, bar principle to that manufacturers facilities for the production of the goods should alone be selected to compete in contracts for those The only proper system for the Government to pursue in purchasing militia clothing, as for all other articles required for the public service, is to ask above board for tenders, and advertise for tenders, so that everybody may be placed on the same footing. This system seems to be ignored every year. Some years ago it was the custom of the Government to advertise for all the paper required for printing the blue-books and other parliamentary documents. During the last

Sir Adolphe Caron.

When the Government want to make a contract for paper they do not advertise for tenders in the newspapers and allow every manufacturer to stand on the same footing, but they send a letter to Mr. Buntin and some others and ask them to send in tenders. This is not the proper system to follow in transacting public business, and I contend that the Minister of Militia is not doing his duty to the people when he expends large sums amounting to $100,000 a year for militia clothing, and does not afford the manufacturers of this country outside of the particular pet ring he has established, an opportunity of competing for the privilege of manufacturing the goods required. The hon. gentleman admits that that is the principle on which he Does he not know fully as well as any has acted. other intelligent man in the House or the country, that certain rings have been established in this country amongst the manufacturers for some years past, and that if these clothing manufacturers understand that there are only three or four or half a dozen men who are to be asked to tender for this militia clothing, they will form a ring, and one will say : You can have the trousers, you can take the tunics, Snd you can have the overcoats. That is the way the matter is fixed amongst these manufacturers, and by this system the treasury of the country is robbed every year, for the reason that the manufacturers of this country are not afforded a fair and honest opportunity to compete for this supply of clothing. I would say that the information given by the Minister is not such information as ought to be given when this question is brought up in the House, and we ought to be given fuller information than we have yet received before this vote is passed.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I may tell the hon. gentleman that I have given really the information which can be obtained from the department. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the whole matter came up and was discussed in the House. have asked for tenders not only in one province or in two provinces, but over all the provinces of the Dominion where we knew that we could find contractors to do the work for the Department of Militia and Defence, and our contracts after a long discussion in this House, as to the manner in which they were carried out, were sanctioned by the vote of Parliament. I have no interest whatever in preventing any contractor in the Dominion from supplying this clothing; but I remember well under the old regime when we were appealing through the newspapers to every contractor in the Dominion to send in tenders, the department lost two or three thousand dollars in some contracts which were undertaken by men who had not the capitalor the means of supplying the clothing. Looking after the interests of the department, as it was my duty to do, I thought that it was far better to go to the firms who had the capital and who had imported from England the implements which were required to carry out the contracts, as they had seen them carthe contracts, as they had seen them carried out in Pimlico. I thought that was far better, because we were getting value from that money from the contractors with whom we had entered into contracts. I have given the hon. gentleman every name that appears in the department as being a contractor with us. I have given him two or three years another system has been adopt- the record as it appears in the department, and the hon, gentleman may make use of the brilliant eloquence which distinguishes him to speak against to tender for this clothing, and as to whether he Sanford & Co., or any other company, but I have given the hon. gentleman every name which is entered upon the books of my department as being contractors with that department. I can tell the hon. gentleman that when this system was inaugurated we had complaints, but for the last three years, from the east or from the west, from the north or from the south, or wherever this clothing is forwarded through the channels of the Militia Department to the militia forces we have had no complaints. I can further tell the hon, gentleman that it is a system which to my mind is a good system, and one which we should stand by.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. According to the statement of the Minister, Mr. Chairman, he has departed from the rule that he laid down for his own guidance, because he stated to this Committee that because the former manufacturers who had the contract had given such satisfaction, and had acquired such machinery as enabled them to manufacture goods so much superior to other people, he had continued the contract with these men. he tells us that the men who had the contract before do not hold the contract now.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I beg your pardon.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I never did.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I beg your pardon, Mr. Minister of Militia. You stated your practice was to give your contracts to the men who had formerly held the contract, because they had fulfilled the terms so well that they were entitled to consideration at your hands; and the former contractors, I want to inform you, were the Sanford Manufacturing Company. Now the information you give to this Committee is that the Sanford Manufacturing Company do not hold the contract at all, but that it is Rosamond & Co., of Almonte, who hold the contract. Therefore, you did not act up to what you believed to be the best interests of the country, when you refrained from giving the contract to Sanford & Co. and gave it to Rosamond & Co. Further, I want to call the attention of the Committee to the last statement made by the Minister of Militia, that he had solicited tenders from the manufacturers of clothing in all the provinces of the Dominion. If that is a fact, the Minister must know the names of those prominent cloth-ing manufacturers to whom he sent letters asking them to tender for this clothing. want to know, who, in the Province of Quebec, was asked to tender for this clothing? Who in the Province of Nova Scotia, who in the Province of New Brunswick, and who in the Province of Ontario, were asked to tender, because the Minister must have a list of all the parties who were asked to tender for the clothing, and I would like to know who they were? Furthermore, if the Minister were going to carry out the policy which he announced here as to giving the contract for this clothing to the men who had imported, at large expense, the machinery necessary to do this work, did he ascertain before he asked tenders from the manufacturers of these outlying provinces, whether they had the necessary machinery to do the work? Now, I want to know from the Minister the names | advantage of it.

of the firms to whom he sent circulars asking them ascertained if they had the necessary machinery to make it, or not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I gave the hon, gentleman the names in Quebec. The hon, gentleman does not seem to know the geography of the country very well.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Perhaps not as well as

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I told the hon, gentleman that Shorey & Co. and James O'Brien & Co. were asked to tender for great coats, riding breeches and trousers. They happen to be manufacturers in the Province of Quebec; and I may tell the hon. gentleman that we sent circulars to Doull & Gibson, in Nova Scotia.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Had they the necessary machinery?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman might investigate that when he becomes Minister of Militia.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is your duty to investigate that, not mine.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I want the hon. gentleman to know that it is not my practice to screen myself under any Order in Council, because every Order in Council sent from my department is made on my recommendation and on my responsibility. The hon, gentleman may be perfectly satisfied that everything I have told him, in so far as these contracts are concerned, is exactly what has taken place; and of the contractors of the different provinces who have been appealed to, some have been accepted and others have not been accepted, because they could not properly carry out the contract.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the hon. Minister be kind enough to tell us when the last contract was entered into, or when tenders were last called for?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend is now taxing me to a very great extent. I think it was last year that the renewal of these contracts was made by Order in Council. I think it was in January, 1891; but if the hon, gentleman wishes to know the exact date I shall get that information for him.

Mr. McMILLAN. Was the old list of prices continued?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman, from his practical experience, will see that the contracts were given at very low The prices were as follows: -Tunic cloth, prices. The prices were as follows:—Tunic cloth, for artillery, $6.04; for infantry, $5; and for vifles, $5.50½. Tunic serge coats, $3; trousers, $4.18; trousers, serge, $2.82½. Riding breeches for cavalry, $6.06; for artillery, $5.56; for infantry, $5.56. Great coats, for cavalry, $7.47; for artillery, $7.69; for infantry, $5.73; and for rifles, $5.73.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are these the old contract prices continued?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No. The prices vary. We took advantage of the market. The woollen market was going up or going down, and we took

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You took advantage of it tleman exactly what we had done—that we had in when it was going up. If I mistake not, these are some instances followed what had been the varying the prices under the old contract.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman should not interrogate me if he is giving the answers. I think he should have the civility at least to permit me to explain what is done so far as my department is concerned. I know the hon. gentleman cannot be expected to be civil-

As a military man. Mr. SOMERVILLE.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not as a military man, but as a gentleman. I was going to tell the hon, gentleman that in making these new contracts we invariably consider the state of the market, and in some instances the market going down we took advantage of that and had the prices reduced by 10 or 15 per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON. That was simply the information I wished to obtain, whether the contract prices are reduced; and if the hon. Minister is able to give us definite information on that point we shall be glad to receive it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As I told the hon. gentleman, we took advantage of the market. The contractors came to us and said the woollen market was up or down, whatever it might be at that particular time. The hon, gentlman laughs, but it is really exactly what did take place, and we made our contracts according to the rising or the falling of the market, and we succeeded in getting lower prices than we had been paying upon the previous

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the Minister ought to give us information as to the prices paid under the former contract, so that we can compare them and ascertain what reduction he has made.

Mr. FRASER. In the exceedingly lucid explanation given by the Minister I did not understand him—I am perhaps somewhat obtuse—to give us information as to whether the market was rising or falling at the time the last contract was made. Did he say that the prices at which the last contract was made were lower than the prices previously given? I would like to know whether he took advantage of a falling market in January last or of a rising market.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman is so very lucid in what he requires in the shape of explanation that I think what I have already explained might satisfy him. I told the hon, gentleman that when these new contracts were entered into, we took advantage of the state of the market. I have not got at this moment the state of the market at that particular time, but if the hon, gentleman wishes to avoid some trouble in ascertaining himself exactly how they stood, I might possibly succeed in getting the information for him from the papers of the period or from the contracts which were entered into. I do not wish the hon, gentleman to understand that I am at all discourteous, but he would not imagine that I could have, in the explanations to be given to the House at present, the exact state of the market at that period of time. I have been asked to explain what the system was which had been adopted by the department in so far as contracts were concerned. I have told the hon, gentleman exactly what the system An hon, gentleman asked me whether we had followed the old prices. I told the hon, gen-Sir Adolphe Caron.

prices in the market, and I can tell the hon. gentleman, moreover, that he will not find a single contract which was renewed which was not lower than the previous contract.

Mr. FRASER. The hon, gentleman I understand now says-and I am perfectly satisfied with the information he gives—that the contracts given last January were lower than the contracts given in the previous year; but I submit that it is not a very difficult matter for the hon, gentleman to give that information; and I submit further that as a Minister he ought to have that information here

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, I ought not to have it; but I am prepared to give it.

Mr. FRASER. If the hon, gentleman is prepared to give it he ought to give it. Preparation means he has the ability to give it, but he should consult his deputy who is present, and who could give that information. One thing strikes me as somewhat remarkable, and that is that the hon. gentleman should consult the manufacturers to know whether the market was rising or falling. It seems to me that he could do better than consult those men who are interested in the matter. The hon, gentleman seems to treat that as a matter of profound indifference. In fact he seems to look upon any matters of trade as beneath him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FRASER. Notwithstanding the protest of hon, gentlemen opposite, I should rather gather that from the character of the remarks he has made this evening. Another thing which has been shown this evening is that our militia organization is rather an expensive luxury, and I submit if the method of giving contracts is as described by the hon. Minister, there should be some change made. I agree with the hon. member for North Brant that no particular state of matters in the past should be a criterion for the Minister, and that because the party stood by him in a given emergency he should not rely on that for all time, and refuse to improve his system of carrying on the business of the department. If the hon, gentleman is falling back on that as an excuse, if that is his authority for going on in the old way, I submit he is standing before Parliament in a very unenviable light. does not pretend to say it is the best method, but falls back on the vote. Another thing has come out in the debate, and that is that the goods got in Canada are better than those obtained in England. I rejoice to learn that we can make better goods in Canada than they can in England: but I submit that the evidence given before the Committee was quite the contrary, and unless the hon. Minister is able to show that since that date the manufacturers with whom he is dealing have made better goods he has not proved his case. I am glad the goods are got in Canada, provided they are as good as those that can be bought in England or anywhere else; but I submit that every man in Canada should have an opportunity of seeing whether or not he can supply those goods. I can understand well that the hon. Minister, depending always on a vote being given to sustain him, no matter what he does, should make his arrangements with the least possible trouble to himself, and continue to deal with the men with whom he has dealt on previous occasions, and who have satisfied him; but that is not the way business is conducted outside the House. Outside the House it is conducted on commercial principles, and men are asked if they can supply the quantity and quality of goods required. This discussion has also shown the effective condition of our militia force, which is very satisfactory. If the militia were called out to manceuvre and fight, and do all that is necessary as effectively as the hon. Minister has done his duty here to-night, then there is no fear for the future of Canada. I am satisfied we are ready for an invasion at any time, but I am glad to know that the men are better than the department, better organized, better controlled, more ready for their work: but these men will be all the better fitted for their work if they are clothed with the best clothing that can be got at given prices, and I am sure that best can be got in Canada only through the fullest opportunity being given to our manufacturers and importers to compete on equal terms. For some time past I am beginning to think that we are spending too much on our militia. We are spending more than the return which is made. I may be mistaken, but I am satisfied now, when the hon. gentleman says that he himself is conscious of this.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. The hon, gentleman says " hear, hear" to the fact that we are spending too much. I am happy to see that his returning consciousness is giving him now the idea that perhaps he is in a wrong position; but be that as it may, there is a feeling in the country that the militia, while doing good service, are costing more than they ought, and that the amount expended is out of all proportion to that which finds its way to the men. If that is the case, the sooner we know it the better, and I am sure the good and true men who are in the militia force will, when they read the discussion here to-night, feel that they are perhaps not receiving all the advantage they should from the outlay we make from year to year. I would suggest that common sense principles should apply in that department as well as in others, and that, although it may be very pleasant for the Minister to carry on the same contracts from year to year, and watch the sliding scale as given by the manufacturers themselves, he himself, or his deputy, or somebody on his behalf, should mark the rise and fall of the market when he makes his contracts.

Mr. O'BRIEN. We have, perhaps, had enough discussion on this subject, but there is one point of view which has been overlooked by hon, gentlemen opposite, to which I will briefly refer. I do not feel at all concerned to defend the action of the Government with reference to the issuing of the contracts for the clothing of the force. The hon, gentleman who has just spoken has stated that the Minister of Militia has not acted on sound commercial principles. I think he has, if he has pursued the course I understand he has taken. think any man in business who wants a special article will go to those whom he knows, from previous experience, are capable of producing it and will produce it up to the standard he requires. That is the course which would be pursued by commercial men in almost every branch of business. there is an article which a man in business finds by capable of doing the work satisfactorily. Of course, experience only can be produced under certain if it was anything of common material or of common conditions by certain people he naturally goes to those in whose enterprise he has every confidence, and who have the best facilities for supplying his wants. We have a good deal of experience in the matter of clothing for our volunteers, and have had clothing furnished which we found most unsuited for the purposes for which it was required. In the first place, the manufacture of scarlet cloth is a specialty, and the process of manufacturing it is very expensive. In England it is only carried on by two or three firms, and in this country only one firm has succeeded in making that cloth at all satisfactorily. Naturally, therefore, that firm will have the preference in supplying us with that material.

Some hon. MEMBERS. What firm?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am not sure; but I know there is only one firm in this country which has succeeded in producing that cloth. With reference to the cut, I think the same observation will apply; as it requires great experience and skilled men to cut the clothing in such a way that it will be satisfactory to the men of the force. Speaking from my own knowledge, I believe that, irrespective of the methods employed in entering into contracts, the department have succeeded in purchasing a quality of cloth thoroughly satisfactory and well appreciated by the force; and I know that in previous years the clothing which was furnished some companies of the militia was not proper, either as regards quality, or cut, or make up, or material. I must say, however, that the clothing now issued is infinitely superior, both as regards material and cut, to that formerly obtained, and the officers and men are perfectly satisfied. I speak, of course, with a general knowledge of what took place in the Committee last year, when a great deal of evidence was given condemnatory of the last issue of clothing, and many statements made in which, as far as my knowledge of the subject went, I could not agree at all. With reference to the clothing now issued, I believe it is as good as can be desired, and the prices quoted are reasonable, considering the quality supplied. Last year I know some members of the House, including the hon. member for Wellington, examined the clothing manufactured last year. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) looked carefully into the material and the process of construction, and I think he was satisfied the country was getting good value for its money. I would add that when a special article is required, which can only be produced by special means, the manufacture will naturally fall into the hands of those who give security, through their experience and the quality of the previous work they have produced, that they are capable of carrying out the contract satisfactorily. The hon. Minister might apply for militia clothing all over the country, and get applications from many persons who would consider themselves competent, and the result would be that we would get a cheaper article but not satisfactory, and we would have over again the complaints of other years of the unsatisfactory quality of the clothing. My own opinion is strongly in favour of the course pursued by the hon. Minister, which course, I understand to be, the obtaining of tenders from those firms he knows from previous experience are cut, which required no special preparation or workmanship, then the theory of general tender would apply; but in this case I am perfectly satisfied that the course which has been pursued—assuming that a fair opportunity is given to every firm, and assuming that there is no combination amongst these firms to raise the price to the Government, which is, of course, a matter upon which we cannot have any precise information-but assuming that all these tenders are honestly asked for and honestly awarded, I believe the system adopted by the department is best calculated to give the best return for the money expended. I think experience and common sense will show us that. The hon. gentleman who spoke last said something about the great cost of the militia. I would call to his attention the fact that our militia force, constituted as it is, is, I believe, the best calculated to bring out most fully and economically the best feeling of the military spirit of the country, and I say that our force is the cheapest of any force in the world. costs us about a quarter of a dollar a head of our population. The American army, exclusive of the State militia and the navy, costs about $1 a head, and the military force of Great Britain costs about $2 per head. So, comparing ourselves with other countries that mostly resemble ours, we find that our military force is the cheapest in the world.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you say the American army costs?

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think about $1 a head of the population. That was the case some three or four years ago when I made the calculation.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The American army costs only $32,000,000, or about half a dollar a head.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The lengthy argument the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has entered into in order to prove that the Minister of Militia has been pursuing the proper course in this matter would not, I think, have been delivered if the hon, member had been here in time to listen to the statements of the Minister of Militia, because the statements of the Minister of Militia and the statements of the member for Muskoka are in direct contradiction. The member for Muskoka argues that, because certain firms have proved successful in producing good clothing for the militia, therefore the Minister of Militia should continue to give the contract to those firms. If the hon, gentleman had been here when the Minister of Militia made the statement in reference to the parties who got the contract last January he would have learned that the Minister of Militia had departed entirely from the course which he commends. Instead of awarding the contract again to those parties who, he says, had given so much satisfaction in the past, the Minister of Militia did not give that contract to them at all, so that the elaborate argument of the member for Muskoka falls entirely to the ground. The Minister of Militia has not let the contract to W. E. Sanford & Co., but he has let the contract to a man named Rosamond, out in Almonte. The hon, member for Muskoka must now see that he is doing wrong in supporting the Minister of Militia, because that gentleman has done the very opposite of what the member for Muskoka says he ought to have done. He has given the contract to a man who has not the experience to which the hon. gentleman refers, who may not have the and what tenders were invited? Mr. O'BRIEN.

machinery from the old country which is necessary in order to fill this contract properly. After receiving this information, I expect the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) will get up and say that the Minister of Militia has done wrong in giving this contract to Rosamond, and he ought to have given it to W. E. Sanford & Co. I appeal to the member for Muskoka to get up and say he was wrong, because the Minister of Militia has not done what he thought he had done. The Minister of Militia says he obtained better prices last January than he had under the previous contract. He is the head of an important department, which costs the country a very large sum of money every year. In this item he is asking for a vote of $90,000, and I think we should have all the information he can give us. I ask him now to put us in possession at least of this information. What were the prices under the former contract, and what are the prices under the contract entered into last January? I think this is information we should be in possession of, and I ask the Minister to give us that information before we vote this money.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I shall give all the information the hon, gentleman requires, but I have been Minister of Militia for the last eleven years, and the hon. gentleman cannot expect me to have all the contracts I have entered into in regard to clothing or materials for the militia force in the book which is supposed to be required from the Minister when the Estimates come up. I have nothing to hide, and I am prepared to give the hon. gentleman all the information. The whole thing was investigated time and again, and I am prepared to give him all the information, but I hope he will not insist upon this item not being passed. I will give him all the information on concurrence, and the discussion may take place just as it is taking place to-night, but I hope not at such great length.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. This is a large amount of money, $90,000, and the Minister refuses to give us the information in regard to it. When will he give it to us? He has his deputy here, and I think there need be no difficulty in his telling us what were the figures under the old contract, and what the figures are under the new contract, and then we can tell whether he has made a good bargain. He says he is going to give us the information, but he does not give it to us.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman will be surprised at the good bargain I have made.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then, if the hon Minister has made such a good bargain, I think we ought to get that information.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot give it tonight.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. When will you say when you can give it? Can you lay it on the Table tomorrow?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes; there is no trouble in getting it.

Mr. MULOCK. Then that statement will show the previous price, the separate articles, and also the prices under the present contract?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. It will also show what steps the department took to invite competitive prices,

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will give you a list of every tender.

Mr. MULOCK. Every person that was invited to tender?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Militia and military stores...... $45,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. For general service in connection with military stores, such as transport of freights, pay of labourers, rent of stores, fuel and light, &c., $18,000; military stores, equipments required for the service, $7,000; field guns, gun carriages, artillery harness, equipment, &c., $20,000.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. You are not purchasing any new guns now?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not just at present; but I think if hon, gentlemen continue to attack me as they are doing, I will have to purchase a few extra guns.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In respect to these military stores, I notice last year one item of some $7,000 was for salaries at the head office. I am aware that the practice has prevailed for a good while of charging a considerable portion of the headquarters' expenses to these stores. It appears to me rather a questionable mode of book-keeping; $7,000 for salaries in Ottawa to be under the heading of military stores is, I know, an old fashion; but it is a fashion which I think would be more honoured in the breach than in the observance. think this ought to be put along with the salaries of the department, and what is expended for stores ought to be by itself.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can give the hon. gentleman every item of that expenditure. the camps take place we require extra hands, and we keep them employed for six weeks or two months, and we could not, according to the hon. gentleman's advice, make them permanent members of the staff, because that would require more money than the efficiency of the service requires. For instance, there are men employed in the different stores only for a certain time, after which we do not need them any longer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If my hon. friend will look at page B-29 of the Auditor General's Report he will see that these identical outside votes, where $7,173 are charged for stores, appear to be for the most part regular annual charges.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Some are, no doubt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand well enough the principle of charging a few days' work which occur at each particular camp; but if he will look at that page in the Auditor General's Report he will see that, practically speaking, a vast majority of these persons are charged all the year round; they are charged for 365 days, for the most part. Now and again you will find a short charge; but the great proportion of them are yearly charges.

Sir ADQLPHE CARON. Most of them are, I admit; but the hon. gentleman will see they are day labourers, and we cannot dispense with their services.

They all ap-Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. pear to be in Ottawa.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. You have got Military District No. 1, London, $600; Toronto, $600; Kingston, $600; Montreal, $900; Quebec, $600; St. John, N.B., $800; Halifax, $900; Winnipeg, $500; Victoria, B.C., $500; Charlottetown, P.E.I., $500. That makes up the $7,100 the hon, gentleman mentions.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think not. I think that is an extra charge, so far as I understand, under the heading of militia and defence here at Ottawa, and the reference is made specially to salaries at Ottawa. The item I am criticizing is "Salaries at Ottawa, see page B-29, $7,173." If the hon, gentleman turns to that reference he will find that none of these particular items are included in the sum of $20,187, which are charged as follows: Military stores, so much; militia clothing, so much; contingencies, so much; batteries, so much, These are different items from those my hon. &c. friend has been repeating. We require details of B-29 of the Auditor General's Report. The item we are discussing now is military stores, and I understand in the Auditor General's Report of the expenditure for last year $7,173 are charged as salaries at Ottawa. Those salaries may or may not be right. I dare say they may have to be incurred. All that I would say to the hon, gentleman is that I think these things should go into the charge at headquarters at once, and not be put under the head of military stores.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am giving the hon. gentleman the information which the officers of my department have given me. It is under the head of public armouries, care of arms, district paymasters, superintendence of stores.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is another item. It is on the item for military stores for which you are asking $50,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. For general service in connection with military stores, such as transport—that was the information I had given to the hon, gentleman. The hon, gentleman will understand that in Ottawa we have the headquarters and the centre from which the stores are distributed all over the Dominion. At our Ottawa building we have to employ a large number of packers and storekeepers; but if hon. gentlemen visited the building when the clothing was being distributed, and when the camps are assembled, they would find that not only was the staff employed, but it was necessary to hire extra men. It is a large staff I admit, but not too large for the requirements of the service. Previous to Confederation and even after Confederation the provinces had their respective militia forces, while now the stores have to be distributed from headquarters all over the Dominion, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I do not see any way of reducing this staff. The number may be reduced by a few at one time; but at another time the necessities of the service will compel a corresponding increase.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Still, $7,000 looks a very heavy percentage for the distribution of $40,000.

Mr. HYMAN. I had occasion to enquire earlier in the session in regard to some saddlery which the Minister said had been ordered and been stored in the department for the troop of No. 1 Regiment. I learn from the regiment that it has not received it. As they are going into camp soon, and as they are using saddles belonging to the time of the Crimean war, I should like to know whether an issue had been made?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon, gentleman exactly what I told him when he put the question before. The saddlery in stores are not such as I should like to see. We have, however, been gradually endeavouring to improve the stores in this respect, as far as the parliamentary vote will permit, and if we obtain a little more money we will get more saddles to serve out to the different troops all over the Dominion. I have been giving out new saddlery as far as possible to different troops, irrespective of provinces, and I hope before long we will be able to accommodate the troop to which the hon, gentleman refers. We have not got them in store, and it will not be until we get a new supply that we will be able to comply with the hon, gentleman's wishes.

Mr. HYMAN. The saddlery may be in store, but we cannot use it if it is in store. I asked this question early in the session, and I was told by the Minister that saddles were in store.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. HYMAN. I am almost certain I was told that the saddles were in store. Surely no saddles are being used of an earlier time than the Crimean war. I desire to bring this matter again to the notice of the Minister.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Who has the contract for making the saddles? How is the contract let, who holds the contract, when was the contract let; and in fact. I want to know all about it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have acted on the hon, gentleman's advice in so far as saddlery was concerned, because there was no necessity for any special appliances to manufacture the saddlery which was required for the force, and contracts were made after public competition.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Were tenders advertised for?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Who hold the contracts?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Borbridge, of Ottawa, and, I believe, a firm in Hamilton. In any case, I can give the hon. gentleman the names.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. When was the contract let?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Or for how long?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. For the time they will take to manufacture the saddles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We want to know what the hon, gentleman has been doing in regard to this item. He does not, I suppose, insert an advertisement for saddles for every single troop in the Dominion, but he issues an advertisement for a quantity for a term of one year—or is it for a term of years?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If we have a vote of Parliament for a certain amount we call for the quantity of saddles we can afford to call for, and we call for it upon tender.

Mr. HYMAN.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Will the Minister give some information as to the quality of the saddles. There is a great difference in saddles, some being very cheap and some being very expensive. Are the saddles manufactured of genuine pig-skin or of sheep-skin, because there is a great difference in saddles?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have no doubt the hon, gentleman knows all about saddles.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I know some things about them, and I would like to know the material from which these are made.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will produce one here.

Mr. SOMMERVILLE. Better let the item stand until you produce it.

Mr. HYMAN. I would like to have a little more definite information with regard to these saddles. I would like to know if I am mistaken in the belief that the hon, gentleman told me that he had new saddles.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I never said we had them in the stores.

Mr. HYMAN. Then they are under contract.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Armouries, care of arms, etc......$60,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt in the cities I suppose the armouries are fairly well attended to, and I presume the arms are all kept in the armouries; but what are the reports to the hon, gentleman about the arms which are in the hands of the country corps? Does he find that a considerable number of these arms are allowed to remain in the hands of the men, and are not in a good condition of repair?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have not the same facilities in the country districts as in the cities to keep the arms in armouries, which are under the supervision of a caretaker. If there be no armoury or drill shed, or military store, in a country district, it generally happens that a sum of money is given to a man to look after the arms. If the arms are out of repair they are sent to the armourers in the military district, whom we keep under pay, and these arms are repaired and sent back.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon, gentleman's officers report to him as to the condition of the arms in the hands of the rural corps generally? Are they well taken care of?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As far as our reports are concerned, and under the difficulties I have explained, the arms belonging to country corps are not in just as good a condition as they might be. As a rule, good value is obtained for the money expended in keeping the arms.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no regiment armed with either Martini or repeating rifles?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; except the permanent schools. We have given them Martini's, and we have also given Martini's for use at rifle practice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Although the question is not absolutely germane to this, and I meant to ask it under the head of ammunition; Supposing by any evil accident my hon. friend should be called upon to defend this country against a foe, could be tell me, as a matter of information, what the extent of our small-arm fixed ammunition might be? How many rounds do we possess in Canada to-day?

Mr. FOSTER. This information should not go out of the House.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon, gentleman will understand that we have been limiting the manufacture of ammunition just to the amount required for the purposes for which it is needed at present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to know just about how much.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think we always have between a million and a million and a-half rounds as reserve.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So that if you had unfortunately to engage in war, after about two hours' active engagement, your commander-inchief would have to report that he was short of ammunition.

Mr. FOSTER. We would have killed all the enemy.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. During the troubles in the North-West we manufactured night and day, and during a fortnight we had more than was required during the whole trouble.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That might be, as our opponents were about three or four hundred in number.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Has the quality of the armunition been improved? As I understand, during the North-West Rebellion, a great deal of the ammunition sent up there was not very efficient. I would like to know if they have improved in the manufacture of this ammunition. I have heard that a great many members of the volunteer force throughout the country complain that the ammunition furnished to them is not of that superior quality which I have heard the hon. Minister describe in this House.

Mr. FRASER. I think the hon. Minister ought not to be called upon to give an answer to a question like that.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Why not?

Mr. FRASER. For this reason: that we shall expose our weakness to surrounding nations. The matter of the quantity and the strength of our ammunition should not be a matter of discussion in this House.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the information on this subject is very valuable. If the volunteers are called upon to perform active service it is important that their ammunition should be reliable, so that if they shoot to kill they will be sure to kill. I would like to know if this factory at Quebec produces reliable ammunition now?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have a great deal of pleasure, as one connected with the militia of Canada, in stating that the riflemen have found a great deal of improvement in the quality of the ammunition manufactured at Quebec during the last two or three years. It has really improved wonderfully, and at the last two or three meetings no fault whatever has been found with it—nothing but unqualified praise; and I am sure that our riflemen flat, and the consequence is that our officers and soldiers at Quebec cannot use that range. Whenever now they want to practise they have to cross to Lévis, at considerable expense and great loss of time. Every time I speak of the matter I am answered that it is a question of property. In vain do I assert that it is not a question of property. I know that four or five years ago Mr.

would not require men of the size of my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) to be marks for them to shoot at. In proof of the high quality of this ammunition, I can not only say that our riflemen in Canada are attaining great efficiency in shooting, but I can point to the fact, and a proud fact it is, that one of our Canadian riflemen—I think from the city of Quebec, though not belonging to the corps of my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), but from his next neighbour, the 8th Battalion—Capt. Davidson, came near winning the Queen's Prize at Bisley the other day, and would have won it had he not made two misses in the last stage. As it was, he was fourth on the list, and only five points behind the winner out of several hundreds.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Did he use Canadian ammunition?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; he did not use it there; but he practised with Canadian ammunition before he went there. The rifle he used there was the Martini.

Mr. AMYOT. I am very happy to be able to corroborate what the hon, gentleman who has just spoken says about the quality of the cartridges now manufactured at Quebec. But it is a well known fact that the rifles now in the hands of the volunteers are not the kind that should be used, and the more quickly they are changed the better His Excellency the Governor Genfor the force. eral himself stated at our last meeting of the Rifle Association his earnest desire that the rifles should be changed, and that we should have modern rifles. But I take this opportunity to draw the attention, not only of the Minister, but especially his colleagues, to the fact that we at Quebec are now enduring a great wrong to the militia force, not only the 9th Battalion, but the 8th Battalion and the 87th. We have at Beauport a rifle range which has been there for thirty years; it is one of the finest in the Dominion; but I beg to call the attention of the colleagues of the hon. Minister of Militia to the subject, because he has not listened to my representations or those of the whole force at Quebec. There has never been an accident at the Beauport range; but about three months ago, if I mistake not, a gentleman who had laid a fishery on the next grounds wrote a letter to the department, stating that he had been wounded by a shot fired by one of the soldiers practising on the range. The Minister ordered an investigation to be made at Quebec, and the report was made that the man in question had not been wounded in that way, but had wounded himself in laying down his fishery. His letter asking for damages was not sworn to by affidavit or solemn declaration, and was not accompanied by a doctor's certificate, and his statement was contradicted by many officers and soldiers of the force. But the hon. Minister has thought fit to issue an order immediately to prevent any more firing at the Beauport flat, and the consequence is that our officers and soldiers at Quebec cannot use that range. ever now they want to practise they have to cross to Lévis, at considerable expense and great loss of time. Every time I speak of the matter I am answered that it is a question of property. In vain do I assert that it is not a question of property. I know that four or five years ago Mr.

a swamp which was his property. Two years ago it was given up, and Mr. Sewell has died since, and there is now no question of property. The stopping of rifle shooting there is a great inconvenience to our militia. Our young men want to practise, but they have not the means nor the time to go to Levis. I hope the hon. Minister will see that this order is reversed. For thirty years this range, which is perhaps the best in the Dominion, has been used constantly, and there has never been an accident there, and nobody claims the property. A railway passes through it, but the proprietor of the railway has given all the necessary consent; in fact, I think the railway was only allowed to pass there on condition that it should not interfere with the shooting. I have no personal interest in this matter, except that I like to go there occasionally to practise; but I speak in the interest of the force, and of those soldiers who like to join in the general competition in the Dominion and to go to Wimbledon occasionally. I hope the Minister will see that a stop is put to that sort of thing.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There can be no question about my being as anxious as the hon. gentleman that he should have a field close to Quebec, where he can practise rifle shooting; but, as the Minister, I got a report stating that a man had been shot, and I thought it was only ordinary prudence to tell the militiamen there not to shoot until I could ascertain exactly whether they were going to kill those people or not. I may tell the hon, gentleman that I submitted all the papers to The soldiers stated the Department of Justice. that this man wounded himself in putting down his fishery in that portion of the flats to which the hon, gentleman refers; but I had a duty to perform to the public, and the hon. gentleman knows very well that we have a range at Lévis, and there is a ferry which crosses every five or ten minutes, which costs only 5 cents. It was my duty to see, when these reports came to me, that the whole thing should be investigated.

Mr. AMYOT. That is the same answer I have been receiving since the last three months. How long am I still to be receiving it? A man wrote to the department three months ago that he was wounded and claimed damages. The officers of the department at Quebec reported there was no truth in what he said, the doctor who attended the man said his story was false, the volunteers on the beach said it was false; and yet the hon. Minister has had these flats closed to the force ever since, although an investigation was made three months ago and the man's claim proved to have been unfounded. Is that investigation going to stop the use of the flats for another three months, or three years, or three centuries?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It will not hurt you after three centuries.

Mr. AMYOT. It hurts me now, because I like the militia; and when the officers and soldiers complained I told them that I expected I would obtain redress on laying the matter before the Minister in a friendly manner. I am forced to-night, however, to bring it before Parliament and to the attention of the hon. Minister's colleagues. The hon gentleman may continue in his stubbornness, but he will have to take the whole responsibility. Let him look to the report of his own officers, Colonels Mr. AMYOT.

Forrest and Duchesnay, and very good officers they are, and he will see that he is not justified in refusing to accede to the request of the militia. He says that we can use the ferry and cross to Lévis, which only costs 5 cents. But does he not know that the ranges are at St. Joseph de Lévis, and that the volunteers have to drive in order to get there; whereas the Beauport flats are quite close to the city of Quebec, and much more convenient than the Does the hon. Minister call that range at Lévis. encouraging the militia? He must know that mere drill does not make a good soldier, but that the great object is to have men who can shoot straight. That is what our esteemed general now insists upon, much more than proficiency in drill, and the hon. gentleman, by his course, is injuring the militia; and now that I have laid the facts before the House I throw on him the full responsibility. done my duty.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Great difficulties have been experienced at the rifle range in Hamilton, and the officers of the 13th Battalion have been taken before the police magistrate for allowing shooting at that range. The range is situated on a flat immediately under the mountain, but a farmer who has a market garden on the mountain, about a hundred and fifty or a hundred and seventy feet above the ranges, complained that the volunteers, in shooting at a mark a hundred and seventy feet below his garden, sent their bullets over the mountain. I would like to know if that matter has been brought to the attention of the Minister. The 13th Battalion is one of the best battalions of Ontario, and ought to have every opportunity for rifle practice. The hon. gentleman no doubt looks as well after the people of Ontario as in Quebec, and that is the reason I ask what is the quality of the ammunition furnished by his department, because it is an extraordinary stretch of imagination to believe that a man in the militia force, armed with a good rifle and cartridges, would shoot at a target under the mountain and send his balls over the mountain, to the great danger of those working in the fields. Now, that was the reason I asked about the ammunition, and I will ask the Minister whether he knows anything about the difficulty in Hamilton, and whether it has been arranged?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not think we have any report from Hamilton on that subject. What the hon, gentleman says is contrary to all the reports I have ever had as to shooting in Hamilton. If anyone who was shooting at the range got over the mountain it must have been very poor shooting indeed. One of his political friends, Lieut. Colonel Gibson, who is a personal friend of mine, and occasionally writes me about militia matters, has never complained of this, and I think that possibly, if there had been any reason for complaint, he would have told me so.

Mr. WATSON. The farmers should complain.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You allow them great latitude there.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Great altitude, you mean. Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend's battalion shoot better in Quebec than the force there, and we have received no complaints about the range in Hamilton.

he will have to take the whole responsibility. Let Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I very rarely interfere him look to the report of his own officers, Colonels in military debates, not being a military authority; but I want to call the Minister's attention publicly, as I have already done privately, to the matter of the rifle range in Charlottetown. There was an immense amount of correspondence on this sub-Some time ago that range was owned by an English gentleman, who did not look after it very well, and he allowed the Militia Department to have it at a very small rental. About two years ago that property came into the hands of a private owner, who demanded an increased rent, which the hon, gentleman did not see his way to give. I spoke to him privately on the subject, and I understood that he was willing to give the increased rent, so that the volunteers would have some place to practise in, because, if they have not that place they have no other place in or near Charlottetown in which to practise. I think the hon, gentleman decided not to rent this range for more than one year. Upon that I wrote to the authorities in Charlottetown and have had no reply; but it appears that the owner will not rent the range for one year, but that he requires to lease it for four or five years. I press upon the hon. gentleman here in the House, as I have already privately, that he should take the range for five or six years. If the owner declines to accept that proposition the volunteers will be without any place to practise in. I do not I think think the demand was an exorbitant one. it is only $50 a year more than was paid before.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon, friend is completely wrong. The hon, gentleman will remember that I stated to him what my proposition was. There is no necessity to bring this before the House. I went to the hon, gentleman, because I thought he took an interest in the volunteer force in his province, but there was no necessity for me to go out of my way to go to him. I said the offer the proprietor was making was $150 per annum, and I was prepared to enter into a contract with him for ten years at his own price. I have the hon. gentleman's own letter, which may reiresh his memory, in which he tells me that this gentleman will not accept the proposal, but that he is prepared to enter into a contract at $150 per annum, renewable, if the department and he consent to a renewal. the hon. gentleman, acting upon his advice-and I see now that I may have been wrong in accepting his advice—we cannot possibly prevent the volunteers from practising rifle shooting, and I will take the range for one year, upon the very conditions submitted to me by the hon. gentlemen's friend.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am glad to hear that. I did not understand it in that way.

Sir ALOLPHE CARON. Three or four days ago I asked the hon. gentleman to write to this man and ask if he would accept this contract for one year, because the rifle shooting was going on and we could not put it off; and because I have done exactly what the hon. gentleman told me to do he brings up the matter before Parliament, and says I was risking the possibility of the force in his province being prevented from practising. I accepted every condition submitted to me by the hon. gentleman's client or friend.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He is neither.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My hon. friend asked me to look into the matter and I did so, and I did absolutely what the hon. gentleman asked me to do, information I have got.

and because I did that the hon. gentleman questions my action.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am exceedingly glad I brought this matter up, because, though it may have been my own fault, I now understand for the first time that the hon, gentleman is willing to accept the offer the proprietor made of $150 a year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Apart from the hon. gentleman altogether, I sent a reply from the department to the person who made the offer to us.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I understand now that the hon. gentleman is willing to accept the offer of $150, renewable from year to year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If those are facts, I shall be glad to communicate them.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I asked the hon. gentleman this very day if he had received an answer from this man, and the hon. gentleman told me he had not, and this was upon the very basis I have explained to-night.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon, gentleman asked me if I received an answer to the letter I had written, and I told him I had not. The letter I wrote was not in exactly the same terms as those he has expressed now. I am very glad to hear what he now states. It must have been my obtuseness that I did not understand that before.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That there may be no mistake now, I understand that the hon. gentleman is willing to make a contract for a year at $150, renewable from year to year?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If it is thought desirable to renew.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask if any contract has been entered into for the erection of a drill shed and armoury in Toronto? I understand that work has been commenced on the ground; but I received an enquiry the other day as to whether a contract has been entered into for the erection of the building.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. So far as my department is concerned, I took action in regard to the Toronto drill shed, and the money was voted, and it has been turned over to the Public Works Department, but I have been closely following the matter up. Several deputations have seen me, and the hon. gentleman has occasionally spoken to me about it; and, recognizing as I do the importance of having a drill shed built in Toronto as soon as possible, I communicated with the Department of Public Works, and I think my hon. friends from Toronto will bear me out in the statement that I tried to hurry up the notice of tenders as much as possible. The hon. gentleman knows that the money is voted, and we will be prepared to go on as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon, gentleman has not answered my question. I wish to know whether there was a contract for the erection of the building?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have given all the information I have got.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, will you tell me again whether the contract has been given out for the erection of the building?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have told the hon. gentleman that is out of my control altogether.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon, gentleman know whether a contract has been entered into?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not believe there is a contract, but I will not be sure of that.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there no person to take charge of the Public Works Department. We are entitled to have a complete Government to answer all questions. I understand the Government have been representing to the city of Toronto that a contract had been entered into for this drill shed, and I have received a communication saying that there is very grave doubts on that point; in fact, specifications and plans have not yet been prepared.

Mr. DENISON. If the hon, gentleman will allow me, perhaps I can satisfy him. I spoke to the Minister of Public Works a few days ago to know if the contract had been entered into. The reason of the delay was this: It is proposed to strengthen the walls of the shed, and also to lower the roof, and it took a little time to make these alterations. These have all been done, and I have no doubt the advertisements have been given out.

Mr. MULOCK. I want to know if the Minister of Militia can confirm the information which the member for West Toronto has given. Of course, it is accurate, so far as he believes, but he is not in the responsible position of a Minister.

Mr. FOSTER. The Minister of Public Works is not here, as my hon. friend knows, and this is an item which pertains to the Public Works entirely. The Minister of Militia has nothing whatever to do with it. It is a vote given to the Minister of Public Works for the erection of a drill shed in Toronto. So far as an answer to the question is concerned, I have made a note of it, and will see that an answer is given as soon as possible.

Mr. COCKBURN. Perhaps I may be allowed to state, having taken a good deal of interest in this subject, that I have seen the Minister of Public Works again and again with reference to this matter, and I know that months ago it ceased to be in the hands of the Minister of Militia, who did all that he could in the short time after the city had selected the site. I may say that only two days ago I had a conversation with the Minister of Public Works with reference to the erection of a drill shed, and I stated to him that the excavation for the drill shed was being rapidly proceeded with, and asked him if we could rely on the work being put out as soon as possible, so that the artizans in Toronto might be employed during the winter months to get it under cover; and he assured me that, owing to these few changes that the member for West Toronto has mentioned, a delay had taken place, but he expected that this week the contract would be advertised. I have no doubt that such will be the case, and that the drill shed will be rapidly proceeded with. I think the total cost will be about $150,000. The city itself has given, I think, $120,000.

Mr. DENISON. Nearly $140,000

Mr. COCKBURN. The claims which have better field. Last spring the officers of the departarisen with reference to it will be fully $140,000. ment who were looking after Cartier Square told Sir Adolphe Caron.

The city will pay its gift in hard money. of Toronto generally provides very well for any matter of that kind. The money was provided in The money was provided in the ordinary course, by being submitted to the ratepayers for their approval in the form of a by-law. These drill sheds are being erected on property that has been transferred to the Government. The citizens of Toronto wished to have a central site, and the Minister of Militia said to them, if they would provide a site that would meet the requirements, and if at the same time it was a site that he, in his military capacity, could approve of, he would be delighted to accept it. There was considerable delay in getting that site; but as soon as it was obtained the Minister of Militia lost no time in fulfilling his part of the bargain, and as soon as he had approved of that site the matter was handed over to the Department of Public Works.

Mr. MULOCK. My correspondent calls my attention to this statement of the Minister of Public Works. He says:

"It is within your recollection that in the House-

Mr. FOSTER. I submit that this is irregular. The hon, gentleman has asked a question and it has been answered. I think this discussion ought to drop until we get to that item.

Mr. MULOCK. Why is it irregular?

Mr. FOSTER. Because it refers to the building of a drill shed which is under the Public Works Department entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The item the hon. gentleman is speaking of is 105, and we are on 99.

Mr. MULOCK. I only wanted to know whether the excavation is being done by contract, or how?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes; so far as I know.

Mr. MILOCK But you do not know anything

Mr. MULOCK. But you do not know anything about it.

Mr. COCKBURN. The excavation is being done by Davis & Co., under contract; they made the lowest tender. It is being done by a firm outside of Toronto, for only 25 cents a cubic yard.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. During this session quite a number of persons have complained to me with regard to the regulations that have been made recently concerning Cartier Square. Some years ago we know the young people of the city were at liberty to use it for all sorts of games, such as cricket, base ball and lacrosse—in fact, it was a playground for a large proportion of the youth of the Lately I have been informed—I suppose corcity. rectly—that it is now devoted to a pet club, under the patronage of the Minister, called the Ottawa Riding Club, and that the public are excluded from that property, that the boys and girls of the city are not allowed to go upon it and pursue their usual youthful games. Now, I do not think this ought to be reserved especially for a few of the élite of Ottawa to use as a riding park. I think the Minister should allow the use of the property by the youth of the city, as formerly, and not keep it for this special purpose.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not kept for any special purpose, except with a view to obtain for the young men, whose champion the hon. gentleman seems to be at this particular moment, a better field. Last spring the officers of the department who were looking after Cartier Square told me the square would have to be ploughed up, and it would take a couple of years before the young men could again use it. I told our officers that, from some information I obtained, if they merely seeded it over and kept it until the end of September the grass would have grown sufficiently strong to permit the games to be resumed. Several gentlemen have come to me on behalf of the various clubs, and have thanked me for what I had done, and said they were not aware that I took so much interest in having such good games in the field. have not only taken this action, but the presidents of the various clubs are aware of it, and have declared I was perfectly right in the policy For the purpose of the cavalry I was following. in Ottawa we built a track at small cost, so as to permit the cavalry evolutions, without the cavalry being obliged to go into riding school. Several gentlemen interested in horseback exercise applied to me for the use of the track, saying it would not only do no injury, but would keep the track in good order. I permitted them to use it, the only obligation being to withdraw when the department considered it necessary. That is the history of the Cartier Square matter. The hon. gentleman will find that the policy pursued by the department has been one in accord with the interests of the people, and after the department had spent $3,000 or $4,000 in improving the field we would, by permitting the various clubs to use it this spring, have simply thrown the money away. am at the same time ready to offer every possible facility to the young men and various clubs who join in athletic sports, and I was doing what I thought proper to make this square as perfect as possible hereafter, in order that it might be of more use to them.

Drill instruction...... $32,300

Mr. MULOCK. The statute in question provides that the Governor in Council may fix by Order in Council a rate of remuneration for drill I should like to know, whether, under instructors. any Order, the amount of remuneration paid must go to the instructors, or may it be farmed out by the instructors?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It strikes me that the practice is that which has been followed for many years. The amount required is set out by the Estimates every year. The drill instruction allows payment to officers commanding corps of active militia—under Militia Regulations 390 and 395 passed during 1887—for 18 field batteries, $200 each; 600 batteries of garrisonartillery, troops of cavalry, troops of engineers, infantry and rifles, $40 each, or a total of $26,000; allowances for officers commanding rural battalions to provide battalion drill instruction, 416 companies, at $25 ^e each, or $10,400.

Mr. MULOCK. You have not touched the question. I want to know whether the Government or the department allow those to whom money for drill instruction is paid to make any cheaper bargain than the regulation provides.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am not in a position to answer the question. I do not know whether it is farmed out or not. Under the regulations, we pay the commanding officers of a company so much. If the hon, gentleman who has taken an interest in militia officers that they will go and farm out the work for which the country pays them, then it is for the hon, gentleman to decide whether he is right or wrong. I know nothing about it; I never heard it mentioned before; I do not believe it pos-The money is voted by Parliament for a certain purpose; it is given to the commanding officers of the various companies, battalions, batteries and troops of cavalry, and I have never heard of any such thing. If the hon, gentleman believes that, I have never heard of it.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not say whether I believed it or did not believe it. I asked the hon, gentleman whether such a practice would be sanctioned by the department if it were brought to his knowledge.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It certainly would not. Mr. MULOCK. It would be considered a breach of trust.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It certainly would.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon, gentleman would examine the pigeon-holes in his office he would find a memorial to that effect.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman seems to know more about the pigeon-holes of my department than I do myself.

I have a copy of a petition that is House. The petition states Mr. MULOCK. was forwarded to this House. that it was first submitted to the hon. gentleman, and he neglected to attend to it, and at last it had to be submitted to Parliament. That is my information.

Mr. DENISON. I think I might throw a little light on this. The drill instruction money is generally paid to officers commanding corps, and as a rule the officers commanding are the instructors, and generally do take the whole of the drill instruction money. But if they choose to employ any one they have a right to do it, and they can please themselves about it.

Drill pay and incidental expenses con-nected with the drill and training of the Militia.....$250,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. pass this vote of a quarter of a million dollars, I think in all conscience a little explanation ought to be given to the House as in what particulars they propose to use it, and especially at what times they intend to call the militia out for drill instruction. Are they going to call them out this autumn?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have given the details of the distribution of the money which Parliament is called upon to vote. From the peculiar circumstance of this late session, and not wishing to anticipate the action of Parliament, so far as the voting of the money was concerned, we had to postpone our camps; it is the intention of the Government to have camps, but I can tell the hon. gentleman, as possibly he may know from his own section of the country, that it is a question that has disturbing elements amongst the volunteers. Some find that it is too late, and others consider that it is not. The department has tried to ascertain, in the different military centres, when it would be most convenient and least objectionable to call out the volunteers to drill. As the hon. gentleman knows, the camps are generally much earlier in the year than now. militia matters believes so little in the honour of the I had no authority to anticipate the action of Parliament on this vote, and I thought until that was done we would have to do the best we could in arranging the camps.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman mean to call out the battalions in the rural districts of Ontario and Quebec this autumn?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is our intention.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of practice and fact, will not that be extremely inconvenient, in view of the circumstance that a great many of these rural battalions will be very busy at their harvest work, and it will be a very inconvenient thing to call them out after the harvest is over? I rather think that in the Maritime Provinces the people do prefer the autumn season, but it is not the case with the rural battalions in my own province, and, I think, in the Province of Quebec also. If that be so, would it not be wiser to throw over the encampment, in these provinces, at any rate, until next summer?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would feel very reluctant not to hold camps, because under the system of drilling the rural corps only once every two years they might lose their chance of being drilled; and I have tried to consult the convenience of the commanding officers, who know very well how their men feel. I am very anxious to have the camps held as usual, and although I feel that in some portions of the Dominion it may be an inconvenience, yet in other portions of the Dominion it will not be so. The Major General and myself have received letters from several of the commanding officers of battalions who will go to Niagara camp, stating that the last week in September or the first week in October would be quite convenient. I know that the fact of the harvest coming on may render the matter inconvenient in some sections of the country; but I have tried to ascertain how that difficulty can be overcome, and I believe that we can have our camps. They may not be as numerously attended as usual, but I think it is very important not to drop the practice of drilling the men.

The hon, gentleman says it is the rule of the department to drill the rural battalions once every two years. I would like to ask him why the 95th Battalion in Manitoba has never been in camp at all. They were organized at the time of the North-West Rebellion, and have been in existence for six years. They have tried to keep up their organization, and I know that they have petitioned year after year to go into camp. I would like to ask the hon. Minister why this corps, which has been in existence six years, has not yet been in camp?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman knows that we have no permanent camps in his province, and that the militia drill at headquarters, just like the city corps.

Mr. WATSON. They have not been drilled at all.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They have a right to do so. He knows that we cannot get up a camp for one battalion.

Mr. WATSON. I know that they have asked to go into camp, and have not been furnished with the necessary means. I have called the attention promises have been made, but no action has been taken; and unless the Minister takes an interest in these companies, and allows them to go into camp, he will lose some of the best volunteers he has in the force. It is unfair not to allow the volunteers of Manitoba to go into camp once in six years, when those of the other provinces go into camp once in two years.

Sir Adolphe Caron.

Mr. HYMAN. I would like to ask on what principle the department decides where these camps shall be held? I would like to know whether the deputy adjutants-general are asked to report to the department as to their location, and whether the department acts on these reports?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We believe it is an advantage to have the camps in different localities. There are certain advantages, from a military point of view, of having a camp in a particular locality. It trains the people, to the extent to which a camp of twelve days can do so, in military art and science; and besides, these advantages should be distributed all over the country as far as possible. We get our adjutants general in the different localities to advise us on the subject. The department acts on its own discretion, always considering, however, the advice which is given to it, because the different places are recommended in different ways and for different reasons. There may be, for instance, advantage attached to a certain place, but it may be more expensive for the department to send a camp to that locality.

Mr. HYMAN. The explanation of the hon. Minister is very lucid, certainly; but I understand him to say that the department asks the deputy adjutant-general to report, and yet does not always act on that report. I would like, then, to know, in case the deputy adjutant-general reports against a camp being held at a particular place, whether the Minister would act contrary to that report. He says there are other reasons. I know there are other reasons; but I question whether any should be considered, apart from the interest of the militia Now, I understand that it is proposed to hold camps in a short time at different places, and that the department has reports from the deputy adjutants-general with regard to them. Before the item passes I would like the Minister to bring down the report of the deputy adjutant-general with regard to military district No. 1. I think it only right that this House should know how the department are acting with reference to that report. If it is found that the report is favourable to a particular locality for the camp there can be no difference; but if the report is found to be against a certain locality it does not seem to me that the department should decide directly contrary to the report. I think the Minister should promise to bring the report down before this item passes, as I would like to see it.

Mr. McGREGOR. The Minister has said that he moves the camp from place to place. We know that London has had it several times, Stratford two or three times, and that other towns and cities have bid for it. The town which I have the honour to represent, Windsor, Ontario, has offered to the department certain terms for the camp this year. We offered the gounds, the light, the water, and other advantages; it is a good place; and the Minister decided, on being called upon, that he would of the Minister to this matter year after year, and let us know before a regular decision was made, and get any further offers which we might make. But I hear that the camp this year is going to St. Thomas. One of the reasons for taking the camp from place to place is that the young men like to have a change. In coming to Essex they will have the advantage of seeing one of the finest sections of the country; we have three trunk lines of railways, which could bring them there; we have the finest river in America; the place is healthful; we could show them as much as any place in Canada, and they would have the advantage of our American neighbours coming overin very large numbers to see them, which would have the effect of making our young men put on their most soldierlike appear-We hope that the Minister will next year allow us to bid for the camp, and give it to those who bid the most.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I wish to tell my hon. friend from London that these reports are sent into the department for the purpose of giving usinformation, but, after they come in, the department have to exercise their discretion; and the hon. gentleman will understand that until the report is acted upon, it is confidential, and if it is confidential it cannot be brought down.

Mr. HYMAN. It is rather late to object after I prefer to object before. It is the act happens. true the report may be confidential until the decision is made, but certainly the information should be given to the House, Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; it is never given. Sir RICHARD CARTWIGHT. The hon. gentleman has got three-quarters of a million out of us tonight, and has discomfited all his foes, and has put two of his most important colleagues to sleep, and I think we ought now to adjourn.

Mr. FOSTER. We have been the whole day on three or four items.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; you have not been the whole day on three or four items. There are one or two of these items which I think ought to be reserved, with the understanding that we ought to have a particular discussion over them. This particular vote of $250,000 for drill pay and contingencies brings up a question which ought, I think, to have some attention at the hands of this House, and that is, whether we are really getting any respectable value for our money under this whole system of camps for ten or twelve days. have grave doubts whether the public money is being at all usefully expended in the way in which our camps are conducted, and I think before the Estimates are finally disposed of some serious consideration should be given that question. To a very great extent, the time put in at those camps is almost absolutely thrown away, and it would be a great deal better-and I am giving, not only my individual opinion, but that of a good many officers of experience—that a far smaller number of men should be drilled, and much more efficiently drilled than they are. In many cases you do not get many of the same men twice over, even for their bi-annual drill, and it is impossible any proper discipline or instruction can be acquired under our present system.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have been asked by captains of the several rural companies of Prince headquarters, instead of compelling them to go into camp. That could be done with great efficiency to the service.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We try as often as possible, from the departmental standpoint, to comply with the views of the officers, and in the case which the hon, gentleman has brought under my notice of course we will do so.

Military properties—care and maintenance, and construction, &c $ 97,000

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I recognize the courtesy of the hon. Minister in answering questions; but it seems to me that, in passing militia estimates, his explanations are fuller than is absolutely necessary at times. I would like to know whether he intends making any repairs to the Brantford drill shed, as it is in a dilapidated condition, the armoury not being fit to preserve the arms and the building having been partially destroyed by a storm, and made partly unfit for

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman knows that, owing to the protracted discussions that have taken place this session, we have been kept here much longer than possibly we might have been, and the Estimates have not been voted. I am trying to get through them to-night, and the hon. gentleman seems to object to the very vote which would permit me to help him, in so far as repairing that drill shed is concerned, which is in a very bad condition, I must admit, judging by the reports I have received. We endeavour just merely to repair it in the most temporary manner possible, because the new drill shed, which is to be built under the conditions submitted by the town of Brantford, and accepted by the Government, should be built in a very short time, and then we will transfer the arms to that building. From the reports I have, it will cost a great deal to repair the old drill shed, and it would then be a very poor job after the money has been expended.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But the hon. gentleman cannot allow things to continue in the shape in which they are. I see no hope of the drill shed being completed soon, and have about given up trying to get the hon, gentleman interested in the maintenance of the Brantford battalion. When I find that the department will not advertise even for tenders, there is very little hope of the new shed being built this year; and from the reports I get from the Minister it is absolutely impossible, with the amount of money at his disposal, to build it. They do that in the face of what they have done for other battalions. I am not pleading for charity; but I reiterate that it is one of the most unfair kinds of treatment to give to one of the best regiments we There is a battalion there with arms, and have. part of this shed has been blown down by the winds, so that the arms are not properly sheltered, and yet the hon, gentleman says they have to remain there until a new shed is built, and even refuses to advertise for tenders. I thought I had got the department to that length. I do not want to reveal private conversations; but I say that the patience which the officers and men are showing under the treatment they have received speaks largely for their love of the service. That shed was put up on Edward Island to urge upon the Minister the ground which the city of Brantford gave without necessity of allowing these companies to drill at rent 23 years ago for 21 years. The Government then gave $1,000, the county gave $1,000, and the city, in addition to land, gave $500, and there is the old shed still, and the battalion left there under all these difficulties. Now, when the city of Brantford has voted $10,000, and $10,000 have been put in the Estimates, and plans have been prepared, the Government find out that $20,000 is not enough, and they will not even advertise for tenders, and in the meantime the old shed is wrecked by a storm, and the arms are exposed. The regiment has remained on, in hopes that something would be done; but at the last moment, when I thought tenders would be asked for—and I believe the hall could be built cheaper than the Minister says—we are told that the architect says it cannot be done, and the Minister lays the blame upon his colleagues. However, this belongs more to the Department of Public Works. What I am discussing now is what the Minister proposes to do with the arms? Can he afford to leave the arms out in the rain?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Like the hon, gentleman, I am not going to discuss the question of the new drill shed. But I may say that the city of Brantford got exactly what it asked the Government to grant, and the city of Belleville received the same amount.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What has that got to do with it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As to the old drill hall, I believe the officers do not expect or wish that it should be repaired, except so far as to prevent the arms from being injured, and that is what I desire to do under the vote I am now trying to get. But the hon, gentleman mixes that up with the building of a new drill hall.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No; you did.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; the hon, gentleman gave the whole history of the old drill hall, and referred to the proposed building of the new one. I can add my testimony to that of the hon, gentleman as to the efficiency of the battalion there, and as to its being one of the best in the Dominion, but the building of the drill hall is a matter for Parliament. The amount of money which was asked for was granted, but it was found insufficient. If the city of Brantford will grant enough to build that drill hall, that is another matter.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was led into this discussion by the statement made by the Minister that the old drill hall would not be repaired. Surely the hon, gentleman is not waiting for this vote to make the necessary repairs to preserve these arms from the weather?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If I do not get this grant I will have to pay it out of my own pocket to suit my friend.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You have had 10 per cent. voted. Is the 38th Battalion enrolled to preserve peace in the city of Brantford, or is it enrolled for service anywhere in this country? I take it that municipalities are not bound to give anything in matters of this kind. It is the duty of the Government to protect the country, but the municipalities show their desire to aid the Government, and the city of Brantford has voted $10,000 for this purpose. It is constantly thrown up that, because Belleville got $10,000, Brantford must not have any more. Belleville did not grant $10,000.

Mr. Paterson (Brant).

Mr. BOWELL. We will discuss that when we come to the item.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand the Minister to say that there would be no economy in repairing the old drill shed.

Mr. BOWELL. I supposed you were going to do what Belleville did—take your $10,000 and build your drill shed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is that the way the Militia Department is run?

Mr. DENISON. That is the custom.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is that what is going to be done in Toronto?

Mr. DENISON. That has always been the custom, as far as I know; and I think it is laid down in the law that the municipality must pay a portion of the cost of the drill shed. I suppose the object of that is to prevent applications being made from places all over the country.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand that Toronto is going to take the $34,000 in the Estimates for its drill shed, and itself expend it on the building?

Mr. DENISON. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). And yet the hon. gentleman says that is what is always done.

Mr. DENISON. The city of Toronto have already voted $140,000, which goes to the Government to supply the grounds, and the Government builds the shed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who calls for the contract, and who builds the shed?

Mr. DENISON. The Government.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then, does not the hon, gentleman see how extremely wrong he was when he interrupted me, and said it was done all over? Where is there another place that ever did it, or was asked to do it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Belleville.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Belleville drill shed was built before the ground was given. I know no other case where the Government ever did it, or asked for it.

Mr. AMYOT. I want to draw the attention of the Minister to the need of waterworks for the drill shed at Quebec. There are six corps drilling in that shed, and I do not see why the Government should not come to an understanding with the corporation of Quebec to supply the men with pure water. There is not even water for the closets, and when there is such a large number of men drilling, this want is injurious to their health. When we spend thousands of dollars for big bonnets and big hats, I think we could afford to spend a few hundreds to supply the soldiers with water. I suppose the Minister does not expect that they will lose their time and also pay out of their own pockets to bring I do not comwaterworks into the drill shed. plain about the state of the grounds in front of the drill shed. We have to cross through the mud like dogs, as there is no sidewalk nor anything of the kind. We endure that; but when men drill for three hours every night, surely they should be Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The trouble did not come at all from the Government, but from the corporation, who exacted much more than they were entitled to for the water which we were trying to provide for the drill hall, and, naturally, we had a discussion which extended over a considerable period of time. But I understand that the whole matter has been settled, and I think there will be no more complaint concerning the water. As to the grounds, I think the hon, gentleman should not complain, because we have one of the best drill halls in the Dominion, and I do not think there can be any great inconvenience to these corps by walking to their drill hall, even when there is a little mud in the fields. The field is like other fields in Montreal and other places where the soldiers drill. There are no sidewalks, because it is the business of the corporation to supply them.

Mr. AMYOT. I am very glad if the question is settled with the corporation. There is another point which I wish to bring to the attention of the The drill shed is not very large, and in the winter they pile up wood, two cords deep, all around it, which diminishes the space inside the building on each side. There is no use building a drill shed and occupying a fourth part of it as a The Government should find some woodshed. other way of housing their wood. When there has been a great deal of snow, I do not think the volunteers should be compelled to go into the drill shed by passing through an immense amount of snow, and having to wear wet pants all the evening. should at least treat them as ordinary servants, if not as soldiers.

Mr. FLINT. I would ask the Minister kindly to make a note of a claim which I wish to present on behalf of the poor widow of the victim of an accident that occurred about two years ago in the town of Yarmouth, when the battalion of artillery were drilling. I would like the Minister to let us know what petitions or applications have been made to the department for some compensation to the widow of that unfortunate man. To show the strength of her claim for some slight compensation, I may say it was, perhaps, the most extraordinary accident that could be imagined. An investigation was made by the department, the result of which was published in the papers at the time, but it has escaped my attention. A labouring man was at work in a stable grooming a horse within a short distance of the end of the drill hall. The company were endeavouring to get a ball out of a gun where it had stuck, and through some extraordinary accident the gun was discharged, although the men stoutly maintained there was scarcely any powder in it. The ball passed through the rear of the drill shed and struck that unfortunate man, a few rods away, killing him instantly. He was a very poor man, and his widow and two or three children were left absolutely destitute, and apart from some slight voluntary assistance from charitable friends, I am not aware whether she has had any assistance from the department. I do not know what view the Minister of Militia may take of any claim which the widow may have against the Government; but even if she had a claim, she and her friends are utterly unable to prosecute it. Therefore, I will ask the Government to see if they could not possibly place in the Estimates, in some shape, a small sum for compensation for that poor woman. I believe it will not be establishing any precedent which will at all interfere with the management of the Militia Department. I appeal to the Minister to give us the information which he has in his possession, and if the rules of his department will allow it, if it would not be creating an improper precedent, I would ask him to give some slight compensation to this poor widow, suffering from an accident occurring through the operations of a volunteer battalion, although I believe the accident was beyond the control of the officials at that time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The case has been brought to my notice, and I shall be glad to reopen it and consider it, and I will give all the documents and information which have been laid before me.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.45 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 12th August, 1891.

The Speaker took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PUBLIC WORKS CONTRACTS.

Mr. GIROUARD presented the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, reporting that the Hon. Thomas McGreevy had refused to answer certain questions put to him in the investigation being conducted by the Committee concerning certain contracts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The report of this Committee requires some action on the part of the House, and I would merely intimate just now that I propose to move to-morrow in the matter.

PRIVATE BILLS—REPORTS FROM COM-MITTEES.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That the time for the reception of reports from Committees on Private Bills be extended until Friday, the 21st instant.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—TAY CANAL.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Before you leave the Chair, I desire to call the attention of the House to a public work constructed at the public expense, but not generally known to the members of this House—I refer to the Tay Canal. The first time, so far as I can learn, that Parliament granted aid to the Tay Canal, was in the session of 1882, when Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Railways and Canals, asked Parliament for a grant of $50,000 for the purpose of entering upon the construction of this canal. He then represented to Parliament that, outside the cost of the land through which a portion of the canal would pass, the canal would cost $132,660. Parliament voted the sum of $50. 000. In the session of 1883 Sir Charles Tupper, then still Minister of Railways and Canals, asked Parliament for a grant of $75,000 to continue the construction of the Tay Canal; and on that occasion, after speaking of the plans, specifications and estimates, all of which, I gather from the discussion, which was very short, indeed, had been carefully prepared at the expense of the department, Sir Charles represented to the House of Commons that the cost of the canal would be $240,000. Blake, then leader of the Opposition in Parliament, questioned the propriety of this expenditure, and asked the Minister, when moving for that vote, as to the propriety of this public work, as to the necessity for it. Sir Charles Tupper did not pretend that he himself understood anything about the necessity of the public work, but he referred to his hon, friend the member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) as being tolerably conversant with the The member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), in justification of the vote, made use of the following language:

"There is the traffic of the town of Perth, and smelting works will be erected there which require this canal. In the back section of the country, as we all know, there are the largest deposits of iron ore in Canada, as well as of phosphates of lime. It will also enable freights to be cheapened in the bringing in of coal for the purpose of smelting iron and for other works intended in that section."

Upon that representation of the Minister of Public Works, which has never been realized, and from the nature of things never will be realized, the Parliament of Canada was induced to vote the $75,000 asked for the continuation of this public work. the session of 1884, Sir Charles Tupper asked Parliament for an additional grant of $100,000 to continue the construction of this canal, and then also represented to Parliament that the cost of the canal would not exceed $240,000. But little was heard in Parliament of this work until the session of 1887, and then Sir Charles Tupper, Minister of Railways and Canals, asked for an additional vote of $55,-It will be observed that, including the session of 1887, there was voted by Parliament for the construction of this canal $280,000, or $40,000 more than Sir Charles Tupper represented in 1883 the canal would cost. Some hon, members of the House by this time became a little doubtful as to the propriety of this expenditure out of the public funds of the Dominion, and the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), ever vigilant in the public interest, put the following question to Sir Charles Tupper, as will be found in the Hansard of 1887, page 838 :-

"How long has this canal been under construction: how much has it cost and how much is it likely to cost? There have been some sums in the Estimates for the last fifteen

In reply to this pertinent question, Sir Charles Tupper made the following reply:-

"The hon, gentleman will feel very much relieved when I tell him that the expenditure commenced in 1883. From that date to 1st March, 1887, the expenditure has been $256,360. This sum of $55,000 will complete the work, including the new basin at Perth, which is not under contract. We shall thus obtain a canal six miles in length at a cost of a little more than $250,000."

Mr. Cameron (Huron).

In 1887 he stated in Parliament that already $256,360 had been expended, and he asked for $55,000 more, in all, including the year 1887, $311.360, or $71,360 more than Sir Charles Tupper represented to Parliament in 1885 the work would cost, and $178,700 more than he said the work would cost in 1882. I think that if it were a valuable public work, constructed in the interests of the public, even although it exceeded the estimates by several thousand dollars, would not have so much of which to complain, especially if that were the end of the matter, as Sir Charles Tupper stated in his place in Parliament that it was the end of the matter. But in the session of 1888, the Tay Canal, through the responsible Minister, was again knocking at the doors of Parliament for an additional grant, and Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Finance, acting for the Minister of Railways, asked Parliament for an additional sum of $78,000. On that occasion the suspicions of the hon, member for South Oxford were more than aroused and he drew the attention of the Minister to the enormous expenditure. Sir Charles Tupper said: "This amount is required to settle matters in connection with the construction of the canal. The work has been done." That was a clear and distinct representation made by the Minister of Finance in his place in Parliament in the session of 1888, that the work of the Tay Canal was then done, and that the $78,000 then asked from Parliament was for the purpose of paying the balance due to the contractors, the work having been finished. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked Sir Charles Tupper on that occasion: "What will the total cost be?" and Sir Charles Tupper replied: "$358,364." In other words, the exreplied: "$358,364." In other words, the expense, including 1888, had increased to $118,864 over the amount which Sir Charles Tupper assured Parliament in 1883 would be the total cost of the completion of the work. One would naturally suppose that after the declaration made by Sir Charles Tupper in the session of 1888, that the work was completed and the sum he sought for not only paid for the completion of the work, but for the new basin, necessary to excavate in the town of Perth, no further expenditure would have been necessary. But, unfortunately for the tax-payers of the country, that was not the end of the Tay Canal, and in the session of 1889, the present Minister of Finance asked Parliament for an additional sum of $25,000 for this ever-wanting Tay Canal. that occasion, the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said: "I thought those works were finished last year." The hon. gentleman had reason to think that the work was finished, because Sir Charles Tupper made the statement in the House of Commons, that the works were com-The Minister of Finance on that occasion pleted. replied: "$25,000 is required to complete the basin and carry out the other works." Sir Charles, as I have pointed out, declared in 1883 that the total cost would be $240,000; he declared in 1887, when he had obtained an additional grant from Parliament, that the sum then obtained would complete the work, including the basin in the town of Perth; he declared in 1888 that the works were complete, and the sum he then asked Parliament a cost of a little more than $250,000." would pay up the balance due on the work. Sir Charles Tupper represented to Parliament in 1885 that the cost of the work would be $240,000. ditional sum of money, and the hon. member for

South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked him the following question: "What is the total cost of these works, and is this really the last amount required?" The Minister of Finance replied: "The total cost up to date is $364,951." In other words, $124,951 more than Sir Charles Tupper asserted to Parliament in 1883 that the work would cost. But the Minister would not pledge himself that it would cost no more than $25,000, then asked. He was too cunning for that, he did not know exactly himself what it would cost, and he was bound to leave room for leaks and the filling up of leaks, and he did not answer the hon, member for South Oxford as to whether the amount asked for would complete the work or not. Well, one would naturally imagine, after these various grants of Parliament from 1882 down to 1889, that surely Parliament had voted enough for the completion of this work. Not so, Mr. Speaker; because I find that in the session of 1890, Sir John A. Macdonald, the late Premier, asked of Parliament the sum of $11,000 for the Tay Canal. The hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked Sir John Macdonald the following question, and made the following statement:—

"This I understand is really a useful work, it drains the County of Perth."

Sir John Macdonald's eyes appear to have been opened to the utter folly of the work from the beginning of it, and he replied in the following language characteristic of the late First Minister:

"Implying if it does not drain the County of Perth, [Lanark it should be] it drains the public treasury pretty well."

It was quite manifest that up to that time this little canal had drained the public treasury pretty well, and Sir John further said:

"The amount is to settle with the contractors and finish the work."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the third time, as I have shown you, that a Minister of the Crown, when asking Parliament for an additional sum of money for this canal, declared upon his responsibility as a Minister, that the sum then sought for was the last sum that would be required to finish this work. In 1888 the then Minister of Finance declared that the works had been completed and that the $78,000 he then sought from Parliament was simply to pay up balances that I suppose were due to contractors and others. One would naturally suppose that after the statement made by Sir John Macdonald when he asked for those $11,000, that that would end the matter, and that the Tay Canal would make no further demand upon Parliament. One would suppose that Parliament had already been generous and liberal enough to this little work, and that at all events, that should be the last time of calling on Parlia-Not so, Mr. Speaker. ment for money. Tay Canal was just as rapacious as the Esquimalt Graving Dock. It was just as hungry as the Kingston Graving Dock; it was just as anxious for public money as the Lévis Graving Dock, and it was as keen to get its hand in the public exchaquer as the contractors for the dredging of the Quebec Harbour. That was not the end of it, and the end of it is not yet. We find that in that very same session of Parliament, after Sir John Macdonald had got the $11,000 I have spoken of, another sum of $20,000 was sought for and was stated to be a revote, a portion of which had been expended and a portion of which He got the additional connection with other canals, that the wear and had not been expended.

$20,000. Up to that time the expenses of this little canal amounted to $395,957; a canal that the people of this country and the Parliament of this country were induced to undertake upon the assurance of a Minister of the Crown that the cost would be $240,000. Up to that time we had expended on that canal $155,957 more than the Minister assured Parliament, in the session of 1885, the whole thing would cost. Now, Sir, does that end the matter; is the Tay Canal finished, and are there demands still made upon Parliament to build the Tay Canal? One would naturally imagine that, at all events, would be the last time of calling on Parliament for a vote, but it was not. There were other leaks to be filled; there were Micks and Nicks to be gratified and satisfied, and Micks and Nicks were gratified and satisfied; and we were told by the present acting Minister of Railways and Canals on the third day of this present month of August that the cost so far amounted to the sum of $440,613.21, or, in other words, we had expended up to that time, according to the statement of the acting Minister of Railways and Canals, $200,613.21 more than Sir Charles Tupper assured the people of Canada and the Parliament of Canada in 1883, that this work would cost. Is that the end of it? No, Sir, the thing is not yet ended, and I fear the end of the Tay Canal will never come. We find, Sir, in the Estimates for 1891-92 an additional sum, as I understand it, of $30,000 to complete the Tay Canal. Add that $30,000 to the $440,613.21 which we were told had been already expended upon it, and you have a sum of $470,-613.21 so far expended upon the Tay Canal, or, in other words, $230,613.21 more than Sir Charles Tupper assured us this canal would cost, in 1883. Is that the end of it? Surely, there will be no further drain on the public treasury. But the Tay Canal must be satisfied, and everybody connected with the Tay Canal must be satisfied, and that is not the end of it. There is now under construction, as we were informed by the acting Minister of Railways and Canals, in reply to a question I placed upon the Order paper, an extension of the Tay Canal from the basin in the centre of the town of Perth to a place called Haggart's Mill. There is under contract an extension of this canal, the dredging of the canal from the basin up to Haggart's Mill, the excavation of clay and rock, the removal of the permanent stone bridge there, the replacing of it by a new iron swing-bridge, and the purchase of some property in order to enable the swing-bridge to work properly. I am told that all these things will cost well on to $50,000 more. So that, for the work which Sir Charles Tupper assured the Parliament of Canada would cost $240,000, we will expend at least half a million of money. But that is not all. In addition to the capital invested in that undertaking we have got annual burdens upon the tax-payers of this country. We have got the interest on the $500,000 to pay. We have the repairs, and the wear and tear of the canal, which I am told will be a very considerable sum, to pay, and the expenditure for lock-keepers, and keepers of the swing-bridges, and so on, that cannot amount to less than from $5,000 to $10,000 a year. All that will be saddled upon the people of this country. We know perfectly well that perhaps for a year or two the wear and tear will not be very much, but well we know from our experience in from the 1st October to the 30th June of this year, the sum of $58.81. That is the return on this investment; that is what the tax-payer of Canada gets for expending nearly half a million of money. Now, I would appeal to sensible men the purpose, this Government took upon themselves in Parliament and out of Parliament, if these to enter into a contract to extend that canal from statements are correct, and I challenge them to the basin in the town of Perth up to Haggart's say they are incorrect, if the whole thing is not a a piece of supreme folly as investing half a million; of money in a work that has realized $58.81 in eight months? We were told in 1883 that plans, specifications and estimates were made by the department. I assume that these plans, estimates and specifications were carefully prepared. We were told that the cost would be $240,000. I have shown that the cost has now risen to about half a million. What are the pitiful results of all this? We were told by the acting Minister of Railways the other evening that this great canal is navigated by one tug, properly called the John Haggart, of 117 tons, which I am told makes one trip a week to Kingston; by another tug called the Harry Bate, of 144 tons, which I am told makes one trip a week to Montreal; by a pleasure boat called the Geraldine, of 15 tons, belonging to Senator McLaren; by another little boat of 8 tons called the Firefly, about the size of an ordinary rowboat; by another little boat called the Ranger, of 8 tons, about the size of an ordinary rowboat; and by an old scow, which I am told made one trip in the season, in carrying coal, I believe, from the Rideau Canal to the dredge working on the Tay Canal. The whole result is that we have two little tugs, one little pleasure boat, two little rowboats, and one old scow navigating the Tay Canal. What a screaming farce that must be to the frisky Minister of Finance; how the staid and sober Minister of Justice must enjoy the joke; how the grave and solemn Postmaster General must chuckle in his sleeve; how the member for L'Islet must brace himself up, and rejoice at this profound stroke of Canadian statesmanship—an expenditure of half a million resulting in a revenue of $58.81. But, Sir, it is not a farce to the Canadian people; it is no joke to the Canadian tax-payer. either a farce or a joke, they must foot the bill. No, it is no joke to them; it is something else, and something a great deal worse. That canal, Mr. Speaker, will stand there for all time to come as it is now, a living monument of departmental imbecility if not of semething worse. That is not the end of the Tay Canal. There is something more The people are not relieved of the burden of the Tay Canal yet. The canal proper extended, or was intended to extend from a place called Beveridge's Bay on the Rideau Canal to the basin in the town of Perth. That was the original undertaking, and the only undertaking that Sir Charles Tupper asked the assent of Parliament to. That was what Parliament was asked to sanction, and what Parliament did sanction under false pretenses, under the pretence that a trade would spring up there to feed this canal, under the pretense that $240,000 would complete the work. It was as public money, believing that this extension was gross a fraud perpetrated on the tax-payers of not constructed in the public interest, believing Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

tear will increase year after year; and as a return this country as was ever perpetrated by any Govfor this expenditure of nearly half a million of ernment on any people. I have said that that money, and the annual cost of keeping up this is not all. Last spring, without the assent of canal, we have by way of tolls from that canal, Parliament, so far as I have been able to gather -for I had not the honour of being in Par-liament at that time-without the assent of the representatives of the people in Parliament assembled, without any appropriation by Parliament for mill, at a cost, we are told by the acting Minister gross outrage. They have been taken from the of Railways, of $18,466. I do not know whether records of Parliament, so far as I have been able to that includes the cost of a swing-bridge or not, or get them from these records. Was there ever such the cost of purchasing land for the purposes of the swing-bridge; but I venture to say that what the Government have now undertaken to do without the assent of Parliament and without an appropriation by Parliament, will reach from $25,000 to $30,000, if not more. Now, what induced this Government, without consulting the representatives of the people, to enter upon this mad folly of extending this canal from the basin in the town of Perth up to Haggart's mill? It was bad enough to enter upon the construction of the old Tay Canal. I believe it is of no public utility, and never will be. I believe it serves no public interest now, and never will serve any public interest. I believe the canal was not constructed in the public interest. But to extend that canal from the basin in the town of Perth up to Haggart's mill, was an act of the maddest folly that any Government ever perpetrated, and I venture to say that no Government in the wide world except this Government would perpetrate such an act. Now, I challenge the acting Minister of Railways and Canals, with six of the most stalwart supporters he has got behind him, to visit the Tay Canal; I challenge every man on that side of the House to travel over the Tay Canal from the Rideau Canal right up to Haggart's mill; and if they do not come to the conclusion which I have come to, that this work is not in the public interest, I will candidly admit on the floor of Parliament that I have been misinformed on the subject. Hon, gentleman need not be afraid to visit it; they need not be alarmed at the warning notes uttered by the acting Minister of Railways, the other evening, when he told us that the high winds blowing over this great canal often drifted the vessels ashore. They need not be afraid if the storms do rise and the winds do blow, and the vessel springs a leak and becomes a wreck, because every one of them can easily wade from the deepest part to the shore without the slightest danger to their lives. Do visit the Tay Canal, by all means, and visit the extension of it up to Haggart's mill, and if you do not come to the conclusion that this extension is not in the public interest, I will confess at once that I have been misinformed. Ask yourself when you visit it, for whose benefit was this canal extended from the old basin to Haggart's Mill, what public purpose does it serve, and in whose interest does it exist? I venture to say that of the 215 members sitting in Parliament today, if they all visited this canal, everyone would say that it is of no public utility, that it serves no purpose except the purpose of Senator McLaren and the hon, member for South Lanark. Believing, Mr. Speaker, that this is a wilful waste of that it benefits nobody except the owners of that mill, believing that it is a squandering of the people's resources, believing that the Government were wholly unjustified in extending the canal from the basin to Haggart's mill, without the sanction of Parliament, without the approval of the representatives of the people, and without an appropriation by Parliament, I beg to submit to you the following amendment :-

That all the words after the word "That." be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof: "In the session of 1892 Parliament was induced to enter on the construction of the Tay Canal, on the assurance of the Government that the cost would be $132.660.

1. That, in the session of 1883, Parliament was induced to continue the construction of the Tay Canal, extending from the Rideau Canal to the basin in the town of Perth, on the assurance of the Government that the cost would be $240,000.

3. That, in the session of 1888, Sir Charles Tupper, then Minister of Finance, stated that the whole cost of the canal would be $358,364. He then asked for and obtained an additional sum of $78,000, and stated that "this amount is required to settle matters connected with the canal. The work has been done."

4. That, in the session of 1889, the Finance Minister asked for and obtained an additional sum of $25,000, and then stated that "$25,000 is required to complete the basin and carry out other works," and that the cost up to that time was $364,951.

6. That, according to the statement of the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, the amount expended on the Tay Canal, up to 3rd of August, 1891, was $440,-613,21.

That this House is of opinion that the said expenditures on the said canal are in violation of the pledges and assurances of the Government to Parliament, and this House is further of opinion that the said extension of the said canal to Haggart's mill is not a work that ought to have been undertaken at the public expense, and is unwarranted by any public necessity."

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know that I have any fault to find with the manner in which the hon. gen. tleman has treated this subject. I regret that I am not sufficiently acquainted with the history of the canal to enable me to speak of it in the way I should like under the circumstances in which it has been brought before Parliament. I have this, however, to say, that if the records of the past are to be exhumed, and if the utterances of Ministers of Public Works are to be taken as positive pledges as to the cost of all such works, I very much fear that the same charge of impropriety might be made in many other cases. I have no knowledge my-self, but perhaps the hon, gentleman who has had some acquaintance with dredging and with works of that kind in the west can speak with more authority upon this subject than I have. I know and the river to Craig Street, the work consisted of no work which has been commenced by this Government or by any other Government, where the expenditures have been confined within the first estimates and the reports of the engineers, except perhaps in the matter of the Goderich harbour. My hon, friend knows that that was not an exception to all rules, and that in no case has the report of the engineers in regard to any work, stating that certain sums would be sufficient to complete it, been found to be so erroneous, within my recollection of about a quarter of a century, as in regard to the work to which I refer. Constant application has been made to Parliament to complete that work and make it useful for the purpose for which it was designed. I do not say there was anything improper in that, but I draw attention to it because my hon, friend is more acquainted with the works on Lake Huron than probably any other member of this House. When he makes these charges against the Government, and particularly against Sir Charles Tupper, I instance the Goderich harbour to show that the same would apply to every public work which has been undertaken since Confederation. I have watched pretty closely the remarks which have been made by the hon, gentleman, and they seem to be confined more especially to the last extension of the Tay Canal, to that unfortunate mill which bears the name of my hon. friend, the member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). If my hon. friend from South Lanark did not own the mill, I think we would not have heard anything about the extension of the Tay Canal to that place.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Hear, hear. would not have been extended there.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the gravamen of the whole charge, and before hon. gentlemen give expression to their opinions on that subject, they should understand exactly what the facts are-I refer particularly to my hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville). They should ascertain before making charges whether this extension is for the benefit of that mill, either in raising the water in the mill-dam or in what is called If they can show that any the bulk-head. personal advantages were to be obtained by a member of this House or by a senator, then a charge might lie, but until that is done, I do not think any hon, gentleman has a right to charge the Government with having expended public money for the particular and personal advantage of any hon. Looking into the history of this canal, I find that this is not a new matter. The Tay Canal was first constructed by a private company, with the object of connecting the town of Perth with the Rideau navigation. On this canal were five wooden locks. The first contract for the construction of a new canal was entered into by Messrs. A. F. Manning & Co., on 15th June, 1883. This contract extended from Beveridge's Bay, on Lower Rideau Lake, to Craig Street, in the town of Perth, a distance of about six miles. It consisted of an artificial cut 11 miles long; with two stone locks of 13 feet lift each, of the same dimensions as those in the Rideau Canal, the lock gates and also the wooden swing-bridge, where the public road crosses the road between the locks, being built by day labour by the Government employees. From the junction of this cut of deepening the channel of the river, cutting across bends, &c., these cuttings being chiefly in rock. The next contract, from Craig to Gore Streets, was entered into by Wm. Davis & Sons, on 12th July, 1888. This contract consisted of deepening the river by a edge work, the building of stone piers for three swing-bridges to replace the wooden ones across the river at Craig, Beckwith and Drummond Streets (the superstructures of which were built by contract by Weddell & Co., of Trenton), and the excavation for and the crib wharfing around the basin. The next contract for the further extension of the canal from Gore Street to 1,000 feet west was entered into by Mr. O'Toole, on 26th January, 1891, and consists of building the stone piers for the new swing-bridge which replaces the old stone arch at Gore Street (the contract for the superstructure being entered into by the Canadian Bridge and Iron Co.), and deepening the channel of the river for the above-mentioned distance. Now, in reference to the extension, I heard, when this question was first brought up, that certain gentlemen, eminent engineers, in this House, accompanied by the most eminent of all, the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), went up to examine that work, and that they went there with the object of attacking the Government and blowing them sky high. I at once sent for Mr. Wise and asked him what reasons he had for recommending this extension, and who would derive advantages from this, and whether this mill, of which we have heard so much, was to be benefited by it. He gave me a verbal statement, and I told him to put it in writing, which I shall read to the House what he reported to me. I am not an engineer, nor should I be able to give an intelligent opinion on a matter of this kind. Mr. Wise handed me the following letter:-

"RIDEAU CANAL OFFICE, OTTAWA, 10th August, 1891.

"The Hon. Mackenzie Bowell,
"Acting Minister Dept. Railways and Canals, "Ottawa.

"SIR,—Referring to the conversation I had with you on Saturday last, with regard to the extension of the Tay Canal up the river to the mill-dam, I beg to report for

Canal up the river to the mill-dam, I beg to report for your information:

"That the first extension from Craig Street to the old basin, in the town of Perth (a distance of about 2,100 feet) was made for the purpose of having the terminus and wharves in the centre of the town; the corporation expending some $4,000 in buying out a tannery which occupied part of the land required.

"That the basin is now within stone's throw of the town hall, and that its construction has been of the greatest benefit to all classes both in the town and also in the surrounding country, freight having been reduced fully 50 per cent. since the freight boats commenced running regularly.

"That the second extension up the river is for a distance of about 1,000 feet.

of about 1,000 feet.

"That it was petitioned for in order to extend the navigation through a portion of the town above Gore Street, so that, if necessary, the wharves could be extended in that direction at any future time: the corporation contributing 34 000 towards greating the new swing-bridge required ing $4,000 towards erecting the new swing-bridge required at Gore Street.

"That this portion of the river had hitherto been used as a dumping ground for all sorts of refuse, which, during the spring freshets, would all be carried into the basin below.

"That it is not a fact, as is generally supposed, that these improvements in the river will be the means of increasing either the head or supply of water to the mill, which has been no more benefited than any other prowhich has been no more perty in the town.

"I have the honour to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"FRED. A. WISE,

"Supt. Engineer."

I believe those who know Mr. Wise know that he is a man whose word can be taken implicitly upon any question of that kind affecting the profession of which I understand him to be a clever member. Now, these are the reasons given for the extension of this canal. The question is really whether the Government is to be condemned by that resolution for having commenced a work and carried it out to completion which has cost more than it was originally supposed it would cost. charge made by the hon, gentleman that there has been any money improperly spent except in the The hon. gentleconstruction of the canal itself. man declares that this work ought never to have been commenced; if that is so, then Parliament is equally responsible with those who proposed it. My hon, friend ridicules, in the facetious way that generally characterizes him, the statement made by myself, the other night, in reply to a question put by him as to the number of boats navigating this canal, and their tonnage. It must be remembered that it is only since the 1st of July, last year, that the canal has been opened; it has only been opened for a very short time, it is not yet in a complete state, and we could not expect much traffic over it yet. Reverting again to the cost of public works, I have a distinct recollection of hearing the late hon. member for East Northumberland (Mr. Keeler) some years ago making a statement in this House that if the Government would vote him $75,000 he would construct a connection between Presqu'Isle. Harbour on Lake Ontario and the Bay of Quinté. Well, after a good deal of trouble those who were interested in the construction and completion of that work induced the Government to place an appropriation before Parliament, and it was voted; but instead of $75,000, the connection between these two waters has cost nearly $1,250,000. True, it is not a canal of the character of the one we are discussing to day; it is one which enables the lake boats to travel from the west down to Montreal. The canal is from 11 to 13 feet deep, in fact it is as deep as the Bay of Quinté in many places, so that by increasing the depth and by making it a more permanent work, we have expended upon it a great deal more than was ever contemplated. I am glad to know that the traffic through it is rapidly increasing, and it is becoming the great waterway from the west to the east; and I have no doubt, as the people begin to appreciate its value in the way of safety and for other reasons, it will be used still more largely in the future. And so in all probability it will be in the case of the Tay Canal, although it is a very much smaller one. I merely instance this to show that in the commencement of a work, and as it develops, and as construction proceeds and continues, in most cases the expenditure increases, for various reasons which it is not necessary for me at present to refer to. I like the wide range the hon, gentleman took when he spoke of the cost of management of this canal. "Why, Mr. Speaker," he says, "it will range from $500 to $10,000." He might just as well have commenced at a cent and gone up to a million.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I did not say that, I said the wear and tear.

Mr. BOWELL. I understood the hon. gentleman to say the management; probably I misunderstood him. Well, Sir, the cost for one year, or since it was opened, of maintaining the canal, has been about $750; I think that is about the sum I stated to the House the other day. wear and tear may be in the future, I cannot say. As to the winds that were to blow and the waves that were to roll, of which my hon. friend spoke so eloquently when he ridiculed the danger to loss of life that might occur in navigating the canal, if the waters of that canal are of the character of a calm mill pond, as the hon. gentleman seems to think, the expenditure of maintaining the canal will not be as high as my hon. friend anticipates. In regard to the bridges, the number of which I gave the House the other night, the hon. gentleman has misinformed the House in stating that they were new They were for the purpose of replacing old bridges that already existed, so that the fact of there being so many is not due to the action of the Government in giving to the town more bridges than they formerly had. The bridges have existed for years, and in the reconstruction of these four bridges the town of Perth made a certain appropriation, and the Government provided the There is one bridge, however, that is new, and cannot be classed among the other four to which I refer. Now, I have shown, in the first place, that the expenditure of money was authorized by Parliament. It is true the first forecast of the estimates has been exceeded, as it has been in the case of almost every work that has been undertaken by this or by former Governments. It would be well if engineers had arrived at that state of perfection in their profession which would enable them to lay before a Government the exact cost of any work which is to be undertaken; but there are so many circumstances which intervene between the commencement of any work and its completion, that it is almost impossible to give an exact estimate beforehand. I have shown from the report of the engineer the reasons why this extension was made, and upon his authority I make the statement that the advantages which the hon. gentleman said were to accrue to the hon. senator and to the member for South Lanark, will not be shared by those gentlemen any more than by other property holders in the vicinity of the canal. Their interests are no more subserved by the extension of this canal to the town of Perth, than are the interests of any other resident or property holder in the town. In fact it does not give to either of those gentlemen any particular advantage over their neighbours, as has been inferred by the hon. gentleman. The hon, member insinuated that the opening up of this basin and the extension of the canal was made for the special benefit of the member for South Lanark, on account of his owning a mill. This statement is not the case. Now, with these facts before the House, and with others which will, no doubt, be laid before us before this debate closes, I scarcely think that the deductions drawn from the quotations which were made by the member for Huron are justified in fact. While I have no doubt as to the manner in which the House will vote upon this question, neither have I any doubt as to how the hon. members opposite would vote for any motion which might be moved by that hon. gentleman, no matter how unreasonable the proposition might be or however incorrect it might be. However, you have the facts before you so far as I been any improper act on the part of the Government in the spending of this money, in the giving out of the contracts, or that it was done for the special benefit of any member of the House and more particularly a member of the Government, I hesitate not to say that the hon. gentleman's motion should not have been put to the House.

Mr. GIBSON. Considering the subject, I congratulate the acting Minister of Railways on the defence he has put forward. I was one of those who went up to look at the work, making the visit more from feelings of curiosity that anything else. I did not make estimates or surveys, but I would be a very stupid man if I failed to see on the face of the work the reason for the extension of the Tay Canal. The acting Minister of Railways has said the expenditure on the canal was for a public work. I must say for the people of Perth that they are very blind to their own interests if they imagine the expenditure for the extension of the canal is to benefit the town by carrying the business further on, because the canal as it now stands is in the very centre of their town, within 100 feet of the public buildings. I must say as regards the canal itself that it is a work well done. I am not afraid of the "raging waters" as the hon, member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) suggests, because I find in the official records that the canal is only 5½ feet deep. Very few people would drown in that depth, and I fail to understand how, as the hon. acting Minister of Railways pointed out, vessels drawing 13 feet of water could pass through it on their way to Montreal.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think I said that. I was referring to the Murray Canal when I made the reference.

Mr. GIBSON. At all events, I trust that the hopes of the Minister will be realized in the future, if they are in this direction. When a work of this kind has cost $4,500,000—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. GIBSON. $450,000 I mean, and if the receipts have only amounted to $58.81, it is high time the traffic on the canal was increased. The acting Minister of Railways spoke as if an improper charge was to be made against the Government. Does the Minister think that because the Ministry, or some member of it, is not charged with stealing out of the public chest, we have no right to question the propriety of any expenditure? He said that this work was encouraged by the town of Perth to the extent of giving $6,000 for the highway bridge through the centre of the town. As a public contractor, and one employing labour, I say that a sum of $6,000 given by a town as a bonus is money well spent in a case of this kind, where I find 80 men employed in town at $1.40 per day, and who will probably be there for some time to come. The Minister also stated at another time that there were 1,000 cubic yards of rock excavation. According to Mr. Wise, whose report he read, the extension is 2,000 feet long. And if we take 2,000 feet of rock cutting, 40 feet wide and a foot deep, we will find it will give nearly 3,000 cubic yards of rock excavation under this contract, which, when the contract comes to be paid up, will come in as a claim on the Government not contained in the estimates. The am able to give them in connection with this work. ernment not contained in the estimates. The And until, I repeat, it can be shown that there has matter of the canal has been so well and fully discussed by the hon, member for Huron that he has left me little to say, further than to say that I have not the least objection to the canal itself, but I do object to the scandalous use of public money for the extension of this work from the town of Perth carrying the business outside the town limit to Haggart's mill. It is done for no other purpose than to give the mill a greater head of water. It would have paid the Government well to have increased the depth of the tail-race instead of carrying out this work, and the result might have been accomplished without building a canal, which is of no particular benefit to the country, or it would have paid to have moved the old mill further down.

Mr. LISTER. What is its capacity?

Mr. GIBSON. About 75 barrels in the 24 hours. I have nothing to say against Mr. Wise's report, because he, being a Government employé, might be doing a very unwise thing if he had reported otherwise. Let an independent engineer visit the place and give an unbiassed report, and if he says this extension of the Tay Canal from Perth to Haggart's mill is a work of general utility, I will give him my head for a foot ball.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Too soft.

Mr. GIBSON. It is not too soft. It would be better for some hon, gentlemen opposite if they had The capital both softer heads and softer hearts. invested in this canal when finished will be, roughly speaking, $500,000. The interest on this may be placed at $20,000 per annum; maintenance of canal banks, &c., at $1,000 per mile, $6,000 per annum; cost of lock-tenders, wages 8 men at $1.25 per day, 200 days, $2,000. These items show that the annual cost of maintenance will be $28,000. that on the Welland Canal the cost is as follows: Maintenance, 27½ miles, staff, $97,035, or $3,528 per mile; repairs, $50,402, or $1,829 per mile. Carillon and Grenville Canal, 61 miles, wages, &c., Under these circum-$7,582, or $1,166 per mile. stances, I hold that it would have been much better to have deepened the river above the town of Perth so as to have increased the head of water for the hon. Postmaster General's mill, for this would have saved all this extra expenditure incurred to make it appear that the Government were building a canal for the purpose of increasing the trade of Perth, which canal, in my humble judgment, does not require any extension, as the canal basin is now situated in the centre of the town. For these reasons, I shall vote for the amendment of the hon. member for West Huron.

Mr. WATSON. As my name has been mentioned by the hon, gentleman opposite as one of the inspectors,—

Mr. BOWELL. Engineer,

Mr. WATSON. I am not an engineer. I was given to understand that I was supposed to be an engineer by the remarks of the acting Minister of Railways, but that is not my business. My business is that of a millwright, and I have some knowledge of that on which I am about to speak. Having some knowledge of the subject I felt it to be my duty to visit Perth for the purpose of seeing these public works. I believe it is the duty of every hon, member as far as possible to visit and view for himself, if he has any idea of forming an estimate of the work going on, as to how the Mr. Gibson.

public moneys are being expended. I have on former occasions asked this House to vote public money for the purpose of opening up and developing large trade. I have asked repeatedly for a vote for improving what are known as St. Andrew's rapids on the Red River. Not one dollar has been spent there. Talk of water power, thousands of horse power could be obtained there for the expenditure made on the Tay Canal. I visited Perth and took in the sights. I must say that I never was more surprised in my life to hear that any Government, or that any engineer would report to the Government, that they should expend the public moneys for the work that is now going on in Perth. I had heard of Haggart's mill, and I thought it was a large mill, that it might be one of these infant industries that the Government wished to protect and encourage, and that they wanted to construct the canal for the accommodation of the trade to and from that mill. But, Mr. Speaker, what did we find when we arrived at Perth? We found a small mill, with a capacity of turning out 75 barrels of flour in twenty-four hours; a two and a-half storey building, forty by sixty feet, and any gentleman in this House knows what a building of that description is worth. It is true it has a water power, and I suppose that the acting Minister of Railways will see fit to condemn the action of the Government, or at least to say that the Opposition are justified in bringing forward this matter, if it can be shown that the present Postmaster General has benefited by the construction of this canal. The hon. Minister of Railways stated that if it could be shown that the canal raised the head of water, then there would be good grounds for complaint. Now, Mr. Speaker, I venture to say, without being a surveyor, that the construction of this canal will give to Haggart's mill three and a half or four feet greater head of water than it has. It does not raise the dam, but it lowers the tail-race, which has exactly the same effect. Who is to be benefited by that? There is no person in Perth that I can find out, who will be benefited by the construction of that work, except the Postmaster General who owns the mill, and Senator McLaren who happens to own three acres of land on the opposite side to Mr. Haggart's mill. If that is the case, it is easily seen by whom the benefits are to be derived. The acting Minister of Railways has stated that the engineer sends in a report in respect to this work; but I say that that is not a very wise report. He says the object of the engineer was to bring the Tay Canal into the centre of the town of Perth. We might not complain of that expenditure, if the town of Perth demanded it, but I find that in the town of Perth, with a population of scarcely 4,000 inhabitants, there is no trade of any extent carried over the canal. not a distributing point now, as the trade is cut off by the railways from the town of Perth. other words, there is a canal built from the Rideau into Perth apparently for the accommodation of pleasure boats running from Perth, because we find that all the receipts we got last year from tolls from these two locks was $58.81, which clearly goes to show that there is no freight, and very little traffic ' over that canal. Now, the acting Minister of Railways states that the extension of the canal to the mill was to increase the wharfage. Well, Mr. Speaker, I should say that it would be well for a great numsee what an immense amount of freight is lying on the present wharf around the canal basin. When we went there, there was not a single craft visible to us except a small rowboat lying in that canal basin, and there was no freight lying on the wharves except the stone that was brought there for the purpose of building the abutments to the new bridge. The Government in order to make this extension pulled down a first-class stone bridge that had stood there for years, and would probably have stood for the next hundred years, if it was left alone. They pulled that down for the purpose of putting up a draw-bridge, in order to extend this canal. As was stated by the last gentleman who spoke (Mr. Gibson), we found, on arriving there, that there were certain reasons why the people of Perth should vote $4,000 for the purpose of having this work done, even if it were only to benefit the Postmaster General; because we found that there was a very large amount being expended on that work, and the pay-roll must be large, as, I think, the contractor told us that he had eighty-five men working at $1.40 per day. It was clearly a matter of speculation for the people of Perth to give this $4,000 in order to encourage this work. Outside the benefit which will be derived by the gentlemen owning the property where the water power is at present in existence, namely, Senator McLaren and the Postmaster General, there is not a single individual who will be benefited by this extension and this large expenditure, except the people of the town who will get the benefit of the money while the work is in progress. Now, the acting Minister of Railways and Canals told us that we should not take for granted that a speech made by the Minister of Public Works should be the final estimate of the cost of building any public work. I could understand that this might be the case in a work where there were engineering difficulties to contend with, but an estimate for simply digging a ditch over a level piece of country, ought to be calculated nearer than 50 per cent. of the cost. certainly think that reflects very badly upon the Public Works Department.

Mr. LISTER. The cost is more than 100 per cent. beyond the estimate.

Mr. WATSON. Yes. The estimated cost of this canal was $240,000, and now it is costing in the neighbourhood of $500,000; and when it is stated that there is only one lock at the mouth of this canal where it connects with the Rideau, it can be easily understood that there is nothing but a ditch to dig through a piece of level ground. do say that it is the business of every member of this House, be he an engineer or not, to go and see that canal. I believe that any intelligent man in this House—and no man should be elected to this House unless he had some fair understanding of knowing when he sees a work whether that work is in the interest of the country or not-I believe that if any man visits Perth and says that that work is done in the general interest of the country, or even in the interests of the people of the town of Perth, then I would be willing to do what my hon, friend from Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) says he is willing to do, that is, to give my head for any purpose. With the exception of benefiting the Postpose. With the exception of benefiting the Post-master General and his little mill the canal will do pense; and not a man in the town of Perth will no good. I contend that an infant industry of that kind, if it is no use without such a work, should have been bought out by the Government at once, for it would be very much cheaper to do that than to build such a canal as this. I venture to say that there is not a practical man in this House or in Canada who would pay $8,000 for that mill to-day. It has six set of double rollers, 9 by 18 inches, and 75 barrels per day is the capacity of the mill. It would have paid the Government far better to buy out the mill at once, or bring it down to the canal basin, if they wanted to give the Postmaster General his head of water. The Minister has told us that the people of Perth used this for a dumping ground; but I do not think that any sane man will say that the Government should have expended half a million dollars of public money on a canal in order to prevent the people of a town from using the land as a dumping ground. The present canal basin is within 75 yards of the post office and the Customs house of the town of Perth. It is right where the people want it. We might justify the expenditure of cutting out that canal basin if there were any idea of extending the canal so that it would facilitate the business of a town, but the Government, after all their expense in taking away a good stone bridge, and erecting a new drawbridge, and extending the canal up to Haggart's mill, are, in my opinion, doing an injury to the people of Perth, because they are carrying the freight past the business portion of the town. Not freight past the business portion of the town. only have we this expenditure on the canal, but we have a lot of other incidental expenses con-nected with it. We have six draw-bridges to take care of, three of them within the town of Perth, and a fourth one to be erected. We find that the Government has two persons attending to those three bridges that are now erected there, but I suppose that these bridges will not have to be opened very often, because when we were in Perth we saw no sign of navigation on the canal. If there were any object in extending the canal beyond Haggart's mill, it might be justifiable, but we could hear of no person who would even suggest that that canal might be extended further than the present extension. do say, as one of those interested in the expenditure of public money, and one who believes that money should be spent in opening up and developing public highways or waterways in Canada, when necessary; that it is an unjustifiable expenditure to throw this money away as it has been thrown away for the purpose of benefiting any one particular individual. If individuals wish to have the Government keep them and sustain their business, and improve their property, the best thing the Ministers could do is to visit these districts, and buy out the industries at once, to benefit their friends. I say that it would pay us ten times over to buy out the property at present in existence at Haggart's mill, than to extend this canal to the mill for the purpose of giving the owner of the mill this water power. For these reasons, I shall have great pleasure in supporting the resolution moved by the hon. member for West Huron, which I consider in the public interest. I am only sorry that there was not further time to enable some hon. gentleman from the other side of the House to visit that district and see how the public moneys are expended—to tell you that it will benefit any person except Mr. Haggart and Senator McLaren.

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I have heard a hundred say differently myself.

Mr. WATSON. I have not heard anybody say so, and when I visited the place I do not think anybody knew that I was a member of Parliament.

Mr. FERGUSGN (Leeds). It was the class of people you visited.

Mr. WATSON. I venture to say that the hongentleman, if he visited that place-

Mr. FERGUSON (Leeds). I was there before you were born.

Mr. WATSON. You may have been; but I venture to say that the hon, gentleman himself will not get up and justify the expenditure which was made in extending that canal, and I defy him or any other person to visit that locality and then say that the people of Perth will be benefited by that extension. If he has found out in what way it will benefit them, I venture to say that no other The statement made here to-day by the acting Minister of Railways, who gave Mr. Wise as his authority, is a very lame excuse. It cannot be shown that this work has benefited anybody but those two gentlemen, and there is no justification for spending the money of the people of Canada in this way, for the purpose of benefiting two of the Government's friends.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). Mr. Speaker, some time last week it was whispered in the corridors of the House that a deputation made up of members from the other side of the House had visited the Tay Canal. It was also whispered, after these hon gentlemen returned, that during their hilarious excursion they got so full of benzine and tangleleg that they did not know whether it was the Tay Canal or the St. Lawrence River.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I contend that no hon, gentleman has a right to throw any such insinuations across the floor of the House. The hon, gentleman makes a charge that the members from this side of the House who visited Perth were under the influence of liquor. I wish the hon, gentleman to understand that the deputation who visited that place are not built that way. If the hon gentleman had been along, perhaps there would have been good grounds for the charge.

Mr. SPEAKER. I presume that the hon. gentleman wants a ruling on the point he has raised. Then I rule that the hon, gentleman is not out of order: he is not referring to anything that has occurred in this House.

Mr. MACDONELL (Algoma). I merely mentioned what I have heard, and if I have been incorrectly informed that is my misfortune. I would be sorry to say anything against the morals of hon. gentlemen opposite when they go on little junketing tours of that kind. But with regard to the Tay Canal, it strikes me that money expended for developing the country, such as the money ex-pended on that work, is money spent in the best interest of the Dominion of Canada. I believe that every dollar of public money expended in the Do: minion is for the benefit of the people of this Dominmoney is expended there for the benefit of an hon. member of this House. I would scorn to use language of that kind, and say that the Postmaster General is being benefited by this scheme. I was glad to hear an hon, member from one of the Hurons state that certain boats pass through the canal. His remark brought to my remembrance an expenditure of public money which took place a few years ago in the district which I have the honour to represent. It was an expenditure on a work which was supposed to be a canal or a lock, and it is there yet, Sir, as a monument to the imbecility and inability of the Reform Government that existed from 1873 to 1878, and through that canal no boat has ever passed and no boat can pass. In fact it is not a canal at all; it is but a hole dug out of the rock, through which the water trickles, but through which a boat does not pass. Call it a canal if you choose; it is but a canal in appearance, in so far as it is a hole in the ground, and nothing else; and when this Government is charged with having built a canal that is of some use, a canal that will float boats and through which merchandise can be carried, it should not for one moment be compared with the expense of half a million dollars which was incurred in the district of Algoma to make a hole in the ground. Sir, I am prepared to vote against that resolution, as I think that public money expended for the benefit of that particular part of the Dominion is for the benefit of the whole Dominion of Canada.

Mr. FRASER. I have some interest in this discussion, coming as I do from a province that has been attempting to get some improvements of such a character as would be in the interest of the people. I congratulate the hon, gentleman who has just sat down upon the admirable way in which he seems to confuse in his own mind right and wrong. He is in favour of spending money anywhere and everywhere, he does not care where it is, and then he turns around and says that money was expended wrongly somewhere in his constituency..., No wonder the hon, gentleman should confuse these matters, when he rises in holy indignation and scorn; and has the meanness to speak about gentlemen who are not only his peers but his superiors, and to impute to them things which never happened. He is a fine man to speak of scorn in this House—is he not ?—and to lecture people upon a matter of public interest, when he has so far forgotten himself as to drag in an untruth about gentlemen who went in the public interest to look after an expenditure of public money. I trust that when the hon gentleman gets up again, the proprieties of life and the common decencies that should prevail among gentlemen will prevent him saying things about men which he would not dare to say outside of this House where these gentlemen could have an opportunity to answer him. So much for the scorn and noble indignation of the hon member for Algoma, who seems to have learnt from the boundless acres that he represents, the habit of making boundless statements in this House without data and without respecting the proprieties of life. Permit me to say, so far as the matter under discussion is concerned, though I did not visit the place myself, that as the hon. member for Marquette says, it is the business of every public man, by visiting the locus of any ion, and it is a base insinuation to suggest that public work in this Dominion, to make himself Mr. WATSON.

acquainted with it. I am very much surprisedperhaps I am wrong, but I understood that the acting Minister of Railways himself has not visited that canal, although it is very near his place. asked a question a few days ago about the deepening of the East River, between New Glasgow and the town of Picton, a river about six or seven miles long; and New Glasgow is a town of more than twice the population of Perth, while Pictou is a town of nearly the same population. The deepening of this river would be of great advantage, not only to the people of the county but to trade generally, because, as everybody knows, Pictou is one of the best harbours in Nova Scotia. And what was I told by the present comatose Minister of Public Works! I was told that investigation had been made and surveys had been made. And here let me say that when a deputation from the town of New Glasgow came first to Ottawa and presented the question to the Government, they were told that nothing could be done until the spring when the ice would be gone, and that an investigation would be then made. But I noticed last winter, just as soon as the election was on, men were down there at work cutting holes through the ice, which was two or three feet thick at the time. I was told that the work would cost over $200,000, and, therefore, it could not be done; but here we have an expenditure of $500,000 to enable two or three pleasure boats to navigate four or five feet of water to the town of Perth. That may be all right for the town of Perth. difficulty with us is that the river is very crooked, but we have built some of the largest ships ever built in Nova Scotia, and taken them down that river, only it is rather difficult, and for $200,000 we would have one of the finest rivers-something like the great rivers of Scotland, which have been deepened for navigation purposes. But in the case of the Tay Canal, the result we obtained from this expenditure of $500,000 is a depth of four or five feet of water, and a revenue, in round numbers, of $59 per year. That is the value of the investment. Are not our people being taught what it is to be economical? I admit that the revenue need not, and in fact cannot, always be in proportion to the amount invested. I admit that the Government must expend money, and that the people need not always expect they will receive a return for the money invested; but I submit that the amount of traffic on that canal is something ridiculous; and if the amount of revenue we now receive is any indication of what that canal will do in the future, I am bound to say that money has been thrown There is one sound principle upon which every Government should act in their expenditure, and that is, that the expenditure should be made always where it is most required. Is it required up there? When I heard the acting Minister of Railways speak about the raging waves, I pictured to myself something similar to what we have down by the sea. I heard the lashing and the roar of the Tay, but when I came to understand that all this lashing and roaring was in a turgid canal of four or five feet of inland fresh water, I began to think that it takes very little to frighten some

Mr. BOWELL Give the hon. member for Huron credit for that.

Mr. FRASER. My hon. friend the acting Minster of Railways gave the clue to that, as I understood him to say some vessels were cast ashore up there. If I am wrong, I beg to be corrected.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say anything about that.

Mr. FRASER. But this I wish to say, that in all the lower provinces, and I do not want to be sectional, but bring this up as showing how unwise the Government is acting—in the lower provinces we have small harbours where the fishermen live, and the expenditure of $500,000 would give us fifty harbours for our fishermen—fifty good substantial harbours. Would not that be a benefit to these people who have to risk their lives by being out in boats during such storms as I would not like the hon. gentleman to see. There we have storms, but here on the Tay Canal, in five feet of water, something like a little creek running through a farm, only a little wider, to talk of storms is absurd. Hon, gentlemen opposite ought not to think that it is wrong in the Opposition, as it ought not to be wrong on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, to visit our public works and see whether our money is properly expended or not. There is no particular privilege hedging in a Minister of the Crown, and if the public money is devoted to serving his private interests, the Government is more culpable than if it were expended to serve a private member. not going to say that expenditure was made on behalf of the Minister. I have not been there, but I do say it looks very much like it, and if we are to believe the evidence, and you will notice, Sir, that even the report of the Minister, very carefully worded, got up for the very purpose, only says that the Postmaster General is not benefited more than anybody else. That may mean a very great deal. The hon, gentleman may own a lot of property there and consequently may be benefited with other property holders; or it may mean that nobody at all is going to be benefited, and that money is to be thrown away after all, and he will be as badly off as the others. But it seems to me, if the only result of this expenditure is to help a mill which only grinds seventy five barrels a day, it is an expenditure which should not be made. will not say that is the reason it was made, but the evidence looks like that. The point is this: Are the Government to go on spending money just to suit their own friends, or should they take into account the places that need the expenditure most? I contend that the closest investigation should be made, and any Minister in Ottawa, who lives so near the Tay Canal, and who knew that $500,000 was being expended there and did not visit it, did not do his duty. Half a million dollars is a large amount of money, of course, not to hon: gentlemen opposite, but it is a large amount of money, when we consider how little is spent all over the Domin-The evidence before me satisfies me that the last expenditure at least, an expenditure made outside of Parliament, looks very suspicious. I think the acting Minister of Railways himself will admit that when an appropriation of this kind is made outside of Parliament-

Mr. HAGGART. If it is so.

Mr. FRASER. I mean this last expenditure. If it is made by the Government without having submitted to the Parliament first—

Mr. HAGGART. If it is so.

Mr. FRASER. Yes, it may be suspicious. That itself may furnish a ground for suspicion. I do not say that that of itself is sufficient, but this I will say, that I believe that there is no town in this country with a population of only 4,000 whose trade will warrant us, when we have so many railways, in expending $500,000 for a canal only 4 or 5 feet deep. This country cannot afford to spend $500,000 to provide a 5-foot canal for a town of 4,000 people. The resources of this country are not sufficient. The country is not getting settled quickly enough for that. We will not have the means of paying that, because when we make that expenditure there, there are a hundred other places where such expenditure not only is necessary, but the trade is larger, and which will have the right to demand that this be taken as a precedent. report says that the trade has been doubled, and I understood the Minister to say that the trade has been doubled. Doubled, when the whole amount collected is $58! That is a very big trade to be If it were not for the canal, the doubled. amount of carriage would only pay $29. To men coming from the Maritime Provinces, when they think of the hundreds of schooners that are never heard of and do more trade than the whole trade brought down that canal, I cannot tell you how ridiculous this whole matter appears. I would ask the Government to take into consideration those cases I have named, where the people and the country would be largely benefited, and where they would have the assurance that they were acting in the best interests of the best citizens in the country. And they were doing this for people who could not help themselves. I mean the fishermen of the second largest county in Nova Scotia. I heard here that this Parliament would not give the money to these men because it costs about half the money to distribute it, and I fear that my native county is not getting what it should. Some other influences must be at work. I would not like to impeach any Minister for having given any benefit to any person other than he should give, but, when a man was strong enough to use his influence with the Ministers, I think the Minister yielded to the aggressive methods which were used by his supporters.

Mr. BOWELL. When did the conversation which the hon, gentleman referred to take place? Mr. FRASER. I did not say that you were the Minister I referred to.

Mr. BOWELL. You referred to the comatose Minister of Railways.

Mr. FRASER. My reference was to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. HAGGART. As this is a matter which particularly interests me, and which I was the means of inducing the Government to enter into an expenditure for in 1883, perhaps it is necessary that I should make some explanation in regard to it. The first charge against me is that made by the hon member for Huron that I induced the then Minister of Railways to construct a canal in order to benefit myself and the people of my locality on representations which were, perhaps, unfounded. The statement that I made at that time was that it was the intention of some parties in the vicinity to induce the construction of smelting works for brought up to the town of Perth, it would facilitate the smelting of these ores in that town. At that time there was a large traffic going to the town of Perth, and I then believed that it was the intention of several parties to erect smelting works and to bring the ore into the town of Perth to be smelted there. As to the construction of the canal, you would imagine from what has been stated that I was interested in the matter. The first idea as to the construction of the canal was brought up in 1883. It was then proposed to construct that canal by the enterprise of the merchants of the town of Perth, who proposed to put their own money into it. Afterwards a grant was given by the Government of Canada to assist in the building of this canal. The island in the centre of the town of Perth was given in order to assist in the building of this canal, and the merchants there were anxious to see the canal constructed from the mouth of the river to the place where it is now. A canal was constructed by private enterprise, but of course that canal had not the depth of water that members from Nova Scotia require for their canals in order to accommodate the large schooners which come in there; but it was sufficient for private enterprise to build a canal of a certain depth in order to encourage the local trade. They did that and they put their hands in their pockets in order to do it. Afterwards, when money was being distributed through the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick and other places for public works of public utility, I thought that one of the oldest counties in Canada had a claim to some assistance, a county which has contributed as much to the public revenue as any other part of the Dominion and had never received any return. Then I asked the Government to assist in the construction of that work, showing the expenditure that had been made by private enterprise and telling them what benefit would accrue from the completion of this work. These gentlemen say that there is no benefit derived by the town of Perth from this canal. The fact is that the benefit derived by the town of Perth in regard to the importation and the exportation of The freight goods amounts to over $30,000 a year. exported and imported has been 400 tons a week, or 24,000 tons a year since the construction of that canal. The reduction on the cost of that freight because of the construction of the canal is $1.50 a ton, or $30,000 a year. Is that no benefit to the people of that locality? Is that no benefit to the people of the Dominion generally? I need not show the absurdity and folly of this resolution which is introduced in 1891 and professes to find fault with the legislation of 1883, and with the statement made by the Minister of Railways in 1887, 1888 and 1889. If they had any fault to find at that time, why did they not vote against the legislation then, and move against it? Why did they not raise their voice against it, instead of waiting till 1891, when they find new life and go back to review legislation which took place seven or eight years ago? As to the statement made by the hon. gentleman that this expenditure was nade solely for the purpose of the extension in my interest, I do not mean to say anything. The canal from Perth to Oliver's Ferry was built before that with 3 feet of water and five wooden locks, and the water was 3½ feet at the time that the iron and other ores, and that, if the canal was water in the Rideau Canal was 51 feet. The present canal is a great benefit to. the country. I say the expenditure was perfectly justified. is a benefit to that section of the country. Look at the vote that was given by the town of Perth for the purpose of contributing towards the construction of the basin and for erecting a bridge over the Tay Canal. The ratepayers of Perth, by ten to one, voted $8,000 for that purpose; and will you tell me that no man in the town of Perth has received any benefit from that expenditure except the owner of one small mill and the Hon. Senator McLaren? The hon, gentleman says that the extension was made for the purpose of increasing the head of water for the mill I own there. say that his statement is incorrect, it does not increase the head or fall of my property six inches. I risk my reputation as a Minister standing in this House, by challenging the hon. gentleman to get any engineer in this country who will go up and make a survey and confirm the statement the hon. gentleman has made. The engineer who recommended the extension says himself that it is not a fact, and that it does not add one single inch to the head or fall of the property which I possess

Mr. WATSON. The engineer's report does not say so.

Mr. HAGGART. The engineer's report does say so.

Mr. WATSON. Not the one that has been read.

Mr. HAGGART. The engineer's report says so. The extension was not made for my benefit. not care one bit about the extension. It was urged upon me by the ratepayers of the town of Perth, and I think I spoke to the Minister of Railways, stating that there was an unexpended balance for completing the Tay Canal, and that it was in the interest of the canal that the extension should be I stated, and the engineers stated, that there was an old saw-mill at the head of it, a couple of hundred yards above, and all the refuse was dumped into the water every spring and had accumulated in a large pile; the ice brought it down in large quantities into the canal, and they thought it would be much cheaper to extend it up When he was there than to remove that mill. doing it I said: Perhaps it would be more in the interest of those residing along the extension that there should be a strong bridge erected. I believe the people in the town of Perth wished it, I had no particular interest in it at all. The answer to me was that if it was extended the people of Perth would have to construct the bridge. An estimate was made for the cost of the bridge which was placed at $4,000, and this sum the people of Perth voted and paid in cash for the purpose of building the bridge.

Mr. LISTER. That was the superstructure.

Mr. HAGGART. That was the superstructure. The piers of the bridge cost, I suppose, $5,000 or $6,000, and the total extension, as I understood it, cost in the neighbourhood of $19,000 or $20,000, of which sum the town of Perth contributed $4,000 towards a steel bridge. Those are the simple facts in regard to the building of the canal and its extension. Isay that in that section of the country it is a work which everyone is proud of; the people consider it not only in the interest of the place, but it saves them a large amount in freight. The amount saved upon freight runs up to $30,000 a year, which sum is saved to that section of the country, and represents more than 6 per cent. interest on When a statement the whole amount expended. was made in the House concerning the advantages of building that canal, I well remember the then leader of the House asking: Would it develop more water power? And he asked me what was the principal reason of the extension from the Rideau up to Perth. The answer was that it would enable the public to effect a great saving on the amount of freight carried over that canal, and it would enable us to say to the railways around us: If you do not give us freights at fair rates, we have a competing line which we will use, and in that way the canal would be a public benefit. The hon, member for Niagara (Mr. Gibson) has made an absurd calculation as to the probable annual expenditure on that canal in paying parties for taking care of the canal, the locks and the bridges, including the wear and tear, and he comes to the conclusion that it will cost about $28,000 a year.

Mr. GIBSON. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I made a calculation of 8 men's wages, at $1.25 each, making $10 a day, which, for 200 days in a year, would be $2,000. I added to that the wear and tear of the canal, but I limited my deductions according to the experience of other canals, and taking the Tay Canal as a basis, I estimated the wear and tear at $6,000, which, with the wages added, would amount to $8,000, and adding $20,000 for interest, I made $28,000.

Mr. HAGGART. I misunderstood the hon. gen-But even $8,000 a year for management would be largely in excess of the requirement; one-quarter of that amount would be quite sufficient. Let him look at the estimates of the Government engineers of the sums required as yearly expenditures upon both the Tay and the Rideau Canals. The Tay Canal is only six miles in length, while the Rideau Canal extends from Kingston down to Ottawa, and the whole amount of the annual expenditure upon the latter canal is in the neighbourhood, I think, of $32,000. If you will look at the old accounts from year to year you will find that Mr. Wise's estimate fully reached the amount that is expended each year; so you can see the absurdity of the figures given by the hon. gentleman when he says that the Tay Canal will require an expenditure of $8,000 a year. The hon, gentleman takes the breadth of the bottom of the prism, which is to be built from the extension up to the mill, and you will find $32,000 in the Estimates this year for both it and the other, including the excavation of rock from the bridge up to the end of the extension. If the hon, gentleman will only wait until the result is known, he will find out that there is not nearly the quantity of rock, nor nearly the expenditure, which he anticipates. I do not know what the amount will be, but I say his estimate is far in excess of the probable requirements. There is another point. The canal was open for traffic only last summer; the lock-tender was put on last summer, and the bridge-tenders were only put on the first of the present month. There has been very little traffic, because the canal was not really open until the 1st of July of this year. I have nothing more to say upon the subject, except that I think this expenditure was perfectly justified, and the people in that section of the country have found it to be greatly in their interest. Certainly, they considered it to be so, when they put into the enterprise a large sum of money. No expenditure can produce more beneficial results to the people of any portion of the province than this expenditure on the Tay Canal. The action of the people of the town of Perth proves that they consider that it has been a boon to that section of the country, and I have shown that they save in freights alone the sum of $30,000 a year. So I think that the Government, in making this expenditure, has been perfectly justified by the results.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have listened with some pleasure to my hon, friend the Postmaster General. The first thing I think that would strike forcibly on the minds of his colleagues, and on the minds of hon, gentlemen on that side of the House, is that he must be astonished at his own moderation in only asking for a paltry $500,000 for so desirable an end. And knowing the weight, and knowing the deserved influence which my hon. friend, as a member of the old guard, and in various other relations, has always exercised over the heads, shall I say, of some of his colleagues, I, for my part, am rather surprised that my hon. friend did not go it one better, and demand at least a round million for the benefit of the town of sides, after hearing the enthusiastic defence of this expenditure by the acting Minister of Railways and Canals, and the much more temperate address from the hon, gentleman who has just sat down, a doubt does remain in my mind, and the doubt, Mr. Speaker, is this: Whether, all things considered, a much more wilful and wanton waste of public money was ever incurred in this country. We have seen a good many schemes in which the public money was wasted by both hands. We have voted $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 for a Chignecto Ship Railway, which I believe to be as useless an enterprise as was ever formed on the face of the earth. We have known what it is to have to consent to an expenditure of millions on millions made on the faith of another Minister of Railways, who formally declared that by spending a couple of millions we would reduce the distance by the Intercolonial Railway to important points by 45 miles, and which afterwards turned out to have the effect, if it did have the effect, of causing a reduction of four miles. But I think, taking all things into consideration, bearing in mind all the facts of the case, bearing in mind what was known to the Government and the country when this work was entered into, the Postmaster, General may be congratulated on having extracted a larger sum out of the public treasury on shallower pretenses than any other hon, member has done. The hon. member tells us there was an ancient canal built there some 50 years ago. If the condition of things was as it existed 50 years ago, there would have been some considerable justification for the hon, gentleman's defence, because in those days railways were not. The only navigation open to the citizens of Perth and the people in the neighbourhood of the Rideau Canal was by the Rideau Canal, and consequently it was natural that the citizens of Perth should wish to spend some of their own money in obtaining a connection. But what was the case in The case in 1883 was that a railway was public money forever to benefit it to the extent of Mr. HAGGART.

running through the town of Perth, giving the people full access to their markets and making them, to all intents and purposes, absolutely and completely independent of this canal. What was the fact in the town of Perth as to this same Rideau Canal, of which the Tay Canal is a branch? Why, the fact is this, and it has been pointed out by me, it has been pointed out on the floor of this House times without number, that the Rideau Canal has all but become an abandoned work, that the Rideau Canal is ceasing to do the traffic and business of the country, that the Rideau Canal is at this moment in such a state that, while we had to pay for the maintenance of the canal an amount of $55,000 per annum, independent of extra sums occasionally required for repairs, the total income of the canal is just $7,000, or one-eighth of the amount of the annual expenses, without taking into account the cost of maintenance, or a farthing on the cost of construction, which I believe was done by the British Government. We will now consider another point which the hon. gentleman made. He admits that $500,000 of the public money has been spent for the town of Perth. He admits that there will be a considerable charge, which, however, he places at a less sum than did the hon, member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson), whose authority on this subject as an eminently practical man is, I think, as good as that of the Minister; there will After hearing the statements on both be, at all events, a considerable annual charge to keep this work in repair, and judging from our past experience I should say that the annual charge would be much more likely to approximate to the sum named by the hon, member for Lincoln than that by the Postmaster General. He tells us that by an expenditure which he places at $22,000 or $23,000, but which the hon. member for Lincoln places at $28,000, an expenditure of $30,000 may be saved in freight in the town of Perth. His statement in that respect will hardly First, he declared that there is an stand washing. annual export of 400 tons a week. Very well. will be well, however, to remember that for a long period of the year, unless the climatic conditions alter considerably, the Tay Canal will be sealed up firmly against all freight whatever, and that, even if there were 400 tons a week, it could not benefit Perth during half the time assumed. I should like to know whether the hon, gentleman means to tell the House that, having a railway at their doors, running straight through from Perth to Montreal, there is any reasonable ground for believing that the bulk of that traffic or the great proportion of it, even if the railway companies were to put up rates would go by the very uncertain and tedious navigation of the Rideau Canal to Kingston and then go down to whatever point it might be consigned. The more the matter is looked into the more it will be found that no such benefit as the hon. gentleman suggests can be obtained by the town of Perth. He says there has been a reduction on 20,000 tons of freight of $1.50 per ton. I think that reduction would have come in any case, and, if the facts are investigated, it will be found the reduction did come to them wholly and entirely irrespective of the construction of this little six-mile canal. That, however, is a point which will repay some investigation. And it is well we should consider it, in the case of a town represented by a Minister, it is worth while to spend dollar for dollar of the securing a possible reduction such as the hon, gentleman alleges has been obtained, because that is what his contention amounts to. The hon. gentleman used another very extraordinary argument. Says the hon, gentleman—and I call the attention of the House to this-there were large outlays going on under the present Government, large outlays were going on all over Canada, in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Quebec, and he claimed for the good county town of Perth and for the county he represented a share and a right liberal share of the plunder. That is about the length and breadth of the hon, gentleman's argument. Where are we going to come to if it is laid down by a Minister of State that if outlays are made in other provinces, presumably for objects of general utility, thereupon every other sub-division of Canada is entitled to claim an expenditure to the tune of $500,000 or thereabouts? The hon, gentleman in criticizing my hon, friend's argument used a remarkable illustration. My hon. friend was speaking of the cost of maintaining an actual canal mile by mile. He put that cost at That is a thing I am not in a $1,000 per mile. position to judge from my own personal knowledge; but the answer made by the Postmaster General is this: Why, he says, there is the Rideau Canal extending from Kingston to Ottawa, over 100 miles, and the cost of that is only $33,000 annually.

Mr. HAGGART. $32,000, including the Tay Canal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Tay Canal being just built, it at present requires no very great outlay. My hon, friend spoke of the future. I know the Rideau Canal almost as well as does the Postmaster General, and it may interest the House to know that the greater part is not a canal at all, but a series of lakes, for the proper keeping up of the water in which no repairs on the banks, most assuredly, are likely to be called for.

Mr. HAGGART. The Tay Canal is mostly river.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the Tay Canal, as constructed, will require banks to be kept up. That is the information I have in regard to the matter. I do not think if it be a river, it is at all likely to be so free from requiring repairs as is a canal which, like the Rideau Canal, consists mainly of a series of lakes. There is no parallel whatever between the cost of keeping up a "canalled" river, if you choose to use such a word, and between the cost of keeping up a socalled canal, which really consists of a series of very short canals connecting one lake with another. The Minister also laid a great deal of stress on another point. He declared that it was proof of the wisdom of this expenditure of half a million dollars that the town of Perth was willing to put up eight thousand dollars for the sake of having five hundred thousand dollars spent for its benefit, a large part of which went for wages, and all of which wages were spent in the town of Perth. Which of my hon, friends here would not enter into bonds with the Government that he will cause his county or the chief town of his county to furnish them, not with $8,000, but I venture to say with $80,000, if the Government on their part will consent to spend $500,000? But, Sir, the hon. gentleman alluded to another point, on which I think he was altogether ill-advised. The hon, gentleman | ment entertained, even at that early date, for the declared that we were not justified on this side of the House in bringing up the question of the wisdom of this large expenditure, because, forsooth, against our protests and remoustrances, the Government had in former times succeeded in passing votes through the House on this subject. I say that now is the proper time for my hon. friend to bring this up, when he is in a position to show to this House and to the people of this country with what wasteful lavishness the public money has been expended to gratify a powerful and influential sup-How are we to know; how are we to tell beforehand, that this same Tay Canal which we were told originally would cost $130,000, which we were told afterwards would cost $240,000; how were we to tell that this was going to cost $500,000? Why, Sir, had we based our opposition to it on the ground that it was sure to cost half a million dollars, what would have been the answer of the hon. gentleman? How the late Minister of Railways, Sir Charles Tupper, would have declaimed, would have made this House ring with his denunciations of the ignorance and presumption of members on this side of the House who disputed the careful calculations which he himself had verified at every point, and to which he would pledge his reputation that this work would not exceed $240,000. what does the engineer's report say? Well, Sir, it is a cautiously drawn report; it is such a report as I would expect would be drawn by an officer of the Department who was sent down specially to report in defence of an anticipated parliamentary attack. In that report which was quoted just now, does the engineer say that this is a valuable work? Does he say that he approves of it; does he enter into any calculation or give any reason why a work so easy as this, a work the cost of which should have been estimated for within a mere fraction, cost nearly $270,000 more than was originally estimated should be spent? All that he says is this: That this work and particularly this extension which the hon, gentleman speaks of, would be a useful drain for the town of Perth; and would be a useful outlet for certain impurities and certain matters which they appear to have been in the habit of precipitating into the canal. The report is not that it does not advantage my hon. friend the Postmaster General, but that it does not advantage him in particular. particular. I am not going to enter into that particular question. I have not been at Perth; I do not know for my part how this would affect his mill; but, I think, it will be obvious to most gentlemen, that if the effect of is to extend a navigable canal a thousand feet from the Perth basin'up to the hon. gentleman's mill, that it must be of some considerable value to that property. I am not going to say—we have not any evidence on that point—that this extension was undertaken for the purpose of benefiting the hon. gentleman's mill; but I should think, as a matter of fact, that whether it did or did not enable him to obtain an additional head of water power, that the probabilities were all and strongly in favour of it benefiting the mill itself. I think that it is reasonably clear on the face of it; that if you extend the navigation up to his mill door, some considerable sum may be fairly added to the value of his mill. But the truth is this: I think that this must be regarded as a small testimonial to show the extreme respect which the Govern-

member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). The hon, gentleman says truly that his county had not received anything for any considerable time, although it had benefited largely, no doubt, in the early days by the construction of the Rideau Canal, as all that part of the country did benefit. I think, Sir, that the real object of the matter was to show, and to convince the citizens of South Lanark, that my hon. friend was a power in the state and a power behind the throne, and as I say: What was half a million of the money of the people of Canada, compared with establishing my hon, friend firmly in his constituency? This is a very fair specimen—and that is what makes it of importance—of the way in which we have been spending public money during There was no reason on earth, these past years. there was no sufficient or adequate excuse, for adding half a million dollars to the public debt and for adding a considerable charge to the public expenditure from year to year, other than this: that, no doubt, it was a very convenient thing for a prominent supporter of the Government that this expenditure should be gone into. They had the flimsy excuse, as I must call it, that, half a century ago, when the whole condition of the country was entirely different from what it is now, certain citizens of Perth for their own benefit had constructed a shallow canal in that quarter. But, knowing that Perth was adequately supplied with railway accommodation, they had no excuse for voting half a million dollars under these circumstances. Now, there are a few points here which the House may very well have its attention called to. hon, the Minister of Customs takes refuge in the statement that, always and under all circumstances, engineers' estimates are apt to be in-correct. That is a very poor excuse under the circumstances which now exist. If there was one thing on the face of the earth which it should have been easy for competent engineers to estimate to a nicety, it would be the work of constructing a 4 or 5-foot deep canal in such a locality as that is, from the town of Perth to the Rideau There could have been no difficulty there about boring the ground to the requisite depth, there could have been no difficulty there in ascertaining almost to a pennyweight what was the extent of rock cutting, or earth cutting, or all the other expense that would be necessary. ought to have been no difficulty whatever, and if the department was worth its salt it ought to have known within 5 per cent., or 10 per cent. at the outside, all that this work could possibly cost. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron), in bringing forward this motion, showed that not once, but twice and three times, very misleading statements, to say the least of them, were made to this House. He showed that time and again the House was told that everything had been expended that required to be expended, that time and again they were told that this work could be off our hands for a certain sum, and that, notwithstanding the former statements made both in the estimates submitted, and the declaration of the hon. Minister, the practical result is that we have a dead loss of at least $20,000 a year in the shape of interest. may depend upon it that we shall have in all probability an annual loss of from $5,000 to $10,000 inflicted upon us for the purpose of keeping this work in a proper state of repair; and when it is all | do. Sir Richard Cartwright.

done, Sir, with all deference to the Postmaster General, I doubt exceedingly if a committee of practical men were appointed to investigate the subject, and to have conferences with the railway company, and examine into all the savings that could possibly be effected by giving the citizens of Perth the Rideau Canal extension to Kingston, from which point they would have to ship to other points-I doubt exceedingly if they would not report that instead of a saving of $1.50 a ton being effected on the 400 tons a week that he speaks of, there would not be a saving of 15 cents a ton. With regard to the personal advantage, I do not refer to it, although, be it more or less, this work must redound to his advantage. The hon. gentleman did not touch, nor did the hon. Minister of Customs touch, the fact that apparently this extension was made without acquainting Parliament with the intention of the Government to make it. the original statements made to us it was said that this canal would extend from the town of Perth to a certain point on the Rideau Canal. Now, it turns out that an extension of a considerable distance and at a considerable cost has been made, with which the House was never acquainted until the motion of my hon. friend was laid before us. I think, that is not dealing fairly with the And more than that, I think a very bad precedent has been established. I think, that other members of this House, supporters of the Government, relying on the example of the hon. Postmaster General and the doctrine he has preached, that, because his county had not received any considerable public expenditure, he has done a meritorious thing in using his influence and position as a supporter of the Government to extract half a million out of the public funds for the purpose of benefiting his own county, will be only too ready to go and do likewise. Now, Sir, we have no half millions to throw away. I will venture to say that throughout the length and breath of this Dominion there are to-day, not one, but five hundred, or it may be a thousand, public works of infinitely more utility than this canal at Tay, all of which are naturally enough clamouring at the doors of the public treasury for assistance; and the Government having granted this request, have made it doubly difficult for themselves to refuse the requests of others; because such an example as this under the circumstances will most assuredly be quoted only too readily by all the hon. gentleman's followers; and I am very much afraid that when you come to consider the incidental results that will flow from this expenditure, we shall be well off if we escape from this Tay Canal without finding that it has involved us in an expenditure of as many millions as it has cost us in hundreds of thousands. But, Sir, the gist of the position of the hon. Minister of Customs is to be found in one or two remarks he made. The hon, gentleman appeared to me not to enter with very great zeal or zest into the task of defending this expenditure. He did it in a rather perfunctory manner. He appeared to feel very much like a certain eminent politician who remarked: "Mr. Speaker, this is a very bad case; we must apply our majority to it." That is almost precisely in terms what the hon. Minister of Customs has suggested to his colleagues and supporters.

Mr. BOWELL. I said that is what you would

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman did not like the task of defending it, and he wound up his speech by encouraging his friends to use their majority to put down this motion, on the ground that apparently they could not afford to quarrel with so powerful and influential a person as the Postmaster General.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MULOCK. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to discuss the whole question of the Tay Canal and extension. I think that this question can be fairly divided into two distinct parts—that which has to do with the authorized portion of the work, and that which has to do with the unauthorized por-I understand that it is admitted on all sides that there was no parliamentary authority for the entering into a contract for the construction of the canal from the basin in the town of Perth to the northerly terminus at Haggart's mill. Therefore, the Government have taken upon themselves the responsibility of establishing the necessity for that work under that legislation which alone authorizes the Government to expend money without the consent of Parliament. Is this, then, one of the works unforeseen and so urgent that the Government are warranted in applying to it the Audit Act, and in pledging the country's credit for it without the previous sanction of Parliament? I do not understand that the Government have seriously defended the work on any ground whatever. The acting Minister of Railways did not venture to compromise his reputation as a public man by saying that the work was a necessary one, a useful one or a wise one. The only extent to which he committed himself was in reading the report of Mr. Wise, the engineer of the Rideau Canal. Now, first of all, I would question the propriety of the Government in seeking to shoulder upon an officer of the Government responsibility for administrative policy. It is the duty of an engineer to decide upon such questions as location, mode of construction, and for that matter mode of operation; but it is no part of the duty of an engineer, in the employment of the Government, to be a witness in support of the policy of the Government in erecting public works. There is an attempt made by the Government of the day to get a defence from a subordinate of the department, when they are unable to find one themselves; and what sort of a defence do they get? They send out an officer after the work is under contract, to try and find an excuse for their previous act; and we may assume that however honourable the engineer is—and I believe that he is a thoroughly honourable and reliable public servant—we can understand that, nevertheless, in his desire to accomplish the object of his mission, he will certainly give the Government the benefit of the doubt. He was, then, sent out on the mission of trying to find an excuse for, this work. Ordinarily one would suppose that the justification would have preceded the fact, but in this case the excuse comes after the fact; and what is the excuse offered by the engineer? In his report, in endeavouring to establish the utility of this work, he says what? Not that it is a necessary work at the present time; not that there is any certainty that it will ever be a necessary work; but simply fiable is that the tail race-this, that if the navigation of the canal is extended from the basin to Haggart's mill, it will in the future afford facilities for the construction of wharfage along that extent, should wharfage ever be necessary. Was there ever a more flimsy excuse offered for an unjustifiable job than the defence offered under this report? The engineer says in so many words, I commend this report to the attention of the Postmaster General, for, after all, he must take the individual responsibility of this work, as there is no doubt he set the idea affoat, or, at all events, encouraged it until it matured, and I, therefore, commend his attention to the report of his own officer condemning the work as absolutely useless. Mr. Wise says: If you ask me to find out an excuse for this work, if you ask me to say what possible public service it can render, all I can say is that it does not render any public service at present, and, so far as I can see, it is not likely to; but should it ever be necessary, in the dim and distant future, to erect additional wharfage, then as you have the tail race made navigable, that will afford facilities to utilize wharfage. If we required any evidence on that point, which we do not, we could easily show there is no present necessity for any additional wharfage, and, therefore, there was no necessity, on the ground of wharfage, to extend the navigability of the canal. The hon. Postmaster General has not dared to commit himself to the suggested excuse that wharfage is necessary. He will not, at this moment, rise in his place, and say that the condition of trade in the town of Perth to-day required the extension of the canal to his mill for the purpose of supplying additional wharfage accommodation. I ask him now if he will say that, as that will have some effect on my argument. He is

Mr. HAGGART. The extension of the canal does not go to my mill.

Mr. MULOCK. That is not the point. I ask the hon, gentleman-

Mr. BOWELL. That is the point you asked.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not ask where it went to or where it did not go to, but I understand it goes te Haggart's mill.

Mr. HAGGART. That is a mistake.

Mr. MULOCK. No matter where it goes, I ask whether additional wharfage is necessary? That is the question I put, and that is the question the hon. Minister cannot answer. The Minister will not dare to say that the trade of Perth requires additional wharfage, and the only excuse the engineer can find for the construction of this work is that, at some future period, additional wharfage may be required. The Government engineer having said, in effect, that at present no additional wharfage is required, and the Postmaster General having admitted that by his silence—for he is always ready to make statements when they will serve his purpose—he having now endorsed the statement of the engineer that additional wharfage is not required, and that being the only excuse, with the exception of one other to which I will refer in a moment, the construction of this work, so far as utility is concerned, was not at all required. The other ground which the engineer takes to say that possibly the work might be justi-

Mr. HAGGART. Let me inform the hon. gentleman that the extension was made on the recommendation of Mr. Page, the engineer.

Mr. MULOCK. Have you got the report?

Mr. HAGGART. No; but I have seen it.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman desires to take any advantage out of the reports of the engineers, let those reports be laid upon the Table. Where is the report of the engineer of July, 1890, on which the late Minister of Railways passed some judgment? Where is the rest of the papers? Why have the papers moved for in the Public Accounts Committee not been brought down in order to enable us to properly investigate all the circumstanees? The hon. Postmaster General was in the Public Accounts Committee when they were ordered, and now he says that he has some reports.

Mr. HAGGART. I was not in the Committee. Mr. MULOCK. I beg the hon, gentleman's pardon, he was.

Mr. HAGGART. I am not aware that the Public Accounts Committee ordered the papers.

The hon. gentleman was pre-Mr. MULOCK. sent and consented to the passage of the order. moved it, and the hon. gentleman bowed his head in assent.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not remember.

Then the hon. gentleman's Mr. MULOCK. memory is defective. I remember it well. I come back to the point that, so far as the Government are concerned, they advocated the extension on the ground to which I have referred, and on another ground, namely, that the tail-race, which has been or is being converted into a navigable portion of the canal, has heretofore been used by the good people of Perth as a receptacle for refuse, and that, at a certain period of the year, this refuse was swept down to the canal. Was that a reason for extending the canal? It would have been a good reason for preventing the dumping of garbage into the tail race, but it is by no means a reason for extending the canal to prevent that nuisance. The town of Perth had its own remedy. It is entitled to the benefit of the municipal laws of the land, and if the people of Perth are above the municipal laws and could dump into the tail-race they could also That excuse will dump into the completed canal. not do, so that there is no possible defence to the transaction on the ground of public utility. What is the object? The Postmaster General has the object? stated it is a very minor offence at best. He acknowledges the wrong, but he says after all I only misapplied money voted for a different purpose; Parliament voted money for the construction of a canal from the Rideau to the basin in the town of Perth, and there was a small balance over, which I was entitled, by some forced construction, to misapply to a work Parliament never ordered or intended should be done. No more dangerous doctrine could be advanced on the floor of Parliament. Parliament, in the exercise of its wisdom, looks into proposed expenditure, plans and specifications ought to be laid before the House, and when money is voted for a particular work and not used, it belongs to the people generally; and I am surprised that to-day, in a Parliament like this, a Minister of the Crown should assert the doctrine that he has the right to seize upon lapsed balances | desire to secure the respect of the people for Par-Mr. MULOCK.

and expend them ashe or the Government, without further consent of Parliament, may determine. There is another circumstance in connection with the transaction. We find a contract given for the construction of a work which was not previously sanctioned by Parliament, and given on the eve of an election. We find that, in the month of February last, the Government entered into a contract for the construction of this work. Why did the Government happen to select that particular time, when the whole country was locked up in the embrace of winter, for the construction of a canal? Why did they choose that most inopportune season of the year in every respect, except a political one, namely, that it was a month before the day of voting. Sir, the whole thing smacks of fraud. It is fraud. In my judgment it was a gross misapplication of the public Whether the purpose was to put money money. into the hands of private individuals or to promote the political advancement of an individual, the money was not expended in the public interest. It is as illegal a transaction as if it had been made through the medium of a contract with Larkin, Connolly & Co. for dredging or other works; but it is in harmony with the practice which has obtained for many years in a certain branch of the public service. It becomes all members of this House, no matter where they may sit, to endeavour to restore a more correct idea of the duties of public men. If there is one thing more than another which we should sacredly guard, it is that we should be true to the public who entrust us with representing them, and should not misapply the taxes we are taking out of their pockets. If we once concede that the Government can, before Parliament assembles, pledge the credit of this country by entering into a contract which is not sanctioned by Parliament, though to-day it may be a small matter of $30,000 or $40,000, if that is once allowed to go unnoticed, I say we are on the eve of wiping out the control of the people over the expenditure of their money, we are abolishing the rights which the people have over the control of that money, we are abolishing the rights of Parliament in that regard and we are abolishing the only safeguard which the people have, which is that Parliament should come together and should deal with their financial affairs in a constitutional way. however, is in keeping with the transactions of the past year. I believe that never has there been so much disregard of the rights of the people of Canada shown by any Government as has been shown during the last year. Look at the violation of the spirit of the Audit Act, when between two and three million dollars have been used without the sanction of the people's representatives, and, during the same time that that illegal expenditure was taking place, we find that a member of the Government promoted his own ends by a course equally unjustifiable and of the same class as that to which I have referred. I say, therefore, it is time for this new Parliament to establish, if it be possible, a position for itself in this matter, and to lay out wholesome rules for its future guid-Without dwelling upon the other portions of the works which may or may not have been of a useful character, the one question in regard to this which I desire to consider is that this extension was unauthorized by the representatives of the people, and I think that those who liament should feel it their duty as trustees of the people to condemn such an act as this, even if it had the sanction, illegally obtained, of a Minister of the Crown and of the whole Government. Any member of Parliament has a right, if the Postmaster General had any right, to do the same thing. any member of Parliament is a supporter of the Government, he may induce the Government and has the same right to induce the Government to do such a thing as this as the Postmaster General had, though perhaps he may not have the same influence to aid a particular individual or a particular locality which is friendly or which may be made friendly to the Administration. If this action is to be ratified by Parliament, there is no end to the abuses which may arise. No matter on what side I might be, I would condemn such a measure as a subversion of the principles of parliamentary representation. people are free to vote as they like on such a subject they should condemn this action, and it was not complimentary on the part of the Minister of Railways to say that on this side we were not free to vote as we choose.

Mr. BOWELL. The same thing has been said a dozen times.

Mr. MULOCK. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman has violated the decorum of this House a dozen times, and will do so again; but I say that partyism ought not to be strong enough to induce members of this House to endorse measures which are not worthy of endorsement, and this action is one which, in my judgment, deserves the condemnation of the people's representatives here; and I am sure that in a free Parliament, as I hope this is, it would receive such a condemnation.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not intend, after the very thorough discussion which this subject has received at the hands of hon. gentlemen who have preceded me, to take up very much time; but there are one or two features of this matter which I desire to call attention to. First, I think there is no question that the House ought to hold the Government to a strict account in regard to the proposed expenditure on any new works, and I think the House should demand from the Government, especially when they inaugurate any new works, that the statements they submit to the House should be accurate and reliable. If that is not insisted upon, we can never know, when any work is started, where the end is to be or what it is going to cost. For instance, in this matter of the Tay Canal, the first estimate, submitted in 1882, was $132,000. need only say that, if the House had known in 1882 that that canal would have cost half a million dollars it is very unlikely that the vote of $50,000 would have been passed at all. Then, in 1883, after another year's investigation, they told the House that, after a careful examination, they estimated the cost at $240,000, and asked for another appropriation of $75,000 for the construction of this canal. In 1884 they again said they had made careful estimates of the cost, which would be only $240,000, and to-day we find that, notwithstanding all these statements submitted by the Ministry to the House, the cost of this canal has run up to half a million dollars. I from the canal; but the very moment the say the Government ought to have known and to have been able to give a careful estimate and a more reliable statement of the cost of this canal to and expense is saved in carting this wheat the people and to the House, and that, in neglect- from the basin to the mill, as is done now. Why, ing to submit an accurate statement of the cost, they were deceiving and misleading the people and the members of the House of Commons, and in this respect I think they deserve the censure of the This seems to have been in accordance with their course in regard to all the contracts that have been entered into. Within the last ten years we have not had a single contract entered into by the Department of Public Works or the Department of Railways, the amount of which has not been largely exceeded. We always find that the final estimate is two or three times the amount of the estimate first submitted to the House, and I think that in that respect the Government deserve censure for not being more accurate and careful in submitting their plans to the House. So far as the Tay Canal is concerned as a whole, I do not intend to say very much. It has already been shown, I think, that the canal was of very little use to the country, and that it cost more than it was worth, but I wish to refer more particularly to the recent extension which was begun last winter without the sanction of Parliament, and for which the House is now asked to vote this large sum. I had the pleasure a short time ago of visiting the beautiful little town of Perth, and of examining closely the location of the proposed extension now being constructed, and I may say that I believe there never was a work undertaken by this Government, or any other Government, that was of so little value to the people of this country I cannot for the life of me see what in the world ever induced the Government to go on with that work except that it is going to increase the value of the property known as Haggart's mill. Now, the hon. Postmaster General stated that it would not increase the head of water at all. Well, I differ very much with him; I believe it will increase the head of water at the mill from three to four feet; it will give him at least three or four feet more head, and in that respect, of course, his property will be increased in value.

Mr. HAGGART. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Of course, I have not made an accurate survey of the exact height of the water. but it was the opinion of all those who went there, and I believe we can form a pretty correct estimate, that at least it will give an increased head at the mill of three or four feet. This is, of course, a great advantage to the mill. But outside all that, I believe that if the canal is extended up to where it is proposed to extend it, it will increase the value of that mill at least eight or ten thousand dollars. I know a good deal about flour milling, I have been in that business all my life, and I have no hesitation in saying that if I owned that mill, and if I could get that canal extended up to where it is proposed to extend it, I would not take $10,000 for the mill more than it is worth to-day. It is easy to see that it will be worth that, because at present the mill is situated at least half a mile from the railway, without any means of getting in grain by rail. The canal in its present location is a considerable distance from the mill, and all the grain coming in has got to be carted from the railway or with that extension, he can immediately put a small elevator in the scow or whatever brings the wheat to the mill, and elevate it right into the mill without any handling at all. In my opinion I believe it is worth $1,000 a year to that mill to have the canal extended up to it. The House will see that when the canal is extended up to the mill you have got 60 miles of navigable stream from the door of the mill to Kingston or to Ottawa; you can buy grain all along the banks of the canal, put it in barges or scows, and bring it to the mill, put in a small elevator and lift the grain into the mill without a cent of expense. Now, you have got to unload all the barges at the canal basin where the canal stops, and then you have got to cart it to the mill a considerable distance. So, again, in shipping flour and feed from the mill, it is certainly a great advantage to have the canal come up to the door of the mill, because then you can put all your flour and feed into the canal boat and take it down to Kingston or this way to Ottawa, without any expense at all. I think there is no question that it is a great advantage to the mill to have the canal brought right up to its door, and I cannot see where it is an advantage to anybody else. As has been stated here to-day, the canal basin comes to within, I think, 100 feet of the main street of the town of Perth; it goes up to the main street within 100 feet I believe, or within a few hundred feet, of the post office and court house, so that it reaches now very nearly the centre of the town. There is a wide basin and good docks, and a splendid place to unload, where vessels can tie up to these docks, and everything complete. Now, they are extending that canal, and tearing down the old permanent bridge across the main street, and carrying it away out of the town into the suburbs to Haggart's mills. is ample accommodation now, there is plenty of wharfage and plenty of accommodation for all the traffic that comes to that basin. You have all the facilities that you want, and there is no possible' benefit to the people of the town in carrying the canal on any further. But the Postmaster General stated that the people desired it and had, ten to one, voted a sum of money in order to extend it. Well, I do not wonder at it. They would be very foolish, indeed, if they refused to vote a few thousand dollars to extend a work that would scatter so much money in their town. When we were there a few days ago, there were no less than 80 or 90 men working there at $1.25 or $1.50 All this money is being spent in the town, the expenditure will be continued for months, and the people would be very foolish indeed if they did not vote-the paltry sum asked for in order to have this work completed. But I certainly cannot see where there is any possible benefit to be derived to the town of Perth from the extension of the canal. If the basin was not there, if they had not ample accommodation in the present basin for wharfage and so forth, then I could understand the necessity for continuing it on and having a basin on the other side of the street. But as it is now, they have all this accommodation, and no possible benefit can be derived to the people of the town by the extension, as is proposed, to the mill property. As I said before, it is to that property alone that I think any benefit can be derived. I have no doubt that so far as the mill is concerned, if I owned it I would me if I had that canal built right up to my door. The Postmaster General said there were 400 tons of freight a week shipped from the town of Perth. I would like to know what that freight is. He said there were $30,000 a year saved in freight alone. Now, 400 tons a week means about 51 cars of freight that is loaded every day in the town of Perth, and I think the hon gentlemen was far astray in his estimate.

Mr. HAGGART. It is an actual fact.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Outside of the Canadian Pacific Railway works, I do not know I am sure how it could be. I know that the flour-mill does not ship a great deal, and there are no saw-mills there that I know of, and I do not see where the 400 tons of freight a week come in. Then as to the statement about the $30,000 saved in freight I would like to know how that occurs. pretty wild statement also, and I think it requires a good deal of proof. When there are so many works required of so much importance all over this Dominion, it seems to me a most scandalous thing that this large amount of money should be expended upon this extension that is so little needed. hon, member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) has estimated, and I think his estimate was a very fair one, that it will cost the people of this country about $28,000 a year to keep up this work, and when we find that the total receipts for the last seven months were only $58, it seems to me that it was a most foolish and unwise thing for the Government to go The interest on that investment of half a million dollars at 4 per cent. will be no less than $20,000 a year. We have therefore this large expenditure, the interest on the money, the cost of these bridges, the swing bridges, repairs to the canal, &c., which will amount to at least $28,000 a year, which I think is a very low estimate; and last year the receipts from the canal amounted to only $58.81. Now, it seems to me that in itself is enough to show that the work was a huge job, and should be condemned by this House without a moment's hesitation. When we find that the only man going to be benefited by the extension of this work is the hon. Postmaster General, I think this House should vote its censure and express its condemnation for any such expenditure.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think we should permit this matter to pass without giving it that criticism it deserves. It appears to me that from the commencement of the work up to the present time every dollar expended has been expended on this work in the interests of the Postmaster Gene-I felt surprised when I heard the statement made to-night that in 7 months the rece pts from this particular work had only reached $58. That of itself is sufficient to prove that it is an unnecessary work, that it is a foolish work, that its inception was a mistake, and the carrying of it on and the extension of it is a still greater mistake. I say to my friends around me that they are not discharging their duty to their constituents if they permit matters of this kind to pass through the House without giving them that measure of criticismand searching investigation which they deserve. It appears to me that the Postmaster General has a peculiar personal infatuation for the development of water privileges. It seems as if the hon. gentleman was determined that he would not only spend consider it worth at least $1,000 per year more to his own resources on a matter of that kind, but when Dominion. I hold it is wrong, and the people will for the purpose of fulfilling and the people will for the purpose of fulfilling and the people will be wrong to people will be a people will for the purpose of fulfilling and the people will be a people will be hold it to be wrong to permit this state of things to man to occupy the position he fills and to draw on the country's resources for matters of this kind. I was surprised that the Minister of Customs should have tried to defend that piece of abomina-I thought he would have allowed the Postmaster General to have shouldered his own responsibility in these matters, and was surprised that countenance and assistance to defending an undertaking for which his hon, friend was responsible. I believe the work is called Haggart's ditch. Hon. gentlemen have been out of one ditch into another ever since we met this session. They have been out of one ditch and into another from the commencement of the Tarte investigation to the present time, and to-night they are in Haggart's The ditch is well named, and it was never intended for anything except to drain that particular section of the country which the hon. gentleman represents. The Minister of Customs would be quite willing to consent to-night to grant the necessary sum to begin at his friend's mill and fill in the ditch all the way to the Rideau Canal if he could bury in it all the scandals hon, gentlemen have had to face since we met in this Parliament. He would be willing to do it, but it would not hold half of them, and there would not be enough material found on the banks to cover them. is not strange, when we review the expenditure of money throughout the Dominion, that we should find a great deal has been expended in the same line. The Postmaster General said this afternoon, and he did it to shield himself, that money for similar purposes was spent in other portions of the country. In all probability he had reference to the Chignecto Ship Railway, which is just about as foolish a scheme as is the hon. gentleman's ditch. By that railway the company undertook to lift ships out of the water, run them across the peninsula and put them into the water again. It is another wild goose enterprise, undertaken by the Government when it thought it might give advantage to them. Another scheme is the Cape Breton Railway, which my hon. friend opposite represents. He stated, when we were finding fault with the enormous cost of that undertaking, that it would pay for the grease on the wheels, and he even said it would pay running expenses. Suppose it does pay running expenses, we will have to pay $400,000 of interest at 4 per cent. for the supreme satisfaction of allowing this road to be built, for the inception of which that hon, gentleman is re-sponsible. If we look around we find monuments of folly from one end of the Dominion to the other, inaugurated since 1881. There is the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, duplicating the line of the Intercolonial Railway, built for the purpose of securing certain seats, no doubt, in that section, and to fulfil a promise made by Sir Charles Tupper that a road would be run through that section absolutely and entirely at the cost of the people. The people have to pay interest on the money expended, and the money that goes to swell the amount we have sunk on the Intercolonial Railway to about $52,000,000, for which the people are paying at the rate of 4 per cent. $2,000,000, from which they ron (Huron):

men as the High Commissioner when he comes out go on from year to year, and allow the hon, gentle-here on the dancing tour as the chief champion of the Tory party of this country. So we have from time to time railways, and ditches, and canals, and public buildings, sometimes constructed in places where they are not wanted, while other places that should have them do not secure them; these works are entered upon on the basis solely as to whether they tend to perpetuate the political existhe Minister of Customs was prepared to lend his tence of hon, gentlemen opposite. That is the whole movement and scheme. I suppose the Postmaster General found that in order to satisfy the people of Perth some particular drain or ditch should be constructed for the advantage of the The town has been run into that particular ditch and the Government are now proposing to extend it. After the efforts of the Postmaster General on behalf of the town, he no doubt expects and hopes that when he returns, notwithstanding all the incidents of his official life and the official lives of his associates, the people of that section will forgive and condone everything laid to his charge and return him to discharge his duties. I repeat that the Opposition are not doing their duty if they do not thoroughly investigate abominations such as this brought before Parliament. Here we are 5,000,000 of people with $240,000,000 of debt, on which we are paying $10,000,000 interest annually, and yet the Government are proceeding quietly and secretly, and without authority of Parliament, and are setting men to work to quarry out a basin close to the Postmaster General's mill to improve his property and give him advantages which he otherwise would not enjoy, and then come to Parliament and ask its sanction for the I say that it is time that we should put an end to these things. I carnestly hope that the statement which has been made by my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) with regard to the use of Governor General's warrants will have some little effect upon hon, gentlemen opposite. I believe that these Governor General's warrants have been very seriously abused, both last year and during years before. I have heard the matter brought before this House on several occasions. and it is time now that this abuse should be stopped once for all. I am surprised that gentlemen in the Government, who have earned for themselves a reputation of being honourable, would allow their names to be used in connection with a system of this kind, that is a discredit to them, and particularly so in the matter we are investigating tonight. I am sorry that we are called upon to-night to offer our criticism on this question, but if the Government discharged their duty as they should, and refused to expend this money before Parliament voted it, the possibilities are that the criticism offered to-night would not have been offered to the same extent. I say that the Government deserve condemnation on the two-fold ground: first, for undertaking this work at all, which is a monument to their folly; and, in the second place, for their having proceeded to complete a work without the sanction of Parliament, and thus adding such a large burden on the people of the country.

THE INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY.

On the motion of Mr. Foster that the House do resolve itself into Committee of Supply,

Mr. WELDON. Before the motion is adopted, I wish to take occasion to bring before the House a matter which I would have brought before the attention of the House and the Government at an earlier date, were it not that it has been found to be extremely difficult for those of us who are engaged in the Committee on Privileges and Elections to avail ourselves of a suitable opportunity in the House. The matter to which I refer is the present position and the future of the Intercolonial Railway. Some weeks ago I took occasion to express my regret that the present position of that railway was so unfavourable, and from the appearances that are open to an observer of the workings of that road during the year 1890 there is reason to apprehend that the loss on the Intercolonial Railway is quite as great, if not greater, than during the year 1889, for which the record is pub-I shall briefly refer to the matter, giving myself much less time than I should like to have, having regard to the great impatience of both sides of the House at this time of the session. I shall very briefly state what seem to me in some degree the causes of the present very unsatisfactory condition on that railway, and to suggest briefly what seems to me as well to be a remedy of some hope and of some promise. It is well known to every member of this House that the Intercolonial Railway was one of the terms of the union of the provinces. The Intercolonial Railway article of the British North America Act was one of the articles, and perhaps the one article, which most largely commended that scheme to the people of the lower provinces. At that time we had in New Brunswick a railway running from the city of St. John to the Northumberland Straits, and in Nova Scotia they had a railway running from Halifax by way of Truro up to the coal-pits in Picton, and the contract the confederated provinces undertook was to supply a link between Moncton and Truro, and also a link from Moneton up to River du Loup; so that the railways of the lower provinces might have complete connection with the Grand Trunk Railway. Filling up these two links referred to meant the building of 500 miles of railway. To very many of us in New Brunswick it was a matter of profound regret that the Inter-colonial railway came to be located as it was located—by what was the a known as the northern It is written in the history of the Intercolonial Railway by the chief engineer of that road during its construction, Mr. Sandford Fleming, that the route chosen, chosen largely in deference to military considerations, largely in deference to English feeling, and largely in the hope of getting by an Imperial guarantee the money necessary to build the railway, was a very long and circuitous route. as is well known. It is estimated by Mr. Fleming that the cost of the railway by the route chosen exceeded what it would have cost had it been carried by the most desirable commercial route by $10,000,000; and he has estimated further that the annual cost of operating the railway by the present route, as compared with the cost of operating it by the shortest available route to connect the Atlantic seaboard with Montreal, is an annual charge much greater than the interest on $10,000,000. Therefore, it is no exaggeration to say that the Intercolonial Railway, having been located where it is, is run at an annual loss of something like a million dollars as compared with what would have been the cost of running it had the short and commercial route been chosen. But whatever the facts were which connected the Grand Trunk Railway running to River du Loup with the railways existing in the Maritime Provinces were filled in so far that an unbroken system was completed in 1876. that year the road was operated at a loss of $28,000, in 1877 at a loss of $507,000, in 1878 at a loss of $432,000, in 1879 at the stupendous loss of $756,000, and in 1880 at a loss of $97,000. By the year 1881 the tide had turned, and the annual reports show a profit in that year of $542, in 1882 a profit of about $9,000, in 1883 a profit of $11,000, and in 1884 a profit of $9,000. Then the tide again unhappily ebbed, and we had in 1885 a deficit of $73,000, in 1886 a deficit of $106,000, in 1887 a deficit of $232,000, in 1888 a deficit of $363,000, in 1889 a deficit of $$258{,}000,$ and in 1890, the last year of which we have the public records, a deficit of $553,000 on the Intercolonial Railway proper, a line something less than 900 miles long, and a second deficit on the Prince Edward Island Railway and on the other branches of the Intercolonial Railway. The total deficits in those years were, in round numbers, three millions and a third. In the light of these facts I cannot apologize for taking up the time of Parliament at this late stage of the session-eager as both sides of the House are to go into the estimates- in making some comments on these facts; and I tell you frankly that in my judgment it is possible in part or in whole to remove these deficits by a radically new method of administering the railway.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WELDON. I hear cheers across the House, and I am glad that my hon, friends opposite are giving me a sympathetic hearing. Any one who has given attention to the systems of railways in Canada, not only the state railways, but the other systems, and who look at the comparative statements written by the railway experts, will admit that railroading in Canada is more unprofitable than in almost any other great country on the earth; and the Intercolonial Railway managers, in common with the managers of the other railways, thoroughly comprehend these difficulties. They are partly climatic; they are partly due to the fact that our territory is vast and our population scattered; and I frankly admit that the losses on the Intercolonial Railway are partly due to the fact of its management being political. I have read the deficits for fifteen years. Some of these occurred in the time when Mr. Mackenzie was Premier and Minister of Railways, and some of them occurred in the years when Sir John Macdonald was Premier of Canada, and when Sir Charles Tupper and the late Mr. Pope and the late Sir John Macdonald occupied the position of Ministers of Railways; and I think in all candour it will be admitted by both sides of the House that the two parties who have divided the Government of this country during the last twenty-three or twenty-four years have placed the railway in the very best possible hands. I think that our hon. friends opposite will admit that they had not a man of greater or more practical knowledge than Mr. Mackenzie; nor will the Conservatives claim that they had more powerful or more able men to manage the railways than Sir Charles Tupper or Mr. Pope—and I would like to route been chosen. But whatever the facts were say a word as to the very high esteem I have twenty or twenty-five years ago, the recent facts always had for the late Mr. Pope as one of the are very discouraging indeed. thirty years; I need not speak of Sir John Macdonald. We have tried to manage these roads by We have tried to manage these roads by placing at their head a political Minister and adopting a political system of management; we have always allowed the members of Parliament to have a hand more or less in the management of the railway; and we know that the results have not been satisfactory. We are not the only people on the earth who have had state railways, or the only people who have had to complain of deficits. A great number of political communities, not only in Europe but in Australasia, have been trying the experiment which we have been trying, and they have had the same experience, namely, that the direct political management of railways, whether under one party or another, has been wasteful and inefficient. have in my hand a report written by a commissioner whom the United States' Government sent to Europe five or six years ago to study the railway problem, and he reports that in countries having had arbitrary rulers, as in countries where there was popular government and a wide suffrage. state railways, with direct state management, were managed wastefully and extravagantly. Indeed, he gives a picture of the evils under which Italy groaned when the Italian railways were, as they are not now, owned by the state and controlled and managed by a member of the Cabinet, and the statement of abuses which he makes reminds me of the statements which I have heard from hon. gentlemen opposite as to abuses in Canada. Here is a paragraph from Mr. Simon Sterne's report, which bears date 1887:

"Italy suffers almost as much as the United States does from a pressure upon the local deputies to the Italian Parliament for positions in the public service—"

I would not say that this is a picture of the evils that exist in Canada, but it shows the state of things that existed in Italy.

"—and the railway was used as a sort of general hospital to take care of the friends, relatives and the political hangers-on of deputies."

Italy, in part because of these difficulties, and for other reasons not pertinent to the discussion, was induced to deal with the railways in a different fashion, and to put them out of the control of And for other reasons, not now necesthe state. sary to discuss, a measure was introduced to take the Government railways out of the control of The Australian colonies have had to the state. deal with the very difficulties from which we suffer, and they felt them to be much more serious than the most pessimistic members of this House would declare ours to be. Abuses arose through the inefficiency of a management influenced largely by politics, and I will give the House briefly a statement of the evils existing in the colony of Victoria as they were depicted some nine years ago by a leading member of the lower House. I will not trouble this House with reading his statement in full, but will merely paraphrase it, so as to give the substance. He described how things were going on. He said there was waste and loss everywhere; that members were overloaded with applications for positions; that the bulk of the correspondence of some hon, members consisted of applications for employment on the railway service. Taking one day with another, during his attendance in Parliament at Victoria, this gentleman said that seventy- the management of our railways, too great division another, to railway matters, with which he had neither the right nor the competency to deal. He complained also that there was political favouritism shown, and great waste, especially at election times, through the crowding up of the service with unnecessary employés; that the promotions in the service were not according to ability, but depended largely on the political influence the applicant could bring to bear on the Government; that discipline could with difficulty be maintained; that if conductors were found to have been passing people freely, so long as they passed the right people, those supporting members on the Government side, they would not be punished, or disciplined or suspended, because political pressure would be brought to bear in their behalf. Conductors by the wholesale were well known, not only to pass people freely, but to steal, to put money in their own pockets, and it was impossible, in many cases, to get them expelled, because of political pressure; and when found guilty of drunkenness, they could not be got rid of, for the same reason. If detectives were put on the line to spot them the cry of police espionage, which a free people would not tolerate, was raised, and the result was that discipline had largely broken down. Another complaint was made in Parliament, and not received very kindly, that, in the nature of things, a political Minister was not the most desirable man to make the head of a railway department, as he had not the necessary knowledge or the opportunity or the time to make himself acquainted properly with the nature of the duties he has to perform; and therefore it was urged for years, in the press and Parliament of that colony, that these railways should be taken out of the hands of the Administration, that the waste should be saved, and the road be no longer lumbered by useless and superfluous employés, that members of Parliament should keep their hands off the railway management and that they should approach as nearly as possible in this matter the economy and the efficiency displayed by a private corporation in similar management. I would be sorry to say that that is a fair picture of things in Canada, because I live in a railway country, and know how matters stand. But I do say that we will plunge into these abuses if we go on managing our railway and leaving it in the hands of a Minister, I care not whether he be of the Liberal or the Conservative

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How do the rates and charges on the Government railways compare with those on railways controlled by private parties?

Mr. W.ELDON. 1 will deal with the question of rates in a few minutes, if the hon, gentleman will allow me to follow my order of argument. Another point made in those discussions to which I am referring is, that railways, under political management, are not as vigorously managed as they should be. The Minister of Railways is a busy man, who has other things to attend to, and there is such a dividing up of power among the Minister and his chief engineer, and those immediately concerned in the management of the railway, that the business is often unduly delayed. No man will say that such a picture does not describe the state of things in Canada. There is here in Canada, in five per cent. of his letters related, in one way or of powers. There are some powers with the Minister, others with the chief engineer, and others with Mr. Pottinger, the manager at Moncton; and the result is that no one of them has sufficiently large discretion to act promptly, and business is consequently lost. I have no hope that any change of management will remove the evil; I believe the Moncton management is as vigorous as possible, under existing conditions, but I do hope, and that is my reason for rising to-night, that it is possible to profit by the experience of communities situated somewhat similarly to ourselves, with a political system very much like our own, and put our railway in a different position, and try and wipe out or reduce this deficit of a half million dollars a year. In the year 1883 the colony of Victoria undertook to deal vigorously with this matter, and they introduced an Act, which appears on the statutes of that colony, as the 47th Victoria, No. 757. I will not describe that statute minutely, but in a general way. It established a railway commission consisting of three commissioners, who were strictly non-political men, and they were given, as that colony gives its public servants, very high salaries. Their position was guaranteed and secured from any undue influence by very excellent provisions, very much the same as those which protect the position of our Auditor General. They were made independent of Governments and members of Parliament; and it is indeed a tribute to the thoroughness with which our Australian friends thought their way through this question before they formulated their theories in an Act, that in the seven intervening years between then and now-and I have gone through the subsequent acts as carefully as I could - I have discovered no amendment, material or immaterial, to that railway statute. And reading, as fully as I have been able to do the Hansards from year to year, I have gone through all the Victoria parliamentary debates from 1883 down, following their railway discussions to see how the commission was accepted by Parliament and could only discover that it has a growing popularity. The project was fiercely attacked in Parliament. All sorts of objections were trumped up and all sorts of difficulties were pointed out. It was pointed out that it would be useless: that you could not take political influence from the management of the railways; that the members would still control the commissioners; that the Administration would continue to control the commissioners; but I leave it to any candid man who will go through these debates to say whether those predictions have not been completely falsified. The commission was not popular at first, but as the years went on, so far as one can judge from reading the debates, it has been growing in popularity. There is one striking instance of that. Six years after the Act was passed an item was put in the estimates by the Minister of Finance to increase the salary of the chief commissioner by the large sum of £1,000, his previous salary having been £3,000, and an item was also introduced to increase the salaries of the assistant commissioners. Naturally, that proposal was attacked; but the objection against it was mainly on this point: that many said it should have been brought in as an amendment to the Act and not as an item in Supply; but there was very little substantial opposition to the vote. It seemed to be agreed on both sides that the commission had been a great success. Abundant after the appointment of the commission. I ask figures were reported to show that for the seven the attention of the House to these facts, and I ask or eight years antecedent to the Victorian railways being put in commission, while there had been a rapid increase in the business done, there was a very slight increase in profit; but in the six years succeeding 1883, when the road was put in commission, the net profits increased enormously, and, in the absence of any alleged cause, and I have not been able to find any in the records, I think it must be concluded that the road was more vigorously and more economically managed. I have a mass of figures here, but I will content myself with a reference to the figures of one year. It is often said that figures cannot lie, but we know that nothing in this world can be made to lie like figures if they are used dishonestly or without competent knowledge. The railway was put in commission in 1883. The mileage of the Victorian system of railways is 2,200 miles, or nearly twice as much as the Intercolonial, and in 1889 the earnings amounted to $5,847,643 more than in 1883, while the net profits had increased in 1889 as compared with 1883 by $3,269,986. Unless there are some causes which we do not know for this remarkable increase in the net profits of the railway under the commission, we must draw the conclusion that it is due to greater economy and greater vigour. In New South Wales the railways were put in commission much later.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was there any increase in rates during that time in Victoria?

Mr. WELDON. No; on the contrary, there was a great decrease, and I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked me that question. There was a decrease in the freight on wheat, on wool, on mutton, on ores. All these were lowered, and they claim that they made a reduction in rates of £200,000 sterling, or $1,000,000, a year; so you would have to add another million to the net pro-That is the statement of the commissioners themselves. In regard to New South Wales, that colony put its railways in commission five years later, and the result of their experiment was even more striking. Quoting from the report of the last commission, we find that in seven years before the railways in New South Wales were put in commission, while there had been an increase in the gross earnings of nearly three million dollars the increase in the profits had been almost nothing, amounting There had been an enormous to only $4,440. increase in the earnings, but there had been practically no increase whatever in the net profits. But during the two years succeeding the appointment of the commission there has been an enormous growth in the earning power of the road, an increase in two years of $1,640,000. The striking fact is that, step by $1,640,000. step with that enormous and unusually large increase in the gross earnings of that system of railways, there has been an increase in the net profits of nearly two-thirds of the increased earnings. If these figures are correct, if there is no undiscovered force to account for this result, I think that should be convincing to every hon, member of this House. A responsible public man who had come from New Zealand and had been connected with the railway system there stated that the result of putting the railway there in commission was a decrease of over 20 per cent. in the expenses within three years after the appointment of the commission. I ask the Government to give their attention to it, and \mathbf{I} ask all hon, gentlemen who are interested in railway matters on both sides of the House to look at this matter in a spirit of fairness. I think it will be a misfortune if we cannot have for an hour or two a temperate and dignified discussion of the position of this railway on its mer-We are all familiar with this business of throwing party missiles across the House, with the result that we do very much to confuse the people and we do not do very much to influence the coun-I have striven to say not a single word that would rouse the political feelings of any member of the House. I submit these brief facts without much note or comment to the House, and I hope the Administration will give this matter their patient consideration, and see whether it may not be worth while, in our interest, with a view to finding, if not a certain solution, a possible or a probable solution of this question of the management of the Intercolonial Railway, to send some railway experts down to those colonies where the system has been in some instances eight years at work, in others six, in others three, and find out by actual observation on the spot how far that experiment is likely to work successfully in Canada. I promised the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) to answer a ques-Will he repeat it? tion for him.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I asked a question with regard to the comparison between the charges on freight and passengers, between those Australian railways and the Intercolonial Railway and other railways in Canada.

Mr. WELDON. I will give the hon. gentleman my information on that point. My information is that the rates for local freight on the Intercolonial railway are reasonable; my information is that the rates on through freight are low as compared with other railways in Canada. But as compared with these foreign systems, their rates are enormous; we cannot compare them, as they are four or five times, even six or seven times, higher than ours.

Mr. OUIMET. It strikes me the hon, gentleman, in making his comparison between our own railways and the state railways in those colonies, would interest us very much by informing us if those state railways are subjected to the same competition that our state railway is here, and as regards other railways owned by private companies.

Mr. WELDON. There are no railways in those colonies owned by companies or corporations.

Mr. MONTAGUE. That does not affect the comparison of the two systems.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may say at this stage, as I come from a province intimately connected with the Intercolonial Railway, that the statements which have been made by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) are very interesting, and the statistics he has presented are very striking. They indicate, certainly, that the subject which he has suggested to the House, and the proposal which I know he has entertained for some time past, are very well worth study. Although, perhaps, he did not call the attention of the House last session to the subject, I know he spoke to members of the Government on the question, and urged very much the same views that he has presented to-night, and the result of attention being called to that subject was that the late Minister of Railways and Mr. Weldon.

Canals took steps to make careful enquiries as to the working of the system of Government railway commissions in the Australian Colonies, making a fuller enquiry than could be made merely from the documents and blue-books which are accessible to us here in Canada. There can be no doubt whatever, I think, that considerable allowance must be made, in judging of the force of the illustrations which he has drawn from the Australian Colonies, for the widely different circumstances in the two countries: there can be no doubt whatever that the mere nomination of three gentlemen to control a railway, as compared with the appointment of a member of the Government, does not by any means account for the difference in the volume of trade, in the reduction of working expenses, and in the increase of the net earnings, which he has mentioned to the House to-night. The appointment of two or three commissioners certainly would not swell the volume of trade, nor induce a greater number of people to travel on the road, and if the appointment of commissioners made all the difference he has mentioned, by checking extravagance and fraud on the roads, then under the system which prevailed before the frauds and extravagance must have been enormous. Allowance must be made for the circumstance which is mentioned by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet), that in those colonies the Government has a monopoly of all the roads in the country, and has absolutely no competition, even from water carriage, in comparison with what we have in Canada. If you take the line of the Intercolonial Railway, nearly through its whole extent there is a magnificent waterway lying in view of it, and when you come to Nova Scotia a waterway lying within 30 or 40 miles on either side of it, keeping down rates and establishing competing points at almost every station on the road. Now, one practical step to be taken before we can come to a conclusion that the management of the road would be improved by the appointment of a commission, would be to ascertain with some kind of precision where the cause of the present deficit lies. Does it lie in the reduction of rates? I deny that emphatically, from the little experience I have had. have had that point discussed frequently in this House, and members from points in old Canada not connected with the Intercolonial Railway have been accustomed to believe that for the benefit of the people of the lower provinces charges for carriage have been made on through freight which are exceedingly low, and which are for the purpose of fostering certain industries in that country, and such as would not compare with the rates charged on other railways in other parts of Canada. I am convinced that that is another fallacy. We will take the rate on coal, which has been mentioned so frequently in this House. Some members, even from Nova Scotia, have stated to the House that the cause of the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway is that we are carrying coal for the benefit of the coal miners of the lower provinces, and far below the cost of carriage. We have been told, and occasionally by an officer of the railways, that the charge on the through carriage of coal does not cover the actual cost; by others it is said that it simply covers the cost, and no more. I venture to say that on investigation it will be found that any railway company left to follow the interest of its under the same circumstances at a like rate. If you investigate you will find that no higher charge is made for freight under the like circumstances than is charged for the carriage of coal from Nova into consideration for a single moment. I do Scotia; and you will find that even lower rates are charged on through freight for articles like coal for the sake of the encouragement of business. For instance, if from Spring Hill coal is moved well conducted, would do the same thing, and carry a long distance at a of a cent a ton per mile, and at less than cost, with a view to the indirect you ask any practical railway man in Canada for his opinion on that rate, if I am not entirely mistaken he will tell you that for the sake of building up the business of that coal mine, for the sake of building up in Spring Hill a population, not of a in connection with the Intercolonial Railway by few dozen people, but of thousands of people, he would continue to carry coal at that low rate. Take the article of flour: the rate is very low upon that. In the lower provinces the people are told that the deficit on the Intercolonial Railway arises to a very great extent, not from the low rate on coal, but from the low rates on flour carried to the seaboard for the benefit of Ontario millers. Well, Sir, comparatively speaking, the rate is quite as low on flour as it is on coal, and the low rate on flour is quite as beneficial to the western parts of old Canada as the carriage of coal at a low rate is bene-ficial to certain districts of Nova Scotia. But you will find, I think, if you consult the Canadian Pacific Railway or Grand Trunk Railway managers, that we make the same rates as they would make on the same freight, and I saw a telegram to-day urging the Minister of Railways to reduce the flour rate lower still, on account of the low rate the Canadian Pacific Railway has made in carrying flour to St. John by the short line, showing that the present rate on the Intercolonial Railway is really higher than the Canadian Pacific Railway is charging in the interest of its line to St. John. On any consideration as to the management of the Intercolonial Railway, whether we shall improve it by cutting down working expenses, or by a change in classification, whether we shall improve it by increasing the rate of charges, we have certain cardinal principles to consider in the operation of that road which it is absolute folly to put out of sight for a single moment. cannot possibly consider that railway as the railways in Australian colonies can be considered. We are not to consider it purely as a business institution, although I admit that it ought to be conducted on safe business principles; but we must remember that that road was built under a stipulation between the different provinces, that it was built as a condition of the union of the provinces, and that if that road had not been built the union of the provinces would have been absolutely impossible. It was not stipulated that it was to be conducted according to any particular principles, or at any particular rate for transacting its business, but it was clearly understood that it should be built as a means of practically uniting the provinces and enabling the provinces to do business together. If we were to place it under the management of a company, or place it in the hands of railway commissioners to manage it as a company would, I doubt that the result would be a considerable increase of rates, because the through rates are not higher in my opinion than would be charged by any company under like circumstances; but if it is attempted to produce the results that the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) declares have been arrived at in Australia, the happy result of increasing the are paying working expenses, are doing as well as revenues of the country by high rates on the Intercolonial Railway, I, for one, would say that that was a proposition not capable of being taken not contend that any article should be carried on the Intercolonial Railway at less than cost, unless under the same circumstances as a company, advantages arising from that trade. So far, I am perfectly satisfied, as a member coming from a province lying on the Intercolonial Railway, that we cannot secure a revenue or even save a deficit simply raising rates, regardless of the interests of the provinces concerned. I do not require to illustrate this at any great length. Anyone who knows the history of the union of the provinces, anyone who knows the history of the Intercolonial Railway, will not forget the cardinal principles that enter into the management of that road, and must enter into it for all time to come. And so in relation to the railway in Prince Edward Island. It was part of the stipulations that that railway should be constructed. It was perfectly well understood by the people of the Island that the railway was to be managed by the Government. How would the appointment of a commission improve the business of the Island railway? Possibly it might reduce its working expenses by sharper and closer economy and management, but it certainly would not increase the volume of business which passes over it. Would it be expected that the people should be charged higher rates, and that a commission in charge of the Government railways would, by screwing up the rates, save a deficit, no matter what it might cost? Will the same principle be applied to the railway in Cape Breton which has only been a summer in operation, and the result of the business and trade of which has been far more encouraging than one had reason to ex-I need not refer at length to the reasons of its construction. It was constructed under a vote, which was practically unanimous in this House, and leading members on both sides generously expressed in regard to Cape Breton a recognition of their right under the circumstances of the past to have a railway constructed, and even at the Govern-They even expressed regret that ment expense. the obligation had not been undertaken sooner by the Government. Enough of that: I do not intend to enter into a justification of that work, although it has been challenged at a recent date. Eighty miles having been constructed; it is not to be expected that within a year or two it will pay working expenses, but it will eventually, I have no doubt, pay its working expenses, and even do better than that, besides furnishing a very important link connected with other parts of the Intercolonial Railway. same thing occurred in connection with the acquisiton of the railway known as the Eastern Extension, 80 miles to the Strait of Canso, of which the Cape Breton Railway is a further extension. When the railway was acquired, its acquisition was defended on the ground that when the Government owned it and controlled it we should keep in hand what was recognized as a well-paying railway—the Pictou Branch—and that was the principal attraction for buying it recognized by the Government of the day. But the fact is, that those 80 miles of railway now, if I am not misinformed, any other portion of the Intercolonial Railway, tude, and I have found that the answer of the interand in the near future will do a good deal better, country through which it passes. We have to consider all these circumstances, and when we say, if we do make up our minds, that the Inter-colonial Railway and the other Government railways are not to be considered as political roads any longer-and I agree to that in the sense that politics should not enter into their management-they will never cease, if I can have any voice in preventing it, they must continue to be political in so far as to respect the principles laid down and understood when the compact was made which united the provinces and resulted in the railway being constructed. Short of that, I say as one member of the Administration to the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon): let us see where the difficulty lies. Let us not be led away by any charm arising from a comparison of figures from foreign countries in which the circumstances are as widely different as things can possibly be. Let us ascertain where the difficulty lies. If it lies in the fact that the Intercolonial Railway carries a great amount of traffic over a long route, built under the circumstances which the hon. gentleman has detailed to the House, built partly under pressure from the Imperial Government in consideration of the guarantee which it gave, and partly out of local interests in New Brunswick-if it arises from that, then to that extent the difficulty is one that cannot be helped. If it arises from the fact that improvident rates of freight are charged, if freight is carried under cost, and without the advantages which a company management would keep in view, namely, the advantages in the way of other lines of business-raise the I go so far as to admit that. If there is loss by undue working expenses, or expenses under the name of working expenses, by mismanagement, by duplicating offices or increasing the number of officers on duty, let us ascertain that, and I think surely that can be put down by the Government, without its being considered absolutely necessary that Parliament should actually give it up as an impossible thing to attempt to stop mismanagement of that kind. I shall cheerfully join my hon, friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) in ascertaining where the difficulty and the waste lie, and if it lie in that direction shall assist in putting it down and I think we can put it down as well without a commission as with it. As regards prompt action in making rates for special cases, he must remember that the Intercolonial Railway is peculiarly situated as to co-operation with other roads. In nine out of ten of the cases to which my hon, friend refers, and in which he says prompter action is necessary, are cases in which application is made to know the rates of freight which can be made from points lying away off the Intercolonial Railway to points Under such circumstances, no rate can be fixed and no rate can be made by the Intercolonial Railway alone, because the Grand Trank Railway intervenes, or the Canadian Pacific Railway intervenes; and until the intervening railway, whichever it may be, make a special rate, the Intercolonial cannot do so. Sometimes when persons have made serious complaints to me of want of prompt action, and want of promptness in giving an immediate answer as to what rate of freight will be made from some point in Ontario to the seaboard, I have complained to the department of the want of prompti-Sir John Thompson.

vening railway was that they declined to make a besides the direct advantages which it gives to the special rate for that class of goods at that time of the year. That may be for reasons which it is not worth while going into now; it may be because the carriage in some other direction would be more advantageous, or because some other rate had been given to some other customer; and the Intercolonial Railway, of course, has to bear the blame of all this. I have only to say in addition, as in fact I think I have said before, that the subject which the hon. member (Mr. Weldon) has brought to our notice deserves very careful consideration, and that we are, in pursuance of the promise that I think was made before, at all events in pursuance of the resolution that was arrived at some time ago, now ascertaining the practical working of the commission system in the Australian colonies, and endeavouring to ascertain, as far as we can, what other forces, beyond the mere change of management, have produced the results which have been arrived at there. But we have something more to do. Before we adopt any remedy our first duty is to ascertain whether there is any abuse connected with the working of the Intercolonial Railway itself which can be cured, and whether the domestic cure is not quite as good and as effectual as the foreign one. We have to ascertain whether there is that duplication of officers which has been alleged; we have to ascertain whether there is a want of firmness in dealing with fraud when it is discovered, and we have to apply a suitable remedy if so. But I do not think it will be found, on the most careful and strict examination, that the cause of the deficit is by any means the lowness of the rates of freight, to which the deficit has been popularly attributed by members residing in other parts of the country.

> Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The subject that is brought under the attention of the House by the member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) is one of considerable interest, and it is of all the greater interest to every section of the Dominion, because the failure of the Intercolonial Railway to pay the running expenses has imposed a very considerable burden upon the public treasury. I do not know how far the Minister of Justice would be disposed to argue that because this road was a political undertaking, and its construction was a part of the terms and conditions of union, that therefore the cost for freight and for passengers should be fixed at a very low rate, and at a uniform rate in every part of the Maritime Provinces, in order to place all the people who reside in these provinces, in this respect, upon a footing of equality. The Intercolonial Railway forms a part of the terms of the Union, precisely in the same way that the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway does, or the extension of railway communication to the North-West Territories. They were all embraced in the articles agreed upon by the Quebec Conference prior to the passage of the British North America Act. I do not understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway imposes uniform rates for freight and passengers in every portion of its line, and I have never heard that those who are paying higher rates than others that were more favourably circumstanced claimed that the terms or conditions of the Union were in that respect interfered with. I see no reason that would put the Intercolonial Railway in a different condition from every mile of the Canadian Pacific very few points where there is competition; that Railway. We have found a company to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway upon terms and conditions agreed upon between Parliament and the executive Government on one side, and the parties ! who became that corporation upon the other. apprehend that the terms of Union would be strictly adhered to if the Intercolonial Railway were transferred to a private corporation, by any agreement between the Government and the persons who might be found disposed to form such a corporation. It is the fact that the railway has been constructed, and that it has been available for the people who were intended to use it, that constitutes the essential portion of the compact; and whether that road is worked by a commission, whether it is under the direct charge of the Government, or whether it passes into the hands of a private corporation, the terms and conditions of Union will have been equally complied with. The hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has pointed out, in the case of the railways in some of the Australian colonies, that they have been more profitably worked under a commission than they had been under the direct management of the Executive; and he also states that the charges upon passengers and upon freight is less, under the commission, than it was under the Government management. I think that Mr. Galt, in his book on railways, in which he advocates the ownership of railways by the Government of the country or by the public, points out that high railway rates do not mean large revenues, and he gives instances of several railway corporations in the United Kingdom that entered into active competition with each other and greatly reduced their charges for freight and passengers; and the result of that reduction was, during its continuance, a much larger revenue than under higher charges. I have no reason to doubt, looking at the monopoly that was enjoyed by the Government in the various Australian colonies, that the same result would follow a reduction there as elsewhere. If the prices are reduced, there are no doubt many persons who will travel upon railways who would otherwise remain at home. They would visit their friends, travel for pleasure, and travel for business, which they would undertake to manage in some other way than by personal superintendence if the rates were continued high. I do not know how far the improved condition of the Australian the burdens imposed upon these people in the way railways is due to the reduction of excessive charges, and how far due to superior management. There are no doubt great differences between the position of railways in Canada and the position of railways in the Australian colonies. There all the roads belong to the Government; they are public works and undertakings; they may charge what rates they please; and those charges, so far as I understand, are uniformly applied in the various sections of the country, whether they are thickly populated or sparsely populated, whether the particular portion of the road is profitable or not. You only ascertain the general results, not the particular results as to particular sections of the Mr. Galt, in his work on the Government ownership of railways, points out as one of the advantages that a country would enjoy from public ownership that the rates may be made uniform, and that persons living in sparsely settled districts are put on an equal footing with those living in districts more thickly populated; and that, no doubt, is true. He also points out that there are commerce; and we have had contributions made where there is not competition there is monopoly, and there the road may increase its charges; there are few competing points, and those points enjoy particular advantages. He also observes that as I long as the private ownership of railways is permitted, when you confer upon railway corporations some of the powers of sovereignty you ought also to impose upon them some of the obligations of sovereignty; and Parliament ought to interfere and see that excessive charges are not made where there is no possibility of competition—that, in fact the rates ought to be regulated where competition will not regulate them. Now, in the case of the Intercolonial Railway the impression generally exists, and I think it is not altogether unfounded, that it has been largely run as a political institution; it has been run in the interest of a party; it has been officered by a party and managed by a party; and so the responsibility being to party, the leaders of which are under certain obligations to the officers who have earned by political service their positions and the distinctions which they occupy, it is not easy to exercise over them that supervision or that control that would be exercised by a private corporation or by a commission. Now, it seems to me that Parliament has scarcely discharged its duty in this particular instance. I think we do not so much need a com-mission as a committee. We ought to have had long ago a parliamentary enquiry into the management of the Intercolonial Railway. It is not paying expenses. Large deficits exist; charges are made upon the public treasury; burdens are imposed upon a population which already contribute to the maintenance of railways in their own portion of the country. These, indeed, may be private corporations, yet for the carriage of freight and for travelling they are contributors to the maintenance of these private corporations. For the same purpose, without living along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, they are contributors to that public corporation, and it is an important question to consider whether, on account of these roads being public property, you are conferring upon those who are using them advantages over those who are using private railways in their own localities. I think that is a fair subject for parliamentary enquiry. It is a fair subject to ascertain whether of freights and charges are less than are imposed on those who are obliged to use private railways, and whether the competition of private railways is such as to make it possible to bring the freights and charges in these districts up to an equality with those that exist elsewhere. In my opinion, that is an enquiry that ought to be made by this House. I think the actual condition of the road, the efficiency of its management, the charges that are made for freights and passengers upon it, as compared with the charges made in other sections of the country similarly situated, ought to be known to this House. After all, when we look at what has been done we see that the road, in the first place, was located in a section of the country in which we were told it was necessary to locate it, so that it would be as far as possible from the American boundary. It was located on a long and circuitous route; it was not a route that a contructed out of public money, and which is (Mr. Mills) has stated, as to its being perfectly owned and managed by the Government of the right and proper, under the terms of Concountry. I could never understand myself why federation, that the road should be given to Canada to construct a railway through the State That has been done, and that road is a rival to the Intercolonial Railway. While the Intercolonial Railway was not paying ex-While penses, a road which the hon. Minister of Justice says we are under obligations to maintain and to keep in operation in fulfilment of the terms of Union, we made large contributions to the construction of another railway that was to draw away trade and commerce from it, and the construction of which did not add to the value of property or confer special advantages on the citizens of this country, but added to the value of property and conferred special advantages on the people living in a foreign state. That has been a part of the policy of hon, gentlemen on the Treasury benches. They have constructed a railway, the Short Line, which has diminished the earnings of the Intercolonial Railway, and has increased the loss sustained by the public treasury of this country. It seems to me, Sir, that while it may be proper, in order to get rid of the political influences which interfere with the efficient management of this road, ultimately to appoint a commission, or to put it in charge of some one outside of the Government and independent of its meddlesome oversight, it is first necessary that Parliament should institute an enquiry to ascertain what the management actually is, what opportunities the road may have of adding to its revenue under a more efficient management, and what are the opportunities furnished by the country through which it runs to increase its traffic, and to add to its usefulness as a public undertaking. I am sorry to find that the first thing required to secure a reform in the management of this work is an enquiry by a committee of this House. That enquiry should be full and exhaustive, and the reason why the management of the road has cost so much should be clearly ascertained, and that cannot be ascertained until such an enquiry is had. It will be then possible, with all the facts before us, when we know the actual condition of things, we can determine whether it is wise that this road should continue under the control of a Minister, or whether it might not be better managed by being handed over to a commission which will be free from those political influences that have so long seriously affected the management and the revenues of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. HAZEN. I would like, as this is the first opportunity I have had of doing so, to enter my protest against the idea advocated in some sections of the country, and put forth by a gentleman holding a prominent position in the public life of this country, that unless the Intercolonial Railway can be made to meet the expenses of running it should be closed up. It has been pointed out during this debate that the Intercolonial Railway is part of the compact under which the four original provinces of the Dominion formed Confederation, and I may say that the closing of that road would, under the circumstances, be regarded by the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and I may also say by a large portion of the people of Quebec as Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

by this Parliament for the construction of a road well, irrespective of party or politics, as a viola-in a foreign country for the purpose of entering tion of that compact. I may also say, with into competition with this road, which has been regard to what the hon, member for Bothwell money should be taken from the treasury of the management of a private corporation, that I, for one, and I believe my views will be shared to a great extent by all the people of the province I have the honour to represent, would solemnly protest against the Intercolonial Railway passing from the control of the Government and being placed in the hands of a private corporation, because under the management of that road by the Government the people would feel that their rights would be better secured and protected than they would be, perhaps, if placed in the hands of a private corpo-

Mr. HAZEN. The Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway; and it is my impression that the views I put before the House will be shared by all the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, whether Liberals or Conservatives. I think the House is indebted to the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) for bringing this matter before us. It is a question which may be fairly discussed; and it is of the utmost importance, if such a thing is possible, that some scheme should be devised and adopted for the management of the Intercolonial Railway, which would enable that road to be conducted in a manner that would prevent this yearly drain on the general revenues of the country. road during the past sixteen years, I find, has been run at a gross deficit of $3,834,956.67.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Far more than that.

Mr. HAZEN. I think my figures are perfectly right. If the hon, gentleman, of course, takes into account the interest on what that road originally cost, then the deficit is very much greater; but I am simply giving the figures of what the gross deficit has been on the running of the road during the past sixteen years. I can make my position good by the figures I will give the hon. gentleman, and the accuracy of which will defy contradiction. The results were as follows:-

Adding up these figures of deficits and deducting Intercolonial Railway runs, and I stated on the from the total the sum of $29,763.33, which is the

Mr. BOWELL. Will the hon, gentleman give the difference in mileage?

Mr. HAZEN. I will deal with that shortly. I find that in the five years during which hon, gentlemen opposite were in power, from 1874 to 1878, the deficit was $2,181,116,37, and that the deficit during the eleven years when the Conservatives had the management of the road amounted which I come that the road would be better to $1,653,840.30, or an average yearly deficit under Liberal management of $436,223.27 and under Conservative management of $150,349.11. So that the average deficit when hon, gentlemen opposite were in power was $285,874.16 more than it has been under the present Administration. I do not quote these figures for the purpose of making any invidious comparisons, as there might possibly have been special reasons why, during the four years from 1874 to 1878, the difference between expenditure of those who use the road, if the management were and revenue was larger than during the past eleven That may have been the case; but at any rate, during the five years the Liberal party were in power the road did not give the results it has given since. In 1874 the mileage of the road was 339; in 1875-76 it was 462; in 1876-77 it was 714. In 1879-80 that increased to 829 miles, and now in 1889-90 the mileage is 890. There may be some reasons which I am not aware of why, before that system was completed and while a smaller number of miles were operated than are operated to-day, the profits might be smaller. But, without any partizan motives, I lay these figures before the House, and I say that, under both Governments, there has been a deficit in the management of the Intercolonial Railway. That being the case, I Intercolonial Railway. That being the case, I think both sides of the House should consider whether some scheme could not be adopted, whether some change in management could not be effected, by which these deficits which crop up year after year might be reduced. So far as that part of the road is concerned which lies in the Province of New Brunswick, between St. John and Amherst, and between St. John and the Nova Scotia boundary, and also in regard to that part of the road in Nova Scotia, almost everyone will acknowledge that it must be run at a profit. There is no road that I know of in Canada where there is more freight carried and more passenger travel than there is on the road from St. John to Halifax. I believe that the loss is in a large measure on the division of the road between Campbellton and Rimouski, where the country is not very thickly settled, where there is not much local freight, and where in the winter season there is a great deal of snow and heavy storms, and great expense is incurred in keeping the road clear. The people of the Maritime Provinces do not wish to be charged with the fact that this road is entailing an annual loss upon the people of the Dominion. I do not believe this loss is due to the operation of the road in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I believe it is largely outside of those provinces that the road is run at a loss. In the recent election campaign in St. John this was one of the subjects discussed, and one in which a very deep interest was felt, as it is in all parts of our province through which the refer when the Estimates are under discussion, but amount of surpluses during the four years I have would bring the question of the management of the named, the hon, gentleman will find that the gross deficit was $3,834,956.67—

The particular plactoring the campaign that I would bring the question of the management of the road before Parliament when elected. While I deficit was $3,834,956.67 public platform there during the campaign that I the views expressed this evening by the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) as to the advisability of placing this road in the charge of an independent commission, the members of which should be as independent of the Government of the day as the judges are, and having authority to appoint a qualified manager to conduct the railway. I may say that it is the opinion in the province from managed, and would be managed in every respect more satisfactorily to the people, if the management were not so far removed from the road itself. contention is that it is almost impossible to satisfactorily manage a road when the management is so far removed as the City of Ottawa is from the centre of the Intercolonial Railway system. would be much better in the interests of the country, in the interests of the road, and in the interests placed in the hands of an efficient manager in Moncton, which I think is about the most central place, than to have a general superintendent thereagainst whose ability I have nothing to say-whose authority comes from Ottawa. The responsibility for the management of the road is now very much divided. We have the general superintendent at Moncton, and then we have the general manager of Government railways at Ottawa, and over him we have the Minister of Railways. well known that, where merchants desire to get special rates or special terms on a railway it is a matter of great importance that they should be able to act quickly, and that a quick decision should be given. At present, if a merchant in St. John wants to get a rate over the Intercolonial Railway, if he is in doubt whether he will take his goods by the Intercolonial Railway or the Canadian Pacific Railway, he writes to Mr. Pottinger at Moncton, and if Mr. Pottinger cannot arrange it, then he has to write to Ottawa; and thus there is a delay which would not occur if some one-either Mr. Pottinger or some one else-had more control over the railway system at Moncton. As to the rates on the Intercolonial Railway, I do not believe that the loss is due to the carrying of goods from the Maritime Provinces at a less price than they should be carried, but I know of cases where goods are brought from Toronto to Halifax and other ports in Nova Scotia, five times the distance from St. John, at a less average rate than is charged from St. John to those same places. I have papers here which will bear out what I state. I know that in certain lines of hardware the same goods are carried from Toronto to Halifax, and other places in Nova Scotia at a less rate than they are carried from St. John to the same points. I believe that, if the management were more centralized, say in Moncton, and if the superintendent was a thorough railway man-and I do not say that the present superintendent is not-and if he had more power than the superintendent now possesses, he would be able to popularize that road and could give fair rates and would obtain a larger revenue than is now obtained. There are other matters concerning the internal management of the road to which it may be better that I should

I hope the Government will give due consideration to the views expressed by the hon, member for the advisability of giving more power, as to man-City of Moncton, than they now do; because, no matter how desirous a manager may be to please the people, it is impossible for him to do so effectively when he is so far removed from the centre of the road as the manager is now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the importance of this subject was a sufficient justification for the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) to introduce I listened with great attention to his speech. Australia were, no doubt, interesting in themselves; but I agree with the criticism which has been passed upon them, that they are hardly applicable to the circumstances which exist in Canada, because in Australia they have no competing lines such as we have here, and, therefore, the arguments arising from increased receipts, which would be almost conclusive in support of the appointment of a commission in Australia, would not evident that the Intercolonial Railway is handicapped in two ways. There was a radical and grave mistake made when this road was built. agree with the junior member for St. John (Mr. Hazen), who has just taken his seat, that as far as the Intercolonial Railway which runs through Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is concerned, it pays well, and I believe that the loss takes place on that portion of the road which runs north from Campbellton to Rivière du Loup. The mistake was made when the road was constructed. Business considerations were put on one side, and the road was constructed from military considerations. danced to a military tune and now have got to That road has been built some pay the piper. hundreds of miles longer than it should have been built, and there is no man to-day in Canada who will not admit that a grave mistake, a mistake which cannot be remedied, has been made by the gentlemen who constructed that road where it has been placed. Sir, that road should have been run down through the valley of the St. John, and if that road 20 years ago had been run down the valley of the St. John it would have cost many millions less money than it has cost, and the advantages which would have accrued to that great City of St. John, N.B., and to all the cities of the Maritime Provinces, would have been incalculable. I never could conceive how the Parliament of that day, or those who controlled it, could come to the conclusion that it could be in any sense in the interest of this country that that road should be built in a location which lengthened it some hundreds of miles, and where for all time to come the cost of carriage must be, and must continue to be, more than it ought. result has been what my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Mills) has said, that as commerce developed a second road had to be built, not by a private corporation, but subsidized by this very Government. We had to build a commercial line running down to St. John through the Maritime Provinces, competing with the military line which we built so many years ago, which we have had on our hands ever ten million dollars increase in capital account since Mr. HAZEN.

since, and will have on our hands for all time to come. That was a mistake which could not be re-Albert (Mr. Weldon) to-night, and will consider medied; it was a cardinal mistake in the first instance, the fruits of which the present generation agement, to the superintendent of the road in the and future generations will have to bear. Now, Sir, how else is the road handicapped? The road is handicapped from the fact that it is a political road, there is no doubt about that, and that, I think, was the weakest point in the speech of my hon, friend. If he had shown wherein he thought that savings could be made then I think he would have been justified in asking for the appointment of a parliamentary committee. Is the road overofficered? Are the rates higher than they ought it to the attention of the House this evening, and to be? Or can be point out any other direction in I listened with great attention to his speech. The which beneficial changes in the interest of the pubreferences made by him to railway management in lie could be made? I agree with him almost eye to eye in recognizing the evils of the present system, and I think the way will be paved for the remedy if the hon, member asks for the appointment of a parliamentary committee, whose duty it would be to make a thorough investigation into the circumstances connected with this road, the number of officers, the pay of officers, the rates charged, and everything else connected with its paying capacity, and report on those facts to the House. But we must have the same force in this Dominion. It is remember, as I said before, that that road is handicapped as being a political road. Every member in the Maritime Provinces knows it is run on political considerations and not on commercial principles. The hon, gentleman said that he would make a non-political speech, and I have no exception to take to that particularly, but he has drawn a comparison between the deficits on this road existing under the régime of Mr. Mackenzie and those under the present Government, and he gave figures to establish what the loss was each year. But the hon, gentleman should have remembered that Mr. Mackenzie, when he was in power, professed to run, and did run that road, I believe, on a purely commercial basis, and when the present Government came into power they over-rode that controlling idea, and ran the road on other than commercial principles.

> Mr. HAZEN. Do I understand the hon, gentleman to say that it does not pay to run the road on commercial principles?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not say whether it paid or not. I will lay down this proposition, that the road should be run on commercial principles, and I think Mr. Mackenzie did run it on commercial principles; and I say that Mr. Mackenzie closed the capital account of the road at $36,000,000. If I am correct, and the deficit was charged to expenses, we know at once what the real loss on the running of the road was every year. But when a new Government came into power, in 1878, a change was made in the manner in which the accounts were kept; the capital account was re-opened, and it has run up from $36,000,000 to between $46,000,000 and $50,000,000. All that, of course, was not taken out of current expenses, because a large portion of that increase was for building new roads. But year by year very large amounts, which had been charged to the current expenses of the road, were charged to capital account, and even the statement which the hon, gentleman has read does not show what the actual loss has been, because a portion of the

1878 ought to be charged to the current expenses expense of the general public. I maintain, and of the road as well as any deficits. Now, a question have always maintained, that if you carry a special comes up whether this road is being run on com-mercial principles to-day; I do not think it is, are interested at a lower price than ought to prev-From what information I can gather, it is run as a ail, you are doing it to the detriment and to the political institution—I do not say it is run alto- disadvantage of the general tax-payer. gether on that principle from Ottawa. I do not farmer whose produce has to be hauled along that entirely agree with what the hon, gentleman line, and the fisherman whose produce has to be has said about divorcing the control of the road carried upon it, have just as much right to have entirely from Ottawa. There are many reasons, in their produce carried at non-paying prices as the my opinion, why a continuance of Ottawa control man who invests his money in a coal mine, and is useful. Local influences are sometimes too expects this Government railway to carry it at nonstrong for the local management, and the general paying prices. There is no use in disguising these interests of the public are apt to be sacrificed to facts. That road is over-officered for political the particular interests of individuals. I myself considerations, it is run on political considerations, believed that a controlling interest from Ottawa is and it is for political considerations that coal is to some extent very good. But take the local macarried at non-paying prices. And that, to some nagement, from Mr. Pottinger, the manager, down, extent, is one cause of the loss. This question and with a few rare and creditable exceptions it is cannot be disposed of in a short debate. I admit a political institution, run for political purposes, that the location of the road is fixed, and You have a political army used for political purposes, that it cannot be altered. But the other point poses and they are paid political salaries. I believe on which I think it is handicapped, the political these evils can be remedied to some extent by the character of the management of the road, can suggestion made by the hon, gentleman; I believe be altered, either by the mode suggested by they can be obviated even without putting this road, the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), or in commission. At any rate, I think we need more information, and that information should be got by a parliamentary committee. It is a little late in the day to have one appointed this year, but I think that in the near future the hon, gentleman would be conferring a benefit upon the people he represents, and upon others, if he would have this Now, the parliamentary committee appointed. Minister of Justice says that it is desirable that this road should not be run entirely upon commercial principles, that other considerations should intervene and control the management. that should be the cardinal principle. I remember taking up the report of the chief engineer in charge of the road, and when he came to account for the loss in running that road he attributed it, to a large extent, to the fact that he carried such articles as coal at a rate below a paying price. What are you doing? You are not carrying that coal on commercial principles. When you come to fix the rates of freight and to determine a commercial rate you must remember that you have got rivals, and the rate must be determined largely by the rate at which your rival will carry it. have not only a rival in the Canadian Pacific Rail. way, but you have got a rival route to Boston, and then by water to the Maritime Provinces, and in fixing the rate upon the Intercolonial Railway you have got to be guided by the fact that you have two rival routes to contend with, and you must fix your rates at as low a price as is charged by the But that being conceded, then you other routes. ought to fix the rates upon commercial principles, and fix them just as low as they ought to be. But you do not do that; you carry coal at a loss. An enormous amount of money was expended a few years ago in the building of special freight cars for the carriage of that coal, and I think I am within bounds when I say that two million dollars—I may be wrong; I speak without reference to the book -but a very large sum of money was charged for the construction of these coal cars, and every dollar of that was carried to capital That was not running the road on commercial principles; that was running the road in some other way, by the Government taking the matter in hand and cradicating the political element, which I do not very much hope for myself. It is said by some hon, gentlemen that this road might be transferred to a private corporation. I do not think that would be justice. I would be opposed to it entirely, and I would be opposed to it for a reason that I think has not been mentioned to-night. My opinion has been for years that Canada is in great danger of being controlled too much by private corporations, and the institution of another corporation in the east with an army of 12,000 or 13,000 men, equivalent to the army of the great corporation in the west, would be a very great danger to the future of Canada. The road can be run properly, and efficiently, and economically in the hands of an economical Government, and if it is found that it cannot be run in the hands of the Government, it certainly can be run in the hands of a commission. The matter has reached that stage when hon, gentlemen will feel justified, in fact, will feel impelled to move for a parliamentary committee to ascertain if the statements made in regard to the political influences which dominate the management of the road are true, and as to what saving in the expenditure can be made, as to the freight charges and other information, and the House will then be in a better position to come to a conclusion as to what should be done with this great national road.

Mr. TUPPER. I think we have enjoyed the very interesting discussion this evening on this very important question, and I am glad the hon. gentleman for Queen's (Mr. Davies) agrees with the majority of hon, members who have expressed an opinion in regard to the retention of the control of the railway in the hands of the Government. The hon, gentleman made an allusion to the early history of the road when he spoke of it as a military route, and I thought it might appear a little ungenerous on the part of Canada to complain much in regard to that, or to adopt the language used by the hon. gentleman. "It dances to a military tune and adds a military road to the dance." If we had in order to develop a particular industry at the not adopted that route we would have had neither road nor dance, for the hon, gentleman will recollect that it was for a good consideration the route was adopted which the Imperial Government de-

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell), Hear, hear.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, member for Bothwell says "hear, hear." He doubts the accuracy of my argument or the strength of that point. will remember that at that time Canada considered it necessary to obtain an Imperial Government guarantee in order to raise the money for the construction of the road, and there was correspondence extending for years, if I mistake not, previous to Confederation, certainly on the part of the late Hon. Joseph Howe, as a member of the Government of Nova Scotia and Colonial Secretary, in order to obtain the aid afterwards given at the hands of the Imperial Government. There was no hands of the Imperial Government. evidence of the slightest ability on the part of the different provinces to construct the road, and it was not contended that the road be constructed as an Intercolonial road without that assistance. refer to that part of the history for another purpose. We have larger ideas now as to what a road should do, as to what business it should produce, than the people or statesmen who managed those matters 20 or 30 years ago entertained. I think it is justifiable, in view of the remarks made to-night respecting the deficit, to look back and see what was expected when this road was undertaken by a population much smaller than ours, by scattered provinces with means not half so large, and with credit not nearly so high as that of Canada to-day. It is pleasing to look back and see exactly how they estimated the work, and compare that estimate with the result stated to-night, and see whether after all we have not done better than was expected. For instance, in the correspondence to which I alluded between Mr. Howe and the Colonial Secretary at that time in England, both of those statesmen took this view of the Intercolonial Railway, or a railway connecting the different provinces, that it was so necessary to the welfare of those provinces and to the people of North America, that it was wholly immaterial whether it would pay or not, and the Colonial Secretary in a very able despatch pointed out that it could not be expected that the road would ever pay, and perhaps it was not desirable that it should be managed for revenue purposes, and both statesmen dwelt on the tremendous and unlimited advantages accruing from the operation of a railway by the Government for the people and in the interests of the people of the different provinces. If there is loss or deficit, where does it go, except practically back to the people, and is not taken out of trade. The trade east and west is bonussed or aided to that extent, and there is no such loss—although I am not giving my view on the amount—as is represented by the large figures quoted when reference is made to the annual deficits on the Intercolonial Railway, if the deficits are not due to corruption or mismanagement of the character referred to, but are on account of the low rates that are charged upon the freight over the No one has attempted to establish that the carrying over the Government road of goods without charging paying rates is a loss to the country. Hon. gentlemen are no doubt aware that at present there is a very interesting discussion being not be run at a loss less than half a million dollars Mr. TUPPER.

carried on in the English reviews involving a proposition of State ownership of English railways, and the argument is based on the ground of the benefit it will be on account of the enormous sums which are at present taken out of the trade and business of England being left in the hands of those industries, which would be a great benefit to that country. At all events, that is a matter worthy of consideration. We find that the United States are about to appropriate enormous sums to subsidize steamships. We have appropriated half a million dollars in order to subsidize an Atlantic line of steamers to carry passengers and freight from this country to Great Britain. The subsidies proposed in the United States are enormous. All these are based on the same principle as the construction of this road, the creation of a great traffic which will benefit the whole country, even though we may pay in the shape of a deficit. No doubt, it is important in the interest of the country to keep down the deficits. But in considering this question I submit that the question of the canals must come up with the question of railways. The hon, gentlemen have forgotten that we lose about $100,000 a year in the operation of the canal system. If it is a wise thing to run a railway controlled and owned by the Government on commercial principles and charge paying rates, the question of the canal system must be taken up and considered side by side. It would not be tolerated, I do not think it would be contended, that we should adopt one system for the Government railways and another for the canals. The object of both seems to be the same—to benefit the commerce of the country and develop interprovincial trade: and if the Government are unable to manage the Government railways because there is an annual deficit, the same argument will lie, and the Government must be called upon to abrogate their functions respecting the canal system and hand them over to a corporation or a commission. think that the question will have to be approached Now, then, we have the opinion of in that way. Mr. Potter, who was a great authority in connection with the Grand Trunk Railway system of this country, and we have the opinion of Mr. Brydges, and the opinions of these gentlemen enabled the hon, member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), when Minister of Finance, to take the country into his confidence and to tell them that instead of the comparatively satisfactory result which has been mentioned to-night in connection with the operation of the road which the member for St. John (Mr. Hazen) has pointed out, that the country was to be prepared for a loss of half a million a year on the Intercolonial Railway. In 1875 or 1876, I forget which, the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), as Minister of Finance, advised Parliament and advised Canada that they were to expect a loss of half a million a year on the Intercolonial Railway. No matter how this question may be dealt with, or no matter what the country may deem wise as to the steps to be taken, they have reason to congratulate themselves that the statement then made as to the annual loss was above the mark rather than below it. Mr. Brydges and Mr. Potter, one a commissioner in connection with the road, and the other connected with the Grand Trunk Railway system, both gave it as their opinion that the road could per annum. Well, the road has been managed, and it has been extended very greatly indeed, and yet its annual loss since the operation began has not been equal to that. The hon, gentleman will remember that irrespective of the point the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) raised about the construction of the British North America Act, and the right of this Parliament now to change the condition of affairs as they were at the union -the House will recollect, that regardless of the letter of the law, or the construction of that Act, that this was the very consideration between the different provinces: that the road should not merely be built, but that it should be built by the Government and run by the Government. I can recollect having read with great interest an able speech by Mr. Brown during the Confederation debate in the old Parliament of Canada, in which he said: So necessary was it for Canada to have that road—not so necessary for the Maritime Provinces by any means—but so necessary was it for all the provinces to have the Intercolonial Railway constructed that the running of it at a loss was a mere bagatelle, and that whether it paid or did not pay the interest, that we could not have Confederation without it, and that he, for his part, was ready to pay the price of five Intercolonial Railways in order to consummate the union of the provinces of British North America. Taking into consideration all these facts in connection with the history of this great work, I say that while we may very wisely and properly set about devising some system of management for improving the running of that road, if it can be improved, and for assisting these merchants and traders of our country who wish to send their business over the road. yet we have no reason to regret from one point of view the present condition of affairs. Bad as any. one may picture the condition of the road, and much as they may regret that the receipts do not show up better than they do, yet they have every reason to congratulate themselves that they are not as bad as all the provinces understood they might be when they undertook this responsibility. So in connection with the canal system, as I have already said. The arguments are familiar to hon. gentlemen, and they apply to a Government railway and to a railway of that character binding the Maritime Provinces with the rest of the Dominion. The canals do incalculable benefit to the commerce of the country, and the tolls and the rates are certainly considered a secondary matter in the canal system. It does seem to me as going to a great length to endeavour to discuss the Intercolonial Railway on any other principle. Hon. gentlemen sometimes run away with the impression that this road is for the Maritime Provinces alone. It has been pointed out to-night that the chief loss occurs on the through business, and on account of the through rates; and if the figures of the traffic were stated I think it would be found that the bulk of that through traffic is from the west to the Maritime Provinces, instead of from the Maritime Provinces west. I hope these tables will be turned some day, and that the Maritime Provinces will send up as much, if not more, than they now receive from the western provinces. This, therefore, is not a question in which the lower provinces are alone interested. It is a question thoroughly national in its inception and keep the railway at work, simply for the great in its working out. Some hon, gentlemen have benefit that would result from it. But the rate is alluded incidentally to the construction of the Short Line Railway, and whatever may be said about that, I do not think that a political aspect can be given to it in this connection, because the hon, member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who rather quarrelled about the construction of that road, will remember that a very large proportion of his own colleagues of the Liberal party in this House supported the Government in the steps they took to construct that road. I am one of those who are of the opinion that the construction of that road is not going to injure this country, no matter what the temporary effect is on the receipts of the Inter-I believe that that road is of colonial Railway. great benefit to Canada, and that it will become a greater benefit every year. It is the carrying out of the original undertaking to give us a direct connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway system between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. The hon, member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) made a passing allusion to coal; but the Minister of Justice pointed out a principle in connection with that well known to railway men. He could have gone further; and I put it to these hon, gentlemen who are familiar with the business of different railway corporations, that they know themselves that the railway companies of this country will carry business for almost nothing, and sometimes actually for nothing, and that they will expend money for the purpose of drawing traffic to their road. the matter of construction of hotels along the railway system, which is often an expenditure out of pocket by the railway company in order to obtain passenger traffic over its line. The companies will take an interest in different private matters that a Government railway is debarred from entering into on account of the political difficulties that surround all these transactions, and they will resort to all kinds of schemes in order to bring traffic to the The original outlay is brought back to them a hundred fold. But before the rate on coal can be quarrelled with the argument that has been advanced in support of it to-night by the Minister of Justice should be met, and that is, that it applies practically now on the Intercolonial Railway to the Spring Hillmines only. The Pictoumines do not send any coal over the line at the rate of three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. The coal they ship pays a very remunerative rate to the Intercolonial Railway; they ship to Halifax and to St. John and to tide water, and that coal pays, and pays well; but if the rate to the west on the Spring Hill mines coal were increased it would simply either close down the mine or cause such a small output that the flourishing town of Spring Hill-which has grown up, and is absolutely dependent on these mines, and now furnishes the chief customers of the Intercolonial Railway for many miles of the road—would be wiped out, and the loss to the road would be enormous in that These mines bring in a very great amount respect. of freight and machinery for construction purposes, and so on, and they pay a very heavy rate on these articles. The people they employ and the business interests connected with them all through the provinces bring goods over that system; and I do not hesitate to say that railway men everywhere will tell you that if a private company owned the Intercolonial Railway they would make the rate whatever was necessary in order to haul that coal and not an extraordinary one. I could mention railway after railway in the United States which carries coal at less than three-tenths of a cent a mile. Some of those companies I admit own the mine as well as the railway, and they keep the rate very low: but there are others near Baltimore which carry coal at a less rate per ton per mile, though not connected with the mines producing the coal which they carry. But, at any rate, it is not an extra-ordinary rate for coal. But I am also informed that on our Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk systems special rates are made, not only with reference to coal, but with reference to other goods, where it is necessary to build up a traffic with which ours could very reasonably compare. But the result of increasing that rate was well explained in this House by the hon, member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) a year or so ago, when it was proposed to increase it, and it was shown that any increase would simply stop altogether that traffic from Cumberland County to Lévis, and decrease business and traffic over the Intercolonial Railway system very appreciably. These are the remarks which, at the moment, struck me. I appreciate the importance of the question, but I rose particularly to add my voice to what has already been said, to the effect that the feeling in the Maritime Provinces is most unanimous in favour of this road being run as a Government road, as it was run from the first. While they are willing and eager that any useful reform should be adopted, and the system made as perfect as possible, they wish the responsibility to lie where it properly belongs, at the doors of the Government in power at the time; and I think it would be unwise and against the interests, not only of the people of that part of Canada, but of the people at large, to consider the proposition that has been advanced, either of transferring the road to the management of a private corporation, or handing over the responsibility to other individuals than those who constitute the Government of the day. I would hail with a great deal of pleasure any enquiry into the management of the road, and I was surprised that the hon, member for Queen's made the allusion he did, in reference to the employes on the Intercolonial Railway being there for political purpose only.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not say that the men were there for political purpose only, because we all know that they are there at any rate to do the work of running the road. But I say that political considerations are paramount in the management of the road.

Mr. TUPPER. They no doubt enter into the selection of those men; but it is well known, and is to the credit of the country in which that railway is situated, that there is not a superior class on any road in Canada, or in the United States, to the men who constitute the workers on the Intercolonial Railway system. It is remarked by the people who travel over that railway every year that a better set of conductors or train hands cannot be found on any system; and the hon. gentleman himself, I am sure, would, on reflection, do the men that justice.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Oh, yes.

Mr. TUPPER. So that the men under this Government, as under the previous Government, though appointed on political considerations, are not appointed on political considerations only. I Mr. TUPPER.

know that a most careful examination is not only made of the applicants for office, but I know that it is impossible to retain in the service of the road—I am speaking of train hands; I do not know how far up the rule goes—any man who is unfit for his work. The rules are very severe, and in the case of certain offences, some of them very heinous, it is impossible to secure the reinstatement of any man proved guilty.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The rules sometimes are yielding.

Mr. TUPPER. I am speaking of the rules being most unyielding. I know of no exception to the rules to which I am referring; and it may be on account of that rigid discipline that the train hands have won the reputation which they have, and of which any man in the Maritime Provinces has reason to feel proud.

Mr. DICKEY. I feel that the House has unconsciously given the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) a certain justification for the suggestion he has made to remove political considerations from the management of Government railways, because we all know, even from the short discussion which we have had in this House, with what difficulty hon, gentlemen on both sides have kept out of the political maelstrom in dealing with their There are two questions touched upon which might be considered as verging on dan-gerous ground politically. The first is the division of the deficit between the late Government and the present Government; and the second is the coal rate. I do not propose to discuss either of these questions, because I hope that those who address the House hereafter on this question, as those who have already addressed it, will discuss this question purely from a business standpoint, and with the national view of improving, if we can, our railway system, and lessening the deficit that exists on it. With regard to the coal rate, I must be allowed to say that I do not at all admit that that rate is too low, or that it is in itself an unpaying rate. I am prepared to establish the proposition that by comparison with the rates on other railways on this continent the coal rate on the Intercolonial Railway is justified on the ground of its earning power in its present shape. It also brings large benefits to the railway, which would entitle it to be maintained even if it were not a paying rate. But all these questions I waive, because we are here to discuss the question raised by my hon. friend from Albert. I think it is a pity that hon, gentlemen on both sides should show a feeling that almost amounts to a panic with regard to the deficits on the Intercolonial Railway. These deficits are to be regretted; but I think the hon. Minister of Marine acted very judiciously in recalling to the House the recent history, which it has apparently forgotten, even so recently as the beginning of Confederation, when everybody accepted this road as a political road and a non-paying road; and we must not let the fact that other roads are run on different principles carry us away from the principle on which this road was built. Now, just consider the position of the road itself. As a comparison, we have the Prince Edward Island line, running through one of the richest countries, I believe, in the Dominion, one of the richest countries in the world, and a comparatively thickly populated country; and yet we find I that railway only collects about fifty cents on every-dollar spent in its management. Now, whatever improvidence there may be in the management of that road this loss cannot all arise from political reasons. In the Intercolonial Railway, we have from Moneton to Ste. Flavie--I speak with deference to the views of hon, gentlemen who represent the constituencies between these points -a distance of 290 miles of almost absolutely non-paying road, where express trains run forty to sixty miles without stopping at a station; and not only that, but a road where little freight is taken up or set down, and on which, with the exception of the summer travel of tourists, there is very little paying traffic whatever. Not only that, but from Ste. Flavie to Rivière du Loup, is, I venture to say, the worst road in the world as regards the difficulty of working it in winter. With the north-west and westerly winds driving the snow over it, there is not a road in the world where it is so difficult to handle the snow in the winter. We all know that that one expense has run as high as $100,000 a year, and that is almost all on this section north of Moneton, so that I do not think, in considering this road, we should be at all surprised when we find a deficit in its operations. I may be allowed to make some passing remarks upon what has been stated as to the general principle upon which this road should be run. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) says it should be run on commercial principles, and I understood the hon. Minister of Justice to say that that should not be the guiding principle, but that it should rather be run on national principles. Now, I submit that the argument used by the hon. Minister of Marine is perfectly sound in principle. The canal system of this country, the money we vote for bonusing roads, the money we spend in deepening the St. Lawrence River and on our harbours and piers, the money we have spent in building the Canadian Pacific Railway—all this stands on exactly the same principle as the money we spend on the Intercolonial Railway. It was all spent, just as the money on the Intercolonial Railway was spent, for the purpose of making this country a nation instead of a few scattered colonies, and whatever it is necessary we should pay to keep that intact, I believe this Parliament will cheerfully pay, and the country will willingly back us in doing whatever is absolutely necessary to preserve the national character of the road. The limitation must be made, of course, that it shall only be what is absolutely necessary. I am not here to discuss the management of this road in its details. I must say, however, with regard to the observations of the hon. Minister of Justice, that I have not that same confidence in the administration of a Government which he seems to entertain. I believe, and I think that all the evidence leads in that direction, that the administrative test has not yet been made as regards free Governments. Where you have so many forces at work, it is very difficult to get that concentrated and prompt action which is necessary to efficient management. I am not speaking here of one party or one country, but speaking generally of the history of the whole civilized world and of free institutions. We have seen the administration of a free government break down in the Crimean war and in every war England has ever had; we have seen it break down in the United States proposition that free governments are on their trial, | in a very different position. We are by the side of so far as administration is concerned. I do not say that we cannot manage this road as a government road. I would not agree with the proposition of the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) to put this road under a commission, until further trial has been given of the present direct executive management, or until a very strong case had been made out for placing it under a commission. I will say this, however, that neither the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) nor the Minister of Justice did full justice to the argument of my hon, friend from Albert, as I understood it. The hon, member for Bothwell said that the case of Australia is not parallel to that of Canada, because there are no competing roads there. But the hon. member for Albert's argument was this: I give you the result of running the roads in Australia with no competing roads, but before there was a commission in charge, and I compare that with the same roads as managed by a commission, and I have shown you that the result has been successful. That was the argument of the hon, member for Albert, and I do not think it was fairly met.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the hon, gentleman will permit me, my observation upon that statement was this: that there was an alteration in the rates, and how far the difference was the result of that alteration in rates, the statement of the hon. member for Albert did not disclose.

Mr. DICKEY. But I also think my hon. friend did not do full justice to the hon. member for Albert on the point I have mentioned. With regard to the instances which the hon. member for Albert cited, there are some very striking peculiarities about the social condition of New South Wales and Victoria. In the first place they are very small countries comparatively, and their population is comparatively within a small compass. In each of them there is a peculiar characteristic, which does not exist in Canada, of a single city containing nearly half the population of the whole country. From this city lines radiate running to the country, and it sounds strange to us as colonists to read the reports of the commissioners in Melbourne, Victoria, stating they propose next year to quadruple the track of a certain line, running out from Melbourne, and to duplicate another track. figures as to the carriage of passengers are simply startling to anybody who reads them. The total population of Victoria is a little over a million, and yet last year on the Government roads in Victoria they carried 79,000,000 persons, and the House will understand what a tremendous feature that is in the consideration of this question when the Intercolonial Railway only carried 1,000,000 persons last year. I think the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) will admit that it is very difficult to compare the results of any particular tariff of rates on roads where the proportion They also of passengers carried is about 70 to 1. carried about 3 tons of freight to one that we carry. Their freight charges are enormouly larger than ours. I do not think that the people of this country would submit to the freight charges made on the Victoria railways. The people who settled Victoria went out there from England with a knowledge only of the English freight charges, and they have submitted to the charges which their war, and all recent history carries out my general Government have put on them, but we are situated a country which has about a quarter of the railway mileage of the world and whose freights are cheaper and whose management is cheaper than that of any country in the world, so that our people have an object lesson constantly before them which is more valuable than any commission could offer. We have conditions existing here which I think would very seriously embarrass the management under such circumstances. Still, I believe the scheme of a commission has great merits. I am sure that every member on this side of the House would be only too glad to support any scheme which, while doing justice to the country, would wipe the political aspect out of the management of the Intercolonial Railway, and I for one would do anything either in the direction of the appointment of a commission or of any other modification of the management of the Intercolonial Railway so as to bring about that desirable result; but at the same time I would not lose sight of the fact that this is a national road and that, if it is handed over to a commission, the true national ends for which it was constructed shall not be lost sight of in its working.

Mr. FRASER. I am very glad this matter has been brought before the House, and I agree with much that was said by the hon, member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), which I must admit had a great deal of weight with me. I am aware that the Intercolonial Railway is a bond of union between the provinces, so that the deficit on that road might well be met by the Dominion, but I do not think that, because it is a bond of union, we should always take it for granted that there will be a deficit, and that we should act upon that idea and receive with perfect complaisance the deficits which we have to meet year after year, provided we can avoid that result. If the people of the various provinces are accommodated as they are now, I believe that we can change this deficit, and I think we should have some commission of enquiry in regard to it. Some hon, gentlemen seem to assume that this road was built under such circumstances that there must be a deficit in its working. I do not think the contracting parties believed that there was to be always a deficit on this road, and I think that probably a committee would find many things in the management of this road which might be changed. Within the last few days I have found the manner in which rates are charged on the Intercolonial Railway. For example, a car of flour from Ontario to Nova Scotia can only be paid New Glasgow, and the as far as charge from New Glasgow to Antigonish is five or six times as large as that from Ontario to New Glasgow. Of course I admit that you cannot charge as much per mile for long distances as for short distances.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Will the hon. gentleman repeat that statement?

Mr. FRASER. I say that the freight upon the same car of flour from New Glasgow to Antigonish is five times as much per mile as from Ontario to New Glasgow. I can understand that the freight must, of necessity, be less per mile for the longer distance than for the shorter distance, but let us change the situation. For example, the freight on a car from Antigonish to New Glasgow, 41

gow to Spring Hill, a distance of 100 miles, it is only 84. There must be something wrong there. What is the reason for that?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. You never get the mileage on the long haul the same as on the short haul.

Mr. FRASER. But the charge for a car 41 miles is $10, and for a distance more than twice that, it is only $4.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is not so. You are misinformed about that.

Mr. FRASER. I am stating what I had from a business man, who actually had to pay that amount.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There was some difficulty a little while ago in reference to some matter of that kind, but it was arranged.

Mr. FRASER. I am only mentioning this in order to show the way in which the Intercolonial Railway is managed, and I say that an investigation should be had into that management. I am satisfied that too much is made of the long rates and that the Intercolonial Railway is not making enough of the local business. I think that the Intercolonial Railway should, like most railways now, begin to see that there is more to be made in the local business than has hitherto been considered, and I believe that, if better rates were given, and the local trade were developed in that way, we would make more out of the road than by continually looking to the longer hauls. Then, as to what the hon, member for Aibert (Mr. Weldon) says should be taken into consideration, that there is something different in Canada from the condition of the countries to which he has referred. I am satisfied that there could be such a pruning brought about by such a commission as the hon, gentleman has spoken of as would materially reduce the deficit on this road. I am sure that the people of Nova Scotia would not like to see the road handed over to a company, and the reason is plain. They want to have the present rates or more favourable rates for the carriage of their freight; but, for myself, I would not fear that any more injury would result from a company than from the present system under which the road is run, and, if the present rates must be upheld, I would not very much object to handing the road over to a company. As far as the political aspect of the question is concerned, we could never suffer more from any company than we do now as the road is conducted under the Dominion Government. But that aside, as a business matter, I am satisfied, if a commission were appointed, they could make these suggestions. The hon member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) spoke about running the road from Ottawa. I must take issue with him there. I think there are men on the Intercolonial Railway, at Moncton, now, to whom if full powers were given, that would run the road better than it is I am satisfied, for example, now run from Ottawa. that the time-table which is dictated from Ottawa is against the views of the best railway men at Moncton, and could be changed for the better. The whole time-table is now made out with the view of satisfying other lines. A good table was prepared a year ago that was satisfactory to the people of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and half an hour miles, is $10, and on the same car from New Glas- afterwards it was changed from Ottawa. You must Mr. Dickey.

give more power to good railway men such as we have now at Moncton. I think what the Minister of Customs said about the character of the railway men is true. than we have on the Intercolonial Railway. course, they have not the same temptations as men have on larger roads, and in larger countries, but for all that, they are good, true and honest men. Of course, we always find them on the same side in elections, but barring that they do their work Now, if the suggestion of the member for Albert is carried out, we will be relieved from a difficulty of that kind, and the commission could find out what the facts are about running the road. I am satisfied, for example, that certain rebates are given to certain merchants that should not be given; I am satisfied that conditions are imposed upon some merchants that are not imposed upon others. committee could enquire into these things. I trust the House will favourably receive this suggestion of the hon, member for Albert, and that the committee will be appointed, and if the hon, gentleman will accept that as a first step, he may get the commission he speaks of later on to run the road. committee should endeavour to find out where the difficulties are, and I am sure Parliament is very anxious to have them removed. It must not be expected that those who are now running the road do all the work they could; it need not be expected that they run the road on the same business principles they would do if they had fuller power. Everybody understands that now the Intercolonial Railway is expected to be run as a Government institution in the interest of the Government that is in power for the time being. I am sure if this committee is appointed it would not only assist the present Government, but assist all governments in The Govputting the road into a better position. ernment would then avoid the political difficulty of the road, and would be relieved from the anxiety and trouble of making appointments. I am not afraid, so far as the people of Nova Scotia are conthat if this enquiry is 'made, shall suffer anything in respect to rates. require only fair rates. If the Intercolonial Railway was built as a bond of union, it was not for the purpose of giving Nova Scotia any better rates than the people of other provinces are getting. not want the road to run for our special advantage; we want fair rates and nothing more. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman who spoke last, means anything more than that, namely, that we should get proper rates, but not better rates than any other provinces are getting. I am sure the hon. member for Albert is entitled to the thanks, not only of the people of his province, but of the people of this Dominion, for having brought up this question, and I trust the discussion will be productive of much good.

Mr. GILLMOR. This discussion has afforded me a geat deal of pleasure. It is about the first discussion where Parliament has divested itself of party feeling. It really is a good treat to have this assembly become a deliberative body for an hour. I am glad to see that party has not got so entirely beyond control in this country that we cannot discuss a great public question upon its merits, for I have thought a good deal about this railway. I have read somewhat about the workings gave very much greater satisfaction. Although of railways in the Australian colonies, and I do the conditions of the countries are not identical, not think their conditions are similar to ours. do not think that we can expect to put the Government railways of Canada in the hands of a There are no better men on any road commission, nor do I think it is necessary. Of human nature is at present, I do not believe that it is hopeless that Governments can be found who can work railways and who can do the right thing. I think myself that gentlemen who fill the high and responsible office of governing a country, ought to be the quintescence of honesty, and of honour, and of economy. I do not know where you will get good men that will do the right thing and the honest thing in the public interest, if you donottakethem from themen that are chosen by the people to fill the posts of honour and responsibility. Therefore I believe that the railways of Canada can beruneconomically, and in the interest of the people, by the hon, gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches. With regard to railways in Australia, if my reading is not at fault, the improvement in their management is not altogether due to putting them into the hands of commissioners. The conditions of that country are very much improved, as the country has advanced the railways have become more profitable. Their rates are very liberal indeed. For instance, they carry all the school children free who can avail themselves of Government railways. The workingmen living in the rural districts, for a mere nominal sum, have the use of these railways to convey them to and from their labour. Altogether the system is very tempting, but the conditions are altogether different. My own impression is that this discussion will do good, because it will lead to the appointment of a committee to make a candid and serious examination into the working of this railway. There has been just a little trenching upon party lines. I do not like to have my friends compare the present results of this road with the results under the Liberal regime of Mr. Mackenzie, when the road was in its early history. Since that time trade has greatly developed, and you cannot make a comparison between the year when it was first in operation and the present time, when it has become enlarged and trade has been greatly developed.

> Mr. McLEOD. As I come from a constituency that is deeply interested in this railway, I think I may be pardoned for making some remarks. agree with the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Gillmor), that it is very satisfactory to find that this question can be discussed from a I think the Minister of non-party standpoint. Justice and the hon, gentleman who has just spoken misunderstood the position taken by my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) in regard to the statistics he presented concerning the railways in Victoria and New South Wales. We all know that the conditions of that country are different from those of Canada, and we do not expect the same results, whatever the condition of the road, as were obtained there. But my hon. friend pointed out that in those countries, where they had nothing but Government roads, they had been managed for some time by the Government; and yet the people were not satisfied, and an effort was made to improve the management. They appointed a commission, and the management of the road improved, the revenue of the road increased, and the road still it is fair to say, especially when this change has been continued and the people remain well satisfied, that the management was improved by the introduction of the commission. That applies entirely to those countries and to the condition of those countries. We have a road in Canada that has been managed almost twenty years by the Government, and I do not think I say too much when I affirm that the results are not satisfactory. differ from hon, gentlemen who claim that we should be satisfied, notwithstanding the fact that there is such a deficit, and notwithstanding the fact that we are brought face to face with an increasing deficit from year to year. That is not a satisfactory result. We have had this management under the Governments of both parties, and in both cases there was a deficit. So we may say we have given it a fair trial, and I do not believe the Government of Canada can manage the road as satisfactorily as a commission or a company. With respect to the location of the Intercolonial Railway, I desire to offer a few remarks. I come from St. John and we are deeply interested in the road. I remember there was a great deal of discussion and dissatisfaction in St. John when the road was located, but I am not at all prepared to say that the location is not a proper one, or that it is a very improper one. We have opened up a very important section of province; the road passes several very considerable towns along the north shore, and, speaking as a St. John man, I know our trade from St. John, in that section of the country has increased considerably by means of the Intercolonial Railway. We now have, largely owing to private enterprise, the road down the St. John valley. Then it was said by the Minister of Railways, and put forward very strongly as against the view of the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), that this road was built as a national highway, and, therefore, it should continue to be a Government highway, to be operated by the Government. I must say I differ somewhat from the Minister of Justice, in regard to that matter. I know the road was built as a national road, that it was part of the condition of the union of the provinces, the road should be built and should be operated. It has been built, and it has been operated. There is no proposition not to operate it. It is intended to operate it, and the object of my hon. friend's remarks is not to decrease its utility, but to place it in a position that it could be better operated in the best interests of our country. That is the object. interests of our country. That is the object. It is not at all to do away with the road as a national road, or interfere with the operating of it, but our desire is to operate it more in the interest of the country than is now possible. We have had a trial of the management of the road by the Government, and I do not think it has been satisfactory. For what reason? Let us look around us. It is said our rates of freight are too low. The first thing I see is that it is run as a political road. I do not care what party is in power or what Government, the Intercolonial Railway is a political road, and this fact is against its best interests. Anyone acquainted with the railway counties knows very well the pressure continually brought to bear on the representatives to have men appointed to positions on the road and retained there, and the managers are really only agents so long as the road is managed by the Government, because political pressure is continually brought to bear, no matter the attention of the House, and for the very great Mr. McLEOD.

what party is in power. So if that fact does interfere with the best mode of managing the road, how shall we obviate that difficulty? Is it not plain that it is to remove this road as far as possible from political influences? It is said that it would not be desirable to hand it over to a private company. I agree entirely with that view. I would be entirely opposed to handing over its management to a private company. But with respect to the other proposition, I am disposed to think—in fact I believe, after giving some study to the matter and reading the results obtained by the commissioners in New South Wales—that a commission should be appointed that would be non-political, the same as are the appointments of the Auditor General and the judges, so they would be free from the control of the Government, and the entire management of the road should be placed in their hands, to be managed on business principles. I believe it should be managed on business principles. I differ in that respect from what has been said by some hon, gentlemen. not believe the deficit should be as large as it is, because there is a long section of the road which pays very well, the section from St. John to Halifax. There is a loss I believe, on the northern portion of the road. It is said the trains are run over the road at a high rate of speed for long distances. It may be so; I do not say it is so. A commission would find out if too many trains are run for the business to be done or a too high rate of speed maintained. If those evils are ascertained they can be remedied, and they can be remedied more easily and promptly if the road is placed in commission than if managed as at present by the Government. There is another matter referred to by my hon. colleague from St. John, the management of the road so far away from the road itself. that is not a satisfactory management, and such a management cannot be made satisfactory. speaking as a manfrom a railway constituency, and I know the difficulties attending it, because I feel them every day. I believe even in this particular there is a wrong which may be remedied. Looking at these matters I think the people may fairly come to the conclusion that during the past twenty years we have had sufficient experience of the present system of management and we should have some I must say that I am glad that the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has brought this question up, and I trust that the Government will give it a fair consideration, because I know that if they do give it a fair consideration they will come to the conclusion that the present management of the Intercolonial Railway is unsatisfactory, and it will be necessary to look around to see what is the best management. If the management is not to be handed over to a private company, then we are bound to consider whether or not a commission will handle the railway in a more satisfactory way than at present.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to detain the House at any length, but I wish to make one or two remarks upon this subject, and to call the attention of the House to one or two circumstances which I think had perhaps be better referred to in connection with the management of the Intercolonial Railway. think we all feel grateful to the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) for bringing this subject to care and study which he has given to the theory which he has advanced. I agree with those tonight who, in referring to this subject, have said that the loss on the operation of the Intercolonial Railway at the present time, do not condemn the political management of that railway. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries called our attention to the history of the construction of this road, and to the inducements which were held out by those who advocated its construction at the time of Confederation. He also pointed out, and very properly pointed out, that the actual results at the present time were very much better than had been anticipated at that early date. If we look now at the history of the operation of this road, from the time of its construction, we will be impressed with this fact: That during the early years after its construction, there was a very considerable deficit in the operation of the road, and that this continued, according to the figures that my hon. friend gave, until about 1880. At that time, I think all in this House who are acquainted with this business of the road, will admit that the traffic increased very largely, that the rates of freights were very considerably reduced, and that as a total result, during these years, the expenses and income were brought very nearly together. There was a small profit for several years, varying from a few hundred dollars to a few thousand dollars. Now, during the last few years, this conditions of things has been reversed, and it does appear to me that there is a very apparent and sufficient cause for this increased deficit, but that it does not point to any laxity, or to any fault in the administration of the road at the present time, as compared with its administration in former years. We know that the opening of the Short Line Railway has very materially reduced the traffic on this road. Short Line Railway through the State of Maine at the present time, carries practically all the traffic from the city of St. John, and from the Western portion of the Province of New Brunswick, westwards and to the eastward; traffic for these points passes over that road as well. The result of the construction of this additional communication has rendered it necessary for the management of the Intercolonial Railway to increase the cost of operating that road. They are obliged to run faster trains, they are obliged to run more trains, and to give greater accommodation; and if anyone will examine the report of the Minister of Railways for the last year, he will find that as a result of operating that road, they have largely increased the engine mileage. They have increased the car mileage by 4,643,000 miles, the train mileage has been increased 3,380,000 miles, and, while there has been this large increase in the cost of operating the road, in the number of trains run, in the distance travelled, and in the speed of the trains as well, the total traffic receipts have only exceeded the traffic receipts of the year before by some $32,000. It will be found that while the receipts have only grown by $32,000, the expenditure necessary to obtain these receipts under the altered condition of things has been upwards of $300,000. accounts, to my mind, for the very large deficiency which we have at the present time in the operation of this road. I quite agree with those who wish to make an effort to have this condition of things changed, while I agree with those who have felt House to secure to another company a subsidy that the Intercolonial Railway was constructed as a bond of union between these provinces, and that the Government is bound, under any circumstances, to see that it is operated in the future, yet I am quite willing to aid in any effort to better the condition of things. I wish to say this for my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), that I think he has presented very strong arguments in favour of the scheme that he has proposed to the House. As was pointed out by several members who have spoken, the comparison which he instituted between the management of the Australian rail-ways under a Minister of the Crown, and under a commission, was very favourable to the latter management; and he reasons, and very properly reasons, that the same change in the management here might be attended with the same results. however, agree too with this view: that we must in considering the future of the Intercolonial Railway in Canada, consider all the conditions which surround our railway system in this country. Some of these conditions have been referred to by the Minister of Justice; but there are one or two others to which I would like to direct the attention of the House. In considering the broad question as to whether railways should be managed by the Government or by private companies, we must, I think, admit at the outset, that in Canada at all events, the Government management of railways generally is out of the question; that the policy adopted has been rather to place the railway system in Canada in the hands of private companies, and to give such aid as the Government sees fit to give, in the way of subsidies, towards the construction of these lines. Now, we have in Canada, as the result of this system at the present time, two important lines of railway. We have the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and these two important railway corporations control at the present time, two-thirds, I believe, of all the railways in this Dominion; or, leaving out the Government railway. I believe they control something like three-fourths of all the railways of this Dominion. We know, too, that they are constantly, every year, extending the mileage of their railways, and acquiring lines that have already been built, and securing a much larger proportion of the total railway system of the country than they have at the present time. We know, too, that both of these railway companies desire to extend their system to the sea ports of the Maritime Provinces, and that it is generally understood and expected by the people of the Maritime Provinces that that will be done. At the present time the Canadian Pacific Railway has a line as far as St. John, where it connects with the Intercolonial Railway, and the Grand Trunk connects at Lévis, opposite Quebec. Neither of these great corporations appears to be satisfied with the present arrangement, and I do not think the people of the Maritime Provinces are fully satisfied with it. We know that there has been, and is I believe still, in the Maritime Provfully satisfied with it. inces a great deal of disappointment expressed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company did not carry out the scheme which was originally proposed to this House, and extend their line by an independent route across the Province of New Brunswick as far as the town of Moncton; we know, too, that during the last session of Parliament the Grand Trunk Company were using their influence in this to construct a line to connect the Témiscouata Railway across the Province of New Brunswick with the Intercolonial Railway at the town of Moneton: the object of these two companies evidently being to secure independent lines of communication to the sea port of Halifax, as well as the sea port of St. John and the other sea ports of the Maritime Provinces. Now, looking to the future of our railways in the Maritime Provinces, it must be apparent that if this idea is ever to be realized, and these two great railway systems are ever to reach the sea ports of the Maritime Provinces, they must do so in one of two ways-either by building independent lines, or by acquiring the present lines which are part of the Intercolonial Railway and controlled by the Government. If independent lines are constructed, we cannot shut our eyes to this fact: that the result will be to reduce the Intercolonial Railway to a mere local line. Intercolonial Railway, under these circumstances, would have no western connection; it would not control the western traffic in either direction; and the result would inevitably be that it would divide with the two great companies the merely local traffic in the the Maritime Provinces. We must admit also that multiplying trunk lines of railway does not, to the general public, decrease the cost of carrying traffic. The rules of competition show that Government railways under a great many circumstances do not effect a real reduction in the The traffic has to be divided between a rates. greater number of railways; there is, of necessity, a greater amount of expense in carrying it, and the roads look for a return on a larger amount of capital. I quite agree with those who say that the Intercolonial Railway should not be sold. I can see very serious objections to that course; and I am aware that such a proposition would not generally meet with favour in the Maritime Provinces. If such a proposition were made, or entertained, there would be many difficulties surrounding it. In the first place, I do not think it would be proper to allow to a company which would undertake to purchase the Intercolonial Railway any bonding powers. In the next place, it would be necessary to preserve the rights and privileges of the Imperial Government in the use of the Intercolonial Railway for military purposes. In the course of the discussion to-night, there have been to my In the course of mind many strong arguments advanced indirectly in favour of the management of railways by independent companies, rather than by Government control, whether by a Minister of the Crown, or by a commission appointed by the Government. Minister of Justice, in defending the present rates charged upon the Intercolonial Railway, said that any company under similar circumstances would carry the traffic at the same rates. Then we have had several persons advocating the management of the Intercolonial Railway on business principles. Well, I think it will be generally admitted that if a road is to be managed on business principles, a private company is more likely to manage it on business principles than either a Government or a com-mission. Then, besides the instance which my hon. friend from Albert has brought forward of Government railways in the Australian colonies, we have before us the experience of the United States. I must admit that I have not studied the subject very thoroughly, although I have endeav-Mr. Wood (Westmoreland).

days; but so far as I have been able to obtain information, I believe that in the United States the principle of placing all the railways in the hands of private companies, has met with most favour-that wherever railways have been constructed by any of the states, and wherever any of the states have attempted to operate them, they have at as early a date as possible disposed of their roads and placed them under the management of private com-panies on some terms and conditions. Then there were arguments advanced, I think by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that railway companies would erect hotels, and in different ways offer inducements to travellers and business people to patronize their roads which it is impossible for any Government or Minister or Government commission to do. I have said that I do not advocate the sale of the Intercolonial Railway to a private company, although my remarks might rather indicate that that would be the course I would favour. It has appeared to me, however, possible that a scheme might be devised which, while retaining all the advantages which the country would derive from the operation of this road as a Government work, might at the same time secure the advantages of having the road operated on strictly business principles by railway companies. To illustrate what I mean, I will simply offer this suggestion to the House-that for instance, with the Grand Trunk Railway, which connects with the Intercolonial Railway at Lévis, some arrangement might be made by which that company would operate the road from Lévis to Moncton; and then an arrangement might be made by which both companies would have equal running powers over that portion of the road from St. John to Halifax. In that way we would accomplish some very important results. Without the construction of any new railway we would give both of these great railway companies independent access to both direct seaports in the Maritime Provinces. I do not myself anticipate any danger from adopting such a course. I do not fear any disastrous results from the operation of the road by companies such as those, and it does appear to me if the Government, retaining the road itself, should arrange with these companies to operate it or run their trains over it, we in the Maritime Provinces, and the people in the west as well, would have the advantage of the competition which would necessarily result, and which, under any circumstances, must be close between these two companies. If there was any advantage from the competition, and from having the roads worked in the most economical way by large companies, the whole country would derive the benefit. This is the idea which has occurred to me, and as the subject is up for discussion, I have ventured to make the suggestion, and hope it may be thought worthy of the consideration of the Government.

a road is to be managed on business principles, a private company is more likely to manage it on business principles than either a Government or a commission. Then, besides the instance which my hon. friend from Albert has brought forward of Government railways in the Australian colonies, we have before us the experience of the United States. I must admit that I have not studied the subject very thoroughly, although I have endeavoured to do so as well as I could during the last few we know that good men are selected, and that, once they assume their duties, politics are not allowed to interfere with the manner in which they are carried out. We also know that all the appointees in the post office are named for political reasons, but I think it may well be said that the management of the post offices is very free from politics and conducted on an economical! scale and as satisfactorily as it is possible for any class of business to be done. I think if a commission were appointed to manage the Intercolonial for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) dating from the 3rd August Railway, which would be as much beyond our control as the judges are, they could run the road as they pleased, and it would be very difficult for us to have grievances redressed. If the Minister of Railways or his department would give to Parliament the reasons, so far as they can be ascertained, for any deficit, Parliament would be able to enquire, from year to year, into the deficits, and remedy them, as far as they are capable of being remedied. That would be a step in advance, and all the information necessary might be got, as some gentlemen suggest, through the appointment of a parliamentary committee. Whilst it is recognized that this deficit is large, the Maritime Provinces are no more to be charged with it than the rest of the Dominion trading with these provinces, as the Intercolonial Railway must be considered as belonging to all parts of the Dominion. If to-morrow, since we have what is called the Short Line Railway, the Intercolonial Railway were stopped at some point at Lévis or south of Lévis, you would find the deficit would cease, but it would not be in the interests of the country to do that, as we would thereby fail to accommodate the various portions of Canada which The Intercoare doing business along that line. lonial Railway has to contend against the water communication along the Gulf of St. Lawrence and with other railroads built in opposition to it, with the trunk lines that have their termini in the United States and do business with the Maritime Provinces through the United States ports; and, considering all the opposition it has to meet, the road is maintaining itself very Again, Canada imported a year or two ago about $9,000,000 worth of goods through Portland and must have sent nearly as much in value through that port to the markets of Europe. we can by any means develop our trade over the Intercolonial Railway through Canadian ports as against sending it to the maritime ports of the United States, we will soon reduce that deficit. Therefore, instead of considering the proposition to take the road out of the management of Parliament, if we would address ourselves, from time to time, through the Minister of Railways and his officials, to learning how the matter can be remedied, that would be better than giving up our control over this great work. I will not further trespass on the time of the House, but will conclude by stating that, representing a constituency more deeply interested in the road than any other, I am not prepared to give my adhesion to the principle of taking it out of our management.

ADJOURNMENT—PERSONAL EXPLANA-

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. EDWARDS. Before the adjournment takes place, I desire to refer to a little matter, and in case there is any doubt in the minds of hon, gentlemen as to whether I am paired or not. I desire to make a statement. I did pair with the member till the 10th August. In order that no mistake might be made. I got from the member for Lisgar a letter which I will read to the House:

"Ottawa, 1st August, 1891.

"My DEAR EDWARDS,—I accept your kind offer to pair with me for the whole of next week commencing August 3rd, excepting the vote on the amendment that may be moved by Mr. Desjardins of l'Islet, or a motion that he may bring in on the trade question. On all other questions we are paired for said week.

"Yours.
"A. W. ROSS."

My reason for asking for this letter was that on two previous occasions on which I obliged hon. gentlemen opposite I was very unfairly treated. Another reason was that I believed hon, gentlemen on this side of the House during this session had been unfairly treated in the same way. Not only have I that letter, but on Monday morning, August 3rd, when I returned to Ottawa, the hon, member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) asked me if I was paired with the hon, member for Lisgar. I told him I was for that week, that the pair terminated at midnight at the end of that week, and not only did I tell him that I had a letter to that effect, but he came over to my desk and saw the letter. I also saw the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) who asked me the same question, and I gave him the same Not only is this the case, but on the 3rd reply. and 4th August the pairs given by the hon, member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow), those sheets do not include my name. Under these circumstances, though I might dwell longer on this subject, I think I am justified in saying that I have been very unfairly treated. Never have I asked an hon, gentleman on the other side to pair with me to oblige me, but whenever I have been asked I have endeavoured to oblige hon, gentlemen opposite. When I first came into this House, while being a Liberal and holding to Liberal principles, I had no other desire than to remain on friendly terms with hon, gentlemen on the other side, and my very first act was to oblige the late Premier Sir John Macdonald before the session had commenced by pairing with one of his supporters for two weeks. I held to that agreement, and I received nothing but abuse from the Conservative journals because I did so. Last session I was asked to pair with an hon, gentleman, and I said I would see whether I could do so The member went away and gave the pair to the whip without my consent, because I never agreed to it, but I abstained for a week from voting in consequence of that. I think it was very unbecoming on the part of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to get up as he has done to-night and practically charge me with falsehood.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have listened attentively to the statement of the hon. gentleman-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Take it back.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have nothing to take back. I have paid every attention to what the hon, gentleman has said and I expect the same courtesy will be paid to me. I simply state the facts as I have them before me. A pair was entered into between the hon, member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) and the hon, member for Russell (Mr. Edwards). I knew nothing about it. The hon, member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) gave a report of the pair, and it reads thus as entered on the pair book which I have, and I presume it reads in the same way in the pair book of the hon, member for Perth (Mr. Trow):

"Mr. Ross (Lisgar) pairs with Mr. Edwards from 3 p.m. Monday, August 3rd, until 3 p.m. Thursday, August 13th, except in regard to Mr. Desjardins' motion."

On every day after that, that statement has been left on the desk of the hon, member for South Perth (Mr. Trow). I find three or four of those statements here, and to save confusion or after altercations, a copy is always laid on my desk at 3 o'clock, and also on the desk of the Opposition whip, and on these he will find the pairs are recorded as follows: -Mr. Bernard paired with Mr. Welsh for the balance of the session; Mr. McCarthy paired with Mr. Préfontaine; Mr. McKeen (No. 160) paired with Mr. Borden, expires 10 p.m., 12th August; Mr. Ross (Lisgar), No. 175, paired with Mr. Edwards, expires 3 p.m., 13th August. That is on the paper for the 10th August, the 11th August and to-day, and has been on the paper every day since the pair was recorded. After Mr. Daly reported to me, I said to Mr. Edwards, you are paired with Mr. Ross. He said yes. He never showed me that letter. I never saw it or knew the contents of it. I went by the book and by the pair as reported by the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) and the hon, member for Perth (Mr. .Trow) had notice of it. I simply went by the book as reported by the hon, member for Selkirk to the whip's room, and recorded. The member for Perth (Mr. Trow), the whip of the Opposition, had not notice of it, and it was his duty, as it is my duty, whenever he makes a pair, and it is recorded, to go and see the member and ask him if it is correct. It was the duty of the member for Perth to notify the member for Russell that he was reported as paired, and to have the name struck off if it was not correct. It is my duty, when a vote takes place, if a member votes whose name is recorded, to try and have an explanation made, and I did that to-night. member for Perth had it on the list before him, and has had it for a week. I never knew anything about this letter being in existence, further than the statement that he had a letter from the member for Lisgar. I now make this statement that, so far as I am concerned, no other pair will be entered unless it is signed by both members. gentleman, in making his statement, said he had in his possession a letter which stated that he was paired for a certain time, and if there was any other entry it was a fraudulent one. The entry that is made here is not fraudulent, it was made in good faith by the clerk of the whip's room, at the request of the member for Selkirk. I knew nothing about the entry, and he had no right to say that it was a fraudulent entry, and I think he ought to retract that statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think this for Lee whole trouble has arisen from the unfortunate man-Russell. Mr. Taylor.

ner in which the whip has chosen to discharge his duty. Had he called my hon, friend's attention to the fact that he was supposed to be paired to a certain day, then this explanation would have been given him, and it would have been accepted. There is no doubt that my hon, friend is perfectly in order, and was correct in saying that the charge was made in an offensive manner against him. There is no doubt that under the circumstances he was not paired for one hour longer than the time he stated, and he should not have been charged, no matter what the whip supposed, with a thing so repugnant to all gentlemanly feeling, as breaking an engagement like a pair. That, I think, is the position of the case, and I think it is very unfortunate indeed that when the whips on either side suppose that, for any reason, a pair has been broken, they should not state their impression in a different way.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not think that is the position of the case at all. The question about pairs has been discussed time and again, and the understanding deliberately come to upon the subject was that a private pair between members not entered in the whips books, should not be recognized; because when a member goes away, and a misunderstanding occurs, a member is charged with being paired who was not paired, he feels Now what occurred this evening was annoyed. that after the division the hon, member for Leeds rose and called the attention of the member for Russell to the fact that he was paired with the member for Lisgar. I certainly did not understand that he was doing it in an offensive sense; I am sure there was not a member on this side of the House who supposed that the member for Leeds was doing any more than reminding the member for Russell that he was paired, supposing, as everybody who knows the member for Russell, would suppose, that the mere intimation would be sufficient to induce him to withdraw his vote if it were true that he was paired. Now, the member for Russell took offence, and stated that he was not paired. It was not necessary for him to say that he had a letter from the member for Lisgar in his possession, but he went on to say that the entry was a fraudulent entry, and said it in a most offensive way. The fact is the hon. gentleman was not paired, as now appears, but the fact that there was a contrary entry does not justify him in saying that it was a fraudulent entry, and no person who is acquainted with the whips on either side of the House would accuse any one of them with having made a fraudulent entry. The misunderstanding that has arisen is in no way the fault of the member for Leeds. Under the arrangement that was agreed to, he was to take the entry in the whips' book, but he took pains not only to see that that was recorded in the whips' book, but to remind the other whip every day of the entries so recorded. In face of those entries, and having no word of contradiction from the whip on the other side, it was his bounden duty to suggest to the member for Russell that he was not paired, and when the member for Russell replied and when the member for that he was not paired, paired, my friend from Leeds was satisfied. I think there ought to be as much courtesy shown to the member for Leeds as is desired for the member for

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon, member for Leeds had been shown the letter according to my friend's statement.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is not true.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I prefer my hon, friend's statement.

Mr. EDWARDS. I would be very sorry indeed to say anything offensive to any hon, gentleman in this House, on either one side or the other. think I was justified in feeling hurt, as I was, when I made the statement that the entry in the pair book of the hon, member for Leeds was a fraudulent entry. I have always understood that it took two to make a pair. I never stated to the whips on this side of the House that I was paired. statement of the member for Selkirk seemed to be accepted on the other side, and when my statement was made to-night it was not accepted. member for Leeds got up, and in a very offensive way denied my statement. I will just say that the member for Leeds is mistaken. He came over to my desk, and I told him exactly what the pair was, and I held out the letter to him, and he said: "Oh, that is all right," and walked away. Now, being cognizant as I was of this fact, hon, gentlemen will understand why I felt very much offended at the hon, gentleman's language.

Mr. TAYLOR. I never read the letter the hon. gentleman mentioned. I did not change my mind further than to remember that the pair was recorded, and it was recorded on the other whip's desk that the pair was for ten days, until the 13th. Members on both sides like to have their names appear as being paired, if they are absent, and we have tried to meet their views. As my hon, friend and the member for Lisgar made this private arrangement, and the time was given in writing the whips are not to blame for the mistake. It was given in by the hon, member for Selkirk, and in order to be sure that no mistake would happen a copy was put on the desk of the Opposition whip. If hon, gentlemen will look on Mr. Trow's desk they will see it is there, and it has been there for several days, and they will further see that the pair expires on the 13th. That is enough to justify my course in the matter. I have nothing further to do, and I simply drew the attention of the House to the matter. But the hon, member refused to accept my statement, and offensively suggested a fraudulent entry.

Mr. FORBES. It is the usual practice for the two members both to sign a paper, which is handed to the whip of either party. Then it is recorded.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not done once in twenty times.

Mr. FORBES. We are endeayouring to carry out the practice. In this case no signature was obtained from the hon, member for Russell; he signed no paper. How the entry came in the book of the hon, member for Leeds I do not understand.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. How is it in Mr. Trow's book?

Mr. FORBES. It is not in his book.

Mr. TAYLOR. Have you seen the book?

Mr. FORBES. The only thing is the paper furnished by the hon, member for Leeds.

Mr. TAYLOR. He has a book like this one, and Mr. PATER I expect it is entered up by the clerk every night. Mr. Lavergne.

Mr. FORBES. No, it is not. It makes no difference, because the pair appears in the book kept by the clerk: it was entered by the authority of the member for Lisgar but without the authority of the hon, member for Russell.

Mr. BOWELL. What the hon, member for Leeds said was that the information was given by the hon, member for Selkirk, and not by the hon, member for Lisgar, and supposing he had made a pair between those two gentlemen, he entered it in the book.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister of Justice seemed to think that the member for Russell was to blame for using the language he used. He overlooked one important point, namely, that when his explanation was given, it was not accepted by the Government whip.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The language used by the member for Russell with respect to a fraudulent entry in the book was used in the same breath as the statement of the hon, member for Leeds, and the latter hon, member had no opportunity of saying whether he accepted it or not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Even so; after the letter had been shown him, he was perfectly justified.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He was perfectly justified.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The feeling prevails on this side of the House, whether rightly or wrongly, that a great many members have been unfairly and unjustly dealt with through the action of the head whip on the other side. There have been, on the other hand, no complaints made by hon. members opposite of the Liberal whip. How do mistakes occur, and how is it that the head whip is so offensive? Not long ago two hon, gentlemen on this side, whose characters are beyond suspicion. found themselves in the same position as did the hon, member for Russell. It is not a matter to be passed over as lightly as the Minister of Justice treats it. It is true that the newspaper reporters will probably, in a spirit of fairness and after this full explanation, showing how utterly wrong the member for Leeds was and how correct the member for Russell was, do justice to my hon, friend; but except for that fact, the statement might have been read by tens of thousands that the member for Russell had violated what is equivalent to his word of honour. The House cannot but feel how unfair and unjust was the charge made against him. It is due to this feeling to which I have referred more than any other for which hon, gentlemen opposite have to thank themselves if they find difficulty sometimes in securing pairs.

Mr. TAYLOR. Oh, oh.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is a feeling of insecurity of being unfairly dealt with; not induced by the instance to-night but by other instances, and this will accentuate the feeling very much.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like to have the names of the two members to whom the hon, gentleman refers.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mr. Langelier and Mr. Lavergne.

Mr. TAYLOR. Did I not explain that those pairs were made by the French whips, and that it was simply my duty to call attention to the matter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It was also alleged that Mr. Colter had voted when he had paired. That report went the rounds of the press, and it was stated he had broken his pair, when such was not This is a most serious matter, because if a member is destitute of honour he is not entitled to sit in this House. The Minister of Justice generally poses as a member desiring to render justice and yet he conveyed the idea that the member for Russell had done something which he should not have done. The Minister of Justice should not try to heap insult on injury in regard to the hon, meniber for Russell, as he has done by the observations he has made. When the member for Russell gives his word it is as good as his bond, and if he was paired he would not vote.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.45 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 13th August, 1891.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE MEMBER FOR QUEBEC WEST.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved:

That the Hon. Thomas McGreevy, member for the electoral district of Quebeo West, the witness named in the report of the Select Standing Committee of Privileges and Elections communicated to this House on 12th August, do attend at his place in this House on Tuesday next, 18th instant, at 3 o'clock in the afternoon.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY-TESTIMONIALS TO MINISTERS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I desire, in conformity with the notice I gave last night, to call the attention of the House to the desirability of expressing an opinion with respect to a practice which has unfortunately grown up amongst us, and which I conceive to be extremely detrimental to the good government of this country. I propose, at the outset, to read the motion with which I intend to conclude my remarks, and which is as follows:—

That Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved: That the acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of Ministers of the Crown or of any member of their families from contractors, Government officials or other persons having pecuniary relations with the Government, is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration, and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under Ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

I desire, in the first place, to say that I do not offer this as a motion of want of confidence. It is in the power of the Government to accept or refuse my motion, as they have done on other occasions, as they did very recently in the case of the motion submitted to submitted the public at large, stand on one side, and private individuals stand on the other side. Now, Sir, I need not say to this House, least of all need I say to the Minister of Justice, who himself has been a distinguished member of the judicial bench, by the hon, member for L'Islet (Mr. Desjardins), and I crust that, on calm consideration, the Government will see the desirability and propriety of affirming the principles which are contained in the resolution which I have just read, and with which I propose to close these remarks. Now, Sir, I want to call your particular attention, and I want to call the particular attention of the House to the substance of this motion. This motion declares, Sir—and let this be carefully remembered—this motion does not object to and does not censure the acceptance of gifts or testimonials by Ministers of the Crown from their political or personal admirers, unless, indeed, these parties should belong to classes having direct pecuniary relations with the Government at the time. Such a proposition, it appears to me, ought to commend itself to every right-feeling and right-thinking man from one end of this Dominion to the other, and I go further; it ought to commend itself to every honest man and to every right-thinking man under every constitutional government. There could be, in my judgment, no proposition clearer or plainer than this. There could be no one thing which tends more to the interest of good government, and which is more vital to the proper management of the public service, than laying down once and for all the declaration on the part of this Parliament: That it is not expedient that Ministers of the Crown should accept, from persons who may appear before them in the guise of suitors, from persons in regard to whom they stand in position of judges, any gifts or presents of testimonials of any kind or description. I repeat again, Sir, that I am not raising the vexed question as to whether a Minister of the Crown should or should not accept gifts during his term of office from political admir-That, I have always held, is a matter of opinion, and it must be determined by the peculiar circumstances in each case. But I lay down, with all the emphasis in my power, I call upon this House and I call upon every honest man in this House and out of it, to stand by me in declaring that Ministers of the Crown have no right whatever under any conceivable circumstances, to accept gifts from contractors or public servants or persons having direct relations with the Government. I have always held that Ministers of the Crown were in a two-fold sense trustees. They are trustees of the people by right of the fact that they are the representatives of the people, but they are more They are the sworn and paid servants than that. of the public; they are, therefore, doubly bound to see to it, that no act of theirs should bring their high office into contempt or should be likely in any way to interfere with the proper administration of constitutional government as we have it and under-More than that, Sir, as every man who stand it. has experience in office knows; as every man who has had experience in public life knows; Ministers of the Crown—and more especially Ministers in charge of great spending departments—are continually called upon to fill the office of judges. They are continually called upon to decide questions involving large sums of money in which their employers, the public at large, stand on one side, and private individuals stand on the other side. Sir, I need not say to this House, least of all need I say to the Minister of Justice, who himself has that there is no one thing which at all times and at all ages has been held to bring more infamy upon a judge, than the acceptance of gifts or presents from a suitor in his court. What would that hon, gentleman say in his own case; what would he think of the acts of any one of his brethren, if in a suit before him under which, by his decision, a suitor should receive a large sum of money; it had turned out that that suitor had, before the day of decision arrived, presented him with a large sum of money, or let us say for illustration sake, a valuable service of plate. Sir, the case is worse in a Minister of the Crown than it is in that of judges, and for this very obvious reason: What judges do, they do in full blaze of publicity; they do it under the eye of a vigilant bar: their decisions in almost every case are subject to be reviewed on appeal, and, therefore, there is infinitely less danger in their case than there is in the case of a Minister sitting, as one might say, in camera: as to whose proceedings very little, often, is known for many years; as to whose proceedings very little can be known, and who may command, and often does command, so powerful a majority in Parliament, that investigation into his delinquencies, if he commits any, is practically impossible for long periods of time, and is often utterly impossible. Now, Sir, having laid down that as regards the theory of the question, I come to the other side of it; that is as to the extreme practical evils to the state which result from disregarding the wise and wholesome rule which is universally established by English practice, and universally established, in theory at least, in all constitutional assemblies. You cannot by possibility—and every man knows that I speak the truth—you cannot by possibility allow a Minister of the State to accept gifts of any kind, without, if the practice becomes known, demoralizing in a very high degree the whole society over which he presides. And especially, there is no one thing which is clearer or plainer to my mind, no one thing which I think will be plainer and clearer to the minds of the hon. gentlemen on either side, than that so soon as the head of a department, whoever he may be, is known to have received gifts or testimorials from persons occupying the relations to which I have referred in this testimonial, that moment, Sir, the demoralization of that man's department is sure and certain. The injury is three-fold; the public purse in such cases is likely to suffer extremely, as we have seen and known; the public service, that is to say the whole Civil Service, and particularly that branch of the service with which such person is connected, is likewise sure to suffer; and public morality, I repeat, receives the worst possible injury it can receive at the hands of any public man, if it become known and patent to the com-munity of which he is chief, that he is willing to accept bribes from parties, as I said, having cases in his court, for that is what it virtually amounts to. Now, Sir, in our own case, with respect to this testimonial business, it is unfortunately too true that the beginning of the evils of which I complain, and which I desire to rectify, took its rise in the first instance, in a testimonial which was presented a considerable number of years ago, to the late Sir John A. Macdonald. That was very much to be regretted, and the more to be regretted, because I have always maintained, and I feel it due to myself testimonial I believe that the motives of the men who originated it were pure and honourable. The circumstances of the case, which the House will pardon me for reciting briefly, are these: Sir John A. Macdonald had been struck down by a very dangerous illness. It was perfectly well known that he was in deeply embarrassed circumstances; deeply indebted I believe, and that but a very slender provision indeed had been made for his family. Under these circumstances, Sir, if ever, it was quite justifiable for the hon, gentleman's personal friends and admirers to have contributed for the purpose of relieving his family from any danger of want, and had two or threevery obvious and very reasonable precautions been taken, no blame could have been attached to the parties who were concerned in getting up thattestimonial. Unfortunately these precautions were not taken, unfortunately publicity was not given, as I have always said publicity should be given, to the names of persons who subscribed; and still more unfortunately precautions were not taken to see that subscriptions to that fund were not accepted save from sources from which they could honourably be accepted. Now, Sir, I am not going at the present moment to repeat what I have found it my duty to say on other occasions on that subject. But, as hon, gentlemen on the other side of the House have lately developed an extreme respect and admiration for an eminent gentleman no longer with us, Mr. Edward Blake, I propose to read to those hon, gentlemen rather than give any words of mine, the language in which Mr. Blake found it necessary to speak of that particular testimonial. What Mr. Blake said was this:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

کیونونی این در در در میدانید در این اینیه در بیشتان بیشتانید. بیشتانی بیشتانی به در میدانید و بیشتانی در این د میشتانید بیشتان در این در میداند در در در بیشتان در این در بیشتان اینیند بیشتانید بیشتانید بیشتان در در بیشتان

"Another case was the gift several years ago to the present First Minister by means of a settlement upon his family of the sum of about $80,000, which was subscribed for and presented to him or to his family while he was First Minister of Canada. It was so subscribed and presented largely by actual and intending contractors, whose business it was to obtain favourable contracts from the Government, and having obtained them, to get the largest prices for the least returns, and the most liberal allowances for extras that they could manage. It was subscribed largely also by public corporations greatly indebted to the treasury, and dependent upon the Executive for favourable settlements of their indebtedness and favourable adjustments of their financial relations."

Mr. Blake goes on to give a very notable instance, which I will not myself at this present moment read to the House. It referred, however, to the Northern Railway Company; and those gentlemen who desire to see what happened in regard to that matter may refer to what Mr. Blake took occasion to say upon it. I purposely abstain from doing so, because, while it is necessary to call attention to this subject, I do not want to import into this discussion more than is absolutely necessary to prove my case, and for that reason only, and in order that the Government may not plead that unnecessary matters were brought in, I abstain from reading the very notable instance which Mr. Blake gave of the enormous public mischiefs apt to result from the practice which I deplore. But, Sir, there was no doubt that from the neglect of the precautions which I have alluded to, grave scandal arose, grave injury to the public service arose, a very bad precedent was set, and in the nature of the case, after that bad precedent another still worse precedent followed. That, Sir, is the case of the testimonial presented to a gentleman whom I do not know whether I should speak of as the present or the late or the suspended Minister of Public Works. to say here now, that in the first inception of that In his case there were no such excuses as those which existed in the case of Sir John A. Macdonald. No man could look at the public record of the parties who subscribed to the testimonial to the Minister of Public Works without seeing that for the most part they were most undoubtedly men coming well within the lines of this resolution. They were public contractors, or public officials, or parties having pecuniary relations with the Government; and I say, Sir, that the bad precedent which existed in the first case was doubled and trebled in its injury to the public service and to the country at large by the case of the hon. Minister of Public Works. I have observed, Sir, that some of that hon, gentleman's apologists have undertaken to mitigate the error, or the crime, call it which you will, which was committed by the reception of that testimonial under the circumstances, by the plea, which I think was also advanced in the other case, that the hon, gentleman did not know who had subscribed to his testimonial. Such a plea, in my judgment, is a direct aggravation of the offence. A public Minister has no right whatever to allow any gift to be made to him unless it is done publiely, and unless he knows from what sources it proceeds; and, Sir, I would say this, that if a Minister of the Crown tells me that he has accepted a gift, not knowing and not choosing to know from whom it proceeded, so far from regarding such a plea as a mitigation, I say that such a plea raises a presumption of guilt. It was his duty to know it; it was his duty to find out; it was his duty to see that not one penny went into his pockets or into his coffers unless it came from such sources that he could honourably and fairly receive it. Now, Sir, I need not tell this House or the people of this country what followed on these precedents. country has been for weeks and months a spectator of investigations which go to show that the natural results of these acts have followed-that a great spending department of the public service has become very little better than one mass of corruption; that the name of Canada, more important by far than the name of any individual man, is fast becoming a disgrace and a by-word from one end of the world to the other; that Canada and the reputation of Canadian statesmen, unless steps and very determined steps be very shortly taken to purge ourselves of these scandals, will sink below the level of a wretched South American Republic; that our credit as well as our character will suffer, and cannot fail to suffer if these things are known to have existed, and yet it be found that the Parliament of Canada will not even declare that it is improper that such things can be. Sir, again I say that rather than use my own words, I will read the language used by the gentleman for whom hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House profess such respect. Here is what Mr. Edward Blake had to say with respect to the Minister of Public Works:

"The thing was approved or condoned, and two or three years ago the Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) got his testimonial too. Why not? What is right for the chief is right for the second in command. He, it is true, has to do with the great bulk of the contracts for public works. He largely decides upon the conditions for tendering, advertises for the tenders, determines which tender shall be accepted, determines whether the contractor has performed the work. He it is who gives the instructions for changes, who settles the bills for extras, which allows the greatest latitude for favourable or unfavourable settlement. He, I say, even above the others, ought to avoid, as a matter utterly abominable, any relations, except the direct business and Sir Richard Cartwright.

official relations, with the contractors who have or may have business with his department. The testimonial he received was about $20,000. And it was largely subscribed by public contractors who had claims against the Government, or hopes or expectations, the realization of which depended almost wholly on its favourable decision. Many of those claims have since been settled. What has happened? This has happened, that many people suspect the Minister of Public Works of having been influenced in his decisions by the relation he allowed to exist between these contractors and himself, as givers and recipient of a large and valuable present. It may or it may not have been so. No man can tell. We cannot judge. God knoweth. But the position is wholly indefensible. To no public man ought it be possible to say: With one hand you took from this man a testimonial; and with the other you settled his claim."

Now, these are the statements of a gentleman whom, now that he is out of the political arena, hon, gentlemen on the other side profess to hold in the highest possible esteem, whose words they are never tired of quoting, when it suits their purpose. I trust they will pay equal respect to them when quoted from this side. Sir, up to the present time, I think but one attempt has been made, to the best of my recollection, to challenge the judgment of Parliament on this most improper and immoral practice. Numerous attempts have been made, it is true, to grapple with the kindred and closely allied one—the cousin german, to say the least of it, - of exacting heavy toll, heavy subscriptions, from contractors for the purpose of carrying elections and for political ends. Over and over again have attempts been made from this side of the House to check that evil. In 1881 a Bill was introduced forbidding contractors, while engaged in public contracts, to subscribe to political funds for either party. As might have been expected, that was voted down. In 1882 a similar Bill was brought up. This they thought it inexpedient to vote down as they had done before, and they referred it to a select committee; and no more was heard of it for that session. In 1883 a similar measure was proposed, and the Bill this time was passed with the vital clause left out. In 1884 we again attempted to introduce the wholesome provision that no contractor should be allowed, under severe penalties, to subscribe to elections while his con-That was killed judiciously tract was going on. in the Committee of the Whole, I believe, and unless my memory wholly deceives me, my hon. friend behind me brought it up again in a substantial shape, and it was for the fourth time defeated by a former Parliament. Now, in these cases former Parliaments were most directly to blame for many of the results which we have seen occurring through the neglect to take that very proper precaution; and I would call your attention, Sir, to this fact, that when the Parliament of Canada, having been challenged four consecutive times in four separate years, and refused each time to declare that it is improper for public contractors to subscribe to election funds for political purposes how can any man venture to say that contractors who had subscribed to political funds, cannot contend that they have the sanction of Parliament in the clearest possible manner for the course they pursued? Sir, every hon, member knows, every man of common sense in the country knows, that when a contractor subscribes out of his own pocket to a political fund, that contractor means to receive, and almost invariably does receive, three-fold, fourfold, five-fold and ten-fold the amount of his subscriptions from a generous Minister. I have quoted what my hon. friend, Mr. Blake, was pleased to say on these subjects; but I think the House will bear with me while I repeat a few words that I myself addressed to my constituents two or three years ago, when these matters had become known to every hon. gentleman who paid any attention to public affairs, but before we had obtained the overwhelming proof we have to-day of the results which, as sure as night follows day, follow such practices. I quote this speech the more especially because I felt it my duty in the speeches subsequently delivered by many of them, that they had read though not profited by it. What I said was this, speaking at Ingersoll on the 14th November, 1889:

"I presume if there is any one thing more than another on which honest men of all parties ought to agree, it is this, that no man engaged in constructing public works should be allowed to make presents to public officials, and least of all to Ministers of State. To this I add, nor in all conscience should such a one be allowed to contribute to election funds, either while his contract is going on or which has a most that chains a waiting the action of the Garage he has unsettled claims awaiting the action of the Government. Surely this is fair and reasonable, and yet four distinct times has a Bill to this effect been introduced into Parliament, and four several times has it been evaded or point-blank voted down; and that, too, in spite of the or point-blank voted down; and that, too, in spite of the fact that on one occasion the clause to which objection was taken, namely, that forbidding contractors to subscribe for political objects, has been reported to the House by a Select Committee, of which the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Macdonald, now Chief Justice of Nova Scotia, was one, and though a clause of similar import had been recently made law in the United States. So also was another Bill, dealing expressly with the case of men making presents to Ministers, voted down, its rejection being moved, with a fine sense of the fitness of things, by Sir Hector Langevin, himself the recipient of a testimonial being moved, with a fine sense of the fitness of things, by Sir Hector Langevin, himself the recipient of a testimonial subscribed for by just such persons as I have mentioned above. Ministers should not take gifts. Now surely, if there is any one maxim in political ethics better established than another—if there is any one thing which ought to commend itself to every honest man of every party in Canada, it is this: that under no circumstances should a Minister of State permit himself to accept gifts, either directly or indirectly, while he continues in office. Least of all should he accept them from public servants or from men employed in carrying out contracts of any Least of all should he accept them from public servants or from men employed in carrying out contracts of any sort. Sir, the reason is most obvious. From the very nature of the case, the contractor in almost every conceivable public work is, by the expressed terms of the contract, left very much at the mercy of the Minister. That Minister can, as a rule, make his fortune or mar it. At any rate, he can almost invariably affect the contractor's profits enormously, and, if displeased, involve him in a tedious and costly litigation. Consequently, the temptation to the contractor to secure the good-will of the Ministers by all means is irresistible. He is really not a free agent, not merely while he is performing his contract, but until he has been finally paid for it, and every sound political rule dictates that such a person should be debarred. until he has been finally paid for it, and every sound political rule dictates that such a person should be debarred, under stringent penalties, from purchasing the favour of Ministers, either by subscribing to testimonials (?) or to election funds. If a man's political supporters do really desire to testify their admiration by making him a gift of money, let them wait till he is out of office, and then subscribe to their heart's content. Sir, there is not much fear of corrupt influence then, but very few and far between were the testimonials subscribed for by admirers of the present Government while they were out of office. Perhaps their supporters thought Sir Hugh Allan had done enough in that way. Sir, these are no light matters, and they have led to no light consequences."

These were the words which I addressed not merely to my constituents, but through the press to the whole people of Canada two years ago. By those words I stand, by those words I am willing to be judged, and by those words I demand that this question be adjudicated upon. I need hardly recall certain occurrences which took place in this House a year ago when I was compelled to intimate my conviction that a certain notorious individual was standing on the peak of a veritable continent of take one or the other alternative. They cannot undeveloped rascality, and that when he was expelled from this House, the ground he took was that it was very hard that he should be singled out for judgment when there were twenty others as guilty as he. This is a new Parliament, a number of new members are assembled here, to some of whom these facts may not be so well known as they are to the oldermembers of the House, and, therefore, I propose to give these new members a chance of clearing their to cause copies to be sent to every member of the skirts from old scandals by referring to some former then Parliament, and I have had reason to observe, revelations and by making the motion which I am about to do. These new members have clear and strong evidence-evidence stronger than has ever been submitted to any deliberative body within my knowledge-with regard to the facts to which I refer. Let these hon, members take the chance now. They will do so if they are wise. If it is any relief to them to abuse me for what I have said, they may I have been dipped too often in the political Styx to care very much what they say in regard to me, but I say, like Themistocles, "Strike, but hear me." Abuse me if you like, but pass my motion. It would be in their own interest, I think, that those hon, gentlemen should vote for this motion which I propose. If you vote against, it—and you cannot amend it; you must vote yea or nay-then you vote that you approve of Ministers of the Crown receiving bribes, because that is what these gifts and testimonials amount to, you vote in favour of their having pecuniary relations with contractors or receiving gifts from contractors or officials. I do not pretend to condemn the gift which may be made to a Minister by his political admirers, but I do complain of any Minister receiving gifts from sources such as these, sources from which he cannot accept without injury to his own honour and to the public treasury. It may be well to consider how the country will regard the action of the supporters of the Government if this motion is voted down. For a long time the country has been rather apathetic in regard to matters that should have stirred the people up, but now there appears to be a spirit moving among the dry bones, and I tell the hon, gentlemen opposite that their action in regard to this matter will be very closely watched. Here you have a motion forbidding Ministers to receive contributions from contractors and persons of that kind, and I cannot conceive how any honest or honourable man can defend the practice of making such presents to Ministers of the Crown. Further, the House has to consider what is the effect of this on the outside world. Everyone knows that our conduct in this matter has attracted a great deal of unfavourable and hostile criticism, and I say that, if the result of this debate shows that the majority of the Parliament of Canada sees nothing wrong in Ministers taking bribes, not merely will our reputation, but our credit suffer in the markets of Europe, and that very seriously. If the Canadian Parliament-which I cannot and will not believe until I see the vote recorded—refuses to declare on this plain question that they consider that the taking of gifts by Ministers from those persons who are specified is improper and ought to be condemned, all I can say is that, as a Canadian, I shall regret the result and I believe that Canada will become in the eyes of the world a synonym for rascality. This vote cannot be evaded. Hon, gentlemen are bound to plead, if they vote against this motion, but that they have sanctioned the very thing I propose to condemn. I have purposely abstained from going into many details which I might go into, because I thought it was not necessary to give many examples. I did not wish to carry the matter further than I thought was imperatively necessary in order to bring the case fully before the House. I, therefore, move that you do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved that all the words after "That" be expunged and the following substituted in lieu thereof :-

The acceptance of gifts or testimonials of any kind on the part of Ministers of the Crown or of any member of their families from contractors, Government officials, or other persons having pecuniary relations with the Government is entirely opposed to sound principles of administration, and is calculated to bring parliamentary government into contempt, and that the example thus given tends to corrupt and demoralize the officials serving under Ministers who have accepted or permitted the acceptance of gifts or testimonials as aforesaid.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I desire to say a few words in reference to this matter and to express the views in regard to it which are entertained by members on this side of the House and particularly We have to by members of the Administration. consider this resolution in connection with the remarks which have been made by the hon, member for South Oxford, some of which certainly commend his resolution to our acceptance, and some of which make us regret that the proposition to express an abstract principle should be put before the House accompanied by statements likely to arouse hostility, likely to arouse animosity out of past transactions, and likely, perhaps, to lead to a misap-prehension among those who are not well informed as to some of the transactions of the past. referring, first, to the observations of the member for South Oxford which, it seemed to me, were hardly necessary to be expressed this afternoon, and which are calculated to arouse the feelings I have mentioned, I would refer to what he said with regard to the testimonial which was presented many years ago to the late First Minister. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comparative moderation with which the hon, gentleman spoke with regard to some of those transactions, notwithstanding that I deplore that he did make comments upon that and other transactions which are to be regretted. The hon. gentleman evidently spoke under a certain measure of self-restraint, especially considering that some to whom he referred were on terms of active political hostility with him, extending over a long period of years. But as one member of this Administration, and I think I am speaking for my colleagues—I must say with regard to the testimonial presented to the late Sir John A. Macdonald, which was so long ago as upwards of 20 years, that that matter has been so well discussed. so well ventilated, and so well considered in Parliament and throughout this country, that there ought to be no misapprehension about it, and there ought to be no association of any incident connected with it, with observations condemning a practice which the hon, gentleman asks the House to declare should be condemned, as likely to lead to corruption. I think the hon. member for South Oxford felt impelled, in introducing his observations in regard to that testimonial, presented, as I have said, upwards of 20 years ago—I think his innate sense of justice compelled him to admit that that testimonial was the responsibility of everything that gentleman has Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.
